Old Customs.

- Old customs! Well, our children say We get along without them; But you and I, dear, in our day Had other thoughts about them.
 The dear old habits of the past—
 I can not choose but love them,
 And sigh to think the world at last
- We had not, in the years gone by, The grace that art discovers;
 Our lives were calmer; you and I
 Were very simple lovers.
 And when, our daily duties o'er,
 We strayed beside the rushes,
 The only gems you ever wore
 Were bright and blooming blushes
- Some good there was about it,
 And many ills we now regret
 Old habits would have routed.
 I know our children still can see
- The world to-day is far to high In wisdom to confess them, But well we know, dear, you and I, For what we have to bless them.

- But here upon our memory's page
 Is very simple reading.
 It says the forms we still hold fast
 Were wise as well as pleasant— The good old customs of the past Have leavened all the present.

"Shall you accept any of these invita-tions. Margaret?" inquired Lionel Trevor opening the door of his wife's morning-room, with a pocket of monogramed and perfumed missives in his hand.

perfumed missives in his hand.

"What are they? I have not looked at them," she replied, with indifference, laying down her pen, and extending a hand whose soiled and inky fingers looked anything but inviting. Her whole appearance, indeed, was by no means attractive. Her slender feet were thrust into a pair of old well work slippers. into a pair of old, well-worn slippers; the loose robe in which she had wrapped her-self was neither sound nor scrupulously self was neither sound nor scrupulously clean, and its faded dingness was unrelieved by any feminine niceties in the shape of collar or cuffs, the massive deadgold brooch at her throat being evidently placed there for use rather than ornalization. ent, to supply the want of proper fast-pushed impatiently away.

An expression of annoyance clouded her husband's features as he carefully picked his path through the intricate maze that presented itself to his bewilder.

To say that the room was untidy would be but faintly to describe the chaos that reigned around. The floor was littered with every imaginable object; the carved oaken bookshelves that lined one end were empty, save for a few nondescript articles that had clearly no business there at all; but wherever the eye rested it was assailed by ponderous volumes, some with tattered covers and loosened leaves others lying open, displaying pencilled marginal notes of reference, and on which the dust of days had accumulated.

"How can you exist in such confusion, Margaret? Where is your maid that she

"How can you exist in such confusion, Margaret? Where is your maid that she does not attend to these things?" he exclaimed, impatiently, as he stumbled over a hat and cloak that lay huddled together on a footstool.

"I have none at present. Ferris complained that she could not do herself justice in my service, and left last week," she replied, carlessly unfolding and perusing the notes. "Mrs. Vanburgh's dance on the twelfth, I could not possibly go there; Professor Brandt gives a scientific entertainment the same night: Mrs. Osborne's amateur concert; Lady Forrest's 'at home,' fourteenth and fifth teenth—one of those days is fixed for a lecture on 'The Darwinian Theory;" I have already procured tickets.

"Here is an invitation to the Marchioness of Bradley's ball on the seventeenth; it will be one of the most brilliant affairs of the season. Surely Margaret, you can have nothing to prevent you then?" he inquired, in a tone of earnest remonstrance.

"No indeed I could not attend it," she "Let me think a moment! Yes, I remember now, I attended an afternoon lecture. Being late, I deferred business until afterwards, and so forgot all about it; here it is, still in my carriage-bag," she replied, carelessly, taking the latter from beneath a pile of books, and handing a soiled and crumpled paper towards him.

"I have changed my mind after all, Lionel, and am going to favour you with my compady," she said, simply, gathering he. Indian embroidered cloak around her.

on which they had been placed. It is really was of no consequence," and consoling her self with repeating a Greek quotation suitable to the coasion, she thrust her hands into the frayed pockets of her resuscitated costume and entered the carriage.

It was a beautiful afternoon in early May; the Park was crowded with all the varied phases of rank and fashion, wealth and beauty, that ceaselessly meet and mingle in the gay whirl of the London season. In her eagerness to arrive sufficiently early at her destination, a popular lecture hall, to obtain a good seat, Margaret discovered that she had started fully an hour too soon. The temptation to while it away amidat the brilliant throng became irresistible, and dismissing the by two elderly ladies, and her attention at once arrested by the mention of her husband's name.

"Yes! that fine-looking young man to whom I bowed is Lionel Trevor. I feel a deep interest in him; as you are aware, his mother was one of our earliest friends and I cannot say how grieved I am at the matrimonial mistake he has made; I fear his life is spoilt by it."

