Mr. MONK. The question of immigration is a very large one, and in view of the very large amount we are going to spend this year the amount asked for under this item being $150,000 more than was asked for last year, the matter is worthy of a little discussion, particularly after what was said yesterday. The hon. minister yesterday stated his policy with great frankness. He does not believe in helping the population of this part of the country in any way to move into the new territories, and he believes in filling up the North-west as quickly as possible, provided a suitable inspection is secured and proper agents are obtained; and he went so far as to say that he could not relax for a single moment. These agencies must be kept up, with the system of advertising, and all this great expense must be maintained, or else there would be a diminution in the flow of immigration to the North-west. The inspection is a most important point. That and some other points which were mentioned yesterday by my hon. friend from Lennox, the hon. gentleman has not approached to-night. The hon. member for Lennox yesterday pointed out some glaring discrepancies in this expenditure of $650,000 which we are making this current year. There were 6,000 Galicians came into Canada, and there are no homestead entries for Galicians. That is something which requires explanation. There were various other points mentioned by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson), upon which we are entitled to an explanation before voting this large item. Is the inspection properly carried out ? There was an article published in one of our medical periodicals last year with regard to trachoma, that disease of the eyes which is being imported into this country by these immigrants. That article was written by Dr. Gordon Byers, an eye specialist of Montreal, who is a professor in McGill and are of the attending specialists at Victoria Hospital. In it he points out that trachoma is now implanted in our country and has been brought in by these immigrants. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) took a very optimistic view of that disease, but I understand it to be incurable. I find in this evening's Montreal 'Star' the following reference to the temporary officer whom the hon. gentleman has appointed in the city of Quebec to examine these immigrants, particularly as regards trachoma :

Dr. Faber, charged with illegal practice keeps an immigration inspector at Quebec for steamship lines.

I do not know whether he is an appointee of my hon. friend or not, but this goes to show that the inspection is not carried on as it should be.

Quebec, July 15.—Dr. Faber, supervisor of immigration for the Canadian Pacific Railway Atlantic line, has been proceeded against by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, charged with illegal practice of medicine.

Dr. Faber has been employed to care for those suffering from trachoma, &c., who have to be deported, during their stay here, instead of sending them to a hospital. The College of Physicians and Surgeons allege that he is not licensed to practice here, that he has no right to the title of doctor, and that he cannot receive remuneration for his services.

The doctor says that he is an American medical man in good standing, that he has not engaged in general practice and that he is acting as an expert on a salary. He is resisting the case and prominent legal counsel is employed on both sides.

I merely mention this point incidentally because I believe that this question of inspection, in view of the policy announced yesterday by my hon. friend, is a most important one. I had occasion to meet Dr. Byers, a few days ago in Montreal, and asked him if there were any changes in the conditions he had indicated in this article to which I have referred. He said there were not, that the disease was still existing, and that its importation had not been interrupted.

No doubt, under the system adopted by my hon. friend, there is a wholesale filling up of the North-west, and it is very difficult to get over the argument presented so carefully yesterday by my hon. friend from Lennox, who pointed out that many of these people whom we are bringing over at our own cost to a large extent, go to the United States, and that many others are not desirable. I have heard an immigration agent in the province of Quebec, a man of great experience, declare that in order to secure a proper immigrant, you must go and get him in the country of origin, make sure that he possesses all the necessary qualifications, physical, moral and mental, take him, upon his landing to this place of settlement, revisit him three or four or five times a year for three or four years, if you want to make a suitable settler out of him, such as we require in this country. And the experience of this gentleman, is corroborated by the experience of which we had a narration yesterday by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver). I listened with great attention to the speech of my hon. friend, who lives in the very place where many of these immigrants have settled, and everybody will admit that there is a great difference between the policy advocated by him and that followed by the department. My hon. friend from Alberta contends, judging by personal experience on the spot, that this system of crowding up the North-west with people from the old world in an indiscriminate fashion, is productive of social, political and economical problems of a very grave nature. My hon. friend from Alberta, who spoke advisedly, said that of course immigrants from the British isles, having all suitable qualifications, should be preferred, and that of course emigrants from this part of the country, Canadian settlers, filling up our North-west were the best we could desire. Emigrants from the United States were also very desirable.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And from France.

Mr. MONK. I am coming to that in a moment. What I wish to call attention to is this. There is a great distinction between what we call selected immigration and the system adopted by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior; and when we are going to set aside $800,000 for immigration purposes, it behooves us to consider whether it is not better for us to modify our course and follow the course adopted by the United States. It seems to me that it would be better to stop this system of paying so much per head. I find that my hon. friend paid last year in bonuses to agents for settlers from the United States $7,903. What kind of people where these that were sent into the country ? The earnings of these agents depend upon the number of settlers they send in—no matter what kind, whether they are affected with moral or political disease, if they are sent into the country, the agents get their commission. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) spoke of the North Atlantic Trading Company. We paid that company $48,618 for 7,540 immigrants, on a basis, as my hon. friend stated yesterday—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I made an error ; I was speaking from memory. The amount they are entitled to is £1 per head.

Mr. MONK. It matters very little, the question is the system, the policy. These agents are paid so much per head. I question very much whether it is not time for us, for the reasons mentioned by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), and for reasons which apply also in the province of Quebec and in the province of Ontario, to put a stop to this excessive expenditure and change the system. Instead of paying so much per head, we should proceed with a system of bringing immigrants here such as that proposed yesterday by my hon. friend from Alberta, and which I mentioned to the committee here as being the system recommended by an experienced agent in the province of Quebec with whom I have spoken much on this subject. The objection will be made that it is difficult to carry on the work of immigration upon that plan, that if you have to follow the immigrant from the time he leaves the country of origin, receive him on his landing in this country, see that he meets with proper treatment where he settles, and then revisit him, it becomes a costly proceeding. But in the long run, it pays better, because the country acquires a better article, if I may use the expression, a better individual. And, as was pointed out to me, this settler, in turn, becomes himself an unpaid immigration agent and secures for us from the country from which he comes the very best class of settlers. There is another point to which I wish to draw my hon. friend's attention, a point that, he will admit is a very important one when you come to the expenditure of such large sums. I have been through the older provinces, and I find that in Nova Scotia, judging from what the people there tell me, the best of their young men go to the United States. I have never had time to verify that, but I was told it by serious and responsible men. I inquired why the province of Prince Edward Island has not increased in population, and I was told that the young men, when they grow up, left there and went to the United States. The same thing was told me with regard to New Brunswick. In regard to the province of Quebec, I need not tell the committee that a very large mass of our population, and a very good element of that population, has strayed into the New England states. They have been attracted there in different ways. At a time when farming was bad, or at a time when manufactures in New England towns were prosperous they went to the United States. They went there in flocks. It is alleged that there are a million of our fellow-countrymen in New England. Of that million probably 300,000 are settled there in a permanent and absolute way. I doubt if there are so many who are thus permanently settled in the United States, for I have visited these towns and I know that many of these families look upon Canada as their country and have never taken out their naturalization papers, as they say, but work in the factories there in the hope of returning to Canada some day. So you have there about 700,000 people born in this country, British subjects, who only ask a favourable opportunity to return to their native country. With regard to Ontario, I am not quite so familiar, but I have been told that a great many Canadians born here have drifted over to the United States. Under these circumstances, is it right for my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior to lay it down as an absolute condition, as I heard him do yesterday, that, in spite of the government's large expenditure on immigration, they would not assist any of the eastern population to go and settle on the plains of the North-west? I think that is a mistaken policy; and if my hon. friend pauses to think of the number of our own people who are living in the United States at the present moment or are preparing to migrate to that country, he will see the wisdom of diverting a great proportion of this money towards facilitating the establishment of our own people on these plains where there are opportunities for the production of incalculable wealth. If that money were expended in carrying on this work according to a proper system, the difficulty pointed out by my hon. friend from Alberta, a difficulty which has struck many people who have visited this part of the country, would be removed. Now my hon. friend the minister will observe that in his department there is a very small, an almost infinitesimal sum set aside for the repatriation of these fellow countrymen of ours who are in the United States, and who ask for nothing better than to come and settle in the North-west. I was out, not through the North-west, but through a portion of Manitoba a year ago, and I found that in a place called St. Laurent, I believe, four or five men from the province of Quebec who had been in the United States, and who had suffered there, and were happy to have returned to Canada. Instead of settling in the province of Quebec, they have settled in Manitoba and they are rich farmers to-day, perfectly contented and happy. What has happened to these four or five individuals who I happened to meet might happen to many more. Their number might be increased ten thousandfold if, instead of reaching out to get these extraordinary types of people from the continent of Europe, my hon. friend devoted a part of the money to bringing in Canadians whether they may have left the province of Quebec, the maritime provinces or Ontario, by letting them know what the advantages are of settling in the North-west and offering them facilities, great facilities, for settling there. I find in the Auditor General's Report of last year a very large sum indeed devoted to agents in the western states. There are agents in Iowa, in Nebraska, in Illinois, in Kansas, in Missouri, in Wisconsin and many other western states; and I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that the expense of these agents, their salaries, their offices, and so on, would amount to about $70,000 or $80,000. On the other hand there is a sum of $1,800 paid to Mr. Brisson, the representative of La Société Generale de Repatriment de la province de Quebec. Now I do not think this great expenditure of the department is properly appropriated. I think that a great deal of this large sum, which I place at between $70,000 and $80,000, is spent for agents who have no experience, though experience is one of the first qualities requisite for an immigration agent. I do not think that sum can give us an adequate return.

I know that, speaking particularly of the province of Quebec, some of our people who have emigrated to the United States and are now in the New England States, would be delighted to come back. I know that my hon. friend has supplemented that by a grant made since. I believe there is an agent or two who gets some $600. But what I wish specially to call the attention of the minister to is the belief I entertain that if the hon. gentleman would expend judiciously a little more money towards the repatriation of our own compatriots in the United States, men born here, British subjects, who after all have the first right to these rich conditions—if he would so expend one-hundredth part of that money he would reach better results, far more durable results, which would leave no fear for the future. Because there is no question that the danger indicated yesterday by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is a real and grave danger. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) may have seen these immigrants as they passed through that port, with beautifying glasses. I have seen them also, some of them have passed through Montreal, and some have remained there, and they are not as good as our own Canadians, very far from it. I desire therefore to call the minister's attention to this point. It may be that the same remark can be applied to the other provinces ; but speaking particularly of the conditions in the province of Quebec, you could recruit, at very little expense, in the New England States, a splendid agricultural class which you could settle in the North-west. Very likely if you brought these special advantages before those of our compatriots who have gone to the States, you would obtain the same results. I hope the hon. gentleman will accede to that proposition.

I only wish to emphasize one more point. We spent last year, according to the Auditor General's Report, what I call a fabulous sum in advertising. I question whether there is much wisdom in such an extraordinary expenditure. I think we have carried that altogether too far. We must make our country known in some dignified way. I can understand that we should make it known in Great Britain where we have authorized agents, and in France where we have authorized agents, and my hon. friend mentioned an agent that we have in Belgium. We should place every information possible, if you will, at the disposal of intending emigrants. But if you look at these figures in the Auditor General's Report, it would seem as if this country was a perfect circus from the way it has been advertised. We have been paying thousands and thousands of dollars to be spent in Chicago in making maps to be circulated. I think that thing is carried too far. My hon. friend ought also to control the statements made by Mr. Preston. Mr. Preston is the agent-general, having jurisdiction over all these numerous and expensive agencies that we have in Europe. He gets $3,000 a year, and all his expenses paid. With that remuneration, if he is a competent man, he ought to avoid falling into the errors which were pointed out yesterday, and of which I have heard a great deal myself.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). With regard to one point which has been spoken of, that is the curative treatment of trachoma, I wish to say that when the patients were examined for that disease by the doctors and were pronounced to be affected by it, they were afterwards examined by specialists, who reported that the disease was curable. They were subjected to the treatment of specialists for three weeks, and at the end of that time the specialists pronounced them cured. They were brought before the inspecting physician and before the American inspectors. The disease had disappeared, and they all pronounced them cured. That is sufficient for me. I know doctors differ. I know one will pronounce you to be affected by scarlet fever or small-pox, and another will say you have not got it. But when the same people pronounce a patient diseased and after treatment pronounce him cured, we accept that. My hon. friend's doctrine on political economy is about as valuable as his opinion on the subject of surgery or medicine. Whether it is an advisable proposition that the money of the country should be expended in transporting citizens from one portion of the country to another, has not yet, I think, been pronounced upon by political economists in the same line as the opinion of the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I think it is not proper to expend government money in transporting the inhabitants of one portion of the country where it is desirable they should remain, to another in order that they may obtain an easier living. It may be of advantage to the individuals, but it is of no profit to the state.

Mr. MONK. I wish to say that I did not pretend that trachoma was incurable. What I said was that I had information, and I believed very reliable information, to show that it was absolutely incurable, and that once a patient is afflicted with it he goes on gradually and becomes a burden upon the community. Personally I do not know anything about it. I did not pretend, either, that we should transport Canadians from one part of the country to another. But if the hon. gentleman will come down to the province of Quebec and see farmers who have eight, nine or ten sons, with a farm of perhaps one hundred or one hundred and twenty acres, he will agree with me that when these sons grow up and pay taxes to this government, some facilities should be afforded them to reach the plains of the North-west instead of trying to get people from the eastern part of Europe.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am bound to take exception entirely to the view advanced by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that it is the duty of the government of Canada to hold out inducements to draw away the population of the eastern provinces and take them out to the North-west. We are all interested in the great North-west, and our desire is that the increased population we get for that country shall come from foreign countries, those countries of course from which we are most likely to obtain desirable immigrants. But certainly at a time when the eastern provinces are not increasing as much in population as we desire, it would not be wise policy for the government of Canada to make their disadvantage greater by holding out inducements to the young men of those provinces to leave their homes and go west. That view has repeatedly been advanced in the House by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I am obliged to take exception to it. If they have any cause of complaint at all in the east, and I do not think they have much, with regard to the immigration policy of the government, it is perhaps that we are giving too much attention to the west and not offering enough inducements to bring people from foreign countries to settle in the eastern provinces. There may be room for criticism in that direction, and if any suggestions could be offered to the Minister of the Interior whereby we could draw foreign immigrants, who are coming to the country, into the maritime provinces or into Quebec, he would be glad to do so. But, if we cannot get a new population into the eastern provinces from foreign countries let us, at all events, try to keep our own population and not offer inducements and use the money of the country generally to draw the young men of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Quebec away from their own soil, where there is work for them to do, and where they are needed, and to carry them to even so good a land as the North-west.

Mr. BOURASSA. I find myself in the rather unusual position of agreeing at the same time with the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I generally disagree with everybody, but this time I agree with everybody which is a happy change for me. What I mean is this: On general principles I entirely agree with the hon. Minister of Finance and I have taken occasion during previous sessions to disagree with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier upon this point. I do not think it is the duty of the country and I think it is the very opposite of the duty of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) to offer inducements to the people of the eastern provinces to settle in the west. But where I think the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is right is when he states that whenever young men from large farming families of the eastern provinces are induced to go to the United States, then, if there was in the eastern provinces some organization which would have the authority of the government or which would be upheld by the authority of the government that would try to prevent these young men from leaving this country and going to the United States, and persuaded them to go to the North-west, it would be to the gain of this country.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that not what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) said?

Mr. BOURASSA. Not exactly that. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier said that inducements should be given to our young men, particularly in the province of Quebec, to go to the North-west.

Mr. MONK. No.

Mr. BOURASSA. I understood the hon. gentleman that way. If not, I am glad to say that I still more agree with him than with the hon. Minister of Finance. But there is no doubt that if the government would appoint agents in Quebec who would have special charge of the work of inducing young men to go to the North-west rather than to the United States, and if they received close instructions they would, to show their zeal and good work for the government, insist on going further and induce young men to go to the west. I think the government should co-operate with the colonization societies of Montreal and Quebec to a larger degree than at present. Here are two societies that are organized by worthy people who are entirely disinterested, who have no political, financial, or personal interest whatever. These societies are organized by people who have no other view than to promote the settlement of the province of Quebec first and then the settlement of Canada at large. Their first object is to induce young men in Quebec to remain in the province, to go and take up new land in Quebec; and to do this they offer facilities to induce them to become settlers and citizens of Quebec, which means, of course, citizens of Canada. But, at the same time when one family, or one set of young men, make up their minds that they will not remain in the province of Quebec, then they would be disposed to help them to go to western Canada rather than to the neighbouring republic. If, instead of appointing paid agents in the eastern provinces who would certainly go too far in the direction of helping young people to go from the eastern provinces to the west, the hon. Minister of the Interior and the federal government would give more substantial help to the colonization societies that exist already in Quebec, I think the object of the hon. Minister of Finance and the object of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would be met; because these societies are composed of people who are entirely disassociated from politics or financial considerations, and they would certainly have as their first object the settlement of young men in the province of Quebec, and secondly inducing young men who did not care to remain in Quebec to go to the west rather than to go to the United States. I had the honour of accompanying a delegation from these societies on two or three occasions, and I must say that, although we were well received by the government, yet, we did not receive from the government the encouragement which, I think, we were entitled to.

I see by the list that has been read by the hon. Minister of the Interior that out of our regularly paid agents in the United States, the total being twenty-three, with a total salary of $25,700, there are six French Canadians, from Quebec, with a total salary of $5,000. The list that is given to-night does not give the residences of these gentlemen, but I have here a list that was laid on the Table of the House at the beginning of the session at my request, and I find that out of these six French Canadian agents, five are residing in Quebec and only one in the United States; while there are seventeen English speaking agents among the regularly paid agents. In the list that is given to-night of the commissioned agents, I find that out of forty-nine commissioned agents there are only two French Canadians in the United States. I make this point not to offer any reproach to the hon. Minister of the Interior on racial grounds, but I think I may fairly say, without making any comparison disadvantageous to any other race, that there is no better class of settlers that can be brought into Canada than the French Canadians resident in the United States, men who have left Quebec of late years, induced as they were by the attraction of the industrial centres of the United States, and who, being disappointed with the results of their life which do not come up to what they had expected, are ready and desirous of coming back to Canada. It may be said that they had no business to leave this country, but we may say that of all other parts of the population. We may say the same of the farmers who have left Ontario and the eastern provinces. The point I want to make is that we should have some agents in the United States coming into personal contact with the people there, knowing how to discriminate between an emigrated Canadian who desires to come back and one that should be left there. Take a Canadian who has been in the United States for twenty-five or thirty years, who is accustomed to the city life of the United States, and I do not think it would be the duty of the government to make any special effort to induce him to come back and become a farm settler. I think he would be disappointed and go back, and rather act as an emigration agent than as an immigration agent; because, the very best immigration agent you could have is a satisfied settler. The kind of men in the United States that we should make a special effort to secure are the men who have been born and brought up on the farm, who have gone to the United States because they were disappointed in their life here, who are fitted for farming life, and who are ready to come back. I hope the hon. minister will follow the advice that has been given to him by the repatriation and colonization societies of Quebec and Montreal. The request that has been laid before the hon. minister is a most reasonable one. They ask for a very small increase in their allowance, being much less than is generally paid to our agents now. The work done by this society would be far more effectual and more valuable than what could be done by the paid agents of the government. I would like to insist upon this point. The agents that we have here in Canada,—I am especially referring to the French Canadian agents—may be well meaning, but it is a well known fact to those who have visited the French Canadian centres in the United States that most of these people are not prepared to come back at the request of a paid agent of the government of Canada who would go there simply for the purpose of asking them to come back. The best policy would be to choose some good citizens, clergymen, if possible, residing in the United States, knowing these people, living with them, who have no special interest in urging them to come back to Canada and who would choose the proper time at which to begin the movement and the proper people to work amongst.

For example, I happened to pass through Fall River and Lowell this spring during the big strike there, and if at that time we had a couple of good French Canadians who were known and trusted by the people there, I believe that quite a number of French Canadian families would have been induced to come back to Canada and would have made good settlers. I believe myself that at the proper time and with the proper means we could have induced several thousands of these people to return. But unfortunately we send agents there who do not know the people personally, who only meet them at large meetings when they speak about the advantages of Canada, but that is not the way in which the work should be done. Speaking for the French Canadian element I am quite sure that if the work had been left to the Colonization and Repatriation Society, much more effective work would have been done with much less expenditure. During the absence of the Minister of the Interior, the Colonization societies of Montreal and Quebec laid a statement before the department which was supported by several members from the province of Quebec, and I trust that the minister will give due consideration to that statement. I think it would meet the views of the Minister of Finance as well as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) if an effort were made to induce the French Canadians of Michigan, Minnesota, Illinois and the western states to settle in Manitoba and the North-west; while the French Canadians in the eastern states who mostly come from the province of Quebec might be induced to move back to Quebec and Ontario in which provinces they would make excellent settlers indeed.

Mr. MONK. In reply to my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), I wish to say that I did not contend that we should organize a movement among the population of the eastern provinces towards the west. If I announced any such proposition, I beg to withdraw it, because it is not at all what I meant. What I did mean to say was that where there were large families as there are in many instances in my own province, and where the farm is insufficient to support a whole family, a portion of that family who cannot reside on the paternal estate might settle in the North-west.

Mr. BOURASSA. They could go to other parts of the province of Quebec.

Mr. MONK. I have heard my hon. friend propound the theory in this House that we should not encourage emigration from our own province to the North-west Territories, and I differ from him there. He will agree with me that most of these surplus members of a family drift off to the United States, and it would be better for us to keep them in Canada whether it be in the west or in Quebec.

Mr. SCOTT. Why do they go ?

Mr. MONK. Because they cannot remain on their father's farm. They first come to the city of Montreal and then they are induced to go to the United States because they are told the conditions are better there.

Mr. SCOTT. The real remedy for that is not to be found in the Immigration Department giving assistance, but by creating such conditions in the North-west as will induce the people of the eastern provinces to go there instead of to the United States.

Mr. MONK. I think a little of both would be useful. As an example I may state that I met in my constituency a few days ago a father and three sons who were going out to work by the day, and they told me that if assistance was given them by the government they would go to the North-west and settle on a farm. There are no opportunities now offered them by the government. There is no office in the city of Montreal where they could obtain tickets on favourable terms, or in fact where the terms offered to them would be as favourable as the terms given to these strangers.

Mr. SCOTT. Do not the railway companies give reduced rates to Manitoba and the North-west during certain seasons of the year ?

Mr. MONK. There is a harvest excursion in the fall, and I have noticed train after train filled with young men from Ontario going towards the west, but the people of our province for one reason or another have not availed themselves of these excursions.

Mr. SCOTT. Home seekers excusions were run during two or three months of the present year.

Mr. MONK. That is done on the initiative of the railway companies and not of the government. I cannot agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) that a parish priest in the United States is the best agent, because I should think he would rather be disposed to keep his flock with him. I may however, tell the Minister of the Interior that I know of one clergyman—I do not remember his name at present—whom he has appointed as an agent and he is a very competent man, and I think that if his labours were extended upon a larger scale they would be productive of very good results.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I agree in part with what has been said by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I must say that the department presided over by the Minister of the Interior is well administered, but I believe that more should be done to repatriate the vast number of French Canadians who have taken up their abode in the United States. Last year I presented to the House a tabulated statement published in the American newspapers which shows the number of French Canadians living in the United States and with the permission of the House I shall read that statement again :

| Maine | 85,000 |
| New Hampshire | 95,000 |
| Vermont | 70,000 |
| Massachusetts | 310,000 |
| Rhode Island | 80,000 |
| Connecticut | 60,000 |
| New York | 130,000 |
| New Jersey | 3,000 |
| Pennsylvania | 4,000 |
| Illinois | 50,000 |
| Ohio | 8,000 |
| Michigan | 140,000 |
| Wisconsin | 50,000 |
| Minnesota | 60,000 |
| Kansas | 8,000 |
| Dakota, north and south | 15,000 |
| Washington | 7,000 |
| Montana | 8,000 |
| Washington | 7,000 |
| Oregon | 5,000 |
| California | 10,000 |
| Other states and territories | 30,000 |
| Total for the United States | 1,228,000 |

Now, Sir, would it not be possible for the Department of the Interior to have a greater number of agents in the United States than they have at present ? I feel confident that if good sterling agents were sent to the States, they would succeed in repatriating a number of these French Canadians and inducing them to settle in both our eastern and western provinces. We have two colonization societies in the province of Quebec, one known as La Société Colonisation de Montréal, the other as La Société de Colonisation du Lac St.-Jean. These two societies with limited means, have done wonders in the province of Quebec. I have here the report of the Lake St Johns Colonization and Repatriation Society, and I find that last year, that society brought from the United States 1,129 settlers. I am sure that if those societies were given the help they claim from the Department of the Interior, they would succeed in repatriating a much larger number.

I agree with my hon. friend from Labelle, that the Department of the Interior should induce the Roman Catholic clergymen belonging to the French Canadian race, to become agents for the Dominion of Canada in various towns and cities of the United States. I must say that there are no better Canadians in the Dominion of Canada to-day than the French Canadians who have been obliged to go to the United States. They live and earn their living under another flag; and yet, when we visit them, as it has been my happy lot, during the last ten or fifteen years, we find that they are as good Canadians as those who live in Canada. If the Department of the Interior would make arrangements with the clergymen, who I am pleased to say are always respected and have the full confidence of their flocks, and who are as good Canadians as they were before they emigrated, the country would greatly benefit by it.

I am happy to say that whenever we have made representations to the hon. the minister or to his deputy minister, Mr. Smart, we have been well received and have been well listened to.

Since we are speaking of French Canadian repatriation, I may just as well say a word about the movement which is set on foot to promote French immigration into Canada. Sir, no man is prouder than your humble servant, to see the immense concourse of people coming today from the British isles to the Dominion of Canada. I am pleased to see that people from Ireland, from Scotland, and from England are coming to this country, because I consider them the best class of settlers in any civilized land in the world. That they are coming in such vast numbers is due to the fact that this country has been well advertised on the other side for the last ten or fifteen years. It is due to the intelligent work done in England last year and the year previous by Mr. Smart, the deputy minister of the Interior, that we have this year thousands of immigrants coming from the British Isles. You have seen in the papers lately, thank God, that there is an Anglo-French entente cordiale. You have witnessed the visit of the President of the French Republic to England, and I am sure you have been pleased to learn how well the King of England was received in France. There is nothing that pleases us more than to see this entente cordiale between these wto great nations from where our ancestors came. Well, Sir, if we do so much to bring into this country English immigrants, Scotch immigrants and Irish immigrants, let us do something to attract here that good immigrant from France, who is very economical. very industrious and very hard working. We have a few French colonies in the province of Quebec; and the other day, speaking with one of the western members, my hon. friend the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) he told me that the two most flourishing parishes in his constituency were parishes peopled by French colonies. But these people must be induced to come to this country. Some say that the French do not emigrate, that they are so happy to live in France that they do not care to go elsewhere. Well, Sir, reading the papers published in France, I find that every year thousands and thousands of Frenchmen emigrate to Madagascar, to the Argentine Republic, to Algeria, to Louisiana, and if they knew Canada, I am sure that they would come here in numbers. Do you not think something should be done to stimulate French immigration into Canada ? Frenchmen, as you are aware, have special reasons to settle in this country. I believe, for instance, that if there were a French line established between France and Canada, it would be a great aid in promoting immigration. If literature were spread throughout northern and southern France, and an intelligent movement set on foot to stimulate immigration from that country, I am positive that the best class of Frenchmen would come to Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. What is Mr. Fabre doing there ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Fabre is getting old. He is residing in Paris, and he receives, I must say a very poor salary. Besides, Mr. Fabre is alone, and one man cannot do what ten or fifteen men can do. Yet, with limited means at his disposal, he has been an efficient representative of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. He has not applied for any assistance.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Several times he has ; he has applied for assistance during many years, and he has not received the help he should have. At all events, I think another system should be established. Mr. Fabre is a semi-ambassador in Paris, but he has not the time nor the means to go into what is called the province to stimulate emigration there. I think we should have in every department of France an intelligent agent, well au fait with the conditions in Canada, and I am sure that with proper inducements and proper literature distributed throughout that country, we could secure a good French immigration. I therefore hope the hon. minister will take into serious consideration the remarks which have been made this evening in reference to the French Canadian repatriation and French immigration. I am glad to be able to state that Mr. Smart, after visiting France and England last year, has come to the conclusion that the best immigrants Canada can have are the British and the French.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have listened with a great deal of pleasure, to the remarks which have just fallen from the lips of the various gentlemen who have preceded me. I can heartily endorse the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that our French Canadians make excellent settlers in the North-west. I do not know however, that our French Canadian friends can complain of lack of attention to their compatriots in the North-west. As the hon. member from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) well knows, starting from Edmonton and traversing the magnificent region for upwards of thirty miles in almost every direction, especially the northern, one comes to home after home, planted by this magnificent people. Passing along the entire north Saskatchewan, one comes across a settlement of French Canadians. At St. Paul de Metis, away north-west of Fort Pitt, there is a magnificent settlement of four counties, established through the energy of the Rev. Father Lacombe, and through the efforts of the clergy, settlers are coming in there of French Canadians from Minnesota and other western states. This district far beyond the region of active settlement, is already becoming well populated. During my visit I found they had a saw-mill and grist-mill and sufficient grain in store to last them a year or so.

An hon. MEMBER. When was that?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Last year. The question of inducing people, who have left Canada, to return, is one on which I differ materially from many of those who have preceded me. The duty of this government is not to coax people to come back but to place before those who wish to better their conditions the advantages of Canada. No young man who has ever lived in Canada should require to be told of its advantages. Therefore I think the department is justified in not spending time and money in sending agents among those who were formerly Canadians. Whether they went from French Canada to the New England states or from Ontario and the maritime provinces to the eastern and western states. These people correspond with their friends in Canada, they know the advantages of Canada, and if they do not choose to take advantage of them, of their own accord, no effort of ours is likely to make them do so.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Has the hon. gentleman any knowledge of the approximate number of our Canadian people who have immigrated to the United States? Is there any tabulated statement to that effect?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Chicago alone has upwards of 100,000 from Ontario and Boston has 200,000 from the maritime provinces. I understand that the number of Canadian born in the United States is over a million.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. About 1,250,000 Canadians in the United States.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Canadian born. There is no need to spend any money in making them acquainted with the advantages of Canada as a home to which they may return at any time, and the efforts of the department should be exerted in endeavouring to bring in immigrants from England, France and Germany, but especially from Great Britain and Ireland. We should bring in emigrants who do not now know the advantages of Canada, and I must commend the Department of the Interior for its exertions along that line. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. minister to an aspect of the immigration policy, in which I am more or less interested, and to a suggestion I took the liberty of making him some years ago, and which I believe has received some attention from his department. Those who have studied the history of the Dominion know that Canada was saved to Britain in the war of 1812 by those who had formerly been British soldiers or were the descendants of British soldiers. In 1837 Canada was undoubtedly saved by those who were either British veterans or their descendants. The same class came to the front in 1867, 1870 and 1885, and went to South Africa in the recent war. The men from Canada who took part in all these wars were largely men who had seen service in the imperial army or who were the descendants of imperial soldiers. Such men make good citizens. Some years ago I suggested to the hon. minister that a number of homesteads should be set apart for these men in the North-west. Upon each of these a little cottage with an outfit should be placed and the honourably discharged British soldier should be given this homestead, subject to the cost of the cottage and outfit as a lien upon it. I do not know that I would even ask to have the whole cost paid back, or possibly he might pay the capital back without interest, and an industrious man would be able to pay it back by the end of ten years. If such a policy were carried out, it would have the effect of bringing excellent settlers into the country. I happened to be in Winnipeg this spring when a number of immigrants were going through. There were some very well to do families among them, but many had only from thirty to fifty pounds in their pockets. They were beset on every side by the agents of land companies and the agents of farmers wanting hired men. The latter had the pull, but with all due deference to those who think that an Englishman should undergo an apprenticeship to a Canadian farmer, I think that as soon as possible he should be put on his own little farm. A few little printed sheets distributed amongst these men, instructing them how and when to put in their crops is all that is necessary to teach them how to begin. If these men had been taken out by the Interior Department, placed on homesteads, and each furnished with a little cottage ready to put up and the necessary furniture—the whole thing would not cost more than from $350 to $400, which would rest as a lien on the homestead—in a few years, we would have our North-west peopled with a class who would make the country prosperous and progressive beyond measure.

Mr. SCOTT. How would the hon. gentleman settle the farm labour problem ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Let them meet it any way they choose. That is another point—I do not think this country is called upon to meet the farm labour problem. This country is called upon to deal with the homesteader, to get men to come in take up our lands and establish their homes. Let the farm labourer come along at his leisure.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have been for a few years one of the honorary presidents of the Quebec and Lake St. John Colonization Company. During the years I lived in Quebec, I happened to pay frequent visits to the Lake St. John district. I know that district well. It is one of the most fertile belts in this country. The population of that district is about 40,000 souls. A few years ago, it was a wilderness. During the last two years we applied to the Department of the Interior for further assistance. The colonization company has received $3,000 a year for the last three or four years. We asked for $6,000 a year. I am very sorry to say that our request was not acceded to. Our colonization company is composed of 700 people, amongst whom are 500 priests. Every member pays one dollar. These people are working for love, if I may say so ; they are engaged in a labour of love and do not charge anything for their expenses or for the work they are doing in the interest of the country. I am sorry we have been refused the further assistance we have asked. During the years from 1897 to 1902, the Quebec and Lake St. John Colonization Company have located in the Lake St. John district 2,228 families. That is a large number of people. Had we been fortunate enough to receive more assistance, I think we might have doubled the number of people who have settled in that district. The greater number of people settled there are repatriated French Canadians. There are some foreigners, people from Belgium and France, and a very few Englishmen. Of course, some of these French Canadians who came back from the United States for the purpose of settling in the Lake St. John district went away again, as is the case in every part of the country. But the greater part of them remained, and as I said 2,228 families have located there during the last five years. The Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company and the colonization company have incurred an expenditure of $119,000, and they have received from the government of $54,000. So, excess of expenditure over what we received from the government is about $65,000. In my capacity as one of the honorary presidents of the colonization company, I had the honour of having some correspondence with the members of the government, with the Prime Minister and others, and also with the Department of the Interior. We were requested to double our subscription if we wanted to have more money. In reply—as will be shown by the correspondence, which will be brought down, I hope—I distinctly stated that it was unfair to ask that from us, for the reason that in the North-west nobody is asked to form colonization companies and contribute money to bring in immigrants to this country. I think it was a very unfair answer that we received. I say again that we were requested to double our subscription if we wanted to receive more aid——

Mr. LEMIEUX. When was that ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Last year. I have the letters in my possession, if they are not brought down. I hope that answer will be changed. I have no objection whatever—and in this I think I speak the mind of all the French Canadian members of this parliament—to every encouragement being offered to immigration to the great North-west. We are represented out there ; we have about twenty-five thousand of our own race who were the first settlers there.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The pioneers of the west.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, the first settlers. It seems to me that parts of the country outside of the North-west where there are fertile lands should not be forgotten. I make these remarks in a friendly spirit, and hope they will be accepted as I offer them. There are other parts of the country that deserve the same treatment at the hands of the government that the North-west receives. I believe that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior was not here when the correspondence to which I have alluded took place, and I take this opportunity of placing the facts before him and before the country. I have received myself, personally, answers which contributed, perhaps, to a certain extent, to send me into private life—to a certain extent at any rate. Reference has been made to the repatriation of the French Canadians, I happen to have visited the French Canadian centres in the United States on several occasions. I have no great confidence in the policy of repatriating the French Canadians—if I may so put it—in a violent manner. The French Canadians that are in the United States know Canada well. The most of them are subscribers to Canadian newspapers and follow the news of Canada pretty closely. A great many of them, I am glad to say, are in good circumstances. Many of them settled in the United States long ago, when we had no industrial establishments worthy of the name. I have no hesitation in saying, and public men who have followed the course of things will share my views, I am sure, that if we had more industries in the past, we should not have seen so many of the children of the soil leaving us to settle on the other side of the line. I would say also that if we had had a better agricultural policy we should have retained within the limits of our country many people who have left us. I am very much afraid that the local governments have not always done their duty, and are not doing their duty to-day. Speaking for the province of Quebec, I say without hesitation that for years and years—I do not speak in any party spirit—we have not practiced the proper policy of colonization. And we are not doing it to-day. Things are going on which should not take place. The provincial governments could do a great deal to promote colonization. If we want to encourage immigration and colonization in the provinces where the lands are covered with timber and the distances are long, we must have colonization roads. The provincial governments must do their share. If the two governments, federal and local, will work harmoniously together, I think we will have a larger immigration into all the provinces than we are having now. It is good news indeed that the Minister of the Interior gave us yesterday, when he said that he expects this year 125,000 immigrants will settle in Canada. That is good news, but we must not forget that immigration on a much larger scale is pouring into the United States. The immigration into the United States will be over 600,000 people. Last year it was about 500,000.

Mr. WILSON. 730,000 last year.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I saw the figures a few days ago, perhaps I am wrong, but I think it was 650,000. It seems to me the time has come when we must put forth determined efforts to settle this country, not one portion alone, but every portion where there are available lands.

Referring to the Lake St. John district, three years ago the Dominion government gave a subsidy to the Lake St. John Railway to continue that road sixty miles from Roberval towards James' Bay. I think it would be good policy for the government to supplement that subsidy this year. Of course we do not know yet what the government intends to do with reference to their railway policy. If the big projects that are now under discussion in the newspapers materialize, that is to say, if the Grand Trunk Pacific traverses that part of the province of Quebec which was going to be traversed by the railway to which we gave a subsidy in 1899, so much the better; but if not, then I would suggest to the government the propriety, the importance, of adding to the distance that was subsidized in 1899.

My hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) has spoken of French immigration, of which we have received very little. If I am not mistaken, about 70,000 people emigrate from France every year. A good many of them have been going to the Argentine Republic; but of late years the French government has encouraged emigration to its colonies, to Algeria, to Tonquin, to Madagascar, &c. I think, however, that we might get some immigration from France, some good immigration.

The hon. gentleman has also alluded to the establishment of a direct line of steamers between France and this country. We have made so many unsuccessful efforts in that direction in the past that I am beginning to despair of any appreciable results. I trust, however, that if the government is now negotiating with any parties, they will take good care to avoid dealings with schemers and promoters. We have had a lot of them in the past that have simply disgraced the name and credit of this country. I say this deliberately. I hope that my former colleagues will take good care not to fall into the hands of people who will disgrace the name of Canada, and lead to another unsuccessful effort. I do not mean to say that those who have been trying to establish a line between France and Canada in the past have done anything improper, but they were not strong enough financially, and consequently they did not succeed. I hope, without making any personal allusion, that if the government deal with any company or any parties, they will take good care to deal only with those who have sufficient financial ability to carry out the enterprise, for which parliament has voted a large sum of money. I have nothing more to add except that I beg to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the request that has been made by the Lake St. John Colonization Company. I think if the grant of $3,000 that has been made in the past was doubled, the number of people who have settled in that district would also be doubled.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I asked the Minister of the Interior if any steps had been taken to bring out honourably discharged British soldiers to Canada as settlers, and he has not answered that question. While he is on his feet, I would also like him to give us a little synopsis of the plans that have been made to entertain the British members of parliament who are coming out to visit this country. I may point out to the minister that last year a number of newspaper men came out to Canada from the old country, and some of them complained after they went home that they did not see the agricultural part of Canada, that is those parts to which settlers were going. They saw, as one of them stated in the newspaper article, the immigrants arriving at Halifax, they saw them en route on the trains, but they did not see them in the sections of the country to which they were being taken, in their homes. In other words, the newspaper men were kept along the lines of railway and did not go out into the country. Now, what plans have been made for showing this country to the English members of parliament when they come here ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No steps have been taken to procure the immigration of discharged British soldiers as distinct from others. As to the second question of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes), I can only say that when lately in England I was seen by a couple of gentlemen who were promoting the visit of members of the British parliament, and I had some discussion with them with regard to the trip which they proposed to take. The arrangements, however, have not yet taken a very definite shape. Dr. Lunn, that is the name of the gentleman who I think is looking after the itinerary, was here a short time ago; and although we have agreed so far as certain features of the itinerary are concerned, which is to be left largely to officers of the Department of the Interior, the details of the plan are not settled yet. The Commissioner of Immigration is coming with them, they specially requested that Mr. Preston should come with them, and I consented to that being done. But as to the large details, so far as my department is concerned with them, they have not yet been settled. While I am on that point I may say to my hon. friend that if he had the same experience as I have had in trying to get people who come into this country to go where I think they ought to go, he would have learned that it is not always possible to send people just where you want them to go. People come here, especially English people, with the notion that they know just where they want to go and it is rather difficult to change their views upon that subject. The party of English journalists was composed of very estimable gentlemen as far as I am aware. We endeavoured to guide them as wisely and gently as it was possible for us to do, but some little difficulty occurred when they were here in regard to the itinerary and the places where they should go, but we found it quite impossible to absolutely direct the movements of this party. They occasionally developed ideas that they wanted to go to places where we knew that it was no use for them to go. The only way to convince them was to allow them to go and see for themselves. Of course in that way time was wasted. Upon the whole, I think the gentlemen who were endeavouring to direct them did as well as they could do under the circumstances. I am satisfied that they could not have done any better if it had to be done over again now.

Mr. BROCK. This question of immigration is probably the most important question that can engage the attention of this parliament or country. A great many questions are involved in it. We have been told this evening that no less than 1,200,000 French Canadians have left this country and have gone to another country, and the first thing that would strike us would be to ask the question : Why do they go ? Why do they leave this country ? The next one is : Where do they go to ? That being the case, we come back to the question and ask ourselves : What inducements do we offer these people to stay here ? I wish to ask the attention of the committee for a few minutes to this subject, and to put it plainly to hon. members who have been discussing matters here for many years, that, if, when we find level headed, sensible, educated people leaving this country year after year, and day after day, it is not natural for us to ask ourselves : Why do people leave this country ? They must go somewhere, and where do they go to ? I would ask : Do they go to a free trade country ? Why do they leave this country ? They leave this country to better their condition, and they think they do better their condition. In looking at the statistics, I find that between 600,000 and 700,000 of these people have gone to the manufacturing states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut and New York. They do not go there to farm. You know as well as I do that the French Canadians who leave the province of Quebec to go to Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont do not go there to farm. They go there because they find manufacturing industries that are highly protected. The manufacturing industries of the United States have their own country for a market sure and solid. The United States keeps the United States for American manufacturers. Therefore, they go there with some assurance of success. The hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) pointed out to us that efforts had been made to bring them back to this country, to parts of lower Canada where there are no manufacturing industries. They have held out very great inducements because they do not come back to farm. These men who have been employed in the factories will not go back to the farm. If they come back it will be because the same inducements are held out to them that are held out by the United States and the principle of these inducements is that we are going to have the trade of Canada for our own manufacturers.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. A certain number of them who have been farmers in the past may be induced to come back.

Mr. BROCK. That I am perfectly well satisfied of.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. But my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) is right as to the main point.

Mr. BROCK. I am speaking of the great question that is agitating this country at the present time. I am quite well aware that a great many people who have been farmers will come back and I am also well aware that we offer magnificent inducements to them to come back and farm, but these large families in Quebec who have left their small farms disgusted with the poor results that they have achieved there and who have gone to the United States, and have made a great success of it will not come back to Canada, because they find that the conditions are different, that our wages are small, that we have not our own markets, that the government of this country are receiving enormous sums from import duties on goods imported into the country that should be manufactured here, and I give these people credit for having a great deal of sense. As the hon. member for Montreal, St, Mary's, has pointed out, they all read the newspapers. They find out that the Minister of Finance of this country tells the manufacturers that if they cannot do with their present duties they had better let their factories go. These men will not turn to this country under such circumstances. A man who has the energy, the pluck and the courage to go to the United States is not going to come back unless he can find that the conditions are going to be somewhat similar to the conditions in the United States.

Mr. MACPHERSON. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) account for the 45,000 American farmers who have come to our country within the last few years ?

Mr. BROCK. These 45,000 American farmers made their farms valuable because they had the home market for their products, and that is the way they are going to tell the government of this country that they are going to have the markets of this country for their products.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. They are protectionists, every one of them.

Mr. BROCK. Every one is a protectionist.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman's inference in regard to these farmers is that they have not read the newspapers, and that they are not aware of the conditions of this country.

Mr. BROCK. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) mean to tell me that the farmers coming from the United States are men who have no common sense and they do not read ? They come because they know that in a short time they will have the privilege of becoming Canadian citizens, and when they do so they are going to vote for protection as they had it in the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) tells us that the French Canadians do not come back to Canada because they are intelligent people who read the newspapers and that they are aware of the conditions in Canada. But, the 45,000 farmers came and the inference from the hon. gentleman's remarks is that they do not read the newspapers.

Mr. BROCK. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) is arguing backwards. The people who have left their farms in this country have gone to the factories in the United States, and they have made a success of it. They know that the reason why they have made a success of it is that the United States retains its own market for its own manufacturers. Do you know any manufacturers in this country exporting goods to the United States ? I am a manufacturer, I may say, in a small way. Not a dollar's worth of goods leave a single factory in this country to go to the United States. In this country we have had seventeen woollen mills burned down within the last six years. How many of them have been rebuilt ? Not one.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). They are building two new factories in Nova Scotia.

Mr. BROCK. The hon. gentleman lives in Nova Scotia, and makes it a success, but I happen to come from the backward province of Ontario. We, in this province, have had some of these mills insured and some not insured, and how many have been rebuilt ? I contend this is one of the best evidences I can bring before this committee to show that our present policy is an inadequate policy. We have heard a great deal about the great expense of establishing agencies to send people to this country, but I can assure you that the best agency, the cheapest agency and the most effective agency that you can employ is to say that Canada is going to be a country for Canadians and that we will have a Canadian policy. That is what will bring the people here. We are part of a great empire ; great men, not little men ; great men in the empire are propounding great policies for the empire. None of our little petty municipal politics for them. Take a man like Mr. Chamberlain. Do you mean to tell me that he is a small minded man. Nobody will pretend that. What is his policy ? It is a policy for all this great empire including the colonies. This government would make this country a cheap country to live in.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. BROCK. Yes, and I can tell these gentlemen opposite that a cheap country to live in is not a good country to live in. They talk about the cheap loaf in England ; why, one of the strongest arguments against them there is that there are millions of people in England who, after fifty years of free trade, have only a very narrow line between them and starvation. It is one of the strongest arraignments against the free trade party in England that they are wanting to know what to do with seven millions of people who are on the verge of starvation after fifty years of free trade. It is not so in the United States. There they are not talking about millions of starving people. Quite the contrary ; they are inviting healthy immigration from all parts of the world, and incidentally they are dumping upon Canada the idiots and the rest of them that are not able to support themselves. I would like that gentlemen on the other side of the House should consider the interests of this country—not the interests of their party, because I know that the interests of their party are not the interests of this country—I would like gentlemen opposite for a few moments to consider the interests of this country. Are not the interests of this country upon the lines I am indicating, namely, that we should have the market of this country for the Canadian people ; and if we have, then we can hold out inducements to these 1,200,000 French Canadians who are amongst the best and most productive citizens of the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the hon. gentleman tell us when they went out of this country ?

Mr. BROCK. I regret to say that they have been going out of the country all my life.

Mr. MONET. And most of them during the national policy.

Mr. BROCK. Are you bringing them back?

Mr. MONET. Lots of them.

Mr. DAVIS. You would have nobody here at all if you kept on your national policy.

Mr. BROCK. It appears to me that the members from the North-west who come down here do not seem to think, or to know, or to acknowledge, that there is any part of Canada but the particular part they represent. I am quite willing to admit that they represent it well, but I want these hon. gentlemen to broaden out a little bit. We have a great Dominion here, and they must not forget that there is another part of Canada besides the west. I can tell you that we in this part of Canada are always thinking of them. We know of their great success, and we are willing to acknowledge it ; but they should be large enough to broaden out and acknowledge that there are other interests than those which they are advocating. Now, Mr. Chairman, we are told by some agencies who are making themselves well known in England and the United States, that there is no room for iron workers, wool workers, cotton workers and wood workers in this country. I am able to speak with authority, and I say that we at the present time are wanting at any rate 10,000 mechanics in this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROCK. We can give them employment——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROCK. We can give them employment if the government will give us the protection that they have in the United States.

An hon. MEMBER. Will they cheer on the other side now ?

Mr. BROCK. I am glad to see the Minister of Finance smiling and approving of that, but I can tell him that one of the great troubles to-day is the feeling of uncertainty there is. The government of Canada propounds a policy of protection under the form of bounties, but I can tell them that it is only a sneaking way of getting out of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. BROCK. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He says we would want those additional workmen if increased protection were granted.

Mr. BROCK. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did he not, as a member of the Manufacturers' Association, issue a circular saying that we want these people now, and without any reference to protection ? I am advised that the circular of the Manufacturers' Association stated that they could not get workmen enough in Canada to-day ; not 10,000, but 30,000 they wanted ; and they did not say that these extra men would only be necessary if they got increased protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROCK. Wait a minute. I am proud to say that we have got in the Dominion of Canada the most progressive and most energetic manufacturers that are on the face of the earth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROCK. They are willing to stake their capital and all they have upon the industries in which they are engaged. Does the Minister of Finance tell me, or will he tell you gentlemen back of him there, that all the industries in this country are successful ? It is one thing having lots of work, and it is another thing to be able to do it at a profit. We cannot make any money by running our factories half time or with half the number of hands. The government, I know, are playing into the hands of certain elements of this country who are spreading the statement broadcast that we have more men here than we want. As a Conservative, I want to see people coming into this country and filling it up. To do that we must hold out the inducement to these people to come here, that we are going to give them work under as good conditions as the people living to the south of us, or otherwise you will land people here from the steamers and the next day you will find them in the United States.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the old way ; it is changed now.

Mr. BROCK. I beg your pardon, it is not changed now, and you cannot show by statistics that it is.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, yes, we can.

Mr. BROCK. I wish to make no representations that cannot be borne out by facts. I have made the statement in this House, and I have made it elsewhere, that many of the factories in this country are working up to their full capacity so far as the hands are concerned, but the great majority of these factories are working without profit. We have got to compete with the cheaper labour in England ; we have got to compete with the cheaper labour on the European continent, and being a small population we are invaded from Germany, from England, from France, from the United States, and we have no foreign market. Give us our home market, as the United States kept their own market, and having that they are able to invade the markets of other countries.

[illegible]. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The [illegible]n markets, too.

Mr. BROCK. That kind of interruption may do for the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross), who does not know what markets Canada wants. We want to be able to go to the markets of the world, and I commend to the gentlemen on the treasury benches their venerable and venerated friend from Victoria, who is their leader and guide in political and trade matters.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Within a month I was speaking to a prominent officer of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and I complained to him that they had not taken full advantage of the recent steamship service established between Canada and South Africa.

Mr. BROCK. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend agrees with me that they have not taken advantage of that service ?

Mr. BROCK. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Other nations are taking advantage of the trade that is offering in South Africa. The reason this officer gave me for the Canadian manufacturers not stepping into that market was because they had a much more profitable market in Canada to-day, and that they could not supply it, much less a foreign market.

Mr. BROCK. That just proves my argument. I say our great market, our profitable market, is the home market. This is the market we want first of all, and we have not got it. We have to compete in this market with Germany and England and the United States. When we go into this market we find English goods and American goods selling at jobbing prices; and the Postmaster General would be perfectly satisfied to allow our Canadians to work without a profit, while contending against a country like the United States, who keep their own market to themselves, in which we cannot sell a dollar's worth of manufactured goods. I cannot understand it. Probably I should not urge the matter too strongly, because the hon. gentleman has been more taken up with law than with business. But as a business man I cannot understand that kind of thing.

Mr. CLARKE. He is the Minister of Labour.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. Chairman, this is a business question. The right hon. Prime Minister, when he was on this side of the House, pleading with the people of Canada to place him in power, said that he would surround himself with a body of business men who would carry on the affairs of this country on business principles. I contend that the policy propounded by this government, more particularly by the Minister of Finance, is not a business policy for this country, but is a policy to help foreign countries against this country. I do not believe he intends it ; it is altogether due to his absolute ignorance of business matters. My genial friend, the Minister of Customs, who occasionally in candid moments expresses himself on the other side, who knows something about business, who knows that the Canadian market is the best market, who would not like this market to be invaded unfairly in lines in which he himself is engaged, should know better. I am astonished ; but so the world goes. I would ask the hon. Postmaster General to get into confidential conversation with my hon. friend the Minister of Customs and take some advice from him, and he will find that the market we have in this country is a market which we should retain for Canada ; and if we are going to induce people to come to this country who are worth having—I mean people who think and act for themselves—we must make the conditions such that when they make a comparison between this country and the United States and consider which is the best country to move to, they will decide in favour of Canada.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman says that the people who come to this country should be people worth having. Does he mean to say that the people who are coming are not worth having ?

Mr. BROCK. I think the hon. gentleman is lowering the average of the west by asking such a nonsensical question. No one is more anxious than I am that we should get a good class of settlers in this country. I am anxious that Canada should stand well with the people of other countries. I am anxious that our government should stand well with the people of other countries ; that they should stand with a united front, and not be disunited ; that the government of this country should be one in policy ; not that people should come to the country and find a government who do not know what their opinions are, who find out first what the public sentiment is, and take advantage of the opportunity to slide to the left or the right. Let us have some solidity here. But first, as a Canadian citizen who is in business in this country, I want to have this market for Canadians. Next, we want to be encouraged to such an extent that we can employ all the people who come here, whether they are mechanics or farmers, and that we can employ them to such advantage that after a time we shall have a surplus to export, as the United States have. When we have that, the hon. minister will not find any difficulty with the steamships going empty, for we shall have plenty of stuff to sell to South Africa and Australia. In the meantime our market is limited in all directions by the policy of the present government. Under these circumstances, you must not find fault if our steamships have to go empty to South Africa and Australia. We cannot find markets in those countries because we have not even our home market.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If you have not a home market, how is it that you are asking for more employees to help you to manufacture more manufactured goods ?

Mr. BROCK. Under the late government we started an immense amount of machinery in this country, hoping that we were going to have the market to ourselves. The present government gave us to understand that they were not going to go back on that policy. But they have done all they could to take that market from us. They have given to England a preference of 33⅓ per cent. Do you think that has had no effect on the industries of this country ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has helped England and it has helped Canada.

Mr. BROCK. The hon. gentleman had better stick to his last. He is talking of something he does not know much about. Look at woollen goods alone.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You cannot draw the wool over our eyes.

Mr. BROCK. I am talking about what I know, and if the hon. gentleman would only talk about what he knows——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You are talking about a good many things you do not know much about.

Mr. BROCK. I may make mistakes like other people ; I am not infallible ; but I am here to express my opinions. I express them not for a political purpose, but because I feel them. Mr. Chairman, this is a discussion that should do good. It must impress the people of this country. We find it permeating not only this side of the House, but the other side. Gentlemen on that side are getting up and urging protection for different industries. The government find them out when they propose to make changes. I would urge them to consider this matter, even in these last days, when they are on their last legs.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BROCK. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but disintegration has set in. I would ask them to take warning, and when they are talking about French Canadian emigration to the United States, and about encouraging French or German immigration, let them consider for a moment why the people are leaving this country—leaving fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters, and going to the United States. They must be doing it for some reason. Not because they do not love this country. They are doing it because that country holds out greater inducements to them than this country. You are trying all sorts of things to bring them back. One hon. gentleman suggested that we should send a body of priests to the United States to bring them back to this country. I have great respect for those gentlemen ; I believe they have great influence ; but they have not enough influence to bring those people from Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, where they are working in the factories, to bring them back to this country to engage in industrial pursuits when we have not our home market for ourselves. First of all give us our markets and then you will have a flow into this country which will surprise you. I know, however, that hon. gentlemen opposite are so wedded to their idols, that they will not be induced to do this, but they are going to their own destruction.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). After the lecture by our hon. friend, I think it is fitting that we should condole with the Minister of Customs and the Postmaster General for their gross ignorance of business matters. We might then give our attention to the estimates of the Minister of the Interior, and I must say, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me you are not performing your duty in allowing the discussion to take the range it has, because if we are going to debate free trade and protection, we will be here until winter. We had better stick to our text. As for the hon. gentleman for Toronto (Mr. Brock) he might, like the prophets of old, exclaim: 'They have all gone astray and I alone am left.' But even the prophet was mistaken, for there were seven thousand people left, and there are still several millions of free traders in this country who will never bow their knee to the baal of protection. It seems to me that we had better go on with our work and pass our estimates and close this useless discussion.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. member for Toronto has made the statement that a great many people are leaving this country at present, and that overflow he says is on account of the policy of our government. But if he would look at the figures, he would find that when the party he is so proud of were in power years ago, more than double the number of people that are leaving now were leaving then.

Mr. BROCK. How much wheat did we grow in the west then, and how much now ?

Mr. DAVIS. That has nothing at all to do with the question. If the policy the hon. gentleman advocates, and which was then in force, was so good, what became of the million immigrants, which the official returns say were brought in, at the cost of a vast sum of money ? Where did those people go ? They did not remain in this country. I know that the hon. gentleman is a sort of a political Van Winkle. He has been asleep so long that he does not know what is taking place ; but I will just point out two lines of figures for his satisfaction. Does he know that in 1896 when his friends were in power and the national policy was flourishing, the exports of manufactured goods from this country amounted to $9,522,000, and that in this year of grace, 1903, these exports have increased, under the policy of the Liberal party, to $22,000,000 or 140 per cent. Yet, still the hon. gentleman cannot see that the country is doing very well. The hon. gentleman is president of several woollen industries and mills in this country, and I quite sympathize with him. He would like no doubt to put a few more sheckels into his pockets and make more returns to the shareholders, but the balance of our people do not feel like letting the hon. gentleman pluck all the feathers off them for his own benefit, especially when his mills are running night and day and even then he cannot fill all the orders. One of the reasons why our mills are not shipping to South Africa is because they cannot fill the orders they have in this country. The manufacturers of clothing were not able to get the goods they required, and finally had to send to the old country for them. The hon. gentleman has treated us to a lecture, but I think we had better stick to the passing of the estimates which deal with immigration. Some one stated to-night that the 125,000 immigrants we got last year were nothing compared to what they got in the United States. But let those gentlemen take up the figures for the last year when they were in power. All they got was 5,000 emigrants, while the Americans were getting 700,000.

Mr. BROCK. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIS. What then have they to complain about ? We have run our immigration up from 5,000 to 125,000 and the Americans are not getting so many to-day as they did then. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman should be very well satisfied with the work done by the Department of the Interior. Whenever he chooses to take up the question of free trade, we will be prepared to meet him and will not leave him a leg to stand on.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) drew my attention to three or four matters to which he thought I should refer. He referred to the statements made by the hon. member for Lennox that the records show 7,000 Galicians entered the country and there is no record of their homestead entries. If the hon. gentleman will turn up the departmental report 1901-2, page 12, he will find that under the name of Austro-Hungarians, which included the Galicians, there were 1,321 homestead entries.

Mr. MONK. That does not explain, because on page four we have the Hungarians 1,048 and the Galicians 6,550 and in the homestead entries we have only the Hungarians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. You have Galicians 6,550, Hungarians 1,048, and Austrians 620. I have no doubt that the term 'Austro-Hungarian,' used on page twelve is intended to apply to those three cases.

Mr. MONK. That is impossible, because the Hungarians are given separately. There were 1,048.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are given separately at page 4 : Galicians, 6,550; Hungarians, 1,048; Austrians, 320. And at page XII, where the homestead entries are given, the hon. gentlemen will see : Austro-Hungarians, 1,321. I have no doubt that the officials who made up the list put these three classes together under the title 'Austro-Hungarians.'

Mr. MONK. The report of the superintendent of immigration shows that of Scandinavians, 2,451 came in.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are in a different class.

Mr. MONK. But there are no Scandinavians homesteaders.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend will turn to page XII, he will find in the list of homestead entries: Swedo-Norwegians, 229; Danes, 40. These seem to be all the entries of Scandinavians. But my hon. friend will understand that the numbers given at page 4 are of families, not of individuals.

Mr. MONK. But making allowance for all that, the hon. minister will see that the figures do not correspond at all. It would be better, in future reports, to put the column together so that we can see what the actual results are.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) to ask what the explanation was, and I am endeavouring to give it to him. I am not aware of the reason why the officials who compiled the table made a change this year. It was not called to my attention. It is quite impossible, as my hon. friend is aware, that I should personally supervise every table prepared by the officers of the department. I am giving the explanation of the facts from which he will see that there is no real discrepancy, that the homesteads do in fact correspond with the number of people reported to have come.

My hon. friend called attention to certain statements with regard to a form of disease which has been considerably spoken of in connection with the medical inspection of immigrants—trachoma. The hon. gentleman spoke at some length on the subject, and I understood him to express the opinion that this disease was incurable. I do not profess to be able to give an opinion upon this purely medical question, but I may say that the medical inspector of our department advises the department that this is not an incurable disease; and also that the matter having been referred to the director general of public health, an officer of the Department of Agriculture, he gives a similar opinion. These officers tell us that trachoma can be rapidly and somewhat easily cured under proper conditions. Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) called attention to the fact that a gentleman named Faber was reported in one of the newspaper as a physician in charge of the work of inspecting immigrants and it was said he had been subject to a penalty—found to be unlicensed or something of that kind. All I have to say is that he is not an officer of my department. He may be employed by one of the steamship companies but he is not employed by us.

Mr. MONK. I did not pretend that he was employed by the department; but I would ask the hon. minister how it comes that this officer is charged with the care of patients afflicted with trachoma, who arrive in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have no record on that subject. It may be that he is acting on behalf of one of the steamship companies.

Mr. CLARKE. Who pays the cost of the maintenance of these sick immigrants?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is the duty of the steamship companies to provide medical treatment for them, and it is the duty of our officers to see that they are cured of the disease before they are permitted to become permanent residents of Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. And are these sick immigrants the guests of the steamship companies during the time they are being attended by Canadian medical officers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The medical officers are officers of the steamship companies, and the immigrants are maintained at the charge of the steamship companies.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no charge upon the Canadian people except the charge of our medical officers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is all.

Mr. FOWLER. How many of the Barr colonists were there altogether, men, women and children?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give the hon. gentleman that information a little later on. I remember that the number of homestead entries made by the Barr colonists was 1,821.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman can give me the information as to the number of colonists later on to-night?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the total number now. I desire to say a word or two with regard to some matters that have been brought to the attention of the committee and in respect to which a word or two may not be amiss. In the first place, so far as that phase of the immigration question is concerned to which my attention has been drawn by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) and the hon. member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte), I may say that we have, at the present time, for the purpose of conducting the repatriation of French Canadians, three agents who are clergymen of the Roman Catholic Church, and I believe, all French Canadians, and we have, in addition, a lay agent.

Mr. MONET. Where are these agents?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend from Labelle referred to the fact that these agents were stationed in the province of Quebec, and suggested that it would be better if they were stationed in certain portions of the United States. That point, though apparently well taken, is not, I think, a real objection to the plan that is being followed. These gentlemen during certain periods of the year leave their parishes, where they are permanently located as clergymen, and go to the eastern states and labour among the French Canadian people. I am in doubt as to whether it would be a better plan to endeavour to employ clergymen of the church who are actually stationed in the United States. We do know that the gentlemen who are engaged in this work at the present time are sincere and active in the promotion of the work. We know further that their work is fairly successful. Whether we could depend upon the work being done in the same way and with the same zeal and earnestness if we employed clergymen residing permanently in the United States, is a question with regard to which I think there is room for a difference of opinion. So far it has appeared that the best plan to follow is the one we have adopted, of employing clergymen whose permanent location was in the province of Quebec, giving them a small additional stipend and thus assisting them in carrying on their work. We have in addition to that, an agent stationed at Mattawa, for a district to which a number of our French Canadian people are going, to assist them in their location when they arrive. He sometimes travels in the United States as well. In addition to that, we give a grant to a colonization society which has its headquarters in the city of Montreal, and to another colonization society whose headquarters is in the city of Quebec. We have been giving each of these societies $3,000 for the last two years.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these societies incorporated under the laws of Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not sure, but I think they are. The question of increasing these grants has been under the consideration of the government during the present year. It was especially brought to the attention of my hon. friend the Postmaster General when he was acting for me in my absence, and it has been brought to my attention by him since my return. In addition to these expenditures, we give to the Lake St. John Railway Company, and have been giving for the last six years, a sum of $8,000 a year. This company expends this sum of $8,000 and a sum considerably in excess of that, I believe, in colonizing the district which the railway serves. They present a report every year showing the nature of the work which they have been able to accomplish. For my own part I am free to say that I do not think there is any more really effective and valuable immigration work being done than is being accomplished by the expenditure of these sums to which I refer ; and I have no objection at all to assenting to the view which has been expressed by a number of members from the province of Quebec that a more liberal assistance should be given for this work. I am glad to hear from the members from the province of Quebec who have spoken on the subject, that they approve of what has been done, and that they would approve of some further assistance being given in the same direction.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I suppose no selection is made of these immigrants on creed lines ? They are all brought in here irrespective of what church they belong to ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We know of no distinction.

Mr. MONET. French Canadians are all Catholics.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think my hon. friend will acquit me of any religious prejudice in regard to the immigrants that are brought in, as they belong to almost every creed.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The minister says he is giving assistance to colonization societies. I presume they are Roman Catholic societies ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think they are wholly non-sectarian societies.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No doubt they are mixed.

Mr. MONET. What I mean by my remark is this : The hon. gentleman spoke of repatriating French Canadians from the United States, and I meant to say that in regard to the question of religion, the French Canadians are all Roman Catholics.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Not by any means.

Mr. MONET. Ninety-nine out of every hundred.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was about to say that the work in connection with the movement of French Canadians back to Canada has been of slow growth, and has only been developed by very constant and persistent work. It has not been at all an easy thing to accomplish, and I think the gentlemen who have been doing that work are entitled to very great credit for the success which has attended their efforts. In the discussions which have taken place, some hon. gentlemen have referred with emphasis to the fact that the immigration to the United States was something over 600,000 last year ; and figures are given—I do not know whether such was the intention in the present debate—apparently for the purpose of indicating that we are not getting our share of people that come from the older countries, and that the success which has attended our efforts is the result rather of a general movement of population than of any special efforts on our part. I do not think we need to disturb ourselves by a comparison between the volume of immigration to the United States and the volume to Canada. If our friends will undertake to make an analysis of the figures, they will find that out of a total immigration to the United States last year of 648,743, there were only 8,168 farmers, and 80,562 farm labourers. Practically all the rest were mechanics and labourers of the common class, people who congregate in cities, and cannot in any sense of the word be held to be persons who will become producers and citizens of a valuable class.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Does the hon. gentleman know how many homesteads were taken up in the United States last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not got the figures by me, but I believe a very large number. But if my hon. friend will look at the records he will see that while it is quite true that a large number of homesteads have been taken up in the United States during the last year, they were nearly all taken by natives of the United States, or by persons who were residents of the United States for some years, not by persons who have come in during late years as immigrants.

Mr. COCHRANE. How does the minister know that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I know it from an examination of the facts I made some time ago. But hon. gentlemen understand that I will not undertake to give exact details from memory at this moment. While I am discussing this point, let me call attention to the fact that out of this total of 648,000 people who went to the United States last year, no less than 178,375 were Italians. Members of the committee who follow these matters at all understand well to what class of people these 178,000 Italians belong. I may say that for myself I have taken special pains that our agents should understand that this particular class of immigration shall not be encouraged to come to Canada. These people are unskilled labourers, a class of people who will not become agriculturists, and who will not live anywhere permanently except in cities. They do rough labour at times, but they drift back to the cities and reside there permanently. If an examination of the returns of the United States is made it will be seen that there is no reason at all that the Dominion of Canada should feel uneasy on account of that comparison.

Turning to our own immigration we find that we have had altogether, according to our exact returns, a total immigration of 121,631 people, and when some miscellaneous returns from outlying districts that have not yet been received come in, they will give a total of 125,000 people. Of these 41,787 were British, 37,891 miscellaneous nationalities, and 41,953 came from the United States. In round numbers we received 125,000 people; and our records show that during the last year, during the twelve months within which we received that 125,000 people, we recorded over 31,000 homestead entries, showing that if the same proportion as last year be maintained in regard to the number of entries made by Canadians as compared with new immigrants we would have about 22,000 homestead entries made by immigrants as compared with 125,000 immigrants of all classes, during the year. It will be seen that 22,000 entries made for farms by new settlers in a year is a large proportion for 125,000 souls. It is a very considerable proportion especially when we remember that there are certain classes of these immigrants who do not take up homesteads at all, but who have come here for the purpose of farming on a large scale and who, in many cases, purchase land upon which they intend to reside. It will be seen that our position in that respect is not unsatisfactory.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the hon. gentleman any tables or statistical statements showing the percentage of illiteracy of those coming ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, I do not think we have that information.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. They are keeping track of that carefully in the United States.

Mr. CLARKE. They keep a record of that in the United States. The hon. minister was making comparisons of the quality of the immigration we are receiving in Canada with that which is going into the United States. The United States officials make very elaborate tabulated statements as to illiteracy, nationality and so on. I want to know if the hon. minister is following that practice.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think there is any record kept in regard to the question of the literacy or illiteracy of the immigrants coming in. As far as I am aware there has never been a record kept of these facts.

Mr. CLARKE. In view of the large amount of foreign immigration coming in would it not be well in future to keep a record showing the percentage of illiterates and the different nationalities ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It might be. It is quite worthy of consideration. A point has been made in the discussion in regard to which I desire to say a word or two respecting the necessity or desirability of doing immigration work in the older parts of the Dominion. I expressed my views last night upon the question pretty clearly, but there is one phase of it to which I did not refer and in regard to which possibly a word or two may not be amiss. I am perfectly well satisfied myself that a large amount of valuable immigration work could be done, work which would be of the most valuable character, in the older provinces of the Dominion if the provincial governments would form organizations for assisting it and promoting it. The general work of the Department of the Interior could not, without very great expense, be developed in such a way as to enable that particular class of work to be handled. It would be most difficult to carry it out effectually, because difficulties would arise in the different provinces in regard to the work that is being done, and in addition to that our officers would lack that direct local knowledge, that contact with the people which is necessary to make that kind of work a success. What I mean is this: If the different provincial governments would form organizations for the purpose of placing well-to-do settlers upon improved farms I am satisfied that with the efforts of the Department of the Interior considerable numbers of these well-to-do settlers could be placed in communication with such provincial organizations, but it is quite out of the question with our organization to endeavour to handle these people and place them upon improved farms in the various provinces. It would be quite impossible for us to do it, because it could not be successfully done unless through the provincial governments. In so far as I have been asked to do so I have very willingly assisted in movements of that kind, but they have not amounted to very much as yet, because I may say that the provincial governments have not taken it up with any great degree of activity.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the hon. Minister of the Interior now referring to the settlement of immigrants on farms in the older provinces ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. I am satisfied that if the provincial governments would furnish the organization for the purpose of taking hold of these people, who are in many cases very valuable and well-to-do people and who would desire to settle upon improved farms in the older provinces, we could turn them over to them. The only provincial organization which has amounted to anything as far as I know is that of New Brunswick. The agent of New Brunswick in the city of London is a very active gentleman and has done a great deal of work in that direction, and I believe his work has been of a very successful character. We have in his case, as in other cases, furnished literature and given such assistance as it has been possible to give, but until the provincial governments take hold of the matter and assume the duty of locating these people and looking after them when they get here, I do not think the work will assume very large dimensions.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and one or two other members of the committee have intimated that there ought to be some distinct statement as to what the policy of the government is going to be in future in connection with the subject of immigration, and I quite agree that the committee are entitled to a complete, distinct and emphatic statement upon that subject. I should find it difficult, I think, to state a policy that would satisfy all the members of the committee, because, as I said last night, hardly two members of the committee agree in their views as to what the policy of the department ought to be. We shall therefore have to pursue a policy which we believe will commend itself to the majority of the members of this House. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) expressed the idea that the government ought to have a policy and know what it is. I can satisfy my hon. friend on that point so far as the policy of immigration is concerned, because I am perfectly clear in my opinion as to that policy, and so long as I am at the head of the department I will carry it out.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I recognize the necessity for making the medical inspection as thorough and as careful as possible. I find no fault with any hon. member calling my attention to any alleged defects in the system of inspection. It is quite impossible that I or my deputy minister can do the inspection ourselves. All we can do is to provide for an effective system of inspection, and in view of the increased number of immigrants we apopinted a permanent medical inspector of the department in the person of Dr. Ellis, of St. John, whose business it is to see that a complete medical inspection shall be made of all immigrants landing at Canadian seaports.

Mr. CLARKE. When was he appointed ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He entered upon his duties in the month of December last. The instructions to Dr. Ellis are full and explicit and if he is not performing his duty I shall be glad to have my attention called to that fact, in order that the medical inspection may be perfected in every possible way. If my friends opposite are of opinion that the inspection is not as thorough as it should be, I will do the best I can to have a complete examination of the whole matter made. Therefore, there is no difference of opinion on that point.

Mr. SPROULE. There is this difference of opinion, that we have been pressing this upon the attention of the minister for two or three years, and it is only within seven months that he has appointed an inspector.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Then my hon. friend ought congratulate me on taking his advice. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does not seem to approve of that.

Mr. SPROULE. Oh, yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A discussion took place on the matter once or twice in the House, and after looking into it we appointed an inspector. Judging by the pained expression of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), he does not seem to be lost in admiration at that; he appears to be rather sorry, because it has removed one of his grievances. There may be a difference of opinion as to whether the principle of inspection is effectively carried out or not, and I am afraid I will never be able, under any circumstances, to fully satisfy my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) any more than I should hope to satisfy my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) on the question of fiscal policy. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) credited me with the statement that I was in favour of filling up the North-west as rapidly as possible. I confess that is the policy I intend to pursue so long as I am in charge of the department.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am in favour of filling up the vacant lands of the North-west as fast as possible, so long as we can fill them up with the class of immigrants which we are getting at the present time, and which is as good a class as we can possibly expect, take them man for man all the way through.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not believe that under any system of selection or searching for immigrants we will get, on the whole, a better class of immigrants than we are getting now. I am in favour of continuing that policy. I am in favour of increasing the number from 125,000 to 150,000 per year, and I am in favour of carrying that out as rapidly as it is possible for us to do so. So long as I have the honour of directing the policy of the department in that respect, that is the policy which my hon. friends may expect to see me follow.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not able to agree that the only thing that is necessary in order to secure a large number of desirable immigrants is to increase the customs duties and alter the fiscal policy of the country as indicated by my hon. friend (Mr. Brock). If that were all that is necessary, it is obvious that our friends who were in power for eighteen years, increasing the duties practically almost every time anybody asked them to do so, did not succeed in getting large numbers of desirable people to settle upon our vacant lands in the North-west. While the Conservatives were in power, and the policy which my hon. friend advocates with such force and sincerity was being followed, the people were going out of the North-west instead of going in. That experience shows that something more is necessary than simply increasing the duties in order to bring about successful settlement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. However, my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) probably stated his views in that respect a little more strongly than he intended.

Mr. BROCK. Not a bit.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) that while in 1896 there were only 1,857 homestead entries, last year there were 31,000, and that means that instead of having 1,857 farmers going upon lands in one year and becoming producers, last year 31,000 more farmers became producers. And let me remind the hon. gentleman that they are becoming producers in a part of the country in which, by the bounty of nature, the average individual can produce very much more largely, so far as money's worth is concerned, than he could in any other part of Canada. The result is that in addition to having 31,000 more producers upon a large scale, we have the consumers in the factories which my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) is so anxious to see prosperous.

Mr. BROCK. We are paying an enormous amount of duty on goods coming into this country. They are becoming consumers of German, English, American and other foreign goods instead of Canadian.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend says they are becoming consumers of foreign goods. Does my hon. friend deny that they are also becoming consumers of Canadian goods to a very large extent?

Mr. BROCK. Necessarily, of course.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Will my hon. friend deny that Canadian trade is increasing in Manitoba and the North-west Territories?

Mr. BROCK. No, I do not deny it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does he deny that because he has not got a monopoly of the trade, there is no trade going on? I am not going into a lengthy discussion of the fiscal question raised by my hon. friend; but I want the House to understand the policy which this government is following. It is endeavouring to build up a consuming and producing population in our vast western country for the purpose of giving legitimate occupation, without excessive duties, on a legitimate business basis, to the mechanics and artisans in eastern Canada; and it is not necessary in order to give that occupation that we should have a fiscal policy which is oppressive to the people who are actually furnishing the money to pay for the goods which are produced in eastern Canada. If my hon. friend desires that I should endeavour to prove that statement, I have simply to quote what he himself says. It is not necessary that the duty shall be raised to an excessive point for the purpose of furnishing labour for the artisan and mechanic of eastern Canada, because under the policy of this government, by the hon. gentleman's own statement, at this moment we require 10,000 mechanics in eastern Canada. So that my hon. friend has conclusively answered himself. He has conclusively shown that under the policy of this government, not only in western Canada but in eastern Canada, there is at the present time ample demand for labour at remunerative wages.

Just a word or two with regard to the action of the department. We are at present spending a large sum of money. The members of the committee will understand from the views I have expressed—I give my opinion for what it may be worth; it is the result of attention devoted to the subject for a number of years, and of communication with officers of the department who have been devoting themselves to the work, many of them exclusively, for a considerable number of years—that the work is being carried on as economically and effectively as it is possible for us to carry it on. The total expenditure for last year will aggregate, when the amount voted in the supplementary estimates is considered, $650,000, or thereabouts, and we have received 125,000 immigrants. The cost per head therefore of the immigration which has come in is a trifle over $5 per head. I think every person will admit that this is an extremely low cost when all things are considered. If hon. gentlemen will give any consideration at all to the work done by the railway companies and other institutions in the western states, they will find that the figure which I have mentioned is an almost unprecedently low figure for the carrying on of work of that kind. If hon. members have listened to what I have said, they will have gathered further that I entertain the opinion that the money we are spending is being well expended, and that the results well repay us for that expenditure. For myself, I would have no hesitation in going further, and saying that if by doubling the expenditure we could double the number of people we are bringing in, it would be wise for us to do so, and there would be very little money expended by this government that would be more wisely expended. There is a point which has probably escaped attention in this connection, and which is worthy of attention by members on both sides of the House who have discussed this question. It is said that we are constantly losing population in the older provinces. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) said truly that most of the people who go from the older provinces do not go for the purpose of farming in the place to which they go. They leave, as I said last night, because they do not wish to follow an agricultural life. When we find a farmer who has been going to a college or collegiate institute, there is no use in sending an immigration agent to him. He knows all about life in Canada; but he desires to go somewhere else for the purpose of following a different line of occupation. We could do nothing to retain that man except by building up a larger market and furnishing him with a career which will induce him to remain in Canada.

Mr. BROCK. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend and I agree in that. My hon. friend thinks the duties should be raised for that purpose, and on that point I am afraid we cannot agree. But I think that he and I will agree that you must put the people on the producing land before you can have a market which will furnish the means of subsistence to a large and prosperous manufacturing community. My view therefore is that it is a wise policy for Canada to expend this money for immigration purposes. I am quite prepared to admit that my hon. friends, in going through the expenditure of $500,000 or $600,000, necessarily made under the supervision of a large number of agents in Europe, in the British isles, in Canada, and in the United States, will here and there find points for criticism, to which my attention ought possibly to be directed, with the object of making changes or improvements. I do not think it would be possible for so large a sum of money to be expended without there being points where criticism could be made. All I can say is that we have as good a system of inspection and examination and audit as it is possible for us to devise, with the knowledge we have of the matter at the present time; and whenever our attention is directed to any defects, we are anxious to remove them wherever it is possible to do so. But with all the defects that may be found in matters of detail from time to time, as there must be in cases of this kind, I take the ground that the general policy we are following is a wise policy, and that the general results attained have been satisfactory.

Mr. MONET. Before the minister concludes his remarks, will he tell me where the repatriation agents are located? Are they in the province of Quebec, and are they charged by the government to look after the repatriation of Canadians, more especially in one province?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The especial work is in the eastern states, to bring them back, if possible, to the province of Quebec.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. minister does not seem to have any special anxiety to-night to pass his estimates, taking advantage of the opportunity to make what we may call a purely political speech, in fact drifting away into the question of the tariff. I do not think the hon. minister was quite fair to the hon. member for Centre Toronto; when the Minister of Customs prompted him he said that by bringing in immigration he was increasing the number of consumers. He is spending a very large amount every year for the purpose of getting more consumers, but consumers of what? Consumers of Canadian manufactured goods? Why, the policy of the government is diametrically opposed to that. Its policy is to force us to expend large sums of money every year in order to bring people into Canada to consume foreign goods and for the purpose of enabling foreign goods to come in—the goods that might be made in this country just as well as in Europe. These goods are allowed to come in at a low rate of duty in opposition to our own productions, and to supply the demands of people whom it costs us over $600,000 to bring into Canada. We are simply spending our money to bring people into the country to make a market for the goods, manufactured in the old country. The Minister of the Interior says that what the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) wants, is an increase in our duties. I would like to ask him if he knows how much the government has decreased the duties. When he went through Manitoba in 1900, he told the people that they were to have free binder twine, free barbwire, free coal oil and free clothing. They were going to get practically everything free, and he was bringing people from the old country, at a very large expense, into Canada in order that they might have those free goods. I wonder does the hon. minister know that the government has not practically reduced taxation one fraction of a cent. I am sure the Minister of Customs knows it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I am afraid he does not know the first principles of his own department, because there can be no question about the fact that the average rate of duty on goods dutiable and free has not been decreased, since the Liberal party came into power.

Mr. HEYD. Nonsense.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman is only showing his ignorance. He can never have investigated the matter.

An hon. MEMBER. What about binder twine?

Mr. HENDERSON. Binder twine is made free, but the duty is put up on something else. Only two years ago the hon. the Minister of Finance told us that he never intended to reduce taxation. There seems to be a division in the government. One member says a reduction has been made; another says he never intended to make a reduction. But any man who has investigated the figures will find that the Minister of Finance has carried out his policy literally and has not reduced taxation.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman then disagrees with his leader?

Mr. HENDERSON. My hon. friend can speak after I sit down and I will listen to him with the greatest of pleasure. I maintain that as high a rate of taxation is in force to-day as in the last five or six years of the Conservative regime.

Mr. HEYD. That is nonsense.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for Brant may say that is nonsense, but he is only giving evidence of how little he knows. The government adopted the system of reducing the duty on one article but taking care to make good the revenue by raising the duty on another article. They reduced the duties on the articles we can make, which we have the machinery and the labour to make, and then turned around and increased the duties on what we could not produce, thus compelling the people to pay a heavy tax on what we cannot produce and making it more difficult for the people to produce what we can. The policy is entirely wrong.

Mr. MONET. I rise to a point of order. We are not on the budget debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Some hon. members have drifted far away from the estimates. To a certain extent the tariff may be discussed, for instance as a reason why we are not getting people to come in and remain with us, but I hope that hon. gentlemen will not go into the details of the tariff and discuss how much duty was taken off or put on various articles.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am perfectly willing to submit to your ruling, Sir, but whether I was in order or not I was following the example of the hon. the Minister of the Interior, and he should have been called to account first. I shall not proceed further than to emphasize what I have said. If I had not told some unpalatable truths to hon. gentlemen on that side they would not have interjected so many interruptions, but they felt that there was too much force in what I did say and took this means to try and weaken it. As you have ruled, Sir, that it is the estimates we are discussing, and not the fiscal policy of the country, I hope the hon. minister will not endeavour to interject a political discussion on the tariff where you think it is not called for.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Especially is that the case when my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior couples a somewhat free-trade speech with the presence of two resolutions on the Order paper, by means of which the government are proposing to adopt the most extreme form of protection you can possibly get in this country—absolutely the most extreme form of protection, as any ordinary text-book will show my hon. friend, if he will consult it. When the hon. gentleman says in one breath that it is absolutely impossible to get people to return to agriculture and after they have abandoned it and gone to other pursuits, and when he assigns that as a reason for not getting people who are leaving the eastern privinces to go to the North-west and when, in the next breath, he tells us that he has three emigration agents appointed to get that very class of people to come back from the United States, he is taking up a contradictory position. People from the maritime provinces are going to the United States almost as fast as they ever were.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my hon. friend will be good enough to consult the census returns of the United States and the state of Massachusetts, he will find that in the five years since this government came into power, nearly 50,000 Canadians went to the state of Massachusetts alone.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I know that quite a number have come back.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am talking of those who have gone.

Mr. DAVIS. How many went in the five years before?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A large proportion of Canadians went to Massachusetts during the five years this government has been in power, as well as during the five years preceding. If my hon. friend from Saskatchewan will look into the reports he will find that to be the case.

Mr. SCOTT. They were too poor to move before.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is a very valuable remark no doubt, but speaking for the people of the maritime provinces—I am not prepared to speak for the people of the west—I do not think they were too poor to move in the five years before this government came into power.

Mr. SCOTT. Many in the west were.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). My hon. friend knows about that. I was not speaking of the people of the west, my remarks were directed to the condition of affairs in the maritime provinces, and, however valuable my hon. friend's interjections may be when they are in point, they are not exactly in point in this case. I was dealing with the question of emigration from the province of Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces, a territory with which I am, perhaps, as familiar as is my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). I say that statement has been made in this House and not challenged, but verified by the figures of the census records of the United States and the state of Massachusetts. My hon. friend speaks of the people of Canada as being too poor to move. That remark is not exactly consistent with the statements reiterated over and over again by him and some of his friends, that these people did move out during the period before this government came into power.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. May I ask the hon. gentleman, is there a yearly census taken from which these figures are compiled ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The United States take their census every ten years, and Massachusetts takes its census every ten years at intermediate times between two censuses of the United States. That is the United States takes its census in 1890 or 1891—I have forgotten exactly the year—and the state of Massachusetts would take its census in 1895 or 1896. In this way it is shown that in the year 1900 or 1901, there were about fifty thousand more Canadians in the state of Massachusetts than there were in the year 1895 or 1896.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There were state enumerators in one case——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, and United States enumerators in the other. I stated that when I made the comparison. The Minister of the Interior has referred to the gratification which every one feels at the increased immigration into the North-west Territories. But when the hon. minister says : We have increased the number of homestead entries; we have increased the immigration, might I venture to point out one thing which I think he will admit, and that is that one splendid crop in the North-west Territory does more to bring this immigration into Canada than all that the Department of the Interior could do in ten years. I think he will not be prepared to dispute that. And the two good crops we have had in the North-west Territories in the past two years, which may be attributed by some enthusiastic friends of the minister to the efforts of the government——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We had these good crops during the period when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I say that these two good crops that we have had in the North-west Territories have done more to bring settlers into the North-west Territories than anything the Department of the Interior has done. And, no doubt, when there were good crops under the previous administration—the hon. gentleman knows more about that than I do—there was a somewhat similar effect in stimulating immigration. But, of course, my hon. friend knows that there is another circumstance which has had a great effect in turning population from the United States of America to the North-west Territories. The high price of lands in the United States and the cheapness of land in Canada and the fact that our cheap lands are advertised by the splendid crops that we have had—these things account to a very great extent for the immigration coming into Canada to-day, and at which we all so much rejoice. But I rose mainly for the purpose of asking my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior whether or not, in addition to the record we keep of immigrants coming into Canada, the Department of the Interior keeps any record of emigration from Canada? It is very desirable that these figures should be kept. I think, notwithstanding what my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has urged, that if we can go to the United States of America and bring back into the province of Quebec men who have left agricultural pursuits there and gone into the factories of New England, if he could successfully accomplish that—and the hon. minister seems to think he can——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was not referring to the movement from the province of Quebec, but to the movement from other provinces.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the hon. minister said he had agents at the present time employed in endeavouring to repatriate these people. Of course, he knows the conditions better than I do; but I should imagine that the people who have gone to the United States were engaged, for the most part, in agricultural pursuits in the province of Quebec, and that they are engaged now in industrial pursuits, and it is for us to bring them back from these industrial pursuits, repartiate them in Quebec and let them engage once more in agriculture. If that is possible, is it not possible to divert some portion of the population which is still flowing—still flowing, I tell my hon friend—into the United States from the maritime provinces, and direct it into the North-west Territories? Because, however excellent may be the quality of the population we are getting from the United States and from the British Islands to-day, I say you cannot get a better quality of population than that which is going from the maritime provinces to the United States of America. And if any portion of the very considerable sum now being expended by the Department of the Interior could be used to divert these people to the North-west Territories, I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior would be willing to adopt that course and would rejoice as much as we would in diverting that movement of population into that great western country, which would flourish even more than at present if that could be accomplished. For that reason it seems to me it might be desirable for the Department of the Interior to endeavour to get some statistics, some information to lay before this House with regard to the movement of population from the province of Quebec, if there be any, and from the maritime provinces to the United States, to compare it with the movement of population to the North-west and see if some portion of the funds of the government could not be used with effect in making this a movement of population within our own country. I know that the industries in Sydney, Nova Scotia, have possibly kept at home people in the maritime provinces, particularly within the last two or three years. Yet, I am quite convinced that there is a distinct movement of population in Nova Scotia, and, no doubt in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, to the United States. And naturally so. These provinces are surrounded by water and they have means of cheap communication with the United States of America. There are great industrial centres within twelve, fifteen or twenty hours of the homes of these people, and which they can reach very cheaply. You would naturally expect, under ordinary circumstances, some movement of population to result from this condition, and that movement does take place. If we could do something to change this and send that population to the North-west Territories, none would rejoice more than I should, and I am sure the Minister of the Interior would be glad if his department could be the means of effecting this change.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have at the present time a record, fairly accurate, I think, of the movement of population from Manitoba and the North-west Territories into the States. It is of trivial extent. But we have no officers to keep a like record in any other part of Canada. The only record of any kind that would furnish an indication of the extent of the movement year after year, would be found in the Trade and Navigation Returns of the settlers' effects that are exported from Canada. They would not give any accurate figures, and as my hon. friend will see, it would require a very elaborate and expensive system to check the number of people going out of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it be possible to obtain the information from the United States returns, or from any information in the possession of the immigration officials of the United States?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are such United States returns, but I doubt if they are very reliable. They have been quoted from in former years, and have been used in newspaper discussions, but there has been a good deal of doubt thrown upon their authenticity. My own belief is that they are not very reliable. In the United States official returns will be found reports from the consular agencies in different countries, giving the numbers of people who have gone into the United States. But I venture the opinion that they are very much exaggerated.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. the leader of the opposition has drawn attention to a state of affairs in the maritime provinces which no doubt is regrettable. It is very curious that while a certain proportion of people are leaving the maritime provinces and going to the industrial centres of the United States, especially the New England states, there is a demand in the industrial centres of Canada for just such people. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) has alluded to the fact, if not this evening, at any rate on a former occasion, that the great industrial centre of Toronto, and other parts of Canada, cannot find people enough to do their work to the extent that they would like to do it. That is well known in the maritime provinces, and it is well understood wherever our people are going from the country to the city, and yet it is an unfortunate fact that in many cases our people, instead of going to the industrial centres of Canada, go to the industrial centres of the United States.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Because wages are higher there.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, and the expense of living is proportionately higher. The result is that people do not live more cheaply there than they do in our own industrial centres. But the facilities of travel are greater and connections are more intimate between certain New England states and certain parts of our maritime provinces, than between the maritime provinces and the great industrial centres of Canada.

Mr. BROCK. The government should rectify that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The government has rectified it, and will improve the situation still more in the future if hon. gentlemen opposite will co-operate with us. We are going to do it any way, and we will do it more effectively and with a better national spirit if members on both sides of the House will co-operate with us. But that condition of affairs has always existed, and I believe will always exist in this country, do what we can to prevent it. The movement of population is frequently from north to south as well as from east to west. It is frequently from Canada to the United States and nothing the government can do will absolutely prevent it. I venture to say that it has been to a very considerable extent decreased since this government has been in power. I venture to say that the movement of population from Canada to the industrial centres of the United States is much less since this government has been in power than it was before. I was surprised to hear the statement of the leader of the opposition a few minutes ago, when he quoted certain misstatements that were made in this House last year in regard to the census of Massachusetts, misstatements I say advisedly. The hon. gentleman has either forgotten, or he did not notice the fact, that these misstatements were corrected by myself on the floor of the House last session, and that the real facts were clearly stated. The leader of the opposition a few minutes ago quoted the member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) as having made certain statements here which the leader of the opposition said were not denied and were not refuted. These statements were denied and were refuted within a day or two of the time they were made, and just as soon as I had an opportunity of denying and refuting them. Here is the denial and here is the refutation, which I would like to quote to the leader of the opposition. In speaking on the budget last year, I was alluding to what the member for Pictou had said, and I remarked :

> The hon. member for Pictou, in his speech, referred to what appeared to be a quotation, I know not from what document, in regard to the migration of Canadian population to the United States, and he read a passage which had a very strong likeness, although it is not verbatim the same, to a statement which appeared in the press three or four weeks ago, supposed to be on the authority of Mr. George Johnson, who is described as the Dominion statistician. I may say that that statement had no authority from the department, and that the department takes no responsibility for it. I note this statement, quoted by the hon. member for Pictou, in regard to the number of Canadians who went to the state of Massachusetts in the five-year periods from 1885 to 1890, from 1890 to 1895, and from 1895 to 1900 :
> In the first period Canadians went to the state of Massachusetts, according to the statistics of that state, at the rate of 12,050 a year ; in the second period, at the rate of 7,236 a year, and in the third period at the rate of 9,888 a year.
> Then my hon. friend from Pictou went on to say :
> If these figures are right, there was a larger exodus from Canada to the state of Massachusetts in the last five years ending with 1900 than there was in the preceding five years.

This is the statement which the leader of the opposition is now quoting and reiterating. I went on to say :

> The hon. gentleman was well advised in saying : 'If these figures are right,' because these figures are not right. There is a misstatement and miscalculation in the quotation made by the hon. member for Pictou, just as there was if the statement which Mr. Johnson published without the authority of the department. I have here under my hand the United States census and the Massachusetts census, and in them

I find these figures. In the state of Massachusetts the Canadian-born population between 1880 and 1890 rose from 119,302 to 207,601, or an increase of 88,299 ; from 1890 to 1900, it rose from 207,601 to 293,169, an increase of 85,568. But, according to the records of the Massachusetts state census, during the period from 1890 to 1895, the number of Canadians in the state of Massachusetts increased from 207,601 to 251,346, an increase of 43,745. From 1895 to 1900, the Canadians in the state of Massachusetts increased from 251,346 to 293,169. In other words, the Canadian-born population in the state of Massachusetts increased, in the first five years of the last decade, 43,745, and in the last five years 41,823, or just about 2,000 more of an increase in the first five years when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office, than in the last five years when we were in power.

I venture to make this correction, because I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to mislead the committee by making a statement that is incorrect. He stated that the statement of the hon. member for Pictou had not been refuted or denied, and I wish to correct him and let him know that it was refuted and denied.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) has entirely missed the point of my remarks and he absolutely corroborates the point I was making. I remarked as a mere incident —it did not touch upon what I was dealing with—that it had been said by the hon. member for Pictou that more people went into the State of Massachusetts from Canada in the first five years of the decennial period than during the last five years, and I stated that it was in the vicinity of 50,000 people. My hon. friend has given the exact figures and he has shown, that, while there was something over 43,000 people during the first five years, during the second five years, since this government has been in power and during the time when they were saying that emigration had absolutely ceased——

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That statement has been repeated over and over in this House within my hearing—during the second five years, according to the census returns there went to the single state of Massachusetts 41,823 Canadians, and yet my hon. friend thinks he has made a point in bringing that to the attention of the committee. Well, he has made a point, but it is not the point that he thought he was making. I would bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior the warning and the caution that his hon. colleague has just given him. His colleague has brought to his attention the fact that to the single state of Massachusetts in five years nearly 42,000 Canadians have gone.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have brought 41,000 Americans into the North-west in one year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that, but we are dealing with a single state. We are at a very different period of our development from that of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. They may have gone from some other state into Massachusetts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is quite possible. The observation of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) is quite true. Some of these may possibly have gone from some other state instead of from Canada, but in any case we would expect to be able to turn to the records of some other state and the hon. Minister of Agriculture with his usual industry would no doubt have brought that to the attention of the committee, but as he did not do so, I think we may rest satisfied that such cannot be shown to be the case. But, it only emphasizes what I was bringing to the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior in the sincere hope that he might see whether or not something could be done by his department to direct the continued flow of immigration from the maritime provinces towards our own North-west instead of to the United States.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think it is necessary for the hon. Minister of the Interior to do anything to turn people away from the maritime provinces. I can assure my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that the class of young men who go away from the maritime provinces are young people who know all about the North-west and they do not need any coaxing to go there. I am quite satisfied that we do not need to start any immigration agencies down there to turn people to the North-west or anywhere else. My hon. friend bases a part of his statement upon the assumption, because it is merely an assumption, that somebody had said that emigration from Canada has absolutely ceased. I venture to say that nobody ever said that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well if anybody ever made such a statement, it was a foolish statement. I believe we will never reach the point when there will not be some movement of population from the maritime provinces. The people of the maritime provinces are a very enterprising, progressive, energetic people, they are an adventurous people, and they will try to see the world. It has been so in the past, and it will be so in the future. I do not expect the time will ever come when there will not be a considerable exodus from the maritime provinces. But when my hon. friend says, I have no doubt in good faith, that he is satisfied that the exodus from the maritime provinces is as great as it ever was, all I can say to my hon. friend is that I entirely dissent from him and I believe his statement will be dissented from by anybody who understands the condition of affairs in Nova Scotia. There are some things in which you need statistics, but there are some things you do not need statistics to prove. There are some things that you know from your general knowledge and observation of what is going on around you, and I venture to say that every hon. member from Nova Scotia will testify that during the last few years the demand for labour in Nova Scotia has been greater than in any corresponding period in the history of that province, and when there is a demand for labour, people do not go abroad, except that adventurous class that will move anyhow. There is something in the conditions that facilitates the movement of the people down there. They have easy communication by water with the United States and naturally they go to the United States more largely than they would go elsewhere. From my observation I am satisfied that a less number of people go from the maritime provinces now than in any period during the last ten years. A very considerable portion of those who go to the United States do not go to engage in industrial pursuits at all. A very considerable percentage of them are fishermen who leave the coast of Nova Scotia and go to Massachusetts and whenever, unfortunately, you see a description of the loss of a Gloucester fishing vessel, you will be surprised at the number of Nova Scotians whose names are mentioned as forming the crew of that Gloucester vessel. These people do not go to engage in the factories, but they go to follow the same line of pursuit they are following at home, and even as respects that class of emigration it is less than it was before. I know from general observation and information that the demand for labour in all branches of industry in the maritime provinces, and I speak more particularly of Nova Scotia, during the past few years has been remarkably good, not merely in the Sydney industries, but in various parts of the country. Altogether apart from the Sydney interests, the demand for labour has been larger than usual, and if there is a demand for labour, people are not going to go abroad, but they are going to stay at home. I think my hon. friend is mistaken. I do not mean to say that there are not some people going to the United States, but, I dissent emphatically from his statement that there are as many going there now as went in previous times.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not recollect making such a statement as that. I say there is still a very considerable movement of population. I was referring to what had been stated by the hon. member for Pictou, and if the hon. Minister of Finance thinks he can minimize this movement of population by any words he utters to the committee he is mistaken. It is not of precisely the character that he refers to. As far as the fishermen are concerned, I do not regard them as emigrants at all. They may go to Gloucester during the summer and come back and spend the winter in Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not always.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A great many of them do. The hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) can tell us that along the southern coast of Nova Scotia, as well as along the northern coast of the Bay of Fundy one can see houses and long rows of cottages which are the property of men who go to Gloucester and fish out of Gloucester during the summer season.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And they all appear in the Massachusetts census.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know what warrant the hon. gentleman has for that statement. I do not know if those men who go there are included at all in the Massachusetts census.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If they are there they must be included.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They have no domicile in the state of Massachusetts. They hire as seamen or masters on American vessels and sail out of the port of Gloucester or other ports of Massachusetts for a few months in the year. They have their domicile in Nova Scotia where their wives and families remain, and where they are themselves when they are not engaged on these vessels. These are not the emigrants of whom I have been speaking. Neither do I agree with the Minister of Finance when he says that it is absolutely useless for the government to attempt to turn these people towards the North-west. He dismisses that with a wave of his hand and he says: Oh, these men know all about the North-west. I say they do not know everything about the North-west. I say that no man knows all about that North-west until he has gone there, and seen it, and spent some months in it. I say that the people of the maritime provinces do not understand the opportunities there may be for them in the North-west. It is useless for the Minister of Finance to deprecate any effort by the government to turn this emigration movement into our own country. The government might at least attempt it, and if they fail then it would be time enough for the Minister of Finance to wave his hand and to say: It is no use. Until the government makes honest and earnest efforts in that direction I cannot agree in the opinion of which the Minister of Finance has expressed.

Mr. FRASER. I come from a county in which there is a very large number of fishermen and I wish to say that I cannot agree with the leader of the opposition. In former years a large number of Nova Scotia fishermen went to Massachusetts and remained there, and there is now only a small proportion who engage in fishing in that state and who return to Nova Scotia. The majority of them went there years ago and they have remained there. It is only three years ago that so high an authority as the 'Mail and Empire' stated that emigration from Canada to the United States had ceased.

Mr. BENNETT. Nonsense!

Mr. BROCK. You do not mean that.

Mr. FRASER. Yes, I am glad to admit that sometimes the 'Mail and Empire' is right.

Mr. BROCK. The Minister of Agriculture says to the contrary.

Mr. FRASER. The Minister of Agriculture did not say so. The reference of the leader of the opposition to Lunenburg is most unfortunate because there are very few of these men who leave Lunenburg now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not referring to the county of Lunenburg; I was referring to the south shore of Nova Scotia, the counties of Shelburne, Queen's and Yarmouth, and I mentioned the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg because his county adjoins these.

Mr. FRASER. With the exception of Yarmouth and to some extent Shelburne, not one-half the number of people now leave for the United States that formerly emigrated there. I am proud to say that there is no county in Nova Scotia that has so increased the number of ships owned by its people as has the county of Lunenburg, and the people are staying at home. In my own county they are purchasing larger boats and engaging more extensively in fishing than ever before. Guysborough is perhaps the second largest fishing county in Nova Scotia, and during the last decade its population increased by 1,500. I admit that quite a number of them went to Sydney, but as a rule they are finding profitable occupation within the confines of the county. In the town of New Glasgow it is very difficult to get carpenters or masons if you want to build a house, and as regards the farmers every man of them is busy. I do not attribute all that to the present government being in power, but I do say that a great improvement has taken place within the last ten years. When times are good the people stay at home and that is what is occurring now. The Nova Scotians are not a roving people, but they are an energetic and enterprising people and they are anxious to seek new fields for their energy and enterprise so as to increase their wealth. The leader of the opposition will perhaps be surprised to know that in eastern Nova Scotia there is more fishing done between the months of October and March than ever before. They used to be engaged in the salt fish industry, but now you will find them going out in November, December, January and sometimes in February, beginning again in April or the last of March, and they can sell their fish fresh instead of salting it as formerly. To say that the people are leaving Nova Scotia at the present time is not a fact.

Mr. BROCK. You are contradicting the Finance Minister.

Mr. FRASER. I agree absolutely with the Finance Minister, and I will add that the people of Nova Scotia are more energetic than the people of Ontario or any other province.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FRASER. If they can better their position they will go to the United States, but they have a yearning for home because they know that the latch string is always waiting for their return. I can tell the leader of the opposition that the Nova Scotians read, and they are perfectly well acquainted with the conditions in the North-west. I know a number of young men who have gone to the North-west, but to talk of sending agents down there to induce them to move out to the prairies would be simply like swapping knives. Let us try and keep our young Nova Scotians at home and improve their condition, rather than transplant them to the west. Let us get men from other countries who will make good citizens to go to the North-west. We will then have the population of Nova Scotia increasing because the people will stay there, and we will have new blood brought into the North-west. It is neither good political economy nor good sense to say that the mutation of population from one province to another is in the interest of the Dominion. In Nova Scotia we are fairly successful. I venture to say that never before in the history of Nova Scotia has there been anything like the accumulation of wealth or the number of people employed that there has been for the last seven or eight years. Why, not long ago men had to be brought from the old country to work in the Cape Breton collieries, and I venture to say that any man who is building a railway in that province now will find it more difficult than ever before to find men to work at fair wages. I remember the time myself when you would have a dozen men looking after one job, whereas now the jobs are so plentiful that the men have their selection in their own hands, saying what they will do. In the last eight or ten years there have been more improvements, more wealth and better houses along the shores in the counties of Digby and Yarmouth, owned by the men who have retired from their fishing, than you will see in almost any other part of this Dominion. If there is a family of boys where the farm is too small for them all, and if any of them wish to leave the farm to go elsewhere, I always tell them to go to the North-west. But I want them to stay in Nova Scotia, if possible. I bear the strongest evidence, so far as my own county is concerned, that there is not one leaving today to seek employment elsewhere to five who left ten years ago. I think the hon. member for Cape Breton would say the same thing. It may be said that the works at Sydney have done that; but I will make the same remark of any county in Nova Scotia with which I am acquainted. I will say it of Pictou, which has perhaps sent more men abroad than any other county in the Dominion of Canada. Not one man is leaving now where five left before, and a large number are returning. I will say with the Minister of Finance, that you will never keep every man at home; I would not if I could. The fact of young men going abroad to see the world is good for them. But there is a yearning to come home again, and many of them do come home. The exodus from Nova Scotia began twenty or thirty years ago. It was largely due to the fact that we tried to build up a mushroom prosperity on an artificial basis; and when the dream was over many came back. Our young women, too, go to the United States to study in the various schools and colleges; some of them go to study nursing. I know a number of people who did not have to leave, but who went owing to the natural disposition of Nova Scotians to better their position. These are put down as part of the exodus. Many of them have remained in the United States. They are handsome and brilliant, and marry there. But the exodus from Nova Scotia is nothing to-day to what it used to be. That being the case, I do not think it would be well for the government to employ agents in Nova Scotia to induce the people to go to the North-west. If they wish to engage in farming, let us persuade them to go to the North-west instead of to the United States. Let us show them that we have a better and a richer country. That information is there already. Now, I hope that we shall understand that no belittling of the immigration policy of the government, although it may not be perfect, is going to help immigration to this country. I think hon. gentlemen opposite are as anxious as we are that this country should be built up; but I submit that carping criticism as to the character of the men who come in, so long as they behave themselves, should not be indulged in. Let us be thankful that so many people are coming to find homes in Canada. Let us believe that the immigrants from any country, the moment they come in contact with Canadians, become improved. If we are going to be particular to wait for a high-class, an educated class, of immigrants who will be equal to the very best we have in Canada, we shall not get them. Thank God we are increasing the immigration into this Dominion, and they are all finding employment. There are railroads being built in Nova Scotia. Before many days there will be railroad building in the county I represent, and it is going to be very difficult to get men to work at reasonable prices. I remember when the Intercolonial Railway was being built, men sometimes walked on foot 30 or 40 or even 100 miles to get work on it. It is not that way at present. I am not taking credit to the government for this; but it is the state of things that exists in Canada, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite ought to be thankful for it, and give the government a chance when they are trying to make things better than they are.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend from Guysborough has, I think, misunderstood some of my remarks. I was not saying anything about inducing the fishermen to leave the counties of Digby, Annapolis, Yarmouth or Guysborough. I was pointing out that the fishermen who go from these counties do not go as immigrants to the United States at all. My hon. friend unintentionally, I suppose, represented me as desiring to transfer the population of Nova Scotia to the North-west. What I was pointing out to the Minister of the Interior was this, that as some people are admittedly going from Nova Scotia, an effort might be made to get them to go to the North-west instead of to the United States, and I should have thought that the hon. member for Guysborough would have coincided in a policy of that kind.

Mr. FRASER. I did.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not gather it from his remarks. If he does, we are at one on that point. I want the people of Nova Scotia to stay in their native province; but if they will not stay, then I want to see them go to the North-west and not to the United States. I do not agree with the hon. member for Guysborough when he says that we should only make efforts with regard to those who propose to go to the United States and engage in farming. We should endeavour to tell our young men that it is better for them to go to the North-west and develop that country and engage in agricultural pursuits than to go to the United States and work in factories.

Mr. FRASER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When my hon. friend agrees with that, I do not think we are at cross purposes at all.

Mr. FRASER. I am glad the hon. gentleman is converted to my view.

Mr. KAULBACH. I cannot exactly agree with my hon. friend from Guysborough in the remarks he made a few moments ago. He may know more of the county of Guysborough than I do; but I speak of my own county—Lunenburg—which is possessed of a population not migratory. They are satisfied to remain at home, because we have an enterprising people, who give them employment. We cultivate the industry of fishing and the industry of shipbuilding as far as we possibly can, giving them material which will enable them to plant their feet on crafts on which they can feel as safe at sea as on land. They can then feel satisfied that they are able to find employment from January to December on board these vessels and obtain a good living. With regard to the county of Guysborough, we can have no better record than is to be found in the fact that the majority of the crews of the Gloucester vessels when wrecked on the shores of Nova Scotia or Newfoundland are from Prince Edward Island, Cape Breton and Nova Scotia. Whether they are permanently employed on board these vessels or not, I am unable to judge, but I think I may safely say that they are only temporarily employed. They work on these vessels in the summer and in the winter return to their respective homes and enjoy the fruits of their labours. As regards the counties of Queen's and Shelburne, a different state of affairs exists. My hon. friend the Finance Minister will bear me out, when I say that a large number of our fishermen engaged in the deep-sea fishing man the vessels at Gloucester and other ports of the United States and seek their living in that way. Those engaged in the shore-fishing are less liable to migrate. In my opinion, the government should give greater encouragement to the fishing industry in the way of larger bounties as an inducement to have them remain in Canada. In years gone by there was very little risk of our fishermen meeting with non-success, but of late years circumstances have changed, and there are difficulties in the way which did not prevail to anything like the same extent formerly. A certain description of fish that in past years only frequented the shores of Nova Scotia and the gulf in shallow water are now found in the deep waters of the gulf as well as on the banks. I refer to the dog-fish, which causes great ravages among the merchantable fish, but I shall not discuss that question now. Let me say to my hon friend the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) that when the late government were in power he was wont to decry the policy of protection and advocate complete free trade. He was fond of putting the questions like this. Where are these tall chimneys which the Conservative party, when they came into power in 1878, were going to erect in all parts of the country ? Where, he would ask, are the tall chimneys in the county of Lunenburg ? My hon. friend visited that county on several occasions.

Mr. FRASER. I was never there but once.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think I saw the hon. gentleman there twice. At all events, I now invite him to come there again, because I never had a bigger majority than when he honoured us with his presence in Lunenburg. Let me ask him what became of the tall chimney of the factory at Pictou, right in sight of his own office, which was erected for the purpose of manufacturing glass ? That factory was giving excellent employment to numbers of persons in that vicinity, but there happened to be a similar industry at Montreal, the managers of which thought it a good idea to incorporate with their industry the one at Pictou and form a combine.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are now getting down to the details of the national policy.

Mr. KAULBACH. The story is very short, and as you, Sir, allowed a certain amount of indulgence to others, I hope you will not cut me off. This industry in the town of Pictou was manufacturing glass of a very fine character and finding a market for it in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and part of Quebec. Montreal men having a glass factory also thought they might make a little more money by merging that industry with their own, and I think that the hon. member for Guysborough was interested in accomplishing their combine.

Mr. FRASER. Hear, hear.

Mr. KAULBACH. However he consented to allow that indstry in the county of Pictou to amalgamate on the condition that it was to be run in the town of New Glasgow, but the contract was so drawn that no length of time was stipulated in which it was to run in New Glasgow, and very shortly it was closed down. Why did not the hon. member for Guysborough allow that industry to be continued in the town of New Glasgow ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman's story appears to me very long, and it is utterly out of order.

Mr. KAULBACH. That tall chimney has ceased to smoke in consequence of the course taken by the hon. member for Guysborough, who preferred an 8 per cent on his capital to a 6 per cent dividend.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must rule that we cannot have our time taken up in this manner. It is not reasonable to expect us to sit here eight hours and then discuss everything else but the estimates. That would test the patience of Job.

Mr. KAULBACH. You have been very good natured, Sir, but I do not know that I am the only trespasser. Those who preceded me were greater sinners, not excepting my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. BENNETT. Finish the story.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No ; I cannot allow any more stories.

Mr. KAULBACH. I will confine myself to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. If any person will go to the town of Yarmouth and watch the steamships leaving for Boston, or if, in the spring he will go to the city of St. John, he will see that the tide of emigration now is, I think quite as great—I would not say greater—than it had been previous to the time when the present government took office. Consequently my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) is not correct when he says that emigration from Nova Scotia has ceased in a measure. While it may have lessened, I think I am speaking correctly, when I say that it has lessened but slightly and not to the extent that our friends opposite would have us believe.

Mr. FRASER. Permit me a word——

Mr. KAULBACH. I hope, Mr. Chairman, you will not permit the hon. member (Mr. Fraser) to refer to the glass matter.

Mr. FRASER. Certainly. If a wrong question is asked in court, there may be cross examination upon it. So far as this matter is concerned, I knew nothing except that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) was a director. They came from Montreal, they promised to make their product, of which I knew nothing, in New Glasgow, and they were to make six per cent. And, of $1,200 that I put in thinking it was a good thing, I succeeded in getting back $200. And they closed up the works in New Glasgow. All this happened before the present government came into power.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I think hon. gentlemen opposite are needlessly obstructing the estimates of the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) and are seeking to pervert the arguments of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) in a manner not justified by his remarks. The hon. leader of the opposition pointed out to the Minister of the Interior that a large percentage of the population was leaving the maritime provinces for the United States, and suggested to the minister that some plan should be devised to divert this population to the North-west. Some hon. gentlemen opposite seek to deny that there is a large percentage of our population leaving our provinces for the United States. But I think that if we look at the census returns of the Minister of Agriculture and comparing the late census with the one of ten years ago, we shall find that the maritime provinces have been sending, in some cases, more than their natural increase, so that there has been an actual decrease of population. Where have these people been going to? Not to the North-west. In Prince Edward Island the place with which I am most familiar, many of our brightest young men have been going to the United States, and they are still going. According to the census of 1890 the population of Prince Edward Island was 109,000. According to the last census the population is 103,000 an actual decrease of 6,000. If we allow for the natural increase, which would be about ten per cent, this would mean that upwards of 16,000 people have left the shores of Prince Edward Island. And nobody would pretend that they have gone to the North-west. If we take the figures for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, we find the same condition of affairs. The natural increase of Nova Scotia would be upwards of 45,000, whereas the increase is only 9,000. I do not think the statistics of the Minister of the Interior can show that these people have gone to the North-west. They have gone to the United States.

Mr. GALLIHER. About 25,000 in British Columbia, and good citizens too.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am glad to say that during the last few years owing to favourable reports in the North-west a scattering few of our young men are going to that country. But many of our young men do not know the attractions of the North-west. Take the young men going to the Maine woods from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, they do not know of the resources in the North-west, and many of the lower class going to the manufacturing centres of the United States know little of that new country of ours. This is a matter of education, giving people the opportunities to know the advantages offered by our own country so as to divert this emigration to the North-west. If a small part of the energy expended by the Department of the Interior in getting Doukhobors and Galicians into the west were devoted to calling the attention of the young people of the maritime provinces who are bound to leave the provinces, and naturally wish to improve their fortunes, to the attractions of that North-west, I think we should have a great deal better results for that expenditure. If you take Prince Edward Island, there are a number of young men, who, as they grow up are pushed off the farm, for that province is more thickly populated than any other part of the Dominion, and it is a natural result that they leave that province. If we attracted the attention of these young men to the North-west and the advantages and privileges they would have there, we should be spending money wisely.

Mr. CLARKE. I trust hon. gentlemen will not think that I intend to inflict a speech upon the committee at this time of the morning. The hon. minister has given me his assurance that we shall have an opportunity of discussing this question of immigration once or twice more before the session ends, as there will be items in the supplementary estimates upon which the discussion will arise. I may advise the minister that there is another matter I intend to bring up when an opportunity presents itself, and that is the particular functions expected to be discharged by the immigration agents in the old country—whether they are expected to interfere in disputes on this side of the ocean between employers and employed, whether they are expected to inform workmen that a strike is on in Canada and that they should not come ; or, on the other hand, to induce workmen to come to Canada to take the place of those who have struck. It is not my intention to enter into that now. But I think the hon. minister is familiar with the facts. I have had a great deal of correspondence sent to me about it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does that relate to the case of Mr. Murray ?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes. I intend to read a lot of correspondence, but, of course, not now. I am sure that, as I have been so considerate of the feelings of hon. gentlemen opposite, they will allow me to say a few words more before I resume my seat. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) has placed hon. members on both sides under a debt of gratitude to him. We have been affirming, as the hon. minister knows, that the optimistic statements made from time to time during the past five years by hon. gentlemen opposite respecting the cessation of the exodus were not founded upon facts, and that unfortunately, the exodus still continues.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, in the argument he has presented to us, and in the figures he has quoted, has dispelled the opinion which was entertained by his own political friends, and he has completely discounted the statements they have made in this House and elsewhere. It must be within the recollection of the Minister of Agriculture that only a few years ago there was put into the mouth of His Excellency the Governor General, in his speech from the Throne, a statement to the effect that there was almost a total cessation of the considerable exodus of our population which at one time was a regrettable feature of our affairs. This statement was made in 1899 ; yet the Minister of Agriculture has quoted to us to-night a comparison of two five year periods, from 1890 to 1895, and from 1895 to 1900, of the emigration into one state of the Union. He has succeeded in establishing the fact to his own satisfaction, and to ours, that notwithstanding the fact that he was making a comparison between a five-year period of unusual depression and a five-year period of very gratifying prosperity, there was only a diminution, in the emigration from Canada to that one state, of less than 2,000. He has admitted the fact that there was an emigration of 41,823 Canadians in the five years from 1895 to 1900, as compared with 43,000 in the previous five years. That surely establishes our contention that the boast which these hon. gentlemen made from platform to platform and in this House—and which we wish had been true—that the exodus had practically ceased, was not the fact, and cannot be substantiated. Prior to 1896, hon. gentlemen opposite quoted again and again, to the immense satisfaction of their friends, the figures supplied by the United States customs returns. They used to roll them under their tongue, they used to give them to us as irrefragable evidence that this country was going to the dogs. They used to quote statistics supplied by the United States customs authorities as to the value of settlers' effects going into that country from Canada ; but now the Minister of the Interior says these statistics are of very little value. Let me draw his attention to what these returns do show. In 1897 the value of settlers' effects going from Canada to the United States was $1,275,000, while last year it was $1,278,000.

Mr. HEYD. Tell us how many came in from the States.

Mr. CLARKE. At this late hour of the night I will not deal with that part of the subject, but at another time I will give the hon. gentleman the information. But while we are all gratified at the increasing number of immigrants coming into this country, let me remind the committee that we are spending more than five times as much, and did spend five times as much in 1902, to promote immigration into Canada as we did in 1896. Now I will give the committee two quotations with regard to this exodus question. One of them is taken from a paper printed in that part of Quebec from which the Minister of Agriculture hails, the Stanstead 'Journal.' I presume the hon gentleman knows that paper, I believe it is an old established paper in that part of the Eastern Townships. In its issue of April 16th, it says :

> Boston and Maine officials report that the rush of spring travel between Canada and the factory towns of New England has begun unusually early this spring. The tide of emigration from the Quebec central district and the lower St. Lawrence still continues. The United States immigration agents, both on the Boston and Maine and the Grand Trunk Railway, are having a lively time in their efforts to enforce the recent immigration laws pased by the States.

The last statement I will quote is made by the gentleman who occupies the position of secretary of the Ontario Bureau of Labour. That gentleman is a political friend of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and occupies a prominent position in connection with the industrial statistics of the province of Ontario. In an interview to the Toronto 'Star,' the junior Liberal organ in the city of Toronto, on Friday, March 6, 1903, I find this statement :

> Mr. Robert Glockling, secretary of the Ontario Bureau of Labour, stated to-day that he had not heard of any great scarcity of iron workers as was complained of by the deputation of employers yesterday. He says that one reason of a scarcity here is that the workmen are going to the States, not, as was stated by one of the deputation, because they can get higher wages there so much as because they are not given a chance to work under as fair conditions here.

I wish the Minister of Labour were present to hear what the secretary of the Ontario Bureau of Labour has to say with regard to these conditions.

Mr. Glockling added that he knew one Ontario city where there were forty or fifty 'skilled mechanics' walking the streets because they were not being given a chance to work under what they considered fair conditions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What does that mean ?

Mr. CLARKE. It means that the conditions under which they live at the present time are so unfavourable, in their estimation, that they prefer either not to work, or to go to the United States for better conditions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What are the conditions under which they live ?

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentlemen when they came into office, declared they would make this a cheap country to live in, but they have increased the cost of living substantially to these men, the burden of taxation which has been placed upon them is very much heavier, as the hon. gentleman knows.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And the hon. gentleman wants to increase it.

Mr. CLARKE. I gave him the figures two or three weeks ago in connection with that matter. But I leave it to the hon. gentleman to settle with Mr. Glockling, his political friend ; and I wish the Minister of Finance would communicate with him and ask for the reasons why our workmen still continue to go to the United States, and why the conditions under which they labour are not as favourable as they are in the neighbouring republic.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understood my hon. friend to say it was not a question of wages. He says they go away because the cost of living is greater here.

Mr. CLARKE. I am quoting from Mr. Glockling. It is Mr. Glockling who says it is not a question of wages, but it is the unfair conditions under which they labour. I have shown by these extracts that the exodus has not by any means ceased, but I hope to live to see the day when it will be completely stopped, or almost completely stopped. I hope to live to see the day when the policy of Canada for Canadians will be accepted throughout the Dominion. But that can only be done, I think, by giving our manufacturers an adequate protection, such as they do not receive at the present time. I think if abundant employment is found in Canada to-day for our workingmen, it is due to the fact that the minister and his associates did not have the courage of their convictions, but that when they came into office, realizing their responsibilities, they determined to leave the protective policy which they found on the statute-book, practically as it was. I believe that if there was a readjustment of the tariff, instead of bringing in annually $80,000,000 or $100,000,000 of manufactured goods, the product of foreign workshops, into this country we would be able to manufacture the bulk of those articles, and find employment for a larger number of workmen many of whom now go to the United States and the conditions of life would be improved because our manufacturers would have control of the home market.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will have to make allowances for the hon. gentleman at this late hour indulging in such a discussion because he finds that the conditions are very embarrassing to him. He is trying to persuade himself that there is something in the condition of the industries of the country that requires improvement, but he forgets that never in the history of Canada have the industries been so prosperous, that never has labour been so much in demand, that never have wages been so high and that never has the condition of the workmen been so good. With that fact before the eyes of every man in the Dominion we will leave the question.

Mr. CLARKE. I would be glad to leave it except for this fact that the hon. Minister of Finance knows as well as any member of this committee or anybody in Canada that since the hon. gentleman came into office the denunciation of protection as the policy of this country has practically ceased, that the hon. gentleman's colleagues gave an assurance to the manufacturers of Canada on the eve of the election of 1896 that if the Liberal party were returned to power there would be no change made in the tariff inimical to their interests, and if these manufacturing industries are prosperous it is because those managing them have been given the assurance that the Liberal party for eighteen years had been preaching a doctrine that they did not intend to carry out, that they had been saying what they did not mean and that as a result of their refraining from carrying out their policy those who had capital to invest invested it more freely than in 1896 when every manufacturer in Canada had to fight for his life.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If that be the condition why does the hon. gentleman want to change it ?

Mr. CLARKE. Because we think the conditions could be made much better.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The conditions undoubtedly could be changed if we went back to the dark days of the so-called national policy and if that policy were brought into operation hon. gentlemen could not present the magnificent statement that my hon. friend the hon. Minister of the Interior is able to present here in regard to immigration coming into the country. They could go back to the conditions that then prevailed when there was stagnation in the North-west Territories in comparison with the conditions that are prevailing to-day. Those conditions might be brought back, but the public opinion of Canada would take good care that they are not brought back by putting again in power the men under whose policy and government those conditions existed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think we ought to send for the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) because I think the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is making a strong bid for the succession for which he was named by his colleague the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) about seven or eight months ago. The hon. minister told us about the workshops booming, warehouses being full, and everything being lovely in his budget speech, and then six or eight weeks after he had to face the condition of things which he proposes to meet by the motion which is now on the Order paper. He tells us that everything is delightful and that nothing is required to be done, but now he has his motion on the Order paper forced upon him by the condition of things in respect to the iron and steel industry which, only a few weeks before he thought was highly satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was under the policy of this government that the steel industry was developed while under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite its condition was such that it was unable to pay any dividends. That was the condition of the industry under the national policy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend has brought down a policy of bounties to the steel industry which since 1887 he and his friends have denounced through the length and breadth of the country ; and if it is necessary the quotations of some of these utterances can be got and given to him.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And if necessary some quotations can be given from the utterances of the hon. leader of the opposition about that time. No great profit would come from our consideration of these things.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I challenge my hon. friend now or at any time to produce one single line to the effect that he has mentioned, and he can take his time to look up the quotations and bring them down because to bring them down is impossible.

Mr. WILSON. I have been listening very attentively to the speeches that have been made.

An hon. MEMBER. We do not want any more.

Mr. WILSON. I will speak just as long as I like. I suppose I have the same rights as anybody else in this House and when I want information to get up and ask for it. I would like to ask the hon. minister if a successor has been appointed to Mr. Devlin in Dublin and if there is what his salary is to be and whether he is to be furnished with a house as Mr. Devlin was. I should like to know why a house was furnished to the agent in Dublin and not to the agent at London. Then, I see that we have Mr. G. B. Smart, inspector of pauper children at a salary of $1,400 a year. I do not know what his duties are. I do not know where the pauper children come from. Then, I see that there is Mr. Corry——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman wants these questions answered he will have to ask one at a time as my memory is short.

Mr. WILSON. Has there been a successor appointed to Mr. Devlin, if so at what salary and is there to be a free house furnished him ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The position of agent at Dublin is now being filled by Mr. W. Webster, who was formerly in the service, with a salary of $1,500. He was formerly Mr. Devlin's assistant. He is now in the same place and no successor has been appointed to Mr. Devlin.

Mr. WILSON. Would the hon. minister tell us what Mr. Smart's duties are ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is an arrangement under which pauper children who from time to time are sent out under the direction of the board of trade are inspected and the board of trade pays the cost of the inspection. The board of trade asks us to provide an inspector who shall go from place to place and see the children who are placed with farmers in different parts of Canada. The inspection is required to be a personal and careful examination, so that the inspector goes there, sees the child and ascertains how he is getting along. It is the business of this inspector to make this inspection.

Mr. WILSON. Does the board of trade pay him ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The report goes to the board of trade and the expense are paid by it.

Mr. WILSON. Well then there is Mr. Corry, inspector with a salary of $2,400.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Corry is not an officer of the Immigration Department.

Mr. WILSON. Is Mr. White ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, Mr. White is travelling inspector of agencies in the United States.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. W. J. White drew a salary of $2,200; for board and lodging, $807; for railway fare, $614; for pullman cars, $403; and we appear to have paid $14.75 for his washing. Why should we pay for his washing?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. White is travelling inspector of agencies in the western states, and he is practically on the road all the time. He puts in his bill and he expects it to be paid. The expenses are audited and we have no reason to think that they are excessive.

Mr. WILSON. Do you pay the laundry bills of all your agents?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The rule is that we pay all expenses that are incurred when the officers are away from home. I do not know what the rule is about the laundry, but if the hon. gentleman desires I will bring down that information to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to have that because there is another gentleman here with a laundry bill of $31.40, and we do not seem to pay the laundry bills of all these officers. The annual report of the department for 1902 shows that there came from the United States 26,388 immigrants, and Mr. Smart brought down to the Committee on Agriculture a report showing that the salaried agents sent to this country 23,781 immigrants, and that the agents on commission sent 3,822 immigrants which would make a total of 27,543 from the United States, or 1,155 more than the annual report shows. What is the explanation of that discrepancy?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy informs me that he was asked to make out a statement showing the number of persons that were sent by each agent and he compiled that from the reports of the agents. The number stated in the annual report is the number reported by the immigration commissioner at Winnipeg. The number counted by the officers on the trains would naturally be slightly different from the approximate statement made from the agents' reports. The hon. gentleman must understand that difference without any explanation.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. gentleman should give an explanation of the discrepancy. The figures furnished by his deputy ought to be reliable.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have given the explanation.

Mr. WILSON. It is not very satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nothing more accurate could be presented. The Committee on Agriculture asked the deputy minister to give as nearly as he could the number of persons sent by the different agents, and he made up a statement from their reports. The agents handle a large number of people and send them along, so that they cannot in the nature of things make a report that is absolutely accurate, because some of the people may not come to Canada. On the other hand the agents on the trains who count the people reported in Canada, must get pretty near to the exact number, but it would be absolutely impossible that there should not be a discrepancy between the two.

Mr. POPE. I appreciate how tired you are, Mr. Chairman, after having worked eight hours, and consequently I shall be brief. But you are not the only tired man in political life to-day. The cabinet, or so much as remains of it, has been working overtime for the last twenty-four hours, and they must be also somewhat fatigued.

The hon. member for Lennox has complained that the figures given by the Minister of the Interior and those given by his officers do not agree. That is not strange. The cabinet do not agree, and why should we expect figures to agree which emanate from a body of men who do not agree? I can understand that immigration is a touching question for hon. gentlemen opposite at this moment. There has been a serious emigration from the cabinet in the last twenty-four hours, and it is a subject which they naturally would not wish to discuss at present. As we shall be called upon to discuss that question at a later hour to-day, it is not necessary that I should dwell further upon it. But I wish to assure the members of the cabinet who are here to-night of my sympathy for them in the great loss they have sustained; and I think, having had such an exhaustive discussion on this question and after the assurance of the hon. Minister of the Interior that we shall have three times as much discussion upon it as we have had this evening, we might now, with the permission of the leader of the opposition, pass this item.

Some resolutions reported.

COMMITTEE ON THE ELECTION LAWS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) was placed on the committee in connection with the Bill relating to the election laws, and as he is absent, the suggestion has been made that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) be appointed on the committee in his place. If agreeable, I will make a motion to that effect, so that the hon. member may be able to attend the meeting of the committee which takes place to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to state what business we may expect to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. After the ministerial explanations, which are set down as a special government order, Supply will be moved, and the Minister of the Interior will resume his estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 16, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RESIGNATION OF THE HON. MR. BLAIR.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is my duty to give to the House the explanations to which it is entitled concerning the resignation of my hon. friend the member for the city of St. John, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Blair), as member of the cabinet and Minister of Railways.

In view of the rapid development of the country, of the flood of immigration into the fertile section west of Lake Superior, of the industrial movement in the older provinces, the government have come to the conclusion that a new transcontinental railway, between the east and the west to the Pacific ocean, has become a necessity. To this view the hon. member has always expressed his assent, but a difference of opinion arose between him and his colleagues as to the mode of construction and operation.

No final plan has yet been adopted, though a basis has been reached for the construction of a line to be built and owned by the government through a commission, but to be operated by a company under special provisions to make it a common highway to all railway companies from Moncton to Winnipeg, and for the construction of a line to be built by a company with the assistance of the government from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean at Port Simpson.

To this plan the hon. member has two objections :

1. To the construction of that section of the above mentioned line lying between Moncton and Quebec, he being of the opinion that such a line would parallel the Intercolonial Railway, an opinion from which we entirely dissent.

2. To the immediate construction of the section between Quebec and the Pacific ocean and to the suggested mode of construction.

In consequence of this difference of opinion between his colleagues and himself, the hon. member, on the 10th instant, tendered his resignation to the Prime Minister. Conferences then took place between the Prime Minister, with the assistance of one of his colleagues, and the hon. member, and finally, on the 14th, his resignation was accepted.

The Prime Minister, whilst expressing for himself and the other members of the administration his great regret at the severance from the cabinet of an able colleague, is happy to believe that the hon. member, upon all questions of public policy, except this one, is in accord with the government.

Hon. A. G. BLAIR (St. John City). Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) having made the statement and explanation referring to my withdrawal from the cabinet it is my privilege, and I think it becomes my duty to make a statement as the retiring minister in my own behalf. I am not unaware, Mr. Speaker, that the step which I have taken is one of the gravest possible character. I regret as much as any gentleman on this side of the House can regret, the severing of the ties which have existed between myself and my colleagues since my entry into the administration. I can well realize that the effect of cabinet changes at this moment will not only tend to delay and protract the business of an already very prolonged session, but will occasion very much embarrassment to the party, and will be a source of anxiety to the Prime Minister himself, a thing which above all I would gladly avoid.

The step which I have taken, Sir, can only be justified in respect of my duty to my constituency; of my duty to the party; of my duty to this House and of my duty to the country, upon the clearest and plainest and strongest grounds. And, Sir, I think I will be in the judgment of every member of this House when I say, that such a course on my part must have been taken by impulsion of the gravest character. No minister filling a distinguished position in the cabinet would hastily and lightly cast aside his position, the influence and the advantages which it legitimately carries with it, and all that that change implies.

For myself personally, I have endeavoured while I have filled this office to discharge its duties in a manner which would not only redound to my own individual credit, but which would be of benefit to the country as a whole. And, Sir, I have not spared time nor labour to achieve these results. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, the step which I have felt called upon to take, I have taken in no light or in no frivolous way. I have not acted in any spirit of caprice, although I find the statement generally made that I have. I have not acted because of any pique, nor for any small sized feeling of such a character. I have left the administration for reasons which I am bound to state to the House, and which have to some extent been stated by the right hon. the Prime Minister. I trust, Sir, that those reasons, while they may not appeal to the judgment of every one, will at least enable my friends in whose good opinion I desire to stand well, my constituents whom I represent in this House, and my province which I have represented in this government; I trust that when I state my reasons I will be able to satisfy them that whether I have erred or otherwise, I have at all events sought in this my action to do what I believed to be my duty.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, speculation is very rife as to the causes which have impelled me to this action. I see it very widely stated in the public press that the fact that some of the members on this side of the House pressed and successfully carried amendments to the railway commission Bill was regarded by me as an offence and was one of the predisposing causes creating dissatisfaction and discontent, and leading me to seriously consider the question of my resignation. I do not know by what standard these people would measure me; I do not know in what balance they would have me weighed, but I trust there is nobody who entertains such a contemptible opinion of me as to suppose that the action of these members in that regard would cause me any offence. When that Bill came before the House I thought it was treated fairly. I had no reason to complain, and until I saw the statement made with such confidence in the newspaper press of this country, I was not aware that I had entertained such a feeling or had been offended by the action of any one of the members of this House. Why, Sir, some of the clauses that were treated in that way in this House and upon which my view did not carry; some of these clauses were of a purely every day character, and while I was bound to have an opinion and while having that opinion I did not fail to express it, yet I am bound to acknowledge and I am free to say that there was no member in the House who would not be as well entitled to express a sound judgment on these clauses as I myself was. I endeavoured while that Bill was going through the House in some two or three instances, to have hon. members know and feel that so far as I could control the consideration of the question I regarded it as an open one, and I stated that if hon. members felt that I was wrong they might freely say so by their amendments and by their speeches. I therefore trust that none of my hon. friends who took that course will do me the injustice to believe that their action had the slightest impression on my mind. Another cause that has been assigned for my present action is that I had no assistance from my colleagues in the council in pushing that Bill through the committee. I dismiss that with a similar observation. I did not ask any of my colleagues of the ministry to help me because I felt that not having studied the Bill as I had done they could not be so familiar with its contents and so well informed upon it as I was to meet the objections that were being made in the House. Had I asked any of them to do so, I want to say openly and publicly that there is no reason in the world so far as I know why they would not have cheerfully and readily come to my help.

Another statement which if possible has had a much wider circulation and which seems to have met with some acceptance in quarters that I would not have thought were likely to accept it; is the statement that I have long been considering the intention of resigning owing to rebuffs and continued ill-treatment received at the hands of my colleagues. Now, Sir, I want to say emphatically here that until the question of the Grand Trunk Pacific came up for consideration before council, the thought of resignation never entered into my mind. And if I had not seen the statement in the papers I would not have been informed as to the conditions which it is said prevailed in council, and as to the treatment I was receiving from my colleagues. Let me say that I know of no instance—and should my separation now prove to be a permanent separation—I am bound to say that I can acquit my late colleagues of any charge of that kind so far as I myself have any personal knowledge. I have heard the name of Mr. Sifton, the Minister of the Interior mentioned as having been caballing against me, and endeavouring to undermine me and my influence in the Cabinet. Well, if that be the case he has succeeded most admirably in concealing that from my knowledge at all events. I never had it in my mind that that gentleman's conduct towards me was such as has been represented. I do not know, nor do I suspect any member of the council from which I have just retired, of having treated me in any such manner. But if there was any evidence required as to the opinions which I held and as to my feeling towards the Minister of the Interior, I think I may at this moment appeal to the fact that when during his absence he was assailed in a manner which I thought was unfair, my voice was the first voice raised in his defence, feeble though my voice may have been. Now, Mr. Speaker, the sole and only cause which has led me to take this regrettable step; and I own it frankly to the House that it is regrettable to me as I know that it must be regrettable to my friends not only here but in my own province—the only cause which has led me to take that regrettable step is because I have been unable to justify to my mind, to my own conscience, and to my own duty to my people, the support of the proposal which the government have decided upon making to this House and the asking of legislation to pass with respect to the project known as the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

It will naturally occur to the minds of members on both sides of the House that it is a matter of extreme difficulty for me to enter upon a discussion of that question. If I were otherwise disposed to do so, I am unable to do it for the very sufficient reason that that project is not before this House at the present time. Nor do I know, from the remark which was made by the right hon. Prime Minister when he read his statement, the form in which that project will be submitted. But this much I do know, from that statement, that the chief troubles which I felt the government must necessarily experience if it forced on that project, have been adhered to. My objections, I may state briefly—not all of them. I will not enter on the subject at present with any degree of particularity, reserving what I have to say upon it for a later period, when it can be more properly and more sufficiently discussed. My objections were of this character. I objected to the government constructing another government road from Lévis to Moncton. I objected to it because it paralleled the Intercolonial Railway in my opinion, without a doubt. You cannot build a line between the same points without practically paralleling the Intercolonial Railway. However, I will not enter upon any elaboration of that point; I will merely state my position. I object to another government road, even if it does not parallel the Intercolonial Railway. We in the province of New Brunswick are not asking for it, unless there are some who want to see the money spent there, and that class of people, I apprehend, are not a class who will influence largely the action of this government or the legislation of this parliament. Another objection was that I thought we were proceeding with undue haste. I have no hesitation in stating that I am as much in favour of the construction of another transcontinental line as any other member of this parliament; but I am not in favour of impetuously rushing into the construction of a transcontinental line from Quebec, through an unknown country to Winnipeg and the west, until we know something about it—until we have the fullest information about it. The project is one of very great magnitude, and should be dealt with only after the maturest deliberation.

Now, Sir, without having this Bill before us, without being able to do more than simply indicate the order of events, I am going to state now to the House what occurred in connection with my resignation. On Saturday, the 4th of July, I became convinced that it was determined to build a line of government railway from Moncton to Quebec, and to proceed at once with the construction, without surveys, from Quebec to Winnipeg; and, Sir, feeling convinced, knowing, in fact, that what my right hon. friend has stated to-day was then decided upon, I caused it to be made known that that policy, not to speak of other features which will be elaborated later, was not a policy to which I could commit myself as a member of the government; that I could not take the responsibility of bringing before parliament, and pressing and urging upon the acceptance of parliament, and calling for the approval of the country, a project of that character. That necessarily would involve and did involve, in the mind of anybody who had heard me, and who knew the position which I felt constrained to take, nothing short of a withdrawal from the government; and on Monday, I conveyed to the right hon. the Prime Minister my resignation as a member of the cabinet, with a written statement accompanying that resignation. I pointed out at the conclusion of my letter that I realized that there was the heavy Bill relating to the Railway Commission which had not yet been fully disposed of in committee, and that, if the right hon. gentleman so wished, and would give the Bill precedence in the order of business in the House, I was willing that my resignation should remain unacted upon until I could assist in putting through that measure. That met with the right hon. gentleman's approval; and at his request I accepted back from him the letter which I had written and the resignation which I had handed to him; and the situation was just as I have stated it, and continued to be, until after that Bill passed the committee. On Friday I had the letter re-written, leaving out what had been said with reference to the Railway Commission Bill, inclosed my resignation with the accompanying letter, and was on the eve of handing it to the Prime Minister, when he did the honour of calling upon me and suggested that I might not act for a day or two, as he desired to think matters over. I was going away on Saturday. I acceded to his suggestion. I did not return till Monday. I expected to have seen him earlier on Monday than I did, and I sent that letter with another with my resignation to him on Monday, the 13th day of July. It remained, as I say, in abeyance during those six or seven days under the circumstances I have mentioned. Now, it is proper and due to this House, and due to myself, that I should put the House in possession of the contents of the communication which on the 10th of July I forwarded to the right hon. the Prime Minister :

Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa. 10th July, 1903.

My dear Sir Wilfrid,—Since the statement of my position respecting the transcontinental project was made in council on Saturday last I have been considering the subject from all points of view, in the hope of finding some proper means by which I could avoid the necessity of withdrawing from the cabinet. I fully realize that in your present indifferent state of health such action on my part would cause you much anxiety and embarrassment, and this I would gladly spare you if it were at all possible. I deeply regret, however, that the more I reflect upon the situation the more I find myself constrained to take this step. It is the only course consistent with my view of public duty and what is required of me by my self-respect.

The suggestion which was made to me when I stated to council my inability to become responsible for the policy which the government was apparently determined to adopt with reference to the transcontinental railway project, that I might delegate to some other minister, or that you yourself might take charge of the carriage of the resolutions and measure in parliament, appears to me more impracticable the more I consider it. It does not seem to me possible that, while declaring myself in council as disopproving strongly ñof the government policy on this question, and therefore unable to support the same in parliament, I could retain my position in the cabinet and avoid the public advocacy of a proposition which it would be especially my duty as Minister of Railways to present to parliament and defend before the country. This course of tactitly accepting a measure which my judgment strongly condemns I consider, on reflection, as neither fair to the government as a body nor just to myself. All inference would be drawn from my silence that I was not favourable to the government policy, and yet that I was not adverse to retaining my ministerial position. I am sure that we all would be placing ourselves, in such a course of conduct, in a false position, and would surely be assailed as committing an open and flagrant breach of a well recognized principle obtaining under our system of responsible government. Neither of us can afford to be a party to such a procedure, and I appeal to you to say whether or not it would not be infinitely better that I should submit to the sacrifice of the office which I have the honour to hold, and in discharging the duties of which I have felt a legitimate pride, while you should be subjected to any embarrassment which might result from my resignation, rather than that we should jointly suffer the reproaches which such act on our part would necessarily provoke. The measure could not be many hours under consideration before parliament when I should be made to feel the insupportable character of my position, and you would be made to reproach yourself, and our colleagues to reproach themselves, with not having foreseen that this result would be inevitable.

You complained on Saturday, when I intimated my inability to support this scheme, that I had treated you unfairly in not having earlier in the discussion advised you that if this policy were determined upon I would be compelled to withdraw from the administration. I believe you will, on reflection, acquit me of this charge. It would grieve me deeply to think I had not dealt with you in a spirit of the utmost frankness and loyalty throughout the discussion of the question ; but with a knowledge of the situation, I could not bring myself to believe that a scheme so objectionable and alarming in many respects would be finally and deliberately adopted by government ; and I did not until a few days before Saturday last entertain the least idea that the advice tendered you against hasty and impetuous action would ultimately prevail.

I consider it would have been unbecoming on my part to have even hinted at withdrawal from the cabinet if my views did not prevail, while there were still good reasons for the hope that my opinions would have weight with yourself and our colleagues. When the ground for such hope appeared to be diminishing, which would be at least from two or three weeks ago, I went so far as to say, with all possible gravity, that I could not see how it would be possible for me as Minister of Railways to undertake to present and defend this scheme before parliament, or allow myself to be regarded as the minister primarily responsible for its adoption. The warning I then gave to yourself and my colleagues was going as far as I thought I ought to go at that stage. I intended it as a direct and clear intimation of my attitude upon the question. I think it was made with sufficient impressiveness, and it is not my fault if it was not appreciated by you: It further appears to me that if I had declared my intention of withdrawing from the cabinet while there was still a prospect of this policy not being adopted, you would have considered I was endeavouring to accomplish by threat what I had failed to effect by argument.

I consider that my position with respect to this question differs in an important sense from that of any of my colleagues. As Minister of Railways the public would naturally regard me as having prompted and urged this scheme upon government. I would necessarily have the carriage of the proposal through parliament, and in the nature of things would be by the public regarded as more responsible for the policy than any other minister in the cabinet, excepting perhaps yourself. The brunt of the opposition which would be encountered in the House would have to be borne by me, and the duty of justifying and advocating the measure would largely devolve upon me. Even if I could bring myself to subordinate my personal judgment upon the question for the sake of the party, how could I discharge the duty of advocating and defending the measure without any heart in the cause, and with the strong opinion which I have uniformly entertained that it was not a policy which would be conducive to public interests, nor one which could be safely adopted in the interest of the government itself.

Again, as respects my being open to the charge of want of fairness to yourself, it rather appears to me that an allegation of that character more properly lies at your door. The Grand Trunk proposition had been made to you, and you had consulted with other ministers, and those ministers had met Mr. Hays on several occasions, as I am advised with your knowledge and approval, long before you made me aware that negotiations or discussions on this subject had been entered upon and were being prosecuted. I do not say that I was unaware of them, because information indirectly reached me to that effect ; but I do say they had made progress and had been well advanced before my chief had considered it proper or necessary to acquaint me with the facts. I think I might justly complain that so important a matter of policy, arising within the sphere of my own department, should have been conducted and continued in this way behind my back, and without my knowledge. I am not making this the subject of complaint now, and it has not materially influenced my action at the present moment. I believe, if my memory serves me, this is the first occasion I have mentioned the subject to you. I reconciled myself to the very obvious slight which had been cast upon me on the ground that probably your knowledge of my views on the general question did not encourage you to expect I would look with much favour upon, or render much assistance toward carrying out the object you had in view.

With the most extreme regret, Sir Wilfrid, I feel compelled to tender you my resignation, which I have to beg you will hand to His Excellency without delay. This resignation you must treat as final. The action which has been taken since Saturday last, in submitting to a caucus of supporters of the government in parliament the transcontinental railway propositions, identically in the form in which they were adopted by council, assures me that the government has fully resolved to take the responsibility of asking parliament to approve them.

In case you may think the action which has been taken is not irrevocable, and to avoid any possible misunderstanding on the question, I feel I ought to repeat to you the conditions upon which I would be disposed, if you so desired, to further consider my action in this matter.

I would require that the government should abandon its present intention :—

1st. Of building or authorizing the building of a line of railway to Moncton, which would be parelleling and destroying the Intercolonial ; or building or authorizing the building of any other line of railway more remote from the Intercolonial, until the need of such latter railway becomes apparent, and proper surveys and an estimate of its cost are first made and thoroughly considered.

2nd. The idea of immediately proceeding with a railway from Quebec to Winnipeg. The government should be content with declaring itself in favour of the policy of building a government line from Quebec to the prairies, and across the prairies to the Pacific coast, as soon as the need shall arise ; and in the meantime that parliament be asked for an amount to enable a thorough exploration of the country to be made, so that it might be possible to judge whether or not a suitable traffic producing route could be found through this district, and its cost and the character and conditions of the country through which it is to pass ascertained.

I would further stipulate :

3rd. That if such a route is found practicable, and gave promise of a fair measure of traffic a railway should be built by government through, if the government should so decide, a commission, rather than by the government itself directly, and that a contract for such construction should be let only after open and public competition.

4th. That when built and ready for operation, such railway should not be handed over to any one existing railway company under lease ; but that the same should be operated either by the government itself, through a commission appointed for the purpose, if so preferred, or by a trust composed of the representatives of the different railways which might intend to use it under direct government supervision and control ; and that such form of dealing with the question of operation or management should be decided later after a fuller knowledge of the facts and mature deliberation.

5th. That the policy of giving a present guarantee or other aid to the company to build a railway in continuation of the Quebec-Winnipeg line through the fertile prairie district, the most valuable and promising section of the whole system, should not now be entertained, and that the final decision of the matter be deferred until it became reasonably clear that settlement along the probable route of such railway would justify its construction.

I desire to express my extreme regret at parting from my colleagues, and under the conditions which have made this step necessary. With many of my associates at the council board it has been a great pleasure to me to act during the past seven years. If it is to be a final separation, I assure you I withdraw with personal feelings of the friendliest character.

Will you, Sir Wilfrid, accept my grateful appreciation of the compliment and honour conferred upon me when you invited me to take a seat in the cabinet at its formation in 1896.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) AND'W G. BLAIR.

This letter, as I have said, was one, with the exception of the reference to the Railway Committee Bill, which I wrote and handed to the right hon. gentleman the First Minister, on Monday, the 6th of July. It was held over under the circumstances I have detailed to you; and when I gave him my explanation in the letter I have just read, I accompanied it with a further letter dated 13th July, which I will also now, with your permission, read to the House :—

My dear Sir Wilfrid,—As I had not delivered to you my letter of the 10th instant on that day, owing to your request that I should defer action for a day or two to enable you to think matters over still further, I have thought that I might supplement that communication and suggest means whereby a common understanding on the railway question could yet be arrived at between my colleagues and myself.

Let me state our position on the main question : My decided preference is for a government owned and government operated railway across the continent, and my chief reason for favouring it is that it will have an equalizing and regulating influence upon all other railways throughout the western territory. In this view I am practically alone, and therefore I admit at once that this proposition must be laid aside. But the cabinet has decided that the government shall build half way across the continent as a government road, namely, between Quebec and Winnipeg, and when built shall lease the same to the Grand Trunk Pacific ; and as to the other half, it has been determined, as I understand, that liberal government aid shall be given the same company to build and thereafter to own to the coast.

To this mode of solving the railway problem I am decidedly opposed. At best it is a hybrid scheme, involving the compromise of two antagonistic principles, and will be followed, as is usual with compromises of that kind, by unsatisfactory results. It will also fail to satisfy the exponents of either view. It will be difficult to explain why government should build and own the lean section of this railway, and provide a company with government credit to enable them to build and operate the fat section.

It is attempted to justify the eastern proposition from Quebec to Winnipeg on the ground that a great railway highway will thus be assured, open to any and all of the western railways to connect with it, and who might take their trains independently over this common highway from their connecting point to the St. Lawrence. I will not elaborate again my objections to this plan. It is wholly impracticable that this line could be so used by different railway companies. There must be some authorized body to work, not the trains, but the freight cars of the different railways, and generally to look after and operate the line. The necessity of this is what I presume has led my colleagues to decide that they will lease this section to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and it is proposed to assure the public that a contract can be made with the Grand Trunk Pacific so binding as to enable these different railway companies to exercise what are called 'running rights' from and to Quebec and Winnipeg. This is equally impracticable, in my opinion, or nearly so. The Grand Trunk Pacific will employ the men who will handle the traffic. The officers of the line will also be employees of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company will be in the field as a keen and active competitor for western traffic with these other companies which it is presumed will desire to connect with the terminals at the end of the government owned section.

I will not go into the reasons, which are conclusive, but, under these circumstances, other companies if they can find any other means of reaching eastern points will not utilize this road. For my present purposes it will suffice to say that in this opinion I believe I am absolutely correct.

As I have said, I am in favour of the whole line being built and owned by government; but having abandoned any expectation in that regard I am equally in favour of the whole line being a company line, if any portion of it, or a substantial portion, is to be a company line, and therefore I am prepared, since Council has determined to go forward with this undertaking at once, to co-operate with my colleagues in guaranteeing the bonds over the whole line to an extent not exceeding three-quarters of the cost of the construction of the railway.

If this view is entertained I think it should be upon some such conditions as the following—I do not propose to state all of them, but the important ones :—

1st. The Grand Trunk Pacific is being aided to a most generous extent. It cannot build its road without very liberal assistance. In giving aid the government might very properly impose terms looking to some financial advantage to the country in the future, and therefore I would insist that a share of the earnings—I would not say half, but I would not think it ought to be less than a third of the net earnings, or that portion of the net earnings which would not be required for the improvement or betterment of the road, and which remained for distribution among stockholders, should go to government.

In this connection, government might very properly claim the right to appoint one of the directors, and also have the books of the company open to the inspection of a railway accountant at any time required.

2nd. As a means to achieve the same purpose which the Nova Scotia people appear to consider very essential—that is to say the obtaining of a share during the winter of the Grand Trunk Pacific through-traffic for Halifax—the company should be bound to carry all unrouted traffic over the whole of the Winnipeg section of a St. Lawrence seaport in summer, and in the winter from Quebec to Halifax and St. John over the Intercolonial; and the Intercolonial should, in the division of rates, be entitled to such division on a mileage basis, mile per mile, with the Grand Trunk Pacific. As to traffic not routed the Grand Trunk Pacific should be required to bind itself that it will use all its influence with its shippers in respect of traffic originating in the west for ocean carriage to secure such traffic for the Intercolonial during the winter season, using with its shippers all lawful and proper means to that end. There might very well be a condition in the contract between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific in order to ensure the observance of this feature of the contract, that the Governor in Council should have power by Order in Council to declare, after inquiry at any time, if it is so established, that the Grand Trunk Pacific have not complied with their agreement and have not used all lawful and proper means to secure the routing of traffic over the Intercolonial; and such declaration being made, the same should be final and conclusive as to the fact, and the Grand Trunk Pacific should be thereupon liable to pay to the Intercolonial the share of freight rates which it would have earned had the agreement been carried out.

I am sure that this will guarantee bona fide treatment by the Grand Trunk Pacific under any management, and will thereby secure an advantage, not only without the enormous expense to the country which would be involved in the building of a line to Moncton, but would save the Intercolonial from destruction and depreciation, and keep the people who live along the line from having the Intercolonial reduced to a mere local road, and, at the same time, would increase the business carried over that railway to the extent to which such business would have been done by the Grand Trunk Pacific over the proposed Moncton line.

I mention these as a few of the stipulations which appear to me to be reasonable and proper, and which, if I had been permitted to conduct the negotiations on this question, I would have sought to bring about. They do not by any means exhaust all that might be suggested; but I mention these now so that you, Sir Wilfrid, and the council may have them before you before you finally determine that you will perpetrate that I cannot help regarding as one of the most indefensible railway transactions which has ever taken place in this country. The more I think upon this subject and look forward to the consequences which are going to flow from an adherence to the present scheme the less capable I am of reconcilling myself to it, and the more determined I feel that the whole responsibility of the undertaking will have to rest upon other shoulders than mine.

I feel it my duty to add, that I shall be compelled, on further reflection, to oppose the project in its passage through parliament.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) AND'W. G. BLAIR.

To that letter the right hon. Prime Minister returned the following reply :

Privy Council,
Ottawa, 14th July, 1903.

My dear Blair,—I received yesterday afternoon, your letter dated the 10th, placing in my hands your resignation as member of the Cabinet and Minister of Railways.

I have received at the same time another letter in which you set forth the reasons which have led you to the course which you have adopted.

This last communication opens with a review of the deliberations which have taken place in Council on the railway question. In this review, matters are stated which, in my estimation, come within the rule that 'the deliberations of the Council, upon all matters which engage their attention, are strictly private and confidential.'

I therefore refrain from discussing them.

With regard to the charge that negotiations with Mr. Hays made progress and were well advanced, before I considered it proper or necessary to acquaint you with the facts, I have only to remind you that I thought advisable at first, to retain in my hands the negotiations of this important subject, keeping the Council constantly informed, until I referred the matter to a sub-commitee, of which you were one. Moreover, far from admitting the charge I claim that since you entered the government, at its formation, I have always extended to you the frank, loyal and cordial support which I consider is due by the Prime Minister to his colleagues.

As to the reasons which you put forward for your dissent from our policy, this is not the time or place to review them.

I may observe, however, on the two main points of your objections :—

1. I am surprised at your statement that the projected line from Quebec eastward to Moncton will parallel the Intercolonial Railway. The territory served by the new line is not the same as the territory served by the Intercolonial Railway. Between the two lines there will be, not only a distance varying from forty to seventy-five miles, but a chain of mountains dividing the territory to be served by each of them.

The plan which we have adopted for the construction of the line from Moncton to the Pacific coast, has been purposely selected so as to keep in the hands of the government the key to the transportation problem from the prairies to the ocean, and to leave the initiative of a private company the section of country where energy and enterprise will be constantly required to meet the exigencies of an ever-changing situation.

It was my duty, this morning, to call upon His Excellency the Governor General, to inform him of your resignation, which it was his regret to accept, and in the afternoon, I acquainted the Council of your final determination.

Allow me, in conclusion, to express to you my extreme sorrow for an action which I regard as a great mistake toward yourself, toward your friends, toward your colleagues, and above all toward your country, which, at this juncture, requires a bold and fearless policy of transcontinental development.

Yours very sincerely,

(Sgd. WILFRID LAURIER.

The Hon. A. G. Blair,

Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, I have about concluded, all I have to say upon this occasion I acquit the right hon gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) of any intention or disposition to offer any discourtesy to me. I realize that it would be foreign to his nature or disposition to offer intentional discourtesy to any one. But I am bound to say there may be occasions when, unintentionally, perhaps the same result follows as though it had been designed. I have not, however, allowed myself, in considering this question of the resignation to be influenced by any other thought than as to whether or not the proposals in themselves which my right hon. friend had decided to make to parliament were such as were entitled to my support. I have determined that question according to the best lights I possess. I do feel that when my right hon. friend says I made a great mistake toward myself, toward my friends, toward my colleagues and toward my country that he is speaking the honest convictions of his mind. But, Sir, if I am capable of exercising any judgment on a matter of this kind, I am bound to say that I do not agree with my right hon. friend, I am bound to say that if I had come to this parliament, and, with what little knowledge and experience I have had of railway questions deliberately advised this parliament and this country that this was a scheme which merited their acceptance, I do not believe I should not have been doing my duty to myself, and in not doing my duty to myself, I should not have been doing my duty to the party with which I am allied. It was my plain and simple course to let them know at the earliest possible moment, and to let the public know also, how strongly I felt, as a responsible minister of the Crown with respect to this important question. My strong conviction is that this country cannot wisely adopt and carry into operation the policy which my right hon. friends the government has adopted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I think it is only right, in view of the announcement which has been made to-day by the Prime Minister (the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. A. G. Blair) to state from this side of the House that, while we have, on many occasions opposed that hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) as strenuously as we were able to do, we are glad to remember, that no personal feeling has entered into our political conflicts either on his part or, certainly, on our own. While we have not seen eye to eye with him in the past as regards many matters of public interest, still every one of us on this side of the House recognizes to the fullest extent the very great ability which he has brought to the discharge of his public duties, the very great experience which he has acquired in public life, and especially the enormous industry which, on all occasions, he has displayed in the discharge of his duties as a minister of this cabinet. Indeed I know that I am voicing the opinions of gentlemen on both sides of the House when I say that many of us have been surprised, during the past five or six years, that the hon. gentleman had been able to endure the enormous amount of work that has been cast upon his shoulders, particularly during the sessions of parliament.

I do not propose at the present time to discuss the very general information, the somewhat vague information, which has been afforded to the House with regard to the railway policy of the government. A full opportunity for that discussion will be afforded when the policy itself is laid before the House and before the country. But I may say, in passing, that no one can fail to recognize the very great responsibility which this government has undertaken when it has seen fit to override the opinions of the man who, of all others in the cabinet, had the most experience with regard to transportation questions in this country; and particularly are we impressed with the responsibility which the government has taken upon itself when we realize, even from the vague and general statement made by my right hon. friend, the extraordinary character of the proposal which is to be announced to parliament before the end of this session. I do not propose to stop to discuss it now; the House is not in a position to discuss it now in the way in which it should be discussed, because we have not the details before us. But there is at least one point which I may press upon my right hon. friend, and press upon him, I think, with a great deal of force. It is well known in the country that the question of transcontinental transportation has been engaging the attention of this government for more than a year. The question to all intents and purposes of a transcontinental railway came before this House, was mentioned in this House, and the attention of the House was directed to it, at the beginning of the present session of parliament, and an announcement was made in the speech from the Throne regarding it, in the following language :

> The great influx of population into our Northwestern Territories, and the very large additional areas of fertile land which are being brought under cultivation, combine to further press upon us the need for increased transportation facilities for the forwarding of our grain and other products to the markets of the world through Canadian channels. The whole question of transportation and terminal facilities continues to occupy much attention, and my government will immediately appoint a commission of experienced men to report on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, we have now entered well upon the fifth month of the present session, and up to the present time, until the general statement made by the Prime Minister to-day, not one single word of information has been afforded to parliament as to what the railway policy of the government is ; and up to the present time not one single meeting of that transportation commission has been held. Indeed I believe, the gentlemen who are to compose it have not yet been finally selected. Although the questions with which that commission is to deal are questions most vitally and closely touching the very matter which the government will bring down, I hope, within a few days, we are to proceed to discuss in this House the construction of a transcontinental railway through a country which the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals says we know nothing about ; we are to proceed to discuss that question without one single word of information from the gentlemen who are to constitute that transportation commission. My right hon. friend may say that these gentlemen were to deal with the question of improving facilities upon the lakes, and with equipping our national ports. I say that it is impossible to separate those questions from the great question of another transcontinental railway; and you cannot properly, or adequately or fully deal with that question until you have the information before the House which should be afforded by a commission, and by the report of that commission laid before the House. Now, I say that, in passing, for the purpose of impressing upon the right hon. gentleman who leads this House and upon his government the importance of bringing this policy, if a policy there is to be, before this House at the very earliest moment. In the closing days of the session, is this House, is this country, to be called upon to decide, in the hurried way in which these matters have to be dealt with in the last hours of the session, upon a policy which is so startling and of so much importance to this country that the man who above all others in the government is supposed to be able to form a safe judgment upon it, has found it necessary to separate himself from the government and to declare that the policy which the government propose to bring before this House is one which is not in the true interests of this country, but which according to his well considered and well matured judgment, may properly be characterized as not only extravagant but even absurd. Now, how long does my right hon. friend propose to keep the House in ignorance of the details of this policy ? How much longer is this uncertainty to continue ? How much longer is this House to wait while the members of the government are making up their minds and settling their differences, if differences there be ? Because rumours are rife with regard to such matters. How much longer is the House and the country to be kept in ignorance of this project in order that matters of this kind may be determined by the government ? I say that if this government proposes to deal with this question at the present session of parliament, we have already waited too long. I say further that if the government adopts the extraordinary course of bringing down in the fifth or sixth month of the session a measure of this kind, without any report from the transportation commission which was referred to in the speech from the Throne—I say that if the government propose to continue this delay still longer, they merit, and I believe they will receive, the just condemnation of every right thinking man in this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add at present, except to request my right hon. friend, before this matter is finally disposed of, to give to the House a statement as to whether the government has definitely determined to bring its policy before the House at the present session of parliament; and if the government has come to that determination, to inform the House on what day, on what early day, we may expect a full and detailed announcement of that policy. There is another thing I wish to mention before sitting down. I wish to inquire whether the right hon. gentleman is in a position to inform the House to-day, and if not, when he will be in a position to do so, as to the filling of the vacancy which has been occasioned by the retirement of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, whether any general reconstruction of the cabinet will be considered necessary, and what gentleman is it that has been selected to fill the vacancy so created.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (St. Mary's, Montreal). I am compelled to say a few words on this occasion. The 'News' of yesterday, published an article from which I quote the following words :

The Rift in the Cabinet.

The dissension in the Ottawa Cabinet which led to Mr. Blair's resignation is presented by certain Conservative journals as an evidence of weakness in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's leadership. Nothing could be further from the truth. In view of the Premier's peremptory dismissal of Mr. Tarte from his cabinet and his ready acceptance of Mr. Blair's resignation, it is idle to maintain the old fiction that Sir Wilfrid Laurier lacks decision and strength of character. The general opinion among Conservatives was that the Premier dare not dismiss Mr. Tarte, while the mere fact that New Brunswick goes Liberal gave to oppositionists probably a very similar opinion of the strength of Mr. Blair and of his ascendancy in the cabinet. As a matter of fact, for the last three or four years neither man had any particular influence in the councils of the government. Neither had the confidence of his colleagues. Both were marked for certain decapitation when the necessity arose. Both these men seemed to the public to be shaping the ministerial policy. In each case the fact was quite the reverse of what the oppositionists argued and the general public believed. Both were heralded as efficient departmental heads ; neither, in fact, was a particularly capable administrator.

How things go in the world ! A few months ago the ministerial newspapers took no exception and nearly all my colleagues were of the opinion that I was a very capable Minister of Public Works. In point of fact I was heralded as the ablest Minister of Public Works that had occupied this office since Mackenzie, which I did not deserve, I admit. But that is not the point to which I desire to especially draw the attention of parliament. It is pointed out in this article, which I understand has been inspired from the treasury benches——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. As other articles have been in the past to my knowledge——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is plainly stated that neither my hon. friend who has just left office (Hon. Mr. Blair) nor myself has had the confidence of his colleagues during the last three or four years. Let me say that as far as I am concerned this is the first time that I have heard such news. I have not always agreed with my colleagues. Any body who has been a minister will grant that all members of the government cannot be of the same mind, but with most of my former associates I have had the most pleasant and cordial relations. I grant that I had opponents. I am very much afraid that I even had enemies. For the last year or two marked for decapitation because we did not have the confidence of our colleagues ! The right hon. Prime Minister is the leader of the government. Could it be possible that the right hon. gentleman would have kept me or my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Blair) in his council, or would he have kept me in his intimacy marking me at the same time for decapitation ? Such a suggestion is not possible.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is not possible.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. And I think that the 'News' is not building a pedestal for my right hon. friend in history in circulating stories of that kind. It seems to me that it cannot be imagined that the right hon. leader of the government could keep in his intimacy, as he has done me the honour to keep me in his intimacy, a cabinet minister who for the last three or four years did not possess his confidence. It may be that my ability has not been equal to my good will. I have done my duty to the best of my ability and my colleagues—most of them from the right hon. Prime Minister down—have been good enough to give me credit for my humble efforts. I have been six years and a half a member of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, an important position ; I have been six years and a half a member of the treasury board, another responsible and confidential position. Now, immediately after my resignation—not dismissal, because I resigned out of my free will—the 'Star,' the personal organ of the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) stated that I was disgruntled and displeased because I did not exercise over the government all the influence, that, perhaps, in the mind of that paper, I should have exercised. I have exercised all the influence that I could desire to exercise in my humble capacity. The same paper also stated that I was displeased because I had not been invited to form part of the Intercolonial conference committee. Let me say to those who inspired that article that I did not expect that two French Canadians could form part of that Intercolonial conference committee. The right hon. Prime Minister was representing not only the government but also the French element which was quite sufficient for me. I may add for the information of those who inspired that article that the right hon. gentleman was good enough to invite me to visit Paris while he was on the other side to help him in the negotiation with the French government. I told him, that, having been absent one summer on account of illness and another summer because I was at the Paris exhibition, I should be relieved from that duty. I make that statement for the right hon. gentleman's sake as well as for my own. Perhaps I may answer this article as it is my right and duty to do so by saying that a short time before we parted after the session was over, the right hon. gentleman with the consent and cheerful co-operation of all my colleagues offered to recommend me for very high compliments which I thought that my state of fortune would not permit me to accept. If I had not the confidence of my colleagues surely I would not be treated as I was being treated then. I make this statement to-day because I think I have the right to my reputation. I have left the government because I thought, that my views, being so different on a broad question from those of my colleagues, it was my duty to part from them. Surely there is no crime in a minister of the Crown giving up an important, a responsible and an honourable position to go back into private life. Let the 'News' build up the right hon. gentleman. Let it write it over again that he has more energy than all the government combined. I have no objection. My right hon. friend has received from my hands—not only when I was his colleague, but when I was his opponent in the press gallery—fair treatment and even cordial and friendly treatment. I have no objection that the right hon. gentleman should be held up as an able man of business, provided it is not to the detriment of the reputation of public men who have equal rights to stand in public opinion for what they are worth. Now Sir, only one word more. The article goes on to speak of what has been accomplished in the past by the right hon. gentleman in the province of Quebec. I do not claim any share in what has been done. I happen to know though that in the difficulties of the school question and in other difficulties, I tried to help him to the best of my ability. My humble support may not have helped him very materially although it was given at the time when the right hon. gentleman was not of the same mind as those who say to-day that I never was worth much in the past, and that I am even worth less now.

