Q. The cleaning of the wheat at the receiving point, I think, is a detriment in connection with the question of noxious weeds, because it is almost impossible to get rid of the weed seeds at these places, and it is scattered around, we find, in different districts, and blows all over the country?

Mr. Whyte.—Can't they take them back to the engine and burn them? We don't allow them to blow them out on our station grounds. It is only a little expense and trouble to convey these noxious weeds back and put them into the boiler and consume them. So that disposes of that objection.

You see what a powerful argument Mr. White is making:

Q. The objection raised is that they do not make a good fuel. Then, wheat—there is a grievance in connection with that, that the farmers lose that. They think when they pay for the cleaning of the wheat that they should get it back again, and this difficulty is raised with reference to the cleaning at the receiving elevators?

Mr. Whyte.—We have used them at Fort William and find that we can't get as good a head of steam from them as from coal, but ordinarily get all the steam we want from these foreign seeds mixed with a little coal.

I have exposed, I think, the character of this amendment. It is an amendment quite useless to the Canadian Pacific Railway because it is not needed. Let the committee know what they are voting for. It is not a concession in any way to the farmers, but the bald and plain truth is that the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway can, under this kind of legislation, charge what rental they like and thus prohibit the building of a second warehouse if they like.

Mr. HAGGART. A good deal of misapprehension with reference to this Bill is due, in my opinion, to the explanation of the right hon. gentleman in introducing the amendment before the committee. I thought that the amendment was intended to apply to the whole Bill, but I find it does not apply to the whole Bill, but only to all subsequent elevators, after the first one has been constructed.

As to the power of this parliament to so legislate, there can be no doubt whatever. We have the right to legislate in any direction we choose and make any conditions we like. As to the right of property that the railway has in the land, it has the right of fee simple under our statute. In this respect its right is different from what it would be in England. In England, the land expropriated by a railway company reverts to the party from whom it was expropriated unless it is used for railway purposes, but in this country the case is entirely different.

But while we have this wide power to legislate, our legislation should always be reasonable. While we have the power to make the railway companies build sidings, without remuneration in any manner whatever, we ought always to exercise that power in a manner consistent with the rights of the company and with justice, as we would do in the case of an individual. Have we done so in this case? What more is it that is required by the people? They have standard elevators and the right to load on flat cars, and now the right to build flat warehouses. The proposed legislation gives the public the right to erect a flat warehouse on the company's premises after getting location of a siding, and the railway company is obliged to furnish such location at a nominal rental. Surely that should be sufficient. You will not surely require that the company, besides doing this for the one elevator, shall have to do it for any number of elevators. This kind of legislation is new to the people in this section of the Dominion and is going a long way—this legislation requiring railway companies to have at their terminals, standard elevators and cleaning apparatus and all that sort of thing.

Mr. DAVIN. The Canadian Pacific Railway insisted that all the elevators erected on their line should have cleaners in them.

Mr. HAGGART. Certainly, that is in the interests of the railway company and is also a benefit to the farmers. But why should we have legislation compelling a railway company to put in cleaners. I never heard of such legislation before. Why not go further and compel them not only to clean the grain but to brush it and provide a market for it and grind it into flour? All these things should be left to the individual enterprise of the people. When it is to the advantage of the warehouseman or the railway company to do any of these things, they will do it without the need of this parental legislation.

I rose to say that the legislation is perfectly within our rights, but we ought not to exercise that right without the strongest reason. If it be necessary to expropriate property that belongs to a railway company and compel a railway company to build sidings on that property without their having anything to say in the matter at all, we should do it to the least possible extent required.

All possible requirements are provided. You have a standard elevator, you have the right to load on flat cars, now you have a flat elevator, and you want further legislation. You want, if the commissioner requires it, to compel the company to have not only this one flat elevator at a station, but ten or fifteen or twenty more.

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad to hear the cause of sweet justice championed so strongly in this House, but justice is not a one-sided affair. And, for my part, while we are considering what is justice in this matter, I would like to clear myself, if possible, from the position of asking anything that is not justice, in other words, of being a party to any socialistic proposition or any proposition to confiscate private property.

Let us get this matter down to a focus. What is the right of ownership of a railway company in its right of way? Is that right of way handed over to the railway company to do with it as it pleases?

