THE HARDEST TIME OF ALL.

There are days of deepest sorrow,
In the season of our life;
There are wild, despairing moments,
There are hours of mortal strife,
There are times of stormy anguish,
When the tears refuse to fall;
But the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

Youth and love are oft impatient,
Seeking things beyond their reach;
And the heart grows sick with hoping,
For it fears what life can teach.
We must see the blossom fall;
And the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

Loving once, and loving ever,
It is sad to watch for years
For the light whose fulfilment
Makes a rainbow of our tears.
It is sad to count at morning
All the hours to even fall;
Oh, the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all!

We can hear the heat of conflict,
Though the sudden, crushing blow
Beating back our gathered forces,
For a moment lays us low,
We may rise again beneath it,
None the weaker for the fall;
But the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

For it wears the eager spirit
As the salt waves wear the stone,
And Hope's gorgeous gown grows threadbare.
Till its brightest tints are gone,
Then, amid youth's radiant tresses,
Silent snows begin to fall;
Oh, the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

Yet at last we learn the lesson,
That God knoweth what is best,
And a silent resignation
Makes the spirit calm and blest;
For we know a day is coming
For the changes of our fate,
When our hearts will thank Him meekly
That He taught us how to wait.

Interesting Story.

Cain and Abel.

John Mandum was the son, the grandson, and the great grandson of Gloucester fishermen. From childhood he had been destined for their calling, and had already made more than one trip to "the Banks" as "odd boy." Last year he had gone as cook. Now, as nineteen, he had a sudden change in life. Capt. Salter had accepted him as one of the regular crew of the Harkaway, to go "on shares" like any other full-fledged fisherman, and John felt that he was a man.

He packed his kit and started to cross the harbor, in order to stroll about the Point. Christy Muller lived on the Point. In the sail-boat which served as a ferry he found little Christy going home.

John grew suddenly stiff in the joints from his back to his nose. He bowed with a jerk, seated himself as far from her as possible by the old ferryman Godfrey, while Christy sat at the bow watching the foamy track of the boat through the water.

Yet John had long ago determined that he would plan an accidental meeting with Christy before he started for the Banks. Here was his chance and he was neglecting it. But when they landed John found himself beside her, and they walked along together. Christy was quite at her ease, and disposed to be very friendly with the young fisherman.

"I heard you was going a-fishing with Capt. Salter, Mr. Mandum," she said pleasantly, as John walked along silently by her side.

"Yes," he replied with a flush on his face that was not called for by Christy's innocent remark.

"And so you'll be off tonight, I suppose?"

"Yes."

Another pause.

"It's a good beginning," he broke out, after clearing his throat. "I'm going in now to be a fisherman. I've given up the idea of schoolin'. Leonard, he always beats me at that. You know, he's always been head of the class, an' me—fist. Len has always been ahead of me, crippled and sickly as he is. I did think of taking up a land trade, and they all need some head for figure's and I have none. Well, he can't get ahead of me at sea, with a long-drawn breath.

"It's a good beginning," said John, at last. "The crew have half the profits. If we have a good haul this run, my share ought to be more'n a hundred dollars. I'd be sure of two or three more runs in the Harkaway this year, if I do well this time, and I will."

They had stopped now, and stood facing the harbor. His sentences came out with gulps, as if each needed a separate effort.

"I—am going to be a fisherman now, regular. I can count on a good steady income."

No answer. Christy was very intent on a brigantine that was making its way past the inner light to harbor.

"I'll have as good an income as most men when they rent a house and—put a wife in it."

Christy's very neck grew rose pink. "I must go home," she said, in a scared, fluttered voice. "Supper is a most ready."

John made no objection to her going. But he did not now walk by her side; he followed her a step or two behind. A word of discouragement was always enough to drive John to despair. He doubted himself now, and his prospects seemed not so brilliant as they had looked but a moment before.

"Of course," he gasped, "we mayn't have a good haul, and if Capt. Salter isn't satisfied with me, I'll not be in the crew next run. That's so; but I mean to try. I'm goin' to do my best, Christy."