However, let bygones be bygones as far as that part of political history is concerned. What I wanted to make clear to-day is that so long as I was a member of the government I enjoyed the confidence of my leader and of most of my colleagues. I have differed with others on questions on which public opinion is not yet enlightened, as history, and history within a short time may demonstrate. Ministers cannot always agree. It is a well known fact that on several occasions I had to disagree on certain railway proposals, going so far in the Railway Committee and in the House as to speak against certain railway proposals which some of my colleagues were upholding. There were other questions with regard to which I am not free to speak, but on which I could not agree with my former colleagues. But the main point on which we have disagreed is the fiscal policy. On that we could not possibly agree, and it was on that I went out of the cabinet. Now Sir, having made this statement so as to let the country know what my personal position was when I had the honour of being a member of the government, I beg to resume my seat.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend from St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has just made a speech, the relevancy of which to this debate I altogether fail to see. The hon. gentleman referred to an article which I have not yet read, and to which my attention was called only a few minutes ago, just before I entered the chamber. The hon. gentleman stated that he had reason to believe that this article had been inspired from the treasury benches, and judging by the manner in which he looked towards me and the manner in which he spoke afterwards, I gather that the hon. gentleman has the impression that I inspired that article. Let me say to my hon. friend; my old friend, that he ought to know me better, than to suppose that I fight with that kind of weapon. I state upon my honour—and the hon. gentleman may believe me or not, and apparently he is not inclined to believe me—but I state on my honour here; and I think the word honour is a word which friend and foe can appreciate in this House. I state on my honour that I had nothing whatever to do with that article; that I never inspired, never read or never saw it until this moment.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would my right hon. friend the Prime Minister permit me to say at once that he is quite mistaken. I did not make any allusion to him at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am very glad to hear it, but if the hon. gentleman acquits me of this kind of warfare he apparently still believes that this article has been inspired by the treasury benches.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let me say to my hon. friend that so far as I know I think he is equally mistaken there. My hon. friend is a journalist; he has been in the business for more than thirty years, and surely he knows too much as to how newspapers are made to believe that if an article appears in the newspapers it must be traced at once to some one in authority. Let me say to my hon. friend that he is wrong to put any such construction upon the article that appeared in the Toronto 'News.' I have no objection to say to my hon. friend—we have been opponents; we have been members of the same party and members of the same cabinet; I am afraid perhaps that we are opponents to some extent again and at all events upon some questions—but let me say to him that for my part and for the part of any one who sits around me here, it is not our intention or my intention to minimize him or any of our opponents. If I have difficulties with anybody I would rather have difficulties with somebody who is somebody than with somebody who is nobody. I may say to my hon. friend that for my part I do not care what is written about me in the newspapers. I have my share of compliments sometimes and I have my share of abuse at some other times. Abuse does not affect me and compliments do not affect me. Whatever may be said in that article in the 'News' as to what I have done (and I understand from the words of my hon. friend that it is rather complimentary) it does not add a single inch or takes away an inch or whether it praises me or abuses me I am what I am, and there is only one thing for which I care; that is the esteem of the friends who surround me. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has given out secrets, and I cannot say that I have any strong objections to that. It is very true that I had been prepared to recommend him for high honours. It is very true that I was a friend of his, and I think he will admit also that as long as he was a member of the cabinet over which I presided I gave him a most cordial support. I have not hesitated to back him under every circumstance and I am bound to say that my relations with him were always cordial. But when the time came when I thought that he was endeavouring to force upon the party a policy of which I did not approve, we had to part, and we could not remain in the cabinet together any longer.

Let me say in conclusion to my hon. friend that far be it from me on this occasion or any other occasion to give him or to ask my friends to give him anything but that opposition which men must offer to each other when they do not belong to the same party or when they are even within the same party but do not see eye to eye on all questions.

With regard to the position of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals I may say the same thing. In the correspondence which he has read and in his remarks he has taken some exception to my conduct, as to the negotiations on this question which may result in a transcontinental railway scheme being proposed to this parliament. I have only this to say to my hon. friend also, and I think he will bear testimony to it, that so long as he was my colleague I supported him with the best of my ability. I treated him as it is my duty to treat every one of my colleagues, that is to assume that they must be supported in everything departmental. But he and I have differed upon this question of policy, and here there is a distinction.

Now, I will not enter on the discussion of this great question, which before long is to come before parliament. I have only this to say to my hon. friend, that I think, in the words of the letter which I addressed to him a few days ago, when he signified his intention of severing his connection with the cabinet, that he has made 'a great mistake towards himself, towards his friends, towards his colleagues and, above all, towards his country, which at this juncture requires a bold and fearless policy of transcontinental development.' I know very well that when we bring forward this policy, we must incur severe criticism. I have yet to learn that any policy which at all commands, or deserves to command, the attention of men has been received in silence or has not been fought. I know the difficulty, under all circumstances, of reconciling men to a big scheme; but because the policy is big, or because it will arouse criticism, certainly ought not to be a reason, and will not be a reason, for me at all events, for not doing what is required at this moment in the best interests of the country. I will not discuss the views of my hon. friend as exposed in his letter. I do not think this is the time to do so. All this criticism, I think, will come better when the resolutions are before the House, when the House can discuss them intelligently, having all the details before them.

With regard to the remarks of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I am sorry that I do not think it is possible for us to satisfy his rather fastidious curiosity. My hon. friend is entitled to know a good deal—not only a good deal, but everything that passes through the government which must take the shape of legislation. But my hon. friend has been rather anticipating events. To-day we have the ministerial explanations, and the debate ought to be confined to them. My hon. friend asks me who is going to take the place of Minister of Railways in the cabinet. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that that question is rather premature. He did not expect me, I am sure,to give him this information to-day, but put the question rather as a flyer. Let me say to my hon. friend that I think this is a case in which the old Latin maxim, 'festina lente' is opportune. I do not propose to make any haste in filling the position vacated by my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Hon. Mr. Blair). It shall be my pleasure, accompanied with regret, to ask His Excellency, at no distant day, to approve of the selection of another Minister of Railways. I do not propose either to say whether there shall be any reconstruction of the cabinet, because I do not think there is any occasion for such a demand on the part of my hon. friend. Perhaps my hon. friend has read the statement in the newspapers that there is to be a reconstruction of the cabinet. Well, if my hon. friend is to take the statements of the newspapers, he must have all the information, which I have not, because newspapers make and unmake cabinets. Newspapers sometimes give information that I have never heard of as to what the government are going to do. Therefore, I think we must rest content at this moment with the statement that there is not and is not likely to be another vacancy in the cabinet besides the one that now exists.

With regard to the policy which we are going to introduce, I am not prepared to say on what day we shall introduce it; but I hope that in a short time, after a reasonable delay, we shall have the pleasure of introducing a policy which will command, I will not say the support of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, but the support of a majority of the members of this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, if I might say a word with the indulgence of the House, I understand, of course, that if the right hon. gentleman has not yet recommended any successor to the hon. the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, he could not make any announcement to the House to-day. But I thought, and still think, that it is proper for me to inquire, and for the House to know, immediately upon the right hon. gentleman coming to a determination, whether or not there is to be any reconstruction of the cabinet. The right hon. gentleman has given us the assurance, that, so far as he knows at present, there is to be no such reconstruction; and I am perfectly willing to accept that for the present, knowing, of course, that he will at the earliest posible moment make such an announcement to the House in regard to this matter as may be necessary. If I might add a further word, I would venture to suggest to my right hon. friend that when he speaks so lightly of the newspapers, he seems to have adopted a somewhat different attitude from that which he adopted when he was dealing with the case of my hon. friend from St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte); because, if I remember correctly, the course of discipline he administered to that hon. gentleman was to put himself in possession of all the newspapers that had been published in Canada for three or four weeks previously, peruse them carefully, and then decide the fate of my hon. friend upon them. So that I think it will not do for my right hon. friend on one occasion to attach such very great importance to the information which we are glad to get from the press, and on other occasions to discount, to so great an extent as he seems inclined to do to-day, the information which, even by way of rumour, is sometimes contained in the public press of Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte), in the course of his remarks, stated that certain articles had appeared in the Toronto 'Star' with reference to him, and also stated that that journal was the personal organ of the Postmaster General, meaning, I suppose, thereby to suggest that the Postmaster General was more or less responsible for the references in that journal to himself. I regret that the hon. gentleman should have made that remark, and I would not refer to it now lest my silence might be misunderstood. I therefore take this occasion to say to him and to the House that the paper in question is not my personal organ, that I have no more control over what appears in its columns than the hon. gentleman himself, that I have not seen the articles to which he referred, nor have I ever at any time in my life inspired any article having the slightest reference to the hon. member for St. Mary's division.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, including $13,000 for irrigation purposes, &c., $430,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give a brief statement by the surveyor general:

Estimate of the amount required for Dominion lands surveys, during fiscal year, 1903-4:—

|---|---|
| Fourteen parties under daily pay at $7,000 each | $ 98,000 00 |
| Two parties under daily pay at $14,000 each | 28,000 00 |
| One party under daily pay at $6,000 | 6,000 00 |
| Sixty subdivision survey contracts at $8,000 | 480,000 00 |
| Inspection of surveys | 10,000 00 |
| Irrigation surveys | 13,000 00 |
| Yukon surveys office | 45,000 00 |
| Employees at Ottawa | 60,000 00 |
| Miscellaneous | 10,000 00 |
| Total amount required for 1903-4 | $750,000 00 |

The above amount of $750,000 has been provided for as follows:—

| In main estimates, 1903-4 | $430,000 00 |
| In supplementary estimates | 320,000 00 |
| | $750,000 00 |

When preparing estimates for next fiscal year, in November last, it was thought that the sum of $430,000 would be sufficient to meet the requirements of the next year; but, since then, the great influx of intending settlers from the United States and from Europe has made it imperative upon the country to provide homesteads for the incoming immigration, and it was decided that an additional amount of $320,000 should be inserted in the supplementary estimates to enable the department to subdivide a sufficient number of townships to meet the wants of immigration. The intention is to survey about 500 new townships during the next fiscal year.

Mr. SPROULE. In what localities are the surveys being made ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The localities are as follows :

| South eastern Manitoba, one party under daily pay.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 7,000 00 |
| York town district and western Manitoba, under daily pay, renewed surveys.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 14,000 00 |
| Between Lake Winnipeg and Manitoba, under daily pay.. .. .. .. | 7,000 00 |
| Forth of Battleford, two parties under daily pay.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 14,000 00 |
| Edmonton district, one party under daily pay.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7,000 00 |
| Edmonton district, renewed surveys. | 14,000 00 |
| Red Deer district one party under daily pay.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7,000 00 |
| McLeod district, one party under daily pay.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7,000 00 |
| Rocky Mountains— | |
| One party under daily pay .. .. .. | $ 6,000 00 |
| British Columbia— | |
| Two parties under daily pay.. .. .. | 14,000 00 |
| Unforeseen surveys— | |
| Five parties under daily pay .. .. | 35,000 00 |
| Subdivision of townships between Fort Pelly in Eastern Assiniboia and Edmonton in Alberta— | |
| Sixty contracts at $8,000.. .. .. | 480,000 00 |
| Total .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $612,000 00 |

Mr. SPROULE. How do you let contracts, by the township or by the day ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. By the township.

Mr. SPROULE. How much does the hon. minister propose for this work ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Dominion Lands Act provides that, except in special cases, the township subdivision surveys of Dominion lands shall be performed under contract at a certain rate per township, per mile, or per acre, fixed from time to time by the Governor in Council, or by competitive tender. The present rate has been fixed by the Governor in Council, and varies according to the difficulty of the work, from $7 per mile in bare prairie, to $30 and $35 per mile in the woods. The subdivision of a township, not including the exterior boundaries laid out by surveyors under daily pay, requires a survey of 48 miles of section lands and of the lakes and rivers within the township. The cost varies from $350 on the bare prairies to $2,000 and over in the woods. A full township provides 64 free homesteads. The townships to be subdivided during the present season are situated between Fort Pelly in eastern Assiniboia and Edmonton in Alberta. Some are on bare prairie and some in country more or less wooded. The intention is to survey about 500 townships. Four hundred are estimated to cost about $900 each. The remaining one hundred townships, being more heavily wooded, are estimated at $1,200 each.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understand it correctly, all the mapping out work is done by men paid by the day ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The general principle is that the outline work is done by surveyors under pay, and township subdividing is done by surveyors who are under contract where the nature of the work is such that the cost can be fully estimated.

Mr. SPROULE. What is paid per day for outlining work laying out the townships ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are doing that work under charge of Dominion land surveyors, who receive $6.50 per day, assistants, who receive $3 per day, and labourers, who are paid the rate of wages of the locality. The ordinary party consists of a land surveyor, his assistant, nine or ten labourers and a cook. I may say that the rate of pay for surveyors is greater of late years. Had we not increased the rate of pay we were likely to be left without good surveyors, and some time ago the pay was increased from $5 to $6.50 on the advice of the Surveyor General. We have practically all, or nearly, all the available Dominion land surveyors working for the department.

Mr. SPROULE. In addition to their pay, these parties are found, they are supplied?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister proposes to survey 500 townships, most of the work to be done under contract. But, practically, there is no competition in that work, because the hon. minister fixes the pay that is allowed for prairie sections, wooded sections, and so on. So, it is difficult to ascertain what the ordinary cost of subdividing these townships is.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This has all been worked out carefully by the Surveyor General. He has not only his own experience to go by, but he has the results of survey work in that country for the last twenty-five years, showing just what it costs in different cases, so that he can work out schedules for the several sections.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the surveyors who work under contract found also ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When a surveyor takes a contract, he furnishes his own supplies. But, when he is under daily pay, the government finds him.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the land surveyed pretty well taken up ? For it would appear that the government is mapping out a very large summer's work—500 townships.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will see that we have not mapped out more than is necessary. Five hundred townships would give only 32,000 homesteads, and we had 31,000 homesteads taken up last year. Practically the surveys are getting pretty closely run. It is difficult to keep ahead of settlement. But it is important to keep ahead, for most unsatisfactory results follow if settlers go in in advance of the surveys. The people get on odd numbered sections, or school sections, two men take up the same quarter-section, and in many other ways most unsatisfactory conditions arise.

Mr. SPROULE. It is partly curiosity that induced me to make these inquiries. I have some remembrance of a strong criticism made against the old government for surveying too much and spending too heavily. The hon. minister is asking now about three-quarters of a million for surveys this year. That, I think, is very much more than ever was asked for this service before. In connection with that is the fact which is disclosed by the minister just now, that we have a lot of surveyed townships already, because a portion of that is to be taken for retracing these lines. He did not tell us how much of this expenditure would be incurred in that work. We find that $10,000 of this is for the purpose of inspecting surveys. Is that inspection to be done at Ottawa or to be done in the country, and what is the necessity for that inspection ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A portion of this money is to be employed in renewing the obliterated marks of previous surveys. There are two parties now at work, and it is estimated that they will be able to renew surveyed lines in about thirty townships, at an average cost of about $5 per mile. I may say that so far back as the time of the government of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, mistakes were made in pushing surveys where they were not necessary, and surveyors were sent out during a number of years to survey lands which did not need to be surveyed. We have never got any value from some of those surveys. I do not mean to say that the largest portion of the work is to be characterized in that way, but I say that a mistake was made in the beginning. I do not think that any of the ministers in particular were to blame, because they were acting under the advice of their officers who were supposed to be familiar with the country. But there is no doubt that they did survey quantities of land which were not fit for settlement. We find ourselves that it is a difficult matter and requires careful examination and supervision to select the land that ought to be surveyed. We have an inspector of surveys and an assistant inspector, who make a careful inspection of the land that they think ought to be surveyed. Mr. Pearce, now the inspector of surveys, is a very old officer of the government, and I regret to say that he has applied to be placed upon the retired list. He is a very competent man. He and his assistant came down here early in the session and went carefully into the whole subject with me, and made recommendations to the department as to the land that should be surveyed. I am satisfied that we are not surveying a particle more this year than is absolutely needed for settlement.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the policy of the government to select in each locality only such land as will be required for settlement, and to leave patches of unsurveyed land ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Our policy is to select lands that we think the settlers are likely to desire to settle upon. Settlement is moving forward in certain districts, and when our officers report to us that settlers are going to certain districts, we take measures to survey the land so that it may be ready for them when they wish to make their entries.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not understand how the minister determines that amount of pay that is to be given.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We act absolutely upon the advice of the surveyor general. We do not pretend to know anything about it, and rely entirely upon the officers of the Survey Department.

Mr. SPROULE. Who fixes the price to be paid per mile for every survey that is made ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Governor General decides it on my recommendation, and I make my recommendation on the advice of the surveyor general.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is allowed for supplies to those who are engaged by the department ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am informed that fifty cents a day is allowed to each man for maintenance. That is all they get, except the salary.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) made a couple of motions for returns which I understand have not yet been brought down. Perhaps the attention of the minister has been drawn to them. They ought to have been before the House before this. They had reference to the odd sections of lands that I believe are reserved for settlers going into the country, the other sections being granted to the Manitoba and Saskatchewan Railway Company. His motion asked for the price being paid per acre. I cannot understand that any such sale should have been made, because I do not see any authority under the law to allow the minister to do it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does my hon. friend say there was a motion for a return ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes. It must have been on the Order paper for eight or ten weeks.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Then my attention has not been called to it. Is the hon. gentleman sure it was not a question ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There was both a motion and a question.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If it is a return, I will have it brought down to-morrow, because it can be prepared in a short time.

Mr. SPROULE. I would just like to say in connection with the amount of money being paid for this work to-day, while I am not objecting to it, because it is pretty costly to live in that country, I have a very distinct recollection of strong complaints being made because the late government paid $5 a day for their surveyors while the present government, whose friends so strongly objected to it, sit in the House to-day and are quite willing to defend paying $6.50 a day, showing that the rigid economy for which they were so noted in the past evaporated when they got on the treasury benches.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a growing time.

Mr. SPROULE. And that was in a new era of the country when transportation was difficult and expensive and the cost of living was high. Surely, with the settlement of the country through the lapse of years since then, provisions ought to be a little cheaper, transportation ought to be a little cheaper and a little more convenient, and if these considerations were an ample justification for the expense then, that reason does not exist to-day. But, notwithstanding that fact the government are paying very much more for this service. The hon. minister says that this is a growing time. Well, it seems to be a growing time in most lines except in cabinet ministers. In that regard there appears to be a shrinkage lately and I am inclined to think there will be other experiences of the kind described by Artemus Ward when he said that when one commences to go down hill it would seem as if all nature had been greased for the occasion to let you slide. I think they will find it so in their experience as well.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I see that there is a vote of $13,000 for surveyors for irrigation purposes. I would like to know what has been done in the past in regard to surveys for irrigation purposes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Irrigation surveys have been carried on for a considerable number of years. If my recollection serves me right they were begun some time about 1891 or 1892; at any rate, some years before I took office. They were carried on for a number of years under the supervision of Mr. J. S. Dennis, who, under the late government, was the inspector of surveys, and who held the position which is now held by Mr. Wm. Pearce. Mr. Dennis shortly after I took office, resigned and became the deputy commissioner of Public Works under the North-west Territorial government. The surveys had been carried on for a number of years by Mr. Dennis and as he was a most competent person, in fact, practically the only man in the service who had a knowledge of the subject, I made an arrangement under which, while he remained the deputy commissioner of Public Works in the North-west Territories, and was not really in the service of the federal government, he should supervise the irrigation work and the work of the staff. That plan has been carried on and it has been found a very desirable plan to follow by reason of the fact that irrigation in the North-west Territories is controlled by legislation which is administered to a considerable extent by the local officers, and it is desirable that we should act with the officers of the Territorial government in administering our irrigation survey work. We have voted $13,000 per year for irrigation surveys and a very valuable amount of information has been collected. A very extensive system of records has been prepared, although, of course, that does not by any means exhaust the possibilities of procuring information in that vast country; yet a substantial beginning has been made. Thanks very largely to the interest, enthusiasm and ability of Mr. Dennis we have succeeded in laying the foundation of a very thorough system of irrigation surveys.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Have there been any irrigation works carried out ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, irrigation works have been carried out and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith, Wentworth) will consult legislation upon this subject he will find an Act of this parliament which provides the method under which water rights can be procured. We have provided a method by which we can sell lands to applicants who desire to irrigate the land. Parties make application to the local authorities to get irrigating rights and then they proceed to do the work. I could not at this moment give my hon. friend the statistics in regard to the amount of irrigation that has been done. That can be easily procured if my hon. friend is desirous of having it. We have not given any government assistance directly in the way of bonus for the purpose of doing irrigation work. We have contented ourselves with acquiring information and written records in regard to that work by procuring surveys to be made, so that when parties desire to do irrigation work they can get the necessary information in regard to levels and the flow of water and that sort of thing by consulting the irrigation officers. One irrigation project has been to some extent carried into effect near Calgary. Another very large system of irrigation has been carried into effect by what is known as the Alberta Irrigation Company, the president of which is Mr. E. T. Galt, of Montreal. They have 100 miles of a water course. I have had the pleasure of seeing this work and it has practically transformed the whole district through which it runs. Large settlements have been brought in and people are going in there now. It is in the neighbourhood of Lethbridge. If my hon. friend has paid any attention to the reports from that part of the country he will have seen that as a result of this irrigation scheme, which is about to be extended, a large settlement has been brought into the neighbourhood of Lethbridge and a beet-root sugar factory has been started on a large scale, with the result that we shall not only have farming but manufacturing industries carried on to a very considerable extent. I think the result is directly due to the inauguration of irrigation work by the government some years ago.

Dominion lands—chargeable to income—commissioner's salary, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give a general explanation of the charges in the vote for Dominion lands.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is the superintendent of mines ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. Haanel.

Mr. SPROULE. He is in the department here ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. As to the increase of $12,000 in the salaries of inspectors and so on, I may say that since these estimates were made up there has been such an unprecedented tide of immigration that it was impossible to keep the work up with the existing staff, and so others had to be employed. There is a vote of $8,000 in the supplementary estimates and the same explanation will apply to that.

Inspector's expenses, travelling expenses of commissioner, superintendent of mines and homestead inspectors, contingencies of Dominion lands and crown timber agents and at head office, removal expenses, stationery and printing, &c., $37,100.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you determine what amount is to be paid in travelling expenses.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In all cases at present we pay actual expenses. They have to return vouchers for every dollar expended. Formerly they were allowed so much per day for expenses and I think the homestead inspectors were allowed so much per year. But now we require vouchers no matter how small the amount, except it is in the nature of a payment for which a voucher cannot be produced and then the inspector requires evidence, that the money was paid and he audits the accounts and they are afterwards submitted to the Auditor General.

Mr. LENNOX. What is meant by removal expenses ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If an officer should be removed from one district to another and if under the Order in Council we are liable to pay his moving expenses it is paid out of this money.

Mr. LENNOX. How is that Order in Council regulated ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If he gets an increase of salary on account of removal he does not get his expenses but otherwise he does.

Mr. LENNOX. Would this item cover the case of a person who is appointed to a position in the Yukon from Ontario.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the practice of the department in that regard ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy informs me that the expenses are not paid except in the case of an officer who was in the service here or in some other part of the country who is sent out to a distant place. In the case of a man being newly appointed to the service his expenses are not paid.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think there is much objection to that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the minister be good enough to explain what the removal expenses are ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is an increase in this vote altogether of $4,000. The items that are paid out of it are the homestead inspectors' expenses, forest rangers' expenses, the travelling expenses of officers of that branch of the department, like the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, removal and attendance expenses of officers of the outside service, printing and stationery for the Crown lands and timber agencies, expenses for temporary assistance at the agencies when any is required, and a small amount paid for commissions on permits, where commissions are allowed by the department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the duties of the homestead inspectors ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The homestead inspectors have to report generally upon every item of information that is required by the department. But their primary and most important duty is to see to the performance of the homestead duties required by the Dominion Lands Act from homesteaders. No homesteader can get a patent for his land until the homestead inspector has made a report to the department after a personal visit to the homestead. He is notified from time to time by the land office of the applications for patents as they come in, and then he visits the homesteads of the different applicants, takes the necessary affidavits, and makes his report with the evidence to the department. This is laid before the Commissioner of Dominion lands, and the application is approved or otherwise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). About how many homestead inspectors are there ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nineteen at present. I may say that the Commissioner of Dominion lands reports to me that it will be absolutely impossible for him to keep up the work with this number, and he has recommended that we should have at least three or four more.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose their duties take their whole time ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They work under the Inspector of Dominion lands, at Winnipeg, and under the rules and regulations they have to account to him for every day of the year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the hon. minister explain what duties are performed at the Dominion lands office at Winnipeg, and what lands are disposed of there ? If one wants to buy land, has he to go to the Winnipeg office ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Winnipeg office is not different from any other land office.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it not more expensive to keep up than the Edmonton or the Calgary office ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I fancy it is. That is owing to the interminable complications that have arisen in connection with the patents for river lots along the Red river. There is a vast amount of work done at the Winnipeg office in connection with these that is not done at other offices. Officials have been kept there under considerable salary for no other reason than that they knew the location of the river lots, and knew how they were drawn. The administration of the law with regard to these river lots is very tangled and very difficult, and is proportionately expensive.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I notice a large sum down for surveys. Is the minister doing anything in the country beyond Edmonton, towards the Peace river ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not very much. We have one party there, but that is all. The policy of the department is not to do very much in that direction. My hon. friend is familiar enough with the west to know that some people have the notion to go as far away as they can. It is the policy of the department to get the nearest land settled up first, and I do not think it would be wise for us to survey the Peace river country when there is so much land nearer that is yet unsettled.

Mr. BENNETT. I find in the Auditor General's Report L—25 and continuing on, probably a dozen pages, many entries of payments to different parties for services in inspection of lands or as land guides. These run into thousands of dollars. Does not every surveyor, after the completion of his work, deposit in the department an accurate description of each section of land ? If that be the case, every land agent at these different points should be furnished with a schedule describing these different sections. If access can be had to these, why is it necessary to send out guides with the settlers ? Not only are fees paid to those so-called land guides, but hundreds of dollars are paid for livery hire. That must give the hon. minister an immense amount of patronage to distribute among his friends.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is true that the surveyor furnishes an accurate record to the department of his surveys and it is also true that the local agents of the Dominion are given that information. Not only is that the case, but we have small printed maps giving copies of field notes. But I may say to my hon. friend, that does not at all take away the necessity of giving constant assistance to incoming settlers in the way of locating them. A stranger not accustomed to travelling on the prairies and to our methods of survey, is very hopeless when he gets to locate, and we have found one of the most pressing needs of immigration work to be the furnishing of efficient guides to locate the settlers. It is quite true that the hiring of livery rigs places in my hands a considerable amount of patronage, but if my hon. friend had to administer it, he would find that with three or four livery stables in a small town all wanting patronage, he would have considerable difficulty on his hands, and I should be quite willing to transfer that particular patronage to my hon. friend. But these guides are absolutely necessary because the average settler, unfamiliar with our system of survey, find it totally impossible to discover his section.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the usual practice ? Do the settlers first go out with the guides and look over the lands and then come to the office of the agent to see where that land is ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is managed through the immigration commissioner at Winnipeg. In certain districts the land agents are given the services of guides. When a settler comes to the land office and asks for a guide, a guide is sent out with him. Sometimes a guide is sent out with a party of people. The commissioner is governed by the circumstances. There is no fixed rule, but the object is to assist new settlers to pick out the land they want with the least possible expenditure of time and money.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The coloured township maps now issued do not show the quality of the land, and one has to go to the field to find that out. It would be just as easy to have the quality of the land described on these maps as not.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I thought that was done. It used to be done.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is not done. The general characteristics of the country are marked but not the quality of the land. When a man pays fifty cents for a map, he wants to get all the information possible out of it. Many persons in Ontario and elsewhere, who wish to select an area in which to settle, do not know the parts already homesteaded and the parts where they may take out homestead entries. It would be easy for the department to issue parti-coloured maps, showing the sections still open for homesteads. All the railways now issue section maps.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That would be very difficult. The result would be this : A man would get his map and see a certain piece of land marked upon it open for homestead. He would travel four or five hundred miles for the purpose of location, and then find somebody else there. He would then have a bill of damages against the department. The bill might be unreasonable, but the man would ask the department to pay it. Such claims would be coming in constantly.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Does he ask the Canadian Pacific Railway to pay it ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Canadian Pacific Railway is not the government.

Mr. BENNETT. How much approximately was paid out for these so-called land guides ? One man, James Thompson, drew no less a sum than $714 ; another $274, and another $126. These items are found all through the report. When a man buys from the Canadian Pacific Railway, he simply takes advantage of the field notes furnished him. Do the settlers go out in the first instance with the guide to see the land or do they first locate on the strength of the report in the department office and then go out with the guide ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are no absolutely hard and fast rules. When a settler comes to the land office for information, the land agent shows him the reports and tells him to go out and locate his land, but he does not know how to get there, and when he does get there, he does not know whether he is on a railway section or where he is. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no part of the service in connection with immigration and land office work that is more absolutely essential than the sending out of guides to assist new settlers to locate. If it were not done, we should find the settlers congregated about the railway station or the land office, not knowing where to go or what to do.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems very odd, if we have an intelligent people going into that country, that such assistance should be necessary. When they go into the office and are handed a map—as they must be if they inquire for one—and the direction is indicated in which they are to look for their land, I should think it would be easy, with the simple system of surveys that is carried on in the North-west (all the lands being in squares) to locate their land. I have never done work of that kind, but I have been told repeatedly by men who have bought lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway that they go to the office and get the field notes, showing where these lands are that are available. They go out of their own accord and find no difficulty in locating the land still unsold. Then they come back, compare their notes with the notes in the office and decide whether or not they wish to purchase. Can the hon. minister tell me how many thousands of dollars have been spent last year approximately, on these so-called land guides ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not able to give the hon. gentleman a correct statement now, and an incorrect statement would be worse than none. But I will be able to give him the facts in a couple of days. I will have a statement prepared. With regard to the information he has received, I have known my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) a considerable while and consider him a man of reasonable capacity in these matters. But I venture to say that if he had to go and pick out land, having no guide and only the information given him in a land office to go by, he would be a long time finding his land. I may say I tried it myself. I do not profess to have a very extraordinary degree of knowledge on these matters, but I have lived long enough in that country to know something of the difficulties. The ordinary man not familiar with land hunting and land examining is almost helpless when he goes out on the prairies, so far as finding any particular piece of land is concerned. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) is familiar with that country and I have never spoken to him on this subject, but I venture to say that if he is asked he will corroborate what I say. There is nothing I am surer about than the absolute necessity of this class of service.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the government the land for sale, or only land for homesteading ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is against the policy of the department to sell, generally speaking. Until three or four years ago sales were made from time to time, but not of an important character. But even small sales are discontinued and are discouraged by the department. Exceptions are made in special cases. For instance, a man may have lost his homestead through being financially unfortunate. If he could not acquire another farm upon terms within his reach, he would go out of the country and would be lost to us. In such a case, if an application is made and the facts are proven before our officer, we may sell a quarter section at a low figure—$2 or $3 an acre. Land not of good quality is sold at as low as $1 an acre. These sales are always in the case of actual settlers, to give a man the same chance as would be given him by allowing him to take up another homestead. The law does not permit a second homestead, so we attain some degree of flexibility in the management of the land by having the sales made in this way. Or, sometimes, men who have engaged in ranching make application to buy small quantities of land; I may say they generally want as much as they can get. Sometimes, owing to changes going on in the country the rancher's property would be destroyed if he were not able to protect himself by purchasing the land. A man may have started a cattle industry and put up buildings and find that he is running his cattle on the public domain. Unless he can get some basis for the industry he would be wiped out. In a few cases of that kind, after looking into the matter carefully, we sell small quantities of land. I think three sections is the most we have sold to one purchaser, and that only after careful investigation. There is a vast quantity of land in the odd numbered sections in the hands of railway companies and land companies, and any one who wants to buy land can buy it—there is any quantity for sale. When we are asked to sell land, our ordinary answer is that we cannot sell, but if the parties wish to buy they can buy it from the companies.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the government been making sales of large quantities of land ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Only in one case, the one to which, no doubt, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) refers—except in connection with irrigation work. In connection with these works, we have sold considerable quantities. The only other sale of large quantity is that of which I speak, the sale to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, to which reference was made by the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart). While I was away, the officers of the department made an examinatin of an area some 250,000 acres, in what was regarded as an arid and practically useless section. The land was sold at $1 per acre, upon settlement conditions. I will bring down full particulars before my estimates are fully disposed of.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Does the minister, or does the government, take any cognizance of the construction of roads in the North-west ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have not any vote for the construction of roads in the estimates this year. I do not remember that we have ever had any such votes except on one or two occasions. When money was voted for roads in the northern portion of the country. If I remember well, we once voted money for the construction of a road in the Peace River district in the neighbourhood of Dunvegan, which was constructed under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Works for the North-west Territories. Then four or five thousand dollars were voted for a road near Green lake, west of Prince Albert.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would impress upon the minister the necessity of constructing roads, or assisting in constructing them by increasing the grant to the territorial government. As my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) knows, there are many places where the settlers have long distances to haul their grain, and the roads are very bad. It would answer the purpose as well if the money were handed over to the territorial government and they were encouraged to build the roads.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will go into that somewhat fully when we come to the vote for the North-west Territories.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not know whether it is exactly germane to this vote, but I notice that in the list of amounts paid over to various denominations in connection with the half-breed schools in the Northwest as given in the Auditor General's Report, some teachers receive very low salaries, and others very high salaries, comparatively speaking.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the hon. gentleman able to tell us how much land is still available for settlement by means of homestead entries in the four organized territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give that information on some other item later on.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. gentleman will find the items I mentioned on pages L—40 and L—41. The amounts are not nearly the same. The point I make is, Why is there a discrepancy in the sums paid to the various teachers ? Why are they not all paid the same amounts ? The hon. gentleman will notice that the Protestant schools get comparatively small sums, or nothing whatever, $100, $50, $75, $200 ; whereas the Roman Catholic schools get $400 and $500.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This vote has always been administered by the Lieutenant Governor of the North-west Territories. There has been no change. We grant a certain sum of money, and the Lieutenant Governor distributes it in assisting schools in the unorganized districts. This department has never had any supervision over it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). But the minister has received a report of the administration of the money ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I have a report ; but it only shows what is paid in the unorganized districts each year, the grant payable to each school, and when last paid. Nine of the schools are Episcopalian, 12 are Roman Catholic. No other denomination is represented. I would gather from the statements that the difference in salary is due to the fact that some teachers are employed a longer time than others.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think the minister should look into this matter a little more closely.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Protection of timber lands in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and tree culture in the North-west Territories, $25,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. The vote last year was $15,000. Would the hon. minister kindly explain the reason for this increase of $10,000 over last year's estimate ? I would like the hon. minister to explain what benefits we are receiving from tree culture.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that the increase is caused by an increase in the scope of the work. We started in a comparatively small way and we are operating in a comparatively small way yet, and I am only sorry that we have not been able to ask for a larger amount of money to be devoted to this purpose. I may say to my hon. friends that if they read the report of the superintendent of forestry explaining that work they will understand what has been done. I am told that he appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and explained very fully the scope of his operations and therefore it is unnecessary for me to repeat the statement here.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose the hon. minister refers to Mr. Stewart ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. I did not happen to be at the committee, and I would like to hear what Mr. Stewart's salary is and what his duties are ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The salary is $2,500 a year. There has been no change in his salary since he was appointed. His duties are to supervise the work of the forestry branch which is divided into two classes. One class of the work consists in the preparation of material for tree planting; that is to say young trees delivered to farmers in different parts of the prairie country are planted under the supervision of the inspectors or supervisors appointed for that purpose. The other division of the work consists in taking such steps as may be found practicable for the purpose of preventing the origination and spread of fires. I may say that this is a class of work which might be with great advantage considerably extended and the reason why it is not considerably extended is due to the fact that we do not feel like asking for a larger appropriation. Hon. gentlemen will see that $10,000 out of the $25,000 we are asking for is for the payment of fire rangers in different sections of the country. I am told that last year the work of the fire rangers appointed by this branch of the service saved very large quantities of timber which unquestionably would otherwise have been destroyed, and I fancy there is no vote in connection with the service of the Department of the Interior which more fully justifies itself in the saving of property which forms part of the public domain.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). What portion of the vote is for tree culture and how is it to be spent ? I did not have the opportunity of being at the Agriculture Committee.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $10,000 is for the salaries of fire rangers and there will be, perhaps, $2,000 or $3,000 additional out of the $25,000 spent in other ways in connection with the prevention of fires. About half of the vote will be applicable to the work of the preparation and the planting of trees.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Will the hon. minister tell us the modus operandi in regard to the growth and distribution of trees? Do you furnish trees free to the farmers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have plantations upon the Experimental Farms at Brandon and Indian Head where large quantities of young trees are grown to an age suitable for transplanting. These young trees are handed over to farmers who apply for them and who agree to plant them under the directions which are furnished by the forestry branch and under the supervision of the officers appointed for that purpose. During this spring over a million young trees were delivered to those who applied for them.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). When Mr. Stewart was before the committee he admitted that at the rate these trees were being given out it would take a long time to re-forest the North-west.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a large country.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Stewart tacitly agreed that trees selected from a bluff adjoining a man's home would answer the purpose as well as the present system. I would suggest to the minister that the fire law in relation to the burning of scrub timber lands might very well be inquired into. In Assiniboia and the southern part of Alberta, only possibly the southern part of Saskatchewan, apparently the present fire law is very proper, but in the northern part of these territories it would be a great blessing if a good fire would sweep over the country and burn the underbrush which varies in size and density and which has to be cleared by the settler with even greater labour than confronted the early pioneers of Ontario in clearing the forests. I would suggest that the minister might inquire whether the regulations may not be amended in relation to the fall fires in the extreme northern part of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would of course take a very long time to re-forest the North-west to any extent that would be appreciable to a person travelling over that vast country, but those who are acquainted with what has taken place in the Western States will know that a little scientific attention paid to this matter results in an object lesson and does a great deal of good. If one farmer in a township proceeds under our legislation and has a little plantation, very great benefits result, as farmers for miles around try to emulate him. During the entire period of my residence there it had always impressed itself on my mind that something should be done to induce the farmers of that country to engage in tree-planting on a more extensive scale than hitherto. If anything is done in the direction of clearing what we call scrub land by fire it can only be done by settlers themselves and then under very careful regulations. It would never do to allow fires to run without control merely for the purpose of clearing away the scrub. Our experience in that part of the country is that fires do incalculable damage once they get out of control. Nearly half of this vote for fire protection is expended on the British Columbia railway reserve, which is the property of this government and where there is considerable timber.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest to the minister the advisability of trying to grow hickory trees in the North-west. It is a timber which is very largely used in Canada now and the supply has become almost entirely exhausted.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The trees best adapted for the North-west are the soft wood trees, such as cotton wood, poplar and Manitoba maple, which grow well and are excellent shade trees. I think it would be useless to try to get hickory to grow.

Mr. OLIVER. I was somewhat astonished to hear the hon. member (Mr. Hughes) asking that the regulations respecting prairie fires in northern Alberta should be relaxed.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Not prairie fires; wood fires.

Mr. OLIVER. Well wood or prairie fires, because if a fire spreads in the prairie it does not stop when it gets to the wood. I do not know how far the hon. gentleman's suggestion is likely to be acted upon by the minister, but having been a member of the North-west Assembly for a number of years, I can say to the House that the question of preventing as far as possible fires of all kinds from running in any part of the country and particularly in the wooded and partly wooded parts of the country, is a subject that has occupied the attention of the North-west Assembly ever since I have known anything about it. If the wood is small or if it is scarce it is all the more necessary that it should not be dsetroyed by prairie fires. If there should be regulations as there are for the preservation of the wood so that it shall not be cut wastefully by settlers, surely it is a thousand times more necessary that it should not be destroyed by uncontrolled fires. I do not wish to engage in a controversy at this particular stage of the game, but I cannot allow the suggestion to pass without a most emphatic protest and to say to the minister as representing that part of the country, that I would most strongly urge not only that the present restrictions be maintained—of course he has no control over them—but that the present means of maintaining these restrictions over which he has control be rather improved and enlarged than otherwise.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In reply to my hon. friend, I have now before me the report. It was written in August of last year, and refers to the work of the spring of 1902 :

This spring ninety-one applicants were supplied with trees from Indian Head, the total number of seedings and cuttings sent out being 106,000, consisting of 33,256 maples, 53,648 cottonwoods, 2,000 elm and 17,096 willow cuttings.

The following is an estimate of stock at present growing in the Indian Head nursery :—

|---|---|
| Maple.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 350,000 |
| Ash.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 225,000 |
| Elm.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 50,000 |
| Scotch pine, one year old.. .. .. | 25,000 |
| European larch, one year old .. | 18,000 |
| White spruce, one year old.. .. | 5,000 |
| Native birch, one year old.. .. | 500 |
| Total number of plants.. .. | 673,500 |

Mr. TAYLOR. Allow me to suggest to the minister that he recommend to the gentleman in charge at Indian Head that he try some of the other hardwood timber. Where ash and elm will grow hickory will grow, and it is one of the most valuable timbers, and one of the quickest growers. We are to-day importing into Canada very large quantities of hickory from the United States. We cannot get it anywhere else, the supply in Canada being exhausted. If the department could make a success of growing hickory, nothing more valuable to the country could happen than to plant some of those untold acres in the North-west with hickory trees. In twenty years from now we would have a supply for the manufacturers of this country, and save importing it from a foreign country. It would be worth trying at any rate, to see whether or not it would be a success.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am glad to have this suggestion from my hon. friend, who has a practical knowledge of woods required for manufacturing purposes. I have a strong idea of the value of this work, if the farmers of the country could be induced to take it up. The amount we can do ourselves is of course comparatively small; but if we can induce the farmers of the country, who have unlimited ground, to engage in tree planting, and to plant that class of trees which will be economically valuable, I am satisfied that we shall accomplish a great thing for the country. I am glad to have my hon. friend's suggestion, and I will see that it receives full consideration.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not like to run foul of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), but I wish to say that what I had reference to was not timber land, but land covered with scrub. Wherever you find a clump of scrub, you invariably have early frosts in the fall and late frosts in the spring; and many of the settlers in northern Saskatchewan and in many parts of northern Alberta would be delighted if some relaxation in the restrictions with regard to fall fires might be allowed, so that they might get the land cleared of scrub, and relieved of the dampness and consequently of the early fall frosts which are caused thereby. I believe in preserving the timber lands at every cost; but this scrub is absolutely useless for fuel, and it is an almost impossible job for the farmers to get rid of it.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). What limitations are there with regard to giving out these seedlings ? Can any person anywhere in the North-west or in Manitoba get all he wants ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. The trouble has been to induce the farmers to take them at all, and look after them. Of course, if the demand became large, the agent would exercise his discretion and not give a larger number to one man than he could look after.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I quite appreciate the advantage of giving them out as an object lesson, to induce the farmers to purchase them in the future; but I would suggest that there should be ultimately some restriction imposed. I imagine that when the farmers of the North-west find that they can get these seedlings free and in unlimited numbers, in a short time there will be such an enormous demand for them, that it will be a great tax on the government to supply them. It seems to me, too, that it is rather unfair that the farmers of one section are furnished with these seedlings free, while the farmers of another section are not. In the United States, the government for a time sent out free seeds. At first there was not much demand for them; but presently the giving out of free seeds not only became a great burden on the government, but an intolerable nuisance.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If a general demand arose, the natural result would be that people would go into the nursery business on a large scale; and as soon as that condition of affairs arose, the government would cease to supply the trees, and leave the work to private enterprise.

Mr. WILSON. A year or two ago, Mr. Stewart, before the Committee on Agriculture, said that if any person wanted trees to plant and made application for them, the government would send a person to look at his farm and prescribe the kind of trees that would be best suited to it, and would lay out a diagram in a rough way as to how they should be planted. That diagram would be sent to Ottawa, and in the following year the inspector would go out and see what had been done. I would like to know if that plan has been carried out ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think, generally speaking, it has. I would not say that there are no exceptions.

Mr. WILSON. Is not that a very expensive modus operandi ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of course, it is expensive. The expenses consist in sending a man out to see that the planting is properly done. There are scores of cases where farmers have tried to plant trees in absolute ignorance of the methods that ought to be adopted ; and after a few years, some of these trees are half dead and others completely withered. The principle of this has been to furnish an object lesson and that is necessarily expensive.

Mr. WILSON. I could quite understand this being done in districts, but Mr. Stewart left the impression on the minds of the committee that if any one applied, an inspector would be sent down to view his soil, make a rough diagram, send that to Ottawa and get a regular plan made, then plant the trees, and the following year inspect them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the intention was to send an inspector out to make a diagram before any trees were planted, but that a diagram would be sent showing how the trees should be planted, and then the inspector would be sent to supervise the planting.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose your travelling foresters are paid their actual expenses ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is nothing paid except the actual expenses, for which vouchers are furnished.

Mr. SPROULE. I see an item here of a pullman and state-room for Mr. Stewart, $131.25. Of course, these gentlemen must travel in state as much as possible, and I presume these things are not put down at lower than cost. There is another item of $839.49 for printing in connection with Dominion lands, protection of timber.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have to get notices printed showing what the law is with regard to allowing fires to run, and these notices have to be printed on a special kind of paper, and are rather expensive.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are they printed ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At the Printing Bureau.

Mr. BLAIN. When did the department begin giving out the trees referred to, and to what extent have the farmers taken advantage of that policy ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My recollection is that three years ago we started with our first vote of $15,000, and the vote has been $15,000 per year since then. I do not think I could give a better idea of the result of the work than will be found on page 10 of the Report of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BLAIN. I think that Mr. Stewart made the statement before the committee that it was almost impossible for the department to furnish sufficient trees to supply the demands of the farmers ; but if I understood the hon. minister, the difficulty with the department was to get the farmers to plant the trees.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend may have referred to the difficulty experienced at first. It was only towards the end of the second year that we decided upon fitting out these plantations. I am informed that the supply is equal to the demand, but no doubt the demand will grow rapidly.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Is a man sent out to show farmers how to plant the trees and lay out the ground ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That rule is not always followed. Where the farmer knows sufficient himself, we do not send any one to teach him.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Suppose an inquiry came 200 miles distant, would the minister send a man that distance ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The applications would come in early in the season, and the superintendent would devide his staff and use his judgment as to where he would send them.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). As there are only two centres, there might be some points many hundreds of miles away from them, and it would be an expensive job.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In that case we cannot do it.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Printed instructions might be sent out which would be quite sufficient. That is all the farmers in the east require. With such instructions, it is not more difficult to plant small seedlings than any farm crop.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me a pretty expensive job. I do not know why the farmers in Manitoba and the Northwest should not be able to plant seedling trees. In our section of the country we buy our apple trees, at pretty high prices too, and we have no government official running around to tell us how to plant our trees. A man who is capable of running a farm ought to have intelligence enough to plant trees. In addition, we have an inspector, if what my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says is correct, travelling about superintending this work, and he travels in a pullman car.

Mr. SPROULE. With a state-room.

Mr. COCHRANE. Of course. And we do not hear anything from the supporters of the government about it. But I can remember the time when, if one of the members of the government I had the honour to support travelled in a pullman car, the fact was heralded from one end of the country to the other, and one would have thought that these hon. gentlemen on the other side would lose their senses at such an extravagance perpetrated by a member of the government. Even the cab-hire of the leader of the government, Sir John A. Macdonald, was criticised. And now the inspector who is to teach the farmers of the North-west to plant trees is not satisfied with travelling like an ordinary mortal, but he must have a pullman car and a state-room.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) seems to think it peculiar that this work is carried on in Manitoba and the North-west, and in no other province ?

Mr. COCHRANE. No, I do not.

Mr. SCOTT. That is what I gather from his remarks. He said that the farmers in his part of the country had to buy their own trees at pretty high prices——

Mr. COCHRANE. I said that they bought trees that were expensive, and they did not have a government official running around to tell them how to plant them.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman says the farmers in his section buy their own trees, and the inference, as I suppose, is that the farmers in the North-west ought to buy theirs.

Mr. COCHRANE. I did not say so.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) was referring to the planting of the trees and the intelligence required in that work.

Mr. SCOTT. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will permit me—I would like to point out that the conditions in the North-west are not similar to those in the older provinces. The Dominion government owns all the public lands in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and it does not own the public lands in the other parts of Canada. That is a reason why, if this work is done for the preservation of forests and the encouragement of tree planting, it should be done by the authority and at the expense of the Dominion government.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Are these trees being planted upon public lands ?

Mr. SCOTT. A part of this expenditure is upon government lands for the preservation of the forest. What I rose for chiefly was to protest against the useless waste of time in asking questions such as have been asked this evening, the answers to which would be known to hon. gentlemen if they would take the trouble to read the report of the superintendent of forestry. I have here that report for 1902, which gives specifically the answers to many of the questions that have been asked with regard to the carrying on of the work. For instance, as to whether the department is going to be able to supply the demands which come from the people for trees. At page eight of the report I find the following :

> In the spring of 1901 a beginning was made by furnishing forty-four settlers, who had their ground prepared, with seedling trees. In all 58,800 trees were sent out at that time.
> In the spring of 1902, 415 settlers were supplied, the aggregate quantity being 468,900 trees. . . . . There are in all 1,006 applicants whose land is being examined this season with a view to planting next spring.
> Applications are now being received from those who desire to have their places examined next season with a view to making preparation for receiving trees for planting in 1904. . . .
> The matter of being able to supply the applicants with seedling trees has been one of some concern, and fears were expressed that it might be impossible to meet the large demands that would be made. I am glad, however, to be able to report that the nurserics established by this department at the Experimental Farms at Brandon and Indian Head through the kind permission of the minister and officers of the Department of Agriculture, will furnish over 1,000,000 trees for transplanting next spring. In addition to these we will probably have 150,000 maples and Russian poplars from Mr. Caldwell, at Virden. So it may be safely assumed that all applicants who have their ground properly prepared for next spring's planting will receive their full complement of nursery stock.

There is a complete answer from the report to several of the questions that have been asked ; and I venture to say that the report contains specific information, answering practically every question with which the time of the committee has been taken up this evening.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) will allow a question, as he seems so conversant with these points ? Perhaps he can tell us what portion of the money has been spent on private property, and what on public property in respect to the planting of trees ?

Mr. SCOTT. I have to admit I am not very conversant with these matters, and cannot answer the question. But I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will be able to obtain an answer from the minister. My principal objection to this vote is that not enough money is being spent upon this object. I consider it, and it is considered by all the peole of Manitoba and the North-west, as one of the most important objects with which this parliament has to deal affecting that part of the country. The pity is that practical work was not begun sooner. This is not a new subject, and the present plan is much more economical and effective, in my opinion, than that followed by the late government in years gone by. For this is a subject that did not entirely escape their attention. They endeavoured to encourage tree planting by allowing men to gain the title to their homesteads and also to the pre-emption of an additional 160 acres, which, in former years they were allowed to obtain. That plan was much more expensive than the practical and effective plan adopted by the present Minister of the Interior.

Mr. COCHRANE. The House, I am sure, is much delighted with the information obtained from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott). It appears to me that he wishes to be a second epistle of the Minister of the Interior. I suppose he is moved by the legitimate ambition of at one time filling the position of Minister of the Interior. The hon. gentleman was good enough to criticise the opposition for occupying the time of the House. I am within the judgment of the House when I say that the hon. gentleman has occupied more than his share of time in elaborating his views and giving us information that amounts to nothing when he gets through with it. He must be well satisfied with himself, and I am sure the Minister of the Interior is delighted that there is a second epistle to himself in this House ready to afford us information whether he has it or not. I did not offer the criticism that the hon. gentleman thought I did. He must not put words in my mouth that I never used. I did not object to the country spending money in furnishing trees. what I objected to was sending out officials to tell the farmers how to plant the trees, and I referred to the fact that in Ontario we have to plant our own fruit trees, that cost us a good deal of money. I do not see why the farmer in the North-west, if he has brains enough to farm, should not have brains enough to set out a few trees when they are furnished him by the government. I object to the unnecessary expenditure of this gentleman travelling in pullman cars. I find in looking over the Auditor General's Report that there is one gentleman who has got a span of ponies. I would ask the second epistle of the Minister of the Interior whether it is shown in that report that some gentleman has got a span of ponies at $225. He is not only travelling in state in the pullman car, and state-rooms, but he has got a span of ponies that cost the country $225. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if I could find that in this report. I think the whole thing is absurd, and when people will read it they will say, great Scott, what is this country coming to ?

Mr. SCOTT. If the hon. gentleman wants information about a span of ponies and thinks there is anything wrong in this officer having a span of ponies, we have the Public Accounts Committee and other committees who are appointed to deal with such questions. Surely the time of this House should not be taken up with discussing questions of no more importance than this. I protest against the way in which, for the past three months, the time of this House has been recklessly wasted by hon. gentlemen day after day and night after night. One night we were kept in session until nearly half past seven o'clock in the morning, and what was the discussion about ? The list of questions in the census schedules which I presume every person in Canada had already seen. I protest against hon. gentlemen wasting the time of the House in such manner.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is not talking to the question before the Chair. He is accusing hon. gentlemen of obstructing. I do not know of any person who is doing it more effectively than he is doing it himself.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think there are quite a number who are not speaking to the resolution, and I would advise hon. gentlemen to get back and discuss the merits of this item. I appeal to them all to keep a little closer to the question under consideration.

Mr. BLAIN. The only difference between the other side of the House and this side is upon the question whether the public money should be expended on private property. Our side of the House do not make any complaint against an expenditure of government money to supply trees to farmers in the western country ; but what we say is that it is not proper that the government should expend money in sending out an official to examine the land, and then sending him out again to help plant the trees in order to beautify a farmer's property. I may say to the hon. gentleman that when Mr. Stewart was before the committee he submitted a plan and distributed it among members of the committee, showing the different ways in which different properties should be laid out. That gentleman told the committee that when a farmer made application for trees, the department sent a man out to find out what kind of land he proposed to plant the trees upon. That was the first expense, and that is something we object to. After he had found out what kind of land the farmer had, and what kind of soil, the department then sent him out to assist in laying out that property and in planting the trees. That is an expenditure that we are objecting to. We know that in that country it is not easy to grow trees, and we do not at all object to the government supplying the trees. We would go so far as to say that when farmers apply for trees the government should keep an abundant supply on hand so as to furnish every farmer who applies for them. But what we do object to is in the government, first of all, sending officials out to inspect the property, and after supplying the trees, to assist the farmer in beautifying his property, a private property which ought not to be improved by public money.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the hon. gentleman seriously objects to this item. I may say that tree planting in the North-west was practically unknown a short time ago. The system has undergone a considerable amount of improvement, and we have reason to hope that by following out the plan we are at present pursuing the result will be to encourage tree planting to a considerable extent throughout that country. Generally speaking, the principle of expending public money on private properties is, of course, indefensible, but the hon. gentleman will understand that this is done only temporarily and to a small extent.

Mr. WILSON. I took the same ground before the committee when Mr. Stewart was before us that I do now. I do not object to the government giving the trees, but I think it is altogether too much to send a man out to inspect the ground, to make a diagram of it, to send the diagram to Ottawa, and have the plan sent back, and then after the trees are planted to send a man out again to inspect them. I objected to that then, and I object to it now.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in the Auditor General's Report, L—91, an item for 300,000 cottonwood trees at $375. Do you buy your cottonwood trees in the western states ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These were bought in Dakota. We are raising some now.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Can you not get these trees in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think we can get cottonwood trees in Canada. Some of our nurserymen in the North-west say that only cottonwood trees grow well on our prairies. I remember the question was discussed when the Minister of Agriculture introduced legislation to prevent the importation of trees from the United States, on account of the prevalence of the San Jose scale. My recollection is that the nurserymen of Manitoba were of the opinion that the only cottonwood tree that could be got to grow in the North-west was that which came from North Dakota.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). The cottonwood tree is raised here as well as in Dakota. The only question is as to whether or not it has been grown here. If the department is going to continue the planting of these trees I would suggest that an arrangement be made to grow them in Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They will grow just as well in the nurseries of Manitoba and the North-west Territories as in Dakota. I am not able to say why it is they have not planted cottonwood on the farms.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in these items money paid out for the purchase of horses and in connection with trading horses. I do not see any credit showing what has been done with these animals.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What page ?

Team of pony mares, $225 ; team harness, half set, $15 ; freight, $91.19 ; single harness, $35 ; curry comb, brush, &c., $1.35.

Lodging and horse feed, $375.15 ; fountain pen, $4.50 ; fountain pen, $3.

They seem to be supplied with everything. What is done with these horses ? Do they give them away when they are through with them ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These items are for horse hire, I suppose.

Mr. SPROULE. This is for the purchase of horses and trading horses.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Ross, the assistant superintendent, has a horse and Mr. Stevenson has a horse. The others all hire horses where they are required.

Mr. WILSON. What was Mr. Ross' business before he undertook the work of superintendent of tree planting ? I understand he was just a farmer who had lived in that country for a while ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Ross is a gentleman who had previously devoted himself before coming into the department to the study of forestry. He has a special education on these lines.

Mr. WILSON. Where did he live ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My recollection is that immediately previous to his coming into the service of the department he was at Toronto. I cannot at this moment give the record, but Mr. Ross devoted himself especially to the study of forestry. He had studied it under specialists in Europe, having gone there for the purpose, as a scientific education in forestry cannot be procured on this continent. After having spent some time in Europe, Mr. Ross returned and continued his studies under Dr. Schenck, one of the most eminent foresters in the world, who is in charge of the Vanderbilt estate in South Carolina.

Mr. WILSON. What is his salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $1,000.

Mr. WILSON. That is not very high for so highly educated a man.

Mr. SPROULE. Talking about horses, here is one item.

Woodrow, W. A.: services, October 15 to December 31, at $75, $191.13 ; board, lodging and horse feed, $93.50 ; horse-hire, $105.50 ; fares, $7.80. $397.93.

I do not know whether these horses are owned or not, but in several instances throughout this report—not in connection with this service—horses are bought and traded and so much given in trade, $15 in one place and $35 in another place. Then, there is 'horseshoeing, $2.70,' and another item 'shoeing horses, $3.75.' Take a case like this.

Wodrow, W. A.: horse-hire, $105.50——

—lodging and horse feed, $93.50.

That is $198 for two and a half months. It seems to me to be an awful figure.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Woodrow is a nurseryman. He had $75 a month while he was working and we paid his expenses while he was travelling in the service of the department from October 15 to December 31. During that time he paid $105 for horse-hire. If my hon. friend was travelling through the country and had to hire horses he would have to pay that much. I know I would; in fact I generally have to pay more. I do not think the amount is excessive.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Before we pass to the next item the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) asked me before six o'clock to give an approximate statement of the amount of land that is available in the organized portions of the North-west Territories for settlement. I want to guard myself in making this statement because it would be difficult except after a very elaborate and careful calculation, to give a statement that could be regarded as accurate. I can only give a very rough approximate statement, but still, even speaking in that sense, one which I think will be of some value to the members of the committee. The total area of land in the organized districts of the North-west Territories is 230,000,000 acres. There have been disposed of in homesteads and pre-emptions, roughly speaking, about 18,000,000 acres, and there have been given to railway companies, colonization companies, &c., by way of grants of one kind or another 58,000,000 acres. That leaves a balance of 154,000,000 acres. I would deduct from that 54,000,000 acres of land that is not fairly fit for settlement, either land which is covered with water or of a rough and broken character; so that, roughly speaking, we have 100,000,000 acres of land still available for settlement in the organized territories.

Mr. WILSON.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by organized territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I mean the territories which have been by Act of this parliament organized into districts—Manitoba, Eastern Assiniboia, Western Assiniboia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan. North of that country we have the unorganized districts of Athabasca and Mackenzie.

Military asylum pensions, $168.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have the explanation of this vote here, and I wish to mention it, so when it comes up in connection with some other department the explanation will have been given. This is a small item but sometimes questions are asked about it. It is made up of three or four small pensions which are provided for by 44 Victoria, chapter 18.

Maintenance, construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Springs reservation near Banff station, North-west Territories, $22,420.

Mr. SPROULE. How much money was spent out of the vote last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was all spent.

Mr. SPROULE. Can you give us the items of expenditure last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the return showing how the money was actually spent.

Mr. BLAIN. How much money has been spent on that park up to date ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say.

Mr. BLAIN. How many acres in it

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is in the form of a triangle, the side on the British Columbia boundary being about 130 miles and the other about 115 miles long. We have added what is called the Yoho park which is in British Columbia and although technically not a part of the same park it is under the same administration. We own the land and have the sovereign right in the North-west Territories, but that part on the British Columbia side is held by the federal government as private owners of property in the province. The universal report is that the park is a source of great pleasure to travellers. The number of visitors has greatly increased, and when I was there, in the month of December, a year and a half ago, I was told that the hotels had been so filled at the close of the season that they had to send word ahead that they could not accommodate any more visitors. The Canadian Pacific Railway has since increased its hotel accommodation, and last year we erected a museum and office where visitors may gather and obtain information. There are over 100 miles of constructed roads in the park; we have 36 or 37 buffalo, and they are being successfully bred; we have a small herd of elk and of moose. It is our intention to have a collection of animals there. The superintendent of the park is a very efficient officer, and I think we get very good value for what money we spend.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). How will the appropriation of $3,000 for the baths be expended?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One of the attractions of the park is the medicinal springs which are very curative in rheumatic diseases. A small fee is charged to the visitors for the use of the bathing house, and these fees pay the superintendence of the bath to a considerable extent. It is proposed on account of the increasing number of visitors to increase the bath house accommodation.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I must congratulate the minister on the expenditure. I can assure him that, if it is properly spent, it is well needed. The old bath-house was rather a disgrace to the country, and I am very glad to know that the minister has put a small sum in the estimates to improve it.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the minister say who the caretaker is, and how many employees there are at Banff Springs?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are four regular employees: Mr. Howard Douglas, superintendent; Mr. Ellis, caretaker of buffalo; Mr. Galletly, caretaker of cave and basin; and Mr. Sanson, curator of the museum at the office building. Any other persons whose names appear in the Auditor General's Report are paid in a temporary way. They are not permanent officials.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that there is a splendid hotel at Banff run by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that there are baths in connection with that hotel. The question is why we should keep public baths there instead of leaving that entirely to private enterprise. There may be some reason that I do not know, but I have not heard any yet.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The baths of the Canadian Pacific Railway hotel are for the guests of the hotel. The baths of the department are patronized by a great many people who do not care to go to the expense of stopping at the hotel. As a matter of fact, the greater number of patients who go there for treatment take up their residences at cottages in the neighbourhood, where the expense is not so great as at the hotel, and they make use of the government baths, which are intended for the use of the public generally.

Construction of roads, bridle paths and other necessary works in connection with the Yoho Park reserve, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Yoho park is in the same valley as that portion of the Banff park where the buildings are and through which the railway runs. It is practically a continuation of the Banff park. I may say that in that park there have been discovered very considerable natural beauties, the presence of which had not been suspected until the last year or two. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company went to considerable expense in bringing over Alpine mountain climbers to make explorations, with the result that very large glaciers were discovered in the vicinity of the railway track. They will form a great attraction to the park, though quite inaccessible except to mountain climbers. We are taking steps to construct roads and bridle paths to make these natural beauties accessible.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The minister appears to have a herd of buffalo in the park, I believe the only herd that there is in North America. Is it increasing?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, very satisfactorily. We are quite satisfied with the experiment we have made. We started with a herd of about 19, and we have now 35 or 36. At some places, of course, the buffalo will not thrive, and it was more or less of an experiment to take these to the Banff park. We got sixteen or seventeen head from Lord Strathcona. They had been at Silver Heights, near the city of Winnipeg, but they had not done well there. We also got three head from Mr. Thomas Blackstock, of Toronto, who contributed them on my promise to attempt to establish a herd. We established the herd, and provided a large enclosure for them, and they have been thriving and doing very well.

Cost of investigation and demarcations and other astronomical work of the Department of the Interior, $58,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase of $17,000 in this item. Perhaps the hon. minister will be good enough to explain the reasons of the increase.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is a service carried on under the supervision of Mr. W. F. King, the chief astronomer of the department. The increase simply means that more work has been done. The increase is not an indication of a more expensive service, but that more work is being done. The details of the estimate this year are:

This work is to be proceeded with under the agreement between the British and the United States governments. It will consist of running a line and cutting out a vista throughout, cutting the necessary trails, making a triangulation to measure the distances, making a topographical survey of the adjacent country, taking necessary astronomical and other observations, and the purchase and placing of iron monuments instead of the existing mounds of loose stones.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this the work of the delimiting of the boundaries ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, the 49th parallel.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Carried on in connection with the officers of the United States government ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How much work have you got done ? Mr. King has been there some years at work. What distance of delimitation have you accomplished ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not say how far, but I will give an exact statement to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). What sort of monuments are these iron monuments ? Are they such that they cannot be moved easily ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are iron posts set in a square stone block, which is embedded in the ground. The monument is about four feet above the ground.

Astronomical observatory for telescope and apparatus, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the observatory you are building here ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, on the Experimental Farm. We had a great deal of trouble finding a suitable site. It was difficult to get a site sufficiently elevated, so that the view from the tower would not be obstructed. Other considerations also had to be taken into account. The site had to be a place where the oscillation caused by railway currents would not affect the setting of the instruments.

Mr. SPROULE. The railways pass close to the Experimental Farm.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Quite far enough away not to have any effect.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a good deal of discussion in the press about your moving the observatory from Toronto.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the meteorological survey, which is under the Marine Department.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Has a telescope been bought, and at what price ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes ; about $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the diameter of your lens and the power of your instrument ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My impression is that it is a 12-inch lens.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be very small.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I relied upon the chief astronomer.

Mr. SPROULE. It could not be very strong with only a 12-inch lens. It is not the height of wisdom to put up some commonplace telescope, because it must remain there a credit to the government or otherwise ; and before you could change it, you would have to remodel the building.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I told the chief astronomer that I thought it would be false economy to buy an instrument which would have to be changed, and impressed upon him the selection of an instrument which would not be required to be changed.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Where was the telescope purchased ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In Cleveland. In our chief astronomer we have a very able officer. He started as Dominion land surveyor in 1873 or 1874.

Mr. SPROULE. Was he attending to the boundary survey ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He was British commissioner under the treaty of 1892. He is now in England, and will be there until the argument in connection with the Alaskan boundary is over. He is an expert officer and thoroughly posted. His presence there is necessary. I was remarking to the committee that in Mr. King we have one of the ablest and most competent officers of the government. I have no doubt that his judgment with respect to the apparatus is perfectly good.

Mr. SPROULE. No doubt it is; he is a good man. How much is it expected the observatory will cost when completed? What has been done besides purchasing the instrument?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The building is under the Department of Public Works, and I have nothing to do with it. We took a vote last year for the purchase of the instruments. We have done nothing of any account in this respect, except the purchase of the telescope, which cost $15,000. This is a vote of $5,000 for miscellaneous apparatus.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). When does the hon. minister expect that the observatory will be finished?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say. I have been pressing upon the Department of Public Works the necessity of proceeding with all despatch. Since coming back from England, I have not had time to make inquiries about the matter, but I believe the work is progressing. I have no doubt it will be finished within a few months.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I have been credibly informed that the building will not be finished within two years. The foundation has been laid, but it will be a somewhat expensive building. The hon. minister says the telescope was bought a year ago and $15,000 paid for it. What kind of political economy, or any other economy, does he call this—paying $15,000 for a telescope three years before it is wanted?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can only say that the order for the telescope was given a year and a half ago, and my deputy tells me that it has lately arrived. If the building has not arrived at the same time, I am not directly responsible. The Department of Public Works have received their instructions, and I can only hope the building will be finished as soon as possible. Had we waited until the building was up before ordering the telescope we might have had the building a year or two ahead of the telescope.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I see by the newspapers that the observatory is to remain in Toronto.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the meteorological observatory.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). The telescope will cost $1,800 in interest before it is brought into use—three years' interest on $15,000 at four per cent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is one of the difficulties arising through not having everything under one department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does this complete the cost of equipping the observatory?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think so. I had a discussion in England with the astronomer with regard to this particular item, and this vote will be sufficient. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will understand that an observatory or a laboratory is never completed. A scientific man can always find something more that he wants. But, for the present, this is enough.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It will equip it completely until the next vote?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether the hon. minister answered my question as to the total cost of the building and equipment.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can only say that the contract for the building was $75,000, speaking from recollection. There was a vote of $15,000 last year for the equipment, and $5,000 now, making $20,000 for the equipment.

Mr. SPROULE. That makes a total of about $100,000. Did I understand the hon. minister to say anything about a laboratory in connection with this establishment?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, I only made the remark that when a scientific man has a laboratory or observatory he can always find something more that he wants for its equipment, therefore, I would not say that the observatory would be completely equipped with this amount.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). On the subject of meteorological reports, has the hon. minister taken any steps to extend the collection of these reports so as to include the remote parts of the North-west and British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have nothing to do with the meteorological service, that is under the direction of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Miscellaneous—costs of litigation, $11,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that a similar amount to this was voted last year. How much of it was spent?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The report of last year has not been made up. In the year previous, we spent $1,938. We have a number of cases coming up this year, which will involve a considerable amount of expenditure for legal fees, and I presume the Department of Justice will require the Department of the Interior to pay the Bills after they are taxed, and we shall perhaps spend $10,000 or $11,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I regard it as a bad plan to provide a lot of money for litigation. In almost every department a large sum is voted for this purpose. If you put it there it is almost sure to be spent. We have a Department of Justice with a pretty large staff, and one would naturally suppose that they would attend to a good deal of the work required to be done, but the amount placed at the disposal of each of the departments is almost sure to be distributed amongst the lawyers or hangers-on of the government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) says, is generally speaking, perfectly true. If you put a sum of money to the credit of the service, the tendency is for them to spend it. But in this case, the amount voted really has no effect upon the amount actually expended. When this litigation arises, the costs of the litigation, if they are payable by the government, are taxed by the Department of Justice, and we have to pay them. When the Bill becomes due we wait till the end of the fiscal year and take an estimate for it.

Mr. SPROULE. We are asked to pay this money, and we have no information regarding the services performed. It seems to me that there is a large amount of money paid out for very little work.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will have to talk with the Minister of Justice about that, because that does not belong to my department. The present item is merely for the purpose of paying legal expenses in suits arising in matters belonging to the business of the Department of the Interior. The expenses have to be certified by the Department of Justice. If anybody brings a suit in which the Department of the Interior is defendant, if there are any law costs payable, we have to pay them. The litigation is conducted by the Department of Justice and the costs are certified by the Department of Justice. I understand the rule is that we do not require to pay the costs of the opposing party, but we have to pay our own costs.

Mr. BLAIN. On page L—50, I see an item 'Amount paid to F. W. Howie, New Westminster, $1,000.' What is the explanation of that item ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A dispute arose in British Columbia in regard to some timber land. A man named Genelle sued the Crown for damages, and the amount mentioned here, $1,000, was paid to the Justice Department for Mr. Howie, to meet the disbursements in connection with witnesses, fees and expenses. I do not know whether the suit has terminated yet. My recollection is that it has not yet been brought to trial. We have been advised that we have a good case.

Mr. MONK. Would the minister give us some details of this sum of $1,000 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is money that was paid by the Justice Department to their agent at New Westminster to pay for his services in connection with this suit. I suppose the Department of Justice will sooner or later have the details. If the details have come back and been returned to the Auditor General's office they will appear in his report. When the vouchers come back the items will appear in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. SPROULE. Was Mr. Howie your solicitor in New Westminster who attended to the case ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I presume he is the agent of the Department of Justice. The litigation is conducted by the Department of Justice.

Mr. SPROULE. There must be vouchers of some kind for this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There will be of course. When the department pays the money we are required to file a detailed statement with the Auditor General, accounting for that money. If the department lets it go for a certain length of time and the Auditor General thinks it is an unreasonable time, he calls upon us to account for that money.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not enable us to get any information. We apply to the Minister of the Interior and he refers us to the Minister of Justice or to the Auditor General. We want some details of what was paid. We have no information of what the disbursements were.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The reason why the details are not given is because the action has not arrived at that stage when the Auditor General requires this money to be accounted for. If it is desired to get them before the matter reaches that stage, the only way will be, if a report has not yet been received from Mr. Howie, to get the Department of Justice to write to him for it.

Mr. SPROULE. The Auditor General's Report is over a year old, surely by this time somebody must have the vouchers. They must be in the possession of some department, otherwise the business must be done in a remarkably loose way.

Mr. MONK. Not only that, but even in this ancient document, the Auditor General's Report for 1902, there is an expenditure of $1,000. Now we are asked to vote $11,000. It seems to me we ought to have every detail of such a large vote, especially when it is for litigation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman wishes to have a list of the suits which are pending, I have not got them in my hands, but I will get them to-morrow.

Mr. MONK. Are there several suits or just one ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are several. Some I know of myself. I cannot remember, speaking from memory, all of them.

Mr. MONK. In the Auditor General's Report for 1902 we only seem to have paid $1,000 for the case of Genelle vs. the King.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There have been several suits within the last year.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid of the devil's claw.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are three in connection with Dominion lands and one or two that came from the Yukon. If the hon. gentleman desires it I will give him a list of them. I cannot do it now because I do not have it amongst my papers.

Expenses of government in district of Keewatin, $2,190.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you spend this for ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As my hon. friend knows the lieutenant governor of Keewatin is the lieutenant governor of Manitoba. He holds that additional office. He has a private secretary with an allowance of $600, and a clerk with an allowance of $480.

Mr. SPROULE. What duties does the lieutenant governor perform ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is supposed to inform himself generally as to what is going on in that territory. The territory is practically uninhabited except for the presence of 200 Indians in it. It is necessary to have some supervision over it and the practice that has been followed for many years has been that the lieutenant governor of Manitoba has been appointed for that purpose. He has to make one trip every year and he makes a report to the government as to what is going on in that section of the country. There are many matters that require the attention of the government.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any such report in the possession of the government now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will be found in the report of my department.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been told that some lieutenant governors do not visit the territory at all, but that they get the money all the same. Is there any information to that effect in the possession of the hon. minister ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember whether he went last year or not, but I know he went the year before. I remember reading the report carefully at the time it came in. He says in his last report :—

In making my annual report upon affairs in the district of Keewatin during the past year, I am glad to be able to say that no occurrence calling for special notice has taken place during the year. Circumstances have prevented my paying an extended visit through the district. I have, however, come into communication with and met some of the missionaries, the principal Hudson's Bay Company's officers and others who carry on trade in the territory, and have thus kept in comparatively close touch and been made well acquainted with the condition of the native population during the past year.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of the vote did he use up last year—the whole of it ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $1,103.23.

Mr. MONK. How did he expend that amount if he did not go there ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount is made up in this way :—

One clerk, $480 ; salary of secretary, $600 ; department printing and stationery, Ottawa, printing, &c., $23.22.

That is all of the expenditure.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that it would be better if this money is employed, properly no doubt, in paying the secretary of the governor that we should say so.

Expenses of government in district of Keeaatin.

There are no expenses there. It is $600 for a secretary and $480 for some one else and $23 for stationery. Would it not be better to put it in the vote in that way ? I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman. What is the use of dissimulating and why should we vote $2,190 to cover expenses which last year amounted to $1,103 ? It is not much, but it is for the principle that we are combating.

Maintenance of lunatics from Keewatin, $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought you had nothing there but a few Indians. Where do you get the lunatics from ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Indians occasionally go crazy and we have to take care of them.

Mr. SPROULE. How many are there in the asylum and where are they kept ? Are they kept at Brandon too ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Last year we paid $744.10 to the Brandon asylum for the maintenance of three lunatics.

Mr. SPROULE. How did you come to know there were any out there if nobody ever visits the district ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The year before last the lieutenant governor did visit it. The lieutenant governor exercises a general supervision. He gets information from traders from the Hudson's Bay Company, and from clergymen as to what is going on. If he hears of any lunatics they are brought down.

Maintenance of assay office at Vancouver, $17,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This vote is for the salaries and expenses in connection with the assay office at Vancouver.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any report of the work done during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work is somewhat less now than it was, on account of the change in the mode of collecting the royalty. Full details are given in part 6 of the annual report of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. What revenue was received from the office ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no statement which shows a revenue under the operations of last year. The method of computation is very complicated. The principle upon which we established the office was not to make any charge for the work done, because we wanted to secure the business in Canada rather than have it to go to Seattle.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not make any charge at all ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not last year, but I understand the superintendent is making a small charge this year. I cannot say how much it is.

Mr. MONK. According to the Auditor General's Report, the expenditure was $21,000 last year, and, as the salaries are rather small, most of that was spent in installation. If you have not any more installation to do, I cannot understand why you want $17,000 this year. The salaries would only amount to $6,000 or $7,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The salaries amounted to $7,850 ; rent, $1,200 ; banking commission, $1,000 ; and incidental expenses, including gas and stationery and many other things, $6,850.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Is this office to be a permanent charge on us of $17,000 a year, against which we are to get no revenue ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is more or less experimental for the present. We proceeded with it largely in contemplation of the fact that we would establish a mint, and the handling of the gold is a somewhat complicated process, so that it was necessary to establish an assay office in order that we might have some experience before we actually engaged in minting. The change in the method of collecting the royalty has decreased the business to a considerable extent, and the government have to consider the course it would adopt if the mint was not proceeded with immediately, and at the present time I am not in a position to say just exactly what course will be pursued.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Are the assay offices in other countries run free of charge ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The assay office at Seattle is managed practically on the same principle.

Engraving, lithographing and printing maps of the Dominion and the North-west Territories, $15,000.

Mr. MONK. Is this something new ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is for maps which it is desired to issue during the coming year, consisting of : engraving, paper printing, &c., 5,000 copies of Ontario map (3 sheets) $2,000 ; printing, paper, &c., maps of Manitoba, Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta, 5,000 copies of each, $1,500; engraving, paper, printing, &c., 10,000 copies of three sheet map of Manitoba and North west Territories, $45,000; engraving, printing, &c., 5,000 copies of British Columbia railway belt map, $2,500; and $5,000 for the purpose of beginning on the preparation of what is called an economic atlas of Canada. It is a work which I think will commend itself to the judgment of the House. It is to be prepared under the supervision of the geographer of the department, who has been engaged during the last two or three years in connection with the large map of Canada which has been lately issued; and which I think the members of the House will agree is a work urgently needed and supplies a very serious and long felt want. It is now proposed to have compiled an economic atlas of Canada, that is to say, an atlas which shall as far as possible exhibit the natural resources of the country. The work will be very extensive, and will incorporate the following, utilizing the plates of the large and small maps of Canada as far as possible, thus reducing the cost to a minimum; an economic edition of the large map in blue and black, only adding to this in large lettering, mineral signs for mineral occurrences, notes regarding agricultural and timber resources; a geological map; a relief map, showing the elevation of surfaces; a map showing canals, with details of each; maps showing telephone and telegraph lines, lighthouses; agricultural diagrams, showing the productions in different parts of the country; diagrams of exports; navigation diagrams; maps relating to population; and generally such economic information as can properly be put into a book of that kind. For the purpose of preliminary expenses in connection with the enterprise, we are asking for $5,000 this year.

Mr. MONK. Who is in charge of that work.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. James White, the geographer of the department. He was for many years connected with the geological survey, and on the death of the former geographer, he was transferred to the Department of the Interior. The large map of Canada was prepared under his supervision. He is a very competent and able officer. This $5,000 is to be devoted to getting together the material for the atlas.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman mentioned a large map of which he wanted a large quantity. What is the object of them ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. For general distribution.

Mr. MONK. There has been a very large distribution already, has there not ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of the large map I think we distributed 5,000. A considerable improvement was made in the second edition. Of that there has been as yet only a very small distribution, but 5,000 were ordered. I may say that my view, which I trust the members of the committee will endorse, is that a map of that kind should be as generally distributed as possible. The cost of printing a map, after the information is all compiled and the work done, is comparatively small, and it seems to me the department could do no better work than to disseminate accurate information regarding the country in that form. My hon. friend would be surprised to know the inquiries that we get for these maps, from school inspectors down to the smallest school children. I think the distribution of a first-class map of Canada, giving detailed information, and showing the geographical features of the country, is among the most valuable work the department can do. I have given instructions therefore to be as liberal as possible in the distribution of the map.

Mr. MONK. I believe in that. There are a great many of the expenditures of my hon. friend's department that I would find fault with more readily than with this one. Who has charge of the work of printing these maps ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The printing of this map was done by the Toronto Lithographing Company. That is the only firm in Canada which has a staff of copper engravers. There has never before been a detailed map of the whole of Canada issued. The maps of the whole of Canada have hitherto been sketch maps. But this is a detailed map on which the attempt is made to give all the geographical information which would be given in a map of each province. In order to accomplish that, it is necessary to do fine work, which must be done by engraving on copper. Some years ago the Toronto Lithographing Company brought to Canada a small staff of copper engravers, and they are practically occupied with the work given to them by the government. They are doing the work under the direction of Mr. White, the geographer.

Government of the Yukon Territory, $405,000.

Mr. BELL. What is the large appropriation stated in the estimates as not required this year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is somewhat misleading as it will probably appear in the supplementary estimates. The information on which to base the item was not in the hands of the department when the estimates were being considered.

Mr. MONK. With regard to item 192, I would ask the hon. minister if he would not reserve these votes, one of which relates to schools, in order to allow of our discussing——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will not be necessary, because there is an item in the supplementary estimates on which we can discuss the whole question.

Mr. MONK. I think it would be better to keep this item. We have passed some very large votes for my hon. friend, and we might keep this item for a later date.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no necessity for my hon. friend to reserve it, because there is an item in the supplementary estimates on which he can discuss anything that can be discussed on this. So, we shall be in the same position.

Mr. MONK. I refer to the vote for the North-west Territories.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In both cases there are supplementary votes, and my hon. friend will appreciate my desire at this late date to get the main estimates through.

Mr. MONK. Very well.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The suggestion has been made that we should adjourn. As my hon. friends have been fairly liberal in passing these items, I think we have got as much as we can reasonably ask for to-night.

Progress reported.

On motion of the Minister of the Interior, House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 17, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ARTICLE IN 'LA PATRIE'—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I read in 'La Patrie' of yesterday, in the parliamentary letter, the following paragraph :

Quelqu'un qui se croit au fait des allées et venues politiques, m'assurait tout à l'heure que l'article très blessant publié dans le "News," a été inspiré par sir Wilfrid Laurier lui-même.

Which I will translate as follows :

Some body who thinks that he knows what is going on in the political world assured me a moment ago that the most offensive article published in the 'News' has been inspired by Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself.

This matter came up incidentally yesterday, and I have only to say again that there is no foundation at all for this statement. Neither directly nor indirectly, in any shape or form, did I inspire that article. I never knew of its publication until my attention was called to it yesterday at three o'clock.

TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). My hon. friend the leader of the opposition asked me a question the other day about an answer I had given to a question by the member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) respecting the action of the gold commissioner at Dawson City in regard to an alleged exemption of the Treadgold Syndicate from representation fees upon their claims. I find that there was an error in the answer which I gave. Though I do not think that it would be misleading, yet it was not strictly correct. To make the answer strictly correct it should have read :

The Order in Council of the 21st of April, 1902 and the former Order in Council of June, 1901.

THE WRECK OF THE SS. 'MONTEREY.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine). I wish to call the attention of the House to an article which appeared in the Montreal 'Star' last night, and which reads as follows :

The Wreck of the 'Monterey.'

The wreck of the 'Monterey,' entailing a loss roughly estimated at a million dollars, once more draws attention to the urgent need of something being done by the Dominion government to redeem the character of the St. Lawrence route. The fact that the 'Monterey' went ashore on French territory does not affect the situation. The ship should not have been near enough to St. Pierre Miquelon to be in danger, and the Department of Marine should not rest until it has discovered and supplied some means by which ships to and from the St. Lawrence may ascertain when they are out of their course. One per cent of the money proposed to be squandered on the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme would probably make the river and the gulf almost as safe as the Lachine canal.

Hon. Mr. SIFTON.

At any rate, whatever is necessary should be done, no matter what the cost, and done quickly. The remedy may be found in more or better lights and fog signals or in wireless telegraphy, or in all these things, but it is for the Marine Department to find the remedy and apply it. This is one of the questions that will not stand any more neglect. Every season brings its tale of wrecks involving great losses and great discredit to the route.

Articles are appearing in the public press once more raising the familiar cry of condemnation of all aids to navigation on the St. Lawrence route, in consequence of the recent wreck of the 'Monterey' at Point Plate, St. Pierre Miquelon.

The facts that this point is 140 miles outside of the nearest Canadian territory, wholly removed from British jurisdiction, and that the lighthouse establishment maintained by the French government has always been held up to the Canadian authorities as a pattern light, have been conveniently ignored by the critics.

This casualty, however, demonstrates that aids to navigation are never to be implicitly relied upon ; accidents are bound to occur to machinery under the most careful management, and the failure of the navigating officer of the 'Monterey' to hear the alarm should not have been accepted as evidence that they were at a distance from it. No aids to navigation will remove the necessity for the utmost caution in foggy weather. Safety is insured only by giving a good offing to all critical points in foggy weather, by slowing down in the vicinity of land, and above all by keeping the lead constantly going, and as this order is strictly enforced by His Majesty's ships, no similar accidents have ever occurred to war vessels. The latest report is :

A special cable despatch from St. Pierre at midnight says that the Elder-Dempster steamer 'Monterey' from Montreal for Bristol, struck near the fog signal at Point Plate, Miquelon, at five o'clock yesterday morning. The signal was not working and did not work till two hours after the stranding of the steamer. The vessel has eighteen feet of water in her hold and engine rooms and her position in considered hopeless. If the weather continues favourable the cargo will be salved ; assistance being expected from St. John's, Newfoundland., Quebec and Sydney. Salving tugs also left St. Pierre last night.

Toronto, July 16.—The 'Evening Telegram's' London cable says :—Lloyd's correspondent of the 'Times,' commenting on the wreck of the 'Monterey' off the coast of Newfoundland, says it was hoped sufficient precautions had been taken to avoid any important losses. One of the stipulations of the insurance on the Canadian Pacific Railway fleet was that the vessels were to avoid the Belle Isle route, and take the wider and safer Cabot straits. The 'Monterey' appears to have been wrecked well out of her course, although taking the Cabot Island way.

According to the following telegram from St. John's, Newfoundland, the position of the vessel appears to be extremely dangerous and little hope of the recovery of the vessel is held out.

It therefore appears very clearly that the Department of Marine and Fisheries of Canada had nothing whatever to do with this accident, which has occurred in waters over which we have no jurisdiction whatever. As regards the accident itself, I may state that Mr. Campbell, agent of the Elder-Dempster Company, telegraphed me the morning of the accident asking for help. Without a minute's delay. I referred him to the French consul in Montreal, and I myself telegraphed to the French consul asking him to give all the help that could be given under the circumstances. Yesterday I received a telegram from Mr. Campbell thanking the department for the promptness with which the matter had been atended to. It is evident, therefore, that there can be no reason whatever for reflecting on the department in the matter.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I again press upon the attention of the Prime Minister, and upon the attention of the government, the extreme desirability of having their railway policy immediately brought down if we are going to have a railway policy brought down during the present session. Yesterday I asked my right hon. friend to give us some information as to the date. I asked him in the first place whether or not we are to have that policy during the present session ; and, in the second place, if we are going to have it during the present session, at what date may we expect it. It is perhaps only right to again remind the government that we have entered upon the fifth month of the session. In the expectation of all of us when we came here, the government measures would have been down two months ago, and had that been the case, we would have been very much further on with our work than we are at present. It is not to be expected that an important measure of that kind is to be brought down after the estimates are all passed and in the closing days of the session. My right hon. friend himself would not regard that as a proper course of conduct. Indeed, in the days gone by, his voice, and the voice of many hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, was raised in strong protest against the bringing down of railway subsidies in the closing days of the session. This is an infinitely more important matter than any of these subsidies which excited criticism in times past, and yet we are nearing what ought to be the close of the session, and we have not an intimation even from the government as to the date when their policy will be brought down. In all fairness to the House and to the country, my right hon. friend ought to tell us whether or not we are to expect that policy, and if we are to expect it during this session he should give some definite and specific assurance as to the date within which we may expect it to be submitted to the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The request which my hon. friend makes is not at all unreasonable, and I am quite willing to give him all the information which it is in my power to give him at this moment. I expect that we may be able to bring down a resolution with regard to the railway policy of the government some time next week, and perhaps early next week. I hope that we shall be able to take up the subject for discussion, perhaps not next week, but, if agreeable to my hon. friend, the early part of the week following ; because I suppose that when my hon. friend sees the resolution he would require some days before being prepared to take up the subject for discussion. Without binding myself absolutely ; if my hon. friend will renew his question on Monday or Tuesday next, perhaps I would be able then to give him an absolutely definite answer.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may assure my right hon. friend that I shall certainly renew my question if he does not bring down the policy within a very short period ; and I am afraid I shall have to comment on the delay in that case a little more at length than I have done to-day.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

Bill (No. 223) to amend the Act of 1899, respecting the city of Ottawa, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may say that this Bill is entirely a transcript of the resolutions with which the House has already dealt. There is no new matter whatever in it.

On section 2,

Mr. SPROULE. What is the security for that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The grants made by the government of Canada from time to time will be the source from which both the interest and the principal will be paid, under the security of this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that we give them $60,000 per annum, which they will have the right to spend, and they will have the right to borrow $250,000 more.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, my hon. friend is mistaken. Out of the annual grant of $60,000 the commission will have to provide for everything. There is no increase in the amount of the grant, and no obligation beyond the amount of the grant.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this is the commencement of a system which is very like the grants to the Montreal Harbour Commission, to be added to from time to time, and that this whole grant will be taken up in the payment of interest, while in the end the Dominion will have to shoulder the debt and relieve the city of the expense.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. After the commission have reserved out of the annual grant a sufficient sum to pay the interest and the instalments of principal, there will be left a very considerable sum of money, quite enough to enable them to meet all the expenses of maintenance. There is not the least danger of the Dominion being called upon to pay any of this debt otherwise than by the annual grant.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the usual history of these cases, and I have no doubt it will be the same with this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would remind my hon. friend that we have improved.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister, in introducing the resolutions did not give any explanation as to what induced the government to continue this grant for a further period of ten years. My recollection is that he merely said that the government had arrived at the conclusion that whoever was in power at the end of ten years would do this, and therefore that we might as well do it now. Is it in the contemplation of the government to continue the grant indefinitely and make it a perpetual grant, or has that been considered ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is very kind in assuming that at the the end of this further period of ten years we shall still be in office ; but I would not like to bank too much on that. Therefore, I would not like to say what will be the policy of the government some sixteen years from the present time. I do not think we ought to be so presumptuous as to say what shall be the policy of the government sixteen years hence. Accidents might happen; though it is not likely, some of us might be out of office at that time. But, to be serious, the view we take is that by giving the commission this power now, they will be able to do things on a larger scale than they could do otherwise. They will be able to acquire land, and work out a larger and more comprehensive scheme of beautifying the city of Ottawa than they could if we confined them to the annual grant, out of which they could not make any considerable land purchases or carry out any very extensive scheme.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The same thing might be accomplished by increasing the amount and limiting the time. The policy seems to be to give them this grant for twenty years and to do nothing further.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, we take authority to say what they shall do.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I mean nothing further as to the continuance of the grant. As to the hon. gentleman being in power at the end of sixteen years, it is quite possible that that may be the case ; but it will be after a vacation of fifteen years, if we can judge the present indications at all correctly. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) suggests after a prolonged period of rest. I would be inclined to add another adjective, and say after a prolonged and enforced period of rest.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Still, my hon. friend does justice to us to this extent, that he believes that. after a period of vacation, our record will be so good that the country will be only too glad for us to come back to office after its experience of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, but because after a period of sixteen years the country will have forgotten the hon. gentleman's misdeeds.

Mr. SPROULE. Over what term does the original grant extend ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The original grant was for ten years, of which four years have now elapsed. We are extending it for another ten years, or sixteen years from the present time.

Mr. BIRKETT. In view of the fact that the duties of the commissioners have been somewhat increased, that the grant of $60,000 is to be extended for a further period of ten years, and that the city is in reality contributing one-fourth of this amount, I think now is the proper time to suggest that the city should have another representative on the board. The city has only one representative on the board at present. I do not think it would be asking too much of the government to ask them to add the city engineer or the chairman of the board of works or some other representative of the city to the board in addition to the mayor.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If this were a joint fund, contributed to by the Dominion and by the city for some joint object, there would be force in my hon. friend's argument ; but inasmuch as the whole benefit of this fund will go to the city of Ottawa, I do not think my hon. friend is likely to make a case that the interest of the city of Ottawa suffers. In whatever way this money is expended, it is primarily for the benefit of the city of Ottawa. Therefore it is not a case of ordinary partnership. It is a case where all the benefit goes to one of the parties.

Mr. BIRKETT. I can hardly agree with the hon. Minister of Finance in that. He must be aware that for many years the government paid $15,000 to the city ; so that to-day the city is contributing at least one-fourth of the $60,000. I think the government gets good value for the money. I do not see why Ottawa should not have an additional representative on the commission.

Mr. BELCOURT. Besides the mayor of Ottawa, the commission is composed of Mr. Bate, chairman, Messieurs Jos. Riopelle, C. R. Cunningham and George O'Keefe, all leading citizens of Ottawa ; and last session three other gentlemen, Sir William Hingston, Senator Casgrain and Senator Frost were added to the commission. It must be admitted therefore that the $15,000 contribution of the city is well looked after by these five Ottawa gentlemen, including the mayor. In fact the administration of the whole work is largely in the hands of these gentlemen.

Mr. BIRKETT. Those gentlemen are, however, not responsible to the city for the expenditure of the $15,000 yearly, but only to the Dominion government.

Mr. BELCOURT. Every one of these Ottawa gentlemen is a large ratepayer and influential citizen, and in that respect responsible to the city, and the mayor is besides responsible in his official capacity.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the city of Ottawa remove them if it wished ?

Mr. BELCOURT. No, of course not, because they are appointed by the government just as the mayor is. The mayor is appointed under the Bill and not by the city. The Bill provides that the mayor shall be ex-officio a member of the commission, but he is appointed by grace of parliament and not by the city.

Mr. BIRKETT. I do not agree with my hon. friend in his contention that the mayor has not any right to sit.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did not say anything of the kind. I would not say anything so nonsensical.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As I understood the Minister of Finance the other day, in introducing his resolutions, this money is to be capitalized for the purpose of adding to the Rockliffe Park?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And that he had options from Mr. Keefer and several other proprietors in that vicinity. Has he any objection to let us know what the options are, so that we may realize at once whether he is making proper investment or not. Let me draw the hon. gentleman's attention to another thing. There is a park north of the railway station, which is in a dilapidated and disgraceful state. There is another field near Sandy Hill, which was formerly a cemetery and from which sand is now being carted. The bones of the dead are exposed and it is in a most disgraceful condition, especially when we consider that it is right in the centre of the capital of the Dominion. In view of the fact that the government is contributing largely towards the beautifying of the city, it should insist that this field be taken care of. It might be made a beautiful portion of the city, and as we are spending a good deal on these improvements, our wishes should to some extent be consulted by the commission and the civic authorities.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The commission will be glad to receive the suggestions of my hon. friend. My hon. friend was slightly inaccurate in saying that we had options on certain properties. The goernment have no options, but I understand that the commission have received some. I have been told the amount but have forgotten what it is. I have no reason to doubt, from information that has reached me, that the options are fair and reasonable, but I have advised the commissioners to take the precaution of appointing valuators, so that parliament will be fully satisfied. With regard to the parks, the city makes an annual grant to its own park committee for the maintenance of parks and some of these places to which my hon. friend refers. I quite agree that all these parks should be improved, and have no doubt that the commission and the civic committee will co-operate and lose no effort to carry out the suggestions of my hon. friend.

Mr. BIRKETT. I have every reason to believe that the cemetery lands were originally ordinance lands and, therefore, came under the Interior Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If that be the case, an arrangement could be made between the Department of the Interior and the commission for the improvement of this field, and no doubt the commission will be glad to take notice of the suggestion of my hon. friends and will endeavour to meet their wishes.

Mr. INGRAM. We are all interested in this work as well as the citizens of Ottawa. In my opinion, it requires as competent an engineer to look after this work as is required for the city of Ottawa. I am informed that the gentleman who fills the position is not competent. At least he was not found competent while in the employ of the city of Ottawa. If hon. members of this House will take an hour some day and go through some of the streets which have been improved by this engineer, I have no doubt that they will come to the conclusion, if they have any experience, that these streets are not properly completed. Some steps should be taken to have a competent engineer appointed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the first intimation I have had of any doubt as to the competency of the engineer who is assisting the commission. I cannot undertake to give any judgment of my own, because I have not the necessary knowledge, but the only impression I have received, from general observation, is that the work is very well done. However, I am not an engineer, and my opinion may not count for much. But the commissioners can have no interest in appointing other than a competent officer, and I have no reason to doubt that if they found this man incompetent, they would appoint a competent man in his place.

Mr. INGRAM. I have conversed with very competent men in this city, who are capable of judging, and after carefully looking over the streets, they assured me that these streets are not properly completed and would have been much better done had a competent engineer been in charge.

Mr. SPROULE. By what authority is the mayor a member of the commission?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The original Act provides that the mayor shall be a member of the commission.

Mr. SPROULE. I ask that question because the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) said that he was no more responsible to the city of Ottawa than any other member of the commission, but since the mayor is elected every year, the people have an opportunity of removing him, which they have not in the case of other members of the commission.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did not say that the mayor is not responsible to the city of Ottawa, but that there is a distinction between the responsibility of the mayor to the city of Ottawa and the responsibility of the other members of the commission. I admitted there was a distinction. I pointed out that all the other gentlemen are responsible to the city, because they are influential and important ratepayers. Though their responsibility is not of an official character in so far as the city is concerned, such as that of the mayor, they are, by reason of their position as citizens, under great responsibility.

Mr. SPROULE. But that responsibility is simply nothing, because the city cannot remove them no matter how much displeased the citizens may be with their conduct. But, in the case of the mayor, they can replace him at the end of his term if they do not approve of what he has done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). None of these gentlemen stands in any representative capacity towards the citizens except the mayor, as I understand. And he is one of a commission of about seven, is it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Eight.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it be a correct view of the matter that one-quarter of this sum is actually provided by the city, because formerly it received that amount from the government in lieu of water rates and something of that kind, it would seem to me that the city of Ottawa, or rather the municipality of Ottawa, for that word makes my meaning a little clearer, should be entitled to some larger representation upon the commission than it has at present. According to the proportion it contributes, the city should have at least two out of the commission of eight, whereas now it has only one. Of course I do not overlook the fact that my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has brought to our attention, that these other gentlemen are citizens of Ottawa. But they are responsible only to the government. There is no responsibility to the municipality of Ottawa on the part of any of them except the mayor ; indeed some of them are not residents of Ottawa at all, though I make no criticism on that point.

Mr. BELCOURT. I think the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will be probably satisfied if I assure him that I for one, have not heard any one complain that the city was not sufficiently represented on the c mmission at this moment. I do not believe that there is a demand to-day in the city that there should be a larger representation of the city on that board. I believe that the citizens of Ottawa, as a whole, are very well satisfied with everything the commission has done, and with the plans for the future, so far as they have been made public. And, as representing the citizens, I take this opportunity of expressing their gratitude for what this parliament has done for the improvement of the city.

On section 4,

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that when this Bill was under discussion before, some reference was made to the question of lumber piling in the city. I have not had an opportunity to read 'Hansard,' and so do not know what was said. But I would like to ask, as a matter of information, whether the government insist on having any voice in the management of the affairs of the city with regard to this and other matters affecting the government's interests. The government has so much property here that it seems to me only just that some understanding should be reached, on wise lines, and the government will not be doing their whole duty, now that we propose to assist in beautifying the city, if they allow a system to continue which, in all human probability will, sooner or latter, destroy the greater portion of the city, including the government property.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The discussion of the lumber piling question took place the other day, arising out of the debate on this Bill, but not relating to it. That is a matter of municipal regulation with which the government have nothing to do. In this Bill, we deal only with public matters which have nothing to do with the lumber piling question. We do not by this measure undertake to displace the authority of the municipality in any way. There was some reference the other day to the Washington system, which, undoubtedly, has some merits. Washington is governed by the national government, which contributes one-half the revenues of the city, the residents contributing the other half. There is much to be said in favour of that system. But there is this difference between the two cities, that Washington is almost entirely a residential city while Ottawa is a manufacturing and industrial city, and, with its great waterpowers must always be so; and so the system will not apply to it so easily as it would to a residential city. I like the Washington idea and would be glad if we could expand this gradually and have a district of Ottawa, a national district, governed entirely under the direction of this parliament. There would be advantages in that system but I rather think the citizens of Ottawa are hardly ready for it at present. They might not view with favour any attempt to bring in such a system, even if we had power to establish it. It would be a matter of provincial and not Dominion legislation. It may be that there will grow out of this some system of that character, but, at present I do not see how we can go beyond the work of the commission and dealing with the particular class of improvements for which this aid is granted.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me it would be the simplest thing in the world. We propose to give through these commissioners, a certain sum of money. In making that gift we can tack on any conditions we please. One of those conditions might well be that the city should rid itself of a great danger which exists at the present time and which must continue to exist unless the city acts. We can do that without impropriety and without adopting the Washington system. We are the givers, and can make what conditions we please.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But our interest as a parliament and government is not greater than the interests of the individual citizen of Ottawa; and surely we must trust the citizens of Ottawa, who have their own interests, their own rights, and their own property to protect. Surely we can trust them with what is after all a matter of municipal regulation. If these beautiful parliament buildings were burned down, great as the loss would be, the people of Canada are rich enough to provide another. But there are many citizens, who, if their houses were burned down are not rich enough to build new ones. Man for man, the interest of the citizens is greater than ours, and I think we can trust them to regulate this matter.

Mr. SPROULE. Let that be granted, and the fact remains that we have greater power, and can exercise more control to make the city do what it should do, than any individual citizen whether rich or poor. We propose to give material assistance to the city and what we give belongs to the whole country. In making the gift we have the right to bring pressure to bear upon the council to do what they should do. We can make that a condition of this munificent gift. It is the proper thing to do, and the government has the power to do it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Right and wrong are matters of opinion. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) speaks as if there were no difference of opinion on this subject. Yet, in this House the other day we had a clear difference of opinion expressed as to whether it was right or not to remove the lumber piles. I offered no opinion on that subject. But some citizens take one view and some another, and there is no absolute right or wrong in the matter.

Mr. BIRKETT. I may say to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the representatives of the city of Ottawa have that matter under consideration. If it is left to the council I feel sure they will deal with it in a manner satisfactory, not only to the citizens but to this parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. They are not making much headway, if we may judge by the papers.

Mr. BIRKETT. You cannot always rely on what you see in the papers. The council represent the people, and the people can be depended upon to see that a proper settlement of this question is reached.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS.

Bill (No. 220) respecting government and Post Office Savings Banks, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

The Minister of Finance and Receiver General shall hold, for the purpose of securing the repayment of deposits made in the government savings banks and in the post office savings banks, an amount in gold or in gold and Canadian securities guaranteed by the government of the United Kingdom, equal to not less than ten per centum of the total amount of such deposits as such amount is ascertained from time to time.

Mr. SPROULE. When were Canadian securities guaranteed by the government of the United Kingdom?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). That was done many years ago, but of late years we have not availed ourselves of it. We desired the endorsement of the imperial government many years ago for certain issues of securities when perhaps the credit of Canada was not as strong as it is now, and we gladly welcomed the greater security which came from endorsement by the imperial government. Some of these securities are still outstanding, and these are the class referred to in the Act.

Mr. MONK. I would ask the Minister of Finance if he has had any occasion to give his attention to an idea that has been prevalent for some time of founding in this country local co-operative banks such as they have established with great success in England, Germany, Italy, Austria, France, Belgium, and even in Russia, banks with small capital that can be established almost anywhere in a country place. I am not familiar with the detalis of the system. The idea has been thoroughly studied here by M. A. Desjardins, and I think in the town of Lévis, in the province of Quebec, a bank of that description has been established by that gentleman, who is the chairman of that co-operative savings and loan association, which I am told, is a great success in every way. I do not know if the Minister of Finance or any one in his department has had occasion to study that system of banking and to ascertain whether it would be feasible to allow the establishment of these local banks under the protection of the law.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A short time ago my attention was directed to the subject by some members of this House, and also by a gentleman who is connected with the official staff of the House (Mr. Desjardins) and who is very familiar with the operations of the bank at Lévis, and I believe has some connection with it. The system is a very interesting one indeed, and deserves study. I have given directions to have the matter inquired into and it may be that at another session we shall be able to give them some legal organization. For the present I cannot hold out the hope that we shall be able to do anything this session; but I can promise that during the recess the matter will be very carefully studied.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Geological Survey—exploration and surveys, printing and publication reports and maps, &c.; wages of assistant explorers, draughtsmen, clerks and others; purchase of specimens, books, instruments, stationery, mapping materials, maintenance of museum, laboratory apparatus, chemicals and miscellaneous expenses; advances to explorers, $50,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). This vote has been decreased by $10,000 in pursuance of an arrangement that I will explain later on for the purpose of doing the work more especially connected with mining. I intend to introduce a resolution on the subject.

Mr. MONK. It would be interesting to know what plan of survey and exploration is being pursued. In what direction are the officers going to operate this year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are fifteen exploring parties now in the field; one in the Yukon, one in the Peace River district, one connected with the boundary survey north of the forty-ninth parallel in British Columbia, one in the anthracite region of the Rocky Mountains, one in the Keewatin district, three in northern Ontario, one in the Bay of Quinte district, one in the Lake St. John district, two in New Brunswick, two in Nova Scotia, and two whose locations are not yet definitely decided.

Mr. MONK. Could the hon. minister tell us who is going in the party to the Lake St. John district, and can he give us a little more precise information as to the direction that the exploration is going to take ? Is it to be due north of Lake St. John or to the east or to the west ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not say. If my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has any suggestion to make in connection with it I would be glad to consider it. The work has not progressed very far in so far as this season is concerned. The information comes from the director of the survey, and I am not quite familiar with the exact location or nature of the work they are doing.

Mr. MONK. Who is going to be in charge of the party ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One of the technical officers. I cannot say which one.

Mr. MONK. Who is now at the head of the geological survey ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. Bell.

Mr. MONK. Does he hold a permanent appointment ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. MONK. How long has he held a temporary appointment?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Ever since the death of Dr. Dawson.

Mr. MONK. Is there any reason why he should not be confirmed in his appointment ? I ask that because I know of him. I know that he has been a very long time employed by the department, and I believe has given great satisfaction. Is there any reason why the appointment should be only of a temporary character ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question which my hon. friend has asked is a somewhat delicate one. Dr. Bell has been in the service of the geological survey for some fourteen years. He was at once appointed to take charge of the work when Dr. Dawson died. All I care to say at this moment is that I have not felt like recommending his permanent appointment up to the present time. I anticipate being able to make some changes which I have had in mind for the last two or three years in connection with the survey and possibly the permanent appointment of Dr. Bell, might be facilitated by these changes. What I propose to suggest is that that which may more properly be called economic work, or work directly connected with mining, shall be separate from the other work and that change I propose to carry out by means of legislation this session, and I was proposing an appropriation for that purpose which will account for the difference in the appropriation which is before us at the present time. I think the question of Dr. Bell's appointment can be settled if the plan is carried out, but I am not prepared to say any more at the present time. The discussion of the scientific qualifications of scientific men is rather a delicate subject and I hesitate to say any more about it.

Mr. MONK. I mentioned the matter because I have known Dr. Bell for a great many years and although not in a position to judge of his qualifications he appears to have the reputation of having fulfilled his duties properly.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would not like to be understood as even remotely suggesting that Dr. Bell's quailfications, as far as scientific knowledge is concerned, are not sufficient, but in addition to scientific knowledge the management of the survey and the executive work connected with it have to be considered and the various qualifications that are necessary to carry it out successfully have to be taken into account. I will be responsible for the appointment when it is made, and I shall try to feel that I have discharged that responsibility properly when I do make it. But in the meantime I do not care to say any more about it.

Mr. KAULBACH. In what part of Nova Scotia is the geological party operating this season ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the exact location. The work of the parties is under the direction of Dr. Fletcher and they are now, I think, in the coal district.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria). They are in the county of Cumberland.

Mr. KAULBACH. They have been in the eastern part of the province for several years. I would like to have them visit the county I have the honour to represent, as it is supposed that there are in that county coal deposits of a very valuable character. We would like to ascertain positively whether such is the case or not, and if so would like to see these deposits of coal developed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not hear my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) very well, but I understand him to suggest that it is desirable that some work should be done in the county of Lunenburg. I will be happy to note that and discuss it with my hon. friend.

Mr. KAULBACH. My reason for making that request is in consequence of its being supposed there are deposits of coal in the county of Lunenburg and we are desirous of ascertaining whether there are or not, and if so, we would like to have that industry developed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have at various times discussed the work of the survey in Nova Scotia with members in the House from Nova Scotia and have received suggestions from them and to the best of my ability I have endeavoured to carry them out. I am not familiar enough with the particular localities to be able to speak of them by name from recollection, but as far as possible I will endeavour to carry out the work that can be done. I will be very happy to consider my hon. friend's suggestion.

Mr. BELL. In reference to the director of the geological survey I understand that the hon. minister anticipates at an early day dividing the work of the department so as to constitute one section that will be more particularly devoted to work from an economic point of view and another which will be more purely scientific.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, more purely scientific and largely topographical.

Mr. BELL. I would be very glad to contribute in any way towards the appointment of Dr. Bell on a permanent basis. I have had a good deal of interest always in watching the work of the geological survey and in reading the annual reports, and it seems to me that the work has been carried on very efficiently in that department since Dr. Bell has taken charge. I would be only too happy to learn that the changes contemplated by the minister will enable him to make a permanent appointment in that case.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may say to the committee something that I will say at greater length, when I make the definite proposition I intend to make, that while I have no doubt of the great value of the work that has been done by the geological survey, the result of my observation and supervision of the work during the last seven years has led me to the conclusion that sufficient attention has not been given to making the results of the work of practical value, and easily available to the public. The difficulty is that information which has been collected at such a vast amount of expense to the country is not in a position to be availed of by the ordinary commercial man or the ordinary prospector. If, for instance, I were asked to furnish a person coming from a foreign country who desired to invest in Canada with the information available on the subject of iron in Canada, I would be utterly at a loss. All I would be able to do would be to refer him to the library of the geological survey. There is no place now in which such information is collected. My purpose in organizing a mining branch is primarily to bring about the result that we will have in succinct and in somewhat popular form, all the information of a practical and economic character made readily available and the first duty of the branch would be to put that in shape. During last year I gave some instructions that have been carried out pretty fully in respect to one particular subject, for instance, the subject of nickel. Dr. Barlow, a very capable officer, has been devoting himself last year to preparing a report on nickel. When that report is out I think we shall have all the information required with regard to nickel in Canada, so that any one who reads that book and understands it will know everything that is to be known about our nickel deposits. If any one asks for information with regard to the economic value of metals we ought to be able to give him that information in the best possible form. That is the principal fault I find with the survey as it is organized at the present time. Of course it is very difficult to make changes; everybody who is connected with an institution is inclined to think that that institution is managed on just about the proper line, but after six or seven years experience I am clear in my opinion that a change is not only desirable but necessary if the country is to get value for the work it is doing.

Mr. BELL. It seems to me that a very great deal of valuable work might be done at once by simply compiling the material at hand. As it is now, one has to read through a lengthy history and here and there he might find a casual reference to this or that mineral, and in that shape the information is not available for practical men. I am pleased to learn that the minister contemplates so arranging things that he will be able to place in the hands of those interested, information as to the different minerals to be found in our country. It might be well that a special search should be made with a view of discovering certain minerals; for instance, a thorough exploration of the iron areas of our province. If a geological officer is merely sent to a certain district to examine it in a general way it cannot be expected he will achieve such valuable results as would be obtained if a trained officer were sent there with the special object of devoting his whole time to one particular subject. That would be of the highest importance in Nova Scotia with reference to its iron and coal deposits.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is quite in line with my own observation as the result of the work of the survey, and some of the best officers in the survey have practically said to me that while the general work of the survey should go on, yet at this present stage of development one of the most necessary things is to do that special work to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) refers. Dr. Barlow has been doing that in the case of nickel, and I think we should detail a competent officer to take up a certain mining field and to examine it thoroughly in its economic features and make a complete and full report about it, so that any person desiring to operate in that field would be in possession of all the information available. Such examination would be more detailed and complete than under a general survey. The coal fields of Nova Scotia are an illustration of the benefit of that kind of work. We have had Mr. Fletcher, who is well known to hon. gentlemen opposite, I suppose, and who has devoted practically his life to the study of coal in Nova Scotia. He would at once be detailed, with competent assistants, because he could not do all the work himself, to write a monograph on the subject of coal in Nova Scotia, and give us all the information he could get.

Mr. MONK. Who is in charge of the international boundary survey ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. Daly. He is a Canadian by birth originally educated in Canada and afterwards became a professor of Harvard University. He is a very capable man indeed.

Mr. MONK. I find in the Auditor General's Report that $1,065 was paid to D. R. Fletcher, of Vermont, for granite monuments to mark the boundary line.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We mark the boundary line with iron posts on granite foundations.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps it is that these were purchased by the United States authorities and that we are bound to share the cost, but if they were purchased by ourselves there is very good granite near where those posts were erected and we might have got it in our own country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The cost was divided, but I do not know exactly how.

Mr. MONK. Who is the officer specially charged with the purchase of instruments ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The officer in charge of any instruments purchased in connection with the land survey, which has to do with the work of marking the boundaries, is not the same as the officer in charge of the purchase of instruments in connection with the geological survey. W. F. King, chief astronomer, has charge of all the boundary surveys, and any instruments required for that work would be purchased by him or on his recommendation. For the geological survey the acting director makes the purchases.

Mr. MONK. Then there are two separate officers to attend to the purchase of instruments. Is there any outside purchasing agent employed by the department ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, no such thing.

Mr. MONK. I mention the matter to the minister, because at the time the firm of Hearn & Harrison existed in Montreal, which has since gone into liquidaton, I heard something of a purchasing agent who resided in Montreal, and through whom all these instruments were alleged to be purchased, though he had no special knowledge of the subject.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am glad my hon. friend has brought that matter to my attention, because there is absolutely nothing in the suggestion. There is nothing purchased for the Department of the Interior except on the requisition of the deputy minister, and his recommendation is made out by himself upon the recommendation of the officer in charge of the survey. As to recognizing any body outside the department as purchasing agent, or go-between, or anything of that kind, there is absolutely nothing of the kind, in any shape, form, or manner ; and the same thing is true of the geological survey, where all instruments are purchased on the recommendation of the acting director.

Mr. MONK. I am very glad to hear the hon. minister give us that assurance. What are the principal firms in Canada with which the department deals for the purchase of these instruments ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy tells me that he thinks, speaking from recollection, that as a rule they have to be purchased in the United States. That is entirely so in regard to astronomical instruments.

Mr. MONK. Most of the purchases seem to be made in the United States, and I realize that for many instruments that may be necessary. But still I think that before dealing with American firms, it would be advisable to see if those who deal in similar instruments in Canada might not be able to furnish what the department required.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend may rely on this, that we do not buy anything outside of Canada that we can get in Canada of equal quality, unless by oversight. Even in cases where the prices are a little higher in Canada, we still patronize Canadian dealers. Speaking from my own knowledge, I do not think there are any manufacturers of scientific instruments of the quality and class referred to in Canada with whom we could deal. Any dealers in Canada would be simply small dealers, with only a few instruments on hand. Of manufacturers I am satisfied there are none.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister touched on a subject which I intended to make a little inquiry about. It is as to where one can get information most readily in regard to any particular mineral. The reason I ask the question is this. A gentleman came here with the view of finding where our iron deposits were and the nature of those deposits. I endeavoured to get the information for him, but found it almost impossible to get any. Is there any way in which that information could be got without much trouble ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is a matter which has been brought to my attention constantly for some years past. Our information, while in some respects very full, is in such a condition that it cannot be got at. In that respect my hon. friend is as well off as I am. If a gentleman came to my department and asked for information about iron, all I could do would be to call an officer to take him to the library of the geological survey, and show him the books in which he could search ; and the probability is that he would not know much more after he got through than he did before. To remedy that defect would take some time ; but I am going to suggest a change with that object in view.

Mr. SPROULE. I sent this gentleman to the library ; but after searching through it, he said that life was too short to try to get the information from such an imperfect source, and he was afraid it was of little value to him. I thought there would be a complete list of the geological reports in the library, and some index kept up-to-date, so that one could ascertain at once where any of these minerals could be found, and in what volume they could be found. He said further, that even though he could get the information in these geological reports, it was very meagre. It might say whether the ore was magnetic iron or bog iron or sulphurous iron ; but it gave very little information beyond that as to the relative quantities of each, as to whether the deposits were large or small or as to the state of development. In all these respects this gentleman, who was from Pittsburg, said the geological survey was very imperfect; it was almost impossible to get any intelligent idea of it without a great deal of work. It seems to me that that could be remedied without very much trouble or expense, and I would suggest that the minister devise some way to overcome it, because it is a matter of importance, especially in view of the fact that our mineral deposits are attracting so much attention abroad, and that they are a valuable source of revenue to the country.

Mr. MONK. I would like to make a suggestion to my hon. friend with reference to this item. I have received letters from different parts of the province of Quebec, requesting me to go to the geological department and try to obtain specimens of mineral, vegetable and animal life; and I must say that in that department every effort is made to give us satisfaction. I think it would be of great use in the education of our people, if the minister could see his way clear to giving instructions to the exploring parties going out each year to secure as many specimens as possible, in order that there should be some for free distribution. In the province of Quebec we have ten or fifteen colleges maintaining natural history museums. It would be very easy, in most cases, for the officers, when proceeding with their explorations, to secure these specimens and reserve a certain quantity for the educational establishments who would make a demand for them. If that could be done without too much difficulty, the government could in that way enrich most of those educational establishments and diffuse knowledge throughout the country of its resources.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not see any serious difficulty in carrying out the suggestion of my hon. friend. To some extent it has already been done, but perhaps not as systematically as it might have been. I shall endeavour to carry out the suggestion.

Mr. SPROULE. From time to time we have had discussions regarding the propriety of building another museum, but have not heard much about it lately. Has anything been done lately in that connection? the museum building we have is quite inadequate.

Mr. LOGAN. I intend bringing this matter up when we are on the Public Works estimates, but in the meantime, as my hon. friend from Grey has introduced it, I should like to emphasize what he has said regarding the inadequacy of the present building. If hon. members would only visit the Geological Survey on Sussex street, they would be convinced that the building is a national disgrace, while at the same time they would be proud of the collections within its walls. Unfortunately, we cannot do justice to the many valuable specimens collected. Some most valuable Canadian mineral exhibits are stored away in boxes or on high shelves, obscured from sight, instead of being exposed to view. This state of affairs should not be allowed to continue. I would urge every member of parliament, who has not visited the Geological Survey, to do so, so that when we come to discuss the Public Works estimates, they will be able to give their views on this matter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no dissent to offer to what my hon. friend has said. No one can doubt that we require a suitable building with the least possible delay. We intended proceeding last year, but there were differences of opinion regarding the site, and as this building will be a national museum, the question of site is an important one. The subject has been lately discussed by my colleagues, and I have no doubt that my hon. colleague, the Minister of Public Works, when his estimates are down, will make a full statement.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has referred to a very important subject. There are some valuable collections in this country, and I think perhaps the Department of the Interior have been approached on the subject of purchasing them. It would be well for the department to secure these valuable collections, which are to be found throughout the country, and I trust the hon. gentleman will lose no time in doing so.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the government yet decided on the site?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has been definitely decided to construct the building and the delay has been due to the difficulty of deciding about the site. It has been suggested that the building should be erected in the park, and then other sites have been suggested. I am not in a position to make any statement, but no doubt the Minister of Public Works will do so. We hope to commence this year and will push the work forward with all rapidity.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understand that some surveys were made with regard to locating coal in Prince Edward Island last year. Have the reports been furnished?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I will bring down the report.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that there was a geologist sent down to the Sudbury district, where it is said there is coal. Has the government any definite information regarding that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work of the geologist sent out to the neighbourhood of Sudbury had reference only to deposits of nickel. His report will be available shortly and will be printed separately. I do not remember any report about coal in Sudbury.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw an item in the paper to the effect that the government had detailed a special officer to look into that question.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the Sudbury district ?

Mr. SPROULE. Somewhere near Sudbury—in the nickel region.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the report is incorrect. There is no work of that kind done near Sudbury.

Mr. LEFURGEY. May I ask who it was who recommended the work of surveying for coal in Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This was done on the recommendation first of the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. MacKinnon).

Mr. LEFURGEY. A large expenditure was made by the local government a year or two ago just about the time of the elections there by this same gentleman. A large hole was bored, but without any result except that, possibly, the hon. gentleman gained some few votes by the distribution of the money. I cannot understand why, after a failure of this kind such a short time ago, the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) should undertake this needless expense in connection with his department, when he should have all the facts at his disposal. I would like to know a little in advance whether the minister is going to continue to dig holes just before the elections in the near future ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My knowledge of the geology of Prince Edward Island is not very extensive. I can only say that I received a communication from the hon. gentleman (Mr. MacKinnon) asking that this work be done. I referred the matter to Dr. Bell, and he recommended the work, and it was done accordingly. As to the details, I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey) will have to talk that matter over when the hon. member for East Queen's is here.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to have the hon. minister bring down the report at as early a day as possible.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will bring it down at once.

To provide for the salary of a geologist to the international boundary survey from July 1, 1903, to June 30, 1904, $2,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there any report from this geologist ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, he makes his report every year. It will be found embodied in the usual publications of the survey.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it in one of the two large volumes given to each member of the House ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, the regular report of the survey. Dr. Daly is the geologist, and it is to his report that I refer :

To provide for plotting and compiling of surveys, plans, maps and utilizing field-notes, &c., (persons having technical or professional qualifications may be paid out of this vote at rates exceeding $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, or any other Act), $5,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase of $1,800 in this item. Will the hon. gentleman please explain ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This vote is to enable us to catch up with work now in arrears. The maps were not got up as promptly as they ought to be. Since Dr. Bell took charge, to his credit be it said, he has endeavoured to get the work up to date, and this is a special vote to enable him to do so. He reports to me that this vote of $5,500, being an increase of $1,800 over that of 1902-3, is necessary because the vote of last year was insufficient to pay the salaries of draughtsmen employed for the fiscal year. Five draughtsmen are engaged, two at $3.25 a day, two at $3 a day, and one for eight months at $2.75 a day, this officer being for the other four months engaged in field work and paid out of the general vote. This vote is practically to enable us to employ draughtsmen and other technical officers to finish maps and plans so as to make available for the public the work the survey has already done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the work tabulated in any way by these men, or do they simply do the work from the field-notes ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They work from the field-notes of the technical officers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The work the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) spoke of a while ago would be further work in connection with analysing the results and putting them in tabular form.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is different.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand. But that work of tabulating has never been done before ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. The only work of that kind that we have done has been the work that Dr. Barlow was doing last year. The work to be paid for by the vote now under discussion consists in putting in shape to be available the work of the technical officers in the field. The other work consists in collecting from the different reports of the survey during the years it has been in existence the information which is embodied there, analysing it, casting out what is obsolete, perhaps making re-examinations to supplement the information where it is defective, and putting the whole thing in shape where it will be practically valuable to the ordinary reader.

Mr. SPROULE. If you are collecting this information, it can be done by these officers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. This is for technical office work necessary to make available the work done in the field.

Mr. SPROULE. But that gives no information. The hon. minister employs two classes of men, and he proposes to take a vote of $1,800 more than last year. That means that he will employ additional hands. What are those additional hands to work at?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When an officer goes into the field and makes an examination of a certain district he makes his field-notes of the work he does. When he comes back he extends those field-notes, and then upon those field-notes are drawn the geological maps of the districts which he has surveyed. The preparation of the geological map is the work necessary in order to make available the work which the technical officer has done in the field. That is the foundation of the usefulness of the survey. That has been allowed to get behind, and we are trying to catch it up.

Mr. SPROULE. How far are you behind now?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The large map of the western section has been got out, that of the eastern section we expect out very soon. The arrears in connection with the general work of the survey, I think, will probably be overtaken in a year.

Immigration—Further amount required for immigration, general expenses to purchase tents, &c., $65,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend from west Toronto (Mr. Clarke) had some remarks to make on this subject. I think this is the last item on immigration, and I call his attention to that fact.

Mr. CLARKE. I want to call the attention of the minister to the case of Mr. Murray, who is an immigration agent stationed, I think, at Glasgow, or some part of Scotland. A complaint is made against him that he went out of his way to secure men to take the place of strikers at the Kingston Locomotive Works. Some correspondence took place, I believe, between the department and the Trades and Labour Council of the Dominion, and the answers of the minister do not seem to be quite satisfactory, and I have been asked two or three times to bring the matter to his attention. On the 13th of October last, I received a letter from Mr. Kennedy, who is the corresponding secretary of the Toronto District Labour Council, which is as follows:—

To E. F. Clarke, M.P., Toronto:

At the regular meeting of the Toronto District Labour Council, held September 11th, charges were presented to the effect that Mr. H. M. Murray, Canadian immigration officer at Glasgow, Scotland, had been co-operating with Mr. H. Tandy, of the Canadian Locomotive Works, Kingston, Ont., by advising machinists to go to Kingston, Ont., to secure work from the above firm, where the machinists were on strike. The matter was referred to the executive of the council to make a report. The executive met Monday evening, October 6th, and the sworn affidavit of Mr. H. Hunter, of Glasgow, was presented, together with copy of letter written by Mr. Murray to Mr. Tandy, introducing Mr. Hunter, which confirmed the charge as made to the council. The executive thereupon presented the inclosed resolution to the meeting of council held on the 9th instant which was unanimously adopted.

On behalf of the council, I ask your immediate support to make right the injustice done.

I remain,
Yours respectfully,
D. W. KENNEDY,
Corresponding Secretary.

Follows a copy of the resolution passed by the Toronto District Labour Council, October 9th, 1902:

That, whereas, it has been brought to the attention of this council that Mr. H. M. Murray, of the Dominion immigration service at Glasgow, Scotland, has been acting as agent for the Canadian Locomotive Works at Kingston, Ont., in securing machinists to take the places of the striking machinists at the above works;

Therefore, be it resolved, That this body do enter its most emphatic protest against such conduct on the part of this or any other officer of the government as an unwarranted interference in a controversy with which he has, and should have, no connection, and as being most unfair, not only to those directly concerned but to organized labour in Canada generally.

And be it further resolved, That in the opinion of this Council the Hon. Clifford Sifton, the Minister of the Interior, should take immediate steps to have all correspondence between Mr. Murray, of Glasgow, Scotland, and Mr. Tandy, of the Canadian Locomotive Works, produced before the House of Commons, and if it can be proven that Mr. Murray was in any way aware of the existing trouble in Kingston, that we do most emphatically demand his removal from office.

And be it further resolved, That a copy of the foregoing be sent to the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. Clifford Sifton, Hon. William Mulock, R. L. Borden, M.P., E. F. Clarke, M.P., E. B. Osler, M.P., A. E. Kemp, M.P., W. R. Brock, M.P., W. F. Maclean, M.P., and Archibald Campbell, M.P.

D. W. KENNEDY,
Corresponding Secretary.

On the 16th of March, I received another communication from Mr. Kennedy, as follows :

Dear Sir,—I have been instructed to again ask you to do this council a favour by making inquiries about the dismissal of Mr. Murray, immigration officer at Glasgow, Scotland, before the House of Commons. I herewith inclose you a copy of reply received from the Minister of the Interior regarding the Murray affair. The council, at meeting held March 12th, objected to the diplomatic language in the minister's letter, and the delegates ask you to demand the meaning of the words which I put in quotation marks in the minister's letter. I remain,

Yours respectfully,
D. W. KENNEDY,
Secretary.

This is a copy of the letter received from the hon. gentleman :

Ottawa, 4th March, 1903.

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 2nd instant. Mr. Murray was removed from the charge of the Glasgow office 'because it was thought that the duties could be more efficiently performed by another member of the staff.' 'He will be otherwise employed.' A general review of the conduct of the office led to the conclusion above referred to. I am not in a position to say 'that any one circumstance could be held to have been the deciding factor in the action taken.'

Yours faithfully,
CLIFFORD SIFTON.

To D. W. Kennedy, Esq.,
59 Edward Street
Toronto, Ont.

Mr. Kennedy has asked me to draw to the attention of the hon. gentleman these words which he claims are diplomatic, and he wants an explanation of their meaning : 'because it was thought that the duties could be more efficiently performed by another member of the staff;' 'he will be otherwise employed;' 'that any one circumstance could be held to have been the deciding factor in the action taken.' These are the sentences that he has put within inverted commas.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think my hon. friend would, himself find no difficulty in knowing what that meant.

Mr. CLARKE. The secretary of the Toronto Labour Council is very anxious for an explanation. There is a very serious question of principle involved in this matter. I do not think it should be the duty of immigration agents to interfere actively between employers and employees in Canada. I think if they do interfere they should state all the facts, such as are alluded to in the affidavit which accompanies this correspondence, and which was made by one of the men who came out to Canada through the instrumentality of Mr. Murray, and who was not made aware of the fact that labour troubles existed here or he never would have come. I had better read the report of the executive committee for the information of the hon. minister, so that the matter can go on record, because I think we ought to have an expression from the hon. minister as to the policy which the hon. gentleman pursues and which he instructs his agents in the old country to pursue respecting this very matter. The executive committee of the Toronto District Labour Council made a report to the council. The complaint in regard to Mr. Murray's conduct was referred to the executive committee of the council and they took evidence, deliberated upon it and made a report as follows :

October 17, 1902.

Executive Committee.

Your executive committee met in The Toiler office, Monday, September 29, to hear evidence substantiating the charge laid before the council by Mr. Boland, of the Machinists' Union, to the effect that Mr. Murray, immigration officer of the Dominion government at Glasgow, Scotland, 'had been acting as agent for the Canadian Locomotive Works of Kingston, Ontario, in securing machinists to take the places of the strikers at those works.'

The following members of the committee were present : President Cox, Delegates Simpson, Gardner, Acheson, Chilton, Vodden, Henderson and Kennedy.

Delegate Boland appeared before the committee and presented a sworn affidavit of Mr. H. Hunter, who had been advised by Mr. Murray to come to Canada to work for the Locomotive Company, at Kingston, Ont.

A copy of a letter was also presented, written by Mr. Murray, to Mr. Tandy, manager of the Locomotive Works, stating that Mr. Hunter was looking for work as a machinist and from the tenor of a letter written by Mr. Tandy a vacancy no doubt existed.

The following is a copy of the affidavit and letter as submitted to the committee.

Province of Ontario, County of York,
To wit :

I, Hugh Hunter, formerly of Glasgow, Scotland, machinist, do solemnly declare that I worked at my trade as machinist in Scotland up to and inclusive of the twenty-seventh of August, 1902. On or about that time I formed the determination of coming to America to settle, and in pursuance of that intention called upon Mr. H. M. Murray, Canadian emigration officer at the Canadian government agency in Glasgow, for the purpose of obtaining information as to conditions in Canada, Mr. Murray told me the best place in Canada for me was Kingston, Ontario, and it was a good place to settle down in and good wages were being paid there. He showed me two letters one from H. Tandy, of the Canadian Locomotive Works, Kingston, Ontario, inquiring for machinists, and the other from McGregor, Gourlay & Co., of Galt, Ontario, and strongly recommended me to go to Kingston. I asked him if there was any strike or labour difficulty pending or existing at the Canadian Locomotive Works in Kingston, and he assured me there was not. In pursuance of the information thus obtained I came out to Canada, only to find that Mr. Murray had misrepresented the facts to me, as there was a strike pending in Kingston in the Canadian Locomotive Works, both at the date of my inquiry from Mr. Murray and at the date of my arrival in Canada. Mr. Murray gave me a letter of introduction to Mr. Tandy, in the words and figures following, that is to say :

Canada government agency, head office for Scotland, 52 St. Enoch Square, Glasgow; address for telegrams, 'Maple, Glasgow.' Telephone No. 671.

August 27, 1902.

Dear Mr. Tandy,—This will introduce you to Mr. Hugh Hunter, of Glasgow, who goes out for the purpose of obtaining a situation in your works. From the tenor of your last letter I have no doubt you have a vacancy.

Yours faithfully,

H. M. MURRAY.

H. Tandy, Esq.,
Canadian Locomotive Works, Kingston, Ont.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of the Canadian Evidence Act, 1895.

(Sgd.) HUGH HUNTER.

Declared before me at the city of Toronto, in the county of York, this 9th day of September, A.D. 1902.

(Sgd.) W. T. J. LEE,
A commissioner, &c.

Upon the foregoing evidence your committee are unanimous that Mr. H. M. Murray has used his position as an officer of the government to help the Locomotive Company, of Kingston, Ontario, to secure machinists to fill the strikers' places.

We would therefore recommend the following resolution as a protest from this council:

That, whereas, it has been brought to the attention of this council that H. M. Murray, of the Dominion immigration service at Glasgow, Scotland, has been acting as agent for the Canadian Locomotive Works, of Kingston, Ontario, in securing machinists to take the places of the strikers at those works.

Therefore, be it resolved, that this body enter its most emphatic protest against such conduct on the part of this, or any other officer of the government as an unwarranted interference in a controversy with which he has and should have no connection, and as being most unfair not only to those directly concerned but to organized labour in Canada generally; and be it further,

Resolved, that in the opinion of this council the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, should take immediate steps to have all correspondence between Mr. Murray, of Glasgow, Scotland, and Mr. Tandy, of the Canadian Locomotive Works, produced before the House of Commons, and if it can be proven that Mr. Murray was in any way aware of the existing trouble in Kingston, that we do most emphatically demand his removal from office; and be it further Resolved, that a copy of the foregoing be sent to the Right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. Clifford Sifton, Hon. Wm. Mulock, R. L. Borden, M.P.; E. F. Clarke, M.P.; E. B. Osler, M.P.; A. E. Kemp, M.P.; W. R. Brock, M.P.; W. F. Maclean, M.P.; and Archibald Campbell, M.P.

That, I think, is all the correspondence I have, and I would like to ask the hon. minister if he proposes to comply with the request made by Mr. Kennedy, and produce the correspondence that may have taken place between Mr. Murray and Mr. Tandy, and also between the department and Mr. Murray? I should be glad, too, if the hon. gentleman felt disposed to make a statement in regard to his policy in connection with matters of this kind, involving disputes between employers and employees, and to know whether it is the intention of the department to permit immigration agents in the old country to interfere with or defeat the purposes of strikers in troubles between employers and employees. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee. I have stated the case as briefly as I could, and I would like to have a statement from the hon. minister as to what his policy is.

Mr. CLARKE.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no objection whatever to bringing down all the correspondence to which the hon. gentleman has referred; in fact, I regret that the hon. gentleman did not move for the correspondence at an earlier date so that we could have it before us now.

Mr. CLARKE. I took the opportunity of mentioning two or three days ago to the hon. minister that I would bring the matter up.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not complaining on the ground of surprise, but if my hon. friend had moved for the correspondence we would have had it before us now.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman has this correspondence himself. The request is made in it that the correspondence to which I have referred should be brought down, and I inferred that that was sufficient notice for bringing it down.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no difficulty about bringing correspondence down. I will have it prepared at once. My recollection of the circumstance to which the hon. gentleman refers is that when the complaint was made it was referred to Mr. Murray for his reply. My recollection of the conclusion at which I arrived, after examining the papers and hearing what Mr. Murray had to say, was that there was no positive proof that Mr. Murray did know all the circumstances of the case in Canada at the time when the event took place, but I also came to the conclusion that he had been, perhaps, a little careless in connection with the matter, and possibly that if he had been a little more alert he would have known. I think the circumstances are such that if he had been a little more alert and inquired into the circumstances this difficulty would not have arisen. The policy of the department and the instructions which the officers of the department have are that they are, under no circumstances, to promote the immigration of mechanics especially, and they are not, under any circumstances, to take part in promoting immigration from the old country of persons being imported for the purpose of taking the places of strikers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What kind of reasoning has induced the minister to instruct his agents that mechanics are not to be brought into this country. Is it because labour unions demand they shall not come.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not necessarily, but because it has been the recognized view of the department that the expenditure of public money should not be incurred for the purpose of bringing mechanics to Canada. The justification of our expenditure lay in the fact that we were bringing people here who would engage in the development of our agricultural lands. I do not believe that any other policy could be sufficiently carried out. There are differences of opinion about the matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) has one opinion, the member for west Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has another, and the member for centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) expressed a very positive opinion the other day that we wanted 10,000 mechanics here, and that we wanted them right off.

Mr. BROCK. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know that my hon. friend would say that if it should be the policy of the Immigration Department to bring them out, but he certainly expressed the opinion that we wanted mechanics here. I may say, however, to my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) that the labour unions do not dictate the policy of the government; no one class of the community has the right to dictate the policy of the government, and yet I think it would be impracticable for any government to carry on a movement whereby mechanics would be brought in to compete in the labour market with the mechanics who are at present residing in Canada. I think that policy is impossible; I do not think it can be carried out, and I certainly would not undertake to carry it out while I entertain the views I entertain at the present time. My hon. friend will understand that to err is human, and we have to work with human instruments, and perhaps sometimes a zealous immigration agent may not be as careful as he ought to be. But I can assure him that so far as the department is concerned the instruction which we give, and the views which we inculcate upon the officers of the department in that respect are distinct and definite and well understood. So far as Mr. Murray is concerned, I cannot say more than I said in the letter.

Mr. CLARKE. The complaint is that the letter is couched in very diplomatic language.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Well, it was intended to be couched in diplomatic language. The hon. gentleman will understand that when a minister is dealing with an officer who has been found not to be quite up to the job, it is difficult to express it in just the language which will accurately convey the idea. The history of Mr. Murray's appointment is as follows: When I organized the work in Great Britain Mr. Murray was a steamship agent at Glasgow and had been in the service of steamship companies there for about twenty years. He was recommended to me as a very highly efficient and capable man of considerable experience and energy, and upon these recommendations, I paid him a high salary; $2,000 a year. I was in Glasgow myself three years ago, and I saw Mr. Murray's work, and I conversed with other Canadians who had been there. His work was inspected by higher officers of the department and as a result, shortly after this occurrence took place, I came to the conclusion that he was not quite fit for the position there and I reduced his salary to $1,200 and put him in a less important place. If my hon. friend has employed men he probably has had occasion to do the same thing. The man who is now in office at Glasgow is Mr. Walker, a gentleman who was appointed to the service on the recommendation of the Minister of Customs. Mr. Walker is a newspaper man from Brantford, and possibly my hon. friend knows him. He is a very capable man, and I believe he will be a satisfactory officer.

Mr. WILSON. What salary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $1,800.

Mr. WILSON. And a house?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No house.

Mr. CLARKE. There are some other matters in connection with immigration to which I wish to draw the attention of the minister. For the past three or four sessions I have quoted in this House statements made by United States officials respecting the quality of the immigration which is coming to Canada. I have drawn the attention of the minister again and again to the necessity for making a careful examination of our immigrants, because I think that quality must be taken into account as well as quantity; and I may congratulate the minister that within the past six months steps have at last been taken to give effect to the suggestions that have from time to time been made from this side of the House, by the appointment of medical officers at the ports where these immigrants enter. But the statements are reiterated, at least in so far as they affect the fiscal year ending the 30th of June last, that the quality of the immigration coming into Canada is not such as we might congratulate ourselves upon. We should aim to emulate as far as we can the efforts of the United States government with regard to immigrants. We are congratulating ourselves upon the success which is attending the efforts of the minister and his officers, to increase the number of immigrants that come into Canada, and comparisons have been made of the numbers now coming, with those in previous years. But we must not forget that now-a-days the United States government is spending as much money to examine into the quality of immigration into the United States and to prevent undesirable immigrants from landing, as we are expending to bring immigrants to Canada, and that in view of the stringency of the regulations which exist on the other side it is a notorious fact——

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). How are they endeavouring to restrict immigration ?

Mr. CLARKE. By the most rigid medical examination.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Is it any different now from what it was at the American seaports ?

Mr. CLARKE. Most decidedly. It is more stringent, and they have felt it necessary during the past few years to place this country in the humiliating position of having dozens of special immigration officers in Canadian cities, winnowing and sifting the immigrants that arrive in Canada destined for the United States, and declaring that such will be permitted to go into that country and that such will be refused entrance and may remain here without regard to what may become of them. I say that condition of things is disgraceful, and it is evidence to me that the quality of immigrants who come into Canada with the object of getting into the United States, is not such as we should desire to retain here.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). What is the difference in the inspection at the American seaports now from what it was before ?

Mr. CLARKE. I am trying to tell the hon. gentleman and the committee that the examination has become so rigorous, that it is alleged by American officials that thousands of immigrants from Europe who could not pass the United States inspection, come by way of Canada, the United States being their destination, in the hope that having resided in Canada for some little time, and being made familiar with the ropes, if I may use that expression, they can find their way across the border into the United States. The American government, becoming apprised of that fact, were obliged, in order that the same rigid inspection might take place along the Canadian border, to appoint dozens of officers. They have now I do not know how many dozens of officers extending along the border, all the way from the eastern seaboard to Seattle, and they are appointing more this year, so that the same rigid examination may be given to immigrants going to the United States via Canada. They do not hesitate to refuse permission to enter the United States to immigrants who cannot pass their standard of examination ; and these immigrants, at all events, until recently, have been left on our hands, and have been in some cases a source of considerable expense either to municipalities or to the country generally.

Mr. SCOTT. Has the hon. gentleman any definite information ?

Mr. CLARKE. I will give the hon. gentleman definite information if he will keep his seat for a few minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. And the places where they may be found ?

Mr. CLARKE. There is not a place in Canada where the United States government have officials, where they cannot be found by the dozen. If the hon. gentleman will look into the matter himself, he will find abundant evidence of what I am saying. I think it is my duty to draw the attention of the hon. minister to these statements, so that he may investigate them, and take means to remedy the evil complained of, and to have the same rigid examination at our seaports as takes place at the seaports of the United States. The document I am about to quote from is Senate document No. 62 :

> Report of the Committee on Immigration, United States Senate, on the Bill (H.R. 12199) to regulate the Immigration of Aliens into the United States, with Statements before the Committee in the First and Second Sessions of the Fifty-seventh Congress.

This document, I presume, can be obtained in the library. At any rate, it is open to the inspection of the minister or of any other hon. gentleman on either side of the House who desires to peruse it. I was so struck with many of the statements made in it that I thought I would be derelict in my duty if I did not draw the attention of the hon. minister and of the country to the condition of things which is alleged to exist, or to have continued to exist until the 30th of June last. Mr. Watchorn was examined before the committee, and at page 439 of this document, I find this statement made by him in reply to a question of the chairman :

> Now, turn if you please, to page 7 in the report of the immigrant inspector in charge of Canadian border inspection for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, and you will see that out of 4,900 immigrants which we have examined in ten months at various points along the Canadian border, from Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., eastward to St. Johns, N.B., 2,028 were found to be of the inadmissible classes, and of that number 496 were suffering from loathsome or contagious diseases, 812 were paupers, and there were 10 insane, 8 idiots, and 5 ex-convicts.

Hon. gentlemen may try to explain away these statements, and I would be very glad if satisfactory explanations could be given of them.

Mr. SCOTT. What became of them ?

Mr. CLARKE. Let the hon. gentleman inquire of the immigration officers here. I cannot tell what became of them. Those in humble circumstances, I presume, did not return. I think it is a serious matter, and a matter worthy of being inquired into. Further on, at the same page, the same gentleman makes this statement:

When you come to realize, gentlemen, that with the very best force of inspectors the government can employ at these stations, yet out of the 600,000 immigrants coming into all the ports of the United States those 600,000 furnished a less number of cases of loathsome or contagious diseases than the 5,000 who came in, or attempted to come in, over the Canadian border, you will see that the work on the Canadian border is simply an auxiliary to the work at the American ports; and if you are going to exempt the transportation lines which carry them in from the penalties which attach to the steamship companies bringing them to the ports of the United States, it is a complete nullification of the work.

I think hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will admit that this is a very serious statement, and that it ought to be investigated; or, if it has been, the hon. minister or his officers ought to give some explanation with regard to it.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the date of that report?

Mr. CLARKE. December 20, 1902:

In the Senate of the United States,
December 20, 1902.

Ordered, that Senate Report No. 2119, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, together with the hearings before the Committee on Immigration, in the first and second sessions of the Fifty-seventh Congress, be printed as a document, and that so many extra copies be printed as will not exceed in cost the sum of $500.

Attest: CHARLES G. BENNETT,
Secretary.

That is the attest on the inside page of the cover. Further on, at page 441, in reply to a question from Senator McLaurin, of Mississippi:

Senator McLAURIN, of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Watchorn, is it a fact that the vessel landing at a port of Canada is compelled to pay the same amount of head tax that a vessel landing immigrants at one of the ports of the United States pays?

Mr. WATCHORN. If the people they carry go to the States, they do.

Senator McLAURIN. If they are coming to the United States?

Mr. WATCHORN. Yes, sir.

That is to say, these Canadian or British ships that are bringing immigrants to Canada for the United States have to pay the head or poll tax which the United States government imposes on ships bringing immigrants to United States ports. They collect from the vessels coming in a sufficient sum to maintain the immigration department. Further on, speaking about these steamship lines, Mr. Watchorn says:

I ought to say that the lines coming to New York, Philadelphia and Boston have medical examinations in Europe.

They do not like to have to carry back a great many people and swell their record of deportations, and as a matter of self-interest they examine medically at all European ports and weed them out. They say, 'You cannot go,' and 'You cannot go,' and so they stand them off, twenty and thirty, sometimes a hundred on a ship, and the very moment they stand them aside, the lines that run into Canada gather them up and put them on a ship to Quebec. So it comes to pass, as you will find if you turn to the Commissioner General's report, on page nine, column five, that there is a very small percentage of loathsome or contagious diseases rejected at American ports. You will see what a very small percentage they represent of the whole number carried. Now, turn to page 11 and look at the list of the border ports until you get down to Montreal, and you will find that of 737 total rejections at the Montreal office no less than 388 were suffering from loathsome or contagious diseases. In other words, not one-tenth of one per cent of those brought to American ports are diseased, while as many as sixty per cent of those brought to Canada are suffering from these diseases.

I would suggest to my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) that he should pursue an investigation as to what became of these 737 immigrants who were rejected at Montreal by the United States medical officer. It would be a fruitful subject of inquiry, because at that time there was no provision made, as I understand, for their examination by an officer of the Canadian government. These officers, I understand, were appointed in December last.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. During what year were these rejected, and what were the causes of rejection?

Mr. CLARKE. You will find in the Commissioner General's Report page 9—I presume for 1902—that not one-tenth of one per cent of the immigrants brought to American ports were diseased, while as many as sixty per cent of those brought to Canada were suffering from trachoma and other loathsome diseases. Surely we have no reason to rejoice in the increased number of immigrants coming to our shores, if the unfortunates are diseased before getting on shipboard on the other side.

The Commissioner General being fully aware of these facts—

That is of the quality of immigrants coming into Canada——

Sent me over to Chiasso, Italy, where all this sifting out work is done, to see how they managed it. I found that when an immigrant comes to Chiasso, and to the Switzerland border, he is there examined medically, just as thoroughly as at any port of the world. If he is found to be diseased the agents says to him 'it is utterly useless to sell you a ticket to New York, and I must sell you a ticket to Quebec. You cannot get into the United States any other way but you must bide your time in Canada and take your chances and get over the border. He singles these people out and puts a certain label on the lapels of their coats. If it is a red and white label it signifies to the agents at the European ports, when they arrive there that in no sense must you sell this man a ticket to the States, but put him on ship going to Quebec.

At page 443 he goes on to speak about the smuggling of these immigrants from Canada to the United States. There have been plans and schemes devised at Montreal to run these immigrants into the United States clandestinely or to smuggle them in :

In all cases where an immigrant is brought over by a smuggler you do not accord that immigrant the right to go back to Canada and receive medical treatment, as they do when they originally apply, but take him at once through a warrant issued by the Commissioner General, to New York and send him back at the government's expense to Europe. We are sending back batches of them every week in this manner.

Let me now read something which, I think, is not a matter we may congratulate the hon. minister upon. It has reference to the law which was passed respecting the inspection of immigrants :

The chairman said : I wish you would touch on the efficiency of the new Canadian regulations as to immigration.

They have passed a law in Canada by virtue of our work on the border because we have, as it were, stemmed the stream and it is now flowing back to them. They, for the first time in their history, have taken cognizance of it and have passed a law to prevent people of this kind, from coming into Canada ; but have not yet adopted sufficient machinery to put it in operation, and hence they keep coming. As it stands now, Senator, I get hold of a dozen or twenty of these men who are diseased. I write a letter to the commissioner of immigration for Canada and I call attention to their act and tell him there are twenty people now in the vicinity of my office suffering from loathsome or contagious diseases. Then he sends an officer, who comes and takes them away and puts them on a ship and sends them out.

The Chairman. Would the Canadian law be effective if there was machinery to execute ?

Mr. Watchorn. Yes ; it would, because it would keep this class of people out.

The Chairman. Are its provisions modelled on the same features as ours as to those ineligible to be admitted ?

Mr. Watchorn—Only so far as pertains to disease. They will not keep out paupers. They want immigrants too badly for that. Here is the certificate as it is issued by our force at the port of arrival in Canada.

Senator McLaurin, of Mississippi. Is that the same certificate printed in your report ?

Mr. Watchorn. Yes, sir. There is a place, you will observe, provided at the bottom for the signature of the inspector who takes up the card and the date on which he takes it up, I think it attests amply the efficiency of the border force when I tell you that out of 26,000 certificates of that kind issued last year we picked up 25,980 of them.

So careful and exact is the examination of these American officials, so thoroughly and systematically do they do their work, that out of these 26,000 permits, which they gave people coming through Canada to enter the United States, they were able to collect at the border no less than 25,980.

My hon. friend from Lennox has handed me a letter, which I will read in this connection, to show the necessity for even more stringent regulations. I do not think that the fact that a man is poor should deprive him of the right to come into Canada and make a home for himself and family, but people who are diseased should not be allowed to enter and be a burden on our taxpayers. We should not be put to the expense of maintaining them in charitable institutions weeks and months until they have quite recovered. That class of immigration ought to be discouraged, but no effective steps have been taken to bar it out. The hon. Minister of the Interior should impose a poll tax on each immigrant that our steamship agents bring to Canada and keep that money for the purpose of meeting the necessary expense of treating diseased immigrants. If there should be no diseased immigrants, the money could be refunded. To show that the class of immigration that is still coming in is not as desirable as it should be, let me read a letter addressed to my hon. friend from Lennox :

Montreal, July 15, 1903.

Uriah Wilson, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to extend to you my thanks for drawing the attention of the people to the matter of immigration.

I have been trying for the past year to arouse some interest in our city, which by the way is the chief sufferer in regard to this evil. If it would do any good I would be only too glad to travel to Ottawa to have an interview with some of the members who are interested in this subject.

I have the honour to remain,
Yours truly,
RICHARD LANE.

It is hardly fair that the philanthropic and benevolent people of great centres, such as Montreal, should have the care and maintenance of diseased foreigners imposed on them as well as the care of their own indigent and sick. I think that this letter is quite sufficient to justify me in making a strong statement as to the desirability of putting a stop to the immigration into Canada of people suffering from disease.

There is one more extract which I propose to submit to the committee for the information of the hon. gentleman. It is taken from the statement of Mr. A. S. Anderson, passenger manager, American Line International Navigation Company, Philadelphia :

In order to show that the old influences are still at work in Europe to induce aliens to evade the United States immigration laws by taking the route via Canada, I will read you a letter from our passenger manager in Antwerp, dated May 24th, 1902 :

'I inclose a memo, of our agents, Blank & Co. It shows that the rate of the Beaver Line is francs 125 to Quebec, francs 137 to Montreal, and to New York probably higher. Our rate to New York is francs 125. I further inclose a statement of passengers that passed here. Considering that our rate is cheaper, our boats faster, superior, and sail direct, the question comes up, Why are they so successful? The question is answered by the memorandum, in which Blank & Co. say: 'We give to the Beaver Line only the deficient passengers.' That is the secret of the Beaver Line's large carryings. All the passengers who have been rejected at an Italian port, or who are deficient, or who have reasons to take advantage of the 'Landing without inspection,' and prefer the certainty to the risk, travel by the Beaver Line.'

The immigrants referred to as passing Antwerp for the Beaver Line during April and May number 1,113.

I commend this to the attention of the hon. minister and the committee. I do not vouch for the statements contained in it, but this is an official document, a report of the evidence taken before the United States Senate Committee. I think I was in duty bound to bring this to the attention of the hon. minister and of this committee, because it is absolutely essential, now that the United States are discouraging immigration, and now that the tide of immigration is coming our way—and I hope that the tide of eligible immigrants will increase in volume every year—that every reasonable precaution should be taken to see to it that the diseased and criminal classes shall be kept out of this country; and any reasonable sum required should be voted, and I am sure will be voted, by this parliament to attain that object. Personally, I am pleased to see that the hon. gentleman has already appointed special officers at Montreal and St. John—I think he included St. John—and Halifax. I hope that he will give instructions to these officers to redouble their vigilance, and that every reasonable step will be taken to prevent ineligible persons getting on board the steamships at the ports across the Atlantic. Prevention will be found to be better than cure; better prevent these people getting on the ocean steamship rather than have them deported or interned in Canadian hospitals for three or four weeks after they reach here. And, if the hon. minister adopts a more rigorous course than has been followed for several years past, when we meet again in this House we shall not find statements of this kind from the immigration officers of the United States, and will be able to congratulate ourselves that, while the stream of immigration is increasing, the quality is improving. I regret having been compelled to take up the time of the committee in reading these documents, but as I gave notice the other day that I would bring this information before the committee, I must ask hon. members to accept that notice as my apology.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot add much to what I have already stated to the committee during the two or three days when this subject has been before us off and on. I can only say that, after looking into the matter last year, I appointed a medical inspector for the department to rigorously supervise the landing of all immigrants. The instructions given are of the strictest character. If any objection is made that the officer is not carefully and efficiently carrying out his instruction, I should be happy to make a thorough investigation; and, in view of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has said, without anything further, I intend to make a thorough investigation as to whether or not he is carrying out the instructions. I believe he is. I do not speak from personal knowledge, but I intend, in view of what has been said, to be able to speak from personal knowledge or as nearly that as may be possible under the circumstances. I may say that 89,000 immigrants have arrived at ocean ports since the medical inspector began his work in December, some 700 of whom had been either rejected or detained for treatment. That is as nearly as possible the proportion in the case of United States immigrants. The total number deported or detained at the various ports of the United States during the last year was 4,974, which bears about the same relation to their total number, 648,000, as 700 would to our total of 89,000. I find also, if I may be allowed to cite the witness whom hon. gentlemen opposite have cited against me, that the United States inspector at Montreal, who has lately been interviewed, says that our inspection is even stricter than that of the United States. So my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will at least have some satisfaction in knowing that we are moving in the direction he suggests. I find that the United States inspector, whose name has been quoted in this debate a number of times, says that, while he has at times criticised the action of the Department of the Interior, he is bound to acknowledge that we have rejected proportionately more than the United States on account of the diseases mentioned.

Mr. CLARKE. More come this way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. But he says that we reject proportionately more on account of trachoma. The hon. gentleman can hardly maintain that more are coming this way if his argument is, as I understand it, that diseased people seek to come through Canada to the United States.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That was his argument.

Mr. CLARKE. I pointed out that on the other side of the ocean, at Antwerp and these other ports of embarkation, intending immigrants who are not able to pass a satisfactory medical examination were not allowed to embark on steamships bound for the United States ports, but were ticketed for Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. But if they were ticketed for Canada and subsequently intended to go into the United States—for that is the whole burden of the report quoted by the hon. gentleman—there would necessarily be a large proportion of diseased persons trying to get in from Canada over the American border. I shall not argue the point; but the hon. gentleman will know that the United States inspector himself in whom my hon. friends opposite appear to have great confidence, says that the inspectors of my department at the present time are rejecting more than the United States inspectors. I simply cite that as evidence of the fact that we are trying to make the inspection as thorough and careful as possible. We recognize the necessity of this, and I very cheerfully give my undertaking to the committee that everything possible will be done to have this work of inspection satisfactorily carried on.

Mr. CLARKE. Before leaving this matter, I would call the attention of the hon. minister to the charts which accompany the report of the Commissioner General of Immigration of the United States. I think if the hon. gentleman would prepare charts to accompany his annual report similar to those which are found in the appendix of the United States report, they would convey very valuable information to the people of Canada, and enable them to judge as to the quality of the immigration coming into the country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend is referring to those charts in the report of the Commissioner General?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a few words which I intended to say the other night. I mentioned that the immigrants coming in were not of as desirable a class as we would like, and I understood that my statement was contradicted by the Minister of the Interior. My hon. friend from Montreal made reference to it as well, and I believe the statement he made was contradicted. I want to say that for the last few years our country is becoming literally overrun by a class of men who are little better than tramps, Russian Jew pedlars, Poles and Italians, with little packs that they carry about with them, are going all over our country. Many of them degenerate into tramps in a very short time; and in our section of the country, at least, you cannot go in any direction without you meet these men, either getting off a train, or walking along the roads, going into houses, leaving the gates open, begging for meals. They have a little pack with them as an excuse for going from place to place. These men are allowed to come in as immigrants. They are undesirable immigrants, because they do not belong to the industrial classes of the country. They make their living purely by deception in peddling, selling something which may be stolen in some other part of the country, and selling it for an exorbitant price to the innocent people who buy it. That is one class. Now, with regard to diseased immigrants who come in. The minister says that his department is entitled to credit for what it has done. It is true they appointed an inspector at the frontier last December, and if the country is receiving any benefit from that to-day, it is the opposition who are entitled to the credit and not the government. It is said that the inspectors stop these diseased people from coming in, and the minister said that the few who did come in were stopped at the border and treated until they were cured. He says that this is not an incurable disease and only requires a short time to be cured. I said nothing about this subject the other night, because there were others who desired to take up the time. I desire to say to the minister that every medical man knows that these cases of trachoma are practically incurable particularly when it reaches a chronic stage. Every medical man knows how hard it is, if not impossible, to cure it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Would the hon. gentleman give us some idea of the nature of the disease?

Mr. SPROULE. The disease is called granular inflammation of the eyelids, and when it continues for a long time it is almost impossible to cure. The minister told us the other night that he was assured by his officers that it was curable. Out of curiosity, I went out into the library and brought in an authority. I have here 'Swanzy, Handbook of Diseases of the Eye.' He is a standard authority on this subject. Speaking of the disease of trachoma, he says of its prognosis:

> At any period prior to cicatrisation of the conjunctiva an attack of purulent blennorrhœa is liable to come on. If not too severe this may result in a cure by absorption of the trachoma bodies, and should not be checked. If, however, the attack be very severe the eye runs dangers similar to those of an ordinary attack of purulent conjunctivitis. These dangers are less the more complete and the more intense the pannus.
> On the whole, if the disease come under treatment at an early period, it may be hoped that vision will be retained in a majority of cases, although a radical cure may be difficult or impossible.

Now, it is a fact, as every medical man knows, that when these cases become chronic, it is difficult and almost impossible to cure them. Thousands of them are never cured.

> These cases require to be under constant or intermitting treatment for long periods, often for years, and are extremely liable to relapses.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). What is the date of that work ?

Mr. SPROULE. If it would be of any use to the hon. member to know, it was written in 1897. He will see that it is very recent, and if he has any curiosity to see it, I will send it over to him. It is later, I presume, than the date when the hon. gentleman got his education in this particular line. I want to say that I have seen many cases of immigrants coming in, and have treated some of them, and I know how difficult it is to treat this disease successfully. Immigrants so affected are dangerous to those who are associated with them, either in the wash room or in the sleeping room, or otherwise. Up to last December practically there was no effort made to stop these people coming into the country, but owing to the incessant criticism of the opposition, the government have at last appointed an inspector at Montreal to keep them out. Now the hon. gentleman cheers himself over the statement of the American officer who said that the Canadian officer was rejecting more than the Americans were. But he forgot to tell us that the Americans rejected them at two points; first they rejected them when making the selection, a place where the Canadians do not reject them. Therefore, there is a larger percentage of diseased persons coming into Canada than of those going to the United States, and the rejections are consequently more numerous here than there. I say this medical man was sent none too soon to Montreal. Another word with regard to immigration. I was in Winnipeg a short time ago, and I saw that the preparations made by the government for receiving and handling immigrants are entirely inadequate. There is not enough room provided for their accommodation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Which port ?

Mr. SPROULE. At Winnipeg. I am not complaining so much of that, because the number coming is so large that it might be quite impossible to expect much from that, but I am only drawing attention to it so that some remedy may be found, and I think it ought to be found at the earliest possible date.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ASSINIBOINE RIVER AND WATER-POWER.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 192) to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine river water-power.—Mr. Puttee.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When this Bill was under consideration before, I thought, and a good many members of the committee agreed, that it was not desirable that the city of Winnipeg should have the right to assign and transfer their franchises, &c., which are being granted by this Bill. Since then it has been represented to me by the representatives of the city that the Bill would not be of much use to them unless they had that power. I have thought that instead of striking out the clause it would be better to add the following to section 10.

Provided that before any such assignment or transfer is made or executed the city shall secure the approval to the assignment or transfer by the Governor in Council. In such approval the name of the company or person to whom the assignment or transfer is to be made shall be specifically set forth.

The Governor in Council may hear the parties and decide whether the transfer or assignment should be made.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended, agreed to.

On section 11,

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In view of the question raised by the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) I have asked for advice and have given my attention to the clause providing that the sections of the Railway Act which relate to expropriation shall apply to this Act. I have been unable to see how they could proceed with any work at all unless they had the power to expropriate, and as their works are subject to approval by the Governor General in Council it is probable that the interests of all parties concerned would be protected before any action would be allowed to be taken by the city.

Mr. SPROULE. Most of the lands they would take would be government property any way.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So I understand.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 202) to incorporate the Missionary Society of the Church of England in Canada.—Mr. Russell.

BROCKVILLE AND SAULT STE. MARIE RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the Order being called for :

Resuming adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Campbell, That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Brockville and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) who is a member of the sub-committee on this Bill, requested me to ask that it be allowed to stand until next Wednesday evening, when he would be present. I have consulted with the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Galliher) who I think has charge of the matter and he is agreeable to the suggestion.

On motion of Mr. Hughes (Victoria), the debate was adjourned.

COLUMBIA RIVER IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

The House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 150) to incorporate the Columbia River Improvement Company, Limited.—Mr. Galliher.

Mr. GALLIHER. The Senate has made an amendment to clause 7 of this Bill, but if it be amended at all the amendment should apply to clauses 7 and 8. The Bill says: 'The company may acquire or operate,' and the Senate have inserted the words 'On the waters mentioned in section 7 hereto.' Section 8 covers the waters of the Columbia river and navigable tributaries not referred to in section 7, and on which we are asking to construct piers and dams. The amendment should apply to section 8 as well as to section 7.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will have to move that he disagrees in that amendment and stating the reasons why he disagrees. Perhaps it would be better to defer the motion for the second reading of the amendments until some other day.

Mr. GALLIHER. If I understand you aright, Mr. Speaker, you wish me to prepare a motion, pointing out why I cannot consent to the amendment suggested by the Senate?

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is this, that when an hon. member does not want to concur in any amendment made by the Senate, he has to move a motion to that effect, giving the reasons for the disagreement, which are entered in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. GALLIHER moved that the amendments made by the Senate be now read a second time.

On motion of Mr. Fraser, the debate was adjourned.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Further amount required for immigration, $98,114.06.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that the hon. minister is reducing the number of agents at work in the United States. Will he give an explanation of the work they have been doing? I mean those to whom commissions are paid.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Some years ago, when we were starting the work in the United States, endeavouring to get it under way, and to get as much interest taken in it as possible, it was considered advisable to appoint a large number of sub-agents on commission. These men received no salary, but they were paid a commission on the number of people they sent. The persons directly despatched by their efforts signed certificates, which were collected later on by the officers in the Northwest, and forwarded to the department here, and the commissions were paid on these certificates. As the work progressed and the number of salaried agents increased, and they became more fully acquainted with the work, it was considered advisable to cut off the appointment of these sub-agents on commission. Some time last year the inspector reported that it would be advisable to discontinue their appointment, and all the sub-agents were removed and their appointments cancelled. Since that time, some forty or fifty of them, who were considered to be of some value, were re-appointed. The other day I gave a list of the sub-agents who had earned any commissions, with the amounts they had earned. That is about the way the matter stands at present.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister explain how it comes that when he had a large number of agents in the United States who were receiving commissions on settlers coming into Canada was less than it is now, when he has fewer agents?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have already explained that our officers went to the United States and picked out men willing to accept these appointments, for the purpose of infusing interest in the work and getting it under way. Later on, when the work was developed, finding that a large number of the sub-agents had not done anything to justify their appointment, their appointments were cancelled. The time spent in this work, however, was not lost. In the first year that we appointed agents, only 700 or 800 people came. Since that time the number has increased. The appointment of these sub-agents, so far as we can learn, did not result in any particular benefit to the country, and that is the reason why we discontinued them except in a few cases. They did not cost the country anything, however, because they did not earn any commissions.

Mr. BLAIN. Some did earn commissions. I notice that one, William Ritchie, received $4,559.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He was only paid on the number he got.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that the commission was $3 per head for men over eighteen years of age, $2 per head for women, and $1 per head for children under eighteen. The minister having cancelled the appointments of all the sub-agents, does he purpose continuing that policy next year ? Looking over the report, it would seem as if these local agents in the United States simply came to a central point and got into communication with the railway company, and received their commission on the people coming from the United States to Canada without having done any work at all. Does the hon. gentleman purpose continuing next year those he reappointed ? If I understood him correctly, some few were reappointed on the same work last year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can only say that it depends on the cirsumstances of each case. The territory in which we are doing our work is very large. If the inspector thinks any particular man should continue in his appointment, he is kept on. It is altogether likely some will be kept on because they happen to be men who are doing good work. At the end of another year, our inspecting officers may report that it is not desirable to continue them in office any longer.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice in the Auditor General's Report that one or two are appointed for each state in the union. I would understand by that that a man would not be permitted to do any work outside of his own territory. In the Auditor General's Report, one man last year was paid $1,979—N. Bartholomew. In what part of the United States did he work ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Somewhere between the St. Paul office and the Omaha office.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did he not work in Iowa ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think for a part of the time.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that a lot of those men were dismissed from office. There is a large number here. $48,761 were paid in bonuses.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I gave the name of every agent the other day in the discussion, and how much he earned.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In the item under consideration I notice a sum for the purchase of tents, $65,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These were tents obtained from the Militia Department to supply additional accommodation in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. The price paid was $25 each, which is the contract price.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why should the Department of Militia charge the Interior Department more for these tents than new ones should cost ? You can buy the bell-tent at the factory in Ottawa for $16.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I suppose they charged what they paid themselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then they paid a great deal more than they can be purchased for. The bell-tent sells wholesale at $16.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Perhaps my hon. friend from Victoria knows something about the price.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not know about the bell military tent, but $25 is about $8.75 more than the regulation price.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall have to ask a rebate from the Militia Department.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask if the agents in the United States are to be continued during the ensuing year ? Seven or eight of them are paid office expenses and maintenance which, with their salary, amounts to between $5,000 and $6,000 a year each.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is to be no change.