Mr. HAGGART. They have it in fee simple under our statute.

Mr. OLIVER. Never mind about the statute. Was that right of way granted to the railway company or allowed to be acquired by the railway company to do as it pleases with it as private property? If John Smith owns a farm here, and James Brown there wants to own it, James Brown must come to John Smith and pay John Smith his price for it. But if James Brown is a railroad company and wants part of John Smith's land, he can get it under an Act of expropriation at a valuation. Why is the railroad company given that privilege? Is it, as I say, to do as it pleases with the land? No. James Brown can do as he pleases with it, because he has paid John Smith's price for it; but when the railway company is allowed the right of expropriation, it is with the understanding that it will use that land for a certain purpose in the public service, and for the public benefit. I do not care what any statute says or what the law generally says, that is the fact and there is no getting away from it. Now, the railroad owns the right of way for the same purpose as it owns its railroad; and it does not own its railroad independent of the right of legislation by this parliament without the imputation of confiscation being raised against us. This parliament has inherently, it has by understanding, and it has by legislation, the right to regulate the rates for handling the traffic over the railroad. There is no question of confiscation in that. We have an absolute right to do this in the public interest; it is part of the public business. Then, if we have such right in regard to the actual rails and road-bed, how is it that the right of way shall be in any different position? Shall the right of way be regarded as purely private property, so that the railway company might build a wall to prevent us getting at the railroad, prevent us exercising our rights in relation to that railroad?

Mr. HAGGART. This parliament has an absolute right of disposition, the right to confiscate not only the railway property but any other.

Mr. OLIVER. But I deny the 'confiscation,' and I decline to be put in that position. There is no confiscation on the part of this parliament when we regulate the traffic on the railroad. Then, there is no confiscation on the part of this parliament in regulating the use to which the right of way shall be put. The railroad is allowed to own the right of way for the purpose of carrying on the work of that railroad. All we demand here is that the right of way shall be used for the purpose for which it is allowed to be acquired by the company—to facilitate the trade of the country. That is all we demand in demanding the right to erect flat warehouses on the company's right of way. We deny that we are confiscating the company's property; we claim we are simply compelling the company to carry out the purpose for which it was given a corporate existence, and for which it was allowed to acquire this right of way. It will be admitted that the providing of facilities for the trade of the country is the first consideration, and that that dominates the private right or the corporate right of the railroad. And, if we prove that the trade of the country demands and requires that the right of way of the company shall be used in that way, we have established our case, and there is no confiscation in the matter. Now, the evidence before the grain commission, established the fact that the grain trade of the country was hampered and hindered, that unreasonable tolls were taken from the farmers of the country by reason of the elevator system and the monopoly that was connected with it. That being established, the right to compel the company to allow the erection on its right of way of such warehouses as are necessary to carry on the grain trade of the country is established. And, so far from this parliament trespassing on the right of the company by demanding that they should use their right of way in that manner, it is the railroad company that has trespassed upon the rights of the country in preventing the right of way being used for the purposes of the traffic of the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not ready to accept the doctrine laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver). He resents the imputation, which even after listening to him I cannot avoid thinking is justified, that this legislation is of the nature of confiscation. He makes a comparison between the control of tolls charged by the company and the right to interfere with the right of way. There is quite a difference, and I am surprised that my hon. friend does not see it. We control the tolls and have a right to interfere with the company in this respect without compensation. And why? Because parliament, when it gave the charter, reserved that right to itself. The power of the company has been limited to that extent. Unless we had reserved that power, we should have no right to interfere between the carrier and the public or individual. When we exercise this right that we have observed, we take no right whatever from the railway company. But I ask my hon. friend: Has parliament reserved any such power in regard to the user of the right of way? Has it reserved the right to say to the company: You shall use your right of way only in such and such a manner? My hon. friend will look in vain for such power in the Railway

Mr. OLIVER.