Christy was on her own door-step now, and quite herself again. "No doubt you will, Mr. Mandum," she said, sweetly. "But you haven't said a word about your brother Leonard. You know he's going in the Harkaway too. I suppose he'll do his best too. I wonder which of you will come out ahead? Well, good-bye, and good luck to both of you. I must go in now to supper. Good-bye."

She nodded to him, and with a laugh and a look which John did not understand she went in and shut the door.

John turned from the house and went stumbling down the street. Christy had told him a bit of news. His brother Leonard was going with the Harkaway too, and had not let him know. What did the fellow mean? Was he trying to beat him at everything? Len was on the wharf when John reached it.

"What were you so close-mouthed about goin' on the Harkaway for?" said John, angrily, to his brother.

"The lads, or men, for they were the size of men, now went aboard together. There had been an unusually singular affection between the brothers when they were children; but Len was made a little conceited by his successes at school, while John was discouraged and dulled by his failure. Len, too, had a habit of leaning common to most boys of nervous temperament, but John regarded it as a sign of contempt for himself. It often stung him to the quick.

The Harkaway set sail. Both of the Mandums had grown up, like other Gloucester boys, in familiarity with everything that concerns a fishing vessel. They were expert enough in their work to satisfy, after a day or two, even old Captain Salter. In spite of his jealousy, John was proud of Len's agility and skill.

"He gets about wonderful for a cripple," the captain said one evening when the wind was rising and a storm was evidently brewing, to some of the men, as he stood on deck, watching Len furl a sail.

"Your father told me as how he was about wonderful for a fishin' and gettin' married. You Mandums always marry young."

Marry? Len marry? John drew back into the darkness behind the fore-castle. His brain staggered for a minute, but why should it not be true? Len was two years older than he. His own plan had been to settle down to fishing, so as to be sure of yearly wages. What girl did Len know? None. He was a shy fellow. Except, of course, Christy.

It was all clear now. He crouched down behind a log-head. The light of a lantern shone on the face of Len, who had finished his task and now stood leaning over the rail joking with some of the men. It was a fine clear-out face.

"He's always stood in the way. I wish he was—out of it."

Did he speak the words, or only think them? He was sick, blind with his hidden rage and misery. He thought he heard his name shouted, but crouched down behind the log-head. The night was falling, a wet wind driving. He staid there he did not know how long, brooding over this new misery.

He was roused and kicked with an oath from the mate.

"What are you skulking here for? Captain told 'Mandum' to go aloft and the cripple's gone. He meant you to go."

John, staggering up, saw the small black figure clinging to the foremast. A heavy flow came. The schooner lurched and the boy somehow lost his footing and was shaken from the spar, as a spider is dislodged from a shaken tree, and fell into the sea.

With a mad leap, John was over the rail.

"Man overboard!"

The schooner was put about, boats were lowered, and the crew picked up John. They threw barrels and bags overboard;—in hopes that Len might cling to them. But the night was dark and the sea was heavy. Capt. Salter at last gave up the search and the vessel went on her way.

He greeted John with rough words as soon as he recovered consciousness, and realized that Len was lost.

"What was you? I meant you when I said 'Mandum,' not the crippled boy."

"I was wishing that he was dead. I murdered him."

"Bah! You talk like an idiot. Did not you go after him? Turn in. This is in his head," nodding gravely to the men as John left him.

The Harkaway brought back an enormous fare. She made the harbor of Gloucester one Sunday afternoon six months from the day she sailed. The cargo was not to be unloaded till Monday, and the crew scattered to their homes. As Capt. Salter was standing on the pier, a man tapped him on his shoulder.

"What is it, Mandum?"

"Will you?—Father and mother he's to be told. I—can't do it, captain."

"I'll go, John. God help us all! I'd rather go on a twelve months' voyage. No, no, my lad, stay here! I'll do it. You're here enough. You look ten years older than when you shipped."

He bent his way to Rocky Neck, where the Mandums lived.

John wandered away in an opposite direction, through the steep, crooked streets leading from the wharves.

friends passed, looked at him, but did not recognize him. He was thin and haggard, no longer a boy. Presently the ferry-boat came up. There was old Godfrey, who used to bring Len over to meet him when he was kept at school. That was years ago when they were friends. He used to hear the boy shouting, "Hillo, Jack!" long before the boat touched the wharf.