"Was that his wife, the dark-eyed brunette with whom he was conversing?"

"Oh, no! there is the fatal misfortune. Mrs. Lionel Trevor is simply a myth in society, entirely fossilized by her absurd; ridiculous devotion to science. I am much disappointed in her; she was always a bit of blue, but being a really beautiful girl, attractive and engaging, it rather enhanced her charms than otherwise. I have not seen her very lately, and indeed doubt whether I should know her, for I hear that she has become such a dowdy as to be scarcely recognizable.

"What a pity! How shamefully wrong of a young wife to risk her husband's love and interests so thoughtlessly," was the indignant reply.

of a young wife to risk her husband's love and interests so thoughtlessly," was the indignant reply.

"Indeed you may say so! Were she to win popularity for him in society it would further his advancement much; he already holds a responsible position under Government, and will ultimately become a leading man, unless he hopelessly injures his prospects by his ill judged intimacy with the Comtesse Rolinski. She is a heartless, unprincipled woman, a thorough adept in the art of intrigue and the world is already beginning to comment rather freely upon it. Her box at the opera adjoins ours. Last night I over heard her, on leaving, demand his escort to the Marchioness of Bradley's ball on the seventeenth. I only hope Mrs. Trevor may see her mistake before reparation becomes impossible. Rev. Father Wilds'

EXPERIENCE. The Rev. Z. P. Wilds, well-known city missionary in New York, and brother of the late eminent Judge Wilds, of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, writes of the late eminent Judge Wilds, of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, writes as follows:

"18 E. 34th St., New York, May 16, 1882. Messas, J. C. Ayer & Co., Gentlemen:
Last winter I was troubled with a most uncomfortable itching humor affecting more especially my limbs, which itched so intolerably at night, and burned so intensely, that I could scarcely bear any clothing over them. I was also a sufferer from a severe catarrh and catarrhal cough; my appetite was poor, and my system a good deal run down. Knowing the value of Ayer's Sarsaparallela, by observation of many other cases, and from personal use in former years, I began taking it for the above-named disorders. My appetite improved almost from the first dose. After a short time the fever and itching were also cured by the same means, and my general health greatly improved, until it is now excellent. I feel a hundred per cent stronger, and I attribute these results to the use of the Sarsaparantlela, which I recommend with all confidence as the pest blood medicine ever devised. I took it as small doses three times a day, and used, in all, jess than two bottles. I place these facts at your service, hoping their publication may do good.
Your sepectfully, Z. P. Willes."

The above instance is but one of the many constantly coming to our notice, which perset the perfect adaptability of AVER'S SARSA-PARILLA to the cure of all diseases arising Ayer's Sarsaparilla cleanses, enriches, and strengthens the blood, stimulates the action of the stomach and bowels, and thereby enables the system to resist and overcome the attacks of all Scrofulous Diseases, Eruptions of the Skin, Theumatism, Catarrh, General Debility, and all disorders resulting from poor or corrupted blood and all was taken of the system.

Has soared so far above them.

The fifth commandment's beauty-May they obey, as we once did, From love, and not from duty.

For what we have to bless them.
Though love was in the heart of each,
I trembled to accost you;
Had you required a polished speech
I think I should have lost you.

No doubt our minds are slow to guage The ways we are not heeding; of the season. Surely Margaret, you can have nothing to prevent you then?" he inquired, in a tone of earnest remonstrance.

"No indeed I could not attend it," she replied, with sudden enthusiasm. "The discussion class holds more than a usually interesting meeting on that night; I am very busy preparing notes upon the subject, 'The Presence of Fossils in Pre-historic Strata.'"

"Highly entertaining no doubt; the comprehensive character of your diversions really surprises me," was the sarcastic remark. "But is it your intention to devote all your life to scientific rubbish of this sort, Margaret?" he continued, in a different tone.

"All my life! Why, a dozen lives, if I had them to live, would not suffice for satisfactory research into the vast field of science!" she exclaimed, warmly and eagerly, her eyes kindling with excitement; "and you require me to waste valuable time in mere frivolous dissipation, when there is so much knowledge to be sought.

"Oh, well! I perceive it is useless to argue, so I will say no more. By-the-by, what has become of the cheque I gave you some weeks since to pay the household accounts with? Here are the demands come in again."

"Let me think a moment! Yes, I remember now. I attended an afternoon."

It was the night of the seventeenth—the Marchoness of Bradley's ball.