Act or any other statute. Corporations are creations of legislation. They have to use their power in a certain way for a certain object. So far as the object is concerned, they are as much the owners in fee simple of their property as an individual is. It is true, we have the power to confiscate. This parliament can confiscate the land of my hon. friend at Edmonton and can even make it over to another party. That would be law. But, though we have the power to confiscate that property, it would not be just for us to do so. Though this right of eminent domain exists in this parliament, it is a recognized rule that when we interfere with private property, whether in the case of a railway company or a private individual, it shall only be on two conditions: First, it must be for the public service, and second, it must be on compensation. Failing these, we may have the power, but we have not the right, to take the property of any man. In this case, the railway company say: We want to serve the public; you want part of my land to store grain; here it is, but give us compensation for it. Is there any injustice in that? Does that not appeal to the sense of rectitude in every man? The company is quite willing to do this upon payment of compensation. My hon. friend from Assiniboia argued a moment ago in this way: Why, he says, there is no logic in the argument of the hon. gentleman, because the Bill provides that flat warehouses should be established at the expense of the company and without compensation to the company. Very true, but what is the reason for that? If the company agrees to give to the public one flat warehouse without compensation, there is no injustice; but the company says: Though we agree to give you one flat warehouse without any compensation, we do not choose to give you three or four or any other number. But my hon. friend made a point which seems to be reasonable. He says that in the nature of things there can be but a very limited number of such warehouses required. Let us suppose there will not be more than two or three, and that these will follow the ordinary rule of compensation. You can compel the company to give you the land, and to give you the siding; and I merely ask these hon. gentlemen from the North-west to take it for granted that the farmers will be willing to treat others as they want others to treat them, to take it for granted that the farmers do not wish to compel the company to give up their property without compensation. As I said a moment ago, I think the amendment, which embodies a fair, just and equitable principle, is still susceptible of improvement and elucidation. For my part, I do not wish that it should be left in the power of the company to charge an exorbitant compensation; therefore, I shall move this as an amendment to the amendment:

Except that in the case of each additional warehouse the applicants desiring the erection of the same shall be liable to pay a rental equivalent to 6 per cent interest upon the value of the lands taken, such value to be determined upon and fixed by the commission; and shall also be liable to pay the cost of constructing the necessary siding, the company providing the necessary rails and fastenings, and charging the applicants either the actual cost thereof, or an annual rental of 6 per cent upon such actual cost, at the option of the applicants.

It seems to me that is an absolutely fair proposition. It simply provides that for the land which is taken from the company the applicant shall pay 6 per cent rental on the value, the value to be determined by the commissioner, and the same way with the cost of the siding. Now, I ask any hon. gentleman from the North-west if he can fairly object to that. If that be not absolutely fair, I despair of making a fairer proposition.

Mr. OLIVER. There is one point which is not within the knowledge of the Prime Minister, I presume. There already exists a sufficient number of sidings and spurs at all or most of the stations in the North-west Territories and Manitoba to accommodate all the elevators and warehouses that will ever be asked for at these places. But although there are already plenty of sidings, this amendment compels a party desiring to build a second warehouse to build the spur or siding at the order of the company. If another siding or spur were necessary, then I would be willing to agree that there is an element of fairness in the proposition of the Prime Minister. But the fact is that another spur or siding is not necessary, because they already exist in sufficient number. To give the company the right to compel the construction of a further spur or siding, is simply to prevent the construction of extra warehouses, and to keep the grain trade of the country in the hands of the present monopoly.

The PRIME MINISTER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon, he is altogether in error. There is nothing in this amendment making the building of a siding or spur compulsory. That is to be left to the judgment of the commissioner. Look at the clause as it reads now :

Such flat warehouse shall be erected on the railway company's premises after getting location of a siding, and the railway company shall be compelled to give such location with siding on its premises, and some place of convenient access, to be approved of by the commissioner.

I do not say that any siding is to be built, that is to be left to the judgment of the commissioner. If the commissioner says the present siding is sufficient, that will be the last of it. Then you will have to provide for the land. That is the way I read the Bill, at all events. My hon. friend asks that whenever a new flat warehouse is built there must be a new siding. Is that his contention ?

Mr. OLIVER. My contention is that under that Bill the railway company can demand the construction of another siding.

The PRIME MINISTER. But it is within the judgment of the commissioner to grant it or not.

Mr. OLIVER. The circumstances are such that necessarily the word of the company must go, they are the parties who are to say whether they have sufficient room or not. The commissioner cannot in reason say that there is room if the company says that there is not. Then the company has the right to compel the construction of the extra siding.

Amendment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) agreed to.