For the first time tears came to his eyes. Nobody but Len had ever called him Jack.

"The poor fellow. The poor little fellow," he muttered.

What was that? There was somebody in the boat with Godfrey—a man—lame. He tried to go toward him, but his legs gave way. The other ran.

"Jack! Here I am, Jack! You thought I went under, eh? Why, what's the matter, old man?"

Len put his arm about his shoulder, trembling and half crying, man though he was. Old Godfrey had hobbled up.

"Len got hold of a bar'l, you see," he said, "n' floated till he was picked up by a bark. The Harkaway wasn't fur from George's Banks when he fell. Thar war plenty of vessels about."

But as they walked home, John told the whole story. He felt that the blood was yet on his hands and he must confess to his brother all that had been in his heart.

"I thought you wanted to marry Christine Muller, and I wished you were dead, Len. Just then you fell from the mast."

Len did not speak for a minute or two.

"It all grew out of my conceit and my teasing, Jack. We'll go back to our old way. What do you say?" stopping and looking his brother straight in the eyes.

John said nothing, but the men understood each other for their whole lives.

"As for Christy," said Len, as they walked on together, "I never had a thought of her or any other girl. That was all father's notion. I wanted to earn some money fishing to go on faster, Jack. Mother is waitin' to see you. And after supper you must dress up and go to the Point. Christy's waitin', too."

John struck into a brisk walk and hummed a tune to himself as he went. The fire-light shone through the windows of his home on the cliff, and the red sunset dyed the water of sea and harbor. But there was no light, nor warmth anywhere on sea or heaven like that which burned in his heart as he walked home side by side with his brother.

Is Your Boy among the Possibilities?

The late John B. Gough once presented the following (quoting picture): "Oh, I have sometimes looked upon a bright, beautiful boy, and my flesh has crept within me at the thought that there was a bare possibility he might become a drunkard! I was once playing with a beautiful boy in Norwich, Connecticut; I was carrying him to and fro on my back, both of us enjoying ourselves immensely—for I loved him, and I think he loved me. During one play I said to him, 'Harry, will you go down with me to the side of the stone wall?' 'Oh, yes,' was his cheerful reply.

"We went together and saw a man lying listlessly there, quite drunk, his face upturned to the bright blue sky. The sunbeams that warmed and illuminated us lay upon his piteous, greasy face; the pure morning wind kissed his parched lips, and passed away unnoticed. The very sun, looking nobler than he; for they were fulfilling the purposes of their being.

As I looked upon the poor degraded man, and then looked upon that child,—with his bright brow; his beautiful blue eyes; his rosy cheek; his pearly teeth, and ruby lips, the perfect picture of life, peace and innocence—as I looked upon the man, then upon the child, and felt his little hand twisting convulsively in mine, and saw his lips grow white, and eyes dim gazing on the poor drunkard; then did I pray to God to give me an everlasting, increasing capacity to hate with a burning hatred any instrumentality that could make such a thing of a being once as fair as that little child.

Reader, make this your prayer; and may you, in God's strength, be enabled to rescue some of your fellow men from the curse of drink, which is doing such deadly work on every hand.

OH, YOU HAVEN'T any kidney disease, eh? But you are from time to time troubled with Backache, Bladder Troubles, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Headaches, Nervousness, Indigestion, Numbness, Dizziness, Malaria, Chills and Fever, Ague, Boils, Carbuncles, Abscesses, Paralysis, Dyspepsia, Impotency, Swollen Ankles and Joints, and your wife has Female Troubles. Don't you know that these troubles would never prevail if your kidneys were naturally active and kept the blood clean?

"Warner's Safe Cure" is the only scientific blood purifier, and that is the reason why it not only cures known kidney disease, but also 93 per cent. of all other diseases which come from UNSUSPECTED kidney disorder. Try it today. Delays are very dangerous.