Mr. MONK. Referring to some very interesting data given by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) regarding medical inspection, I quoted a day or two ago a newspaper report to the effect that Dr. Faber, inspector at Quebec, is an American practitioner, whose right to practice in Quebec has been called in question by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of that province. He seems to have been appointed by a steamship company to look after immigrants suffering from trachoma and detained in the city of Quebec. How did these immigrants get through quarantine ? That question is one of considerable interest because we have in the city of Montreal people suffering from trachoma, and one would like to know how these immigrants got there. Are the officers appointed to inspect the immigrants all qualified practitioners and what are their salaries ? And where are they placed in order to perform that inspection. I might add that many immigrants remain in Montreal and are a very sickly lot indeed, even without this affection of the eyes. Many of them are by no means satisfactory as regards their moral conduct. Those who succeed in gaining a living in the city of Montreal are, most of them, simply parasites. Those who work stand in the way of our workmen getting a fair wage, because they work for almost nothing. They do not live at all as our labourers do, they work for very low wages. That is the reason, probably, why this immigration is so very unpopular among the working classes of Montreal. It would be impossible to find a single labour organization in the city of Montreal that would approve of the kind of immigrants that have been passed through that city within the past five or six years. I should be glad if the minister would give us some information with regard to this class of immigrants.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The procedure, when the immigrant lands at the ocean port is this: The ship is boarded first by the quarantine officer, who is an officer of the Department of Agriculture, not of the Department of the Interior. The quarantine work is carried on under the direction of Dr. Montizambert, director general of public health. When the inquiry with regard to the disease of trachoma was brought up, we were advised by the Department of Health that trachoma was not a quarantinable disease. So, the ship is not quarantined because of any of the passengers being affected with trachoma. Nor are passengers necessarily prevented from landing because they have that disease. The passengers are all inspected before they land, by our medical inspector, and in any case where the medical inspector thinks the disease is curable, the party is detained for treatment. Before they are allowed to depart from the House of detention at the ocean port they must be cured to the satisfaction of our inspector. The medical inspector of the department, Dr. Ellis, of St. John, gets a salary of $2,000 a year. He was appointed last year, and the general instructions issued to him are to examine immigrants arriving at the port, all Canadian bound immigrants and also all immigrants proceeding direct to the United States, but not passed by the American inspector. He is to order the deportation of all American bound immigrants afflicted with loathsome or contagious disease. If the immigrant is suffering from some simple, non-contagious disease, or if he has only some slight physical defect not sufficient to prevent him from earning a livelihood in the ordinary way he is not excluded. In case of parties suffering from curable disease who have sufficient to pay their expenses, he may permit them to enter a hospital, where they are to be kept until they are cured and there is no danger from infection. In case of immigrants who are unfit to proceed upon their journey and who refuse to enter the hospital, he is to order their deportation. So, hon. gentlemen will see that, so far as the instructions are concerned they cover the case fully, and I think it will be found that since the present machinery has been provided under the direction of Dr. Ellis the inspection has been pretty thorough. My hon. friend will remember an interview that I read this afternoon in which the American inspector at Montreal said that the medical inspectors of our department were more strict than his own.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sifton) will excuse me if I insist a little on this point. My excuse is that I do not believe in the system of assisted immigration at all. I have to bow to the policy which my hon. friend has adopted, but I believe in selected immigration, and I think this assisted immigration is not only a great mistake, but is going to give us a great deal of trouble before very long. Therefore, my hon. friend must be indulgent with me if I ask a few questions. A great many of these immigrants reach Montreal on board ship, which comes up from the gulf to the port of Montreal. They disembark there and take the train for the west. Has the department an inspector at Montreal, and, if so, who is that inspector?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The inspection has been carried on under the direction of Dr. Ellis without the appointment of a permanent officer until lately. Dr. Stewart is the permanent officer now.

Mr. MONK. Does the inspector attend upon the arrival of every batch of immigrants to perform his duty of inspector?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Those are his instructions. Our inspector is not Dr. Stewart, the eminent physician, with whose name my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) must be very familiar. At least I do not think it is. The appointment was recommended by one of my colleagues in Montreal. I know the inspector simply as Dr. Stewart.

Mr. MONK. Has the inspector a regular salary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think he is paid by fees.

Mr. MONK. It would be very desirable to have an inspector in Montreal who would attend upon the arrival of every ship containing immigrants. My hon. friend will bear in mind, speaking of the disease which has been mentioned so often——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The number of immigrants who land at the port of Montreal are comparatively few.

Mr. MONK. We see a great many of them there.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The principal landing places are Halifax, St. John and Quebec. The number landing in Montreal, is, comparatively speaking, very few.

Mr. MONK. We see a great many disembark from the ship at Montreal.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I mean the steerage passengers to Montreal are very few. It would be hardly worth while to have a salaried officer there.

Mr. COCHRANE. I find the name of a Mr. W. J. White in the Auditor General's Report. Is he an immigration agent ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is general inspector of immigration agents in the United States. He inspects the work of the agents and supervises the work of advertising and the preparation and circulation of literature.

Mr. COCHRANE. It seems to me that living must be very high in the United States. I see this gentleman is allowed for sixty-one days, at $10 per day for living expenses. What part of the United States is he in ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. White has had large experience in connection with the subjects of advertising and dealing with the press, and he was taken to England by the deputy minister for the purpose of overhauling the immigration work in England. He was given an allowance of $10 a day for his expenses while he was there.

Mr. COCHRANE. The inspector of immigration agencies had to be taken to Great Britain. What did you want him there for ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. White was taken to England by the deputy minister because a considerable portion of the work which the deputy minister undertook to do there was to secure proper attention to that work by the British press, and in the matter of approaching the press and securing proper press recognition, Mr. White is a specialist. In the Department of Immigration we had no other officer so competent, and I am bound to say he was very successful.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does it cost any more for a specialist to live in England than to live in Canada ? That is almost enough to support the minister himself, $10 a day. Then we have $384 for fares. Does the department supply all their officials with valises and traps of that sort ? If they do, I would like to get a job. I do not think the people of this country should be called upon to pay these men extravagant salaries, to pay them $10 a day for their living allowances, and $384 for fares. I suppose they travelled in pullmans and staterooms. It may be very nice for ministers that have political friends to attend to, but I think the electors of this country will take it more seriously. We have sums all through the Auditor General's Report. There is another gentleman here, I would like to know if he is an agent, too, in the Immigration Department, a gentleman by the name of W. W. Cory. What is that gentleman's business ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. His duties consist in inspecting the government offices in the Yukon district and the land titles offices in the North-west Territories.

Mr. COCHRANE. There is a gentleman that gets——

Mr. SCOTT. Order. The hon. gentleman is not dealing with the item before the committee.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think I was, Mr. Chairman. I leave it to you to decide.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am willing to give the hon. gentleman all the information I can about Mr. Cory.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There was an understanding the other evening between the members of the opposition and the minister on the last item, that he would give them a free hand to discuss any item under immigration. A good deal of the discussion this evening has not been directed to immigration items, but knowing the arrangement that was made, I have given members a free hand to discuss any question.

Mr. SCOTT. I point out that the hon. gentleman is travelling entirely outside of that arrangement, because he is dealing with an official who is not an officer of the Immigration Department.

Mr. SPROULE. Go away back and sit down.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I might give the information now as well as any other time. What does the hon. gentleman want to know ?

Mr. COCHRANE. What salary does Mr. Cory get ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have explained his duties. He makes an annual inspection of all the offices in the Yukon district and the North-west Territories. He has to travel from one place to another, auditing the accounts and disbursements, and generally reports upon the methods under which these offices are carried on.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am willing these gentlemen should have a sufficient salary, but I object to the amounts they receive for expenses. Now Mr. Cory, in the Auditor General's Report——

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully ask for your ruling on the point of order I raised. The hon. gentleman is discussing an official who is not an immigration official, and has nothing to do with that department.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Of course the committee will remember that notwithstanding the arrangement that was made, it is expected that each member will confine his remarks to questions in reference to immigration. It would not be in order, and would not be according to the arrangement, to discuss any question outside of immigration. Therefore I call attention to the fact that we expect every one to confine his remarks to some phase of the immigration question.

Mr. COCHRANE. I had your ruling before that I was in order, and the Minister of the Interior said he might as well give the information now as any other time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Minister of the Interior is not presiding, and I am bound to carry out the arrangement that was made the other evening between the Minister of the Interior and the members of the committee. If the minister feels disposed to violate the rules I shall have to call him to order.

Mr. CLANCY. I thought it was well understood, and I think the Minister of the Interior understood, that any item might be taken up on the question of immigration. The other items were permitted to go through with that understanding. But now, under your ruling, there was no such understanding, and we must be confined in a definite manner to the matter of a single item in immigration alone. I must say that by your ruling we must conclude that the arrangement has been absolutely ignored.

Mr. TAYLOR. I must disagree with what you have just stated, Mr. Chairman, that we can only discuss immigration items. I think the item we are now discussing includes a great deal more than immigration, and we are perfectly justified in discussing any question which comes under item number thirty.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When I said the committee were only permitted to discuss questions of immigration, I meant all the questions that come under the department of the Minister of Interior. But they cannot discuss any question that is outside of his department, no matter what the Minister of the Interior says, because he has no power to give privileges to the committee outside of his own department. As long as the discussion is confined to dealing with the various questions of the Department of the Interior, it will be allowed.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have to inform you, Mr. Chairman, that you are out of order, because this gentleman is in the Department of the Interior. We are talking about Mr. W. W. Cory, page L—41 of the Audito General's Report. This Mr. Cory, I understand, is inspector of land agencies in the North-west and in the Yukon. For that service he is paid $2,400 a year, a very liberal allowance. Then this gentleman for living expenses in the North-west Territories and in the Yukon gets $620. He gets for fares $384. I suppose he is travelling in luxurious coaches and pullman cars, and all that sort of thing. Not only that, but he pays $31 for a valise that sost $25 and some other traps that he has to carry around cost $8.50. Then he gets a $3.50 leather purse. An ordinary purse will not hold his money. I suppose it so bulges out that he must have a leather one to hold it. He gets $20 for tips. What is that for? I have had several definitions of that on this side of the House, but I have not received a ministerial explanation. Are the electors to pay their money out for gentlemen that are travelling around the country, for valises and three or four bags of different kinds, for a $3.50 leather purse and for tips to the amount of $20? This gentleman's trip cost us $4,264.10. I think that is a pretty serious matter.

Mr. HEYD. You might have called it even money.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is my hon. friend saying?

Mr. HEYD. I was merely saying that my hon. friend might have called it even money and knocked off that ten cents.

Mr. COCHRANE. I wanted to be particular, just like the hon. gentleman was when he protested against the Indians being inspected by a doctor. Here is the amount of money that is paid to one man, and I think this is something that should receive our consideration. Why should it cost $10 a day to live in the North-west Territories? I know the hon. minister feels away down in his heart that there must be a fraud in connection with that. No man, if he is living as he should and if he is honest in his report, would pay $10 a day for living in the North-west Territories. I think it is shameful that the country should pay that amount of money to any man. It does not cost a man of ability any more than it costs ordinary mortals, and if there are men who want to live as high as that, I think it is better that they should be discharged, because I am satisfied this is a fraud that is perpetrated on the public. Why should we pay for this gentleman's valises and purses? I should think he could pay for his own, and I do not think the hon. minister will justify this. His second epistle might, but I do not think he would.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The truth about Mr. Corey is that he gets his actual expenses while in the North-west Territories. In the Yukon he gets $200 a month for his living allowance. The living allowance of the ordinary officer in the Yukon is $150 a month. This gentleman is an inspector travelling all the time, and from the best information we can get we believe that $200 a month is no more than a fair living allowance for him while in the Yukon. It would be quite impossible for the government to get along without an inspector. We have a large number of officers handling large sums of money, and the only check the government has is the report of the inspector, who goes from office to office and makes a detailed report in regard to the affairs of the offices he visits. We must have a competent man for that duty.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do you fit out all your officials for such trips as this ? Do you buy their clothing, too ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No ; we do not buy their clothing.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do you furnish all your officials with valises and bags ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The department is required to furnish a despatch bag for the official papers that they require to carry.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to say a few words in regard to immigration from the western states and from Europe. I do not pretend to find any fault with what the hon. minister has done or what he is doing, but, at the same time, I may say that the hon. minister does not go at that kind of business as I would do it myself. I do not think he is going at it in the right way. In the first place, we all know that it is a poor class of people who leave Ontario and Quebec and the other provinces, men who have not sufficient means to go to the west and who get no help from the government at all. The Canadian Pacific Railway gives them some help, but I never knew a case in which the government helped any of these people. If they have done so, I have never heard of it. We all know the poor class of people are the men who desire to go to the west. The rich class of people do not go there, and if you ask a wealthy man to migrate to the west the reply you will get would be : I am not compelled to ; I can stay at home. If you put the same question to a man without means, the reply you would get would be this : Well, give me the means and I will go. He is perfectly right in saying that. A man with $25, $50 or $100 is not able to go there and make a home for himself, unless he wants to make a slave of himself. A man should have means sufficient to enable him to live a year at least, and these people, having no means, cannot go to the west ; and, as a matter of fact, they do not go. A great deal has been said about Canadians emigrating to the United States. It is very easy to condemn them in the House here, and to say that they should not go to the United States, that they should do this or that, but you must remember it is not so easy to carry out the advice that is given to them in this House. Very few hon. members of this House know what emigration means. A man with a few dollars, three or four dollors, or perhaps ten or fifteen dollars, when he gets hard up, can go to the United States. We must remember that a poor man in Quebec can go to the United States at a cost of a few dollars, whereas it costs him a good deal more than he can afford to move to western Canada. In the States our people get work and save a few hundred dollars, and then they return home and others go to take their places, so that it is a case of going and coming all the time. The money spent on immigration is not spent in the right direction. It is a disgrace to see how our Canadians are being allowed to drift to the States. You see train load and train load of them moving off, and the next day an agent starts off after them to try and coax them back again. If you took the money that was spent on their going and returning, and the money that you spend on the agents, and the money that you pay for bringing here the trash of Europe, and apply the aggregate amount to keeping our own Canadians at home you would be spending money to better advantage. I know something about the west, because I was there before half of you were born, and forty-five years ago I walked right up to the Pembina Mountain. I could have bought half of the west at that time for little money, but the trouble is that I hadn't the money and like other poor folk I had to come back. It is just as well for the minister to stop his agencies in the United States or else to change his system. Previous to 1862 there were very few Canadians in the United States and there were comparatively few factories, but during the civil war the men were engaged at the front and as the women took their places in different employments the Americans came over here and succeeded in inducing a number of our younger people to settle down there. They got $45 and $50 a month, but as it required $2.50 in paper money to get one dollar in gold the people were not anxious to leave the States and so they stayed there. That was really the beginning of the Canadian settlement in the United States. If the Minister of the Interior gave more encouragement to Canadians to stay at home and less encouragement to Europeans to come here he would save money and have a better class of population in Canada.

Mr. SCOTT. I have listened attentively to this discussion on immigration which has been going on for four days, and I think I may say that no one will accuse me of taking up the time of the House by engaging unduly in the discussion. In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Morin) I would say that while doubtless it is true that so long as the world lasts there may always be improvements suggested in any system which is being carried on by human agency, still when we look at the results of the work which is being carried on by the Minister of the Interior in connection with immigration, we must admit that it is producing good results; at all events vastly better results than were obtained when the Conservatives were in power and were conducting their policy of immigration. Every member of this committee will admit that it is most important that we should receive in Canada a good class of immigrants. We do not want diseased persons nor those who might be classed as paupers and who are liable to become a burden on the taxpayers. The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) discussed the question this afternoon with commendable moderation, and his words bore that great weight which his words always bear when he speaks in this House. Yet I think that perhaps he laid too much stress on the report of the United States officials which would go to show that over 700 diseased immigrants had necessarily been left in Canada within a certain period. I was constrained to ask him where these people had gone to, and the hon. gentleman advised me to institute an inquiry to discover. I think, Sir, that most hon. gentlemen will agree with me that the suggestion of the hon. gentleman was in itself an answer to the complaint he was making. If it be necessary to institute an exhaustive inquiry to discover where these 700 diseased persons have found a haven of rest in Canada, we may take it for granted that the condition of things is not so serious as he would make out.

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the hon. gentleman to look up the record of 'Hansard,' and he will see that quite elaborate explanations were given as to where these people have been going and what a burden they were on the municipalities. Surely he would not expect me to ascertain where the seven hundred who were rejected went? I merely drew attention to the statement that this number were rejected at a single Canadian port by the officials of the United States. There was no means of our sending them back; that is the position.

Mr. SCOTT. I have listened to practically all the discussion that has taken place on this subject in the last four days, and until the hon. gentleman himself presented a letter from a gentleman in Montreal this afternoon, we had not one item of definite, practical information on which to base a complaint. Even the letter which the hon. gentleman read was very vague. The gentleman wrote as follows:

> Allow me to extend to you my thanks for drawing the attention of the people to the matter of immigration. I have been trying for the past year to arouse some interest in our city, which by the way is the chief sufferer in regard to this evil.

Evidently the matter is not considered very serious in the city of Montreal, if he has been trying for a year to arouse some interest in it, apparently without much success. He goes on to say that he would be glad to come to Ottawa if his presence would be of any benefit. That is the first practical item of evidence which has been given to the House that there was any real complaint. I venture to say again that if there is difficulty in discovering the location of the complaint, and if an exhaustive and close inquiry is required this would go a considerable length in proving that the complaint is not very serious. As a resident of the North-west Territories, where a very large proportion of the immigrants go to, I may say that I am as much interested as any member of this committee in that question as to whether diseased persons or undesirable characters shall be permitted to come into this country. Speaking as a resident of the North-west who has within recent years come into contact with a good many of the new settlers, I may say that in our country there is no serious complaint at all against the character of the immigrants. There is not to my knowledge any considerable number of them with loathsome diseases or with any class of disease. With regard to the people who have come from Europe, I have never heard a single complaint on that score. The only complaint with regard to incoming settlers has been with regard to some of the people who came from the United States, who, a few days after their arrival, developed cases of small-pox. The disease was not developed when they came across the border and were examined by the physicians there. While I am on my feet, I would like to say that it must be a matter of very great satisfaction to the House and the country generally that, in the matter of immigration, we have got to the point where we can feel that we can afford to discriminate and sift. Until a few years ago it was never suggested that we ought to sift; the whole cry was to get people, any kind of people, to come to the country. Only the year before the election of 1896, when the hon. gentleman's friends were in power, this problem of immigration was considered so serious by the people of this country that a great convention was called, held in the city of Winnipeg, I think, in February, 1895 or 1896, at which there were delegates from all points between the Pacific coast and lake Superior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Promoted largely by Conservatives.

Mr. SCOTT. Promoted, as my hon. friend says, largely by Conservatives. It was attended by the then Minister of the Interior, the Hon. Mr. Daly, who begged the delegates to suggest some means to him by which he could induce people to come to this country. The feeling of that convention was almost one of hopelessness about bringing immigrants into the country to help to develop its resources. Until my hon. friend the present Minister of the Interior took office and took charge of the Immigration Department, we never had any reasonable amount of success in dealing with this problem. I agree entirely with my hon. friend from centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) who spoke on this subject a couple of nights ago, that the general policy of the government has far more to do with a solution of this question of immigration than anything that may be directly done by the Immigration Department. My hon. friend knows that I entirely disagree with him as to what that general policy should be, particularly on the question of the tariff ; and if my hon. friend looks back over the history of recent years, he cannot fail to reach the conclusion that the policy of the present government with regard to the tariff and transportation——

Mr. INGRAM. Is the hon. gentleman in order now ?

Mr. SCOTT. I am perfectly willing to submit to the ruling of the Chairman. This is a phase of the question which was discussed at considerable length on another day, this week. I do not wish to take up any length of time in discussing it. I merely wish to say that I agree wholly with the hon. member for centre Toronto in the belief that the general policy is the more important consideration.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell how far the Minister of the Interior altered the tariff policy in actual practice with regard to the North-west Territories ?

Mr. SCOTT. I am afraid my hon. friend is trying to lead me into a wider discussion of the tariff. That has been pretty well thrashed out in this session and in recent sessions. I would only refer my hon. friend to his leader, who stated with reference to the iron duties that enormous reductions had been made since the present government came into office. I repeat that I entirely agree with the hon. member for Centre Toronto in that regard, and I was going on to say that if he would look over the history of the recent past, he could not fail to arrive at the conclusion that the present general policy of the government, as well as the very effective immigration policy which has been put into operation by the present Minister of the Interior, is proving to be a notable success, at least as compared with what we had in previous years. In the year 1896, the total immigration had been reduced to about 16,000 a year, as a result of the general policy and the lack of an immigration policy on the part of the hon. gentleman's friends who were in office.

Mr. CLARKE. How much was spent during that year in promoting immigration ?

Mr. SCOTT. I believe $120,000.

Mr. CLARKE. How much was spent last year ?

Mr. SCOTT. Between $500,000 and $600,000. But I would point out to my hon. friend that in previous years the Conservative government spent a vastly larger sum than $120,000.

Mr. CLARKE. You are referring to 1896. Stick to your text.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. Hon. members addressing the committee should stand and address the Chair.

Mr. SCOTT. I must apologize, Mr. Chairman, for having transgressed the rules.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This whole discussion is irregular. We have discussed this question three consecutive days. We have gone over the same arguments day after day, and it appears to me a very undignified way of conducting public business by men of talent and capacity, that they should go on raking up the same questions continually.

Mr. INGRAM. You have no right to dictate to us.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am not dictating, but simply showing why the whole discussion is irregular. Should any hon. member call my attention to the rule and say that we are not bound by any arrangement made between hon. members on both sides, I will be forced to declare this discussion out of order.

Mr. INGRAM. We have no objection to your declaring what the rules of the House are; but when you undertake to dictate to us how we are to discuss these matters, you are entirely out of your sphere.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must always dictate to hon. members when a point of order is raised. I am pointing out in what respect this discussion is out of order, and when the hon. gentleman discusses the ruling of the Chair, he is committing a breach of order himself.

Mr. INGRAM. We have legal redress in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has no right to discuss the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. INGRAM. I am resorting to the redress I have in common with every other hon. member.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wishes to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. INGRAM. I will do that if you will persist in dictating to us what we shall do.

Mr. SCOTT. As the original offender, I most humbly apologize for having transgressed any rule. I was endeavouring to proceed strictly with the discussion of this immigration item which is now before the committee. I was dealing with the contention advanced by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) that the expenditure of the late government was only $120,000 per year. That was the expenditure in 1896, but during the ten years from 1881 to 1891, there was a considerably larger annual expenditure; and the reports of the Immigration Department showed a very satisfactory return in the way of immigration, the figures being in the vicinity of 800,000 people. But when the census enumerators however—those very zealous enumerators to whom the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce sometimes refers—took the census in 1891, it was discovered that not only had we not retained the 800,000 people we had brought in at an enormous expense, but had scarcely maintained the natural increase of the country. But the conditions are now entirely altered. We have been getting during recent years a very considerable number of immigrants; and although it has been insinuated time and again during this debate that we are not keeping them, the figures and facts show the contrary. Every person is aware that we are retaining the people brought into the country and the fact does not require to be fortified with the proofs in order to be convinced of it. Last year the production of Manitoba and the North-west Territories increased to an enormous total, exceeding 126,000,000 bushels of grain.

Mr. TAYLOR. Thanks to a kind Providence.

Mr. SCOTT. Was Providence never kind during the whole eighteen years when the hon. gentleman's friends were in power.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. How much of that prosperity was due to the presence of such immigrants as the Doukhobors ?

Mr. SCOTT. A very considerable proportion.

Mr. CLARKE. How much ?

Mr. SCOTT. The settlements of the Doukhobors shows a very considerable production.

Mr. CLARKE. Give us the figures.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not got the figures at hand, but I can tell my hon. friend that, from what I know, the Doukhobor and the Galician settlements are proving very successful, many of these people are just as successful and valuable as new settlers as any of the others brought into the country, but I would remind my hon. friend that it was not the present government which began to bring Galicians into the country. Before 1896 the great efforts of the Immigration Department were devoted to countries like Galicia.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman has introduced the subject of Galician immigration, which I did not mention at all. We must not build up houses of cards to knock them down again.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the hon. gentleman object to my introducing the subject ?

Mr. CLARKE. I object to my hon. friend dragging me into it. I did not mention the subject of Galician immigration. If he wants to make an argument in favour of Galician immigration, let him do so, but not in reply to me.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I take it that, as far as the hon. gentleman is concerned, he withdraws all the objections urged in past years to the Galician immigration.

Mr. CLARKE. Surely the hon. gentleman must submit to the intelligence and common sense of his auditors. I asked him to explain what proportion of the prosperity of Manitoba and the North-west Territories is due to the presence of the Doukhobors. If he wants to ascertain what opinions are held of the Galicians, I must refer him to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). I did not even mention them.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not got the figures of the actual production of the Doukhobor settlements, but if my hon. friend will take my word, speaking as a resident of the North-west Territories, my best information is that the majority of the Doukhobors are proving very good producers and settlers.

Mr. CLARKE. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. SCOTT. There was a considerable number last year who were seized by some mania and gave considerable trouble, but that trouble has been almost entirely removed. There is a very limited number who are still affected by this form of mania, and a couple of dozen of them are incarcerated in some of our institutions at present. I would remind my hon. friend also that the Doukhobors came into the country under different conditions from any of the other classes. They did not come in through any efforts of the Immigration Department but at the request and under the auspices of the Society of Friends of the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. CLARKE. Why then did the Immigration Department take credit for bringing these people out ?

Mr. SCOTT. Does the hon. gentleman think that the Immigration Department would have been justified in excluding the figures of the Doukhobors from its returns ? Is the department not in duty bound to include in its returns all the people who may come in during any one year. However, Mr. Chairman, I was proceeding to point out to the hon. gentleman that the difference in results is shown by the conditions in Manitoba and the North-west, and I was quoting the enormous total production of grain last year which exceeded 126,000,000 bushels. I have not under my hand figures showing the total production in the year 1896 or previous years, but I venture to state that the production last year was fully three times as great as it was in any year prior to 1897. Then, take the figures with regard to the export of cattle.

Mr. CLARKE. Was that increased export due to the immigration policy of the government ?

Mr. SCOTT. Very considerably. The increased production of grain and cattle——

Mr. CLARKE. Cattle ?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, it was certainly due to the increased population of the country. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) surely will not contend that the same number of people as in 1896 increased the production to what it was last year, fully four times as great as that of 1896 or any prior year. In 1896 the total export of cattle amounted to 8,000 head. Last year we exported to Great Britain alone, 41,000 head, besides very considerable exports to the British Columbia mining markets and to the Yukon. Then I would direct his attention to the transactions in land in that country, which are a very good index of the general business conditions. In the year 1896, the sales of the Canadian Pacific lands amounted to a total of 66,000 acres, representing about $200,000; and the total sales of all the companies exceeded by very little 100,000 acres for a sum in the neighbourhood of $245,000. In a single month during the present year, the Canadian Pacific Railway sells more land than all the companies together sold in any year prior to 1897. Last month the Canadian Pacific Railway sold between 300,000 and 400,000 acres of land, these transactions representing more than $1,000,000, and the total sales of that company last year amounted to about 2,500,000 acres for a total of almost $10,000,000. The conditions go to prove the contention of my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) that the general policy pursued by the government has more to do with immigration than anything that can be done, directly as an immigration policy. The immigration policy that we pursue bears about the same relation to the whole conduct of government as the advertising and bookkeeping departments of an ordinary business bears to the whole business. It is a necessary and valuable element, and the business could hardly be conducted without it. I am inclined to agree with the Minister of the Interior that it is necessary to make these expenditures directly upon immigration, and to advertise our country throughout the world, so that we may induce people to come here and assist us in developing the country. But the immigration business itself is only a small factor, the main factor being such a policy on the part of the government as shall make the conditions of life in the country so favourable that people will be induced to come, and to stay when they have come. As I pointed out to my hon. friend, in years gone by, we got large numbers of people, but they refused to stay. The conditions of life in the western country under the policy pursued up to 1896 were such that these people could not make a living, and they refused to stay.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the difference in the conditions ?

Mr. SCOTT. The ordinary farmer——

Mr. CLARKE. In what way have the conditions improved ?

Mr. SCOTT. If my hon. friend will be patient, I will tell him. The conditions with regard to tariff taxation were so severe and the freight rates imposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway which hon. gentlemen opposite had constructed——

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman so far insult the intelligence of this committee as to say that taxation is now less than it was in 1896 ?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly it is. The rate of taxation is very considerably lighter than it was in 1896. And if my hon. friend disputes it, I will refer him to his own leader who will tell him what I tell him.

Mr. HENDERSON. Our leader never contended anything of the kind. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) makes no distinction between taxation and duty. We admit that some duties are reduced, but taxation has increased and the burdens of the people of the west are increased.

Mr. SCOTT. I am willing that my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) or any other gentleman should go to the western farmer and endeavour to convince him——

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt him again ? Will he tell us what lines of goods are cheaper than in 1896. Coal oil?—binder twine ?——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria). This is not in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I regard this, at least, as outside the question.

Mr. SCOTT. I am obliged to tell my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) that I am not a travelling price list. But he has always shown himself a fair-minded man on the floor of this House, and I think he is fair enough and his range of knowledge is wide enough to enable him to agree with me when I say that the whole conditions of livelihood in Manitoba and the North-west at all events—those countries I know something about—are vastly more favourable to comfort and success than they were in 1896.

Mr. CLARKE. I am always willing to take any of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Scott's) statements that appeal to my judgment; and I should be glad to take his statement now, but that I have seen, and compared, and compiled figures that compel me to express a doubt as to the accuracy of what he is saying. That is the reason I asked him for the figures. I assert that taxation is higher now than it was in 1896. I ask him how the conditions of life are improved, so far as the government could improve them ? Will he say that the cost of living is lower ?

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend and I will have to agree to disagree. My opinion is that taxation is not higher than it was. The farmer buys numbers of articles which he is compelled to buy, at less rates to-day than prior to 1896. Practically all lines of clothing come in at lower rates than prior to 1896, and every important feature of the business of gaining a livelihood in that country has been made more favourable to the farmer. One very important feature is the reduction of freight rates.

Mr. CLARKE. By the Manitoba government.

Mr. SCOTT. By the present Dominion government. One very material reduction, as the hon. gentleman knows, was that brought about by the Crow's Nest Pass contract, made, if I remember well, in the year 1898. Then, the whole administration of the department over which my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior presides is more intelligent, more energetic and more satisfactory to the people, since he has taken hold of it, than was the case before. My hon. friend from Toronto has been in the North-west and these things must be within his knowledge. In countless ways which would take too long for me to enumerate—my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) would become impatient were I to go over the list—the conditions of life have been vastly improved, as the result of the policy of the present government. And the results are shown by the figures which prove that the people are coming into that country, and not only coming in but staying there. As I said before, according to reports of the Immigration Department, we received under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite 800,000 people in ten years. But they did not remain in that country. I venture to say, on my responsibility as a member of this House that, in the year 1896, there were not to be found in Manitoba and the North-west one out of every five of the people who had originally gone into that country. Why had they gone away ? They were driven out by the non-intelligent policy adopted and carried out by the Conservative government up to 1896. The conditions to-day are entirely different. Does anybody dispute that they were driven out—that they went out ?

Mr. CLANCY. Nobody doubts that they were driven out, but they were driven out by the cries of hon. gentlemen oppposite that this country was not fit to live in.

Mr. SCOTT. I would advise my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) to tell that to the marines. That is well enough to say here, but it would be absolutely useless for him to attempt to convince the people of Manitoba and the North-west of anything of that kind. In the early years of 1890 a considerable immigration set into the North-west from the western states of the union, directed chiefly to northern Alberta. These people found the conditions of that country such that they remained less than four years ; and if hon. gentlemen will look over the files of western newspapers for the years 1894 and 1895, they will find accounts of the caravans of these western settlers who were travelling south again, going back to the United States, too poor to pay railway fares. The conditions were such that they could not sell their effects, their wagons and their horses, and the only way to get out of the country was to hitch their teams to canvas wagons and drive hundreds of miles to reach their old homes. I will give hon. gentlemen one instance. In 1895 it was expected, in the early part of the year, that a general election was about to take place, and the parties commenced to prepare in the various districts. In a little settlement east of Regina, the settlement of Balgonie, very largely composed of people from Europe, a class similar in some respects, particularly in their industry and thrift to the Galicians, called Germans, or Russian-Germans, descendants of people who nearly a century ago migrated from Germany to Russia, in that settlement the voters' list was made up in the year 1895, and the election was held in June, 1896. Now let hon. gentlemen bear this fact in mind, that when that election was held in June, 1896, it was found that there were ninety less voters than had been put upon the voters' list in 1895 ; ninety voters representing ninety families, had pulled up stakes and gone away to the United States, because they could not make a satisfactory living. To-day the majority of these people are back on their old holdings in the Balgonie district.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. gentleman repeat again the statement he made with respect to the expenditure on immigration under the old government and under the new government ?

Mr. SCOTT. I said that in 1896 the old government spent $120,000, and that in former years they had spent sums vastly greater than that, and they were also bringing in immigrants in greater numbers, but those immigrants did not stay in the country.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the Liberal-Conservative government expended a sum vastly greater than the sums expended by the present government since 1896 ?

Mr. SCOTT. No, I said that in certain years the Conservative government spent sums almost as great as the sum expended by my hon. friend the present Minister of the Interior last year.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like that question to be put right, and I would refer the hon. gentleman to the Year-book, and ask him to read the figures, also give us the years when the Liberal-Conservative government spent anything like $65,000. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would be good enough to read us the figures for the five years prior to the defeat of the Liberal-Conservative government, in 1896, backward, and then take the years forward from 1896 up to the present year.

Mr. SCOTT. I prefer to take the years for the period of which I was speaking, which was the period from 1881 to 1891. The expenditure in 1881 was $214,251; in 1882, $215,339; in 1884, $511,209. I had not looked at these figures for months, and I was speaking from recollection when I said that in certain years the Conservative government had spent almost as much money as my hon. friend did last year.

Mr. BLAIN. Read forward from that year.

Mr. SCOTT. In 1885 the hon. gentleman's friends spent $423,861. I think these figures substantiate the statement I made that there were certain years when his friends spent almost as much money as was spent by the present government last year. Now, before concluding my remarks, I would like to give my hon. friends opposite some advice. I think they are prepared to admit that on the whole the immigration problem has been fairly and satisfactorily solved by this government, and if they are not prepared to admit it, I may say that at all events the people in the west are satisfied with the administration of the Immigration department by my hon. friend the present Minister of the Interior. What was the position last year? Up to the 30th of June last, we had an immigration of a little over 126,000. Something in the neighbourhood of 45,000 of these came from the United States, and hon. gentlemen on both sides admit that these are first-class settlers. Then we got from Great Britain about 41,000. The balance of these people came from the various countries in Europe, and the Minister of the Interior, or his officials, inform us that about 6,000 of these people came from Galicia, were of that class of people known as the abused Galicians. Let us admit for a moment that the Galicians are objectionable. And we have to admit that, with the exception of this 6,000, the whole of these 126,000 new settlers that came into the country are of the very best class we could desire. I think that is fair proof that immigration is being dealt with to the general satisfaction, even of the most captious critics who sit upon the opposition benches. Now, I must allude to a slanderous remark that was made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), who, I am sorry to see, is not in his seat, against the Barr colonists. I think my hon. friends opposite will generally admit, that I am stating the case fairly in saying that they do not object to immigrants from the United States nor from Great Britain, except possibly some individual cases. But the hon. member for East Grey made a slanderous and abusive remark against the Barr colonists, against those 2,500 people who came out here. He said he learned that there were rumours afloat that these people were composed of the scum of the London slums. Now I say upon my responsibility as a member that such a remark is a slander; and I can quote from the statement which was already quoted by my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) in this House, made by Mr. Haultain, in the legislative assembly at Regina, that the Barr colonists were as a whole as fine a class of people as ever came across the water. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) read to this House an extract form the speech made by Mr. Haultain, who said he had travelled with a number of these people and had never seen a finer class of settlers. I say it is a shame and a disgrace, and an abuse of the privileges of this House, for an hon. member to get up and make such a statement without a semblance of authority. When put to the proof and asked what he had to justify his remarks, the hon. gentleman said that he thought he had seen it in some newspaper. He was not even able to state the name of the newspaper. I think I am in the judgment of the House when I say that no hon. member has the right to make such a remark about any class of people in this country, whether they are new comers or old timers, without the best justification, and all the justification the hon. member for East Grey had for calling the Barr colonists scum from the London slums was the statement that he thought he had seen it in some newspaper. I venture to say it was a newspaper without any semblance of authority if the hon. gentleman really did see it in any newspaper. I will read from the hon. gentleman's speech on the floor of this House.

Mr. CLARKE. What day was that? I do not remember when the hon. member for East Grey spoke.

Mr. SCOTT. It was just a week ago tonight.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for East Grey denies it. I will read what that hon. gentleman said——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. There can be no quotation from a previous debate.

Mr. INGRAM. Why did you allow the hon. gentleman to make a quotation then?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. He has made no quotation. He made a reference to the question only. There can be no quotation, and I cannot permit quotations to be made on either side from previous debates.

Mr. CLARKE. The ruling, as I understand it, is that an hon. gentleman can get up and attribute to another hon. gentleman, and that too in his absence, certain statements and that the denial cannot be quoted.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Before you give your ruling, Mr. Chairman, as I know you wish to give a well considered ruling, will you allow me to point out that this is the same debate continued. This is not a past debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When this question came up it came up when the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) made his speech on an absolutely and entirely different question, and whilst the Speaker was in the Chair. It was during that past discussion that the expression was used by the hon. member for East Grey. It was since referred to, and against the rules of the House somebody read it on the other side. I am not going to allow a repetition of selections or quotations to be made from a former debate.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why did you allow it, then ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) did not make any quotation.

Mr. COCHRANE. He did make a quotation.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the hon. member for West Assiniboia referred to a former debate. The hon. gentleman had full latitude to score, if I may so describe it, the hon. member for East Grey for something he was supposed to have said in a former debate, if it was a former debate. Surely, the hon. gentleman, in doing that, was out of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is quite clear. The rule says that reference to a former debate can only be made by way of illustration, and that no quotation can be made from a former debate. I am not responsible for that rule. That is the rule, and that is my ruling.

Mr. INGRAM. I quite agree, Mr. Chairman, with you in respect to that particular point, but I want to draw your attention to the fact that I am quoting from a debate which took place in supply, in discussing the immigration item. We have agreed with the hon. Minister of the Interior that we shall have perfect liberty to discuss every question concerning the policy of the government on immigration.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. minister has no power to give you liberty to violate any rule of that kind, and I am only this evening carrying out, against the rules of the House, an arrangement that was made between the committee and the minister. I am not going to permit every rule of the House to be violated because these arrangements have been entered into.

Mr. FOWLER. Why did you not stop the hon. member for West Assiniboia ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. He did not make any quotation.

Mr. COCHRANE. He did make a quotation.

Mr. INGRAM. Before you rule, Mr. Chairman, that this is a former debate, I would call your attention to the following in 'Hansard' :

SUPPLY—IMMIGRATION.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SCOTT. I am in possession of the floor.

Mr. INGRAM. I have the floor just now.

Mr. FOWLER. This is a question of order.

Mr. SCOTT. If anybody is the offender, I suppose I am. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) is attempting to defend me.

Mr. INGRAM. No.

Mr. COCHRANE. No ; nobody with common sense could defend you.

Mr. INGRAM. I hold that this present debate is the same debate as that which was introduced by the motion of the hon. Minister of the Interior, to which I have just called your attention, Mr. Chairman, and that what I propose to quote has reference to the present debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When we read an item, discuss it and dispose of it, you cannot refer to it again.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). You can by arrangement of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes, by arrangement with the committee. No single member, whether he be a minister of otherwise, can make any arrangement against the will of the committee. If the committee by unanimous consent agrees to set aside the rule which governs the committee, then that can be done.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the rule ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The ruling now is that you cannot quote from a previous debate.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman read the rule ?

Mr. CLARKE. The rule seems to be that the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) can slug the hon. member for East Grey without the friends of that hon. gentleman having an opportunity of refuting the charges and quoting what he did say. I will pass 'Hansard' over to the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) so that he can read the denial made by the hon. member for East Grey.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not going to quote what the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said. It has been referred to here by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). It was referred to the other night in this House. The hon. member for East Grey denied it, or did not recollect it, at all events. 'Hansard' was produced, and the very words that he had said or which had been attributed to him were in his speech in 'Hansard.' That took place only the other night.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you recollect just what he did say then ?

Mr. GALLIHER. He simply referred to the fact that these Barr colonists, or some of them, he understood, had been taken from the slums of London.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that a fact ?

Mr. GALLIHER. That was drawn to the hon. member's attention when he was present in the House, and he had nothing to say.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) dispute that fact ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I was not in London, I did not see them picked out, and I never saw any of them.

Mr. SCOTT. To settle the point finally, I may say that I have the quotation here, and my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will find it at page 6403 of 'Hansard.' The hon. member for East Grey was speaking——

Mr. BLAIN. We must have the rule first.

Mr. SCOTT. And he said——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SCOTT (reading)—

I need not say anything——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SCOTT (reading)—

—of the class of immigrants which were brought out——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SCOTT (reading)—

—but I am told that many of them were picked up from the slums of London.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I will be forced to name some hon. members if they do not behave themselves. The rule is :

No member, in speaking, can refer to anything said or done in a previous debate during the same session—a rule necessary to economize the time of the House. Neither is it regular to refer to arguments used in Committee of the Whole ; nor to an amendment proposed in the same. Neither may a member read from a printed newspaper or book, comments on any speech made in parliament during the current session. It is also in contravention of the rules of the House to discuss measures which are not regularly before it. But a reference to a previous debate, by way of illustration is in order. But a member may always quote from a speech made in a previous session.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. May I call your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman is speaking on the same question in Committee of Supply, and it is the same debate.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no question about it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. I do this because it is evident that hon. gentlemen opposite have been obstructing the passing of these estimates for the last hour or so. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have a number of questions to ask and it is impossible for us to ask them until the government supporters stop obstructing.

Mr. CLARKE. It is now in order for me to make a few remarks. I may say to the hon. member (Mr. Scott) that I do not wish to take his place, but, I have to take a train in a few moments. I call his attention to the quality of immigrants coming into this country. I will not quote from a previous debate, but I would direct his attention to a speech made by the Minister of Agriculture the other night as to the exodus, and I am sure the member for Assiniboia will not challenge the statement of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. SCOTT. Not at all. I am aware of the figures he gave.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you concur in the statement of the minister ?

Mr. SCOTT. The statement was made with reference to the eastern provinces.

Mr. CLARKE. Very well then, these figures reveal a condition of things that ought for ever to shut hon. gentlemen's mouths as to the exodus.

Mr. SCOTT. The exodus in the west has entirely ceased.

Mr. CLARKE. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that twelve months ago the Minister of Agriculture made a speech in which he proved to our satisfaction and to his own that between 1890 and 1895, 43,000 Canadians went to Massachusetts, and between 1895 and 1900 there were 41,000——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Will my hon. friend permit me——

Mr. CLARKE. Wait till I have finished the sentence—the later period during which the hon. member (Mr. Scott) would like to persuade us that the exodus had practically ceased—now then the Minister of Agriculture may say what he has to say.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is not correctly quoting what I said the other night. I was correcting a statement made by the leader of the opposition and the question was as to the number of Canadian born people in the state of Massachusetts. That statement does not show that they went from Canada to Massachusetts; they may have come from any other part of the United States to Massachusetts. The hon. member for Pictou last year made a statement to this House in which he quoted incorrect statements from the American returns. I corrected that misstatement. The other night the leader of the opposition quoted the incorrect figures of the hon. member for Pictou given last year, and I showed that I had refuted that misstatement of the member for Pictou. What I said was that these people were Canadian born living in Massachusetts at these dates. They may have gone there from Canada or anywhere else.

Mr. CLARKE. Let me point out to the minister that the figures quoted as to the number of Canadians in Massachusetts between 1890 and 1895 were made to do duty to show the enormous exodus from Canada during that five years period; and when we apply the same rule to the Minister of Agriculture he says: Oh, but these Canadians may have been residing in some other state of the union and may have gone from that other state to Massachusetts. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the explanation meets the situation, I have no objection to the Minister of Agriculture having it placed on record. This afternoon the member for Assiniboia made the statement that 700 was the total number of diseased immigrants rejected in Canada by the United States officials. I quoted the statement of Mr. Watchorn that in one year in one port 737 immigrants who came to Canada ostensibly to go to the United States had been rejected; but if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) will turn to page 11 of the annual report of the Commissioner General of Immigration for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1902, he will find a tabulated statement, No. 3; 'report of immigrants refused admission from foreign contiguous territory to the United States under provision of the Alien Contract Labour Laws and Laws Regulating Emigration;' and he will find that all told there were 2,016 and not 737 rejected at the United States border. So long as that condition of things is permitted to exist; so long as that percentage of unsuitable immigrants is allowed to come into this country, the hon. gentleman cannot make any boast as to what has been done by the Interior department.

In introducing this matter this afternoon, it was for the sole object of drawing the attention of the hon. minister to the statements again and again made by the immigration officers of the United States as to the quality of these immigrants, and of urging the minister to take steps to prevent the introduction of this class of people into our country. The hon. gentleman refers to the number of immigrants coming from the United States into Canada. Why have they come, though it costs more to live here now than it did five or six years ago? Because the available land of the United States is practically taken up, and because they can buy in our North-west for $3 or $4 an acre just as good land as they left in the United States, and can sell the land they left for five or six times that price. The hon. gentleman knows, of course, that the immigration from the United States is very largely induced by American land speculators who have bought large blocks of land in the territories and are advertising in whole-page advertisements in the newspapers of the United States the superlative advantages of our North-west as a country for settlement. And if the immigration from the United States was not as great formerly as it is to-day, that was due to two facts: First, there was available land for settlement in the United States; and next, the hon. gentleman's friends never ceased to decry the North-west country, publishing the most pessimistic statements respecting it; and because, further, the conditions of life had not been solved by the settlers to the same extent as now. The experimental stage was not past then. It is happily past now, and the series of abundant harvests which the country has enjoyed in the past few years has done more to attract attention to its advantages, and to induce immigration to flow into it than all the efforts that have been put forth by the Minister of the Interior and his friends in the government.

Motion of Mr. Taylor negatived: yeas, 21; nays, 25.

Mr. SCOTT. In reply to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), who I am very sorry is compelled to go away, I may say that I entirely agree with him that this inspection and keeping out of diseased persons is most important. I trust that there is no member of this committee who desires to see diseased or undesirable persons allowed to come into this country. But my point was that I thought the hon. gentlemen opposite were laying undue stress upon this matter. At all events, speaking for the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, I said that there was practically no complaint in that country, to which the majority of our immigration goes, on this score. But before this little interruption occurred, which I very much regret, I was dealing with the abuse which at present and for years past has been showered by hon. gentlemen opposite on all classes of people who have been coming into Manitoba and the North-west Territories—abuse which in all cases has been unjustified. For years the Minister of the Interior was assailed because a large number of people were coming from Europe and a comparatively small number from Great Britain. But we find, from the remark which I quoted from the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that they are quite as ready to abuse people coming from Great Britain as they were those coming from Galicia. If the hon. gentleman was disposed to be fair, he could have quoted the testimony of the Prime Minister of the territories, a member in good standing of the Conservative party, as to the splendid character of these Barr colonists. He could also have quoted the testimony of a Conservative newspaper published in Battleford, which I may say is the pioneer paper of the North-west Territories, and whose editor was no doubt very familiar with what he was writing because all these colonists went through Battleford on their way to the locality where they settled. That paper spoke in the very highest terms of the character of those people. I wish again to offer to my hon. friends opposite a word of advice regarding the statements which they sometimes purposely make and sometimes, I am fain to think they carelessly make, in abuse of the new settlers. For instance, the other evening, in speaking in this debate, the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) spoke of the government permitting to come and settle on our fertile lands of the North-west Territories, idiots, insane persons, diseased persons, and paupers. His remarks might easily be construed into a reflection on the majority of the people who have come and settled in the country.

Mr. BROCK. Do not misconstrue them. I did not say that they settled on the lands of the North-west Territories. I said they were rejected and remained in the country.

Mr. SCOTT. I am endeavouring to point out to hon. gentlemen opposite the advisability of their being a little more careful in the statements they make with regard to the people who come into this country. I do not think the hon. gentleman intended any reflection on a majority of the people who come and settle in the country, but he did speak about idiots, insane persons, diseased persons and paupers being permitted to come to this country, and that remark might well be construed into a reflection on the people from the United States and the people from Great Britain who have come in during the past year. I am certain that the hon. gentleman intended no such reflection, and I merely point out that it would be well for hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House to have a care of the way they speak about those people. I quite agree with what the hon. Minister of the Interior said the other night, that man for man a better lot of people never came into the country than the 125,000 who came in during the past year. Forty thousand came from the United States, nearly an equal number from Great Britain, and the remainder from other countries in Europe. I would like to make a reference to the Galicians, chiefly because of a reference made to them by one of the other members from the North-west Territories the other night. I may say that I do not at all agree with the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in his estimate of the Galicians as settlers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would the hon. gentleman have the hardihood to say that if the hon. member for Alberta were in his seat ?

Mr. TAYLOR. He took good care to look around to see that he was not there.

Mr. SCOTT. It will be the privilege of the hon. gentleman for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to draw the attention of the hon. member for Alberta to my remarks in 'Hansard.' I have frequently said the same thing to himself, and I am sorry he is not in his seat to listen to the remarks I have to make. It would not be news to him. He is perfectly well aware of my opinion. In my opinion these 6,000 Galicians who came into this country during the preceding twelve months are valuable and useful settlers and are welcome among us, and an equal number next year and the following years will receive from the great majority of the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories an equal welcome. The hon. member for Alberta does not express the unanimous opinion of the people of his own community. The Conservative newspaper in the town of Edmonton has frequently given testimony to the good character of the Galicians, and I might quote also the testimony of the Conservative member for the district of Victoria in the North-west Legislature in their favour. And as that gentleman is a merchant in the town of Fort Saskatchewan he has ample opportunities of judging. The hon. member for East Grey took considerable credit this afternoon for the efforts of the opposition in keeping a certain number of undesirable characters out of the country during recent months. Had he gone back to the years before 1896, he would have found that his party friends were successful in keeping hundreds of thousands of people away from this country. If we had had in those years the intelligent progressive policy we now enjoy, we would not at present have but a paltry quarter of a million in our western territories, but something near a million and a half. Speaking as a representative of the territories, I can assure the hon. Minister of the Interior that his land admistration, his immigration administration, and his administration of the various other branches of the department, meet with the very warm endorsation of our western country.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the record of the two political parties, on which my hon. friend has detained the House the last hour and a half, but I wish to draw attention to one point at issue between the hon. member and myself. He tried to create the impression that the Liberal-Conservative party had expended nearly as much money upon immigration as the present government. I wish to correct that statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I said that in certain years the hon. gentleman's friends had spent almost as much as we did last year.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by that, except that he would like to leave the impression that at certain times the late Liberal-Conservative government had expended as much money on immigration as this government. I will take any six years the hon. gentleman chooses during the eighteen years when the Liberal-Conservative party were in office and compare them with the six years of the present administration, and the comparison will show which of us is right. But if the hon. gentleman will not name any six years, let me take the last six years of the late administration, and he will find that the difference in favour of the Liberal Conservative government is $1,505,784. In other words, the present government has expended, during the last six years, on immigration more than double what the Liberal-Conservative government expended during the last six years it was in office. But the hon. gentleman selected one year. Well, I am willing to take any one year. The expenditure on immigration of the Liberal-Conservative party was small.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And the results were very small.

Mr. BLAIN. In the hon. gentleman's county, the census return for the past ten years shows a smaller population than they did the previous ten years. I gave a list last session, showing that in all the very best counties of Ontario, the population was less, according to the census of 1901 than it was in 1891. The hon. gentleman seeks to mislead the committee when he attempts to make us believe that the Liberal-Conservative government expended anything like the amount of money on immigration which this government has expended since 1896.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. the Minister of the Interior will be pleased, no doubt, that his hon. friend from west Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) took up so much of the time of this House. After starting out with the lecture to hon. gentlemen on this side, after telling us that he had listened during four days to the discussion of this question and was very weary and disgusted, he has just taken up an hour and a half of our time going over the same ground again in order to air his views on this subject which he was so tired of. The hon. gentleman referred to the condition of this country previous to 1896, but every one will agree that since then times have been much better in Canada and all over the world. Therefore there can be no particular credit given the policy of the government for the prosperity we are enjoying to-day. In 1896, and for some years previous, there were very hard times in Canada, as was the case throughout the world, but how were the government of that day met by hon. gentlemen opposite on the great question of immigration. During those years there was very strong necessity for spending large sums on the encouragement of immigration. Did hon. gentlemen opposite support such a policy? No, they opposed every item of expenditure on immigration. I would like to hear from the hon. the Minister of the Interior whether he has ever met any opposition on this side as regards the amount which he desired to expend for the purpose of encouraging immigration. I venture to say that he has not. He has met some criticism on the administration of his department. His attention has been called to the reports of the American commissioner, showing what a large number of people have come in who are diseased. Was it not our duty to do this in order that means might be taken to prevent any further influx of such people? In doing this we are advancing the interests of our people. But the hon. gentleman will never find any Conservatives in this House or out of it, taking occasion to run down this country. He will not find any one connected with the Conservative party writing letters to a leading financial paper in England in order to discourage any desirable class of people from coming to this country or to prevent the investment of capital in this country. On the contrary, we have joined with our hon. friends opposite in congratulations over the good times we are now enjoying, which seem to be general throughout the world, and which I hope will long continue. We hope that the administration of this government will be such as will redound to the benefit of the country and our expenditure will be reasonable, and proper immigration will be encouraged. The hon. gentleman speaks of the present condition in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Everybody knows that for the last few years we have had good crops in Manitoba and the North-west. And is it not a fact—is it not true of the hon. gentleman's own constituency ?—that prior to 1896, many farmers who had bought agricultural implements on credit were not able to pay for those implements owing to the bad crops ? But, with the good crops of the last few years, they have been able to pay these and other debts, and I venture to say that many of these farmers have good bank accounts to-day. Is this due to the policy of this government ? Not at all ; it is due to the good crops——

Mr. SCOTT. Will my hon. friend permit me one remark ? If he will refer to the record of the crop reports, and will take a series of years prior to 1896 and a series of years succeeding 1896, I venture to say he will find very little difference in the average year.

Mr. INGRAM. I simply leave the statement I have made alongside the statement of the hon. gentleman and leave the people of this country to judge which is correct. There is another factor which has helped them greatly. We know that nothing tends more to draw people to a country than the discovery of gold. We know that the British Columbia mines were largely developed by reason of the discovery of gold. And we know perfectly well that capital has been brought in from every country in the world, and hundreds and thousands of people have come in because of the discovery of gold in British Columbia. The hon. gentleman has spoken of tariff and transportation, and has referred to the year 1881 and succeeding years. I wish to point out to him that had that policy of his friends been carried out, we could not possibly have had the present population in the North-west, for they opposed a transportation policy. Notwithstanding their opposition, the Conservative party carried the line of railway through, and as a result of that policy we have the present development of that country.

Mr. TAYLOR. We would not have had a country at all but for that.

Mr. INGRAM. Certainly. I do not wish to take up more of the time of the committee.

Mr. COCHRANE. Go for him.

Mr. INGRAM. It is not necessary. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is here. Perhaps it has been whispered to him what statements the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has been making. I believe that one of these gentlemen has one opinion with regard to the Galicians as immigrants, while the other has quite a different opinion. So I leave these hon. gentlemen to settle their differences. For my part I should be glad to see not merely hundreds of thousands but millions of people coming to this country. There is plenty of room for all. I trust a vigorous policy will be pursued for the encouragement of a good class of immigrants. I have no fault to find so far as the amount of money expended is concerned. If the money is properly expended, the expenditure is not too great in the interest of the country. There are points that, I think, could be fairly criticised. I doubt whether it is wise to have so many immigration agents in the United States paid by commission. I do not dwell upon that, because there are other hon. gentlemen who have given the matter more consideration than I have and are more competent to speak upon it. As a member of the opposition I can say that we are not open to the charge of having refused our approval to the appropriation of any reasonable sum for immigration purposes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think it is somewhat unfortunate that our good friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has aroused the spirit in this discussion which we observe. Matters were proceeding very nicely, and the estimates of the minister were being discussed in a very temperate manner until our good friend came in and got the blood circulating rather quickly. I hope, however, it will calm down. As to the credit due to the Minister of the Interior, and as to the condemnation of the policy of the Conservative party, a great deal of extravagant language has been used by the hon. member for West Assiniboia. I stand here prepared to prove to any reasonable audience that the reason the North-west was not colonized to a greater extent up to 1896 was mainly the cause assigned by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram). It was due to disloyalty of the leaders of the Liberal party, whose speeches were used by the immigration agents of the western and south-western states throughout the length and breadth of the world to keep colonists out of Canada and induce them to go to the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. I suppose that caused the bad crops that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) was speaking about ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am not speaking of bad crops. There will be bad crops in the North-west for all time whenever you will find bad farming. And there will be good crops for all time where you find farmers who know how to put in their crops, properly. I say, in all fairness to the Minister of the Interior—and I speak of what I chance to know something about—that he has shown great energy in advertising our North-west in the western states and in the British islands. I do not say that all the money has been judiciously expended. I suppose it will be hard to find any large expenditure, every part of which is quite judicious. I am quite willing to give him the credit he deserves. But I am not willing that any man should stand up in this House and condemn the policy of the Conservatives in this regard. And I should think the Liberals would be ashamed to refer to the North-west in connection with immigration; for, as I said, the speeches of the Liberal leaders were used in England, and on the continent of Europe to keep immigrants out of Canada and bring them into the United States. Reference has been made to the Barr colonists. It was my privilege to see a large number of those colonists and on a previous occasion I told the House that I found them to be a very desirable lot of immigrants. And, in this connection, I may say that there is a good deal of fault found by some people with regard to the classes of immigrants. But let it be remembered that the men who raise the straight objection with regard to the importation of mechanics, the importation of labourers, the importation of farm labourers and farmers—these people, not so many years ago, themselves landed on the docks in this country. I want that to be borne in mind. If we are ever to make this country great we must encourage all desirable classes of immigrants. We must keep out the undesirable—especially those physically undesirable, those diseased in mind or body. But, so long as a man has a clear head and an honest heart, I care not if he has not a dollar, let him be brought in and he will find the means of making an honest living. So far as the Barr colonists are concerned, they are a superior lot, and, so far as the colony is concerned, a finer tract of land than that upon which they are settled is not to be found in the Dominion of Canada, or on the continent of North America. What I wish to ask the minister, and I shall be pleased if he will answer me when I am through is, whether there are any large tracts of land set apart in the North-west for Nestorians, Arabians, or any other class not of our own people.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I presume that policy will not be followed any more. I understood that certain lands had been set apart for a number of Poles.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Some gentlemen have criticised the Doukhobors. I noticed that as soon as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) came in, the hon. member for West Assiniboia became more docile and assumed a much milder tone than he had previously done. Now, we must admit, of course, that when the tide of immigration is large, a certain number will come in who are ignorant and undesirable. But I do want to say this, that the Galicians have taught the people of Canada to know the value of our poor lands. The hon. member for Alberta knows well that along the south shore of the North Saskatchewan river are regions that no person, even the most enthusiastic and optimistic Canadian, ever imagined were fit for settlement; yet these people have gone in there among those hills and have shown us that a rolling hill country, which most of us thought to be useless for settlement, can be converted into a prosperous country. The people are now living contented and happy on their own homes; they are as comfortable and as prosperous, to all appearances, as any that can be found in the older settled parts of Canada.

Mr. HACKETT. I would ask the hon. minister if there is any agent in Prince Edward Island to direct persons who want to leave that province to take up their home in the North-west?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. HACKETT. I think it is very desirable that some person should be appointed in that province for that purpose, because there are numbers of our young men who drift away from our island to the United States who, if they were properly directed, would go to western Canada. I think it would be good policy for this government to appoint an agent in Prince Edward Island for the purpose of directing our people who desire to make their homes in the west, and if possible to procure for them a lower fare on the railways than they can now procure. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) told us last night of the great surplus of labour down in the lower provinces. He said it was impossible to find a man to do a day's work, they were all so busily engaged; that times were good, every person was employed, and the man who desired to procure labour couldn't find it there. Now, the hon. gentleman was certainly drawing on his imagination. We all remember that when men were wanted to reap the harvest in the North-west Territories, and when there was a reduced railway fare, and a chance for our young men in the lower provinces to take a trip to the North-west and to view the country, the trains were overcrowded with those who desired to go out there and work a couple of months for $40 or $50. Now, if they had had employment at home they would not have done that. I am sorry to bring this up before the committee, but the truth must be stated, that two years ago the trains were overloaded with these young men from the eastern provinces who were seeking employment in the west. We remember that when they found themselves there they were abused, no accommodation was provided for them. One would think that after they had left their homes and travelled thousands of miles to work on the farms, they would have found at least a couple of months' work. I think the government should have done something to assist those young men. Many of our young men drift away to the United States. The Minister of Finance said a few days ago that there were always some adventurers, some enterprising spirits who would leave the country. Sir, hon. gentlemen opposite have changed their tune. I remember when, in this parliament, blue ruin was preached by the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when we were told that the young men were being driven out of the country by the policy of the late government. There was no talk then of adventurers and enterprising spirits. But if we have now adventurers and enterprising young men who go away to seek homes for themselves, the least the government can do is to assist them in settling in the North-west. But they will not do that, they would rather spend the money of this country in bringing in Doukhobors and others who are a menace to the welfare of our people. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has spoken about what was done under the late government. I remember very well, in this parliament, when every effort was made to assist immigration into Canada, when that great Liberal-Conservative party, under the leadership of Sir John A. Macdonald and his able lieutenants, were building that great railway to open up that country and to take in immigrants, knowing that we had in that far west millions of acres of land uncultivated waiting for the settler. Why, Sir, some of the very people who went in there then now occupy seats on the government benches. We were told the other night by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) that the only thing that was done during the regime of the Liberal-Conservatives was to take in some Jew pedlars, or something of that kind. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that more than Jew pedlars were taken in. There is not an hon. gentleman representing a constituency in the North-west to-day who did not go in there under the regime of the Liberal-Conservatives. The hon. gentleman who addressed us a moment ago went in there in the days of the Liberal-Conservative party. The hon. member for Saskatchewan said he had been there for twenty-two years.

Mr. SCOTT. That was before the Conservatives were in power.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. gentleman himself went in there as an assistant to Nicholas Flood Davin, at Regina, and he knows it.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. gentleman was there when the Conservatives were in power and he is now representing a constituency that should be represented by the honoured dead. These hon. gentlemen talk about what they are doing now and what was done before. It is true that the Liberal-Conservative party opened up the great North-west. It is true that they built, through their statesmanship and energy, the great railway that now spans the continent from east to west. It is due to their energy that these hon. gentlemen are participating in the blessings and benefits that we have obtained from Providence through the energy of the Liberal-Conservative party. I desire again to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to the fact that if we had an agent down in Prince Edward Island, where hundreds of our young men are leaving our shores each year to take up their abodes in the United States, because we are circumscribed in our limits, great good would result. The land is all taken up and is occupied by farmers. When young men grow up they must leave the farm and take up other occupations. If the hon. minister would endeavour to assist these young men, not in the way of paying them any money or anything of that kind, but in the way of obtaining for them during the summer excursion rates over the railway in order that they might go to the North-west, it would be greatly to the advantage of Canada, because one young Canadian from the east or from any part of the country going into the North-west Territories, having a knowledge of farming, and having the experience that is acquired by a young man who lives on a farm, is worth a dozen or two of those Doukhobors that the hon. minister has been paying $20 a head for during the last few years.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has any system in his department as to the charge for living expenses, horse-hire, and expenses of that kind. Is it a general principle in his department that employees are allowed to charge up to the country the cost of accident insurance policies ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The expenses to which the hon. gentleman has been referring simply consists of travelling expenses. Of course, horse-hire is charged up when the official is travelling on public business. In case an official of the department has transportation from the railway companies, as some of them have, and travels on a pass and does not, therefore, charge any railway fare, he has no right to action in case of an accident, and the department pay for the accident insurance. He would have no right of accident against the railway company in case of accident on account of the fact that he is travelling on a pass.

Mr. INGRAM. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has a certain schedule of living expenses, and officials such as fishery inspectors used to make their charges in accordance with that schedule. They must charge so much for horse-hire and no more, and so much for meals and no more. I am bound to say, when looking over this item of horse-hire, that $25 a day for horse-hire is too much. I find a charge here for seven days' horse-hire, $75. There is no place in Canada where a man would require to pay $25 a day for horse-hire. I would not mention this gentleman's name if it had not been mentioned before, but I find that Mr. W. W. Cory charged for accident insurance $35. I beg to differ from the hon. minister in regard to that matter. If a man occupies a position under the government at a high salary—I do not care whether he has transportation from the railways or not—he has no right to expect the government to pay for his accident insurance policy. I do not think the government are justified in paying it. Twenty-five dollars a day for horse-hire is far beyond all reason.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). How many horses ?

Mr. INGRAM. I do not care if there were one or two horses. When we find that this gentleman purchases an eiderdown robe at $25, I think he is going a little too far. If the country is going to pay for everything like that I think this high toned gentleman should be contented with a little less than these articles, the expenditure on which we see detailed in the Auditor General's Report. I would advise the hon. minister to carefully peruse that report and prevent items of this kind being put into it. If the opposition were to do their duty strictly to the letter, they would carefully go through all these items and take up the time of the House in finding fault with them. Surely it is not necessary to do more than simply draw the attention of the minister to some of these items which are extravagant and unreasonable and which, I think, ought not to appear.

Mr. COCHRANE. The department's attention has been drawn to this matter by the Auditor General. This gentleman did not travel on a pass at all. He has perpetrated what I call a fraud. He did not even buy a return ticket, and the Auditor General drew the attention of the deputy minister to the fact that he had taken $40 or $50 out of the country that he was not entitled to. It is nothing short of a fraud perpetrated upon the country that this official of the government should be able to take out of the pockets of the people that sum of money ? The attention of the department has been drawn to the fact that he not only got his fare, amounting to between $300 and $400, but that he bought a ticket each way, not a return ticket. The Auditor General drew the attention of the deputy minister to the fact that he might have bought a return ticket and saved $40 or $50.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR The general principle is that where an officer has transportation we pay for his accident insurance policy. In this particular case my deputy tells me that Mr. Cory was charged an excess price for his accident insurance policy on account of having to travel to the Yukon in the discharge of his official duties. Under the conditions of the policy he would require to pay an additional amount because he went out of a certain territory.

Mr. INGRAM. There are others who have to pay that.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the explanation which is furnished to me. The officer had to hire a team and according to the scale for other things $25 a day would not be out of the way.

Mr. INGRAM. In some departments they fix a limit per day for horse-hire and it seems to work well. With respect to accident insurance there is a rumour in this city that a certain gentleman takes advantage of his position to intimidate government employees in order to get their insurance; that their insurance is dropped in other companies and this man gets the insurance by reason of his position. That is common rumour in Ottawa and if the minister will inquire from the insurance companies he will find that the statement I make is pretty nearly correct.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not very well inquire unless I have the name.

Mr. INGRAM. I will give the minister the name privately.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Very well.

Mr. BLAIN. Why was $8,000 paid to the Lake St. John Railway and Colonization Company ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This company does a considerable amount of immigration work and this annual grant has been made to them for some years past. The subject was discussed fully the other evening. They made a report showing what they have done.

Mr. BLAIN. Where can we see that report.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is not printed, but I can bring it down if the hon. gentleman desires.

Government of the North-west Territories, $3,000.

Mr. INGRAM. It is perfectly understood of course that all these items can be discussed again.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a vote of $250,000 for the North-west Territories and everything in connection with the matter may be discussed on that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote of $250,000 is an allowance to the North-west government for the year that has expired, and as I fancy there will not be much opposition to it, and as it can be discussed in the supplementary estimates I would like to get the vote passed as it is urgently needed.

Mr. MONK. It has been arranged that that item should stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not wish to disturb any arrangement.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I only express the hope that when the minister brings down his votes for the North-west Territories, in addition to the $250,000, he will see that they are given a little extra, because he must know that they require a much larger grant than they have had in the past for roads and bridges.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may say that we propose to treat them very liberally.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MONK. Can the hon. gentleman say what business will be taken up on Monday ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. After private Bills, which is the first order of business, we will take up a number of the Bills on the Order paper, and if we reach Supply, we will continue with the estimates of the Minister of the Interior. Then there are a few items remaining in the supplementary estimates affecting the various departments, and if possible we would like to pass these.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the Grank Trunk private Bill be proceeded with on Monday ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is in the hands of the hon. member in charge of it, but I should think not.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 20, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RAINY RIVER MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the day are called, I would like to bring to the attention of the government a telegram which I received late on Friday afternoon. It is as follows :

Fort Frances, Ont., July 16.

R. L. Borden,
Ottawa.

Canadian Northern has daily passenger trains east and west. Spite this, mail for Rainy River valley comes by freight and is practically suspended. People are using American mail, express boats to Rat Portage, and any available means to forward mail out, but have had only one mail in for past seven days. Business is paralyzed, and we can get no relief from Post Office Department. If this is economy, it means at a ruinous cost to a growing and ambitious district. Please help us.

W. J. KEATING, Mayor.

I know nothing of the circumstances, and the only course open to me was to bring this matter to the attention of the government at the earliest possible moment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). With reference to the subject of mail service at Fort Frances, to which the hon. leader of the opposition, has alluded, when this subject was brought to my attention two or three days ago, I applied to the comptroller of the railway mail service for an explanation. He informed me that the service between Winnipeg and Fort Frances was performed by the Canadian Northern Railway, by their regular train service, which at that time was limited to three trains per week. I think the days were Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Without the consent of the department, the railway company decided to discontinue the running of that train service as heretofore regularly to Fort Frances, but to stop at same point west, and intended, in lieu thereof, to put on an express train. The express train as I am informed was not established for a few days after Friday, the last regular day of the local to which I have referred. Accordingly there was a hiatus cused by this change in the running of the train. The moment the matter was called to my attention, instructions were given to utilize all the trains, which is now being done. Of course it is the privilege of the mayor to write as he likes to a member of the House and for an hon. member to read his telegram, but it is quite an unfair way of presenting the case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know whether my hon. friend intends to charge me with any unfairness.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend had submitted the telegram to me, I could have shown him that the reasons assigned were without foundation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When any communication of this kind comes to me, as a member of the House of Commons, I shall consider myself quite at liberty, if it relates to a public matter, to bring it to the attention of the government and obtain from the leader of the government or the head of the department concerned, such explanation as he may think necessary to give.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to bring to the attention of the government the fact that the documents which have been printed, purporting to be a return to an address of the House of Commons dated the 11th May, 1902, for copies of all Orders in Council and other documents having reference to the granting of provincial autonomy to the North-west Territories, are extremely defective. I had procured a number of prints of these documents from Regina, and, doing the work of a clerk this morning, I compared them with the return which has been brought down, and I found that a very great number of the documents have not been brought down, or at least have not been printed. In order to show my right hon. friend how very incomplete is the return as printed, I will read a list of the documents which have not been included in it, some of which are of no great importance, but others of which are of the greatest possible importance for the purpose of an intelligent discussion of this question. I may say that one or two of the documents which I have included in the list, while not directly referring to the question of provincial autonomy, are nevertheless in answer to correspondence which does touch that question as well as the question of better financial terms; and these, I think, ought to be brought down, because they are part of the consecutive correspondence dealing with these matters. The letters which have been omitted, which I had to take from a number of documents and therefore have not them arranged in chronological order, are as follows: January 31, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; February 11, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; February 9, 1903, Mr. McGee to Mr. Haultain; February 16, 1903, Mr. Keys to Mr. Haultain; March 19, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; March 21, 1903, Mr. Sifton to Mr. Haultain; April 15, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; December 17, 1902, Mr. A. L. Sifton to Mr. Clifford Sifton; February 5, 1903, Mr. Sifton to Mr. Haultain; February 11, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; February 21, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; April 16, 1903, Mr. Fielding to Mr. Haultain; April 17, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Fielding; April 20, 1903, Mr. Fielding to Mr. Haultain; April 20, 1903, Sir Wilfrid Laurier to Mr. Haultain; April 20, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Fielding; April 24, 1903, Lieut.-Gov. Forget of the North-west Territories to the Secretary of State, inclosing an address; June 2, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Sir Wilfrid Laurier; June 6, 1903, Mr. Fielding to Mr. Haultain; June 15, 1903, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Fielding; July 25, 1903, Mr. Pelletier, acting Under Secretary of State to Lieut.-Gov. Forget; January 30, 1901, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; March 21, 1901, Mr. Sifton to Mr. Haultain; March 30, 1901, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; April 5, 1901, Mr. Sifton to Mr. Haultain; June 4, 1901, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; June 5, 1901, Mr. Sifton to Mr. Haultain; August, 11, 1901, Mr. A. L. Sifton to Mr. Clifford Sifton; August 14, 1901, Mr. Clifford Sifton to Mr. A. L. Sifton; January 11, 1902, A. L. Sifton to Sir Wilfrid Laurier; January 22, 1902, Sir Wilfrid Laurier to Mr. A. L. Sifton; March 15, 1902, Mr. Haultain to Sir Wilfrid Laurier; March 18, 1902, Sir Wilfrid Laurier to Mr. Haultain; March 27, 1902, Mr. Sifton to Mr. Haultain; April 2, 1902, Mr. Haultain to Mr. Sifton; April 29, 1903, Mr. Pelletier, acting Under Secretary of State, to Lieut.-Gov. Forget. I thought it would be desirable to read this long list in order to indicate to my right hon. friend how very defective is the return which has been brought down and printed. I recollect that at the time the papers were first brought down, the right hon. gentleman mentioned to the House that there would be some other papers. Possibly these have not yet been prepared; but might I be permitted to suggest that, in bringing down correspondence of this kind, it would greatly diminish the labour of members who desire to deal with important subjects of this character, if the documents could be printed in chronological order, beginning with the documents, of an earlier date. That has not been done in this case, and if we have another return printed, with the documents that I have mentioned, I am afraid that the matter will be in rather a confused condition. Possibly it would be advisable to have these documents arranged in chronological order, if it would not take too long, and printed, so as to have them in an intelligible form before the House. The correspondence is quite voluminous, and it will be difficult to gather its bearings unless we have it in that form.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I think that some part of the difficulty arises from the fact that my hon. friend's remarks dealt with two subjects, which probably the officials who prepared the return did not associate together, although they do in some respects touch each other. My hon. friend's remarks had relation to the question of provincial autonomy, and he has mentioned some correspondence which took place between Mr. Haultain and myself which has not been brought down. I had no correspondence whatever with Mr. Haultain on the question of provincial autonomy. I did have correspondence with him with respect to the grants to the North-west Territories, and I quite admit that the two questions touch each other, though they are distinct from each other, and I think that may be the explanation of the absence of these documents.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That explains two or three of these documents, but not all. Two or three communications, principally telegrams, passed between Mr. Haultain and the Minister of Finance. I referred to those in mentioning that some of the documents contained no reference to provincial autonomy. But there are a great many other documents not brought down which refer to provincial autonomy, although they may refer principally to better terms. Some of those omitted relate entirely to the question of provincial autonomy.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). When I brought down this return I stated that something more would have to come. I note that some correspondence subsequent to the date of my hon. friend's motion is not included, but I will have this brought down. Would my hon. friend be kind enough to let me have the list he has just read ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am afraid that it is not legible to any one but myself, but I will have a copy made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be in 'Hansard,' and can be got there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to bring to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior the fact that he promised to bring down a return which had been moved for by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche). I do not know whether it has been brought down or not, but I have not seen it. When we were proceeding with the estimates a few days ago, the hon. gentleman said that it would be brought down the next day or the day following. He said also that he would bring down certain information with regard to the lands still obtainable in the organized territories for homestead entries.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I gave instructions to have the return referred to by the hon. gentleman brought down and expected to have it this morning. It is, however, being attended to. As to the lands, I gave a statement, but my hon. friend was not here at the time. You will find it in 'Hansard.'

Mr. LANCASTER. I desire to call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Marine to a return ordered the 1st of June for correspondence with regard to fishing rights in James Bay. When may we expect this return ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It must be in the hands of the Secretary of State, because I sent him the papers a long time ago.

THE COLUMBIA RIVER IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

On the Order for :

The second reading of the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 150, to incorporate the Columbia River Improvement Company, Limited.

Mr. GALLIHER moved that the said amendment be amended by striking out the words 'section seven' in the second amendment and inserting instead thereof 'sections seven and eight.' He said : It is inexpedient to include section seven unless section eight is also included, as section eight covers waters not mentioned in section seven. The Senate, in section fourteen, proposed the following amendment : After the word 'operate,' in the first line, they wish to insert 'on the waters mentioned in section 7 hereof.' That would make the section read : 'The company may acquire and operate, on the waters mentioned in section 7 hereof, the works of any company having powers wholly or in part similar to the powers of the company.' Now, that would only give this company the privilege of acquiring the works of other companies at a point on the shores of Upper Arrow lake, or at a point on Upper Arrow lake where the Columbia river enters it, but would not give the powers which they require of acquiring works of other companies that might construct works upon the Columbia river above Upper Arrow lake or upon navigable tributaries of the Columbia river. Evidently the Senate did not notice that there were different points asked for as covered in section 7 and section 8. By inserting the words 'sections 7 and 8' we cover the waters mentioned in these sections, and the company would acquire what they really ask for and what is necessary in their interest.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand, then, that in this section, as it was at first the provision was general, but the Senate has limited it to the point referred to in section 7. Section 8 is a companion section to section 7, and, if it is restricted, you should refer to both these sections.

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, that is it.

Amendment, as amended, agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

CENSUS SCHEDULES, 1891, HALTON, CARDWELL AND PEEL.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

How many schedules were filled in, either in the counties of Halton, Cardwell and Peel in whole or in part, by the census enumerators for 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). The number of schedules filled in, either in whole or in part by the census enumerators for the counties of Halton, Cardwell and Peel in 1891 were as follows: County of Halton, 1,724; county of Cardwell, 1,221; county of Peel, 1,215.

MR. L. J. LATOUR—LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

Is Mr. L. J. Latour still under leave of absence from his position of postmaster of the Department of Public Works? How long has he been under such leave of absence? What amount has been paid to his son?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland):

1. Yes.
2. Since 1st March, 1903.
3. $366 up to 1st July.

MR. P. V. SAVARD, EX-M.P.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. Is Mr. P. V. Savard, ex-M.P., for Chicoutimi, in the employ of the government?
2. If so, what is the nature of his employment?
3. What salary is he receiving?
4. Has he made any report of his work?
5. And if so, what is the nature of that report?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine):

1. Yes.
2. He is engaged by the Department of Marine and Fisheries to inquire into certain legal points connected with conflicting claims of the federal and provincial governments and the Labrador Company to the right of fishery within the limits of that portion of the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, known as the Mingan Seigniory.
3. No regular salary. He receives five dollars per day while engaged in the work.
4. He has made the interim report; but a full report is awaited by the department.
5. Answered by above.

ALNWICK BAND OF MISSISSAGA INDIANS—CLAIM OF, FOR COMPENSATION.

Mr. McCOLL—by Mr. Calvert—asked:

Is it the intention of the government to take up and deal with the claim of the Alnwick Band of Mississaga Indians for compensation for the unextinguished Indian title to the territory claimed by them, lying south of Lake Nipissing, east of the Bobcaygeon road, and west of the Ottawa river, as having been formerly the hunting grounds of the Mississaga Indians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The claim is under consideration, but no conclusion has been arrived at.

WINTER NAVIGATION OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAITS.

Mr. HACKETT asked:

1. Has the government authorized the following telegram, published in the Charlottetown 'Patriot' of the 14th instant?

Ottawa, July 14th.—The Liberal members and senators have been assured by Minister Préfontaine that it is intended to build a steamer, and endeavour to have the construction sufficiently powerful to cross the straits in winter, in the government service, also in summer, costing two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

2. If so, will the construction of said steamer be commenced forthwith?
3. When will she be placed on the route, and between what points on the mainland and Prince Edward Island will the service be maintained?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine):

1. No.
2. No.

DISMISSAL OF ISRAEL NOBLES, HATFIELD'S POINT, N.B.?

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

Has Israel Nobles, lighthouse keeper at Hatfield's Point, King's county, N.B., been dismissed from his position? If so, on whose recommendation, and what charges, if any, were preferred against him?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine):

1. Yes.
2. On the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in the public interest.

DISMISSAL OF CAPTAIN BISHOP, ALBERT, N.B.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

Has Captain Bishop been dismissed from his post as harbour master of Albert, in Albert county, N.B.? If so, when, and on whose recommendation, and for what cause? When was Captain Bishop appointed to said office?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine):

1. Yes.
2. On the 9th June, 1903, on the recommendation of the minister, and in the public interest.
3. On the 22nd June, 1897.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 224) to amend the Fisheries Act, was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

The section substituted for section 6 of the Fisheries Act, chapter 95 of the revised statutes, by section 1 of chapter 51 of the statutes of 1894, is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:—

6. Every one who hunts or kills fish or marine animals of any kind, other than seals, porpoises, whales and walruses, by means of rockets, explosive materials, or explosive projectiles or shells, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding three hundred dollars and costs, and, in default of payment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What change is effected in the law by this section?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine). At the present time there is no power in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to allow any of the animals here designated to be killed with explosives. Under this amendment, permission may be given to hunt and kill seals, porpoises, whales and walruses with explosives, explosive projectiles and so on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the reason of making that change ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Requests have been received that licenses be issued in certain parts of our waters to establish whaling stations; to be conducted on modern lines, that is to say, as they are conducted in other countries, with the use of explosives. The department thought the Canadian fishermen should be placed in the same position as the fishermen of other countries. So on the recommendation of the commissioner of fisheries it has been decided to ask for the necessary power to amend the law to that effect.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it the usual custom of fishermen in other countries to use explosives ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In other countries it is, but in this country, so far, it has not been allowed.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). This industry is largely engaged in Newfoundland. They use this method of throwing the harpoons and killing the whales.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is the result of the investigation which has been held in British Columbia, and it has been recommended that we should allow purse seines to be used under special license in the waters of the Pacific coast. The question of traps has been left in abeyance in the meantime, so no mention is made in the Bill of traps. All we require at the present time is an amendment which will enable the department to allow special licenses to issue in British Columbia waters for the use of purse seines, in accordance with the almost unanimous opinion of those engaged in that industry.

Mr. KAULBACH. If persons are to be prohibited from this method of fishing in the Atlantic waters, why are they to be allowed in the Pacific waters ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is thought proper to allow it in British Columbia waters because the Americans are using the same mode of fishing. It has been established by those who have studied the question that it is the best mode of catching fish in these waters, and it is the most profitable way of carrying on that industry alongside of our American cousins, who are practising it.

Mr. KAULBACH. When the same methods were employed in the Atlantic, they were found an injury to the fish, and when our government approached the United States government asking them to abolish that method they consented to do so. I think the same thing should be asked for in the Pacific waters, and I think it would be granted by the American government ; otherwise, in the course of a little while the fish will become extinct.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For the information of the hon. member I may state that though this question is new to me, it is not new to the department, where it has been studied for the last three years. Voluminous correspondence has been had with the American authorities in the matter, and they have refused point blank to concede anything in the line of abolishing purse seines. They have gone further and they have established traps. At the same time they are taking so many salmon with these traps that it has become a very serious question in British Columbia whether within a year or two we should not also allow traps as the Americans are using them. But some of the parties interested in the fishing industry were not ready to go so far as to use traps, and they unanimously recommended that purse seines should be allowed to be used. At present the industry is threatened with great injury, and is liable to be seriously diminished if the Department of Fisheries is not allowed to license purse seines.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) At present American seiners are frequenting the coast of Nova Scotia in the spring of the year with their purse seines, and take every opportunity of catching mackerel outside the three-mile limit, and inside the three-mile limit, unless our own steamers are there to prevent them. Now, it would be considered something of a hardship if our own fishermen within the three-mile limit were not able to use the same method of catching mackerel as the Americans enjoy outside the three-mile limit. If we could only get the American government to abolish purse seines altogether, then it would be a mutual advantage to prevent entirely that method of catching mackerel. But at present the American fishermen will enjoy a privilege on our own coast that, by this Bill, will be denied to our own fishermen. I know of several merchants in Halifax who are in the possession of very expensive purse seines at present.

Mr. KAULBACH. I was not aware that any privilege was allowed Americans on the shores of Nova Scotia inside the three-mile limit.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). No.

Mr. KAULBACH. I quite understand what the hon. member said, but I was not aware that they were permitted outside the three-mile limit, though it may be that they may have the seines on board clandestinely, and may catch mackerel in that way. But if such is the case, I think it would be advisable for the government to communicate with the American government and ask them to abolish trap seines entirely, and to see that their fleet are not permitted to employ that method of fishing. I will go further and say that if the Americans persist in using purse seines in the waters of the Atlantic, then we should match them with a similar method. We did catch large quantities at one time with purse seines, but we found that they destroyed the fish and we gave it up entirely. As I said before, the Americans consented to do the same.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have not done so, I am informed.

Mr. KAULBACH. Our government should approach the American government again and ask them to abolish that method of fishing.

The MINISTER OF MARINE FISHERIES. Before issuing these licenses I may take the precaution of corresponding with the American authorities in the matter, and informing them that we have now the power to license this method of fishing and intend to do so unless they will stop it on their side; if they do not, then we will proceed under this law.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am only referring to purse seines.

Mr. CLARKE. Under what conditions do you propose to authorize the use of purse seines in British Columbia waters?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be the ordinary license surrounded with certain conditions that the department may deem fit to impose.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the pre-requisites that the department demand from any person applying for a license ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Special regulations are made from time to time regarding licenses, according as circumstances may require. They are altered from time to time on the recommendation of the minister to the Governor in Council.

Mr. CLARKE. Can you give us any information as to the regulations in force now ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are none at present as regards purse seines, because we have not licensed any, but before issuing a license we will prepare certain regulations, which will have to be approved by the Governor General in Council and published.

Mr. CLARKE. And all who comply with the regulations will be authorized to use purse seines ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. I think before the minister should take upon himself to interdict entirely the use of purse seines in our waters, on the erroneous grounds, as I think, that they are seriously diminishing the mackerel, it would be well for the department to make an examination into the whole matter. I wish to tell the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if he will turn to the report made to the London Fisheries Commission of 1883, by Prof Huxley, Sir John Lubbock, and another gentleman whose name I forget, he will learn that they lay it down that man is powerless practically to diminish deep sea fish by any means he may use to exterminate them. These professors came to this conclusion after a most complete examination of the conditions surrounding the fisheries of the North Sea and the German Ocean for from 50 to 200 years. It was pointed out that the mackerel will leave our coasts under certain conditions because the food they feed upon disappears, that the food disappears because certain vegetation disappears, and that the vegetation disappears because certain currents are changed. If that is so, I think it is scarcely worth while for the government to listen to folk lore in reference to this matter. It would be far better to examine into the matter scientifically and arrive at a conclusion that will have a solid basis before any action is taken. I have observed the fisheries on the Atlantic coast for some years. I know that in 1889 more mackerel re-appeared on the Nova Scotian coast than probably have ever been caught by mankind in the history of the world. The same thing occurred last year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They reappeared in considerable numbers since then, did they not—in 1899, or thereabouts ?

Mr. KENDALL. I do not know about 1899, but they came in last year.

Mr. KAULBACH. They reappeared last year in larger numbers than usual. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) says that they appear every year, but not in such large numbers as they did last year. The main object of the prevention of the use of purse seines in Atlantic waters was that the Americans would come, together with some of our own vessels, and capture fish outside of the three-mile limit, thus preventing those who fish in competition with them from the shore, from getting a catch at all, because, the moment purse seines are used outside of the three-mile limit, in deep water the fish will disappear altogether. They are driven away from the shore and they will not reappear again during the season.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I decidedly object to allowing the Americans a privilege on our coast that cannot be enjoyed by our own fishermen. The Americans will come, as they did this spring, and take home large cargoes of mackerel caught off the coast of Nova Scotia in their purse seines. They will always take advantage of the opportunity of coming within the three-mile limit whenever there is not one of our own cruisers on the coast to prevent them. There is no doubt that they adopt that method of poaching whenever they get the opportunity. Our own people have purse seines and they sometimes prosecute the mackerel fishery in that way. I do not think that there is any chance of any correspondence that may take place with the American government being effective as to the prohibition of the use of purse seines. They have too much interest and too much money invested in vessels and seines employed in the catching of fish to listen to anything that can be said by our government against their present method of catching mackerel. I think it is quite a hardship just now that we should prevent our own fishermen from adopting the same method that the Americans enjoy at the present time, because, I know that there are firms in Halifax which have purse seines and vessels to prosecute the fishery and it would be quite a hardship to adopt any law by which we should prevent them from enjoying the privilege which hitherto they have enjoyed.

Mr. MORRISON. Would the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) kindly repeat the last question which he put to the hon. minister? I confess I did not quite grasp the point of it nor yet the answer of the hon. minister.

Mr. CLARKE. I wanted to learn from the hon. minister what would be the conditions under which licenses would be issued, and I understood from the hon. minister's reply that they would be issued under certain regulations prepared by the department here, and that all who applied under these regulations would without discrimination have licenses issued to them, that there would be no discrimination in the issue of licenses to all who complied with the regulations of the department. Am I correct in so understanding the hon. minister?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They would have to conform with the regulations. The regulations will probably determine how many licenses will be issued for a certain space. We cannot pile them one upon another. It depends necessarily on what will be the recommendation of those who know exactly how this law will work out. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) does not expect the department to grant licenses at random. The regulations would have to provide for the territory where the applicants are allowed to fish. This is a special way of fishing and these purse seines are very large. The regulations would have to provide that so many purse seines may be used within a certain space.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the department propose to issue these purse seine licenses to a limited number of people and to discriminate against other people who may make application for them? Do I understand that the hon. minister will determine from amongst the number of applicants for permission to use purse seines who shall be permitted to use them and who shall not be permitted to use them?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. CLARKE. That is what the hon. minister has been saying all the time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then, I was misunderstood. I am not posted enough on the question to tell the committee what the regulations will be, but the regulations will be decided by the officers having regard to the practice in other countries where purse seines are authorized, and I suppose the regulations would provide for the use of so many purse seines within, say, a distance of fifty miles, because, it is impossible to have more than that number and, of course, those who apply first and who can fulfil the conditions will get the preference. I do not see how we could do otherwise. I suppose that one of the regulations which has been enforced by the department for a couple of years will be continued and that is the regulation providing that there shall be no speculation in licenses. Licenses cannot be transferred without the authority of the department. Otherwise, there might be cases where ten or twenty persons might club together, get the licenses for a certain space and sell them. It is not the intention to permit such speculation.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know enough about the methods of fishing on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts to be able to form an opinion of much value, but it strikes me that if the hon. minister is authorized to issue these purse seine licenses to certain persons and to say who shall be permitted to use these purse seines that this proposition may be liable to grave abuse. If there are twenty persons engaged in fishing in a certain district and the hon. minister says that the territory is not wide enough to permit more than ten to prosecute the fishery, how will he discriminate as between those who are to be allowed to fish with purse seines and those who are not allowed to fish with purse seines ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same way as we determine how many lobster licenses shall be granted in a certain district.

Mr. CLARKE. Who does determine who gets them ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The officer in charge. It has been the custom to give the preference to the one who used to own the license. Sometimes it has been decided to increase the number and sometimes to decrease it, but the people are notified and nobody is taken by surprise.

Mr. CLARKE. Some body is taken by surprise if twenty apply and only ten are granted licenses.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That, of course, is unavoidable.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am inclined to think that the minister has taken quite a burden upon his shoulders, and he will have difficulty in discriminating as to who are to receive licenses and who are not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is the same in all other waters.

Mr. KAULBACH. With regard to our own waters I want to be understood as saying that if the Americans are allowed to operate with purse seines in the catch of mackerel or other fish, then our fishermen should be allowed to do likewise. Of course, if we could restrict the Americans from purse seining, I would wish to have some such arrangement made as was formerly in effect. My hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross) says that they do catch fish with purse seines inside the three-mile limit, which means that they poach. If that is the case, it is all the greater reason for the government to have more patrol vessels on the coast to prevent such poaching. It is a serious matter when the shore fishermen find Americans coming down with fifty and sixty in a fleet and depleting the waters of fish, while our Canadians inshore are unable in their small boats to capture any. Therefore, I would say that some arrangement should be made by which we could place ourselves in an equal position with the Americans as regards the capture of fish.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). Is there anything in this Bill which prevents Canadian fishermen from fishing with purse seines outside the three-mile limit.

Mr. CLARKE.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nothing whatever.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). Then, if that be the case, American fishermen have no privileges that Canadian fishermen do not enjoy. The hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) appears to be under the impression that American fishermen have some privileges which our own fishermen have not.

Mr. KAULBACH. Not at all. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. We have no jurisdiction outside of the three mile limit.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). We have the same rights that other fishermen have.

Mr. KAULBACH. We cannot control the Americans outside of that three mile limit, but what I complain of is that the Americans take the right to themselves inside the three mile limit.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). That is poaching, and I would be glad to see the fishery protection service made as efficient as possible so as to stop that. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) referred to reports made by certain professors to the effect that no device yet known to man could diminish the number and quantity of fish in the waters. Well, I hardly think that is correct even though celebrated professors are responsible for the statement. Fact is more important than theory, and the fact is that since purse seining was introduced the mackerel on our Atlantic coast in Canadian waters have been very greatly reduced and our fishermen do not now make the profits they formerly made. While fishing was done by hand-line, and before the days of purse seining, the industry was a very certain one. The fishermen fitted out their ships and boats and they were almost certain to return with a profitable fare, but since purse seining has been introduced it has become a most precarious business, and the shore fishermen at least are most frequently doomed to failure. If any international arrangement could be made by which purse seining would be abolished, it would, in my opinion, be the very best thing that could be done. Of course, we cannot prevent the Americans from fishing outside of the three mile limit, and failing an international agreement, the only thing we Canadians can do is to protect the inshore fisheries in the best possible way. Purse seining is most destructive to fish life. The seine incloses a large quantity of small mackerel and other small fish which are thrown overboard to foul the bottom and frighten the fish off the coast. The mackerel in some way are supposed to know when they are chased by seiners, and it is the opinion of men of long experience in the business that they abandon the coast when they are so pursued. As I have said, the best thing would be an international arrangement to abolish purse seining, but failing that the next best thing is for us to protect our own fishermen as best we can within the three mile limit.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this Bill intended to apply principally to British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the minister taken into consideration that the Americans are both using purse seining and trap nets along the great lakes and on the international rivers. It appears to me that the object of this Bill is rather to imitate the bad example of the Americans than to provide a solution for the difficulty. The trouble with regard to the great lakes and rivers that divide Canada from the United States is just as great as that which the minister endeavours to provide for in this Bill f r British Columbia. Do I understand that the minister will issue licenses under certain regulations for purse and trap net fishing on the great lakes, or whether the intention is to confine the provisions of this Bill entirely to British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This Bill applies only to the British Columbia waters. It is the result of several years of special study that has been made of the question out there, and the people have come to a unanimous conclusion upon it. I do not think that the conditions are the same on the great lakes.

Mr. CLANCY. The Americans are using purse seines and trap nets on the great lakes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Trap nets are allowed.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the minister to say that his department issues regulations governing the number of licenses on the great lakes ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have not done so as yet, but it might be opportune to do so.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the Ontario government have the right to control the fisheries in the inland waters. That being true, they would have to say how many licenses shall be issued.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Dominion government controls the regulations, and the licenses are issued by the Ontario government.

Mr. INGRAM : Therefore, this government have no control over the number of licenses that are issued ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They might do so by regulations. They have not done so yet.

Mr. MORRISON. I think there is some misapprehension between the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) and the minister in regard to the regulation pertaining to provincial licenses for purse seines, as proposed to be issued. I do not understand the minister to say that so many of these licenses shall be issued for certain sections, say within twenty miles or within fifty miles.

Mr. CLARKE. That is what the minister said.

Mr. MORRISON. I think the minister must have misunderstood the hon. gentleman. If he did say that, I think he must have had in his mind the recommendations of the superintendent of fisheries in the province of British Columbia, Mr. Babcock, who, I believe, has recommended to the Department of Marine and Fisheries here that if the government ever issued purse seine licenses, they should be confined to certain designated districts. Speaking for myself, and I represent that part of the province of British Columbia which is perhaps most interested in the fisheries there—I think that there are the strongest and most cogent reasons why that should not be done, but that, if these licenses are issued, say in New Westminster, the licensees should be permitted to go and fish in the waters of the Skeena river or in any other waters of British Columbia. Two years ago a commission was appointed, of which I was a member, to look into this matter and to make recommendations to the government, and one of its recommendations was that these purse seine licenses be issued. It deprecated the issue of licenses for traps. I believe that the government decided not to issue licenses for traps, notwithstanding the rumours to the contrary, but that they decided to issue purse seine licenses, and with no restriction as to locality.

Mr. CLARKE. Are we to understand, then, that all who comply with the regulations which may, from time to time, be adopted and published by the department may procure these purse seine licenses ?

Mr. MORRISON. That is certainly what I strongly advocate, and what I think, from my rather limited knowledge of these matters, though I have made some study of them, is the best policy to adopt ; though there will have to be regulations regulating those who get the licenses. There may be some to whom they would be worthless. Under a salmon license, for instance, which any man can get on paying $10, there are certain regulations which make it unlawful for one man to fish within a certain distance of another. That would limit the number of licenses issued for certain waters. But there would be no discrimination ; each one would have to take his chance. I think complications would be avoided if purse seine licenses were issued without restriction as to the locality where the licensees might fish.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the mode of fishing with these purse seines? Is it done from a vessel?

Mr. MORRISON. Not necessarily from the vessel; they may be attached to the tug boat. They are not attached to the shore, and they are not permitted in what are known as closed waters—the estuaries of rivers, bays, runs, passes, and inlets of that kind. I understand that it is the intention, as it is the proper thing, to prohibit fishing in these narrow or closed waters. This step on the part of the government seems to be due to the methods adopted by the Americans, who fish south of the international line without any restriction whatever, every hour of the day, and every day of the week, and by every method they can invent, while immediately across the international boundary line the Dominion government imposes certain restrictions upon the licensees, such as forty-eight hours of close season.

Mr. CLARKE. As a result, the Canadian fishermen get the worst of it, do they not?

Mr. MORRISON. I think that complaint is not well founded. If Canadians were permitted to fish with traps in the outside waters where the salmon are, it is supposed that they would break up this trap fishing by the Americans; but that is only a conjecture. An ordinary fisherman could not take advantage of a trap net; it is too cumbersome and involves too large an expenditure. But the purse seine is comparatively inexpensive, and two or three or half a dozen fishermen could club together and go out and invade the territory of these Americans who are fishing by the trap methods, and relieve the difficulty in that respect. The people on the coast of British Columbia think that something should be done other than the gill-net method of fishing by the Canadians; but they are not prepared to go to the extent of asking to have trap nets; and this provision is a kind of compromise which may be very effective, and may conduce to the development of the fishing industry in British Columbia.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that the regulations of the department will not discriminate against anybody, but that all who comply with them will have licenses issued to them?

Mr. MORRISON. That is what we strongly impressed on the minister, so that I suspect that the minister must have misunderstood the hon. member when he asked that question, and had in mind the strong recommendation made by the superintendent of fisheries in British Columbia. Although he is a very capable man, his experience has been on the south side of the line, and he is very anxious to see traps introduced, which I think would be a most improper and indefensible policy for the government to adopt. I rather think the minister must have had that in his mind.

Mr. FRASER. I think there will probably be very little difficulty, because these purse seines will not be used from the land at all. They are different from the trap-net, which is attached to the land. Consequently the difficulty that occurs in Nova Scotia from using these nets will not occur. The department has laid down the rule that once a fisherman gets a license, it is continued to him year after year until he gives it up. There was something said of purse seining outside the three-mile limit. I agree that if it were possible to make an arrangement with our neighbours to the south not to use any purse seines outside the three-mile limit, that would be a good thing for both parties. The best fishermen in my county are of the opinion that if we could combine with the Americans to stop that kind of fishing outside of the three-mile limit, it would be better in the interest of the fishermen both inside and outside of this limit. It would prevent the migration of the fish now caused by their not coming to the shore, and consequently prevent any such poaching as often goes on at present. Then there would be a double force to prevent the American from coming within the three-mile limit, namely, the laws of both Canada and their own country. Although I cannot pretend to be an expert, I have made such study of this question as I could, representing, as I do, a constituency which is largely interested in the business, and my firm conviction is that it would be a good thing for both nations if both would cease using these appliances outside of the three mile limit.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). If there could be an international treaty for the prevention of purse seining that would be very desirable, but I do not anticipate that we will ever get the Americans to agree to anything of the kind, because they have too much money invested in that method of fishing. Some American fishermen have been seized by our own cruisers and their vessels confiscated for fishing within the three-mile limit. There have been no encroachments, as far as I know, this year, but the American fishermen have been very successful in the use of purse seines outside of the three-mile limit on the coast of Cape Breton during the spring mackerel season. That has not, however, prevented the fish this year from coming closer to the shore, and more have been taken by our own fishermen than during the last ten years. In the county of Richmond, the fishermen used up all their packages for mackerel and were compelled to salt the fish, in some instances, in their boats, so abundant was the catch of spring mackerel.

Mr. KAULBACH. When was that?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). This spring. I am only addressing the House to endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from Cape Breton. To say that the mackerel are going to be depleted by any method we can use to catch them is absurd. The quantity we take in fishing on the coast of Nova Scotia or Scotland is only a drop in the bucket, considering the quantity to be found in these waters year after year. I read an article recently on herring fishing on the coast of Scotland, in which this statement was made, that there are more herring destroyed and eaten by the gannets and other sea birds on the coast of Scotland during the year than are taken by the fishermen, and it is well known that the herring fishing on the coast of Scotland is the largest in the world. The fish follow the bait, and if they do not frequent our shores as usual from year to year, it is because they have not the bait there which they generally follow. The deep cod-fishing on the banks of Newfoundland and St. Pierre and all along there is increasing in spite of the catch from year to year, and in spite of the length of time these fisheries have been exploited. First the Portuguse, then the Spaniards, then the Frenchmen, and lastly our own people have prosecuted that industry, and whenever our fishermen are successful in getting the proper bait the fish is as abundant as ever. To say that we are going to destroy our fisheries by the quantity we are going to catch is an old woman's story.

Mr. WADE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he would accept an amendment to make the meaning more clear of subsection 8, of section 8. The subsection reads 'No one shall drift for salmon except in British Columbia' and the amendment I would suggest is to strike out the words 'drift for salmon' and insert instead 'catch salmon with drift-net.' The reason is that parties say that they are not drifting for salmon but for other fish, and if they catch salmon they cannot help it. They thus seek to evade the law although their object is to catch salmon. While on my feet, I would also like to draw attention to subsection 7 of section 14. 'No one shall use drag-net, bag-net, trap-net, pound-net or fish-weir of any kind, without a special license, for the capture of deep sea fish, other than salmon.' I want to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the expression 'trap-net' which has created great trouble in Nova Scotia. In some parts of the province, on the south, the fisheries officers are exacting a license fee for a certain net, which they claim to be a trap-net, but in other parts they are not because they say it is not a trap-net. The whole point of contention seems to be that one set of officers say that a net, in order to be a trap-net, must have a net floor, and that that constitutes the distinction between a trap-net and another kind of net, whereas others contend that any net which operates as a trap to catch fish is a trap-net. It is important that an interpretation should be placed on the term 'trap-net.'

The fishermen on the shore in some localities, in days gone by, fished with a seine which they shot out from the shore around the school of mackerel. But, in later years, they put out a seine from the shore, and construct at the end of it what they call a bowl, which is in the shape of an arrowhead, or circular, with a leader from the mouth of said bowl. The mackerel coming down the shore strike the leaders and are led into the bowl where they are easily inclosed. Nets of that description, I believe, are without a floor in most localities. What was originally meant to come within the designation of a trap net within the Act was constructed on the principle of setting out stakes planted firmly on the bottom and nets strung along the stakes, and then a floor put in, so that there was no way the fish could get out at all. But it is unfortunate that the law as it stands at the present moment is in such a form that one judge may decide that a certain net is a trap-net and another may decide that it is not a trap-net. I think it would be well to have an interpretation. But for the present I would ask the minister to accept the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. MORRISON. The hon. member's (Mr. Wade) amendment may involve a difficulty of interpretation. For instance, on the Fraser river——

Mr. WADE. It does not apply to that.

Mr. MORRISON. But it might apply to waters where the circumstances are similar. Obviously you could not have a drift-net except in a current. All these nets are regulated as to mesh, and there is no difference between a drift-net and another net except in the use of it. It is a drift-net because it is thrown into running water and it drifts. They may not tie it to the shore. Or it might be permanent and tied to the shore.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). That would be a drift-net.

Mr. MORRISON. I am not sure.

Mr. WADE. A drift-net is not a net attached to the shore or to a buoy.

Mr. MORRISON. But the name applies to the method of fishing rather than to the net. You have a drift-net by virtue of the fact that you fish in running water, and that distinguishes that method of fishing from the permanent method of fishing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the minister whether or not there has been a report of the committee with regard to certain matters mentioned in this Bill ? I think the hon. minister was good enough to say, when the Bill was introduced, that he would lay a copy of the report upon the Table, so that we might consider it when we came to discuss the Bill in committee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said I would give the substance of what the report purports to be. I do not know why it has not been laid on the Table. But the result of the investigation was, purely and simply to recommend what is in the Bill as respects purse seines.

Mr. WADE. To meet the suggestion of my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Matheson) I would change the form of my amendment to read 'no person shall drift for or catch salmon with a drift-net.' This will allow for the exception of British Columbia.

Mr. MATHESON. I think it is possible to make too many laws. I have been connected with the fisheries for the last forty years, from a time when the government did not interfere with the fishing at all, except in the rivers. The catch of mackerel during the present season is as big as it was forty years ago. It is well enough to make laws to regulate the fisheries in rivers and inland waters, but, as to the fishing in the Atlantic, you may interfere with the subject, but you cannot interfere with the fish—not a bit. Providence furnishes too many fish for your little attempts to interfere with them. There is such a thing as governing people too much. To undertake to make regulations for the fishing in the Atlantic is entirely unnecessary. We might be better employed. And I may say that it does not seem to be thoroughly understood what a drift-net is. It ought to be considered the same here as in the old country. A fisherman goes out in his boat in the evening, ties a net to his boat and drifts all night, returning with his catch in the morning. That is not surrounding the fish, but simply giving the fish a chance to get into the net.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We seem to be dealing with two things at the same time. I wish to confine myself to section 3, of the Bill. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) has apparently taken a different view of conditions that should be imposed from that which the Minister of Marine takes. The minister seems to be under the impression that there is to be a territorial limit to these purse seines. From what I have been able to gather and from what I previously knew as to the nature of the purse seines, I do not see how that is possible. The minister likens it to a license for a lobster factory. But the license for a purse seine is different ; it is a license to take the purse seine and go out on the river or the ocean at the mouth of a river and use the purse seine to catch fish. If I am not right in my understanding, perhaps my hon. friend will say so.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, with a variation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, that is the way they are used in the Atlantic, they put them on board their vessels and take them out. If that is the case, how are you to regulate territorial limits where these purse seines are used on the Pacific coasts ? I would think with the hon. member for New Westminister (Mr. Morrison) that you should give the license to any person who applies, subject perhaps to certain conditions in the way of user. For example, if some one is using a purse seine at the mouth of the Fraser river, another man must not run his purse seines across those of the first man, or do anything that would prevent a legitimate use of them by the man who was first occupying that position. No man should take up a territorial limit and be able to say, that belongs to me, to the exclusion of every one else. I do not see that the question of territory can have anything to do with it. I gathered from the minister that there would be some question of territorial limit with regard to the user.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There were recommendations to that effect, but we have come to no decision.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as I am concerned, I would be inclined to protest against any regulation of that kind. You may make a regulation as to the way in which a man should use his purse seines on the river, at the same time preventing him from doing detriment to any one else.

Mr. MORRISON. He would use it in the open water, not at the mouth of the river.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The mouth of the river is twelve or fifteen miles wide, is it not ?

Mr. MORRISON. That would scarcely be called a river, but the point is to prevent them going into the estuaries or closed waters of any kind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is more familiar with the circumstances than I am. But subject to that, I would repeat the view I have expressed, and what the member for New Westminster has said about it would emphasize my view, that you cannot have any question of territorial limit. The only regulations of any use would be those which prevented one man from interfering with the use of purse seines by another man. If the minister would give us a little more definite idea of what conditions he intends to impose, it would enable us to discuss the matter more intelligently.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is impossible at present to say what the conditions will be, as we will require to study the matter carefully before framing regulations in order to make them fair and reasonable to all parties concerned. At present there is some disagreement between the parties interested, and we shall have to consult them before framing the regulations.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any intention to confine the issue of these licenses to political friends, and to withhold them from political opponents ?

Mr. MORRISON. There may be no political opponents out there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Since I have been in the department so far, I have made no distinction on political grounds between applicants. They will all be treated fairly.

Mr. WADE. In view of the fact that the minister desires to have an opportunity further to consider my amendment to this Bill, I will not press it, but I will ask him to take the matter into consideration during the recess with the view of interpreting those words ' trap net.' Perhaps this session he will be able to introduce a further amendment to interpret those words. It is important to do so, because there is a great deal of litigation going on at the present time in consequence of doubt as to the meaning of those words, and that litigation is likely to increase.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will with pleasure look into it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SECURITY FOR DOMINION NOTES.

Bill (No. 222) respecting Dominion Notes, read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). This Bill is to give effect to the resolution which the House has already adopted in committee respecting the currency. We put it in the form of a revision of the Currency Act, but the material parts have already been dealt with by the committee.

On section 2,

Mr. BELL. What is the meaning of these words ' and shall be legal tender in every part of Canada except at the offices at which they are redeemable ' ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the language in the present Act. The explanation I think is that if my hon. friend should take a note of the Dominion to one of these offices for redemption, if it were a legal tender at that office he would get another note for it, but if it is not legal tender at that office he would get gold.

On section 5,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a slight change in this section to conform to our modern practice with respect to loans. The Bill provides that the note issue shall be covered by Canadian debentures. We provide in this section that either by debentures, or by way of loan or in any other form in which we raise money we shall have the right to raise money to redeem the notes.

On section 7,

Mr. INGRAM. What does that mean ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the present Act. It means that in each province of the Dominion we shall have an office at which to redeem these notes.

Mr. CLARKE. What provinces are there that have no offices now ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE, They all have them, but this is a re-enactment of the existing clause.

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There may be a few of these old provinces of Canada notes outstanding.

Mr. BELL. Are there any notes of the province of Nova Scotia outstanding yet ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a very small number. Once in a while we have a small number sent in.

On section 9,

Mr. CLARKE. I take the opportunity of drawing the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to complaints which reach newspapers from time to time as to the continued circulation of filthy, greasy notes, and of asking if it is not possible to take some steps to curtail the circulation of these notes ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does the hon. gentleman mean Dominion notes ?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I had hoped that we had cured that complaint and I am bound to say I have not heard it for some time. We made an effort by issuing a larger quantity of currency and by redeeming the notes more frequently to meet the public demand in that respect. It adds something to the cost of printing and engraving, but I think it is money well spent. We have given every encouragement to the banks, when their notes are no longer decent, to present them and get new notes.

Mr. CLARKE. But what about the circulation of filthy, greasy notes of the chartered banks ? Can nothing be done to call in those notes ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid we will have to educate public opinion to make the banks do that.

Mr. INGRAM. I would also like to mention to the hon. minister the subject of mutilated silver. While the Criminal Code deals with that question it does not seem to do so effectively. There is a large amount of mutilated silver in circulation, it is getting to be a regular nuisance, and I think some steps should be taken in reference to that also.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My attention has occasionally been drawn to the case of mutilated silver. We have been asked occasionally to redeem that silver, but if we make it a criminal act to mutilate the coin of the realm it hardly seems proper that we should put a premium upon the crime by redeeming the mutilated coin. There is another form of silver coin and that is the form which is not mutilated, but which is worn by use, and I think it is proper to redeem it, but we have not felt justified in undertaking to redeem mutilated coin.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose an announcement were made that mutilated coin should be redeemed after a certain date, I think it would be the means of calling a lot of it in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is dangerous.

Bill reported, read a third time, and passed.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT, 1898.

Bill (No. 225) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1898.—(The Minister of Marine and Fisheries), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon Raymond Préfontaine). I have already explained this Bill. It is very simple. It is to put into effect the resolution passed by this House as to the abolition of inspection fees and to allow the Governor in Council to re-establish these whenever it may be deemed necessary to do so. There is another clause recognizing the use of naphtha in small pleasure boats.

On section 1,

Mr. CLARKE. Is there anything in this Bill respecting the employment of certified engineers?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nothing in this Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. It is the intention of the department to introduce legislation dealing with that matter?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is before the House a Bill to that effect presented by a private member, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). We have not yet been able to come to an understanding about that Bill, but I hope we will be able to do so. The Bill stands as a public Bill and up to the present we have not been able to meet a committee of the parties interested. If it is possible later on to agree as to the request without interfering too much with navigation, we will do so with pleasure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the exact change in section 1?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We sanction the decision of the House abolishing the dues for inspection, and we also recognize naphtha launches.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I presume the word 'steamboat' includes a vessel propelled by electricity or gasolene?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, it is included.

On section 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This inspection does not apply to steamers of less than three tons gross that are not used for hire.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not unless they carry passengers. By the first clause you abolish dues and fees, and by the second clause the Governor in Council may have power to impose them under certain conditions.

On section 5,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Section 37, as you have it, omits the provision contained in section 37, of the Act amended, which provides:

> The owner or master of every passenger steamboat exceeding one hundred tons gross shall pay an inspection fee of $8 for each inspection.

Then you retain in the amended section 37, and in section 43, in a modified form, the provision fixing the rate of duty to be paid. The original section 37 provided:

> The owner or master of every steamboat in Canada shall pay, yearly and every year, a rate of duty fixed by the Governor in Council, and not exceeding ten cents for every ton gross which such steamboat measures.

The amended section 37 provides that:

> The Governor in Council may fix a rate of duty to be paid yearly and every year by the owner or master of every steamboat registered in Canada, not exceeding ten cents for every gross ton which such steamboat measures.

A similar change is made in section 43, which deals, not with steamboats, but with barges and steam tugs. The only difference is that the original section 37 provides that the owner or master shall pay a rate to be fixed by the Governor in Council, whereas the amended section provides that the Governor in Council may fix the rate of duty. What is the reason of the change? Is it to give the Governor in Council power to fix the rate of duty or not, as they may think best in the public interest ? I cannot understand the reasons of public policy for such a change.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As the hon. gentleman is aware, it has been decided to abolish these inspection fees and dues for two years. In case the government should decide two years from now to re-impose them, the Act allows them to do so. That is all that it means.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So long as the Governor in Council did not fix any rate, it seems to me that the sections as they were originally enacted would accomplish the same result. I cannot see that very much is accomplished by this amendment. Possibly it may make a little plainer that there is an option on the part of the Governor in Council to fix a rate or not as he sees fit. Then I understand the policy of the department is to do away with these inspection fees for a period of two years ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the policy of the government, and in submitting this Bill, I am simply carrying out that policy. The exemption that has been decided upon will last only two years, and then, without any new enactment, the Governor in Council may re-impose the dues and fees if they decide to do so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is nothing in the Act itself with regard to the period of two years.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, because the dues and fees were abolished, but that was a provision made at the time.

Bill, reported, read the third time, and passed.

CERTIFICATES TO MASTERS AND MATES OF SHIPS.

Bill (No. 226) to amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships, read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. CLARKE. What is the meaning of this amendment ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It creates another class of masters and mates, in order to facilitate their examination for a home voyage, and render less costly the appointment of such men.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has been represented that in inland navigation, especially in British Columbia and the North-west Territories, and Manitoba, these temporary certificates are too limited. They are limited to ten ton vessels, and strong representations were made to extend them to twenty tons. They are only granted to persons who have passed a certain examination in the locality where they have to navigate and also for special reasons.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SAFETY OF SHIPS.

Bill (No. 179) to amend the Act respecting the safety of ships, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Prefontaine). In 1901 an amendment was made to the Act respecting the safety of ships, commonly referred to as the 'Deck Load Act,' and it was found the amending Act of 1901 was so very ambiguous in regard to the height of deck load allowed on open spaces on the upper deck, that it now becomes necessary to further amend the Act to remove the ambiguity and make the law clear on that point.

A deck load law has existed in Great Britain and in Canada since 1873, brought about by an agitation initiated by the late Mr. Plimsoll, a member of the imperial parliament; and up to the enactment of 1901 the legislation in the United Kingdom and in Canada were perfectly in accord.

In the Canadian Act it was provided that after a certain date in the fall no ships could clear from Canada with any cargo whatever on the open spaces in the upper deck to a height exceeding three feet.

It was enacted by imperial legislation that no vessel should arrive at ports on that side up to a certain date in April—15th—with cargo of any description in uncovered spaces on the upper deck to a height exceeding three (3) feet.

The Canadian enactment of 1901 is, however, so ambiguous, that it has been strongly contended that a ship can leave Canada during the prohibited period with a cargo on the open spaces on the upper deck, such as deals, scantling, boards, &c., to a height exceeding three feet, or in other words, to any height which the owner of the ship might consider proper.

The discrepancy between the Canadian enactment of 1901 and the provisions of the Imperial Act was brought by His Majesty's Board of Trade to the attention of His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, and in a despatch from the Right Honourable Mr. Chamberlain to the Governor General, dated the 3rd May, 1902, it is intimated that His Majesty would not be advised to disallow the Canadian Act of 1901, but requesting that the matter be brought to the attention of His Excellency's advisers.

The annexed Bill is therefore framed to obviate this ambiguity and to bring the Canadian law into accord with the law regulating the loading of deck loads in the United Kingdom.

In the Canadian Act of 1901, paragraph (c) of subsection 1, it was enacted that the loading of 'any deals, battens, or other light wood goods of any description' was prohibited' to a height exceeding three feet above the deck in any spaces where the deck of such ship is closed in.' It is contended that this prohibition extends to the cargo only when loaded in covered in spaces, and does not extend to spaces on deck that are uncovered. I may mention that His Majesty's Board of Trade hold this view of the matter.

In the new annexed Bill, which amends the Act of 1901, the limitation contained in those words 'in any spaces where the deck of such ship is closed in,' has been struck out, and leaves the section to read: 'any deals, battens or other light wood goods of any description to a height exceeding three feet above the deck,' that is, above the upper deck.

In paragraph (a) of the same section, the words 'or any pitch, oak or elm planks, or any other heavy wood goods whatever' are added, as it is considered the addition makes the Act more comprehensive.

Mr. KAULBACH. It appears to me that this is a very restrictive measure and interferes between the owner of the ship and the insurer. The matter should be left between these parties with no interference whatever. With regard to the height of three feet allowed, I may say that the rail is usually higher than three feet. Why should they not be allowed to have it flush with the rail at least, using that as the measure that would be required? Very often vessels going out from our ports for ports down south load far beyond the rail, and they make their voyages with perfect safety. But this Bill would interfere very materially with shippers from Canada to the ports referred to in the Bill. Is it because it is required on the other side that this should be the case?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes; I read from the memorandum I had before me the recommendation made by the Home government on the matter in order to assimilate the two laws, and have them coincide.

Mr. KAULBACH. Would it not be well for the hon. minister to remonstrate with the Board of Trade on the other side? They might allow conditions to be changed to meet the reasonable remark I have made in connection with the load line.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am afraid they would not find it reasonable, because the matter has been the subject of a very long correspondence, and the Board of Trade on the other side seem to insist that we should pass this law. Up to the present time they have not proceeded against those who infringed the law as it is in Great Britain, but if we do not pass such a law as this, over there. It is in the interest of our people who do not comply with the law over there. It is in the interest of our people to make this amendment to the law.

Mr. KAULBACH. The greater portion of the cargo going to the south would be that on deck. To restrict it to three feet would make it lower than the rail, which, I think, would be a very severe provision. Of course, it would only affect vessels leaving Canadian ports for certain ports on the other side of the Atlantic. But among these shipments are immense quantities of lumber of light material such as pine and spruce, and invariably seasoned, so that the weight would be small. I think it should be left at the height of the rail.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That representation has been made. But the view taken by the hon. gentleman would not help the question at all. The ambiguity consisted in the fact that the three feet mentioned is inclosed according to the law of 1901. Now, it is proposed to strike out the provision as to its being inclosed and leave the three feet, the same as in the provision of the law enacted in 1901. So, there is no particular change except to make the law clearer on that point.

Mr. KAULBACH. I only refer to it as a hardship on the shippers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As I stated to the committee, the matter has been gone into very thoroughly and there is no help for it, if we want to protect our own people.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I remember that when the Bill of 1901 was before the House, there was some discussion as to the meaning of the words 'and during the voyage while within Canadian jurisdiction.' I do not know whether the hon. gentleman can give us information as to the scope that these words have been held to have since the Act came into force. You will observe, Mr. Chairman, that the Bill says—I leave out the unnecessary words:—

> No master . . . . on a voyage from any port or place in Canada to any port or place in the United Kingdom, or in the continent of Europe north of Cape Finisterre in Spain, not being a port or place within the Mediterranean sea, and during the voyage while within the Canadian jurisdiction.

—and so on. What is the scope or meaning of these last words?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We do not attempt to assert jurisdiction outside Canadian waters. The law is left just as it is, so far as that is concerned—it applies to Canadians in Canadian waters. If we had used words having a wider range, they might declare the Act ultra vires. We have no right to legislate so as to assume power outside of our own jurisdiction. The recommendation from the British authorities simply was that the point I have referred to was not made clear, and the object is to make it clear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that I would exactly agree with the hon. gentleman's view of the law as to what we can do. But this law apparently means this—that when a master of a vessel gets three miles from shore he can pile up his spars or his deck-load in any way he thinks fit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But if he does so, he does it at his own risk. He takes the risk of having his cargo confiscated under the law when he reaches the other side.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would be the case only if he were going to a point in the United Kingdom, but not if he were going to a port, not a Mediterranean port north of Cape Finisterre. The imperial statute would govern the case of a cargo going to the United Kingdom, but in the case of a cargo going to any of these other ports, there may be no law to control it after it leaves Canadian waters.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) ask us to legislate outside of Canadian jurisdiction? I do not think we have the right to do so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In respect to Canadian vessels, I think we could.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not studied the question, but it would seem to me at first sight that we would not. But I have only taken the law as it stands and amended it to meet the recommendations made on the other side.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—GOVERNMENT RAILWAY POLICY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he is able to give us any more definite information than we had on Friday as to the date at which we may expect the proposed railway measure of the government. The right hon. gentleman was good enough to state that I had better remind him of it, and I see there is no notice on the Order paper of any resolution being brought down. Possibly he may be in a better position to-day to give us exact information as to the date. I understood him on Friday to say that we would have it this week certainly, possibly early in the week. If he has anything to add to that to-day, I am sure the House will be glad to hear it.

The PRIME MINISTER. The measure will certainly be announced this week. I am sorry that I cannot give the exact date, except that it will be this week.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Department of the Interior—to pay the claim of Amos Barnes re the purchase of certain buildings on lands situated on river lots, Northwest Territories, $3,580.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Last year I asked for an appropriation of a similar character, and explained the reasons for it. Some years ago an application was made by Sir William Van Horne to purchase a certain amount of land at Selkirk, near the old town site of east Selkirk, of which he wished to make a model farm. I called for a report from the officers of the department as to whether this land had already been applied for, and the report stated that it was available for sale. Subsequently, however, it turned out that squatters had already settled on the land. There were files in the department to show that these squatters were there and had made claims. I became aware that they were on the land after the land had been sold and patented. The facts of the case are these: In 1883, one John Grant squatted on land adjoining the right of way of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at east Selkirk, and on the 18th of September of the same year he conveyed the same to one Henry Nelson. Mr. Henry Nelson remained in possession until May, 1887, when he conveyed it to Mr. Amos Barnes, who began erecting a hotel, but before completion of it, in June, 1887, Mr. Barnes sold out to one Frank McRae, who proceeded with the erection and completion of the same at a cost of some $2,500. Mr. McRae having died in January, 1889, Mr. Barnes leased the place for some time, and in September, 1889, purchased it for the sum of $1,700, and he has been in possession ever since. At the time the hotel and adjacent buildings were erected these were well outside of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's right of way, which was then at this point only 100 feet wide. The Canadian Pacific Railway originally selected station grounds elsewhere, but having decided upon another location, they filed a plan which included Mr. Barnes' hotel, and upon this plan a patent was issued by the department to the railway company, on the 17th of June, 1895. On this plan, within the limits applied for, there appears an outline marked 'hotel,' but nothing to connect it with the claim of Mr. Barnes, who had previously filed a claim for land as a squatter in the vicinity. It was not suspected that the hotel was anything else than the boarding house for the accommodation of the railway hands, and the patent was issued without regard to it. Since that time Mr. Barnes and the Canadian Pacific Railway have had some negotiations with respect to compensation for Barnes' improvements, but no result has been arrived at. In the beginning of January, 1901, the company entered a suit in ejectment to turn Mr. Barnes out of his own hotel, and he then moved those buildings off the railway land on to the other portion of the land occupied by his other buildings, which he had fenced and cultivated as a garden for upwards of fifteen years. At the time of moving these buildings back, Mr. Barnes appears to have been aware of the fact that the land had been patented to Sir William Van Horne, but he appears also to have been under the impression that an arrangement had been made with Sir William Van Horne by which Sir William had agreed to convey to the several settlers the lands occupied by them, and it was in consequence of this that he removed from the railway land. The ground on which Mr. Barnes removed his house had been patented, as mentioned before, to Sir William Van Horne, and he in his turn has transferred the same it appears to another party who has instituted ejectment proceedings. This places Mr. Barnes in a very serious position, and means for him the practical confiscation of his earnings of a life time. This is a case where the officers of the department have made a mistake, I think the department were wrong in issuing patents in the first place. The property has been valued. I asked for a similar vote last year to compensate another squatter, much in the same way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This represents the value of the buildings erected by Mr. Barnes, does it ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The valuation was made by a well-known appraiser and valuator, Mr. Wm. Bryden, of Winnipeg, who is employed by an insurance company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was it held by the courts that the buildings themselves were the property of the grantee of the lands ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the case has come to trial yet. I think it has been allowed to stand at the instance of the solicitors pending action by the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The item is simply for the value of the buildings, and it seems to me that Mr. Barnes might have a good right to remove them, although he might be ejected from the lands themselves.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think there will be no doubt that he will have the right to remove the buildings. I do not think there is anything to prevent him removing the buildings if he wants to. I think the parties will be willing to allow him to remove the buildings, but they are old frame buildings, and the real position of the matter is that he has no place to which to remove them. His is a hotel business which he has built up at that particular place, and there is no place in the neighbourhood where he can go. He might as well leave them where they are. I have had this claim before me for two or three years. I did not think at first it was a case in which I should ask parliament to pay it, but after considering the circumstances I thought we ought to pay it. I beg to move :

That the word 'North-west Territories' be struck out and the word 'Manitoba' be inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The reason that I made the observation was that the item purports to be for the purpose of paying for the buildings. It seems to me that you might have a different measure of damages altogether. You are not purporting in this item to pay for the loss of any land. You simply purport to be paying for the loss of the buildings, and I think that very likely he might have a good title to the buildings, and in that event, the department might be called upon to pay only the cost of the removal. If you are not paying damges for the land, it follows that you would not pay for a new site to which to remove the buildings.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I suppose that in reality what he is being paid for is compensation for being disturbed and put out. I finally said, after discussing the thing backward and forward, that I could not put a value on the disturbance of his business and good will, but that I was willing he should get enough to pay for his buildings. The valuation is possibly what it would cost to put up the buildings, allowing a reasonable amount for depreciation. I do not suppose the buildings are actually worth that much money in cash to-day. But these are the conclusions of the valuator. In regard to the other case that we had up last year, we had several parties make a valuation of the property, we had the property valued four or five times, they all differed, and it was a difficult matter to get them to agree. In this case I said : We will have an independent man go out and give us the fair value of the buildings as they are. We did that, and I recommended this to be paid.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is any correspondence between the department and Mr. Barnes ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I have a recollection that there was a good deal.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister lay it on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no objection in the world.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any other claim ? There was one last year and there is one this. Is there any other claim of the same kind ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so. There were several made, but these two were the only ones that were well founded.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Supposing a squatter takes up a location on the Canadian Pacific Railway section and is living there and the company sells that land, has the squatter a superior right to the railway company ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No ; if a man goes before the land is surveyed and it turns out that he is on an odd-numbered section, or a school section, or a Hudson's Bay section, he has no right to remain unless he pays for the land. If he is on an even-numbered section, then he has the right to make a homestead entry.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If it is unsurveyed, does he not hold the land ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He has to take his chances.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Suppose he happens to go upon an odd-numbered section, does he not hold the land ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, he has to buy it.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

To recoup the government of the North-west Territories, for expenses connected with the protection of the bridge across the Bow river at Canmore, North-west Territories, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That represents the expenditure made upon a bridge in the Banff park by the North-west territorial government. The bridge was erected by the government of the North-west Territories just at the time that the limits of the park were enlarged by Act of this parliament, so as to include the locality in which the bridge is. On the 4th November I received a letter from the commissioner of works of the North-west Territories, in which the following statements are made :

I am informed by the engineer in charge of construction, Mr. John Stocks, our superintendent of bridges that owing to the large washouts along the bank of the river in close proximity to the site of the bridge, there is very grave danger of the new bridge being carried away, not owing to any fault in construction, but owing to the fact that the river is making a new channel for itself practically around one side of the bridge, and that even if the bridge stood, which owing to its construction it is very liable to do, that the channel would leave its present location and render necessary the construction of another bridge practically as large, and that the only method of providing safety is to build protection works for a distance along the bank of the river where the wash out has taken place, the estimate of the cost of which is in the neighbourbood of $3,000. In order to be safe it is necessary to do this work this fall, before the spring freshets get a chance to get in their work.

In view of the actual necessity of doing this work in order to prevent the destruction of the bridge, I was authorized by Order in Council dated December 5, 1902, to enter into arrangements with the government of the North-west Territories to take such steps as might be necessary to protect the new bridge at an expenditure of not more than $3,000. In pursuance of that Order in Council, this vote is to pay them the money.

To pay the Casca Transportation Company balance of account in connection with relief to miners in Liard river district, North-west Territories, $600.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In 1899-1900 news came that a number of miners were in a starving condition in the Cassiar district and we authorized the Hudson Bay Company, by telegraph, to afford relief. That cost us something like $30,000. The Casca Trading Company also afforded relief in the same district, and they presented vouchers, but they were not in proper shape and were referred back to the company, and in the meantime the amount lapsed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was this in British Columbia or the territories ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is an amendment that the phraseology of the item be changed by striking out the North-west Territories and inserting British Columbia.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the Liard river district in British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We will put in the words ' Cassiar district.'

Mr. LANCASTER. Is not this a provincial matter ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was to all intents and purposes a matter that arose in the territories. They were mining in the Liard river district in the territories and they straggled down by way of the Stikine river to British Columbia.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this the party that went down the Mackenzie river to try and get up the Liard river ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When we authorized the relief we did not know how they got there. We just knew that they were struggling back in a destitute condition.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Additional amount for museum building at Banff, North-west Territories, $1,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this for an addition to the building ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This vote is to complete the construction of the buildings for offices and museum. The total cost is, I think, besides this vote, $8,000.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that there are a good many private dwellings in that park, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have a large hotel there. Is there any revenue to the government from the park in that way ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a small charge for the baths, and there are some small amounts from the rentals of lots. The hon. gentleman will find the details at page L—116 of the Auditor General's Report. The total for last year was $2,861.13.

Amount required to cover the expenditure connected with the opening up of a road from Teulon North, Manitoba, $15,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is to cover an expenditure for cutting a road through the bush country north of Winnipeg in order to enable the swamp lands commissioners and the surveyors to reach the district where they had to work. The expenditure was by error charged to the swamp lands vote, whereas it should have been charged to the Dominion surveys account.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the precise location of the road and its length ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One hundred and eighty miles altogether.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much has been expended ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has all been expended.

Mr. CLANCY. Was there a vote taken for that work ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was not a vote taken for it. The swamp lands commissioners and surveyors went on to cut these trails in the course of their work, and charged the cost to the swamp lands vote. The swamp lands, however, are, when transferred, the property of the Manitoba government, and when we came to consider the matter, we concluded that the expenditure was not properly charged to that vote, and that the officers who carried it on should have applied to the head office for authority. They did not do so, but went on and made the expenditure, considering it part of their work. There is no doubt at all about the utility of the work. I have had it carefully examined by the inspector of surveys, and that is his report upon it. I am perfectly satisfied of the necessity of the work. The error was on the part of the officers in going on with it without advice from the department. If they had applied, I think the expenditure might have been properly charged to the survey vote ; but as the money had been expended, I thought it better to come before parliament and have the explanation made.

Mr. CLANCY. Under whose authority was the work carried on ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work was done under the direction of Mr. Macdonnell, who was one of the swamp lands commissioners at that time.

Mr. CLANCY. Was there a vote taken to cover that service for the swamp land ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The swamp lands commissioners are paid out of provincial funds, but this item was not properly charged against those funds.

Mr. CLANCY. Under whose control are the swamp lands commission ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under the control of my department.

Mr. CLANCY. Does it not seem extraordinary that they should take on themselves to make an expenditure of that kind unless they had unlimited power ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not approve of the way in which it was done, and when this came to my attention I said at once that it was done irregularly and could not be charged against the swamp lands account. It was properly chargeable against the survey vote, and under the circumstances I thought that the proper way was to ask for a special vote.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the scope of the duties of the swamp lands commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under the settlement between the province of Manitoba and the Dominion it was provided that such public lands in Manitoba as should, upon examination, turn out to be swamp lands, to the satisfaction of this government, might be transferred to Manitoba and become its property, and commissioners were appointed for the purpose of making the selection. They report from time to time and their expenses are charged against the subsidy to the province of Manitoba.

Mr. CLANCY. I am unable to see what they have to do with constructing roads, if they are appointed merely to determine what are and what are not swamp lands.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The reason given by the commissioner was that it was impossible for him to get on the land to make a selection without making a road. While that is perfectly true, he should have advised the department and asked the department to build the road. Instead of that the commissioners incurred the expenses themselves. I had the matter looked into by the inspector of surveys, and am satisfied that the expenditure was necessary but was not incurred in the proper way.

Mr. CLANCY. Was there a demand made on the province of Manitoba to pay this sum ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was this road inspected before it was built or after ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was inspected after it was built and as soon as the question was brought to my attention. The inspector advised me that the road was necessary.

Mr. CLANCY. The commissioner who ordered this road, Mr. Macdonnell, I understand, was formerly member for Selkirk ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. It appears that this gentleman controls the department instead of the department controlling him. He can spend $15,000 without consulting anybody. Will the hon. gentleman lay on the Table the items of the expenditure made by Mr. Macdonnell without authority ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR :— Itemized statement of expenditure incurred in connection with cutting road from Teulon North, during fiscal years 1901-02 and 1902-03.

The department has got full value for the money, but the expenditure was not made in the regular way. If it had been, I would not be asking for this vote. The only way to deal with it now is to make a special vote.

Mr. CLARKE. Will this sum be charged back against the province of Manitoba ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. CLARKE. The province will be the gainer ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. Of course it will be $15,000 better off than if it had to pay, but it is our duty to do whatever is necessary in connection with the work except pay the actual expenses of the commission. I have no doubt that if it had been charged at the time against the survey vote it would have been regarded as a legitimate charge. But when it was done in the way it was, the money having been spent without express authority, I said I would bring it before parliament and ask the House for a special vote. Mr. Macdonnell is not now in the Swamps Lands commission.

Mr. TAYLOR. He ought to lose his job after undertaking to spend $15,000 without authority. Amongst the items in the Auditor General's Report, I read one of about $5,000 for provisions and supplies, this out of a total of $14,000. Apparently they did nothing but eat up camp supplies.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The road had to be cut in swamp country, and the difficulty of transportation of supplies is very considerable. The expense is only $63 a mile, which does not seem excessive.

Mr. TAYLOR. Just for cutting out the timber ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Cutting out the trail and doing whatever was necessary to make it passable.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this road used by anybody but the surveyor and commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has been most useful for settlers going into that part of the country. A large number of settlers could not have got in at all but for the cutting of this trail. But, of course, the fact does not relieve us of the necessity of having a special vote. I do not think Mr. Macdonnell is in fault as to the necessity of the work, but as to the way in which it was done. Perhaps a gentleman who has been for a long time a member of parliament has less exact ideas than ordinary officials as to the methods of departmental procedure.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), the other evening referred to some eider-down quilts and pillows bought by some officials in the Yukon country. But he did not inquire what became of them. Amongst the items in the Auditor General's Report I read of large amounts spent for tents, wagons, and so on. What became of all these ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the inventory, but I am sure that everything bought is in stock belonging to the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. We are passing every night votes for expenditures of this kind. I found, for instance, an item of $14,000 for flags, but I have not seen anything about these flags having been sold. I do not know what becomes of any property that the government buys. Somebody must steal it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What item was that ?

Mr. TAYLOR. It was not in the hon. gentleman's (Hon. Mr. Sifton's) department. But what I speak of is the rule in all departments—money spent for supplies to be used for a month or two, and nothing to show what becomes of them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. So far as my department is concerned, I am sure the hon. gentleman will not find anything lost track of. An inventory is made and the utmost care is taken of the goods. I sometimes think that more care is taken by the surveying parties in looking after the stuff than it is worth.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is all right for the surveying party. But what became of the tents bought for Mr. Macdonnell's party ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no doubt they are in stock at the present time.

Mr. CLARKE. The province of Manitoba will be relieved of the payment of this sum ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The province of Manitoba will be chargeable with his salary and expense during the time he was engaged in this work. The inspector of surveys, Mr. Pearce, reported that it was a fair charge. The work was of sufficient value in connection with the swamp land inspection to justify the charge against the province. I took that basis, and so I ask to have it dealt with accordingly.

For expenses connected with the Alaska boundary commission (Governor General's warrant), $10,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The treaty for the Alaska boundary was signed some time in January, a short time before the opening of the session of parliament. It was necessary to do a certain amount of work and incur some expense before it would be possible to obtain an appropriation, and the Governor General's warrant was issued. Under the law it was necessary to revote the amount.

Amount required to cover the late Thomas W. Middleton's shortages in connection with the gold commissioner's office at Dawson, $5,243.14.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is one of two cases in which there have been defalcations, one case in which the money was stolen, and this, a case of shortage. I think we have as good a system as could be devised for the auditing of the revenue in that country. There are a considerable number of offices, in which a large amount is collected. For the purpose of avoiding any possibility of error, I secured, at the beginning, from the Finance Department, the nomination of an officer of the department to be sent there as general comptroller of the revenue. The officer chosen was Mr. Lithgow. I am not sure where he came from, but he has proved a very competent man. It is his duty to see that everything is done that is necessary to protect the revenue. Technically, Mr. Lithgow was responsible for this loss, but, in reality, it occurred when he was out of the country on leave of absence. He reports that this defalcation includes three returns from the Stewart river, those for September, October and November, 1901, some Hootalinquia returns and, in addition the officer took from the suspense account by making false entries. The defalcation was reduced by salary unpaid and other items, leaving it at the amount of this vote, $5,243.14.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What became of this defalcating officer ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am informed by my deputy that he committed suicide. There was a change in the office of accountant. Mr. Mackay was appointed accountant and was placed under bonds. Mr. Middleton was appointed assistant accountant. There is where the mistake occurred. When Mr. Lithgow went away the work was divided between Mr. Mackay and the assistant accountant in such a way that the assistant accountant had it in his power to make these defalcations.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the minister how it was that Mr. Middleton was not under bonds ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The accountant was under bonds, and he ought to have been doing the work in such a way that the other man would not have power to steal this money without his knowing it. If it had been done with his knowledge, the guarantee company would have been liable ; but in Mr. Lithgow's absence the method of doing the work was changed in such a way that the assistant accountant got power to handle the money for a short time.

Mr. CLANCY. Did Mr. Lithgow make that arrangement before he left about the division of the work ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I understand from his statements that it was after he left.

Mr. CLANCY. Is Mr. McKay responsible for making the new arrangement ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McKay would be personally responsible to the government. We would have the right to say to him that he ought not to have made this arrangement.

Mr. CLANCY. Did Mr. Lithgow leave any instructions when he went upon his holidays ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not quite clear as to that. As I understand from Mr. Lithgow's statement, the change was made after he left.

Mr. CLANCY. There ought to be some definite statement from both Mr. McKay and Mr. Lithgow.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the committee desire, I will have all the correspondence brought down.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman ought to have it at hand now. It is an important matter that Mr. Lithgow should have neglected his duties in failing to give instructions that were proper, and in allowing this matter to occur. If, on the other hand, Mr. McKay was in authority, and without instructions took that course, then he ought to be held responsible. When was this defalcation first discovered ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were both working in the same office, and they did their work in such a way that one man ought to have watched the other. I felt myself that in reality, if anybody was to blame, it was Mr. Lithgow.

Mr. CLANCY. Has Mr. Lithgow made any statement regarding the matter ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, he made a full report, which I have here. Mr. McKay did not make any statement.

Mr. CLANCY. Has Mr. McKay been called upon to make a statement ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My recollection is that as soon as the matter came to my notice I at once asked Mr. Lithgow's version of it, as it was pointed out to me by my deputy that Mr. Lithgow was the responsible officer. I placed the blame upon Mr. Lithgow in not having the assistant under bonds.

Mr. CLARKE. How long was this going on ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Less than three months.

Mr. OSLER. The report of the commission appointed to inquire into the defalcations in the Militia Department showed rather an extraordinary state of affairs, and if that permeates all of the other departments, one cannot wonder that there are defalcations. The report of this commission showed that there was no check on bank transactions and that any subordinate clerk in the office could have committed defalcations without being found out for a year. I hope that such a condition of affairs as that does not exist in the department which the hon. Minister of the Interior administers, because, when there are large sums of money coming in from such a distance, it is very difficult to keep a proper check on them, and unless men are appointed for their ability, and not for their political pull, you cannot avoid defalcations. The wonder is that they are not greater than they are, because the system exposed by the investigation of this commission was utterly bad.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the members of the committee will agree with me when I say that in view of the fact that we have officers scattered all over the Yukon Territory collecting vast sums of money, and that we have only lost altogether, out of the millions of money that have been collected, about $7,000, it is greatly to the credit of the officials there. This gentleman is one of the best officers we have, and his politics are those of my hon. friend (Mr. Osler).

Mr. CLARKE. That accounts for it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is one of the best officers we have, and the government are under a great obligation to him for the conscientious care he has exercised. He made a slip in this case.

Mr. CLARKE. You want a larger number of officers of the same stripe.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a considerable number.

Mr. TAYLOR. If they were all Conservatives, there would be no trouble.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a considerable number, but I may say we do not give them the preference.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In regard to the observations the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler), if my hon. friend has read the report he is aware that the commissioners did not confine themselves to the Militia Department, but that they investigated the methods of all the departments, and they made a report which was eminently satisfactory. When we think, as the hon. Minister of the Interior very properly says, that only a small sum has gone astray out of the large sums that are received in the Yukon, and when we consider the vast transactions of the Dominion of Canada, we have reason to be proud of our civil service and to rejoice that there has been very seldom an occasion that anything has gone astray ; and I think that in this respect the members of the committee will agree that the civil service of Canada can compare favourably with that of any other country. You cannot make a man honest and honourable by any system of examination that you may adopt. At all events, I only wanted to remind my hon. friend that the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the Martineau case, and who went through the various departments, was very satisfactory, and although they offered some suggestions, they concluded, as the report showed, that the safeguards and checks prevailing in the various departments were fair and reasonable.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is perfectly aware that it is denied that the report is accurate in some respects in regard to the duties of the Auditor General, and in regard to the manner in which cheques come into his possession. It came under my notice that the Auditor General asked of the hon. Minister of Finance an opportunity of explaining that the commissioners had arrived at some very erroneous conclusions as to the exact circumstances under which cheques passed between the Auditor General's Department and the Department of Militia and Defence. When the hon. gentleman says that the report is eminently satisfactory, I am not going to raise the question, but I simply think it is due to the Auditor General to say that I am informed that the Auditor General did ask the hon. Minister of Finance for an opportunity of explaining what to him seemed an inaccuracy in the conclusions at which they arrived.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) rather makes out the situation to be much better than I claim it to be, because the report made some reference to the Auditor General's manner of adjusting these things, and the Auditor General complained that the report possibly censured him a little. That does not prove anything wrong in the report, but it proves a difference of opinion between the Auditor General and the commissioners as to what may be the best method of conducting the affairs of the departments. As respects the desire of the Auditor General to make an explanation, I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to the fact that the Auditor General came before the Public Accounts Committee and desired to make an explanation. I offered no objection to his making it, but I suggested that as he was an officer of the House I thought the proper way would be to put his statement in the form of a report, which might be laid on the Table of the House. That is all the difference there was between us in regard to the explanation; he would like to have made it before the committee, and I suggested that he should make it in a report to the House. I have no objection to him expressing any opinion or making any explanation which he desires to give.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. CLARKE. What change has taken place in the system of audit?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All cheques are now being sent direct from the bank to the Finance Department, and they pass from the Finance Department to the Auditor General. It has been suggested that they should go also to the department concerned, and that point is under consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. When was that change made?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the 1st July.

Mr. CLARKE. What changes were made in the system of checks and safeguards?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This change was made as the result of the commissioners' report.

Mr. CLARKE. So that the practice which prevailed prior to 1896 continued until the 1st of July?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was no change in the methods pursued by the prior government. They were precisely the same as those which prevailed before, but when the report of the commissioners was brought down the beginning of the fiscal year was deemed to be a very convenient time at which to change the system in regard to the handling of cheques.

Mr. OSLER. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether cheques are ever signed by stamp by any of the ministers?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly not to my knowledge.

Mr. OSLER. I ask the question because I notice that very important letters issued by the ministers are signed by stamp, and I think it is a practice that should not be allowed to obtain for one minute. If cheques are signed by stamp I would like to know it. Any one can see what it may lead to. The stamp may be under the control of the deputy or of any clerk, who may be at liberty to sign important letters by stamp. I venture to say that the president, or secretary, or manager of a large financial or business concern, who is signing twenty times the number of letters or cheques that any one of the ministers has to sign, would never think of signing his name by stamp as ministers sign important letters.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. So far as my department is concerned, every cheque is signed by my deputy and the accountant in their own proper handwriting. If the deputy is away, the secretary of the department is authorized by Order in Council to sign.

Mr. OSLER. Is there an Order in Council allowing ministers to sign their letters and cheques by stamp?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think there is any Order in Council permitting that. There could be no such Order in Council authorizing the signing of cheques by stamps. As to the signing of letters, I suppose that is a matter of the personal taste of the minister. For myself I do not like it, and I have never used a stamp. It involves a little more labour if you have to sign your own letters, but I prefer to sign. I am aware that some of my colleagues use a stamp. I take it for granted that the stamp is only used after they have carefully read the letters. The use of the stamp is a matter of personal taste. As respects cheques I am quite sure they are not signed by stamps.

Mr. OSLER. I am glad to hear that, because judging by the loose manner in which the letters are sent out by the different ministers it is liable to be assumed that they might also sign the cheques by stamp. If that were done no better system could be devised to open the door to fraud and embezzlement.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The practice is simply adopted by some ministers who so sign their names to personal letters. Official documents are never signed by a stamp, although it involves a great deal of labour. Every patent, for instance, is signed by the proper signature of the officer.

Mr. OSLER. I should hope that a patent is not signed by a stamp. I refer to official letters coming from some of the ministers.

Mr. TAYLOR. Some of them are very lazy.

Mr. CLANCY. It must have come to the notice of the Minister of Finance especially, that the departmental audit is carried on in a very loose way, and I am afraid that this carelessness is not of recent years either. Any one who examines the departmental accounts before they go to the Auditor General must see evidence of gross neglect. That is especially the case where letters of credit are issued. There is a looseness in connection with the present practice which ought to be put an end to. As the country grows this evil will grow correspondingly. Some accounts came under my notice within the last few days which go to prove that the audit that takes place in the several departments is as a rule a perfect farce.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that those who have any experience with the Auditor General are disposed to bear testimony that whatever faults he may have, he is pretty close in his audit, pretty careful and pretty rigid. So far as accounts which come within his scope are concerned there is very little room for complaint——

Mr. CLANCY. I have made no complaint against the Auditor General. I have pointed out that he is utterly hopeless to remedy the evil after the accounts have been paid by the department. There is no more diligent man in Canada than the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was proceeding to say that the Auditor General has not such full control over letters of credit as he has where a particular account is presented to him for approval. Still, in administering the affairs of a large territory, we cannot very well get along without the letter of credit system. If a department has a letter of credit the minister and his officers should realize their responsibility quite as fully as if they were dealing with individual accounts, but unless we abolish the system of letters of credit, I don't quite see how a remedy can be provided. I admit that where a minister obtains a letter of credit the Auditor General loses control over the expenditure until the accounts have been returned, but that is inevitable. If in any particular case a particular minister fails to have an adequate inquiry into the account before paying it, that is a proper matter for investigation and condemnation, but if my hon. friend wishes to abolish the letter of credit system, I would ask him to remember that it would be very difficult to substitute anything in its place in dealing with the business of a large country like this.

Mr. CLANCY. I think, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This discussion is out of order.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it is.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is dealing with the question of the loss of this money and that is a question of audit.

Mr. CLANCY. As the Minister of Finance knows, the departmental audit is very often of a very loose character. There are certain cases I think where there has been no letter of credit issued. I do not know that there was a letter of credit issued in connection with the Census Department because that money was not paid until the service had been rendered. I have no hesitation in saying that the census audit was a most scandalous one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no hesitation in saying that the character of the audit by the Auditor General——

Mr. CLANCY. I have not referred to the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who else is it if it is not the Auditor General ?

Mr. CLANCY. I refer to the audit in the department before it reaches the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If there is no letter of credit issued, then each individual account goes to the Auditor General and he has the opportunity of auditing it before he issues the cheque. In the case of the census, I assume that there must have been some arrangement under which these accounts were audited in the department and only came to the Auditor General afterwards. If so, each particular account will have to stand on its merits. Speaking generally, I think that the audit of the accounts of the Dominion is in the main very good and very rigid. If we have any fault to find with the Auditor General it is that perhaps we sometimes think that he is a little too rigid in small matters. I believe that the audit in the main is a good one and above criticism, and I say that not for the sake of the Auditor General alone, but for the credit of the Dominion.

Mr. CLANCY. No one is attacking the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman must be attacking some one.

Mr. CLANCY. I refer to the audit made in each department, and I repeat that generally speaking it is of a loose character. As the Finance Minister knows perfectly well, the Auditor General is powerless to remedy this, because the money has been paid before the account reaches him.

Dominion lands chargeable to capital—further amount required for surveys, &c., $90,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the minister state why so large an amount is required in addition to the estimate of last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would point out that before the spring opened, on account of the apparently large rush of immigration we had to decide what to do. We had to send the parties out early in the season, and we had to incur the responsibility of expending more money than we had appropriated. When we did that, we expected to have the appropriation long before this; but, for reasons with which my hon. friend is as well acquainted as I am, our estimates are late this year. The details of the surveys I gave on a previous occasion.

Mr. OSLER. Whereabouts generally are these extra surveys being made ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I gave a detailed statement in my explanation of the main vote. It will be found on page 6759 of 'Hansard' of this session. The greater portion are north of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, between the western boundary of Manitoba and the foot hills of the Rocky Mountains, in the fertile belt. There are surveys in other parts of the country, but that is where the vast bulk of the work is being done, because that is where the great demand for land for settlement exists.

Mr. OSLER. Are there any surveys being made of those large tracts of land which are being sold ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a large amount of settlement going on in the land reserved for the Regina, Lonk Lake and Saskatchewan Railway; and wherever there is a demand for land for settlement, we are carrying on surveys in different parts of that reserve, chiefly in the northern and eastern parts.

Mr. OSLER. What lands are reserved for the Regina, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not tell my hon. friend without the map. The land extends from seventy or eighty miles north of Regina to Prince Albert.

Mr. OSLER. That tract has not been extended at all ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was slightly extended beyond the original reserve. When the dispute occurred between the trustees for the bondholders of the railway company and the government, the government had then offered to the representatives of the company to allow them to select any odd-numbered sections at the disposal of the government anywhere in the North-west Territories. I sent them a map, and gave them carte blanche to select anywhere in the territories. When the right of the company to the land grant was sold, I did not feel disposed, on account of the changed conditions in the North-west Territories, to allow that offer to remain open, and an order was made, or an Order in Council was passed, confirming their selection to the original reserve, with a few townships on one side, which, if I recollect rightly, included a tract which had been offered to the Saskatchewan and Western Railway Company, but was not accepted. That is the only change that was made.

Mr. OSLER. How many townships ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall have to look that up. I do not remember exactly.

Mr. OSLER. Would the minister give us a map or a description of the lands ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall be very happy to bring down a marked map showing the old grant and the reserve that is passed, so that my hon. friend will have the exact information he wants.

Mr. OSLER. Has the minister dealt with any of the even numbered sections in that district ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nothing except the sale that was made to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. With regard to that, the officers were examined before the Committee on Agriculture, and the full details are found in the evidence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the evidence given before the Agricultural Committee is printed as yet, so that we are not very familiar with it. Was any portion of the land withdrawn from settlement and sold to this company ? If so, what were the reasons which induced the department to depart from the usual course ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The arrangement that was made was that we agreed to sell 250,000 acres of land in a certain specified territory at a dollar an acre, on condition that the company placed in each township thirty-two settlers, twenty of whom should be on homesteads, and the other twelve might be on land purchased by them, at their option. I may say that the greater portion of this land was rejected originally by the Qu'Appelle Railway Company as not being fit for settlement, and has been reported by the government inspector as unfit for settlement. The reports of my officers show that any efforts to settle these lands have been a failure. In any case the government would have got nothing in a financial way. The company have not fulfilled the conditions or put themselves in a position as yet to get any land patents.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Within what time were they to put in thirty-two settlers per township ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They had two years in which to fulfil the condition. The two years are not up yet, but will be in a few months. It is very doubtful if they will be in a condition to get anything.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the lands are of no value, it is not very probable that they will be settled even by this company. Is it possible, under the law, to withdraw any lands whatever in the North-west Territories, and sell them in this way to an incorporated company instead of retaining them for the purpose of homestead entries ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman give us a reference to the clauses or regulations under which this can be done ? It is a very important feature of the law and we ought to understand it thoroughly.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will have it looked up in a few minutes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it can be done with regard to these lands, it could be done with regard to every acre in the North-west. The Minister of the Interior or the Governor in Council could withdraw all the government lands in the North-west Territories which are still unsettled and sell them to a land company.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The provision is that any particular tract may be withdrawn by Order in Council. Of course, the power is there for the purpose of being exercised in special cases.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is rather a large power. The hon. gentleman was to have brought down certain papers in this connection.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I found that the motion made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) included a lot of other things besides this, and I will endeavour to have the return on the Table to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did the hon. gentleman mention the price at which the lands were sold per acre?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This particular sale was at $1 per acre.

Mr. OSLER. The Order in Council will be brought down and the map showing the tract?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there anything in the department to show the value of the land?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has all been examined by reason of the fact that it was in a reserve which had been set apart for a land grant to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway, better known as the Regina and Long Lake Railway. The railway company had it examined, and rejected almost all the land. It was then examined by the government inspector. He reported that about 60 per cent was wholly unfit for settlement. I would have had no idea that the company would succeed in colonizing it had it not been for the suggestion they made that they purposed putting on it a large number of farmers who were accustomed to growing flax on arid ground. For the ordinary farmer it was considered of no use at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that the company had issued a prospectus in which these lands were described in very glowing terms?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not responsible for the advertisements of land companies.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Possibly, but if the lands are of the character described it would be almost the duty of the department to warn people against being misled by misrepresentations. I have not seen the prospectus myself, but I understand these lands are described in very glowing terms as worth a very considerable amount of money.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They have not put themselves in a position to get an acre yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As I understand it, when they have placed thirty-two settlers on a township they are entitled to take out a patent——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. By townships.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They have not yet settled a sufficient number on any township, so far as the department is aware ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They did apply some time ago for some of the land, but they failed to put in the necessary proof. They put up $50,000 as a guarantee that the contract would be carried out.

Mr. LENNOX. They have certain rights to get the land at $1 an acre for a length of time. What time are they allowed to comply with the conditions and become entitled to the land ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When I bring down the Order in Council I will have a memorandum made embodying as much information as possible.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there any discrimination made between the even and the odd sections ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was a sale of even sections. It was in the reserve. The odd sections they bought from the railawy companies, and they have a right to select what they have purchased from the companies.

Mr. OSLER. The even sections sold were in the territory of the reserve ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. OSLER. Were they between the rivers ? Were they north of Saskatoon ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not familiar enough with the geography to say.

Mr. OSLER. The minister would know whether they were north of Saskatoon and Prince Albert and westward.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am informed they were all south of Saskatoon.

Mr. CLANCY. Have the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company made any selection of lands other than those they purchased from the railway company ? Did the railway company allot their lands before making the sales ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The position was as follows : The government was under contract to give the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company something less than a million acres of land. A large tract of land had been reserved, out of which the company was entitled to select the odd sections to the extent of about a million acres. The reserve within which they had the right to select was about three and a half million acres in extent. The company caused the greater part of the land to be examined, and they declared to the government that they could not find a million acres of land fairly fit for settlement within the tract. This was one of the first subjects to come under my attention when I took office in 1896. Protracted negotiations went on between the government and the solicitor for the company, or he may have been solicitor for the bondholders of the railway company who, I believe, had security upon these lands. The solicitor for the bondholders or the company, finally took the position that they could not find within the tract the amount of land fairly fit for settlement that they were entitled to. I then informed them that they might take their land anywhere in the North-west Territories where the government owned the odd sections. I gave them the whole country to select from.

Mr. OSLER. I would like the hon. minister to produce the letter in which the offer was made.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no difficulty about that. But the company still refused. There were interviews between myself and the solicitor, when the offer I had made was again discussed verbally. Then, the condition of affairs in the North-west began to change, immigration became more rapid and the demand for land increased. A wet season occurred, and as hon. gentlemen know, this arid land presents a better appearance in a wet than in a dry season. From a combination of causes the land became more desirable. The railway company negotiated a sale to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, the terms of which I do not know.

Mr. CLANCY. Was the sale made upon the strength of the hon. minister's letter that they might make a selection in any part of the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If so, it was never brought to my attention. The proposition was a proposition from the railway company, and when the sale was made by the railway company, we restricted the purchasers to a certain specified area to which my hon. friend from west Toronto (Mr. Osler) has referred and which will be shown on the map which I shall bring down.

Mr. CLANCY. Within the area first indicated ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Restricting the area, not exactly to the original limit, but adding somewhat to it, a few townships.

Mr. OSLER. Then the minister will bring down that map.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. How many settlers have been put upon these lands by the Saskatchewan Land Company

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have not yet got a return. We must get a return for each township. But they have not proved that they have complied with the conditions in the case of any township yet.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Turriff, who I believe is a land commissioner, stated, speaking of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company :

I am not prepared to say just how many have gone in on their grant last summer, but there were over 300 homesteads made in that part.

That was last year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of course they have sent in a considerable number. I recollect now they applied to get some patents, and they filed some information with regard to settlers. But the evidence which they filed did not prove that they had complied with the conditions, and consequently we did not give them the land.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax. Will there be another opportunity of discussing this matter ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy informs me there is a small vote for Dominion lands coming down in the supplementaries for 1903-4, which will afford an opportunity of discussing this matter at any length hon. gentlemen may desire. My hon. friend is also aware that he can discuss any resolution on concurrence, with all the information before him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We are a little handicapped in discussing it at present on account of the absence of the documents which have been referred to. Will the hon. gentleman have any objection to letting this item stand, say, until to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will understand that these are the supplementary estimates for the last year, and it is very embarrassing if we have not got the money available before a certain time. The matter can be discussed just as well and just as fully on other items that will come up.

Mr. OSLER. The minister made a remark that some gentleman on this side of the House knew why the estimates had not been brought down. I hope he does not accuse the opposition in delaying the estimates. I think the opposition have great cause of complaint that the estimates have been so long delayed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I merely stated the fact, I did not find any fault.

Government of the North-west Territories—additional grant required for schools, clerical assistance, printing, &c., $250,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As the leader of the opposition is aware, this is the item that will enable us to pay the deficit of the last six months in the government of the North-west Territories. In the supplementary estimates for the coming year we are going to ask for $250,000 more to add to the subsidy of the North-west Territories, and I would ask my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to defer the full discussion of the financial state of the North-west Territories until that vote comes up, on account of the absence of some of my hon. friends from the North-west Territories who desire to be present when it takes place. Several of the western members are absent. I will then make a full statement. This $250,000 we desire to pay at once to the North-west government to cover their deficit for the last year. They have expended the full amount of their vote, and we cannot give them any more until this vote is passed. The $250,000 that we are going to ask for will be in addition to the subsidy for the last year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the total amount including this ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This makes it about $700,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount last year was $457,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have no objection to pursuing the course the hon. gentleman has suggested so far as making a statement is concerned. I think it important to have the documents we were speaking of this afternoon, printed and in an intelligible shape, and placed before the members of the House before that vote comes up. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was in the House when I drew attention to some documents which have not been brought down in connection with the returns respecting provincial autonomy.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was away when the motion for the return was passed. I think a large number of these letters refer to financial matters and say nothing about provincial autonomy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There are perhaps four or five documents which I enumerated in the House to-day which come within this description, but many of them deal for the most part with financial matters, and shortly also with the question of provincial autonomy. It would be well to have the whole situation placed before the House, because the documents will be required in order to enable the House to judge whether this vote should be passed. They might as well be printed in one pamphlet.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We will have the return made up, including all the correspondence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to expedite that, because it would be important to have it a week or ten days before the vote comes up.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There will be no loss of time. Most of the returns ordered by parliament are prepared now, and we can get a special staff and get this report out in two or three days.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman does not quite understand me. I said it would be very desirable to have this return in the hands of hon. members a week or ten days before the vote comes up because this correspondence is rather voluminous, and we want time to study the question.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will undertake to have it down so that the House can order it to be printed this week.

Mr. CLANCY. I have no doubt that the particular claim that is being made by the territorial government is a proper one. I am not prepared to question that. I believe the hon. minister is coming to their assistance to relieve them of a deficit that arose from expenditures that were really forced upon them in the interests of the country. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain in detail this vote of $250,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Briefly, they got a subsidy of $457,000; they spent it all, they were $250,000 short at the end of the year, and we propose to give them $250,000 to supply the deficit.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose that they gave the hon. gentleman some details as to how the expenditure was made?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The correspondence which my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has asked for, and which is very lengthy, goes fully into the financial situation in the North-west Territories, and the different items are covered very fully by it. In order to explain the expenditure I would have practically to read the public accounts of the North-west Territories for the last year. They explain the expenditure of last year as having been urgently necessary, and as a justification for passing beyond the amount of money that has been voted to the territorial government, they state the fact that there was a very great destruction of their public works by reason of the unusual floods which took place all over the country during the year. The largest item of expenditure, I think equally large with the school expenditure, if not larger, is that which is made on roads and bridges, and the general expenditure on highways, and owing to the excessive floods and the vast amount of damage done they had to incur a great deal of expenditure in repairing the damage. As this was in the nature of urgent expenditure, they felt justified in going on and expending the money. They were the parties responsible for the work and we are not disposed to say that they were wrong and we ask parliament to vote this $250,000. I do not put this forward as a full and detailed explanation, because I will make that in detail when the vote comes down in connection with the supplementary estimates. As the hon. leader of the opposition has been good enough to agree that the full discussion shall be deferred until then. In the meantime I am going to bring down all the correspondence, in which my hon. friend will find the details of the expenditure, and an explanation given of the causes of the shortage and everything necessary to put the House in possession of the fullest information that we have ourselves.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think they also claim that the immigration going into the country has made it necessary to establish a great many school sections and also that where settlements are made in new districts it has been necessary to provide roads and bridges to a greater extent than existed before. There are a great many items of this kind on which they base their claim. However, we will have a full statement from the hon. minister when he comes to the estimates for the coming year. In the meantime, would the hon. minister be good enough to tell us the position of the litigation between one of the municipalities in the North-west Territories and the Canadian Pacific Railway in regard to the question of taxation? If I remember correctly, there were two suits instituted, really on behalf of the government, but nominally by municipalities. One of these municipalities was in the North-west Territories and another one in the province of Manitoba, and if I remember correctly the decisions in the two cases were somewhat different. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could give us a brief statement, because I know nothing about the matter beyond what I saw in the newspapers, of what the courts did actually decide, and what is the present position of this litigation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does my hon. friend ask me to do that now ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Just very briefly.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will understand that although the matter arises in a sense in my own department, I do not follow all the details of the litigation as closely as the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick), whose business it is to do so. I understand the present position is this: In the North-west Territories the court held that the tax could be collected on Canadian Pacific Railway lands, and that in the province of Manitoba it was held that it could not be collected. I believe that no notice of appeal has been given by the railway company as yet. I say that subject to correction. As my hon. friend has called attention to it, I will have a proper statement of the exact position of affairs from the Department of Justice, and I will give it later on.

Grant to recoup the local council of the Yukon Territory for expenditure incurred in connection with Eldorado Gusher, $50,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it were anticipated that the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) would be better here at an early date perhaps it would be better to have this stand.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As my hon. friend suggests that we should allow this to stand until the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) is here, I would be happy to agree.

Item allowed to stand.

Military properties—paving streets in front of barracks, Winnipeg, $9,434.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I move to strike that item out. I will put it in the supplementary estimates for the current year.

Mr. OSLER. It is no use this year; the elections are over.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend is quite mistaken. It was expected that this item would have been passed some time ago, and that possibly the work could be done before the end of the fiscal year. I intend to put the item in the estimates for the current year.

To pay for land adjoining Hamilton Drill Hall, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It will be necessary to extend the Hamilton drill hall, and this land was offered at a very reasonable price and approved of by the colonel of the regiment. I think the hon. member for the city of Hamilton will agree with what I am saying.

Mr. BARKER. I am very glad to be able to confirm what the minister says. There was an opportunity of getting this land very cheap and the price was considered so reasonable that the officers of the regiment got an option to buy it, and it was taken over by the Crown.

Coronation contingent—further amount required, $13,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. After the contingent reached London the unfortunate illness of the King occurred, and the contingent returned home about the date it was originally expected it would return. Later on, when the coronation did come off, the King himself expressed a desire that a certain number of men selected from the different colonies should form a body guard, and we sent from Canada a number of men commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Turner, V.C. This amount was largely used for that purpose.

To reimburse Lieut.-Col. Cole his costs in Cooke vs, Cole, $1,351.43.

Mr. MONK. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This item grew out of the suit which took place as the result of an order by Lieutenant Colonel Cole for the arrest of Lieutenant Colonel Cooke, in Montreal, on a charge of insubordination in refusing to obey orders. Lieutenant Colonel Cole was in command at the time of the Montreal district, owing to the absence of the district officer commanding at the Valleyfield riots. I do not know that it is necessary that I should go into all the details, but as a result of this arrest, Colonel Cooke took legal action against Colonel Cole, and obtained a verdict for a small amount of money. A good deal of expenditure was involved, and Lieutenant Colonel Cole lost this amount. In view of the fact that Lieutenant Colonel Cole was discharging his duty, as he believed, as the senior officer in the district at that time, it seemed to me only fair that he should be reimbursed. It is a question of law, which I believe had never before been brought before the courts, and Lieutenant Colonel Cole was acting upon a construction of the law which had been placed upon it for years, and which was placed upon it by the general officer commanding at the time, General O'Grady-Haly. That is the reason this vote is asked.

Mr. OSLER. The minister approved of the course of the officer ?

Tne MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there any appeal to the superior officers in connection with it ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, and the superior officer approved of Lieut-Colonel Cole's action.

Mr. MONK. From what I know of the circumstances, it seems only fair that we should reimburse Colonel Cole. How is the sum made up ? Is this the taxed costs, or is there any thing beyond them ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. I may say that I submitted the claim of Lieut-Colonel Cole to the Justice Department, and the Deputy Minister of Justice went carefully into the question, and sent me a memorandum fixing the amount at $1,351.43 as the proper amount to pay, being the amount actually disbursed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Should not this case involve some amendment to the law ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. The Deputy Minister of Justice was engaged on the matter when he went away, but I am not able to say that he completed it. I had hoped to have the amendment to introduce as a part of the new Militia Bill which I had hoped to bring down this session. That has been postponed, and perhaps the public will not suffer if the two are allowed to go over for another session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The idea, I suppose, is to place the law in such a position that an officer acting in that way would be justified not only by his superior officer, but by any action in the civil courts that might be taken against him.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Quite so.

Mr. MONK. Is this going to be paid to Colonel Cole himself ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Additional unforeseen expenses, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The usual vote for unforeseen expenses is $20,000, at which it has stood for a number of years. But it is really too small, and we have to consider the necessity of enlarging it. The special need of this additional vote arises from the fact that the gratuities to the widows and families of deceased officials are charged to this fund, and there have recently been several large additions to it. There are gratuities to the families of two judges and one lieutenant governor, amounting to a considerable sum. There is also the sum of $692 which was paid for expenses in connection with the visit of the Boer delegates to this country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are not these gratuities in some cases brought down in special votes ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where they come under the Civil Service, they are included in this vote ; but when there is no provision for them, we take a special vote.