Bill reported.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the third reading of the Bill

Mr. DAVIN moved :

That the Bill be recommitted for the purpose of inserting the following amendment to section 5:

And shall see that at each point where an elevator or warehouse is established throughout Manitoba and the North-west, bulletins shall be posted up each day from September 1 to January 1, showing the prices ruling at Winnipeg and Fort William at ten o'clock a.m. of each day.

And at end of subsection 1 of section 52 the following words:

And every elevator shall clean the grain before it is weighed, and shall have appliances by which the wheat shall be cleaned, and the cleaned wheat and the cleanings shown, and the seller shall have an opportunity of personally ascertaining the weight of the cleaned grain and of the cleanings. The proprietors of any elevator failing to provide machinery for thus cleaning and weighing grain shall be guilty of an offence under the Act.

We are now removed from the railway and we are dealing with the elevator. I have shown the importance that Mr. Whyte, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, attaches to the cleaning of grain. At all events, I think the second amendment may be accepted by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue. Therefore, I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche)—

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Has the hon. gentleman made his motion ?

Mr. DAVIN. I think it would be better to vote on each motion separately.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Therefore, I beg to move that the following words be added to section 5 :

And shall see that at each point where an elevator or warehouse is established throughout Manitoba and the North-west, bulletins shall be posted up each day from September 1 to January 1, showing the prices ruling at Winnipeg and Fort William at ten o'clock a.m. of each day.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We discussed this question at some length the other day. My hon. friend says, referring to section 5 of the Bill: If the mover of the Bill wants to be logical, the consequence of section 5 is that he will adopt my amendment. But, there is a wide difference between the two. Nearly all of this Bill has been based on the Minnesota legislation. They have preceded us a good many years in the production of wheat, and they send an enormous quantity away compared with what we send from the North-west Territories. Naturally, the Royal Commission inquired into how they were conducting the business in Minnesota, and they followed the system there to a considerable extent. Section 5 is as follows:

The commissioner shall keep on file for public inspection in his office in Winnipeg, publications showing the market price of grain in the markets of Liverpool, London, Glasgow, Winnipeg, Fort William, Toronto, Montreal, New York, Chicago, Minneapolis and Duluth.

It will be his business to keep all these different publications connected with the grain trade at his office, so that the public may become acquainted with the different movements of the trade. My hon. friend proposes to add the following clause:

And shall see that at each point where an elevator or warehouse is established throughout Manitoba and the North-west—

I am not ready to say how many stations there are in the North-west Territories. We know that there are many of them, and there are several elevators at each station.

—bulletins shall be posted up each day—

Each day.

—from September 1 to January 1, showing the prices ruling at Winnipeg and Fort William at ten o'clock a.m. of each day.

What is the purpose of these bulletins? It is to enable the farmers to follow the motions of the grain trade and find out the prices at which they should sell their grain. Naturally, these bulletins must be issued under the responsibility of the government; otherwise, they would be of no use whatever. It will entail considerable expense to issue these bulletins, telegraph them over the country and post them up at each shipping point, but what is worse than the cost is the responsibility put upon the government of issuing these bulletins upon which the farmers and buyers will base their transactions. It would be perfectly useless to issue these bulletins if somebody is not responsible for their correctness. I think it would be wrong to assume such a responsibility on the part of the government. I will tell the hon. gentleman the conclusion that they have come to in Minnesota. There it is not at all the issuing of the bulletins every day under the responsibility of the authorities. My hon. friend goes further than the Minnesota law when he wants us to publish a government bulletin every day because the Minnesota law only asks for a bulletin once a week, and then the farmers have to pay for it. For my own part, I would not care to assume the responsibility of doing that, and I shall oppose the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Davin) negatived on a division.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is now on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. I beg to move—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has not the right to move again without the unanimous consent of the House.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It was agreed that the amendments should be taken up one after the other.

Mr. DAVIN. I beg to move:

That all the words after 'That' in the main motion be left out, and the following substituted therefor:

And every elevator shall clean the grain before it is weighed, and shall have appliances by which the wheat shall be cleaned, and the cleaned wheat and the cleanings shown, and the seller shall have an opportunity of personally ascertaining the weight of the cleaned grain and of the cleanings. The proprietors of any elevator failing to provide machinery for thus cleaning and weighing grain shall be guilty of an offence under the Act.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) wish to give any more explanation?