"Pots of beer cost many a tear. Golden cups may carry deadly draughts. Take up roll from the brewer's basket. Cultivate your roses, but not on your nose. Always drinking, always dry. Many a child is hungry because the brewer is rich. When wine is in, wit is out. The more you drink, the less you'll drink. Often drunk and seldom sober, falls like leaves in October. Every sot will go to pot."

SOROFULA

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has its equal as a remedy for Scrophulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and cures a more permanent, lasting result than any medicine I ever used. — J. H. Haines, No. 12, Litchfield, Conn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrophulous Humors, and it has cured them faithfully. I will thoroughly eradicate any Scrophulous Humors. — W. E. Fowler, M. D., Greenfield, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered from Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I used Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking five bottles of this medicine I am completely cured. — Mary C. Amosbury, Hookport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and in a few months was cured. — Mrs. J. C. Cook, Foxcroft, Me.

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JULY 20, 1888.

Our Progress.

Fifty years ago the population of Nova Scotia was less than 200,000, in 1871 it had increased to 387,000, and in 1881 to 440,572, and now it is estimated to be 490,000.

"Willow Bank."

We cannot help wondering why it is that our people do not appear to take more interest in the cemetery. "Willow Bank" is beautifully situated and with a little trouble and expense could be made a delightful spot.

Water Supply.

The subject of a water supply is one of vital importance to everyone and the time is fast approaching when the people of this village will find themselves under the necessity of providing a supply of this necessary element otherwise than from the ordinary wells of the place.

The lack of water privileges has led to the increase of rates of insurance so as to make it very expensive for those doing business to avail themselves of the benefits of this means of protection.

These schemes of supplying this want have been talked of, the advisability of which should be considered. First, the construction of a suitable tank or reservoir near the vicinity of the springs on the side of the elevation above mentioned and leading the overflow from them into it and thence by suitable pipes to the village.

As regards the first scheme it would be attended with little expense in comparison with the second or third, but there is a doubt as to whether a sufficient supply could at all times be relied upon.

as the location of the reservoir would have to be placed in an altitude but little higher than the village and consequently but a small head of water obtained.

Other schemes might be practicable, the development of which does not at present appear. But one thing is certain, if we wish our village to retain the popularity it has already won of being a healthful and pleasant retreat for those retiring from the bustle and turmoil of a business life and the resort of the pleasure-seekers during the heated terms of summer, we must supply at least the necessities of life in a pure, abundant and healthful condition.

The Elopement.

During the past few days the chief theme of conversation has been the elopement of Rev. J. R. Hutchinson and Miss Smith. When the report reached Wolfville it was credited by a few, but subsequent tidings show that there is very little doubt of its accuracy.

A painful sensation was created in the city last night by the publication of a sensational story of an alleged elopement. Henry Smith, a gentleman who came here from Ireland a few years ago, boards with Isaac Wylie, on Hollis street. His family consists of his wife and three daughters. They move in the best society. One of the girls, Gertrude, was 21 years of age, pretty, vivacious, intelligent, and an accomplished musician.

She had a large circle of acquaintances and was very popular. She was a model of propriety and frequently visited the sick at the hospital and performed other good works. Some weeks ago Miss Smith went with some friends to Wolfville to enjoy a holiday. There she met with Rev. J. R. Hutchinson, a returned Baptist minister from India. Mr Hutchinson labored six years at Charoole, India, and returned a year ago to complete his studies. He graduated at Acadia last month. He was 28 years of age, tall, handsome, and married to a pretty and accomplished wife, who is now in St. John. It is said that Mr Hutchinson and Miss Smith became smitten with each other, and their intimacy soon became the subject of village gossip.

How to Visit the World's Metropolis.

Concluded. LONDON. Before making any special mention of northern London it may be just as well to notice a few things of interest in the southern and eastern parts. Churches, and other buildings of antiquity are objects of interest on account of their architectural beauty and historic associations.

Centenary Pilgrims. Not only in this immediate neighborhood but also in the suburbs there are more or less of these historic centres.

The Crystal Palace, which really does not come into our narrative, is a permanent exhibition at Sydenham, and is mainly constructed of the material of the great exhibition in Hyde Park, 1851.

In various parts of the great metropolis there are museums, picture galleries, recreation-grounds and magnificent parks covering areas from sixty acres to four hundred and fifty acres.