To pay the Canadian Pacific Railway for expenses in connection with the visit of Sir Edmund Barton, Prime Minister of Australia, $1,020.59.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When Sir Edmund Barton was in England last year, he was invited to return by way of Canada, and the government extended to him their hospitality, and they ask this vote to pay his transportation expenses.

To provide for the payment of all services under the Naturalization Act of 1902, according to the schedule of rates established by Order in Council, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to provide for certain payments which arise under the Naturalization Act, not only as respects the future, but as respects the past, for which returns are to be made, covering a period of years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I moved some time ago for a copy of these returns. I do not know whether or not there is any difficulty in bringing them down. I think I had some communication stating that they were somewhat lengthy, but I hope the government will be able to bring them down before the end of the session ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I remember my hon. friend's request. I will take a note of his suggestion, and will see that the attention of the Secretary of State is called to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the nature of the returns ? Are they by officers of the courts of the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, by the clerks of the courts, and they go back for a number of years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are they made to any particular department ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To the Secretary of State.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What use is to be made of them ? Are they to be tabulated or published ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know that I can answer that. They are required under the Act. I have no doubt they would be tabulated, but I have no personal knowledge of the matter. They would not be of much value unless they were put in such a shape as to be available for public information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How is it that they happen to cover a number of years? Has the work been neglected by the officers in the past?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think they are made under a new Act, which is retroactive. Some of them, I think, go as far back as 1853.

Mr. CLANCY. Was any vote taken for that service last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, this is the first vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the Naturalization Act of 1902 applicable to the whole of Canada in this respect?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It must be, because the memorandum alludes to some returns which are to be obtained from Montreal as far back as 1853.

Mr. MONK. From the clerks of the court there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Does the Act require that we should go back as far as 1853?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Apparently. I have not the Act in my hand, but I am reading from the memorandum furnished by the Secretary of State.

To repay Petersen, Tate & Company, the amount of their deposit with interest at three per cent, $56,940.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This was deposited some years ago by Petersen, Tate & Company as security for their fast line contract; and while we have a legal right to forfeit this money, we think we should repay the deposit with 3 per cent interest. We have no reason to doubt that these gentlemen made every effort possible to carry out their contract, and undoubtedly lost a lot of money. They acted in good faith, and I think the committee will agree that this money should be returned.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There was security by way of deposit and also security by way of bank guarantee. What amount did they cover?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bank guarantee was given up some time ago. There were some negotiations respecting a change in the form of contract, and my recollection is that the bank guarantee was then given up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This represents the end of the bottle neck service too I suppose. If we look back to the debates of 1897 or 1898, we will see that this deposit was pointed to as an indication of the absolute success of the undertaking. We know that in the discussion which then took place, many references were made to this by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. We were referred not only to this deposit of $50,000, but to the bank guarantee; and when we criticised the action of the government in refusing to carry out the contract made by the government of Sir Charles Tupper, we not only had the pleasure of hearing about this bank guarantee and the deposit of $50,000, but were also taunted with the boast that this government had made a bargain so much more in the interest of the country than that which had been made by its predecessors. I think the difference was said to be a quarter of a million dollars annually. That was paraded, not only in this House, but throughout the country, as an indication of the great business abilities of this government. They were able to make so much a better bargain than the Conservative government, and the service was absolutely assured. There could be no doubt about that. Not only was that boast made in this House, but on the public platform. In Toronto the right hon. the first minister produced a telegram before a delighted audience, and assured them there was no further question about the fast Atlantic service being an accomplished fact. We asked some questions in the House from time to time, and after a while the treasury benches were not quite so sure, and eventually they got down to telling us that there was no further news on the subject. After a while it was difficult to get any reply at all. Eventually, however, I asked the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce about these two guarantees, and he told us, some three or four years ago that while it was not intended to enforce the bank guarantee, nevertheless the government did propose to retain this deposit of $50,000, for the present at least. Now this deposit is not only handed back but we are paying interest on it at the rate of 3 per cent. This would perhaps be a good opportunity for my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to tell this House something about the prospects of the fast Atlantic service at present. This government came into power in 1896 with a contract which it could have carried out and which would have been very much more in the interest of the country than any it is able to make at present. From what knowledge I have been able to gather, it would not be possible for the government now to make a contract so advantageous to the country as the one entered into by the Tupper administration. We were told by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, some weeks ago, that it was not the intention of the government to accept either of the tenders which have been put in recently, but that these tenders might serve as a basis for further negotiations, indicating that further negotiations were being carried on. The service which the government called for, and for which tenders were sent in, was rather of an extraordinary character. They called for boats of sixteen knots and boats of twenty-one knots alternately.

The government does not propose to accept any of the tenders put in. Is there any probability at all that this fast Atlantic service, over which the government has been working industriously but vainly for some seven years, will be realized during the next seven years ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My recollection of the so-called contract made by the government of Sir Charles Tupper, is that it was one-sided. It bound the government to do certain things and gave the other party the option of doing some things if it suited their convenience. It was not a contract which could be enforced against the contractors. There were privileges and options given them ; certain things were contingent on certain other things, so that practically it was not such a contract as my hon. friend describes. As to the deposit, the object of the securities we asked from Petersen, Tate & Company was to give assurance of good faith. No doubt the bargain with them, if it could have been carried out, was an excellent one. It assured us a good service at a much less sum of money than any previous proposition. The fact that it was not ultimately carried out is a cause of regret, but they gave every evidence of good faith. They were a firm of reputable standing, and they furnished, besides this money, a bank guarantee, which was afterwards given up. They gave us every evidence of good faith you could ask of any contractor. They were not able to go ahead, and eventually lost a good deal of money by the transaction.

As to the present position of negotiations I am afraid I can hardly add anything to what my right hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) stated. The government invited tenders for a service of twenty-one knots and sixteen knots. A sixteen knot service in comparison with a twenty-one knot service may seem very moderate; but sixteen knots would be a very substantial improvement on any service the Dominion has ever had. And, if we could get a sixteen knot service fortnightly, combined with a twenty-one knot service fortnightly, we should be in a very excellent position indeed. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce laid the tenders on the Table and stated that they were not regarded as satisfactory, because he thought the sums that were asked for the service were larger than we ought to pay. Practically nothing has happened since. We have not abandoned the question and are still free to receive proposals. Occasionally, gentlemen come to us and say the matter is engaging their attention, and that they will probably submit propositions to us. However, we have nothing to offer the House, and all that we can say is that the matter is still under consideration. We are prepared to make a contract with substantial people. But if they do not come, we can hardly create them. I do not know what further information we can give.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The government, apparently, is in the position of Mr. Micawber, waiting for something to turn up. I am very glad indeed that the government have not abandoned the question. They have abandoned the bank guarantee, and they are abandoning the deposit. It must be extremely satisfactory to the public that they have not abandoned the question also, but that they still have it under consideration.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Am I to understand that the deposit of $50,000 was remitted ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is what we are proposing; that is the purpose of the vote now under consideration.

Mr. OSLER. I agree that, probably under all the circumstances, it is the proper thing to return the deposit; and I think we are getting out of the proposed bargain for these bottle necked ships cheaply. I think we should have been in a bad way if these gentlemen had fulfilled their bargain. The government went into the scheme quite ignorant of what they were contracting for, undertaking a very large expenditure on an experimental ship which has not turned out to be a success for that class of navigation. We are burying one of the attempted bad bargains of the government at very small expense when we return this deposit.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot agree that it was a bad bargain. I respectfully submit that it was nothing of the kind. If carried out it would have been advantageous to the government, in fact, it was so good for the government that the financial men did not find anything in it for them, and they were compelled to give it up.

Mr. OSLER. But if the bargain had been gone on with, as the ships have not proved a commercial success, the service must have been a failure,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think this ship has been proved a failure. Very eminent naval architects have certified that the ships would serve the purpose for which they were designed. The difficulty was not in the class of ships, the difficulty was the financial one. The financial men were not making so much money out of it as they thought they ought to make, and could not go ahead.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) aware that there are some claims against Mr. Petersen about that deposit ? Are there not some claims filed in the department ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no recollection of them. I must not contradict my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) but I do not remember any.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Petersen employed attorneys and refused to pay them and they filed claims. I was asked to warn the hon. minister not to pay Mr. Petersen until these payments were settled.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will inquire into it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would file a claim for one gentleman——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the claim has not already been filed, I am afraid, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) will find it too late.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think some were filed.

Mr. CLANCY. It is said to be a very bad case that has no redeeming feature, and a very sad case where there is no consolation. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) has pointed out that, if we have not the fast Atlantic service, at least we have been saved from making a very bad bargain. It certainly is better to return this deposit than to have made the bargain that gentlemen opposite have proposed. A contract was made by the government of Sir Charles Tupper and was left to be dealt with by the present government. But it was rejected solely on the ground that a cheaper service could be had. But hon. gentlemen opposite were grasping at shadows. They endeavoured to make a bargain upon the basis of a scheme that had not been developed, and that no financial concern would look at. The Finance Minister is not candid enough to acknowledge that a great opportunity has been lost to Canada, that it would be impossible to enter upon a contract now such as that made in 1896 which these hon. gentlemen refused to carry out. It is only another addition to the procession of blunders that the present government have been guilty of since they came into office. Now the Finance Minister himself comes down and tells us that the scheme was a visionary one and that financial men would not look at it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. CLANCY. No, the hon. minister was not candid enough to say that, but that is the substance of his admission. And now he is waiting for somebody to come along and offer him a bargain. These hon. gentlemen evidently thought they had a bargain day arranged for and rejected the contract of the former government to make another arrangement, no matter what it might be. It was pointed out at the time that their scheme they proposed would be a failure. The scheme arranged for by Sir Charles Tupper's government at a cost of $750,000 to get a cheap service. And now we have the result—Canada still, after all these years, without a fast Atlantic service.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Will the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) be kind enough to tell me if there was a contract entered into by Sir Charles Tupper's government ? And what was the defect of the scheme which was contracted for by the present government ?

Mr. CLANCY. No doubt the Minister of Finance will give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche, Halifax) his answer.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) said there was a contract entered into by Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. CLANCY. I may inform the hon. gentleman from Halifax, if he has not heard of it before, that there was a contract ready for signature, and that this government, when they came into power, tore it up or made some other disposition of it in order to enter into a contract with Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Company, which has resulted as has been stated here to-night. No doubt the minister will tell him that there was a contract ready for execution on the part of the government of Canada, which contract they did not execute.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already stated—I do not know whether the hon. member for Bothwell was in his place at the moment—that my recollection of the document, which I have not looked up for some time, was that it was not, in the best sense of the word, a contract at all. It gave the contracting parties an option which practically took away the character of a contract. However, the document will speak for itself.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understood the member for Bothwell to say there had been a contract signed, and subsequently he explained that it had not been signed by the government. Could the hon. gentleman say why the government did not execute it ?

Mr. CLANCY. I am not in the secrets of the government, and the hon. gentleman has not been kind enough to tell us the reason himself. He is a member of that government, and it is an extraordinary thing for him to ask a member of the opposition the reason why he and his colleagues refused to sign the contract.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his ingenuity in evading the question. He knows well that I was alluding to the government which he said had prepared this contract. He said the government of Sir Charles Tupper had secured a contract.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, the hon. gentleman said that. He was comparing the contract which he said the former government had secured with the service we were trying to secure ; and in answer to the inquiry of the junior member for Halifax, he said that if the contract was not signed it was there awaiting signature, that is, awaiting the signature of Sir Charles Tupper's government. Now, I understand that document was prepared during the regime of the Tupper government, and was left unsigned by the Tupper government. My question was, why it was left unsigned by the Tupper government.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that matters of that kind may have been going on after the parliament of Canada had expired. These things cannot be done in a day. The question was never raised in the House from that time to this that there was any indisposition on the part of the then government of Canada to enter into the contract that is now spoken of. The hon. gentleman knows that the life of the then existing parliament expired by effluxion of time, and everything ceased at that moment. Those were the ordinary reasons why the document was not signed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The government to which the hon. gentleman refers as having expired had been in existence, along with its lineal ancestors, for eighteen years. This question did not begin the last month or two of the existence of that government, but it had been discussed for years, and we were told that a contract had been secured that they were anxious to have carried out, and I want to know why they did not sign it. If it was so good a thing, why did the government of that day not sign the contract ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And vote the money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They did not require to vote the money. The member for Bothwell says the parliament had expired, that is true. The hon. gentleman says the contract was made by the Tupper government. If, after parliament expired, it is true that the Tupper government had secured the contract, why did they not sign that contract ? That is what we have not yet heard explained to the House.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows that after Sir Charles Tupper went out of office he went to his successors and specially requested them to carry out that contract. That statement was made in this House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why did they not do it ?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows that the general elections came on, and while I am not in possession of the reasons, if any reasons existed for the contract not having been signed, it is plain that the question was never raised once inside or outside of this House that there was any doubt in the minds of the government of Canada that the contract should be executed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why did they not execute it ?

Mr. CLANCY. Let me ask my hon. friend why they have been dallying for seven years with another scheme ? Will the hon. gentleman tell me now why we have been told year after year that Petersen, Tate & Company have failed ? Why have we been told year after year that the government were negotiating and were likely to execute a contract at some time for a fast Atlantic service ? Why has this been going on from year to year ? I suppose the hon. gentlemen have some very substantial reasons for it ; and yet the hon. gentleman is totally oblivious to any conditions that might obtain during the short period that Sir Charles Tupper was Prime Minister of Canada, why a certain contract was not executed within a few months. The hon. gentleman as minister knows that these things are delayed probably for reasons that might be very valid. Delays will occur, though there may have been no intention of delaying.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will answer the hon. gentleman's inquiry why this government has not signed the contract with Petersen & Tate. It is because we have never yet had an opportunity of signing a contract that we deemed satisfactory and in the interest of Canada. When such a contract is presented to us for signature it will undoubtedly be signed. But the hon. gentleman says that they had a contract that was a most excellent one, and that for seven years the government and people of Canada have lost the advantage of a most excellent contract. Now we have reason for it, namely, because the Dominion government, by negligence, omitted to sign that contract.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not say that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the contract was lying there awaiting signature, and if it was a contract of such infinite advantage to the people of Canada, why did not the Tupper government sign it ? That is a question I want to have answered.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman know now at just what period the negotiations had closed before signing that contract ? Is the hon. gentleman prepared to say that it was not months or even weeks before Sir Charles Tupper went out of office ? There were negotiations upon which that contract was based. Does the hon. gentleman say that there were not negotiations upon which that contract was based occurring within perhaps a week or two of the time Sir Charles Tupper went out of office. The hon. gentleman is assuming that there were no negotiations for six or seven years, as in his own case. I warn the hon. gentleman that I do not undertake to give any reasons, I am merely pointing out what might be probable reasons. I ask him now if he is prepared to state that he knows that this matter had been a subject of negotiations for any considerable time before the government of Sir Charles Tupper went out of office, or whether it was a matter that came of negotiations immediately prior to the time of his going out of office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I presume the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has told us all he knows upon the subject, just as hon. gentlemen opposite have told the country over and over again that Sir Charles Tupper, after his government was formed, had secured a contract.

Mr. CLANCY. When ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. His government was formed on the 26th April, and it lasted for sixty days. Both on the floor of this House and all over the country the hon. gentleman and his party have boasted of his having, during that period, secured a most advantageous contract, and that that contract was executed, but now he tells us that——

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman must not put words in my mouth. I never said it was executed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then there was no contract. The hon. gentleman stated in the course of his remarks first of all that there had been a contract secured by the Tupper government. However, he desires, and I accept his explanation, to say that there was no signed contract, signed by the government. I presume it was signed by the other party. Was it signed by the other party? If so, why was it not signed by the government of that day ? Why did they not clinch the bargain that was awaiting their signature ? The hon. gentleman asks why we, in parliament, did not do our duty in seeing that it was signed. Sir Charles Tupper had an opportunity of signing it after the dissolution and before we came into office. There was no sitting of parliament while the contract was awaiting the signature of Sir Charles Tupper. Since the hon. gentleman cannot give the information as to why they did not sign it, I think the country will come to the conclusion that it was a very improvident bargain, that it was a one-sided affair, and that the conditions were such as to rob it of its value. I have not seen it for several years—I think a copy was laid on the Table of the House at the time—but I think it was a proposition that no business government would for one moment dream of accepting. It contained conditions liberating the contractors for all sorts of reasons. The ordinary perils of the sea were nothing to the conditions that were introduced here. They might take their ships off for this reason, for that reason and the other reason, and the pay was to go on. A great deal of discretion was left entirely in the hands of the contractors. It was not such a contract as the hon. gentleman represents it to be. It was not such a contract as would stand criticism before the House and the country. It was entirely a one-sided contract, and even taking the view that it contemplated a high rate of speed, the details robbed it of its value, and therefore Sir Charles Tupper did not see fit, I presume, in the interests of the country, to sign so unilateral an agreement, and left it unsigned. It was not the contract that the hon. gentleman boasts of, because if it had been, it would not have been left an unexecuted document and used for an electioneering campaign and nothing more.

Mr. MONK. That is not my recollection of what took place in 1896.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In 1896 ?

Mr. MONK. I hear for the first time the hon. Postmaster General criticising the details of the contract. My recollection of it was that the negotiations between the company and the government of Sir Charles Tupper were completed, that everything that his cabinet could do had been done, and that all that was required was the approval of the Governor General. That is my recollection, and I think my recollection is as correct as that of the hon. Postmaster General. It required the approval of the executive, and as soon as Sir Charles Tupper went out of power he wrote to this government urging them to obtain the sole element which was wanting to make a binding contract, because, as far as he was concerned, he had done everything that was in his power.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Wrote to the Premier ?

Mr. MONK. He wrote to the Premier, and during the late autumn session in 1896, immediately after the election of the 23rd June, Sir Charles Tupper repeatedly called the attention of the government to the matter.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, but previous to that and during the election campaign he stated that the contract was signed.

Mr. MONK. It was, as far as the government was concerned, perfect, but it required the approval of the Governor General. That is my recollection of it, and His Excellency at that time did not see his way clear to give that approbation. As regards the details of the contract, it was not a one-sided contract, and it was never criticised as a one-sided contract by this government, because it was not. It provided for certain contingencies.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A great many.

Mr. MONK. The criticism of my hon. friend related to the amount. We were to pay $750,000 and that amount was scouted by my hon. friend himself as an excessive amount, because the government of the day pretended that they could obtain just as good a service, or a better one, for a much smaller amount. That is my recollection of it, and I am quite prepared to admit that we should refund this amount to Petersen, Tate & Co., although I confess I do not think we should refund the interest, I think it would be quite sufficient to return the amount to them, but that is a question of detail. If the hon. Postmaster General says that there was no contract, he must know he was mistaken. There was a contract, and it was completed by the then government as far as it was in their power to complete it. It was withheld by the head of the executive. Sir Charles Tupper called the attention of the government to the fact that there was this complete and binding contract, but the government never carried it out because they pretended that they could get the service performed for a smaller amount.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know whether it was waiting or whether it was sent to the Governor General for execution or not. If that is the case, and if there was an Order in Council passed and the necessary signatures added, and it only remained for His Excellency's approval, it would, of course, rob my remarks of the force which otherwise would attach to them. My hon. friend's recollection may be quite correct on that point, but when the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) stated that it was an unsigned contract it naturally occurred to me to ask why it was unsigned.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has put words into my mouth that I did not utter. I never said anything about a one-sided contract, I spoke of a contract. The hon. gentleman became hypercritical, and he wanted to know why it was not signed. I did not say whether it was signed or not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend is quite mistaken. It was he who said that, and not myself. The hon. gentleman asked me why it was not signed. I frankly admitted that I knew no reason, and did not attempt to give a reason, but I would like to ask the hon. minister why he at one time opposed the Pacific cable and why he went up to his own constituents and told them that the Pacific cable would bear upon the farmers of Canada, that the Australian farmers would become their competitors in the British markets, that the farmers of Canada would have to bear the brunt and burden of the Pacific cable when it was laid, and I would like to know if he has received knighthood for his services in connection with that important work, after telling his own constituents that the burden would have to be borne by the farmers because the Australians would become their competitors in the British market ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Oh, I think the hon. gentleman is imagining a good deal.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). If I understand the language of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), he said there was a contract, and then he went on to argue that the fault on the part of this government was that they had not carried out the contract. I would like to know whether there was a contract or whether there was not a contract. I would ask my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to say whether there was a contract or whether there was not a contract. Lawyers, of course, understand what these things are, but it would be better for the intelligence of plain persons if some one would say whether there was a contract or whether there was not a contract.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is to be regretted that my hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Roche) has to pass over the government, who should know something about this matter, and ask for information from the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). However, I do not deny that he is perfectly right in doing so.

Some hon. MEMBERS Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Postmaster General has made the rather remarkable statement that the contract with Petersen, Tate & Company never was signed by this government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did he say that ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood him to say that distinctly. He said that when the proper contract was brought forward the government would sign it, but up to the present time the government had not signed it. In looking up the records of the debate in 'Hansard,' I find he has entirely different information as to that, from the information announced to the House by his colleague. As far back as the 12th of April, in 1897, Sir Charles Tupper said :

I would like to ask whether the statement published in the newspapers as to Mr. Chamberlain, the colonial minister's declaration on the floor of the House of Commons in England that a contract had been signed by the government of Canada and the contractors for a fast service is well founded.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, Mr. Chamberlain's statement was well founded and the matter is now under the consideration of the imperial authorities.

It was signed, and it was brought down to this House for approval, and parliament passed it, and, therefore, the Postmaster General is not very well informed as to that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I am quite well informed.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier said it was the Governor General.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We were talking about the contract between this government and Petersen, Tate & Company, and my hon. colleague from Halifax is talking about something else. Perhaps I ought to apologize to my hon. friend the Postmaster General and say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a misstatement to the House in April, 1897. We will talk to the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he next comes to the House about that misstatement, and ascertain the reasons which induced him to deceive the House in that way. Sir Charles Tupper explained the situation of this contract in April, 1897. In 'Hansard' for 1897, page 923, he says:

Under these circumstances, negotiations were entered into with the Messrs. Allan and the colonial office, and we arrived at a point which enabled us to agree upon a provisional contract; and all that was necessary, so far as the government of Canada was concerned, was the signature of His Excellency the Governor General. Honourable gentlemen opposite know that an Order in Council was prepared authorizing the government to make the provisional contract with the Messrs. Allan, subject to the approval of the House when it should meet, and so much importance did I attach to this work being carried rapidly and completely to completion, that I took the liberty, when leaving office, of writing a letter to the hon. gentleman who succeeded me, suggesting that if the assent of the Governor General to this provisional contract were obtained, a year would probably be saved. It requires something like two years to construct, with due regard to economy, ships suitable for so great and important a service; and as soon as the assent of His Excellency was obtained to the proposal, it could be submitted for the approval of Her Majesty's government.

It appears plain that the provisional contract was drawn up between his government and Messrs. Allan. The only thing that was necessary was the assent of the Governor General to the Order in Council, which was not obtained before Sir Charles Tupper's government went out of power. When his government did go out of power, Sir Charles Tupper wrote to the present Prime Minister urging upon him that that provisional contract should be executed. That should leave no doubt in the mind of the committee as to what was the real reason why the contract with the Allans was not carried out. As a matter of fact, it was not carried out by this government because they distinctly stated to the House that they could make a better contract with Petersen, Tate & Company. They laughed at Sir Charles Tupper's government because it proposed to give more money for this service than it was necessary, and members of the government of the day whose utterances I have in my hand, threw the taunt across the floor that the government of Sir Charles Tupper were paying altogether too much for this service and that an efficient and equally good service would be provided by this government under the contract with Petersen, Tate & Company at a saving to this country of $250,000 a year. We have had that saving for all these years it is true; in fact we have had a saving of the whole amount, but in the meantime, we have no fast Atlantic service and according to the statement of the Minister of Finance, there is no immediate prospect that we shall have any fast Atlantic service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think the country has suffered much by the absence of a fast Atlantic service for the last seven years. There are some people who think it is not an advisable service at all. Public opinion is more or less divided on it yet. There are those who favour it; the government would favour a satisfactory service on reasonable terms. But I doubt if any one can point to any injury the country has sustained by reason of not having a service up to the present date. Moreover, it would seem to me—though it is not a considered opinion—that the great development of Canada that has taken place in the last seven years, and the greater development that awaits her in the future, show that the time for securing a satisfactory fast line, so far as the interest of the country is concerned, is rather in the future than it has been in the past.

Mr. CLARKE. Why are you advertising for tenders?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Trying the feeling; seeing what we can get.

Mr. LENNOX. The Postmaster General has hardly weighed the statement which he made to the House. He endeavoured to cross-examine the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) and figuring the time he took to do this at $28 a minute, the result has hardly been satisfactory to the House. It is very easy for a distinguished lawyer such as the Postmaster General is to bother and badger an ordinary member of parliament, but I am glad to say that in this instance the hon. gentleman for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) was quite able to hold his own even against this distinguished lawyer and equally distinguished member of the government. The Postmaster General was one of the cabinet who ought to know in what position things were when they came into power—above all men, at least above all outside of the cabinet, he ought to know exactly in what condition that matter then stood. It does not reflect much credit upon the Postmaster General that he quibbled for so long a time to-night in order to lead us away from such facts as are important in this connection. The hon. gentleman is always on the alert and in his place in this House if any member of the government is, and he ought to know what takes place, and he must have known of the statement made by Sir Charles Tupper in this House. He knew what was taking place. He knew perfectly well that up to to-night no minister of the Crown had ever dared to say that the question was as to the particular terms of the contract other than the amount of money that was to be paid, under that contract, as proposed by Sir Charles Tupper. But to-night, the hon. Postmaster General imagining for the moment that perhaps some of us did not recollect the true terms of the contract, and the position in which it was at the time the former ministry went out of power, is so forgetful of his responsibility as a minister of the Crown that he tries to mislead the committee and in that way to mislead the country as to the true points at issue. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the question is not a quibble as to whether the contract was signed or not. The particular point is this, that there appeared to be a satisfactory basis of contract arrived at; that Sir Charles Tupper, in going out of office, requested this government to adopt that contract and have it examined and completed in the interests of the country; that this government professed that they could obtain a contract on better terms and for less money; that for seven years they have been going through the country proclaiming that they were obtaining a better contract, and leading the people to believe from time to time, that in a few weeks the matter would be concluded; and that to-day they come down with the statement that they have utterly failed to obtain a contract. The hon. Postmaster General tells us that perhaps after all the country has not lost much; that he is not sure that, if they had made a contract, it would not have been a loss to the country; that he is not sure that the bargain which this administration was entering into was not a bad and foolish bargain; and so he says to the country in the alternative, perhaps we have to congratulate ourselves after all that there has been no contract for a fast Atlantic service. Does the hon. gentleman forget the speeches he has made in North York, and in other parts of the country in reference to this fast Atlantic service? Does he forget the speech he made in Toronto at the banquet of the board of trade not very long ago in reference to the vast advantages that were to flow to Canada from the negotiations for transportation, the fast Atlantic service included, that were being entered into by this government? He wants us to understand, to-night that perhaps after all the country is to be congratulated on the fact that there has been a failure, and that there is no immediate prospects at all events of this government securing a contract. I think the hon. gentleman has hardly done himself justice in expending this long time, at $28 a minute, which he so often refers to, in employing his great skill as an advocate and his great ability as a minister of the Crown, to quibble about a matter which was entirely within his own knowledge, and which, if he did not know it, he should be slow to confess he was ignorant of, having regard for his responsible position as a minister in the administration succeeding the administration which had the contract before it.

Mr. CLANCY. It would be unfair to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr Roche) to allow this item to pass without at least recognizing his great thirst for information. The hon. gentleman had the following question on the Order Paper to day:

1. Did the present government find in 1896, on assuming office, in any of the public departments, a contract signed by the government, or any minister on its behalf, and the Messrs. Allan, for a twenty or twenty-one knot steamship service between Canada and Great Britain, for a subsidy of $750,000 by Canada, and $375,000 by the imperial government, annually, or for any other sum?

2. Did the present government find any bona fide, definite offer to provide the above-named service for the sums stated above, without any modification or reservation?

3. What were the reservations, if any, stated in the tender?

The business government to-day asked that that question be allowed to stand. Is it any wonder that the hon. gentleman should show such undue zeal to-night to ask from this side of the House the very question which the government refused to answer him to-day? The committee will no doubt now see why the hon. gentleman's anxiety has been so great. The ministers whom he so religiously supports through thick and thin, were unable or unwilling to answer his question, because they were playing the role of the Postmaster General, a very capable and ingenious gentleman, who was filled with information and kept it back for the purpose of a victory. The hon. gentleman has a high position in this House, and it hardly becomes him to talk for victory rather than the truth. That was a small victory, in professing not to believe that the government had all the means of knowing, and questioning those who had no means of knowing, as to the existence of a contract, and basing an argument upon it. I think the hon. Postmaster General has had a chance to repent, and I hope he has repented. I shall now turn to the hon. member for Halifax and ask him to press the government for the information that he is asking from this side of the House. It is a most extraordinary thing for a member of the House to ask a question of the government, and the government to request it to stand, and then for the hon. gentleman to ask this side of the House for the information. It is certainly becoming to the methods and understandings of the hon. gentlemen opposite and of this business government, who are always ready to supply not only their own friends, but the country, with information. This is a splendid instance of the business capability of this government, and the plight hon. gentlemen are placed in who are giving them so solid a support.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). As my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has been kind enough to allude to me, I would take the liberty of making a reply. I have heard in the press or elsewhere that the business government which preceded the present one had made a contract with the Allans for a twenty-one or twenty knot service on the most favourable terms, and that this unbusinesslike government had cancelled that contract. My hon. friend from Bothwell alluded to that as a contract, took for granted that it was a contract, argued from it as a contract, and drew his conclusions that that contract had been nullified by this unbusiness like government. I asked the question on that point this afternoon. Either it was a contract, according to my hon. friend from Bothwell, or it was not, according to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I ask these gentlemen, who have a knowledge of the subject, or else they ought not to have talked about it, whether this was or was not a contract? If it remains to be signed or authenticated by the Governor General or any other power it was not a contract.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to draw the attention of the government to some words spoken by the right hon. the Prime Minister in the debate on this subject. Discussing the Atlantic Fast Line service on May 10, 1898, he said :—

> The hon. gentleman referred to the fact that on a certain occasion I had read a telegram received from the Minister of Finance who was then in England, stating that Mr. Petersen had made a deposit which had been stipulated in the contract. That is so, I read that telegram and the telegram correctly stated that Mr. Petersen had made the required deposit and the money is now in deposit. My hon. friend asks what it is for, if it is simply an ornament. He asks if the deposit has been forfeited. No it has not been forfeited for the reason that it cannot be forfeited. We have no power to forfeit it.

Mr. WILSON. I have not heard yet why the interest should be paid on this deposit. The depositor was given as a guarantee that the contractors would carry out their contract. When they have not done that, it seems to me that they should lose the interest on the money. If they get back the principle they ought to be well satisfied.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The general rule with regard to contractors security is that when you return them you return them with the savings bank interest.

Mr. WILSON. Why should they be returned at all ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a matter of opinion. These people have lost a great deal of money. The hon. gentleman says that at least they should suffer the penalty of losing the interest, but they have lost a good deal more. If we do this as an act of grace, we should not spoil it by keeping back the interest.

Mr. CLARKE. As the government have lost the interest on this fast Atlantic line these people might reasonably be expected to lose the interest on their deposit.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In this case the government are holding strongly to the principle.

Mr. MONK. There is every reason to return the interest after the disclosure made to us by the hon. Postmaster General. He has told us that the prosperity of the country and the general trend of trade have led the government and himself to the conclusion that the time was not opportune——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say the government.

Mr. MONK. That the time was not rife for a fast Atlantic service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I expressly stated that I was not expressing the opinion of the government. I said speaking for myself.

Mr. MONK. No, the hon. gentleman may have spoken for himself, but he did not qualify his statement in that way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I said, speaking for myself.

Mr. MONK. Well, even so, but when a gentleman occupying the very strong position, the dual position, which my hon. friend occupies in the present administration, takes the House into his confidence and tells us positively that the time is not yet ripe for a fast Atlantic service, we are naturally led to ask him why the government advertised for tenders for such a service. For a long time I have suspected that the cause of the delay is to be found in the fact that the hon. gentleman does not believe in a fast Atlantic service for the country at present. Under the circumstances, I am not surprised at the government returning not only the deposit but the interest. But we are entitled to know why the government, after refusing to carry out the contract made by Sir Charles Tupper, has been continuously holding out to the public the delusion that it was seeking, month after month and year after year, to obtain a fast Atlantic service. We were led to believe that what was preventing the government from giving this country a fast service, was the difficulty of finding somebody capable of complying with the required conditions. But now we have the real reason from the Postmaster General. He tells us that he does not believe in a fast Atlantic service and that it may take some time yet before he himself, if not his government, will come to the conclusion that the time is ripe for carrying into execution the project which has been during the past seven years before this government. Under the circumstances, the frank statement of the hon. gentleman deserves to be taken note of.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is entitled to a great deal of credit for the ingenuity he displayed in twisting words and giving to them a meaning other than what was intended. I have often had occasion to admire the ingenious manner in which my hon. friend has managed to extract from a phrase a meaning different from that which people of common intelligence and sense would give to it. In this particular instance perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to recall the substance of what I said. I said, speaking for myself, and not for the government——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, well, well.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman have patience ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I cannot have patience with that at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What I said was that I doubted if the country had sustained any loss to speak of, because of that fast line not having been already established, and the reason I gave was that the commercial prosperity and growth of the country in the past seven years have been such, that I cannot see how they could have been any greater, and I am confident that in the future more satisfactory results will be obtained than would have been accomplished had we followed the policy advocated by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend spoke about the future, and it seems that in his opinion the time for establishing the fast line has not yet come.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We have been years hearing what a great thing this fast Atlantic service was going to be when hon. gentlemen thought they were going to carry through this contract with Petersen, Tate & Company, but now, when that contract amounts to nothing, we have the Postmaster General, after having boasted all over the country of the government's great feats in this matter, saying it was a very good thing that we had not succeeded in the last seven years in establishing that service, and I suppose, applying the argument of the Postmaster General, we must conclude that it would be just as advantageous for us to be without his service another seven years. The hon. gentleman asks us to wait until the country is making no progress, and says that so long as it is being developed commercially, it is not worth while having this fast Atlantic service. The hon. gentleman's remarks throws considerable light on the past seven years. We supposed the government were doing the best they could. We were fully aware that the best they could did not amount to very much, but we did suppose it was the best they could.

Now, it appears, according to the view of my hon. friend the Postmaster General, that it was not the best they could do, that they really believed all the time that it was not very much in the interest of the country that we should have a fast Atlantic service during these six or seven years. This enables us better to appreciate the position of the government with regard to this matter ; and the House and the country ought to be very much obliged to the Postmaster General for the frankness with which he has expressed his opinion with regard to the very important subject.

Mr. OSLER. If the explanation had not been given, I certainly would have left this House with the idea that the government were satisfied that the negotiations for the fast Atlantic service had failed. The Postmaster General, with his important position in the cabinet, must have great weight, he has expressed so freely the opinion that it is as well for the country that the fast line negotiations have failed, that I think it would be well for us to know where he is going to stand on this question, for it is a very important question, and one that will involve a very large expenditure if it is to be gone on with. And I think we should know whether his colleagues agree with him on that point, for I believe the country regard it as a very important matter. And I am much mistaken if there will not be a great feeling of disappointment in the country when it is found that this government, instead of being in earnest on the question of a fast Atlantic line, have all the time been playing false, have all the time been fooling the country. I remember being present at a banquet in Toronto, and I think the Postmaster General was there also. A cable came, timed to the moment, just when the Prime Minister was speaking. It was from the Minister of Finance, then in England, and stated that the contract had been concluded for the fast Atlantic service, the deposit secured and everything completed. If I mistake not, the Postmaster General was among those who applauded——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I was not there, nor did I applaud.

Mr. OSLER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. However, I believe that that applause represented the feeling of the country—that there was general delight that the fast Atlantic service had been secured. I think the discussion we have had to-night shows that, to all intents and purposes a contract had been made with the Allans which would have given to this country a fast Atlantic service, and that this government, when they came into power, threw the contract aside. I was in the House during the discussion on the reasons for throwing it aside, and my recollection is that the only reason given—at all events, the only reason that had any weight—was the extravagance of the contract. I do not think it is well now to try to get out of the responsibility for cancelling that contract by pleading a mere side issue in the conditions, particularly as the government made no attempt to renew the negotiations with Messrs. Allan, but at once set about making a new contract with other people on the plea of economy. The contract with Mr. Petersen failed, as all men who had experience with mercantile business knew it would fail, for it was not entered into on a business basis, but purely on an experimental basis. I say this government had no business to enter into a contract of an experimental nature on such a subject. The Petersen contract having failed, and the deposit being the only thing that keeps in mind this great failure, I throughly agree to the return of that deposit, and I agree with the minister in thinking that if the deposit is paid back, interest at 3 per cent should be paid. And I shall be glad to see the end of the Petersen contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suppose that gentlemen who attend great banquets in Toronto where the proceedings are marked with great enthusiasm should not be held too closely to their recollection of what occurred. I suppose, we shall have to forgive my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) if he depends upon a naturally fertile imagination, cultivated under very pleasant circumstances, in reporting statements coming by cable from the Minister of Finance, rather than upon any record of the facts. The hon. gentleman says that a cable was handed in, timed to the moment, stating that the contract had been concluded, the deposit had been made and all sorts of arrangements completed. The only foundation for the statement was that a telegram was read on that occasion from the Minister of Finance, not stating that the contract had been concluded, for it had been concluded months before, not stating that all arrangements had been made, but simply that the deposit had been made. That was the fact. The deposit had been made. The cablegram stated the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Mr. OSLER. But on the basis of the telegram, speaking from memory, all that I have stated was set forth. It was stated that this telegram marked the conclusion of these negotiations, that practically the transaction was completed, and the fast Atlantic service secured. I have been quite within the mark and have been speaking without exaggeration in the statements I have made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) stated that all these things were set forth in the telegram from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. OSLER. That was a mere detail.

An hon. MEMBER. What difference does it make ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, when anything is quoted as having come from me, I like to be correctly quoted.

Mr. MONK. I do not think I misrepresented my hon. friend the Postmaster General in the view he took of the fast Atlantic service ? He has admitted that the past attempts to secure that service have been fruitless. I think he went further, and stated that the country at the present moment did not require that service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not make any such statement.

Mr. MONK. That will be borne out by 'Hansard.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not at all.

Mr. MONK. I think that as this is essentially a government of individual opinion. We are entitled to know the opinion of the hon. gentleman's colleagues. We have here the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher), who is interested in the fast service. The Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), and my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine). I think that, under the circumstances, we are entitled to an individual expression of opinion from these gentlemen as to whether they coincide in the rather scornful expression of opinion we have heard from the Postmaster General as to this very important matter.

Mr. CLANCY. I am very glad to say that I can now furnish the Postmaster General with the information he pressed so strongly for. He wanted to know why the contract, if any, had not been executed. I frankly admitted that I was not prepared to offer any reasons.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) gave several reasons.

Mr. CLANCY. That is the hon. gentleman's (Hon. Sir William Mulock) language, not mine. The hon. gentleman pressed me very hard, because he wished the committee to believe that there was some substantial reason why that contract, if not executed, was delayed. That was the hon. gentleman's object, if he had any. There was no other object apparent from the course the hon. gentleman took. The reasons I gave were that posibly there was not time. Now I am going to read from a return that was brought down in connection with the fast Atlantic service. Here is what Mr. W. G. Parmalee, deputy minister, has to say :

> Sealed tenders addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, care of the High Commissioner in London or to the undersigned, marked on the outside 'Tenders for steamship service, Canada and Great Britain,' will be received at the office of the High Commissioner in London, or at the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Canada, up to and including Wednesday, June 10th, 1896.

That was the first time tenders had been asked for, and these tenders were to be received up to and including 10th June, 1896. We have a report here from the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, the late hon. W. B. Ives, dated 30th of June, 1896, of which I will read the first paragraph :

> The undersigned, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has the honour to submit for the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General in Council the following :
> Under the authority of an Order in Council of date the 6th of May, an advertisement was inserted in various Canadian and English papers asking for tenders for a 'fast Atlantic service,' under certain terms and conditions, copies of which, as hereto attached, were distributed to various steamship companies and to parties asking for the same. There were, within the time specified, three documents handed in at the office of the High Commissioner in London, endorsed 'tenders for steamship service, Canada and Great Britain,' and one was handed in at the Department of Trade and Commerce.

I shall not read further than that. It is evident that the reasons I gave, while not the real reasons, were perfectly true and obvious, namely, that possibly there was not time. The hon. gentlemen will see from what I have read that in the first place tenders were asked for on the 6th of May, 1896, and the last day for receiving such tenders was the 10th June, 1896. The elections took place on the 23rd of June, and this report made on the 30th of June by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, set forth that these tenders had been asked for, and asked practically the assent of the Governor General in Council to the contract, and the government resigned on the 11th of July following. Now, I would ask the hon. gentleman, in face of the return that has been brought down, and of which I have made a slight quotation, if it was not a fair suggestion to say that possibly there was not time to execute the contract.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I agree with the hon. gentleman in his last statement that when tenders were only received on the 10th of June, it was not unreasonable that the government should not have signed the contract on the 30th of June. I should be surprised if a contract of that magnitude could be dealt with in twenty days. The hon. gentleman has thrown some light on the subject by giving dates. But at the same time he does not dispose of the question. His party had been 18 years in office, and had had ample time to formulate a policy and carry it into effect if they desired. Why did they delay signing the contract until after they were defeated ?

Mr. INGRAM. I would ask if the penalties attached to this contract with Petersen & Tate were ever called for by the government ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not recollect what penalties there were other than the deposit of the security in cash and the bank guarantee. The bank guarantee was given up several years ago in connection with the readjustment of the contract.

Mr. INGRAM. I think in this contract you will find additional penalties if the company fails to carry out the contract ; also an additional sum of £10,000 is asked for. Has that ever been paid over by Petersen & Tate ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there were only two securities, one of £10,000, which was deposited, and the other a deposit of a bank guarantee. The bank guarantee was released some years ago. This deposit being repaid closed the transaction. I am not aware of any other penalties which were required.

Mr. INGRAM. Here is a clause in this contract that reads strangely now, so long a time has passed since 1897 :

> That at the same time they, the said contractors will give to the minister a guarantee to his satisfaction for the further sum of £10,000 sterling, which said deposit of £10,000 and guarantee for the further sum of £10,000 are to be deposited and given as security that they the contractors will supply the steamers in accordance with the terms of this agreement and within the time or times hereby contracted therefor (for which purpose it is agreed time is to be of the essence of this contract).

Time does not seem to be of the essence of this contract ; therefore I presume it was at this time that this famous telegram was read in the city of Toronto, Friday, May 28th.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is the date of the Toronto meeting ?

Mr. CLARKE. 6th of October.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the same time, nor anywhere near it.

Mr. INGRAM. This agreement was made on the 22nd of March, 1897.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is farther away yet from the October telegram.

Mr. INGRAM. This was on the 22nd of March in the spring and the meeting in Toronto was in October.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend said that it was about the time of the Toronto meeting and he finds it was far away.

Mr. INGRAM. It was near enough to suit the purpose of the right hon. Prime Minister in reading such a telegram with the object of influencing the electors. There is no question about the penalties attached. If the company did not build their vessels after a certain time, if they did not do certain things at a certain time there are penalties mentioned in this contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the deposit and the guarantee. These are the penalties.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, but in addition to that here is one of them :

> Subject to the conditions hereinafter contained, there shall be paid to Her Majesty as liquidated damages agreed to by the contractors :—
> (a.) The sum of five hundred pounds on each occasion when the contractors fail to provide at the appointed Canadian or British port a mail ship in accordance with contract, ready to put to sea at the appointed time, or when such mail ship shall not actually put to sea and proceed on her voyage at the appointed time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They would be very poor if we enforced that.

Mr. INGRAM. Why is it that these contractors were to be allowed 3½ per cent and the hon. gentleman is now only allowing them 3 per cent. I think the government should not allow them any interest at all. I think they are doing very well to get their $50,000 back and this government have been lax in the performance of their duty in not demanding the payment of the forfeit by this company for failing to enter into this contract. It is well known that prior to 1896 one of the strongest supporters in the fast Atlantic service was Sir Charles Tupper. He came to this country in 1896, he became the premier of Canada, he acted in that capacity for sixty days and during that short period of time, as is conclusively shown by the Blue-book, the government of which he was the head were fully alive to this important question. As the result of advertisements asking for tenders to be closed on the 10th June, they had a contract prepared, signed by the government, and agaiting the signature of the Governor General. So, I say it does not lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to charge the government of that day with laxity in their duty to try and bring about this fast Atlantic service. But, this is in line with the policy of the Liberal party since 1896. They have no policy upon any particular question. They are simply opportunists. Even after they have agreed on measures in Council and before bringing them down to this House, if popular opinion is against them they are prepared to revoke their measure and come down with a different policy next day to meet public clamour. When the government of the Conservative party ruled this country and when the hon. gentlemen then occupying seats on the opposite side of the House asked the government of the day where they stood on any particular question, the Conservative leader of the government rose up and declared their policy. If the opposition of that day asked any question concerning the policy of the government in any particular line the Conservative party were ready to state their policy.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were great on policy.

Mr. INGRAM. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were better on policy than performance.

Mr. INGRAM. They were a constructive party while hon. gentlemen opposite are a destructive party. That is the difference between the two parties. The Conservative party in opposition are not afraid to declare their policy. They are prepared to declare their policy on any line in regard to the government of this country, while the government lacks stamina and backbone enough to state what they think upon any question, and especially what their policy is in respect to the railway question. People have come to the conclusion, especially since what transpired here the other day, that the government are not prepared to announce themselves on any important or serious question. In addition to what I have said I desire to add that I think it is a crying shame that the business of the session should be in the position we find it to-day. When the speech from the Throne was brought down over four months ago, I want to know if the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had it in view then to keep this House in session and to keep this opposition waiting for over four months for its policy to be presented on the transportation question. Did he have that in view at the time he came down with the declaration which was put in the mouth of the Governor General ? If he did not have that in view, how does it come that we have been kept here for four and a half months and that the government are not prepared to state to the opposition and to the country what their policy is upon the transportation question? It is a crying shame and I want to repudiate the assertion that is often made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that the opposition are to be charged with obstructing the business of the House. We are adopting the only legal and proper course that is open to the opposition, namely, to call the government to account for having failed to bring down important legislation that was promised to this House months ago. When the right hon. Prime Minister said the other day that it required courage and boldness to introduce a question of that kind a broad smile spread over the countenances of members of the opposition because we did not expect from the leader of a great party that it required boldness or stamina to come down and proclaim his policy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are getting a little out of the track of the fast Atlantic line?

Mr. INGRAM. It is a little out of the track, but I think it is a good thing to remind hon. gentlemen of their shortcomings.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it not congenial?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, very.

Mr. INGRAM. The sooner hon. gentlemen proclaim their great measures which they propose to bring down to this House the sooner we will get through. In the meantime, as a humble member of this House, I want to deny that any hon. member on the opposite side of the House has any right to accuse any hon. gentlemen on this side with obstructing legislation?

Mr. OSLER. To show that I did not exaggerate in the statement I made as to the effect of the celebrated cable, in regard to which, as the hon. Minister of Finance said, I was quoting from memory, I shall quote the 'Globe' report of the banquet, which will show how genuinely in earnest apparently the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues were at that time. This is from the 'Globe' of the 7th October, 1897, and the banquet was on the 6th October:

If I find anything good in the programme of my predecessors—I hope Sir Frank Smith will not accuse me of any theft if I say so—(laughter). I am quite willing to put on the clothes of Sir Frank Smith, and they would be a good fit, I am sure. (Laughter). The government of which Sir Frank Smith was an honoured member had determined to have the fast Atlantic service, that is to say, the service to carry passengers especially, and to carry the mails. But, you know, I must say, though it be in the presence of Sir Frank Smith, that we are above all things an economical government. (Laughter).

What roars of laughter there would be if the right hon. Prime Minister had said that at a banquet at the present time!

That is a compliment which I cannot pay to the government of which Sir Frank Smith was a member. (Laughter). I wish I could; but the truth, you know, must be the truth upon all occasions. (Laughter). Sir Frank Smith's government had undertaken to give to that service a bonus, a subsidy, of $750,000 a year. We thought it was too much. We thought we could do it for less, and we succeeded in making a contract with a firm for a subsidy of $500,000, saving to the country therefore the sum of $250,000. We contracted with the firm of Petersen Tate & Co., a Newcastle firm, a firm composed as we ascertained, of men of the highest honour, of the highest integrity, and the highest competency in their profession. Mr. Petersen and Mr. Tate have had a good many obstacles to overcome, as is always the case with men who launch a new idea into the world.

Here the Prime Minister acknowledges the truth of what I said, that it was a new idea and an experiment, and it turned out to be a fad.

Their idea was a new one, and therefore it met with objections and with discouragement from more than one class of people; and not later than a few weeks ago, or a few days ago only, it was stated that the scheme of Mr. Petersen had fallen down, that it must be considered as absolutely a thing of the past. Mr. Petersen and Mr. Tate were at work. They work as men always work when they want to succeed. They said nothing; they answered no accusations; but to-day I have a telegram from my friend and colleague, Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, to this effect: 'Petersen has made to-day the deposit required by the contract.' (Loud cheering and great enthusiasm).

The contract was signed and the deposit was paid. I was quite mild when I quoted the enthusiastic manner in which the Prime Minister elaborated on this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was the enthusiastic manner in which the telegram was worded.

Mr. OSLER. Well, I was quite right anyway.

It is with joy indeed that I welcome this explosion of satisfaction at the announcement that this scheme has not failed, but that it is to be carried through. I know that in some quarters this idea of having this passenger traffic amongst us was not popular; but, sir, let me say to you that if there is a patriotic idea in the land it is the idea that we should not only carry the freight, but carry the passengers between America and Europe. (Hear, hear, and applause). We can do it, we ought to do it, and now it is no longer in doubt.

What will the Prime Minister say to the Postmaster General's doubting to-night.

This line of steamers shall be floated probably within two years, certainly within three years; and when we have this class of steamers afloat on the ocean I have no hesitation in saying, such is my confidence in the scheme—and it is a confidence which must be borne by every man who has looked into the subject—that we shall have the great bulk not only of Canadian traffic, but of American traffic as well. Sir, remember this, what I say is no idle boasting. Remember that the St. Lawrence route is the shortest of all routes. Now, as you know, all men have an aversion to the sea—I know I have —(laughter)—and my experience is not exceptional in this respect ; all men have a terror of the sea ; but when tourists know and are aware that upon the Canadian line, with a class of steamers having a speed of twenty knots an hour, equal in comfort to the best afloat on the ocean, there will be no more than four days between land and land—(applause)—the Canadian line will be patronized as no other. (Great cheering). What will be the case when this line is in operation ? The case will be this : that a passenger taking the steamer at Moville, say, if Moville is to be the Irish port, within less than four days will be in the strait of Belle Isle, and then within less than one day, or twenty-four hours, will be in the harbour of Quebec, and one day's sailing on the beautiful St. Lawrence with its magic scenery and free from all discomforts of the sea. (Applause). When we have this line with us we shall not only have the entire Canadian traffic, but we must as a necessity have the larger proportions of the American traffic. This that I say may perhaps seem presumptuous. It is not. At all events, if it is, I have such an unbounded faith in my country that I believe every word that I say now and I am sure it will come out to be true also.

I do not think I can be accused of having exaggerated.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Who made that speech.

Mr. OSLER. Why, that was the Prime Minister before an audience in Toronto.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When.

Mr. OSLER. In October, 1897.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. OSLER. I think I was quite right when I suggested that the cablegram was in beautiful time. I have no doubt it had been waiting in the office for a considerable time and it was brought out and its date altered so as to make it opportune, and it was received with tremendous applause. It was the key note of the meeting; that the government had succeeded in securing a fast Atlantic service equal to the best on the continent; that they had repudiated the contract that had been made with the Allans; that as an economic government should, they would save the country $250.000 a year, and that in two or three years at the outside the most magnificent fleet of boats on the ocean would be sailing from Quebec to Europe. This was a very poetic vision, but when it came to fulfilment the government were entirely unable to get any futher than the initiatory stage, and the Minister of Finance had the deposit and he has held it at a rather high rate of interest for the benefit of the country ever since.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hour is late but I beg to rise to say that I am troubled about the speech of the Postmaster General. I feel a great deal of anxiety for him. He says he has been speaking for himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. COCHRANE. He will be out tomorrow.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He is the master of the administration now.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think that the rule has been laid down very clearly that a Minister of the Crown in this country of ours has no right to speak for himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In England they have such a right, but England is a small country and the constitutional rule is not well known nor well understood. In Canada a Minister of the Crown has no right to speak for himself. Now, the Postmaster General has either spoken for himself or he has spoken of somebody else. If he has spoken for himself he has violated the constitution.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am very much afraid that he will be punished and his punishment will be severe indeed if he is punished as he deserves to be punished.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If the Postmaster General has spoken for the government he has no right to say that he was speaking for himself. We are in a difficult position. We have the right to know, when a minister of the Crown speaks in parliament, whether he speaks for the government or whether he speaks for nobody at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He has no right to speak for himself and if he does not speak for his colleagues he speaks for nobody. I am anxious to know where we stand tonight. We have heard a great deal about the fast line. The Postmaster General has reproached one of our friends with the statement that he was off the track. I would like to see the track of that fast line.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If there is any track to that fast line at all I want to know where that track is.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) To Halifax.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In the winter months Halifax is the right track, but I would like to know what track the government intends to take in the summer months. One member of the government said that it was premature to expect that the contract should be awarded now. I have some experience in awarding contracts and when tenders are asked it is an evidence that the plans are matured and that the tenders are to be decided upon. When those tenders were asked the government had a policy and the country has a right to know when the government will adjudicate upon the tenders.

Parliament is sitting and in my humble judgment I think it is the proper time to decide upon this very important matter. We have been years and years trying to arrange for the fast line. I am not prepared to say that the government have not done the best they could, but that best has not been much. I am very sorry to say so, but perhaps it is just as well that we have not decided sooner. However, it seems to me that now that the government have asked for tenders, and having told the country that they were ready for the question, they should take the House into their confidence and decide one way or the other. But, again, I am very much afraid my hon. friend the Postmaster General is swimming in deep water.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I must pay my hon. friend the courtesy of recognizing his remarks; I quite understand the tenor in which they are expressed. He is quite aware of the efforts made by the government to secure the fast line; it is all a question of terms. If the people of New York desired a line, they could have one, as that city affords such attractions on very satisfactory terms. Our own Canadian ports are coming to the front, and becoming more and more attractive to shipping, and as the days go by, we shall be able to make better terms. The government, ever since it was formed, has been prepared to enter into a contract if satisfactory terms could be secured; and I think, with the progress the country has made, is making, and is sure to make, that a satisfactory contract may be looked for in the near future. It is, however, a question dependent on the amount the country is prepared to pay, and the cost in turn depends on the attractiveness of the route itself. If Canada were a sufficiently populous and wealthy country, we would not have to pay a subsidy; we would have fast lines coming here because it paid them to come. But all things go by comparison. My hon. friend is quite aware that we are as anxious as the opposition to have a fast line when it can be obtained on terms which will be deemed to be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I think it is a fortunate thing that no contract has been entered into, and I am surprised to hear hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House speaking of this as a fast line. It is no such thing; it is a slow line. With the progress which Canada is making, and with the intelligence of the people, I think we must one of these days have a fast line that will be worthy of the name. Of course, the selection of the route is a question for the future to decide; but when we find ourselves so many knots below what is the case elsewhere, we are very far behind the times if we speak of this as a fast line. I am well pleased that no contract has been entered into, because we would be only the laughing stock of other nations if we dared to call what Canada has a fast line.

Amount required to meet the expenses of the royal commission appointed to make inquiry into recent industrial disputes in the province of British Columbia (including payments not exceeding $5 each per day to members of the civil service for services in connection with this commission, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act), $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the position of the work of that commission at the present time?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This commission was appointed this spring to make an inquiry into the clauses of the industrial disturbances in the province of British Columbia, which have been more or less frequent for some time. This spring there were strikes in the city of Vancouver, and at the Union and Extension coal mines. The inquiry was conducted by two gentlemen, Chief Justice Hunter and Mr. Elliott Rowe.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is Mr. Rowe's occupation or profession

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think he is a clergyman. The secretary was Mr. King, the Deputy Minister of Labour, and the stenographer was one of the stenographers of the Department of Labour. The vote has reference to them, when it allows $5 a day for their services. This commission entered on their work about the 1st of May, and they have been continuously engaged almost to the present time. The original Order in Council required them to complete their work at an earlier date, which was named; but as the work proceeded, they found they had not completed it within the time named, and an Order in Council was passed extending the time to the 30th June. The Deputy Minister of Labour has only to-day reached Ottawa from the west. The commission closed their labours of taking evidence towards the end of June, and the deputy informed me to-day that he had brought the report to Ottawa, and in a short time doubtless it will be given to the public. He was detained on the way here performing some official work at Calgary on his way east or he might have been here three or four days before. He informed me that the commission had sat almost continuously from the commencement of their labours, at the city of Victoria, at the city of Vancouver, at Cumberland and at Ladysmith, the places where these strikes were. I do not wish to anticipate the finding of the commissioners by alluding to its tenor; but when it is given to the public, I think it will prove to be of great public interest and value. Incidentally it may be mentioned that the commission held their sittings practically in open court. Both parties were represented by counsel, and the issues were well dealt with by both parties. I think the result was that in both mines peace was restored. At Vancouver also the parties were represented by counsel, the strike ended, and the men returned to work. When the commissioners' report is given to the public, it will be found to throw a good deal of light upon the industrial troubles that have befallen British Columbia for some time past.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Are all the strikes over in British Columbia now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that is the case. The strikes at the coal mines and on the railway are settled now. Calgary is not in British Columbia, but there was a carpenters' strike there which paralyzed many other industries. That strike, which had been in existence for many months, has now been declared off. These men have resumed work and requested the deputy to arrange for a standing agreement between the men and their masters for the settlement of the future disputes so as to avoid strikes. My deputy informs me that the employers have agreed to that arrangement and have even gone further. They have entered into its spirit and since the men have consented that there shall be no strike without an appeal being made first to arbitration, they, in a like manner, bind themselves not to lock out without first referring the dispute equally to the standing board of arbitrators for Calgary. The coal mine strikes at Union and Extension mines had been in existence for several months and was due to causes which will be made quite clear when the report is presented to parliament.

Mr. INGRAM. How many days was this commission sitting altogether ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The commission issued towards the end of April and lasted continuously. I fixed a date within which the work was to be completed so that there might be no delay. The deputy told me that the report of the commission alone covers about 150 pages of type written foolscap and that the evidence is most voluminous. It was taken in public meeting, the court-house being thronged, and the questions fought out well on both sides by counsel.

Mr. INGRAM. Who were the counsel ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There may have been different counsel at different places, but, I recollect the names of some that my deputy gave me. One of the counsels was Mr. Wilson, a member of the British Columbia government, another was Mr. E. P. Davis, a leading counsel in the city of Vancouver. There may have been others whose names I have not heard. I think that Messrs. Wilson and Davis were representing the employees. Mr. Bodwell may have been engaged in the case as well, but that I do not know.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice that this item is for $10,000. Were there any other charges?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. None whatever. This is the total amount.

Mr. INGRAM. What pay do the commissioners receive ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There were two members of the civil service on that commission. One was Mr. King the Deputy Minister of Labour, and the other a short hand writer in the Labour Department. The item of $5 per day each is for those two.

Mr. MONK. Were they getting this over and above their own salary ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, and it was very reasonable that they should have it. It is quite impossible for people travelling to make up for themselves their legitimate disbursements. There are many small items of disbursement, which are not strictly taxable in their living expenses, but which they have to pay.

Mr. MONK. Their expenses were paid, apart from this $5.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The $5 was to cover any expenses over and above living expenses.

Mr. INGRAM. What was the pay of the commissioners per day ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the Chief Justice was paid $40 per day. I do not remember what the others were paid. There will be some printing to pay for too.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman give us the information later ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes; of course these items will appear in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did the hon. gentleman not pay a substitute for Rev. Mr. Rowe ? While he was away, who looked after the spiritual wants of his people ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that he has any charge.

Mr. BLAIN. What demand was there for the appointment of this commission ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What does the hon. gentleman mean ?

Mr. BLAIN. I remember the hon. gentleman making the statement that the Labour Department were now ready to cope with strikes in the different parts of the country. He instanced Valleyfield, and sent his deputy to Rossland to look after a gold strike. I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman has found his department unable to cope with these strikes, and for that reason has appointed a commission.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The object of this commission was to take evidence. It was a semi-judicial tribunal, clothed with the power to take evidence and examine witnesses under oath. The chief justice is eminently qualified to weigh evidence and draw conclusions. That commission has rendered great public service. I have already heard from British Columbia satisfactory expressions of opinion as to the good it has accomplished, and my hon. friend will put himself and his friend in a false position in the eyes of the people of that province, if he should assume an attitude of hostility to that commission. The commissioners were men of eminent standing and knowledge and had the confidence of both parties. It has restored harmony and brought to light circumstances which were hidden and will be most interesting and valuable to the industrial world.

Mr. INGRAM. Two or three years ago serious difficulty arose in the mining districts in British Columbia. The hon. minister sent his deputy out there for the purpose of bringing about a settlement; and I think that both sides were dissatisfied with his ruling. I suppose the state of feeling was such there that those who had invested capital and those employed in the mines thought it was as well a commission should sit for the purpose of inquiring and placing the facts before the House, so that members could find out where the cause of the trouble lay. I presume that the hon. gentleman from the North-west Territories who introduced the Bill in another portion of this legislature for the purpose of preventing foreigners coming into this country to agitate strikes was largely prompted by the difficulties that occurred in British Columbia. If we have the information that this commission have to-day, it may be useful for us, and if the hon. minister will lay it before the House before some of the Bills now coming up for consideration are passed, it may assist in the discussion of those Bills.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I requested the deputy to-day to have the report printed with all despatch, and I have no doubt he already has placed it in the hands of the printer. He only arrived to-day. My hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) is entirely misinformed as to the supposed state of feeling in Rossland and of the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Labour. The Deputy Minister of Labour was invited to Rossland to deal with troubles between employers and employees in the mining districts. There was a strike—

Mr. INGRAM. A couple of years ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not so long ago as that, I should think. He went there and investigated the cause of the strike and made his report. I do not wish to be bound by what I say now, because my recollection of the facts may be astray. But, as I remember it, this report was to the effect that the strike ought not to have taken place. His verdict was against the strikers. It is hardly likely that both parties would be satisfied with the verdict, but I have reason to believe that some of the strikers have come to the conclusion that they were in the wrong, and that the report was justified. I think probably the report of the commission may incidentally explain the causes that led to the strike in Rossland. It was not necessary to go to Rossland, because peace had been restored, the parties were at work again, and a united effort was being made by both sides to revive the mining industry. The commissioners thought that, under the circumstances it would be better not to go there and inquire into the causes of the trouble in Rossland. That was the decision of the commissioners in their wisdom, and I agree with it; it was not in the public interest to revive the feeling that existed so long between the parties.

Mr. BLAIN. That was the reason I asked the question. The Postmaster General has stated that when the strike took place in Rossland an invitation was extended to his department to send the deputy minister there, and he agreed to the request and sent the deputy minister. But what I wanted to know was why, when a strike took place in another part of the province, he did not send the deputy minister there rather than appoint a very expensive commission?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have given my explanation.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the hon. minister find that his department was unable to cope with the strike and the labour troubles in British Columbia, and for that reason he was compelled to appoint this commission? While I am on my feet, I would ask the hon. gentleman to answer the question where the request came from for the appointment of this commission to investigate the labour troubles in British Columbia?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Macpherson) discusssed the subject with me and favoured the appointment of commissioners. So did Senator Templeman, a member of the government And they doubtless voiced the opinion of British Columbia to a considerable extent. I think my hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) also pressed it upon the consideration of the government, and, in fact, my recollection is that all the members from British Columbia supporting the government expressed the same opinion.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And did not all the members opposing the government do the same ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no doubt my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes)—speaking now in all seriousness—if he has followed the reports in the press of the doings of this commission—will approve of the work that has been done, and will regard the commission as a very good thing for the province of British Columbia.

Mr. MONK. The Postmaster General did not answer the question put to him as to whether this commission was asked for by anybody. What strikes me is this : The Department of Labour costs us about $40,000 a year, and the amount of this vote is about one-third of that amount. Mr. King, I think, about doubled his salary for a considerable amount of time by this commission.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How ?

Mr. MONK. His salary, I believe, is $2,500. And on this commission he gets $5 a day and all expenses besides. I think that about amounts to doubling his salary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. MONK. I think it is. If it was necessary to take evidence to place before the House and the country in reference to the industrial position in British Columbia, it might have been done with far less expenditure. In fact, I do not see why Mr. King, if he is competent to fill the position of Deputy Minister of Labour, could not have proceeded there. Commisssions of that kind have been issued and have taken evidence without so much expense to the country.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What instructions did the hon. minister give to the commissioners ? Did he direct what questions to ask ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I may say to my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), also to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes), who have spoken, that, living as I do in British Columbia and in the mining districts where a number of these strikes have occurrred, in the coal mines, the gold mines and others, I may be permitted to say something on the necessity for such a commission as this. If these hon. gentlemen lived there as I do, and understood the conditions as I do, I do not think they would for a moment cavil at the government having appointed this commission rather than attempt to carry out the work by any single officer. This commission was given a very wide scope as to the taking of evidence and inquiry generally ; and, if I may anticipate what the report of the commimssioners will be, I think members of the House will regard the appointment of the commission as in the interest of public peace generally and in the interest of trade generally, and will be thankful to the government for appointing that commission to bring out these facts. I do not think that there is any way in which the work could have been so successfully done as by the means adopted by the government.

With regard to the strike in Rossland, some two years ago, I was in Nelson, not far from there, at the time Mr. King came out, and I may say that Mr. King did everything possible to bring about an understanding between the different parties. He met with some difficulty at the hands of the unions, and in fact was at first refused the privilege of interviewing the men generally upon the question. When it was afterwards suggested that they should discuss the matter and come to an arrangement, I am informed that the unions would not agree to be bound by any decision that was come to ; that while they were willing to submit the difficulty to investigation, they would not bind themselves to accept a verdict. Therefore, no fault could be found with Mr. King, because he did his duty as far as he was permitted to do it. A similar result might have occurred in the present case had that course been adopted. But as I say, the commission that has just sat were in a position to get at the root of the whole evil. I trust they have done so, and from the personnel of the men who compose that board of commissioners, I am satisfied they did do so. I think when their report is brought down a state of facts will be disclosed which will show that it was necessary to inquire into the power, if any, exercised by the western federation of miners or other organizations of the United States, over our unions in Canada. That certainly is a matter about which the people of Canada should have something to say, and in relation to which they should be in possession of the facts. If such power is detrimental to the interests of trade and the relations that should subsist between employer and employee in this country, the sooner the western federation of miners are cut off from exercising any control over our unions in Canada, the better for all concerned in Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend seems to find fault with us, and says that we are cavilling at the committee.

Mr. GALLIHER. Not at all, I did not mean that. I think it is perfectly proper for members of the opposition to make themselves familiar with the reasons for the actions of the government, and they can only do so by questioning the minister.

Mr. INGRAM. We are not as well posted as the ministers, and we have to ask for information in this way. But the hon. gentleman has gone too far when he says that no fault was found with Mr. King, because fault was found with him.

Mr. GALLIHER. By whom was the fault found ?

Mr. INGRAM. The minister has said by the union.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some of the men, I do not know whether it was the union.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister has referred to the committee not sitting in Rossland. That may have been a proper move for the commission to take. Rossland is certainly one of the most troublesome points in British Columbia as regards labour troubles.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. All is quiet there now.

Mr. INGRAM. Here is a commission appointed for which the country has to pay, supposed to be composed of good sensible and competent men, and surely those interested in a matter of so much importance would find no fault in the commission sitting in Rossland to investigate the difficulties there because if they had gone to Rossland they would probably be in a better position to get evidence affecting the strikes in the past, and be able possibly to prevent them occurring in the future. However, I do not want to anticipate. I am willing to wait until the report is brought down, when we will have an opportunity of criticising the department and condemning it, if it deserves condemnation.

Amount required to meet expenses in connection with the commission to inquire into the Martineau defalcations, $1,100.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The three commissioners were Mr. Courtney, the deputy minister; Mr. Burn and Mr. Kent. The deputy minister receives no compensation. The report has been brought down.

Mr. BLAIN. Referring to the preceding item, did the minister say that the government instructed the commissioners where they were to hold their sittings, and that they were not to go to Rossland ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) asked what instructions were given to the commissioners. Their instructions were contained in the Order in Council appointing them, and required the commissioners to investigate the causes of the industrial and transportation troubles that have taken place in British Columbia. I think the commissioners were requested to sit at certain places, but well on towards the close of their sittings, the secretary of the commission telegraphed me to the effect that the commissioners thought it inexpedient in the public interest to go to Rossland, and left the matter in my hands to decide. I concurred with them in that view, and relieved them from going to Rossland. I do not think it would have been in the public interest to do so under the circumstances.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister give his reasons why he thought it was not in the interest of capital and labour that they should not sit at Rossland ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Among the reasons set forth in the communication sent to me, one was that peace had been restored, and that it was not deemed expedient to bring the two parties, who had so recently been in hostility, into court again. There had been a long strike between employer and employee, and a great deal of trouble had been occasioned, loss of money, people had gone away, industry had suffered, and people were heartily sick of the trouble and wanted peace. It was thought that to bring these two hostile parties together again and inquire into the causes of their quarrel in the past, would have a bad effect, and would disturb the harmony that had been restored.

Grant to the Canadian South African Memorial Association, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The object of this is to assist this association in marking the graves of Canadian soldiers who lost their lives in South Africa. The work has been undertaken by an association one of the chief members of which is Lady Minto. The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) is also one of its members, and I think that the military people generally are associated with it. They have raised by private subscription between $6,000 and $7,000 and they have asked that the government should contribute. I am inclined to think that the government can do the work better in this way by co-operating with the association than if we were to undertake it independently. The military people are giving a great deal of attention to the work, they have the co-operation of the military authorities in South Africa and as a result of this fund there will not be a grave of a Canadian soldier who lost his life in South Africa that will not be marked by a suitable monument.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Dominion government assumes no control ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, we give them this grant the same as we would give it to any other organization.

To cover unprovided items, 1901-2, as per Auditor General's Report, page C—4, $200,635.65.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a formal item which the Auditor General desires to have passed at the end of the year to square his accounts. Where an appropriation is made for a department it sometimes happens that in one branch the appropriation is over expended, whereas in another branch there is an amount that is unused. Of course, the grants unused are greatly in excess of the over expenditures. The Auditor General likes to have this vote put into the Supply Bill. It is not really a vote of money, but it is rather a formal confirmation of the small over expenditures that have occurred during the year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was merely going to observe that it would have the effect of increasing the appropriation for a particular item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As to a particular item it may be so, but the documents show that there are very large sums that are unused. Here and there it is found impossible to keep the expenditure to the exact sum appropriated, and in sum cases by transfers from one branch to another a readjustment takes place. This is not properly a vote of money, but it is simply to enable the Auditor General to square his accounts at the end of the year. I confess that for some years I had some difficulty in understanding why this was necessary, but it has been the practice of parliament for some years to vote an item of this character.

Scientific institutions and hydrographic surveys—amount required for time ball at Halifax, N.S., $1,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This time ball is erected at the request of the board of trade and the shipping interest at Halifax to give the mariners the time. The same thing exists at every ocean port. There is one at Montreal and also one at Quebec, maintained by the harbour commissioners. This is a new one and it is being erected under the supervision of Prof. Stupart, of the meteorological service.

Gratuity to Capt. A. M. MacGregor, late master of the surveying steamer 'Bayfield,' on his retirement (one year's salary), $1.050.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain MacGregor, who is 75 years of age, has been 18 years in the service. He is now too old for the service and this is the ordinary gratuity of one year's salary.

Mr. INGRAM. Is this Captain MacGregor who used to sail on Lake Huron and Lake Superior ?

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Thomson) wanted to say a word or two in regard to this item not with the idea of objecting to it but he was rather inclined to think that some more liberal allowance should be made to this gentleman, who, I understand, has been twenty-seven years in the service of the country.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain MacGregor is perfectly satisfied with this, and this is the ordinary gratuity.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know nothing of the circumstances beyond what was mentioned to me by my hon. friend from North Grey. If the captain himself is perfectly satisfied with the allowance I would have nothing to say about it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is there not some rule that a month's salary shall be given for every year's service ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That comes under the Superannuation Act. This is not under the Superannuation Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain MacGregor is perfectly satisfied.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will be the order of business for to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Several of the Bills and resolutions on the Paper may be reached, but we will move supply, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) resuming consideration of his estimates. There are a number of scattered items yet which, if opportunity offers, will be brought forward. I would like myself to invite attention to the supplementary estimates of the Railway Department, and if I can find time to-morrow to get the information they may be brought forward, but I doubt if I will have the time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it the intention to take the resolutions with regard to bounties.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Possibly. My hon. friend had better assume that they may be brought up. Perhaps there may be other business ahead, but if we do bring them up I would like my hon. friend to feel that he is not witnout notice.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12,55 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 21, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ELECTORAL DIVISION OF ST. JAMES, MONTREAL.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I wish to call the attention of the government, Mr. Speaker, to the question of the representation of St. James division, and if necessary I shall conclude with the usual motion. In a number of constituencies vacancies occurred since last session, and in all these the vacancies have been filled. There were the division of Argentueil, the north riding of Grey, the district of Maisonneuve, the district of Yarmouth, the north riding of Ontario, the division of Durham and the electoral district of Maskinongé, in which vacancies occurred from various causes, and under your warrant, Sir, writs were promptly issued and these vacancies filled. With regard to the electoral division of St. James, on the 16th of March you, Sir, communicated to the House the report of the judgment rendered upon the contestation of election in that division, and in your communication to the House you stated that 'the trial judges having reported that corrupt practices extensively prevailed in the election, I have, in conformity with section 48, chapter 9, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, withheld the issue of my warrant for a new election pending action to be taken by the House in the matter.' Subsequently, on the 3rd of April last, and in conformity with the provisions of the statute cited by yourself, a motion was made in this House for the issue of your warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the purpose of holding a new election. This was done under sections 46, 47 and 48 of chapter 9 of the Controverted Elections Act, Revised Statutes of 1886:

Section 46. The Speaker shall, at the earliest practical moment after he receives the certificate and report or reports, if any, of the court or judge, give the necessary directions and adopt all the proceedings necessary for confirming or altering the return, or to except as hereinafter mentioned, for the issuing of a writ for a new election (for which purpose the Speaker may address his warrant, under his hand and seal, to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery) or for otherwise carrying the determination into execution as circumstances require.

Section 47. When the judge in his report on the trial of an election petition under this Act states that corrupt practices have, or that there is reason to believe that corrupt practices have extensively prevailed at the election to which the petition relates, or that he is of opinion that the inquiry into the circumstances of the election has been rendered incomplete by the action of any of the parties to the petition, and the further inquiry as to whether corrupt practices have extensively prevailed is desirable, no new writ shall issue for a new election in such case except by order of the House of Commons.

On the 3rd of April I moved, seconded by Mr. Léonard :

That Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ for a member to serve in this present parliament for the electoral division of St. James, in the place of Joseph Brunet, whose election was declared void.

That motion was agreed to unanimously. That was a very considerable time ago, and it seems to me a manifest injustice not to have proceeded to execute the order of this House, especially in a matter of this kind. That it was not carried out is not due to any cause existing in this House. You, Sir, issued your warrant in conformity of the House, agreed to unanimously, and if the election has been delayed, if the writ has not been issued by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, that is due entirely to the action of the government. In other words, the cabinet, which, under the modern interpretation of our constitution, is purely and simply a committee of this House, has judged fit to delay the issuing of the writ and to prevent the electoral division of St. James from being represented during this most important session. As an elector in that division, and as one living in it and knowing public feeling there, I am prepared to state that this delay of the government is condemned by the electors. In common with other electors of this Dominion, they claim the right to have a representative here, particularly in view of the fact that that claim has been upheld by the order of this House. Since the beginning of this session we have had under our consideration measures of particular interest to the division of St. James, which is one of the most important of the city of Montreal. It is a division in which there is a large number of representatives of every class—professional men, university men and labourmen—and each of those classes, more particularly the third, is deeply interested in the questions we have had under discussion. Among these I might mention the improvement of Montreal harbour, in which the St. James division is particularly interested ; the Bill with respect to insolvency, which I have had the honour to submit to the consideration of this House, because that division has very large commercial interests ; the Railway Bill, in which it is interested in a very particular degree ; the Bill concerning the Montreal bridge, which touches on the north side of the St. Lawrence, St. James division ; the transcontinental railway line, concerning which we are to have soon a communication from the government, and the Redistribution Bill. In all these measures St. James division is interested in common with other divisions, and in some of them it has a particular interest. And there is no reason whatever why the election in that division should have been delayed for three months and the division deprived of representation in this House and of an opportunity to take part in the discussion and decision of this important question. It is needless for me to say that, under the present custom of parliament in England, the withholding of a writ of election from an electoral division is a very grave punishment of the division, and is very rarely resorted to in modern times. Formerly the Crown abused the privilege of withholding the writs. In times of great corruption, when parliament sought to bring a remedy, writs were withheld by the Crown ; but, in modern times, that extreme punishment, the putting of this stigma, this mark of ignominy, upon a constituency is a very rare thing indeed, though the right still exists.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And is only exercised in cases of corruption on the part of the people.

Mr. MONK. Yes, and as my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) very justly says, it is exercised only in cases of very general and wide spread corruption. In the very recent case of Colonel Arthur Lynch, who represented the division of Galway, a very interesting debate took place in the British parliament as to the propriety of issuing the writ. I have not the report of that discussion here, but hon. members who refer to 'Hansard' will find that the opinion was very generally expressed in the House that the case of Colonel Lynch was not a case for the punishment of the constituency in general. The opinion was also expressed once in the House that the withholding of a writ of election was an extreme measure to which the Crown could resort only under circumstances of very general corruption. These circumstances do not by any means exist in the present case. The story of the election in St. James division, Montreal, is pretty familiar to most, if not all, the members of this House. It amounts to this : A few men—a very few, when you consider the large number of electors in that division —conspired to prevent the free expression of the peoples' will, conspired to seduce and buy some of the agents of one of the candidates, and, having secured the silence, the acquiesence, of these agents in some fifteen or twenty cases, they contrived to destroy the ballots deposited by the electors, and, in most cases, substituted ballots of their own. And there is no doubt in my mind that, had that fraud not been perpetrated the result of the election would have been largely, if not totally, different. That is a fact that is well recognized by those familiar with that election campaign. Why, I ask, should the vast mass of the electors be practically disfranchised through the wilful neglect of this government ? The reason is not far to seek ; it is that there are from eight or nine to a dozen aspirants to the nomination among the Liberal supporters, and the rivalry of these possible candidates, and the difficulty the government find in establishing harmony among them and their factions, is the sole, the unique cause of the disfranchisements of the electoral division of St. James. So, whereas, in the first instance, the will of the people was denied expression by a certain number of unscrupulous supporters of the government, at the present moment the peoples' desire to be represented in parliament is defeated by a group of men who find it impossible to agree upon a candidate for parliamentary honours. Under these circumstances, I think the protest which I have taken the liberty to place before you, Mr. Speaker, and before the House is well based, and should receive the immediate attention of the government.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry to be obliged to observe to my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) that I think his memory is somewhat at fault on this occasion. It is quite true that at the opening of the session, some time after the courts had passed finally upon the election in the St. James division, my hon. friend moved for a writ to be issued for a new election. And my hon. friend should remember that upon that occasion not the slightest exception was taken to the motion, which was passed unanimously, not only without a word of dissent, but even without a word of debate. The long disquisition upon which my hon. friend has entered as to keeping the constituency disfranchised had, therefore, no application whatever. There never was in the mind of anybody on the floor of this House any intention to disfranchise the electoral division of St. James. If there had been any such intention, if it had been supposed that the constituency was in such a position that the Crown would be obliged to apply the punishment which is sometimes applied to the constituencies in England, disfranchisement, that would have been the time to make the observation, and press the exception. But, when the motion was passed without a word of dissent from anybody, that was clear evidence to the mind of everybody that there was no occasion to disfranchise the constituency. Therefore, all the observations which my hon. friend has indulged in, so far as that part of the question goes, are absolutely and entirely without foundation—he has not the slightest cause or justification for them. The reason why the writ has not been issued for the constituency of St. James is rather in the conduct of my hon. friend himself. My hon. friend will remember the motion he moved to have the writ issued, to which motion I have just referred, and which was granted. He cannot have forgotten, I am sure, that sometimes afterwards, a couple of weeks afterwards—I have been looking over the debates, but I have not yet found the exact date—my hon. friend gave me notice from his place that, as the writ had not been issued, he would call the attention of the House to that fact on a subsequent day.

Mr. MONK. My right hon. friend is mistaken, I have never referred to the subject since.

The PRIME MINISTER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. He certainly referred to the fact that he would call attention to it on a future day, and I have been waiting for him ever since. That is the reason why no action was taken. The reason why the writ was not issued at the time my hon. friend made the motion was this: I inquired as to the particulars, and I was told then that the lists were being prepared by the municipal authorities in Montreal, and therefore, I thought it was better not to have the writ issued at the time. My hon. friend said he never called my attention from his place to that question. I do not accuse my hon. friend of wilfully forgetting—on the contrary. But, perhaps, I may mention a circumstance which will, I am sure, bring the matter to his recollection. He will remember that he crossed over here to tell me that he would not bring that motion just then, but would wait a little longer; and I have been under the impression that he would move it.

Mr. MONK. I must correct my hon. friend. He refers to the motion I made on the 3rd of April for the issue of the writ.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. MONK. Yes, and I have not referred to that subject since.

The PRIME MINISTER. Either he or I am mistaken. At all events, the hon. gentleman, having called the attention of the government to that matter, we shall give it immediate attention, and see whether the condition of things in Montreal is such that a writ can be issued.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman is joking or in earnest in putting forward some of the reasons that he has just mentioned. I suppose one of the reasons was a joke, and the other one apparently was intended as a real reason. A writ was moved for in this House and it passed unanimously. That was on the 3rd of April, and three months and a half have elapsed. It would have been possible to have a member elected for that constituency by the middle of May. But during two months and a half and well on to three months that constituency has been unrepresented because the right hon. gentleman did not know the condition in which the lists were. With all the powers at his disposal, with all the resources of this government at his disposal, he was not able to ascertain the condition of the lists in St. James division, Montreal, to know whether he should bring on an election. He is inclined to blame my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) for the fact that this election has not been brought on. I suppose the next thing we shall hear from the right hon. gentleman is that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is to blame for the fact that the government's railway policy has not been brought down after the session has been going on four and a half months. Such a reason would be about as good in the one case as in the other. Now, this constituency has a right to be represented, unless the government decide, and they say they have not decided, that is should be disfranchised on account of the corruption which prevailed in the last election, and which was wholly due, I am glad to say, to the efforts of some persons in that constituency whose aid has been very much relied upon by the government. From the 10th of May up to the present time, as I am informed, the lists have been ready, and that division has been in a position to have an election properly and regularly conducted. During the whole of that time until near the end of July, the hon. gentleman and his government have not been able to ascertain that they are in a position at any moment to bring on an election in that constituency. I think we shall be more inclined to rely upon the reasons which have been suggested by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, and to believe that certain difficulties which are said to have arisen in that constituency with regard to the selection of a candidate are the real reasons for this delay, rather than those which the right hon. gentleman has advanced in the House to-day. There were certain difficulties, we are reminded, in that division just before the last election, and I suppose it is to avoid a repetition of those difficulties, and to arrange the claims of friends who are aspirants for this position, that the constituency of St. James has been without representation in this House of Commons for the last two and a half or three months.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I beg to say a word in answer to the hon. gentleman for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who spoke of the corruption which he alleges took place in the St. James division when the last election occurred. As a matter of fact, the only corruption which was proved happened in just one poll, and there has been no proof at all that corruption took place in any other. This corruption was of course wholly unwarranted, and was not the act of the Liberal party as a whole. In fact, it was condemned during the election by several speakers belonging to the Liberal party; and after the election it was also stigmatized—I may use that vigorous term—by the then recognized organs of the Liberal party. As to the present divisions in that constituency, I may say that if an election took place to-morrow, the hon. gentleman would find the Liberal party united and ready to meet the foe. In speaking about Mr. Brunet, who has been unseated, the hon. gentleman might perhaps take the House into his confidence so far as to tell us whether he did not agree to support Mr. Brunet at the beginning of the campaign. For I am told that in the early days of the campaign the hon. gentleman was ready to lend his very valuable assistance to Mr. Brunet.

Mr. J. E. EMILE LEONARD (Laval). (Translation.) I was greatly pleased to hear the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) speak of corruption. The Liberal party are resorting once more to their old tactics. Towards the close of the Hon. Mr. Mercier's administration, all the Liberals who had benefited by its mismanagement, forsook him when they perceived that his downfall was inevitable. Now, that the ex-member for St. James (Mr. Brunet) has been disqualified by the courts, the hon. member for Gaspé would take the same stand his party has always taken when Liberal scandals were exposed.

As regards the question whether the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had decided to support Mr. Brunet or not, in his electoral contest, I may say that the statement made by the hon. member for Gaspé is wholly incorrect. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier, as leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec, never even suggested that the Conservatives of the province of Quebec, or of the Dominion, would support Mr. Brunet's candidature. If the hon. member for Gaspé will take the pains of inquiring from his immediate neighbours, he will become acquainted with the circumstances which brought about Mr. Brunet's candidature.

When the hon. member for Jacques Cartier moved for the issuing of a writ for a new election in St. James division, some time past, nobody objected on the other side of the House, and the motion was agreed to unanimously. Since that time we have not heard anything of that writ in the House. However, members who reside in Montreal, and myself, for one, have heard the ex-member for St. James himself state that the right hon. Prime Minister, or some of his colleagues, had promised him that there would not be any election; giving him to hope that the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) would introduce a bill cancelling the judgment which disqualified him. I cannot say to what extent that statement is correct; but, at all events, Mr. Brunet states freely that he has the promise from the leader of the government that he will once more be the liberal candidate in St. James. Of course, liberal promises are not to be much relied upon, and I assume that this promise was made for some particular purpose, and in view of that, the issuing of the writ is being delayed.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier will be agreed to and that the government will soon have an election in St. James division. This is the more desirable that the government of the province of Quebec will soon have several electoral contests going on. If the statement made by the hon. member for Gaspé has some foundation, that is, if the government is quite sure of carrying the election in St. James, then that victory will compensate them for the four or five defeats which are awaiting the government of the province of Quebec, a pupil of the federal government.

Mr. MONK. One word in reply to the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux). Surely he cannot have followed the contestation of the St. James election when he says there was no proof of corrupt practises except at one poll. If the hon. gentleman will read over the evidence he will find the clearest proof disclosed that the agent of Mr. Brunet, in poll No. 37, as to which the revelations were complete, stated to Mr. Bergeron's agent at the time he succeeded in obtaining the good graces of that young man, 'You need not mind acceding to my proposal, because we have carried out the same scheme in fifteen or eighteen polls.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is that evidence?

Mr. MONK. I think it is and most conclusive. It was a general scheme and not confined to that poll. My hon. friend suggests that I promised Mr. Brunet to support him in that election. It is true that at the time that Mr. Drouin was the adopted candidate of the government a very considerable number of the friends of my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) prospective candidates, came to me and assured me that they had become alienated from the Liberal party on account of its failure to fulfil its pledges and that they had determined to come forward in St. James division as opposed to the government and as supporting the Conservative party. To these gentlemen I stated that if they maintained these good sentiments, if they sincerely had these convictions, we would give them some encouragement. But, I regret to say, that a great change came over the spirit of their dream. Mr. Drouin disappeared, Mr. Brunet came forward as the government candidate, Mr. Bergeron came forward as the true candidate of the Conservative party and I have no doubt that if these frauds had not been carried out to the extent to which they were carried out Mr. Bergeron would have been sitting in this House to-day.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) take us a little more into his confidence and tell us if he did not agree to support Mr. Brunet as against the other Liberal candidate on condition that Mr. Brunet would vote, at all events, against the government on its policy in regard to the relations between Canada and the empire?

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend insists I must tell him frankly that I never agreed to support Mr. Brunet. Although I had the greatest respect for Mr. Brunet I did not think he was qualified to represent that important division in this House, but the approaches were made to me by several confreres of my hon. friend who are professed Liberals to-day and who were opportunists at that moment.

Motion (Mr. Monk) to adjourn, negatived.

YUKON TELEGRAPH.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) to alleged statements made by Mr. J. B. Charleson, in Dawson and also in Vancouver respecting the management of the Dawson telegraph service and line. I wish to draw his attention first to statements attributed to Mr. Charleson in the Seattle 'Post Intelligencer' of the 2nd July, which appear in the form of a despatch from Dawson dated the 17th June. Mr. Charleson is reported to have said :

The Dominion government made appropriations good until July of last year. But the superintendent did not take advantage of the appropriation, and the appropriation lapsed to the government. Then it became necessary to wait until this year to get the appropriation renewed. It has been renewed and some addition has been made to the fund, but the addition is not large. The original appropriation of a year ago was $25,000.

The men in Dawson took exception, it is true, to having to work without pay. They complained strenuously and refused to work. I would have done the same, and would have done more. I should not have stood such neglect. The superintendent had money with which to pay. Why he did not pay I cannot say.

The employees and the heads of the service have no right to pay themselves out of the revenues of the service, hence it was necessary to await a new appropriation.

A second long period without pay elapsed, but that has reached its end. The men have been paid all along the line to date. I hope they will get their pay promptly in the future. But what they will get remains to be seen.

While I can say the employees suffered neglect which I would not have tolerated, I will not place the blame. I feel that the Minister of Public Works wants to have the service satisfactory and to give the men fair treatment.

Mr. Crean is yet nominally superintendent, but he is not handling any affairs of the line. While I do not know whom the minister will select for the next superintendent, it would not surprise me to see Mr. Rochester made the man. He is an exceptionally capable and vigorous man.

I have no regular connection with the service. I was superintendent of construction when the system was built. Since it has been finished I have been at my home in Ottawa. In deciding on this investigation the minister selected me and asked that I serve. I agreed to do so.

Supplies are distributed along the line at all points during the open season. Fourteen miles of cable are to be stretched over some of the mountains in British Columbia this winter. This cable was not recommended by myself. I think Mr. Crean recommended it. It may be an improvement on the old line now in use on these stretches. I have nothing to say on the merits of a cable for mountain use.

After leaving here Mr. Rochester and I shall go up the Skeena river and into the interior from Katimat to visit the line in British Columbia.

All the supplies for the Dawson station and boarding house will be bought in Dawson hereafter. I shall leave for the outside next week.

Then, the Vancouver 'Province' of 10th July has the following statement by Mr. Charleson :

I have very little to say for publication regarding the reported mismanagement of the affairs of the Yukon telegraphs, but when I have completed my investigations into the condition of affairs, my report to the Minister of Public Works will contain a full statement of things as I have found them, and it certainly will not be very complimentary to Mr. M. W. Crean, the present superintendent of the line.

Then the paper continues :

Mr. Charleson stated that Mr. Crean was still nominally superintendent, but that by virtue of the commission which Mr. Charleson had received from the department at Ottawa, the powers of superintendent had been conferred on him for the time being. Mr. Charleson also took exception to the statements made in these columns by Mr. Crean that when the line had been handed over to Mr. Crean by Mr. Charleson, there were a number of men who worked for Mr. Charleson in the north that had not been paid.

'When I completed the construction of the line,' said Mr. Charleson, 'all the men were paid with the exception of those left in the cabins on the Ashcroft-Atlin section. Vouchers for the pay for these men amounting to about $15,000 had been prepared and given to Mr. Crean to forward to Ottawa, but when I arrived here last August I found these same vouchers in the office of the superintendent here. It was then too late for the appropriation to be passed by the House, as the vouchers should have been sent in May.

Mr. Crean's attention having been called to these statements by Mr. Charleson, he stated that :

He had no reply to make to Mr. Charleson's statements, except that he is still superintendent, exercising the same authority he has had since his appointment, and that he remains in charge of the Yukon telegraphs. Mr. Crean said he considered it improper to discuss official matters in public. Any communication he had to make will be sent to the Minister of Public Works.

I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to these alleged statements and I wish to ask him if it is a fact that Mr. Charleson was commissioned to investigate the alleged mismanagement of the Yukon telegraph service, and if he has had any report from Mr. Charleson since he was so commissioned ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) I may say that it is somewhat difficult to place much reliance on newspaper reports. At the same time, as I understand it, there was a large number of accounts connected with the construction of the line which seemed to be in dispute in the department, and I thought it best to have these matters cleared up. As Mr. Charleson had been superintendent of construction he was sent out for the purpose of arranging the accounts, getting proper certificates, and looking into the matter generally. There was no complaint made to me in regard to the superintendent of the telegraph line or as to its operation, and I think no authority has been given at all to make an investigation into that subject. There has been no complaint made and all I can do is to say that the whole matter will be looked into now that it has been brought to my attention. I would have more to say in connection with it probably if I had had notice, but I will look into the matter and have a full investigation as to how it stands.

Mr. MORRISON. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I have no manner of doubt of the authenticity of these reports——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MORRISON. I shall conclude with a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. There has already been one motion disposed of and no other motion can be made. As to those questions which are brought up when the Orders of the Day are called, it would be much more in accordance with the rules of the House if these statements were made on the motion for going into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY—STOCK EXCHANGE SPECULATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House a matter as to which I have already spoken. I refer to the operations of the stock exchange; and in order to indicate clearly what the scope of my argument is, I wish to state that I shall conclude with the following resolution:

> That it is of urgent necessity to adopt effective measures in order to control stock exchange operations and check hazardous speculations which impair the financial security of Canada and the prosperity of its trade and industry.

At the end of the financial crisis which is still fresh in the memory of a good many in this House, the manager of the Bank of Commerce in Toronto stated that this slump was a necessity because people had gone so far in the way of stock speculation that nothing but such an acute crisis would tend to stop the evil. I do not dispute for one moment the opinion of this gentleman, but I believe that the financial régime under which such condition arose, is an evil towards the suppression of which the attention of the government should be called. In 1888, this parliament adopted 'An Act respecting gaming in stocks and merchandise.' (51 Vic. Cap. 42). This legislation was introduced by Hon. Mr. Abbott in the Senate and it passed through the House of Commons, then led by the late Sir John Thompson. When introducing that measure in the Senate, Mr. Abbott used words which may well be applied to the present situation. He said:

> This evil has attracted the attention of public men, it has been animadverted upon very generally in the press of the country; and the evil has reached such proportions that it has become absolutely necessary to do something to check it.

Of course it may be argued now as it was argued then that we have no right to interfere with individual liberty and that speculation in itself is no crime. I admit that. But if wise speculation be no crime there is not the slightest doubt but that wild speculation is one of the most fertile causes of crime. I might well repeat the words which Sir John Thompson, then Minister of Justice, used in the House of Commons when he introduced the Bill:

> I know from experience, and from applications which have been before me, that numbers of persons belonging to respectable classes in the community, are in our different penitentiaries now in consequence of bucket shop transactions, which led them on to embezzlement and frauds of different kinds. It is considered, therefore, in the interests of public morality that legislation of this kind should be adopted, and I do think this can be safely adopted.

To which the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) added:

> As the honourable Minister of Justice properly says, there are in our penitentiaries today men who have been sent there for crimes committed, the first step towards which consisted of the operations of gambling which are fostered by these bucket-shops, and in a still greater degree by the regular stock exchanges.

I am not here to endorse the opinion of the hon. member for North Norfolk, but I may say that the operations that were carried on at that time by the bucket shops are now conducted on a wider scale and in a worse form by the regular stock brokers; and if Sir John Thompson was right when he said in 1888 that the operations of the bucket shops were a most effective cause of crime, I say that the operations of the stock exchange, as they are carried on now, are an effective cause of crime, and that interference by the government is called for. If it is our duty to legislate against crime when it is committed, it is also our duty to legislate to prevent the commission of crime if we can.

There is not the slightest doubt also that it is our right and duty to legislate even against individual liberty when the exercise of that individual liberty degenerates into such a license as to imperil the national security of the country. The operations of the stock exchange, carried to the extent they have been carried for the last few years, are a menace to the financial security of this country. In the first place, not only regular banks, but savings banks, that have been established under the credit of the country, have gone so far as to lend money on the security of stocks which have been paid for on a very narrow margin of five or ten per cent. In the next place, a large number of financial or industrial institutions that are organized under joint stock capital have suffered and greatly suffered from the slump that was recently caused by the actual operations of the stock exchange. The result of this is deterrent to the investment of capital which otherwise would seek security in our industries. Moreover this stock exchange business puts our railways, our banks, our insurance companies and a large number of industries practically in the hands of people who hold shares of these institutions, not with the idea of making profits by the natural development of these industries; not with the idea of earning interest upon their shares because of the trade carried on by these companies; but who are simply expecting that the changes in the stock market will give them a chance to speculate on the rise and fall of these shares. Therefore, I say that it puts the titles of ownership of several of our basic industries within the hands of men who have no interest in the future prosperity and stability of these industries.

This stock speculation under present conditions is also a danger to our fiscal stability. We have had an example of this during the present session, when people have come to this parliament looking for a remedy because they had been ruined by wild speculation and had seen the shares which they held on very small margin taken out of their hands as soon as they were not able to put up the balance of the margin. Instead of doing what they would have done had their shares been paid in full; instead of going to the directors of the companies; instead of coming to the conclusion that the proprietors of any industry should look to its welfare; they have come to this government and have asked that by changes in the tariff, the decline in the price of their shares should be arrested, and their stock market value increased. I do not want to bring into the discussion the propriety of these changes in the tariff, but I do say that it is not of good omen for the stability of the fiscal policy of a country that a movement might at any time be created amongst the speculating classes, with the object of demanding a change in the tariff just to increase their gambling chances.

Now, Sir, the law of 1888 was directed against a thing which is described in subsection (a) of clause 1 of that Act. It says:

Every one is guilty of a misdemeanour who

With the intent to make gain or profit by the rise or fall in price of any stock of any incorporated or unincorporated company or undertaking, either in Canada or elsewhere, or of any goods, wares or merchandise, makes or signs, or authorizes to be made or signed, any contract or agreement, oral or written, purporting to be for the sale or purchase of any such shares of stock, goods, wares or merchandise, in respect of which no delivery of the thing sold or purchased is made or received, and without the bona fide intention to make or receive such delivery; and every one who acts, aids or abets in the making or signing of any such contract or agreement.

Now, Sir, what was Mr. Abbott's opinion on the matter? He was the author of the Bill, and I might say was, on legal as well as financial matters, one of the highest authorities in this country. He said:

The real difficulty in preparing a measure of this description has been to draw a line of distinction between the transactions which are carried on in the legitimate business of a broker, and the transactions which are carried on in the way I have mentioned in those bucket shops. It is not alone in Canada that this distinction has been sought for; it has been inquired into and received the same solution in the United States where this species of gambling is very prevalent. . . . The distinction which I understand is a true one between bucket shop transactions and legitimate brokerage business is as stated to me by a leading New York broker who wrote me. . . . . The distinction which this gentleman draws, and which is to be found in the Acts of the States of Illinois and Ohio, is, that in one case the purchase is made with the intention of carrying it out as a bona fide transaction, the seller to make delivery. In the other case, there is no intention of making a bona fide purchase or sale.

Well, Sir, I say that ninety per cent of the operations now carried on under the regular brokerage system may be justly described as what Mr. Abbott in 1888 called the illegitimate operations of bucket shops; and I am going to prove it. I may add to Mr. Abbott's opinion the opinion of Sir John Thompson. He said:

I acquiesce fully in one of the opinions that has been expressed, that, if the transaction from which delivery would result, as the natural and legal consequence, it is not a transaction that would be interfered with by this Bill; but if the contract is one of which delivery forms no part at all, but which is simply between a pretended purchaser and a pretended seller of certain stocks, as to their rise or fall in a distant market within a given number of days, these acts are aimed at by this Bill, and I can confirm to the fullest extent what hon. gentlemen opposite have said as regards their evil effects.

There was opposition brought against the introduction of that measure. In the Senate, Mr. Abbott said plainly that he thought the measure was just what it should be, and should not be amended. But the opposition was stronger in the House of Commons; and, as Sir John Thompson said, naturally a good part of it came from the bucket shop owners, who did not want to see their business checked ; but he said also that there was a certain amount of uneasiness among the brokers who carried on a legitimate trade. The same argument that will probably be used against my proposition was used then, that it was an attack upon individual liberty. Sir John Thompson gave way to a certain extent, and moved an amendment to Mr. Abbott's Bill, which he preceded with a few remarks, from which I will quote these words :

I may say that the Bill has received the endorsation of operators engaged in legitimate business in Montreal and Toronto. A certain portion, however, of the brokers in Montreal, engaged in legitimate business, have pressed strongly to have a few words added to the first clause of the Bill ; and I am advised that the addition of the following words will meet the objections they raise :

The foregoing provisions (of this Act) shall not apply to cases where the broker of a purchaser shall receive delivery as above of the article sold, notwithstanding that such broker shall retain or pledge the same as security for the advance of the purchase money or any part thereof.

This amendment was introduced into the Bill almost verbatim, and stands now as the second paragraph of subsection (b) of section 1. It will be noticed that Sir John Thompson said that most of the regular stock brokers approved of this Bill. But, I think a great number simply wanted to get rid of competitors so as to carry on under the protection of the law the operations that were carried on by the bucket shops. I might say that one member of the House foresaw very clearly what was going to happen ; I refer to the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), who said :

It seems to me that, according to that view, we will stop illegitimate gambling and will recognize legitimate gambling, with a certain amount put up. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Mitchell) that what we desire to do is to put down the bucket shops, and the only question which suggests itself to my mind is whether we do not leave a wide door open for the evasion of this Act. I am not sure that it is in the public interest to facilitate the purchase of stocks on small margins in any case, and, if we could do it, I am not sure that it would not be just as much in the public interest to stop that kind of gambling in stock on margins of five or ten per cent as to put down the bucket shops.

The only difference between the present situation and the situation at that time is that people are fleeced now just as much as they were then, but that the fleecers are fewer and bigger. They are directors of large companies ; they are donators of hospitals ; they are even members of the parliament of Canada ; in fact, they occupy high positons ; and, with those strange feelings that exist in every community, we pay to them the respect of considering them the basis of our financial status. We have been legislating against the bucket shop operators because they have been doing on a smaller scale and in a franker way what these high gentlemen are doing now. I say that nine-tenths of the operations now carried on upon the stock exchange are, according to the definition given by Sir John Abbott and Sir John Thompson, exactly similar, to the operations then carried on by the bucket shops. I say that nine-tenths of the operations now carried on between the brokers and their clients are performed without the slightest intention of ever carrying their bargains to an end—that the client never takes shares with the intention of paying for them, and the broker never expects that the client will pay for them. I say—and I am going to prove it by the records of one of the leading brokers of Canada—that in nine cases out of ten it is merely a question of bet. The only difference is this. Under the bucket shop system the client knew that he was betting ; but now he does not know when the broker is betting for him or when he is betting against him, and he cannot know.

There was a legal case which created a good deal of sensation, not only throughout the province of Quebec, but throughout Canada, and I might say throughout the brokers' world ; and I am going to refer to it at some length, because it gives us the whole scope of stock exchange operations. It is the case known as Forget vs. Ostigny. The defendant in the case was a young bank clerk of Montreal, who earned a salary of about $900 a year. It was established by the evidence that all he had outside of his salary was $2,100 worth of shares of the Bank of Hochelaga on which there was a lien of $1,400. He was an intimate personal friend of Mr. Rodolphe Forget, the chief accountant of Senator Forget, and now we may say the leader of that firm. Mr. Forget lent to this young man the money he required to buy his first shares; and the time came when Ostigny, who had no money and no more salary than he absolutely required to live on, held shares unpaid to the figure of $28,900 in the hands of Mr. Forget. He got tired of paying up margins and refused to pay any more. He consequently became ruined and insolvent, which perhaps did not matter much. Mr. Forget sued him for $1,927, being balance of account due on margin, commission, and so on. The cause of action originated before we adopted the statute of 1888; but as that statute has been quoted all through that case in the different courts, from the Superior Court of Montreal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, it has a direct bearing on our law. The defence was based on article 1927 of the Quebec Civil Code, which says : 'There is no right of action for the recovery of money or any other thing claimed under a gaming contract or bet.' The case came before the Superior Court of Montreal, and the learned judge who presided, Judge Pagnuelo, made an exhaustive review of the whole question and the different legislation governing stock transactions in France, England and the United States. He concluded by ruling that Mr. Forget's claim could not be maintained, as it was based on a pure gambling transaction. The case was taken to the Court of Appeals, and that court decided, Judge Hall dissenting, that the judgment of Judge Pagnuelo was a good one. Permit me to read extracts from the opinion given by the Chief Justice of that court, Judge Lacoste :

It is sometimes difficult to draw the line between speculation and gaming transactions. The business done by frequenters of the bucket shops does not leave any doubt. These transactions are always bets on the rise or fall. But elsewhere gambling transactions have often the appearance of serious contracts. Thus, a person sells a stock deliverable on a fixed day ; the contract is lawful, but the circumstances of the case may show that the intention of the parties was not to give and take delivery, but only to gamble. . . .

The learned judge than analysed the evidence, which establishes that Forget bought different shares for Ostigny, lending him the amounts required and keeping the shares which he gave 'with others to a bank as collateral security for a loan which he was obtaining for himself.' He then proceeded to say :

It seems strange that the respondent, having instructed appellant to buy for him, did not take delivery, and that the appellant has not offered delivery. Forget, however, appellant's employee, tells us that the usage of the stock exchange permits a broker to do this, and that if the client does not ask delivery within twenty-four hours, the broker may borrow for the client on the security of the stocks which he has just bought and which he holds as a pledge. The client may at any time ask for delivery of the stock, but if he does not do so and neglects to pay the margin asked for, then the broker sells the stock and a settlement is made by the payment of the differences. The witness Forget tells us that respondent was acquainted with this usage. It results from this practice that the client does not take delivery of the shares, and that his responsibility is limited to the payment of the margin and the interest on the advances made by the broker. The instruction to buy, therefore, is not serious, but is only given to permit gaming on the rise or fall. Both parties understood it so.

Then the learned judge went on to show that the two parties, Forget and Ostigny, could not but know the exact situation, that the appellant (Forget) knew that the respondent (Ostigny) would not take delivery, and treated the shares as if they were his own property. He said :

The appellant ought to have known that respondent could not take delivery and that the custom which I have just mentioned would be followed. He understood this so well that he treated the shares as if they were his own property ; he gave them to the savings' bank with other valuable securities as guarantee for loans which he obtained for himself, and he disposed of a number of them before he received respondent's order to sell them. His clerk tells us that on the 21st February, on respondent's order, he sold two hundred shares of the street railway company, and that he could not deliver more than one hundred and thirty-five, because he was short of the rest. If appellant really had held the shares as a pledge how could he transfer them to the bank as security for a loan not limited to the amount which he had advanced for the purchase of the shares ? What text of law authorized him to dispose of the pledge ? This treatment of the shares by the broker indicates that he considered himself the owner.

I ask any man who has any experience of business on the stock exchange, if this is not the history of nearly all the transactions carried on there? The result of that judgment alarmed not only Mr. Forget but all his confreres. What did they do ? The amount at issue was too low to give them the right to appeal to the Privy Council, so they came to terms with Ostigny. They paid all his costs and even, I was told, gave him a discharge of the amount due, and then obtained his consent to an appeal to the Privy Council. In that case, as in the case of Roy and the Canadian Pacific Railway, I regret that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council should have been made, unwillingly I am sure, the instruments of parties whose object was to prevent the operation of Canadian law, and the government should see that something is done to prevent the Privy Council being made the instruments of such shameful transactions and agreements.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would remind my hon. friend that Ostigny was not represented before the Judical Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. BOURASSA. No, he was not. The only party represented was Mr. Forget and he got a judgment ex parte. But although I am very unworthy of appreciating the judgment and common sense of the members of the Privy Council, I feel impelled to say that there are such striking errors in their judgment in this case, that I am warranted in saying that they came to a decision without really knowing the facts. According to the evidence, at a certain moment during the time he was speculating, Ostigny asked for delivery of 200 shares of the Montreal Street Railway, and Forget said he could not make a delivery as he only had 135. Yet in the face of that evidence, which was reiterated in the opinion delivered by the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals, what did the Lord Chancellor hold? He said :

When the shares purchased for the respondent were sold they were redeemed from the bank and delivered to the purchaser.

That was contradicted by the evidence.

The contracts made, which were unquestionably within the authority given by the respondent, were certainly not gaming contracts as between the parties to them. They were real transactions ; the shares purchased and sold were in every case delivered, and the price of them paid or received, as the case might be,

So that their lordships of the Privy Council based their judgment on an assumption which is clearly disproven by the evidence of Mr. Forget's employee.

The year following an exactly similar case was taken before the Law Lords. This was a suit taken against a regularly organized company, the Universal Stock Exchange Company, by one of their clients, one David Strachan. But the situation here was not exactly so favourable to the brokers, because instead of being the party taking out the suit, they were the defendants. Strachan sued to get hold of some security, and the case came before a judge and jury. Judge Cave, who presided, said :

A man goes to a broker and directs him to buy and sell so much stock as the case may be. That may be, in the eye of the purchaser, a gambling transaction, or it may not. If he means to invest his money in the purchase of the stock which he orders to be bought, that undoubtedly is a perfectly legitimate and real business transaction. If he does not mean to take up his stock, if he means to sell again before the settling day arrives, that may be a gambling transaction so far as he is concerned, but it is not necessarily a gambling transaction so far as the broker is concerned; and in order to be a gambling transaction such as the law points at, it must be a gambling transaction in the intention of both parties to it.

Now, the record in that case proved that there was a signed contract between the brokers and the client. Several of the clauses of that contract—I am not going to worry the House with it, though I have it here—provided that the contract was made for the purpose of delivering shares, that the natural and legal result of the contract would be the delivery of shares through the broker to the client. Nevertheless, the jury decided unanimously that it was a case of gambling. The case was taken before the Law Lords. The counsel of the client did not appear, and the case was pleaded ex-parte by the counsel of the brokers, and one of the authorities they invoked was the judgment that had been rendered by the very year previous by the Judicial Committee in the case of Forget and Ostigny. But the Law Lords, I must say, did not pay the slightest attention to that judgment. I have here the judgment delivered by Lord Herschel and ratified unanimously by the Law Lords. I may say, before I quote from this judgment that the counsel for the stock brokers invoked that contract I have just mentioned, and said that whatever might be the amount of risk that was run by the client of the broker the contract entered into was an undertaking for the delivery of shares. Referring to this Lord Herschel said :—

It has been said that wherever a contract is entered into between two parties containing an obligation under any circumstances to cause property to pass from one to another, whatever else there may be in the contract, and although neither of the parties contemplated that that provision should ever become operative, yet, if it ever may become operative, the contract cannot be by way of gaming and wagering. The proposition amounts to this, that parties who intended to gamble with one another, but wanted to have the security against one another of being able in a court of justice to recover their bets, could compel a court of justice to adjudicate and secure to them their bets by a judgment, if only they inserted in their contract a provision which might in certain events become operative to compel the goods to be delivered and received, although neither of them anticipated such a contingency; the purpose of inserting the provision creating an obligation being only to cloak the fact that it was a gambling transaction, and enable them to sue one another for gambling debts. The proposition contended for by the learned counsel for the appellants would really lead to that result, and I should require much consideration before I gave my assent to a proposition involving such consequences.

I quite understand why Lord Herschel and his colleagues of the Law Lords' Committee of that day did not refer to the judgment given by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ostigny and Forget. They were opposed to that judgment in toto and therefore passed it over in silence. But what is the difference between the transactions that are carried on here and the transactions adjudicated upon by the Law Lords ? The difference is simply that here there is no written contract saying that the intention is to make delivery. But I have said, and I repeat, that nine-tenths of the stock exchange operations carried on are not carried on, as Lord Herschel said, for the purpose of selling on one side and buying on the other, but for the sole purpose of gambling; and the delivery of the goods is regarded only as an incidental matter. In fact, I am sure that I am within the mark when I say that nine-tenths of the people who go into stock exchange operations pay their stock in full only when they are forced to do so. In nine cases out of ten they simply pay their money in the hope that it will bring them some return by the rise in the value of the shares.

Now, Sir, I have insisted at length on this case, because, as I have said, it gives the exact situation of our operations. Therefore, in the opinion of the authors of the law of 1888, and in the opinion of the Court of Appeal of Montreal, in the opinion of the Law Lords of England,—and, I may add, that this would have been the opinion of the members of the Judicial Committee, if, instead of a case of conspiracy, they had had a case legally and honestly and properly pleaded—we ought to legislate now. And I may add that the only Canadian judge who differed from his colleagues on the question, Judge Hall, added these words in his judgment, which, I think, place a heavy responsibility upon us, who have the legislative power in our hands :

The fact that speculation in stocks has been indulged in improperly by those who cannot afford the risk, is not a sufficient reason, in my opinion, for attempting to correct the abuse by exceptional interpretation of general laws. It will be admitted, I am sure, that the natural remedy, if one is to be attempted, is by legislation.

And that is what I am asking the minister to consider.

In what way are operations now carried on? I take here, out of a thousand, just as an illustration, one transaction which a friend has communicated to me within the last few days. During the first days of January, he bought 100 shares of Dominion Iron and Steel at 61, making $6,100. On the 18th of March, he bought 100 shares of the same stock at 36½, making $3,650; or a total for the two transactions of $9,750. He went on paying margins until the crisis reached its accutest point when he decided to pay the whole thing and take his certificates. He received his certificates on the 16th of June. On that day the quotation, according to the Montreal 'Gazette,' was 13½ at the highest and 12⅞ at the lowest. Take the highest figures, and we find that his titles, according to the quotations of the stock exchange, were worth $2,700, while the titles which he bought through his broker were worth $9,750. We are asked to believe that the broker really bought 100 shares in January, and that he really bought 100 shares more on the 16th of March. But we have no evidence of it; and I shall show that in many cases, this is not done. But, supposing (as it might be, and as I will prove it has been in other cases) the broker did not buy the shares, this would mean that the broker has received from my friend $9,750 and he has given him titles that cost him $2,700, pocketing the difference of $7,050. It may be said that my friend could have told the broker: 'This is not what I bought from you, therefore, give me back my money.' What would have been the reply of the broker? First, he would have invoked, naturally, clause 4 of chapter 45 of 51 Victoria, our Act on gambling, which provides that in any prosecution under this Act the person accused shall be a competent witness on his own behalf. He would have gone to the court and there would have shown the amendment I read at the beginning of these remarks, introduced by Sir John Thompson at the request of the brokers, and would have said he had bought these shares and kept them as the agent of the purchaser, being ready to deliver the goods at any time.

But how could he prove that? Not by producing the shares, but by producing his books. He would prove naturally that on such a day in January he bought 100 shares of Dominion Iron for Mr. so and so; that on the 18th of March he bought 100 shares of the same stock for the same party. He would prove by another page that on the same days he held 400 or 500 shares of Dominion Iron, and therefore, that he could, on either days, hand to my friend the shares he bought. But how will you ascertain the number of shares of the same stock which that broker was supposed to hold at the same moment? While his ledger shows on one page that he held 500 shares, it might be that he was accountable for 100 shares to one of his clients, for 200 shares to another, for fifty shares to another, and 300 shares to another, which would make a total of 650 shares. He would have enough to meet the request of anyone in particular, but he would not have enough to cover the whole. It amounts to this, that in actual practice, the brokers hold a number of shares, sufficient, in their calculation, to face the probable requisitions of their clients, but do not mind not having on hand the total number of shares for which they have collected a margin, and upon which they go on collecting interest and additional margin. This came out openly in the case of Forget vs. Ostigny. The broker was obliged to admit that he had only 135 shares in hand when his client asked for a delivery of the 200 shares he had bought. Meanwhile he had collected margins, not only upon the 135 shares he held, which perhaps belonged to another man, but he also collected margins on the sixty-five shares he had not. I think I was quite right when I stated that this kind of speculation is a worse kind of robbery than what was done under the bucket shop system, and that if there was need of legislation then there is still more need now.

Now, another abuse comes from the fact that the brokers are now in many cases directors of large companies. What is the result? They are interested not only in following the general movements of the stock exchange, their interest is not only to induce their clients to buy and sell stock, in general, but their interest is also to use their clients for the benefit of the company of which they are directors. Therefore, they will advise them with a mysterious air of business prophecy: 'Buy such a stock, it is good, it is very good, and it is going to go up.' Naturally it does go up, because he will say the same thing to fifty other innocent people who want to buy, and who rely upon him as their financial adviser. But if he wants to acquire a certain stock, and strengthen his position in a company in which he is interested, he will say: 'I am afraid of that stock; I am a director in that company and I know what is going on. But don't mention it to anybody. I am afraid the stock will go down.' Naturally the poor fellow, thinking that he is being advised by his best friend, who wants to make him wealthy, he repeats this under the same secret, in the same confidence, to fifty other people. Twenty days after the stock will go down and the director acquires cheap shares at the expense of the clients of his broker's office.

Of course, sometimes they are bitten themselves. The slump is stronger than was suspected and it is then, when the brokers are cornered up, that they are not only able to speculate against their own clients, but in order to save themselves and their clients, they are forced to speculate against those clients and collect margins on shares which they do not possess.

Then there is another danger when those directors happen to be rivals, and they create a slump on the market to take revenge upon each other. As I am disposed to call people by their right names, I may remind the House of what happened between Mr. Ross, the vice-president of the Montreal Street Railway Company, and Mr. Forget, the vice-president of the Dominion Iron and Steel. Mr. Ross sold all his stocks in the Montreal Street Railway and Mr. Forget sold all his stocks in the Dominion Iron and Steel, which caused a slump. Now to show you what brokers who happen to be directors of companies are apt to do, I will quote you a telegram that was received by a friend of mine during the last slump. He had bought 200 shares of Montreal Street Railway on the Montreal market. He paid the margins for several days. One day he got tired and he caused his agent in Quebec to wire to a Montreal broker to sell his shares in the Montreal Street Railway Company for such a figure, which he quoted. The shares were not sold. Instead of that he received a request for still more margins. He replied ordering to sell at prices quoted at the stock exchange, and here is the reply that came :

Cannot sell stock at all, quotation is put there to support the market.

Now, Sir, either one of two things, either the brokers lied to my friend or they lied to the public on the board of the stock exchange. If the telegram stated the truth, the public was humbugged as to the value of the Montreal Street Railway Company's shares. If the quotations were accurate, the broker had evidently already sold my friend's shares and collected margins after the sale and was unable for the time being to pay the proceeds of the sale.

Now, Sir, last fall, there was a newspaper quarrel in Montreal that attracted a good deal of attention, a quarrel between 'Le Journal' and 'La Presse,' between 'Le Journal' which is kept up by Senator Forget's money, and 'La Presse,' which is edited by Mr. C. A. Dansereau. I need not make the House acquainted with either of those two gentlemen, they are well known. Neither will I repeat any of the sweet names that they exchanged between themselves, of which 'robber,' 'brigand,' 'pirate' on one side, and 'traitor,' 'spunger,' 'drunkard,' on the other side, were among the sweetest. I will simply confine myself to the accusations that come within the scope of my arguments. First Mr. Dansereau accused Mr. Forget of having sold without notice $4,000 worth of shares that were held by the late Sir Adolphe Chapleau. Mr. Forget denied that and replied that his books were open and that if Mr. Dansereau would come and examine them he would find even some profits that Mr. Dansereau himself had made. I will read a short extract from Mr. Dansereau's reply, in French, and then translate it into English :

Je ne trouverais dans vos documents ni les conseils donnés à vos clients, ni leur rage, ni leur déception. Rien ne me dirait si vous achetiez pour vous les bons lots dans la baisse, plusieurs jours avant de faire acheter les autres à la hausse. Je n'y trouverais pas, non plus, si vous les faisiez vendre à la veille d'un essor, je n'y découvrirais aucun indice de la défense formelle et persistante que vous aviez imposée à tous vos clients de toucher au Dominion Coal et au Steel. Nous avons vu le rare spectacle d'un directeur jouant contre le crédit de sa compagnie.

Mes transactions avec vous ne furent pas longues et intéressent peu le public. Vous fûtes assez bon pour m'acheter du Pacifique en échange d'une information, d'un "tuyau", et vous m'écriviez que j'avais réalisé, je ne sais trop, probablement $1,200. Vous savez que je ne les touchai jamais.

Here is the translation :

I should find in your documents neither the advices given to your clients, nor their anger, nor their deception. Nothing would show me whether you bought good lots on a decline several days before selling others on the rise. Neither should I find whether you sold them on the eve of a rise, nor should I discover any indication of the formal and persistent prohibition which you had imposed upon all your clients from touching Dominion Coal and Steel. We have seen the rare spectacle of a director playing with the credit of his company. My transactions with you were not long and of little interest to the public. You were good enough to buy Pacific for me in exchange for a pointer I gave you, and you wrote me that I had realized, I do not know how much, perhaps $1,200. You know that I never received it.

I regret I cannot translate exactly the word 'tuyau.' The literal translation is 'pipe.' It is a very expressive slang word, which means a valuable information received and given secretly. Mr. Forget avoided carefully to repel the accusation that he was gambling against the company of which he was a director ; but in reply to the other charge, he stated that he had never bought Canadian Pacific Railway stock for Mr. Dansereau, in London, and he had only bought some shares in New York out of which Mr. Dansereau had realized a profit of $418. Mr. Dansereau then had a photograph taken of the memorandum that came from the Forget house and he had it printed in 'La Presse.' I will read that memorandum. It is as follows :

MEMORANDUM.

From L. J. Forget & Co.,
Stock Brokers,
Members of the Montreal Stock Exchange.

The translation is as follows :

The photogravure published by your confrere is but a memorandum. It is not a contract——

Nobody had ever claimed it was a contract.

—our signature does not appear. It was but a note we gave to Mr. Dansereau, explaining to him the transaction that we had closed for him.

And here is the point to which I want to direct the attention of the House.

One can see the buying up of 225 shares of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I had bought much more than that and had given to Mr. Dansereau the benefit of those 225 shares. This gentleman had realized a profit of $418.17 as the same appears by the memorandum dated the 27th July, 1885.

So this interesting correspondence establishes this fact : that Mr. Forget bought, himself, in New York, for Mr. Dansereau, 225 shares amounting, as I have said, to $8,465.63 and he caused to be bought in London 175 shares, amounting to $6,781.25, the total value of the stock being $15,246.88. In the same correspondence, Mr. Forget says all along and Mr. Dansereau admits it, that Mr. Dansereau was insolvent. So, we are told that Mr. Forget bought over $15,000 worth of shares and that he expected Mr. Dansereau to pay for them when he knew he was insolvent ? That this was a purely gambling operation is clearly established, first, by the fact which I have just stated of the insolvency of the purchaser. Then, according to Mr. Forget's own statement, he bought a great number of shares of Canadian Pacific Railway stock in New York and simply acknowledged a profit on 225 of these shares, which, I suppose, was his valuation of the 'tuyau,' and gave a credit memorandum which looked as if he had purchased nominally 225 shares for Mr. Dansereau. But, for ordinary clients, who do not deal in 'tuyaux,' who could not and would not sell important political secrets, what guarantee have they that, instead of making them share in his profits, Mr. Forget did not make them share in his losses, and still worse that sometimes he was not gaining while they were losing ?

There is nothing in the law and there is nothing in the practice to indicate that brokers are not betting and speculating against their clients ; but on the contrary, they may do so with the greatest facility. Although they may be the most virtuous and disinterested class in the community, we should not expose their virtue. Besides, I say, that, in times of slumps, it cannot be otherwise than that they should speculate against their clients.

It is not only in the similar kind of speculations that the regular brokers are emulating the old bucket shops' keepers. In those days there was the 'ticker,' a kind of telegraph instrument which enabled the broker in a small town to pretend that he was keeping in contact with the stock exchange. The ticker has been abolished but some of the brokers in Quebec have adopted a new system. They have commercial travellers going into the country towns and inducing the people to gamble, telling the merchants and farmers to buy shares of this stock or of that, and endeavouring to make them believe that in a few days they will make money. The evils that existed before 1888 are existing now, but only to a greater extent and with much more serious consequences.

I may be asked : Why are the authorities not enforcing the present law, chapter 42, of 51 Vic ? It may also be said that if the law at present is not operative it will be difficult to apply a more stringent law. I am going to reply shortly to these objections. First, it must be remembered that the statute as it at present exists was nominatively directed against bucket shops. It says, in the preamble :

Whereas gaming and wagering on the rise and fall in value of stocks and merchandise are detrimental to commercial and public morality, and places affording facilities for such gaming and wagering, commonly called 'bucket-shops,' are being established, etc.

So that many people will be stopped by the very wording of the preamble from using the law against ordinary stock speculation. Then, the circumstances are different. When that law was introduced, Sir John Thompson very properly said that what was aimed at then was the wild speculation on real goods that was going on, that the law was made not with the idea of controlling the exchange of shares of joint stock companies, but with the purpose of preventing stock gambling in merchandise. Under these circumstances it is not operative to a certain extent. Take the statement of Sir John Thompson as to the effect of the law, the amendments that I have mentioned, and still worse the judgment which the Privy Council has given since that time, and which I have analysed and which has rendered the law perfectly negative. Hon. gentlemen will see that it is inapplicable to the present circumstances. I hope, if another case were brought before the Privy Council, it would be pleaded as it should be pleaded, without being preceded by a conspiracy such as I have described, and that the judicial committee of the Privy Council would find a way to change the jurisprudence ; but as it stands, it is impossible to apply the law of 1888, in view of the judgment that has been given. Then I add—and I think this is the strongest argument—that so long as we have but punitive laws it will be impossible to stop that evil. You cannot have a punitive law applied to a particular evil unless public opinion admits that that particular evil is a crime. The public at large are not interested in this, and a great number who are interested are something like the gamblers in other things : some of them are not disposed to have the law changed, and others say that evil exists in every country and it is useless to try and stop it in this. It is also argued that it will be impossible to convince a great many people, and even the judges themselves, that speculation in itself is a crime and that therefore it is useless to apply a punitive law.

What we need is an administrative law ; a law that will not prevent legitimate speculation, but a law that will minimize speculation ; a law that will regulate speculation and that will establish a basis of some kind for stock exchange operations, and in consequence prevent wild speculation. First of all, I believe that stock brokers should conduct their business under the authority of the law, just as hotel keepers do, and just as in large cities people who keep houses that are not considered to the credit of the community, but are necessary to a state of corruption, must keep these houses under the guidance of the law. Stock brokers should take out a license. I do not say that they should be appointed by the government, because that was tried in France and proved to be a failure. But stock brokers should take out a license so that we may know who is conducting stock exchange operations, and so that nobody else shall be authorized to carry on the same trade.

Then it should be made a provision of the law that no large company, whether incorporated by parliament or under the seal of the Secretary of State, can elect as a director a licensed stock broker. Then again, stock brokers should have no right to speculate for themselves, but should content themselves with the profit arising from the speculation of their clients. If speculation is made by them under a false name it should be assimilated to conspiracy.

Then the question of margin comes in. I must say that I share the opinion which was expressed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce fifteen years ago, that so long as we allow speculation on narrow margins, it will be very difficult to stop the evil. I believe it would be impossible at the present time to declare that no transfer of shares could be made unless they should be paid for in full, and it might not be wise to enact that now ; but it should be at least declared that no transfer of shares can be made unless they are margined to the extent of at least 25 per cent of their value. This system of purchasing on small margins is the greatest cause of slumps. Shares of good and bad stocks are bought in large quantity by people who put all the money they have on a small margin, and who, therefore, take the greater risk, because they expect the greater profit. They buy on these small margins just for the purpose of selling as soon as the shares rise in value ; and this gives the greatest opportunity to the 'bears,' because when they want to run down a stock they know that thousands of shares of that stock are in the hands of people who cannot hold them and who are bound to sell the moment they go down a few points. When the bears make a raid, and the stock goes down three or four points, these people are forced to sell, and then the slump begins. The next day those who are a little stronger on the market will be forced to sell, and within a week or ten days the different grades of these small speculators will be wiped out ; and such will be the decrease in the value of shares caused by putting so many on the market, that the bona fide holders of the stock, who invested with the idea of becoming part owners in that property, will also be wiped out of their holdings. Therefore, the larger the margin you provide for, the safer you will make the speculation. If the stock is fully paid up, or if it is paid up to a large extent, the stockholders will look to the directors for a profitable administration of the concern. They will look to the directors of the company for their security, instead of looking to Mr. Forget or to Mr. Ames to make them gain upon stocks that perhaps Mr. Forget or Mr. Ames are interested in running down.

In the fourth place, I would advise the Minister of Justice and the government to give some attention to the existing law concerning joint stock companies. I am told, although I hope it is not the case, that at present the Secretary of State issues under the Great Seal of Canada letters-patent authorizing the directors of companies of various kinds to issue paid-up stock to almost an unlimited amount. I need not say what a cursed operation this issue of paid-up stock is. We all know what was the result in the case of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. This company had already obligations for more than its property was worth, and just because it pleased its directors, they made a new issue of $5,000,000 worth of common stock at 60 per cent. It was not because it was worth 60 per cent, but just because they decided, under their authority, that it was to be sold at 60 per cent. And when two of the kings of the financial world, Mr. Ross and Mr. Forget, decided to quarrel and to make the shareholders pay for their quarrel, the stock was run down to 12 or 13 per cent. I therefore say that there should be no authorization given to any company authorized by this parliament or by the Secretary of State, to issue stock or obligations for anything else than real worth, which would in itself justify such issue of stock or obligations.

I would also advise that the law should provide that no transfer of shares would be valid unless the transfer bore the name of the seller and the purchaser and the date of the transfer, so that we would not have these pretended sales that are now carried on, and so that when the speculator on margin would come to pay in full for his shares he would receive the shares that he bought and not the shares that the stock broker bought when it pleased him or paid him to do so.

Then the law should provide that at least the savings banks, if not all the banks; at least the savings banks that are authorized by this parliament under the credit of the country and which receive the money of the workingmen and the poorer classes, should be debarred from being a party to these speculations, and while they refuse to accept a good note signed by an honest and solvent man, endorsed by another honest man, for say $500, they will not be permitted to lend $50,000 to Mr. Ames or Mr. Forget, who will give them as security shares that are not their own property, but which belong to other people, and with which they play football all the year round. At all events, no bank, whether a chartered bank or a savings bank, should be authorized to lend money on stocks that are not margined to at least 25 per cent of their value.

It may be said that these suggestions would to a large extent stop the operations of the stock exchanges. I am not a high financier and I cannot say what the result would be if stock exchange operations were limited, but I share in the opinion of the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) when he said, that these operations could be greatly curtailed without any detriment whatever to the community. I have always thought that the idea that people should be left to speculate as widely as they want is a wrong idea, kept up by stock brokers for their own purposes. Even the people who have been fleeced by them are accomplices of such a false opinion. At any rate no damage will be done to legitimate speculation if the hand of the law separates the good from the bad, the robbers from the robbed, and protects those who are fleeced from those who fleece them. I have spoken at great length and it may be that the newspapers will say of me, as they said a month ago, that I speak feelingly because I have been injured by these people. I wish to say, not because it is of any importance, that I have never in my life had any dealings with stock brokers, that I have never speculated, that I do not even know what it is to speculate, except by the sad relations which I have received from people who are just as intelligent, just as honest, just as good business men as those who have robbed them under the protection of the law.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to defend the poor brokers. I congratulate the government on having succeeded in getting one of their followers to waste another afternoon, and I daresay we shall have more afternoons wasted in the same way until the government are ready to bring down their railway policy. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has touched on a subject which is certainly a sore subject with many, as it entails loss of money—the subject of speculation. I am afraid, however, that by no Act of parliament can we stop that. Since the days when Joseph made a corner in corn, since the days of Law in Paris, since the days of the South Sea Bubble, speculation has been ingrained in human nature; and I do not see how, by any law you could put on the statute-book, you could prevent speculation. The system which the hon. gentleman has described prevails, and has many evils, though he evidently knows very little about the transactions he refers to. They are precisely the same as the transaction of a man who buys a piece of land, pays a deposit, and gives a mortgage for the balance; and you might as well try to place a law on the statute-book to prevent dealing in real estate as one to prevent stock speculation. There is one way, however, by which to a greater, or less extent, the evils of speculation can be cured by parliament. But the members of the present government, instead of doing what they could to check speculation and to avoid giving it legal sanction, have deliberately incorporated companies and given them power to speculate. As a result of giving these powers to the first company, we have gone and granted similar powers to other companies. The two loan companies in western Ontario which have failed with such disastrous consequences to their shareholders and their depositors, have failed solely and entirely because of the powers granted by this government. In 1898 a large company then in existence, and having certain powers from the Ontario legislature, applied to this House for an extension of its powers, and for confirmation of the powers it then had. It was a company incorporated under the old Building and Loan Societies' Act. It had power to receive money on deposit, to issue debentures, and, as was understood to be the case with all loan companies, to lend money only on real estate mortgages. That company applied for and obtained power to lend money on other securities. I opposed that Bill at the time very strongly. The Minister of Finance helped to carry it through. I presented the request of a great many leading banks against giving the company that power; but nevertheless it was granted. I succeeded, however, in getting one limitation inserted in the Bill. I pointed out that it gave the company power to acquire the stock of any company incorporated by the Dominion or by any provincial legislature. I pointed out that under that provision the company could speculate to the extent of putting their whole capital into mines or into any visionary scheme which they fancied; that they could buy an incorporated bank by holding the whole of its shares, with the result that a company having $2,000,000 capital could carry on a bank with a capital of $1,000,000 or $500,000, and under the charter of that bank, could evade limitation imposed upon the company not to receive deposits to a greater extent than four times its paid-up capital, and could receive deposits to the extent of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000. They could put their money into any visionary scheme. It was said that the banks had more or less of that power. I pointed out that every bank was obliged every month to publish a statement of its assets, liabilities, deposits, &c., while this company under its charter was only required to make a return to the government of its business up to the end of the year, not later than the 1st of March of the following year: that that return would not be published by the government until the 1st of July, and probably not distributed until three or four months afterwards and that the result was that the company had the power practically to wreck the shareholders to obtain money to an unlimited degree, and the government and the public would find out nothing about it for a year and a half. In the face of very strong opposition, that Bill was passed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is the Act?

Mr. OSLER. The Central Canada Loan & Savings Company, Chap. 97. I do not say one single word against this company, for I believe it is an exceedingly prosperous and well-managed company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then the Act is all right?

Mr. OSLER. No, that company has the power, and it depends entirely upon its management whether it will exercise that power or not. Let me read the powers that are given it:

The new company shall have the power to lend moneys on the security of, or purchase or invest in—

(a.) mortgages or hypothecs upon freehold or leasehold real estate, or other immovables;

(b.) the debentures, bonds, stocks and other securties of any government or any municipal corporation or school corporation, or any chartered bank——

The only thing I was able to accomplish—and I only succeeded in doing it after a great deal of pressure and after showing the evils that would result if my suggestion were not adopted—was to have these words put in:

—to the extent of not more than twenty per cent of the paid up capital stock of any such bank——

That clause has been added to the charter of every other company of a similar nature since then.

—or incorporated company, if incorporated by or under the authority of the parliament of Canada, or of the legislature of any former or present or any future province of Canada; provided that the new company shall not lend upon the security of, or purchase or invest in bills of exchange or promissory notes.

The new company may borrow money and receive money upon deposit, upon such terms as to interest, security and otherwise as may be agreed on, and may issue its bonds, debentures and other securities for moneys borrowed; provided always that the total of the new company's liabilities to the public outstanding from time to time shall not exceed four times the amount paid upon its capital stock; and provided further that the amount held on deposit shall not at any time exceed the aggregate amount of its then paid-up and unimpaired capital and of its cash actually in hand or deposited in any chartered bank in Canada and belonging to the new company.

So long as the new company is indebted for money received upon deposit, the total amount of its real estate and its mortgages or hypothecs upon freehold or leasehold real estate or immovables shall not from time to time exceed eighty per cent of its total assets

The new company shall transmit, on or before the 1st of March in each year, to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, a statement in duplicate, to the 31st December, inclusive, of the previous year, verified by the oath of the president or vice-president and the manager, setting out the capital stock of the new company and the proportion thereof paid-up, the assets and liabilities of the new company, the amount and nature of the investments made by the new company, both on its own behalf and on the behalf of others, and the average rate of interest derived therefrom, distinguishing the classes of securities, and also the extent and value of the lands held by it, and such other details as to the nature and extent of the business of the new company as the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General requires, and in such form and with such details as he from time to time requires and prescribes; but the new company shall in no case be bound to disclose the name or private affairs of any person who has dealings with it.

That charter, against the protest of the banks of Canada, was passed by this House, although the evils to which it would give rise were pointed out very strongly by myself and one or two others. I am within the mark when I say that at least fifteen or twenty other companies have come to this House and obtained the same powers. It was under a similar clause that the two unfortunate companies in St. Thomas came to grief. They made foolish investments, under the authority of this clause, which they could not have made had that power not been given them. They had the right under their charters to invest their whole capital and deposits in the wildest of wild cat mining schemes. They could, between the 1st of January and any time one or two months after, invest all their capital, and it would be fifteen months after that date before the shareholders would learn how their money had been invested. You cannot by any law prevent people speculating in some thing or other. People who will not smoke, people who will not indulge in cigarettes or drink, will bet on horse races, and the sooner we will recognize this universal tendency of our human nature, the better. But there is one way in which a government can minimize the evil, and that is by taking great care that all companies, having the stamp and authority of government, shall be subject to restrictions in this respect and be forced—especially all companies which borrow money and invest it in such fluctuating securities—to send out to the shareholders and the public, at short dates, statements showing the condition of their affairs, just as the banks have to do. Just imagine what the condition would be if our banks were not required from month to month to give their statements to the public. That is a check which keeps banking within its proper limits and prevents abuse. How can you prevent men in a town like St. Thomas from buying on margin, when they are told that the directors of this, that and the other company are piling up profits by speculation? That is what was the trouble in St. Thomas. Those directors gave out that they were making large sums of money out of stocks, and I dare say they did for a time, and the result was a perfect craze of wild speculation in that district, from which it has suffered very seriously, apart altogether from these particular failures. This government has laid itself open to blame by giving a free hand to financial companies applying for incorporation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Had either the companies referred to authority in its Act of incorporation to buy stocks on margin?

Mr. OSLER. They could do anything they liked.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would like the hon. gentleman to read the clause which gave them authority to buy stocks on margin.

Mr. OSLER. One need not buy stocks on margin to lose money. As a matter of fact, these companies have the power to buy stocks on margin, because they can lend money to any individual to enable that individual to buy stocks. They also bought stocks on margin themselves. That is shown by the reports we have so far.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Whether or not the powers given to these loan companies were too great or too little is a fair subject of debate, and I am not going to assert that our legislation is in all respects perfect. But I am rather surprised to learn from the hon. gentleman of the heroic efforts which he made to prevent the government giving certain powers to these companies. I have no recollection of any such efforts or of the measure to which he refers, but, according to his own statement, it was a private Bill. Of course, the government, in a sense, are responsible for all legislation, and in that respect we have to accept responsibility; but the responsibility is not limited to the government, but is shared by every hon. member who votes for the measure. My recollection of the matter in question is that it was in no sense a party measure; and in looking through 'Hansard' hurriedly, I cannot find that my hon. friend ever opened his mouth against it. It may be that in the Banking and Commerce Committee my hon. friend gave expression to his valuable views; but I should imagine, if he had very strong views and thought it a matter so important, he would not have been content to confine his observations to that committee, but would have come before the House and put himself on record against the clause. From the hurried glance I have been able to give over 'Hansard,' I cannot find that there was any debate on the Bill. In the index there is no reference, under the name of my hon. friend, to this Bill. If in the Banking and Commerce Committee he expressed the views he has just now given to the House and others differed from him, of course, he is entitled to credit to that extent. But, if he implies that this was a great question as between the government and the opposition, or that on this question the government insisted upon the adoption of a certain course by this legislature against his judgment and that of hon. gentlemen opposite, that is hardly a fair presentation of the case. Many a clause appears in private Bills which is the subject of discussion, and it would hardly be justifiable for an hon. gentleman, years afterwards, to say that they were all the work of the government. The hon. gentleman will have to share with us some of this responsibility, when it does not appear that he made any effort to prevent the passing of the clause, even to the extent of voting agains it.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is right. I do not remember having taken any steps against it in this House. I knew it was useless. A protest, a very strong protest, was made in the committee. But the Finance Minister appeared and championed the Bill as strongly as I and some others opposed it, so I felt sure it was quite useless to go further in the matter. But to the extent of not raising my voice in protest in this House, I am responsible.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. May I be permitted to contradict the hon. gentleman's statement (Mr. Osler's) on the personal point. He said that I appeared and championed the Bill. Nothing occurred that would justify that statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to point out to the Finance Minister that I raised, in this House, during the present session, exactly the same objection as that spoken of by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) as having been raised by him years ago. This was in connection with Bill (No. 24), which is not a private, but a public Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What Bill is that?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is an Act to extend the power of loan companies. I have it before me. The effect of the Bill was to confine its operation to a very few companies; I think it was stated at the time that it was confined to practically one company. It did not contain exactly the provisions referred to with regard to the power to purchase shares in a bank. But I will read my hon. friend the Minister of Finance the clause, which I think, passed in exactly these words, with the exception I have mentioned:

1. Every loan company, in addition to the powers vested in it, may from time to time lend money on the security of, or purchase or invest in, (a.) mortgages or hypothecs upon freehold or leasehold real estate or other immovables, (b.) the debentures, bonds, stocks and other securities of any government or any municipal or school corporation, or of any chartered bank or incorporated company if incorporated by the parliament of Canada or by the legislature of any former or present or future province of Canada, but not including bills of exchange or promissory notes.

I raised the objection that this would enable this loan company—if it applied only to one company—to invest its moneys in the stock of any wild-cat company in Canada, and I did not think that was a judicious power to confer on any such company, as the results, in some case at least, would be very likely to be those pointed out by my hon. friend from West Toronto. The hon. Minister of Finance, if I remember correctly, said that the power had been granted to other loan companies, and no evil results had followed, and there did not appear to be any reason for withholding it from this company or the companies to which this Bill applied. I did protest against that policy. I thought it very bad policy to give these companies these enormous powers of investment and purchase. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) asked this question: Is a company of that kind authorized to purchase on margin? If that hon. gentleman had thought for a moment, he would have seen that that did not affect the question we are discussing. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) also confused the matter very much in the remarks he made. But, suppose this company goes to a broker and says: We want to buy so much stock, and we will pay a margin of 10 or 20 per cent. Or, suppose it buys from the same broker that stock and then takes the stock to a bank and borrows against it all but 10 or 20 per cent. You may call one transaction gambling and the other transaction not gambling if you like. But, so far as the results are concerned, they must be the same upon the person who engages in the transaction.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The transaction is illegal on the part of the company. It may not be illegal on the part of the brokers, who may be incorporated with certain power as a stock exchange, but it would be illegal on the part of the loan company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Illegal to purchase the stocks and then pledge them?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, to buy them on margin.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know how my hon. friend is going to make the distinction, so far as the results are concerned. The result to the unfortunate shareholders would be exactly the same.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I admit the result would be——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, the result would be the same. That emphasizes the point made by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler). It is absolutely wrong to confer such wide powers on any loan company, the shareholders of which have the right to assume that the funds placed in the hands of their directors shall be invested in securities which are not affected by the contingencies to which mining companies of various kinds are subject in this country.

My hon. friend from Labelle has taken up a good deal of time this afternoon. I do not propose to direct much attention to his remarks. The first and most important point is that, for the most part, his remarks seem to constitute an attack upon the private affairs of a gentleman in the city of Montreal who is not in this House to defend himself. So far as the speech of the hon. member for Labelle amounts to a personal attack, I am bound to say that I do not think it was in very good taste. I have heard very great indignation expressed in this House with regard to criticism of government officials, even in respect of a public matter, on the ground that they were not here to defend themselves. But here, in respect not of a public matter, but of a private matter, we have the house of Messrs. Forget dragged before this parliament to the extent of an hour's speech, mainly devoted to the discussion of their private affairs. If these gentlemen are guilty of the dishonourable conduct the hon. member for Labelle has seen fit to attribute to them, the courts of the country are open to any who are aggrieved. For my part, I decline to believe any of the statements reflecting on these gentlemen. I decline also to believe that stock brokers, as a class, are the scoundrels that this hon. gentleman undertakes to say they are. I have no doubt that some stock brokers, as some members of any other class, are not honourable, may be even guilty of fraud. But, even though that is the case, it does not become any hon. gentleman in this House to stigmatize these men as gamblers, perpetrating fraud every day of their lives. When my hon. friend from Labelle talks about gambling he ought to look at both sides of the case. If these brokers are gamblers, what are the men of whom he talks so sympathetically who give these brokers the instructions under which they act? If these stock brokers carry out the instructions that necessarily involve gambling, the men who give the instructions are as much gamblers as the stock brokers themselves. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) was very anxious, some time ago, for an investigation into these transactions. Perhaps he had better not go far away from this House to begin an investigation of that kind. And the investigation should not stop short at stock brokers. So far as the law is concerned, it has been put in operation in some parts of the country. I believe that in Nova Scotia indictments have been found against some stock brokers under the very section of the statutes to which my hon. friend has referred. But as to the remedies which are suggested by my hon. friend from Labelle, I should hardly think that he was very serious in some of those which he advanced to the House. One of the suggestions he made was, so far as I could understand him, that when any gentleman desired to take, as the term is 'a little flyer' on stock, he should not be permitted to do so unless he put up a larger margin than is the custom at the present time; that is to say, he should be allowed to gamble, as the hon. member termed it, but he must gamble under certain precautions. I do not know whether that remedy would commend itself to the Minister of Justice, or whether he thinks that idea could be carried out. Now, I have no doubt that this dealing in stocks has become a great evil in Canada; but so have many other things become great evils. For example, as the hon. member for Toronto pointed out, we have had land booms in the North-west, we have had land booms in Manitoba, we have had land booms in the city of Winnipeg. I think even in the city of Toronto we have had something that was described ten or twelve years ago as a land boom.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) And Sydney, C.B.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Toronto land boom was a reality.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course we all know that when people in any country see their friends making large sums of money by speculative means, by a sudden increment of value, whether in stocks, lands or anything else, the community as a whole is very apt to lose its head and to indulge in speculations that sooner or later will bring their logical and legitimate results. That is the condition of affairs in Canada at the present time. Prices of certain stocks in this country went up very suddenly and rapidly, people saw their friends around them making a great deal of money, and men who could not afford to take risks in anything, took risks in stocks. Some people went headlong into stock speculation and many of them most unfortunately lost everything they had. I doubt very much whether you can cure an evil of that kind by legislation. I am not prepared to say that you might not be able to mitigate it to some extent by legislation, in the way of amendments to the criminal code. No doubt, the Minister of Justice will turn his attention to that subject. But as for the remedies which the hon. member for Labelle has suggested, I do not see the slightest adequacy in any one of them. Suppose you licensed every broker in Canada and put him under periodical inspection from time to time, does not the hon. member for Labelle, who is so familiar with this subject, know that people all over Canada could speculate through brokers in the United States, as they do already? The hon. member for Labelle, who is prepared to say that he knows that nine-tenths of the stock operations in Canada are in the nature of gambling, surely must be familiar with that fact, and I would like to know how he would deal with it. If you license every broker in Canada and put him under the most rigid inspection, you would still have people in Canada dealing with brokers in the United States.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Do we not license insurance companies?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, we do license insurance companies, but I am bound to say that I do not exactly understand the relevancy of the hon. gentleman's question. If you licensed every broker in Canada, even if you abolished every broker in Canada, people in Canada would still have ample opportunity to speculate in stocks with United States brokers. So, I say, I do not believe that you can absolutely cure this evil by legislation, though, as I have already said, I am not prepared to say that the Minister of Justice might not mitigate it to some extent by amendments to the criminal code, which would prevent these operations being conducted on so large a scale.

Now, the hon. member for Labelle took occasion also to reflect seriously upon their Lordships of the Privy Council. I have no doubt they will be very much pained when they learn that their decision does not commend itself to his own sound and well considered judgment. I think the hon. member for Labelle perhaps overlooked the fact, when he was contrasting the Law Lords with the members of the Judicial Committee, that those two bodies are composed of exactly the same learned judges. At least that was the case up to a few years ago, I have not examined the personnel of those two bodies lately. But I know that a few years ago every Law Lord was a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and I think that is the case still with the possible exception of the Chief Justice. When the hon. member reflects in scathing language upon the legal acumen of the members of the Judicial Committee, he reflects on the legal acumen of the Law Lords who are exactly the same persons.

Mr. BOURASSA. I did not reflect on the legal standing of the gentlemen who gave the judgment, but I reflected on their action in that case where they only heard one side, and then gave judgment, ignoring entirely a part of the evidence of the record.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend shows how little he understands about these matters, and how careful he ought to be before he criticises subjects that he is not very familiar with. If he knew anything about arguing a case ex parte, he would know that when a case is argued ex parte the appellant goes to a court to some extent handicapped, because the court in such cases always argues the case for the other side. I argued one case myself before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee where the other side did not appear, and the present Attorney General of England, Sir Robert Finlay, who was the senior counsel in that case, remarked, before we went into court, that it was most unfortunate for us that there was no one on the other side, because the court, in arguing the case for the absent party, is sometimes apt to take a very strong view of the case from the standpoint of the respondent; therefore counsel always desire the respondent to be represented rather than have to argue the case ex parte with the respondent absent.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Did you win the case?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, and it overruled a long series of decisions in Nova Scotia and two decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada, but there is not a lawyer in the province of Nova Scotia at the present time who would be disposed to argue that the judgment of the Privy Council in that case was not a sound and correct one.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Would the hon. gentleman allow me? As to that case of Forget and Ostigny to which he refers, I must say that the judgment of the Privy Council being an ex parte judgment has not been recognized by the judges of Quebec, because they say, and I have myself heard the Chief Justice of Quebec say in a similar case, that they cannot accept that jurisdiction because Ostigny was not represented.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course I am not so familiar with the rules of the hon. gentleman's province and do not know what weight is to be attached to authorities of that kind. But if he will examine the English reports during the last ten years, he will find the case, which I argued ex parte, to have been cited by counsel over and over again at least half a dozen times, and referred to and relied on by courts of the highest standing in England. That would simply seem to indicate that there is a different rule in different countries. It has been the rule in our own courts, and I know in the courts of England as well, to make no distinction as to the authority of such cases. The hon. member for Labelle, I think, desired to say something to me on that matter.

Mr. BOURASSA. It is immaterial. I was going to say, that, according to the theory of my hon. friend, it would be better for a party engaging in a lawsuit to have no lawyer to plead for him.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is treason.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not sure that it would not be better sometimes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am afraid that my hon. friend is speaking without consideration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think I must apologize to my hon. friend. I was about to say to the hon. member for Labelle that if he will go to the volumes of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada he will find many cases—I remember one from my own province—which have been argued ex-parte and in which the appellant has failed. The case of Lane vs. Macdonald from my own province was argued about twenty years ago ex-parte in the Supreme Court and the appellant failed. The court argues the case for the absent respondent and sometimes convinces itself; and many lawyers, as I know, because I am speaking from experience as a member of the bar and in that I can appeal to the hon. Minister of Justice, would rather, in the final court of apppeal, have the other side represented by counsel than to argue the case ex-parte.

Mr. BOURASSA. What has the hon. member to say about that part of the judgment of the Privy Council where they declared a fact which was directly contradicted by the evidence and based their judgment upon it ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have never heard of the case to which the hon. gentleman referred until to-day. I have not examined it but I would hardly be inclined to think that so important a part of the evidence had been overlooked by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. MONET. If the respondent had had a lawyer there to represent him he would have pointed that out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That may be very true and there may have been some question overlooked. If any measure can be devised for the purpose of controlling stock speculation in Canada I for one would be prepared to give it my hearty support, but I am afraid that I can hardly gather from the hon. member for Labelle anything that would contribute very much to that end. Stock speculation is undoubtedly an evil, but it is an evil that, for the most part, it is almost impossible to cure by any legislation.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been said on this question by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) I think I shall say a few words. I do not rise to say a word against any private individual. I think we have only a right to speak of those who have inflicted an injury upon the community. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Labelle has proved his case, that an injury has been inflicted upon himself or upon others but in regard to what the hon. member for West Toronto states, I am sure that the case he made out is correct and that is the case of the two loan companies in St. Thomas in the county which I have the honour to represent. They acted under the authority of this government in dealing in margins and they brought about perhaps the greatest calamity that has ever happened in our county. I think the attention of the government having been called to section 9 of chap. 61, they should see to it that no other companies are allowed to fall into the same condition as that in which we now find the Atlas Loan Company and the Elgin Loan Company of St. Thomas. I know that the people there took stock in these loan companies believing that they were doing a legitimate business in loaning money on mortgages on landed property. Of course, there is very little risk in that. When I took stock in one of these companies I believed that they were doing business in that way, but, I found that they had come to this parliament and got permission to do an illegitimate business, as I think, and the consequence is that there are widowed women, retired farmers, and others who had made a competence for themselves who will be obliged to go to work again or go to the poorhouse simply because they have been fleeced of the earnings of their lifetime. I think, the government's attention having been called to this, that they should see that no other companies are allowed to engage in stock speculation as these companies have done with such disastrous results. I have nothing more to say except to express the hope that section 9 of the Act, to which I have referred, will be amended and amended this session.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that it seems to me that there is a good deal in the argument put before us by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that we should make some effort to improve the law, and to that extent, for my own part, after what I have seen in the city of Montreal, I would be disposed to support the motion of my hon. friend. Within the last eight or ten years the fever of speculation has developed in the city of Montreal to an extent which has brought ruin to a very large number of people, to a great many families and particularly to a very large number of young men to whom it appears, as it used not to appear when I was a young man, that the best way to obtain a suitable position in life is to acquire wealth by avoiding the observance of the law of daily work. As a rule, in the hope of acquiring wealth suddenly, they get money in any manner possible, invest that money in paying a small margin upon stock and not infrequently they are ruined and sometimes landed in the penitentiary as a result of this extraordinary tendency which is now so prevalent in Canada. I suppose it is the same in other parts of the country as it is in the city of Montreal, but I speak of Montreal more particularly because I know what is going on there. I am like the hon. member for Labelle, a man who is not given to speculation myself. I have never speculated or bought shares of any kind, but from what I have seen I am very sure that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Labelle would be a step in the proper direction ; I refer to that part of the remedy which he proposed, that every transaction which takes place upon margin should be made more serious and more difficult by the imposition of a heavier margin. I say this with all due reservation, because I am not very conversant with these operations. I am almost sure that a law of that kind would have a great effect in the way of a deterrent from the reckless speculation which is indulged in in the city of Montreal. The provisions of chap. 42, 51 Vic. may be very good as far as they go, but it has not been found possible to apply section 1 to check reckless speculation and I would like to say to my hon. friend, that, being, probably, in the same situation as myself, he has lent too willing an ear to those of this friends who have gone to the offices of brokers and lost money. He has lent too willing an ear to those who have lost money, probably through the legitimate employment by them of the firm of Mr. Forget, and the consequence of that is that my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) very recklessly has maligned in this House this afternoon a man who in no way deserves the censure directed against him.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have merely chosen Mr. Forget as a most striking example.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend has been reckless in doing so, because he has very nearly coupled with Mr. Forget's name the word 'robber' and 'despoiler of the poor.'

Mr. BOURASSA. It was Mr. Dansereau who did that.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend has made a mistake in quoting that controversy between Mr. Dansereau and Mr. Forget, because it was a personal matter, and we have no means of verifying what are the facts. I would say to my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) that he has treated with a great deal of flippancy the case of Ostigny and Forget. That was a case which interested the whole bar, and the dissent of Mr. Justice Hall was considered extremely strong, and it certainly justified the brokers of the city of Montreal—than whom I do not know a more respectable, a more honest and straight-forward and a more loyal set of men—it certainly justified them in taking the steps which they did to bring that case as far as the Privy Council. My hon. friend has qualified that step, which is taken every day in the practice of our profession, as a conspiracy to wrest from the Privy Council a verdict favourable to the brokers and their alleged infamous transactions. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) must be mistaken. My hon. friend knows that that case was fully discussed before the Privy Council. I have not seen the report lately, but it was considered by every member of the bar at that time to be a very strong judgment indeed, and for my own part I was impressed, as were a great many of my confreres, with the idea that the Privy Council in upholding the dissent of Mr. Justice Hall had interpreted the law as it really is in our province. I think my hon. friend from Gaspé is mistaken in saying that our courts will not abide by the holding of the Privy Council in the case of Ostigny and Forget.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is all a question of fact.

Mr. MONK. Yes. My hon. friend referred to the case of Roy vs. Canadian Pacific Railway. Well, in that case admissions were made which perhaps gave reason to the Privy Council in judging as it did. Very important admissions were made by my friend Mr. Gouin, who argued the case before the Privy Council, and it was upon these admissions the Privy Council rendered judgment in the case of Roy. At any rate, I have never heard it alleged that the Privy Council made a mistake on the questions of fact as they found them in the case of Ostigny vs. Forget. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) is surely mistaken in holding up to this House a man of the position of Senator Forget as one given to speculation with the object of ruining his clients—I think that is a fair interpretation of what my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) said. I do not mean to say that that information has not been conveyed to the hon. gentleman by parties who might have suffered in speculation.

Mr. BOURASSA. I would not like my hon. friend to go so far as that in the interpretation of what I said. What I said was that, as the law stands now and as the practice of the brokers is, it may be that in times of a crisis they are led and almost forced to speculate against their clients. I never said that that was the object of Senator Forget or any other broker under ordinary circumstances.

Mr. MONK. I am very glad to hear my hon. friend say that, because the senator—whom I am not specially charged to defend, but who is an old friend of mine—is a man who occupies a very high position in the city of Montreal. He is a governor of our university, and a benefactor of that university, which stands in great need of assistance. He occupies a very high position in respect to all our philanthropic works in the city of Montreal, and I have no hesitation in saying that he generally enjoys the confidence of every class of the community. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) is aware of that. I may say also that as one of our French Canadian fellow-citizens who have entered the world of finance and begun at the foot of the ladder, he has attained a position unattained previously by any of his compatriots, and which has reflected a great deal of credit, not only on himself, but on his fellow French Canadians.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). Reference has been made by some of the speakers to speculation in respect to land in Manitoba and the North-west, and I wish to say a word as to that. I do not refer to any boom in Winnipeg or Toronto or any city, because lands rise and fall in value in these cities regularly. But I want to point out that the records of thirty years in the city of Winnipeg concerning the lands in Manitoba and the North-west show that there has been a steady increase in the price of these lands, and that there never has been any set back in that price. These records show on the average a steady increase of 12 per cent in the value of farm lands throughout Manitoba and the North-west.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES (West Huron). I have no desire to follow the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) through his lengthy and eloquent address, but I simply rise for the purpose of endorsing generally what he has said. The argument has been advanced by the member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) that because some people have a tendency to do certain evil acts, there is no use in passing legislation to prevent them from committing these acts. If that argument were followed to its logical conclusion, we might as well do away with all legislation. Some people in their nature have a disposition to steal, and, per se, you should not legislate against stealing; some people in their nature have a disposition to commit murder, and therefore, according to the logic of the hon. member (Mr. Osler), there is no use putting a law in the statute-book against murder. There are a good many people who are disposed to do immoral things, and according to the logic of the argument of the hon. member for Toronto, you should not legislate against these things. That is surely not a very logical argument, but coming from a man who is a stock broker, I am not surprised at it at all. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Labelle has performed a public service in calling the attention of parliament to this evil. If it is not an evil, then there are a great many people throughout the Dominion who are labouring under a misapprehension, because there are a great many people who are under the impression that speculation on margin, as we ordinarily understand the term, is gambling pure and simple. A great many people are also under the impression that it is contrary to good morals to tolerate this spirit of gambling under the name of speculation, and they believe that parliament should provide a remedy against it. I admit that it is exceedingly difficult to stop people from speculating, but there is a wide difference between speculating in real estate, for example, and dealing in stocks on margin, as the term is ordinarily used. There are a good many people who have suffered from stock speculation of one kind or another, and I do think that the people of this country would welcome any legislation that would have for its object the checking of this evil. Even if such legislation does not entirely stop the unwise and improvident spirit of gambling that is abroad in the land. I was somewhat amused at the leader of the opposition, who started out apparently with the object of getting his friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler) out of the hole in which he had landed, and who, for the time being, did not admit that there was any wrong in this system of speculation, but before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) had finished his argument, he admitted that it was an evil, and he also thought that there might be some possibility of checking it if the Minister of Justice would introduce an amendment to the Criminal Code directed against it. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) and the member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) both admitted the prevalence of the evil. Now, as to whether the government is or is not responsible for the speculation that was carried on by the loan companies in the city of St. Thomas, that is neither here nor there. The hon. gentlemen succeed in establishing the fact that the loan companies in the city of St. Thomas were carrying on an illegal transaction in speculating in stocks, and as a result that they brought ruin and disaster on a good many families in the vicinity. These hon. gentlemen proved the contention of the hon. member from Labelle, although they did not intend to do so. If it is possible for the Minister of Justice to devote some attention to this matter, as I presume he will, by introducing an amendment to the Criminal Code, he will be doing something that will confer a great benefit on the country at large. The gambling spirit prevails to a very large extent, and whilst I admit without hesitation the impossibility of removing it entirely by legislation, I do say that we can check it to a very considerable extent. We have spent a great deal of time in this House, not only this session, but in previous sessions, in passing legislation that was vastly of less importance than the legislation which we have been invited to enact by the hon. member for Labelle.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, when a few evenings ago I briefly referred to the subject which has been introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), I did not think that during this session it would receive as much attention from the members of this House as it has. On another occasion I may refer to the matter again, with a view to suggesting some remedy for, or some means of minimizing, the evil complained of. For that reason my remarks on this occasion shall be extremely brief. That an evil does exist has been fully demonstrated by the hon. member who has introduced the motion now in your hands. I believe it to be a very widespread evil. We speak of the evil of intemperance; but to my mind stock speculation brings more sorrow, more sadness, more broken hearts, more ruined homes, more suicides, than all the ravages of intemperance. We talk of the evils of the race track. Betting on the race track is nothing as compared with this evil. I have before me a quotation from the 'Canadian Sportsman' on the subject of the worst kind of gambling. In this brief article, that paper, referring to a recent failure in the city of Toronto, says:

> The class of business done by this firm has had much to do with the wild mad speculation that has had so large a number of our citizens in its grasp within the past year. Talk about injury being done this community by holding a race meeting conducted by gentlemen for two-weeks in the spring and one week in the autumn. There has been more citizens of Toronto ruined within the past six months and more misery caused by this carnival of reckless speculation than the Canadian turf is responsible for in the fifty years in its history.

We say, then, that it is an admitted fact that an evil does exist, and our duty here is, if possible, to find some means of minimizing that evil. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) says that speculation has long existed and will continue to exist—that it is natural to speculate. I believe there is a great deal in that; but that should not deter us from finding some means of minimizing what we consider an illegitimate practice. We must be careful at the same time, however, to distinguish between the broker who carries on a legitimate business, and the broker who carries on what may fairly be called an illegitimate or improper business. The business of a broker is just as legitimate and honourable as that of the banker, the merchant, or any other man engaged in the ordinary walks of life; and no reflection to my mind should be cast on that class of the community who engage in a business which is proper and legitimate and a requirement of the country. Even dealing on margin may be legitimate business. Where there is no intention to deliver the goods that are sold on margin or to implement the purchase, then I consider the business becomes a dangerous and illegitimate business. If a man has not the means to implement his purchase, he is sure to become the loser in the end, because when stocks decline, time after time, and he puts up his money until he puts up his last dollar, if he is unable to continue to meet the decline or to take over the stock which he has purchased, he must become the loser and his family will become the sufferers. I said, however, that there is a kind of dealing on margin which I consider perfectly legitimate. For example, a grain merchant of Liverpool may purchase a million bushels of wheat in New York. Knowing that he has a sufficient margin between the price he pays for that wheat in New York and the price he expects to obtain for it in Liverpool, provided there is no decline in price in the meantime, it is perfectly legitimate for him to sell short the million bushels, and so protect himself against loss. That is the kind of transaction that is engaged in every day of the year. That man has the goods to deliver, because he has purchased the wheat in New York, and is able to implement the transaction.

I remember very well when the Bill referred to by the hon. member for Labelle was introduced into this House by Sir John Thompson, I believe it was first introduced in the Senate by Sir John Abbott, then Prime Minister of Canada. That Bill was aimed against the small bucket shops which at that time were all through the country doing a large business. It was not intended to operate against the legitimate broker at all. However, means were very soon found of evading that law, simply by changing the base of operations. Instead of consummating the transaction say in Toronto or Montreal, the broker simply wires the deal to New York or Buffalo, so as to have it completed outside of the country, and not commit an offence against the laws of Canada.

Dealing on margin no doubt makes speculation easy, because it is done with less money than would be required if a man were buying stocks and paying the full price for them. To my mind what we must keep in view in discussing this matter is the means by which we can make it more difficult to speculate on margin. I believe that if we can limit the supply of money which the broker controls and which he obtains on the security of the stocks he holds, then we will limit the operations of the broker, and minimize to a very large extent the dealings on margin. It has been suggested that it would be a good thing to license the broker. I would not approve of that. If you license a broker to do this class of busines, you simply make the business more respectable, and create an injury rather than a benefit. To my mind the business at the present time is too respectable. It has been transferred from the small bucket shop to the large broker's office, which at the present time is practically nothing more nor less than a big respectable bucket shop.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, unlimited stock speculation is damaging to the country in many ways. It limits the amount of money available for the legitimate business of the country. That has been proven over and over again. The money of the country that ought to be reserved for the legitimate business of the country is often sent out of the country to be used for stock speculation. The proof of that is apparent to-day. We have the most prosperous times probably that ever existed in the history of the continent of America; but by reason of inflated companies, by reason of millions of stock being put on the market, that stock has not been digested, as the term is, and the result is that in the midst of this great prosperity there are many people labouring under financial difficulties brought on by stock speculation. Then, stock speculation is a danger to the loan companies and the insurance companies, the reserves of which sometimes find their way into the stock market. Other great interests are involved in that way. The loan companies have had the public faith in them largely reduced, and the time has arrived when this parliament should do something to prevent their investing the money of their depositors and shareholders—in some cases to the extent of ninety per cent—in stock speculation and only ten per cent paid in advances on real estate, which is the purpose for which they were specially created. It is said that we cannot make a cure, but I believe some kind of a cure may be effected on the lines laid down by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) this afternoon and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) this evening. It is all right for men who have the money to go into stock speculation. People talk about betting on horse racing, but there is this to be said in its favour as against stock gambling, that when a man puts up his money on a horse, he knows how much he stands to lose, but when a man puts up his money on stocks on margin, he never knows how much more he will have to pay and what obligations are ahead of him. If some law could be passed whereby the amount of margin would be increased or which would prevent loan companies from advancing more than a certain percentage on speculative stocks, the evil would be largely reduced. A strong case has been made out, and I think it is incumbent on the government to introduce some kind of legislation in the way of curtailing the power which the loan companies have of lending money on stocks.

Mr. D. MONET (Laprairie and Napierville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has rendered, and will render a valuable service to the public generally, and to several people in particular, by presenting the motion put in your hands this afternoon. The hon. member merely stated aloud what every one in this country has been whispering for several months past: that there exists a system of speculation on margin of a most fraudulent character; a system of speculation which is the more dangerous because it is apparently carried on under the cover of our statutory law of 1888. The facts on which my hon. friend for Labelle has based his argument have not been contradicted by any of the members who addressed the House, either on this side or on the opposite. Indeed, they are taken from the records of two cases looked upon as very famous and which were even taken to his Majesty's Privy Council in appeal. The facts referred to by my hon. friend and which are undeniable and uncontradicted, are recounted in those cases.

My hon. friend also referred to certain facts in connection with the famous controversy which arose in the months of September and October last between Messrs. Dansereau and Forget. The hon. member for Labelle in pointing out with the eloquence and ability which we all recognize, the facts connected with this controversy, showed, I think, that fraud very often enters in these speculations which he denounced.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) complained that the hon. member for Labelle had repeated some statements in which mention was made of thieves and swindlers, because these expressions seemed to apply to Mr. Forget. It appears to me we should not be afraid of calling certain things by their name, and particularly of calling a thief a thief. When certain doings are recognized by us as bad, I do not see any reason why we should object to designating as they deserve those who are guilty of them. However, according to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, my hon. friend from Labelle had no right to qualify as he did the conduct of those who commit those acts considered as actual frauds.