Mr. DAVIN. I think I have given sufficient explanation. One of the hon. gentlemen opposite made a very strong argument in favour of this clause this afternoon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At what does the hon. gentleman estimate the cost of this cleaning arrangement?

Mr. DAVIN. One of the colleagues of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) showed that the cost of putting in one of those cleaners would not be more than from $150 to $165.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would clean, how much?

Mr. DOUGLAS. One thousand bushels an hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have some experience, and I venture to say that you cannot get one in for $1,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will read to the House a letter which I received from the Stratford Milling Company.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman had better hand me over the letter to read, because if he reads it, and I give way, then I cannot speak again.

The PRIME MINISTER. Nobody would believe that.

Mr. DAVIN. Here is the letter :

Stratford, Ont., May 26, 1900.

Hon. Senator Perley.

Dear Sir,—In response to your esteemed inquiry of May 23, beg to say that we can furnish you a receiving separator, with capacity of about 1,000 bushels per hour, for the sum of $165 f.o.b. here. You do not state in your letter the capacity of the machine you require. If it is for a handling elevator where you simply take grain in and ship it out again, you might require a larger machine; but if for a storage elevator, this size would be plenty big enough.

We shall be glad to receive your order, and to give you such further information as you may require. Thanking you for the inquiry,

Yours very truly,

THE STRATFORD MILLING CO.

(W. Preston, Prop. and Mgr.)

Even suppose it should cost $1,000, as my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) says, what signifies $1,000 face to face with the vast interest of doing efficient justice to the mass of the farmers of a great country like the North-west.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many elevators are there in the North-west ?

Mr. DAVIN. Four hundred and forty-seven, but all of those on the Canadian Pacific Railway have cleaners.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many without cleaners ?

Mr. DAVIN. I think some three-fourths of them have cleaners in.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Oh, no.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. All the elevators on the Canadian Pacific Railway include both the Lake of the Woods and the Ogilvie elevators, none of which have cleaners. The Standard elevators have cleaners.

Mr. DAVIN. Here is the Ogilvie Milling Company, a millionaire company, immensely wealthy, and all of that wealth made out of the North-west, and is it unreasonable to ask them to put cleaners in their elevators ? It would be disgraceful to this parliament if we allowed this Bill to pass without providing that the elevators shall be of the efficient character that the Canadian Pacific Railway, in its wisdom, in its interest in its business, and in its interest in the farmers, insisted should be found in elevators erected upon their line. Let us say that half of the elevators have cleaners.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If my hon. friend brings a case before the House he ought have figures. It is no use making guess-work.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Sir, even if not a single one of the 447 have cleaners, this House would be justified in demanding that they ought have them. When my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) spoke of $1,000, I think he spoke in the large language of the earlier gods, which he is inclined to use in argument.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was well within the mark.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, suppose it cost $1,000. Then, in view of the fact that you are giving these elevators such an opportunity of making money, is it too much to ask them to make their elevators so efficient that they will clean the grain of the farmer and save him the extravagant dockage and the freight on dirt to Fort William, a thing which Mr. Whyte has said is so important in the interests of the farmers ? I hope this clause will be adopted.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend was much more reasonable the other day, because he then proposed that his motion should apply only to elevators to be built in the future. There are at present 447 elevators, and the Bill provides means which will be as fair as possible for discovering the amount of dockage to be made. But my hon. friend, by the section he proposes, wants to compel every elevator at once to provide cleaning machinery. An hon. gentleman who has experience of cleaning machinery says this would cost at least $1,000 for each elevator. What my hon. friend proposed the other day was much fairer.

Mr. DAVIN. Will you accept that ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That it shall only apply to elevators to be built in future ? I think I can take upon myself to accept that, provided that it is made clear that it will not apply to any existing elevators.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, we will compromise on that, for half a loaf is better than no bread.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Will my hon. friend alter his amendment in that way ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the hon. minister will allow me, I think that after the thorough discussion this Bill has had in the committee and in the House, it would be very foolish now to make any amendments in it without due consideration. It seems to me far better to let the Bill go through as it is, and if after a year's operation there are found to be any defects in it, they can be remedied; but to pick it to pieces at the last moment and to make amendments that have not been duly considered would, I think, be a great mistake. So far as these cleaners are concerned, I do not think they could be put into the elevators in the North-west for less than $1,000 on the average, if it could be done for that. I have had a good deal of experience in these matters, and every one who knows anything about machinery knows how necessary it is to have it new, and to have proper shafting, and this is all very expensive. I hope the minister will not consent to any other amendment now.