Nor must we omit to make mention of City Road, Wesleyan Church and Bunhill-fields burying-ground. These are of interest to all visitors for around them cluster memories of the sainted Wesleys, Susanna their mother and Bunyan.

The north of London, especially Highgate and Highbury, is associated with the names of Cromwell, Wilkie, Hogarth, Leigh Hunt, Keats, Andrew Marvell and Coleridge, the residences occupied by many of these being still in an excellent state of preservation.

Mention also must be made of the British Museum. This structure is the repository of an unequalled collection of Greek, Roman, Egyptian, and other antiquities, and is rich beyond description in the possession of rare and ancient manuscripts, shells, fossils, minerals, mummies, &c.

Department of printed books; department of maps, charts, plans and topographical drawings; department of manuscripts; department of natural history; department of oriental antiquities; department of Greek and Roman antiquities; department of coins and medals; department of British and medieval antiquities and ethnography; department of prints and drawings.

And now our wanderings are at an end. A few places have been hurriedly visited and of course many important places have been omitted. As this sketch closes it is not without the hope that some of the readers have gained information and are in a better position (so far as knowledge is concerned) to visit the world's metropolis.

Baseball.

A very interesting game of baseball was played on the college campus between the W. B. C. and a picked nine from the Cornwallis valley on last Friday afternoon.

The visiting team was captained by Mr Charles Eaton, ex-captain of the College football team, and our own boys were in the hands of Mr E. Sawyer. The game of seven innings was played in two hours and a half with fine work to the credit of both sides.

MOWS.—The grass on the Old Burying Ground has been mown this week and it presents a much better appearance than before.

TELEPHONE.—Mr. S. P. Benjamin has been stringing the wire between his residence and the mills this week. Communication will be had at once and will be a great convenience.

RAISED FROM THE FLAMES.—The Annapolis Spectator made its appearance at its former size on Friday last. May our contemporary's future prosperity commend itself to all eyes!

PERSONAL.—Prof. A. E. Caldwell, wife and son, arrived home from a trip to New York and other American cities on Saturday evening last.

EXCURSIONS.—We understand that another steam-boat excursion from Wolfville is to take place about the middle of next month—A moonlight sail on the basin would be pleasant and we think it would be a good undertaking for the right parties.

STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL.—The strawberry festival given by the ladies of St. John's church in Witter's Hall last Wednesday evening was, as is always the case, a success both financially and in point of merit.

LOWER HORTON.—The services of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches of Lower Horton will be held in the church of the former next Sunday morning, and Father Chiniquy will preach. The collection will be for the benefit of the speaker.

HAYING.—Haying has commenced in this vicinity. Already several of our farmers have large areas of grass mown. The crop, concerning which grave doubts were entertained during the early part of the summer, has been greatly benefited by the subsequent rains, and the indication is now that a good average crop will be harvested.

At the Teacher's Examinations, held throughout the Province last week, sixteen candidates have written for grade A License. Of these nine are graduates or undergraduates of Dalhousie, two of Acadia, and one of Kings; the remaining four are Normal School graduates and Grade B teachers, who have been prepared for examination by private study.

TEMPERANCE DRINKS.—Bigelow's Ginger Pop, nice drink on a warm day, at SHAW'S.

WELCOME.—The new Methodist minister, Rev. Mr. Harris, occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church last Sunday morning and evening. He was thoroughly appreciated on both occasions.

BERWICK TIMES.

NEWS, NOTES, JOYTINGS, ETCETERA.

Rev. D. O. Parker is our representative in Berwick, and is prepared to take orders for job printing and advertising. We are constantly adding to our plant, and will give prompt attention to all work. Get our prices.

Mr. Parker has a fine show of furniture in his new warehouses. He represents this paper in Berwick and takes subscriptions for it and orders for advertisements and job printing.

Our thanks are due to Henry Clute, Esq., of Weston for a generous gift of the very choicest strawberries of the season. Will not some one remember the Editors of the Acadian in Wolfville? We do not want them to be jealous.