I think the hon. member for Labelle might have gone a little further than he has done, in giving out certain facts in connection with this Dansereau-Forget dispute. For instance, if he had carried his inquiry a little further, he might have informed the House of the famous circumstance of the decease of the well-known broker, which Mr. Forget availed himself of to refuse paying to his client Dansereau what he owed him. I think the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would not object to our calling a robber he who actually robs his client.

Mr. SPEAKER. (Translation.) I think the hon. member is going a little too far. Rule 13 of the Rules and Regulations reads as follows:

No member shall use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof.

Mr. MONET. (Translation.) I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, when you called my attention to the rule, that the facts elicited by my remarks had taken place before Mr. Forget was a senator. That was the explanation which I proposed giving to the House. In any case I bow humbly to your ruling.

Every one admits that the facts elicited by that famous dispute are true. It is stated that after all the evil is not so great, since two cases only have been found where fraud was apparent. As a matter of fact nobody is very willing to admit having practised that kind of speculation, whether he has succeeded or not. That reminds me of Sir Charles Tupper's answer to the inquiry as to how he had made his fortune. The ex leader of the Conservative party, instead of admitting that he had speculated, merely stated that he had practised as a physician for three, four or five years, and in that way had amassed the immense wealth he possessed at the time.

If those who profit by speculation are in no way anxious to boast of the means whereby they have succeeded, the more so are the losers in the game reticent in this connection. The evil is much more widespread than seemed to think those who spoke after the hon. member for Labelle, and who, while not controverting the argument brought forward by this gentleman, seemingly claimed that it is not expedient to introduce a law regulating speculation on stock in this country.

The contrary is to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I have received letters from friends urging the necessity of a law that would protect these poor victims ; and here are the very words which one of them uses : 'To protect those who are foolish enough to do as I have done.'

It is evident that those who speculate on margin (I mean those who have only a few hundred or a few thousand dollars) are induced to do so by the advice of those who, certainly, control the rise or fall of stock in most cases and thus rapidly build up a fortune for themselves at the expense of the buyers.

The evil exists, and the fact having been brought to the attention of parliament, it seems that the Minister of Justice and the government should find a means, not of interfering with legitimate speculation, but of putting a stop to that abusive speculation which leads these poor victims to the consequences we know.

I said a moment ago that those who do not succeed are far from being boastful of a practice which has caused their ruin ; and so, we are not made aware of the extent of the evil. But we all know, it is notorious to-day, that even professional men, notaries, have been sent to the penitentiary merely because they had speculated with money put in their hands by individuals, often poor widows, who had only a few hundred dollars savings. These notaries had committed these frauds in an endeavour to meet the calls made on them to cover their margin on account of a sudden rise or fall of the stock, which they had been unable to foresee. In the same way bank cashiers have been obliged to quit the country because they could not refund the money which they had embezzled for purposes of speculation.

It suffices to mention these facts without giving names or entering into particulars, to show that the evil exists. Now, that evil having been brought to the attention of the House, it is its duty, as well as that of the government to try and find a remedy.

In conclusion, I wish to thank once more my hon. friend from Labelle for having brought up that question. I think he has thereby rendered a great service to the public. The almost unanimous expression of opinion on the part of the members, who admitted that the evil existed, should induce the government, and more especially the Minister of Justice to take proper measures for remedying it.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I concur very heartily, Mr. Speaker, in the remarks made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and my hon. friend from Napierville (Mr. Monet) as regards this great evil. I have listened very attentively to that strong indictment made against gambling and what I may term gambling dens, established in our large cities. In my opinion, my hon. friend from Labelle has rendered this country a real service, and I hope his speech will be read by all the young men just about entering on their career in this country. It has been my lot to represent in the district of Montreal—the largest judicial district of the province of Quebec and perhaps the largest in the whole Dominion—the Crown in my official capacity of Crown Prosecutor. I have seen, term after term, young men belonging to the notarial profession, for instance, standing indicted for forgery and fraud—for having taken the money which had been deposited with them by clients ; and the cause of their being arrested and sent to the penitentiary was this passion to gamble on the stock exchange, even if they had to do it with money which did not belong to them. That is one of the saddest chapters of criminal history in Canada. I have witnessed such cases often, and therefore I can bear testimony to the truth of the picture presented by my hon. friend from Labelle. What does the hon. gentleman propose ? The remedy seems very simple, raise the margin. Go into the city of Montreal or anywhere else, where the stock exchange reigns supreme, and you will be told by young lawyers, notaries, and clerks, that they go to the brokers offices just as they would go to a club to play a game of cards or to a lottery. We have legislated against lotteries because they are based on chance. Why should we not legislate for the same reason against the stock exchange ? The young man with a salary of $500, or even with a salary of $1,000 per year, who goes to a broker and buys shares of say Dominion Iron and Steel or any other stock on a margin of five, ten or fifteen per cent, is nothing else, to my mind. but a common gambler : and if you would raise this margin to twenty-five per cent you will do the young men of this country the best service you can render them. This debate should be a great moral lesson to our young men. I am told by the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that it is better to preach by example, which is no doubt true, but unfortunately the best educated men of this country are addicted to that gambling frenzy. When men lose at the stock exchange, they accuse the fiscal policy of the government as the cause of their losses. Lately we have heard of many thousands of the young men of this country losing money through speculating in stocks, and the government was charged with being the cause of those losses. Well, is it not a fact that the real cause was the depression brought about by the stock brokers themselves ? I believe that the depression was due to their own quarrels, as we have been told this afternoon. I would urge the adoption of this resolution; indeed, this debate will furnish a highly moral lesson, which I hope will bear fruit.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). That there is urgent need of legislation to prevent stock gambling, if you can prevent by legislation, no one will deny. But the question is what could you do by legislation to prevent it? I think that the most effective remedy would be to compel actual transfer and registration at the time a sale of stock is made. I have always thought that every stock broker should have the stock on hand before selling it, and when he sells it, he should immediately put the sale on record and transfer the stock. Monthly returns should be sent the government of actual transactions; and if it be found that a broker has been dealing with stocks not in his possession, he should be punished by a fine. To sell stocks short or stocks which you do not own should be made a punishable offence.

This will pretty effectually stop it, so far as I know. Now, it may be said that the variety of stocks is so great that this could not be done. When stocks are listed they become, in a measure, public property. At least, they are negotiable property and it is an easy matter to take record of them. Stock brokers do not deal in wild-cat schemes, mining speculations and stock of that kind. They handle stocks for which there is a public demand or stocks which have intrinsic value. If a stock broker takes the responsibility of handling stocks at all the first requisite should be that the stock should be registered. Then, a record should be kept of every transaction and a return made somewhat similar to the return made by the banks, so that the government could trace the stock, know whether the broker was dealing on margin or selling something that he did not own. If the transactions were confined to bona fide purchases and sales, it seems to me, not so much harm would be done. I believe that probably it would be an additional safety to compel a purchaser to put up a larger margin. Many deal in stocks on a small margin who would not touch them if the margin were greater. I am not so pronounced on that point as I am in believing that every stock transaction should be registered and that there should be a monthly return of every broker who deals in stocks, and, if it is shown that he is dealing in stocks he does not own, he should be fined.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I believe that the question raised by the motion of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is one well worthy the consideration of this House. I have listened patiently and carefully to all that has been said in order that I might gather suggestions that would be useful in any effort I may make to remedy the grievances which exist. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) must bear in mind that this question is one over which we have only a partial control. A transaction in stocks is more a matter of civil contract which is to be regulated, to a large extent, by the law of the particular province in which the transaction takes place.

Mr. SPROULE. Who gives the stock broker authority to carry on his business?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is a matter of local concern. We can only deal with that question here so far as we may make the dealing in stocks a penal offence. I agree with all that has been said about the evils that have resulted from stock gambling transactions. I have in my own experience known of cases of the greatest possible hardship. I am quite within the limits of what I know to be absolutely accurate, when I say that the Ville Marie Bank of Montreal was wrecked as the result of stock gambling engaged in by persons connected with the bank. I have known cases of young men engaged in banks—I have one before my mind now—a young man who took $40,000 of the bank's money in one month for the purpose of stock gambling. I know a case which resulted in suicide. These are very serious and real evils, evils for which we feel there ought to be some remedy. Yet it is very easy to say that we ought to stop these things. Before we take any action it is better to carefully and accurately consider the method to be adopted to arrive at the end we all have in view. It is idle to call all stock brokers villians and scoundrels. I listened carefully to what was said by my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) and I am sure that he did not use a word that could be construed into a wish to apply such terms to all the members of a respectable calling in the community. All who have had experience in affairs know that stock brokers are as respectable as any other class and as well deserving of our consideration. All stock dealing is not criminal; all stock dealing is not improper; all stock dealing is not to be discouraged. A man knows of a stock he thinks is likely to rise. He goes to a broker and asks him to buy a hundred shares of that stock. The broker says: I will buy the stock, and you will give me ten, fifteen or twenty per cent margin. The broker purchases the stock; but, to do so, he must pay the then market value and must supplement the amount advanced by the client by borrowing or advancing the balance of the purchase price. If he charges a commission for this service there is nothing wrong about the transaction, nothing even to be discouraged. He makes the purchase, registers the stock in the name of the client, if the client pays in full, or, if not, he registers it in his own name and becomes responsible to the bank that makes the advance. No doubt, he transfers the shares to the bank as collateral security for the advance. In case the broker pledges his own credit, in addition to the security, to the bank for the purpose of getting that advance to accommodate his client. There is nothing wrong in all this, nothing to cause us to condemn all stock brokers' transactions. But that which is wrong, that which is to be condemned, that for which we should endeavour to find a remedy, is the case of a man who goes to a so-called stock broker—because these people are not worthy of the name of brokers—and goes through the form of purchasing so many shares when he and the broker with whom he deals knows that there is no intention on the part of the broker to buy a share of the stock, much less to transfer it to his client. In such a case the client simply puts up a certain amount of money for margin; if the stock rises, the difference between the then current price of the stock and the rise, in addition to the margin, goes to the credit of the client. If there is a decline in the price, then, of course, if it is sufficient, the client, loses his margin. That sort of stock brokerage illustrates the old rule, 'heads I win, tales you lose,—the broker being the man in the position of advantage. If we can reach that form of gambling—for it is nothing else—we shall go far to bring about a remedy for the evils pointed out. I have not considered the matter very carefully, but it appears to me that the statute my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) referred to this afternoon would go far in the way of remedying the evil, if it had not been amended after it came back from the Senate. That statute to which my hon. friend referred is a part of our Criminal Code. That article provides:

> Every one is guilty of any indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment, and to a fine of five hundred dollars, who, with the intent to make gain or profit by the rise or fall in price of any stock of any incorporated or unincorporated company or undertaking, either in Canada or elsewhere or of any goods, wares or merchandise—
> (a.) Without the bona fide intention of acquiring any such shares.

But here is the apparently harmless amendment that was made to Abbott's Bill when it came back from the Senate, and which I think makes the whole section inoperative:

> But it is not an offence if the broker of the purchaser receives delivery, on his behalf——

—remember, it is the broker who takes delivery—

> —of the article sold, notwithstanding that such broker retains or pledges the same as security for the advance of the purchase money or any part thereof.

As was pointed out by the member for Labelle, a broker may have five different clients, each of whom purchases say 500 shares, and he, the broker, may only own 500 shares, he can use these shares so as to evade responsibility if proceeded against under the Criminal Code notwithstanding that with respect to the 2,000 shares the transaction is a mere gamble, and against such transactions we should legislate if possible. But before applying a remedy we must find out the nature of the disease, then after a little consideration no doubt we will find some kind of a remedy for the disease.

I would like, before sitting down, to make a reference to what was said this afternoon about the case of Forget and Ostigny. I think the hon. member for Labelle went a little too far in his criticisms of their Lordships of the Privy Council. The Forget and Ostigny case was merely one of fact. The question was as to whether a particular contract they were called upon to consider was a gaming contract within the meaning of an article of the civil code of our province. Three judges of the lower court held that, as a matter of fact, it was not, while their Lordships of the Privy Council held as a matter of fact that it was, reversing the decision of the lower court and holding that it was a gambling transaction. That was a question upon which men may differ. I would like to say this, that I consider the right of appeal to the Privy Council as a great safeguard to the people of this country, and to the province of Quebec in particular. The Privy Council are far away from our little local troubles and difficulties; they are men of broad instincts, men of great learning, and I think I may say, if the hon. member for Labelle will permit me, speaking of one who has passed away, that one of the greatest civil law lawyers I ever knew was a member of the Privy Council, Lord Watson. He had been trained in the law of Scotland, which is to a large extent based upon the same principles as our law in the province of Quebec. He knew his civil law thoroughly. I remember having myself heard him correct a quotation from Pothier that was made by a lawyer from our province, and he corrected him in such a way as to indicate not only that he knew Pothier, but what is far better, that he understood him. Now, there are other great lawyers, Lord Davy, for instance, who also knows something about our civil law, and who is certainly one of the best Roman law lawyers living at present within the limits of the British empire; and a man who knows his Roman law has a very good foundation for the civil law in our province. Let us not be too prone in criticism of the Privy Council. I have been before them, and I know that they care very little about the petty differences and difficulties that trouble us in this country. Their only desire is to do what is just and fair. They have got the capacity, they have got the learning, and they have got the desire to do what is fair and just. I may conclude by saying that I think the hon. member for Labelle has drawn our attention to a grievance, to a grievance that requires a remedy. I cannot say that I can do much for him at the present time, but insofar as my limited knowledge and experience go, I am entirely at his service, and I shall endeavour, so far as possible to find a remedy for the grievance he has suggested. But I must ask him, if he will permit me, to withdraw his motion.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Several hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House have taught a lesson to the young men of this country. They told them that they ought not to gamble. I quite agree with the advice that has been tendered to the young generation; but knowing what I know, and what is well known in this House and outside of this House, I think we should begin our education of the young generation by setting them an example. When Ministers of the Crown, both in this parliament and in local legislatures, when members of parliament, when secretaries of ministers, when men who pretend to know everything that is going on, gamble and buy stocks right and left, it is not surprising that young lawyers and young clerks gamble and speculate. I say it again, when members of parliament, when ministers, not one, but several of them—I do not make any personal allusion, I speak of ministers generally of the various parliaments of this country—are known to gamble and speculate, we must not be surprised if the younger generation follow that dangerous example. Let us give the example ourselves. My hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) alluded to the case of steel and coal. Well, we have heard very little else but steel and coal during last session of parliament. We could not walk through the lobbies of this House without hearing steel and coal. Everybody was buying. It was not the young men alone who were guilty of gambling, it was men in high positions who were buying stock. My hon. friend will permit me to tell him that gambling is one thing and tariff is another thing. The tariff was not sufficient in the case of steel and iron, and the best evidence that it was not sufficient is the fact that a free trader like my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has at last made up his mind to give additional bounties to that industry. Surely if the Minister of Finance was convinced that the tariff is high enough, he would not for the sake of gamblers, add probably $1,000,000 to the Budget of Canada. Let us deal with gamblers, but let us not mix up tariff matters in a question of this kind. Again I say, and I think I am expressing the sentiment of all those who know what is going on, that it will not be sufficient for us to enact laws here while men in high positions give a bad example by gambling and buying stock with which parliament may have to deal. I think that is a very improper thing indeed. I do not wish to give lessons to anybody, that is not by any means my intention. But I think it is a very improper thing for members of parliament and ministers to gamble in stocks of corporations that sooner or later may apply to this parliament for favours in the shape of additional duties and bounties.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). In view of the fact that the city I represent is one of the greatest sufferers in the Dominion of Canada from stock speculation, I feel I would fail in my duty if I were to remain silent on this question which is now before the House. The papers of this country have been filled for weeks with news concerning the unfortunate calamity which occurred in connection with some of the loan companies in the city of St. Thomas. I can testify that a gentleman who was looked upon as a pillar of the church has confessed that he has been not only taking the people's money, but he has committed forgery, theft and fraud. So, while there may be very little sympathy for the gentlemen whom the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) referred to, ministers and members of parliament and business men who indulge in stock speculation, there can be a great deal of sympathy for the poorer classes of the people who have saved up small earnings and then, induced by a broker or a manager of a loan company, have engaged in stock speculation and lost all their money.

I trust that the hon. Minister of Justice, who has announced that he proposes to take this matter in hand, will be successful in meeting the case that I have pointed out, namely, protecting the small depositors or those who have been induced to go into speculation in stocks. But, I think he will find it is a somewhat difficult task when he undertakes to check hazardous speculation. If I desired to enter into a hazardous speculation, or if I desired to enter into what I thought was a good speculation, and which turned out to be a poor or hazardous speculation, I think I could get over the difficulty. I could buy stocks in New York or Chicago, and I do not see how we could by legislation passed in this House prevent a person from indulging in speculation in stocks in the United States. Perhaps there may be some method known to the hon. minister for overcoming that difficulty, but as far as I can see there will be a great deal of difficulty in framing legislation to entirely wipe out speculation in hazardous stocks. A year ago in my own city not only old men, but young men, married women and young women indulged in speculation in stocks. Many of them made quite large sums of money, but when the slump came they not only lost all the profits they had made, but they lost the savings of many years previous to that. I am glad to take part in this discussion. I have been asked on many occasions since the misfortunes occurred to the loan companies in St. Thomas by people who lost their money if legislation to prevent a recurrence of such a disaster could not be passed by this House, and I shall be glad to lend my assistance when the occasion arises.

Mr. BOURASSA. With the indulgence of the House and in reply to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice, I would like to say that I did not bring this motion in with the idea that legislation ought to be enacted this session, but I brought the question up so as to cause a discussion to be had in this House, and so as to get the hon. Minister of Justice at work on the matter. The hon. Minister of Justice has expressed his willingness to do something, but I would like to get from him a clearer expression of opinion. Of course, I understand that the question has to be carefully studied, not only from a legal point of view, but from a financial point of view as well. I quite understand that my hon. friend will have to put himself into communication with bankers and financial men throughout the country, and if he is prepared to do that so as to be able next session to bring in some legislation on the matter, I am willing to accept that.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There will be this session some amendments to the law respecting loan companies. I have had occasion to prepare some amendments that will probably be introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding). In respect to the amendments which are necessary to meet the grievances pointed out by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), I will endeavour as far as possible to introduce such amendments as will meet the difficulty. Of course, it will be necessary to make inquiry, because, with all due deference and respect for the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte), I have not that practical experience which comes from actually dealing in stocks.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have not either.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am absolutely guiltless in that respect, whatever my other iniquities may be. The short road to fortune has never had any attraction for me, and I think the same thing is true of my colleagues in the government.

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) withdrawn, motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Census, $35,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What time do you expect to elapse before the census is completed ? I understand you have dismissed a number of employees who were engaged on the staff. How many do you still retain ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). It is hoped the work will be finished before the New Year, and possibly earlier than that, but certainly by that time. We were able to dispense with the service of 35 or 40 clerks on the 1st of July. There are between 60 and 70 left still in the office at work, and we expect that they will finish the work about the new year or possibly the 1st of December.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. minister tell us, now that he is within measureable distance of the end, what is going to be the whole cost of the census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have already placed a statement before the House of what the cost was up to a recent date, and I think it was $1,100,000. This vote ought to finish it. That would make it about $1,150,000. I am speaking from memory, but a statement was made to the House some time ago in answer to a question.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that after the instructions had been issued to the enumerators a further supplementary circular was issued to the enumerators in the province of Ontario. Would the hon. minister make a statement about that and would he produce a copy of the circular ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was one error in the instructions, but immediately after they were sent out, and before the work of enumeration commenced, the correction of that error was sent to the commissioners.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister say that that did not increase the cost of the census?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think it increased it beyond the expenses of the messages that were sent to the commissioners.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister settled with the malcontents among the enumerators who claimed they should receive more pay. Did he give them all they claimed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On the contrary, there was a good deal of dissatisfaction in consequence of their not receiving what they demanded. They were paid according to the schedule rates which were issued with the instructions.

Mr. SPROULE. Were they satisfied with that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I dare say a good many of them were not satisfied when they did not receive all they asked for.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the Minister of Agriculture call to his assistance the Minister of Labour to settle the dispute ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I read the instructions carefully, and I must say that it was easy for one to come to the conclusion that the rate of pay was to be $3 per day. I do not think they would have much difficulty in upholding that contention in a court of law. The instructions said that they were to do so much work for which they were to be paid, not to exceed $3 per day, and the natural inference was that they would get $3 per day.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was preceded by the distinct statement that they were to be paid at schedule rates.

Mr. MONK. What remuneration was paid to Mr. Drolet, who had charge of the census in relation to the industries and manufactures in Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that he was paid at the rate of $125 a month.

Mr. MONK. How many months did he devote to that work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that he was at work about eight months.

Mr. MONK. Had he any assistants ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He had enumerators under him who took the details in each locality ; he having the general supervision and being responsible for their management. He had three in Montreal and others in different parts of the province.

Mr. MONK. There is no doubt that $125 per month was the exact amount of his remuneration ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was his pay, but he had travelling expenses when he went about the province.

Mr. MONK. Did the census officers employ any lawyers in the city of Montreal, and if so what was the amount paid to those lawyers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that through the Department of Justice a case was taken out against a manufacturer who refused to give some information required in the census.

Mr. MONK. Who was the lawyer, and what was the amount of remuneration paid him ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand it was Mr. Wilfrid Mercier, who is in charge of the law business there for the Department of Justice. I cannot say what remuneration was paid him, but I presume the costs were taxed in the ordinary way by the Department of Justice.

Mr. MONK. Will the minister ascertain before another meeting of the committee what was the exact amount paid to Mr. Mercier ?

Mr. BLAIN. Last session the minister stated that one of the causes of the increase of expenditure for taking this census as compared with the census of 1891, was that the enumerators and commissioners had a greater number of schedules to fill out this census than last. Was that a correct understanding of the matter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not quite. The statement made was that there were a very much larger number of questions to be answered. The word 'schedule' is rather an indefinite word used in that way. A schedule as meant in the census, is a sheet on which are the questions across the top of the columns and down the side a space for the names of the individuals who are enumerated. Opposite the name of each individual the questions are to be filled in. This is the schedule, but a schedule may have five questions or fifty on it, and it may have ten names or fifty names of persons enumerated. The statement that there are so many schedules in the one census or so many schedules in another census is no measure of comparison between the work of the two censuses.

Mr. BLAIN. The other day I asked the minister, how many schedules were filled in either in whole or in part by census enumerators in the counties of Halton, Cardwell and Peel in 1891. The hon. minister gave this : Halton, 1,724 ; Cardwell, 1,221 ; Peel, 1,215. Do I understand from the minister now that this does not include all the work to be found on the schedules given to the enumerators in these counties?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. My hon. friend misunderstands me. What I mean is that a comparison of the schedules of 1901 with the schedules of 1891 is no indication of the amount of work done in the filling in of the schedules by the enumerators. The answers given to the hon. gentleman's question were correct as given. The hon. gentleman asked how many schedules there were, that is, how many sheets. The answer gives the number, but it does not tell how many questions or how many persons' names there were on each schedule, and without having these numbers a comparison between the number of schedules is no measure of the amount of work done respectively in the two censuses.

Mr. BLAIN. In so far as the schedules are concerned. If I understand the hon. minister correctly, the enumerators in those counties did more work in 1891 than they did in 1901.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, let me read the hon. minister's answer to the two questions I put to him this session. The first was : What were the entries in the schedules in 1891 and in 1901 ? The answer was that in 1891 there were 651 more in Halton, 430 more in Cardwell and 374 more in Peel. What I mean to say is that in so far as the schedules are concerned, the enumerators in those three counties did more work in 1891 than in 1901. There is no question about that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, there is every question about that. My hon. friend's inference from a comparison of the number of schedules, that in 1891 the enumerators did more work than in 1901 is not a correct inference.

Mr. BLAIN. In so far as the schedules are concerned ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In so far as the schedules are concerned it is not a correct inference, because, as a matter of fact, the schedule in 1891 only had 25 names upon it, whereas the schedule in 1901 had 50, that is to say, with every line of the schedule filled ; and there was an answer by every one of these fifty names to every question across the top of the schedule ; and in many instances the schedules in 1891 had not as many questions across the top as the schedules in 1901. Therefore, when my hon. friend counts the number of schedules used by the enumerators in 1891 and compares it with the number used by the enumerators in 1901, the comparison is of absolutely no use to show the amount of work done by the enumerator. You require to have, not only the number of schedules, but the number of questions on each schedule and the number of names entered on each ; and then, by working the matter out arithmetically, you will get a true comparison of the work.

Mr. BLAIN. I am anxious to understand this matter. I took these three counties for the reason that their population is very much less in 1901 than it was in 1891. For instance, in the county of Peel there were more than 1,700 people less, though the territory is exactly the same, and I am quite sure there are no more manufacturing establishments. Therefore, it is difficult for me to undertand why it cost nearly double the amount to take the census in 1901 than it did in 1891, and I asked these questions for the purpose of getting the information. If the answers do not afford a fair comparison, would it be too much to ask the hon. minister to lay on the Table a statement of the questions asked by the enumerators in 1901 and the questions asked in 1891, so that a fair comparison may be made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As I said a moment ago, when these questions were asked I knew that the answers would not give a fair criterion of the work done, and I therefore had a statement made out, which shows that for these three counties the number of forms of schedules in the census of 1891 was 9 and in the census of 1901 15. But on the 9 forms of schedules used in 1891 there were 216 different questions, while on the 15 different forms of schedules used in 1901 there were 657 different questions, or over three times as many. The number of schedules is no indication of the amount of work. I have here a statement of the questions put by the enumerators and the answers taken down. In the census of 1891, the number of questions put and answers recorded was 2,111,136. In the census of 1901 it was 3,034,529, or practically half as many more.

Mr. BLAIN. Then that would make a half as much more work in 1901 as in 1891.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In so far as the questions and answers are concerned.

Mr. BLAIN. Would you regard that as half as much more work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically.

Mr. BLAIN. Would it not be fair to say that it might be one-quarter as much more work ? It would hardly be one-half as much more to answer a few questions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When you take everything into consideration, you can take it fairly as half as much more.

Mr. BLAIN. But it costs the government more than double to do half as much more work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 Canada was in a period of depression and labour was plentiful and cheap, whereas in 1901 the country was prosperous and labour was scarce and dear.

Mr. SPROULE. In the Public Accounts' Committee, the hon. gentleman's officers refused to bring down the schedules on the ground that they were private. The committee wanted to examine those schedules in order to determine whether certain suspicions were well-founded, which they had entertained regarding the taking of the census. I am not sure that there was an absolute refusal.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That question has been threshed out on various occasions, especially in connection with the census of 1881 and 1891 ; and while it was held that the names of the individuals were not private and confidential, the details of the schedules were considered absolutely so and were to be kept secret. Under these circumstances, I had nothing to do but to refuse to allow the schedules to be made public.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask by what right the minister refused to allow these to come before the committee. The order of reference was for all the documents, and I do not see by what authority the hon. gentleman set aside that order.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I told my officers that I would take the responsibility on myself of not allowing these schedules to be brought before the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is the rule which gives the hon. gentleman that authority to control the committee ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not undertake to control the committee. What I did was to control my officers and I take the responsibility.

Mr. SPROULE. Under what rule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. None is required. A minister is responsible for the work of his department.

Mr. SPROULE. To my mind, the minister has taken on himself an authority which is not justified by any rule. His officers are before the committee and in its hands and not in the hands of the minister. It was an improper interference on his part with the rights of the committee to prevent the committee being put in possession of documents ordered by the House. If it is essentially necessary that these papers should be examined in secret, the House can appoint a special committee to examine them, but the minister has no right to dictate to the committee what its duties are.

Mr. MONK. The hon. minister takes a very strange position. He admits that he gave an order to his officers not to produce certain papers, which the committee had ordered, and says that he is responsible to the committee and parliament. When called to account, the hon. gentleman refuses to give any reasons, but admits his responsibility. For, what my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has done is exactly to call the minister to account under the rule of responsibility and ask him by what authority he forbade the officer of the department to produce those papers. The minister says : I did give the order, and am responsible to the House ; and he gives no other reason for the arbitrary exercise of his authority. It seems to me, he does not admit his responsibility at all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has entirely ignored the explanation I gave a few minutes ago. I said that this very question of the secrecy of the schedules had been threshed out certainly on one memorable occasion in this House in connection with the census of 1891, and I think a similar discussion took place in connection with the census of 1881. On each of these occasions, the minister in charge took the position that I take now, and the House supported and endorsed the minister. I do not remember the exact procedure. But I recollect the fact, and I am acting upon that precedent. I say that this course has been taken by previous Ministers of Agriculture, and that it has been approved by the Commons of Canada. I believe it to be the right course. My hon. friend knows that, under the rules of the House he has the means of calling me to account by bringing up the matter for discussion and moving for my condemnation. I am willing to face that responsibility.

Mr. SPROULE. I have no remembrance of such a discussion as the hon. minister refers to. It may have taken place, and I not remember. But my view of the duties and authority of the committee leads me to the conclusion that such a position as that taken by the minister would be wrong ; and the fact that the House had declared to the contrary would not change my opinion. As I understand it, all papers and documents relating to matters of public expenditure to be inquired into by the committee the committee may call for. If the committe has not authority to compel the production of them, it asks authority of the House, and that authority is invariably given so far as my memory goes. I know of no rule in Bourinot, May or any other parliamentary authority which justifies the contention of the minister. It is true that a vote of the House would be regarded as a precedent and would probably be held as justification for action on similar lines by the minister. But, as I say, I have no rememberance of any such vote. I have not had time to look the matter up. I read of this affair in the newspapers when I was on the road. I thought it a most extraordinary proceeding, and decided to bring up the question in the House. I intended to look into the matter before doing so, but have not had time. I am quite clear in the opinion that the committee should not be hampered in its work of inquiring into transactions involving the expenditure of the peoples' money.

Mr. LENNOX. As the minister has taken a definite attitude, and as he must realize that this is an important question, no doubt he has fortified himself with precedents. Surely the hon. gentleman will go a little further than he has done, and will satisfy the committee, at least to the extent of referring us to the authority he relies upon, so that we may ascertain, as a matter of fact, that the same point was involved in previous discussions as was involved in this one. I think this is a reasonable request.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not examined the matter in the way my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) indicates. I do know that there was the debate I referred to in connection with the census of 1891. In fact, I think debates took place on several occasions on this point. Hon. gentlemen then in opposition inquired with regard to certain points of the census of 1891, and demanded that certain information should be given. The hon. Minister of Agriculture of that time, thinking that this would involve the disclosure of the details of the schedules, would not give the information. I cannot say at the moment whether there was a vote or whether the position of the minister was approved simply by the matter being dropped. I remember that the position was taken that the list of names or anything of that kind should be disclosed, but business details, particulars with regard to families or property, were to be held secret and inviolate. And that was quite understandable and proper. The questions of the census are more or less inquisitorial. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) referred to a law case where a manufacturing firm in Montreal contended that they were not bound to give the details of their business. The Census Act required them to give details, but the condition is that these shall be held secret and confidential. Only on that condition are we allowed to exact the information. When the compilation takes place in the census tables, the totals and general results are given, but nobody knows the business details. On that occasion the leaders of hon. gentlemen opposite formed the government, and the position they took is the one I now take. I believe that they were right, and that they followed the spirit and the letter of the Census Act and that any departure from the rule they laid down would be contrary to the law. I do not propose to act contrary to the law if I can help it.

Mr. MONK. I cannot say that the explanation of the minister is satisfactory to myself. In the first place, the holding he speaks of seems to have been before he took office, and there has been no holding of that kind since. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he himself had previously taken that position, and the House had exonerated him. But it seems, from what he says, that that is not the case. The question that was decided rose under a previous administration. For my own part, I cannot bring myself to agree with the minister on the merits of the question. The minister is not able to invoke any rule under which he was at liberty to refuse to the committee the information which the committee sought, except this vague precedent of a previous administration. He is aware that the members of the committee have a right of access to these documents as well as the minister himself. The meetings of the committee are private, and the public is excluded theoretically from its meetings; but as members of this House we are just as much entitled to take communication of these private schedules, under such rules as the committee may make, as the minister himself. It amounts to this, as my hon. friend from Grey has said, that the minister took upon himself to refuse to the committee what no rule prevented the committee from having. Upon what principle would the hon. gentleman claim that, because he is a minister, or a member of the committee of this House—for that is what it amounts to—he could exclude from the cognizance of his colleagues certain documents which he may have in his possession? I do not think his position is tenable for an instant, because he could just as well apply that to any other document. Why is it confined to these particular schedules? They may touch upon private matters, but so far as we are concerned, they are public documents. What would prevent him from saying to any clerk in the department, This is a document that may compromise the reputation of somebody, and I forbid you from producing to the committee any document having reference to public accounts. Yet the hon. gentleman, under his interpretation of his right, could do that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman entirely forgets the difference between such a document as he refers to and these census schedules. These schedules were taken under instructions which declared to the people who gave the information that it would be held inviolate and secret; it was a contract between the people who gave the information and the department which got the information.

Mr. SPROULE. How long is that to be kept secret ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Indefinitely.

Mr. MONK. Under what law ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Under the Census Act.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not say so.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But the Census Act gives the minister power to make regulations for taking the census, and the instructions of the department did say so, and have said so ever since we have had a census in Canada. I have made no change in this matter, I have followed out the regulations made from time immemorial, and they are necessary for the taking of a census. If you did not make that rule you could not get the people to give the information. As it is, in some instances the people have refused and it is only by reason of the agreement that we would keep the information secret that we are able to go to the courts of law and compel people to give the information.

Mr. SPROULE. The order of reference instructs the committee to bring before them all persons and papers, and that order is above the authority of the minister or his employees. I want to point out this fact, that in the long inquiry in 1891, when Mr. Connolly came before the committee of inquiry with their books locked up; he said they were instructed by their solicitor that these were their private papers and they had a right to refuse to expose them. What was the order of the House? It was that the books should be laid on the Table, and the books were produced and were examined. The same thing could be done in this case. I never knew an instance before the Public Accounts Committee where individuals or corporations who appeared with their private books or accounts obtained exemption from laying them before the committee. No minister has authority to say, either to an individual or an employee of the government, You need not produce these documents to committee. The authority of parliament is above the minister and should control him. I understood him at first to say that such a discussion took place regarding the secrecy of the census schedules in the committtee, and that the question was afterwards brought to this House and debated.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not say it was before the committee, I said the discussion took place in this House. I do not remember the details.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked if the minister would be good enough to point to a precedent, because I have no knowledge of any. I still think that when the House of Commons makes an order of reference to that committee it invests that committee with authority to command any official under the government to produce books or papers that may be in his custody, and the committee has a right to examine them. If a minister was invested with any such authority, it would be the easiest thing in the world for him to cover up any scaly transaction that might take place in his department by saying, This is private, and I will not allow my employees to bring it down.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a procedure by which he can bring the matter up in due course before the House; and if he can secure an order of the House to override my decision, he is at liberty to do so. But I must tell him frankly that he will have to get such an order before I can recede from my position.

Mr. BARKER. I wish to recall to the memory of the minister that the discussion in the Public Accounts Committee went a great deal further than the point that has been raised this evening. The hon. gentleman contended there that the committee had no right to enter into the question of these schedules or to inspect them, because the commissioner had taken an oath which prescribed secrecy and which he could not break. It was contended on the other hand that the statute gave no authority to the minister or to the Governor in Council to prescribe any such oath. I do not think the hon. gentleman can point to one word in the statute that authorizes any such oath to be imposed upon any official. But that is not the point I proposed to deal with. I proposed to point out a matter far more serious. The hon. gentleman, with a great deal of reference to the history of the past, said that previous governments had followed the rule he was following now. Well, assuming that previous governments had followed that rule, I would feel inclined to continue the rule, inasmuch as the public has probably been led to believe that they were giving the information under a pledge of secrecy. But it turned out that although the hon. minister was so particular about secrecy as to the census of 1901, he was not so scrupulous about the information obtained in 1891 by his predecessor. Although the officer in 1891 was sworn to secrecy, the hon. gentleman himself had no scruple whatever in obtaining from Mr. Blue the information that had been then obtained under a similar oath of secrecy. When does the obligation of secrecy end? If the hon. gentleman who has been conducting this census is sworn to secrecy and if the public have been imposed upon, because they would be imposed upon in believing that the information they gave to him was absolutely secret, what may be said, if, in a year or two, all that information is to be brought into the House of Commons, published in 'Hansard,' published in the press of the country and spread broadcast over this Dominion? Where is the good faith that the hon. minister speaks of? In 1891 the same oath was prescribed. The information that was then given to the officers of the commissioner of that time was absolutely as secret as this information which the hon. minister says is secret. By what right did the hon. gentleman get information upon the schedules of 1891 from certain parts of the country and then come to this House and make a statement criticising the returns of 1891 as against the returns of 1901? The hon. gentleman surely must be consistent. He uses the precedent of 1891 to justify his oath of secrecy. Surely the information that was then obtained should also be treated as absolutely secret and the documents that were found in the government records were just as much beyond his control as the documents obtained in 1891 are now beyond the control of the Public Accounts Committee according to his own contention. The hon. gentleman had no right to use these. The officer occupying the position that Mr. Blue occupies to-day took the oath of secrecy at that time. The information he had obtained was secret and supposed to be inviolate. By what right was any information relating to the census of 1891 used by the present minister ? By what right did he obtain information as to schedules of 1891 which a member of the House of Commons cannot obtain in regard to the census of 1901 ? Will the hon. minister answer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) has asked a question which I think it is quite easy to answer. The census commissioners and the officers of the department in regard to the census are under oath in regard to census matters. The census commissioners of this census, I believe, have the right to investigate the census schedules of a former census.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me how and where he gets that authority ? Those who made the former census were sworn to secrecy.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As officers of the department——

Mr. BARKER. If the hon. gentleman will permit me, the present commissioner is not given any authority in regard to the preceding commission. He is sworn in regard to all matters coming within his knowledge in taking the census. If he gave any information in regard to the census of 1891, it would be a violation of his oath.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Act he will find in section 20 the following :—

Whenever the Minister of Agriculture deems it convenient, he may, by special letter of instruction, direct any officer, census commissioner or other person employed in the execution of this Act, to make inquiry under oath, as to any matter connected with the taking of the census, or the ascertaining or correction of any supposed defect or inaccuracy therein ; and such officer, census commissioner or other person shall then have the same power as is vested in any court of justice, of summoning any person, of enforcing his attendance, and of requiring and compelling him to give evidence on oath, whether orally or in writing, and to produce such documents and things as such officer, census commissioner or other person deems requisite to the full investigation of such matter or matters.

Mr. BARKER. Certainly, there is no doubt about that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The statements that were laid on the Table of the House last session were the result of an investigation in regard to checking and proving the accuracy of the census of 1891. For the purpose of such proof and such checking we had to go to the census of 1891 in order to prove the correctness of the census of 1901. I have explained that on a former occasion, but, for the hon. gentleman's benefit, I can explain again that there were evident certain extraordinary discrepancies, or a startling condition of affairs shown by a comparison of the results of the taking of the census of 1891 and the taking of the census in 1901. These results are such that there must have been some inaccuracy in one or other of the censuses, or that a very extraordinary condition of affairs had arisen in this country in regard to its progress and development between the two censuses. The first duty of the census commissioner and the officers under his charge was to see whether his own census was correct. That was investigated as far as it could be and there seemed to be no reasonable doubt that the figures and compilation were correct. Then, as an explanation of this condition of affairs, were we to accept it as a fact that Canada had absolutely retrograded during the decade, or were we to try and see whether there was another explanation of the extraordinary comparison between the two censuses. We investigated the census of 1891, I confess, largely in consequence of some allegations in regard to the taking of the census of 1891 which had been common talk throughout the country for many years—the statement that the census was padded, the statement that the census was inaccurate and the statement that the compilation was defective. We were led, perhaps, to a certain extent, by the prevalency of these statements to make this investigation.

Mr. CLANCY. By whom were these statements made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were made by all sorts of people and they were made publicly on the floor of parliament.

Mr. BARKER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were made elsewhere through the length and breadth of Canada.

Mr. BARKER. If they were made on the floor of parliament they were not secret. The commissioner was bound to keep that information secret.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is talking about another matter. The question I am speaking of was in regard to the public statements of the census of 1891 being inaccurate. These statements were very prevalent in Canada for many years after the taking of the census. I confess I was somewhat guided in my desire to look into the census of 1891 by the prevalency of these statements. I believed that the solution of the extraordinary condition of affairs might be found there. After first of all satisfying myself that the difficulty did not arise from any inaccuracy in the census of 1901. I then caused an investigation to be made. I did not give publicity to any of the facts in the schedules of 1891 which came under the category of those facts which I have stated ought to be held secret. I want my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) to understand that fully.

Mr. BARKER. Did not the hon. gentleman refer to the names and particulars in various villages ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The names only.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman discovered that there was a family of seventeen in the province of Quebec, and he was astounded at it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I would not be astounded at that in the province of Quebec. It is quite common there.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman thought it most uncommon.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said a minute ago that I gave nothing to the public except the names. I believe I did give the names of a whole family of seventeen, but it was still only a string of names.

Mr. SPROULE. And the hon. gentleman gave the industrial establishments.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not give any data of the industrial investigations to the public in that way.

Mr. SPROULE. Did he not name a certain number of industrial establishments and say that actually upon inquiry they found old ladies knittings reported as industrial estimates ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is a little mistaken. I think he is confusing a former debate which he listened to many years ago with what I said on this occasion. What my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has accused me of is of having laid on the Table of this House this information which he now accuses me of withholding. He says that I am now refusing to give information which for my own purpose I gave last year. I say that I am refusing to give information now which has been given to the enumerators on a pledge of secrecy, but the information which I gave last year was merely a string of names which could in no way be considered as confidential. Last year I gave no details of property and no details of private concerns in any shape or way. In the debate which I referred to as a precedent, that question came up and gentlemen on both sides of the House took the position that the secrecy was not violated by giving the names, and that it was only as to details of business and of private property that the secrecy would be violated. It is true that last year, in consequence of the extraordinary condition of affairs which was revealed, I did make an investigation into certain facts in regard to the taking of the population in 1891, but that was all that was given to the public. I should say that the list of names was compiled from the census of 1891 by the census officers under oath, and under that section of the law which enables them to make such an investigation as they may see fit in order to secure an accurate census. I am now asked to place the schedule before the committee, and I contend that that is contrary to the precedent which I have quoted ; contrary to the spirit and letter of the Census Act, and contrary to what is necessary for the taking of an accurate census.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister should have been more candid in the statement of his position. We understood from him that he had a precedent to guide him, and which to be a precedent at all must be practically identical with the case under discussion. The minister has shown that he has no such precedent. He cannot tell whether the circumstances in the past case are identical with the circumstances in the present case, and he does not know even whether the previous case was discussed in the House or whether a vote was taken upon it. He has to admit that he does not know whether the case which he said was a precedent ever came before the Public Accounts' Committee. The hon. gentleman told us in a very jaunty fashion that he dictated the action that was taken, and if he thinks that he can treat us in that jaunty manner I suppose he must be the judge of that himself, but we will have something to say also in regard to it. The Minister of Agriculture leads this committee to understand that he did not interfere with the public accounts committee, but that he instructed his own officials, and he announces that he has control over his own officials. Upon the minister's own confession extracted from him by the hon. member for Hamilton, the fact appears now that the minister did interfere with the investigation of the Public Accounts' Committee, and that he led the chairman to understand that a precedent existed, when as a matter of fact there is no such precedent at all. I say that the Minister of Agriculture by the presence he exercises over witnesses, and by his influence and blandishments on the chairman of the committee, who is susceptible to such influences, did interfere with the investigation by the committee. However willing we might be to bow for the time being to the decision which was come to in the Public Accounts' committee upon a former occasion, and which had been appealed from to the House, and had been sustained by the House in former years ; we are not prepared on the mere ipse dixit of the Minister of Agriculture to accept the position which he takes to-night. The minister says that at the time he referred to in 1891 he was not in the House of Commons. He did not hear the debate ; he did not read the debate, but he asks us to accept as evidence something which he says somebody told him.

That is hardly a sufficient reason why we should pass this item. The hon. minister invokes the statute ; he says that under the statute he has a right to make regulations ; but what regulations ? The regulations for the taking of the census ? Will the hon. minister or any of the legal luminaries who support him find anywhere in the statutes one sentence that will bear the construction that for all time to come he is to control the information which we gather through the country by means of the census enumerators ? Why, the proposition is too absurd to be entertained by sensible men, much less by a committee of the House of Commons of Canada. We must approach this matter in some sense of common sense ; and when the hon. minister suggests that because he has the power to pass regulations, he is therefore, for all time to come to control the free representatives of the people, and say : 'Thus far shalt thou go, and no further,' I deny the proposition absolutely. The authority with which I understand the minister to be clothed is this, that he can make regulations for the proper conduct of the officials under his control during the census enumeration. Unless he finds within the four corners of the statute a provision which says he is to be the sole confident of the secrets of this country as regards the census, I submit that it is not common sense to say that the Minister of Agriculture is to be the sole repository of the information obtained by the enumerators at the expense and for the information of the people of this country. The hon. gentleman must remember that there is a distinction between making full disclosures and making a disclosure to a committee of the House of Commons. I do not think the hon. gentleman fully appreciates that point. The hon. gentleman seems to think that so long as you are a private member of the House, so long perhaps as you are any minister of the Crown except the Minister of Agriculture, it might not be safe to trust you with a state secret ; but as soon as you become Minister of Agriculture, the position changes. I claim that the right to obtain information at all is to be limited to such information as is necessarily required for the uses of the people of this country. You have no right to be inquisitorial beyond that limit. What is necessary in order to put the people of this country in a position to know and judge of their resources, their strength, and the future of this country, is what we have a right to inquire into ; and unless you can make the information available for those uses or similar uses, you have no right to obtain it at all. The House of Commons, in delegating its powers to the Public Accounts Committee, authorizes that committee to be its agent just as effectually and just as clearly as it delegates to the Minister of Agriculture the duty of presiding over the agricultural affairs of this country. We have just as much right, when we go into that committee, to get down to the rock foundation of things, and to find out what has been done in connection with the census, as the Minister of Agriculture has to ascertain what his officials have been doing. Nay, more, I venture to say that if there is a distinction to be drawn, it is in favour of the Committee of the House of Commons, because we are the inquisitorial body in this case, specially charged with the duty of investigating these matters, and finding out, unless baulked completely by the hon. minister. That is what the hon. minister does not seem to like. This being a committee of investigation, presided over by a chairman, with the officials of the Census Department called to give evidence, it differs in no essential particular from an investigation before a court. These are our witnesses; we have a right to call them, I am not sure but that we have a right to call the Minister of Agriculture. I do not know but that it would be a good idea for us to do so. Perhaps he might claim privilege, and say that it might incriminate him to answer. But at all events, we have a right to call the officials for the purpose of ascertaining whether that which appears in the census is as it ought to be, and whether the work of the Census Department has been honestly and fairly carried out. My hon. friend is not a lawyer, and I am afraid he has not a judicial mind.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Is my hon. friend a lawyer ?

Mr. LENNOX. I am a farmer, I am happy to say.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A lawyer too ?

Mr. LENNOX. I am a farmer and an honest lawyer, or a lawyer and an honest farmer, which ever my hon. friend likes. I say that my hon. friend has not a judicial mind, with a disposition to look at both sides of a question evenly. He has one faculty of a lawyer, that of evading a question pretty effectually at certain points—a faculty which many hon. gentlemen on that side of the House possess in an eminent degree. With the experience which my hon. friend has, at all events, he will recognize that it is one of the gravest offences known to the law for any person to tamper with a witness, to approach that witness and instruct him not to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, or to say to him, 'Couldn't you forget ?' Well, I think it is my duty to tell the hon. minister in a most respectful way that I think intelligent men throughout the country, aside from lawyers and judges, and those specially trained in matters of this kind, will regard the Minister of Agriculture as having committed a very grave offence against the interests of this country when, without, as I understand it, consulting the other members of the government or any authority whatever, but merely of his own motion he undertook without any authority to order his officers not to obey the instruction of the committee. He acted in an arbitrary manner for which he deserves the censure of this House. The hon. gentleman coolly tells us that we can move an order of the House, but at this stage of the session, in its fifth month, we have not the time to do so. We would have to go to the committee and get its ruling, and then bring the matter before the House and meet all the delays which the government has put in the way of accomplishing business during the last five months, so that it is quite evident that such a course is out of question. The hon. minister has been unable to give us any precedent for the action he has taken.

Mr. SPROULE. According to Bourinot, each of the select standing committees 'shall generally be empowered to examine into all such matters and claims as may be referred to by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.' Consequently the committee had the right to bring before it any witnesses it desired and such documents as it deemed necessary. Bourinot goes on to say :

> Many witnesses are examined in the course of every session before committees of the Senate and the House of Commons. It has already been stated, in the first part of this chapter, that it is usual in both houses to give committees special authority to send for witnesses or documentary evidence. Witnesses are summoned in the Commons by an order signed by the chairman and they are bound to bring all the papers which the committee may require ; but the committee can not order the production of documents or the summoning of witnesses unless it has the necessary authority from the House to send for persons, papers and records.

In this instance the House gave the Committee on Public Accounts the authority to send for persons, papers and records. What happens should the witness refuse to obey the order of the committee ? According to Bourinot :

> His conduct will be reported to the House and an order will be immediately made for his attendance at the bar or before the committee. Similar proceedings are taken when a witness refuses to answer questions.

We find a case in point cited in this work :

> In the session of 1891 the committee of privileges and elections, to whom was referred a very important inquiry, reported that one of the witnesses refused to place under the immediate control of the committee certain documents which he had produced. His conduct was reported to the House, and he was ordered to appear at the bar. He appeared and was ordered to deliver all accounts and papers to the Clerk of the House. He complied at once with the order, and the committee had consequently full control of the documents in question.

I cite this to show that the minister had no right to order his employees to refuse to give information to the committee or to produce the documents which the committee required. Had the refusal been reported to the House, the House could have insisted on the witness bringing down those papers and handing them to the committee, or have compelled them to come before the Bar of the House and hand them to the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend was not in the committee when the occurrence took place. If he had been, he would have known that the chairman of the committee endorsed the course I had taken. The chairman ruled that Mr. Blue need not bring down those papers.

Mr. SPROULE. On whose instructions ? The instructions of the minister, who had no authority ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The minister did not instruct the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister said that he instructed his officers.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I instructed Mr. Blue, but not the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister instructed the witness.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, he instructed him not to bring the documents.

Mr. SPROULE. Which he had no right to do.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The minister has a right to instruct his officer to do anything. But the chairman of the committee rules that Mr. Blue need not bring the documents. The action was the action of the committee. The hon. gentleman is barking up the wrong tree.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. minister say that that was reported to the House, which is a higher authority——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to finish. I believe he was not present at the meeting of the committee——

Mr. SPROULE. I was not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will tell him what occurred. Mr. Blue had been ordered to appear before the committee and bring certain documents. He appeared but informed the committee that he had not the documents. The committee discussed whether he should be required to bring the documents. Certain members, including the hon. member from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) contended that he should bring the documents. The Minister of Agriculture, who is not a member of the committee, asked leave to explain. He stated that he had ordered Mr. Blue not to bring the documents and gave the grounds for his position, which I need not repeat. If the committee had referred the matter to the House, the question would have come up in the House. The case which my hon. friend has just referred to in Bourinot says : 'His conduct was reported to the House, and he was ordered by the House'—to do so and so. If the committee reports Mr. Blue's conduct to the House and the House orders him to bring the documents, the House will take the responsibility and the responsibility will be off my shoulders. But the committee has not reported to the House. Should the committee bring the case before the House, we shall see what the House will do. In the meantime, as I said a few minutes ago, the hon. gentleman is barking up the wrong tree. He says the Minister of Agriculture dictated to the committee and gave instructions to his officer contrary to the order of the committee——

Mr. SPROULE. Contrary to the order of the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Well, if the hon. gentleman thinks so. But I have explained the case so thoroughly that I need not go further than to quote from Bourinot, the authority on which the hon. gentleman relies, page 337:

> Whilst members have every facility afforded them to obtain all the information they require on matters of public concern, occasions may arise when the government will feel constrained to refuse certain papers on the ground that their production would be inconvenient or contrary to the public interest.

Mr. SPROULE. That has no relevancy to this case. That refers to papers placed upon the Table.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But the principle is the same.

Mr. SPROULE. No, it is not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is only a direct contradiction, and not so courteous as the hon. gentleman usually is. I think the principle is the same and that the quotation is entirely germane and cognate to the question at issue.

Mr. SPROULE. I have given the authority that the House delegates to the committee and shown the right of the committee to demand that persons and papers be brought. I have given the rule that compels the witness to bring with him such documents as are required. I followed this up by showing what was done when the witness refused, no matter who instructed him. The case was reported to the House, which ordered the witness to be brought to the Bar, and then directed him to deliver the papers to the House, and the House returned them to the committee. I showed that the House has higher authority than the witness or the minister——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nobody denies that.

Mr. SPROULE. I have said that the minister undertook to instruct a subordinate contrary to instructions from the committee, that the minister was vested with no such authority, and the witness had no right to refuse to obey the instructions of the committee. The hon. minister says the matter was not brought before the House. I can only say that if I had been there, I should have tried to bring it before the House, and I have taken the first opportunity afforded me to try to review the matter, for when I saw the course taken by the minister, reported in the newspapers, I thought it a high-handed proceeding, quite beyond his authority as a minister and justified by no rule or precedent.

Mr. BARKER. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House, but I desire to call attention to the instructions the Minister of Agriculture gave to his officers on the subject of the secrecy to be observed with regard to names. He now seems to draw some distinction between names and other particulars in the schedules, and claims he had the right to do what he did in sending lists of names of the census of 1891 to different parts of the country, to persons in no way connected with the census, to obtain information from them, and then use the information gained from them, and the names, in this House for political purposes. I propose to read from his own instructions to show that the names are as much secret as any other part of the information he had obtained and that he has no more right to deal with the names than to deal with the particulars of property given in the schedules. I might remind the hon. gentleman that he sent a special circular all over the province of Quebec emphasizing these instructions and particularly informing the people that everything connected with the census was absolutely secret. We on this side of the House do not admit that the government had any right to impose the oath of secrecy. The statute certainly does not authorize it. It authorizes the government to settle forms of oaths to be taken by the officers for the purposes of the census, but in no way does it authorize that an officer shall be prevented from giving information as to what the schedules contain when called upon by the committee of the House. This is one clause of the instructions :—

> Many persons imagine that the census schedules may be in some way used as a sort of advertisement for them or as a reflection upon them. But the fact is that these schedules are never seen except by the commissioners——

If that is so, how does the hon. gentleman get the information upon which he made a long speech in this House last session ?

—these schedules are never seen except by the commissioner and others engaged in taking and compelling the census, who, besides being sworn officers bound not to divulge any individual information, care very little for, and have no interest in, the several statements contained in them. The names——

So, here the names are particularly mentioned as something secret.

—are taken in the census schedules simply for a check upon the returns, and to afford opportunity to correct any palpable error.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) reading ?

Mr. BARKER. From chap. 1 of the instructions, page 7, the 4th paragraph.

In other words the enumeration of names is a necessary guarantee of good faith and correctness and it has no other object.

Now, will the hon. gentleman tell me that there is anything connected with the census that is not secret, if any part be ? Does not that convey the impression that these men get the information for the commissioners and that the names are held secret, as well as everything else ? The hon. gentleman has issued these instructions to his officials, but he sent a circular throughout the province of Quebec repeating them and informing the people how secret these would be. Here is a paragraph in the instructions, showing that the names are used for a particular purpose, and yet it turns out that the census of 1891 has been used by the hon. gentleman for political purposes, and he made a speech here upon information obtained outside the census officials of 1891, though they were also sworn to secrecy.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the names as being just as secret as other parts of the census. Let me quote from a debate which occurred in regard to the census of 1891 on this very question. The debate arose in 1893, and in the course of some remarks an hon. member of the House, after quoting the instructions in the census of that date, says :

It will be found that the letter of instructions scarcely goes so far as to prevent the names of persons from being given. There was this view to be considered. Although no written instructions were given, the census enumerators and commissioners have found that people are sensitive in giving information which might in any manner become known to competitors in their busines.

Further on he says :

It would appear therefor that there is nothing in the instructions, either verbal or written, which would preclude the giving of the names of persons who own and carry on industrial establishments, and I can see no reason—and I think it would be difficult to find a valid reason—why the names of persons who carry on these establishments should be withheld. When we go further than that to details of the business which a person carries on under his own name, I think we approach ground where there is very good reason why it should be withheld. Great difficulty has been experienced in the case of persons carrying on a single industry, I mean one which in the tabulations is not united with any others carrying on a similar industry. . . . In these cases it was found that several were very loath to give the details asked for because they were by themselves and the figures would give information as to the details of their single business.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that the hon. gentleman, having looked into the matter is willing to give the names and descriptions.

The reply was :

Yes, I see no objection.

Now, these words which I have quoted were uttered by the then acting Minister of Agriculture in the Conservative government, the Hon. George E. Foster. He took exactly the ground I am taking here to-night. That ground was based upon precedent, and the ground I take now is based upon precedent in the census of 1891. Reference was made in that debate to the censuses of 1871 and 1881, and the same course was taken by the then existing governments in regard to the question of divulging the details of the census schedules. I have continued exactly the course and policy which were followed by the governments having in charge the preceding censuses.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the item is adopted, I wish to ask the minister one or two questions. It is said that the expense of taking the census of 1901 far exceeded the cost of taking the census of 1891, and consequently it is proper for us to inquire why that cost is so much greater. The items that I may mention perhaps are small, but yet many small items put together make a very large one. I find, for example, in the case of Beauharnois, in the province of Quebec, on page D—219 of the Auditor General's Report, the commissioner was allowed $30.75 for meals for enumerators while receiving instructions. This does not seem to have been a general practice, and I have been wondering why this commissioner should be so favoured. However, he was not so much favoured as another commissioner, the one for Chambly and Verchères. On page D—222 I find that this commissioner was allowed the sum of $132 for meals for enumerators during instructions. Now, why should this commissioner be allowed to give his enumerators a champagne luncheon when they met together for the purpose of receiving instructions, while the poor enumerators in the province of Ontario had to pay for their own dinner ? It seems to me that is unfair. But that is not the chief point. It shows to me that these accounts have been passed without any care whatever, that no special care has been taken by the department in examining into the correctness of these accounts, but that every item sent in by the commissioners was allowed by the department.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. An allowance of that kind was made to the enumerators when they went to receive their instructions; they were allowed their expenses. This particular case, as the hon. gentleman says, is a curious one. I am informed that the commissioner paid for the meals of the enumerators, and they were not allowed anything individually for that purpose. The account appears here as paid to the commissioner. It is the sum of a lot of charges for meals which each enumerator would have been allowed had he sent in the account himself. But instead of that, the commissioner paid for them all and sent in his bill, and on the explanations furnished, the bill was allowed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I find that enumerators seem to have been allowed expenses of various sums running from $2 up to $4 and over, notwithstanding the fact that the commissioner had to provide for their accommodation. They also received their ordinary day's pay of $3, as each enumerator seems to have been allowed $9.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The $9 is the pay for three days while getting their instructions, at $3 a day. Then they were allowed their expenses while doing it.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the county of Halton I notice that meals were not allowed to the enumerators, and that no allowance whatever was given to the commissioner for meals for them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because the enumerators paid for their own meals.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly, and I think they should have done so in Chambly and Verchères also. However, that is not a big matter, but it was one of the matters that go to swell the increase. There is another matter I desire to draw the hon. minister's attention to. That is the taking of the census in Burrard. My attention was drawn to this through reading an open letter written by Mr. Wm. McCraney, formerly member of this House for the county of Halton, now residing in British Columbia, a gentleman whom I knew very well during his long residence in that county, a gentleman who occupied a seat in this House, I think, for two parliaments, a gentleman whose word would be accepted by any one who had the pleasure of knowing him. Although politically opposed to me, I would say of Mr. McCraney that I knew him to be a gentleman of honour and a man whose word I would accept at all times without hesitation. I believe he would be incapable of prevaricating or making a misstatement in regard to this matter. Mr. McCraney draws particular attention to the cost of taking the census in Burrard, and this is one of the places where it seems to me the cost has been swelled enormously. I shall read a part of Mr. McCraney's letter dealing with this matter. On page 3, of the letter, he says:—

> This D. C. McGregor——

I may say that McGregor is described in the letter as 'one of a high smelling confederacy' that they have in Vancouver.

> This D. C. McGregor and Frank Burnett were connected with the late customs collectorship scandal, which created a very bad smell here for some time. McGregor could not deliver the goods (customs collectorship) so Burnett could not purchase. Both were willing but the government was not, so the deal fell through for non-delivery of goods (customs collectorship).

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. 'Hear, hear' says the hon. minister. Mr. McCraney explains it in this way:

> But these schemers, having secret documents relating to this dishonourable business held a club in their hands—— —that was the club which they held over the hon. minister's head.

> —and so demanded a quid pro quo, so to placate them at the last general election, McGregor got the returning officership, Burnett got the position of census commissioner in Burrard constituency which cost the country $17,628.15, seventeen thousand six hundred and twenty-eight dollars and fifteen cents through his planning.

Mr. McCraney says further:

> I have no hesitation in saying it can be well done for $10,000. (See Auditor General's Report, vol. 1, D—114). I have been all over the territory excepting in the interior of Cassiar and know what I am talking about. I believe this is the most corrupt constituency in the Dominion of Canada, of which I can give you much further proof.

In this constituency the commissioners, because there were two of them, namely, the notorious Frank Burnett and Henry Corwin, instead of receiving $75 each, as is customary where two commissioners are appointed for the same riding, these high smelling individuals obtained $9 a day for 210 days, for between nine and ten months of the year, or in all $1,890 apiece, and expenses amounting to $604.39 paid to each of them. Why these men should have been allowed this large sum of money and why they should have been employed for nearly nine months of the year does seem extraordinary, and I think it calls for some explanation from the hon. minister in view of the very strong letter which I have read from one of his own political friends, a gentleman of character who would not represent a matter in the way in which he has done unless he believed it to be strictly correct. I think this item calls for more than a passing explanation and that it is due to the hon. minister to put himself right in the eyes of his own political friends in regard to it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I, like the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), remember Mr. McCraney very well indeed, when, years ago he was a member of this House representing the county which the hon. member for Halton now represents. I am quite sure that Mr. McCraney would not say or write anything that he did not believe to be true, from the information he had in regard to the matter. I must confess that what is stated in the letter is entirely news to myself. I do not know yet anything of the details that he speaks of in regard to the elections in the constituency of Burrard. As to any club being held over my head, in my absolute ignorance of what is going on there I was not aware of this, and it has certainly never descended.

Mr. HENDERSON. You did not know the position you were standing in ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I did not, and in my ignorance I had not the slightest fear. Mr. Burnett was appointed one of the commissioners of that constituency, and he did his work in the usual way as other commissioners have done it, and I have no reason to suppose that it was not carefully and promptly done. As to the statement of Mr. McCraney that the work ought to have been done for $10,000, when it has actually cost about $17,000——

Mr. HENDERSON. Seventeen thousand six hundred and twenty-eight dollars and fifteen cents.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He may have been in possession of information as to how much it ought to have cost. I do not pretend to know how much it ought to have cost, because I am not familiar with the constituency, except that I know that it spreads along the whole coast from the American boundary to the boundary of the Yukon Territory, and that it includes the Cassiar, Cariboo and Atlin districts, that it is an enormous constituency, a constituency which is as large as an ordinary province, and very difficult to get about. But there is an explanation of this expenditure, which, perhaps, my hon. friend does not know about, and which, I dare say, Mr. McCraney did not know about, and I think, that, probably, if he had known about it, he would have known that a great deal of the work had to done along the coast in the north, that for that purpose our commissioner had to go away up into the Atlin district, and that on his return he was unfortunate enough to be on board that ill-fated steamer the 'Islander' which, as everybody knows, was wrecked, and in which wreck a great many people on board unfortunately lost their lives. The records of the taking of the census were lost in the wreck of the 'Islander' and Mr. Burnett had to go back over the same ground, and retake that part of the country, the most difficult and expensive part of the country to deal with, and I think that alone would account for, and almost, if not absolutely, justify the whole additional expense which Mr. McCraney speaks of, and the difference between $10,000 and $17,000. I have not the details to show whether the retaking of that part of the country cost so much as that, but I am only stating what I know at the present time off-hand in regard to the taking of the census in that particular part of the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was quite aware of the fact, and I have no doubt Mr. McCraney was also aware of the fact of the 'Islander' having been lost, of the documents relating to the census having also been lost, and that the census had to be retaken, but the hon. minister is mistaken when he presumes that this accounts for the extraordinary difference between the careful estimate of Mr. McCraney and the actual cost of taking the census. No, the total cost of taking the census in that district would amount to $4,440. That is the district where the census had to be retaken, and in the Auditor General's Report the cost of the first trip as well as the cost of the second trip is given. Dividing that into two equal parts, it would show that the cost of retaking the census, or the additional cost on account of the loss of the 'Islander' would be $2,220. If you deduct $2,220 from the total cost of $17,628, you would still have a cost of $15,407 for taking the census, which Mr. McCraney says ought to have been taken for $10,000. I do not think for one moment that the loss of the 'Islander' explains the matter. Besides the minister is mistaken when he says that the commissioner had to go through this district. I do not think that the commissioner ever went into that district at all. The men who were paid were Geo. Pollard, Robert Patrick and Henry E. Brown, for taking the census in that district where the records were lost, so that the extended time of 210 days for which the commissioner was employed was certainly not on account of his having to go up there a second time, because he does not appear to have been there even once. I am afraid that there is more truth than poetry in the statement of Mr. McCraney when he calls Vancouver the most corrupt constituency he can find in the Dominion.

Mr. BLAIN. I find that Wm. Kelly, one of the commissioners for North Hastings, received $653, which is an unusually large amount.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I know that Mr. Kelly got a very large amount for expenses. I understand that Mr. Kelly took hold of the north part of the constituency, which is very scattered, and as he had to drive all over the constituency, his travelling expenses were very heavy. The account was submitted to me, and I remember that I passed upon it. It seemed a reasonable account, although very much larger than most of the accounts from the different commissioners.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood that Mr. Kelly came to Ottawa about his account.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He did.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps this extract from a letter which I will read will throw some light upon the payment of such a large amount as $653.14 to Mr. Kelly. The department was apparently unwilling to pay Mr. Kelly the amount he was entitled to, and so Mr. Kelly came to Ottawa and brought with him the Reform candidate in the approaching local election, Mr. Lott. I understand that the minister had an interview with Mr. Lott.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not remember, but I may have.

Mr. BLAIN. When Mr. Kelly went home he wrote a letter, dated Marmora, 24th of March, but before I read the letter, permit me to say, we complain that the minister did not send out any fixed schedule of remuneration, and that it resulted in the commissioners' coming down here and interviewing the minister, and no doubt if they gave a good account of their stewardship the minister paid the amount they claimed. However, Mr. Kelly says, writing to the Minister of Agriculture :

> When I met you in the House of Commons on Thursday last in company with Mr. Lott.

It would therefore appear that Mr. Lott and Mr. Kelly met the minister. Mr. Kelly very innocently says in this letter :

> The Ontario elections are coming off the end of May or the beginning of June. Mr. B. O. Lott is the unanimous choice of the Liberal convention. I have made up my mind to do some hard work in this north riding of Hastings. Mr. Lott is the best canvasser and the hardest worker ever went into a political contest. Relying on the fair and honourable way laid down in your circular re the payment of the commissioner I feel sure I will be fairly dealt with. I have the honour to remain,
> Your old servant,
> WM. KELLY.

There was not much trouble about the account after the Minister of Agriculture got this letter. Writing to Mr. Blue some time afterwards, Mr. Kelly says :

> You say the Minister of Agriculture has fully considered my account and that an additional amount of $300 has been allowed me. I will accept the $300.
> WM. KELLY.

Mr. Lott, the Reform nominee, and Mr. Kelly, the commissioner, had a personal interview with the minister at Ottawa, and then the minister allowed $300 more, and Mr. Kelly says that is all he wanted. It would seem as if the minister did allow politics to enter into the census.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, perhaps not, but the letter is very suspicious. I have some other interesting correspondence, but I will not trouble the House with it now, further than to say that there is a good deal of the same kind of thing in other counties. One gentleman writes from West Hastings :—

> I certainly feel I am entitled to the full amount of my account and I urge you to look more carefully into the matter as it will injure our cause here.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). What is before the House ?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Victoria wants to know what is before the House.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I am asking the Chairman that question.

Mr. BLAIN. I will wait until the Chairman answers.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is the census ; it is a very wide question.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ross) would stop writing and listen to what is going on he would understand.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). There is not so much interest in it as to cause any one to listen.

Mr. BLAIN. I can inform the superannuated gentleman that I am within my rights before this committee. I am reading a letter addressed to the minister in respect to the payment of a census account, and that is about as close up to the mark as we generally get in this House. I am pointing out that this Mr. Kelly came down here with the Reform nominee whom he promised to support, and he is paid by the country to the tune of $653.14. I complain that the minister has left himself open by the instructions he issued to this kind of thing. If the commissioner gives a good account of his stewardship, the hon. minister instructs the department to pay the account, and it is paid.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot remember the letter in question. I may have seen it or I may not have seen it; but I can assure the hon. gentleman that Mr. Kelly's account was carefully scrutinized, and when he was paid the extra amount, it was on the explanations furnished by him when he came down and interviewed me. Mr. Kelly's statement was supported by Mr. Lott, as appears on the face of that letter.

Mr. BLAIN. It is a copy of a letter from the hon. gentleman's own department.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I take it that the hon. gentleman is reading a copy of a letter which is authentic. I do not remember the letter, and I cannot say anything about it.

Mr. BLAIN. Do you remember the interview ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I remember the interview with Mr. Kelly; I do not remember seeing Mr. Lott. But it is quite a common thing for people who want to get their accounts straightened out to bring friends with them. In that case my heart seems to be softened. I have no doubt Mr. Kelly gave satisfactory explanations to show why he should be paid that amount of money. I am sure I would not have paid it for any political reasons.

Mr. HENDERSON. When does the minister expect to complete the taking of the census—I mean collecting the information ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The enumeration is practically completed. There are a few items scattered about which we have to write about. But practically the whole enumeration is completed, and the accounts in connection with it are all closed. There are a few complaints still in existence, some of which may on investigation be conceded, but I think they will be very few.

Mr. HENDERSON. Within the past month information was being collected in my county, and I wondered if that was a very general thing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that when anything appears on a schedule inconsistent with some other statement in it, it is the duty of the officers here to communicate with the enumerator who made the schedule and obtain explanations. That is part of the work of compilation and checking. Occasionally letters are sent to enumerators who took information which on the surface is not quite explainable, and when it is explained, the information is complete.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The minister promised that he would explain the item on page D—184 concerning an assistant commissioner in North Ontario. This is the gentleman who some time ago was concerned with a little ballot stuffing there in the interest of the Liberal party. He is paid for fifty-eight days at $3.50 a day. I would like to know what that is for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Roach was appointed to assist Mr. Graham in consequence of the great length of the constituency.

Mr. BLAIN. Have all the accounts in connection with the county of Lisgar, Manitoba, been paid, or are there any disputed accounts there ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTUDE. All the Manitoba accounts have been settled.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the minister to make a statement a few days ago with reference to a proposition to keep a permanent staff of officers for the census. Has he decided anything in regard to that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I made the suggestion that it would be a wise thing to keep a very small permanent staff for census work and to prepare certain statistics between the census years. I believe it would be very advantageous to the country, but I have not been able to submit any such scheme to my colleagues, and they have not yet considered it. Consequently it is all unsettled as yet.

Mr. BLAIN. I am quite sure that the taking of the census for 1901 has not been satisfactory to the people of Canada. The cost of taking that census, as stated by the hon. minister, will amount to about $1,150,000 before it is completed, a good deal more than double the cost of taking the census of 1891. I find that the enumerators were instructed to take some of their figures from the assessment rolls of the province of Ontario. It is well understood that the municipal assessors do their work in the spring in every township of Ontario. I have here a copy of the assessment blanks put in the hands of every assessor of Ontario, and the number of columns is very large, thirty-four. In many of these columns are found exactly the same questions as are asked by the enumerators, and in case of death the enumerators were instructed to verify their figures from the assessment rolls.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood that that was done in some parts of Ontario.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BLAIN. How did they get the details ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They got them from the people they were questioning. They asked them what death occurred in the family. In Ottawa the death returns were compared with those in the assessment rolls, but the enumerators did not in any case take their information from these rolls.

Mr. BLAIN. Why were instructions given to compare them ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Simply to see how they compared.

Mr. BLAIN. In the correspondence some of the enumerators have said that they took the deaths from the municipal clerks and the assessment rolls in the different counties. I read the letters myself, so that I have personal knowledge of what I am stating. If the hon. minister feels it to be his duty to make a comparison between the reports of his enumerators and the returns by the different assessors in Ontario, and if he proposes to keep a permanent staff, I would suggest that he could reduce the cost of taking the census in Ontario very much by utilizing the assessment rolls in the different municipalities. Here are the people in these older counties, who are decreasing in population every year, in every municipality the assessor every year goes over the same farms, interviews the same families, fills in the same columns, and these are returned to the provincial government and no doubt also to the Dominion government. And it would be worthy of the hon. gentleman's attention to see if a large reduction could not be made in the taking of the census by utilizing these assessment rolls, which are always up-to-date.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the suggestion a very good one, and I am glad to find that my hon. friend has such confidence in my continued tenure of the office.

Mr. SPROULE. There were certain disputed accounts in the county of Lisgar, when were these settled ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A long time ago—nearly a year back.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that they were settled at the time of the by-election ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We discussed that last year.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there any information in the published census returns which is compiled from any source except from the returns of the enumerators ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is not.

Mr. LENNOX. Waiving the question of our right to get these secrets, are we to understand that the printed document corresponds in every instance with the returns of the enumerators?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Has it been brought to the knowledge of the minister that the opinion widely prevails that certain liberties have been taken with the returns made by the enumerators? For instance, that the sex of the individual has been changed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That has never been brought to my attention.

Mr. LENNOX. That is, a person returned as a woman was converted to a man and vice versa. I do not know which is the greater offence. Although I am not able to prove the fact, I have reason to believe that the opinion is fairly well founded.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). There is a very large and important item with regard to cold storage and dairying, $220,000, an increase of $10,000. What is this increase for, and in what way does the hon gentleman divide this large amount of money among the various branches of his department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got the papers under my hand, and therefore cannot give the figures exactly with regard to the division, but in general terms I may say that that vote, which is under Professor Robertson's management, is divided in this way. We have what we call the fruit division, the poultry division, the live stock divison. the cold storage division, the pushing of our commerce in foreign markets, and then the general office expenses here at Ottawa for that division. I would not like, off-hand, to give the figures, but the cold storage division takes the largest amount. That covers not only cold storage work in the country, which comprises the bonus paid to the creameries and the refrigerator car service in the railways. I do not think that this year there has been a bonus of any kind on cold storage warehouses in Canada. I think these are finished, and also the cold storage and cool chambers on board the ocean steamers. I omitted a number of divisions. There is the dairy division proper, which includes the running of the creameries in the North-west Territories, the management of one or two creameries in Nova Scotia, the management of the cool curing rooms for cheese which were established last year, and the general instruction work with regard to dairying. The live stock division, under Mr. Hodson, includes work in connection with the live stock associations in the different provinces, work in connection with the fairs and exhibitions, assistance to the institute work in the various provinces, and also work in relation to the great agricultural gatherings of the year, such as the Guelph Fat Stock Show, the fat stock show at Amherst, and the various sales of live stock which have been organized and carried on more or less under the control, though not under the actual administration, of the live stock commissioner. The fruit division includes the administration of the Fruit Marks Act, including a certain amount of supervision of, and investigation into, the growth of fruit in the country ; the management of packing, and suggestion and instruction in regard to it, and also some slight investigation into the condition in which our fruits arrive in foreign markets and how they are handled there, as well as the gathering of information which will aid our shippers in packing and the management of shipments. The poultry division deals chiefly with the business of eggs and poultry meat in the country, trying to show that our people here can successfully and properly fatten poultry for the home and foreign markets; and we have also been gathering more or less information with regard to poultry management for the production of both eggs and meat. The headquarters staff includes Professor Robertson's own salary and travelling expenses, the main officers here at Ottawa and the accountant work for the whole of these different branches. The increase of $10,000 is due to a general expansion of the work almost entirely. About $3,000 or $4,000 is additional for the live stock division, and another portion is additional for the foreign markets division. Speaking offhand and from memory, I think we are not proposing to spend more during the coming year on the cold storage division or on the dairy division than we did last year. The fruit inspection, I think, is costing a little more, chiefly in travelling expenses, due to the fact that the fruit inspectors are asked for the year round, while we originally intended to have them only during six or seven months of the year. I do not recall any other increases that are at all considerable. But, of course, in this, as in all other branches, there is a constant slight tendency to increase salaries. And I may say, in explanation, that there is a constant effort on the part of people to tempt away the men who are engaged in this work who have expert knowledge. I am constantly being brought face to face with the fact that in the United States the colleges and experimental stations and large business concerns want to get our men, offering them high salaries and advantageous positions. And it is only by raising the salaries to a certain extent that I am able to keep the men. But I want to do credit to our officers by saying—and I say it with the greatest pride and satisfaction—that the officers of the Department of Agriculture are interested in their work, are patriotic in their work, and are willing and glad to stay here at prices much below what they could get were they to desert Canada and go to foreign lands. By reason of their interest in their work and their patriotic feeling in the development of the country, the best of them have refused advantageous offers rather than leave the service of Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). The minister has gone over the subjects treated of in the different divisions. But I am bound to say that the answer as to the amount of money to be spent on any division is not very clear. We do not know, for instance, what is to be spent for the extension of markets or what amount for cold storage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am sorry I can not give that this evening. But I shall be glad to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity later on to get all the information he wants. I have the information prepared by officers of the department but the papers are not here. If the hon. gentleman would like, I would suggest, if the discussion of the census is closed, that we might call the census item carried but the House will have every opportunity to discuss the vote my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) has referred to. And I would call that vote to give him every opportunity to learn whatever details he may wish to know.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I understand that the hon. minister will call this vote for the cold storage division again?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure that the hon. minister knows the inconvenience of an arrangement of that kind. This is a very important service, and the committee will certainly require to have the information in considerable detail. The minister has told us in general terms something about the service. But as my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) says, no details are given. I should suggest that, so far as the census matter is concerned, that item may be considered as dealt with for the present at least. But this other matter should stand until the hon. minister is prepared to give us the information. I mean by that that this item relating to cold storage does not pass at all to-night.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is what I proposed. Let the census item be declared carried, if my hon. friends opposite say the discussion——

Mr. CLANCY. My attention has just been called to the fact that all the items have been passed with the exception of the census. Therefore, I am afraid we shall have to hold that as a hostage a little longer until the hon. gentleman is prepared to give the information we are asking for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was suggesting to pass the census item—let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) not shake his head until he has heard me—and I will ask the Chairman to call the item of $220,000 for the express purpose of affording a full discussion on that item. And I pledge myself to have here the information asked for. If that is agreeable, I will propose it; if not I am in the hands of the hon. gentlemen. When that item passed some weeks ago I gave a pledge that an opportunity would be given to discuss it, and I do not wish to depart from that pledge.

Mr. CLANCY. When will the matter be taken up again?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to take it up this week, because the chief officer of that division is away. I may take it up some day next week, when I will have all my papers with me.

Dominion arsenal, $150,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir F. W. Borden). This item is for the Dominion arsenal at Quebec, where cartridges and ammunition for artillery are manufactured in a government factory. This money will be used in the payment of wages and the purchase of material chiefly. The amount of wages is estimated at about $72,000, and the materials over $100,000 for the manufacture of cartridges. In the shell factory the wages amount to about $12,000, and materials to $5,000. In the artillery workshop, the wages amount to $10,000 and the materials to $8,000. I may say generally with regard to this factory, that it has recently been greatly improved and increased in capacity. While we were manufacturing a million rounds a few years ago, last year we manufactured about 7,000,000 rounds of ball cartridge. The capacity of the factory for the present year will be something like 12,000,000 or 13,000,000. For the present year it is expected that over and above the ordinary requirements, there will be manufactured 2,000,000 rounds, which will go towards making a reserve of ammunition.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister explain about the miniature ammunition, and how it is distributed ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Last year of that there was manufactured 415,000 rounds. As my hon. friend knows, the old exploded shells of cartridges are used for that purpose, and a very much smaller quantity of powder is used in making them. This ammunition is found to be very valuable for practice at short range, I think only twenty-five yards distance is necessary to practice with this ammunition. It is found very useful at camps and places where the ranges are not safe for the use of long range cartridges.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I understood the minister was going to supply it to the cadet schools free. I am informed they cannot get any.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Because we have not yet been able to make a sufficient quantity. Small quantities have been supplied to the cadets within the last month or two. I hope next year we will be able to supply it free in large quantities.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there any items coming up in the supplementary estimates on which we can discuss the militia question ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, there will be in the supplementary estimates an item upon which the whole condition of the militia and the question of defence can be discussed, and upon which I expect to make a statement to the House with reference to those matters.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I may point out to the minister that our friends across the way have set us an example that it might be well for us to consider. I do not find any fault with the Dominion arsenal being stationed at Quebec, except that from a strategic view point, in case of invasion of this country, Quebec would certainly be one of the first places invested. If our enemy could possibly control the approach to the river, he might possibly control the approach by land also. Our American cousins have their main arsenal at Springfield, quite a distance from the seaboard, and they also have another one at Rock island, on the Mississippi river. I had the privilege of going through both of them, and they make no secret of stating that the object of having them so far inland and away from the seacoast is to make them practically absolutely safe in time of war from attack. I would suggest to the minister that in case he proposes to erect a larger arsenal, it might be well to consider the advisability of placing it further inland.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I quite agree with my hon. friend, and there is a great deal of force in what he says. However, we know that it is an easy matter to move the cartridges the moment they are manufactured to points inland and store them in magazines. Two or three places are to be constructed in the present year for that purpose. I agree with him that in the near future it will be necessary to construct another cartridge factory, and when that time comes, I think some inland point should be selected. It has been in my own mind that possibly some point near the city of Ottawa might be a convenient place, where there is good railway communication inland, and where stores of this kind could be moved rapidly and safely.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will be the order of business for to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will consider one or two Bills, and perhaps resolutions, and if time permits we will go into supply. There are a number of scattered items in the estimates which we may take up. The Minister of Agriculture has arranged with some hon. gentlemen opposite that his Bill respecting the inspection of seeds will be discussed during the afternoon, and perhaps the Criminal Code Bill may come on.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 22, 1903.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock,

THE KELLER HEATER CO. OF CANADA LIMITED.

Mr. COLIN F. McISAAC (Antigonish) moved :

That the petition of R. T. Heneker and others, presented this day, praying that leave may be granted to the Keller Heater Co., of Canada, Limited, their petition for a private Bill, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for receiving such petitions to be read and received forthwith and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Explain.

Mr. McISAAC. The Keller Heater Co. of Canada became incorporated by letters patent issued under the Ontario Companies Act. They purchased the rights of certain parties in a patent granted by the Dominion of Canada, issued on the 15th of July, 1897, on a certain invention for improvement of feed water heaters, condensers and hot air blast devices. The right to extend the patent, on payment of a fee of $20, expired on the 15th instant, and by inadvertence, the date was allowed to elapse without the fee being paid. The company was incorporated solely for the purpose of manufacturing and introducing this invention in Canada, and has expended large sums of money in preparing to carry on this business. They will suffer great hardship if they are not allowed to make good the inadvertence which allowed the time for extension of the patent to expire without payment of the fee.

Motion agreed to, and petition received.

QUESTIONS.

FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax)—by Mr. Johnston (Cape Breton)—asked:

1. Did the present government find in 1896, on assuming office, in any of the public departments, a contract signed by the government, or any minister on its behalf, and the Messrs. Allan, for a twenty or twenty-one knot steamship service between Canada and Great Britain, for a subsidy of $750,000 by Canada, and $375,000 by the Imperial government, annually, or for any other sum ?

2. Did the present government find any bona fide, definite offer to provide the above-named service for the sums stated above, without any modification or reservation ?

3. What were the reservations, if any, stated in the tender ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government did not find in 1896, on assuming office, in any of the public departments that a contract had been signed by the government or by any minister on its behalf, and the Messrs. Allan for a 20 or 21-knot service between Canada and Great Britain; nor had any Order in Council been approved authorizing such a contract. A tender for a mail service had been made by the Messrs. Allan, but they placed a construction upon the terms and conditions of the tender inconsistent with the public advertisement, as follows :—

1. That steamers are to be provided capable of performing voyages at an average speed of 20 knots per hour, and that the voyages of each vessel are to be completed within the shortest possible time consistent with prudent navigation; but that penalties will not be exacted for reduction of speed during fog, snowstorms or heavy gales, when slowed to avoid danger in the vicinity of ice or land.

2. That temporary delay or disturbance to sailings due to such causes, or to serious marine disaster, strikes of workmen, or other causes which contractors could not avert or control, shall not involve the contractor in penalties, nor be regarded as breaches of contract.

CENSUS, 1891 AND 1901.

Mr. CALVERT asked :

1. What and how many kinds of schedules were used in taking the census of 1891, in the districts of Cardwell, Halton and Peel ; and the census of 1901, respectively ?

2. How many questions were asked on each schedule for each census, respectively ?

3. How many answers of the persons enumerated on each schedule were required in the aggregate for each schedule of each census, respectively ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) :

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT—THE REPRESENTATION OF BEAUHARNOIS.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to bring to the attention of the House a question of privilege that concerns the electoral district of Beauharnois. On Monday last I wrote to the hon. member representing that division (Mr. Loy), informing him of my intention of calling the attention of the House to this matter of privilege. Among all the privileges enjoyed by the House of Commons perhaps the most valuable and most precious is the independence of its members. It is a privilege which has been very often infringed in the past, and against the laws of which I think the House cannot take too great precautions. It is unnecessary for me to mention the law in respect to the privilege of the House as regards the independence of its members. It is sufficient, I think, to state in a general way that from a very remote period the Commons of England have legislated in regard to that privilege ; that legislation has been perfected, and since we have enjoyed representative and free institutions in this country we have ourselves adopted such legislation as would amply protect the independence of its members, without which the House cannot attain the object of its creation. I would like to mention, as a reference, what the state of the law is in England in regard to the independence of parliament. At page 30 of May's Parliamentary Practice, he speaks of government contractors, and says :

Government contractors, being supposed to be liable to the influence of their employers, are disqualified from serving in parliament. The Act 22 George III., chapter 45, declares that any person who shall, directly or indirectly, himself, or by any one in trust for him, undertake any contract with the government department, shall be incapable of being elected, or of sitting or voting during the time he shall hold said contract, or any share thereof, or any benefit or emolument arising from the same ; but the Act does not affect incorporated trading companies, contracting in their corporate capacity. The penalties for violations of the Act are severe. A contractor sitting or voting is liable to forfeit £500 for every day on which he shall sit or vote, to any person who may sue for the same ; and every person against whom this penalty shall be recovered, is incapable of holding any contract. The Act also imposes a penalty of £500 upon any person who admits a member of the House of Commons to a share of a contract. The Act 41 George III, chapter 52, disqualifies in the same manner, and under similar penalties, all persons holding contracts with any of the government departments in Ireland.

At page 607, the same author gives an example tending to show the severity of the House of Commons in regard to members dealing with the government and deriving emolument from such dealing :

In the session of 1847-48, a member having had doubts, suggested whether he had not been disqualified at the time of his election, as a contractor, thought it prudent not to take his seat, in case of being sued for the penalties under the Act. He was, however, unwilling to admit his disqualification ; and he accordingly applied for the Chiltern Hundreds. Doubts were raised as to the propriety of allowing him to vacate his seat by this method, but it was agreed that, as the time had expired for questioning, by an election petition, the validity of his return, and as the House had no cognizance of his probable disqualification, there could be no objection to his accepting the office, which solved all doubts, and at once obliged the House to issue a new writ.

A more recent work is that of Mr. Leonard Courtney, on the 'Work and Constitution of the United Kingdom,' published in 1901. There also is a reference in regard to government contractors, which I would like to quote to the House :

Akin to the legislation against placemen was that for the exclusion of government contractors from the House of Commons. The presence of persons of this class enjoying pecuniary advantages through the favours of ministers became a considerable scandal in the wars of the eighteenth century ; and reached such a pitch during the American war of independence that an Act was passed in 1782 disqualifying contractors. This, however, did not extend to subscribers to public loans who had also enjoyed considerable benefits as favoured allottees ; but this source of corrupt influence was destroyed by the development under Pitt of the system of negotiating loans by sealed and secret tenders to the best bidder through the agency of the Bank of England.

I quote these authorities merely to show that from a remote period there has been very stringent legislation in England in regard to members of the House dealing with the government on a monetary basis. Our own legislation is to be found to-day in the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 11, sections 9, 10, 11 and 12. I will quote section 10 of the law, which is very much the same as it is in England. Section 10 has particular reference to the question which I am now bringing to the notice of the House :

No person, directly or indirectly, alone or with any other, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, with or for the government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, or shall sit or vote in said House.

This legislation, which is found in the Consolidated Statutes of 1886, is derived from 41 Victoria, chapter 5, an Act passed in the year 1878, the provisions of which are very much the same, with the exception of some details, as the dispositions to be found in our Consolidated Statutes. The statute of 41 Victoria was derived itself from, or was very similar to, the Act passed immediately after confederation. I refer to 31 Victoria, chapter 25, passed in 1868, the object of which was to secure the absolute independence of parliament. Now, Sir, the question of privilege is this: Ever since 1896 it has been intended to erect a public building and post office in the town of Valleyfield, in the electoral district of Beauharnois. I do not suppose there has been any subject more discussed in the town of Valleyfield than this question of a post office for that large and growing locality, since 1896.

Three sites were in view, or were contemplated as fit and proper sites for the establishment of a Dominion public building in that town. There were two government sites and another property which was the property of the now sitting member for that electoral division. There was a government site on the south shore of the canal situated in a central part of the town, and according to the opinion of many residents of that town a fit and proper site for the erection of a public building. There was also, on the north shore of the canal, another government property which was not in use at that time, as I am informed, and which was in the immediate vicinity of the large factories erected in the town of Valleyfield. That site was pronounced by many, particularly by those engaged in the work at the cotton mills, as by far the best site for the erection of a public building. From 1896 great pressure was brought to bear on the government to erect a post office in the town of Valleyfield on a fit and proper site. There has been a great deal of correspondence on this subject. Some of the correspondence is no doubt in the Department of Public Works, but outside of that correspondence, I believe, a delegation of the citizens of Valleyfield same to Ottawa in regard to the propriety of erecting a public building in that town, and the question was generally discussed and brought before the notice of the government on every occasion. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Loy) either in 1897 or in 1898, if I mistake not, was chief magistrate of the town of Beauharnois. My information is that the question of the selection of a site and the question of the propriety of the Dominion government erecting a public building in the town of Valleyfield were very largely discussed during his incumbency of office. In the Appropriation Act of 1900, $75,000 was voted by this House for public buildings generally chargeable to capital. In the Appropriation Act of 1901 there is an item of $10,000 for the erection of a post office in the town of Valleyfield, but during 1901 nothing was done towards the selection of a site or the erection of a public building. In the Appropriation Act of 1902 we find again an item of $10,000 for the erection of a public building in the town of Valleyfield, but during 1902 nothing was done towards carrying out the intention of parliament as regards the erection of a public building or the choice or purchase of a site. I now desire to say a word as regards the value of the property which was ultimately purchased by the government for the erection of a public building. The property is known on the official plan of the town of Valleyfield as comprising Nos. 78 and 100, and by the assessment roll of 1902 the value of the property in question is estimated:

On the buildings thereon erected, of lot No. 100, $2,000; of lot No. 78, $3,800, or in all, $5,800 for the entire property with the buildings thereon erected. As I am informed the value set by the assessors of the town of Valleyfield upon the property within the limits of that town for the purpose of taxation is the real and actual value of the property. There is no doubt according to the information which I have received, that the utmost value that could be placed upon this property would be $6,500, and a sale at the price of $7,000 would be considered a most advantageous sale. I may mention that the bank of Hochelaga which has erected a fine building in the town of Valleyfield, I believe, at no great distance from this property, purchased the site for the erection of its branch there for $2,500. The lot purchased by the bank of Hochelaga measures 50 x 85 feet, a total area of 4,250 feet.

Now, I come to the dealings with the property in question until the moment when it passed by purchase into the hands of the Dominion government. On the 4th January, 1898, the sitting member for the electoral district of Beauharnois gave a promise of sale of this property to a lawyer of the town of Valleyfield, Mr. Amédée Archambault, and the price mentioned in this promise of sale was $8,000. The deed of sale was executed before Mr. Joron, notary public, but neither that deed of sale nor the resiliation of that promise of sale was registered according to the provisions of our law. It was merely a promise of sale, and in that promise of sale it is stipulated that at any time before the 1st of June, then following—the promise was on the 4th January—the vendor would, upon the demand of Mr. Amédée Archambault, the purchaser, give him an absolute deed of sale if required to do so. There were other stipulations contained in the promise of sale, but I think it necessary merely to call the attention of the House to the following clauses contained in the promise of sale. It is in French, and I will translate:

It is understood between the parties that the said Amédée Archambault will be able to take possession of the lands herein sold at any time that he may desire to do so before the 1st day of June next, and in case that on the 1st of June next or afterwards, in case of an extension of delay, unless there is some stipulation to the contrary between the parties, the said Amédée Archambault shall refuse on the demand of the said Loy to fulfil the conditions hereinabove described and to sign the act of sale all buildings and improvements of whatsoever kind upon the said property will remain the property of the said Loy and the said Archambault will have no right to claim any compensation whatever.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What date is this ?

Mr. MONK. This is in the terms of sale of the 4th of January, 1898.

It is understood moreover that in case there is an execution of the said contract or sale it will be inserted therein, that the said Amédée Archambault in case he should die, will allow a loan of $4,000 to be made in order to pay the mortgage, reference to which has already been made, and the balance will be paid to the said Loy towards acquitting the price of sale. The said Loy will consent to the lender of the said sum, that there will be a hypothec on the said piece of land. The said Loy obliges himself to pass a deed of sale according to the conditions hereinbefore set forth to all persons that the said Amédée Archambault will indicate to him as being in his lieu and place. If the purchaser sells a part of the property he will pay to the vendor in case there is still something due on the price of sale, in the following proportions : For lot 78 the part occupied by the stone building, one dollar a foot on a depth of 100 feet, and on the other part of the said lot seventy-five cents a foot on a depth of 100 feet; and in case the depth would be more than 100 feet the sum of fifty cents a foot on the additional depth; the whole to the acquittal of the price of sale according to the conditions of the present deed.

Now, Sir, I have mentioned that this transaction between the member for Beauharnois who was not at that time sitting as a member for this House, and Mr. Archambault, was not registered. No effect was given to that promise of sale, and fifteen days after the first of June, the date of expiry of the delay, another deed intervened between Archambault and Mr. Loy completely resiliating the previous contract between the parties, and the property passed into the hands of the present sitting member for Beauharnois, who on the same day made a loan and granted a mortgage for the amount of that loan upon the said property. It is proper that I should mention that during the delay between the 4th of January, 1898, and the 1st of June following, a man named Leduc, a contractor, acting under the instructions of Archambault, I presume, moved the building which was on the front part of the property towards the back part, and the amount of about $800 became due to the contractor in consequence of this work. He sued Mr. Loy at that time for the amount due him for the work he had performed upon this property, and the defence was that the property did not belong to the defendant Mr. Loy, but that the owner of that property was Mr. Archambault. The contractor had failed to comply with the provisions of our Civil Code under the terms of which he might have secured a privilege upon the property; he had failed to give notice to the defendant as by law he was obliged to do, and failed to fulfil other formalities, and his action was dismissed upon a demurrer. My information is that since that judgment the amount due to Mr. Leduc, the contractor, has been paid by the sitting member for the electoral district of Beauharnois or by other persons on his behalf. The claim has been satisfied, from which I think there is a reasonable inference, that although upon a question of law the action brought by the contractor was dismissed, nevertheless there is in that an acquittal of the debt by the sitting member or by other persons on his behalf proof that he recognized that even from the 1st of January, 1898, to the 1st of June following (from the time that the deed was resiliated) he was in reality proprietor of that property and bound for the improvements made to it. Now, Sir, in the month of October or November, 1902, as I am informed, an Order in Council was passed authorizing the purchase by the Dominion government of this property. These two sites belonging to the Dominion government where a post office might have been more conveniently erected than upon this site, were set aside. I may mention that my instructions are, and I believe that we will be able to establish it, that of those two government sites one was unnecessarily since 1898, leased to a private individual for a term of 99 years. I refer to the site situated on the north side of the canal in the immediate vicinity of the cotton factories of the town of Valleyfield. I have said that an Order in Council authorizing the purchase of this property was passed in the month of October or the month of November, 1902. A discussion upon this subject took place in the month of March in this House in Committee of Supply and the Minister of Public Works is my authority for that statement. He is reported at page 473 of 'Hansard':

An Order in Council passed on the 22nd November, 1902, authorizing the purchase from R. B. Johnston for the sum of $10,000. The land is 77½ feet by 160 feet deep.

I believe the date is correct. I think there is no doubt that the authorization for the purchase of this site was adopted in council in the fall of 1902, and I believe the date given by the Minister of Public Works is the correct date. But at that period, in the month of November, 1902, my hon. friend from Beauharnois was the owner of this property, because we find that it was only on the 1st of December, 1902, that by a deed passed before R. A. Dunton, notary public, he sold to R. B. Johnston—whoever he may be, I have not been able to discover—this very property for the sum $9,700. That deed was duly registered on the 12th of December, 1902. The purchaser, R. B. Johnston, on the 20th of January, 1903, sold this property to the Dominion government by a deed passed before the same notary, R. A. Dunton, of Montreal, for the sum of $10,000, or $300 more than the price mentioned in the deed of the 1st of December, 1902, between the hon. member for Beauharnois and R. B. Johnston, and the deed was duly registered on the 4th of February, 1903.

Now, Sir, I have every ground for stating that this Mr. Johnston acted as the prête-nom of the hon. member for Beauharnois. In reality, as I think the evidence will establish, it is the sitting member for Beauharnois who, from the 1st of January, 1898, without any intermission whatever, has been the owner of this property ; and resort was had to Mr. Johnston in order that the property should not pass directly from him to the government and in order to avoid those very stringent provisions of chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. I therefore submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a question into which it is the duty of this House to inquire.

As I stated in opening my remarks, there is no more precious privilege among the many privileges which this House enjoys than the privilege of the absolute independence of its members. The history of the House of Commons of England discloses that whenever there have been parliaments the members of which were dependent upon the Crown for offices of emolument—and there was, as members of this House are aware, a dark period in the history of that institution when almost three-quarters of its members did hold positions under the Crown—or whenever members of the House of Commons have had transactions of this nature with the government, that House has failed to fulfil the high function assigned to it. I believe therefore that we cannot guard too carefully against even the slightest suspicion of want of independence on the part of members of this House.

I have placed a resumé of these facts in a motion which I now have the honour of placing in your hands, Mr. Speaker, and I ask that the question which I have brought to the attention of the House be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I may state that I have followed in this the procedure adopted in 1891, when under circumstances of a similar nature the matter brought to the attention of the House was, after discussion, referred to that committee. Allow me to state this additional fact, that the property in question, as I am informed, was not all sold to the government, but that a lot with the buildings erected thereon, was reserved, and also a lot at the back part of the property. I move :

Frederick Monk, the member representing the electoral district of Jacques Cartier in this House, having declared from his seat in the House that he is credibly informed and that he believes he is able to establish by satisfactory evidence :

That on the first day of July, 1897, George Loy, member representing the electoral division of Beauharnois, was the proprietor of a property in the town of Valleyfield, known as lots 78 and 100 of the official plan and book of reference of the town of Salaberry of Valleyfield.

That on the 4th January, 1898, the said George Loy handed said property above described by and virtue of a promise of sale to one Amédée Archambault, advocate, of Valleyfield aforesaid, for a sum of $8,000.

That it was agreed by said George Loy that the sale would be completed by a title in due form on the first of June then following.

That by the terms of agreement between said George Loy and said Amédée Archambault it was agreed that if at any time during the existence of the promise of sale in question, said Archambault disposed of said land in favour of any other party, he, the said George Loy would be obliged to give a title or conveyance in favour of such other or third party.

That the said promise of sale of 4th January, 1898, was never registered or completed, but was rescinded on the 15th June then following.

That on the first day of December, 1902, by deed before R. A. Dunton, notary, said George Loy, member of the House of Commons of Canada, representing the electoral division of Beauharnois, purported to sell said property (lots 78 and 100 of Valleyfield) to one Robert Brice Johnston for the sum of $9,700.

That on the 20th January last, 1903, said Robert Brice Johnston, by deed purported to sell said property to the government of Canada for the sum of $10,000.

That from the time the said George Loy handed his said property to Archambault up to the day of the sale of said property to the Crown or government of Canada, he never ceased to be the proprietor of said property, and that at the time of the sale of said property on the 20th January, 1903, said Robert Brice Johnston was merely acting for and on behalf of said Loy, who in said manner did indirectly sell his said property to the Crown or government of Canada in violation of chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of Canada ' An Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.'

That the said property so sold to the government of Canada was sold at a price exceeding its real value, the assessed value of said property being $5,800.

That at the time of said sale the government of Canada possessed at Valleyfield various properties available for the same purpose for which it acquired the property in question, to wit : the erection of a post office.

That it be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to inquire fully into the said allegations and especially, but without limiting the scope of said inquiry, to investigate all circumstances connected with the acquisition of said property by the government of Canada and all matters mentioned in the statement hereinbefore made with power to send for persons, papers and records and to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation; and that the committee do report in full the evidence taken before them and all their proceedings on the reference and the result of their inquiries.

Mr. G. M. LOY (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, in answer to what has been said by the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) I beg to make the following statement of facts :—

The property in the town of Valleyfield chosen as a site for the post office, and to which reference has been made, did at one time belong to me. About the end of July or beginning of August, 1902, a man named R. B. Johnston of Montreal, came to me at Valleyfield and asked if my property was for sale. I told him it was, and thereupon he asked me if I would give him an option for a few days. This I consented to do. Immediately afterwards, I went to Montreal to consult my business advisers, Messrs. McIntosh & Hyde, accountants. I asked Mr. Hyde if he knew Mr. Johnston, and whether he was a responsible party, and if I was safe in giving him an option. Mr. Hyde inquired of Mr. Dunton, the notary, who reassured him as to Mr. Johnston's position; and about the same time Mr. Dunton and Mr. Johnston called at Mr. Hyde's office. in the latters absence, and made a payment on account of the purchase price. Time was taken to inquire into titles, and I understand that a search was made as far back as 1840. In any event, the purchase by Mr. Johnston was completed about the end of November or beginning of December, 1902, when the balance of the purchase price was paid me by Mr. Johnston. The price paid for my property was about its market value, at the time. The property had been held in my family for over forty years. When Mr. Johnston secured an option on it, I did not know that he intended to resell it to the government; and in so far as I am concerned, I received from him merely its market value and no more. The money I received was paid by Mr. Johnston to myself.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). When this matter was brought to my attention a short time ago, not being familiar myself with what had taken place, I asked my deputy to give me a memorandum from the particulars in the department, and he furnished me with the following :—

I have examined all the papers in the department having reference to the acquisition of the site for the construction of a public building at Valleyfield.

The Order in Council giving authority to purchase a lot of land 77½ feet on Victoria street and 163 feet on Ste. Cécile street from Mr. Robert Bruce Johnston, was passed on the 22nd November, 1902, the consideration money being $10,000.

The deed of sale was made before R. A. Dunton, notary, on the 20th January, 1903, and was registered on the 4th of February of the same year. The negotiations for the purchase were primarily carried on by Mr. U. H. Dandurand, real estate agent of Montreal, who was entrusted with the duty of procuring the property by the former minister, Hon. Mr. Tarte.

The property was examined by Mr. Routhier, an officer of the chief architect's branch of the department, who reported that the lot owned by Mr. R. B. Johnston would be a most suitable site, the drainage and water being available on both front and rear, the lot being nearly level. The officer further reported the price ($10,000) to be reasonable considering the location and the scarcity of sites available in the centre of the town. This officer at the same time reported a lot in close proximity only 53 feet by 150 feet put up at a price of not less than $13,000, this lot being No. 68, corner of Nicholas and Victoria streets.

The chief architect having approved of the report of his subordinate, the ordinary report to Council was made for the acquisition of the property. The title was looked into by the Department of Justice and the deed was obtained as above stated on the 20th January, 1903.

I was verbally informed by Mr. Dandurand that he was the person who procured an option on the property from Mr. Johnston. There is no information in the department as to the manner in which Mr. Dandurand procured that option.

(Signed) A. GOBEIL,
Deputy Minister.

After having heard the statement made by the hon. member, and in view of the facts as they appear in the records of the department, and in view also of the statement made by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) I think that it is beyond all doubt that the property bona fide belonged to Mr. Johnston months before its purchase or the Order in Council was passed. Everything goes to show that such was the case. There was delay, as reported from the Department of Justice, in completing the papers with regard to the title, even after the property had been offered for sale and the department had agreed to purchase it. I am satisfied, from everything I can find out from the documents and facts, that there was no collusion between the department and the other party to the transaction, that Mr. Johnston was the bona fide owner, that there was no knowledge whatever by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Loy) of the intended purchase by the government, and no arrangements between the hon. member for Beauharnois and the department. So far as I am concerned, I have no doubt that the facts have been fully placed before the House by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). The negotiations which led to the purchase of the property under discussion were initiated by me. During the session of 1901, parliament authorized the placing of the sum of $10,000 in the estimates for the erection of a public building in the thriving town of Valleyfield. During the summer of 1902, although I know Valleyfield very well, I took the trouble of visiting that town. Several representations had been previously made to me regarding sites. I thought it my duty to go to the spot myself once more. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier has just mentioned that, according to the information he has received, there were three available sites—the one acquired and two others. He added that since 1898 one of these, which was formerly the property of the government, had been leased : Let me tell my hon. friend that that property belonged to the Department of Railways and Canals, and when I went to the town of Valleyfield I was confronted by the fact that the only site which perhaps might have been considered had been leased for ninety-nine years. It therefore was out of the question, but in any case I would not have recommended that site which is located just opposite the bridge. If my hon. friend, when he next has the pleasure to go to Valleyfield, will look at that site, he will find that it is a narrow strip of property and could not possibly have been chosen for such a building as the one we intended then to erect. It was too narrow. The other site, to which my hon. friend has alluded, is on the other side of the canal. It is not located in the centre of the town, as everybody who knows Valleyfield will admit. It therefore was also out of the question. I say without hesitation that the only available site for a public building was that which then was the property of my hon. friend (Mr. Loy). I felt the great difficulty in which I was placed. I knew very well that Mr. Loy could not sell to the government, as that would be a breach of privilege, not only on his part but on mine. If the sitting member for the riding of Beauharnois has been guilty of any improper action, I am more guilty than he. And if he is to be punished, I must suffer the same punishment, because I am the only guilty man, if there be any. Let me explain how the whole transaction was conducted. In my opinion that was the only site available. On that point I challenge investigation by any impartial man. Without saying a word to the sitting member, I instructed Mr. Dandurand, a real estate agent to acquire Mr. Loy's property. Mr. Dandurand has been for years the trusted purchasing agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

He has purchased for them hundreds of thousands of dollars worth, if not millions of dollars worth, of property. He is one of the best known real estate agents of the city of Montreal. I told him the facts and circumstances. He then arranged with Mr. Johnston, who, as I understand, is another real estate agent, to go to the town of Valleyfield, and, without making known the object of the purchase to the sitting member, to take an option on the property at the best possible price. Mr. Johnston represented to the sitting member, I believe, that some Montreal merchants intended to establish a large store in Valleyfield and that in view of this that he wished to purchase the property. I think, Sir, that I have not been guilty of any impropriety in purchasing the site under these circumstances. If I had to do it again, I would certainly do it as I did it in this case. The property was the only one available, the only one on which the building could be erected. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has alluded to the purchase of the property by the Hochelaga Bank. He has gone, on occasion to the town of Valleyfield, not to examine property perhaps, but on some other errands. He has not failed, if he has looked about him to locate the site on which the Hochelaga Bank has erected a branch. It is far from the site on which the public building is to be erected. The two sites are not to be compared. I do not know the price that was paid by the Hochelaga Bank; all I know is that Mr. Dandurand is one of the ablest real estate agents, I instructed him to pay the market value of the property of the sitting member for Beauharnois, I gave him positive orders not to let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Loy) know the object of the purchase, and I know that Mr. Dandurand carried out my instructions to the very letter. If there is an inquiry, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier will find out that what I am stating represents exactly the real facts of the case. The hon. gentleman from Beauharnois is put to annoyance for a thing of which he has not been guilty. I place myself and my position in the hands of parliament. The expedient, if I may so call it, to which I resorted was the only one left. The whole matter was conducted in a thoroughly business-like manner. The deeds have been examined by the Department of Justice. I initiated the negotiations and am responsible for the first part of the bargain. But I take full responsibility for the last part of it. My successor has confirmed my action, and I say without any hesitation that he has acted rightly, that he has done the right thing by the town of Valleyfield and by parliament. My hon. friends who do not know the town of Valleyfield may perhaps think the price a little high. Let me remind the House that, during the last five or six years the population of the town of Valleyfield has about doubled, and, with the increase of population there has been an increase in the value of property in even a greater ratio. It would be impossible to buy any site similar to the one my former department purchased for the same price. The figures that have been given by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, have been given to me. I have inquired personally and carefully into the circumstances of the case, and, so far as I am concerned, I am prepared to repeat under oath what I am saying now. And I know that Mr. Dandurand, the trusted real estate agent, whom I charged with the negotiations, will confirm every word I have stated on this occasion. The hon. member for Beauharnois has done nothing wrong. We carefully concealed our steps from him. As I say, Mr. Johnston went to the town of Valleyfield under the pretense of buying a site for a large store. It is under these circumstances that the government has become the owner of the property referred to in the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must say to the House at once that I never heard of this matter until a few minutes before the opening of this sitting, and, up to this moment, I do not know the particulars. Of course, when an hon. member of this House takes upon himself to make an accusation which involves not only the seat, but the honour of a fellow-member, and when he does that deliberately, as has been done by the hon.

member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), the rule of the House is that, under such circumstances the inquiry is generally granted. I followed the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) as carefully as I could, and I think I represent exactly the effect of what he said when I say that he based his case mainly upon the fact, as he stated, that the sale which took place last fall from the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Loy) to Mr. Johnston was not a bona fide but a colourable sale, that the hon. member for Beauharnois knew that Mr. Johnston was not the real purchaser, but that the government of Canada was the real purchaser. Of course if such were the case, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier would have reason to bring the matter to the attention of the House. If the sale was a colourable one, as is alleged by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, instead of being a real one, the case would be a very strong one. But my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has heard the statement of my hon. friend from Beauharnois. I believe there is no man in this House who would not accept at once the statement of the hon. member for Beauharnois that when he made the sale to Mr. Johnston, he had no intention of making a colourable sale; he had no reason to suppose that Mr. Johnston was not buying for himself; he had no reason to suppose that Mr. Johnston who is a business agent, was not buying in the ordinary course of his business. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has also heard my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) who informs him that the statement made by the hon. member for Beauharnois is true to the letter in every particular, that the hon. member for Beauharnois had no notion that Mr. Johnston had been sent there at the instance of Mr. Dandurand who was acting at the request of the Minister of Public Works. Under such circumstances I think the hon. member for Jacques Cartier will perhaps hesitate to persist in the statement which he made a moment ago, that the sale from the member for Beauharnois to Mr. Johnston was a colourable one, that it was, to use his own words, a sale under what we call in French a prête-nom. Under these circumstances, I hope my hon. friend will see the advisability of not pressing his motion any further.

Mr. MONK. In answer to the right hon. leader of the House, I am bound to say that the information I have received is of a very reliable character, and I weighed it very carefully before I decided to bring this matter to the notice of the House. I do not question the good faith of my hon. friend from Beauharnois, but it may be that, not being a lawyer, nor accustomed to weigh judicial circumstances, he was led to believe that the transaction, so far as he is concerned, was absolutely in conformity with the law, and that he did not evade the provisions of the law relating to the independence of parliament. In the motion which I have placed in your hands, I have summed up the facts, and alleged that this was a colourable sale. It may be a colourable sale, and still my hon. friend from Beauharnois may be in perfect good faith when he, appreciating the circumstances from his own point of view, thinks it is not a colourable sale. Members of this House who are members of the bar know that matters of this kind are appreciated differently according to the standpoint from which one looks at them. But I believe the circumstances of the sale, if they were fully disclosed to a committee, would lead the committee, not to the belief, but to the conviction, that the provisions of the law relating to the independence of parliament had been violated, and that it is in reality what the hon. gentleman calls a colourable sale. I think I may make that assertion without in any way reflecting on the credibility of my hon. friend from Beauharnois. I therefore find no reason for not proceeding with this resolution, which I beg you to believe I did not bring before the consideration of the House without weighing every circumstance connected with the transaction. I am convinced that when these circumstances are fully disclosed before a committee, the committee will arrive at the conclusion that the privilege of parliament has been violated. Under these circumstances, I cannot recede from the position I have taken, and I must persist in my motion.

The PRIME MINISTER. As the hon. gentleman takes the responsibility of the grave charge which he has made, of course the committee will have to go; but he takes his own risk in the matter.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the fact that on Monday last the leader of the opposition referred to the promise of the Minister of the Interior to place on the Table of the House certain papers in connection with the sale of land to the Saskatchewan Land Company. The Minister of the Interior said then, that the papers would be down immediately, but we have not got them yet. I trust the minister will be able to assure the House that they will be down immediately, as it is very important for us to have them at this time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I inquired about them this morning, and find they are in course of preparation. If I cannot lay them on the Table of the House this evening, I will do so to-morrow.

REPORT OF SALMON COMMISSIONER, B.C.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) moved that an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of the Salmon Commissioner for British Columbia.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAY POLICY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish again to direct the attention of the government to the very great delay which is taking place, in announcing to the House that no such policy as that which has been discussed in the Address will be brought down, or in bringing it down forthwith without any further delay. It is well known to all who have followed the course of public affairs in this country that the question of a transcontinental line was engaging the attention of the government during the past session, and in the interval of the recess, after that session had come to a close, the subject was discussed by different members of the government throughout the country, and particularly by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. If I remember correctly, it was announced by one of the members of the government during the past autumn that negotiations were even then going on between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, as it is called now, and that the company was possessed at the time of the views which the government entertained with regard to any arrangement that might be made. The question of transportation was brought prominently before the House in the speech from the Throne, and as I have pointed out before, the government then announced, as part of its policy, the constitution of a transportation commission, which should make a report, to be laid before this House, with regard to certain matters which are intimately connected with the project of a transcontinental line. Now we are at a period which should be very closely approaching the end of this session, if the length of the session is to be brought within any measurable limits. We have had announced through the press of this country, and through correspondence between members of the government which has been submitted to parliament, a project which is probably of more importance to the future welfare of this country than any matter which has engaged the attention of parliament during the past twenty years, but we are not able to get any pronouncement from the government on the subject. My right hon. friend stated to us on Friday last that the proposal would be brought down during the present week, and probably, as he stated, very early in the week. We are now in the third day of the week, and no notice of any resolution has made its appearance in the usual place, in the Votes and Proceedings, and the days are slipping away. We are in as much ignorance as ever we were as to the actual intentions of the government, except in so far as we know them from the utterances of the press and from the correspondence, which has been brought down, between the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals and the Prime Minister.

Now, it does not seem to me that this is a satisfactory condition of affairs. I will not refer to the rumours which are prevalent, not only around the corridors of this House, but throughout the press of the country, of differences of opinion between the members of the government who still remain in the cabinet in regard to this question, but I say in passing that these differences of opinion, if they do exist, are not sufficient to justify the government in keeping members of parliament here week after week and month after month waiting until the government can come to some conclusion upon this all-important matter. I would like, in that connection, to point out to the government, and particularly to my right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the House, some very significant language which has been addressed to him by his late colleague, the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair). That language seems to indicate that the government has decided upon a policy and that that policy is of so definite a character that the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals has found it necessary to withdraw from the government, because that policy, being of a definite nature and being opposed to his views and judgment, he could not see any other course to take at the present time. I will point out to the right hon. gentleman who leads the House this language, referring to the letter of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals of the 10th July, 1903 :

> It further appears to me that if I had declared my intention of withdrawing from the cabinet while there was still a prospect of this policy not being adopted, you would have considered I was endeavouring to accomplish by threat what I had failed to effect by argument.

The direct statement is that there had been a definite policy decided upon by the government in consequence of which the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals found it necessary to withdraw from the government. He states the same thing in the most explicit language further on. He says :

> The action which has been taken since Saturday last, in submitting to a caucus of supporters of the government in parliament the transcontinental railway propositions, identically in the form in which they were adopted by council, assures me that the government was fully resolved to take the responsibility of asking parliament to approve them.

That is not a vague rumour. That is not the utterance of any individual member of parliament. It is the utterance of the late colleague of my right hon. friend, and it is an utterance which shows that this policy was not only decided upon in council, but it was submitted to a caucus of the supporters of the government. That letter bears date 10th July, 1903, nearly a fortnight ago; therefore, the policy itself must have been submitted to the caucus more than a fortnight ago, and yet, the House and the country are kept in ignorance of the actual details of this policy which it is proposed to bring down to parliament, as it is said, during the present session. Then, the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals says further:

> In case you may think the action which has been taken is not irrevocable, and to avoid any possible misunderstanding on the question, I feel I ought to repeat to you the conditions upon which I would be disposed, if you so desired, to further consider my action in this matter.

Then he sets forth the conditions, which I need not read to the House, in order to indicate that there was a definite policy proposed by the government, adopted in council and submitted to the caucus.

Now, if we turn to the letter written in reply to that by the right hon. leader of the government, we find no denial whatever of the fact that a policy has been formulated by the government, adopted by council and submitted to the government supporters. On the contrary, we find language in the letter of the right hon. gentleman which indicates that the view expressed by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals was exactly accurate in that regard. He says in his letter, dated the 14th of July, more than a week ago:

> With regard to the charge that negotiations with Mr. Hays made progress and were well advanced, before I considered it proper or necessary to acquaint you with the facts, I have only to remind you that I thought advisable at first, to retain in my hands the negotiations of this important subject, keeping the Council constantly informed, until I referred the matter to a sub-committee, of which you were one. Moreover, far from admitting the charge, I claim that since you entered the government, at its formation, I have always extended to you the frank, loyal and cordial support which I consider is due by the Prime Minister to his colleagues.
> As to the reasons which you put forward for your dissent from our policy, this is not the time or place to review them.
> I may observe, however, on the two main points of your objections:—

Then the right hon. gentleman proceeds to details which indicate that this policy down to the minutest details had been formulated by the cabinet, that it had been submitted to the supporters of the government and for some reason or other is being kept from the knowledge of the House and the country. Observe the details into which the right hon. gentleman goes in answering the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals:

> 1. I am surprised at your statement that the projected line from Quebec eastward to Moncton will parallel the Intercolonial Railway. The territory served by the new line is not the same as the territory served by the Intercolonial Railway. Between the two lines there will be, not only a distance varying from forty to seventy-five miles, but a chain of mountains dividing the territory to be served by each of them.
> The plan which we have adopted for the construction of the line from Moncton to the Pacific coast, has been purposely selected so as to keep in the hands of the government the key to the transportation problem from the prairies to the ocean, and to leave to the initiative of a private company the section of country where energy and enterprise will be constantly required to meet the exigencies of an ever-changing situation.
> It was my duty, this morning, to call upon His Excellency the Governor General, to inform him of your resignation, which it was his regret to accept, and in the afternoon, I acquainted the council of your final determination.
> Allow me, in conclusion, to express to you my extreme sorrow for an action which I regard as a great mistake toward yourself, toward your friends, toward your colleagues, and above all toward your country, which at this juncture, requires a bold and fearless policy of transcontinental development.

This indicates not only that the policy had been determined upon in the cabinet, that it had been submitted to the supporters of the government in caucus, that it had been dissented from by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, but that the right hon. Prime Minister regarded it as a bold and fearless policy of transcontinental development. I see no reason why that bold and fearless policy of transcontinental development should not be forthwith brought down to the House, and I say that we should have an opportunity as soon as possible to consider it because it is manifestly unfair that a great question of this kind, a policy which the right hon. gentleman himself characterizes as a bold and fearless one, and which his late colleague the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals characterizes as a reckless and absurd one, should be kept any longer from the people of the country and from the parliament, and should be brought down during the closing days of this session. Now, that is not all, because, there has been in the press of this country, in organs which are said to enjoy the confidence of the government, in organs which are said sometimes to be inspired by members of the government, in organs with which certainly members of the government are in very close touch, if they do not control them, the announcement of the policy of the government as far back as the third day of the present month. Whether or not the rumour be well authenticated I do not know, but it has been currently said in this city and through the corridors of this House that this very policy announced in these newspapers was handed out in typewritten form by a certain member of the present administration. And the policy as stated to the country in that way in advance of its being stated to parliament, is this :

The government has decided to build from Moncton to Winnipeg and to lease the road for fifty years to the Grand Trunk Pacific. The Grand Trunk Pacific will pay operating expenses only for the first five years. It is well known that the portion of the line between Quebec and Winnipeg will require to be run at a loss to begin with.

For the next five years the company, if it makes any profit over working expenses, will pay interest on cost, but not to exceed three per cent. For the remainder of the term the company will pay three per cent on the cost.

On the line between Winnipeg and the Pacific ocean the government will guarantee three per cent bonds to the extent of 75 per cent of the cost of construction, but the maximum amount to be guaranteed on the prairie section is not to exceed $13,000 per mile, and on the mountain section $30,000 per mile. The mountain section is to be reckoned at 500 miles.

From Winnipeg to the Pacific the road will be built and owned, as well as operated, by the Grand Trunk Pacific.

It is understood that the company will have to pay three per cent interest from the date of issue—that is, when the road is completed—on the prairie section bonds.

On the bonds for the mountain section the company for the first five years will only have to pay to the government on such surplus as exists after the payment of working expenses, but in any case this will not exceed three per cent. After five years the company will have to pay three per cent. The mountain division bonds, like the prairie section bonds, will be issued on the completion of the road. In this way the Grand Trunk Pacific will finance the whole construction from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean, and add interest to the cost thereof.

The road from Moncton to Winnipeg will be constructed under the supervision of a government commission. The Grand Trunk Pacific will deposit with the government $5,000,000 in cash or approved securities as security. The government to pay three per cent on the cash and the interest that may be received on these securities. This deposit will be released by the government, so that it may be available to the company for the construction of the last section of the line, whenever that may be.

The capital of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which is now placed at $75,000,000, will be reduced to $45,000,000. This will comprise $25,000,000 preferred stock and $20,000,000 common stock. The latter will be owned and controlled by the Grand Trunk of Canada. In this way it will be seen that the Grand Trunk is to be interested in the project.

Running powers will be given to any railway from Winnipeg to Moncton, on such terms as may be agreed upon by the Governor in Council, having due regard for the interests of the Grand Trunk Pacific as operators and lessees. The equipment for the whole line will require to be furnished by the Grand Trunk Pacific, and must be secured as rapidly as the development of the traffic demands. The rates on the whole line will be subjected to the Governor in Council or railway commission, but must not be reduced below such a figure as shall enable the Grand Trunk Pacific to pay rental to the government. A majority of the directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific must be residents of Canada.

It will be seen that the government has taken ample security for every dollar invested in the undertaking, as well as securing the control of rates, and therefore the general opinion of the public will be that the bargain is an excellent one. In this connection it should not be lost sight of that in fifty years the government may resume control of the road from Moncton to Winnipeg.

Now, that is very circumstantial, and that is very much in detail, and it can hardly be believed that this information given to the press was not in some way or other inspired by some member of this government. And then in another very prominent organ which is supposed to enjoy, to a greater extent than any other the confidence of the government, on the 12th day of July, it is announced that this scheme has finally been passed upon by the cabinet.

An hon. MEMBER. What was the date ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The publication is on the 13th of July, but the date of the telegram is the 12th of July. I call attention to this date, because it so closely corresponds with the date named by the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair), on which he said that this project had been adopted by the cabinet and had been submitted to a caucus of government supporters. On the 10th day of July the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) declares that this is the case, and under date of a telegram on the 12th day of July the announcement is made by this prominent organ of the government. The telegram is dated the 12th of July. It does not imply that the cabinet met on Sunday, but on Saturday, and on the 13th of July, 1903, the Toronto ' Globe ' announces :

There was a meeting of the cabinet yesterday, when the Grand Trunk Pacific project was finally passed upon, and it is expected that an announcement of the government's policy will be made in the House early this week. While there have been some minor changes in the agreement between the government and the company since the details of the undertaking were given in this correspondence, they are not of material character. Whatever alterations have been made are in favour of the government. As there has been some criticism of the best mode of dealing with the eastern section, that is from Moncton to Quebec, it may be said that there is no change in this regard, and that the decision remains to have a government-constructed road from Moncton to Winnipeg. As the name of Sir Rivers-Wilson and others connected with the Grand Trunk Company have been added to the directorate, it may be inferred that the company is taking a still greater interest in the scheme. After disposing of the Grand Trunk Pacific business, the cabinet took up the supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year, and made good progress with them.

Under these circumstances, some explanation is certainly due ; some better explanation than which we have had to the present——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Some better explanation is due as to the reason why the government should delay in bringing down this proposal to parliament, if it purposes to bring it down. We should know why the anticipation of my right hon. friend on Friday last, when he said he expected the proposal would be laid before parliament early this week, has not been fulfilled. Here we have the details settled, approved by the cabinet, submitted to a causus of government supporters nearly three weeks ago. Here we have the announcement made in the organs of the government, first on the 3rd of July as to the details, afterwards on the 12th of July that the matter had been finally concluded ; and yet we are here on the 22nd of July without the government proposals before us, without any opportunity to consider them or to deliberate upon them, and that after we have been in this session of parliament since the 12th day of March last, or four months and ten days. The question of transportation has been before the government for more than a year with regard to this matter, and yet we are supposed to deal with this subject in the closing days of the session, because if rumour is to be trusted, the differences which have led to the resignation of one member of the cabinet are not the only differences which exist in the cabinet on this subject, and up to the present time they are unable to make up their minds to bring down any proposal to parliament on account of these differences, which are keeping us here during the entire summer. I trust that my right hon. friend will be able to give some assurance to the House to-day more satisfactory and more definite than any he has yet afforded, and that we may not be kept here day after day and week after week, marking time as it were, and waiting for the announcement of a policy which should have been made in the early weeks of the session. Mr. Speaker, I conclude these remarks by moving the adjournment of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I doubt not that it would be more agreeable to my hon. friend, as it would be to myself, if he and I could slip away to the seaside rather than to remain in this sweltering atmosphere. But I have been prepared for a long session ever since we assembled here four months ago or thereabouts, for we heard it from gentlemen on the other side, that before prorogation day would come the snow would cover the hill tops, and consequently we are still in the early days of this session.

Some hon. MEMBERS.. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. I knew it all along, but I did not expect to have it admitted by the leader of the opposition, that we had been marking time. Whether we have been discussing estimates from day to day, or talking about small matters, or asking little questions about petty details, all this was simply to mark time, because we were to have a Redistribution Bill, and that has been the reason why we have been marking time for four months or thereabouts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I did not say we had been marking time ever since the commencement of the session. I said we were marking time at present, and I refer to the incident of yesterday as one of the examples of it.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend had better confine his remarks to his own side of the House. If the hon. gentleman says that yesterday we were marking time, I have only to refer him to the remarks which he himself made in discussing, with some interest and some profit to the House I must say, the question that was brought up by a member on this side of the House. If the hon. member believed that that question was brought up in order to kill time, I do not suppose that he would have favoured the House with the remarks which he did on that occasion. If he has followed, as I have sometimes done, the discussions which have taken place on the estimates, he will agree with me that we were marking time on those occasions. But the statement was made at the opening of this session that the snow would fly before the session was over, or before the Redistribution Bill would be accepted by that side of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Who made that statement ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman's friends.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think it would be invidious to mention any names, but, if anybody says that I am not correct, I am willing to be corrected.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to state, that, so far as I am concerned, the right hon. gentleman is absolutely incorrect, because I have stated over and over again, when the inquiry has been made of me as to the probable length of the session, to hon. gentlemen on that side of the House as well as to hon. gentlemen on this side, that I saw no reason why we should not conclude our labours by the 1st of August at the latest.

The PRIME MINISTER. Before we can conclude our labours, my hon. friend will agree with me that we have to pass the Redistribution Bill. If the Redistribution Bill were put over to another session, the session would be very short—I think I have heard that stated on the other side of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

The PRIME MINISTER. Though we have had it before us three or four months, we have not yet passed the Redistribution Bill. For that I do not blame the members of the committee who have been struggling with it; I suppose they have not been marking time; but have done good work. But my hon. friend will agree with me that we have to stay here until we dispose of the Redistribution Bill, and therefore my hon. friend is quite in error and without justification in saying that the government have been remiss in regard to bringing business before the House because we have not brought down a certain important measure. We have been supplying business to the House from day to day. If I look at the Order paper of to-day, I see that there are several measures of great importance still to be discussed and disposed of before we could take up the railway policy of the government, even if it were introduced to-morrow. First of all, we have the Railway Commission Bill, a most important matter, which has been partly disposed of, but to which some further labour is to be devoted; we have the resolutions concerning the judges, important resolutions relating to a bounty on lead, also important resolutions relating to bounties on steel; we have still to vote the railway estimates; and we have some other matters to dispose of. Under these circumstances, we have plenty of labour supplied to us by the government in the form of legislation, and I think it is not fair for the hon. gentleman to say that we have not been attending to the duties required of us, and certainly not fair to say that we have been marking time. We have been disposing of the business of the House as speedily as it has been possible to do so. I have been in the House for more than twenty-five years, and I remember that one of the leading parliamentarians of that day, Mr. Holton, used to say that a four months' session was not long enough to do the business of the country. Since those days the business of the country has doubled, the revenue has more than doubled, the country has grown much larger; and if four months was not long enough for the business of a session twenty-five years ago, my hon. friend has no reason to complain if we have not disposed of the business of the country in a session of five months. We are in the fifth month of the session, and a good deal of business yet remains to be disposed of; and even if we brought down the railway policy to-morrow, we would still have to dispose of that business. But, I can assure my hon. friend that the government has no intention at all of delaying that matter or wasting one single moment of the time of the House. We want to dispose of the business as soon as we can; but my hon. friends must not be surprised if we do not bring before the House all our measures at the same time. I hope we shall have the report of the committee on the Redistribution Bill soon, perhaps to-morrow. Then we shall be in a position to take up that question and I hope dispose of it. I can only repeat that the policy of the government with reference to the railway question will be brought down, I hope before the end of this week. I hope that we shall be in a position to invite my hon. friend to discuss that measure at an early date next week; and, if I may judge from the applause which greeted his statements to-day, we can rely upon the support of the hon. gentlemen opposite to that measure, because they already relish the great boon that this policy will be to the country. However, Mr. Speaker, I cannot be drawn into making at this time a more formal statement of that policy than I have made already. We are working on that policy, but it is a policy which is not at all an easy one to adjust. There are certain questions which have to be determined and adjusted even after the principle is settled upon. The details of this matter are as important as the principle itself. We are working at it, however, and if my hon. friend will only possess his soul in patience for a few days more, he will be gratified perhaps more than he has reason at the present time to suppose.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. First Minister's observations largely consist of hope; but a good judge of human nature, looking into the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite, would conclude that their consciences were greatly troubled with despair. They have been vacilating between hope and fear and despair for many weeks, and have not given this House the information it was justly entitled to, nor the country their decision which they ought to have come to long ago. The right hon. First Minister asked, who prolonged this session?

An hon. MEMBER. Yourself.

Mr. SPROULE. An hon. member says 'yourself.' The hon. member cannot have given very much attention to the work of this session during the last three or four months, or he would not have made that statement. We have been jollied along from week to week without any government policy, without any definite principle laid down, without any important measure of the government before us; and we have been obliged to decline voting the estimates, on the strict constitutional ground that we must have the government's policy before we vote the money to carry on the affairs of the country. That is the right of the opposition ; that is the function of the opposition, and we are endeavouring to discharge that function to the best of our ability. But we have been deprived of the government's policy, and we have been jollied along without any sincere desire on their part or on the part of their friends to bring the work of this session to anything like a speedy conclusion. The Prime Minister says that twenty-five years ago it was believed that the work of parliament could not be done in less than a session of four months. Why, thirty-three years ago, when the sessional indemnity was fixed, it was fixed on the basis that a parliamentary session would last only thirty days ; because it was provided that in the event of a session lasting less than thirty days, the indemnity would be $10 a day, but that if it lasted more than thirty days the indemnity would be $1,000. I give that as an answer to the observation of the Prime Minister. Now, I say that the opposition could not properly let the work of the session go on unless we had the government's policy. The House has been sitting for a little over four and a half months. In the speech from the Throne at the beginning of the session the government definitely outlined a policy. Why have they not brought down that policy and pressed it ? During these four and a half months they have been hatching half a dozen policies, not one of which has been brought to fruition and presented to this House and the country. But we witness the unseemly spectacle of the government hatching out a policy while the House is in session, instead of having it ready and bringing it down when parliament opened. That is the reason we are kept so long, that the government have not reached a definite conclusion in regard to their policy.

We have the very unusual spectacle of a government frittering away the time of parliament while wrangling among themselves over a question of policy. Can that be denied ? The other day one of their ablest ministers resigned because he disagreed with the policy they had hatched out about ten days ago. Evidently up to that time they had not concluded on any policy ; and just as soon as they come to some determination and were about to present it to parliament, we had the resignation of one of their most important ministers. Since then they have been in a condition of statu quo. They do not know where they are or what to do. This policy, for the presentation of which we have been so long waiting in vain, should have been decided on before parliament was called together. I can understand the government not being prepared at the opening of parliament to meet some grave question arising during the session, something not previously anticipated; but that is not the present case. We had an intimation more than a year ago of the policy which the government were contemplating, but during all the intervening time they have not succeeded in putting it in such a business shape that they can present it to parliament. I protest against this frittering away the time of parliament. I protest against the great expenses with which this government is saddling the country, by thus unduly prolonging the session, through their own lack of business capacity. Let them bring down their policy so that we may deal with it, or acknowledge their incompetency by resigning office. At the rate we are going, we shall probably be here six months before this session closes. To what must we attribute this delay ? To nothing but the vacillating unbusiness like course of the government. It is due solely to the fact that they had not their work prepared to be submitted to parliament. The right hon. the First Minister tells us that he hopes to present in a few days the railway legislation of the government. But he expressed the same hope last week, and several weeks ago, and we are still living on hope. It may be weeks yet before we will see that measure brought down. On behalf of the people of this country I protest against the inaptitude and utter lack of business capacity displayed by this government during the last four months and a half. We have here 213 members kept in session month after month, kept away from their business, and all for no other reason than that the government is incompetent to deal with the business of the country. How much longer we may be still kept here because of that government not being ready with its policy, it is difficult to say. All the indications are that the government has as yet no settled policy on this railway question. They are evidently fighting among themselves and may fall to pieces any day. One day we hear that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) is going out because he cannot agree with his colleagues. Another day it is the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) who is about to resign in disgust. Then we are informed that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is away sulking in his tent. He is said, in this the hottest season of the year, to be suffering from an attack of grip. I should be inclined to think the cause of his malady was rather the choice between losing his grip or silently endorsing a policy which he condemns. Other members of the cabinet are also said to be at cross purposes, and in fact no one would be surprised to hear at any moment that it had fallen to pieces and was unable to come down with any policy. In the opinions of many, the only thing that holds them together is the spoils of office. That is the general impression throughout the country. They dare not dissolve this House and appeal to the people, because if they did they would not come back with a baker's dozen. We are told that growls of discontent have come from the Upper Chamber, that the newly appointed senators have been sending in letter after letter telling the right hon. gentleman that his policy is ruinous, unwise and unsuitable to the wants of the country, and that in consequence of these representations the right hon. gentleman is at his wits' end to discover some compromise that will get him out of his present difficult position. This is why we are being bumped along from day to day waiting for some definite policy to be submitted to us. On account of its vacillating and helpless condition, the government have been consenting to the violation of every sound parliamentary rule. To-day we had another private Bill introduced.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has no right to refer to a previous decision of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. To what do you refer, Mr. Speaker ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman was referring to a Bill which has been introduced to-day and a motion passed by the House. If he had any reflection to make on that motion, he should have made it when it was moved.

Mr. SPROULE. I am referring to the constant violation of the rules laid down in the British North America Act for the direction of this parliament, and I am drawing attention to the fact that although the British North America Act limits the time within which certain legislation may be presented to this House, we have been violating from week to week this rule, because the government are hopelessly at sea and unable to control the House. They are, in sporting parlance, sparring for wind and jollying the House along until they can reach some decision and some policy. I am entitled to draw the attention of the country to the hopeless condition in which the government find themselves. I challenge them to resign and to appeal to the country. If they did they would be relegated to that obscurity from which they should never have emerged.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I have listened with a great deal of interest to the reply made by the right hon. gentleman to the very well grounded complaint of my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, on the unwarranted delay of the government in submitting to parliament the most important business of the session. The right hon. gentleman displayed a great deal of tact, cleverness and ingenuity in avoiding the point. He gave no satisfactory answer to account for the amazing delay which has occurred in submitting to parliament a measure involving, so far as we can judge, a liability for the Dominion amounting to something like $100,000,000, by far the most important measure that has been submitted to parliament since the day of the resolution in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway was submitted. And what is the reply of the right hon. Prime Minister ? He says, with the utmost bonhommie and kindliness, that he long ago made up his mind to a long session, that he came here with that expectation, having gained it from a remark made by a gentleman on the opposition side that the snow would whiten the hill-tops before this parliament would see prorogation. The right hon. gentleman has not been kind enough as a rule, in the past to take the days for the opening and prorogation of parliament from this side of the House. And, if on this occasion we find him saying that the cause of the very tedious manner in which he is proceeding with the business of the session is to be found in a remark, probably of a jocose character, made by a member of this House, we may doubt if he is giving us his sincere idea on the subject. I would remind the House that the condition of business of itself calls attention in a most marked manner to the failure of the government in the performance of its duties, and one of those duties is to conduct the business of the House of Commons. There can be no question that, while it is the duty of every member of the opposition to participate in the discussions which take place in this House, and to give to every discussion which arises his best attention and his best efforts, yet the conduct of the business is entirely in the hands of the government of the day, and the government of the day is solely responsible for the manner in which that business makes progress, unless they can fairly show that the opposition are factiously obstructing. I am sure it would be impossible, in the case of the present session, to point to any evidence to show that the opposition has obstructed the business. They have discussed the estimates at considerable length, it is true. But the right hon. Prime Minister himself has to-day given us what he considers to be the sole reason why the business of parliament is in the backward condition it unquestionably is in, and that is that until the Redistribution Bill is submitted to parliament and disposed of we cannot see prorogation. And that Bill has not been submitted to parliament at the end of nineteen weeks of sitting. Who is responsible for that delay ? Is the opposition to be held responsible for it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. BELL. A motion for the introduction of that Bill was given notice of by the right hon. Prime Minister at an early day, and when the measure was introduced it was referred to a special committee of this House in control of which the government is absolute. It has the chairman of the committee, it has the majority of the members of that committee, it absolutely controls every meeting, and the conduct of every meeting and the fact that the measure lingers in the committee to which it has been referred is entirely due to the fact that it suits the purpose of the government to keep it in that position that they may delay and retard the business of this House. What is the purpose for which the redistribution measure has been kept back, and is to be submitted to the House only after what ought to be the closing hours of this session? The great probability is that it has been so retarded to enable the right hon. gentleman who leads the government and who leads this House to take absolutely unlimited time in devising, and if possible maturing, a great scheme of railway construction which he announced in the speech from the Throne in the opening day of the session. It has been pointed out by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that this is not a new measure. There were anticipations of that measure one, two and three years ago, in remarks made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. It was in the most clear and explicit manner projected in the speech from the Throne. It was dealt with by both the mover and the seconder in reply to that speech—both of whom are government supporters, and, in his reply to the speech of the leader of the opposition, the right hon. leader of the House assured the House that action would be taken on that subject immediately. In that speech he showed that he knew absolutely what the scheme was, that he knew its whole nature and extent. It involved, according to the right hon. gentleman's statements on that occasion, not only a railway connecting the prairies of the west, which were rapidly being settled by incoming immigrants, with the older portions of the Dominion, but also a railway system connecting the prairies with the sea coast. So, the project he had in mind included practically the whole scheme we have to-day given in the columns of the press based upon information gathered by correspondents within the precincts of this House. The projected scheme covers a railway extending from Port Simpson, on the Pacific, to Moncton, which is practically on the Atlantic coast. Therefore, that scheme, insofar as its extent is concerned, was absolutely in the knoweldge of the government when the session commenced. It had been, to a certain extent, announced long before parliament met at all, in the information given as to the scheme known as the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway scheme, which was the shape the scheme took when it first came before the people. In the four and a half months since the House met, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill, which was introduced, has been modified in one form and another until it has developed into a far greater scheme than was foreshadowed by the advocates of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and it is finally practically withdrawn from the cognizance and action of the House, being hung up and not allowed to make progress. I should like to know who is responsible for the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill is practically suspended between Heaven and earth in this parliament for five or six weeks? Is the opposition or is the government responsible for that? There can be no question whatever, no matter how pleasantly or humorously the right hon. premier chooses to deal with this subject, that to-day the government is being held in judgment by the people of Canada for the fact that when they have, by their own declaration, under consideration a project which involves a liability for every man, woman and child in the Dominion of Canada of some $20, involving a liability for the whole Dominion of $100,000,000, they have delayed the submission of that question to this parliament and have allowed day after day to pass, and week after week to pass while they block the progress of business by keeping back the Redistribution Bill, seeking to gain time. And for what purpose? It is not hard to say for what purpose. It is obvious that the scheme of the government is one upon which the government itself has not agreed; and there is no doubt in the mind of any reasonable person that the delay in the business of parliament, the fact that parliament is practically being held up, is in order to give the leader of the government and his colleagues time, if possible to adjust their differences, to try, if it be possible, to arrive at some form of scheme on which they can come to this House as a united ministry.

Now that is probably according to the great law of nature which is known as self-preservation. They are anxious not to lose their place as a government. But in what manner are they treating the people of Canada? Here is a session which has now lasted almost to the extreme length of a long session; which will soon be one of the longest sessions of parliament which have been known in this country. Already the members are exhausted with their labours and anxious to return to their homes, to which they are called by every business consideration; yet they are held here day after day and week after week, put off with promises of 'to-morrow,' of 'next week,' of 'within a reasonable time,' delayed, cajoled, treated, I might say, in an insulting manner so far as the opposition is concerned. When we ask reasonable questions about what is to be done, we are put off as if we were children who were asking for a holiday, put off with some sugared sweetmeats from day to day, instead of being treated as reasonable men. The country cannot be expected to view this sort of thing with complacency, nor certainly can the members of the opposition be expected to view such things with complacency. There is no doubt that the time has long passed when the government should have submitted this matter to parliament. It is the duty of a government, when they call parliament together and submit in the speech from the Throne a programme of business, to be ready with that business, to bring the most important business of the country before parliament at an early period, instead of in the expiring hours of the session, at a time when the members are exhausted with their labours and unable to give an important measure the sufficient and searching investigation which their duty requires them to give it, on account of the weariness they already feel through the past labours of the session. That is manifestly the policy of the government, they wish to prevent that complete and searching inquiry into this proposed measure which the country requires at our hands. What reason can be advanced for this government, made up, as we are told, of business men, made up of the men who were the choice extracts of all the ability of all the provinces, coming here to parliament and holding up parliament for four or five months because, during all that time, no measure of any importance has been passed. This House has simply been doing the routine work of parliament, has been jogging along through the estimates in the usual fashion, and has been compelled to busy itself, so to speak, with matters of comparatively small moment because matters of great moment have been intentionally withheld from them. I maintain that the manner in which the opposition has been treated this session is entirely unwarranted, but even more unwarranted is the manner in which the people of Canada have been trifled with in reference to a matter of more importance to the country than any measure which has been submitted to parliament since the Canadian Pacific Railway resolutions were presented.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I was much surprised at the reply which the Prime Minister gave to the leader of the opposition, when taunted by the leader of the opposition that he was delaying the business of this parliament in failing to bring down a measure which is recognized by all as the most important measure that has come before parliament since this government came into power, to say the least. The only reply the Prime Minister made to the leader of the opposition was to take up the Order paper and say: There is no need for us now, Mr. Speaker, to bring down any more resolutions, because we have something left on the Order paper still. Is that a reply to give to this House when we press for the submission of a scheme which is to add to the debt of the country 25 per cent of its present debt? Because this proposed scheme will increase the debt of the country by 25 per cent, leaving out all the responsibility of the guarantee. Yet the only answer the Prime Minister makes is to say, forsooth, that there is still some business before the House, still a little readjustment of the steel bounties, a little readjustment of the lead bounties, and that as long as these comparatively trifling measures are before us it is not for the opposition to ask for any further business. Is it the intention of the government to weary out this House before they bring down a measure involving an expenditure of $100,000,000, in the last weeks of the session? This is a measure that should be submitted to us at a period when there will be ample time to consider it. Is it not due to the country that we should have ample time to discuss a measure of such importance? I say it would be an outrage to bring down such a measure without giving us three, or four, or five weeks in which to consider it maturely. But if the reply of the Prime Minister to the leader of the opposition means anything, it means that he wishes to bring down this measure at the last moment when he thinks it will be discussed in a hurried manner, when he thinks he can pass it through this House without proper consideration. The answer of the Prime Minister is not worthy of the government. If the measure has been agreed to in a general form, it is due to this House to submit to us at least its outlines, so that members of the opposition may have ample time to discuss it intelligently.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). I have been frequently asked why this session is so prolonged, and I invariably answer that the opposition are prolonging the discussions. Up to the present time I had been under the impression that we have been engaged in doing some work. I notice that all the obstruction that has been made in this House comes from the other side. I notice that when the estimates are brought before us there are half a dozen men on the other side who spend hours and hours in discussing a matter that does not involve twenty-five cents. Now, it strikes me that if the government intended to prolong this session for their own purpose they had willing instruments in our friends on the other side, who have readily fallen into the trap. It strikes me that after getting off the work that is on the Order paper, and when there is nothing more to do, then they can say that the government are not ready with their policy and they will be justified in complaining of the delay. But I will guarantee that weeks have been consumed during this session in discussing the estimates, and our friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) said they were holding up the government because the government were not ready to bring down its railway policy. Now, if I were on the other side, and my policy was to shorten the session, I would pass the estimates through, get off the Order paper all the business there is on it, and then say to the government: Now then we have completed our labours, where is your railway policy ? Where is your Redistribution Bill ? If what they say is true, they are willing instruments in the hands of the government to prolong this session. They are adopting the wrong course, and in trying to convince us, who have been wearily spending week after week here, that we are to blame for making this a long session, they are undertaking too much. I believe one of the gentlemen who condemned the government for prolonging this session has himself taken up at least twenty or twenty-five days of the session in expressing his views on every conceivable subject. I am willing to cooperate with those who are anxious to get home to attend to their business. I have business to attend to, I am sacrificing my time and my comfort, and there are hundreds of members here who are anxious to get home, and who would get home if only those hon. gentlemen on the opposite side, instead of holding up the House as they are doing, would let us get through with our business.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). If the argument of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) is absolutelycorrect, why then, I think he ought to be very grateful to the opposition if, as he alleges, they have held up the estimates so as to give the government an opportunity of doing that which they said they wished to do ; that is to bring down the transcontinental railway policy this session.

Mr. HEYD. You have given us half a day to-day.

Mr. KEMP. If the opposition allowed the estimates to slip through without that right amount of criticism to which they are entitled we might have been away from here perhaps a month ago. Then, how could the government have brought down a transportation policy when they have no policy yet to bring down ? I think it is a mistake to suppose that the government have only been considering this great transportation question since this session commenced. It seems to me that the government have had almost a year in which to consider this transcontinental railway scheme. I find on looking up the records that Mr. Hays made his statement in regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific on the 24th day of November last, and I assume that previous to that time the Grand Trunk Pacific had approached the government and discussed with them this great project. On December 4th Mr. Hays came and it is reported that he saw the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Right Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce took the 'Globe' into his confidence and I infer from what he said in the interview which he gave that he made known to Mr. Hays even at that date what the policy of the government was in regard to the question. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the views of the government had been given to Mr. Hays. That statement will be found in an interview with the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce published in the 'Globe' on the 4th December last, and therefore, it seems to me that the government had a policy at that time. They had ample time before this House met to perfect that policy and to be ready when the House opened to say what that policy was. I believe they had that policy in view when they made the statement in the speech from the Throne to this effect :

> The great influx of population into our North-western Territories and the very large additional areas of fertile land which are being brought under cultivation combine to further press upon us the need for increased transportation facilities for the forwarding of our grain and other products to the markets of the world, through Canadian channels. The whole question of transportation and terminal facilities continues to occupy much attention, and my government will immediately appoint a commission of experienced men to report on the subject.

What does it mean when they say 'the whole question of transportation ?' Does not that include the transcontinental railway proposition? That commission was to be appointed at once, but it has not been appointed yet, and I take it, in view of the statement of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce on the 4th December that the government's policy had been made known to Mr. Hays, that they then had a policy and that their policy then was that they were going to refer the whole question of transportation to a committee to report. The government have evidently since that changed their minds. They have decided not to refer the question to a commission and they have decided since the House met and since this statement was made in the speech from the Throne to work out this transcontinental railway project within the cabinet. I take it from what has transpired during the last few days that there is little hope of any policy coming from this government. We are kept here and the charge is made by the right hon. Prime Minister that we are being kept here by the obstruction of the opposition. The right hon. gentleman seems to be anxious to get the estimates and the small Bills out of the way. What does that mean ? Does that not mean that in the last days of this session the greatest project that has ever been before this country, or, if not the greatest project, perhaps, second only, second in importance to the Canadian Pacific Railway, is to be brought before this House ? I consider that the right hon. gentleman is quite wrong in saying that the estimates and these Bills of minor importance should be put out of the way before this important project is brought before the House. Now, I wish to say that the government have no mandate from the people to push through this House any such important project as that during this session, and I hope that the government will not force that measure upon this House. I merely rose to emphasize the fact that was brought out by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) that public life in this country becomes a burden which I charge to the responsibility of the government in conducting the affairs of the country in the manner in which they do, and I say it is too bad that we should be kept here the year round while the government are framing such an important policy as the transcontinental railway policy.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). Mr. Speaker, it was the proud boast of the right hon. Prime Minister that if the people of this country returned him to power he would surround himself with a lot of capable, honest, business men. He formed his government and when it was formed a great portion of the people had confidence in a number of his colleagues. But, where are they now? The people had great confidence in the late lamented Sir Oliver Mowat. The cabinet had hardly met when Sir Oliver Mowat was found to be troublesome and he had to be moved. Who filled his place? We had an hon. gentleman from Quebec that the people had confidence in, and who was regarded as an honest, able business man. I refer to Sir Henri Joly. He was found to be another troublesome man. He was promptly transplanted, removed from the government and given a position. Then, we had another gentleman from Prince Edward Island that the people of that province had great confidence in. They said: Here is a poor honest man and as long as he remains in that government the business of the country will be conducted on right principles. But, he was transplanted. I refer to Mr. Justice Davies of the Supreme Court. There was another honest man, the late lamented, Hon. David Mills. He was found to be a troublesome member of the government and he had to be pushed out and placed on the Supreme Court bench in order to give place to one whom the right hon. Prime Minister could control. We had another gentleman that the people of Ontario said was the big policeman, and they believed that things would be all right as long as he remained in the government. I refer to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). He got troublesome but a delegation went to him and said: You keep that office. There is no work in it. You are an old man now, you have a lot of sons. Draw your salary, and we will provide for your sons. Stay there and keep your mouth shut. He is there to-day. He is not in his place in the House at the present moment but he is there in the department drawing his salary. The right hon. Prime Minister made a proposition in the letters which have been read before the House to the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) that it ought to be beneath the dignity of any hon. gentleman to make to any colleague in the government. It was on the same lines as the proposition that was made to the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. Swallow your convictions, sit there, be a looker-on, swallow this Grand Trunk Pacific scheme, I have started the scheme, I have kept it in my own hands, I have carried on the negotiations, I did not consult you because you were a man of honest convictions, but I consulted some of my other colleagues. All you have to do is to swallow this hundred million dollar scheme and get the rake off. You sit there, I will take your portfolio and push the thing through the House. With a rake off of a hundred million dollars he could afford to sit with his supporters behind him, vote this thing through the House and give his colleagues $5,000 each to run their elections on. It is easy to say that. With this hundred million transaction, the right hon. gentleman could easily say: Sit there, keep your portfolio, I will see it through the House, swallow your convictions. If there is a man in this country entitled to the respect of the people it is the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals who refused to accede to the proposition which was made to him and which the right hon. gentleman admits in his letters he made. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals would not sit down and be a looker-on and swallow his convictions. Still there are other men who are in the cabinet and they are swallowing their convictions. Perhaps they may oppose the government yet, for there is a lot of kicking going along. Where are the business men of the government? Why, one of the first men taken into this cabinet who had any business about him was the Hon. Mr. Tarte, and we know that the Prime Minister said: when Tarte goes I'll go. He put out Tarte because he had too much business about him, and he filled his place with whom? A gentleman of the same ability? Ask the people of the province of Quebec that?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Come on.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am coming on, and I will give you enough before I get through. To-day the Prime Minister says that we are to be here until the snow flies. This business government met on the 12th of March, and we were hardly here a day when they piled blue books upon the Table prepared by the officers of the government, but that is all they have done since. Those of them that are left in the cabinet now have their palatial residences in the city of Ottawa. They came here poor honest men, and now they have their palatial residences. Go down the street and ask any citizen of the city of Ottawa, if you look at the palatial residences of these gentlemen that came here poor men—we had a discussion last night about it—and they will tell you that some of these ministers are living on $15,000 or $20,000 a year, which they made out of stock, and drawing a salary of $7,000 or $8,000 a year.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw that.

Mr. SPEAKER. In addition to the hon. gentleman being out of order on that point, his discussion is not germane to the question that has been brought before the House by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am referring to the statement of the Prime Minister that he expected to be here until the snow flies. I am showing that the government has not brought down the measures announced in the Speech from the Throne, and yet we are here four months and a half, and the reason for it is that they are living here in their palatial residences drawing their $7,000 a year from the money of the people, besides $1,500 sessional indemnity, and they can afford to stay here till the snow flies. But this House is composed of business men like myself, who have business to attend to, and if the government had gone on with its business we would not be here now. They blame the opposition, but if you take 'Hansard' you will find that the government supporters have occupied more space than the members of the opposition. The Prime Minister referred to the Redistribution Bill, and when he introduced that Bill you would think butter would not melt in his mouth, and he told the people of Canada they were going to have something that the country had never seen before.

Mr. COCHRANE. So they have.

Mr. TAYLOR. He was going to have a consultation between gentlemen on both sides of the House, and he asked that three men on this side of the House be named, and they were named the next day, but the government did not name their men and get down to work. They called in the members of every constituency in the province of Ontario and asked them what they wanted, and they drew the map and had everything prepared before the committee met at all. Ontario was selected as the province that had to be slaughtered. That was cut out before the census was taken. I have a letter in my desk that I will read at the proper time, wherein one of the census commissioners accuses the minister for not publishing a full report. I say that the census was practically stuffed, so that Ontario might be lessened in its members, because Ontario sent the largest delegation here to oppose this government. They applied the census first and then they applied the Redistribution Bill to cut Ontario down. Has the Redistribution Committee been a consultation? Not at all. They had four government supporters and three opposition members, and the government members spent three or four months consulting their friends in the country as to how they could cut and carve the constituencies to give the best political effect to the government. We will see when the Bill comes down whether it is the fair, honest measure that the Prime Minister promised. The Prime Minister told us to-day that there was a lot of stuff on the Order Paper, such as the bounty on steel, the bounty on lead and the bounty on binder twine. Well, these should have all been mentioned in the budget speech, because there were delegations here asking for relief for these interests; but the government were then fighting as they are fighting now. We hear of two ministers having a scrap in one of the departments yesterday. We hear that one minister caught another by the throat and held him up against the wall because he did not pay the census accounts; and blamed him because it was the cause of the loss of a lot of seats in the Manitoba provincial elections. It may be true, or it may be a rumour, but it appears to be all right, for judging from the looks of the Minister of Agriculture to-day, he looks as if his throat had been squeezed. The Minister of the Interior blames him for not paying the census commissioners and the census enumerators all they asked for, and that had led to one trouble in one wing of the cabinet. Here we are kept day after day, simply beating time, waiting for the policy of the government at an expense of $4,000 or $5,000 a day for paying the officers and printing, outside of the indemnity to the members. This country now finds that this government is not a business government, and that it has retrograded, because the men of the best calibre in it have left it. The vacant seats have not been filled by business men or men equal in ability to the men who left. There is a process of weeding out going on. Those that are remaining; whether or not it is that they cannot agree to the rake-off or their share of this $100,000,000 that is coming from the people of the country; we know that the fact is that there is a big fight on, and that they had one man strong enough not to accept the invitation of the Premier: look on and let me run this thing through the House for you, and you say nothing.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). The leader of the opposition would have been remiss in his duty if he had not taken the opportunity which presented itself this afternoon of again reminding the right hon. Prime Minister of the obligation which has been specially imposed upon him during the past week by the resignation of his colleague the Minister of Railways, to lay before the House at the earliest possible moment the particulars of a measure of such vital importance as that which caused the rupture between the right hon. gentleman and his colleague. It has been pointed out two or three times this afternoon that the question of transportation is the most vital one affecting the interests of the people of this country. It has also been pointed out that more space was given to that subject in the Speech from the Throne than to any other. It has been pointed out that the government declared that the matter was of such great importance that a commission of practical, experienced men would be appointed forthwith to examine into and make a report, not only on the question of transportation, but also on the question of terminals. Nearly five months have elapsed, and not one step has been taken towards accomplishing what the government declared was a matter of vital importance to Canada. The commission has not been constituted yet; experienced men have not yet been found, notwithstanding the fact that more than four months have elapsed since the announcement was made. Experienced men have not been found who are willing to take their places on that commission and make a report on a matter of such great importance to the people of this country. Why has that commission not been filled? There has been no satisfactory explanation given to us why that part of the government's programme has not been carried out. Does my hon. friend think the hon. leader of the opposition has been unreasonable in drawing attention to a matter of such great importance, and in pressing the right hon. gentleman to let the opposition and the country, the people most concerned, know what he proposes to do at the earliest possible moment? The charge has been made that the opposition have been obstructing the business of the House. That charge is not well founded. The opposition would not be discharging their duty to the country if they allowed all the estimates to go through before these matters were laid before parliament. If they adopted that course, the weapon would be taken out of their hands. When the right hon. gentleman charges the opposition with delaying the business of the House, he must forget the statement made by his own late Minister of Railways and Canals in giving his reasons for withdrawing from the cabinet. That hon. gentleman stated that he could not concur in the policy of the government, and he expressed his regret that his resignation from the cabinet would prolong this session for some weeks. The right hon. gentleman referred to the fact that a number of measures yet remain on the Order Paper to be disposed of, among them the resolution respecting the lead duties, the resolution respecting the steel duties, and the Railway Commission Bill. But he did not state to the House that last session the House had the Railway Commission Bill before it and that it was withdrawn, so that this year it is practically an old measure. Therefore the government cannot take any credit to themselves for having introduced that measure this session. If the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues had any definite or fixed policy with reference to the tariff, the resolutions respecting the steel duties and the lead bounties and binder twine would have been disposed of long ago. The very fact that these resolutions are now on the Order Paper is the most striking evidence that could be presented of the vacillating policy of this cabinet; and it is very unfair and unjust to hold us on this side of the House responsible for the undue length of this session. If the government had brought down the measures foreshadowed in the speech from the Throne, I am sure that they would have received the most intelligent consideration the opposition could have given to them; and we would have co-operated with the government in bringing the session to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion. The session has been prolonged because of the unreadiness which has characterized the methods of hon. gentlemen opposite. A measure involving such an immense expenditure as the government's railway scheme is one that should receive the most searching criticism at the hands of the members of the opposition. After four and a half months of the session we are told by the hon. gentleman primarily responsible for the transportation policy of the government, the late Minister of Railways and Canals, that notwithstanding the magnitude of the proposition which is to be presented to us a few days hence an undertaking involving an expenditure of probably seventy or eighty millions of dollars, not one single survey has yet been made of the country through which it is proposed to carry this transcontinental line. Does my right hon. friend think that the opposition would be doing their duty to their constituents and to the country if they allowed that measure to pass this House without giving it the fullest consideration they are capable of? Is it not right that the hon. leader of the opposition should take advantage of every opportunity to draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the responsibility that rests upon this government, and to demand that a matter of such vital importance to the people of this country should not be haggled over or delayed any longer, but should be brought down at once, so that the people of the country may know what its merits are? The late Minister of Railways and Canals stated the other day that the question had been submitted to the cabinet and had been approved by it. Under these circumstances, what are the causes of delay? Have we not a right to insist that this matter, which is of such vital importance to the country, shall be placed before the House, in order that its details may be fully discussed at the earliest possible moment ?

Mr. SEYMOUR GOURLEY (Colchester). Mr. Speaker, I repudiate the charge that has been made that this session has been prolonged by any gentleman on this side of the House. I think it ill becomes men who have raised every possible issue to delude the people, to attempt at last to raise that issue. No men have ever been so successful as the hon. gentlemen opposite in raising false issues to delude the people of Canada. But I tell you, Mr. Speaker, and these gentlemen that the day is past for deluding the people of Canada with false and specious propositions. The people of Canada supposed that these gentlemen had been in opposition so long that they had probably learned wisdom, and that when they came to govern the country they would govern it on commendable principles. But that expectation has been entirely disappointed. I do not desire to be unkind in speech to anybody. If these hon. gentlemen, when they came into power, had made an honest confession that they had been attempting to mislead the people with regard to their policy—if they had said, 'we are unable to carry out the policy we propounded in opposition, we confess that you gentlemen were right, and we are going to steal your policy holus bolus and adopt it'—if they had done that, I would have said that there was some good in those wrong and sinning souls, and I would have been glad to have extended a hand of fellowship to them when they were deep in the mire. But these gentlemen have not done this; but while professing to be free traders, they have mangled the national policy. They were not satisfied to accept the national policy as a great gift to Canada and leave it alone; but they approached that sacred shrine; and when they approached it, if they had a bit of conscience in their carcasses they would have been stricken to the heart for the sin they were committing, and would have gone back and left that shrine untouched. But instead of that, they stabbed it, as Brutus stabbed Cæsar, and to-day they are as unrepentant as Brutus was. These gentlemen, Mr. Speaker, came into power under circumstances which afforded them such a splendid opportunity for statesmanship that I expected at their hands a bold policy. I admired that word of the Prime Minister the other day—a bold policy. I wanted to say to these gentlemen, throw away this timid, shivering policy; throw away the Conservative clothes that you have worn so long. And I am bound to say that they have worn them without any grace. Their figures are too small to look well in the magnificent garments that Sir John and Sir Charles wore like giants. After masquerading in them for a while, they said, we have got on our feet, and we think we have some understanding of the interests of Canada. If they had then thrown off their stolen clothes and shown the little animals inside, and said : we will do the best we can, we will be natural, honourable and honest, and exhibit ourselves to the people as we really are, I could have forgiven them. Never did a government receive so magnificent a heritage as did this government. Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper had worked for years to build up Canada. When they came into office they found an opposition which was decrying Canada and they set about endeavouring to create a national sentiment and make a nation of these scattered provinces, which until then had solely cultivated sectional spirit and provincial ideas. For twenty years after confederation these men laboured with the people of Canada—a people who had been trained in the narrowest school and ideas. For twenty years these eminent men devoted their great intelligence and energy to the development of a national sentiment, which would enable them to develop Canada. During all that time how were they met ? Instead of having to face an opposition who were proclaiming, as we do, the necessity of a national sentiment, of union, they had to meet an opposition which stirred up every provincial, narrow feeling, in the vain effort to break down these men in the splendid task which they had set themselves to perform. I have sat here and listened to the little men on the other side, who have forgotten the history of Canada, rising in their places and making the pretense that they are the authors of Canadian prosperity. Why, Mr. Speaker, they had as little to do with the present prosperity of Canada as the timid rabbits running in our woods and forests. The swallows that fly over these parliamentary walls have had more to do with our prosperity than hon. gentlemen opposite. I never could understand how any hon. gentleman opposite who had any respect for himself could listen to such utterances without a blush or a protest. These hon. gentlemen, sir, had nothing to do with the development of Canada. They came into office at a most favourable time, when the work of these great Conservative statesmen had borne its proper fruition, when the narrow provincial sentiments which had existed and benumbed Canada for years had been entirely dispelled, and a broad national sentiment prevailed all over the country; when the North-west had been brought into confederation and our Dominion extended from the Atlantic to the Pacific. When Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper took office we had but a few Atlantic provinces, but these statesmen were strong enough and patriotic enough to see that we never could make a nation out of these alone. They therefore set to work and embraced the whole of this British North American continent into one great confederacy, so that we could have a great field in which to build up a nation, that would compete successfully with our neighbours to the south, for the dominion of this continent. They built that great national route the Canadian Pacific Railway; they inaugurated the policy of protecting our national industries which has since become firmly fixed in the affections of our people; they laid the foundation of our public laws and administration. Everything was matured by their policy. The splendid edifice of Canada was completed by hands other than those we see opposite. All that these hon. gentlemen opposite have done with this magnificent edifice is to tear down a pillar here and take down an ornament there, and replace them with some botchy patchwork. That being the state of affairs, I am surprised at the assurance of hon. gentlemen opposite in undertaking to charge the opposition with not performing their duty according to the practice and rules of British parliamentary procedure. I propose to fully discuss this great question. I stand perhaps in a different position from any man in this House? I am a railway man. I want railways in this country, and I am prepared to oppose any plan that is going to mar the prosperity which is now at hand.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Motion (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to adjourn, negatived.

PRIVATE BILLS.

BROCKVILLE AND SAULT STE. MARIE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Brockville and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

On the preamble,

Mr. TAYLOR. It will be within the memory of members of the Railway Committee that this Bill, together with two others came before the Railway Committee —this Bill (No. 104) to ratify the purchase by some Americans of the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, another on behalf of the creditors in Montreal and elsewhere to incorporate a company with the right to purchase this road, and another from the promoters of the present Bill, asking for further powers. These three Bills were referred to a subcommittee. Before that sub-committee appeared a great number of creditors having claims against the original company, the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company. That company was chartered some fifteen or sixteen years ago to build a railway from Brockville to Westport and on to Sault Ste. Marie. The company that was formed consisted chiefly of Mr. R. G. Hervey, of the town of Brockville. He organized a construction company which took the contract for building the road. The railway company applied to parliament for a subsidy which was granted —$3,200 a mile for forty-five miles from Brockville to Westport. They also applied to the town of Brockville and different municipalities through which the road was to run, and subsidies were granted by these municipalities to the amount of something like $116,000. The road was constructed so far as to gain a permit from the government allowing them to run trains and carry passengers, and a portion of the subsidy was paid over. The subsidy from this parliament was pledged to the late James Cooper, in payment of the rails, spikes and tie plates. The government approved of that, and the money earned under the subsidy was paid to the late James Cooper on account of these rails. Some $38,000 of the subsidy granted was not paid, but that sum has lapsed owing to the road not having been completed up to government standard within the time allowed. A great number of people had claims against the road for work done under contract, for supplies furnished, or for right of way, and these parties appeared before the sub-committee. The sub-committee heard these people, and, as I understood from the members who I was allowed to nominate to serve on the sub-committee, it was agreed by the members of the sub-committee that no attention should be paid to the other two Bills, but the committee would simply recommend the ratification of the sale that had been ordered by the court. I may say that there is a lawsuit pending involving the question of the jurisdiction of the court in Ontario that ordered the sale of this railway. It is contended that, as this railway was named in its charter as a railway for the general advantage of Canada, it is not within the power of the courts of the province of Ontario to order its sale. However, the road was sold under an order of court, and the suit now pending is to test the legality of that sale. I have given notice of several amendments which I shall ask the House to approve, and I am quite sure that when the hon. members have heard the statements that will be made by myself and others interested, they will accept these amendments. I shall move these amendments as the different clauses to which they relate come up. But in the meantime I may read and explain them. The first is:

To section 1. That the word 'North-western' be struck out and the words 'Sault Ste. Marie' be substituted in lieu thereof.