Mr. DAVIN. But the hon. minister has accepted it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend must not take advantage of the willingness with which I met him without giving any serious attention to his proposal; but the moment I hear a gentleman of such experience in such matters as my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) who has just spoken. I certainly think I acted too promptly, and I will withdraw my consent.

Amendment (Mr. Davin) negatived.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to propose the amendment of which I gave notice some time ago. I do not intend to make any remarks on it as I discussed it very fully this afternoon. I might merely say that I still hold the view that under the Bill the farmers will not be accorded the utmost freedom in shipping and storing their grain. For that reason, I beg to propose the following in substitution of clause 40 of the Bill:

The commissioners shall give permission to any person who demands it in writing, the privilege of erecting, maintaining and using, free of charge, on some portion of the company's right of way adjoining the main track, siding or spur at each such siding or station, an elevator or warehouse for the purpose of storing and shipping grain in car lots, but the said elevator or warehouse shall not be used for any other purpose.

I may say that this is the main clause of the Bill which has been proposed the last two sessions by my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). It is a clause to the framing of which he gave the greatest care, and I believe that if it is adopted as a substitute for clause 40, it will remove the occasion for agitation amongst the farmers of the North-west.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, in support of the motion, that I consider this clause 40 to be the important section of the Bill; and as it stands, I for one as a western member cannot give my sanction to its going through the House without expressing my views on it. Ever since this question has come before parliament, it has come on the one ground of a demand by the people of the North-west to be allowed to market their grain as they please and as is most convenient to them. The subject was brought before the House three sessions ago by the member for East Assiniboia, and by one means or another his efforts were defeated. It was brought before the House last session by the same hon. gentleman, and again his efforts were defeated. It appears before this House this session; and if this Bill is carried, again those efforts will be defeated. The most important demand made by the people of the west, through their representatives, during these three years, is absolutely and in so many words refused by the last subsection of clause 40 of this Bill. I want to say on behalf of the people I represent, that the main demand which they have made upon this parliament from year to year is absolutely and point blank refused by subsection 8 of section 40. That is, the right of any man to buy grain from a farmer and ship it over the railway, as it may be convenient to him, or as the railway may allow. In the report of the commission on the first page, this complaint is set forth:

That the owners of elevators enjoy a monopoly in the purchase of grain by refusing to permit the erection of flat warehouses where standard elevators are situated, and are able to keep the price of grain below its true market value, to their own benefit and the disadvantage of others who are specially interested in the grain trade, and of the public generally.

There is rather a misrepresentation there, because it is not the elevators but the railway companies which refuse to permit the use of their right of way for the erection of flat warehouses where standard elevators are situated.

I am bound to say that the evidence submitted from one end of the country to the other bore out to the last degree the assertion contained in the clause I have just quoted. Is that a matter of importance or is it not? If it has been possible for grain buyers to depress the price of wheat throughout Manitoba and the North-west to an average extent of two cents a bushel, it is easy to estimate the loss. The output of Manitoba and the North-west was 26,000,000 bushels during the past year, and the loss to the people by this depression of two cents in the price amounts to over half a million dollars.

On page 8 of the report of the commission we find the commissioners declaring:

We find that the grievances complained of have arisen largely from the protection afforded by the railway company to elevator owners to induce them to build elevators, which resulted in placing the shipping of grain at elevator points in the hands solely of the elevator owners.

That is to say, for the depression in prices the commission lay the principal part of the blame on the monopoly given the elevator owners, and the prohibition against the free buying and selling of grain by men of small capital at points throughout the country. On page 11 of the same report, the commissioners point out:

We consider that proper relief from the possibility of being compelled to sell under value and of being unduly docked for cleaning, is only to be had by giving the fullest obtainable freedom in the way of shipping and selling grain.