Rev. T. D. Hart and family left for their new home in Lockport last Monday. Even outside of the pastoral work, Mr. Hart and his interesting family have been valuable and highly esteemed citizens. We wish them much happiness, great grace and no mean share of this world's blessing in gold and silver and generous hearty friends during their stay in the live little island on the South Shore.

The S. S. Concert "An Evening with Frances Ridley Havergal" which came off last Sabbath evening in Berwick, was as we anticipated, a complete success. The audience were furnished with programmes, and without any visible manager each came off in due order and the whole programme was rendered as smoothly as clock work.

Kentville Letter. Now is the time to visit Kentville. Nature has nearly exhausted her resources in endeavoring to make the town a second Eden, and as she has been ably assisted by the citizens of the place her efforts have not been in vain.

It is rumored that there are a number of American gentlemen in the Province looking for a desirable site for a summer hotel. They recognize in the Cornwallis and Annapolis valleys one of the most popular resorts on the Continent, and if they can make such a venture a financial success, why can't we? Why not form a local syndicate, build the hotel, secure the patronage of the travelling public and reap the harvest? This is a question for those that have money in the banks drawing 3 per cent. and who would desire to get at least 10 per cent. on capital invested.

A large number gathered in the Presbyterian church on Friday evening to listen to a lecture by Father Chiniquy, but as the reverend gentleman failed to put in an appearance the congregation were content with a silent service.

B. G. BISHOP ON BUYING.

To buy or not to buy: That is the question. Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous dealers, or take arms against this sea of troubles and by opposing get bargains. To buy: To make purchase, and by that purchase we end the heart-ache and the thousand natural shocks that flesh is heir to. 'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished for. To buy: To purchase: Perchance to be galled. Ayl! there's the rub; For in that purchase I can give value in stock.

Little Soldiers.

Are you fighting for the Master, Little children, brave and true? Are you working in his vineyard? There is room and work for you.

Of What Use.

What will you do with it? Is the question that involuntarily arises when one passes in the midst of all the sunshine and roses of June to watch "the glad faces, sweet and fair," that emerge in long processions from our colleges.

Sensible Maidens of To-day.

What an immense contrast there is between the maidens of to-day and those of three or four generations ago! Where one class of too much study twenty died day before yesterday, so to say, of too thin slippers, the girls of to-day have eschewed those thin slippers, and with them the infantile short sleeves and low necks of the old daily wear.

The Young Soldier.

For many years it has been the fashion in Germany for little boys from four to eight or ten years of age to wear the military musket, or cap, and a toy sword. Our little Jack, while in Stuttgart, wore the musket, and sword, which, with his dark blue, close-fitting over coat and white leather gloves, and his erect bearing, added to the general military effect.

Always Tell Mother.

There is something that tugs at one's heart in the last words of the young woman in Sacramento who shot Peterson and then committed suicide with morphine. After being long in a stupor she rallied a moment and said to the attendant: "Please don't tell mother."

Love and Hate.

Look you, the man whom you hate—are there not women who we-ship him, children who look up to him? Who sees the true man, you who hate him, they who love him? Love is a divine delight; it reaches out over and around its object to the illimitable, it is a part of the Over-Soul, of the Infinite, of God.

Imprisonment For Life.

Imprisonment at hard labor for life, was the sentence. Yet how could it be—the prisoner was so young and pale, and there was still a kind, expressive look in that haggard face—and still he had committed a murder. In a drunken row he had killed a fellow man.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

Use Seavey's East India Liniment. 12 The summer quarterly session of the Grand Division, S. of T., will be held on August 8th, at Sydney, C. B.

The White Signal.

It is told of Charles George Gordon that, when in the Sudan, one half-hour each morning there lay before his tent door a white handkerchief. "And," says the one writing of it, "the whole camp knew the significance of that small token, and most religiously it was respected.

At nearly a years use of SIMSON'S LINIMENT, I have proved it to be what I supposed at first it was, an excellent Liniment to have about a Stable. I have used it in cases of Cuts, Galls, Bruises and Sprains on my horses, and in every case found it to give relief at once, cleansing the cuts and galls so that they healed rapidly, and reducing the soreness in cases of sprains and bruises in a short time.