It was the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway that this company bought. I understood from the members of the sub-committee whose appointment I recommended that they would simply report in favour of confirming the sale of what this company purchased, and, if they asked for further powers from parliament, parliament would do what they have done in previous cases. There are precedents that my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) will refer to, showing that in other cases when parties have asked for powers with regard to a railway company that owed bills for labour, right of way, and so on, the payment of those bills was made a condition of the new powers. That is what the creditors in this case are asking for. The first amendment that I shall propose will have the effect of simply confirming the purchase of what the railway company bought, which is the work known as the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company. We say that that name should be left instead of being changed to the Brockville, Westport and North-western. The next amendment is to substitute $160,000 for $500,000 in section 2. These people bought this railway at the sale for $160,000. Now they are asking parliament to legalize a capital of $500,000. Why authorize a larger capital than the property they bought? The third amendment proposes to strike out section 8. That section declared that the road was for the general advantage of Canada, therefore, these words are unnecessary. They purchased the Toronto, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, which was, by its charter, declared a railway for the general advantage of Canada.

4. That section number nine be amended by adding the following words after the word 'acquired' in the fifth line:—'That the proceeds of the sale of such bonds shall only be used for the completion, equipment and betterment of said railway from Brockville to Westport.'

They asked in their original Bill for bonding powers for $25,000 a mile on a railway that they bought for $160,000. I think the committee agreed to recommend $10,000 a mile, I understood it was agreed by the committee as a whole, and my friends who are on the committee inform me that they were going to recommend $10,000 a mile as bonding privileges, but with the understanding that if these bonds were sold, the proceeds would go for the betterment of the road. I think when I read some letters I have received lately in reference to this matter that the House, in order to protect itself, will not allow this company to go on and give them a capital of $500,000 where they might issue stock to that amount, and sell bonds for $450,000, when, perhaps, after realizing the money, they may put it in their pockets and not spend a dollar on the road. I think the committee will see that this amendment is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the rights of the people:

5. That the following new sections shall be added and numbered as sections 11, 12 and 13, and shall read respectively as follows:

Section 11. That when the said company completes the said railway, so that it will pass government inspection, and be entitled to receive the unearned subsidy, should the parliament of Canada see fit to revote it, it having lapsed, that it be paid over to the estate of the late James Cooper, who had an assignment of the said subsidy as security for rails supplied to equip the road.

This company has a little work to do. When they were before the Railway Committee and before the sub-committee and were face to face with the creditors, they made a proposition to go on and complete the road for $15,000, and the balance of the subsidy, if revoted by the government, would be given for the benefit of the creditors. The $15,000, it was estimated, would complete the road, so that the subsidy will be earned, and the road will pass government inspection. I have no doubt parliament will revote the subsidy, because this money was simply held back until the road was completed, and the fact of it having lapsed is no reason why it should not be revoted. But a clause should be put in to show that the money shall go to the party who had an assignment of it; it should be provided that the subsidy when earned should go in payment of the rails, spikes and fish plates, in justice to the estate of the late James Cooper, who supplied these rails, fish plates and spikes in good faith. A good portion of the subsidy already earned has been paid by the government to Mr. Cooper, but Mr. Cooper still has a judgment for a large amount against this company. But if the Bill goes through as it is, this company would have the right to demand from the government this unearned subsidy. Therefore, I think some clause should be put into the Bill providing that when this subsidy is earned and paid, it shall go to the party who had an assignment originally upon the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Company for the subsidy.

Section 12. That should the said company apply to parliament at any time for further powers, the parliament of Canada shall inquire into certain claims against the said Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company by persons living in the county of Leeds and elsewhere, for supplies furnished for the construction of the said railway, for the purchase money due on right of way, moneys due to contractors, labourers, &c., many of whom have judgments in court against the said Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.

The people who purchased this road purchased it with all the encumbrances that might be against it. The court simply ordered the sale of the road. There were legal claims which this company certainly admits, and the members of the Railway Committee who heard these gentlemen make their claims. I have a few of them here, one of which is set forth in a letter from Mr. Lewis, who appeared for some of the creditors before the committee. He states :

Brockville, July 2, 1903.

Hon. William Harty,
Chairman Sub-Committee of the Railway,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—In the matter of the Brockville and North-western and other Bills concerning what was formerly known as the Brockville and Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway. I represent the following clients :

|---|---|
| W. G. Parish of Athens, whose claim is | $2,685 93 |
| H. H. Arnold of Athens, whose claim is about | 2,000 00 |
| D.W. Downey of Brockville, whose claim is about | 200 00 |
| John Nelson Knowlton of Crosby, whose claim is about | 8,000 00 |
| L. S. Lewis, of Newboro', whose claim is about | 1,900 00 |

The first three are for goods supplied and wages paid and the last two claims represent actual work on construction and wages paid out therefor. These men are residents of the municipalities that gave to the Brockville and Westport Railway the following bonuses which have been paid by the several municipalities.

|---|---|
| Brockville | $36,000 00 |
| Rear of Yonge and Escott | 7,000 00 |
| Rear of Leeds and Lansdowne | 15,000 00 |
| Bastard and Burgess | 3,000 00 |
| South Crosby | 6,000 00 |
| Village of Newboro' | 4,000 00 |
| North Crosby | 15,000 00 |
| Total | $116,000 00 |

In addition to which there was granted the government subsidies.

These gentlemen are contractors for doing a portion of the work, and have these claims against the parties, and I am sure this parliament will not legislate the honest claims of these gentlemen out of court by giving a charter with extended powers to this company. There are three gentlemen, one of whom I am informed has since failed. An offer was made to the sub-committee when they were before us, but which was withdrawn owing to financial troubles. These three gentlemen from New York came over and bought this road, but owing to that failure they were unable to carry out the proposition made to the sub-committee. Now, will this parliament authorize these three gentlemen to sell bonds for $450,000 and stock for $500,000 ? When they get the money they can do as they like with this road, leave it there to the town of Brockville and the other municipalities who put their money into it. I think parliament will certainly protect itself by saying that it will only give them a capital equal to the money they paid, and allow them to issue bonds and sell them for a sufficient amount to complete and equip the railway. Mr. Lewis writes further :

To avoid repetition I have perused the statements filed by Hutcheson & Fisher of Brockville, who represent W. J. Webster—

Mr. Webster lives up in the locality of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). He was a contractor and has a large claim for construction.

—and Sanford Vickery who are creditors of the same class that I represent and I concur in what is therein set forth and refrain from repeating it in this statement. Propositions of settlement have been made from time to time by the present purchasers who now seek a charter, to the people who did actual work on construction as my clients but recently these propositions have all been withdrawn. The $38,000 subsidy which has not yet been paid over to this road by the Dominion government together with the percentage of the $11,240 now in court which the American purchasers of the railway would receive as a dividend on the bonds they hold, with which the road was principally paid for (they having been allowed to turn in bonds instead of money) would, if distributed amongst the people who built the said road and who have not yet received their pay, pay over forty cents on the dollar of all legitimate claims. This would not require the purchasers of the said road to put up one dollar in money in addition to what they have paid for the road and what they would be required to expend in order to bring the road up to government standard but the American purchasers are not satisfied with this and desire to take from the earnings of the road that was brought into existence by these unpaid creditors, that which the said railroad earned before the same was offered for sale by public auction. We submit that this case is and should be entirely analogous to the case of a liquor license holder who by the Ontario law is required to pay all debts that he has contracted before a transfer of his license will be granted to another man to whom he has sold out his business and that in the case of railway corporations where mortgages or bonds are foreclosed the high court of parliament is the only forum to which one can appeal under existing circumstances for the enforcement of these construction debts and wage claims against the road.

The case of Creditor Knowlton is a fair sample of the injustice which the present purchasers would inflict upon these creditors. You will bear in mind that the conditions of sale under which this railway was advertised to be sold set forth in large type that it was to be distinctly understood that the purchasers should only receive such titles as the holders of the said road had. This of course referred to the right of way. Mr. Knowlton not having been paid for the right of way then proceeded to arbitrate with the purchasers as to the price to be paid for the right of way across his farm to which the American purchasers agreed. There was however alongside the railway where it runs through Knowlton's farm a large strip of land from which the dirt had been taken for several feet down to provide for a heavy fill beyond his line. The price of this the new purchasers refused to arbitrate about or pay for, claiming that did not come under the head of 'right of way' and the only recourse Mr. Knowlton has regarding that portion of his land (which is worth about $200) is the present application to parliament.

If the creditors Bill is defeated and the Brockville and North-western charter is granted without the new purchasers being required to satisfy the construction debts, Mr. Knowlton will simply lose that land to the new purchasers who have paid nothing for it. The fee simple is still in Mr. Knowlton. The land is no good with all the dirt taken off it and the railway company has the benefit of it. The question is asked: 'Why did not these creditors protect themselves when the said railway was offered for sale'—and the conditions of sale furnish the answer to this question. The purchasers who held bonds were allowed to turn in same as so much cash and through an arrangement with the Philadelphia Investment Company who held nearly nine-tenths of the bonds, the said purchasers secured these bonds for a nominal figure and were thus enabled to outbid any other bidder who not having the bonds would have to put up cash for the full amount of his bid. I am informed that some members of the Philadelphia Investment Company are members of the combination or syndicate of purchasers. It will therefore be readily seen that these gentlemen under those circumstances might bid $200,000 for the railway and would not be required to put up as much actual cash as one having no bonds bid $100,000, and under those conditions it was therefore impossible for the creditors of this road who were financially weak to protect themselves and we claim the said creditors have a right to come and ask parliament to relieve them from the results of the unfair competition. If the railroad was offered for sale to-morrow on even terms to all purchasers each man being required to pay the full amount of his bid whether he was a bondholder or not it would never be sold for the ridiculously low figure for which the present purchasers obtained it, and it was only when the road was sold and an application for privileges was made to parliament that these creditors had an opportunity to make themselves heard, other than through the action that is still pending. The parties themselves admitted that at least a distinction should be made between the creditors now appearing and that the local people ought to receive pay for their construction debts and wage claims.

That is the statement put before the sub-committee which dealt with this matter, and as I understood, the sub-committee agreed to ratify and confirm the sale without giving any extended powers. If that company are asking for extended powers that the majority of that committee recommended, then, I think, respecting as I do, many of these creditors who are constituents of mine, that the claims of these people should be recognized in this Bill as similar claims have been realized by this parliament in other Bills to which my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) will refer.

Mr. GALLIHER. Mr. Chairman, is it the purpose to deal with each of these proposed amendments as they affect different clauses to speak at this stage?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GALLIHER. Because, if it is, I do not propose to speak at this stage.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You are speaking now on the preamble. The clauses will come up in order and as each section is called the amendment will be made to the section.

Mr. GALLIHER. I will only then state generally, speaking on the preamble, that I was a member of the sub-committee of the Railway Committee which sat on this Bill. The Bill having been referred to the sub-committee they met several times and discussed it. Finally the majority of the committee agreed to a report which was afterwards submitted to the Railway Committee and endorsed by the Railway Committee. That, for all practical purposes, I think, disposes of the question as to whether or not this Bill has been fully dealt with by the sub-committee and by the Railway Committee. The sub-committee, upon going into this matter, concluded that they would recommend that the other two Bills be not accepted and that this Bill in so far as ratifying the purchase of this road is concerned should be adopted. Further, it was agreed by all the members of the committee that the bonding privileges of $25,000 per mile asked for by the company should be cut down to $10,000 a mile. Two members of the committee, or what we may term the minority portion of the committee, wished to include it in a clause to the effect that the proceeds of these bonds should be expended upon the forty-five miles of railway already built. However, the majority of the committee agreed upon submitting the report as it now stands which was adopted by the Railway Committee and which does not contain that limitation. The sub-committee also recommended that the words 'Sault Ste Marie' be struck out and that the company should be named the Brockville, Westport and North-western Railway Company. The reason of that was that the extension asked for to Sault Ste. Marie was not granted by the committee and there was therefore no necessity for retaining the words 'Sault Ste. Marie' and it was thought it would be more applicable to the road to call it the Brockville, Westport and North-western. That was agreed to, I think, I am safe in saying, by all the members of the committee. I do not remember that there was any objection to these words being submitted, from any members of the committee. This being done, that also was adopted by the Railway Committee when the report of the sub-committee was brought in. We also considered the question as to whether that sub-committee should deal with the claims of the creditors that were being pressed, and we came to the conclusion that we would not touch upon that question, that we were merely going to deal with the question of ratifying the sale to the present company, and with the question of giving them bonding powers to the extent of $10,- 000 per mile on the forty-five miles constructed, in order that they might be able to put the road in proper repair and also earn the remaining subsidy.

Mr. PRINGLE. I was not present at the final meeting of the sub-committee which considered this Bill, and therefore, I cannot speak with precision as to what occurred. However, at the last meeting at which I was present there was a discussion as to the sub-committee recommending simply a Bill ratifying and confirming the purchase of the Brockville and Westport Railway by the applicants for the present Bill. The consensus of opinion was that if no arrangement could be arrived at between the conflicting interests that a Bill would be recommended simply ratifying and confirming the purchase. But, Sir, I find that the Bill which has been reported to the House goes very much further than that. This Bill gives to the applicants very large powers over and above ratifying and confirming the purchase. The position I take is this: That these applicants had a perfect right to come to us under the Railway Act and ask for a Bill confirming their purchase, and they were entitled to receive that Bill subject to any rights acquired under existing legislation. But when they come to us and ask for the privileges which they have obtained in this Bill then I think we have a right to say to them: Before we give you these privileges you should do what is right and just by the people who have assisted in the construction of that road and have not been paid. I will briefly mention the history of this enterprise. The Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company was chartered by an Act of the legislature of Ontario a good many years ago. That company entered into a contract with a man named Robert G. Hervey for the construction and equipment of that portion of the line from Brockville to Westport, being forty-five miles, and agreeing to pay for such construction and equipment (according to the schedule attached to the contract) all of the stocks, bonds and subsidies of the company. In pursuance of that contract work was begun and the line partially completed. The rails and fastenings and the wire for fences were purchased from Cooper, Fairman & Company and the Dominion Wire Company, and I might say that a large portion of the material used in the construction of the railway, in the shape of ties and so on, was purchased from persons throughout the province of Ontario. For instance, the Rathbun Company furnished a large portion of the ties which went into the construction of this road. The Investment Company of Philadelphia furnished at different times certain sums of money upon notes made by the railway company and endorsed by R. G. Hervey, and with certain bonds of the railway company as collateral security. The Investment Company were familiar with the condition and transactions of the railway company, and agreed to the assignment by the company of the Dominion subsidy for the purchase of the rails, fastenings and wires which were purchased from Cooper, Fairman & Company. In July or August, 1892, an agreement was made between Hervey and the Investment Company for the assignment by Hervey of the construction contract to the Investment Company, and thereupon Hervey endorsed such transfer upon the original contract. The directors, who up to that time had been legally qualified by holding each the amount of stock specified in the charter, and having paid all calls thereon, resigned as such directors, and the Investment Company nominated a board of directors. It is important that we should consider that position. The Investment Company who took over all the bonds of this road under which the road was subsequently sold, took over this contract from Hervey—and I am reading now from the statement of Hervey which can be substantiated as I understand, by the records. The Investment Company agreed to assume these liabilities; the liabilities which we have been considering in the committee and in the sub-committee. Mr. Hervey's object in making this agreement was that the railway might be completed and equipped and the construction liabilities paid by the Investment Company who became the contractors; and the object of the Investment Company was stated to be that they might acquire a good title to the stock and bonds upon the completion of the contract. Now, just while I am on that point, one of the parties who came before the sub-committee was a Mr. Robinson. Mr. Robinson had had a contract for the construction of a certain portion of this road. He had a claim against this company of some $20,000, and he obtained judgment upon that claim, but as yet has never received a dollar. Now, Sir, I say that the Investment Company, when they took over that contract, assumed that liability. They agreed with Hervey that they would pay the liabilities which then existed, and that they would go on and complete the construction of this portion of the road. The Investment Company received all that there was to be had, they received all the bonds, all the stock, all the assets of the road. There is nothing else that could be obtained and it is under these bonds that the Investment Company sold this road. I contend that the parties who have purchased it are really parties representing the Investment Company. However, instead of proceeding to complete and equip the railway in accordance with the terms of the contract which they then held, they failed, and refused to pay the construction debts; and to complete such construction and equipment, I am informed and believe that they attempted to repudiate the assignment of the Dominion subsidy to Cooper. The Dominion subsidy had been assigned to Cooper, Fairman & Company as a security for their furnishing the rails and fastenings and they undertook to foreclose the deed of trust or mortgage securing the bonds. Several years of litigation ensued, during which time the directors of the railway company did not act, so I am informed, in the interests of the railway company, and did not defend such foreclosure suit, as they should have done, and should have set up that the bonds held by the Investment Company should not draw interest until such contract was completed. By reason of the failure of the Investment Company to carry out in good faith the contract they had assumed, the subsidy of the Dominion government lapsed, or at least such portion of it as had not been paid, but was withheld by the government pending the completion and equipment of the line in accordance with the specifications. It has been contended, and I think it was a fair contention, that the securities held by the Investment Company should be charged with a lien for the payment of the construction debts, and the completion and equipment of the line according to the contract. If I am stating what is correct—and I am stating it upon the authority of Mr. Hervey, whose statement I have in my hand—when Mr. Hervey handed over his contract the Investment Company agreed to take his position and complete the road in consideration of their receiving the bonds, stock, &c. Now, Sir, I was not opposed in the committee to granting to this company the same powers as the original Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company had; but I took this position, that if the applicants for that Bill wanted from us large privileges, then we had a right to say to them: When we grant you these privileges, we think you should do what is right and fair by the creditors of this company. I have a statement here which was directed a short time ago to the Hon. William Harty, the chairman of the sub-committee of the Railway Committee, and I do not know that I can do better than read this statement to you. I may explain to the House that the creditors felt that it was in their interest to apply for an Act authorizing them to construct a railway from the present terminus of this road, and they offered, if they obtained that Act, to place in the hands of the Minister of Railways and Canals the sum of $50,000 to be divided rateably among the creditors. That was Bill No. 67; then there was Bill No. 89, known as the Brockville and Sault Ste. Marie Bill; and there was the present Bill. Messrs. Hutcheson & Fisher, who are acting for a large number of these creditors, state in this document:

Re Brockville and Westport Railway Bills.

Sir.—We understand that of the three Bills referred to your committee by the main railway committee, regarding the Brockville and Westport Railway in this county, only two are being pressed in earnest, viz., the Brockville and Western Bill herein referred to as the Creditors Bill, number 67, and the Brockville and Northwestern Bill, herein referred to as the Syndicate's Bill, number 89, the other Bill, known as the Brockville and Sault Ste. Marie Railnumber 104, as stated by Mr. Barwick was applied for in order that the four gentlemen who are the applicants might be in a position to obtain a license from the Minister of Railways and Canals to operate the forty-five miles of railway now in use until a new charter is obtained.

On behalf of Mr. James Cooper, the Dominion Wire Manufacturing Company, Limited, W. J. Webster and certain other creditors of the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, whose claims are for material and labour supplied in building the road, we ask you to report in favour of the first Bill named—The Brockville and Western Bill—and to report against the Brockville and Northwestern Bill. The Creditors' Bill you will notice has a clause providing for payment of fifty thousand dollars into hands of the Minister of Railways and Canals for distribution pro rata among creditors of the Westport Company within sixty days after the new company acquire the road.

We submit that the men whom we represent are entitled to consideration at your hands. Because they are the men who actually supplied the material and labour which made the railway, built it and made it available for traffic and for all these years their claims have remained due and owing. Mr. Cooper supplied rails, bolts and fastenings: the wire company the wire for fencing and Mr. Webster actually constructed a section of the road, built fences, &c. Your committee are fully aware of all the circumstances under which the rails were supplied. A transfer of a part of the Dominion government subsidy was made to Cooper, Fairman & Co., as security for the rails, but owing to the fact that the road was never completed to the government standard, the government engineer refused to accept it and some thirty-eight thousand dollars of this subsidy to which Mr. Cooper was entitled, was never paid.

We say that parliament, the highest tribunal in our land, has the authority and power to ascertain if an undertaking such as a railway has paid its debts of construction and if it finds that construction debts are still owing that parliament has the right to enforce that lien which equity recognizes everywhere as belonging to the man whose labour and material has created the railway and undertaking in question. In a recent judgment in the United States Supreme Court Mr. Justice Brewer expressed the opinion in reference to foreclosures of mortgages on railways:—'This court long since recognized the fact that in the present condition of things other inquiries arise in railway foreclosure proceedings than the mere matter of the debt of the mortgagor to the mortgagee. We have held in a series of cases that the peculiar character and condition of railway property not only justifies but compels a court entertaining foreclosure proceedings to give to certain limited unsecured claims a priority over the debts secured by the mortgage. It may be and has often been said that this ruling implies a departure from the apparent priority in right secured by a contract, yet this court recognizing that a railway is not simply private property but also an instrument of public service has ruled that the character of its business and the public obligations which it assumes justifies a limited displacement of the contract and recorded liens on behalf of certain unsecured creditors.'

It is contended by the promoters of the Syndicate Bill that this equity in favour of labourers and material men does not apply or attach in this case because the syndicate purchase this railway at a court sale. We submit that the equity does not apply because :—

The conditions of sale were unreasonable and on the face of them show that they were framed with the object in view of the large bondholders (who was also plaintiff and had conduct of the sale) becoming the buyer. No outsider had any chance whatever of buying the undertaking at any price. Bonds could be turned in on the purchase money and the Philadelphia Company then held some ninety per cent of the total bond issue. They or their nominees would thus only have to provide in cash the remaining ten per cent of their purchase price and the costs of the suit. As Mr. Holm told your committee when he and his associates went to the sale with ninety per cent of the bonds in their pockets or under their control, they intended to come back the owners of the road. They were thus in a position to outbid every one. For this reason we submit it is pertinent to this matter to inquire.

What this block of bonds—ninety per cent of the total issue—cost the promoters of the Syndicate's Bill ? It has not yet appeared what price was paid the Philadelphia Company, although we have stated as a matter of report that the price was $90,000 and no one had denied it.

Mr. Cooper was offered the holdings of the Philadelphia Company at one time for $125,000, but owing to the death of his partner, Mr. Fairman, just at this time, he was unable to entertain it.

Inasmuch as ninety per cent of the purchase money at the sale was paid in bonds, we are entitled to bring before the committee all the circumstances in connection with the Philadelphia Company's holdings of these bonds. We do know that the construction contract to build the road was assigned by the contractor, R. G. Hervey, to this company. The Philadelphia Company accepted and acted on this transfer and took certain benefits under it and the contractor R. G. Hervey, says that before this transfer was made the Philadelphia Company agreed with him to satisfy the construction debts then outstanding, on which Hervey was then liable, and to complete the railway according to the contract.

That is the statement made by Mr. Hervey in writing, and it has not been contradicted ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Would the hon. gentleman not infer from what he has read that that is merely the assertion of some verbal understanding, which was not embodied in the agreement itself.

Mr. PRINGLE. I do not infer anything of the sort. The original contract was for the construction of a certain portion of that road. The consideration for that contract was the bonds and the stock of that road. Mr. Hervey went on to construct the road and found some difficulty in financing. He then assigned the contract to an investment company, which took the consideration he was receiving, namely, the bonds and stock, and agreed to build the road, and released Mr. Hervey from all liability.

Mr. GALLIHER. Does he not say in that statement that before this assignment was made, he agreed to do that ?

Mr. PRINGLE. No, he says he assigned direct to the investment company. The only assets of that whole system were the bonds and stock, but these were received by the investment company. The investment company subsequently sold this road under a mortgage given to secure these bonds. Is it not most reasonable, even if Mr. Hervey did not say so, to assume that the investment company were to pay for the construction of the road ? They went on and finished a portion of the road and paid for a certain portion, but at the time when Mr. Hervey abandoned this road, Cooper & Fairman had been supplying the rails, the Rathbun Company had been furnishing the ties, and Robertson had a contract for the construction of a number of piles on that road, which he went on and completed. Subsequently he had to sue the railway company and obtain judgment, and then he found that the bonds and stocks and everything were held by this investment company.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for private Bills has expired.

STEAMER 'SCOTIA'—CLAIM RE SALVAGE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). A few days ago I saw a report in one of the newspapers of the decision of the Privy Council in the case of the Anchor Line Steamer 'Furnessia' which rescued the government steamer 'Scotia.' The Privy Council decided that judgment could not be recovered against the King, but the Lord Chief Justice expressed the hope that notwithstanding this decision the Dominion government would compensate this Anchor Line steamship, because, if not, the effect would be that steamers would avoid in future going to the rescue of Dominion government boats in distress. It struck me that that recommendation of the chief justice would have been accepted without question, but I am sorry to see to-night in a despatch quoted from London 'Truth,' that the Canadian government have resisted the claims for compensation, and 'Truth' says : 'The natural outcome of this meanness will be that no ship will come to the assistance of any government vessel in distress.' I do not want to make any comments, but sincerely hope that the report is not correct and that the Dominion government have not refused compensation. To do so would be false economy.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought the matter to the attention of the House. I regret that the hon. Minister of Justice is absent as he would be able to answer the inquiry more fully. However, speaking from such knowledge as I possess, and which I think is quite correct, I will say that the defense raised by the crown was not with the intention of ultimately refusing to compensate this Anchor Company at all. In fact, I think the Anchor Company quite understand that the defence was raised because of some question arising, I think growing out of insurance contracts. But it is the full intention of the Crown to do all that is proper under the circumstances quite irrespective of the judgment. It has always been their intention to do so; but it was necessary, out of consideration of the rights of other parties, to allow the case to proceed through the courts.

Mr. OSLER. I think the government were quite right in that, but I hope prominence will be given to the statement made by the Postmaster General. While I quite agree that it was wise on the part of the government to resist when they did, yet, evidently the idea has gone abroad through the English newspapers that application had been made to the government and the government had resisted. I think steps should be taken to correct that false impression very soon.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Civil Government—Department of Labour—Salaries, the whole or any portion of which may be paid notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $15,300.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). There is a net increase here of $1,450. The increases with regard to salaries include one new appointment at a salary of $1,400, Mr. W. W. Edgar; two statutory increases of $50 each to Mr. Ardouin; and increase of salary to Mr. Frank Plant, who received $1,000, and whose salary has been increased to $1,200; an increase for Mr. Gibbons from $800 to $850; an increase to Mr. Andrews from $600 to $650; and an increase to Mr. Lapointe from $600 to $650.

Mr. SPROULE. The new apopintment is Mr. Edgar?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, he was a clerk in the library of parliament. His salary in the library was $1,100, and he received also $450 a year as secretary to the Speaker, a total of $1,550. He was transferred to the Department of Labour at $1,400, which is $300 more than his fixed salary, but $150 less than his two salaries combined. Mr. Edgar is a very scholarly man and has made a specialty of economic questions; and the services of a gentleman of his attainments are very necessary in the department.

Mr. SPROULE. And is his place in the library to be filled ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has been filled by the appointment of Mrs. Lampman, the widow of the late Archibald Lampman, the poet. Mrs. Lampman had been a clerk in the Post Office Department, where her salary was much less than she is getting in the library. Her salary in the library is $800.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of from $1,000 to $1,200, but all to one man, as I understood.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Plant is the clerk referred to. He is a man of forty or so, a married man with a family, and lives in Ottawa. A salary of $1,200 does not seem unreasonable for a person in his position.

Mr. SPROULE. What position did he occupy before he was appointed in the Department of Labour ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. By trade he is a printer. He is a very bright man. When he first came into the department he was appointed as an ordinary clerk. As he became familiar with the work, he has been given, in addition to general work, special duties. At present, and for some time past, he has been specially engaged on the circulation branch of the Labour Gazette.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw a note the other day that the Minister of Labour's correspondents were threatening a strike if their allowance was not increased. Has the minister got that trouble fixed up ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think it has assumed any such proportions as my hon. friend apprehends. I am not aware of any difficulty of that kind, except that one correspondent, Mr. Phillips Thompson, of Toronto, has expressed a desire for an increase of salary. That is the only application of that kind. I was not aware of such a communication until I saw it mentioned in the press. I made inquiry of the deputy and learned that Mr. Thompson had made a direct application of that character.

Mr. CLARKE. What remuneration does Mr. Phillips Thompson receive? What demands has he made? And what are you going to do about it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has put three questions in the space of his brief speech. The first question is as to the present allowance. The present allowance to each correspondent it is $100 a year. The next question is as to the demands made. Mr. Thompson names no amount, but expresses the opinion that there ought to be an increase. The answer to the hon. gentleman's third question is that the matter will receive careful consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand that Mr. Phillips Thompson is expected to review the labour situation of the whole city of Toronto for $100 a year or about $8 per month? Is the Dominion divided for correspondence purposes into districts, and does each correspondent supply information from his district? If so, are the districts the same size, and are the correspondents paid by scale, or how are they paid?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Each correspondent is required to send in a monthly report to the department as to labour questions in his district. No distinct geographical limits are assigned to him. He takes upon himself to notice matters occurring in the district where he resides.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Thompson is a journalist and a very competent man, but the minister does not seem ready to grant his application.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Phillips Thompson is a very competent and reliable man. It gave me great pleasure to appoint him to that position, and his appointment is fully justified by the manner in which he has discharged his duties. As I stated already, the subject only came to my attention yesterday, and it will receive careful consideration. There are many ways of dealing with such an application. The duties of a labour correspondent do not monopolize his time. A person who is engaged in industrial life, or in touch with labour questions, may easily qualify himself to make a correct and reliable monthly report as to industrial matters in his district, without being obliged to neglect a regular calling. Therefore the principle has been adopted throughout Canada of making an allowance of $100 a year, or $8 per month for a monthly report with regard to industrial matters. Mr. Thompson's profession, I think, is that of a newspaper correspondent. I am told just now by my deputy that he has an appointment in the Ontario government; I was not aware of that before. But many of our correspondents are engaged in newspaper offices, there may be some exceptions; but they are men having a regular calling. In the city of Montreal, owing to the prevalence of two languages, it is necessary to have two correspondents, one speaking English and the other French, and the same practice is adopted in the city of Quebec. Whether it would be wise to increase the number in a city like Toronto, or appoint one to an adjoining neighbourhood, is a subject to be considered. As to the amount of salary, if we were to double, or treble or otherwise, increase the salary of one correspondent, my hon. friend would cite that as a precedent in favour of all the others. Therefore we have to approach the subject of increasing the salary of one correspondent, bearing in mind the result it would have with regard to all the others.

Mr. CLARKE. When a correspondent sends a letter for the 'Gazette,' is it published just as he sends it in?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The report presented by the correspondents is in the form of tables to be filled in. The correspondents are furnished with blank schedules containing the questions or points indicating the nature of the information that the correspondent is expected to furnish. These schedules are edited in the office, and whilst the language of the correspondent may not be used, the substance of the report is published.

Mr. PUTTEE. How many correspondents are there for the 'Gazette,' and are there two correspondents in any other city except Montreal?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are 31 correspondents in all Canada. Only in Montreal and Quebec are there two correspondents.

Mr. OSLER. The amount paid to this gentleman who is correspondent for Toronto, is certainly very small, only $100 a year. That is a small amount to pay for proper information from a city like Toronto. It seems to me that if the government wished to have a fair labour report, they should not appoint a man who is in the employ of the Ontario government. That should be a fatal bar to any labour correspondent, I do not care by what government he is employed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I really was not aware till just now that Mr. Thompson was in the employ of the Ontario government. But I am sure the hon. gentleman would not expect Mr. Thompson to be dismissed because of that fact.

Mr. OSLER. Certainly not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is a very independent minded man, a very sensible man, and I do not believe the circumstance of his being in the service of one government would have the slightest influence upon his report to this government. I do not know even that we should assume from the fact of his being in the service of the Ontario government that he is a Liberal. Even that is unknown to me. But he is, I think, an exceptionally able man. He has been identified with the press a great many years, and I was led to select him for correspondent because of his contributions to the press of Canada during so many years. I knew him in that capacity only. He has made a study of labour questions, in fact I understand he is himself an author of a somewhat valuable book upon labour problems. These are the considerations which induced me to appoint him to the position which he now fills. As to the amount of the salary paid to these correspondents, I may say that this is the first time I have been urged by the opposition side to increase the salaries of the labour correspondents. At an earlier period the objection was taken from the other side of the House that they were overpaid. However, I am glad the hon. gentlemen have receded from that position. I conclude that if at one time they thought these gentlemen were overpaid and now they think they are now underpaid, perhaps the salary is not altogether out of the way.

Mr. OSLER. I did not suggest that they were underpaid, but I said that in order to get a labour report from a city of the importance of Toronto, $100 a year seemed to me too small an amount to pay. As far as Mr. Thompson is concerned, I am not suggesting one word that would indicate that he is not a proper person to do this work. I do not know him, but I believe he is a very capable and upright man. It is simply on principle that I raised the question. I do not think the correspondent of the labour bureau should be an employee of any government, Liberal or Conservative. I think the principle is wrong. In this case, the reason may be so strong that the exception is proving the rule.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour who the correspondents of the Labour Bureau are in the city of Montreal, and what is the salary of these correspondents ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. One of the correspondents is Mr. Gustave Audette and the other was Mr. Fitzpatrick, but I think he has either resigned or contemplates resigning.

Mr. MONK. What salary do they receive?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The amount is paid monthly after the report is received. If no report comes, there is no payment for the month.

Mr. MONK. Have Messrs. Audette and Fitzpatrick sent regular contributions during the past year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There have been irregularities in the reports of the Montreal correspondents. Mr. Audette is a recent appointee, and is a successor to Mr. Gareau. Mr. Gareau was also somewhat irregular in sending in his reports, and he has resigned.

Mr. MONK. I would like to inquire from the hon. Postmaster General if there are any labouring men, so-called, attached to the bureau in Ottawa ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to more fully explain what he means by a labouring man ?

Mr. MONK. I do not think it ought to be necessary for me to explain that to the hon. Minister of Labour.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what is in the hon. gentleman's mind.

Mr. MONK. I mean a man who has actually been at some trade, who has performed manual labour and who, consequently, may be termed as belonging to a class of men who are called labouring men.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. O'Donohue, the fair wage officer, was a printer by trade. Mr. Dubreuil, I am told, is a carpenter, or a mechanic of that kind. I am not sure, however, about that, but my hon. friend may know.

Mr. MONK. I have never heard of him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Plant is a printer by trade and Mr. Williams was a locomotive engineer.

Mr. MONK. Are they employed in the bureau at Ottawa ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I suppose it would be among the duties of the officers of that department to see that the schedule of wages in cases of government contracts is paid to the labouring men employed by the contractors ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The government has a policy on that subject, and it would be the duty of this department to assist in carrying out that policy.

Mr. MONK. Well, that is a very vague answer. I do not know what the policy of the government is on that subject. There can be no doubt as to what the policy ought to be. If a government contract is given and a schedule of wages is attached to the contract, I suppose that schedule is the estimation placed by the government itself, or its expert officers, upon the value of the workmen's labour, and I presume there can be no doubt that the policy of the government, or of the Department of Labour, would be to see to it that the schedule of wages is paid to the employee by the contractor. Surely the government should have no other policy than that. What I wish to know is whether that policy is being carried out in the working of the Department of Labour ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it is the practice of the department to live up to that policy. The object in having a schedule of wages is to protect the employees. It is for their benefit. Of course, if employees choose to waive that position for any reason of their own, that might perhaps be treated as a matter of their own concern, but however that be certainly without their consent the department would not waive any such condition in the contract, but would require the contractor to pay the schedule rate of wages. We have in a very large number of cases compelled contractors to pay the schedule rate of wages. Contractors, in sending their vouchers and progress estimates, have to verify the payment of wages according to the schedule ; of course, as I say, subject to the exception that this provision, being for the benefit of employees, if an employee chooses to waive it, that relieves the government of its obligation in that particular instance.

Mr. MONK. All I can say is that the policy of the government is a very bad one, and that the Department of Labour falls far short of the object of its creation, because anybody acquainted with the ordinary conditions of labour knows that the contractor, in a majority of cases, will stipulate for lower wages than the wages mentioned in the schedule. I am surprised to hear the hon. Minister of Labour state that the policy of the government is that when the poor labouring man has been induced by a contractor to give his service at a lower rate than the fair and reasonable rate fixed by the government, the government's policy is to see to it that the poor labouring man obtains no relief at all. I am justified in saying that is a very poor policy. There are a great number of cases where contractors will grind down the labouring man and stipulate an unfair wage, and it was always understood that the policy of the Labour Department was to prevent that. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) will agree with me in that. The government inserts a schedule of rates for the reason that the government is supposed to protect the labouring man against the employer, but now the Minister of Labour states that if the workman chooses to work for an unfair wage, the department that costs us $40,000 a year will not come to his assistance.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is very astute to develop a remark into something that never was intended by it. I find the hon. gentleman to be one of those who does not appear to be able to correctly argue a case, but who from the slightest observation develops something wholly unwarranted. The hon. gentleman has in his mind as I have, the only case on record where there has been a waiver, and he knows all the facts of that case because he was professionally engaged in it. He is not warranted in developing a general policy based upon an isolated case. The facts of the case to which he has alluded to are, I understand, as follows : A contractor obtained a contract for erecting a public building at Nelson, British Columbia, and being an eastern contractor, he thought it might be of advantage probably to his employees or his acquaintances in the east to take them to Nelson. He may not have known what facilities there might be in the labour market there, as labour may have been scarce, but whatever may have been his reason he consulted with the men and told them if they would go with him he would pay their expenses out and back and board them while there, provided they would accept a certain rate of wage, which happened to be different from the schedule rate. When the case was brought to the attention of the Hon. Mr. Tarte, then Minister of Public Works, this special agreement was brought before him and he seeing nothing unfair in it, acted upon it. I presume the Hon. Mr. Tarte informed himself of the circumstances and was fully satisfied that the case presented no such features as my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) imagines, of the wage earner being compelled to take an insufficient wage. The conditions in Canada since this government came to power have been, that labour is even more plentiful than hands to do the work, and instead of a contractor being in a position to grind down an employee, the employee is able to place a value upon his own labour and sell it at a good price. The sympathetic appeal of my hon. friend on behalf of the downtrodden wage earner has no practical application, although it may be a beautiful thought to pass through the hon. gentleman's brain.

Mr. MONK. The minister has told us that the Department of Labour would not interfere if the wage-earner stipulated for a lower price than that set forth in the schedule.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is wider than my statement.

Mr. MONK. The minister said that if the labouring man chose to waive the advantage of the wages stipulated in the contract he was free to do so and the Department of Labour would not interfere. The hon. minister is silent because he knows that is what he said.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) does not want me to be rude and to interrupt him while he is speaking. I shall have great pleasure in replying to the hon. gentleman, but there has been only one case of the kind since the department has had existence, and when he began his question I knew that he was alluding to that case because he was professionally engaged in it. I told him that he should not endeavour to prove a general proposition from a single case. However, that is his logic, not mine. My proposition is that the Department of Labour is here to enforce the policy of the government, but if a workingman did make some special arrangement under special conditions and that fact is brought before the minister in whose department the work is being done, and if the facts are as in this particular instance, I would like to know wherein any public injury or any private wrong is done by the department not interfering. The schedule is there to protect employees against unfair treatment and to secure to them a fair wage. If the men of their own motion, being perfectly free, chose in a special instance in consideration of particular circumstances—perhaps in this case they wished to avail themselves of this trip to British Columbia with all its attractions—if they make a special arrangement, then unless it is clear that there has been undue influence brought to bear upon the men; unless it can be shown that they did not stand in a position to take care of themselves, is it unreasonable that in a special instance of that kind it should not be dealt with as the late Minister of Public Works chose to deal with it in the isolated case to which I have alluded?

Mr. PUTTEE. The only thing that pleases me about this discussion is that the minister tells us that this is an isolated case. I understand the facts to be these: There was a contract called for and the Department of Labour ascertained the current rate of wages in Nelson, British Columbia, and reported that to the Public Works Department, and these rates became part of the contract. It appears that the contractor was an eastern man and he took his men with him to British Columbia, and I suppose he got them at the eastern rates or at a less rate than prevailed in the west. Now, that is exactly one of the things that the current wage resolution went through this House to prevent; the taking of men from one part of the country to another and the breaking down of the wage rate in that other part. I regret that the Department of Labour did not stand by its own schedule. I understand that the Department of Public Works is responsible for the carrying on of that particular contract, and there is this point in it.

When a schedule is made up by the Labour Department and reported to the Public Works Department and included in the specifications, it becomes a part of the contract; and I decidedly object to that part of the specifications which applies to the wages of labour, being departed from any more than that part which applies to the purchase of materials. The two parts are pretty much on the same basis; the contractor has to buy the material called for, and he has to buy the labour called for; and it does not seem to me right to let him go below the schedule in the one case any more than in the other. I am glad to hear that this is only an isolated case, and I do not think it should form a precedent for the future. It seems that the late Minister of Public Works is blamed for this breach. I hope the Minister of Labour will say nothing to encourage the present Minister of Public Works to proceed in the same way in the future. We know that eastern contractors, from Montreal and from Ottawa, have in the past tendered for western works at very much lower prices than contractors on the ground could do the work for; and they undertake the work on the expectation that they will be able to take men from the east and put them at work under conditions which those men do not know anything about. It is idle to say that these men are free—that they choose to do that. The men are not free. They do not know the conditions prevailing; they imagine that they are the same as the conditions under which they have been accustomed to live and work. This is the principal evil of the contract system in this country. When a contractor in a cheap district gets work in a dear district, and takes his labour with him, and pays the wages that he has been in the habit of paying in the cheaper district, he commits a breach of the schedule, which I think we should have it clearly understood will not be permitted in the future. If that was an exception which the late Minister of Public Works put through, I hope it was only done against the protest of the Labour Department. That is the only idea of having the schedule of wages drawn up, and it does seem to me that it is altogether defeating the object of the Labour Department to allow exceptions of that kind to be made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. While of course, I assume the responsibility of what occurred, I had no personal knowledge of the matter until to-day. The circumstances all occurred at a time when I was absent from Canada on public business elsewhere, and all that my department was able to do was to call on the Department of Public Works to apply the schedule. It was for that department to administer its own affairs. Of course, the government as a whole must assume the full responsibility for all that takes place, whether by the government as a whole or by individual members of the government; and I quite agree with my hon. friend that one of the features of the fair-wage policy of the government is that the prevailing wage in the district where a work is to be performed shall be paid to those engaged on the work. I can only say that whatever may have been the special reason which moved the late Minister of Public Works to dispose of the matter in the way he did, no doubt he felt fully justified by the facts. I pronounce no opinion myself whether the facts warranted the conclusion he reached or not. My department called attention to the provisions of the schedule, and there our powers came to an end. But still, I agree with my hon. friend that it is not a case of exception that ought to be recognized—I mean allowing workingmen to be shifted from one locality to another, if the object is to break down the labour market in the locality. One of the leading objects of the fair-wage resolution is to prevent any such result as that.

Mr. MONK. I am very glad to see that the hon. minister has shifted his disposition to a certain extent. I understood the hon. gentleman to state distinctly that if a labouring man chose to waive the schedule rate of wages, he was free to do so, and the department would not interfere. It seems to me extremely unfair for my hon. friend, who is the Minister of Labour, to endeavour to shift the responsibility of an action of this kind to the other department. If the Department of Militia gives out a contract under the circumstances under which this contract was given out, and the labouring men suffer from the conduct of the contractor, I do not see that the responsibility of my hon. friend is completely relieved the moment the Minister of Militia chooses to disregard the labour clauses in the contract. On the present occasion, in two or three instances, my hon. friend has endeavoured to lay the blame of what occurred during the execution of the contract in question, upon the ex-Minister of Public Works, whereas the blame should attach to the department of my hon. friend himself. Let me just point out in a few words the circumstances of this case, and the House will then understand that no blame whatever attaches to the ex-Minister of Public Works, but that there is blame to be imputed to my hon. friend, and to the employees of the Labour Department. And I venture to say that with a far smaller sum than that which we expend on that comparatively expensive department, three or four practical labouring men could be employed as experts, and we would get far better results. In the case to which my hon. friend the minister has alluded, and which belongs exactly to the category of cases referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg, there was a contract for $49,900 given to Messrs. Lemoine for the construction of a post office at Nelson, B.C., and in the fair-wage schedule the wages stipulated were: for blacksmiths, $4.50 per day of nine hours, and for stone cutters, $5 per day of eight hours. Three cases came under my notice, and I have no doubt whatever that the contractors meted out the same treatment to the other labourers whom they employed that they meted out to the three who claim the attention of the government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman say that in respect of three different contracts such departures have come to his knowledge, or is he speaking of cases applicable to one contract?

Mr. MONK. I am speaking of three labourers to whom the department refused its intervention; but I am convinced that these contractors followed out the same policy with regard to the other labourers whom they brought from the east as they followed out with regard to these three, who happened to be electors of mine and on whose behalf I solicited the intervention of the department and did not obtain it. What did these contractors do? They wanted to make money out of this contract. They knew that the wages stipulated for British Columbia were fair wages and nothing more, and they had a scheme of bringing to British Columbia eastern labourers and paying them eastern wages. But they knew that they were evading the law, and they felt convinced, I suppose, that they would evade the attention of my hon. friend and his department; and so they were careful to make a written agreement with these labouring men. What was the agreement? I will take one of the agreements, and they were all similar. It is as follows:

I, the undersigned, Alfred Racine, stonecutter, of the city of Hull, in the county of Wright, do engage myself to B. O. Lemoine, contractor, of the said city of Hull hereto, represented by . . . . . the whole of the time of the works in stone-cutting in the construction of the post office at Nelson, in British Columbia—I accept 33 cents an hour for my work, all extra hours on the day's regular work to be paid me at the same rate. Whereas, the said B. O. Lemoine is obliged to furnish me with board and my passage to go and come, I admit that the compensation for my work amounts under this arrangement to at least $5 per day for eight hours work.

They were compelled to give that admission regarding the wages, so that the contractors knew perfectly well their obligation.

And I consent that the monthly pay-list should be made in consequence and allow B. O. Lemoine the difference between 33 cents per hour and $5 per day for eight hours, to reimburse them for my passage. It is understood that I will be admitted to work extra hours at the same price—33 cents. The present agreement, made on the condition that I shall work continuously until the completion of the work. It is hereby understood that on the first salary accruing to me, B. O. Lemoine will retain the sum of $50, to be only paid me at the end of my engagement, if I work until the completion, but that he will keep the said sum as liquidated damages in the contrary case, any other recourse they may have.

This was the form of agreement, the object of which was to place the contractors beyond the conditions of their contract with the government, to the execution of which the employees of the Labour Department and my hon. friend were especially pledged. It was for them to see that contract of this kind—which I call fraudulent contracts—contracts in violation of the principle of contract with the government and the rights of the workingmen—it was for them to see that that particular contract made by the contractor in the east with the labouring men was not carried into execution. A similar contract was passed with another stonecutter, whose claim I lodged in due time in my hon. friend's department and with a blacksmith—three brothers and I have no doubt they were not the only workingmen so treated. I entertain no moral doubt that every single workingman from the east was treated in precisely the same manner. What happened? These men went out and were paid under this form of contract. That is to say, they received considerably less than the contractors were bound by their agreement with the government to pay them. If the contractors had a contract for over $49,000, it was precisely because of the higher rates of wages in British Columbia and the conditions of life there, which are completely different from those here. Those workingmen came back and discovered how they had been treated. They came to me, and I inquired from the Department of Labour what the conditions of this contract were, and they made up their accounts in accordance with it. The blacksmith, Albert Racine, had a right to $4.60 per day of nine hours. He made up his account from his book with the greatest care. No question whatever was raised as to the number of days charged; and taking his schedule of wages stipulated by the government and deducting from these wages $105 for passage going and coming and $250 for board, at the rate of board agreed upon, this blacksmith had a right to a balance of $246.46. He had a clear right to recover that amount from those contractors. He has a right at law to recover it, I have no doubt, in spite of the agreement he has signed; but outside entirely the consideration of that agreement, it was for the Department of Labour, which had been duly notified, to see that the government contract was carried out. The claim of this man's brother, also a stonecutter, Camile Racine, amounts to $1,308.05, and there is no dispute as to the number of days. He charges $5 per day of eight hours, and he allows the contractor $321 for his board. There was coming to him a balance of $211.60. Another brother, a stonecutter, had a claim also for about the same balance. As soon as these facts came to my knowledge I communicated to the Labour Department. I have here all the correspondence, which I am ready to submit to my hon. friend the member for Yale and Caribou, and from that correspondence it results clearly that contractors were not paid at that time. The Department of Public Works had a large balance on hand then coming to the contractors. I notified the Department of Labour of this condition of affairs, and I received the answer that every possible attention would be paid to the claims of these three workmen. I also communicated at the same time with the Department of Public Works. I did so in order that that department would lay those accounts, if necessary, before the contractor, and I notified the Department of Public Works that I had placed these claims, which seemed to me incontrovertible, in the hands of the Labour Department. I wrote several times to the Department of Public Works that these claims would be placed in the hands of the contractor and that justice would be done, and that there was a balance coming to the contractors amply sufficient to pay these claims. I wrote several times to the Department of Labour and have the letters here and the answers I received. I called attention to the justice of these claims and the circumstances I have just related, and asked that the department should carry out its duty to see that the fair-wage schedule be carried out with regard to these three workmen. After I had waited a very long time without receiving any information at all, as to the progress made in the settlement of this claim, I received at last a communication from the Department of Labour, if I mistake not, communicating——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) proposes to refer to any special letter from the Department of Labour I would prefer that he should read it. These letters are not sent by me, but by my officers, and I would like to know to what the hon. gentleman refers. I think he will find that the decision was given by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MONK. I have here several letters from the department of my hon. friend. If he desires, I will read them. One is as follows :

Department of Labour, June 16, 1902.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 13th instant re claims of Alfred Racine and Camille Racine against Viau & Lemoine for $213.08 and $211.60 respectively for wages alleged to be due in accordance with schedule inserted in a contract for the construction of a post office at Nelson, B.C.; also a copy of the agreement made by Viau & Lemoine with Alfred Racine and Camille Racine, and copies of the claims of these two men, giving details of the hours worked for contractors, amounts paid, &c.

In reply, I desire to inform you that these claims will receive immediate attention.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. L. MACKENZIE KING.
Deputy Minister of Labour.

F. D. Monk, Esq., K.C., M.P.,
58 St. Francois Xavier Street,
Montreal.

That was in answer to a letter in which I sent these claims, duly attested, to the department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understood that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) was going to read a letter saying how the case had been finally disposed of, and by what department. I have not heard that. I do not know from what department the letter came to which the hon. gentleman refers, nor do I know its tenor.

Mr. MONK. I have that letter here also. Here is a letter from the Department of Labour :

Department of Labour, Ottawa July 10, 1902.

Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of July 9th, addressed to the Minister of Labour, in reference to the claims of the three Racine brothers against the contractors for the construction of a post office at Nelson, B.C., and asking that the department give this matter its immediate attention.

In reply, I beg to inform you that the secretary of the Department of Public Works, in a communication addressed to the Deputy Minister of Labour, has stated that he has written to the contractors concerned laying before them the claim of the brothers Racine, and asking on behalf of the honourable the Minister of Public Works, a full explanation. He has stated also that he would forward to this department the statement of the contractors in the matter, as soon as it is received.

On receipt of this statement from the Department of Public Works, I will communicate with you at once, and in the meantime I am notifying the department of your further inquiry in the matter.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
R. H. COATS,
Acting Deputy Minister of Labour.

F. D. Monk, Esq., K.C., M.P.,
58 St Francois Xavier Street,
Montreal, Que.

I received also the following letter :

Department of Labour, Ottawa, July 21, 1902.

Dear Sir,—With further reference to our recent correspondence re the claim of the three Racine Brothers against Viau and Lemoine, contractors for the Nelson post office, I beg to inform you that I am in receipt of a communication from the secretary of the Department of Public Works in which he states that he is now in a position to bring the matter before the minister for a final decision. As you may happen to know the minister is at present absent on a tour of inspection and it may be some little time before he returns to Ottawa.

In the meantime, however, an application on the audit office for the payment of an estimate in favour of Viau & Lemoine amounting to $700 has been stopped pending the minister's decision.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
R. H. COATES,
Acting Deputy Minister of Labour.

F. D. Monk, Esq., K.C., M.P.,
58 St Francois Xavier Street,
Montreal, Que.

I read this because, as the minister will see by the terms of this letter the decision of this matter, instead of being vested in the Department of Labour, seems to be vested in the Department of Public Works—an anomaly to my way of thinking, because it seems to be that in a case of this kind it would be for the Department of Labour to give a decision before which the other departments would naturally bow as being the decision of the department interested principally in seeing to the carrying out of the fair-wage schedule. My hon. friend has asked me to give him the last communication I have received in this matter. I received the decision, in accordance with the letter of Mr. Coats which I have just cited to the committee, not from the department of my hon. friend (Hon. Sir William Mulock), but from the Department of Public Works, which, according to me, had no jurisdiction in the matter at all. If my hon. friend the Minister of Labour and his department had done their duty, I have no doubt that these men would be paid to-day. For it is quite natural that the Department of Public Works, which had nothing to do with the matter except to pay the contractors, should have arrived at the decision that the contractors were to be paid, in view of the abstinence from interfering on the part of the employees of my hon. friend (Hon. Sir William Mulock) I received the following communication from the Department of Public Works :

Department of Public Works,
August 11, 1902.

F. D. Monk, Esq., M.P.,
Montreal.

Sir,—The honourable the minister authorized me to communicate to you his decision in the case of the claim of Camille Racine and Alfred Racine for wages as stonecutters in connection with the erection of a post office at Nelson, B.C. This decision is embodied in a letter of the honourable the minister to Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King, Deputy Minister of Labour, a copy of which letter is hereto attached. Let me add that the engagement signed by the Racine Brothers is dated Hull, June 20, 1901.

Believe me,
Respectfully yours,
FRED GELINAS,
Secretary.

And here is the decision, a decision which I submit to the committee was rendered by the wrong tribunal. The tribunal that had jurisdiction in this matter was that of my hon. friend (Hon. Sir William Mulock) especially created for the labouring men circumstanced as these three claimants were circumstanced. The letter giving the decision is as follows :

Office of the Minister of Public Works of Canada
Ottawa, August 11, 1902.

W. L. Mackenzie King, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

My dear Sir,—Re claim of Camille Racine and Alfred Racine for wages as stonecutters in connection with the building of post office at Nelson, B.C.

I find that these gentlemen had made a written engagement with Viau & Lemoine, by which they agreed to accept 33 cents per hour. They have been paid according to their engagement. In other words they have made a contract which they are asking me to set aside. I shall certainly not do so. I cannot possibly interfere with Viau & Lemoine and oblige them to pay the Racine brothers more than these gentlemen had agreed to accept.

Truly yours,

(Sgd.) J. ISRAEL TARTE.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) says 'hear, hear.' But this decision, coming from a department which is not specially charged with the protection of the labourer, may not appear surprising. It is not surprising to me, because my hon. friend is not a lawyer and is not presumed to have knowledge of conditions existing in another department, and is not presumed to know that at the time of the signing of this contract there was a special wage stipulation in favour of these men which it was not in the power of the contractor, I say, speaking as a lawyer, to set aside. Any contract made by a contractor in violation of his principal contract with the Department of Public Works, in so far as this particular aspect is concerned, was a contract against public order and void. That is my contention, and I have no doubt that the courts in the province of Quebec would so interpret it. This disposition contained in the fair-wage clause, to which is annexed the fair-wage schedule, is a condition of public order, and any contract made by a contractor with labourers, be they eastern or western, in violation of that, is a contract against public order and, ipso facto, is null. Therefore, the contract invoked by the Department of Public Works against the claim which was lodged by these three men in the Department of Labour is void, and would be so declared by the courts of my own province, and I have no doubt by the courts of any province; because I believe it is the law in every province that every contract against public order is null and of no force or effect. Now, what I complain of is that, although for more than three months the Department of Labour was in full possession of these facts, had the accounts of these labouring men in its hands, it does not seem to have been able to take one step towards securing the rights of these labourers, but had allowed the contractors to be paid in full for their contract without exacting from them the fulfilment of that clause which the Department of Labour was specially obliged to see enforced. I say that if the Department of Labour does not see to the carrying out of this fair-wage stipulation in government contracts, what is the use of the department? I say, moreover, that the other departments of state have no jurisdiction to decide this question, neither the Department of Public Works or any other. Under the law, as I understand it, questions of this kind are vested for decision in the Department of Labour, and it is impossible for that department to shirk its responsibility in the premises by saying: Oh, the decision has been rendered against us in some of the other departments. It was for that purpose that I asked my hon. friend, at the beginning of this discussion, what the policy of his department was, and I understood him to say distinctly that the policy of his department was to try and see that the fair-wage conditions were carried out; but that if, forsooth, the labouring man and the contractor choose to stipulate a low rate of wages, as in this case, an unfair and unjust rate of wages was stipulated, then the Department of Labour would not interfere. My hon. friend said that that was very astute reasoning. But there is no astuteness about it at all. That is what my hon. friend said, and it is that policy he has carried out in this case. I say we have just right to complain, before we vote this amount, at the way in which this matter was managed in the department of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I was Minister of Public Works when the claim of the Racines was presented. I do not agree with the description of the powers of the Department of Labour given by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I would certainly not have allowed the Department of Labour to manage the affairs of the Department of Public Works when I was at the head of it. I was very glad indeed often to avail myself of the ability of the officers of the Labour Department. I think they will agree with me that we worked very harmoniously indeed, and I did not hesitate cheerfully to work with the Department of Labour from the very inception of the organization. The way we proceeded was this: When a contract was to be awarded the schedule of wages was submitted to the Department of Labour and prepared by them. The contract was signed according to that schedule, and when so signed the administration of the work remained and must remain under the Department of Public Works. When there are difficulties the Minister of Public Works tries to adjust them, and I have on several occasions been only too glad to avail myself of the services of Mr. King especially. On this occasion the Racines presented their claim. I do not remember whether it was presented directly to me by them or to the Department of Labour.

Mr. MONK. It was presented to both departments simultaneously.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, I think my hon. friend interested himself on behalf of these men, if I remember right, I received a letter from him. I think they are electors of his. However, these claims were investigated with a great deal of care. The Racines are intelligent men, living, I think, in Cartierville, near Montreal. They made an arrangement by which they were to receive a certain amount per hour, as well as their travelling expenses and other advantages. They made a special bargain. After having investigated the case, I came to the conclusion that, as they had signed a contract, which was a fair one, they were well paid. I did not think I was justified in setting it aside. That is the position in two words. Now, the Department of Labour has been made acquainted with the whole situation, the position has been discussed, and I think the Department of Public Works and the Department of Labour are jointly responsible for the decision that has been rendered. In other words, I rendered a decision, and no representations were made to me by the Department of Labour that my decision was wrong. That decision was communicated to the Department of Labour, and no complaint was made about it. The Department of Labour, I say again, cannot possibly administer the affairs of the Department of Public Works. If the two departments attempted to work jointly in that direction, they could not do it. I have been long enough Minister of Public Works to be able to state that it cannot possibly be done. The Department of Labour, is a kind of advisory board, and very useful. Surely no Minister of Public Works, having respect for his position, would allow any other minister to come into his department and decide matters over his head. So long as I was there, nothing of the kind was done, and nothing of the kind was attempted. Again, I say that the officers of the Department of Labour have been very useful indeed. In the Racine case, I think both my decision and the decision of the Department of Labour—for that is what it amounted to—were fair and right.

Mr. MONK. I do not know that my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was here when I gave the details of this case.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I was not.

Mr. MONK. I want to tell him that I was not attacking his department.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We are discussing a pretty important question. The question is whether the Department of Labour should have the right to direct the affairs of the Department of Public Works. That is the case in two words.

Mr. MONK. Yes, that is an important point. I wanted to say to my hon. friend that in defending his department which I was careful not to attack, he has, I think, extended that defence to the hon. Minister of Labour and I do not think the hon. Minister of Labour has as good a defence as the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If I were an ex-minister it would be very good.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps. I think the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, has given away the case as to the hon. Minister of Labour, because my hon. friend says that he rendered this decision, carried it out, and paid the contractors and there was no remonstrance made whatever by the Department of Labour. That is just what I find fault with. I can understand that a minister at the head of a department which is not particularly charged with the interests of the workingmen and who really does not know all the details of the fair-wage schedule for the enforcement of which we have created a special and an expensive department—I can understand that a minister at the head of such a department might say: I find a contract between a contractor and a labouring man, the contract is sufficient for me, if they have agreed as to wages, I see no reason for stopping the pay of the contractor. It is here that the duty of the Department of Labour begins, because, I lay it down as a principle that this contract made by the contractor with these workmen is a contract which is against public order and as such it could not be invoked against them. That is the law in the province of Quebec, and I am pretty sure it must be the law in the other provinces also. Therefore, there would be no valid agreement, these men have been deprived of this $700 or $800, the contractors have been paid in full and it is the fault of the Department of Labour. Why is it when the Department of Labour had these accounts in its possession that there was no question raised whatever as to the amount payable to these men when the Department of Labour knew perfectly well that the only way the contractors could get paid in fraudulent avoidance of this contract was to invoke this secret contract made by them with these workmen in the east? Why did not the Department of Labour intervene and make representations to the Department of Public Works in order to secure the rights of these men? That is the real point and what has happened in these three cases has probably happened in the case of every one of the labourers employed by these contractors. I have no doubt whatever that they took all their labourers from the east. The hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) shakes his head. Is he prepared to say that there were only these three labourers taken from the east?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am prepared to deny the hon. gentleman's statement that in all probability all the labourers were taken from the east, because, living there, I know that some of the men employed live in that town and were paid the schedule rate of wages. You would not get men out there to enter into a contract such as these men entered into, regardless of whether they would be doing men on the ground out of a job or not, and who are now coming to the hon.

member for Jacques Cartier asking for assistance and sympathy. They entered into this contract knowing that this schedule of wages was the schedule of wages paid to men living out there, and knowing that the contractors could not procure men for less than those wages. Yet, of their own accord they entered into this contract regardless of whether they were doing men on the ground out of a job or not. I do not agree with the principle of importing men from one province into another to do work. I entirely disagree with it. I think it is a principle that should not be followed. If there was a way of preventing contractors from bringing men from the province of Quebec to British Columbia, I should be only too glad to see it applied.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That would be a very difficult thing to do.

Mr. GALLIHER. I say if there was a way of doing that I would be glad to see it applied, so much opposed am I to the practice of contractors who may get contracts, taking their men from wherever they may reside and employing them on their contracts in another province. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) tries to evoke sympathy for these men——

Mr. MONK. Who is talking about sympathy ? I am not talking about sympathy; I am talking about money.

Mr. GALLIHER. Or money either. I will not argue the question of law with the hon. gentleman. I do not know what the decision would be in the province of Quebec in a case of this kind, but, these men, if their contract is null and void as between them and Lemoine, have their recourse against Lemoine. It is not a question at all of classing them in the same way as if the contractor had gone to the city of Nelson where the building was being put up and had attempted to employ men there and to coerce them into hiring at less than the schedule rate of wages. About the agreement which these men entered into, I do not pretend to know anything, except what is specified in the contract which the hon. gentleman has read, a contract entered into by these men with their eyes open to all the facts and regardless as to whether or not they were doing any other men out of a job.

Mr. MONK. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend, because I think he has made the case very much stronger. When the hon. gentleman says that no man in Nelson, British Columbia, would think of working for the wages stipulated for by these men he makes the case much stronger.

Mr. GALLIHER. I will not allow the hon. gentleman to put words into my mouth. What I did say was that the contractor could not get men in Nelson to work for those wages.

Mr. GALLIHER.

Mr. MONK. That makes the case very much stronger.

Mr. GALLIHER. For the simple reason that they would not be allowed by the union to which they belong to do so. If that is any advantage to my hon. friend he is welcome to it. That is a statement of fact.

Mr. MONK. That makes the case very much stronger, because it shows clearly on the testimony of a gentleman living out there that these men were employed at a most unfair rate of wages and therefore they are right in claiming the rate of wages stipulated by the department of government that made the contract.

Mr. GALLIHER. That brings up a matter that I should answer.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to get through as I have not much more to say. I do not agree with my hon. friend that we should only give work to labouring men at the place where the contract is being executed. If a Canadian is a good workman it does not make any difference whether he comes from the province of Quebec or from any other province. If a contractor is executing a contract in the province of Quebec we will be glad to have workmen from the province from which my hon. friend comes. I believe the minister is a lawyer, but he does not answer my objection that this contract was null and void as against public order. The hon. gentleman says that these men entered into this agreement knowing all the facts, but that is a gratuitous assertion because I began by stating that it was only when they had reached Nelson that they found that they had a right to $4.50 or $5 per day.

Mr. GALLIHER. There is a statement in the agreement you have read that it makes up to $5.00 a day. How do you answer that ?

Mr. MONK. I answer that by saying that these men did not know that they had a right under the contract made by Lemoine & Viau to $4.50 a day. It was the contractor that inserted that clause but he did not tell these men. I am stipulating a low rate of wages with you but under the contract I have made with the government I am bound to pay a higher rate. It is there that the Department of Labour should have come in but failed. Everyone who is familiar with the ways of these contractors knows that when they have a chance they make an agreement of this kind with the labouring men. These contractors made a most profitable contract with the government, and they made a most profitable contract with the labouring men whom they imported from the east. Upon these three claims alone Messrs. Viau & Lemoine pocketed $800 which they wrung from these labourers.

Mr. GALLIHER. Viau & Lemoine's tender was $25,000 lower than the lowest local tender, and so far from making money they lost money on the contract.

Mr. MONK. I will take my hon. friend's word for that, but there is no doubt whatever that when they signed that contract on the 1st of January, 1901, for $49,900, they had before them this fair-wage schedule and they must have calculated that they would pay blacksmiths $4.50 and stonecutters $5 a day. There is no doubt that if they were allowed to pay their labouring men half the fair wage rate they could have tendered at a lower price. It was the duty of the Department of Labour to see that justice was done to these men and we have a right to criticise the neglect of the Department of Labour to do this justice.

Mr. GALLIHER. I must still disagree with my hon. friend with regard to being willing to see labourers coming from one province into another. He may be broader in his views than I am, in this respect, but so far as I am concerned, when a public building is being erected in a province—I will confine it to a province and not simply to a town—and when there are workmen in that province and particularly in the town where the work is going on who are willing and capable of doing the work, whether rightly or wrongly, I believe that these workmen should have the preference over workmen from another province. That is the principle I go on. I like to see the home man who spends his money in the town and who is building up that province, get work in that town when he is competent and willing to do it. Of course if there is a scarcity of labour there could be no objection to labourers coming from another province, or if a labourer comes in from another portion of the Dominion of his own motion and gets work, I have not a word to say. But I have a word to say against the labourer who contracts as these labourers did contract down here, to give their services at a lower rate than men were entitled to who lived in that province and were ready to do the work. Now, there was a consideration for these men signing such a contract. In the first place they were to be kept on during the continuance of that work and so the contractors were practically insuring them a job for the time during which the work lasted, which might be a year or a year and a half. There was the other consideration which to my mind is a minor one as compared with that, and that is that their passage should be paid each way and their board.

Mr. CLARKE. And a chance of viewing the scenery.

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, and the scenery of British Columbia is well worth being viewed by any one. Further than that, some of these men, after coming out there jumped their job.

Mr. MONK. Not these men.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not speaking of these men, but some men who came from the east did jump their job and that is why I presume the $50 was to be retained by the contractor until the end of the work. It was not like the case of men going out there without any consideration and accepting less than the schedule rate of wages and where they just simply cut in for the purpose of undercutting the wages. There was a substantial consideration given them and some of them no doubt went with the object of getting a trip to that province, and they could work when they went there or quit, just as they liked, and were in no way bound.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How does the hon. gentleman explain, that counting in every thing they got, they were still $200 short of the wages they would receive if they had been paid according to the schedule ?

Mr. GALLIHER. That might be explained by the consideration of the men receiving a steady job for a year or a year and a half.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Permanent employment ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, and that is a very important consideration to men out of work.

Mr. CLARKE. They would not be employed after the work was done.

Mr. GALLIHER. No, but they would have work for a year or a year and a half and they would have an opportunity of getting a little taste of the scenery and the social qualities of that beautiful province.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) has missed the point, and that is, that under this Bureau of Labour employers and employees may contract themselves out of the obligation in the schedule rate.

Mr. GALLIHER. The Minister of Labour has answered that.

Mr. CLARKE. Of what value is the schedule if it may be evaded by the contractor ? The case has been most admirably presented to the Minister of Labour by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. The Department of Labour was warned before the contractors were paid off, that these men were short $200 or $300 each of the amount they would have received had the schedule of wages provided for in this contract been paid to them. Surely if a contractor signs a contract with any department of government and that contract contains a schedule of wages, the contractor cannot afterwards employ men in violation of that schedule at a lower rate? No matter how steady the work to the men may be, that is not a consideration which should induce the Department of Labour to withhold enforcing the terms of the contract. The hon. member for St. Mary's issued his fiat. He ignored the schedule. He said: 'These men have made an agreement with the contractor, and they are out of court so far as I am concerned.' Why did not the hon. minister take up the cudgels on behalf of the men if the schedule was to be of value to them? If the contractor can sign himself out of any obligations which the schedule imposes, what is the value of the schedule?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How I would have dealt with this case if I had been here and if it had been submitted to me, I will not now state, because that would be a mere theoretical statement. But I would certainly begin the consideration of such a question with the desire, and if possible, the determination to allow no departure from the terms of the contract, including the schedule price of labour. The particular case in question, as I have stated, occurred in my absence, and I had not heard of it until to-day. At the same time, I recognize the governmental responsibility, and in that spirit must take the responsibility of all that occurred in this particular instance. What would be the proper way to deal with such a case would be a serious question for consideration. I agree with my hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) that in this particular instance these workingmen were not very considerate of the interests of the workingmen of the west, when they chose to throw away the protection which the department was endeavouring to throw around workingmen everywhere, and make a secret contract which conflicted with that which the government had tried to make for them.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman state that they were aware that they were entitled to receive the wage scale of the schedule?

Mr. MONK. I began by stating that they knew nothing of the conditions of the contract with the government. They found those out when they were out there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If they did not know about the schedule, how could they contract themselves out of it? They made a special contract. I do not know the terms of that special contract; but it is fair to assume that in making it these men knew all about the schedule.

Mr. CLARKE. No, no. The hon. gentleman must accept the statement of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He will not take the responsibility of saying that these men knew nothing about the schedule.

Mr. MONK. They made this agreement at Hull without knowing anything about this schedule. They found it out when they reached British Columbia, and when they came to my office they asked me if it was possible that such a thing could exist.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman knows that of his own knowledge, I accept his statement; but I am inclined to think that he was misinformed. The contract was advertised and the schedule was public property, and the workingmen of Hull know full well the practice of the department in regard to such matters. These same contractors have had several other contracts with the government. It is well known to the working people of Canada, not only in Hull, but everywhere, that it is the policy of this government to establish a schedule of wages which is part of the contract itself.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. All our works are under schedules.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. minister takes that view of the case, it is high time that the men who are working for fair-wages should be protected against conduct of that kind.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are discussing at present the probabilities of these men having any knowledge of the schedule. I say it is most improbable that they did not know that there was a schedule. The workingmen of Canada all know what the present government has done in this respect, and they know it, I am sure, gratefully; and these men, who chose to make this special agreement, made it, in my opinion, knowing full well what their rights would be in the absence of such an agreement. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works a moment ago mentioned to me that he now recalls some of the circumstances which induced these men to make this special agreement, and not to take the benefit of the schedule.

Mr. MONK. I did not understand that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps my hon. friend will announce to the committee the statement he made to me a moment ago. If they made that special arrangement, it satisfies my mind that they knew very well what they were doing. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is an hon. gentleman learned in the law, a jurist of great note in his province, a professor of law and an eminent practitioner, and he has laid down in the most unqualified language that this alleged waiver is literally void. If so, why has he neglected so long the interests of his clients and not taken out suits against these contractors to conpel them to pay compensation to these men? If these men have rights, why has he not, as a zealous counsellor, taken steps to prosecute those rights ?

Mr. MONK. How does my hon. friend know that I have not done so?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then, what is his grievance?

Mr. MONK. The law's delay.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why has not my hon. friend made use of that great learning of his to secure to his friends their rights? I hope it will be made known to them that he has, on the floor of parliament, as their representative, as a professor of law, a lawyer, an eminent man, a man of knowledge, alleged that on all these authorities they can absolutely rely on recovery without a shadow of doubt, if the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who knows the methods of the law, would only move his hand and put the majesty of the law in motion.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. Postmaster General if it is not his duty, if he believes that a scale of wages should be fixed—and I understand that he has an officer for that special purpose—to protect those men who believe they should have that scale of wages ? What effect will it have on the labour market if the hon. minister neglects just such cases as those which have been presented to him by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier ? Admitting his contention that these men knew that schedule and violated it, what effect will that have on the rate of wages in British Columbia and everywhere, and on those who believe in the schedules and desire to have the wages of the schedule paid to them ? How is the hon. gentleman protecting their interests ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has a habit of asking a large number of questions and expecting an answer, and then standing his ground. If he wishes me to interrupt him to answer his questions, I will do so. It is the duty of the department to protect the workingmen in respect of their rights arising under the schedules. Not only is it our duty, but we perform that duty. I do not know what decision I would have given if this case had been referred to me; but I should have begun the consideration of the question with a judgment in favour of the schedule. But this case has been disposed of; it is out of court, so far as the government is concerned. No good purpose will be served by my expressing an opinion on this particular case. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was supreme in his sphere. As Minister of Public Works, he was one of the contracting parties, and nothing could take away from him the right to determine the merits of claims arising under that contract. He was head of his department, and while he might consult the other ministers, it was for him to finally determine how he would wind up his contracts with the contractors. Whether I would or would not have agreed with my hon. friend, I could not say, as I am not sufficiently familiar with the facts; but I consider that it was very improper for those three men, knowing their duty towards their fellow-workingmen in Nelson—it was a very improper and unbrotherly act for them to have sought to underbid their fellow-workmen in the Nelson market in the manner they did. It may be that my late colleague felt they had no claim on his sympathy, and left them to that unerring law, which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says will give them a remedy, if they only choose to set it in motion.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister has been made aware of the conduct of the contractors, and he reiterates, in the face of the solemn assurance to the contrary of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, that the men knew all about the schedule. He thus refuses to accept the statement of my hon. friend.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I accept the statement of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that these men told him they knew nothing about the schedule, but that is only hearsay evidence and is not conclusive ; and drawing an inference from the circumstances, I am inclined to believe that they knew fully what their rights were.

Mr. CLARKE. Notwithstanding the statement of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, that these men, were not aware of the schedule and the rates of wages to which they were entitled if they worked at Nelson——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How could the hon. member for Jacques Cartier know it ?

Mr. CLARKE. Because I presume he has the testimony of these men. The hon. minister has no testimony whatever to the contrary, and yet he assumes that these labouring men were not telling the truth. But now that he has had his attention called to the methods which have been and may be adopted by men prepared to work under the schedule rates and by contractors prepared to evade the terms of the contract made by them with the government, how is he going to protect the fair-wage men in the future ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot conceive of any set of circumstances which could induce me to allow a contractor to evade his contract.

Mr. CLARKE. That is to allow the men to contract themselves out of the contract and the contractors to avoid its obligations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say that I would allow the men or the contractors to avoid the contract. What I said was that I cannot conceive of any conditions which would induce me to allow a contractor to escape the payment of his schedule rate of wages.

Mr. CLARKE. Since the hon. gentleman's attention has been drawn so forcibly to the avoidance of the schedule rates in the Nelson contract, will he see that provision is made to prevent contractors from contracting with men to do work for less than the schedule rates? Surely that is a fair proposition, if he desires to enforce his fair wage schedules.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As we go on in the world we learn more. There is nothing perfect. There is no legislation which astute people will not find means to evade. If any weaknesses are found from time to time in this or the other legislation, it is our duty to remove them; and it may not be unreasonable to devise some measure such as my hon. friend refers to. His suggestion is one worthy of consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. I am much obliged to the hon. minister. If these schedules are to be of any value, they must be lived up to. That is a proposition which the hon. minister will not dispute; and if methods are being devised by contractors to make greater profit out of their men than their contracts allow, surely the matter is one that ought to be attended to without delay. Evidently the legislation providing for these schedules is not perfect, and I think my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is entitled to the thanks of the working men of Canada for having drawn the attention of the minister so forcibly to this flagrant breach by certain contractors of their contract with the government.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have no desire to unduly take up the defence of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour. He is well able to take care of himself. But I must repudiate the insinuation that in deciding as I did, I was in any way endeavouring to help the contractors to evade the schedule which was inserted in this contract. The case was submitted to me in a very clear way. Those three brothers were anxious to take a trip west. They, like many others, were in search of gold. The wages granted them were higher than those paid in the east, and they agreed to go for those wages. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has been informed by them that they did not know that there was a schedule attached to the Nelson contract. My hon. friend, of course, has received his information from the three Racines?

Mr. MONK. Is the hon. gentleman acquainted with these three brothers?

Mr. CLARKE.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am not, except in a literary way, because I have received a great many letters from them and in their behalf. They were all employed in the same time.

Mr. MONK. The blacksmith was employed some time after the others.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I understood that they would be employed all the time the work was being carried on, which was a great advantage. They were anxious to go, and I understood, when their case was presented to me, that they had gone out hunting for gold. I gave a decision. If that decision was not a legal one, I have no objection to its being reversed now.

Mr. CLARKE. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I decided to the best of my knowledge. I had the written contract under my hand, the conditions were explained to me, and I thought them sufficient to justify me in giving a decision in a certain sense; but if it is going to be the law that, under no consideration or condition, the schedule wages will be disregarded, I have no objection to having my decision changed.

Mr. CLARKE. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. All the same it is a pretty hard rule, and I am afraid we are going very far. These men are intelligent men. They must have known that there was a schedule, because the Department of Public Works has been carrying on all its work under schedules. That was well known.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Advertised.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. All works have been advertised. There is not a work, I think, that has not been carried out on the schedule wages. All the same, these men may have ignored the rule. Let my hon. friend (Mr. Galliher) make some exceptions to what he said. He expressed the belief that when a work is advertised in British Columbia, or Manitoba, or Ontario, or Quebec, only local men should be employed. That is not a sound Canadian rule.

Mr. GALLIHER. I did not say what my hon. friend from St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) attributes to me. I was speaking of the circumstances under which these men were employed. When men go out to British Columbia in search of work and are employed, there can be no objection to that. But when men contract at a lower rate than the regular rate to go out to British Columbia and engage in work there for the purpose of depriving other men—or at least with the effect of depriving other men—of work at fair wages, I say I do not want to see men from outside given work in the province of British Columbia under such circumstances.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher), if I understood him well, was echoing the sentiments and opinions of his province to a very large extent. I have received protests on many occasions from our British Columbia friends against the employment of men from other provinces. Such a doctrine should not be entertained in this parliament. If there are labour troubles in British Columbia, let me say, without making any personal allusion, that, in my opinion, they are due, to a very large extent to the fact that politicians are catering too much to prejudice. I do not make any personal allusions. But when even members of parliament are found supporting the doctrine that only British Columbians should be employed on these public works that is going pretty far.

Mr. GALLIHER. I did not say so. I made no such suggestion. Will the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) rise and say that my statement was to the effect that men from other provinces than British Columbia should not be employed under any consideration ? Was it not to the effect that men should not be brought from one province into another under the conditions under which these men were brought into British Columbia ? And will the hon. gentleman say that I am wrong in that ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I accept the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Galliher). It is very clear. But I say I have received protests from British Columbia against the employment of eastern men, even for regular work, such as telegraphers and men of that kind. And the labour troubles of British Columbia, I say again, are due to a very large extent to prejudices entertained by people who, in my humble opinion should give other advice. British Columbia is in bad shape to-day. There are labour troubles all over. Instead of encouraging them, it seems to me we should give sound advice, and it is not sound advice to encourage prejudices. However, the Racine case is under consideration of the Department of Labour. And, if my decision has not been right, I shall not cry if it is reversed.

Mr. GALLIHER. I feel satisfied that when the hon. gentleman from St. Mary's division referred to telegraphers he was striking at me.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, not particularly.

Mr. GALLIHER. The hon. gentleman says he is not striking at me particularly. I am prepared to be put on record as saying this—that where there are appointments to be filled on telegraph lines in British Columbia and there are competent men resident in British Columbia to fill those positions, I want to see those positions filled by British Columbians rather than by Ontario men. And I say that if this were the case of a work in the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario, if vacancies were to be filled in the staff operating telegraph lines, the hon. gentleman would not send to British Columbia or anywhere else for men to fill them. That is my view.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In Quebec we employ men from all parts of the country without asking whether they are English or French, without asking whether they are from Quebec or whether they are British Columbians or Ontario men.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not raising any question of race. But I do say, Mr. Chairman—I may be wrong, you may call it narrow if you like—that where there are positions to be filled in any province, the men who reside in the province, if they are capable, the men who spend their money in the province and help to keep up the province, should be appointed. I say that not of British Columbia alone, but of any province.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The money spent on British Columbia works is not British Columbia money ; it is Canadian money. The principle which has been supported in British Columbia is false, it is bad ; and I take this opportunity of saying again that I have received protests from public men, from members of parliament——

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, from me.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Not only from my hon. friend (Mr. Galliher)—he must not take everything I say to himself alone. I have received protests—it seems incredible—from members of parliament, from public men, from labour associations, asking me to dismiss men because they did not belong to British Columbia—for that reason and no other. They contended that only British Columbia men should be employed on these Canadian works. That is a false doctrine, a bad doctrine, one that should not be encouraged. If we are going to go province by province, then city by city—Montreal against Quebec ; no Toronto men in Montreal ; no Montreal men in Toronto. Let our British Columbia friends rise a little higher ; they are capable of it.

Mr. GALLIHER. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) should not refer to me in such a remark, because I have never asked the dismissal of a man because he is not a British Columbian. But I advocated as strongly as I knew how the appointment of British Columbians in preference to eastern men. That is as far as I went, and I think the hon. gentleman will bear me out.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUTTEE. Coming back to the question of the contract, I cannot agree with the decision that the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) came to in this case, because it seems to me that it is weakening altogether the principle adopted by this parliament. The effect of two or three decisions of that kind would be to notify contractors that the schedule was not to be taken seriously ; and when you come to that, you might as well do away with the trouble and bother—yes, and the pretense—of having any schedule at all. Now, what the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) really did was this—he allowed these parties to make a contract setting aside the contract he had entered into on behalf of this government. It seems to me that is a wrong position for him to take, on the face of it. The object of the second contract was to get beyond the provision of that wage schedule. The purpose was to enable the contractor to make money——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) allow me a moment ? Would he be prepared to say that the schedule prices should have been paid to these men besides all the expenses of their trip ?

Mr. PUTTEE. No.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is what I want to know, because that is the case after all.

Mr. MONK. No, not by any means.

Mr. PUTTEE. I was going to mention that. I have no sympathy with men, especially intelligent men, who, understanding that there is such a thing as protection in the contract for them, will deliberately sign such a contract as these men signed. I accept the statement, as a matter of fact, of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), but I want to say that intelligent stonemasons in this country do know of this matter. I am perfectly well aware of that ; and I have found other men who, knowing this, have gone and made arrangements with contractors for taking a lower price, believing, I imagine, that they can, through writing to members of parliament and getting their good offices, and through using the Department of Labour, get afterwards these higher prices that they have contracted themselves out of. I have no sympathy at all with such men, although I am aware that in other branches of labour men are often led to do this ignorantly, through not reading the papers before them to sign. I have no sympathy at all for a man that will deliberately go and enter into these underhand agreements with the expectation afterwards of being able to get the rate guaranteed in the schedule. But because of this difficulty, we are not going to recognize the practice of contracting out. The whole matter was before the minister at the time he made his decision, and I say that I do not agree with the decision he came to. It seems to me that it would have been fair to make an estimate of what these contractors should be paid in the way of railway fare and board, and deduct that from the amount of this claim, and then give these men the balance that was coming to them. But contractors should not be able to make money by making any agreement with men below the rates mentioned in the schedule. You have got to lay down the principle once for all, and as soon as it is laid down, contractors will be governed by it, knowing that these schedules are to be recognized as closely as any other specifications in the contract.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that the question to which the Minister of Labour has attached so much importance is not an element at all to determine cases of this kind. According to what the minister said this afternoon it would have been sufficient, in the agreement which I read, for the workingmen to state at the foot of the agreement that he entered into it knowing that it does not correspond with the fair-wage schedule. It would be possible, therefore, for labouring men to contract themselves out of the fair-wage clause without having any recourse left. From what the Minister of Labour says, the moment the contracting labourer knows of the fair-wage clause and he chooses to contract himself out of it, he has no recourse.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never said anything like that.

Mr. MONK. That is what it amounts to. The minister stated repeatedly this evening that if these three men knew there was a fair-wage clause and they chose to make this contract, he thought the decision rendered could not be appealed from.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never uttered anything open to such an interpretation.

Mr. MONK. Then the Minister of Labour does not think that the knowledge by the labourer who contracts himself out of the fair-wage clause is an objection to his obtaining recourse, and that is my opinion. That is the opinion at present of the Minister of Labour. It is easy to conceive circumstances where a labouring man, being in want of work, although he knows the existence of the fair-wage clause, will make a contract with a contractor willing to give him steady work say for two months for $1 a day, when he knows that under a clause of the government contract he would be entitled to $2. Even under those circumstances, that man has a recourse, and it is for the government to see that he is paid the full amount of his wages, although he contracted to serve for $1 a day. Otherwise it is no use trying to carry out these clauses at all, they are nothing but a delusion. Now, in regard to these three men, I wish to say this, that I do not think the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal, knows them. They are all skilled workmen, though they are uneducated. I have a letter from one of them written in French, which I would be willing to hand to my hon. friend, and he will see that the writer is an illiterate man. They heard when they reached Nelson that they had a right to higher wages. They carried out their contract, and on their return to Montreal they came to my office, as they live in my constituency, and asked me to write the Department of Labour to find out if they were not entitled to higher pay under the fair-wage schedule. These were not the words they used, but they understood there was a stipulation in the contract made by the government with Viau & Lemoine by which they were entitled to higher wages. The minister will find in my correspondence that I did make that inquiry, and when we got the facts from the Department of Labour we made our claim. They never knew of this fair-wage clause, and I do not think there are many labouring men, even stonecutters or blacksmiths, who know anything about the fair-wage clause.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have a higher opinion of the intelligence of stonemasons and mechanics than my hon. friend. The fact that the government inserts a fair-wage schedule in contracts I think is generally known by the mechanics of Canada. The policy has been in force for some time, it was begun some years ago, and has been gradually adopted by one department after another until now it is the policy of all departments. Of course, it is easy to be wise after the fact, but I think that in dealing with a case of this kind one should avoid giving inducements to violate the spirit of this agreement. A workingman who knows that the government has taken the trouble to try to secure him a fair wage, and who deliberately disregards that arrangement and adopts another course calculated to injure his fellow-workingman, takes a course that I think does not appeal to one's sympathy. They do an unbrotherly act in invading the labour market of others and trying to under-bid their fellow-workingmen. If they choose to go to that other market and sell their labour at the market price, that is another thing. After this question was brought to my attention to-day I began to consider how it should be dealt with, and I will mention one method that occurred to me. I think there should be no possibility of a contractor gaining by disregarding the schedule. I am not aware whether contractors, as a rule, or at all, attempt to evade the terms of the contract.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would my hon. friend allow me ? I remember very well that the contractors stated to me that they had not disregarded the schedule of wages, because there were advantages attached to the arrangement which were an equivalent for the deduction in the rate of wages. I remember that was one of the considerations that induced me to make these people stand by their agreement. Let my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier inform himself about these men. Let me tell him that these French Canadian artisans are just as bright as those of any other race. They know all about the schedule of wages.

Mr. CLARKE. What were the special advantages they were getting under this arrangement that they would not have had under the schedule ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The special advantages were that their travelling expenses were paid.

Mr. CLARKE. That was taken out of their wages.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I know ; but they had not money to go up there. They were anxious to go. Of course, I state what was reported to me. They were anxious to go, and that is the reason why they made a special agreement. There were three of them. It cost a certain amount of money to go out there. The contractor agreed to pay their trip. It was a large amount of money. I do not remember whether the return trip was paid or not.

Mr. MONK. Yes, it was paid out of their wages. How does my hon. friend know that they desired to go out there ? The contractors stated that ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, it was stated to me.

Mr. CLARKE. Did the hon. gentleman hear the men as well as the contractor before he came to a decision ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, the case was stated to me by my friend from the Department of Labour, and I think I got a letter from the hon. member for Jacques Cartier too. I gave a great deal of attention to the case. Of course, I do not know whether I have been wrong in the interpretation of the law, or whether the contractors had any right whatever to depart from the schedule. Perhaps I have been wrong.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was going to say that in a matter of this kind there should be no inducement to either party to depart from the schedule. As to a private stipulation for contracting out, the rule adopted may not be sufficient. I think that precautions should be taken to prevent a contractor gaining from such a stipulation. The pressure will always come from the contractor. He will get a contract, which on its face requires him to pay a certain rate of wages. He will make his calculations accordingly and if he is successful in getting the men to work at a lower wage he thereby makes an undue profit. It may not be unreasonable to have a clause in the contract that if it is disclosed that in any case the contractor did not pay the schedule rate of wages he should lose that amount and by that amount his contract price should be reduced. I do not say that that would be a proper remedy in all cases, but it would have the result that when the settlement was made he should not be permitted to gain by inducing the workmen to contract out of the schedule. My deputy informs me that in a large number of cases applications have been made to the department on behalf of the workmen and that in some sixty odd cases, in fact in every case except the present one, the department was instrumental in securing to the workmen the schedule rate of wages. This is the only case where the schedule was not enforced literally and it may be, that, as the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says, the men obtained the equivalent of the schedule rate. At all events, that was the suggestion of my hon. friend in dealing with the case, so that it appears after all that he was, in his judgment, endeavouring to live up to the spirit of the agreement by seeing that they got what he deemed to be substantially the schedule rate. Of course, if a large sum of money was advanced to these men to take them across the continent and they did not work it out I do not know what remedy the contractors would have. These are doubtless very honourable men who would not have broken their contract, but there are instances in which travelling expenses have been paid in advance and have not been worked out and in that case the contractor would be the loser. The contractors in this instance have run the risk. Whether they did run a real risk I do not know. I assume the contrary because we are told by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that when they reached Kaslo they learned what the schedule rates were and they, notwithstanding, proceeded to work. It might be supposed that if their employers were with them at the time when they learned what their rights were they would have made a demand upon their employers.

Mr. CLARKE. They would have been fired probably if they had done so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That may be an explanation for not doing it, but ordinarily when a person discovers that a wrong has been done him he is ussually found asserting his claim at an early day.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. member for Jacques Cartier tell me how long these men have been employed out there ?

Mr. MONK. I would like to say that if these questions are to be decided not by the Department of Labour but by the department interested in the contract it would possibly be better before coming to a decision to hear both parties. They began work—this is one of the accounts—on the 4th September, 1901. They worked through September, October, December, January, 1902, February, March, April and May.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. They complained only when they came back here ?

Mr. MONK. I stated that they became aware when they were out there, probably by contact with other workmen, that they were getting less than the others. They came to my office and asked me to find out what were their rights. I wrote to the department to find out their rights as I did not know myself any more than they did. Then I got the schedule and found out the conditions and they made their claim.

Mr. CLARKE. There will be no hope of stopping this kind of business unless the hon. minister penalizes the contractor every time he does anything of this kind. According to the statement of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier these men were not compensated to the extent of $200 or $300 each, which compensation was due them if they had been paid the scheduled rate of wages. I would suggest to the hon. minister that if this matter is not finally closed he should take steps to collect that sum for these men.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think there is a sum of money due the contractors yet.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. minister wishes to give evidence of a bona fide desire to establish a fair rate of wages he will see that an effort is made to secure to these men the money that is due them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman suggests that I am not giving a bona fide desire to establish a fair rate of wages simply because of that isolated transaction occurring, the hon. gentleman does not to my mind make a fair suggestion.

Mr. CLARKE. Now that the hon. gentleman has had his attention drawn to the matter I am sure we will only need to remind him of the fact, that, as the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works says, there is some money due to these contractors, to secure his intervention on behalf of these men. It is a serious matter, and I think a violation of a contract made between the contractor and the Department of Public Works should be visited with some penalty. It would be a deterrent to some other contractors from doing the same thing and it would save the hon. gentleman's department possibly from a great deal of criticism. The hon. gentleman made the statement in the earlier part of the evening that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House had objected to the remuneration paid to persons who act as correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette.' I would ask the hon. gentleman when that complaint was made and who made it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand that in the session of 1901 some hon. gentleman opposite took the attitude.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister made a very much stronger statement earlier in the evening.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said exactly then what I said now.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister then said that members on this side of the House objected to the amounts paid to these correspondents as being too large, and that since we had changed our minds and were advocating higher wages now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said that I understood hon. gentlemen on the other side some time ago took exception to the salaries of the correspondents as being too high, and that now they took exception to them being too low.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister will be able to say who made such statements ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was not present at the time, but, that is what I understood.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman does not know of his own knowledge ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never said anything different from what I say now.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister stated that these correspondents sent in a lot of tabulated statements with schedules of statistics. What becomes of them when they are sent to the department ? Are the reports made up from the statistics, or do the correspondents send the letter press as we have it published ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They fill up the schedules with such observations as they see fit to make, and their observations are edited by the department for the purposes of the 'Gazette.'

Mr. CLARKE. The editor of an ordinary newspaper has very great latitude and he publishes what he thinks desirable. Do those who edit the 'Gazette' change in any particular the reports sent in ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The exact language is not used because it may not be proper for publication, but the substance of the reports is adhered to strictly and the originals are on file.

Mr. CLARKE. I see Mr. Phillips Thompson makes a very elaborate report for July. Is this printed just as he sent it in ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Thompson is an exceptionally good correspondent——

Mr. CLARKE. I am not disputing that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And his reports are so well worded that it is rarely that there are any variations from the originals.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the July report printed just as Mr. Thompson sent it in ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to answer categorically the question, but the hon. gentleman may rely upon it that it is substantially his report.

Mr. CLARKE. How often are these fair wage schedules made up ? The minister knows that the conditions are continuously changing and the cost of living is increasing rapidly throughout Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On the occasion of each schedule being prepared, the department informs those, and fills up that schedule from information up to that time.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that the duty of the fair-wage officer ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. How does he obtain the information ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As a rule he visits the locality where the work is going to be performed.

Mr. CLARKE. I want to draw the attention of the minister and his deputy who is present, to statements that have been made during the past two or three days by a number of our fellow subjects who have come out from the old country. I refer to certain Scotch moulders who have been induced to come out here as they allege under false pretenses. It is a very serious state of things, and one that should be put an end to at the earliest possible moment. The 'Montreal Star' of yesterday, the 'Toronto News' of yesterday, and the Toronto papers of to-day contain statements respecting the treatment which these men have received. There is also a statement from the Canada Foundry Company as to the way they have been treated. It is a serious matter, if, as alleged, 150 or 170 moulders were induced to come out to this country under false pretenses and are now making arrangements in Montreal for the purpose of securing their passage back to the old country. Should these Scotch moulders go back in the state of mind that they apparently are now in, it will certainly give this country a black eye, and we ought to have some report from the minister or his deputy as to what steps have been taken to inquire into the grievances which these moulders claim they labour under. I read in yesterday's Toronto 'News' a telegram from Montreal as follows :

> Montreal, Que., July 21.—A committee of ten, representing the Scotch iron moulders who were brought to this country to work for the Canada Foundry Company, at Toronto, is in the city making arrangements to have the whole party of 170 men taken back to the old country.
> They claim they were brought to Canada under misrepresentations. It was represented to them that a colony was being founded at Toronto, and big works established, and they had no idea a strike was on there. They say they practically had to fight their way out of the works.

On the steamer coming out they were told that a strike was on, and, after stormy meetings, decided to go to Toronto and see how the original representations compared with circumstances.

The Montreal 'Star' of yesterday under a large type heading 'Indignant Scotch Moulders' 'to sue government officials for $50,000.' Says :

There is considerable excitement among the iron trades men of this city to-day, as a result of several of the iron moulders that were brought from Scotland to work in the Canada Iron Foundry, at Toronto Junction, where there is a strike on, arriving in the city.

The men were taken to 132 St. James street, the headquarters of the Iron Moulders' Union. Among others were Messrs. Thomas Robertson, of 90 King street, Govan, Scotland, a native of Saltcoats, Ayrshire, and John Thompson, 115 Brighton street, Govan, Scotland.

When seen by a 'Star' reporter, Mr. Thompson made the following statement :—

'We have had some desperate fighting since we left Glasgow, and to say that we have been grossly deceived is putting it mildly. We were engaged by Mr. William Laurie, of 322 St. Vincent street, Glasgow, Scotland, to work in the Canada Iron Foundry, at Toronto Junction. This man made a declaration to us that there was no strike on in Canada. He said that he was co-operating with the Canadian government immigration agents in securing skilled mechanics for the Dominion of Canada where there was a great scarcity of labour of all kinds.

Large posters were put up all over the town advertising for 22,000 skilled mechanics to go to Toronto, Canada, where there were great extensions of work in progress, and where a new colony was being founded. All kinds of inducements were held out to us. We were to be given a home free, and our wages was to be $16.50 per week, of fifty-five hours, and we were guaranteed two years' work, and they promised to bring out our wives and children.

When we were a few days on the ocean we were informed by a man named Graeme Hunter, that he was also co-operating with the government agents in securing skilled mechanics for Canada ; that there was a strike on at Toronto, and that we would be expected to put up a great fight against the strikers if necessary. We did not know what to do, but resolved to go on to Toronto after we reached Quebec. There were 170 of us in the party, and we made it interesting for Hunter and the other agents all the way from Quebec to Toronto. The train did not stop at the Toronto station. We were run into the works by a side track, like cattle, where there were tents erected for our accommodation.

We were then informed of the true situation. We absolutely refused to go to work, whereupon the officials refused to give us our baggage. They tried to make us go to work by threatening us with being thrown into prison for having disregarded an agreement. They used the police, but we fought our way out of the works and we marched to the Toronto Iron Moulders Hall. Some of our party were pretty roughly handled, but none of the men were seriously injured, except Robertson, who was nearly chocked to death.

We were practically prisoners from Quebec to Toronto, and we were almost hounded to death.

We were not allowed to talk to any person. The agreement was that the company was to keep $37 out of our wages for our passage. We cannot condemn the immigration policy of the Dominion government too strongly. All kinds of deceiving advertisements are distributed throughout Scotland, and there is now, no doubt, but the old country people are being led astray. Many of them are being brought to this country under false pretenses. We intend to take an action against the government officials as well as the company for $50,000 damages. We have our written contract specifically stating that there was no strike on in the iron foundries at Toronto.

There will be a mass meeting of the Iron Moulders Union to-morrow evening at 132 St. James street, when the whole situation will be discussed. The Scotchmen will be at the meeting and they will produce the agreement and all papers in connection with their trip to Toronto.

The Scotchmen are bright, intelligent workmen. They are thickset and appear to be very powerful.

It seems to me, in view of the conflicting statements made, the one by the Canada Foundry Company, and the other by these men, that it is the duty of the Department of Labour, if it has not done so, to begin an examination of the conditions and of the statements made by both parties. It would be a matter to be regretted if men should be induced to come to this country under false pretenses, especially as it appears that these men are going to return home. I would ask the hon. minister if he has sent his deputy, or his fair-wage officer, or any other officer, to Toronto or Montreal to ascertain whether these statements are well founded ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The strike of the Canada Foundry Company at Toronto is a very regrettable affair, and I join with my hon. friend in deploring the circumstances that have occurred in connection with the bringing of a body of moulders from the old country to take the place of the strikers. There has been no complaint made to the Department of Labour by the Canada Foundry Company, or by the strikers, or by the men who have come from the old country, and I only know what has occurred from a perusal of the reports in the press. By one of these reports I observe that the moulders who came out, having had this trouble, waited in a body on the Ontario government. Under the provincial Act there is machinery providing for the adoption of conciliation methods in industrial disputes, and the men have invoked that machinery in this case. Therefore, I think that the men have elected to appeal to the Labour Department of the provincial government. Neither party having invited us to take any part, though it is open to them to do so, it seems to me doubtful whether any good result could come from gratuitous interference by this department. The department is ready to offer its friendly aid at any moment when there appears to be the slightest prospect of any good resulting from its doing so. It is open to either party in a dispute or to any public body or any body of representative men to invite the co-operation of the department. The city corporation, if it feels a sufficient interest in the matter, might invite the department to intervene; and in that case perhaps the disputants would welcome an intervention, feeling that the request was in response to public opinion, and that in that light, intervention would be thoroughly warranted. But up to the present moment there has been no indication given to the department of a desire on the part of any person, either in the dispute or outside of it, that the Department of Labour should intervene. It is a matter of good judgment to determine the proper time to intervene. I have read in the press the statement of the case from the foundry company's side and also from the side of the men, and the department would be only too pleased to be of service; but my hon. friend himself will, I think, agree with me that it would not be wise on the part of the department to gratuitously step in without any suggestion or intimation of any kind that interference was invited or would be tolerated.

Mr. CLARKE. I would draw the attention of the hon. minister to this fact, that these men evidently feel that they have been deceived, and that they are labouring under a grievance. The fact that they have elected to go to the premier of Ontario surely is not sufficient to warrant the hon. gentleman in withholding his hand? I do not for a moment affirm that the statement made by either of these parties is correct. But it is a matter of vital importance, I submit most respectfully, that the officers of the department should ascertain from these men, who are about to leave Canada and go back to Scotland, their side of the case; and then it would be the duty of the department to ascertain whether their statements are well-founded, and whether their grievances are as alleged. If, in view of the statement we had the other evening from the hon. Minister of the Interior, it can be established, as these moulders allege, that the government immigration agents in the old country are promoting and assisting this immigration under false pretenses, it is surely important enough to justify the interference of the hon. gentleman and his department. This movement is branching out and assuming more serious proportions, and the hon. gentleman should not hesitate to interfere and ascertain what the facts of the case are—who is in the right and who is in the wrong. In view of the policy enunciated by the hon. Minister of the Interior the other night, it is due to that hon. gentleman that the officials of his department should be absolved from the charges made against them by the Scotch moulders, if they are not guilty of those charges. I have pointed out the serious effect that these statements will have on immigration. If these men are permitted to go back to Scotland and disseminate these statements as to the treatment they received from the government's agents in Scotland, and from those with whom they came in contact on shipboard or on this side of the Atlantic, I need not point out to the hon. gentleman that they will certainly have a depressing and serious effect, and I think he would be justified in inquiring and ascertaining all the facts and informing the people of Canada and the people of the old country as to the true condition of affairs.

Mr. PUTTEE. This matter has acquired more than local importance; and if the hon. Minister of Labour has not been asked by either side to interfere or conciliate, I think it would naturally be expected that the Labour Department would at all events keep track of the events that are happening in Toronto at the present time; because we have evidently reached a crisis in dealing with labour matters in Ontario. I believe the minister will find it to be a matter that should be brought before the heads of other departments, notably, the Interior Department and the Justice Department. I have read the statements to which the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has called attention, and have taken the trouble to find out to what extent the complaints are well founded. There is one thing I am pleased to see, and that is that both sides in this case are laying the whole matter before the public. The men especially have taken great pains from the start to see that full information is given, and they took the very sensible step from the beginning of forbidding any of their own members picketting or besetting the premises included in the strike. There are several statements in the newspapers to-day, which I have ascertained to be true. One is that the county police have been instructed to arrest all men found around those premises. One result has been that two or three days ago three men, recently in the employ of the company, happened to be in that vicinity, and were taken in charge by the county police and rushed into the premises of the company. They were kept there several hours and then removed to one of the sub-police stations. On application being made for their release, the reply was given that they could not be released because no charge was made against them, and therefore it was not possible to bail them out. Later on a charge was made, and they were removed to the central police station. At 9.30 p.m. some friends of theirs wanted to bail them out, but they were told that it was contrary to custom to let men out after dark, so they were kept in jail all night. The next morning they were charged before the magistrate on an amended charge, as the original charge was not properly made out, and they were then let out on bail. There is another matter to which I would call attention. The Noble Detective Agency has its men all around the works, following, watching, and besetting all men in any way connected with, or who have been in the employ of the company. These men are intimidated by the detectives and prevented doing things which they have a perfect right to do. As this is purely a labour trouble, the hon. minister should have these matters carefully watched and reported on to the Justice Department. The fact that a contract was made in the old country to bring these men out is a matter of public notoriety. That kind of thing has been going on during the last nine months very frequently, but during the last two years intermittently. During the earlier part of this session a large deputation of the Trade Congress of Canada, representing every province, waited on the government and urged it to pass an anti-contract law. But in this matter, as in every other, when the labouring people ask for an anti-contract labour law, the impression is given forth that they are objecting to immigration of all kinds. I wish distinctly to contradict that statement. In asking the government to pass an anti-contract labour law, they are asking it to do what hon. ministers have often admitted should be done. They have admitted that men should not be encouraged by misrepresentations to come to Canada. Such contracts should be made illegal. The ordinary intelligent Canadian labouring man thoroughly appreciates the fact that when an immigrant comes here and becomes a producer, he also becomes a consumer, but what we object to is bringing out workingmen under false representations; to compete with the same class in our cities and towns. There is another department for which the hon. Minister of Labour could get some information. In the interview with the First Minister of Ontario, I find this little passage:

> As to protection, Mr. Barnett of the local union said they had met the employers in order to try and settle the dispute, and the employers asked the men to support them in their agitation for a higher protective tariff, Mr. Barnett answered: 'Why should we do so? You will not help us to protect labour, why should we help you to protect capital?

I am told that there has been a movement going on during the last nine months to flood our cities with artisans and mechanics, in order to have a glutted labour market and thus bring pressure on the government to raise the tariff. This is being done by the Manufacturers' Association which is fighting the battle of this foundry company and they are being sustained by the National Foundry Association, which is an international organization. What object have they in fighting us in this way? Is their object not also to congest the labour market, to make what they are pleased to call a fluid labour market, so that many will be without employment, and then they can turn around and say that what is wanted to give employment is more protection and a higher tariff. In this dispute which is now on in Toronto, there are a good many things concerning which the Labour Department should inform itself and in which it should not wait to be asked to interfere. I am told that forty citizens of Toronto, some of them with their families, have already crossed to the United States, and that in their places are these men who were brought from the old country, and who would be glad to return if they could get the price of their passage. To my mind, while an old country immigrant is a good immigrant, our Canadian people are the best people to keep in the country, and to have an organized movement driving our own men out and getting a more unstable population in, is injuring not only the province of Ontario, but the whole Dominion. This question is not a mere local one. It is a big contest with the International Association of Employers. This association sent over at the start from twenty to thirty men, contrary to the provisions of the Alien Labour Law. Why is that law not enforced? This national association of employers keeps a band of men, professional strike breakers, and brings them from Duluth and New York, and erects tents for them inside the foundry grounds and keeps them at work. Citizens of Toronto, who have gone on strike, cannot proceed against those men because they do not know their names, and we have the law violated by a large body of men who are supposed to be our best citizens. That matter should be looked into, and closely followed up. I claim that we have a right, while the Alien Labour Law is on the statute-book, to have it enforced. For myself, I am prepared at any time, if the hon. minister will oppose the repeal of that law, to vote with him, and to propose to the minister the introduction of an anti-contract labour law, to prevent workmen being brought here under contract to labour. There is no need for the introduction of such labour, and it is not brought here for any proper purpose. In the strike in Toronto all these features are found. As was stated in the paper to-day, when these old countrymen were brought in the cars in which they were were run within the company's works, and when they wanted to get out on Monday morning, they had to fight their way out. The police were there and the men had to fight their way out. And their baggage was stolen. Everything that has happened around these works for the last few days is having the effect of exciting and inciting men to riot. This is the natural effect of what is being done by the people who have locked-out their men; in fact, all the officials of the company, even aided by the police. That is the proper interpretation of their act when they deliberately force men to fight their way out of the works—it is inciting to riot. There is no doubt that, if they are given time they will succeed. A large body of men cannot be expected, however peaceably disposed they may be, to remain impassive under irritation of this kind. It is important that the minister should keep close watch on the proceedings in Toronto until this matter is settled and get full and authentic information as to the various steps of what has occurred so far.

Miscellaneous—Department of Labour, allowances to correspondents, printing and stationery (including printing of 'Labour Gazette), travelling expenses, &c., and $500 each for an accountant and French translator, which sum may be paid to any one in the civil service notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $33,450.

Mr. SPROULE. According to the Auditor General's Report the department spent only $32,213 for the year ending June 30th, 1902. How is it they need so much this year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has been usual to take an appropriation of $50,000 a year, but in no instance has this been required. Whatever is not used lapses. In the fiscal year just closed there is a considerable lapse, and I trust there will be the same on the present vote. But the expenses of the department naturally increase. For instance, we have the 'Labour Gazette,' the printing of which is to be paid for out of this appropriation. The circulation has increased. At present I think it is between 11,000 and 12,000. It was established in August, 1900, so it will soon have completed its third year. There is a slight revenue from it, but not much. Then, the committee will remember that parliament this session has passed an Act under which the department may intervene in railway labour disputes. That is another responsibility and duty placed upon the department. Whether it will involve any expense or not no one can tell. I trust that the railways of Canada will be free from labour disputes, but should they arise the expense will be provided for.

Mr. SPROULE. But why does the department require such a large vote when the Auditor General's Report shows a relatively small expenditure?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That only shows that it is quite safe to trust us with the larger sum. We return directly all that is not wanted.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the subscription price of the 'Labour Gazette' and how many are subscribed for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Labour Gazette can be obtained by annual subscription or by separate copies. The annual subscription is 20c. and the price per copy 3c. There is a subscription list of between seven and eight thousand, besides a considerable free list. All members of parliament receive free copies, and public libraries throughout the country, boards of trade, &c., are also on the list.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the revenue?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would be 20 cents each on a subscription of between seven thousand and eight thousand?

Mr. SPROULE. Last year it was $1,060.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That would show a subscription list, then, of about 5,000 copies.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the cost of producing it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It costs more than that. The amount is given in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CLANCY. I was not asking the Auditor General, but the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can get it and look it up.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are there no advertisements in connection with the 'Labour Gazette'?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. INGRAM. As the items of the Labour Department will soon be passed, I would ask for an answer to a question I put with regard to the salaries of the British Columbia Labour Commissioners. I wished to know the date of beginning and the date of closing and the amount paid to each commissioner.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The commission was composed of Chief Justice Hunter and the Rev. Mr. Rowe. Chief Justice Hunter was paid $40 a day and Mr. Rowe was paid $35 a day. The secretary of the department was the Deputy Minister of Labour, who was not paid anything except his travelling expenses and the sum of $5 a day by way of indemnity to cover miscellaneous disbursements. The stenographer was Mr. Giddins, who was treated in the same manner, and allowed $5 a day for items of expenditure. The officers of the department left here on the 22nd of April and reached British Columbia in due course, going without a break to Victoria, where they put themselves in communication with the commissioners who immediately organized and published advertisements in the local press announcing the intention of the commission to begin the sittings. Having given a few days' notice they commenced sittings in the first week of May and continued at their work, engaged either in taking evidence or in preparing the report, without the break of a single day. They worked continuously from the time they began until the second week of July. Then the officers returned to the department, reaching here on the 18th of July. The cost of the commission has not yet been ascertained. The hon. gentleman can figure it out to a certain extent so far as these items go. But there is another large item to be paid for yet, that is the cost of publishing the report, and perhaps the evidence. The report is a voluminous one, covering about 170 pages of foolscap typewritten. There is also a vast amount of evidence, I am told over 3,000 pages. So if the evidence is also printed, it will involve a good deal of expenditure. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman thinks it would be advisable to publish the evidence. But as to the report, it is the intention to issue it as a supplement to the 'Gazette,' and for that purpose some 11,000 or 12,000 copies will be required. Other copies will also be required, and an order has been given for 15,000. I think it will be very instructive in regard to some of the causes of the labour troubles that have prevailed for some time past.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why not give us some of the causes now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The report is in the hands of the printers, I have not seen it yet. It reached here on the 18th of July. I felt that the best course to adopt would be to have it printed at once, and as soon as it is printed I will lay a copy upon the Table of the House. I have not yet been able myself to read through the report, although the deputy has stated to me a good deal of the substance of it.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that from the 22nd of April to the 18th of July inclusive, the commissioners received at the rate of $40 and $35 per day ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will only be paid from the time they began their work.

Mr. INGRAM. That is from the first week of May to the last of June.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. From the day they began their work until they concluded it. I am sure that Chief Justice Hunter and the other commissioner could not think of charging any more than they are entitled to, and the Order in Council states specifically the amounts they are entitled to receive.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not saying they would, I presume they would not. But taking the statement of the hon. gentleman that they commenced sitting as a commission from the first week of May to the close of June—I would like to get the accurate dates if I could.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy informs me that the commissioners left Victoria on the 28th of April to commence their work. They had previously had a meeting to organize and authorize the issuing of notices to the public. Speaking from memory, it was on the 28th that they left Victoria and proceeded first of all to Ladysmith, and thereafter to other places where the commission sat, and they were engaged continuously from that time, and from the 30th of June onward to the 8th of July. The fact that during that period they had taken down about 3,000 foolscap pages of typewritten evidence shows that they were pretty well occupied. They examined over 100 witnesses, to say nothing of the time devoted to hearing the arguments of counsel.

Mr. INGRAM. So we may conclude they began on the 28th of April and closed on the 8th of July. The point I want to get at is, did they receive payment for the time between the 22nd of April and the 28th of April, and between the 8th of July and the 18th of July, at the rate of $40 and $35 a day ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Their pay will cease on the 8th of July.

Mr. INGRAM. And they did not receive pay previous to the 28th ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They have not been paid anything yet and will not be paid anything before the 27th of April.

Mr. INGRAM. Now with respect to publishing the evidence, of course I expected the department would publish it. If any suggestion I can make would be of any service I would simply say that we have spent a very large sum of money in sending out these commissioners for the purpose of making an inquiry, and if it has been made simply for the purpose of making a report from that evidence, I do not think it will be satisfactory at all. Having spent a large sum of money for the purpose of securing that evidence, if the evidence is to be of any advantage at all, we should be in possession of it in order that we may judge as to that report these commissioners have made upon the evidence. I would like to see the evidence published and circulated amongst the members of this House at all events in order that we may have it for future reference. I am stating my own mind in respect to this and not speaking for any person else. I would like to know from the hon. minister if the department have made up their minds to publish this evidence or not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have already intimated that the case is a very important one, that the report is of very great value and it would almost follow from that statement that it would involve the publication of the evidence itself. The question of the printing is a serious one and it may be that the Printing Committte of the House would deal with the subject when I lay a copy of the evidence upon the Table. I think the evidence would have to be published.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that not rather an extraordinary proceeding ? Here is evidence produced as a result of investigations made by the head of the department. Other departments have their departmental reports prepared and submitted to parliament. This is a labour department and it is necessary for it, when evidence of this kind has been taken, to come to parliament and ask the Printing Committee of the House if the evidence shall be printed and circulated ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman forgets the arrangement. This expenditure for the committee is under a special vote for this particular purpose.

Mr. INGRAM. Asked for by the department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No matter who asked for it. It is not a sum voted to the department. It is a sum voted for this commission only. The department have a copy of the report of the commission and they intend to make use of that report and publish it as a supplement to the Labour Gazette, and if $10,000 is sufficient to pay for a copy of the evidence, then there would be no objection to its being ordered to be printed. But, if it is found that it is not sufficient the question of cost arises as to how it shall be paid for. The hon. gentleman need not be at all concerned upon this subject. I am sure it would be printed either by the department or the Printing Committee of this House.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will be the order of business for to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Railway Commission Bill will be taken up tomorrow as the first government order, and it will depend on how long it takes whether we shall reach supply later on.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the Railway Commission Bill been printed and circulated amongst the members ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand so, but I have not seen it myself.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not seen it yet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman looks up the files he may find that it has been printed.

Mr. LENNOX. It will be very inconvenient to take it up if hon. members have not had an opportunity of looking it over.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree that we could not expect to go on if the Bill has not been reprinted.

Mr. SPROULE. It is in the post office tonight.

Mr. LENNOX. Even if it is reprinted we should have some time to look it over.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would hope that my hon. friend would not prevent some consideration being given to it to-morrow. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) who was associated with the late hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) in some of the hearings and is familiar with most of the matters, will take it up and if it be found that there is anything requiring further consideration I am sure he will be willing to give an opportunity for that. The reason I am anxious to have it advanced is that the Senate has very little to do and it has even threatened to adjourn. If we are able to advance that Bill it will be an accommodation to the Senate and that is a very important matter.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not desirous of obstructing the matter, but I think if we had the Bill in our hands for a short time before its further consideration is proceeded with it would facilitate its passage.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps there are some portions of the Bill which there will not be great difficulty in proceeding with. As to any matters which will require further consideration perhaps there will be no objection to allowing them to stand——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We might proceed with it on that understanding. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether the resolutions on the Order paper will be taken up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Railway Bill will have priority. If we reach these resolutions we may take them up at a later stage. It will depend upon the time occupied by the Railway Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.35 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 23, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough) moved that the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which were referred certain allegations respecting the sale to the government, by George Loy, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Beauharnois, of certain properties in the town of Valleyfield, be authorized to employ a shorthand writer to take down such evidence as the commitee may deem necessary.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS WITHDRAWN.

Mr. C. S. HYMAN (London) moved that the following Bills be withdrawn, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the twenty-sixth report of the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines: Bill (No. 210) respecting the Nipissing and Ottawa Railway Company; Bill (No. 6) to amend the Railway Act; Bill (No. 16) to amend the Railway Act; Bill (No. 19) respecting drainage and the right of way across the property of railway companies; Bill (No. 23) to indemnify those who suffer damages in consequence of fires caused by railways; Bill (No. 77) to promote the safety of railway employees.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not sure whether this motion would be in order, because it concerns both public and private Bills. No doubt the motion would be in order so far as private Bills are concerned, but so far as public Bills are concerned I have some doubts, and I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press his motion until I have looked into the matter.

Motion withdrawn.

QUESTIONS.

COLLECTOR OF CHAMBLY CANAL.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Has the government notified Jules Quesnel, collector of the Chambly canal at St. John, that his services are or will be dispensed with?
2. Is it the intention of the government to dismiss the said officer?
3. What reason is there for the dismissal or removal of the said officer?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding):

1. Jules Quesnel has been superannuated.
2. He is not dismissed, but is superannuated in the usual course.
3. His age and service brought him under the provisions of section 3 of the Superannuation Act, under which he was retired from the service.

CORRESPONDENTS OF THE LABOUR GAZETTE.

Mr. LENNOX asked:

1. When the correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette' were appointed, what remuneration was agreed upon or fixed?
2. Has the rate of remuneration been increased?
3. Have increased duties or services been exacted of the correspondents without increased remuneration?
4. Have representations and complaints been made to the Department of Labour touching these questions, by the correspondents of the 'Gazette'?
5. Have the alleged grievances been redressed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). When correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette' are appointed they are paid a sum of $100 per annum to make a monthly report as to the condition of industrial matters in the district in which the correspondent resides. There has been no change of any kind in the terms of their engagement. It is possible that on some occasions a labour correspondent may have more work to perform than another, but his engagement is to serve as correspondent at his place of residence. There has been one application for an increase, which is now under consideration.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. H. BOURASSA (Labelle). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to refer to reports that have appeared, particularly in some of the newspapers belonging to the party of the opposition. It is stated in these papers that I initiated the debate on stock speculation the day before yesterday for the purpose of assisting the government to take up time while we were waiting for their railway policy. I need hardly say that such intention never entered my mind. I might not have referred to the matter were it not that the same opinion was expressed by the leader of the opposition yesterday in the House. On the same day on which I made the motion, another hon. gentleman, during my absence from the House, the member for West Toronto, stated plainly that the government had succeeded in getting one of their followers to waste another afternoon.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you refer to me?

Mr. BOURASSA. To the hon. member for West Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. I represent West Toronto.

Mr. BOURASSA. Then it is a mistake in Hansard.' I mean Mr. Osler. But, coming from that gentleman, I would not mind the charge: I know where the shoe pinched him. As far as the hon. leader of the opposition is concerned, I think our personal relations are such that I might appeal to the fairness of that hon. gentleman. I can tell him that members of the government have trouble enough with me in connection with their government business that they would never think of asking me to do that which it has been suggested I have done; and I would be the last man to enter into such a compact.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Let me say to my hon. friend that I would accept most freely and fully any assurance from him either in the House or out of the House. What I said yesterday was that we were marking time because my hon. friend proposed a resolution from which, with all deference to his views, I did not think that very much practical good would come, although I quite recognized his desire to bring about an improvement in the conditions to which his resolution had reference. I do know that the resolution was withdrawn. It was only in that way that I was suggesting that we were marking time. As my hon. friend says, our personal relations have always been such that I am certain it needs no assurance from me that I was not for a moment casting any reflection upon his motives.

STRIKE OF EMPLOYEES OF CANADA FOUNDRY COMPANY.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Vancouver). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour if any representations have been made to him in regard to the trouble existing in Toronto between the Canada Foundry Company and the iron moulders of that city? According to the press of that city, it appears that matters are in a very serious condition, the company being represented as bringing out a large contingent from the old country evidently to take the places of the strikers, and that the men are now making arrangements to be taken back. I would like to know if any representations have been made to the Department of Labour on the subject?

Mr. SPROULE. That subject was discussed for two hours last night.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Smith, Vancouver), I would say that the department has received no communication from any person in reference to the strike in question. The strike is a somewhat serious one, and as has just been mentioned by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was the subject of a reference in the House last night. Neither party having applied to the department for intervention, it is a question whether any proffer of intervention would be acceptable. However, it was pressed upon the attention of the government that the department should proffer its services, and having considered that suggestion, I have given instructions to the department to have a communication directed to the representatives of the different interests offering the services of the department. Whether or not they will be accepted, or if accepted they will be productive of any good, is a matter the future only can tell, but the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) said last night—I do not know his source of information—that as far as the Foundry Company were concerned, they were not free agents in the matter, and could not withdraw without the consent of some other union, I think some American union. However, that would be for them to consider in case they are willing to accept the services of the department.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I desire to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) to a number of Scotch labourers and workmen who have been brought to this country and who I believe are being returned for certain reasons. I desire to ask him if he has considered the injurious effect the return of these men would have upon immigration to Canada from the old land.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) I would say I have not given the subject any special consideration. I may say further that I am satisfied that the movement of the people referred to, to Canada, was in no way due to the action of the officers of the Department of Immigration. Whether it is the business of the government to interfere under the present circumstances I am not prepared to say, but I am prepared to say that I have not formed any conclusion in favour of any such interference at the present time.

TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the government whether or not there is any information which could be given to the House in regard to the formation of the proposed transportation commission. It was announced, I do not know with what authority, some time ago in the press that Sir Wm. Van Horne had definitely declined to accept the position of chairman of this commission. Perhaps the right hon. leader of the government would let us know as to that, and if so, what is the position of the matter at the present time?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have a letter from Sir Wm. Van Horne on this subject, which I will be very happy to bring down tomorrow.

STEAMER 'SCOTIA'—CLAIM RE SALVAGE.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Mr. Speaker, during my absence last evening, reference was made to a case of some importance. I refer to the case of the steamer 'Scotia' in connection with certain salvage services which were rendered by the Anchor Line steamer 'Furnessia.' I deem the matter of sufficient importance to make a special statement of the government's connection with the case in view of the reference which has been made to the Canadian government in an important London newspaper and which has been cabled to Canadian newspapers. The steamer 'Scotia' was built for the government at Newcastle-on-Tyne, by Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth & Company, Limited. The contract price was £47,000 to be paid by instalments, the last instalment of one-tenth of the price being payable on arrival of the steamer at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, or in case of loss during the voyage. The contract provides that the steamer shall from the date of the first instalment being paid until final delivery be considered the property of the purchaser, subject only to the builders' lien for and rights with respect to any unpaid balance due to them. It is stipulated that delivery shall be given and taken in the river Tyne, but that the government may request the builders to deliver the steamer at Port Mulgrave, in which case the builders agree to prepare and navigate the steamer from the river Tyne to Port Mulgrave for the sum of £1,400, plus the insurance premium, if the government decided to insure, this sum to be payable on arrival of the vessel at Port Mulgrave, and in the event of the delivery of the steamer at Port Mulgrave being undertaken by the builders, the government is to pay the last construction instalment previous to the departure of the steamer from the river Tyne. The government did in fact require the builders to deliver at Port Mulgrave, and the builders, pursuant to contract, undertook to do so. This involved the builders in the obligation to provide the necessary coal and outfit the vessel for the voyage so as to make her seaworthy in all respects. The last instalment of the price was not paid in accordance with the contract previous to departure of the steamer and had not been paid when she finally arrived at Mulgrave. I am informed, however, that that instalment has since been paid upon the responsibility of the Department of Railways. The government insured the vessel for the voyage. Her supply of coal became exhausted during the voyage, and she was found in distress by the Anchor Line steamer 'Furnessia' about two hundred miles from St. Johns, Newfoundland, and at the request of the master of the 'Scotia' brought to St. Johns, by the 'Furnessia,' where she was attached in the Vice-Admiralty court for $30,000 salvage at the instance of the Anchor Line. The master of the 'Scotia' appears thereupon to have instructed a counsel, procured the release of the vessel through a bond of $60,000 given by the Reid Newfoundland Company, and engaged in the defence of the claim. The government was not in any wise a party to any of these proceedings. The captain having procured the release of the vessel, continued his voyage to Mulgrave, where the vessel arrived in a considerably damaged condition owing to the use of her joiners work for purposes of fuel while she was short of coal. I am informed that the Department of Railways, through their agents at Liverpool made a claim upon the insurers for the damages sustained by the vessel and the prospective amount of salvage services. The insurers, however, denied liability upon the ground that the vessel was not seaworthy, not having been provided at the outset of the voyage with a sufficient supply of coal. They also, I understand, alleged that as the vessel belonged to the Crown, she could not be condemned to pay salvage. The builders, on the other hand, contended that they had provided sufficient coal at the departure of the vessel, but that it had fallen short owing to the unusual weather and difficulty of the voyage, which could not reasonably have been anticipated. In these circumstances both the insurers and the builders declined to indemnify the government for its loss, alleging that there either was no loss because of the immunity of the Crown or that in the case of the insurers, the loss should fall upon the builders, and that in the case of the builders that the loss should be borne by the insurers. Inasmuch as the government had taken all reasonable and proper steps to protect itself in respect of this voyage, it was considered only reasonable to uphold the rights and interest of the government arising out of these transactions. Accordingly I instructed Messrs. Whiteway & Johnson, solicitors, of St. Johns, to appear on behalf of the government as owners of the vessel in the salvage proceedings and set up the alleged immunity of the Crown, at the same time informing the salvors of the reasons for so doing and the situation in which the government found itself. In my letter of instructions to Messrs. Whiteway & Johnson, I stated among other things as follows :

> I may say, and I think the salvors should be informed of this, that the Crown would be quite willing to submit to the jurisdiction of the Newfoundland admiralty court for the purpose of determining the amount of compensation, if the insurers and the Armstrong Company would agree to abide by the judgment and to indemnify the Crown, which ever of them may be held ultimately responsible for the damages. If the vessel was not seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage we cannot recover from the insurers, but we can, I think, recover from the Armstrongs the damage sustained. If the vessel was seaworthy the insurers are certainly responsible, but we can only recover the damages which we have legally suffered, and up to the present neither the Armstrongs nor the insurers have agreed that the Crown should abandon the technical advantage arising out of the immunity of the Crown's property from salvage claims, so that for our own protection we are obliged to set up this point. Probably the salvors may think it to their advantage to let the matter stand over for the present and confer with the representatives of the several interests in England as to some equitable arrangement for having the compensation determined and paid by the parties upon which it should probably fall. In the meantime, however, our position is as above stated, and we wish to avail ourselves of all points both in law and evidence to defeat or reduce the salvors' claim.

These instructions were, I am informed, carried out, and I anticipated that upon being advised of the situation the salvors would have advised the government with a view to such further proceedings as might best protect our mutual interests. It appears, however, that the salvors preferred to proceed with the action, being advised, I suppose, that they could establish their claim against the vessel, and objections and difficulties were placed in our way during the subsequent proceedings in the court. The result is a judgment dismissing the claim against the vessel from which I understand the salvors propose to appeal to the judicial committee, but, in the meantime they are making the representations in question, which perhaps would have been more appropriate before the case had reached its present stage in the courts.

So, that we are in the position of being obliged to stand between the English builders and the English insurance companies, neither of whom would give way, and both of whom insisted that we must urge our claim in the court on the ground that the Crown property was not liable for salvage. That case was decided in our favour in Newfoundland courts but the Prime Minister was very anxious that some arrangement should be made with the Anchor Line in order to prevent any shadow of reflection on the conduct of the Canadian government, and the right hon. gentleman suggested that we should communicate with the Anchor Line. We immediately did so and requested one of the representatives from New York to come here for the purpose of discussing the position the government should take in connection with the appeal to the Privy Council. I was not present at the time the conference took place, but, I have here a memo. drafted by the deputy minister of what occurred at that conference. The memorandum is dated the 18th of March, 1903, and reads as follows :

March 18, 1903.

Memorandum re 'Scotia.'

Mr. John G. Todd, of New York, representing the Anchor Line, called to see me to-day, and we discussed very fully the situation with regard to these proceedings. He agreed with me that it would probably be useless to sue the insurers or builders while the present judgment of the supreme court of Newfoundland, holding the Crown exempt from salvage charges remains in force, and we also agreed that negotiations with the insurers under present conditions would probably not be hopeful. I told Mr. Todd that the government, except for its guarantees from the insurers and builders would not have raised the question as to exemption of Crown property from payment for salvage services, but would no doubt have submitted to the jurisdiction of the court and paid whatever amount might finally have been awarded for these services, and that the Crown was practically forced into the position which it has taken by reason of the attitude of the insurers, who set up our exemption and refused to admit our claim for damages. We agreed, therefore, that Mr. Todd should recommend the company to proceed with the appeal and have it brought on for hearing if possible early in July. I stated on the part of the government that we would appear and submit the facts as they stand to the court, stating as above that we set up the point of exemption to protect ourselves as against the insurers. If the company succeed on the appeal, of course we will have to pay the company for the salvage services, and afterwards have our recourse against the insurers or builders. If the Crown succeeds upon the appeal it will still be open for the company to make such representations for the consideration of the government as it may be advised with a view to obtaining indemnity upon the merits of the case. Meantime a letter is to be written to the English solicitors who have charge of the claim against the insurers, instructing them to notify the insurers that the appeal will go on unless they make a satisfactory settlement ; that the Crown as a defence would admit the salvors' claim and pay such amount as might be adjudged ; that in the circumstances we hope that the insurers will abandon the claim that the Crown is exempt and agree to the payment of reasonable damages. Otherwise that while looking to them, not only for the damages, but also the costs which we may have to pay as the results of the litigation. Our solicitors are to be instructed to effect a settlement with the insurers with the concurrence of the salvors if possible, and to report the result of their negotiations, but in the absence of any agreement with the insurers the appeal is to proceed.

There the matter stands at the present time.

INSPECTION AND SALE OF SEEDS.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 200) respecting the Inspection and Sale of Seeds.—The Minister of Agriculture.

On section 4.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). When this Bill was in committee before, it was the subject of a good deal of discussion in general as well as in detail, and there were suggestions from both sides of the House with regard to its provisions. On its first introduction, I pointed out that I was not wedded by any means to the details, and that I would be very glad to receive suggestions and to see if these suggestions could be incorporated in the Bill without marring any of its essential principles. As a result of that discussion and consideration of it, I intend to submit certain amendments which I may read together as they are more or less dependent the one upon the other. Section 1, of the Bill provides that it shall come into force the 1st day of September this year, and I propose to substitute for that the 1st day of July next year. This will give those who are engaged in the seed trade an opportunity of disposing of the seeds which they have on hand, which they purchased not knowing that there would be such a law as this. It will also be time enough to bring about the improvement in the sale of seeds for next year. Then I would propose that in clause 3 the word 'vegetables' should be struck out. I believe that in the future the trade in seeds of vegetables and flowers will have to come under the operation of an Act similiar to this by the demand of the people themselves; but, at the present time it is possible that greater difficulties might arise in dealing with the trade in these seeds than those which we encounter in dealing with the trade in ordinary agricultural seeds. The menace to agriculture is much greater from the present position of trade in ordinary agricultural seeds than it is from the condition of trade in vegetable or garden seeds. I am therefore going to propose that the word 'vegetable' be struck out of section 3, which would remove that difficulty from the Bill.

Then, I think it would be best that section 4 should not apply to export trade. I therefore propose to introduce into the second line of that section, after the word 'sale,' the words 'for the purpose of seeding in the Dominion of Canada.' That would make the provisions of the section, in regard to the marking and grading of seeds, not applicable to seeds intended for export. I think that eventually, in the course of a little time, it will be requisite to make that clause of the Act and those dependent upon it apply to the export trade as well as the home trade; but, as I have always wished, in dealing with this Bill, to proceed slowly, and to make the improvements step by step, I am disposed to meet the objection raised in regard to that point and to provide that section 4 shall only apply, for the present at any rate, to the home trade.

I would like to deal in section 6 with another exemption or partial exemption to the provisions of this Act. A good deal of discussion arose in regard to a supposed transaction between two farmers in a neighbourhood, one of whom raises an ordinary crop of seeds and sells it to his neighbour, as farmers frequently do. There was a very evident desire expressed by many members of the House that the provisions of the Act should not apply to such a transaction. Some members, however, believed that they should. I confess that I think the principles of the Act should apply to a transaction of that kind. But if there are difficulties in the way, which would prevent the proper enforcement of the Act without great hardship, I would be glad to adopt any amendment that would meet that case. I asked the hon. gentlemen who engaged in the former discussion to suggest an amendment for that purpose. No practical suggestion, I think, was then made; but after thinking over the matter and discussing it with my officers, I have a suggestion to make which I think will perhaps accomplish the object in view and at the same time not make the Act inoperative. I am going to propose an additional subsection as subsection 'e' to section 6, providing that the Act shall not apply:

> Or to seed that is grown and sown by any farmer on his own premises unless the purchaser of such seed demands from the seller at the time of the sale thereof that the said seed be supplied to him subject to the provisions of this Act.

That would leave on the purchaser the onus of requiring that the transaction should be subject to the provisions of this Act. If the purchaser wishes the transaction to be subject to the provisions of this Act, he can require it; if he does not so require it, then the provisions of the Act will not apply to the transaction, and nobody else can attack the seller, even though the seeds and the package in which they were placed might not fulfil the provisions of this Act. I think that meets the views of those gentlemen who thought the Act was too severe upon farmers who sold seeds to their neighbours, while at the same time it puts into the hands of the purchaser the privilege, if he chooses to exercise it, of having the provisions of this Act applied to the transaction. It seems to me to be a solution of the difficulty pointed out as possible to occur, and at the same time complies with the spirit and the general principle of the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the purchaser said to the seller, I wish to get from you No. 1 red clover, and purchased accordingly, and said nothing about other provisions of the Act. Would not that bring the transaction under this Act?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the purchaser wished to avail himself of this section, he would have to do so, and then every provision of the Act would apply. It is not intended that the purchaser should be able to apply one provision of the Act and not another. If the purchaser wished the transaction to be subject to the provisions of the Act he would have to say so at the time of the transaction. If he did say so, then the whole transaction would be subject to the provisions of the Act. If he did not make that stipulation at the time of the purchase, the provisions of the Act would not apply, and the seller of the seeds would not be liable to be prosecuted under the Act. That, I believe, to be a fair and equitable solution of the difficulty suggested.

Mr. CLANCY. That applies to all classes of seeds?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. Of course there are some provisions of the Act which apply to some seeds and others to other seeds; but that would not change these provisions. The next difficulty that arose was in connection with section 7. Exception was taken to the amount of the fine, and the suggestion was made that there ought to be separate fines —one for the first offence and the other for second and subsequent offences. That seemed to be reasonable, and I propose to substitute in place of section 7 a section providing a fine not exceeding $25 and not less than $5 for the first offence, and not exceeding $50 and not less than $10 for the second offence, together with the costs of the prosecution. Objection was taken on the part of the wholesale dealers that they might be held liable for the contents of the package after it had gone into the hands of the retailer or any other person and its contents had been tampered with. To avoid any such possibility, I am proposing a clause providing that the package shall be sealed, and as long as the seal is unbroken the party who sold it shall be liable for the contents. If it should be broken, he may be still held liable, provided that, in the presence of two disinterested witnesses, a sample of the contents is put into another sealed package.

Mr. GILMOUR. What is to prevent the duplicating of the seal? Are you providing for that contingency?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not thought of that. That would probably be an infringement of the Trades Marks Act. Some provision would be necessary to complete the protection given the seller.

Mr. STEPHENS. How is a retail merchant going to get samples without breaking the seal?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the seal is broken, the wholesale dealer is no longer responsible, but the retail merchant may take a sample from the bag and put it into another receptacle under seal, in the presence of two disinterested witnesses, and the contents of the bag would be judged by this sample. I propose to amend section 12 to meet the objections of the seed merchants, who seem to think it is not clear enough. This section provides for samples to be sent within seven days to any official analyst of seeds, taken from any seeds which are found or suspected to be sold in violation of the provisions of this Act. Section 15 provides that one-half of the pecuniary penalty shall be payable to the informant or the complainant. This section was struck out by the committee, and I would suggest that in its place the following section be inserted :—

Any pecuniary penalty imposed under this Act shall when recovered be payable one half to the imformant when such informant or complainant is the purchaser of the seed with respect to which the penalty is imposed, in all other cases the whole penalty shall be payable to His Majesty.

Mr. GILMOUR. A man may purchase a very small quantity merely in order that he may be in a position to prosecute and realize half the fine.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Such a case might occur. But, if the sale has really been made, I think the penalty ought to be inflicted. A man buys a small quantity of seed, say even eight or ten pounds of clover or timothy, and he finds afterwards that the seed is not what it is purported to be. It is very considerable trouble to him, and often very considerable expense, to prosecute. The ordinary individual has not a sufficiently high sense of public duty to prosecute. But if we throw upon the purchaser the onus and responsibility of prosecuting I think that when a man renders such a public service, it is only fair that he should have a portion of the result.

Mr. GILMOUR. I think the intention is good, and it would be all right in the case of a legitimate buyer that the person who prosecutes should receive half the fine. But the hon. minister will admit that under the section as he proposes it a person might buy a very small quantity, and, on the strength of the purchase, prosecute and secure half the fine.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand that, yet I do not see how we can discriminate between one purchaser and another. But this clause is to prevent third parties prosecuting. A farmer might purchase seed and not wish to prosecute, and a third party, through malice or through hope of pecuniary advantage, might enter an action without any personal interest in the transaction at all. I wish to prevent that. I find that section 17, which provides for an appeal is not necessary, for the provisions of the Summary Convictions Act will apply. And, as it is not necessary, its presence in the Bill might involve technical legal difficulties. I shall, therefore, propose to strike out section 17. These are the amendments, that, after careful consideration of the arguments advanced in a former discussion, commend themselves to my mind, and I think their adoption will make the Bill as perfect as it is possible to make in a first attempt in legislation of this kind. When the Bill was up for discussion before, I took occasion to say that we had in the committee the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Bruce) who has had much experience in this trade, and I trusted that before the passage of the Bill the committee would have the advantage of his advice and assistance in discussing it. I hope he will give the committee his views, as he did when he presented a deputation of the seedsmen to myself as minister in charge of the Bill. If a general discussion is desired, I would ask hon. members to proceed, and then we can take up the clauses.

Mr. BELL. I should suppose the minister would leave the matter for a day or two until the members of the committee have had an opportunity to look into the amendments he has suggested. I understand that it is not in accordance with the usual procedure of the House that such amendments should be proceeded with until after reasonable notice; and while I would not be disposed to insist upon that in opposition to the hon. minister's wish, I must confess that I find it difficult to follow the amendments as read, because of the difficulty of hearing him. I think members will be glad to consider the amendments as they will find them in 'Hansard' to-morrow before attempting to proceed with them in detail.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It will perhaps be better to proceed with the general discussion, and some explanations may be called for. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) did ask an explanation which I asked leave to postpone until I had gone through the amendments. I think it would be well to have a discussion before we proceed, as the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) sugests.

Mr. SPROULE. I referred to the fact that we make a time limit, which, I take it, involves the putting of a date on the seal. If the time limit is near expiring and the seed were sold to an innocent party—as the Minister of Agriculture is engaged at this moment, I shall wait until he can give me his attention.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As the hon. minister has gone through the amendments he proposes, I think we should take the Bill up section by section and consider the amendments as they arise? If it is desired that further time should be given on any particular amendment, the discussion of the clause to which it relates can be postponed. In this way, we shall make some progress, but, with a general discussion we shall make no progress.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister's amendments are more important than the Bill, It would be better to have them reprinted, so that hon. members can consider them before taking up the discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. I was merely responding to the invitation of the minister, who intimated that it would be proper for me to refer now to the matter I mentioned, which was this: When the seal is put on, there must be a date, because the amendment proposes that the guarantee shall be good only for a certain length of time. If the seed passes into the hands of an innocent party about the time of the expiry of the guarantee he would practically not have any guarantee whatever.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. member spoke about the date. The date must be on the seal but the object of providing that in no case shall the responsibility for such seed extend beyond ninety days of the sale thereof, which date must be plainly marked on the package or bag which contains the seed, is, that some seeds deteriorate in ninety days. That is the case with a good many seeds, but not with all by any means. Many seeds will last much longer. That is the object of making the time ninety days.

Mr. SPROULE. We will suppose that a seedsman got an order for certain seeds, and the wholesale man had them on hand, but the time of that warrantee had about expired, lacking a few days. He sold those seeds, but they did not reach the consignee until after the expiry of that time, and when he received those seeds he found they were not up to the standard, who would be responsible then? The action had not been commenced within the 90 days, and his warrantee expired by the effluxion of time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a legal point that I would not like to give an opinion upon. There are many cases in Acts where a delay is fixed, and in those cases the point has to be taken up from a legal point of view.

Mr. SPROULE. The object in making a law is to avoid any of these technicalities that might result in litigation. It seems to me it would be possible to provide that when any person sold seeds under a warrantee, he should be held responsible for them after the time had expired before they reached the consignee.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The purchaser knows what the date of sealing was. The date has to be put upon the package, and he knows what the provisions of the Act are, and therefore he knows that within a certain delay he has certain rights. After that delay has passed those rights cease.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the minister to explain what kind of seeds will deteriorate in 90 days.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed by those who have studied this matter more than myself, that hulled timothy seed cannot be counted upon after 90 days—timothy seed that has lost its hull.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have kept timothy seed over two or three years, and it was just as good as at the begininng. I have often had it in store for two or three years. I am satisfied that timothy seed, if kept in a dry place, and unless it gets damaged by moisture, is just as good at the end of twelve months as when it is first threshed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman would have found, if he had had that seed tested by a seed analyst, that it had steadily deteriorated and was getting poorer every year.

Mr. TAYLOR. When it was sowed the result was just as good.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Any results he would observe in a field in a particular case, would be far too inaccurate and unsatisfactory to lead to a general conclusion.

Mr. McCREARY. In regard to this Bill, I regret to say that I was not in the House the other day when the Minister of Agriculture gave his explanations, I was otherwise engaged. I have not heard either his explanations given this afternoon. However, as I read the Bill cursorily, it seems to me that it is going to have a peculiar effect in our western country. For instance, clause 3 says :

No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, for the purpose of seeding, any seeds of cereals, grasses, clovers—&c., having in the packages or bags any seed of wild mustard, Russian thistle and so forth. If he does so, he is subject to a penalty running from $10 to $100. Clause 9 says that any person may go on to a farmer's premises and if he finds any of these seeds in his sacks or bags he may bring an action and fine him $100, and get half the fine. Now, I do not believe this will work in the western portion of the country especially. It seems to me it simply means this, that if a farmer wants to change his seed, as he frequently does, and he sends to Winnipeg and buys a carload of seed, if it contains any mustard seed or any other of these seeds mentioned here, he can be fined $100. If that is the meaning of this Act, then I may say it may apply to some isolated state of affairs that may exist in some little five-acre lot where they pick the wheat out by hand, but on the prairies it means that every farmer that sells seed out there will be subject to a penalty, not a single one would escape. The idea is just about as impracticable as the one passed a few days ago about marking butter. It seems we have a lot of theorists, men running experimental farms, faddists, men who would starve on a farm of their own, and they are evolving out of their own brains some ideal state of affairs that should exist, and they are trying to make use of this House to put it into law. The consequence is that the law remains on the statute-book without being obeyed, a dead letter, a fraud upon the public. After a while the farmers will kick and the law is repealed. Now, I merely ask the minister if the idea of this Act is that if any farmer sells seed one bag or a hundred bags, and which are found to have a few grains of mustard seed in it, he can be fined $100 at the instance of any neighbour of his, or informer who may be found around his premises. If some man who has a spite against him knows he has got 100 bushels of wheat for sale, all he has to do is to go into his barn and take one of these sacks and find a little mustard seed or Russian thistle in it, and fine him $100 and get half the fine. If that is so, then this Bill had better be stopped at once.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must remind the committee that this whole discussion is out of order, there is nothing before the Chair. I would ask the minister to tell me what is the proposition now before the committee. There is no progress being made at all.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The government benches are obstructing.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. After the minister gave an exposé of the proposition which he intended to bring before the House in connection with this particular Bill, it is then the duty of the committee to take up the Bill section by section and apply the amendments proposed by the minister. But this general discussion, when there is no question before the committee at all, is wholly out of order, and I have no more control of the committee than if I were 100 miles away. Unless I am overruled by the committee, as I generally am when I am right, I would rule that this discussion is out of order. We will have to commence first by a motion to reopen all the sections which have already been carried, that is, every section of the Bill with the exception of three. This discussion is on sections which have already been passed on by the committee. After a motion is carried to reconsider what we have done already, then it will be in order to move these proposed amendments to each section as we go on, and then we will be making some progress.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I remind you, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. minister referred to several amendments which he intended to propose to the Bill, and he asked for a general discussion upon them ? It was in following out the suggestion that we were endeavouring to refer to these various amendments.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Ministers are human like the rest of us, and they are sometimes out of order like the rest of us. Therefore, I am calling the minister's attention to the rule of order. I have put about two hundred Bills through my hands this session, and there has not been one that has been put through in this irregular way.

The MINISTER OF AGRICRULTURE moved :

That section two be amended by striking out the words 'first day of September, nineteen hundred and three' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'first day of July, nineteen hundred and four.'

Mr. McCREARY. Will this be on the understanding that we are to reconsider the entire sections of the Bill ? Will the hon. minister give us that assurance, or will we have a discussion of the Bill on this question ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Subject to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I suppose that if the Bill is to go into force on a certain day the whole of the Bill might be discussed as to the advisability of its going into force on that day.

Mr. HEYD. Mr. Chairman, I suppose I am in order now. I need hardly say that in this Bill there is the promise of a great deal of good to the farmers of this country, but I am satisfied in the House we have not amongst us the commercial experience necessary to make this Bill perfect. I have been approached when at home by the retailers of seeds, who say that they have not had an opportunity of expressing their views, and that in the amendments which have been suggested by the wholesale trade they have relieved themselves of a certain share of responsibility by shouldering it off upon the retail dealers. One of the largest retail dealers told me that rather than carry on the seed business under the Bill as proposed to the House, he would go out of business. I would suggest, in the interests of the farmers at large, that we should perfect this Bill as far as we are able and then let it go to the various agricultural societies, retail dealers' associations and wholesale dealers in seeds, and let them consider it and suggest amendments. After that we will be in possession of such an array of facts as will enable us to perfect a Bill which will be of use to the country. We all know the injury that is being inflicted through the sale of impure seeds. I am satisfied that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has the welfare of the agricultural community at heart in bringing forward this Bill, but a Bill so far-reaching in its consequences ought to be considered with reference to the trade it affects, and especially with reference to the interests of the farmer who grows seed and grows it for the purpose of selling it. I do not think we have that commercial knowledge of the seed business which will enable us to perfect a Bill that will be just in all its particulars to every class of the community, and therefore I say that we should try to perfect this Bill, to adopt the suggestions that are made by the hon. minister, who has given a great deal of care to it, and then leave it to be further considered by the wholesale trade, the retail trade and the farmers, and give them an opportunity for making suggestions in regard to it, so that when we come to consider it next year we will be able to perfect a Bill that will be applicable to all classes of the community and that will operate for the welfare of the country.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Chairman, I was going to make the suggestion that has been made by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) in regard to this Bill. I do not think that the farming community or the seedsmen of the country, those who handle and do nothing else, are sufficiently familiar with the provisions of the measure to understand them properly. The seedsmen and farmers are entirely with the hon. minister in his desire to improve the quality of the seed production of Canada. We are all much interested in bringing about this result as he is, and we will do everything we possibly can to achieve the object which he expects to result from this Bill. But we have not yet had sufficient time to consider the Bill or to understand how it would operate as a mercantile measure. I would suggest that the hon. minister should continue the work of educating the farmers at the institute meetings which has been going on for some years past, and he might possibly also issue a bulletin giving his views in regard to the intended legislation that we are considering here to-day. During the recess the seedsmen of the country and the experts of the Department of Agriculture might consider the Bill and agree upon such provisions as would not be an injury to the farmers or interfere too much with the seedsmen in the management of their business. I understand perfectly well that it is not the intention of the hon. minister to inflict any hardship upon either the farmers or the seedsmen, and if time were given for the consideration of the matter between now and the next meeting of the House, I think a Bill might be brought in that would be of service to the country, and which would realize the expectations of the hon. minister in regard to our seed product.

Mr. SPROULE. I took a copy of this Bill home and submitted it to one of our seedsmen, and the conclusion he reached was very much the same as that of the seedsman to whom the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) referred, that if this Bill became law he would have to go out of business, because he thought it quite impossible to carry on his business and keep within the provisions of the law. He said that the law must either be a dead letter or there must be constant and repeated violation of it, which no seedsman would desire to have. The opinion I expressed when the Bill was first proposed, and the opinion which I hold still, is that unless the Bill is very much amended it will be utterly impossible for any seedsman to carry on his business without finding himself in trouble and liable to prosecution.

Mr. OLIVER. It seems to me that the proposition of the hon. minister, which, if I understand it aright, is to postpone the effect of the Bill for another year, meets all the arguments that have been put forward.

Mr. COCHRANE. No.

Mr. OLIVER. It must be taken for granted that the hon. minister and the department have given the matter some expert attention, and that the Bill in its present shape has certainly the principle to commend it, and that there is valuable information as to details. At the same time, we can all recognize that it is a Bill of very far-reaching effect, and that probably it would not be well for it to go into effect without everybody having a say in regard to it. If the Bill is not to go into effect until after the next session of parliament, then the best way to call the attention of the people of Canada to it is to put it on the statute-book. I strongly support the Bill, with the amendment proposed by the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) This Bill will not come into operation before the first of July, 1904, and why should we be in a hurry to pass it at all this session. Let it be circulated so that those who are interested in it may understand it thoroughly, and then next session we will be able to consider the objections offered to it and will be in a position to pass a better Bill. Among the many faults we have in this House, one is that we pass too much legislation on subjects that might as well be left alone to regulate themselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. If this Bill is to pass, the word 'person' should be struck out and the word 'dealer' inserted. We know it to be a fact that farmers in the North-west and in all parts of the country keep oats, barley, and wheat, for seeding purposes, and give them to their neighbours. If a farmer has any such weed as mustard in his crop and if he sells the seed to his neighbour he is liable to be prosecuted under this Bill. In fact if the Bill passes no one dare sell his neighbour a bushel of oats or any other grain if he had a noxious weed in his fields, and you will hardly get a farm in Ontario that will not show some of the weeds mentioned in the Act. If you pass the Bill at all it should apply to dealers only and not to farmers.

Mr. OLIVER. If it be true as the hon. member for Leeds says that every farm in Ontario is flooded with weeds, then it is a strong argument in favour of this Bill, the principle of which is to check the evil of weeds in our cultivated lands.

Mr. COCHRANE. This Bill does not come into force until after next session, and it is much better that we should hold it over and make whatever amendments we think are desirable then rather than to pass it now and amend it afterwards. If we hold it over and pass all its provisions at once without amendment then it will be plain so that ordinary mortals may understand it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The question arises whether we should make this Bill law this year or leave it over until next session, but in either case it is much better that we should try to make the Bill as perfect as possible, now that it is before the House. My hon. friend from Brant suggested that we should discuss it and then submit it to farmers institutes and agricultural meetings. If it does not become law this year it ought to be so submitted, but if it is to be submitted it ought be submitted in as perfect a shape as possible. We are legislating here on a new subject and one which I know involves great difficulty, but we have been able to legislate successfully on new subjects in the past and there is no reason why we should not do so in this case. The hon. gentleman from Leeds says that the amendments amount to as much as the whole Bill. That is not the case, but even if it were it would be no objection to the measure. What I want to find, and what the majority of this committee want to find is a solution of the difficulties which the farmers of Canada now labour under in their purchase of seeds for seeding purposes. This committee has almost unanimously accepted the principle of the Bill, and if it is desirable that such a Bill should become law then the condition of affairs in the country is acknowledged to be such that the time is ripe for its enactment. My hon. friend from Hamilton said that the seed dealers who think that they are more aimed at in this Bill than any one else, are quite prepared to acknowledge the principle of this Bill, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) said that the Bill should be limited to dealers. I may say that the dealers already think that the Bill almost aims exclusively at them. I do not think that is the case, but their view has to be taken into consideration. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has attacked the Bill on very broad grounds and he has said that it is entirely unworkable especially in the North-west Territories. My hon. friend is not aware probably that in the North-west Territories there is local legislation which is far more strict than the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. McCREARY. It is not carried out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It may not be carried out for the benefit of the people, but, nevertheless the representatives of the people have adopted such legislation. If the hon. gentleman is surprised at it, it is simply because he has not taken the trouble to study the question, and has made statements to the House without knowing the details of the question he has been talking about. The hon. gentleman may be perfectly right in what he says. It may be that this Bill is unworkable in the North-west Territories; but the representatives of the people elected in the North-west Territories believe that more drastic legislation is necessary, and I suppose that when they put it on the statute-book, they believed that it was workable, and in the interest of the people of the North-west Territories. I do not know the North-west Territories and Manitoba as well as the hon. gentleman does; but I do know them well enough to know that if there is any part of the Dominion of Canada that requires legislation with regard to the purity of seeds and the destruction of weeds, it is Manitoba and the North-west Territories. But the provisions of this Bill have been, as my hon. friend from Alberta says, the subject of the utmost consideration and investigation, not only by myself as minister, but by the experts employed in my department to deal especially with this subject. I may say that the provisions of this Bill, as it stands to-day, are not nearly as drastic and stringent as the condition of affairs in the country would lead us to believe would be advisable; but I understand perfectly well that what is advisable may not be feasible, and that we have to creep before we can run; and therefore we are obliged to minimize the restrictive character of the Bill to such an extent that it may be fairly workable and may attain the objects we have in view. It is for that reason that I decided to-day to propose certain amendments to the Bill, and I would be glad to have the co-operation and assistance of the committee on each amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. With regard to the ordinance which the hon. minister says is on the statute-book of the North-west Territories, I have not seen such an ordinance. If there is such an ordinance, it certainly has never been observed since the day it was passed; because there is not a farmer in Manitoba or the North-west Territories who could carry out the provisions of section 3 of this Act. If the North-west legislature was foolish enough to put on the statute-book an Act which could never be carried out, I hope we are not foolish enough to repeat that Act in this House. In the North-west Territories, in Manitoba, in Minnesota, in Dakota, or in any of the other states which produce large quantities of grain, such an Act could not possibly be enforced. If the minister wants to suit the farmers, let this Act be considered by them. If he wants to suit the seed dealers, he is quite right to pass such legislation. For instance, if section 3, which provides that no person shall sell seeds unless they are entirely free from the seeds of the weeds named in the section, were modified to say that they shall contain not more than 10 per cent or 5 per cent or some other per centage of these seeds, it might to a certain extent be workable. The hon. gentleman also wants to take into consideration the fact that when a farmer buys his seed, he usually puts it through a process of blue-stoning before he puts it into the ground, and provision might be made for imposing that duty on the seller of the seed as well. The minister before passing this Act, should consult the farmers of the prairies as well as the seed dealers of the east. As the Bill stands, it would be a gross hardship on the farmers of the west. It would put the farmer into the hands of some unprincipled scoundrel, who could go into his granary and pick some of these deleterious seeds out of his stock, and then have him hauled up and fined $100, and, if he did not pay the fine, have him sent to jail; and, if the farmer wanted to put the man out of his granary, he might subject himself to another fine of $500. I submit that the clause giving the informer the power to enforce the penalty is wrong. That should be put into the hands of a government official, who would not get any part of the fine. There is scarcely a police magistrate who does not reflect severely on the character of whiskey informers, and these informers would be in the same category. If the minister is going to enforce the Bill or bring it up again next session, I think it should be modified in the ways I have suggested.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend evidently has not studied the Bill or listened to what I have said this afternoon. He says the Bill has not been submitted to the farmers of the North-west Territories. The details of the Bill of course have not been submitted to them, but the question the Bill deals with was brought up and discussed last winter at every institute held in the North-west Territories. With regard to the farmer selling seed to another farmer, the amendment which I read to the House to-day, providing that the provisions of this Act shall not apply to such a transaction unless the purchaser at the time requires that it shall be subject to the provisions of the Act, meets that case; so that if two neighbours wish to sell seed to each other without being subject to the provisions of this Act, they can do so. The hon. gentleman also objected to the informer getting a portion of the fine. That also is proposed to be modified. That section of the Bill was struck out at the previous meeting of the committee, but I propose to insert in place of it another section providing that when such informant is the purchaser of the seed with respect to which the penalty is imposed, then and then only shall he get one-half of the penalty. A person who is not the purchaser would have no chance of getting any portion of the penalty; but the man who has suffered a wrong, and who takes the trouble, not to right his own wrong, but to do a service to the community, ought to have something for the public service he has rendered. He ought to have a portion of the fine to reimburse him for the trouble he has taken, in a public spirited way—because probably the wrong he has suffered does not amount to much—to put a stop to the selling of inferior seed.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I do not think that much harm will result if the Bill be allowed to stand over another year. Let copies be sent to the farmers institutes and farmers' associations and the grangers, and we will then next session know what the farmers think of it. There is no great hurry for the Bill. We have lived all these years without it, and can get along without it another year.

Mr. LENNOX. I approve of the hon. minister's present intention of not putting the Bill into force this year. But I would go further still and let the discussion stand over until next session. I do not think that the public mind mind has been directed to this matter to any great extent. No doubt the hon. minister has given it a good deal of thought and has an honest desire to provide a remedy for what he considers a grievance, but nevertheless it seems to me, as I said the other day, that we are erring on the side of too much legislation and do not recognize the ability of our people to regulate many of these matters themselves. There is very good reason why we should defer further consideration of this measure. I understand the government to say that they are exceedingly anxious to get certain important measures before the House without delay; and if we go into a discussion of this matter, we will be putting an obstacle in the way of progress. There is another and a more serious difficulty. If this Bill is persisted in, I fear we will witness another of those ruptures which are becoming alarmingly frequent this session. It is evident that we are on the verge of an unfortunate friction between the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) and the hon. Minister of Agriculture, I would deeply regret that anything of the kind should occur at this juncture. The government is already sufficiently embarrassed without having the further embarrassment of one of its ministers being attacked by a prospective minister. We can make every allowance for the language used by the hon. member for Selkirk with regard to the hon. minister, because he has just come from a scene of agitation and disappointment and finds it difficult to restrain his feelings. As to the fitness of the language, I have nothing to say.

Mr. WRIGHT. Has this anything to do with clause 2 ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No, it has not.

Mr. LENNOX. I hope that I shall keep myself within the rules of the House. I wish simply to express my sincere hope that at the present juncture, when the friction now existing among hon. members opposite, both in the cabinet and out of it, threatens to bring about such a state of things that we may have no administration at all, the hon. minister will see the advisability of not pressing this measure. Speaking in all earnestness, I believe that it is not in the interest of the seedsmen or farmers that we should commit ourselves to any definite policy such as is laid down in this Bill. The matter, having been brought to the attention of the public, should be allowed to stand over until another session, when it can be put into such shape that it will be more likely to give general satisfaction and probably, by the time another session comes around, the hon. minister will be relieved from the responsibilities of office and not have to father the measure at all.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). I represent a rural constituency, Mr. Chairman, and there are some things in connection with this debate which I find rather puzzling. I have always been under the impression that the farmer raised the seed which he sold the dealer. We have some noxious weeds in our county; and while I am as much the friend of the farmer as anybody else, I fail to understand why, if you do not punish the farmer who raised the dirty seed and sells it to the dealer, you should punish the dealer for selling this dirty seed furnished him by the farmer.

Mr. BRUCE. The seedsmen of Canada are not asking for this legislation, but as the hon. Minister of Agriculture has introduced the Bill, we desire to see it passed in such a shape that it will be as little harmful as possible both to the farmers and seedsmen. To show you, Sir, that the country is not suffering to any alarming extent I shall take the liberty of reading some remarks which Dr. Saunders made when giving his evidence before the Agricultural Committee on the 12th of June. Dr. Saunders stated that 131 samples of clover seed which he tested averaged seventy-five per cent in germinating power, and seventy-five samples of timothy seed averaged eighty-three per cent; showing that in these important and staple seeds, although we may meet with an occasional poor sample, the Canadian seedsmen have supplied farmers with a very reliable quality of the seed, and that most of the samples have been remarkably clean. This shows that we are not likely to have any greater difficulty with regard to weeds than we have had heretofore and that the country will not suffer if we allow the Bill to stand over until the farmers and seedsmen understand it better and are better able to suggest the changes necessary to make it effective.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very sorry to have to disagree with my hon. friend from Elgin regarding the urgency of the case. There seems to be a general impression that this is not an important matter, that it is not a matter of urgency, and that because we have not had such legislation in the past, we do not need it in the future. No man can travel through Ontario in any direction without seeing evidence of the necessity of something being done to get rid of weeds. I am satisfied that this province loses hundreds of thousands of dollars per year because of the prevalence of noxious weeds. I do not think that there is any question coming before the parliament that is more important than the question of weeds in the farmers' grain.

In the North-west, in the district in which I live, I can assure the committee the farmers have suffered damage to the amount of thousands and thousands of dollars by reason of buying grain which contained the seeds of weeds. Now, it is true the country will not burn up if we do not pass legislation on the subject this year. It is also true that the legislation we may pass may not be effective for the purpose designed. But I do submit that we have to make a start some time if we are ever going to reach an end. Apparently, these weeds will not kill themselves; apparently people will not cease trading in impure seeds, unless legislation and administration is made effective against such conduct. Well, if we are going to commence some time what better time is there than now and how can we commence better than by affirming the principle of legislation against noxious weeds by passing this Bill at this session? If there is any question as to the details of the Bill, as to the effect its provisions will have if put in force; if there is any danger, in the opinion of any hon. gentleman, as to delaying the business of parliament, all that that hon. gentleman need do is to agree to the amendment proposed by the minister which will prevent the Bill from being effective for another year, and will give everybody warning that parliament is in favour of the principle of this legislation, and that all must be prepared to protect their own interest by the time parliament meets again. But if the Bill is set over for another session, the country will take it for granted—and I think will justly take it for granted—that parliament is not in favour of the principle of the Bill; for they will say that if parliament was in favour of the principle it would have adopted it, but that having refused to adopt it it is not in favour of it; and everybody dealing in impure seed will rest easy. And so, next session we shall find ourselves exactly where we are this session, with the House not prepared and the people not informed. I say, in the interest of the farming community, the greatest in the country, it is most important that the principle of legislation against impure seed should be adopted at this session by the passing of this Bill with the amendment proposed by the minister bringing the Bill in force next year.

Mr. HEYD. If we carry out the wishes of the minister, we shall start next year where we leave off this year, but, if we leave this an open question for another year, everything that has been said during the past week in connection with the Bill will have to be talked over again. If we pass the Bill as the minister wishes, farmers and dealers will have a live question before them, though it will be some time before the measure becomes operative. If we do not cary out his wishes, we must start again where we are now and all our labours will be lost.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. WRIGHT. As a dealer in seeds for the last thirty-two years, I think I have the right to say something on the subject. If there is any question in this country that demands legislation, it is the selling of impure seeds. Our friends of the law may not be aware that last winter during three or four months, in the province of Ontario, at meeting of farmers' institute held in every section, the burden of the lectures was the fact that so many foul seeds are sold to the farmers in the grain which they buy for seed. At every one of these meetings a large chart was put up on the wall showing the places where seeds were purchased and the percentage of foul seeds in them. Every farmer present at the institute meeting, without a single exception, said something should be done in the way of legislation in order to remedy the evil. So, I cannot see how any one can say in this House that the subject has not been before the farmers or that they have not had an opportunity to say anything about it. It is true they may not have come here with any one delegated to say these things for them, but it is a certain fact that the matter has been before them at every farmers' institute meeting, and with unanimous voice they have said that something should be done. If we do not take any action this session, all the trouble that we have been to and all the time that we have spent will be lost, and all the things that have been said here to-day and other days will have to be said next session. It is time we should settle down to work and see if we cannot get a Bill into shape that it may be placed before the farmers' institute for discussion. Then, if there are changes to be made, we can make them. But for goodness sake let us do something, and not be staying here all the time talking.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). The amendment is to provide that this Act shall not come into force until the 1st July, 1904. I think that in the previous debate in connection with the Bill, I expressed myself as believing that this measure should not come into force during this parliament, or, until next year at any rate. I think it would be wise to have it as a measure that might be legislated on at a future session, that it should practically serve as a notice of motion to the country that the matter was going to be dealt with by this parliament. The reasons advanced by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) I think, are extremely good—that the country may have notice during the next twelve months of what they may expect in connection with the seed Bill. I scarcely think the hon. members of this House are aware of the enormous waste there is in this country owing to noxious weeds, not only in seeds, but in cereals of all kinds. I know that we have unloaded at our elevator No. 1 Manitoba hard wheat that has a very large percentage of weed seeds. I was really surprised to see it.

And I have been told by some who are engaged in the trade that there have been some remarkable turnouts of weed seeds in the shipments of Manitoba wheat. As the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has said, you have but to travel through the country on train to see hundreds and hundreds, even many thousands of acres of wild mustard spread before you. No one can deny that every spear of wild mustard is displacing a spear of wheat or other grain. The positive waste that is going on year after year in growing and gathering these seeds is incalculable. The province of Ontario to which I belong, has recognized this as an evil. They have declared that these noxious weeds shall not be grown on the highways or even on the fields. They give power, as I understand it, to municipalities to see to the enforcement of the law. The result is that the law is not enforced, but stands upon the statute-book practically a dead letter. If the bill now before us will meet the difficulty and lead to the production of a purer quality of seeds, it is of the utmost importance and in the right direction. But I believe with the hon. member for Brant and some other hon. members, that it would be better not to make a law now, but, as I say, to let this serve as a notice of motion for next session of parliament. We have a great competitor in the growing of seed in the country to the south of us. Sixty-five per cent, in round numbers of their exports, which amount to about $1,300,000,000 consists of the products of the farm. Of this, a large proportion is seeds, and the seeds grown in that country come in direct competition with the seeds grown in Canada.

We are the largest producers and exporters of alsike in the world. We are no small producers of red clover, and fairly large producers of timothy. These seeds are produced largely in the western states, in Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, and I think, Indiana. They have, as I understand, no law regarding seeds. Now, it strikes me that perhaps if we put too rigorous a law upon the trade of this country, which has been well developed by the seedsmen, it may affect our exportation of seeds out of the country. That is what appeals to me. For myself, I have not sufficient information to form an opinion with regard to that matter, as to how we would meet the export trade of the United States in these seeds where we especially come into competition with them. Of course, we come into competition with them in our wheat, oats, barley, and those things, and also in seeds. A good many of the seeds imported into this country are used in Ontario. Under these circumstances, I can agree with the proposition which has been made by several hon. members here to-day to let this Bill serve as a notice to the country that next year absolutely a Bill will come up for the purpose of regulating the seed trade. In the meantime, let the farmers' institutes and dealers of all kinds be consulted in regard to it, and let them be told to suggest any amendments they choose. Another feature of the Bill that I do not agree with is that regarding the payment of the fine. It is repugnant to me that we should pass any Act here with a penalty clause which gives to the informant one-half or one-quarter of the fine, or any part of it. I thoroughly believe that all fines should go to the Crown, and that the Crown should itself enforce the Act. I know that a great many people have a serious objection to that mode of proceeding. The only department of the government where that principle may perhaps be justified, is the customs. There it may be necessary, but I say we should avoid as far as possible introducing that principle into any other Bill.

Mr. HALE. I believe this Bill is in the right direction. I am sorry that I cannot agree with the last speaker (Mr. Ross, Ontario), who thinks the Bill should not become law now. If there is an evil in this country, as it is clear we have in this respect, where bad seed is being scattered broadcast over the country, why should we allow the dealers another year to get rid of that seed by placing it on the market? I think the sooner this Bill becomes law the better, and I think it should be placed upon the statute-book this year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Moved to amend section 4 by inserting after the word 'sale' in the 22nd line, the words, 'for the purpose of seeding within the Dominion of Canada.'

Mr. SPROULE. How are you going to establish that fact? If a man has such seed, upon whom will rest the responsibility of showing that it is for the purpose of seeding in the Dominion of Canada?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When he holds seed in his warehouse or place of business, it will be held to be for sale in the Dominion of Canada. If, however, it is exported, the bill of lading which he sends forward will show that it is for export and not for sale in the Dominion of Canada. Until he takes positive steps to export it, the seed will be held to be for sale in the Dominion of Canada.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were two amendments to be added to section 6. One of them, subsection (c), was carried the other day. Now, I propose another one as subsection (d), which is to meet the view expressed the other day that a farmer might desire to sell to his neighbour. This is to protect him in such transaction, but where the purchaser desires to have the provisions of the Act apply, he will have a right to express such desire, and the provisions of the Act will apply.

Mr. GILMOUR. I think he should ask in writing for the statutory seed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think we need imply in the law that it need be put in writing, but after being considered if it is thought necessary by the law department I will be glad to make such a provision.

Mr. GILMOUR. If a person is made liable to be fined, I think the evidence against him should be perfectly clear, that he contravened the law, and in this case it could only be made clear when one farmer had from the other a statement in writing that he had purchased statutory seed.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose I buy seed by sample and it is said to be No. 1, or No. 2, or No. 3, I have obtained it under this Act because this is the only Act that describes what No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 seed is. I find afterwards that the seed contains noxious weeds. I fall back upon the dealer and ask damages from him because he gave me seed that was not up to the standard. Well, he would set up the plea that it was not sold under this Act, although as a matter of fact, it was sold under this Act for grade.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. Minister of Agriculture proposes to amend section 6 by adding a subsection to be known as subsection (d) as follows :

> Or to seed that is grown and sold by any farmer on his own premises unless the purchaser of said seed demands from the seller at the time of the sale thereof that the said seed be supplied to him subject to the provisions of this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose he buys it for No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 it is subject to the provisions of this Act, and would he not be justified in setting up in court that it was bought under the provisions of this Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think he could very well do that, but some proviso may be added to this subsection as the following which I merely suggest off-hand : 'which fact should be expressed in a receipt given for the payment for the seed.' The intention of this clause is that the purchaser shall ask a stipulation that the seed is sold to him under the provisions of this Act. That is a positive Act on the part of the purchaser and without that positive Act, on the part of the purchaser the idea is that the seller would not be subject to the provisions of the Act. Then, as a proof that the purchaser made that stipulation he should require it to be acknowledged in the receipt for the payment of the grain, and if it was not so acknowledged in the receipt for payment, then there would be no proof that he made such a stipulation. That would be proof in writing and that would be proof in writing which the purchaser would hold as he would his receipt for the payment.

Mr. McCREARY. You would make the seller give a certificate if the purchaser demanded it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, and if the purchaser did not make that stipulation at the time of the transaction, then, the seller would be free from all responsibility under the provisions of this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I am very much afraid that would be difficult to carry out.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I cannot see any difficulty in carrying out the intention of the hon. minister in connection with that matter. One farmer goes to another and says: 'I want to buy some seed.' The other asks: 'Do you want it for seeding purposes ?' 'Yes,' don't you know there is an Act governing the sale of grain for seed purposes ? Will you sell me seed that comes up to the requirements of the Act ?' 'Yes.' The bargain is made on that condition. 'Well' the purchaser says 'of course, you will give me a certificate to that effect ?' and the seller would say: 'Yes.' If the purchaser paid the seller 10 or 15 cents a bushel more for his grain because he required to use it for seed I should think he would have the right to get seed that would come under the provisions of the Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest to the hon. minister that it would be more practicable if he would insert the word 'obtains' in his amendment instead of the word 'demands.' Otherwise we would be in this position that a farmer would say that he demanded a receipt but he would not have the benefit of getting it in writing. Unless he had it in writing I do not think a case could be established. It is something like the law requiring the description of certain classes of merchandise to be in writing. I refer to the statute of frauds. I do not think a person should be liable to the penalties of the Act unless it is conclusively shown that he sold grain for seed purposes. The efficacy of the law would be taken away if there was no statement in writing, because the purchaser could come forward and say : It is true I got no writing. I have no evidence against this man in his own hand writing that he sold me this seed under this Act ; still, I am prepared to swear that I demanded it, and we would then be in the unfortunate position of having oath against oath. I think the hon. minister should put in the words 'unless he obtains,' because, if he does not obtain it he need not buy the seed. He should not buy the seed unless he obtains a receipt stating that the seed is sold under the provisions of the Act.

Mr. GILMOUR. Another way in which it could be made certain is by requiring that the farmer selling statutory seed should have the same mark on it that the merchant is required to have who sells statutory seed. That would be proof positive.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The amendment as it stands, I think, perhaps, would be a little more perfect if the change which my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) suggests were made and if the word 'obtains' were substituted for the word 'demands,' and a change were made providing that a certificate should be supplied to the purchaser stating that the seed supplied to him was subject to the provisions of this Act. I propose that the amendment shall read as follows :

(a.) Or to seed that is grown and sold by any farmer on his own premises, unless the purchaser of said seed obtains from the seller at the time of the sale thereof a certificate that the said seed be supplied to him subject to the provisions of this Act.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Ross) asked on a previous occasion as to the effect of section (b) of clause 6, which, as printed, reads :

Any person selling seeds direct to merchants to be cleaned and graded before being offered for sale for the purposes of seeding.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) suggested that this would not protect the farmer who sold to a country merchant who did not intend to grade or clean the seed, but to sell it again to a regular seed dealer who had an appliance for cleaning and grading. I have consulted several lawyers, and especially the deputy of my department, and they hold that the words 'to be cleaned and graded before being offered for sale' relieve the farmer from any responsibility who sells to the country merchant, who in turn sells to the larger merchant, with the intention of having the seed cleaned and graded before being sold for seeding purposes. The belief is that this clause completely protects the country merchant who purchases from the farmer with the intention afterwards of selling to the seed merchant, who would clean and grade.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I buy a great many seeds, and some that are not sold by retail or sold for seeding. We handle a great many seeds which are sold to dealers, who, in their turn, reclean and grade them, and under these circumstances, I was anxious to know whether I could still continue my business. I am glad to hear from the hon. minister that the clause covers that. I would suggest to him that the word 'or' should be substituted for the word 'and,' so that the clause would read :

Any person selling seeds direct to merchants to be cleaned 'or' graded.

We avoid as much as possible buying uncleaned small seed, that is seed that has the chaff in it, just as it comes from the threshers, but sometimes we are compelled to take it. We also buy seed which the farmer calls sufficiently clean, and if the word 'or' were inserted, that seed could be sold for grading purposes. It perhaps might not be quite clean, but it would go to be graded and if the word 'or' were inserted, it would cover that. I think it would improve the section.

Mr. SPROULE. Some seedsmen in my locality buy seeds from the farmers and sell them wholesale or retail, but never clean them, because they have no cleaning apparatus. Suppose they sold to a person who did not clean or grade it, what would be the condition then ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the farmer sold it for seeding purposes, the farmer would be liable.

Mr. SPROULE. But the farmer might say that he did not sell it for seeding purposes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The merchant who sold it to another farmer for seeding purposes would be liable. If the country merchant sold it to a seed merchant who went into the cleaning and grading of seeds, the country merchant would not be liable, because he is selling it for the purpose of cleaning and grading, and not for seeding. I do not think there is any objection to the word 'or' being substituted for the word 'and,' and perhaps it may improve the section. This clause would not cover the case where the country merchant sold uncleaned seed to a farmer for seeding purposes, and I do not think it ought, because the country merchant should be subject to the same law as the wholesale seed dealer if he sells to a farmer for seeding purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told by a gentleman of experience that this law would drive a number of men out of the business, and therefore it would reduce the competition in the sale of seed. I gave this Bill to a gentleman to examine it carefully, and he said that either the Act must remain a dead letter or otherwise a number of persons who dealt in seed would be liable to be mulcted very frequently. This gentleman has handled seeds for the last twenty years, and he has no apparatus for cleaning them. Another gentleman who does purchase and clean seeds told me that he thought he would not be able to carry on his business under this Bill. It seems to me that the measure is likely to be very unpopular. It might be made as perfect as possible, and then allow it to stand over for another session, until we get suggestions from seedsmen and farmers which would make it workable.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is what we are trying to do now. There is no doubt that the country merchants who sell seeds to the farmers for seeding purposes ought to be liable to the same conditions as the general seed merchants.

Mr. STEPHENS. If a merchant takes so little interest in his business that he would not prepare himself to clean the seed and make it fit for farmers to use, he should not be allowed to stay in the business to the detriment of all the farmers who dealt with him.

Mr. HUGHES (P.E.I.). If this Bill does not prevent men from selling the seeds of noxious weeds for good seeds, then it is of no use at all. If you make the Bill so that it will allow a man to sell weed seeds for other seeds, and if he can go on with his business in that line just as before, then there would be no use placing this Act upon the statute-book. My hon. friend seems to wish to make the Bill so wide and easy in order to make it workable, that it will work no injury to any man, and he can sell what he likes. Certainly the Bill must interfere with the business of those men who sell noxious weed seeds, no matter who they may be, and every person recognizes that a great deal of harm is done in that way. We recognize that by passing this Bill, and I would suggest that this clause be allowed to go through as it is.

Mr. SPROULE. I am simply drawing attention to the objection which has been raised by the men in the business. These men very often purchase from one farmer and sell to another. They do that for the convenience of the farmers, and no doubt make a little profit out of the transaction as well. It is because of the contention of these men that they cannot carry on their business without violating the law, that I am suggesting that we should not pass the Bill at once, but let it stand over in order to see if some suggestion cannot be made whereby these men shall be able to carry on their business, and do it profitably without violating the law.

Mr. BRUCE. There is no doubt that this Bill is a very serious matter, both to the seedsman and to the farmer. We are not likely to place ourselves in danger of coming under the penalties of this Act without taking the greatest precaution in regard to the seeds we buy. The farmers who produce the seeds have not yet had an opportunity to make careful preparation for the Act. When the farmer has had an opportunity to learn that he cannot sell the poor seed which he has been in the habit of producing, he will not produce it. If this measure be made law now, he not only looses the value of his hay crop, but his seed as well. It would be a very serious mistake to bring this Act into force at once. I notice from 'Hansard' that when the Bill was discussed last week, the hon. minister said that the farmers had not the necessary machinery for cleaning seed. I think every farmer who cleans seed for sale should have the necessary machinery. It is a very simple thing. A farmer can get a perfect seed mill for $25, and that would enable him to sell his seed to his neighbour. Under existing conditions, as the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) stated the other night, it would be necessary to establish seed shops in every township. The farmers ought to have the machinery necessary to put their grain into marketable condition before they can sell it, and there is no reason why they should not have such machinery.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend was not here the other evening when I stated the result of the tests made of various samples of seed; but they show that even without any warning such as that which has been before the country by reason of the discussion of this Bill, the proportion of seed which is bad in this way is not so very great.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I do not see quite clearly how a farmer would know, when he is offering seed for sale, say to a jobber, whether it is to be re-cleaned or not. In what way is the farmer to be relieved?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In any prosecution under the Act, the proof would have to be brought forward. As a general rule, jobbers do not buy seed for seed purposes. In the case mentioned, the jobber would have to prove that he had bought it for seed purposes.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). The farmer would have to ask the purchaser whether the seed was to be re-cleaned and graded or not?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so. The clause does not mean that.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7,

Every person who, by himself or through the agency of another person, violates any of the provisions of sections 3, 4 and 5 of this Act, shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a fine for the first offence not exceeding twenty-five dollars and not less than five dollars, and for each subsequent offence not exceeding fifty dollars and not less than ten dollars, together with the costs of prosecution, for each receptacle, package, sack or bag in or from which seeds are sold, offered, exposed or had in possession for sale, contrary to the provisions of the said sections; and, in default of paying such fine and costs, shall be liable to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one month, unless such fine and the costs of enforcing it are sooner paid.

Mr. BRUCE. I understand that the penalties imposed by this Act are taken from the Adulteration Act. There is no charge that either the seedsmen or the farmers of the country have been guilty of anything in the shape of adulteration, and I think the penalties are unnecessarily severe. I notice that the amendment of the minister has reduced them considerably; but I think they should be made simply nominal, for the purpose of carrying out the Act as intended. I understand perfectly well that the minister has no intention of doing an injustice to the farmer or any injury to the seedsman; but that his object is only to make them both live up as closely to this Act as possible.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think the penalties imposed in this section are at all undue.

On section 7a,

Any person domiciled within the Dominion of Canada who sells seeds in packages, sacks or bags, sealed by him, shall alone be held to the observance of the provisions of this Act with respect to said seeds, so long as the same are sold without the seal thereon being broken; and such person shall not be responsible therefor after the seal thereon is broken, unless at the time of breaking of said seal a sample of said seeds for official test is taken and inclosed in a sealed package in the presence of two non-interested witnesses; and in no case shall the responsibility of such person for such seeds extend beyond ninety days from the date of placing the seal thereon, which date must be plainly marked on said packages, sacks or bags.

Mr. WRIGHT. How will that affect the retail merchant who gets long grass or clover in seed packages of a quarter of a pound each? There is no seal on them, but they are just fastened together with mucilage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A seal would have to be put upon the package. The wholesale dealer is only held responsible so long as the seal is unbroken.

Mr. SPROULE. The time limit is ninety days. Suppose the seedsmen did not dispose of the seeds inside that time?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He could no longer hold the wholesale dealer responsible, unless before the ninety days he had taken a sample and inclosed it in a sealed package.

Mr. SPROULE. Every package should show on its face the date on which it was put up.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The clause says so.

Mr. SPROULE. In what position would the seller be after ninety days?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He then would be responsible.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Does the hon. minister intend appointing an inspector?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have no intention of appointing an inspector outside the present staff of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. After ninety days that wholesale dealer is not responsible? He must put a date on each seal. But he may be putting up and sealing thousands of these packages, must he stamp them all?

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Is it the date of the sale or the shipment that he puts on the seal? Suppose a sale was made in July for shipment in October, which date would be put on?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should suppose myself that the seal would be put on at the time the seeds were put up. Of course the wholesaler might chose to put up a lot of packages before making a sale. In such a case, he would put a date on each. If the seeds are sealed up for ninety days, they would be as likely to deteriorate in the hands of the wholesaler as the retailer.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the wholesaler puts up impure seeds and keeps them in his store until the ninety days have expired and then sells them, is he relieved from responsibility?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, he is after the ninety days.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A wholesale dealer has a lot of seed. He puts up a portion of it at the beginning of the ninety days and the rest of the stuff he does not put up until after the ninety days—what is the object?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The seed merchants complain that they might put up perfectly pure seed which would go into the hands of the retailer, and then the retailer would adulterate the seed, but the name of the wholesale dealer would be on the package. A farmer who bought from the retailer a package, might sample and test it, and find that the seed was adulterated and he would come on the retail dealer. But the retail dealer would say: I bought that from the wholesale dealer as pure seed, and I ought not be liable. The wholesale dealer, whose name is on the package, wants protection, and we are providing protection, if he chooses to put a seal on the package which he sells to the retailer. As long as that seal is unbroken, he is held responsible during ninety days from the date of putting on the seal. As soon as the seal is broken or the ninety days have expired, he is no longer responsible.

Mr. SPROULE. When do the ninety days begin to count?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From the time the seal is put on. The retailer can protect himself, when he opens the package, by taking out a sample and by inclosing it under seal in another package in the presence of two witnesses.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Suppose the retailer opens the bag and sells part of it, what becomes of the rest?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The retailer is responsible after the seal is broken. But if he keeps the seal over ninety days without breaking the seal, the wholesaler will be no longer responsible.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). May not the retailer then sell that seed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but subject to the provisions of the Bill. If he sells seed mixed with weeds or which does not germinate, he will be liable to the penalty.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Does the hon. minister mean to say that if a wholesaler sells a retailer seeds on a ninety day guarantee, that guarantee does not start at the time the goods are shipped ? If it starts sixty days before the goods are shipped, then the retailer has only thirty days in which to recoup himself.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The wholesaler is relieved of the responsibility after the seal is broken or after ninety days. If the retailer thinks that the date of the seal is too far back, he need not purchase it, or he may insist that the seal be dated when he purchases the seed.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Has he that privilege ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly. The only thing is, the wholesaler is responsible so long as his seal is unbroken, up to a limit of ninety days. If the seal is broken, the retailer has to assume the responsibility, except that he takes a sample of the seed and that sample will be proof of the quality. If the retailer, however, holds the seed for longer than ninety days he is responsible, no matter whether the seal is broken or not.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Does the hon. minister intend keeping a check on this sealing up business? Is he going to have an inspector in every seed warehouse in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is simply a matter of precaution as between the wholesaler and the retailer. The wholesaler is afraid the retailer will change the seed in the packages. Suppose, for instance Mr. Rennie, of Toronto, should sell seed to John Jones, a country merchant. He puts on the package his name, 'Rennie,' a name which carries weight in the seed market. The retailer takes the seed out of the package and fills the package with other seed, selling it as Rennie's. If the retailer were fined for selling such seed, Mr. Rennie's reputation would suffer.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And so would that of the retailer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But he would try to evade the blame by saying that he had received the seed from Rennie and was faultless in the matter.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Was there ever a case in which a retailer was fined for selling impure seeds ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There has been no law under which he could be fined, except the common law. We are trying to provide machinery to meet such cases. The seed merchants tell us that if the Bill had not such provision they might be liable to such misrepresentation and they wish to be protected. This clause is for the purpose of providing means by which a wholesale seed merchant may protect himself in a certain manner for a certain time.

Mr. SPROULE. But suppose a retailer bought a thousand packages of seed. If he wished to protect himself must he take a sample of every half-pound package ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As a matter of fact, seed merchants do not sell seeds in packages, except garden flower seeds, which are to be exempt from the operation of this law.

Mr. SPROULE. Turnip and carrot seeds are sold in packages.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As between the wholesaler and the retailer, they are sold in bulk, and the retailer puts them in smaller packages.

Mr. SPROULE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—these seeds are sold by the wholesaler in packages. We buy nearly all our mangel seeds in packages, because they are supposed to be a little better. And the same way with turnip seeds.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Such transactions will not come within the operation of the Act when the word 'vegetable' is struck out of the third section.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is one point I would like to understand. A wholesaler sells seeds in sealed packages. At the end of ninety days he is relieved of responsibility. But suppose after ninety days the package is broken open and it is found to contain a large proportion of weed seeds. Is the wholesaler responsible or is he still relieved of responsibility ?

Mr. SPROULE. The retailer would be responsible and the wholesaler would be relieved.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not think the law should be made to work that way.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the effect of the Bill.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The whole thing is a little seedy.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We were considering clause 7a.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that clause is hardly what it ought to be to protect the retail dealer. While it would be a protection to the wholesale man, it would be little protection to the retailer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Perhaps the date ought to be reckoned from the sale of the seeds. In that adjoining section, I had intended that the sealing should be done at the time of the sale or the shipment. I had no idea of seed being put up in quantities with the seal on it while still held in the hands of the dealer for future sale. If that were done, it would to a certain extent meet the intion of the section. I would therefore be disposed to change the section and make it read :

In no case shall the responsibility of such person for such seeds extend beyond ninety days from the date of the sale thereof.

Instead of saying 'the date of placing the seal thereof.'

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). That is better.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That might be still a little indefinite; the sale and the shipment might not necessarily be at the same time. Now, the sale might be held to take place at the time the order was given, though the dealer might not deliver for several months after, in which case ninety days ought to be counted from the time he put up the seeds and shipped them. I would ask the opinion of the hon. member for Hamilton, who is in the trade.

Mr. BRUCE. Do I understand this refers to clover and grass seeds?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. Exclusively?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To all seeds that come under the operation of the Act.

Mr. BRUCE. It would be rather a serious matter for the dealers. Clover and grass seed are sold entirely for cash, we draw immediately upon shipment. If the buyer were enabled to hold this seed for ninety deys and then to put in a complaint about it, it would be a very serious obstacle to the business. The profits on clovers and grass seeds are infinitesimal, and the dealers could not afford to carry the seeds for a long time. If it was simply a matter of forty or fifty bags of seed, the country dealer could test the seed without breaking the seal, except of one bag, and make a complaint if necessary. He could try a bag of seed with one of these little triers as soon as he received it, and if he had any objection he could make a complaint to the shipper. But no seedsman could possibly do business under that provision and carry it for ninety days.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have proposed another section 12 instead of the present section 12, which will read :

Any sample of seeds taken from any seeds which are found or suspected to be sold in violation of the provisions of this Act, shall, within a delay of seven days, be reckoned (a) in the case of seeds under seal as aforesaid, from the date of the breaking of the seal ; in all other cases, from the date on which the said seed entered into the personal possession and became the property of the purchaser.

The printed section 12 says simply seven days in all cases, it was intended to be seven days after breaking the seal. Of course, in that case the test need not be made at any time during the ninety days, or until breaking the seal.

Mr. BRUCE. Seven days after breaking the seal would not answer the purpose, because he might carry it for the full ninety days and he would still be under obligation. I think the seven days given to the wholesaler after shipment would be quite sufficient for a cash article, when settlement is to be made immediately upon receipt of the seed.

Mr. GILMOUR. During seven days the seal should not be broken, because the moment the seal is broken and the bag opened, the wholesale man should not be held responsible for that opened bag, because other seed might be put into it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The intention is that the wholesaler shall only be responsible until the seal is broken. The ninety days is rather a restriction of that, because even if the seal was not broken at the end of ninety days, the wholesaler would be relieved of all responsibility.

Mr. GILMOUR. I agree with the hon. member for Hamilton. Why should the wholesaler have ninety days ? He can ascertain directly whether it is up to the standard or not, and he should be relieved at once. To carry it for ninety days would almost mean that the money should not be paid until the ninety days were over.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the minister to explain how the penalties imposed by this Act will be enforced when a conviction is secured against either the wholesale merchant or the retail merchant. Is it expected that every retail merchant will be an analyst, and that he will know when he opens the bag whether the seed comes up to the standard or not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He will take a sample and send it to the analyst in the department, who will test it for him and report.

Mr. TAYLOR. But before he gets that done the season will be over for making use of the seed.

Mr. BRUCE. As I understand it, the department will regulate the grades of the seed at the beginning of the season, so that not only the wholesale seedsman but the retailer will understand what the grades are. If the wholesale seedsman ships to the retailer, the latter can get samples from the department here according to the grades they have established, 1, 2 or 3, and he can compare the shipment with the sample from the department. It would be a simple matter, on the receipt of any shipment, to tell whether the seed is up to grade. But there should be no indefinite time such as ninety days, because it would be impossible to conduct business under those conditions.

Mr. TAYLOR. That may be the plan by which the minister intends to work it out for the security of the retail merchant. But I am bound to say that there is not a retail merchant in the country who is competent to discover from a sample of timothy seed how many foul seeds there may be in it. I could tell daisy seed in a sample of timothy, but there are other foul seeds more injurious than daisy that I could not tell. Let me give an illustration : A retail merchant sends to my hon. friend, or to Mr. Rennie, the seedsman whom the minister recommended, for a bag of timothy or of clover or of alsike. He receives these three bags stamped with the name of the seed merchant and there is a seal on them. He breaks the seal before he can look at the seed. The seedsman is liberated as soon as the seal is broken. The dealer breaks the seal in the presence of two farmers. The seed looks all right at the mouths of the bags. It may be up to the standard so far as he is competent to judge. He takes a sample out of each bag in the presence of the farmers, they seal the samples up, put their names upon them and they are put away in a drawer. Then the merchant deals out to the first farmer a peck or a bushel taken from each of these bags. The other farmer wants the same quantity and he gets his peck or bushel out of each of these bags. Then the farmers go home to their farms. They have both clean land on which to sow the seed. After they have sown their grain they sow their timothy and their alsike. It will not develop foul seed at once. When the farmer cuts his crop of grain off he finds that he has a good catch of seed, but it does not fully develop until next spring, and then he gets his crop of hay. Perhaps one of those farmers will say that the seed produced its kind and that he never had better seed on the farm. The other will come back to the merchant and say : The crop the seed for which I got from you, was full of foul weeds. How is the hon. minister going to convict the merchant who sold the seed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A sample is taken and either of these farmers who bought the seed can have that sample forwarded to the seed laboratory and a test will show the exact condition of the seed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I explained that the sample was taken, but it was from the mouth of the bag. One farmer had got his seed out of the mouth of the bag while the foul seed was found below that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A proper sample would not be taken out of the mouth of the bag.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is he going to empty that bag out in order to get a sample ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, there is a very simple contrivance costing about twenty-five cents by which they can take samples from any portion of the bag. A proper sample would be taken in that way.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, each merchant who handles seed has to provide himself with one of these contrivances ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it will be wise for him to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR. If you establish a laboratory and the sample upon examination is found to be foul, perhaps the farmer could get back at the wholesale merchant, but the farmer cannot tell for six or eight months after he has sown the seed whether he has foul seed or not. It would be impossible for him to prove that he purchased this foul seed from the merchant because any man might walk upon the farm at night and sow foul seed. It looks as if this Bill will be entirely unworkable, a great disturbance to the trade and of no great benefit to the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is perfectly right in saying that somebody could walk upon a farmer's land and sow foul seed, although I do not think it is at all likely to be done by any person but the farmer himself, but I admit frankly that the growth of weeds is not a sufficient proof that the seed contained foul weed seeds. Many weed seeds will stay for a considerable length of time in the land before germinating and they are carried by wind and birds from one farm to another, and from one field to another, but, I think the machinery that we propose is quite sufficient to prove the quality of the seed that is sown. That is all we can do. We do not expect to perform miracles, but we believe that we can minimize the risks and difficulties attendent upon the sale of seed.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Section 3 says that any person who sells seeds containing noxious weed seeds shall be liable. It is not the intention of the hon. minister to allow either the 90 day or the 7 day clause to interfere with that prohibition as far as noxious weeds are concerned, is it ? I presume that must refer to germination.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The seven days is merely the time within which the sample must be taken. This is simply to insure that the sample by which the shipment or delivery of seeds is judged shall be taken at once. If it is not taken at once it would not be fair to judge the seeds by that sample. The seven days period is given as a reasonable time within which the merchant can take his sample. I think there might be a less delay than that—three or four days possibly. The 90 days in clause 7 deals with a totally different point, and I am not at all certain from what has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Bruce) but what it would be better to expunge that part from the guarantee. I can understand from what he says the difficulties in the trade which might arise from the insertion of the 90 days clause. I would be disposed from what he says to leave that out. That was simply put in as an assistance to the wholesale dealer to limit his responsibility. Even if the seal was unbroken he should not be responsible for more than 90 days, but if that is stricken out, then he would be responsible just as long as the seal was unbroken.

Mr. BRUCE. Those engaged in the trade would simply have to make a personal agreement with the purchaser that unless the seed was returned within a certain number of days they would not be responsible for it. In regard to the remarks of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) I may say that I have never been in favour of coercive measures. I think that education does a great deal more than you can do by coercing people, but if this Bill is likely to become law the trade and the farmers will have to take the best means possible to protect themselves. I do not know myself, after fifty years experience in the business, of any country in the world where there are such restrictions in regard to the sale of seeds as are proposed to be applied under this Bill, and there are countries that have had greater and longer experience than Canada has had up to this time. The object of the hon. minister is the production of the cleanest seeds that can possibly be obtained, and that is the object of a seedsman as well. No seedsman can carry on a satisfactory business unless he applies himself constantly to the accomplishment of that end. I have had some experience in the business, and I understand perfectly what that means. If you disappoint a customer you never can get him back again and the object of any man in business is to retain his customers. The hon. minister knows perfectly well that it is impossible to get clean seeds unless they are grown on clean land, there should be some restriction in the Act compelling farmers not to offer the seed for sale grown upon lands polluted with wild mustard and some other impurities which are particularly objectionable. A great deal of good has been done by the Department of Agriculture in connection with the meetings of farmers' institutes. We find during the last few years that there has been an increasing inquiry for the better quality of seeds. Nine out of ten farmers will come into my warehouse and buy the best seed we have, and will not look at the second quality. Sometimes a farmer who has a rented farm and who is not particular about results will buy indifferent seeds, but the best farmers will not buy any but the very best, and they can get in Canada the best seeds that are procurable in the world.

Mr. WRIGHT. This thing will gradually rectify itself. When this law passes and the seed dealers find it is necessary for them to have clean seed, they will send an inspector around themselves and see where the grain is being grown and that there are no weeds in it. For example, we grew a large quantity of pease for sale to the American market, and we hand-picked them all, and have fifty or sixty women picking them over, so that they would be perfectly clean. The American purchasers of these seeds sent out inspectors, who went through the fields where the pease were grown, and if they found there were any weeds in the crop they would have them picked out. The seedsmen who will buy these seeds will similarly go to the farmer and see whether the fields are perfectly clean or not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I appreciate very highly the statement of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Bruce) with regard to the educational work that has been done in the country by the officers of my department. I am glad to hear that the people are asking for the best quality of seeds, and that is a most gratifying fact to me as the result of work which has been done by my department. I believe that that educational work will go on in the future as it has been going on in the past. The hon. gentleman says that if this Act was to come into force he would reject about 50 per cent of the seed which he purchases from the farmers, instead of 10 per cent as now. That would be one of the most beneficial educational forces that could be exerted in the country. My hon. friend (Mr. Bruce) and some others of the most reliable and most experienced dealers in the country do reject seed which is full of impurities when it comes into them, and if they would reject more I am satisfied that it would be all the better. Some may say that this is going to cut some farmers out of their seed trade, but if it is going to cut the farmers out of the sale of weed seeds, I would be glad of it. That action on the part of the seed dealers will accomplish much in an educative way. It is not so long since country store keepers purchased good, bad and indifferent butter, and paid an average price per pound for it, but that kind of thing has passed away in this country, and to-day the farmer who makes good butter gets a better price for it than the farmer who makes bad butter. And so if the seed merchants will pay the farmers according to the quality of the seed, the farmer will soon find that it will pay him better to keep his seeds clean. If the seed merchants would go a little further and, as my hon. friend from Renfrew has described, send inspectors out to examine the fields, they will get better seeds than they now do. It may be that some of them do it now, but, judging by this discussion, I do not think that they engage in such work as this.

Mr. SPROULE. Seven out of ten farmers sell more or less seed every year, and that would practically mean that you would have to inspect every farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the seed merchants, as a rule, buy from particular farmers, and they could examine the fields of these farmers without much trouble. In the case cited by the member for Renfrew, the inspectors were sent to Canada by the United States seed merchants.

Mr. SPROULE. In my section of the country men will come in with a load of seed fifteen or twenty miles, and that seed will include alsike, mammoth clover and different others, and if you followed out that plan, you might as well go out and inspect every farm.

Mr. BRUCE. Do I understand that the minister expects the seedsmen to inspect the fields ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not say I expected it, but I think in many instances it would be advisable.

Mr. BRUCE. Many of the best farmers make a practice of going over the fields before they are cut, because if there are weeds in the field it is utterly impossible to separate the weed from the seed when the threshing takes place. A careful farmer will cut the weeds before the crop is cut. I wish to address some observations to the minister in regard to the question of germination. I think the seedsmen who interviewed the Minister of Agriculture mentioned that it would be very difficult for them to comply with the regulations with regard to germination. For instance, I get a carload of seed to-day and I ship out the most of it that day or the following day, and it is impossible for me to test the germination in that time. With a short season, lasting three or four months, and carloads going out and carloads coming in, it would be impossible to test the germination. I know perfectly well that there is very little difficulty with regard to timothy and clover, because, if you get new seeds and you can tell them by their colour, there is never any doubt about the germination, so that we pay very little attention to the question of germination in clover and timothy. In the case of vegetables and feed seeds, we are most particular. We get them in bulk from growers early in the season, and we have an opportunity to test their germinating qualities long before they are sold. It would be utterly impossible for us to test the germination of clover and grasses as they come in and go out ; but, of course, we can tell very easily whether they are new or old seeds. It does not pay any dealer to carry seeds over for one year. The interest on the seeds carried over will amount to the profit.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say, before recess, that the ninety-day limit he thought quite sufficient, because during those ninety days the seeds would deteriorate, particularly timothy. Now, I would like to ask my hon. friend from Hamilton, who is a practical man, will timothy seed deteriorate in ninety days ?

Mr. BRUCE. Not unless it happens to be mouldy or heated. If it is in perfect condition when put into the bags, it will keep for three years.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman misquoted me. I said timothy seed which had lost its hulls. I think that makes a difference.

Mr. BRUCE. Hulled timothy seed will retain its vitality for three years, and I do not think you will find any difference in its germination.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think, from what I have been told, that a seed expert as a rule can tell pretty well the germinating quality of a seed by looking at it—not absolutely perhaps, but pretty closely ; and I think I am justified in saying that from what my hon. friend has just said.

Mr. BRUCE. There is no doubt about that at all. We would not be afraid of the restrictions of the Act in reference to germination.

Mr. SPROULE. The germinating quality of good, healthy, fresh clover and grass seed is usually all right. But the seeds with which the farmers with us find the greatest trouble are mangold seeds and beet seeds. It is the very common opinion among farmers that the dealers, when they keep the seeds over a year, steep the old seeds, skim off those that float, and mix the others with the new seeds and sell them. There is a great complaint in our part of the country that not one-half or one-quarter of the mangold or beet seeds will grow. We scarcely ever hear a complaint about clover or grass seed.

Mr. FRASER. Do I understand that that method, of putting seeds in water, is taken with seeds not immediately planted ?

Mr. SPROULE. It is said so. I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. FRASER. I would not think that seeds put into water to be tested in that way would afterwards be sold as a commercial article.

Mr. BRUCE. I would say, in reply to the hon. member for East Grey, that the idea that old seeds are put into water so that the defective seed may be floated or skimmed off is an absolute fallacy. It would be impossible to turn over tons of stuff to swim it, and then dry it again. I never heard of such a thing being done. With regard to the germination of mangold or sugar beet seeds, I may say that every perfect seed will produce a true plant, and mangold seeds will retain their vitality for a long time ; but no seedsman or grower can take the responsibility of making a seed germinate after it is put in the ground, if it has not the proper conditions of soil, climate and rain.

Mr. SPROULE. But where the conditions seem to be favourable in every respect, the soil properly worked up and the moisture all right, you naturally look for a fair proportion of the seeds to grow ; but when you find that only one-half or one-quarter of them grow, you naturally conclude that the seed could not have been very good.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will ask that the section immediately after section 7a be allowed to stand for further consideration, as it is not in quite the shape in which it ought to be for an enactment.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister had better let the whole Bill stand. As it is to-day, with all the amendments made to it, the hon. gentleman would hardly recognize it as his own child. It came before the House in such a crude shape that it required all these amendments. I think he had better take the advice of his friends on both sides and ask that the committee rise, report progress and sit again next session.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are some other things to be considered before we reach that point.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This refers also to the question of the seal, and as it is bound up with that section which I have just asked to stand, I would ask that this be allowed to stand also.

Section allowed to stand.

Section 12, amended as proposed, agreed to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved that section 15 be reinstated, and be amended to read as follows :

Any pecuniary penalty imposed under this Act shall, when recovered, be payable one-half to the informant or complainant, and the other half to His Majesty, when such informant or complainant is the purchaser of the seeds with respect to which the penalty is imposed. In all other cases the whole of the penalty shall be payable to His Majesty.

Mr. GILMOUR. The purchaser might not be a bona fide purchaser. He might just have bought a pound of seed to put himself within the law and become a common informer. There is nothing worse in our country than the trade of the informer. It is most disreputable and leads to serious consequences. We had a sample of it in the working out of the Scott Act, and this would not be much better. The amendment which the hon. minister has proposed does not improve his Bill.

Mr. BRUCE. I thoroughly agree with my hon. friend from Middlesex. Whatever may be the penalty, and it should not be too large—it ought to go entirely to the government. We ought not to encourage people to become informants because there are too many men looking after such opportunities. I do not think that our seedsmen and farmers should be brought into the category of misdemeanants.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think that the dangers alluded to need be apprehended. Reference has been made to the Scott Act. Well, my own county was under that Act many years, and we had no abuses such as those mentioned. I know that in some parts of the country it was said that such abuses took place, but I think the reports were exaggerated. It was a very rare occurrence indeed when anybody gave information simply to get the fee. The reason for this clause is that the farmer or purchaser of seed, who has suffered by reason of his having purchased improper seed, is performing a public service when he prosecutes the seller; but if he has to do it at his own expense, he will probably think that he has suffered enough already, without going to the trouble of a prosecution, when he has to run all the risk without any chance of being reimbursed. However, I am in the hands of the committee and quite content to abide by its decision.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). This kind of legislation is not right. If a farmer is aggrieved he has his remedy. He can bring an action and have the man fined. In my opinion the whole money should go to the Crown. A very special case would have to be made out before I would consent to furnishing opportunities to our farmers to go into the business of informing. I would ask the hon. minister to strike out that clause.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As the sense of the committee is against the clause, I withdraw my motion.

Motion withdrawn.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. GILMOUR. I would suggest to the hon. minister that he should have this Bill reprinted so that we may see exactly what it is. It has met with considerable opposition, but I believe that there is more merit in it than there was in the Fruits Marks Act, because in that Act the packers of apples are required to be learned in the law. They have to bring out the statute and lay it on the barrel in order to mark their barrels in accordance with the statutes. Then should they mark their barrels wrong—and they might easily do that because the quality of the fruit is only a matter of opinion—they are responsible for their action. This Bill has more merit than even the Butter Bill, because that Bill gave a privilege to certain individuals to stamp their butter as creamery butter which was refused to the other individuals just as well entitled to it. And in another part of that Bill, dairy butter of the commonest quality is allowed to be freely sold, but you are not allowed to clarify it and sell it after it has been thus made more palatable. I hope that the hon. minister will be able to make this Bill workable, as in such case it will be better perhaps for the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am exceedingly gratified by the compliment which my hon. friend has paid me when he said that there is more merit in this Bill than in the Fruits Marks' Act. That Act has done inestimable good to the fruit trade. Of this I have convincing proofs every day, not only in this country but in Europe. In saying therefore that this measure has more merit than the Fruits Marks' Act, he is paying it the highest possible compliment.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask another question. Should this Bill become law, suppose a farmer finds seeds, which were sold to him as pure, to be mixed with obnoxious weeds, would he not have an action for damage against the seedsman, even though the seedsman stated in his catalogue that he did not guarantee the seed. The seedsman could not shelter himself behind this Act. The law makes the standard. The standard says the seed shall be pure, and the farmer purchases it, believing it to be pure. Suppose he finds it is not pure, what remedy would the farmer have in law against the seller ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) ought not to appeal to me on a question of law for I am not a lawyer——

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. gentleman has the Minister of Justice beside him.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But, without appealing to the Minister of Justice, and even though I am not a lawyer, there are one or two things in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sproule) remarks which I think I can answer. There is nothing in this Act to prevent an action under the civil law for damages. This Act is of the nature of a criminal law and provides for penalties.

Mr. SPROULE. And not damages for loss sustained ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, that is a matter of civil rights, and, as such, I understand, comes within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures—I am speaking subject to correction as a layman. But this Bill would not prevent one from obtaining damages for an injury done.

Mr. SPROULE. It would strengthen his case immensely.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To provide something of that kind ? But it would be ultra vires of this parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister misunderstands me. If a man purchases seeds under this Act, they must conform to a certain standard. And if the seller were condemned under this law for selling impure seed, that fact would immensely strengthen the case of the complainant going into court claiming damages.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Which is an argument for the passing of this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to it, but rather commending that feature of it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I appreciate that, and I think the hon. gentleman is right. This will provide machinery by which a man could sustain an action for damages better than could be done at the present time. The members of the committee have discussed this Bill pretty generally. Before the committee rises, I would like to say that I think I have accomplished what I had hoped for in the discussion. I have had the advantage of the opinion of the members of the House which I asked for when I first introduced the Bill in committee. I am sure that these opinions and the discussion which has arisen here will assist very much in the perfecting of this law. If its passage is delayed for another year, the discussions which have taken place this session will not be lost by any means. I trust that as a consequence of the discussion the people who are interested in the seed trade, the farmers who purchase, the men who handle and the dealers who grade the seeds, will study the proposed law, and will give us the benefit of that study. And I trust that, as a result of all this the law will be more perfect than it could otherwise have been made on a first attempt at legislation of this kind.

Mr. GILMOUR. Will the hon. minister have the Bill printed as he intends to have it enforced at a future date ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will take steps to have the Bill printed as it is now before the committee.

Mr. BRUCE. I desire to thank the hon. Minister of Agriculture for the painstaking and careful way in which he has listened to every suggestion that has been offered. But I trust he will see the absurdity of the suggestion of the hon. member for Grey that he should follow up a dealer who has sold a lot of timothy or clover and allow the buyer to come back for damages against the seedsmen because there might possibly be mustard in the seeds he bought. The buyer has an opportunity to see the seed and know whether their is a mustard in it, for the mustard seeds can be detected at once; moreover, no seedsman who knows his business will sell clover with mustard in it, because the mustard can easily be seen and easily removed. It may be that a crop of mustard will be found in land on which the seed is sown, but then the mustard may have been there for years, and it would be most unfair to subject the seedsman to a charge for that with which he had nothing to do.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—TROPHY OF THE GORDON HIGHLANDERS.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (North Victoria). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to draw the attention of the House to the handsome trophy which stands on the Table. This is a trophy presented by the first battalion of the Gordon Highlanders to the Dominion Rifle Association, in commemoration of the services of the Canadian troops, especially of the first Royal Canadian regiment, in South Africa where they were the comrade regiment of the first battalion of the Gordon Highlanders. It is unnecessary for me to recount the glorious deeds of that historic regiment. This trophy is presented as a token of the friendship and comradeship existing between the regiments and that we trust will always last between the soldiers and citizens of Canada and the soldiers and citizens of the motherland.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). Since my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) has referred to the matter, perhaps I ought to say a word, as I am responsible for the trophy being placed in the position in which it is. A memorandum will be found immediately in front of the trophy which explains the source from which it came and the reason why it was sent here. I thought it would be agreeable for the members of the House to see it and to have this assurance of the high appreciation by that very gallant and distinguished regiment, the Gordon Highlanders, of the Canadian volunteers who served in South Africa. A tribute to our Canadian soldiers could not come from any higher source than from this gallant regiment with whom our men served side by side in the late war. I think it is a very great compliment to have been paid to our militia, and I am sure the militia throughout the country will appreciate to the full the great honour which has been done them. These are the words engraved upon the trophy :

Trophy presented by the 1st battalion of the Gordon Highlanders to the Dominion Rifle Association in remembrance of the spirit of comradeship which existed between that corps and the Canadian troops in South Africa during the South African campaign.

I am sure I need not add a word to this. It speaks volumes of itself.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Department of Indian Affairs—British Columbia—industrial and boarding schools, $69,650.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a decrease here of $8,200, from the fact that this year we do not require the vote we had last year for erecting school buildings.

Mr. WILSON. How many Indian schools are there ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are 31 day schools in British Columbia, to which we give $300 each and one to which we give $400.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the minister could tell us when these schools were established, whether many of them were established lately; also, what salaries are paid to the principals of these schools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot tell my hon. friend the time when each school was established. I suppose that could be found in the records of the department. In the case of day schools, whenever evidence is brought forward that there is need of a school in any particular district, I look into the information furnished, and if I think the need is pressing, I allow for a salary. The ordinary salary is $300. Most of these schools, in fact all the day schools, are carried on under the supervision of some religious body.

Mr. WILSON. What kind of a school have you at Brandon ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would remind my hon. friend that this item refers to the schools in British Columbia. I may answer, however, that the industrial school at Brandon was established about 1892 or 1893. The buildings were put up at that time.

Mr. SPROULE. On what principle do you supply medical attendance and medicines?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have practically the same arrangement there that we have in other places; we simply have to furnish medical attendance and medicines to the Indians where we find they are unable to do it for themselves, and we try to keep the expenditure down as low as possible. In British Columbia the expenditure on these items is increasing, and a considerable supplementary vote will be asked for during the present session for the coming year. It seems to be a fact that as the care of the Indians in British Columbia has increased, the demands for medicines and medical attendance have also increased. I suppose that is due to the fact that in former years, when less attention was paid to them, they did not make so many demands for medicines and medical attendance. Our experience is that as the province of British Columbia opens up and the Indians become better known to the agents and the people the demands constantly increase. We have some salaried officers and we have some who are not under salary. When they are not salaried we pay them by fees. We prefer to have them salaried because then we know what we have to provide for.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you usually pay for salaries on an agency or reserve?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give the hon. gentleman a list. I do not suppose that it will be necessary to read them all. One gets $300, another $240, another $300, $400, $1,200, $500, $1,200, $430, $350, $480, $780, $360, $240, $300, $480.

Mr. SPROULE. That includes medicine as well as medical attendance?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice an item here in connection with the suppression of the liquor traffic. What rule is followed with regard to the convictions which take place amongst Indians in Ontario, for instance, or in any other province? Under what law do you prosecute?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under the Indian Act. The Indian Act makes it a criminal offence to sell liquor to Indians.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but for instance, a prosecution took place on Manitoulin Island. We have a license law in Ontario which provides a certain fine for any one selling liquor to Indians, and there is a much heavier penalty than for selling liquor to white men. In the event of a prosecution taking place where liquor is sold to Indians would you prosecute under the License Act or the Dominion Indian Act.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We prosecute in every case under the Indian Act of the Dominion, which makes it an offence to sell liquor to Indians.

Mr. SPROULE. That applies all over the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Where do you find a return of these convictions?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am informed that there is no list published in the report of the department, but if it is thought desirable that such a list should be published there is no trouble in the world in embodying it. Attention has not been called to it before. We have in all cases reports from the agents of the convictions which have taken place.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, these reports, I assume, for any year can be obtained from the department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. minister to give us a statement of the number of Indians in British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. According to the census there are about 25,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister give us some information in respect to their farming operations? I notice that the government are supplying a considerable quantity of seeds, &c.?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) very much information about the farming of the British Columbia Indians, because they do not follow farming to any considerable extent. We have not in British Columbmia the system of teaching agriculture to the same extent that we have it among the Indians of the North-west Territories and Manitoba. The Indians of British Columbia are a different class altogether. The greater number of them do not live upon land suitable for farming and do not care to follow farming anyway. A great many of them follow fishing. Many of them go out to labour. They go out when the fishing season is on, and agriculture has not been developed amongst those Indians in the same way as it has been amongst other Indians. Probably the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Earle) could give more information upon that subject than I can.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the hon. minister to give the Indian population of British Columbia to-day as compared with what it was ten years ago ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My information is that there is practically very little variation in the Indian population as far as the information of the department goes. Referring to what my hon. friend asked me a few minutes ago, I find in the records of the department from the British Columbia agencies that the total amount of farm products of all kinds produced in the different reserves in the whole of British Columbia last year amounted to $278,-173, the larger portion of which would be hay.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I did not hear any answer to the question as to the salaries totalling $20,440. To what officials are these salaries paid ? Are they departmental officials ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The salaries are as follows : A. W. Vowell, chief superintendent, $3,000 ; W. McLaughlin, senior clerk, $1,800 ; W. A. Stevens, clerk, $1,000 ; H. G. Dalby, $720 ; A surveyor, $1,800 ; D. McLaughlin, messenger, $600 ; extra for clerical services in Victoria, offices and agencies, $580 ; G. W. DeBeck, agent at Kwawkewlth, $1,200 ; W. R. Robertson, agent at Cowichan, $1,200 ; R. C. McDonald, Fraser agency, $1,200 ; A. Irwin, Kamloops and Okanagan agency, $1,-200 ; E. Bell, Williams lake agency, $1,200; H. Guillod, West Coast agency, $1,200 ; R. L. T. Galbraith, Kootenay agency, $1,200 ; G. W. Morrow, North-west coast agency, $1,800 ; Richard E. Loring, Babine agency, $1,200 ; Tom, constable, Cowichan, $240.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I notice that we pay for medical attendance $11,000 ; for day schools for educating the Indians we pay $9,700, and for travelling expenses $5,600. I think it most inconsistent that we should pay $5,600 for travelling expenses and $9,700 for schools.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am sorry to say that the objection which my hon. friend takes will probably be removed, because our medical attendance is growing larger, and not because we desire it either. So far as salaries in British Columbia are concerned, it is quite impossible to improve the position. The province is of vast extent, the agencies are separated in most cases by considerable distances, and it is quite impossible to secure the services of agents competent to do the work at salaries substantially less than those which we are paying. My recollection is that the salaries are a trifle less now than when I took office, but there is substantially no increase anyway. The principal expenditure must necessarily be the salary of a good man on the reserve to look after the work. There is an inevitable increase in medical attendance. I do not see that there is the least power in the department to reduce these expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. These expenditures remind me of the Barney Ricketts road jobs in Muskoka, where they paid $300 for overseeing and travelling expenses and put $50 on the road.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). It is most extraordinary that you provide the munificent sum of $4,500 for relief to the Indians and $1,000 for seed, while you pay $5,600 for travelling expenses.

Mr. EARLE. I wish to ask the minister if any progress has been made in the negotiations for the removal of the Songhees reserve ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Some years ago, after a great deal of discussion and trouble, an arrangement was made whereby it would have been possible to remove the Songhees Indians from their reserve. I personally recognized what every one must recognize who has seen the Songhees reserve in the city of Victoria, that it is a source of regret that the reserve should remain where it is. My hon. friend (Mr. Earle) is aware that when I was negotiating with the Indians some years ago, the local government interposed a difficulty which was explained shortly afterwards in this House. Since that time no other definite arrangement has been arrived at. About a year ago I had a discussion with Mr. Eberts, then Attorney General of the province of British Columbia, and I reviewed the whole situation with him, and I told him that I was perfectly agreeable to carry out any reasonable arrangement that might be made. I said to him, and I think another member of the local government was present, I said to him : If you carry out in substance the arrangement which I suggested at that time, I am willing to do all I can to give it effect. It was then arranged that Mr. Vowell, the Indian superintendent at Victoria, and the representatives of the local government should try and get together and work out some kind of an arrangement whereby this should be done. I had hoped at that time that that would have been done, and I rather think that the reason why nothing very substantial has been done has been owing to political changes in British Columbia which have taken up the attention of the local government very much. I am quite prepared, and have been prepared since 1897, to carry out the arrangement on the general lines on which we were negotiating at that time, and which I think are the only lines on which an arrangement can be made. I may remind my hon. friend (Mr. Earle) that the rock on which we split is this. I said : I am willing to undertake the burden of getting the Indians to move, and I am willing to recognize, in a sense, your reversionary title to the reserve, but you will have to furnish a reserve in place of the one which they have in the city and which the Indians will be willing to accept. That the local government was willing to do, but they said : If the reserve in the city sells for more money than the reserve which we give in its place costs, then we want that money. I said : I cannot, as trustee for the Indians, hand that money over to you, but I will fund that money, and if you establish your title to the money then you can have it. I could not feel it my duty, as superintendent general, to hand over that money to the local government. My impression is that at the last negotiations I had with them they expressed their assent to the proposition which I had made before, and that the money should be funded, if there was any balance, and dealt with according as the law might direct later on. I am perfectly willing to do that now if the local government can give their attention to it and transact their part of the business. I cannot say at the present time if the Indians are willing to go, but at the time I made the proposition they were willing. I am safe in saying that at the time Mr. McKenna and Mr. Rothwell were there, in the summer of 1897, the Indians would have gone, but I cannot say now whether they would or not.

Mr. EARLE. As I understand it, the arrangement, as outlined by the minister, is what took place, but I think there was always the difficulty that the Indians would not move, and it remained for the Dominion government to inforce their removal, provided the other conditions were carried out.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think there would have been any trouble about their going in 1897.

Mr. EARLE. I notice in the papers since we have been in session that the provincial government had about secured a site suitable for them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the proposition I made in 1897 I undertook that the department here would see that they moved, and we were satisfied from the report of our officers that they would go at that time.

Mr. BROCK. There is an expenditure here of $140,000, and in that expenditure there is an item of nearly $70,000 for industrial and boarding schools. I understood from the minister that the British Columbia Indians were engaged as fishermen and as labourers, and I would like to know what is taught in these industrial schools, for which we pay such a large sum of money. The minister said that they were principally under the charge of the different religious bodies. What kind of teaching do they give in these schools that produce fishermen and labourers ? I have no doubt that you are teaching these children some industry, and I would like to know if the minister thinks he is justified in making this large expenditure on education with apparently such barren results ? Are they, when they leave school, turned adrift to go fishing with their fathers and mothers, or do they take to agriculture or to some trade ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The general question of policy as to Indian education is a very large question. The system of education by industrial schools was inaugurated a good many years ago. I have gone into that question pretty fully on other occasions when the Indian estimates have been before the House. My view generally has been that the establishment of further industrial schools should not be encouraged; because I found, on investigation shortly after I took office, that it was extremely problematical whether the results of the industrial schools were commensurate with the size of the expenditure upon them. I found, for instance, that boys and girls were in some cases kept in industrial schools until they were twenty-three or twenty-four years of age, and some of the officers of the department were afraid to let them out. I issued an order that no person should remain in an industrial school after the age of eighteen, and the pupils who were above that age were got from the schools as quickly as possible, and placed according to the best judgment of the different agents. My view was that the money would be far better expended in giving the Indian children a reasonable amount of education and civilization in ways by which a much larger number would be reached, than by concentrating the expenditure upon an alleged industrial education of a few. Therefore I have followed the policy of encouraging the establishment of boarding schools rather than industrial schools. The experience of the department has been that it is very difficult to get a satisfactory attendance at day schools. The children go back to their parents' homes, which are generally not of a very elevated character; they are very irregular in their attendance, and it is very difficult to improve them; although we have a considerable number of day schools where the circumstances do not warrant the establishment of boarding schools. But the policy we have been following in recent years has been to establish boarding schools where the children are kept a much shorter time than they are at the industrial schools, and where the benefits are spread over a much larger number. It would not do to begin the policy of abolishing industrial schools, which have been establishsed at large expense, and where staffs have been appointed and equipment provided. I would not take the responsibility of recommending that these schools be adandoned or dismantled; but I have taken the responsibility of saying that I would not encourage the establishment of further industrial schools. The effect of Indian education, in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, has been excellent. It has made a distinct improvement in the general tone of the Indians. I am satisfied that my hon. friend would receive testimony from those who live in the neighbourhood of the reserves that there is a vast difference between the Indians of the North-west now and the Indians of the North-west twenty or twenty-five years ago. At the present time the Indians are a comparatively civilized lot of people. I do not know that there is anything special to be said in regard to the work in British Columbia, except this, that the Indians of British Columbia originally were a much more turbulent lot of Indians than those in other portions of the country, especially those towards Fort Simpson and other parts of the North-west coast; and the fact that they are now a comparatively orderly and civilized community is largely due to the establishment by missionaries of mission stations and the establishment of industrial and other schools among them. Some years ago I visited Fort Simpson, where I saw an Indian village which no person at a little distance would imagine to be an Indian village, because it had all the characteristics of a respectable village of white people. I visited one house where an Indian who fifteen or twenty years before would have been a savage, occupied a comfortable little cottage with a sitting room which was carpeted and furnished with an organ and with other evidences of civilization. At Metlakatla we have had a considerable expenditure from time to time; but the agent there has had a very large band of Indians to look after. There too, I think the civilization of the Indians has proceeded at a very rapid rate. While the Indians of the northern portion of British Columbia were originally as much more savage and turbulent race than the Indians of other portions of Canada, yet they have had this other characteristic, that when they have adopted the ways of civilization, they have become much more like white men than the Indians of other parts of the country. There is a distinct difference between the Indian of British Columbia and the Indian of the North-west Territories. The Indian of British Columbia will go into the pit and the field and work at day's labour, while it is impossible to get the Indian of the North-west Territories to do that. Many of the Indians of British Columbia are very comfortably off, and their villages are quite prosperous. The impression I derived from a trip which I made to British Columbia some years ago was that there was no part of Canada where the expenditure of the government in assisting the different churches and in carrying on educational work among the Indians has been productive of more beneficial results.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I would like to ask the minister some further questions regarding travelling expenses, for which I think the amount charged is very large in proportion to the whole. In the Auditor General's Report for 1902, at page J--73, I find the following.

Travel, A. W. Vowell; board and lodging, $148.-50; cabs and porters, $30; barbers and laundry, $2.65; ferriage and street cars, $4.70; fares, $101.-90; pullmans, $39.75; livery and horse hire, $99; hire of launch, one day, $10.

I do not know whether this is some ambassador travelling in state, or an ordinary agent of the department; but from the expense account he sends in, he must be a man of considerable importance. $5,600 out of $137,000, is a large proportion for travelling expenses, and I would like the hon. minister to give some explanation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not see that I can give any more explanation than is to be found in the Auditor General's Report. Mr. Vowell is the general superintendent of the Indian Department in British Columbia, and the items given are his ordinary travelling expenses. I do not know that the details are specially objectionable, except the item for cab-hire; and as the particulars of this item are not given in the Auditor General's Report, I cannot say whether it is excessive or not. All the items were passed by the accountant of the department and subsequently by the Auditor General's officers, and I have no doubt the charges are proper.

Mr. EARLE. I may say in connection with the expenditure of our agents in British Columbia, that if my hon. friend were to go to that province and take a trip up the northern coast a thousand miles or so, he would find that his expenses would amount to very much more. Travelling in British Columbia is quite different from travelling in the North-west Territories and the eastern provinces. The hotel, wayside house expenses, horse-hire, &c., in these interior districts are very heavy. Take a trip to Cassiar, and you will find that you will have to pay very much more there to hire a horse than you would east, and you cannot expect the agent to walk. As far as Mr. Vowell is concerned, I am satisfied he does not travel in state. He goes by himself, does not take an attendant, and makes his trips as speedily as possible. I am satisfied, if my hon. friend had the details, that he would find they are not excessive, taking into account the condition of things in that country.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I can understand portaging over a rough country, but how does the hon. gentleman account for street cars. Let me read another account, that of one F. Devlin. I suppose he is an Irishman, and they always travel well. He charges board and lodging $205.90; provisions, $25.05; hire of boats, canoes and men, $51.80; fares, $91.50; electric car fares, $54.40; cartage, $11.50; ferriage, $3.80; livery and horse-hire, $38.50; stage, $9.50; sundries, $3.75; total, $495.70. I would like my hon. friend to explain how Mr. Devlin works up electric cars to $54.95 in that country. I did not know that they had any.

Mr. EARLE. I may say, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that we had electric cars in British Columbia before they had them in eastern Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The items which my hon. friend read are the ordinary travelling expenses of the agent, and I do not see anything objectionable in them. The agent has considerable distances to travel. He charges up the actual items. His charge for provisions is $25.25. If my hon. friend had to travel in a canoe, he would have to bring provisions with him. You cannot go long distances in canoes unless you buy provisions before starting. The item for fares is $91.50. Let me tell my hon. friend that if any officer of my department charges an item of fare which was not justified by the distances he had to travel, it would be impossible for that item to pass the Auditor General's office. If he were to charge for fifty miles of travel, which he did not actually do, an order for an explanation would come from the Auditor General's office at once.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). It is very refreshing to hear the hon. Minister of the Interior lecture this side of the House on criticising the item of electric car fares in British Columbia by the Indian agent, and especially to hear the cheers of gentlemen opposite over the remarks made by the hon. minister. If we go back a few years we will find that these very men took to task no less a man than the Rt. Hon. Sir John Macdonald because he had charged up a couple of dollars for cab-hire. When these hon. gentlemen find fault with our criticisms, I would ask them to look up their own history, of which they ought to be ashamed.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if anything has been done with regard to the re-allotment of the Indian reserves? The greater portion of the Indian reserves, especially on Vancouver Island, are the very choicest land. Several of them are several thousand acres in extent, and the Indians cultivate only a few acres, having taken to other occupations for a livelihood. I think that the provincial government brought this matter to the attention of the Department of Indian Affairs.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question as to the re-allotment was up last year. In the month of January I brought Mr. Vowell over from British Columbia and discussed it with him very fully. The question was brought up upon the request of Col. Prior, then Prime Minister of British Columbia, and the Attorney General of his government. They took the position that a re-allotment was necessary. I said I could do nothing without the advice of my officers in British Columbia. And I sent for Mr. Vowell, who came over. I discussed the question with him very fully. The report was adverse to action being taken at the present time, and no action has been taken since. Just the other day I received a letter from either the Prime Minister or the Attorney General of British Columbia asking me what had been done in connection with that. I advised him that Mr. Vowell's report was adverse, but I presume the next step will be for Mr. Vowell to discuss the matter with them there.

Mr. EARLE. Did Mr. Vowell consider the same quantity was required for the Indians as was given some years ago?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would not say that Mr. Vowell distinctly said in his report that there should never be any change; but his report was against taking any steps at that time. And the report was sent to me, and I discussed it with him verbally. I remember being impressed with the idea that his judgment was correct and that no action should be taken. I may say that I have a great deal of confidence in Mr. Vowell's judgment, I have found, since coming into office, that Mr. Vowell is a very capable officer and a man of very good judgment. If he has a fault it is that he stands up for the Indians to the utmost limit. And, possibly in a matter of this kind where the question of the Indian reserves being somewhat taken from arose, it might be that he was a little prejudiced. At the same time, as he is the chief officer in British Columbia on whose advice I must rely, my hon. friend will see that under the circumstances I can do nothing but accept his report at least for the present.

Mr. EARLE. There is another question, perhaps not quite in line with the item before us, but which I would like to get some information about as it comes to my mind. There was an investigation made last year by Mr. Vowell, and, I think, Senator Templeman and Mr. Sword, in regard to the fishing by the Indians in the inland rivers. I inquired of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with regard to this matter, and he told me that he knew nothing of the commission and thought that possibly the report had been sent to the Indian Department, as Mr. Vowell was chairman of the committee. I have had inquiries from the Tourists' Association who are taking considerable interest in the sporting fishing on the island as to what had been done with the report, and whether any action had been taken.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The investigation has been the subject of a report, the substance of which is that the difficulty that has occurred is of a very slight character and should be left, as far as possible, to the local agents to settle. The difficulty involves two departments, Marine and Fisheries, and my own acting for the Indians. My hon. friend (Mr. Earle) will understand that it is easier to get into trouble with Indians than to get out of it, and while they must be treated with firmness, yet, in a matter of that kind, where they believe their fishing rights to be involved, the question must be treated with delicacy and care. Mr. Vowell and Senator Templeman looked into it and reported that it would be better not to make a general order, but to leave the matter to be worked out locally by the agents of the different places where the difficulty occurs.

Mr. EARLE. Is the Indian agent in a position to deal with the fishing. Or must that be dealt with by the Marine and Fisheries Department ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The agent has practical control of the operations of the Indians. He cannot act on behalf of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but as the difficulty is the interference by the Indians with the fishing, the agent, practically controlling what the Indians do, is in a position to deal with the difficulty.

Mr. EARLE. The difficulty is that the Indians do not regard the fishing regulations for instance, on the Cowichan river. The Indian agent could not make regulations by which they could fish. Evidence was taken before the Fish Commission in Victoria. But, unfortunately, the results were not reported to us until yesterday, and then only in the form of a naked report. Evidence was given by Indians brought down by Mr. Robertson, the agent there, but, we do not know what that evidence was. It would appear that the Indians were fishing on these rivers by their old fashioned methods, which are destructive and which obstruct the fish altogether. In consequence of the danger of getting into trouble with the Indians, the Marine and Fisheries Department have not taken any action.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If I recollect aright the Indians build a weir across the river. When the Department of Marine and Fisheries was notified of this, they sent the correspondence to me, and I called upon Mr. Vowell for a report. The substance of his report was that it would not be wise to take violent action or to insist on the weir being taken away for the present. It will be possible to get over the difficulty in time, but, under the circumstances, it would be better not to take too violent action at present.

Mr. EARLE. I think there is no disposition on the part of the people to raise difficulties with the Indians. But I notice that the Tourists' Association, who are making great efforts to induce people travelling through the country to visit British Columbia, are taking a great interest in the matter and are arranging to build fish ladders and so on at their individual expense. If a regulation could be made without affecting the Indians too seriously, it would be advisable for the department to take action in the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. I find in the Auditor General's Report a pretty large item in connection with the Indian Department in British Columbia. It is charged to surveys and reserve commission. Would the hon. minister give us some explanation of that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. An arrangement was made some years ago—at that time when British Columbia entered confederation I think—as to the reserves that should be set apart for the Indians. There was a very large number of reserves in different parts of the province. A commission was appointed, or provided for at that time, to organize survey parties to survey these reserves. The work has been going on since, but it has not been completed and will not be completed for many years. We do not survey all the reserves, but only those required. There are three or four surveys to be made during the coming year. Mr. Vowell acts as superintendent of the commission and directs the work. He reports that next year we will need to survey three reserves on the Skeena river, Fort Rupert, Katlatka, Chilcotin and Pemberton Meadows. There are several other places where surveys have been asked for, and he may call for them to be made. He asks for $5,000 to pay the expenses. There are three or four other places where surveys are asked for, and where we will probably cause surveys to be made. We ask for a vote of $5,000 to pay the expenses.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the expenditure for the commission?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was a commission appointed consisting of three men, but we have not found it necessary to preserve the scale of expense on which the work was done a year ago.

Mr. GALLIHER. Since this matter of the Indian reserve has come up for discussion, introduced by my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Earle), I will take the opportunity to draw the attention of the minister to a request that has been made to me as representing a district in British Columbia. A number of settlers living at Agassiz have represented to me that there is a reserve near there to which only a very few families of Indians belong. There are only a few families living on it at all, and these families for the most part of the year are off the reserve entirely, living with relatives on other reserves. The reserve in question is a considerable tract of land, and very rich agriculturally, and their desire is that it should be thrown open for sale. Now the same proposition was made to me by some residents of Salmon Arm with regard to a reserve there. Still another request was made to me with regard to some reserve in the Similkameen. They request that some readjustment be made by which these reserves should be thrown open for purchase by white settlers. The reasons they give are that there are only a few Indians there, and for the most part they live with tribes on other reserves. With regard to the request made from Similkameen, the reason given is that there are valuable deposits of precious minerals on some of these reserves, and they want the privilege of entering upon them for the purpose of prospecting and locating mineral claims, and working them in the ordinary way. I draw these matters to the attention of the minister, because I have been requested to do so by some of my constituents.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The case which my hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) has brought up, is a common case in connection with the administration of Indian affairs, and arises from the natural feeling in human nature which causes one man sometimes to covet his neighbour's goods; and a white man, finding the Indian owns a very valuable land, sometimes covets that land. We have throughout Canada a large number of such cases such as that to which the hon. gentleman refers. We have cases of fertile lands on Indian reserves which the Indians do not in reality occupy or cultivate in a bona fide way, and which they positively refuse to give up. Let me say to my hon. friend that all the Indian reserves in Canada have from time to time been set apart by treaty. It is not a temporary arrangement made by the grace of the Crown for the benefit of the Indians, but it is a solemn treaty made by the Crown with the Indians under which these reserves have been set apart, and the faith of the Crown is pledged that the title of the Indians to these reserves shall not be disturbed. There is only one way under the law as it stands at present that Indian lands can be set apart for sale. They cannot be set apart for homestead entry under any circumstances unless the government desire to pay for them; but they can be set apart for sale by the department in trust for the Indians, upon a formal surrender being executed. It does not make any difference whether the reserve is occupied or not. Outside the province of British Columbia there is no qualification to the statement that the only way in which a reserve can be put up for sale or opened for settlement is by a formal surrender being executed by the Indians voluntarily. So far as British Columbia is concerned there is some qualification to that statement, because the title to the Indian reserves is somewhat different from the others. That qualification is that if, on a general recasting of the allotment of an Indian reserve in British Columbia, by the authority provided in the original arrangement, it was found that these reserves were not required, then they might be thrown open. But we could not go to one particular reserve and say: We are going to throw that open. That would clearly be a violation of the arrangement. As matters stand at present, the only way in which these reserves can be thrown open for sale would be by getting a surrender from the Indians. Any time the Indians are willing to surrender, it could be sold to the highest bidder.

Mr. GALLIHER. These requests came to me in respect of reserves where, as I said, there were very few Indians living at any time of the year. I have had no such request from any source such as William's Lake, a reserve that I visited myself; or such as the reserve in the vicinity of Armstrong, where the Indians are themselves very good settlers indeed, and raise hay and grain, and market it the same as white men. They have industrial schools, and make shoes, and are educated in trades. I have no requests in respect of these. But the people who made these requests to me say that the reserves in question are practically useless to the Indians, because they do not occupy them, and it would be greatly in the interest of filling up the country and making a good agricultural district of what is now useless both to the white man and to the Indian. I appreciate what the minister has said, that you cannot deal with one parcel at a time, that you have to make a general reallotment if you deal with it at all. I think there should be some inquiry made into this question in the interest of settling up that portion of the country, and putting there a class of farmers who will cultivate the soil which is really at present of no benefit at all to the Indians. If this land were sold, it would provide a fund that would be of benefit to the Indians, and the settlers would be prepared to pay for the land.

Mr. EARLE. I would ask the minister if these reserves are in the same position as the one at Victoria, whereby the lands alienated by the Indians have reverted to the Crown?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. According to my recollection they are all in the same position. Of course, that suggests a further difficulty, which did not occur to me when I was answering my hon. friend which has arisen in connection with similar matters. Before we can deal with the land at all we shall have to make an arrangement with the provincial government and deal with it jointly because they have a reversionary title.

Mr. BLAIN. In regard to the item of $5,000 for surveys I would like some more information. If I understand the hon. minister correctly he makes a statement that the population of the Indians of British Columbia is about stationary, that it is about 25,000 and that it has been the same for the last ten years. Why is it necessary to spend $5,000 for surveying more territory particularly as the hon. minister states that the Indians do not take to farming? The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) says that there is a large quantity of land which is only very sparsely settled by Indians.

Mr. GALLIHER. The ranchers in that district want these surveys.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are under obligation to make surveys as they are required and as my hon. friend will readily see as the province of British Columbia settles up and as the white population spreads over the country the Indians demand that the reserves should be surveyed and allotted to them so that they can be separate from the rest of the community and feel that they are protected. We are proceeding with these surveys from time to time, not too fast, but just as they are demanded.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Would the hon. minister say how much land would be surveyed for $5,000—how many thousand acres?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not give the hon. gentleman the exact information as to how much would be surveyed because it depends upon a great many things. If the surveyors have to travel up to the Skeena river a good deal of the vote will be expended in travelling expenses, in getting ready to go and in that sort of thing. The Skeena river district is one of the places where a survey will be made this year. They have to procure their passage there and pay all the expenses and the actual work of running the line would not probably amount to very much.

Mr. EARLE. There is one more matter I desire to bring to the attention of the hon. minister before this item passes and that is the work of the Bishop Christie school at Clayoquot. Could the hon. minister give me the attendance at that school? My reason for asking is that I had a letter from Archbishop Orth in reference to it, and from my own knowledge of the school I know that an excellent work is being done there. They have spent a very large amount of money of their own and if they are to carry on the work they ought to have some additional assistance.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Clayoquot school is a boarding school. The total enrolment is fifty-two, and the average attendance, forty-eight.

Mr. EARLE. The average attendance is now some where in the neighbourhood of sixty, and in addition to that they will be able to take in more children than they have at present if they had the means. As far as the work is concerned I expect the department have had a report from their agent in regard to it. It is wonderful what they have done. This is a district I know very well. Some four or five years ago when they took hold of this school there had nothing been done amongst that large tribe of Indians in the way of educating or training them in any shape or form. They now teach industries in the school as well as teaching the Indian boys and girls how to read and write. There are quite a number of boys who are doing carpenter work and making and mending shoes, and there are girls who are knitting socks and doing housework and needlework. This school is doing a most commendable work but those in charge of it feel that if it is to be as successful as they wish it is necessary that they should get further assistance from the government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are providing some additional assistance for that school in the supplementary estimates.

Yukon Territory—relief of destitute Indians and medical attendance, $5,000; to promote the education of the Indians in the territory, $5,000, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As I explained to the House last year, we have to make a beginning in connection with the work of looking after the Indians of the Yukon territory and we are taking these small votes for the purpose of doing so. The number of Indians actually located in the Yukon, as reported, is 702. Accounts have come forward for the expenditure for relief of distressed Indians and medical attendance amounting to over $2,700. As far as the medical attendance is concerned, the committee will understand that this is extremely expensive. You cannot pay salaries at the price that medical officers require in that country, and consequently we have to pay them ordinary rates for visits when made. We shall probably have to expend the whole of this $5,000. The other $5,000 for education we are proposing to hold for the purpose of assisting in any missionary enterprise which any of the churches may engage in amongst the Indians. We have not yet definitely appropriated it one way or the other.

Mr. SPROULE. You had $5,000 last year. Did you expend any of it, and if so, how?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have spent nothing out of the moneys that were voted for school purposes last year. We have spent a considerable portion of the amount voted for relief; in fact I think we have exceeded the vote, and we will take a supplementary estimate to cover the excess.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in this case that you do not do the same as you do in regard to public works. You have money voted for one year and do not spend it that year and do not revote it for the next year but allow it to drop, so that, of course, we cannot tell by reference to the estimates whether there has been any money spent or not.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This vote is for 1903-4.

Mr. SPROULE. I know. But if there was a vote for public works which was not spent, you would say so much revoted, but here you let the item drop and put in the same amount.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Accounts have been rendered so far for last year for $2,700.

Mr. SPROULE. You only spent $2,700 last year, and now you want $10,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We spent nothing for education last year.

Mr. MONK. I understand this is for a band of 700 Indians. Are they increasing in number ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is not a band. According to our reports, which are not very full, there are 702 Indians in the Yukon, but they are constantly moving. I do not think we will find that $5,000 is too much.

Mr. MONK. It is not so much the amount as that it is five times what you asked last year for these Indians. They seem to have got along very well before we established government in the Yukon, and although I have no objection that we should assist them to a certain extent, yet it may be that if the assistance goes on increasing it would induce them to a life of idleness.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We cannot be accused of being over generous with the Indians in that territory, at least so far. The policy which the government of Canada has very wisely adopted has been that wherever they went into a country where there was an Indian population they would treat them with humanity and with a reasonable degree of liberality, and on the whole that is a most economical policy. We took a vote last year for $1,000, and we put it in the hands of the commissioner for the district to do what he thought wise with it, and it was distributed through the officer of the government. When these estimates were prepared last January we had accounts for $2,700, and for the year altogether we will have $6,000 or $7,000, so that if we get along with $5,000 next year we will have to exercise considerable care. I do not think the hon. gentleman would say that, having taken possession of that territory, we should do nothing at all for the education of the Indians there. We intend to follow, as nearly as we can, the policy which has been followed in other parts of Canada, and if the churches do any missionary work we intend to give them a little assistance. There is no probability of any rapid growth of this expenditure.

Mr. MONK. What form does the relief take ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The relief is altogether distributed through the mounted police officers.

Mr. MONK. How much has been expended on medical attendance ? Are the physicians paid by fees, or how are they paid ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the amounts separated that were paid for relief and for medical attendance, but, of course, I can get it to-morrow.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I will read some accounts from the Auditor General's Report, page J—61, which will explain to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) where the money goes :

Expenses of H. A. Conroy, paying annuities, with Dr. Hislop and clerk, December and January, 1901-2 : H. B. Round, clerk, 2m., $150 ; A. Kennedy, cook, 46 d., $61.33 ; ammunition, $6.65; bags, tent poles, &c., $6.25 ; boat cover, $5 ; camp cook stove, $10 ; camp heater, $4 ; coal oil, $2.25 ; eider-down robes, 3, $75 ; goat robes, 4, $38 ; kettles, $7 ; leather trunk, $28 ; liquor permit, $2.50 ; mattresses, sectional, 3, $18 ; mitts, 5 pr., $2.75 ; mocassins, 1 pr., $1.25 ; overcoat and cap for H. B. Round, $12 ; pillows, 2, $4 ; postage, $3 ; robes, $2.50 ; rope, 38 lbs., $7.16; sleds, flat, 5, $26.50 ; snow-shoes, $6 ; table linen and towels, $7.77 ; tent, with fly and ground sheet, $39.25; tools and hardware, $18.70; valises, 2, $4.50 ; board and lodging, $193.60 ; extra baggage, $21.05 ; fares, $143 ; gratuities to Indians, $7 ; hay and oats, $9.75 ; hire of bob-sleigh, $8 ; interpreters, $14 ; laundry, $10.35 ; livery and cartage, $18 ; messengers, &c., $10 ; provisions, $213.03 ; pullmans, $29 ; road makers, $37 ; stabling, $7.50 ; telegrams, $7.38 ; tips, $3 ; use of houses, $13.50 ; washing blankets, $7 ; O. Belrose, transport, 4 d. at $10, 40 d. at $12 ; Dr. Hislop, expenses to Winnipeg, $47 ; small items, $1.10, $1,869.62.

H. A. Conroy : board at Ottawa, $86 ; cabs and transfers, $6.60 ; 2 trips, Ottawa to Montreal, $30.50 ; 13 trips, Ottawa to Maxville, $36.40, $159.50.

H. A. Conroy, advances for expenses season of 1902, $3,691.88.

That will give you an idea of how this money was expended.

Mr. MONK. It is a question whether the Indians travel at our expense or whether it is the physicians. My hon. friend (Mr. Thomson) has given us an insight to this expenditure which is a little strange. Who are the physicians, and how are they paid ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We make use of the services of the physicians to the Mounted Police in the Yukon territory, and pay them the ordinary rate paid to medical men. We tried to establish a lower rate, a fee of $2 a visit, but it was wholly unsuccessful, because the medical men declined to attend the Indians unless they got a regular rate. As to my hon. friend's question respecting the expenses of Inspector Conroy, he is the officer who pays the Indian annuities in the far northern district, in what is known as Treaty No. 8. About four years ago we made a treaty with the Indians in that district. At that time, owing to the movement of population in the district, the Indians were becoming very restless and turbulent, as Indians do when no arrangement has been made for a transfer of title. We sent a commissioner to make a treaty with them, and he made a treaty, with the result that since that time they have been quiet and there has been no trouble with them. Under that treaty the officer had to pay them $20,000, and to take a medical officer with him. One of the things the Indians stipulated for was that a medical officer should be sent out with the officer who went to pay the money, in order to treat any Indians suffering from any serious disease who came to him for treatment. The officer had to take all the measures necessary to make a trip of 750 miles north, beyond a railway. The expenses are necessarily very heavy, and I think Mr. Conroy's expenses have been kept down to a figure which under all the circumstances is very small and very creditable to him. At the time the matter came before me, I was agreeably surprised at the amount of this bill. Previous to that another officer of the department, Inspector McCrae, went from headquarters and made the payment ; but after that year I decided to send Inspector Conroy, and his services so far have been very satisfactory. I do not think it would be possible for him to make the trip at any less expense.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I would like to call the minister's attention to the item of $3 for tips.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think my hon. friend will have to let that go without any explanation. It is remarkably small, according to my experience.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Perhaps the minister will give us his experience of his trip to Europe.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the details.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why did Mr. Conroy require to make thirteen trips to Maxville at an expense to the country of $36 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am informed that Inspector Conroy, while here, was allowed by the deputy of the department to go on Saturday and come back on Monday, and that his railway fare was paid by arrangement with the department. It is a question whether it would not have cost more to pay his board in Ottawa. I suppose it would amount to about the same thing.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I see he made two trips to Montreal, for which he charges the department $30.50. Was that to save his board here, or to give him a trip?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That was to buy supplies for his trip.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice an item under this head of $5,000 for education. I understand that there are about 700 Indians in the Yukon district. Will the minister state how many are going to school, and what the qualification for teachers is ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At present there are four schools in the Yukon district for Indians. They are all carried on by the missionaries of the Church of England. There are 94 children on the roll and an average attendance of 45. Special teachers have been appointed at Cariboo, while at the other places the missionaries attend to the teaching. There is nothing decided in regard to our policy as to these schools; but we intend to try to pursue the same policy there as in other places

Mr. MONK. I see that we have had a physician in the Yukon district at $2 a day—Dr. Hurdman. Under Treaty No. 8, I understand from the Auditor General's Report, at page J—172, that we paid $4,066.58 to the Indians. That would seem to be the amount we are bound to pay them under the treaty. This Mr. Conroy is a most expensive plenipotentiary to the Indians, because it has evidently cost us a larger amount to pay him than to discharge our obligations to the Indians. Mr. Conroy received in nine months $1,350 of salary, and his travelling expenses, which are detailed at page J—61, amounted to about $5,000. They certainly appear for a very large amount in the Auditor General's Report for 1902. What with eiderdown quilts, mattresses, valises, leather trunks, moccasins, fur coats and other things, it would be better for us to employ an honest Indian than Mr. Conroy.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend would look at J—58, he will find that the annuities amount to $25,000, and he is directing his attention to the salaries and not to the annuities.

Grant to recoup the local council of the Yukon Territory for expenditure incurred in connection with Eldorado Gusher, $50,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When this item came up some days ago, it was suggested that it should be left over until the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) was here. Mr. Ross is in the city but his health will not permit him to take part in any discussion. Hon. members are aware that last year he had a stroke of paralysis and has been endeavouring to regain health ever since. It would be wholly impossible for him to take part in any discussion.

Mr. MONK. I regret to hear that Mr. Ross is unable through illness to attend. In that connection I would ask my hon. friend if there is any truth in the newspaper report to the effect that he intends resigning his seat and is to be named lieutenant governor of the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no truth whatever in any statement that any change is contemplated, so far as the government is aware.

Mr. MONK. The items which follow this item of $50,000 will give rise to some discussion. I would suggest either to leave the items concerning the government of the Yukon Territories stand, or vote this $50,000 and hold over the others.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will understand that, so far as discussion on the general expenditure is concerned, there will be items in the further supplementaries for this service which my hon. friends can discuss. It is not desirable to leave over items in respect of sums which are desired to be available. The government will have to bring in a Supply Bill at an early date, and it is not satisfactory to have one or two items standing. This particular expenditure was wholly unforeseen. Two or three miners in Eldorado creek undertook to put down a shaft. Their idea was that below what they believed to be bed rock, they would find a layer of pay gravel. They put a shaft down and struck what appeared to be a never ending flow of water. It was in the winter. The water came in in an enormous quantity and threatened to form a glacier which would fill the whole valley and do incalculable damage. It would cover the pay gravel with ice, and it was feared that it would not thaw in the summer. I authorized the local council to spend whatever was necessary to plug up the hole and prevent the flow of water. They engaged gangs of men and succeeded in blocking it up, but it broke open again. Finally, after much labour and expense they got the flow under control. The expenses are about $50,000. After these expenses had been incurred, the parties who had sunk the shaft applied for a franchise to be allowed to sell the water for mining purposes. I exacted from them an agreement that they would pay the government ten per cent of the amount they got by the sale of water for the purpose of recouping the government for its expenditure. The money I am asking is to recoup the council for the expenditure they have incurred in this connection.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). What sort of a hole was it which cost $50,000 to block ? Are there any more holes to block there ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know the exact dimensions but everybody in the district was crying out to have the flow of water stopped.

Mr. COCHRANE. What time did the plugging of the hole occur ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work was going on for two or three months prior to March this year. They did not get the whole thing under control until March.

Mr. COCHRANE. When did it begin ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. About December—after the election.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like the hon. minister to verify his statement regarding the time. At what time was the election ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not any means of verifying that statement now.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the Yukon government, which had charge of this expenditure, furnish any detailed statement to the department ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. They show items for labour, $4,717.49, $25,833.09, $1,372.50 $1,331.75. They show that they paid for wood for the boilers using steam in the ditch $635, $5,341.25, $105. They paid for the contract which they gave for plugging the shaft in the first place, $6,377.40, $1,843.82 ; also, supplies, and small accounts.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Was this for plugging a hole or making a hole ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is for plugging a hole in the first place and afterwards making the ditches to let the water off.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Was it a political hole ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so ?

Mr. LENNOX. The minister mentions that there was an item of $6,000 to a man named Matheson as a contract price for doing this work. Though that contract was let and the work paid for, we yet have these other items including $4,000 for labour. There will have to be some explanation of the reasons for expending all this money outside of the contract.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The flow of water broke out again.

Mr. LENNOX. Then, the contractor did not perform his contract. The contract must have been to do the work effectively. But we find that this work, which was to have been done under contract for $6,000, subsequently cost $44,000 besides that amount of the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. I should suggest that this contractor was not quite as good an expert as the ballot stuffers they had in West Elgin and Huron.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. minister offer no explanation ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think I have any except what I have already given. My information is that they let a contract to Matheson to plug up the shaft, which he did. But it afterwards broke loose again, and they had to take the work into their own hands. My hon. friend will understand that it was very difficult work to do. The flow of water was very violent, and appliances which might have been got in such a country as we are situated in, were not available there. They had great difficulty in getting anybody to take the work in connection with it. There was a great deal of alarm as to the possible consequences ; and I felt that the only thing I could do was to authorize the Yukon Council to do whatever might be necessary and to incur any expense that it might be necessary to incur.

Mr. LENNOX. We can understand—or rather we can imagine—that, as the hon. minister suggests, it was a work of very great difficulty. But we have to take it as a matter of imagination. The only support we have for opinion is the amount expended, for the minister is not able to give us any information upon which to form an opinion. It may be quite true that the money was properly and necessarily expended. But we have no means at the present time of judging of it. He is not able to tell us anything of the nature of the work executed. This is spoken of as a shaft. If it is a shaft in the ordinary acceptation of that term in mining, I suppose, it to be of considerable size. I suppose the minister could not tell us the size, but perhaps he could tell us whether it was really a shaft or an ordinary boring.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a miners' shaft.

Mr. LENNOX. I would suggest to the hon. minister that he should not ask us to deal with this item until he can give us some reasonable information to enable us to judge whether the expenditure is right or not. Before I sit down there is one point on which the minister perhaps can give us some information. It was mentioned that the man who caused the original difficulty proposed to get control of this flow of water for the purpose of furnishing water to miners, he to pay a royalty of 10 per cent. Has there been as yet any income derived by the government to recoup or liquidate the expenditure incurred ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The arrangement was only made in March of this year.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister inform the committee as to the basis on which the 10 per cent is calculated, and what probability there is as to the recovery of this $50,000 within a reasonable time on this basis ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think I can give any explanation further than I have given. I authorized the Yukon Council to take the matter in hand. They did so by letting a contract, but the shaft broke out again, and they proceeded to do what they thought necessary under the circumstances, and what turned out to be successful. They sent a bill of $50,000 and, as the expenditure was incurred with our authorization, there was nothing for us to do but to pay it.

Mr. MONK. This is a peculiar item, and we are entitled to more information. Here is a man who digs a hole. We do not know who he is or whether he is solvent or not. He occasions this extraordinary outflow of water and the people of the Dominion are called upon to spend $50,000 to close up the hole. And now we are told that certain parties are going to unplug that hole and make a lot of money by using the flow of water. Is the man who is going to do this the same man who bored the hole in the first instance ? As my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) said, we ought to be given more details of the expenditure. We ought to know, in the first instance, the name of the man who sunk the shaft and whether he is solvent. He is the party primarily responsible for this money and the damage he has caused. Where has he gone ? Has any recourse been exercised against him ? And who is the man, now that the hole has been plugged and replugged who is going to unplug it and carry on this very profitable business ? And what are we to get out of it ? The item is so new, so novel, so original, that we should be made acquainted with the details. I think the hon. gentleman had better leave it in abeyance until he has some more information to give us.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The man who dug the shaft was Mr. A. R. Thompson, No. 3, Eldorado Creek. The shaft was not sunk for finding water, but in the ordinary way for finding gold and they found the water by accident. It was just a case of something happening which would have caused irreparable damage if the government had not interfered. As to whether we have a right to recover from

Mr. Thompson, I would not express a definite opinion. I doubt it. He asked for a franchise to make use of the water, he himself proposing the condition that he should pay a percentage. I do not think there is the least doubt but that the government did, under the circumstances, what was the proper thing to do. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had received a telegram that this accident had occurred and this damage was being done, he would have done what I did, and later on would have come to parliament and asked for a vote of money. I do not think anybody would have acted differently under the circumstances. This flow of water, if no action had been taken, would have done an irreparable damage by flooding mining lands, and in that very severe climate when the water would have frozen, it would have formed an immense mass of ice, with the result that mining operations could not have been carried on in the spring, and practically the whole industry would have been destroyed for the next season.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister thinks that probably some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House would have done the same as he did, and perhaps they would to some extent. We have a statement from these gentlemen who were delegated to perform the work, but I think we should have that statement more in detail. It begins with an item of $4,000 for labour. That does not appear to me to be sufficient information. The item in itself is not large, but it is of a class which should not be recognized in dealing with public money. The same remark applies to items running all through these estimates. Referring again to what the minister said about this question of the 10 per cent—there would be no object in making the arrangement unless the minister had some calculation as to what the result would be. He enters into an arrangement with the man who caused the injury in the first place. It may be assumed that there is a possibility that the difficulty which happened may happen again. I think we ought to have some information as to why it was considered advisable to enter into that arrangement, and whether it was with the idea that this $50,000, or a portion of it, would be recouped.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think I could give any more information than I have given. I do not know whether the government will be recouped to any extent or not. We thought that, inasmuch as we were asked for a franchise for the use of this water, and the flow of the water had caused considerable expenditure on our part, that it would be only right for us to levy a reasonable percentage on it for the purpose of getting recouped. One thing we do know, that the Yukon Council has expended this money for that purpose, and we have to pay it. They have sent us a detailed statement of the expenditure, showing the arrangements and what was paid to each man while the work was going on. The hon. gentleman will find that in the Auditor General's Report. In the meantime, I have given the total expenditure in the different classes.

Mr. BLAIN. This accident, as I understand it, took place upon property that was owned by the government, and the government gave instructions to expend whatever money was necessary to protect that section of country from the overflow of water. My opinion is that the government should have held the property and sold it in some way by which they would have been able to get back the $50,000 expended. It seems to me they should not have given up to private parties the ownership of the property without having received the money they had expended upon it. Could the minister explain why he gave over the property without getting back the money expended upon it ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The property in question is a creek which is subject to mining leases in the ordinary way, and under ordinary regulations. We have an interest in it to the extent that we receive a royalty on the gold taken out. The expenditure was incurred on public grounds, to prevent the destruction of the industry on that creek. We never had possession of the claim except for the purpose of doing this work. It would have been no advantage for us to take possession of it, because that would not have been any security for the money.

Mr. MORIN. I hope the minister will excuse me if I ask some questions that perhaps he has already answered, because I was not in the House when this conversation took place. Would he tell me how deep that shaft was sunk ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. 222½ feet.

Mr. MORIN. How wide was the shaft ? I suppose it was dug down in the usual way. Shafts of that kind are generally dug square down, 6 feet by 6 feet, or 8 feet by 8 feet, or 10 feet by 10 feet.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The ordinary size of a mining shaft is 3 to 4 feet square.

Mr. MORIN. In sinking the shaft, did you use a bucket with a windlass to hoist the material out, or did you use an engine ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will explain to my hon. friend. The shaft was put down upon a mining claim owned by a man named Thompson. He owned the claim and put down the shaft himself. He thought there was good bed-rock below where he had been mining, and that he would find more profitable gravel, but instead of that he found a subterranean lake, which must have been in some parts higher than the surface of the ground. The water was forced up through the shaft in enormous quantities. It was in the early part of the winter, when the weather was extremely cold, and the result of this enormous flow of water was that it threatened to cover the whole valley with ice, so that it would be impossible in the spring to carry on mining operations. We were urged by the council of the Yukon Territory to authorize them to spend the money necessary to enable them to plug up the hole and stop the water from flowing. They let a contract to stop the water, and the flow was temporarily stopped, but afterwards the force of the water opened up the shaft again and they had to construct a canal to carry it off and prevent the ice from accumulating in the valley. That is the whole thing, and we have to pay the bill.

Mr. MORIN. I do not understand the hon. minister when he says that they plugged up the hole. There are times and places where the water is stopped by plugging up the hole, but I understand the hon. minister to say that they filled the shaft up. They did not plug up the hole; they just filled it up. Am I right or am I wrong ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know the details of the practical operations up there. I understand in the first place that they tried to plug it up by filling the shaft with bags of beans and pease and things of that kind, so that the swelling would cause the bags to become firm. This is an old method of stopping the flow of water in a well. They tried that at first, but they found it unsuccessful.

Mr. MORIN. That is not what is called in a mining district plugging up the hole. That is filling a shaft. I have seen work of that kind done. While sinking a shaft the miners struck what is called conglomorate rock and found a flow of water. They drilled through the rock with a diamond drill and found too much water and they did not fill up the shaft, but they plugged the hole with a piece of cedar. They drove a cedar plug into the hole, and then drove an iron pin into the cedar plug, and thus stopped the flow in that way. In the case of which the hon. minister speaks it was not plugging the hole, but filling the shaft. I think that in the way they went at it they made a mistake. Does the hon. minister know whether they went through frozen ground or loose ground, rock or slate?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Before they started to sink this shaft they were mining in what is usually to be considered as bed rock. But my hon. friend will probably know that in mining districts they often find what is called false bed rock.

Mr. MORIN. That is what is called underground slide.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They expected that they would find bed rock farther down, and get better paying gravel, but instead of finding bed rock, they found a lake.

Mr. MORIN. They found what they call in a mining country an undisturbed stratum. Nevertheless, that was a very expensive work to cost $50,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. MORIN. I have sunk shafts and worked in shafts and slate, coal, rock and clay, and from my knowledge of these things I can tell the hon. minister that the figure is altogether too high. This shaft was 3 x 4 feet square. Unless this work was done in conglomerate rock or frozen ground, the material could be dug for a dollar a foot.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was not digging; it was filling.

Mr. MORIN. Filling would be done for a great deal less than that.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say one thing in connection with this matter. I have no doubt that the committee is somewhat disappointed in not being able to get the information from the hon. member who represents the district (Mr. Ross) that the committee anticipated getting. The hon. minister tells us to-night that the hon. member for the Yukon is unfortunatly laid up from illness and that he has never been well since he had a paralytic stroke a year ago. It seems to me that it does not reflect very great credit on the government that they should have compelled a man in his physical condition to contest that seat as their candidate, because they must have known, as any one would know, that a man in that condition is hardly the man to bear the strain that would be put upon him in going through a campaign there and then coming out here to represent the people of the Yukon. I do not think it is very creditable to the government, and it seems they must have found themselves in a peculiar position; otherwise they would not have been compelled to bring that hon. gentleman out as their candidate under those circumstances.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any correspondence which would throw any light on the subject ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is nothing that would show any more than I have stated to the committee. The Yukon council simply explained what had happened and asked for authority. I think it happened nearly all by telegraph, and believing it was a case of absolute necessity I authorized them to go on. The work was done under the authority of the commissioner of the district, who was then Major Wood, of the Mounted Police, and the Yukon council. Of course, the accounts have been audited by the controller of the district.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That does seem a very large amount for filling a shaft 3 x 4 feet square and 200 feet deep, although I suppose some of the expense was incurred in connection with the construction of the canal on a subsequent occasion. But, even taking that into consideration, one would suppose that one-fifth of this amount would have done this work.

Grant to recoup the local council of the Yukon Territory for part of their outlay on roads and bridges during fiscal year 1902-3, $126,642.50.

Mr. SPROULE. By what authority was this money expended by the Yukon council? This is to recoup the council for money expended. Where did they find the money and under what authority did they expend it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Yukon council began the construction of a considerable number of roads with the funds at their disposal during last year. I may say before giving the details of the expenditure that the amount of their expenditure, whether from miscalculation or otherwise, rather exceeded the amount of their revenue, and they had at the end of the year a shortage of $126,000. The roads they constructed were as follows:—

Gold bottom road, extension, $4,337.84; Dominion wagon road, $4,010.72; lower Dominion sled road, $984.00; Henderson wagon road extension, $1,522.62; Lepine creek, winter road to Quartz mines, $2,770; Bear creek and Lovett Gulch road, $4,560; Last Chance wagon road, $408.82; Last Chance sled road, $2,799; Boucher creek sled road and pack trail, $4,683.79; Mayo bridge and trail Stewart river district, $1,795; Clear creek trail, $750; Eureka wagon road and Indian river bridge, $7,170.05; White Horse copper mines wagon road, $1,901.39; Livingstone creek wagon road, $1,449.42; surveying trail from White Horse to Mush creek Dalton trail, $672.83; Sulphur wagon road construction, $813.39; Dawson—White Horse road, $54,431.66; Sulphur sled road to Gold run, $996.42; Stewart Rover winter road, McQuesten to Gordens Landing, $2,000; Gold Hill wagon road from Eldorado up Gold Hill, $6,987.20; West Dawson Bluff road from Hubrick Ferry to Glacier trail, $8,804.25 Dawson Bluff road improvements, widening road from eight to twenty feet along Bluff from Dawson to Ogilvie Bridge, $24,366.71; Hootalinqua trail location—from Hootalinqua to Junction Dawson—White Horse road, $251.50. Total, $138,467.11.

In addition to this they spent $88,632.16 in maintenance and repairs in different roads which were already in existence. The total amount for construction of roads was $138,467; for maintenance and repairs of roads, $88,632.16; $1,807.50 and $1,500, making in all $230,406.77. The amount at their disposal from revenue which they had, left a shortage of about $126,632. That is the amount we are asking parliament to vote.

Mr. SPROULE. By what authority did they make this expenditure?

Mr. TAYLOR. To carry the elections.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was no authority given by the department to the Yukon council to exceed their appropriation, but they went on and they spent the money. We have no doubt that value was received for the money and that the work was useful work, and, therefore, we think we ought to acknowledge it and pay the expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. Did this government make no remonstrance to the Yukon council. It is a most extraordinary way of doing business and altogether outside of any constitutional rule of any nation in the world.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have made it clear to the Yukon council that the appropriation in future is not to be exceeded. I quite admit that the action of the council in exceeding the amount at their disposal, was quite indefensible, but I do not think my hon. friend can suggest any other course than to pay what in reality is an expenditure which has furnished useful results, and at the same time to endeavour to see that they don't exceed the appropriation in future.

Mr. SPROULE. This expenditure is not like plugging in the hole. It is not something that was forced on the minister against his will. The expenditure must have been going on the whole season and the minister must have known what this council was doing. That was the time to remonstrate.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from East Grey is quite in error, because the larger part of this money was for plugging a hole during the election in the Yukon Territory. The roads were all built then. We want details of this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have given that.

Mr. TAYLOR. You gave a list of roads, but we want to know when the money was spent by the Yukon council and to whom it was paid.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The expenditure was incurred during last season. The deputy minister was there in the middle of the summer and he informs me that the information at his disposal did not lead him to suppose that the appropriation would be exceeded, and we had no intimation of it until the work was done and the liability incurred.

Mr. TAYLOR. That proves what I say that when the deputy minister was there in the summer the appropriation was not exceeded, but afterwards the election came on and the money was spent. We want to know whether these roads were built by contract and who the contractors were. Surely the council sent down some details.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no doubt we have that, and I will lay it on the Table.

Mr. LENNOX. What was the amount of the appropriation for this work.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Yukon council has various sources of revenue, one being the grant that this parliament votes, and their total revenue last year was, according to our last figures, $385,386.84. The expenditure was $562,029.34, leaving a balance of $176,642.50, of which $50,000 was for the expenditure in connection with the shaft on Eldorado Creek and the remainder for the roads and bridges to which I have referred.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not see exactly how the figures work out, though it may be as the minister states. On the figures he gave a few minutes ago, there was in round numbers a total expenditure of $230,000 on roads. There is a shortage on roads of $126,000. The difference is $104,000. We have this fact, that where the Yukon council would have been justified in expending about $104,000 they actually expended $230,000, or more than double. I do not know whether that fact had any reference to the elections or not; but whether it had or not, it requires very serious consideration and the very fullest information, I think, before this committee is justified in coming to the conclusion which the minister suggests, namely, that there is no alternative but to pay this money now. I do not know where this matter is going to end. I do not know that the hon. minister is exactly correct in saying that this kind of thing never occurred before. Has there never been another occasion when this has been done, though not to so large an extent ? It is impossible to see how this could occur without the knowledge of the department. If it is an honest expenditure, any person familiar with public works and keeping track of the matter in the way in which the department is bound to do, would surely know that the council were more than doubling the amount they were justified in expending. I do not suppose that these public works are gone into without some calculation, some estimate, some data on which to proceed, and the department, if they exercise reasonable supervision, must be able to detect it if the council is going altogether beyond the proper mark. The minister tells us that he has read to-night the items of expenditure. I submit that he has not read the items in the way in which we should have them. We must separate the items. We have large expenditures for various roads. We have the total expenditure only for each road or each separate undertaking; but we have no details whatever of the items which go to make up these separate expenditures. What this committee, I submit, is entitled to is the details of the expenditure in reference to every one of these roads, taking every separate work by itself. I do not say that there is one dollar of dishonest expenditure; but I do say that this committee is not justified at this stage in passing this item, and the minister will recognize our right to have full particulars before the matter goes any further.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister's own deputy, who was there early in the season, must have been informed what work it was contemplated to do. The minister must also have had some estimate from the Yukon council before last year's estimates were voted. The work was laid out a year before. There is a telegraph line there, which, so far as we know, has been in operation all summer, and the department were in communication with the Yukon council all the time; and yet they allowed that expenditure to go on in an irregular and unconstitutional way. It seems to me entirely unaccountable, and I do not see on what principle the minister expects this House to vote the money. Then, again, the work was done, and it must have been paid for from some source. From what source were the payments made ? Where did the Yukon council get the funds to pay for the construction of these roads, without the authority of the minister, parliament, or any one else, so far as we know ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend understands that the Yukon council have various sources of revenue. Their total revenue last year amounted to $385,386.94. Their revenue keeps coming in, and I suppose they are suffering from a shortage because they have obligations which they have not been able to meet; but as the revenue comes in, I suppose they have been able to pay the accounts as they have come in. They have simply rendered us a statement showing what their expenditure was, and showing that they had that shortage at the end of the year. There was no authority given to them from here to exceed the revenue, and I had no advice that that was done until I received a statement showing that they had over-expended their revenue, and showing what the expenditure had been for. I have no doubt that we have the exact details of every item of expenditure, as they had to go before the Auditor General to be audited in the regular way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The difficulty seems to be that if the revenue can be exceeded to the amount of $126,000, there is no reason why it could not be exceeded to the amount of one or two millions. The methods of the government of the Yukon must be extremely defective if difficulties of this kind are likely to arise. How do we know that the government of the Yukon will not during the present year exceed their revenue by $500,000 or $1,000,000 ? Is there no check on these gentlemen ? Do they vote these amounts in the Yukon council, and if so, are they not under control in some way ? Who was the party on the spot responsible for this over expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The officer of the department there, is also controller of local expenditure, Mr. Lithgow. It is his duty to advise. The items are regularly voted by the council on the same principle as we vote items here.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the officer not advise the government that an over-expenditure was taking place ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman consider that the officer was doing his duty towards the government and the country ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is a very good officer, generally speaking, but was at fault in not advising us.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Lithgow is a very capable and efficient officer, and if it was his duty to advise as well as superintend, I cannot understand his not having done so. The amount seems very excessive, if you compare it with the expenditure in the North-west Territories on roads. $230,000 is a large amount for a very small population and area comparatively speaking. When the money from the revenue of the Yukon is received, is it subject absolutely to the control of the officers there without any control by the department ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The local council have a regular organization and our comptroller is also comptroller of the local expenditure. The council carries on its bookkeeping much the same as we do ours. I suppose that the way this over-expenditure was incurred, was due to the fact that the men in charge incurred larger expenditure than they were authorized to do. Possibly the comptroller did not know until the bills came in. I can say to my hon. friend that difficulties of this kind will sometimes occur in connection with government districts a long way off.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it not be better to alter the system ? The Customs department collects an enormous amount of money, but it is not paid in to the credit of that department. That department cannot spend it. It is paid into the consolidated revenue fund. Would it not be better to have the revenue paid in to the consolidated revenue fund and have the expenditure of the Yukon limited to a certain amount, voted and put to their credit.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that the method of paying local revenue into the consolidated revenue fund would answer. We have a council there now, one-half of the members of which are direct representatives of the people. A considerable portion of the revenue is derived from local sources. Out of a total revenue of $385,000, about one-half is from local sources. I am quite prepared to admit that an improvement should be made, so that there would be no possibility in the future of the appropriation being exceeded. Things ought to be so arranged that we will be promptly advised of any excess over the appropriation, but that will have to be done by checking not only the actual expenditure of money but the incurring of liabilities, which in this case was what actually occurred. The officers charged with the expenditure of the money did more work than they were authorized to do by the council. If there had been an appropriation in excess of the amount at the disposal of the government, they would have reported it ? No report came and we were not advised until after the work was done that there was much shortage.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am inclined to think it occurred in that way. I know that Mr. Lithgow, and am very much inclined to think that he in no way neglected his duty. But some one has been derelict. If it is some one in charge of certain expenditure, the hon. gentleman should let us know and what reprimand, if any, was administered to him or what means he proposes taking to prevent this occurring again. The hon. gentleman likens this council to the case of a provincial government ; but if a provincial government made an over-expenditure and came here to be recouped, they would be told to meet it out of next year's income. We are asked to supplement this out of the consolidated revenue of Canada, and we must have more effective control. In what department did the over-expenditure occur and who is the officer responsible ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It occurred in connection with the expenditure on public works and the commissioner of the district is the officer responsible.

Mr. LENNOX. Who are the parties who determine what public works in that territory are to be executed and what roads are to be opened up ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The commissioner and the council.

Mr. LENNOX. When is that done ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be in the beginning of the year I suppose.

Mr. McCORMICK. How many miles of roads were built for that $130,000 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the exact mileage, but I have a table showing the location.

Mr. LENNOX. I infer that last year some time there was a scheme outlined for certain public works. This year, I presume, at a corresponding period, something of the same kind was done. Now, having found that this difficulty arose, has the hon. minister put himself in a position, knowing what expenditure is contemplated, to make sure that there shall not——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I made arrangements that the total amount of the appropriations of this year should be telegraphed to the commissioner, and I gave instructions that he should be advised that that amount should not be exceeded under any circumstances.

Mr. LENNOX. It seems to me that, if parliament is liable to pay the money—and probably there is no way out of it—it would be necessary for the authority responsible to this House—I suppose it would be the Minister of the Interior—to have every scheme involving the expenditure of money submitted to him before it is determined upon, otherwise it is not possible to be sure that this may not arise again. Would the minister tell us whether anything of this kind has arisen before ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the first place, we carried on these works through the Public Works Department. But, so far as roads and trails were concerned, that was found to be very unsatisfactory. Serious complaints were made and it was contended that the local council would be able to construct the works more effectively and economically, and would be better judges of the way the trails should run, than an officer sent by the Public Works Department. It was decided to change and put the matter in the hands of the local council, in conjunction with an officer of the commissioner's staff, who, in this case, was Major Wood. We made the change, thinking we should improve our position. Last year was the first year we did this and we found that they exceeded their appropriation. The officer of the commissioner, of course, while not a member of the government, is responsible to me as minister at the head of the department. He acted on the advice of the council. I do not think there is the slightest danger of the commissioner allowing the appropriation to be exceeded in the future in the face of express instructions to the contrary.

I do not think the fact of the over expenditure is due to the elections as the hon. gentleman suggested, but, simply to the fact that the works cost more money than was anticipated. The men who were out on the works incurred larger liability than the officers thought they would. I do not think the council knew that they had exceeded their appropriation until the bills came in. That is what I am told, and I believe that it is in accordance with the facts.

Mr. SPROULE. What sources of revenue have the council, and how much ? Are they paid so much per head of population or do they collect certain revenues ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. From liquor licenses they receive $27,334.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they keep the whole of that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, these are local revenues. From liquor permits they receive $123,983.69 ; barristers' registrations, $925 ; incorporation fees, $700 ; fines, $1,061.50 ; minor revenues, $2,930.33; marriage licenses, $356.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they get any subsidy from the Dominion government in addition?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Just what we vote in this way. We voted last year $131,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a quasi form of government. Is there no provision in the law by which they are entitled, year by year, to so much per capita or to a certain amount ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Therefore they can properly depend only on the revenues received from the sources mentioned ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then there is no justification in the world for making this over expenditure and expecting the Dominion government to make it good. And it seems to me that it is indulging to an unlimited degree any men or class of men to let them make such an expenditure and allow it to pass. Have the government in any way called Major Wood to account for what has been done ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, except by voting him an increase of salary.

Mr. SPROULE. That conduct is quite in keeping with the management of public affairs in many other cases under this government. It is disgraceful to the government and doubly so to the Minister of the Interior. He has his own agents in the Yukon, he has a telegraph line, built at great expense, to enable him to communicate directly with his agents or employees. Yet this expenditure goes on and there is no remonstrance, no punishment for the official who incurred it. As there was no word of remonstrance, so there is no word of real explanation and, we are simply asked to vote the money. The minister says that the election taking place had nothing to do with this expenditure. From the experience we have had in other parts of the country, it is at least suspicious. The election was taking place, and every employee of the government was allowed to spend money without restraint and without remonstrance. They have a large revenue to fall back upon, that of the Dominion, and we are asked to vote the money without a word of explanation or excuse. The expenditure has been made by the minister's agents, and the country has to pay the shot.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand from the minister that last year we voted $131,000 and we are now called upon to pay $126,642.50. Then we are called upon to pay, something that probably could not be foreseen or controlled, this $50,000 for plugging up the shaft. So, whereas we expected to expend $131,000, we are called upon to expend, not only that, but $176,642.50 in addition. Is that correct ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. And this is what the hon. minister calls good business management on the part of a good business government. It will be for the people to judge, and I think they will come to a different conclusion from that of the minister.

Grant to St. Mary's hospital, Dawson, $12,500.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is one of two grants to hospitals that are mentioned in the estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the two in one city?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. And both are crowded. The accommodation is not sufficient.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the government come to have two hospitals instead of one large one ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are not public hospitals.

Mr. SPROULE. Who built them, and by whom are they controlled ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One is a Roman Catholic and the other is Presbyterian. They are established by those two churches through humanitarian motives, and are conducted under considerable difficulties. They do public work and fulfil the functions of public hospitals. They formerly received $2.50 a day for each patient, but that was found insufficient, and they now get $4 a day. We are asking for an appropriation in this case of $12,500 to relieve them of immediate necessities and put them in a position to carry on their work.

Mr. SPROULE. What oversight, or control, or supervision has the government over these hospitals by way of inspection or otherwise so as to know whether they are run economically and efficiently ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have no oversight or control except that our officers go through the hospitals and see that they are properly carried on.

Mr. SPROULE. Have the government no one on the board of management who takes any part in seeing how they are conducted ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. For instance, in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, we grant a certain amount per day for each patient that is treated ; but we do not inspect the hospitals, that is done by local authority. The local authority in Dawson city would no doubt provide for the inspection of the hospitals. But our officers know what is going on, and see that everything is properly conducted. But there is no legal system of inspection by a federal officer.

Mr. SPROULE. Wherever we vote money for public institutions we should have some government oversight or inspection to see that the money is properly expended.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is not a vote given like money that is paid under an Act of parliament, where of course we should have official inspection. Here we are simply giving this money as a gratuity for work that is useful to the public. I have no doubt that if we desired to have a representative on the committee of management, or if we desired to have the hospitals inspected by our officers, the hospital authorities would cheerfully agree to it. But there is no necessity for it. Of course, on the general principle the hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. SPROULE. You vote money to different denominations for carrying on schools for the benefit of the Indians, and does the minister mean to say that the government has no oversight over those schools, does not inspect them, does not know the tuition which the children are receiving ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have not made any arrangement as yet for the payment of money for Indian education in the Yukon territory, but when we do, the schools will be inspected by our officers.

Mr. SPROULE. You are carrying on this system for a number of years in connection with the education of the Indians in the territories, in British Columbia, and in Manitoba. There you have oversight and inspection; but in this case where you vote money and hand it over to denominational hospitals you have no inspection or oversight.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If this were being done on a larger scale, or where there was a possibility of abuse, the hon. gentleman would be perfectly right in insisting upon official inspection. But here is a small town. I have no doubt the medical officer goes there, and the officer of the mounted police frequently visits the hospitals. The officers of the government are constantly there for the purposes of seeing what is going on. It is a small affair, there is no possibility of any abuse. At the same time, if the hon. gentleman insists upon it, I will agree to have the hospitals inspected by the medical officers of the government.

Mr. SPROULE. I think as a matter of principle—and I have expressed the same view before—that wherever we spend public money belonging to the state, we have a right to know from some source that that money is used for the purpose for which it is voted.

Mr. FRASER. There would be this difficulty, that it would take $12,500 to pay a doctor to inspect these hospitals, at the price doctors are paid out there.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will be the order of business for to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). We will take up several resolutions which stand on the Order Paper, and then go into Supply to consider a number of estimates that are scattered through the departments. Perhaps we will take up the estimates of the Railway Department, though I am not sure of that.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.15 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 24, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. CHAS. S. HYMAN (London) presented the report of the special committee to whom was referred Bill (No. 66) to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 231) to confer on the commissioner of patents certain powers for the relief of the Keller Heater Company of Canada, Limited.—Mr. McIsaac.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT, 1900, AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 232) to further amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900. He said : This Bill proposes to amend what is known as the Manitoba Grain Act, which is an Act of very great importance in regard to the transaction of the grain business and the shipment of grain in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It has been the subject of a good deal of consideration in this House and it has been found an extremely complicated subject and one in regard to which it was very difficult to reconcile the conflicting interests and conflicting views of different parts of the community. However, further discussion and experience have rendered it possible to bring the parties who are interested, the shippers, the buyers and the railway companies, rather more into harmony in their views. During the present session the Grain-growers Association of the west sent delegates to the city of Ottawa and they discussed the subject here during my absence with representatives of the grain dealers and the railway companies, and the result has been that they have practically arrived at an arrangement as to what would be fairly satisfactory mutually in the way of an amendment to the existing law. I may say that there is little doubt that the law as it stands at the present time is capable of improvement. I think the Bill which I am about to present and which represents something of a compromise arrangement entered into by the parties concerned will be a very great improvement in the direction of bringing about harmony and general contentment. The specific details of the Bill will, of course, be discussed further on the second reading and in committee, but in the meantime I will give a brief statement of what the Bill purposes to do. Sections 1 and 2 deal with the interpretation of the terms used in the Bill. Section 3 provides for the appointment of deputy commissioners. There is now a grain commissioner who has very considerable duties to perform under the Act and it has been found quite impossible for one man to do all the work. Of course the work, owing to the rapid increase in the production and shipment of grain from Manitoba and the North-west Territories, has enormously increased. It is generally admitted that more than one officer is required. Section 4 makes provision that what are known as track buyers of grain shall take out licenses. Section 5 makes provisions regarding the duties of weighmasters. It requires the weighmasters to keep a record of the fact when a car is leaking or in bad order. Section 6 deals with the time of rendering statements by warehousemen owning terminal public elevators. Section 7 gives the commissioner power to deal with disputes regarding applicants for elevator sites. Section 8 removes the provision which gives the commissioner discretion respecting the keeping of an account of the grain received, stored and shipped. Section 9 provides that the Act shall not require the receipt of grain where there is not sufficient accommodation in the elevator. Section 10 repeals the provision which in the present Act makes the holder of a receipt not liable for storage charges after the expiration of seven days from the giving of the notice requiring his grain to be shipped. Section 11 deals with the power of any person having grain stored in the elevator to order a car to be placed at such elevator. Section 12 amends the provisions relating to the duty of the warehousemen when grain is out of condition. Section 13 deals with the duty of the warehousemen in furnishing statements to the commissioner. Section 14 provides for the erection of flat warehouses. Section 15 defines the time within which any person who has procured a site is required to commence the erection of his elevator or warehouse. Section 16 makes provision for the erection of loading platforms and the furnishing of cars at such platforms. Section 17 regulates the duties of grain commission merchants. Section 18 provides for the application of fees collected. Section 19 requires the officers mentioned in section 50 of the Manitoba Grain Act to make certain reports to the commisisoner. Section 20 provides penalties for infraction of the Act. Section 21 deals with the distribution of cars and makes provisions respecting the business of track buyers. Sections 22 and 23 deal with the question of storage charges.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE GOVERNMENT OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Referring to the request made by the leader of the opposition for a further return in reference to copies of correspondence with the North-west government and the members thereof, on the question of provincial autonomy, I beg now to present a supplementary return to the Order which was passed, and in compliance with which a return was presented to this House some time ago. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that there are some of the letters which were mentioned in the list which he read to the House which cannot be found. There were letters which passed between A. L. Sifton and myself, which were upon the file that I had in the council chamber and which have been mislaid. As soon as that was ascertained, I telegraphed to the North-west government to send down copies of the letters from their files. They will be here probably in a day or two.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I may say that I have a print of some correspondence from the North-west Territories' legislative assembly which contains copies of these letters, and I can furnish it to the hon. gentleman if it is desired that they should be printed at once.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Then there are the following letters: one dated March 15th, 1902, from Mr. Haultain to Sir Wilfrid Laurier; one dated March 18th, 1902, from Sir Wilfrid Laurier to Mr. Haultain, which cannot be found at the present time. Sir Wilfrid informs me that he thinks these can be got, but the result of an inquiry from his secretary brought the reply that they could not be found.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have copies of all these that are mentioned on the list that I read to the House, and which can be furnished for the purpose of being printed. I think they are probably correct as they were printed by command of the territorial legislature.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I wish to mention the letters that are not in the list as presented so that there can be no mistake. There was a further letter from Mr. Haultain to myself, dated 2nd April, 1902, and another letter dated December 17th, from A. L. Sifton to myself. There is a letter dated January 31st, 1903, from Mr. Haultain to myself; one dated February 9th, from Mr. McGee to Mr. Haultain; one dated April 15th, from Mr. Haultain to myself; one dated April 17th, from Mr. Haultain to Mr. Fielding, and one dated July 25th, from Mr. Pelletier to Mr. Forget. These letters have not been found up to the present time, although the clerks in charge of the files have been busily engaged searching for them. They appear to have been mislaid; possibly they may have been taken to council. There may be some mistake about the dates which were transmitted to my hon. friend, and these mistakes may result in there being letters which are actually on the file, but which are not indicated by the exact dates. For instance, there is one letter which is stated to have been received by myself from Mr. Haultain, but I think there must be some mistake about that. It is supposed to have been received while I was away, but neither my private secretary nor any one else in the department has any record of it being received.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman would send his secretary to look over the papers I have, I think he could get copies of all these which are referred to in the list which I read to the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall do that, and if there are any that are not comprised within this return we will have them presented in the form of a supplementary return, so that it may be complete. In the meantime, I will leave this return on the Table of the House.

QU'APPELLE, LONG LAKE AND SASKATCHEWAN RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I beg to present a return that was moved for by the hon. member for Provencher, asking for all copies of papers, &c., with reference to the land grant to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company ; also a list of papers, &c., in connection with the Saskatchewan Land Company with reference to their acquisition of the land grant to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway, and also a return as to the land sections in connection with the said railway. I present the return so far as it relates to the transfer from the railway company, because members on the other side of the House are desirous of having these papers. The rest of the correspondence is very voluminous, and the clerks are at work on it now, and we expect to have it ready shortly.

TREADGOLD COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not the personnel of the Treadgold Commission has finally been settled ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, the commission as finally issued will be to Mr. Justice Britton and Mr. B. T. A. Bell, secretary of the Canadian Mining Institute.

THE TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman promised yesterday to give us the information to-day as to whether or not Sir Wm. Van Horne had consented to accept a position on the Transportation Commission.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry to say that I have a letter from Sir Wm. Van Horne stating that he cannot accept the chairmanship of the commission. I will hand over the letter to my hon. friend.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. H. BOURASSA (Labelle). I wish to remind the Prime Minister that, in the first days of the session, two or three addresses were carried, for the return of some papers that have not yet been brought down. One of those addresses was in relation with the repeal of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty ; another was about the establishment of a naval reserve and a navy school in Canada ; and, I think, there was another one about the commissions granted to Canadian officers in the British army ; but I am not quite sure about the latter.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will attend to the matter.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAY POLICY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). We had the assurance of my right hon. friend on Friday last and again on Wednesday that the proposed measure with regard to the transcontinental railway would be placed before the House not later than this week. Does my hon. friend propose to make any announcement to-day ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I expect, without pledging myself absolutely, to put upon the Order Paper to-day notice to that effect.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I trust that my hon. friend's expectations will be fulfilled. The delays in bringing this measure before the House which has now been in session for about four and a half months, remind us very much of the delays in the celebrated case of Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce, and the House might regard itself in the position of Miss Flyte, who used to say she expected judgment on the Day of Judgment. My right hon. friend some times in days gone by has been discouraged about the progress of business, but I am sure on this side of the House we are getting discouraged in regard to the length of this session, and in connection with the delay to which the government persist in putting us day after day and week after week with regard to this matter. I definitely understood from my right hon. friend a week ago to-day, that that measure would be brought down this week. The right hon. gentleman then said it would be down probably early this week, but that it certainly would be down this week, and we are to-day as much in the dark as ever about it. Could not my right hon. friend at least give us an assurance as to a date beyond which he will not keep the House and the country waiting for this policy? He expects to be able to put it on the Order Paper to-day, but he does not pledge himself to do so, and we know that expectations are often disappointed. My right hon. friend's expectations with regard to this policy have been so often disappointed already that we really do not feel the same confidence in them with regard to this that we do with regard to some other matters. I would like, if my right hon. friend can do it—and I think the request is not an unreasonable one—that he should at least fix a date beyond which the House and the country will not be kept waiting for the announcement of this measure.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is because expectations are often disappointed that I do not absolutely pledge myself to give the notice of motion to-day, although I think I shall be in a position to do so. My hon. friend is a lawyer, and he has reminded us of a celebrated case in which there was considerable delay. It is because I know something of the delays of lawyers that I do not absolutely pledge myself to give the notice which I expect to give. Unfortunately, I am in the hands of the lawyers at the present moment; and, until they have completed their work, which I think they will do to-day, I cannot give that pledge. My hon. friend, being a member of the profession, knows that it would not do for me to pledge myself until I am absolutely sure that I shall be in a position to keep my word.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is the part of my right hon. friend, as a statesman, to see that the lawyers do not neglect their duty.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend an consolidate the law respecting railways.

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to a request that was made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). He had to leave to-day, and he told me that he had mentioned to the hon. Minister of Justice that he desired that this Bill should not be proceeded with to-day, but that a future day should be fixed for its consideration. He holds that if that is done the progress of the Bill will be facilitated. The Bill was only distributed, I think, yesterday and the members have hardly yet had a chance to look it over. I do not anticipate that there are any great number of points to be considered; but if it could be left over until, say, Wednesday next, I think that would suit the hon. member for Lincoln.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I would suggest that we fix Tuesday next, and if it is found in the meantime that Wednesday would suit the hon. member better, we could fix that day. I said yesterday to Mr. Lancaster that we would take the earliest possible day that would suit his convenience.

Mr. LENNOX. I may say that the hon. member for Lincoln told me not to ask for anything that would delay the work of the House. While he would prefer Wednesday, he would be willing to have it taken on Tuesday if necessary.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We will say Tuesday, and if in the interval that is found to be inconvenient for the hon. member for Lincoln, he can let me know and I will have the Bill kept over until Wednesday.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood that it was at the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Justice that he agreed to name a day when this Bill should be proceeded with.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. member for Lincoln came to me yesterday afternoon and asked me if I was going on with the Bill. I said I was ready to proceed with it. He said that as he had not had an opportunity to examine it since it had been reprinted, he asked me if I would postpone it until next week. I told him that I thought it would be well to have a day fixed for the consideration of the Bill, and he then agreed, as I understood, to fix Tuesday. It is immaterial to me whether we fix Tuesday or Wednesday, so long as we have an understanding beforehand, in order that other business may be brought up in the interval. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

BOUNTY ON BINDER TWINE.

House in committee on the following resolution—The Minister of Finance.

That it is expedient to enact as follows:—

1. The Governor in Council may authorize the payment of a bounty to any corporation, firm or person manufacturing binder twine in Canada; such bounty to be equal to the amount paid as export duty in the Philippine Islands, on manilla fibre produced in such islands, and used in the manufacture of binder twine in Canada. Such bounty shall only be payable in respect of binder twine manufactured on or after the first day of September, 1902. Provided, however, that the bounty shall not exceed three-eighths of one cent per pound, on the manilla fibre so used in the manufacture of binder twine.

2. The Governor in Council may make regulations to carry out the intention of this Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At an earlier stage of the session I intimated that the government, while not willing to make any material change in the tariff in the present session, deeming that such a course would not be expedient, having regard to the general conditions of the country, might find it expedient to invite the attention of the House at a later stage to the condition of one or two industries in connection with some legislation touching the question of bounties. I mentioned at that time two particular industries, the manufacture of binder twine and the lead industry, and since that time we have introduced resolutions with regard to bounties on iron and steel. So that there are now on the notice paper three resolutions touching the question of bounties. The particular motion before us deals with the question of a bounty on binder twine. Binder twine is on our free list, and for some years the business has been carried on under that condition, and on the whole, I believe, has prospered. However, the industry has been placed at a special disadvantage by certain United States legislation, not touching the question of import duties, but the question of export duties on the raw material which is produced in the Philippine Islands. About a year ago the United States government enacted a law under which, while an export duty of three-eighths of a cent per pound was levied on all manilla fibre exported from the Philippine Islands, and while all shippers of the material would have to pay that export duty, a special provision was made that if the material so exported from the Philippine Islands should be manufactured in the United States, and then shipped abroad, the shippers would get a rebate equivalent to the export duty. The net result is that while the manufacturer of binder twine in the United States has exemption from that duty, and can send the manufactured article into Canada free in competition with the product of our own manufacturers, the Canadian manufacturer, who imports his raw material also from the Philippine Islands, has to pay that export duty. In that way there is a substantial discrimination against the Canadian manufacturer of binder twine and in favour of the American manufacturer. It is not exactly a question of free trade. The Canadian manufacturer is placed in a much worse position than he could be by the application of free trade principles. We have thought, therefore, that in order that we might compensate the manufacturer of Canada for that special and exceptional disadvantage under which he labours, we would provide for the payment of a bounty to the extent of the export duty. The bounty, of course, will only be paid on that portion of the manilla fibre which is imported into Canada and used in the manufacture of binder twine. Our statistics will easily show the quantity of manilla fibre imported into Canada from the Philippine Islands ; but as all that fibre is not used in the manufacture of binder twine, these statistics will not help us very much in estimating the amount that we shall have to pay under these resolutions. We propose that the bounty shall take effect on all binder twine manufactured in Canada from the 1st of September last. Our reason for fixing that date is that the law of the United States was passed upwards of a year ago, and the manufacture of all binder twine manufactured in Canada from manilla fibre for the present season began last autumn. We therefore propose that all binder twine manufactured in Canada from the 1st of September last shall be entitled to this bounty, on evidence being given that the manilla fibre which entered into its manufacture was imported directly or indirectly from the Philippine Islands and that the export duty was paid thereon. It is difficult to estimate what amount we shall have to pay under this item. It will not, however, be a very large sum. The limitation is not as to the aggregate amount. It is as to the amount per pound of manilla fibre imported and used in the manufacture of binder twine.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the hon. minister inform me how many pounds of binder twine were imported into Canada from the United States last year, and the value of the same ; also, the quantity in pounds exported from Canada to the United States ? As I understand, there is an arrangement by which binder twine can be exported to the United States free of duty, though I believe there are some conditions in their law, the practical effect of which is to exclude our binder twine.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total imports in 1902 were 14,927,302, I think practically all from the United States. The value of it was $1,507,344. Practically we have no exports to the United States. Binder twine under certain conditions is on the American free list. I think this refers to binder twine made of certain material which practically shuts out twine of our manufacture.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand the hon. minister to say that under conditions that have existed during the past year the binder twine industry of Canada flourished?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For several years—since the tariff was adopted.

Mr. TAYLOR. Since binder twine was put on the free list?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not see how the hon. minister can say that when he tells us just now that we have imported nearly 1,500,000 pounds at a value of $1,507,000. This was all manufactured by American labour, and was sold to the Canadian farmer at higher prices than the farmer was able to buy it for before the binder twine was put on the free list. With a great flourish of trumpets the duty was taken off and some arrangement was announced to have been made under which it was said the Canadian manufacturer would have access to the markets of the United States. And to-day the minister admits that they made such conditions—and the figures prove it—that the Canadian manufacturer cannot export a pound of binder twine to the United States, though we import such a large quantity. Why does not the government protect the binder twine industry and establish this manufacture in Canada as it was before, so that Canadian labour may be employed and still the Canadian farmer get his binder twine cheaper than he can buy it to-day from the American trust? Instead of a vigorous policy of that kind the minister comes down and gives a little bounty, making it equivalent to what the Americans have, still leaving our market to the Americans, and gaining no chance for us to sell to them, putting about a million and a half of Canadian money into the United States, a great portion of which is paid for labour, and leaving our farmers still subject to the extortion of trust prices for their binder twine. I understand that our binder twine factories have been practically closed for the last two or three years. They have been before the government asking for relief and this is the relief they are given.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) perhaps, is not aware that, during the last couple of years the Canadian manufacturers of binder twine have been able to carry on operations only by the favour of their American rivals. I make this statement because I have undoubted evidence that it is true. The American manufacturers of binder twine came over to this country and told the Canadian manufacturers: Unless you limit your product, we will slaughter the market, and you will not be allowed to manufacture at all. If the Minister of Finance wishes to hold an inquiry into the case, he will find that every word of my statement is true. Under these circumstances, the minister has no right to say that the manufacture of binder twine in Canada is prospering. I say it again: The American manufacturers told the Canadian manufacturers that unless they limited their product they would be slaughtered——

Mr. CLARKE. The Americans fixed the price.

Mr. TARTE. Of course. We are practically in the hands of the American trust. That is an unfair position. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance says he proposes this bounty on account of special circumstances in the binder twine industry, as it is protected in the United States. But he has no right to take that stand, in my humble opinion; because while he invokes that pretext in his action in regard to binder twine, he intends also to ask parliament to give bounties in the case of lead and in the case of iron and steel, though these special circumstances do not exist in these industries in the United States. The principle we are asked to sanction to-day is not a fair principle. We are asked to take out of the pockets of the tax-payers of this country large sums of money to pay to the manufacturers of binder twine in Canada. If, instead of this, we had a protective policy, a straight Canadian policy, the tax-payer would not be called upon to contribute money to individuals or to firms.

Mr. CLARKE. And the farmers would get that binder twine cheaper.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, because, as I said, we are practically in the hands of the American trust to-day and have been for a year or more. Of course, I speak independently, for I am responsible for the very policy that has been followed. I do not say that it had my approval—very far from it. But I remained a member of the government while that policy was adopted and carried out. I am fully responsible. So, I do not speak in a party spirit at all. Not by any means. But I say again that the principle we are asked to sanction to-day is not a proper remedy. It is unfair to the tax-payer; and it will not inspire confidence among the manufacturers or induce them to invest more capital in this industry. It is, as I said on another occasion, an expedient; and expedients have never, to my knowledge, produced permanent good results. However, those of us who do not share the views of the Minister of Finance and his colleagues are obliged to accept the remedy that is offered. We cannot get everything we want; we are bound to accept what we can get.

Mr. MACLEAN. The House and the country will hear with great regret the announcement of the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) here to-day. In substance he has told us that the efforts of the government in the direction of the revision of the tariff and increased protection have no results, but the granting of bounty on iron and steel, on lead and on binder twine. I have been studying the question rather closely of late, and watching the signs of the times on the other side of the boundray line. If there is anything in view at the present day, it is that we have in America reached 'the crest of the wave,' as the Minister of Finance called it some time ago. The people of the United States, as a nation and a manufacturing nation, are preparing themselves to make a slaughter house of Canada. I believe that the present financial disturbance on the other side of the line is merely precursory of a movement which is spreading all over the union which seeks wider markets, and I believe that before the day is out we shall hear something of a movement that has been inaugurated in the North-western states, with its centre in Minneapolis, which looks forward to some arrangement as a result of the coming meeting of the commission which will increase the markets of the Americans at the expense of Canadians. I believe that that movement is widespread, and that every effort will be made, when the commission meets, to break down the barriers we have and turn the Canadian market over to the American manufacturer. I believe the country views this with alarm. which will not be made less by the policy announced by the Finance Minister, limiting the action of the government to the granting of bounties to the extent he has named. If there ever was a time when we should have an up-and-up, forward protectionist policy it is to-day. We propose to go into extensive expenditure on railways in this country; we propose to grant millions and millions of money to build railways; and yet we have not the courage in this House, and this government has not the courage, to adopt a protectionist policy with regard to steel and iron. If that were the case we would have rolling mills established in this country to build all these railways, we would have, as we are likely to have, the Steel Association of the United States coming over into this country—but I am not quite sure that is the case. But we do know this, that the prospects of reciprocal trade relations between the mother country and Canada have already compelled a large number of American concerns to consider the advisability of locating their export trade arrangements in Canada. We know what has happened in the town of Peterborough. A large cereal company in the United States saw what was coming, and they organized to do all their export business from Canada, and are now establishing large works in this country. So with the steel industry, with a vigorous protectionist policy to bring it about. It is being brought about now in England because they are becoming protectionists there.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are not discussing the general question of the tariff.

Mr. MACLEAN. But the Finance Minister opened up the whole question, and that is my excuse.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Because the Finance Minister or some other minister has opened up an irrelevant matter, that does not make it in order. The question before us is the propriety of giving a bounty on the manufacture of binder twine. Under this resolution we cannot discuss the general tariff.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the hon. gentleman is perfectly in order, in criticising this resolution, to show to the House that a protective tariff would be a better protection.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not open up the whole question of steel, though I have no objection, if the Chairman will permit us to do so, to these three resolutions all being considered at once, if any body desires to do so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the minister's statement, I am here to see that the discussions are in order, and I say that the tariff is not now the subject before the Chair. It is entirely out of order to discuss the propriety of giving a duty on other things. Unless the committee will decide to discuss the general question of the tariff, then I must keep the committee within reasonable bounds.

Mr. MACLEAN. I think the Minister of Finance has raised the general question of the tariff by proposing a bounty. We are raising the question that duties by customs can be levied more advantageously to the commerce of the country. I think, I am in order, when the issue of protection and free trade is raised as it has been, to refer to the general issue, and on that line, unless you interfere with me, I propose to continue for a few moments. My statement is that if we had had due protection in this country, not spasmodic protection like this, we would have a new era of prosperity. We would be in a position to take care of ourselves now when this threatened invasion of our territory is likely to take place. For the Americans see that we are not genuine in our protectionist views, because we know, as has been stated here to-day, that our liberty in respect to binder twine is controlled by an American trust. There are other industries that have been ignored in this country. I refer to the ship-building industry. A bounty might very well be given to the steel ship-building industry. I believe the case that has been put forward in favour of a bounty in connection with ship-building in this country is unanswerable. The hon. gentleman must have had the papers presented to him. I have seen some of them, and so far as I can gather from these papers, the time has come when a bounty ought to be applied to the steel ship-building industry of Canada, and foreign built ships ought to be excluded from the coasting trade of Canada. All we are told here to-day is that we are to have bounties on iron and steel and on lead and on binder twine. The fact is that there are a great many industries that ought to be taken up and ought to have protection applied to them in order that we may be able to meet the threatened American invasion, and get the benefit of keeping our work for our own workingmen and our own market for our own products. That time seems to be near at hand. There is another instance which I wish to mention, and that is the market gardeners of this country. Their market has been given over entirely, for all kinds of early fruit and vegetables, to the Americans. They have petitioned us from time to time for some kind of protection. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would apply the bounty principle to them. But so far the hon. gentleman has given them no encouragement, and their market is departing from them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must insist upon the hon. gentleman keeping to the question. I am going to make this a test, and if the committee do not stand by me, they will have to appeal to the House in the matter. My decision is this, that the speakers must confine their remarks to the question before the Chair. We cannot wander away to steel, and market gardens, and a hundred questions besides. My decision is that the discussion must be limited to the propriety of this parliament granting a bounty on the manufacture of twine in Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am discussing the bounty question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The bounty is applicable to one hundred and forty questions. We are now discussing the propriety of giving a bounty to a certain industry.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it not perfectly proper for the hon. gentleman, in criticising this resolution, to point out to the House that it is not wide enough ? I do not regard that as beyond the bounds of criticism. The hon. gentleman finds a resolution here which proposes to give a bounty to the manufacturers of binder twine ; is he not perfectly in order in pointing out that the resolution should not stop there, but should extend to various other things, which in his opinion, should receive encouragement by way of bounty ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I cannot understand how it could be argued in considering this question, that a bounty should be given to market gardeners because they raise cabbages and other vegetables, I cannot see the relevancy at all. I do not see the relevancy of the question of giving a bounty to every industry in the country to the special question that is before the Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not in order to discuss the principle of bounty ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, that is narrowing it down to a very small limit.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask if we could put the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) in order by moving that the committee rise ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Can we not move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again ? May I ask your ruling on that point ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Upon such a motion as that we could not depart from the subject under discussion, the discussion would have to be strictly confined to the subject in hand. Therefore the hon. gentleman would not help us by moving that the committee rise in order to give the floor to another member. For myself, if I may assume the role of a peacemaker, although we are transgressing to some extent the rules of the House, I would be willing to allow my hon. friend from East York to speak upon the tariff question, which he has so much at heart. Though I think he is in the wrong, I would be quite willing to allow him to expound his views.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). In regard to this subject of bounty——

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Chairman, then with your indulgence, I will put it that way——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Am I to understand that the committee is satisfied with the present range of the discussion ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Because if the committee is satisfied, then the responsibility is taken off my shoulders and I lose control of the committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, no.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If I raise a point of order, I am either right or wrong. If I am wrong, I will apologize to the committee, if I am right, then I want to retain control of the committee so that I may guide it in the discussion. The way to ascertain the ruling of the House is not to move that the committee rise, but simply to say : I appeal to the House for their decision.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, no, that is not the way at all.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I beg your pardon, but, however, as that question is not before us, I do not suppose it is necessary to discuss it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not an uncommon thing by the general consent of the House to allow the discussion to be broadened. I am sure every member of the House on both sides desires to uphold the Chair, and we are quite satisfied that the chairman is only desirous of maintaining the rules of the House, but it is a general practice by common consent to allow the discussion to be broadened and my own opinion would be that the chairman should not keep us too closely to the question. There are two or three resolutions on the Order paper dealing with the same class of subjects and I would rather that we had liberty to refer to them, but when we do exercise that liberty we must not hold the chairman responsible for establishing a precedent which will prevent the committee at another time from keeping closely to the rule.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is perfectly in order. He is discussing the question in reference to binder twine and surely you may say that if you are going to grant a bounty on binder twine it is necessary that a similar concession should be given in regard to other articles. I have been a long time in the House and I have never heard such an interpretation given the rule as that which has been given by the chairman of the committee. Every one in the House, I am sure, desires that the dignity of the House and that the rules of order shall be preserved and especially that the ruling of the chairman shall be accepted when he is correct. But, I beg to differ from the chairman and I wish to stick strictly to the rules. He has no right to appeal to the committee. If his ruling is wrong our duty is to put it in writing, appeal to the House, call in the Speaker and have his opinion upon the subject and if necessary appeal from the ruling of the Speaker to the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is exactly the position I took. I thought I was right then and I am of the same opinion still. It is the duty of any person who does not believe I am right in my ruling to appeal to the House. I would rather that an hon. member would do that than that I should sit here knowing that I am perfectly right in regard to my ruling and have it disregarded. Almost every time I have ruled in the committee in an effort to keep the committee to their work and to facilitate the despatch of business I have been overruled by one party or the other. The result is that the session is extended week after week and I am kept sitting here without any progress being made in the business. When I give a ruling that in the opinion of the committee is not according to the rule then I would like to have the opinion of the House upon the matter and then I will know whether I am right or not and will not be obliged to submit to the lectures of parties who think I am wrong when as a matter of fact I am perfectly satisfied I am right as I believe I am now. However, the responsibility will be upon the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a rule which means something or it does not mean anything. If there is a rule that requires hon. members to stick to the subject under discussion then, certainly, that rule should be enforced. If the remarks of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) are pertinent to the subject under discussion, then any member of this House can say anything he likes on any subject when any question comes before the House.

An hon. MEMBER. No, no.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. Protection or bounty.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly he may say anything on any subject. It is quite evident that unless the rules are to be supported, we cannot carry on business. Of course, the chairman cannot dictate to individual members under the privilege of parliament as to what they shall say if these members are supported by other members, but unless members of this House are prepared to support the chairman in rulings that are according to common sense as well as according to the rule of the House we certainly cannot do business with very much credit to the country or to ourselves.

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not think that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has stated the case fairly. The hon. Minister of Finance came forward here with a proposition to grant bounties. I have not departed from that in the least and I intend to stick most closely to the subject.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Binder twine.

Mr. MACLEAN. The question of bounties having been introduced I am discussing the desirability of extending these bounties to other things. I think the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) agree that I am within the rule. I propose to show why a bounty system should be applied to the ship-building industries of Canada as well as to binder twine and for this purpose I shall read a short communication setting out the arguments in favour of my contention.

Certain of the component parts of a ship not manufactured in Canada but imported either from Great Britain or the United States are subject to duty. Certain other of the component parts of a ship manufactured in Canada upon which duty is not directly paid but by reason of our tariff the price includes if not the whole at least nearly the same duty as if imported. The coal used in the construction of a ship is subject to duty. Nearly the whole of the material used in the construction of a ship has to be imported either from the United States or Great Britain ; during the last eighteen months almost exclusively from Great Britain, because satisfactory delivery could not be obtained in the United States. The freight and marine insurance on this material amount to considerable. The carpets and furnishings throughout pay duty directly if imported. If not imported indirectly on account of our tariff. The difference in labour is also very considerable, the wages paid in this country being fully fifteen per cent higher than in Great Britain. This difference, however, I am glad to say would be somewhat lessened, because I believe men in this country perform more work per hour than they do in Great Britain.

In Great Britain, coal and structural material are in close proximity to the shipyards, and therefore are obtained at a minimum of cost. All parts of a ship including its furnishings are obtainable on the lowest basis of cost of production on account of the tariff of Great Britain.

Our chief competitor for the building of new ships is Great Britain, and while Canadian shipbuilding is subject to the several disadvantages above mentioned, amounting to rather more than $4 per gross registered ton, British built ships are permitted to come into Canada entirely free of duty, and are afforded the same privileges in Canada as Canadian built ships. This we do not at all object to, as Canadian built ships are afforded the same freedom in all British ports, but what we desire is that the government consider the advisability of affording such a rebate or bounty as will be equal to the disabilities under which we labour, amounting as stated to rather more than $4 per gross registered ton, and thus place the ship-building industry in Canada on a parity with the same industry in Great Britain. This being done I feel sure there will be no more newly built British ships brought into Canada, but that they will be built in Canada, as they can be obtained at no more cost than if built in Great Britain, and will be more suitable at least for the lake traffic.

In the days of wooden ship-building in Canada it was considered fair to allow a rebate of $1.15 per net registered ton on the highest class of steel-kneed vessels built in this country. Thus it will be seen that what we are now seeking was recognized years ago to the extent then required.

Then suitable wood for the construction of vessels could be conveniently had in Canada. Now scarcely any wooden ships are being built, but steel ships are taking their place, and instead of being able to obtain the material convenient to the shipyards as was the case when wood was used, the material has to be imported, as already stated.

In addition to this required subsidy of $4 per gross registered ton, it is earnestly desired that foreign built ships be excluded entirely from Canadian coasting privileges, the same as Canadian built ships are excluded from coasting privileges in foreign countries, and that foreign built ships be not admitted to coasting privileges at any rate of duty unless and until Canadian ships are admitted subject to the same rate of duty or license fee as is now charged in Canada.

The gentlemen who drew up that paper made out a case which they presented to the government some time ago which, I think, justified the extension of this principle of bounties to the production of steel ships in Canada. If it were applied to the production of steel ships in Canada we would have large shipyards all over the country. I believe that we have the ore, we have the coal and we have everything necessary for the production of steel ships, but the encouragement which applied protection would give them in the shape of a bounty. I think it is time that the government had the courage of their convictions. They have not the courage of their convictions; that is the trouble. They believe in protection but they will not live up to it. They have been converted to it and they carry out the principle at times in a spasmodic way, but if they would carry it out in its entirety in these growing times, when Canada is going ahead, when we propose to spend millions on our railways and give some encouragement to the steel ship-building industry we would have immense shipyards in the country and we would be building the ships that would run in connection with the transcontinental roads from their ports on the upper lakes. We would be following the example of the United States which stands to-day in the first position.

Mr. FRASER. In regard to ship-building?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, but in regard to a great many things and the great danger to this country to-day is that it is threatened with an invasion of the products of the American manufacturers who attained to a position to rival Canadian manufacturers and drive them out of their own market by the thorough adoption of the principle of protection. I disagree somewhat with the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) who said that the system of bounties was not a good form of protection. In a great many cases the bounty is the highest form of the protective system. It is sometimes the most efficacious form of protection and I would like to see it applied in other directions. I not only hope to see the government extend that policy to steel ship-building, to lead, to binder twine and to steel and iron, but I would like to see it extended to a great many other things, and I would like to see the customs employed so as to increase the measure of protection that the manufacturers and workmen of this country ought to have. I have been led, as I said to the committee a short time ago, to make these remarks by reason of what is transpiring in the United States to-day. I almost fear that a financial crash of some kind is impending over there. The manufacturers are making money, the railway companies are making money, and yet, by reason of something that has happened there, they see their markets threatened, they have more production than they know what to do with and they are preparing to make a slaughter market of Canada as they did in the old days, but, if this government had the courage of their convictions and if they had the courage to put the protective principle into force they would give us bounties on all these things as well as customs duties so as to give increased protection to Canadian workmen and Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I have to apologize for appearing to again rise, when a question of order was being decided by chair, but I regret to say that from this part of the House it is impossible to tell what is being said. Hon. gentlemen speaking from the lower benches upon this side of the House have their backs turned towards us, and it is very rare that we are able to catch one word in ten that is said. We sometimes hear hon. gentlemen on the front row of the other side of the House, as there is a better opportunity of the sound being carried across. Hon. gentlemen speaking at the back of the chamber on the other side cannot be heard on this side without very great difficulty. With regard to the question of bounty on binder twine, I would ask gentlemen opposite what better device could be adopted to enable our manufacturers of binder twine in this country to make it here than the one now proposed. The United States and Spain unfortunately went to war; the United States was the victor and they took possession of the territory where the raw material for the manufacture of binder twine grows. If we attempted to prohibit the importation of American binder twine into this country, it is possible that the United States government might retaliate by refusing to allow any of the raw material to be sold to Canada. There is a monopoly in New York at the present time for the purpose of controlling the trade altogether, and I believe that the bounty now proposed is the only possible way of aiding the manufacturers in this country. If we attempted to shut out American twine there might be a reprisal in the shape of a refusal to give us the raw material, and then we would be at the mercy of the American twine manufacturers altogether.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the export duty imposed on the raw material by the United States ?

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Three-eights of a cent, I understand.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the average price paid by our farmers for binder twine last year ?

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I do not know what the farmers paid in the west exactly, but I know that the price has been falling steadily.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the argument of the hon. gentleman that in order to placate those who control the production of the raw material, the people of Canada generally should have to pay this duty of three-eighths of a cent a pound ?

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). What I say is that it is better to assist the industry by a bounty, under the circumstances, than by placing a higher duty on the manufactured article.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand from the hon. gentleman's argument that we are practically living on sufferance in this country ?

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). So we are.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) would place us in a very humiliating position. If the advice of the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) were accepted, and if a duty was placed on binder twine which would protect our own manufacturers and keep them fully employed, the result would be far better, and our farmers, instead of paying 12 to 14 cents a pound for binder twine, would be paying 10 cents.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). What would the hon. gentleman do suppose we were prohibited altogether from getting the raw material out of which binder twine is made?

Mr. CLARKE. I would be prepared to answer that question when the prohibition was put on. The hon. gentleman is simply imagining a fallacious argument to justify him in supporting the resolution.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I can assure the hon. gentleman that it is a positive fact.

Mr. GALLIHER. The contention of the hon. member (Mr. Roche is well worthy of consideration. Our dealings with the United States teach us that the United States are looking after the United States all the time. If I am right in the contention that we cannot get the raw material except through the United States, then we are in the hands of the United States to that extent. Our experience would lead us to believe that if we built up a tariff wall which would shut out any of their manufactures we might reasonably expect that they would build up such a wall as would prevent us getting the raw material, and so prevent us altogether from making binder twine in this country.

Mr. CLARKE. What would be the effect of putting a bounty on the production of lead in Canada?

Mr. GALLIHER. The difference is that we have the raw material for the manufacture of lead in Canada, and that we have not the raw material for the making of binder twine. It is absolutely necessary that our farmers should have binder twine and if we cannot get the raw material otherwise than through the United States, will any gentleman say that we are not in their hands to that extent?

Mr. SPROULE. The fallacious reasoning of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) is that because manilla comes to us through the United States we must avoid building up our binder twine industry in Canada by bounty and a duty for fear we would offend the Americans. Does he think that any nation would be so small as to prevent us giving a bounty to our manufacturers to the extent that they allow a rebate to the manufacturers on the raw material that comes from the Philippine Islands ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I was talking about a duty and not a bounty.

Mr. SPROULE. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. GALLIHER. Not at all.

Mr. SPROULE. When manilla is exported to any other country but the United States there is an export duty on it, and the Canadian government propose to reimburse the manufacturers in Canada to the extent of that export duty, thus putting the Canadian manufacturer on the same level as the American manufacturer in respect to the raw material.

Mr. GALLIHER. To that I agree.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but that at best is only a half-way measure, because while we reimburse the Canadian manufacturer to the extent of the export duty, we still allow the Americans to throw their twine into Canada. I want to have the Canadian market for the Canadian manufacturer, and if we did justice to the Canadian manufacturer we would not only compensate him to the extent of the export duty on the raw material, but we would go further and put a duty upon binder twine coming into Canada to secure for him the Canadian market. Is that wrong or is it right ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not saying that it is wrong or that it is right, but if we are compelled to get our raw material through the United States, and if we shut out American binder twine, does not the hon. gentleman think it possible that we might be prevented from getting raw material altogether ?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think anything of the kind, because if that prohibition were applied to Canada it would have to be applied to the rest of the world, and no nation would dare to do that. Are we to be forever cringing to the United States or to any other country in respect to our trade. Are we to be afraid to build up any industry in this country because it may offend the United States that we should do so. I have heard that argument so often from the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in past years that I am sick of it. We are not worthy of being Britons if we are not above such an argument as that. Let us do what is in the interest if our own people without regarding what any other country may think or do.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) say that the member for North Norfolk has advocated submitting to unjust demands on the part of the American people or surrendering our rights in any respect in our negotiations with them ? Is that the charge the hon. gentleman makes ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard the hon. member for North Norfolk use this argument when dealing with this subject. When a proposal was made to put an export duty on logs so as to insure the manufacture of our lumber at home, and I was advocating it, I was told by the hon. member : 'Beware, or you will exasperate the United States; they could stop commercial intercourse with us at any time, and they will do it if you go too far; you will only worry and annoy them. Don't we know that they could hinder us in many ways ? They could stop the bonding privilege that we enjoy and all commercial intercourse with us.' I refer to that because I have heard it so often, and his argument now is exactly on the same line. When in the interests of Canada we propose to do something, are we always to be told : Don't let us do it, because they will strike back ? They are so small a people in their national aspirations that they would do it if we dared to do something in the interests of Canada. I do not think that is an argument that should ever be used in this Canadian parliament. I have always thought that as a nation we should do what the interests of this country require, regardless of any other nation, precisely as they do in the United States. They put on or take off a duty just as it suits the interests of their own people, and they do not consider whether it restricts the trade of England, Canada, Germany, or any other country. I say that the interests of our country to-day require that we should not only give this bounty, and thereby remove a handicap which our manufacturers are labouring under owing to the regulations made by the United States government, but that for the purpose of keeping our market for our Canadian manufactures, we should go further and put a duty on all binder twine coming into this country from any other country. If we did that, we believe the twine would not be increased in price to the consumer here, but we would build up the manufacture in Canada to such an extent that competition would bring down the price to the lowest possible figure to the Canadian consumer, as it did before, and we would have binder twine at its real worth; whereas to-day we are obliged to take it from the United States, whether the price is high or low.

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to say one word, as I have been alluded to by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I am afraid that this discussion is getting a little beyond the bounds.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ruled that some time ago, but the committee took it out of my hands, so that they are responsible for it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am not taking the initiative, but desire very briefly to reply to the hon. gentleman's allusion to myself. The statements made with regard to the necessity of embarking upon tariff legislation, and the criticisms made upon the conduct of the government because they are not disposed to go so far as our friends in the opposition think is proper, are in my opinion entirely uncalled for, inappropriate and out of season. We have had the statement made by the government that in consequence of certain conditions, it was not deemed proper to open the tariff question this session; and I for one supported that position entirely irrespective of any abstract or practical views I might entertain upon the question of tariff legislation. The ground taken by the government was that as negotiations of a most important character are pending, the outcome of which will create conditions that will require action in one direction or another—negotiations the outcome of which we cannot foresee, and in consequence of which we cannot predicate our action in tariff matters upon known conditions—the government would abstain from tariff legislation this session, and would wait until it knew definitely and could move intelligently in the course which it would be proper for it to take. I endorsed that position. I would endorse that position as a protectionist. I would endorse it as a member of this House governed by practical considerations. The government, notwithstanding that position, proceeds to the extent which is necessary in the public interest, to relieve certain interests in Canada which are suffering from causes which the government may be able to remove. To that extent the government are justified in moving in this matter, and they can do it with perfect consistency with the position they have taken. Beyond that I do not think it would be proper for the government to go. So far I would support them; beyond that I would not. With regard to the charge which the hon. member has made with reference to myself, it has been a very usual thing for more than a quarter of a century to answer anything I may have said in this House by the statement that I was a Yankee. That has always been considered a sufficient answer to set aside any argument or statement I might advance.

Mr. SPROULE. I may remind the hon. gentleman that I uttered no word about his being a Yankee.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not say the hon. gentleman did; I am talking about the general course pursued. The hon. gentleman says to-day that I have in the past advocated the adoption of policies dictated by fear of retaliation by the Americans. The inference is that in doing so I have shown a craven spirit and a desire to bow to the Americans; and when asked for some specific case, the hon. gentleman brings up the old question of the export duty on logs. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have consistently, during all the years that that question has been under discussion in this House, opposed an export duty. I have opposed an export duty on anything, I do not care what it is. We are to-day, in the resolutions under discussion, meeting the question of an export duty unfairly imposed by another country for the purpose of injuring one of our interests. I condemn that export duty as being wrong. I condemn export duties in all cases as being wrong in principle. I have condemned them on every occasion in the past, and I will condemn them in the future, and in doing this, I am not showing any craven spirit or bowing to dictation from a foreign country, but merely contending for justice and fair play. I condemned the proposal to put an export duty on logs in our own country. I did that because the owner of standing pine would have its value reduced to the extent of the export duty for the benefit of the sawmill interest in the country. The friends of the sawmill interest advocated the imposition of an export duty for the benefit of that interest and to the detriment of the standing pine owner, and its imposition was essentially unjust, bad politics, and bad political economy. I opposed that export duty on broad public principles, and I wish to say to the hon. gentleman that his insinuation with regard to the course I pursue in this matter is unfair and unworthy of him. I have stood up in this House during the thirty-one years that I have had a seat here and advocated what I believed to be Canadian interests on the broad ground of the benefit of Canada, and I have had no motive or impulse beyond this during all that time. I have done this often in the face of opposition and prejudice, and have incurred on many occasions charges of the most unfriendly, unwarrantable and untruthful character. I stand here to say I have never been in favour of surrendering a single Canadian right. I will go as far as any man in this House or in this country in maintaining Canadian rights, and I only await the proper hour when circumstances and developments show us the proper course to pursue, in order to follow the dictates of my convictions.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). The hon. member who has just taken his seat says that the opposition proposed more than the government now propose for the binder twine industry. I wish to ask him if he thinks the government are going as far as they should go to protect that industry ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not know that that has anything to do with the question. The government are introducing a resolution granting a bounty in order to counteract an unfair discrimination in the form of an export duty which has been imposed in favour of the United States; and in doing that are only doing justice to our own manufactures.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I think it is only reasonable to ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks the proposal they have made is as far as they should go in the interest of the binder twine industry ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I have only to say, as I said before, that the question of dealing with the tariff on broad principles, on the principles of protection versus free trade, is lying in abeyance, awaiting certain developments and the conclusion of certain negotiations. In the meantime, the government proposes in this resolution, not upon protective principles or non-protective principles, to remove the disability of an unfair discrimination that now interferes with a manufacturing interest in Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. What are we waiting for now before proceeding to the consideration of the revision of the tariff ?

Mr. CHARLTON. We want to know whether we are to engage in a commercial war, or whether we are to have peace.

Mr. MACLEAN. We have another significant announcement. First, we have the Minister of Finance saying that only three interests were to be considered. Now, a supporter of his gets up and gives us the reasons. That reason is that we are to go into negotiations with the United States, they to have the big end of the stick and we to have the little end. If we went into the negotiations having a tariff like their own, we should be able to accomplish something. The hon. gentleman says : Do not put up the tariff now, but go to the Americans with your low tariff and make a reciprocal arrangement with them, giving them the Canadian market. Why, that is where hon. gentlemen opposite have always made their mistake. They should have met the Americans with tariff for tariff, and then they would be in a position to negotiate with them and maintain Canadian rights. It is the old story of 'looking to Washington.' Evidently these hon. gentlemen are going to Washington and going with their hands tied. That is not the way to fight the Americans. We should stand up to them like men; meet them with a tariff equal to their own, impose that tariff in the interest of Canada, and make it a thoroughly protectionist tariff so as to keep our markets for ourselves.

Mr. HEYD. The subject we are now discussing would have interested me a great deal at the time of the budget debate. But the government, for reasons that were quite clear to themselves, decided not to open this question of the duty on binder twine. I am convinced that the manufacture of binder twine, like every other industry in this country, should have its interests looked after by the government, and should not have been singled out as the only industry subjected to competition from the other side. That question was discussed at the time of the budget debate. But to reopen it now will not answer any good purpose.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is opening it?

Mr. HEYD. The question is not being opened from the standpoint of a duty, but from the standpoint of whether it is right to give some countervailing advantage to the manufacturers of binder twine in Canada to make up for the injury caused them by the bounty in favour of the American manufacturers. The question has been asked, what is the amount of that bounty. The exact amount is $6.82 per ton. In order to compensate the manufacturers of Canada as against this unfair competition, the government propose to give them three-eighths cents per pound, or $7.50 per ton. The only question I have to consider in this matter is whether it is desirable and in the interest of the manufacturers of binder twine to have $7.50 a ton to compensate them for that unfair competition.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) mean unfair competition through the export duty of the United States, or through the withdrawal of the protective tariff in Canada?

Mr. HEYD. On general principles, I said, binder twine should receive the same measure of protection granted to every other industry. And I said it was not right that it should be singled out and deprived of the benefits of what we call our revenue tariff.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) to say that this is the only industry singled out in this way?

Mr. HEYD. This and barbed wire.

Mr. MACLEAN.

Mr. BLAIN. Well name the other as well as this.

Mr. HEYD. This is the one we are talking about. The barbed wire industry is small and very little capital was injured by putting barbed wire on the free list.

At the time, there were not many binder twine manufactories in Canada. Most of them have come into existence since. The $7.50 per ton proposed by this Bill is to compensate the manufacturers for this $6.82 bonus that the United States manufacturer gets. In so far as this bounty will be of service to the manufacturers of binder twine in this country, I am glad the government are going to give it. I should have been glad personally if they had given 12½ per cent protection. All these arguments of my hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) that the United States might prohibit the exportation of manilla fabric to any other part of the world but the United States, do not appear to have any effect upon the owners of Canadian binder twine factories, the men who have their money invested in this business; for they have all petitioned in favour of a tariff protection of 12½ per cent. So, I do not think there is much in those arguments. The fact that confronts me is that the government have decided, after a discussion, not to open the question of a duty on binder twine. When that question once more presents itself, I shall do what I did before—urge them both privately and in the House to put on a duty. They did not listen to that plea before, and now it is too late to discuss the question. I can assure them of my sincere desire that this Bill should become law; because, to the extent that it compensates the manufacturers of binder twine for the unfair competition to which they are subjected, it is certainly of benefit to that industry. On pure manilla, 650-foot twine, there will be the full benefit of ⅜ cents per pound. On 600-foot twine which contains about 60 per cent of manilla, there will be a proportionate benefit, and so on through the various qualities down to the lowest on which there will be little benefit to the manufacturer. This is not so much as I would like to see. But, to get up a general discussion on this particular item is going a little far afield, I think. And when you, Mr. Chairman, find fault with the committee for overriding your decision I venture to say that it is only because you do not put your foot down and insist on those decisions being observed. For my part, I was prepared to endorse and uphold your decision that this general question should not be discussed on the motion before the committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell) I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) a question. He says he is in favour of a high protective tariff on binder twine. Did he vote for high protection on binder twine or did he vote against it?

Mr. HEYD. I do not know that there was a resolution moved on the subject of placing a duty on binder twine. But if there had been, and if I had played to the galleries by recording my single vote on this side in favour of such a resolution, my action would have been regarded as insincere by hon. gentlemen opposite. If the amendment proposed by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) in some way or other involved the idea of putting a duty on binder twine, I can only say that I voted in favour of the government's contention on that occasion.

Mr. SPROULE. And the resolution was in favour of adequate protection.

Mr. HEYD. But 'adequate protection,' in my opinion is a very inadequate phrase.

Mr. SCHELL. In the discussion before us to-day we have primarily a matter of fact. We have left that and drifted into matters of sentiment and imagination. The matter of fact before us is ⅝ cents per pound on manilla. The object of this is to put our manufacturers of binder twine in as favourable a position as that they formerly occupied. But the discussion has drifted off to the matter of higher protection. I have waited for some time to find out on what basis of protection the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) would wish us to go. And he has stated that his basis of protection would be the same as that of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte), the adoption of a tariff equal to the American tariff. Now, suppose we put the tariff on binder twine up to 45 per cent. It is a matter of belief on my part that that would raise the price of binder twine to the consumer——

Mr. CLARKE. What was the experience?

Mr. SCHELL. I think it was the same thing.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to say that I never said here or elsewhere, that it would be necessary to have the same tariff on all articles that the Americans have. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Schell) will not find that in my speeches anywhere.

Mr. SCHELL. 'Tariff for tariff' was the word throughout the budget debate. And my hon. friend from East York has just now stated that that is what he would propose.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCHELL. If we were to apply the American tariff to this importation of 15,000,000 pounds of binder twine, that would mean a tax upon the people of this country of $487,000, say half a million dollars, upon this article alone.

Mr. CLARKE. But if we did not import the binder twine, we would not pay the duty.

Mr. SCHELL. The quantities of twine imported were about 15,000,000 pounds, and if the tariff were in force which these gentlemen advocate——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Does not the hon. gentleman claim that if we imposed a tariff of 40 per cent it would raise the price 40 per cent?

Mr. SCHELL. It would give them an opportunity to do it if they wished, and there are very few people in business, regardless of their politics, who do not take advantage of the opportunity. That is the experience, not only in Canada, but everywhere else, because it is human nature. If you give them the opportunity they will take advantage of it; and it is idle to talk to farmers, at all events, or to myself, and to say that if you put up the duty to 45 per cent——

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman this question? When the duty of 12½c. per pound was taken off, did it lower the price of twine?

Mr. SCHELL. The hon. gentleman may answer that question himself, I claim that it did. The question before us is this, Are we now to put on a duty of 45 per cent and raise the value of the twine manufactured in Canada, on the basis of the 15,000,000 pounds, to the extent of half a million dollars, or should we put on a bounty of three-eighths of a cent per pound, which amounts to $56,250 upon that 15,000,000 pounds imported? This three-eighths of a cent is a very small trifle, as the hon. member for East York says, 'a miserable thing.' But if it puts the manufacturers in Canada to-day upon an equal basis with the Americans, where they have been for the last six or seven years, surely that should not be called a miserable thing. The manufacture of binder twine in Canada has been a profitable venture for those who have been engaged in it, with one exception, and I wish to draw attention to that exception. Under the old regime it will be remembered that practically every binder twine factory in the Dominion of Canada went into the hands of an American trust, every one, I believe, but one. They were all bought up by an American trust, and the binder twine manufacture of Canada to-day is largely in the hands of Americans, the largest amount of capital.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the Central Prison factory bought up, and the Kingston Penitentiary?

Mr. SCHELL. These were not manufacturing concerns.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. And the Brantford manufactory?

Mr. SCHELL. Yes, that was bought up by the Americans.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, I have in my hands here to-day letters from farmers who were owners of this factory, and consumers——

Mr. SCHELL. I wish to state to the hon. member for St. Mary's that he is entirely wrong. The Brantford factory was bought up by Americans, and immediately after that was bought up the farmers' binder twine factory was started, and that farmers' binder twine factory was then the only independent factory in Canada, and in three years they declared a dividend to the extent of 250 per cent upon their stock. But it was not until after the Liberal government came into power, and allowed them to make these profits, when they were manufacturing without any duty.

Mr. SPROULE. They went into the trust.

Mr. SCHELL. No, that was when they were an independent concern. But we are drifting away from the question. The question before us is this, shall the farmers in this country, on 15,000,000 pounds of binder twine, be taxed a sum of $500,000; or, as proposed by the Minister of Finance, shall the manufacturers of this country be given a compensation for the injury inflicted upon them by the United States, of $56,250? That is a question we are discussing, brought down to actual figures. I am willing to vote in favour of the farmer paying no more than $56,000, instead of paying $500,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Perhaps the Finance Minister could tell us, in the absence of the Minister of Customs, on the basis of the imports for the last fiscal year, what will be the charge on the consolidated fund imposed by this bounty for the present fiscal year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is difficult to tell, because our imports are not entirely confined to manufacturers of binder twine; twine is largely used for other purposes, for general cordage. But I would think that probably it would be $25,000 to $50,000, possibly more. I have some hesitation in giving an estimate, but I do not think it would exceed $50,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. The member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) and the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) have, if I understood them rightly, both expressed themselves in favour of giving a bounty rather than an increased duty. Now, I presume both these hon. gentlemen represent largely workingmen. The Minister of Finance, in reply to my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke), has stated that a very large sum of money will have to be taken out of the taxes paid by the people generally to make up this bounty. Now, I want to ask these hon. gentlemen what right the workingmen of Canada have to pay taxes in order to lower the price of binder twine to the farmers?—because it will have that effect. If you put on a duty, the party using the article pays the duty; the consumer pays the duty, there is no question about that. But if you put on enough duty, there would be no importation. The people in the North-west can raise all the flax we require to make our own binder twine. If the Minister of Finance wants to do what is right, let him give the people of Canada the benefit of producing the fibre to make binder twine. Why should we pay a million and a half dollars over to the people of the United States, a great portion of it being for labour, instead of keeping it for our own workingmen? Why should not the farmers of this country, particularly in the North-west, grow the fibre and our Canadian boys manufacture it into binder twine? But we are importing it now to the extent of a million and a half dollars worth from the United States, free of duty, and it comes in here and is sold to our farmers, by the act of this government, and the industries in this country cannot go on without a bonus is paid to them. Now, the minister asks the workingmen of this country, who have no interest in binder twine at all, to help pay that tax. Why should they be compelled to do it? I say on behalf of the workingmen, that it is unfair to them for the Minister of Finance to put his hand into their pockets and to take out the money to pay this bounty to the manufacturers of binder twine.

Mr. PUTTEE. I must congratulate the last speaker (Mr. Taylor), who I have now heard for the first time ask why the workingmen should be taxed to provide cheaper articles for other people. I have often been bothered with that question myself, but I have answered it in a different way to what the hon. gentleman usually does. But it appears to me that the greater part of this discussion is not addressed to the main feature of the question. It has been asked, Are we to be under the sufferance of the United States? Well, if the only source of the supply of this fibre is the Philippines, we have got to answer that question in the affirmative, because that country is under the United States. Consequently, we must be under the sufferance of the United States, and it makes no difference whether we get hot about it or not, we are utterly dependent upon another nation. If that is the case, why is this export duty put on? Is it put on to stimulate protection? That is the legitimate office of an export duty. It is either that, or it is to stop exportation. But if it is neither of these, then it must be put on for the benefit and at the request of the manufacturers of binder twine in the United States. They have that much leverage on their government that they are able to take that much money out of their people, or out of ours, for their special benefit. Well, if that is the case, it appears to me that if this three-eighths of a cent bounty that we are going to put on offsets the operation of their export duty, then I think it is most probable that they will increase the duty. I want to ask the Minister of Finance a question which he must have been thinking about for some years.

There has been in the southern states a good deal of experiment carried on with the object of proving whether any material can be produced that would take the place of manilla fibre in the manufacture of binder twine. I understand that there has been more or less attention paid to it in this country, but seeing that the matter has been before the Department of Finance for some years, it seems to me that the hon. Minister of Finance must have had his attention drawn to it and that he must have come to some conclusion upon it, and as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has given his word that we can raise a substitute in the North-west Territories, I certainly agree with him that it would be far better to try and encourage the growing of a substitute in this country than to start upon this policy, knowing that we shall all the while have to keep up with the policy in regard to the exportation of fibre from the Philippine Islands. I may be dense, but it seemed to me, when I read this resolution when it was first put upon the order paper, that that was the whole question. As a matter of fact, is all the available supply in the Philippine Islands ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. HEYD. That is a fact in respect to manilla.

Mr. PUTTEE. Is it a fact that there is no substitute that can be provided ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I speak with some hesitation in regard to a matter of this kind, but I am advised that there has been nothing found which can take the place of manilla for the purpose of cordage or binder twine. There is a substitute, known as sisal, which is raised in the West Indies, and it is used to some considerable extent as a substitute, but it is not as good as the original article. We do not propose to put a bounty on binder twine irrespective of the material used in its manufacture. If it is made from these substitutes imported from abroad, the condition which we are dealing with does not exist and no bounty is paid. We confine the bounty to the quantity of actual manilla used in the manufacture of binder twine. I am not aware that there is any produced in Canada at the present time, and I am not aware that there is any serious proposition at present to raise anything in Canada which would exactly take the place of manilla. We may be able to get something that will be a substitute, but up to the present time, as far as my knowledge goes, there is nothing that the manufacturers of binder twine would accept as a fair substitute for manilla.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) looks at the Auditor General's Report, he will see the quantity of raw material purchased last year by the government institution at Kingston, and he will find that about one-sixth of the binder twine was the product of manilla, and that the rest was sisal.

Mr. PUTTEE. Nearly every industry which has had some special source of supply of raw material has had to adapt itself to some other line of material when the original supply had run out. I think it would be as well for the hon. Minister of Finance to pay attention to the matter of finding a fair substitute. At the present time we have to accept the statement, which I believe is the statement of the manufacturers, that there has been nothing so far produced that will take the place of manilla fibre in making binder twine. But if they make binder twine with other material, and if the supply of manilla is limited, we will have to find something else, and it would seem to be the part of wisdom to devote ourselves to an effort to finding a suitable substitute rather than that we should be trying to protect ourselves when we know we shall not succeed. As to the question whether a bounty is more preferable than a protective duty, I say it is.

Mr. GALLIHER. I want to answer the question put by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor). He made, I might almost say, a tearful appeal on behalf of the workingmen of Canada, who, he said, would be called upon to pay this tax by reason of the bounty. I do not think the workingmen of this country want to be placed in any different position from any other class of the people. The workingmen should pay their proportion of the taxes, just the same as the capitalists do and as the farmers do. I represent, it is true, a very large number of workingmen, and I am satisfied that these workingmen are willing to pay their fair share of taxation. The difference between a duty and a bounty is this : Whereas, under a duty, the party who consumes the article—in this case it is the farmer who is bound to be a consumer of binder twine whether he wishes to be or not—would have to pay that special tax——

Mr. CLARKE. How is that, when the price is fixed by the American cordage trust ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am speaking about the difference between a bounty and a duty. The duty is paid by the person who consumes the article ; whereas, in the case of a bounty, the public at large contribute to it. As I say, the workingmen in my district are satisfied to pay their fair proportion of taxation.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman prefer a bounty to a duty ?

Mr. GALLIHER. On this particular question that we are discussing now, which is as to whether there shall be a bounty of three-eighths of a cent per pound put upon binder twine in order that our manufacturers of binder twine may be placed on an equality with American manufacturers.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman has given expression to his approval of the principle of aiding by bounty rather than aiding by a duty. I want to know whether he is in favour of giving aid to an industry by bounty instead of by duty ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not think that is a question I am called upon to answer at the present moment.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) is not bound to answer, of course.

Mr. GALLIHER. The point we are discussing has nothing to do with that, because we are not discussing whether it is better to put a bounty on or whether it is better to put a duty on. We are discussing the question as to who are the people who have to pay the tax.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman made the statement that he approved of this proposition to grant a bounty on binder twine, because the community in general did not have to pay it, but the person interested.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. One hon. member on his feet at a time is the rule.

Mr. GALLIHER. I never know when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) is going to get up or sit down. I did not make the statement which he attributes to me. I disagree entirely with what he says. I did not say that a duty imposed a tax on the community. I said that with a duty a man who is compelled to pay the duty has to pay the tax himself, while in the case of a bounty the public at large—the workingman, the farmer, the capitalist and the manufacturer —all have to pay their proportionate share. That is as far as I went.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The question before the committee is whether the resolution of the hon. Minister of Finance shall pass. We are wandering away from the question and wasting the time of the House, until I am sick and tired listening to this miserable twaddle that is spoken on a question of this kind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross) should have got up and made that speech when I decided that hon. members were violating the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I beg to take direct issue with the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Galliher). He has stated that the object of the hon. Minister of Finance in asking us to sanction the principle of giving a bounty is to place the Canadian manufacturer on the same footing as the American manufacturer. Is that it ?

Mr. GALLIHER. With regard to the supply of raw material.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Now, the hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken. He has not given any attention to the question under consideration. He has given no consideration whatever to it. The American manufacturer is protected to-day by a duty of 45 per cent. That is a very high duty indeed, and the Canadian manufacturer has no protection at all. That makes a vast difference. The question is very obvious, it seems to me.

Mr. GALLIHER. You forget that I was speaking of the home market.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Some of my hon. friends have stated that every time we put a duty on a certain article we are imposing taxes upon the people. That is a false theory. There is not only nothing in it but there is a falsehood in it. There is nothing good in it but there is a great deal of bad in it. When a duty is imposed on an article that we can manufacture here it means that Canadian labour will produce that article instead of foreign labour. For instance in the United States they have a duty of 45 per cent on agricultural implements and agricultural implements sell cheaper in the United States than anywhere else in the world. Is there any reason under the sun why Canadian labour cannot manufacture binder twine as cheaply as American labour ?

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). No.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Why not. We can get our raw material nearly as cheap as they can, and our Canadian labour is cheaper than their's, and I say without hesitation that if the Canadian manufacturer is given the home market he can manufacture just as cheaply and just as advantageously as the American manufacturer can. If we are to be saying all the time that we cannot manufacture as cheaply as the Americans, why then we will never build up industries in this country. Perhaps it is that we have not at present the equipment necessary to supply the demand for binder twine, but let the Minister of Finance say that in two years or in three years the duty will be so and so, let us have a policy and we will soon have the means to manufacture. The giving of bounties is simply taking the money from my pocket and from every other man's pocket without giving to capital any assistance for the future, and the people of this country will never stand paying bounties for all time.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it wrong ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Of course it is wrong.

Mr. SCOTT. Is not a duty wrong in the same sense ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, and for the excellent reason that if you prevent the products of foreign labour coming into this country and if you give Canadian workmen the advantages that you are giving foreign workmen, you do not increase the price.

Mr. TALBOT. What about the consumer ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The consumer is yourself and myself and the consumer will pay the very same price.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not what the member for Leeds says ?

Mr. SCOTT. Who pays the duty ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, who pays the duty. Take any article you like that we manufacture in this country and it is folly to say that we are going to pay higher prices for it than we do now.

Mr. SCOTT. In many cases.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I say no, and I will prove it. Is there any reason why labourers in Montreal and Toronto, or in Brandon, or in Winnipeg cannot make binder twine as cheaply as the American labourer can.

Mr. SCOTT. Possibly not.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is no reason why Canadian money cannot procure the same plant ; there is no reason why Canadian labour should not be as skilful as American labour, and why under the sun could not our Canadian manufacturers sell as cheaply as American manufacturers. I know that I will be told that competition will be less and that this is the only argument, but take the manufacturer of agricultural implements and there are fifty of them in Canada and let us secure the Canadian market for the manufacturer of binder twine, and you will have competition. I do not desire to address myself to free-traders who do not want to be convinced.

Mr. SCOTT. There are none here.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There are some of them, and I have no doubt they are in perfect good faith.

Mr. SCOTT. Very few.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. They are getting less.

Mr. OLIVER. There will be more after next election.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I heard that speech before.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am sorry that my hon. friend does not pay more attention to it. In what position have we been during the last two or three years. Why, during the last two years we have been importing 75 per cent of our binder twine from the American trusts, mind you. These American trusts have gone to the Canadian manufacturer and they have allowed them to manufacture 25 per cent and no more, because they have said to them : You are not protected in Canada and if you manufacture more than the 25 per cent we will slaughter the Canadian market. Is not that a shameful state of things ?

Mr. CLARKE. They fixed the price.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, the American trusts were in a position to dictate terms because there was not protection in Canada, and are we going to stand that kind of thing ?

Mr. FRASER. We are getting cheaper binder twine than protection would give us.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Not at all. The free-traders are simply playing the game of the American trusts. I could establish by evidence before a committee of the House to-morrow that the American trusts have dictated their own terms to the Canadian people here. Is it not better that we should have binder twine made by our own people rather than by the American trusts, who are protected by a duty of 45 per cent ? Our farmers themselves have invested money in this industry——

Mr. GALLIHER. Are not the American trusts so far as binder twine is concerned in a position to prevent you manufacturing binder twine in Canada if you had a tariff as high as the roof ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How could they do that ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Because they control all the raw material and we are at their mercy for it.

Mr. TAYLOR. You can go to England and buy all you want of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. England has to pay the export duty.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not know that the American trusts control all the raw material, and I would be very much surprised if that were the case.

Mr. BROCK. There is an immense exportation of it to England that the American trusts cannot touch.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If we were to believe the statements that whenever we impose a duty on foreign articles we are taxing our own people, then there would be no use in our having any industry in this country whatever. But fortunately that theory is utterly false from the very bottom to the very top, and there is no doubt whatever that when a country is in a position to supply our own markets advantageously, as we are capable of doing in many many things, it is our great advantage to do so. Why have we got that much ? We are creating centres of trade. and giving traffic to our railways and navigation companies and work to our own people. Why are so many of our countrymen in the United States ? Every man who has followed the history of the past knows that it is because we have not enough industries here. Why have our friends in the maritime provinces lost so much of their population ? Because they have not enough industries there. Why are they asking parliament to-day to grant them bounties for their industries ? Because they know that without those favours their industries could not get on their feet. When some of their industries are protected, they say, we are against protection. What is true in the maritime provinces is true everywhere. It is a pity that men of ability and standing feel bound by past theories or past speeches. It seems to me they should take the example of such men as Mr. Chamberlain. He has been a partisan of free trade, but he has changed his mind, because he sees that England has been made a slaughter market by all the nations of the world. What is true of England is true of Canada. Our tariff, which is relatively low to-day, is no longer sufficient. Circumstances have changed. It does not do any harm to teach some little lessons to our friends in the maritime provinces. They want railways, they want millions in bounties, and when we ask them to take into consideration the fact that in the other provinces we can manufacture goods for them, they go for us, and in great style. I say that on this occasion the Minister of Finance is making a mistake. During the last five or six years we have tried the system of bounties; we have tried it on lead and on iron, and it has not worked. The Minister of Finance has been obliged to change it three times, and I make this prophesy, that the third change will not work much better than the two first did. If he had come out straight with a reasonable duty on binder twine, he would not be obliged to pay a large sum of money, the Canadian manufacturers would extend their works, the farmers would not have to pay more for their binder twine, and we would have an additional market for our farmers. I am spending the summer at a country place, Boucherville, and the farmers there realize that their best market is the city of Montreal. They sell all their products in that city. Let us create centres of industry in all parts of Canada—binder twine industries, agricultural implement industries, and other industries—in larger proportion. Let us manufacture everything we can.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) We have heard that speech before, often and often.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Then, my hon. friend is assuredly deaf from a fiscal standpoint, otherwise he would have changed his mind after hearing such powerful and convincing arguments.

Mr. FRASER. I would not have said anything but for the hon. gentleman's reference to the maritime provinces. I am not going to discuss the question of protection and free trade with the hon. member; but I wish to point out that he has taken a position to-day in which he is opposed by all free traders and all protectionists. They all hold that there is no fairer way to assist industries than by bounties, because the general community pay them instead of the few who use the protected article. It will not do for the hon. gentleman to try and set the maritime provinces against the rest of this Dominion. We pay our fair share of a fairly large duty, averaging sixteen or seventeen per cent, on the goods we buy. We are manufacturers of iron, and if we get a bounty to help us a little in starting our industries, surely the hon. gentleman is not going to hold us up as wanting everything and giving nothing. I make the statement that any industry that cannot flourish on a protection of seventeen or eighteen per cent must have something wrong with it. With regard to binder twine, the cry of everybody in this House was : take the duty off binder twine in the interest of the farmer. We took off the duty and the farmers started a binder twine industry of their own; and, if I am correctly informed, that industry paid one hundred per cent on the capital invested, so that in one year they got their whole capital back. An industry that can do that ought to be able to stand a little competition from the United States. I do not know altogether the conditions in regard to the raw material for binder twine.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentlemen who say 'hear, hear,' are idiotic enough to think they do. I am honest enough to say I do not know all the conditions affecting the raw material; but I do know that when there is a difference in the cost of the raw material that enters into the manufacture of the article in the United States and in Canada, and the United States manufacturer has that advantage because of a law of the United States, it is only fair to the Canadian manufacturer that he should be put in the same position.

Mr. LENNOX. What about the forty-five per cent duty ?

Mr. FRASER. If the American manufacturers have a forty-five per cent duty, and they can sell the article in Canada cheaper than the men who made a hundred per cent on the money they invested in one year, I say let it come in the interest of the farmers. I am on the side of the farmer who purchases rather than the few manufacturers who manufacture. To hear hon. gentlemen opposite one would suppose that the manufacturer was everything. He is a good deal, I admit, but he only represents about twelve per cent of the population of Canada, and I think a few of us should say something in the interest of the eighty-eight per cent of people who purchase. Hon. gentlemen opposite think that if we manufactured everything here and kept out foreign goods, that would be a good thing.

Mr. BROCK. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER. Where, then, would you get money to pay the cost of the railways ?

Mr. BROCK. Where do the United States get their revenue ?

Mr. FRASER. The United States get it on the goods they import; but the man who uses the article which is made in the country pays a large duty on it, not to the government, but to the manufacturer who puts up the price as near as he can to the price of the article imported plus the duty. I am in favour of looking after all classes; but it makes a man tired to be told constantly that there is only one class in the country to be looked after, namely, the manufacturers. How are you going to enrich the farmers who constitute sixty-five or seventy per cent of the people of Canada, by enabling them to feed the fifteen per cent who are engaged in manufacturing ?

Mr, CLANCY. Where does the hon. gentleman get his calculation ?

Mr. FRASER. If the hon. gentleman looks at the census, he will find that my statement is correct.

Mr. CLANCY. I say it is not correct.

Mr. FRASER. My statement is correct. The large influx of population into this country at the present time is composed of farmers, and the millions of acres of land in the North-west are going to be occupied by men engaged in tilling the soil; so that instead of diminishing the number of farmers in Canada, we are increasing it. I think that the manufacturers are entitled to consideration, and when we give them an advantage of sixteen per cent, we give them a good start. The farmer who has to sell his products in the markets of the world has no such advantage; he has no bounty or duty or anything else to help him; and after being obliged to meet the competition of every other man in the markets of the world, he is to be taxed, not by the government or for the public requirements, but by the protectionists tax collector in order to build up his industry. I want the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) to understand that the sentiment in the maritime provinces on this subject is just about the same as I find it to be in every other part of Canada, namely, that when the duties we have gave a reasonable chance to manufacture, we should not increase them.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the duty on binder twine ?

Mr. FRASER. I would not have a duty on binder twine. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) or, if not he, a large number of hon. gentlemen of the same persuasion, kept this House hour after hour and day after day while they sought to make capital out of a proposal to take the duty off binder twine. It seemed to be a race between some hon. gentlemen on that side and some hon. gentlemen on this side as to who should speak most kindly of this proposal in the effort to relieve the farmers of their sufferings caused by the duty that then existed.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) does not mean to say that I advocated the removal of the duty on binder twine ?

Mr. FRASER. I venture to say the hon. gentleman did not say a word in favour of keeping it on when hon. gentlemen on his own side advocated its removal.

Mr. SPROULE. Time and time again I did. I never yet advocated taking the duty off. But I have often advocated keeping it on.

Mr. FRASER. The difficulty I am in is that the hon. gentleman speaks so often that it would be a weary hunt for me to go through 'Hansard' to find out what he said on any particular question. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement that he was in favour of the duty, and that whenever an hon gentleman on his own side declared in favour of taking it off, he rose and contended ardently to have it left on.

Mr. SPROULE. That is entirely a misrepresentation of what I said.

Mr. FRASER. Then, the hon. gentleman did not oppose those on his own side who advocated the removal of the duty ? That is what I said—that when his own side advocated taking it off, he did not advocate keeping it on—and the hon. gentleman agrees with me.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is not at all correct.

Mr. FRASER. I considered then as I do now that it was a little race between hon. gentlemen opposite and hon. gentlemen on this side for popularity with the farmers. All agreed in saying that if the duty were taken off the farmers would get their binder twine for less.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) is not now insisting that there ever was a movement on this side, or ever a speech made on this side, in favour of taking the duty off.

Mr. FRASER. Most decidedly. The late Mr. Davin, then member for West Assiniboia, was the chosen champion, the very apostle of the removal of this duty.

Mr. CLANCY. No, no.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) was not here at the time. If he refers to 'Hansard' he will find that the removal of duties on coal oil and binder twine were the main planks in the platform of the late Mr. Davin, and that these changes were advocated by him in this House with all his customary eloquence. And I think I should be able to find, if I searched 'Hansard,' that he even moved resolutions in that direction.

Mr. HENDERSON. No.

Mr. FRASER. I think that the hon. gentleman who says 'No' does not recollect the facts——

Mr. BENNETT. Obstruction.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We shall be here until the snow flies.

Mr. FRASER. Hon. gentlemen opposite speak for hour after hour, but if a word is said to expose their errors, they raise a cry of 'obstruction.' They must have all the time of the House to themselves, and no man must speak against them under penalty of being called an obstructionist. Now, I do not often trouble the House. But when the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) would give the committee the impression that we in the maritime provinces are against what is right and are clamouring for iron duties, I wish to tell him that he is mistaken. Whatever was done for the iron business was done on what I regard as the only proper principle —that of giving a bounty. There is not a political economist of standing, whether he takes the free trade or the protectionist side, but admits that, if anything is to be done in favour of a particular manufacture, the right way is to do it by means of a bounty. The hon. member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says that that is all wrong, that it should be done by protective duty. I am very glad to know that a political economist in the House disagreed with him, because he knows that a bounty is the best way——

Mr. MACLEAN. I did not deny the other. We may have the two together.

Mr. FRASER. I do not say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) said that the protective tariff is not good. It would be a strange thing in the way of protection that he would not advocate. But he did dispute the statement made by the hon. member for St. Mary's division on the bounty question. That is what was done for the industry in the maritime provinces, and the people there do not ask for higher duty.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If I alluded to the maritime provinces, it is only because I was interrupted by some of my friends from that part of the country. In answer to them, I gave what I thought a pretty good argument. I simply told them that when the iron industries were involved they were very glad to have recourse to what they call now the best form of protection. Nobody agreed more cheerfully to help the iron industry than I did. But I believe we did not do in 1897 what we are called upon to do now. When we were arranging duties on iron and steel in the revision of 1897, the country was not equipped as it is now. And I claim that, instead of giving bounties to-day, the country, being better equipped, having more iron and steel plants, the time has come for the imposition of duties. I believe that is the genuine position to take.

Mr. WADE. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) a question? Does this argument of his apply to the maritime provinces only?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Certainly not.

Mr. WADE. Then why does he single them out?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I stated the reason. I was interrupted by two or three of my friends from the maritime provinces, and I answered them. Now I expect my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) to take part in this debate. I am going to call him to my help and rescue. I need some help just now. I will tell him why I invite him to take part in this debate. He knows better than I do the facts concerning the binder twine industry in Brantford, his own town. I was a minister of the Crown with the hon. gentleman when the farmers' binder twine mills made money. I was a minister of the Crown with him when the same men came to us and told us that they could not go on with their operations. And they have closed their mill. Many of the binder twine mills have been closed or are working only partially. The Minister of Customs knows the case better than I do, but I know something about it, and I will tell what I know for the information of my hon. friends. The reason these people made money during a year or two—during one year especially—is that when the Philippines trouble came on they had a very large quantity of raw manilla on hand. The American factories, being unable to get supplies, our people made money——

Mr. BROCK. Out of the raw material?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes. These people came to the government and presented a memorandum which is before my former colleagues. But, while these people made money for one year, it is a well known fact that during the last three or four years, since we made the mistake of making worse the policy that the late Finance Minister had adopted, since we wiped out the duty on binder twine, the mills have closed down their operations. And why? Because they were unable to compete with the American trust, which is protected with a duty of 45 per cent. I have the statement in my hand about those big industries.

Mr. FRASER. They put no money in it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What is the use of saying they put no money in it ? There has been a large amount of Canadian money invested in these industries.

Mr. FRASER. They got it all back.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I cannot undertake to convice my hon. friend. He has stated that these people were earning 100 per cent. It is true they made no money for one year, for a special reason. Their mills have been closed since. We are importing 75 per cent of all the binder twine we are consuming. Our mills are idle most of the time. Why ? Because the American trust have come to this country and have given the Canadian manufacturers to understand that if they dare to manufacture more than 25 per cent they would slaughter them. I make this statement on my responsibility, and if the government institute an inquiry they will find that to be the case. Why should we allow that ? Why is that state of affairs going on ? Because there is no protection against the foreign manufacturer. Now is it desirable that we should go on in that way ? Sir, no childish arguments can be advanced against that clear fact. We have imported 75 per cent of an article that we can produce ourselves, for which we have the plant, but our plant has been kept idle by the American trust. I am speaking in the presence of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government, and I make the statement again, it is true and can be proved in twenty-four hours. Now, is it desirable that we should continue in that way. Are convinced free traders going to get up in this parliament and say that it is a satisfactory condition of affairs that an American trust should be given permission to come into this country and say to our Canadian manufacturers : You are not protected ; we are protected by a 45 per cent duty ; you cannot compete against us, and we can slaughter you because we have no protection. Both parties in this country are responsible for that state of affairs. The late Minister of Finance, influenced by the same considerations that we hear to-day, lowered the duty to 12½ per cent. He made a mistake, and we have made another mistake by wiping out the duty. We had to lose something in order to save more. I felt obliged to consent to this, because I thought it was necessary to make some sacrifice in order to save something more important. But now by-gones are by-gones. The Minister of Finance and his colleagues understand so well that the binder twine industry cannot go on under the present conditions, that they are asking us to give a bounty. Now, I say that bounties are not the best way to deal with this matter. I say that instead of asking us to take the money out of the pockets of the Canadian tax-payers, we should prevent the American trust from invading our market. We should use our own plant, we should use Canadian labour. We would not pay a cent higher for the twine. Why should we pay for it higher when it was manufactured by Canadian hands ? Sir, no answer, no argument, can be advanced to prove that because binder twine is manufactured on Canadian soil it would be dearer. There is no sense in the argument, there is no truth in the assertion. But what is true of binder twine is true of everything else. It is a fact that by imposing duties on foreign articles we are raising the prices in proportion to the extent of the duty, then we are taxing our people very heavily indeed. Still, if you compare prices of the most highly protected articles in this country with those of other countries, you will find that you are not paying dearer here than they are paying elsewhere. Compare the prices that are paid in England, in free trade England, for agricultural implements, with the prices paid for the same implements on the other side of the line. or in Germany, and you will find that they are dearer in England than anywhere else, perhaps. I say without any hesitation that a good many of our hon. friends who are talking about the lower tariff or free trade, are talking by an old book, an old theory. Certainly I do not question their good faith. We are not accusing each other of bad faith, we are discussing a question of business, of national affairs.

Mr. SCHELL. Can the hon. gentleman give us any figures ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, I have given the figures in the House already, and they have not been answered ; I have given them on two former occasions, comparing the prices of things in the United States and in England, and no one has answered those figures. Perhaps my voice was not worth answering, but there was a time when it was considered worth answering. I invite the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who are in favour of a low tariff, to study those figures, and I invite them to answer those figures. Now, how is it that the most enlightened nations in the world, that the best equipped nations in the world, such as Germany, such as the United States, such as Russia——

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

BROCKVILLE AND SAULT STE. MARIE RAILWAY.

Mr. FRASER moved :

That the House go into committee on Bill No. 104 to incorporate the Brockville and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, before you put that motion I would like to say that when this matter was up on Wednesday night the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) who is interested in this Bill, was addressing the House and when the hour closed he had not concluded his speech. He received a telegram to-day and had to leave on important business and he requested me to ask, if the matter came up, to have it allowed to stand until next Wednesday night. I told him I would make the suggestion and I hope it will meet with the approval of the mover of the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. I see that the order is not properly drafted on the Order paper. It says : House in committee on Bill (No. 104) &c.,' whereas it should be : 'House again in committee on Bill (No. 104).' So I suppose, the hon. member (Mr. Fraser) will withdraw his motion and the House will go into committee.

House went into committee on the Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I have some amendments to propose to the Bill and I want the promoter of the Bill to be present before I proceed. I do not think a Bill can be proceeded with according to the rules of the House in the absence of the promoter.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am in charge of this Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman in charge of this Bill, the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment), is not present and I do not think it is proper to proceed with the Bill in his absence as it is contrary to the rule.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Once a Bill is before the House it is the property of the House. Any member present by courtesy is allowed to move it; in fact any hon. gentleman can move it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the rule is against the hon. Postmaster General. I am informed by the clerk of the House that the rule is as I have stated it.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am in charge of the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that when a Bill is introduced and receives its first reading any hon. gentleman can, in the absence of the mover, become the promoter of the Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the number of the rule ?

Mr. TAYLOR. That may be so by courtesy of the House but not if any member takes objection. Then, the rule of the House is that the Bill cannot be proceeded with.

Mr. GALLIHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether you heard me or not, but I am in charge of this Bill and have been in charge of it during all the discussions that have taken place since it has been before the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When I gave my ruling it was with the understanding that the party who moved it did so with the consent of the absent member. I take it for granted that no hon. member would move a Bill unless he had the consent of the absent member.

Mr. TAYLOR. The rule does not say that the consent of the absent member is necessary. The rule says that the absent member must be present.

Mr. FRASER. As I understand it, a Bill is not in charge of a member after its introduction. It then becomes the property of the House. Otherwise a member might retire from an important Bill and the House could not deal with it. Just as soon as a Bill is proposed to the House the House will deal with it and will say whether it will pass it or not irrespective of whether the member wishes it or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask you to read the rule that applies to the case, and if I am wrong, I will submit.

Mr. INGRAM. A few years ago the late Hon. David Mills, who was well up on the rules of the House, objected, while a member of the House, to a Bill being proceeded with for the reason that the mover of the Bill was not present, and it was decided on that occasion that the House could not proceed with the Bill, and, therefore, it was not proceeded with.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Any Bill or proposal that is made, after it passes into the possession of the House, can be dealt with by the House, whether the promoter is here or not if, in the opinion of the House, it is deemed advisable to prosecute further the proposal of the mover. But, of course, if a member ceases to be a member of the House then it is a different thing. Then it has to be taken up de novo. That has been the practice during this session and during all other sessions.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood that the rule was going to be quoted.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We will look it up.

Mr. TAYLOR. I shall have to appeal from your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and ask the Speaker to decide because I know I am right.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Very well.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think we may get some light upon this subject by reference to Bourinot, p. 372 :

If a member refuses to proceed with a motion, the House cannot force him to do so, but he has a right to drop it. A member who has given notice of a series of resolutions may withdraw some of them and go on with the others. A member may not propose a motion in the absence of another who has placed it on the notice paper, except with the general consent of the House.

Of course, that consent can be obtained.

Mr. CLANCY. That must be the unanimous consent of the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It does not say that. It says general consent.'

Mr. TAYLOR. If any one objects it is not the general consent of the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Galliher) if he is in charge of the Bill.

Mr. GALLIHER. I have been in charge of it constantly since it was introduced.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Again I find in Bourinot that one member may take charge of a public Bill in the absence, but with the permission of another member.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a private Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a public Bill.

Mr. GALLIHER. Apart from that there is no motion being made. This Order is on the paper and the Bill is in the committee of the House. We are now entering upon a discussion of the preamble. I stand here as the member in charge of the Bill, and I have been in charge of this Bill. This Bill was brought up on the last night when we considered private Bills, the hon. member whose name appears as promoter of the Bill was not here and the question was not then raised.

Mr. TAYLOR. I raise the question now because courtesy would not be extended to the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) who is unavoidably absent, to conclude his remarks.

Mr. GALLIHER. I have consented twice owing to the absence of the hon. member for Cornwall to have the Bill stand over. That hon. gentleman in speaking on it the last night the Bill came up for discussion, made a remark tantamount to saying that by the time it was needed a certain document would be in his possession; in other words, meaning that he proposed to talk the Bill out. I must object now, having charge of this Bill, to its being postponed. There is no reason why it should be kept over until next Wednesday simply because the hon. member for Cornwall has to go away and attend to other business. We are here and we want this Bill disposed of and I do not want Monday to pass over, because it is a day that can be devoted entirely to private Bills, if necessary.

Mr. BELCOURT. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that the Bill, having been reported by the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, is no longer under the control of a member. It seems to me that when there is a report of a committee to this House reporting the Bill the House must deal with the Bill whether the gentleman in charge is present or not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is that no private Bill can take any stage in the absence of the gentleman whose name it appears in, if objection is taken.

Mr. C. MARCIL. We are now in committee, and this Bill has been referred to the committee by the House, so that any objection of this kind should be taken when the Speaker was in the Chair.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did raise the objection then.

The committee rose, and the Speaker took the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER reported :

Mr. McDonald, from the Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 104) reports that during the discussion on the Bill, Mr. Taylor appealed from the ruling of the Chair : that Bill (No. 104) could be proceeded with in the absence of the member in charge of the Bill.

And Mr. SPEAKER, having read the report from the committee of the whole, he put the question :

That the decision of the chairman of committees be sustained.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I beg your pardon, Sir, we are asking for your ruling. We have not appealed from the Speaker to the House. When we get the decision of the Speaker, then, if necessary, we will appeal to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is mistaken in that respect.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The appeal is not to the Speaker, but to the House, and the Speaker puts the motion whether the decision of the chairman shall be sustained.

Mr. TAYLOR. The paper which I put in the hands of the Chairman of Committees goes on to say that it is an appeal to the Speaker for his ruling, and that was not reported to the Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a reference which can be made to the Speaker for the purpose of deciding a question, but there is an appeal which can be made from the Chairman to the House, and Mr. Speaker has put the question according to the rule : That the decision of the chairman be maintained. If the House answers 'yes' it is sustained, and then the Speaker announces the decision of the House.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The practice has always been that if there is an appeal from the Chairman of Committees the Speaker gives his decision, and then the Speaker's decision may be appealed from to the House. Otherwise, there could be no appeal from the Chairman of Committees to the Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. When the House is in committee an appeal may be made from the decision of the chairman to the House. That is the rule. I remember that some years ago the chairman, having given a ruling, a reference was made from the committee to the Speaker asking his decision upon a point of order, but then it was only a reference to the Speaker in order to have his opinion, and it was not directly an appeal from the decision of the Chairman of Committees. In the present case the report is that an appeal has been made from the decision of the Chairman of Committees, and in that case the motion put before the House is simply : That the decision of the Chairman of Committees be sustained. In accordance with that procedure I put the motion : That the decision of the Chairman of Committees be sustained.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. Those in favour of the motion will please say 'aye.'

And a number of hon. members having answered 'aye,'

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say——

Mr. SPEAKER. Those not in favour of the motion will please say 'nay.'

And a number of hon. members having answered 'nay,'

Mr. SPEAKER. I declare the motion carried.

Mr. INGRAM. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask your ruling——

Mr. SPEAKER. There is nothing before the Chair now, the House goes back into committee.

And the House having resumed in committee,

Mr. SPROULE. When Mr. Speaker was putting the question to the House I endeavoured to point out that Bourinot lays down the following rule in his 'Procedure and Practice,' page 483 :

If it be found expedient in either House to refer a point of order to the Speaker, a member will move that the chairman report progress and ask leave to sit again that day. When the Speaker has resumed, the chairman will report that the committee wishes to be instructed as to the point in question. The House will then proceed to take the matter into consideration, and the Speaker having been requested to give his opinion will decide the matter in dispute ; then unless there is an appeal to the House against the Speaker's decision, the committee will resume its proceedings.

Mr. GALLIHER. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman voted 'nay' on the motion, and having recorded his vote, he is too late now to make any comment on the motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not know what the hon. member is going to say.

Mr. SPROULE. It is just a question whether the hon. gentleman desires the House to be right or not. If he desires the House to be right, surely he can have no objection to my statement. I wanted to draw the attention of Mr. Speaker, if I had the opportunity of doing so, to the irregularity with which it was reported from the committee that we desired to have the advice of Mr. Speaker on a point of order that has been raised before the chairman. If this authority is worth anything, I was entirely right.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. What is your point of order ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the committee rise and report to the Speaker that we cannot proceed with this Bill on account of the absence of the promoter of the Bill. That is in accordance with the rule which the hon. member for East Grey has just read. We want it decided by the Speaker whether we can proceed with this Bill in the absence of the member whose name is attached to it as the promoter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Let me explain this matter. When a point is raised in the committee upon which the committee wish to obtain the decision of the Speaker, a motion may be made for the committee to rise and report progress, and place the point in dispute before the Speaker, who will then, in his place, submit the matter to the House for its consideration, and afterwards give his decision upon the point raised. When there is an appeal made from the decision of the chairman, the mode of procedure is somewhat different. The Speaker simply takes the Chair and the chairman steps out without any motion at all. Then the Speaker puts the question to the House, shall the decision of the Chairman be sustained ? And if the decision is sustained, the Speaker steps out and the chairman steps into his place. Now, let me quote the rule from Bourinot. The rule is first given, and then the methods which were employed in 1885, when there were several appeals to the Speaker :

In such a case it is for the chairman of the committee to report in writing the point of order which he has decided, and the Speaker must then submit the matter to the House in the language reported to him, and put the question, that the decision of the chairman be confirmed. The committee may then resume if the business be not concluded.

That was actually the procedure which was adopted here. As it has been decided that my decision was in order, a reference can be made to the Speaker on the same point.

Mr. SPROULE. We are not appealing to the House, but we are appealing to the Speaker for instructions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will you permit me to suggest that the decision of the chairman has been sustained, so that that matter has been disposed of. But I think that my hon. friend from Leeds is now in order in making a motion to refer a point to the Speaker. That is a motion which requires the consent of the House. If the House wishes to make a reference to the Speaker, it can do so ; but unless that motion is carried, there can be no reference to the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Surely it does not require the consent of the House to have a reference to the Speaker.

Mr. HENDERSON. It would be a remarkable proceeding if the House should refuse to members the privilege of consulting the Speaker. We should surely be able to approach the Speaker of the House at all times on a question of order or of right, even if it referred only to five members. I, therefore, think the majority should not refuse to hon. members on this side of the House the right to consult the Speaker on an important point of order.

Mr. INGRAM. Five or six years ago in this House, when the practice of members whose names were attached to private Bills, being absent when the House went into committee to consider them grew to be an abuse, the Hon. Mr. Mills raised the objection to the Bills being proceeded with in the absence of the members promoting them ; and it was ruled at that time that the Bills could not be proceeded with because the members promoting them were not in the House. It seems a most remarkable thing that when we ask for a similar ruling, we cannot get it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We can get it, but I want to point out how to proceed :

If it be found expedient in either House to refer a point of order to the Speaker, a member will move that the chairman report progress and ask leave to sit again that day. When the Speaker has resumed, the chairman will report that the committee wishes to be instructed as to the point in question. The House will then proceed to take the matter into consideration, and the Speaker having been requested to give his opinion, will decide the matter in dispute.

If the hon. member for Leeds wishes to move for a reference of that kind, he must put his motion in writing.

Mr. BELCOURT. The rule may be stated by the hon. Minister of Finance ; but before we go any further, I want to call the attention of the House to this that if you now refer the matter to the Speaker, you will have the strange anomaly of referring the matter to the decision of the Speaker, after the House itself has pronounced finally upon it. If I understand anything of the rules of this House, it seems to me that an appeal to the House is the final appeal. It might be that the ruling which the Speaker would give would be contrary to the decision already arrived at by the House, and you would then have the Speaker and the House in conflict with each other. The hon. member for Leeds, could have taken one of two alternatives. He had his choice between asking for a reference of the question to the Speaker and appealing to the House. Having appealed to the House, he has exhausted his right, and the question cannot now be referred to the Speaker for a ruling; for, after all, the House is supreme, and its decision is surely higher than that of the Speaker or the committee.

Mr. CLARKE. Surely a majority vote of this House will not set aside the standing rules which govern the proceedings of the House ? What we ask is an appeal to the Speaker as to whether the chairman has given a proper ruling or not.

Mr. BELCOURT. That question is no longer debatable, for if the decision given by the House has the effect of setting aside the rule, the rule is set aside.

Mr. INGRAM. It must be unanimous.

Mr. BELCOURT. The point I make is this : The question is now at an end. The hon. gentleman had his choice of asking for a reference to the Speaker for his ruling, or an appeal directly to the House. He chose to appeal directly to the House. The House has pronounced on the question. The Speaker will either rule against or in favour of the ruling given by the House. If he rules against the decision of the House, you will have a conflict between the House and the Speaker, which, to say the least, would be most inconvenient. It would be almost scandalous.

Mr. CLARKE. Does my hon. friend mean to say that it would not be a scandalous proceeding to set aside the rule without the unanimous consent of the House ? I am sure that if we have an opportunity of appealing to the Speaker, he will give a ruling that will be satisfactory to the whole House.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not set myself up against the Speaker. I only call attention to an anomalous situation. It seems to me that we are proceeding on wrong lines. The House has pronounced on the question, and I should think that the decision of the House on a matter of this kind would be final.

Mr. SPROULE. Evidently the hon. gentleman entirely misunderstands the question. The hon. member for Leeds desired to report to the Speaker and get his ruling. In attempting to do so, we proceeded in an irregular way. It was not an appeal from the ruling of the Chair, but a desire to get instructions from the Speaker as to the point of order. The appeal was irregular, and therefore it can have no force or effect. When we desire to get information from the Speaker, whom we have a right to look to at any time, and we are going about the proceeding in a regular way, surely the hon. member for Ottawa has no right to object to it.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will my hon. friend answer this question ? Is it or is not a fact that the majority of this House has pronounced on the question ?

Mr. SPROULE. No. The question was not——

Mr. FRASER. Let us understand where we are. The Speaker decided that we could proceed with this Bill without the member whose name appears as the promoter being present.

Mr. MACLEAN. The House decided that.

Mr. FRASER. Excuse me. The Speaker decided that——

Mr. TAYLOR. The Speaker will not subscribe to that.

Mr. FRASER. It was on that decision of the Speaker that we proceeded with the Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Peel——

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker has given no ruling.

Mr. FRASER. But the chairman has, and the appeal has been on that ruling. And now it is proposed that we shall ask Mr. Speaker what his opinion is upon a decision given by the Chairman which was sustained by the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FRASER. Does not the hon. gentleman see how ridiculous that is ? We are going to ask His Honour the Speaker to decide a question as Speaker that the chairman decided, which decision on the appeal being taken to the House was upheld. It is absolutely the same thing in another form.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. SPROULE : I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) a question ? Have we or have we not the right to refer a question to the Speaker for information.

Mr. FRASER. Decidedly. But we have done so ?

Mr. SPROULE. Then, if we have——

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman will pardon me. He rose to ask me a question. I answer that question in the affirmative. But the hon. gentleman who took the appeal took it in another way, having appealed to the decision of the majority.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all.

Mr. FRASER. Let us go back and see where we stand. The question was raised before the chairman whether we could proceed with this Bill in the absence of the member whose name is on the Bill The chairman decided that we could. Now, that is not final, because the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said : I appeal from that, and I ask that the Speaker be called in to decide that question. The hon. member may not have adopted the method which he now thinks would have been best. But Mr. Speaker did the only thing that he was permitted to do under the laws of the House. And the House having decided that the chairman's decision was correct, we are now asked by another means to get the Speaker to decide the question that has already been decided by a vote of the House. It is a well known rule that you cannot have two appeals in the same case. You might as well say you could have an appeal from one decision to two courts. The decision is given and it is final.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) permit me to ask him a question ? Would the hon. gentleman hold that the decision of this House by a majority of votes is final to suspend a rule that according to the rules can only be suspended by unanimous consent ?

Mr. FRASER. Decidedly not. But that is not the case. The decision of the Speaker was not upon a rule of the House. It was upon a question that arose outside of the rule. If it had been a rule, it would have been entirely different. The chairman said it was not a rule of the House and that he so decided. And the question was taken to the House and the House said by its vote that the chairman was right. But we can well understand this second effort to get it before the Speaker; the object is to gain time.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all.

Mr. CLARKE. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. Mr. Fielding). We are all interested equally in having the rules of the House observed because they are as much for the protection of members on one side as for the protection of members on the other side. Permit me to occupy a moment in stating the case as I understand it. There are two methods of procedure. One is by way of reference, where the committee regards the matter as in doubt and desires information from the Speaker. Upon that question, you may have the resolution as my hon. friend is proposing it. But a motion of that kind has no effect in itself, but is made effective by being adopted by the House by decision of the majority. The other way is to proceed by way of appeal. That does not depend upon the action of the majority. Any hon. member may appeal from the decision of the Chair. Even if the majority is against him he has a right to have his appeal. An hon. member has the choice of either of these methods. The hon. gentleman appealed from the decision of the Chair. The procedure was that the Speaker should be called in, the report made, the decision announced and the question put to the House. That has been done. The result was that the ruling was sustained. Now, I claim that my hon. friend's (Mr. Taylor's) motion is in order; he has the right to make it. But it would be a most unseemly thing to pass it, and ask the opinion of the Speaker in a matter in which the whole House has pronounced.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask if we have the ruling on a point of order on the law covering the case ?

Mr. BELCOURT. The hon. gentleman did not want the opinion of the Speaker but the opinion of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I wanted the opinion of the Speaker. That is the resolution placed in the Speaker's hands.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was an appeal to the Speaker.

Mr. TAYLOR. For a certain purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member (Mr. Taylor) desired to get the ruling of the Speaker, but was forced to take the other course against his will, and the course taken was an appeal rather than a reference to get the opinion of the Speaker as he desired. He stated specifically that he wished to get the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. TAYLOR. My motion is as follows :

Mr. Taylor appeals on the ruling of the Chairman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. Wait now.

—that Bill (No. 104) can be proceeded with in the absence of the member in charge of the Bill, and appeals to the Speaker for his ruling.

The chairman never read that to the Speaker.

Mr. BELCOURT. There can be no appeal to the Speaker against the ruling of the Chair; the appeal must be to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. He can apply for the information.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is another question.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman had struck out the word 'appeal' and substituted 'refer'——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But he did not.

Mr. CLARKE. But suppose he had ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CLARKE. I appeal to hon. members in all seriousness. Is it not establishing a dangerous precedent to say that the minority is to be prevented from obtaining a ruling of the Speaker on a matter affecting a grave question of order ? If I am wrong, Mr. Chairman, you can correct me, and I am sure you will. These standing rules are for the protection of both sides of the House, the minority as well as the majority, as the hon. Minister of Finance said ; and they cannot be set aside without unanimous consent. It will be a grave matter indeed if we are to set aside the standing rules by a vote of the majority of the members present. That will be a very dangerous precedent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Previous to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) making his motion, I stood here and told the committee deliberately that there were two methods of procedure, one to appeal from the chairman's decision in reference to the question, and the other a decision on the part of the committee to obtain information from the Speaker, the question being one in which there was a doubt. After I made this statement, the hon. member for Leeds wrote out his appeal. I stepped out of the Chair and Mr. Speaker stepped in and we proceeded exactly according to the rules laid down. Now the last motion made by the hon. gentleman is in order. He wishes to appeal——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. He wants to refer.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I beg pardon. He wants to refer to the same tribunal that has already decided.

Mr. TAYLOR. He has never decided yet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In other words the reference is made to the Speaker. Now, I put the motion——

Mr. CLARKE. May we not discuss it, Mr. Chairman ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes, you may discuss it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to put myself right. When eight o'clock arrived and the Speaker was in the Chair when the clerk read the order I rose and addressed the Speaker, stating that the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) had requested me, owing to his having been called away, to ask that this Bill be allowed to remain over for another evening, so that the other Bills on the paper might be proceeded with. I simply put the request and was going on to say—some request having been made that I should state my objection to proceed—that I had amendments to propose, when the Speaker said there had been a mistake in the Order Paper, and that it should have read 'House again in committee,' and walked out of the Chair. I intended with him in the Chair to raise these objections——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You could not do it that way.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Speaker was in the Chair. 'Hansard' will prove that I had so far proceeded with my speech when he said that the Order Paper was wrongly printed and should have read 'House again in committee' and walked out of the Chair. Now, that is just as the circumstance happened. I simply made a request on behalf of a member of this House who had not concluded his speech when the hour closed the other night, and I think the House in justice should have acceded to this request. I am sure there is not a member on this side of the House who would have objected under similar circumstances to a similar request made from the other side.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Taylor moves that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again to-day, for the purpose of ascertaining the decision of the Speaker upon the question which was recently before us.

Mr. LEFURGEY. As this question affects the rights of the minority I do not think it should be treated lightly nor decided hastily. As the hour for the discussion of private Bills is very nearly up, I think it would be well to permit this matter to drop, as it is obvious that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) does not wish this Bill to be proceeded with on account of the absence of an hon. member, and of the promoter of the Bill. I cannot understand why the government should allow the time of this House to be wasted for an hour, as it is being wasted by refusing to act in a spirit of fairness towards the opposition. I cannot understand why this desultory discussion went on for an hour when almost every member in the House was at loggerheads as to the correct proceeding, and the chairman himself is undecided what course to pursue. I think in a case of that kind there should be enough dignity on the government side of the House to deal with the matter in a sensible way, and not delay any further the precious time of this House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The minority in this House should have some rights. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has made a motion for a reference, and under that reference the Speaker decided it was an appeal to the House. The hon. member for Leeds surely has a right to correct his motion if he makes a wrong motion, and any other gentleman has a right to make a motion to get the opinion of the Speaker on the question. Look at the position the House will be in if we are to be guided by the rules laid down by the Finance Minister, that the committee has to give its consent to its rising for the purpose of getting the opinion of the Speaker. In no case then can the minority get the opinion of the Speaker upon any question raised before the Chair. Fortunately for us, the rules of the House do not require it. It is sufficient that the hon. member makes his motion for the committee to rise so that the opinion of the Speaker may be obtained. It is not submitted to the committee at all, there is no vote upon the question. The Finance Minister cannot show any authority in that direction. Any member of the committee, any member of a minority, has a right to get a decision of the Speaker. The chairman of the committee has no right to put the motion to the committee. It is sufficient that the motion be made to appeal to the Speaker, and he leaves the question to the Speaker to decide. Otherwise there would be no protection for the minority, because the majority can vote at any time that the committee should not rise in order to get the opinion of the Speaker. How are we to get the opinion of the Speaker otherwise? Would the Finance Minister or any other member opposite suggest any method? The member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) says that because the member for Leeds made a mistake in putting his motion, that should debar him from getting the opinion of the Speaker on the question. Surely if the member for Leeds has not a right to make another motion, some other member can make it for him. My contention is—and I would ask your ruling upon the question—that any member of the committee can ask the chairman to rise and request the opinion of the Speaker as to the interpretation of a rule of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry that I have to differ with my hon. friend the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Haggart), who is a much older parliamentarian than I am. He asked me to give him some authority to sustain the position that this motion must be voted upon. Can the hon. gentleman give me any authority, or show any way of getting a motion adopted except by voting upon it? The rule says that a member may move. Does it not naturally follow that you must have a vote? A motion that the committee rise and report progress, is surely a motion upon which we must vote.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Nine o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for Private Bills has expired.

BOUNTY ON BINDER TWINE.

The House resumed in committee the resolution concerning a bounty on binder twine.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. At six o'clock when the committee rose, I was saying that all the enlightened nations in the world were engaged in the battle of industrial life. I mentioned some nations, and included the name Russia. There was a clamour of scornful disdain at the mention of that country. I have no objection to withdraw the name of Russia in discussing a question of this kind. I think it is useless, it is unfair, to look at straws, let us look at square facts. A little flaw in a big piece of steel does not make much difference. However, Russia is not such a small nation that we must ignore it. Russia is entering into the field of industrial activity with a surprising strength. It is one of the great coming nations of the world industrially, and agriculturally it is to-day one of the great nations of the world. Canada has no more dangerous rival for wheat than Siberia. However, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is asking us to-day to deal with a special case, with the binder twine industry. He is giving to that industry a stone when he has been asked to give bread. He was not asked to give bounties. My hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Macpherson), who I do not see in the House at this moment, defended bounties. When his friends in British Columbia approached parliament about lead, they did not ask for a bounty, they asked for protective duties. Let me say that the iron and steel capitalists of Sydney have not asked for a bounty either, they ask for a straight protective duty. But they must submit to the inevitable, and they have informed the government that the inevitable to which they submit will not lead them to final success. That is the reason why, in my humble opinion, the government is not following the course that they should follow. They recognize the fact that the industries to which they are giving bounties cannot live without something more.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has made the statement that the lead people who came here did not ask for a bounty.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, they asked for duties.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I wish to tell the hon. gentleman that they did ask for one of the two things. It was immaterial to them which, and quite a number of them favoured the bounty.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Let my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) give me that assurance and I will give him the paper which I have in my hands, the memorandum presented to myself and my former colleagues by these very same men. I have the memorandum and I will pledge myself to bring it and lay it on the Table of the House.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman to the contrary notwithstanding, I attended the first meeting that was held by the silver lead men of British Columbia, in the city of Vancouver, when they talked it over, and talked it over very strongly, and I can assure the hon. gentleman and the committee that the question of bounties was talked of as much as the question of duties—every bit as much. I cannot help what he may have in his hands. I know that the silver lead men were very well pleased to get a bounty, that they were glad to get it and that that was part of their suggestion.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman is in a very peculiar position indeed. Two years ago a bounty was given. The system of bounty which was then adopted did not produce anything. He knows that. His friends in the west could not take advantage of it. The lead industry could not take advantage of the system of bounty that was then adopted. How then can he say that it was a good system ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was not high enough.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It was not sufficient then. The system of bounty then adopted, for which, I admit, I was responsible, did not work. Of course, the lead people are obliged to accept what they are given, because the government stated at the beginning of the session through the hon. Minister of Finance that they would not give any duties. They are bound to accept what they are given. But the lead people, not only to-day, but for years, have been asking for duties. The iron people have been asking for duties, the people interested in the binder twine industry have been asking also for duties and not for bounties. These are the facts of the case. So, I say that we are face to face with the fact that the government have fully made up their mind that they will not adopt the policy of protecting the national industries of the country. It is debatable. I frankly admit that there are two sides to this question. I do not claim to be infallible. Those who hold the view that a low system of tariff is the best, have the full right to their views, but let the country know where we stand. The government should tell us where they stand to-day. Am I mistaken in saying that in the not very far past, even during this session, members of the government have been giving hints—very strong hints—pledges, I may say, to the manufacturers, that in the near future the tariff will be revised on the protectionist system and that these hints have been given by ministers of the Crown, by responsible men? Yet, to-day we hear prominent supporters of the government denouncing protection in all sorts of forms. Well what I ask, for one, is that we may know exactly where we stand. The system of bounties is protection in a certain form. There is no doubt whatever that industries that are given bounties will benefit by them. If you give to a certain manufacturer $5 a ton or five cents a pound, that is so much that the manufacturer will put in his pocket. There is no doubt about that. But that is not the policy of protection that I for one believe this country should adopt. I have no more to say except that in my opinion the government are making a mistake in this case, not only from the industrial standpoint, not only from the financial standpoint, but from the standpoint of the farmers. A large quantity of Canadian flax is used in the manufacture of twine and small cordage. The Canadian farmers, if we had a protective policy, would be protected then. The more people we employ in this country the more goods we manufacture here, the bigger we make the market for the Canadian farmer. We imported during the last two or three years 75 per cent of the twine and cordage that we are using. If we had manufactured that twine and cordage we would have employed some Canadian labour, we would have bought some Canadian wheat, we would have kept in the country hundreds of thousands of dollars that we sent abroad. These facts cannot be disputed. Every half million dollars or million dollars of money that are kept in circulation in this country to buy Canadian goods, to buy flour, to buy timber, to buy iron, to buy meat is money that is better employed than if it is sent abroad to feed foreign labourers, to buy foreign timber and to buy foreign products of other kinds. It seems to me that the argument is unanswerable. I fully grant that no country in the world can produce everything that it needs, but if a country can manufacture an article advantageously, I do not see any reason why it should be manufactured outside of its limits. Now, I have been interrupted several times by the words 'look at England.' I have already, on a former occasion, answered that argument, but I believe the best answer for that argument is being given day after day through the despatches that are coming from the mother land. Let us not forget that England has not always been a free trade country—very far from it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Since 1842.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Ross) says that England has been a free trade country since 1842. He is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I am always mistaken.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, the hon. gentleman is not always mistaken, but this time he is mistaken as to that, and if he will kindly follow me for one minute I will prove that he is mistaken in his statement. No doubt the first step towards the principle of free trade was taken in 1842, but the last duties were removed only in 1860, when there remained only 24 articles on the dutiable list. What happened then? There was a war between Austria and Germany, there was a war between France and Prussia, and there was the great civil war in the United States. In other words, the nations of the world which have come to the front since as industrial nations were not equipped practically then, and these nations have been equipped only since 1875, after the Franco-Prussian war. Well now, England had been for many years before a violently protective country. England has been losing ground rapidly. The balance of trade has been year after year against England. I gave the figures the other day, and nobody has answered them, and they cannot be answered, because they are true. The agriculture of England has been destroyed year after year; the acreage under cultivation has diminished to a lamentable extent. These facts cannot be disputed. Now the foremost men of England, the far sighted men of England realize that England is losing ground all over the world, and there is a strong movement towards the adoption of a protective tariff, because they feel the time has come, the conditions being changed in regard to the nations of the world, when England must not be any longer the dumping ground of the universe. At the same time Canada is face to face with a unique occasion. The policy of Mr. Chamberlain has the right ring about it—the right imperial ring and the right colonial ring. We can get a preference from England provided we make up our minds that we are going to be a protectionist country. If we open our markets to all nations of the earth and say they shall have equal rights, then we cannot get a preference from England. We must raise our tariff against the nations of the world if we are to trade with the motherland. This is not a question of theory. For the last fifty years our tariff has been about half the tariff of our American friends. The United States has developed year after year, until now they have a population of 80,000,000. We have a little less than 6,000,000; we have not progressed so fast; their tariff is twice as high as ours. The lesson that the United States has taught us should not be lost sight of. We cannot help ourselves. Those of us who hold views contrary to the views of the present government are in the minority, apparently at any rate. I doubt very much if we are in the minority in this country; I believe we are in the majority at this very moment. In the Liberal party itself we are not in the minority, but I know what party ties are and I know what party discipline is. There are members of parliament sitting on this side of the House who share the views I have expressed. There are on the ministerial benches ministers of the Crown who share my views. It is an old story for me ; I know all about it. There are in all the provinces Liberals of strong views—I have their letters in my hand—there are strong Liberals who do not hesitate to write me day by day that the government is wrong. I do not say that they will vote against the government, because they still have hopes. That is the trouble, if I may call it a trouble. I say now, in all candour, that I would rather stand by the word 'hope.' The ministers are giving the hope to their friends who are protectionists that they will revise the tariff, but there are still some of their supporters who say that a low tariff is a good tariff. That is not a right stand, in my humble opinion. It may not be the last time that we shall call the attention of the country to the opinions we hold. The fiscal policy of a country should be above petty party division, and should be considered a question apart from politics. In conclusion, Sir, I wish to say that I accept the bounty, because I cannot get duties.

Mr. SCOTT. This subject has been pretty well threshed out this afternoon, and I rise simply because of some references that have been made by the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte). In two particulars the hon. gentleman has done a valuable public service. In the first place, he took his stand upon what I consider to be sound economic doctrine ; and in the second place, he succeeded in showing the falsity of one of the cries which our hon. friends of the opposition—notwithstanding that they were his chief applauders here this afternoon—have for many months been holding forth to the people of Canada. I refer to the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite that it was the action of the government in 1897, in removing the duty from binder twine, which caused the considerable increase in its price. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has pointed to us the binder twine factory in Brantford, which in two years yielded a dividend to the proprietors exceeding 100 per cent, and he told us that the reason why they could make such enormous profit was on account of the Spanish-American war, which caused the increase in the value of the raw material, a stock of which these gentlemen, to their own great profit, happened to have on hand. It would appear then that in the opinion of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) the Spanish-American war had something to do with the increase in the price of binder twine, and that it was not the action of the government in removing the duty which was the cause of that increase. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) also stated that he was opposed to this bounty, because it meant taking the money out of the pockets of some people in the country and putting it into the pockets of other people. And when I asked if the same principle should not be applied to duties, he said it should ; but he contended that the duty did not increase the price. His statement meant that if it could be shown to him that a duty upon an article increased the price he would oppose that duty, because it would be improperly taking money out of the pockets of some people of the country and putting it by law into the pockets of other people. He argued, however, that the placing of a duty on binder twine would not increase its price. I believe, Sir, in considering any one of these articles upon its merits in connection with the imposition of a duty, and it may very well be that the placing of a duty on some articles would not lead to an increase in their price. However, as regards twine, I think the opposite, and a very large number of the farmers of this country think the opposite. But I say that it may be possible, notwithstanding my own opinion and the opinion of others, that the placing of a duty on binder twine would not increase the price of the article, and therefore, so far as binder twine is concerned, if the hon. gentleman be correct in his theory, his position is perfectly sound. But in taking the position that the placing of a duty on articles in general does not enhance the price, my hon. friend is flying in the teeth of every economic authority in this country or in any other country. I could point him to the utterance of the Hon. George E. Foster, who said on one occasion that if the putting of the duty on an article did not have the effect of enhancing its price, then it would be entirely useless to impose a duty. My hon. friend must be aware that when he declares that the putting of a duty on articles of general commerce does not enhance their price, he is announcing an opinion which is the very opposite of the opinion held by a very large number of people in Canada. Why do the consumers object to any proposition to increase the tariff ? They may be mistaken, and their opinion may not be worth as much as the opinion of the hon. member for St. Mary's, but they certainly do think that an increase in the duty would mean an increase in the price. And when the hon. gentleman speaks of the large body of opinion in this country in favour of the doctrine which he has been promulgating for some months, he must forget that we had farmers' associations throughout the province of Ontario meeting week after week, and at every meeting placing themselves on record as being opposed to any general increase in the tariff. He must also forget that the Trades and Labour Council of Canada, at its last annual meeting, placed on record a most emphatic protest against any general increase in the tariff.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him if he believes that the Trades and Labour Council represent the labour element of this country on that point ?

Mr. SCOTT. I should hope so.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend hopes in vain.

Mr. SCOTT. My opinion upon that point may not be worth a great deal, but, at all events, this body represents a section of labouring people from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and their view is entitled to some respect.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Certainly it is.

Mr. SCOTT. And when my hon. friend was contending that no duty meant an increase in price, I remembered a statement which I saw in a reputable newspaper some weeks ago with regard to the prices of wire. It will be remembered that when changes were made in the tariff some years ago, barb wire for fencing and certain other qualities of wire, technically designated by numbers, were placed upon the free list. There are certain other qualities of wire which still bear a duty. I saw the statement made in the 'Farmers' Sun' of Toronto, and I have never seen it denied, that the difference in the price of the wire which is free of duty in Canada, as compared with the United States, is 25 cents per 100 pounds, and on these qualities of wire which still bear a duty in Canada, there is a difference in price of $1.60 per 100 pounds as against 25 cents per 100 pounds on the wire that is free of duty.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the difference on that class of wire to which the hon. gentleman refers ?

Mr. SCOTT. Barbed wire and certain other brands are free, and certain other qualities remain dutiable.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the duty on that ?

Mr. SCOTT. I imagine it is twenty or twenty-five per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. Would that make $1.60 per cwt ?

Mr. SCOTT. I presume so. I was led to believe so by the statements of the 'Farmers' Sun.'

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Would the hon. gentleman tell me what it is worth per hundred.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not an expert in wire. I am simply presenting the statement as I have obtained it. I have never heard a denial of the statement. If any hon. gentleman is prepared to deny it, the House will no doubt be very glad to have the information. The statement was that on one class of wire which is free there is only a difference of 25 cents per cwt., which is only the difference of the transportation charges, while the wire which is dutiable shows a difference in price between the United States and Canada of $1.60 per cwt., which is the difference in the cost of transportation and the duty added, showing conclusively that the farmers have to pay a higher price for those articles on which duties are levied. If the placing of a duty on an article does not mean any increase in price, what is the meaning of the appeal which hon. gentlemen opposite are from time to time making in this House for increased duties for the benefit of the farmers ? How are the farmers going to be benefited if the increased duties are not going to increase the prices of the products they raise ? As I said before, there may be certain articles on which the placing of a duty would not increase the price ; but there are other articles on which the duty increases the price almost to the level of the duty. For what other purpose is it proposed to place a duty on steel rails ? Will any hon. gentleman say that that is not intended to give the manufacturers an enhanced price on that article ?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows that steel rails are free. He knows that if a duty of $7 a ton were put on steel rails, we would have the Canadian market for steel rails, and it does not necessarily follow that there would be any advance in price.

Mr. SCOTT. When Mr. Clergue last fall appealed for a duty on steel rails, what was the reason underlying his appeal ? It was that Mackenzie & Mann were buying steel rails in Germany at a price which he could not hope to compete with, and he wanted a duty so as to compel Mackenzie & Mann and other railway builders in this country to pay a higher price. He said that if that were not done, he could not manufacture steel rails in this country. With regard to the resolution before the House, while I am not at all enthusiastic in its support or in support of any proposition increasing the taxation of the people of this country, whether by this method or by the method of a customs duty, still, speaking for myself, I very much prefer this method of assisting the binder twine industry to the method of placing a duty on the article. I think this is the much more definite and satisfactory method. If it is in the general interest of the country that any manufacturer should be given direct assistance. I think that the whole country, which it is presumed will receive the benefit, should assist in bearing the burden, instead of the whole burden being placed upon a limited number of consumers who use the article.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House what benefit the country will derive from this bounty of three-eighths of a cent a pound on manilla fibre ?

Mr. SCOTT. I would prefer that my hon. friend should ask the binder twine manufacturers that question. I have no distinct knowledge on the matter. But, I presume that the binder twine manufacturers are willing to accept this measure, otherwise I do not suppose that the hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches would be forcing such a measure upon them.

Mr. HEYD. They will be able to sell their binder twine that much cheaper to the consumers.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In other words, they will be able to compete with the Americans who have closed them up, until to-day seventy-five per cent of the binder twine used in the country is imported. That bounty, I hope, will enable our manufacturers to compete and to keep their establishments open ; so that, instead of importing seventy-five per cent of our binder twine from the United States, we will manufacture it ourselves.

Mr. McCREARY. Has the hon. member for St. Mary's any evidence that the binder twine factories have been closed on account of the competition of the United States ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes.

Mr. McCREARY. Is there not evidence to show that the binder twine factories have had all the work they could do for the last three years ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. What have they to come here for, then ?

Mr. McCREARY. Like other manufacturers, I suppose, to get all they can out of the people of Canada. I suppose the hon. gentleman would say that the manufacturers of threshing machines and binders should come here for more protection, though we know as a matter of fact, that all the manufacturers of binders in Canada were not able to supply the demand of the west last year. If it had not been for the binders that were imported from the United States, half the crop of last year would have remained on the ground unthreshed.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman opposed to this bounty ?

Mr. McCREARY. I am asking for information. I think that this government, before they increase the duties or the bounties should be in possession of undoubted facts, and not simply take the statements of the manufacturers themselves. I believe that all these binder twine factories, except two are in the hands of the combine in the United States. I believe that that combine owns these factories, and it is merely to increase their profits that this combine is asking for this bounty.

Mr. BLAIN. If this bounty passes, does the hon. gentleman think it will increase the price of binder twine to the farmers ?

Mr. McCREARY. I do not think it will.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, in his opinion, protection does not increase the price to the consumer ?

Mr. McCREARY. That is a different thing. I believe, from what I could learn from the binder twine manufacturers of the United States, that, as a matter of fact, they never got the rebate to which they were entitled, on account of the peculiar agreement made with the Philippine Islands. So that I do not think the Canadian binder twine manufacturers to-day are suffering at all. I think they are merely trying to get more profit from the sale of their goods.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has the hon. gentleman any positive information as to the statement he has just made, that nearly all the manufacturers of binder twine in Canada are in the hands of the American trusts? If my hon. friend is right, the bounty policy is a very bad one indeed, because we are simply taking money from the pockets of the Canadian people and giving it to the American trusts. That would be an abominable policy, against which the country should revolt. But I believe my hon. friend is wrong. I have positive information that most of the binder twine industries in Canada are in the hands of Canadians. I have personal information as to that. So that the most of our money will not go to the American trusts. But it shows, if my hon. friend will allow me to say so with all respect and deference, to what extremes our free trade friends will go.

Mr. McCREARY. I merely asked the hon. member for St. Mary's for information. He makes a statement of fact on which he has no more reliable information than I have for the statement I made. He has only the rumours circulated through the press and otherwise, and that is the only basis I have for my statement.

Mr. McEWEN. I would ask the hon. member for St. Mary's how many of these factories are shut down at the present time ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There are a couple closed down at Brantford.

Mr. HEYD. They are not closed.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend will not play on words. They are not closed, but they have not been working on full time nor making money. In Montreal our manufacturers of binder twine have been closed for most of the time.

Mr. CALVERT. How many ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We have two. One of them is a very large industry. In Brantford there is a large factory established by farmers. I believe a couple of thousand farmers have invested money in it. They have come to us repeatedly and told us they are losing money. And I have received letters from them since. They have had their factory going for only a part of the time. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance knows that as well as I do.

Mr. HEYD. The Chatham factory is closed.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, and most of the factories have been working very little. Let me repeat the statement I made, evidence of which can be had in twenty-four hours if an investigation is held. We imported last year 75 per cent of the binder twine we used. And the American manufacturers came here with threats in their mouths telling our people they must agree to manufacture so much and do no more, or they would slaughter the market. I make this statement deliberately, and am prepared to give the evidence to support it.

Mr. HEYD. I never heard it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Heyd) will induce his friends on the treasury benches to grant an investigation, I will produce the proof of it under oath. It is a fact well known in commercial circles.

Mr. McEWEN. I would ask whether any of these factories which are shut down receive pay for shutting down? The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is in with these people, and I would be glad if he would tell us.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am not interested in any of these binder twine factories. But I know that the statements I have made are true. The Canadian manufacturers came to us when I was a member of the government asking for protection for their industry. There is no secret about it. They told us they could not compete against the Americans, because the Americans were protected by a duty of 45 per cent, and they were slaughtering this market. The best evidence of all this is that the Finance Minister and the government are asking parliament to vote bounties to these people. Will my hon. friend (Mr. McEwen) vote against these bounties? Does he believe that the decision of the government is wrong? If he thinks this industry is all right, he should vote against this bounty. If these hon. gentlemen are advocating the necessity of additional bounties, how can they say that there is nothing the matter with this industry? Their position is most illogical. The proposition that the government has laid before us proves that the statements I am making are true and that this industry needs help. I contend that, instead of giving bounties we should put on duties. But I say again that I am very glad that my friends on the treasury benches are not allowing more industries to be closed, but are going to help the Canadian labour to do better than it has done during the past two or three years.

Hon. Mr. TARTE.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I am sure the government deserves the sympathy in the pitiable position in which they find themselves in regard to this industry. Previous to 1894, there was a sufficient duty on binder twine to enable the manufacturers in Canada to secure nearly all our home market. In 1894, the duty was reduced in deference to clamour raised by people in different parts of the country for political purposes. With a duty reduced to 12½ per cent, the amount of binder twine imported from the United States increased and the amount manufactured in this country decreased. In 1897, the duty was taken off. This was not done because the farmers asked for it. The farmers were not paupers; they do not ask to be placed in a different position from other people in this country. They know that our revenue is raised by tariff duties, and no person could contend that 12½ per cent was an oppressive duty. It is not more than a revenue duty, even according to the views of the members of the government. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) has said again and again that the present revenue is a tariff for revenue only, and it is a great deal higher than 12½ per cent. So, this duty was not removed because it was a protective duty; its removal was simply designed as a vote-catcher. The leader of the Liberal party thought the farmers of this country were easily caught, and to catch them they made a few clap-trap changes in the tariff,

Mr. CALVERT. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith, Wentworth) permit me to ask him a question? If the removal of the duty in 1897 was intended as a vote-catcher, what was the object in 1894, in reducing it from 25 per cent to 12½ per cent?

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). No doubt, it was removed in deference to a political agitation carried on by men who wished to catch votes. All the hon. gentlemen opposite were engaged in it, as well as some on this side. Under the 12½ per cent duty we imported only 2,000,000 pounds of binder twine. But when the duty was taken off, the amount increased to 10,000,000 pounds the year before last, and to 15,000,000 pounds last year. Instead of manufacturing 75 per cent of the binder twine we use, we only manufacture 25 per cent, the remainder being imported from the United States where the manufacture of it gives employment to American workmen. And the farmers are not benefited by it. Even if they were—which I dispute—it would be a benefit which they have never asked for, for they know that every man should contribute his share to the revenue, and 12½ per cent is not excessive. Our factories are closed, and the American trust controls our market. If the American trust saw fit, they could crush our factories out at once. Why? Because they carry on business in a much larger way and are able to manufacture cheaper than can the factories in this country. To-day, they are placed in a very much superior position because of the ⅜ cent per pound that they get. So, the government come to the rescue of this industry. Why do they not do the same by scores of other industries that are in the same position? Why, because there is not enough money in the treasury to pay bounties on all these industries? If this system was adopted in its entirety the government would not have one-tenth of the money they would require. Consequently it is adopted piecemeal—a sop thrown here or there wherever there is a strong kick coming. If my hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) comes with a big boot and threatens a strong kick, there is some help given to an industry in his constituency. And an industry in Sydney is treated in the same way and for similar reasons. But the general industries of the country are sacrificed—not all of them, because the duties were not removed from all of them, were not even lowered on all of them. If to-day we are prosperous these industries are able to survive. But we know what the position of this country was from 1873 to 1879. We had a low tariff, and the hard times in the United States forced the manufacturers there to look for an outside market. They found it in Canada, slaughtering the industries of this country right and left. In 1879 a tariff was put on which enabled our own industries to exist. But the same conditions will arise again unless the government is prepared to keep our market for our own manufacturers.

I think we should adopt a strong tariff in this country for other reasons The Hon. Joseph Chamberlain to-day, in the old country, is holding out his hands to us and making us an offer that will be worth countless millions to this country if we can take advantage of it. But we are not in a position to take advantage of it, we have not anything to offer. Let us raise our tariff, not, as some hon. gentlemen opposite have said, we desire to do, up to that of the United States. No one on this side of the House ever expressed a wish for a tariff the same as they have in the United States. What we want is a tariff averaging that of the United States, a much higher tariff than we have at the present time. Let us place ourselves in that strong position that we will have something to offer, and what will be the consequence? If we are able to effect with England a preferential arrangement that will enable our products to be placed in her markets at an advantage over those of all other countries, the consequence to this country will be that every acre of land that is capable of producing wheat will be worth at least $20 an acre more. If the farmer only gets five cents a bushel more for his wheat, that will mean $1 on twenty bushels which would be the interest on $20, and the result will be that every acre of land in this country that produces wheat will be advanced in value by $20. But England will not give us this advantage, we cannot expect England to admit our products into her markets on more favourable terms than those of other countries, unless we have something to give in exchange, and we are not in a position to-day to give anything in exchange. In order that we may have something to give, let us raise our tariff and put ourselves in such a position that we can say to England: we will take down this wall, we will admit your products on extremely favourable terms if you will give us this advantage. Why, Sir, it would be the greatest boon that ever befel this country, and it seems to me this government ought to take some steps in that direction. Now is the time for this government to act, when this agitation is going on in England, when people there are making up their minds. Now is the time when we should advance every argument possible to strengthen the hands of our friends in the old country who are willing to give us preferential treatment, treatment that will make this country advance in prosperity far more rapidly than it is doing now, beyond even the brightest dreams of our most enthusiastic statesmen. If we could get this preferential treatment people would come to this country from other lands in far greater numbers than they do now. They are to-day coming into the United States at the rate of from 500,000 to 800,000 a year. We want to draw the tide of immigration to our own country.

Mr. HEYD. Not all of them.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Not some of them, I agree, because 60 per cent of those people we do not want. But there is a large stream of desirable immigrants coming to America that would form a very desirable addition to our population. The way to induce a greater stream of immigration is to make it more profitable for the farmer to grow agricultural products in this country, and it will be more profitable for him if we can get this advantage in the British market. But we must have something to offer in return—not a mere sop in the way of bounties, such as the government are throwing out to the binder twine industry, which is indeed a very picayune advantage. It is only enabling these manufacturers to hold their heads above water. It does not enable that industry to thrive as it ought. With even the small duty that existed before, instead of our binder twine factories existing by sufferance of the American trust, they would to-day be manufacturing all the twine used in this country. Why should we not make twine in this country sufficient to supply our own wants? Why do we not make it? Simply because the binder twine industry is chiefly in the hands of an American trust. It has been alleged here to-day that they made 100 per cent profit. That is true as concerns the Brantford factory, but how did they do it ? They did it by accumulating the raw material when it was cheap, and selling it when it was dear. That was one reason, but the chief reason was that they took advantage of the enormous rise in price that was caused by the American trust getting control of our markets. They put the price up, and the Brantford company were not foolish enough to throw away the opportunity, and they sold their twine at the higher price.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that company has never paid less than 10 per cent.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). If they are paying 10 per cent to-day, I do not know what they are coming to the government for.

Mr. WADE. Are you opposed to it ?

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I believe they should have a higher protection, that would be more valuable to them, and to every other twine industry that saw fit to start business in this country. Gentlemen who argue against the protective tariff lose sight of the fact that it secures a home market to the manufacturers. One of the greatest advantages any industry can have is a market, that is the main thing. Let any company get possession of a market, and it requires a desperate fight on the part of any other company to get that market away from them. Let them treat their customers fairly, and no new company will be able to undersell them. In 1896 the Canadian manufacturers had possession of a considerable portion of our market, but the American manufacturers have got possession of it, and they will retain possession until our manufacturers are placed in a superior position which will enable them to undersell their American competitors. I am glad indeed that the government has seen fit to offer this little assistance, small as it is. I am glad to know that the light has broken in upon them to this small extent, and I hope they will go further and give these industries a protective tariff.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I am pleased to know that the government has, even at this late hour, taken some means to help the binder twine factories of Canada out of the hole they have got into for the want of some protection. We are told by the Finance Minister that nearly a year ago the Americans imposed a duty on the raw material. I think it was then the duty of this government, in view of that fact, at the earliest date, at least on the 13th of March, to introduce this bounty resolution, and to give the binder twine factories a chance to live. But the government have waited until the 24th of July when the market is crowded with American twine. You cannot drive through any town in this country without seeing the shops filled with American binder twine, and that, too, at a time when the harvest is almost ready to cut. Not until now has this government given the binder twine people any idea that they were going to be assisted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has forgotten the statement made in the Budget Speech that this bounty would be paid.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman did not indicate what the nature of the assistance would be.

Mr. HEYD. The binder twine men understood it.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I am glad the government has now come to the relief of the binder twine men, and is going to give them something for what they manufactured last year, because they had no assurance at all that they would even get this bounty. We have heard many things promised in the speech from the Throne that were never performed.

Mr. CLANCY. This is the language used by the Finance Minister :

> The government will introduce, before the close of the session, some legislation whereby the binder twine manufacturers in Canada will be compensated for the disadvantages under which they labour.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman, even as he reads that language, vindicates my statement. But if he will read the preceding remarks, he will see that I described the condition of affairs in the Philippine Islands, and stated that the compensation was to be made equal to the disadvantage.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman did not say why or how.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The binder twine people were not concerned in the how or the why. I am dealing with the remark of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. Johnston) who said the binder twine people had no intimation. He is mistaken.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the Finance Minister tell us whether, in his opinion, this bounty will increase the cost of twine to the farmers ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend has worked that old gag often enough. I do not pretend that the bounty increases the price of anything, and nobody else pretends it would. While a bounty would, of course, not increase the price to the consumer, the imposition of a customs duty might, and in most cases would, increase the price.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman will permit me to say that I did not expect a gentleman occupying the position of Finance Minister would stoop to that low manner of addressing this committee, and using language of that kind. I do not wonder for one moment that the dignity of this House is going down under such leadership. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to answer my question that he is so clever about ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did answer the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. BLAIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, he did not answer my question. What I want to ask the hon. gentleman is this : Will the hon. minister tell this committee, whether, when this bounty is placed on binder twine, it will increase the cost of binder twine to the farmer ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I believe that in fact it will reduce the cost of binder twine to the farmer, but the question as to what is the effect of a bounty and the question as to what is the effect of a duty are vastly different things.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not ask that question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know the hon. gentleman did not ask it, but I took pains that he was not permitted to put a catch question without getting a fair answer.

Mr. BLAIN. I have no disposition to put a catch question. That is not my aim. I thought the hon. Minister of Finance, as he had introduced this motion, was the proper person to ask that question. I thought the committee had the right to the information that the hon. gentleman has tendered, and I am glad to see the hon. gentleman stand up and say that protection does not increase the price to the consumer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has proved that he did intend to ask a catch question.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Mr. Chairman, I am pleased, even at this late hour, to hear the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) state that it is not the intention to raise the price of binder twine to the farmers. The government have found out that the binder twine manufacturers cannot live without this bounty and they are going to give them a present of it. It will be stated throughout this country that this is designed to decrease the price of binder twine to the consumer, but the hon. Minister of Finance has proved to me that while this may be a benefit to the manufacturers, nobody else is going to get any benefit from it, because the government are not prepared to grant sufficient protection on binder twine to enable the manufacturers of binder twine to manufacture that article in Canada. While I am going to support this bounty, I do not believe that it is a proper way to put taxation upon the people. First you levy taxation upon the Canadian people to pay that bounty and then you leave an open door to the Americans to come in and slaughter their goods on the Canadian market. The argument has been presented that if we impose a duty upon American binder twine the Americans may refuse to give us any manilla. Would the Americans give us any manilla now if they required it all themselves ? Everybody knows they would not. They have simply put that export duty on to help the Americans knowing that this government are pledged to meet their tariff on certain things.

Mr. TALBOT. Is it not a fact that the export duty on manilla affects the American people just as much as it does the Canadians ?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). How does the export duty affect the American manufacturer ?

Mr. TALBOT. It affects the manilla going into the United States as well as to manilla coming into Canada.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is no bounty in the United States.

Mr. TALBOT. There is a rebate.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). As I understand the hon. Finance Minister they give a rebate on all that is manufactured in their own country.

Mr. TALBOT. On all that is exported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Both hon. gentlemen are right. The duty is first imposed in the Philippine Islands and they get a rebate on all that is manufactured in the United States.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). So that the American trade are assured of their raw material and this government has not backbone enough to stand up and put a tariff on binder twine sufficient to protect the Canadian manufacturers, but they give the Americans access to our markets to enable them to slaughter their goods and to crush the Canadian manufacturers. To illustrate my point let us suppose that I have ten head of cattle in a field and that my neighbour has twenty-five. Will I throw down the fence and allow my neighbour to pasture his twenty-five head of cattle in my field because I have only ten heads ? That is on the same principle exactly. We are levying a tax on the Canadian people to pay to the manufacturers of binder twine and then we are allowing the Americans to come in on the same ground and get the benefit of what they are doing. Why not impose a tax on the American producer for the benefit of the Canadian manufacturer ? I think I have used as much binder twine around sheaves as any hon. member of this House and I can tell the committee that when the tariff was taken off binder twine we paid more for it. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has pointed out that the Americans have control now of our factories, so that the Americans can actually get this very bounty that we are giving to-day if they buy up the Canadian product. To-day the market is full of American manilla on which this bounty is given. The binder twine industry, if it so desired, might go on and manufacture binder twine in advance of the requirements of the trade and collect this bounty and they could sell out to the Americans and the Americans would get the advantage of the bounty.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Chairman, as I represent an agricultural county, perhaps it would not be amiss to say a few words on this subject. I am sure the farmers of my county will beg to be delivered from such friends as the hon. gentleman from Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte). He tells us that their interests will be best conserved by a protective tariff. I think he would have to hunt a long time in my constituency before he could find one farmer who would take any stock in that. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) made two rather surprising statements, as coming from an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House. One was that the government had cut down the tariff on a great number of articles. We have heard from these hon. gentlemen that the government had not affected the old national policy in the slightest. The statement of the hon. gentleman seems to me somewhat surprising. He made also another startling suggestion in the interest of the farmers, and that was that the Canadian manufacturers should be given control of the Canadian market. Let me illustrate what that means. I will take one class of manufacturers and I will show how they deal with the country. I have under my hand some papers. I will take hardware for instance: cut nails, wire nails, tarred paper, pressed spikes, tacks, lanterns, rope, lead-pipe, shot, bolts and nuts, tire bolts, screws, carriage bolts, sleigh shoe bolts, machine bolts, blank bolts, bolt ends, varnishes, shovels, coach screws, wire of all sorts, nuts, axes, woodenware, haying tools, handles of all sorts, tinware, galvanized ware, wire doors, wire screens, coal hods, stove-pipes, elbows, locks and knobs, scales, papers, white lead, burst, putty. There is an association of these gentlemen, and I mean to say to this House that no wholesale dealer in Canada can buy a dollar's worth of these articles from any one of the members of this association until he enters into a binding agreement that he will not purchase from any other parties outside the association, that he will not sell for a less price than that dictated and then they will not really sell him the goods, but they will allow him a return commission for selling them. They dictate the price at which he shall sell them, and compel him to buy from them and after that they require him at stated periods, each year, or each six months, or each month, to make a statutory declaration that he has performed all these conditions. Let me read to the House from one of the letters I have, an extract from a contract that they require the dealer to enter into. This is the statement of the shot men, and I will refer hon. gentlemen to the well known firm in Toronto of Jenkins & Hardy, who are the agents for a number of these concerns.

SHOT.

January 8, 1903.

Dear Sirs,—We beg to advise you that subject to the following conditions, you may be entitled to a premium of 2½ per cent upon the net amount of your purchases of shot (commencing to-day) in each six months ending June 30th, and December 31st, same to be payable within thirty days after the expiration of each six months upon which premium applies.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I am in the hardware business.

Mr. WADE. What manufactury are you connected with ?

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I am a dealer in hardware, and in that statement you have read they stipulated nothing about the price that the shot shall be sold for.

Mr. WADE. I have yet that to read, and if my hon. friend is a retailer I may say that this does not apply to him at all. It refers to the wholesale man who stands between him and the manufacturer, and the wholesale man has to run the risk of his insolvency. That is what I am getting at: Here are the conditions :

Conditions.—That we receive from you after the end of each six months period, ending June 30th, or December 31st, declaration which satisfies us that in the six months upon which you are applying for premium, you have not imported or purchased shot from any manufacturer other than those whose names appear below, and that you have not directly or indirectly offered or sold shot at less than the established prices of the Shot Association of Canada to the retail trade, or upon more favourable terms to your customer than the established terms of the said association to the retail trade.

We reserve the right to revoke and cancel all or any part of this proposition at any time on notice to you by registered letter of our desire and intention to do so, but not thereby to relieve ourselves from any obligations which may have accrued on your above described purchases of shot up to date of said revocation.

Those are the conditions which are imposed and if the hon. gentleman doubts my word he can go to the well-known firm of Jenkins & Hardy and he will find that such is the case. I have the form of declaration which is required from these wholesale firms every six months or a year as the case may be, and if they do not make it they cannot purchase that class of goods from the parties who are in the association, and as far as I know and as far as I am informed and believe it is the case with every one of these manufacturers forms part of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. I will state further that I have been informed and believe that the prices which are fixed by the Canadian manufacturers to-day throughout Canada for all hardware, are prices which are agreed upon by them in conjunction with the American Manufacturers' Association. Not very long ago I chanced to hear a conversation which was taking place between a strong supporter of the Conservative party, a wholesale merchant, and another gentleman, and he made this statement : It is no use for us to talk about it ; we in the wholesale trade are absolutely at the mercy of the manufacturers of Canada and they are in affiliation with the manufacturers of the United States.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). If the Canadian manufacturers are in combine with the American manufacturers and if the combination spreads over this continent, what difference would it make whether the duty was 25 per cent or 50 per cent, if the prices are regulated by the combine ?

Mr. WADE. I will tell my hon. friend that I believe that these manufacturers and these associations have ways and means of accomplishing their purpose that he does not know of and that I do not know of. I am prepared to accept the statement of the hardware merchant made in my hearing, and I know he is a man who knows what he is talking about, and he certainly is not a supporter of the present government.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman drawn the attention of the Minister of Justice to that, and asked him to prosecute under section 520 of the Criminal Code ? I did——

Mr. WADE. If the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) is responsible for bringing that to the notice of the Minister of Justice, and thereby causing the section in the code referred to, then I say he has accomplished a great good to the country, because it should be a crime that these men may combine to absolutely control the wholesale business of this country, and to say to the wholesale merchants : You shall not buy merchandise any longer except from us ; we alone will supply you, and we will compel you to sell them at a certain price, and we will not permit you to sell at a lesser price, and we will dictate to you what the price shall be. The hon. gentleman has accomplished a great good if he suggested that to the minister.

Mr. SPROULE. I brought it to the attention of the Minister of Finance sometime ago with reference to the leather trade which is exactly on the same lines.

Mr. WADE. All the credit to the hon. gentleman if he did that. It was time that some one should do it. And now we find that one of the leading gentlemen who has been asking us to care for and caudle the manufacturers in every possible way, has deemed it necessary in the interest of the public to cause an amendment to the Criminal Code of such a nature as declares their practices to be a crime. That is the position they are in, and yet the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) would say to us that we should deliver the whole of the markets of the Dominion of Canada into the hands of such men. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, it is time for us to consider this matter. In my judgment the Canadian Manufacturers' Association have gone as far as they should, and they are trenching upon dangerous ground when they try to press on a bit further. I have only referred to the case of the hardware manufacturers, but I am informed that other manufacturers have been imposing the same conditions. Why, I went into an old established hardware concern not long ago and they told me that the Manufacturers' Association had actually sent a man to them demanding that they should have inspection of their books, because they had heard that the firm had purchased goods from concerns other than those in the association. I have a long string of names here, I do not wish to give them, but I thought it well to bring this matter to the attention of the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. In view of the long discussion of the subject and the nature of that discussion, I would respectfully suggest to the Minister of Finance that he withdraw the resolution. It appears that this resolution which is intended to give certain relief to the binder twine manufacturing industry is not satisfactory to the friends of that industry who have taken a great deal of trouble to show that it is not sufficiently far-reaching and would not do any appreciable amount of good. That being the case, then speaking on behalf of those who use binder twine I can say that they are not asking for any such resolution, and I think the minister would please everybody by withdrawing the resolution and leaving the binder twine manufacturers just where they are now. I think, however, the discussion has done good in this way : that our friends opposite have taken a very definite stand upon the subject not only of the duties on binder twine, but on duties generally, and when the next election rolls around we in the North-west Territories will not be in the position of being attacked because the government is too protective. We are at least saved from that hereafter because of the attitude taken by the opposition now and on previous occasions calling the government to account because they are not sufficiently protective. I am no sympathizer with the idea which has been put forward repeatedly by the opposition, that the remedy for all possible industrial and commercial evils is the raising of the tariff. It does not make any difference what the industry is ; it does not make any difference what the condition is, the remedy proposed in all cases by hon. members opposite is to raise the tariff. They speak for the people who are interested in raising the tariff and it is not at all wonderful that they should advocate that as a cure-all. I speak for the people who are interested in keeping the tariff low, and for my part let me say, that this idea that every industry can be protected is a fallacy. If it is possible to protect every industry and if every industry is protected, it all comes around that no industry is protected and we are all on the same level. If there is to be protection some body must have the advantage and some body must be at a disadvantage or there is no protection. Protection means unfairness ; it means a special advantage to some, and unless there is that special advantage there is no protection. In regard to this binder twine industry it has not received protection at the hands of this government. I take for granted that the government in framing the tariff came to the conclusion that somebody had to be sacrificed, that somebody had to get along with lower duties than other people had to. They figured no doubt that the great necessities of the country should come in under a low tariff or come in free, while the luxuries should pay the greater part of the revenue. On that principle, and considering that binder twine is a vital necessity to the greatest producing industry of the whole country; is an ever-recurring necessity and had been up to that time under the operation of a notorious combine ; the government placed binder twine on the free list. Taking into consideration the fact that the material entering into the manufacture of binder twine was entirely imported ; taking into consideration the fact that there was a minimum amount of labour and capital entering into the manufacture of binder twine and a maximum amount of imported material, it seemed reasonable that that industry which had been the subject of the profitable operations of the combines for so many years, should be brought down to the level of no duty. There is no great capital invested in the manufacture of binder twine ; there is no large amount of labour engaged in its manufacture, at any rate, in proportion to the raw material used. The reduction in price of binder twine by reason of the abolition of the duty was a material advantage to the farmers of the country, and I am surprised that the opposition and some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House should take a stand in favour of the reimposition of a duty which, from the standpoint of the farmers at any rate, is an unjustifiable tax on his industry, a tax which is not supported by any of the reasons which can be advanced on behalf of some other industries. As my hon. friend from Wentworth said, the farmer is no pauper ; he is prepared to pay his share of the taxation of the country ; and give our hon. friends of the opposition any fair chance, and they will see to it that he pays, not only his fair share, but a great deal more. There are many articles of consumption required by the farmers on which the duty is higher than a revenue basis. Probably the duty should be kept moderately high in the interest of industries in which there is a large investment of capital and a large employment of labour, in which native material and native labour enter largely or in which native capital, native labour and native material are the whole consideration. These industries certainly are entitled to all the benefit which a revenue tariff can give them. The farmers who are willing to submit to duties of this character, under these circumstances, are entitled to compensation of some sort ; and it was thought well by the government, in framing their tariff, to give them in the west compensation in free binder twine, free barbed wire, free cream separators, and, in this eastern country, in free corn. The farmers have been given these advantages, which have been valuable, and I am glad, from a political standpoint, to see that our friends on the other side of the House have taken so long a time to-day, and have been so determined in their efforts, to establish themselves in the position of demanding that these advantages should be taken from the farmers.

As to the charge that the reduction of the duty has increased the price of binder twine, I do not suppose that anybody holds that seriously. Although it was proclaimed on every platform occupied by Conservative orators throughout the North-west at the general elections, we have had it on authority to-day that the reason of the increased price of binder twine was the war in the Philippines, which enabled the binder twine factories to pay a dividend in one year of 100 per cent, in another year of 40 per cent, and I am told in two other years 20 per cent ; and the lowest they have paid since 1896 has been 10 per cent. I would like to know what these binder twine companies want. They have made more profits, from one reason or another, in spite of, if not because of, the removal of the duty than possibly any other manufacturing industry in this country. Surely this is an industry which, in the first place, it is an advantage to the farmer should not be protected ; and, in the next place, it surely is an industry which could and should live without protection.

There are certain disadvantages under which the binder twine companies in Canada labour, as compared with their competitors in the United States, in connection with this export duty on manilla. For one, I am prepared to say that if the bounty proposed to be given to these industries is not satisfactory to them, if it is not enough to relieve them from the control of the United States combine, of which complaint has been made here to-day ; if it is not enough to put them on their feet and enable them to pay 100 per cent dividend every year, then I think the government would be justified in withdrawing the resolution and leaving them exactly where they stood before. But if the question is raised as to the principle or the theoretical right of imposing this duty, I think that question is very easily answered. There are certain conditions existing beyond the authority of this country which produce a certain set of conditions in this country ; and it is no contravention of free trade, or of any other reasonable doctrine of government, that action may fairly and properly be taken in this country by any means possible to meet those conditions.

Mr. CLANCY. Another apology.

Mr. OLIVER. No apology whatever ; a complete justification. It is the business of this government, or of any government, to see that the various industries of the country are not placed at an undue disadvantage because of the action of other countries. In this case they have seen fit to take special means to do it. But, for my part, I say that if they did not see fit to do so, and if, because of that, the binder twine industry went to pieces altogether, it would still be better for this country at large that we should be able to import our binder twine free of duty than that this country should be taxed, on one hand to pay the rebate, or, on the other hand, to provide a duty that would enable the price of binder twine to be raised to the consumer in this country for the profit either of the United States combine or the Canadian combine.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman the courage to move a resolution carrying out the views he has just expressed ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is hardly necessary for the hon. gentleman to ask that.

Mr. HEYD. Where does the hon. gentleman get his authority for speaking of a Canadian combine ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am given to understand that the great reason for the demand for the reduction of the duty in 1894 was that it was understood that a Canadian combine existed. My own experience does not go back to that time ; but that I am given to understand, and I believe it is true.

Mr. HEYD. Does the hon. member believe there is one yet ?

Mr. OLIVER. From what the hon. member for St. Mary's said to-day, that the American combine came into this country and dictated terms to our manufacturers, under which terms our manufacturers restricted their output, and I believe paid their shareholders dividends ranging from 10 per cent to 100 per cent, we are entitled to say that the binder twine industry is a combine which is a part of the American combine ; and I do not see how that condition would be improved to the consumer by the imposition of a duty, which would simply enable the members of the Canadian combine to take that much more out of the Canadian consumer.

We have heard a great deal with reference to the manufacturers and the industrial classes of this country. Surely the real industrial class, which produces the great wealth of this country, is entitled to some consideration at the hands of this House. The hon. member for St. Mary's drew attention to the exodus of Canadians to the United States and demanded that there should be an imposition of duties to prevent that exodus. Another hon. member drew attention to the necessity of imposing duties to prevent the recurrence of hard times in Canada. When did Canadians go to the United States most rapidly, and when were times hardest in Canada ? When the duties were highest, and under that government whose policy was called national, which was to put the duties just as high as the manufacturers asked.

Mr. TAYLOR. The statistics do not prove that. They prove the contrary.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I am sorry for the statistics, that is all. Does the hon. member deny that the exodus of Canadians to the United States from 1878 to 1896 was greater than ever it was before or since ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. He denies that. Then the United States statistics do not bear him out. Does he deny that times were harder in Canada during the regime of the Conservative ministry than they were before or since ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Everybody denies it.

Mr. OLIVER. Then my hon. friends are very good deniers.

Mr. TAYLOR. From 1874 to 1878 we had the worst times we ever had.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member (Mr. Oliver) would not get credit for sanity to talk in the country in that way.

Mr. OLIVER. I have heard a great deal about those hard times from 1874 to 1878. It is not within my memory that they were anything like what hon. gentlemen opposite asserted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it not within the knowledge of the hon. member that during the Mackenzie regime the government appointed a commission to inquire into the causes of the prevalent depression at that time ?

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly they did. But what I wanted to ask these hon. members was this : Do they admit that times were hard in 1896, or were times prosperous then? Silence gives consent. Times were hard in 1896. The so-called national policy was in force and the Conservative government was in office. It was within their power, if they had the will, to place duties on any article at any rate they pleased. If they did not exercise that power and improve the times, it could only be because they did not believe what they say now, or else that what they say now is not true. There is no getting away from that proposition.

Mr. CLANCY. The only way to get away is that these are fairy tales.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no fairy tale about the fact that trade in Canada has more than doubled since the lower tariff came in force; there is no fairy tale about the fact that the population of Canada has greatly increased since that time; there is no fairy tale about the fact that while Canada was manufacturing millionaires from 1878 to 1896 and the bulk of the people were poor, to-day the bulk of the people are growing wealthier, and for the last seven years we have not heard so much about millionaires being turned out.

Mr. BENNETT. They have gone broke on stocks lately.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no use in hon. members telling this House or the country that a mere increase of duties is going to increase prosperity. Our memories are short, but they are not so short as that. If an increase of duties generally will produce general prosperity, I am for increase of duties. But the experience of eighteen years proves that high duties cannot produce prosperity. It is only a waste of words to tell us that a repetition of these duties will make the country generally prosperous.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? How is it that the city of Toronto, which certainly has more manufacturing concerns than all the rest of the province of Ontario, has increased within the last ten years upwards of 100,000 in population, while the whole province has increased only 50,000, and nearly two-thirds of the counties of Ontario have decreased in population in the last ten years?

Mr. OLIVER. I really do not know. If the people are not there, they must be some place else.

An hon. MEMBER. They are going to the United States.

Mr. BUREAU. They have gone to Manitoba and the North-west.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the movement of population, I want to say to hon. members in all earnestness that during the years of the so-called national policy, during the years of unreasonably high duties, which laid burdens upon the farmers for which they received no compensation, there was a movement of our population from eastern Canada to the North-western states to such an extent that to-day the state of North Dakota is practically Canadian, the state of Minnesota the Red River valley is largely Canadian, the state of South Dakota is largely Canadian; and the states of Washington and Oregon have large numbers of Canadians among their population. You say: These people went from a country of low protection to a country of high protection. That is true. But had it not been for the protection that prevailed in Canada, including the North-west, which placed our North-west at a disadvantage, all things considered, as compared with these North-western states, our people would have gone to the North-west and Canada would not have lost that population.

Mr. LEFURGEY. They went from a high protection country to a country of higher protection. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) explain that consistently with his theory?

Mr. OLIVER. It was because of the greater proximity of the western states and easier means of reaching them, coupled with maladministration in the Canadian North-west which made the North-western states seem desirable by comparison.

Mr. LEFURGY. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I am doing the best I can for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLANCY. Speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite such as the hon. gentleman is now making drive them over to the United States.

Mr. OLIVER. No danger of that. Let me tell the hon. members that the truth underlying this demand for increased duty on binder twine is practically this—that the farmers are prosperous and can stand it. That is really the argument underlying this demand. But the farmers could not stand it from 1878 to 1896, and they cannot stand to have a similar condition of affairs introduced again. The question is not whether they are willing to stand it or not. The fact is they cannot stand it. When you put a great industry—the industry upon which the whole prosperity of the country depends—at a disadvantage, you necessarily injure the minor industries, including that of manufacturing.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not mean to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I would like to ask a question in all earnestness. Does he say that in the thriving west peopled with probably the most enterprising farmers in Canada, ruin would follow the imposition of a duty of 12½ per cent on binder twine?

Mr. OLIVER. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) understand me to say so?

Mr. CLANCY. Quite so.

Mr. OLIVER. I fear the hon. gentleman's hearing cannot be good. I certainly did not say so.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the hon. gentleman's argument then ?

Mr. OLIVER. My argument is that if hon. gentlemen opposite were allowed to bring in their policy of laying the burden upon the farmers for every line of industry and consumption, they could not stand it. They could not stand it before, and they cannot stand it now.

Mr. CLANCY. The reason I asked the question is this—the only relief the hon. gentleman can point to as having been afforded the farmers of the North-west with respect to duties is the abolition of this twelve and one-half per cent on binder twine. If the prosperity of the North-west is due to a change of tariff, and the only change affecting the North-west is this twelve and one-half per cent on binder twine, then, according to the hon. gentleman this change has brought about that result.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. members opposite are the authority on the subject of tariff changes. I am not presuming——

Mr. CLANCY. Let the hon. gentleman answer that.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) say that the abolition of the duty, twelve and one-half per cent on binder twine is the only change in the tariff ?

Mr. CLANCY. The only substantial change affecting the North-west.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, and, as we do not agree upon our facts, we can hardly reach an agreement in our conclusions. If there has been no substantial change in the tariff except this twelve and one-half per cent on binder twine, what are the hon. gentlemen talking about ? If we have the same tariff as they had, why should they complain ? Will they come forward as one hon. member did on their side and say—while another repudiated his statement—that we must have tariff for tariff with the United States ? Will they say that we must have not a protective tariff, but a prohibitive tariff ?

Mr. CLANCY. What is your position ?

Mr. OLIVER. I believe in a low tariff. If hon. members insist that there has been no substantial reduction in the tariff, they can mean nothing by their proposals of change except to have prohibition instead of protection. I shall be glad if they take that stand and stick to it. We would like to go before the country with them on that question.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to make representation to the minister with respect to the material entering into the manufacture of binder twine—if we may return to the question of binder twine for a moment. As I understand it, the bounty is to be paid on binder twine a large factor in the manufacture of which is manilla. I am informed by a constituent of mine, who has invested his money in this industry, that he is able to produce a fibre from another material that will be a substitute for manilla. I would ask that, if this can be made a success, the bounty be applied to binder twine made of this new fibre. The hon. gentlemen have appointed Mr. Joseph Haycock as inspector of binder twine. I am sure that Mr. Haycock, who has a great knowledge of the trade and of the requirements of the farmers, would be able to say whether the article produced by this fibre was as good as that into the composition of which the manilla has entered. May I ask the minister's consideration of that point, and that the bounty may be made applicable to the product I refer to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can promise consideration of that for the future, but we could not bring it into operation immediately.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask the minister, in view of the statement made by several hon. gentlemen opposite that they believed this bounty would reduce the price of twine to the farmers, why it is that he has made this measure retroactive, and gives a bounty on binder twine produced since the first of September last ? He must know that the manufacture for the present year is now over, and every pound of twine that is being manufactured in Canada has been sold to the retail men, who have probably sold the greater portion of it to the farmer. How is the farmer going to get any benefit, unless he amends his resolution so that the manufacturer who is to get the bounty reduces the price of that he has already sold to the retailer, and the retailer remits the amount of the bounty to the farmer ?

Mr. HEYD. The farmer gets the benefit in the reduced price that the American is able to sell his twine for, and our people have to come down to that. It is to enable our people to come down to the American price that this bounty is given.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is in prospective, but the last year's output is sold on the market and there is not a merchant in Canada today who has a stock in store. Half the crop in the western country has been harvested with the binder twine, and how are the farmers going to get this rebate ? It is simply a bonus taken out of the labouring men and given to the binder twine manufacturers ?

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 233) respecting the manufacture of binder twine in Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he proposes to deal with the twine that has been sold and passed out of the hands of the manufacturers ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In every matter of this kind there are some possible difficulties. We shall have to deal with it by the general power of making regulations applied to all other bounties. I have no doubt the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has charge of that branch of business, will be able to devise means. That is the only answer I can give my hon. friend.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will admit that in asking the assent of the House to the Bill he ought to be able to give his reasons now. This is a very difficult question to deal with. The whole output of twine since September, 1902, nearly a year ago, has passed entirely out of the hands of the manufacturers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is to be paid to the manufacturers of binder twine. I think I am correct in stating that although sales of binder twine have been made of late, probably there had been few if any sales made prior to the date of the announcement made in this House. There is no doubt that the transactions that have taken place during the current season have been based upon the expectation that this bounty will be paid. The manufacturers understood they would receive it, and whatever effect that has upon prices has gone into operation.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman say that he has given the manufacturers an intimation ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I did not say that. I gave the manufacturers no intimation except that which was conveyed to the public on the floor of this House.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). The contracts for twine were made chiefly long before the budget was brought down. I think the most difficult proposition is to find out how much was manufactured, because it has passed out of the hands of the manufacturers. How are you going to arrive at the amount of money you require to give as a rebate ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think it is important whether it has passed out of their hands or not, for the purposes of this Act. They are entitled to a bounty by way of compensation for the duty which they have paid, and every pound of twine manufactured for the present season, as we are advised, that which has been manufactured from manilla, has paid the export duty, and that is the basis upon which we propose to make the compensation. As to ascertaining the exact amount, that is a matter which will probably have to be based upon the returns made by the manufacturers, returns that they will make in good faith and upon affidavits. The importation to deal with the quantity of manilla which has been imported for all purposes, and some factories use manilla not merely for binder twine but also for cordage. It may be difficult to distinguish. I confess I do not see anything we can do but to accept the affidavit of a reputable manufacturer. We have to do that in customs duties every day, and I suppose we shall have to do it in this case.

Mr. TAYLOR. The manufacturer fixed his price last March, and most of his orders were taken from the retail merchants for the quantity they required in March. The sale was based on the cost of the product, the export duty that he had to pay, the labour and everything else. He sold it then, not expecting any rebate from the government. He has got his money for it, and now the government are making him a present. I do not see how the farmer is going to get any benefit from it.

Mr. SPROULE. This may help the manufacturer of twine, but it will not help the man who bought the twine. I am told that a great deal of the twine manufactured in Canada this year has been bought up by American firms and is distributed through their own channels. Take, for instance, the McCormick Manufacturing Company. They bought up large quantities of Canadian twine so as to control the market, and they distributed it to their own customers. Certainly it could not be expected that we would have any very great sympathy with the American who bought that twine, but he sold out to the retail dealers, and the retail dealers, upon the basis of that price, sold to the farmer. The farmers will get no advantage this year from this bounty, whether they do next year or not. There will be some twine manufactured yet, because they keep manufacturing until towards the end of the harvest. Small orders are coming in at the present time. When I was home a week ago some men had not enough twine to keep them running more than two or three weeks, and they could not get any until the manufacturer had provided more twine. Others got twine from the McCormick Company, who have collected it in Canada and distributed it both from Chicago and from points in Canada. This is going to help the manufacturer, but for the present it will not help the farmer. I want to say one word in regard to what the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said that if this is undesirable why not withdraw it. We do not say that it is undesirable; at least I do not. I say it is good as far as it goes, but in my judgment it does not go far enough, because we want a duty imposed as well. As far as it puts our manufacturers in the same position as the American manufacturers as to raw material, I think it is right, but I think the government ought to invoke the criminal code to break up what is in reality some kind of an understanding between the manufacturers of binder twine in this country and the American handlers of that article, and to break up some of the combines in the handling of iron and steel.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The explanation of the proposal is this: The American manufacturer, when he was manufacturing binder twine without the added cost of the export duty, might manufacture it cheaper than if he had to pay the export duty. The export duty was put on, he had to pay it, but he got a rebate. Having obtained that rebate his twine would cost so much less under that condition of things. He then would fix his price taking all these matters into consideration. Having fixed his price and coming into competition with our manufacturers, our manufacturers, of course, would have to regulate their price in Canada with his price; so that, they would be at about $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per pound disadvantage and the farmer would get the benefit of that.

Mr. CLANCY. How?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The American manufacturer could sell his binder twine cheaper because he had got this rebate. The Canadian manufacturer, not having obtained that rebate, would nevertheless have to sell his twine at a price to meet the the price of the American manufacturer, and this bounty is to compensate the Canadian manufacturer for the loss he would be at as against his competitor in the United States. The farmer got the benefit of the lower price that had been fixed in the United States by virtue of the rebate that the American manufacturer had got. That is where the farmer gets his benefit. The farmer was buying his twine under absolutely free conditions and one of these conditions was that the men in the United States who sold it to him had $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per pound rebate, so that they would be able without any sacrifice to give the advantage to the farmer because the Canadian price had to be fixed in competition with the price of the American manufacturer, and it is to compensate the Canadian manufacturer that the resolution has been introduced.

Mr. SPROULE. Although the American manufacturer gets his manilla free, and although he is manufacturing under these conditions he is fixing the price of binder twine in our country to-day. How is the Canadian farmer going to get any reduction in price on account of this bounty, when the price is fixed by the American manufacturers?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the American manufacturer did not get a rebate——

Mr. SPROULE. We are giving it to the Canadian manufacturer.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman asked me a question and I am answering it. If the American manufacturer did not get a rebate of the export duty his binder twine would cost him $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per pound more.

Mr. SPROULE. Who are you giving this rebate to?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. To the manufacturer of binder twine in the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. You are giving it to the manufacturer in the United States?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are not giving it; the American government are giving it to the man who manufactures binder twine in the United States. He has paid the duty and he gets a rebate. If he did not get that rebate his binder twine would cost him $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per pound more, but as he gets that rebate he can sell his binder twine at $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per pound less. The Canadian farmer in importing this binder twine is able to import it from the United States at $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per pound cheaper that he otherwise would be able to do. The Canadian manufacturer who has to sell in competition with the American manufacturer must sell, having regard to the import price, and must pay $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per pound in addition to his cost and we are giving him back that $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per pound by way of a bounty.

Mr. CLANCY. I had expected a better course of reasoning from the hon. Minister of Customs than that. I am not going into an intricate debate of the question, but, I am going to ask the hon. gentleman if the American gets a rebate on 15,000,000 pounds of twine that comes into Canada, how is the Canadian consumer interested in any sense in this bounty that we are giving? He will get his twine at the reduced price that the American sells it at, by reason of his getting the rebate. I am prepared, even to take a wrong course to help the manufacturers out of the deal that was put upon him by hon. gentlemen opposite, but I deny that the consumer benefits to the extent of one farthing.

Mr. HEYD. Not by this.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is not intended for him, this is for the manufacturer.

Mr. CLANCY. I admit the manufacturer will benefit by it because he is obliged to pay the fine in consequence of the action of hon. gentlemen opposite that the Americans have imposed upon him. The hon. gentlemen give the Americans free entry into our market. But the Americans were not satisfied with that. They fine any man in Canada who wanted to manufacture binder twine in his own country, ⅝ of one cent on each pound that he brings in, and that is the result of the action of hon. gentlemen opposite. They are now imposing a tax upon every man, woman and child in Canada to the extent of the bounty on binder twine to help our manufacturers out, but the consumer in no sense gets one farthing in benefit. Yet that was the argument that the hon. gentleman made just a moment ago.

An hon. MEMBER. No, no.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister of Customs says that the farmer will get his binder twine that much cheaper. The farmer gets it that much cheaper because he is not depending upon the Canadian manufacturer for a pound of his twine. He will get every pound of it under conditions that hon. gentlemen opposite opened up to him by means of giving the Americans complete control of our own market and if the American manufacturer gets a rebate in his own country because he sends his twine to this country, then, our farmers are in no sense concerned in this bounty. They are only concerned inasmuch as they must put their hands in their pockets and pay for it. As a usual thing, a duty has to be paid by the consumer. There are cases where the consumer pays the duty, and there are cases where he does not. There are cases where the party pays it, and where he partly pays it, and where the exporter from a foreign country partly pays it but in this case it is unerring. It comes out of the pockets of the people, whether they use binder twine or not. The hon. gentleman will ask me what my position is. I take the position that on general principles bounties are wrong. There are some cases where they would be justified. They are only justified where the conditions are such that reasonably, protective and defensive duties are inadequate to give our own people a fair field in their own country, but whenever you withdraw duties, or a defensive tariff, from a certain industry in Canada and give a substitution by compelling our own people, consumers or not, to pay tribute in that way, I think you adopt the most mistaken policy that could be pursued in any country. The hon. gentleman knows that this is a compensation for his own blunder. He knows perfectly well that if the government had retained or advanced the duty he would not be coming down now and asking the people to put their hands in their pockets to pay bounties. I am not going to object. He has made the most of it, and I am willing as a tax-payer in a small way to contribute my share to help the manufacturers out until such times as we have a government that will relieve them of this burden that has been placed upon them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The farmer, of course, is being helped in this matter, simply in the way that has been described. According to the plan of hon. gentleman opposite, if he had had a tariff of ⅝ of a cent per pound on binder twine, the farmer would have paid it. We are not doing it in that way, but, out of the public treasury to which every one contributes, we are compensating the Canadian manufacturer for the disadvantages he has been at as regards the ⅝ per cent per pound rebate. It is very easy to see that if the American manufacturer got his raw material at four cents a pound, and based the price of his product upon that, and if the Canadian manufacturer had to pay six cents a pound and sold his binder twine, whether it was at a dead loss or not, would have to sell it in competition with the price fixed on the basis of the four cent per pound raw material in the United States. If the United States manufacturer has got his raw material at ⅝ of a cent a pound less by virtue of this rebate he is able to make his price ⅝ of a cent per pound lower which he does. He enters the Canadian field, the Canadian manufacturer must fix his price, having regard to the price of the American manufacturer, and in doing that he is at ⅝ of a cent per pound disadvantage and this proposal is not that the farmer shall pay that ⅝ of a cent per pound in the shape of a duty upon his binder twine, but it is, that, out of the public treasury which is contributed to by all, ⅝ of a cent per pound shall be taken and given to the Canadian manufacturer to put him on an equal footing with the United States manufacturer.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that we are not depending, under the conditions created entirely by himself, upon the Canadian manufacturer for one pound of twine. I repeat that I am astounded beyond measure that the Minister of Customs should present the argument that the farmer gets no benefit from that. The farmer is not obliged to buy one pound from the Canadian manufacturer. Whether they put two cents a pound upon the raw material that comes into Canada, and whether or not we can get it elsewhere, the farmer has not a particle of concern so long as the Americans can come into this country and sell all the twine.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Suppose we took the hon. gentleman's plan of putting three-eighths of a cent on binder twine, who would pay that? That is the point.

Mr. CLANCY. I will give my hon. friend a candid answer. The American manufacturer would not want that three-eighths of a cent put on, because it would place him at a disadvantage. The American is opposed to it for some reason, and the reason is that it would probably cost him that three-eighths of a cent to get in to this market. I will say that there might be a slight advance, but I do not admit it——

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Take one position or the other. Would the farmer pay anything of that or would he not ?

Mr. CLANCY. The foreign producer of binder twine is opposed to our raising the duty, and if we pay the duty he need have no concern. Will the Minister of Customs say that if we put a duty of three-eighths of a cent a pound the Canadian farmer would pay it all ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have asked you a question, and what is your answer ?

Mr. CLANCY. I have told the hon. gentleman that the chances are to a large measure that that three-eighths of a cent would be paid by the foreign producer who wished to get in to our market. Now let me ask if the Minister of Customs will say that the American producer would pay none of that duty, and that the Canadian consumer would pay it all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We all know very well as to the question of who pays the duty ; that circumstances govern. Let me ask the hon. gentleman this : Canada is short 15,000,000 pounds of binder twine, and that has to be got somewhere, and that being the case, let me ask the hon. gentleman if under these conditions the Canadian farmer would not of necessity largely, if not wholly, pay the duty ?

Mr. CLANCY. That is a very fair question. If we are 15,000,000 pounds short by reason of the policy of the government which has closed up our binder twine factories, I am prepared to admit frankly that the farmer would pay it because the government has cut off the source of supply in Canada.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have more manufacturers of binder twine now than we had at the time the hon. gentleman is speaking of.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where is the output ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Coming from the factory.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman well knows that the increase in our production of binder twine has not kept pace with the increasing demands of the country. I admit that under the conditions which the government has created our farmers might have to pay the duty, but if we produce our own binder twine there would be no such condition as the Minister of Customs pictures.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Customs has said that there are more binder twine factories in Canada now than bef re the duty was taken off. Let me tell him that the output of the Canadian factories to-day is less than half what it was a few years ago.

Mr. HEYD. Nonsense.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes it is. Your factory and one or two others are making a little, but where are the factories at Toronto, at Cobourg, at Port Hope and at Montreal and at the Kingston penitentiary ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Busy.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, but they are making rope and not binder twine. When the Minister of Customs announced that binder twine would be on the free list he said that the American manufacturers could come into our country and sell their twine, and that the Canadian manufacturers could go to the United States and sell Canadian twine. But the Minister of Finance admitted to-night that we imported over $1,000,000 worth of twine from the United States and our Canadian manufacturers had not been able to sell a pound over there. When the minister brought down his tariff resolution, why did he not provide that American twine could come into Canada only when our twine could go into the United States ? That might have been a sensible thing to do. A few years ago they called these manufacturers bloated monopolists, but to-night they are giving them a bonus which will go to the manufacturers and which will not go to the consumers. They endeavour to compensate the manufacturer for the loss he has sustained, because the American government give a bonus on what is exported out of the country equal to the duty they pay on the manilla coming from the Philippine Islands. There is the position the Minister of Customs has got the manufacturers of Canada into. When he brought down the tariff he said to the Yankees : you can make twine over there and sell it in Canada and we will have the right to make twine in Canada and sell it to the United States, but when we went to sell our twine there they would not let us in. Every farmer in this country knows that ever since this government came in the price of binder twine has been increasing. At first they blamed it on the war, but last year they had not that excuse, and from the accounts of the Kingston penitentiary, which show what they paid for their raw material last year, we know that the farmers of Canada paid 12 and 13 cents a pound for their binder twine, when it only cost one cent a pound to manufacture it. We know that the Canadian industry is in the hands of the United States combine and that they dictate to our manufacturers the price they shall charge and the quantity they shall turn out, or else the Americans will lower the price and crush every Canadian factory, there being no duty to protect them. We know that every Canadian dealer had to place his order and did place his order with the McCormicks, and other American firms, who sent an agent over here, and they placed their orders in March last for the quantity of twine they would require. Therefore nobody will get the benefit of this bounty except those bloated manufacturers that the Minister of Customs a few years ago used to be blowing about. Now he is giving them a bonus out of the treasuary of this country as he admits. Why should he ask the workingmen of this country to pay a bonus on binder twine that is used only by the farmers. The farmers do not want the poor workingmen to contribute to the price of their binder twine, and it is unfair for this government or any other government to tax the workingmen to lower the price of binder twine for the farmer, and that is what it amounts to.

Mr. HEYD. It is a pity that in discussing a matter of this kind we do not get to the exact facts. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) conveys the impression that our binder twine factories are entirely closed up, and apparently doing nothing. We are not in a position to say exactly how much binder twine is made by the Canadian factories, but one way of getting at it is to ascertain the amount of raw material that is imported into this country out of which this twine is made. In 1898 we imported $572,000 worth; in 1899, $941,000 worth; in 1900, $944,000 worth; in 1901, $676,000 worth; and last year $1,296,000 worth, being the largest importation of the raw material out of which binder twine is made that we ever imported into this country.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). Will the hon. gentleman give us the quantity in pounds?

Mr. HEYD. I cannot tell you that.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). The price has increased nearly double.

Mr. TAYLOR. And this covers all the cordage besides; it is not binder twine alone.

Mr. HEYD. So it does, but we have the right to assume that if in 1898 we imported $572,000 worth of raw material, and last year $1,296,000 worth, there must necessarily have been more binder twine made last year than there was in 1898.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is double the price it was then.

Mr. HEYD. No, it is not.

Mr. TAYLOR. Pretty near it.

Mr. HEYD. There were a few statements made here to-night that ought to be referred to in the interest of the binder twine makers of this country. It has been represented that they are dictated to by the foreign manufacturers. The statement has been made by the hon. member for St. Mary's that they are only permitted to make a certain quantity and if they attempt to make more they are threatened with being wiped out. I have some knowledge of the binder twine business in this country; I know the men who carry it on, and I do not believe that statement is true. I believe that the hon. member for St. Mary's has been so informed by parties who are desirous of having the duties restored; but I do not think the statement is correct, because I know that the binder twine companies to-day are trying to turn out all the binder twine they possibly can make. The great complaint of the manufacturers of binder twine is that the United States manufacturers, protected by a duty of 45 per cent upon all twine of which manilla is a component part, have absolutely the American market to themselves, and at their own convenience fix the prices at which binder twine is to be sold. Our people early in the season are not aware of the quantity that is likely to be imported into Canada, and they are afraid to manufacture largely because they do not know what the requirements of the United States will be. If there is a large harvest such as there was last year, and a large demand for binder twine in the United States, the surplus which the United States manufacturers will have to dispose of will be considerably diminished, with the result that the price will be kept up. But if, unfortunately, with the producing capacity of the American binder twine factories equal to or more than equal to the consumption, there should be a small crop in the United States, and a large output of binder twine, the American producer, who is not prevented from coming into Canada, will be forced to sell his binder twine here at reduction on the American price probably of two cents, which would immediately take away all the profit and part of the principal of the Canadian manufacturer. Therefore, the Canadian manufacturer wants a duty to protect him from that competition. It is undoubtedly the fact that the American manufacturer has his own market to himself. It is unquestionably the fact that he fixes the price for the Canadian consumer by dictating the price at which the twine shall be sold in this country. The American manufacturer supplies first Texas and then the other wheat regions of his own country, gradually coming north; and if at the end of the season he finds that he has more twine than he can sell in the United States, he can under present conditions invade the Canadian market, and by selling his twine at two cents a pound less than he does in the United States, he can undersell our producers, and thus, by making money on the American side and losing a little on our side, he ruins our industry.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. member be kind enough to tell us what amount of American twine was imported into Canada in 1896 and in the present year?

Mr. HEYD. Last year there was imported $1,500,000. The American importations into Canada are growing larger every year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In 1896 there were 4,000,000 pounds, if I recollect rightly, and this year 15,000,000 pounds.

Mr. HEYD. The importations are undoubtedly increasing, and the position is this, that the United States manufacturers, being able to manufacture their binder twine at the very lowest cost, owing to the fact that they have the largest establishments for the production of the twine, are placed at a slight advantage over our people, which is compensated for by the fact that our people can hire their labour at a little less cost, and can distribute their twine through the agency of farmers' associations who are associated with them. That puts the two pretty nearly on a par; and if our people had a protection of 12½ per cent, they could prevent that slaughtering which may take place at any time whenever there is a surplus of twine in the United States. The fear of that surplus constantly presses on our manufacturers of binder twine. The result is that at those seasons of the year when they ought to be employed in producing for the Canadian consumer, they are afraid to produce, not knowing the amount of surplus that there will be in the United States. Therefore, they limit their production, and thus increase the manufacturing cost of the product. Of course, hon. gentlemen are aware that I am in favour of a duty on binder twine. Having two binder twine factories in the city of Brantford, I am naturally a little more interested than people from other localities.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. gentleman in favour of it because he has a couple of factories in his constituency or because he believes it to be right?

Mr. HEYD. Of course, I think that binder twine should not be singled out from the operation of a revenue tariff; but having these factories there, I am a little more conversant with the conditions that exist in reference to binder twine, and I wish to say that all the statements that haave been made here with reference to a combine in Canada are incorrect. No such thing exists. The majority of these binder twine factories are owned by farmers. There are over thirty thousand farmer stockholders.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say there was a combine. I said the price was regulated from the American side.

Mr. HEYD. That is so.

Mr. SPROULE. I applied to two dealers, one of them bought from McCormick, and the other from Deering, and I asked them if they could not get the twine cheaper from our own factories. They said they were informed by these factories that it was utterly impossible, because the American manufacturers struck the prices.

Mr. HEYD. That is true. The American manufacturers did not fix the price until April, and our own people, not knowing what the price would be, were afraid to manufacture largely. The result was that they only started later in the season to manufacture to the utmost of their capacity, because they saw that there would be a demand in the United States for about all that the United States' factories could produce, and that the competition from the United States would not assume that slaughtering aspect which they are always afraid of. That is likely to be the result this year. The latest information is that there is a large crop in the United States; we are also likely to have a very large crop in Canada; so that for another year the Canadian manufacturers of binder twine will be able to declare in some instances a 10 per cent dividend, and in other instances no dividends at all, or very small ones. The statement which has been made here repeatedly about the tremendous dividends which have been declared by the Brantford factory is easily accounted for. These large dividends caused the construction of six or seven binder twine factories in this country. On January 1st, 1898, manilla was selling at from 3 15-16 cents to 4 cents a pound. In 1899 it rose to 6⅛; in 1900 it rose to 11⅝ and 14½ cents; and in 1901, it dropped to 6¾ cents. The result was that in 1898, 1,000 pounds of manilla cost $40, in 1899 $62.25, and in 1900, $145. The Brantford people, having a large stock of manilla on hand, which was bought at $40 a ton, were able to sell a large quantity at $140 a ton, and that accounts for the tremendous dividends we have heard of. The result was that they declared dividends of 90 per cent, 100 per cent, 60 per cent and 250 per cent, as a consequence of the increased price of raw manilla occasioned by the war between Spain and the United States. The normal conditions under which the binder twine factories operated previous to that enabled them to pay 10 per cent dividends, with a slight allowance for deterioration of machinery; and since the war it has required the utmost care in the management of the concern to enable 10 per cent to be paid by the Farmers' Binder Twine Co., of Brantford, which has practically no expense of selling, and with 6,000 or 7,000 farmers interested in buying the product. That is the position of the binder twine factories of this country. They are subjected to the competition of the United States manufacturers, who monopolize their own market by means of a 45 per cent protective duty; and to the extent that this bounty which we are now enacting operates to the benefit of our manufacturers, it will secure them from a certain loss. The farmers of Canada will only lose their proportion which this three-eighths of a cent a pound entails. I have figured out the thing as carefully as I could, and I do not think the bounty will cost the people of Canada this year over $25,000. The discussion of this question this whole afternoon has, I think, cost the country a great deal more money than the bounty will cost the farmers. At any rate, it shows the disposition of the government, that our manufacturers shall not be subjected to unfair competition, and I look forward with confidence to the time when a revision of the tariff shall take place under the auspices of the present Minister of Finance, and when, I believe, ultimate justice will be done to the manufacturers of binder twine in this country.

Mr. TAYLOR. I made a statement awhile ago which some hon. members appeared to doubt. I have here the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1895. I find that in that year we imported from the United States 2,035,785 pounds of binder twine. Last year we imported about 15,000,000, or eight times the quantity imported in 1895. The value of our imports last year was given by the Finance Minister at a figure which shows a valuation of over 10 cents per pound. In 1895 the value of our imports was $123,315, or a fraction over 6 cents per pound. I said the price last year was nearly double that of 1895, and here is the proof of it. In 1895 Canadians were making their own binder twine, and selling it at about 6 cents per pound ; but this year we are getting our binder twine, or at least three-quarters of it, from the United States, and, as I stated, at nearly double the price.

Mr. CLANCY. When was the export duty placed by the United States on raw material for binder twine ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think in March of last year.

Mr. CLANCY. A great deal of the twine manufactured since September of 1902 is made of raw material that was imported before the imposition of this duty. How is the hon. minister going to arrange in his Bill or regulations to provide for that ? Will it apply only to raw material imported since the duty ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. But the resolution does not provide for that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman will find that that is fully covered. It says :

> Such bounty to be equal to the amount paid as export duty in the Philippine Islands on manilla fibre produced in such islands and used in the manufacture of binder twine in Canada.

Certainly, our intention is to do what the hon. gentleman suggests, and our regulations will be made so as to carry it out.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman says that the Bill is the same as the resolutions, and he will see that the resolutions do not cover the point.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is mistaken. But certainly that is the intention, and I think he can rely on the regulations being made accordingly.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why is it that the Canadian manufacturer is under some disability in not being able to sell his product in the United States as the American sells his product to Canada ? I understood that an arrangement was made under which binder twine was to pass across the boundary either way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not aware of any such arrangement.

Mr. TAYLOR. That was the impression that was left.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). In view of the statement of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) that a combination exists and prices are fixed by the American interests, I would like to know if the Dominion government, who manufacture binder twine to a certain extent, were a party to that combination ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to bring that forward when the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) is in his place. He is in charge of the penitentiaries where the twine is manufactured, and he is the combinester if there is one.

Mr. HEYD. When the hon. gentleman used the phrase 'prices are fixed,' what I meant was that they are fixed simply because the Plymouth Company and the Harvester Company sell in the United States and Canada at certain prices, and our people are compelled to sell at the same prices, or they cannot sell at all. There is no combination.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). It would appear that the Canadian government has been a party to some combine or conspiracy to charge the farmers more for their binder twine than they ought to pay. The hon. member for South Brant has stated that the Farmers' Binder Twine Company made enormous profits, somewhere in the neighbourhood of 240 per cent, besides using large amounts of their earnings to add to their plant. So they must have made a profit of over 300 per cent. Yet farmers are not able to buy from the Dominion government for less than they could buy from Canadian or American companies. I find that according to the Auditor General's Report for 1902, volume 1, page M—47, that farmers were charged 10½ cents for mixed manilla, which was sold by the government for five and one-tenth to the jobbers. In answer to a question asked him this session of parliament, the hon. Minister of Justice said that this twine was made for about six cents per pound. If this twine can be made for six cents per pound, why does the government charge the Canadian farmer ten and a half cents per pound? A margin of four and a half cents is more than a reasonable margin, and would go to show that there was a combination to which the Canadian government was a party.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suspect that the government sold binder twine at the trade price. Had the prices gone down they would have had to face the loss, and as it went up, they did not find reason for departing from the trade price.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). It would appear that there is a combination and that the government are a party to it. They do not sell to the farmer at a fair advance on the cost of production, but they sell at the same price as the others.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope so.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). This is an injustice to the farmer. The factory at Kingston was not established for this purpose. When the manufacture of binder twine in Kingston penitentiary was determined on, it was in order that twine might be sold to the farmers at reasonable prices. Yet, if the hon. minister's statement is correct, the object now is to sell at the same prices as are charged by other manufacturers. To charge the farmer 4½ cents profit on binder twine made in the penitentiary, an unreasonable profit, and one that goes to show that the government are a party to the combination.

Mr. CLANCY. I would suggest that the words 'imported since March, 1902' be inserted after the words 'paid as export duty in the Philippine Islands on manilla fibre produced in such islands.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not like to make changes in this way. But I will give consideration to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman and will consult the Minister of Justice about it. If the section is not clear as it stands, I will make it clear either with the form of words the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) suggests or with some other.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

On the Order being called, House again in Committee of Supply.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It it twelve o'clock, and surely the hon. minister——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not expect to sit late. But we would like to make a reasonable degree of progress. The railway estimates are very much in arrears, and as those of last year are the only ones I am trying to deal with, my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) as ex-Minister of Railways will understand the embarrassment that will be involved by delay in getting them through.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not think the hon. gentleman will have much trouble with his railway estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Surely we can sit for half an hour. I have had the deputy minister waiting here all day. Give us half an hour.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He must give consideration to other gentlemen who are tired.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is not complaining. Give us half an hour.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has made good progress with his Bill, it has taken all the stages, with the consent of the House. I hardly think it is fair to ask us to sit any later.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite realize that at this hour of the night, if hon. gentlemen opposite press the matter, we cannot make any progress. At the same time, I wish to point out that the estimates which I desire to obtain are those for the past year which has already expired, for moneys that are due, and in some cases delay would be embarrassing. I hoped for that reason we might sit for half an hour and make some progress. But if, as the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says, he would prefer not to go on to-night, I will not press the matter.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What are we to have on Monday?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. After private Bills, we will take either resolutions or government Bills, and if we go into supply the railway estimates will be taken up.

Mr. SPROULE. No Grand Trunk Railway Bill?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but perhaps my hon. friend will, in the meantime, see some notice of motion which will give him a ray of hope.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 27, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright). I beg to move, seconded by Mr. LaRivière :

That the fifth report of the Select Standing Committee to revise the debates of the House during the present session be referred back to the said committee for further consideration.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAY POLICY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the leader of the government whether he has any further information to-day with regard to the proposed railway measure that we understand is to be brought down ? We had the assurance of the right hon. gentleman on Friday that to-day we would have notice of the proposed resolution, or a statement made as to some details of it at least. I would like to remind him that it is ten days to-day since we were told that the policy would be announced to the House last week, and at that time the right hon. gentleman fixed the early part of this week as the date at which we would be called upon to discuss the measure after it had been before us several days. The expectations of my right hon. friend given to the House on Friday last have not yet been realized. I would like to again ask whether or not we may expect an immediate announcement of this policy ? My right hon. friend blamed the members of the legal profession, who are members also of the government, I suppose, for the delay which had taken place up to Friday last. Surely there has been sufficient time since then to correct the defaults of these gentlemen, and that can hardly be alleged as an excuse at the present time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am glad to inform my hon. friend that I have just been informed myself within the last half hour that the lawyers have finished their work. I hope, therefore, to be able—I won't say to-day —to put a notice on the Order Paper. I have reason to believe that, if not to-day, to-morrow, will be put on the Order Paper, much to the satisfaction of my hon. friend, the notice which he has been so long looking for, and which will give me an opportunity of placing before the House the policy which we intend to present to it.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ST. CHRYSOSTOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. J. P. BROWN (Chateauguay) moved that Bill (158) respecting the St. Chrysostôme Railway Company be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines for further consideration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any explanation of this ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. BROWN. It is simply for the purpose of changing one or two of the names that appear as incorporators.

Motion agreed to.

BROCKVILLE AND SAULT STE MARIE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Brockville and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Mr. PRINGLE. Mr. Chairman, the point was raised on Friday last as to whether this Bill could be proceeded with in the absence of the member in charge of the Bill. We are entitled to a ruling from the Speaker as to whether this Bill can be proceeded with in the absence of Mr. Dyment without the consent of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There was a motion made by the hon. member for Leeds, who is not present now, and if the committee is yet determined to go on with the motion, I shall read it :

Mr. Taylor moves that the Committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day for the purpose of referring a point of order to the Speaker to obtain his decision upon a question referred to the House respecting the chairman's decision on Bill 104.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps some hon. memebrs are present now who were not present the other evening, and are not aware of the point involved in the motion. There are two forms of procedure in matters of this kind. The one is by way of a reference when the committee, not any member of the committee, may procure by vote a reference to the Speaker for the purpose of obtaining his opinion upon a given point. That is the procedure my hon. friend from Leeds is taking by his present motion. There is another form of procedure, which takes the form of an appeal which any individual member may take against the ruling of the chairman. The curious position we are in is this, that the hon. member appealed from the decision of the chairman, and that the appeal was taken by the usual method of the chairman leaving the Chair, the Speaker taking the Chair, and the appeal being decided by the House. Now, if we pass my hon. friend's motion as it is now presented, we shall be asking the Speaker to give his opinion upon a point which an authority higher than the Speaker has already decided, that higher authority being the House itself. When this matter was before us the other evening, those of us who differed from my hon. friend opposite, while maintaining that his motion was in order, held that it would be quite unseemly if we resolved to ask the Speaker to determine a point which in this same proceeding had already been determined by the House itself.

Mr. SPROULE. But you will doubtless remember that when the hon. member for Leeds made his motion, he explained that his desire was, not to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, but to have the instruction of the Speaker as to whether the point he had taken was well founded or not. He so expressed his desire in his resolution; and, except for the fact that the word 'appeal' was used in it, it could not carry the assumption that it was an appeal from the ruling of the Chair. That seems to be laid down very plainly in Bourinot, which says:

> If it be found expedient in either House to refer a point of order to the Speaker, a member will move that the chairman report progress and ask leave to sit again that day. When the Speaker has resumed, the chairman will report that the committee wishes to be instructed as to the point in question. The House will then proceed to take the matter into consideration, and the Speaker having been requested to give his opinion, will decide the matter in dispute; then, unless there is an appeal to the House against the Speaker's decision, the committee will resume its proceedings.

Bourinot explains that it is very inconvenient for the House to be suddenly called to decide whether the decision of the chairman shall be confirmed or not, without hearing the argument upon the point of order; and in order to enable the House to be well informed on what the point of order is, the more appropriate course is to ask instructions from the House through the Speaker as to the point of order, and therefore to move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again that day, for the purpose of reporting to the Speaker the point of order raised in Committee of the Whole, and having his decision upon it. There is no appeal made to the House until after the Speaker rules, and that appeal is made against the ruling of the Speaker. So when the point of order is reported to the Speaker, and before he gives his decision upon it, it is quite in order to argue the question, so that the whole House may hear it, and the Speaker may have the benefit of the argument before he gives his ruling. After that is done, he gives his ruling. But, following the other course is obviously very inconvenient, because there is no argument upon the point of order itself, and many members of the House may be called in for the vote who have not heard the point of order either debated or raised; but the only question put to them is: Shall the decision of the Chair be confirmed? Now, I think it is quite plain that the more convenient and more intelligent way would be to do as is desired, ask the committee to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again that day, so that this question might be reported to the Speaker, and his ruling on the point of order might be obtained after a discussion had taken place upon it before the Speaker and before the House, and so that when an appeal were made from the Speaker, the House would be called upon to sustain the Speaker's ruling or reverse it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would just say that I have looked this matter up since it came before the committee the other night; and on page 748 of Bourinot, I find this:

> In the chapter on public Bills, the rules in committees of the whole and on the third reading are fully explained, and as these apply to private Bills—except where there is a standing order on any particular point—it is not necessary to recapitulate them here.

Turning to public Bills, I find, on page 373, the following.

> One member may take charge of a public Bill in the absence and with the permission of another member.

I infer from this that, as the same rule applies to public and private Bills, one member may take charge of a Bill in the absence and with the permission of another member.

Mr. LENNOX. I concur in what the hon. Minister of Finance says as far as he goes, that is, that it is quite proper to refer the question to the Speaker, or to take an appeal to the House; and if we were to go upon the narrowest possible technical principles, the inference which the hon. Minister of Finance draws might now preclude us from referring this question back to the Speaker. But I submit that that would manifestly be entirely too narrow a view to take of this matter, having regard to the circumstances as they exist in this case. It is clear to any hon. gentleman who was in the committee when we last sat that the sole object of the hon. member for Leeds was simply to have the ruling of the Speaker in regard to the point of order, and having obtained that, he would probably have been quite content to abide by it without further question. It is quite true that in the notice he gave—and I assume that it was not absolutely necessary that he should give a written notice at all—he used the word 'appeal;' but 'appeal' as he used it is not to be construed in any technical sense, but with regard to what he manifestly had in view, namely, that he wanted the opinion of the Speaker, or the instruction of the Speaker to the chairman.

That being the case, it would not be treating this committee fairly if it were held that because the word 'appeal' was used when it was made clear that what the hon. member for Leeds required was the instruction of the Speaker—that we were precluded from having the benefit of the opinion of the Speaker on a somewhat important point. It is not a question affecting the hon. member for Leeds alone, but the rights of this committee; and I submit that if there were no other reason, the fact that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) persistently endeavoured and failed to obtain the eye of the Speaker at the time he was putting the question to the House, ought to be sufficient to show to this committee that it would be the veriest abuse of a technicality if this matter were not now referred to the proper authority to decide. When the hon. Minister of Finance points out that it is manifestly wrong to bring this matter up now as it has already been submitted to the House and action taken upon it, I submit the matter has never been determined by the House, because the House was never properly seized of the question. The Speaker, not knowing the position which the hon. member for East Grey was about to take, and taking the technical language of the notice, was probably for the moment not entirely seized of what the hon. member was aiming at. But now that we know exactly the position in which the matter stands, I would urge the committee to deal with it upon a broad and not upon a technical basis, and we will have the benefit of the opinion of the Speaker upon this question.

Mr. GALLIHER. One thing which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) made quite clear at the last sitting of this committee was that the reason he took this objection in the first place, was because the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Pringle), was absent and in order to enable him to get here and finish the speech he had so ably started at the previous committee meeting. The hon. member for Stormont being now here, that technical objection has entirely disappeared, and we are now prepared to hear him continue his speech. Moreover, I do not think the hon. member for Simcoe is very serious in his contention that the ruling of the Chairman is wrong. I do not think he will contend very seriously that one member having charge of the Bill cannot delegate his authority to another member to take charge of it in his absence. Taking these facts into consideration.

Motion of Mr. Taylor, negatived.

On the preamble.

Mr. PRINGLE. When the committee rose last Friday evening, I was quoting from the statement of the case made to the chairman of the sub-committee by the solicitors for some of the largest creditors. I propose to continue quoting from that statement:

An action is now pending to compel the Philadelphia Company, to carry out the terms of their agreement and asking the court to stop interest running on the Philadelphia Company's bonds so long as they are so in default. The foreclosure suit of the Philadelphia Company is brought, on arrears of interest on the bonds. The principal of the bonds is not yet due. Will not be due until 1918. In addition we know that when the Philadelphia Company offered their block of bonds for sale they declined to give any guarantee of their title to same. They would only sell 'their rights' without guarantee or warranty of any kind.

I was not present at the final meeting of the sub-committee, but at a previous meeting it was conceded by all parties that no matter what Bill was reported, there should be a clause inserted in it making it subject to the final decision of pending litigation.

I think it is unfair that this sub-committee should report the Bill when there is litigation pending. We have the authority of Messrs. Hutchison & Fisher of the town of Brockville, Mr. Hogg of this city, and of a gentleman from Gananoque, a solicitor of good standing, that there is litigation now pending with regard to the foreclosure of this property. Why should we ratify and affirm that purchase when there is that litigation pending? The whole committee were unanimous that a clause should be inserted providing for the existing litigation. And it was to be without prejudice to the results of the litigation. Let me refer to another point, and on this also I challenge contradiction. This Bill was introduced as a Bill respecting the Brockville and Sault Ste. Marie Company. The committee never consented to the change being made to the Brockville and Western. And I am told that on the final day of the sitting of this committee, nothing was said in regard to the name of the company being changed to the Brockville and Western. I think it most important that a clause should be added to this Bill in respect to pending litigation. Referring again to this document presented by the solicitors, they state:

We submit, therefore, that Messrs. Holmes, Schmit et al. who claim under these bonds as to ninety per cent of their purchase money stand in the Philadelphia Company's shoes and are not entitled to say 'We bought the railway at a court sale without notice or knowledge of any equity and paid the price in cash.' They pay only ten per cent in cash plus what the bonds cost, and as a matter of fact are charged with the equities which attached to this block of bonds.

3. The sale at Brockville on 20th January last was not subject to a reserve bid. No report as to the value of the road and undertaking was made by a competent engineer or any other person and nothing was done to protect minority interests in the least degree. It is then said: Why did not the minority interest, construction creditors and others appear in court and contest the action? We say the minority interests were not large and none of them except those we represented ever received any notice of the proceedings. We do know that certain of them were advised, on good authority that before the road could be sold legislation must be obtained and they were waiting for application for this legislation. Once, notice was actually published of an application to parliament to dispose of the road. The minority thought that they would then have an opportunity of being heard. But the company abandoned their application and matters were allowed to drift. None of the small creditors ever had the means or a large enough amount at stake to litigate their rights with the Philadelphia Company, and incur a large amount of costs which would necessarily be involved.

4. At the present time the following litigation, however, is pending: In the foreclosure suit of the Philadelphia Investment Company vs. the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, an appeal from the master's final report is now pending. This appeal is set down for hearing at the next sittings of the Divisional Court.

That appeal has not yet been heard. It is on the list of cases to be heard at the next sitting of the court. Why should this Bill be passed unless we insert a clause 'without prejudice to the pending litigation ?

Another action is also pending brought by Mr. Carl W. Vollman against the Philadelphia Company. The Brockville and Westport and the new syndicate. This action will be ripe for trial at the fall sittings of the High Court at Brockville. This action attacks the sale of the railway to the syndicate, asks for a decree compelling the Philadelphia Company to complete the road according to the terms of the construction contract which was assigned to them, and asks for a declaration of the court cancelling interest on their bonds while the Investment Company is in default under the contract.

It was on this written statement as presented to the chairman of that sub-committee that, I think I am correct in stating, the majority of the committee considered it advisable that the clause should be inserted in the Bill. But still, the Bill has been reported without that clause.

In this action the plaintiff asks to set aside certain proceedings of the board of directors of the railway company because such board was illegally constituted, the directors not having been properly qualified. We submit it will seriously prejudice this litigation if the syndicate's Bill is passed as it now stands. Even with a saving clause as was suggested by Mr. Barwick, the fact remains that parliament has confirmed the sale and even with a saving clause in the charter the effect will be to minimize the litigation and create a prejudice against it.

It is not conceivable to me why the sub-committee would not accept Mr. Barwick's suggestion. He represented parties interested and suggested the saving clause. Yet they do not seem to have seen fit to report the Bill with that saving clause in it.

5. In addition to all the above facts and circumstances we submit that by reason of the totally inadequate price paid for the road by the syndicate in comparison with its cost, the amount paid in bonus by municipality and government subsidy, one is forced to the conclusion that there is a nigger in the wood pile somewhere. It is not right that a few men should so manipulate bonds, issues, &c., so as to defeat the labourer who built the road, the material men who furnished the supplies. We don't appeal to you because the syndicate who bought the road are foreigners. We do say it is unfair to assist foreigners or resident citizens to acquire a franchise and confirm a purchase which had been acquired (even assuming it has been acquired within the strict letter of the law) in such a way that the natural result is to wipe out and utterly destroy the claim of the men who laboured through heat and cold, late and early, to build the road and the men who furnished the material to build and equip the road.

6. No franchise was ever sold. The Ontario court had no jurisdiction to sell a railway franchise without special legislation, and none was ever given in this case. The syndicate never purchased a franchise and they now ask you to grant them one. We submit you are justified in refusing a franchise until equitable claims receive a just and equitable consideration. Parliament has imposed similar terms before in the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway case and in the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway case, and we ask you to follow the precedent laid down in those cases.

7. It must not be overlooked that the receiver of the railway after spending a large sum in erection of new buildings, purchase of new rolling stock, in addition to making ordinary repairs, has paid into court $11,480 to the credit of the foreclosure suit. If the sale of the railway to the New York syndicate is held to be valid these purchasers will be entitled to ninety per cent of this sum paid by the receiver. So the position of the matter will be as follows :

|---|---|
| Price bid at auction for railway. | $160,000 |
| Of this there has been paid into court in cash, about ..... | 20,000 |
| Balance by bonds turned in.. | 140,000 |

Purchasers will receive out of court in cash ninety per cent of the sum paid in by the receiver, nearly $11,000.

We allege the bonds cost the syndicate $90,000, which with the $20,000 paid makes a total cost of $110,000. Deduct share of cash from receiver and a balance of $99,000 remains, the actual cost of the railway, forty-five miles long completely equipped with rolling stock, and engine houses, tools, &c., &c. The railway received in municipal bonds and government subsidy $211,000, which with the sums put in by the contractors and the railway company in cash and proceeds of loans shows that the cost of the railway was between $800,000 and $900,000.

These figures should convince the most skeptical that if no provision is made for some equitable settlement for construction debts, a monstrous injustice will pe perpetrated.

8. Thirty-eight thousand dollars of government subsidy is still unpaid in consequence of the railway not being finished to government standard. While the receiver was in possession he has proceeded with completion, and now a comparatively small amount of work remains to be done. This subsidy was assigned to Mr. Cooper, and his rights thereto have been recognized by the government. Mr. Cooper has offered to assign to the promoters of the syndicate's Bill his rights to this subsidy for fifty cents on the dollar of his judgment, excluding interest on judgment and costs. As to the unsecured claims, we have repeatedly offered the promoters of the syndicate'S Bill to accept forty cents on the dollar of the claim exclusive of the interest and costs. A careful estimate of the sum required to settle the claims on this basis would be $60,000 to settle construction debts.

9. We represent railway employees whose claims total $1,822 for wages while working on the railway prior to the appointment of the receiver. By reason of this labour the railway company was able to operate the road and received the revenue for their own purposes, and we submit these wage-earners are entitled to consideration at your hands. They are willing to settle on a forty-cents-on-the-dollar basis.

10. At a former meeting of your committee, Mr. Holmes, representing the purchasers and other promoters of the Syndicate's Bill, stated that he and his associates asked no favours or privileges as to issue of bonds, &c.

We submit that in any event Mr. Holmes should be taken at his word and given no favours. The prospectus issued by the New York syndicate, a copy of which is filed with your committee, proves that the large bond issue and the large capitalization was part of a scheme to derive an enormous profit for this syndicate by manipulations of the stock and bond issue and its flotation on the market. In conclusion, we submit: (a.) That the syndicate's Bill should not be allowed to pass until the litigation now pending is decided. (b.) That we have established our right to receive a fair and reasonable settlement of our construction claims before any franchise is granted to this new company who have purchased for a mere song a very valuable property. (c.) That a clause should be inserted in the syndicate's Bill providing for a fund to be paid into the hands of the Minister of Railways of at least $50,000 to be applied on construction debts.

This memorandum is signed by Messrs. Hutchison and Fisher, representing Cooper, Fairman & Company, and a number of other creditors. Now, Mr. Chairman, I consider that the sub-committee acted most fairly, and the minority of the members of the sub-committee acted most fairly and reasonably in this matter. The position I took and the position that other members of the minority of the sub-committee took, was this, that these gentlemen had purchased that property at a public sale, that under the Railway Act it was necessary for them to come to this parliament and ask for a Bill ratifying and confirming that purchase, and that we should recommend that Bill ; but if these gentlemen asked for larger privileges outside of that, then we should consider the whole of the three Bills which were before us, and treat them on their merits, and if we could equitably do anything for the creditors it should be done. Now, after a considerable discussion, at two or three meetings, it was decided simply to confirm the purchase, not giving any powers beyond the 45 miles. That we consented to, letting the other Bills stand aside. The minority members of the committee also were willing to authorize an issue of common stock to cover the purchase money. They were also willing to allow bonding privileges of $10,000 a mile for the betterment and equipment of the 45 miles, and for no other purpose. Now we submit that we should not grant these people power to issue bonds for $10,000 a mile on a road which has cost them $2,000 or $3,000 a mile, unless that money is to be used for the purposes of betterment and equipment. Why should they require bonding powers of $10,000 a mile unless they use that money for the purposes of bettering the road ? We are simply going to give to these men who have formed this syndicate, who I say are in league with that Philadelphia Trust Company, power to issue bonds to the extent of $450,000 upon a road which has cost them less than $100,000, and to go into the market and dispose of these bonds. I say when they ask that from this parliament they are asking us to grant them a great privilege, and we would be perfectly justified, under all the circumstances, in saying to them : If we grant you a privilege of that sort, then pay $50,000 to be distributed rateably among the people who built that road, and who should have been paid by this very Philadelphia Investment Company. That is one of the clauses of the Bill that I, as a member of the sub-committee, objected to very strongly. I did not think we should give them that wide power of bonding this road for $10,000 a mile.

Now, Sir, the minority members of this sub-committee also considered that, inasmuch as they were creditors for supplies, the fact of such claims should be stated in the report, so that this fact might be on record in case of any future application to parliament. One claimant, an assignee of the government subsidy, has passed away, I am now speaking of the late James Cooper, who died since the committee made their report. Surely it is important, in the interests of the estate of the late James Cooper, that there should be something on record to show just the position that the committee who were dealing with this matter, took. I think I am expressing the view of every member of that committee when I say that it was decided that the two Bills, the Bill which was being promoted in the interests of the creditors, and the other Bill which was before the committee, should be set aside entirely, and that they should be left in a perfectly free position to press their views and press their claims upon any future application to this parliament for a charter for an extension of that system. I think we are only asking what is fair when we ask to be put on record, so that if these gentlemen who are now the promoters of this Bill (No. 104) should come before this parliament next session for an extension of the road from Westport to Sault Ste. Marie, the position of the other parties in Bill (No. 67) should not in any way be prejudiced. It seems to me it is only reasonable and fair that that should be put on record as the finding of the sub-committee. As I stated, I believe I am expressing the opinion of every member of that committee when I say that the committee were unanimous in their decision to dismiss this Bill, leaving all parties on an even footing as to the extension. The minority members of that committee deemed it very important that all three Bills should be dismissed, and simply an appeal made in favour of a short Bill ratifying and confirming their purchase.

Now, sir, I am sorry to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter, but I feel that a great injustice is being done to these parties unless it is made clear that when these people come before parliament again asking for an extension of this road, then the right of all parties can be brought forward and freely discussed. As I pointed out when Mr. Hervey took the contract for the construction of the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, he was to receive all the bonds and all the stock of that company. He borrowed money from time to time from the Philadelphia Investment Company, and subsequently the Philadelphia Investment Company made up their minds to take the contract out of Mr. Hervey's hands. Mr. Hervey assigned that contract to the Philadelphia Investment Company and Mr. Hervey has put in his report a statement saying that the consideration was that they were to pay the debts then incurred by Mr. Hervey. Now, I have a statement from one unfortunate creditor, and I will just give the statement to this committee to show how the sub-contractors on this road were treated, although they had the assurance of Mr. Hervey that the Philadelphia Investment Company, who owned all the bonds, who owned all the stock, and who were getting all the benefit of the work done by these sub-contractors, would pay the liabilities. This is the statement of Mr. Wm. Robinson. He says that :

On or about the year 1897, Mr. Robt. Mitchell of Ottawa, (since deceased) and Mr. Wm. Robinson of Owen Sound entered into a contract with the Brockville,Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company——

The contract I have amongst my papers.

—and Mr. R. G. Hervey of Brockville for the construction of several difficult and heavy sections of the above railway. After working one month the contractors were promptly paid for the work done, and thus encouraged, proceeded more vigourously in prosecuting the work—but, received no more money therefor until about seven months labour bill had been incurred under repeated promises from day to day that money would be forthcoming. The result of such treatment on the part of the company was that heavy labour bills were incurred by the contractors far exceeding their ability to pay unless the estimates, long overdue, were paid by the railway company. About Christmas a substantial payment was paid on account of labour done by Mr. R. G. Hervey thereby encouraging the contractors to complete the work and thus secure the subsidies which were to be paid by the government in ten mile sections when completed to the satisfaction of their engineers.

It was these very sub-contractors who completed the work so as to enable Mr. Hervey and the Philadelphia Investment Company to get the subsidies from the government. They took the subsidies, put them into their own pockets and did not pay these sub-contractors.

After the second payment, on account, had been made from the company's offices no more money could be obtained, only the 'old time' favourable promises and encouragement to 'go ahead,' 'dont't stop work,' 'the needed succour will surely be to hand before next pay day,' and such persuasion used, as secured for the company the completion of the road (practically at the contractor's expense). Our capital and resources being thus exhausted our horses, mules and all working plant were seized by the sheriff and sold at a ridiculous sacrifice on a market where such plant was useless except for contractors' purposes for which it was designed and realized an amount quite inadequate to satisfy the claims against it as well as depriving the contractors 'of their means of support.' However, we recovered from this 'knock-down blow' as best we could and sued the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company for the then unpaid estimates recovering a judgment against them for about $20,000——

I have a copy of the judgment as obtained and the execution which was issued at the time against this company. The amount of the execution was for $19,402.75, besides an amount of $263 for costs, interest, &c.

—which was afterwards transferred to Mr. R. G. Hervey under an agreement on his part to pay all our labour and material bills incurred in connection with the construction work and furnish us with final receipts therefor and in case of default in so doing we were to get an immediate judgment for the unpaid portion of our claim. While we were thus harassed by our labourers and others who had furnished the provisions for our camps and feed for our live stock, the company gave us a short-time note for $4,000 signed by the president and assured me that if I would get it cashed they would take care of it at maturity. We were then forced to appeal to Col. R. R. McLennan who had faith in the promises and apparent intentions of the company. He endorsed same and I got the value therefor which was immediately applied towards settlement of the then most pressing labour demands. The aforesaid note matured and was renewed and renewed—finally paid by Col. R. R. McLennan who recently told me that it has never since been paid by the makers thereof.

Owing to the default in payment by the company which caused the entire loss of my plant, stock and equipment, including derricks and tools and machinery for heavy work—I have since been unable to operate as a railway contractor having expended upwards of $10,000 in said contractor's plant, every dollar of which belonged to myself, my partner, Mr. R. P. Mitchell, only acting as superintendent—he had no interest in the outfit—and at the time of death owed me about $1,400. The railway company, so far as can be determined in the absence of the aforesaid receipts, or vouchers, representing the settlement of some of the labour accounts, now owe me about $14,000 with interest since the road opened for traffic—together with their sole responsibility for the loss of my plant, making an actual total exceeding, $25,000.

That is including interest from the date of the judgment. That is only one of many cases, I say, of extreme hardship, and I think that the minority members of the sub-committee were not asking too much when they asked that sub-committee to make it clear in their report that in the event of any future legislation, or in the event of these parties asking for an extension of their charter to Sault Ste. Marie, these claims should be considered. That is only one of many claims. There is the claim of the Rathbun Company, besides that, who supplied ties, fence posts, lumber and other material required for the construction of the road. Then, there is the claim also, and a very important one, of the late James Cooper. No reference at all is made to this claim. I apprehend that if this Bill goes through in its present form, the estate of the late James Cooper will not be able to obtain anything out of the subsidy if the government should at any time decide to pay it to this company. Now, I wish to make it clear that I, at any rate, as one of the minority members of that sub-committee, did not insist that any clause should be put into this Bill to pay either of these sub-contractors or these wage-earners. The position I took and the position, I think, that the other minority members of the sub-committee took was this: These people are entitled to a Bill ratifying and confirming their purchase. We will set aside the bill of the creditors, we will set aside the part of the bill asking for the extension of this road from Westport to Sault Ste. Marie, we will simply ratify and confirm their purchase and we will leave this whole question open, so that in the event of the claims of these parties coming up subsequently the matter can be dealt with.

It is fair and reasonable that we should ask to have a saving clause inserted in regard to pending legislation. Mr. Barwick, who represented these parties, suggested such a clause, but the committee did not insert it. I am informed that nothing was said at the committee with regard to changing the name of this company from the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company to the Brockville and Western Railway Company, and yet it is important that the name of a company should remain unchanged. In looking over 'Hansard' I find that the hon. member for Guysborough and the late Hon. David Mills, and others on that side of the House, have taken strong ground that the claims of wage-earners and contractors should be safeguarded in legislation of this kind. We did not go that far, but all we asked was that fair treatment should be accorded to the wage-earners. I ask now that this Bill should stand until such time as we can put it in proper shape. I must say that Mr. Holmes, of New York, the promoter of this Bill, presented his case in a very reasonable manner, and he stated that they would pay whatever was due to any labourer on that work. In the constituency of Leeds there are a large number of workingmen who are yet unpaid and who can ill afford to lose their money. Several of them appeared before the Railway Committee, and one of them, a strong supporter of this government, represented that they were in no position to attend the sale and purchase of this road, but that he felt that when the Bill came before parliament the claims of himself and others should be provided for. I am informed that nearly all the workingmen to whom money is due by this company reside in the county of Leeds and are supporters of the present government, and it is for these men that the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) is making this fight to see that justice is done them. I am bound to say that every member of the committee who supports the present government refused to insert a clause in the Bill protecting the wage-earners, although the gentleman from New York who was promoting the Bill made the distinct statement that he would be the last man to see these men deprived of their wages, and that he was quite willing that a clause should be inserted to protect them. Why did the Liberal members on that committee refuse to insert that clause.

Mr. CLARKE. Did you draw the attention of the Minister of Labour to that situation ?

Mr. PRINGLE. I did not call the attention of the Minister of Labour to that matter because I did not know that the Minister of Labour would be bothered looking after the labourers and wage-earners of the county of Leeds. But if he would, then he should see that there was an amendment added to this Bill by which they would be protected. I may also state that Messrs. Hutchison and Fisher, solicitors for the Bill, announced themselves to be willing, as Mr. Holmes was willing, that a clause should be inserted protecting the rights of the working people. Why is it that the majority on that committee not only struck out the proposition made by the promoters of the Bill, but also refused to insert the saving clause which Mr. Barwick, an eminent counsel asked them to insert. As I have said the minority of the committee asked for nothing unreasonable. They simply asked that a clause protecting the wage-earners should be inserted ; that a saving clause be inserted as to pending legislation, and that there should be a report showing the reason why the three Bills were set aside and reserving the rights of all parties in the event of future application being made to this parliament. We did not ask that a clause be put in requiring the company to pay the creditors, but I find that in the case of other Bills passing through this House, gentlemen on the other side have insisted on clauses being inserted giving ample protection to the creditors as well as to the wage-earners. In 1895, when the Bill respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company was before the House, the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) made the following statement. 'Hansard,' 1895, page 3238 :

> As that matter is disposed of I have another amendment, to which the same objection cannot apply, because it does not affect the main part of the Bill. I have here a petition which I wish to read to the House ; but before doing so, I wish to read the amendment which I intend proposing as clause 10 of the Bill. It is as follows :—
> Before this Act shall become operative, the company shall pay all outstanding accounts for labour performed on the railway and other works of the company, and also for material supplied to or for the use of the said company, the amounts and the accounts for labour and material to be ascertained by the mayor of the city of Hamilton, and, when the said mayor shall certify to the Minister of Railways that all just claims as aforesaid shall have been paid, this Act shall become law.

Now, that is a very sweeping amendment; it is far stronger than anything we ask for; and yet it was supported by nearly all the members on the other side of the House. The hon. member for Bothwell, the Hon. Mr. Mills, at that time, in reply to Mr. Coatsworth, said:

I am rather surprised at the line of argument adopted by the hon. gentleman who is promoting this Bill, that because the parties have not been informed that such a Bill was before the House or the railway committee, and because they have not been able to make known their complaints, therefore the House ought to take no cognizance of it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is not my argument at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not say it was a serious argument, but the hon. gentleman made those observations. He went further, and said that the promoters of this Bill ought not to be made liable for the debts of the sub-contractors. Well, Sir, we have in the province of Ontario a statute which gives builders a lien upon the property upon which their labour or their material have been expended. Now, it seems to me that that Bill is founded on equitable principles and equitable considerations, and I do not know why that rule should not apply to a railway corporation, if it is their bounden duty, as the promoter puts it, to see that those who expended their time and their labour on the work from which they are to derive advantage, should be paid by those to whom they have let the contract for the performance of this work. It is their bounden duty to see that those who spend their time and labour on the work from which advantage is derived by the company, are paid by those to whom the contract is let. If we undertake to put men of straw who do not reside in the country and have no property in the country forward as sub-contractors, it is their business as a matter of due diligence to see that those who have done the work have been paid for it, or, if not paid, that the money is not handed over to the contractors. That seems to me to be a principle of simple justice, and, before the company are allowed to avail themselves of the labour of those men who work upon the road they ought to be made to give compensation for it. It is better that they should pay twice than that the parties who expended their labour on the work, and who have nothing else to subsist upon, should remain unpaid.

Apply that principle to this case. Here is a man named Hervey, who takes a contract for the construction of 45 miles of railway, for which he is to receive bonds and stocks of the company. He is not proceeding very well, and the Philadelphia Investment Company, which has advanced the money, says, we will take that contract off your hands, we will take the bonds and stocks, and assume the liabilities. They urge on these sub-contractors to complete the road—why? Because they want to obtain from the government the subsidy on the road, and they obtain it. The subsidy was given to them, and instead of paying the sub-contractors and the wage-earners, they put the money into their own pockets. They receive the benefit of the work, and obtain the money. And these are the very gentlemen who are asking for this legislation. They can shape it as they like. They can say that these individuals purchased the road, but they purchased the bonds through the Philadelphia Investment Company; and I say that we would not have been going too far if we had asked for a similar clause to be inserted in this Bill to the clause which was inserted in the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Bill. But what I complain of is this: We met the majority of the committee most fairly. We said, we do not want to hold up the applicants for this Bill in any way; they are entitled to come to parliament and get a Bill ratifying and confirming their purchase; let us give them just what they are entitled to; but, when we set aside the claims of the creditors and the other claims, let us make a report, so that, it will be clear that if these parties come to parliament next session asking for an extension of this road, the creditors can then come in and press their claims. But the majority of the sub-committee, whether intentionally or not, have not brought down that report, nor have they added the other clauses to the Bill which I say should have been added. Now, Sir, let me refer again to the position taken by the hon. member for Guysborough in 1895. Referring to the amount of $60,000, he says:

Yes; that amount has been owing ever since. And a large number of these men are feeling it very much. There are farmers and others who have worked upon that road and have not been paid a dollar since that time, and they feel the pinch. The company is given the benefit of their work. It will not do for them to say: We give the contract to Bracey Bros., and if a man works for Bracey Bros., he knew what he was doing. You could get labourers every time and avoid paying them by throwing responsibility from one to the other in that way. This company are bound to see that the men were paid, and if they made it possible for Bracey Bros., to leave the country without paying the men, then any further advantages granted to them by the legislature should be granted upon the conditions I shall name.

I say this is a very much stronger case. Here is a case in which the contractors employed sub-contractors, and these sub-contractors absconded from the country owing these people. Our case is a very much stronger case. The Philadelphia Investment Company got the benefit of the work of these people, and agreed to pay them, when it took the work out of the hands of Robert G. Hervey, and it is really the Philadelphia Investment Company which is getting this legislation through these individuals. When the matter came before the committee, the hon. member for Guysborough made this motion:

I move to amend the Bill by adding the following clause:—

The company shall remain liable for all debts due for the construction of the railway of the said company, and, if such debts are due to contractors, shall cause all just claims for labour, board and building material, in respect of such construction, to be paid by such contractors or their assigns or assignees, and, in default thereof, shall be directly liable to all persons having such claims.

The hon. member for Guysborough supported that motion throughout the whole discussion, and he was supported by Sir Louis Davies and a number of other government supporters. Now, let us look at the position in this case. We had before the committee Mr. Carter, representing the Rathbun Company. He explained to us that the Rathbun Company, in perfect good faith, had supplied all the ties and fence posts and other lumber that was required for that road. And they supplied these goods, believing that the Philadelphia Investment Company, which was getting the benefit of all the assets of this road, had pledged itself to pay for these articles. Let me for a moment refer to the Act confirming the charter of the Great North-west Central, chapter 85, 51 Victoria, 1888. I will only refer to section 27 of the schedule, which is as follows :

Provided always that the company hereby incorporated shall be and remain liable for, and shall pay and discharge all debts which were due on or before the second day of June last past by the North-west Central Railway Company, and the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company, or either of them, for railway construction, and which have not since been paid and discharged, and the said company hereby incorporated in accepting this charter, do for themselves and their successors, covenant, promise and agree to and with Her Majesty the Queen, her heirs and successors, that they shall fully pay and discharge all such debts, and will cause all just claims for labour, board for labourers employed in or about such construction, and buildings, materials in respect of such construction due by contractors to be paid by such contractors.

That is a very sweeping clause, and very much stronger than anything the parties interested are asking for. In 1888 a discussion took place in this House and the Hon. Mr. Edgar, in speaking on this very section, said :

There is no need of discussing in what way the charter was not in accordance with the Act; but I may briefly say that the Act required that the charter should provide for the payment of all the legal obligations of the former company, and the charter undertook to interpret what that meant by defining certain obligations which the new company was to be bound by. I do not know what parliament would have stated had it been asked to define the obligations more distinctly in the Act; but the government defined them by letters patent, and they have to admit that that part of the charter requires confirmation by an Act of parliament. I move for these papers, and I think they will show that the government are responsible for the delay in the construction of this railway through that rich portion of the North-west. Everything, apparently, was ready for the work two years ago.

This discussion arose on a motion by the Hon. Mr. Edgar for copies of all papers, documents, telegrams and correspondence in connection with that land grant to the Souris Rocky Mountain Railway Company, or relating to the construction of the said railway. With regard to the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company, when the charter of that road was up for discussion in July, 1895, this clause was very thoroughly discussed. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) and his friends supported it throughout. I do not intend detaining the committee much longer. I was not present at the Railway Committee when the report came in, or I would have raised the question I am now raising. Nor was I present at the final meeting of the sub-committee. But I do feel very strongly that whoever made out this report did not carry out the views of that committee. They may have carried out their personal views, but not those of the majority of that committee. My hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo was there, and I will ask him now if this point was ever discussed in that committee while I was present, namely, the change of the name to the Brockville and Western ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Not that I know of, while you were present.

Mr. PRINGLE. Was it at any time ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I will reply to that later on.