There can be no question as to what has been the trouble in the North-west, and there is no question as to the definiteness of the report of the commission on the subject. The commission report that the great need is perfect freedom to buy and sell grain—a free market for grain—and yet in response to the report, we are enacting a measure, which, in one of its clauses, provides :

No owner or operator of any such warehouse shall be allowed to store in or ship through grain purchased by or for himself.

How the House can agree to pass such a provision as this, in the face of the report of the commission and of the evidence placed before the House from time to time by the members from the North-west, I cannot understand, and I cannot understand how they can expect that such legislation will result in benefit to the country either west or east.

The interest of the eastern producer is a dominant interest ; those of the trader and the carrier are subsidiary interests. They succeed or fail just as the producer succeeds or fails. They are not independent but dependent interests. They do not exist except by the success of the producer, and every man throughout the Dominion is interested directly and indirectly in the success and prosperity of the producers of the North-west. If the western producer does not receive that fair value for his produce to which he is entitled, there is a loss of trade to the country generally, and there is a discouragement to further production. The best encouragement that can be given to production in the west is to give the farmers the best possible return for their labour, and when you say to the men who produce 26,000,000 bushels of wheat in a year : You shall not have the right to buy and sell that wheat in the way that will give you the best return, you are applying a brake to their enterprise. When you legislate in so many words to say that wheat shall be handled by a monopoly which your own commission had reported had unduly depressed the price of wheat, which, in all probability, has meant the loss of half a million dollars to the people of the West in one year, you do not legislate in the interest of the people of the North-west, or the people of the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. Though I have done so two or three times already, I will address myself once more to the sense of fairness and judgment of my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver). The condition which has existed up to the present time is one that must be remedied. We all agree upon that. The question is whether the remedy provided by this Bill is sufficient or not. I think it is sufficient, and I think I shall be sustained by the House on that point. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) says it is not sufficient. Now, what are the points and what are the arguments ? He bases his report altogether on the report of the commissioners. I understand that he says that the report of the commissioners shows that the monopoly that exists up to this time has depressed the market, and that the direct loss to the farmers has been, at least, two cents a bushel. We have only to look at the first page to see this. It says :

3. That the owners of elevators enjoy a monopoly in the purchase of grain by refusing to permit of the erection of flat warehouses where standard elevators are situated, and are able to keep the price of grain below its true market value to their own benefit and the disadvantage of others who are specially interested in the grain trade, and of the public generally.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. That is one of the complaints.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is, at all events, one of the complaints investigated by the commissioners ; and they found that there was a system of monopoly which had to be put an end to. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) says : Why do not you follow the commission ? I was surprised that he should use this argument, when we have done what was recommended by the commission and more. How is it that he will take the report of the commission declaring that there is a monopoly to be broken, and when we accept that report and follow the very method indicated by the commission to break that monopoly, he tells us that it is not sufficient ? If you take the report of the commissioners, you take it in its entirety. What is the way they have suggested as a means of doing away with this monopoly ? They propose that the farmers should have the privilege of erecting their own storehouses. The Bill provides that any ten farmers shall have power to put up an elevator of their own with a capacity of 3,000 bushels, and, if that is not sufficient it can be extended. The recommendation of the commissioners goes no further than that. With this granted, the commissioners think, the monopoly would be broken. But we have gone further, we have provided that any ten farmers may club together and put up an additional elevator. What more is wanted ? The suggestion of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) in his amendment is this :

The commissioners shall give permission to any person who demands it in writing the privilege of erecting maintaining and using, free of charge, on some portion of the company's right of way adjoining its main track, siding or spur at each such siding or station, an elevator or warehouse for the purpose of storing and shipping grain in car lots, but the said elevator or warehouse shall not be used for any other purpose.

Now, Sir, if this amendment were allowed it would go further than is proposed by the commissioners or anybody else. It would give every farmer or every combination of farmers the privilege of having warehouses upon the land of the company. Can any one imagine such an amendment seriously proposed—that we should give to every farmer the power to build flat warehouses wherever he chooses upon the land of the company without any conditions of compensation, and force the company, without compensation, to provide facilities. This is socialistic legislation; it is not British legislation as we understand it. The amendment that has been adopted is one that we can understand. Ten farmers club together and put up a flat warehouse, paying only a nominal rent of $1 a year for the land. But, if ten more want a flat warehouse, they can get it on paying for it. Here is substantial justice done to all parties. And, so far as doing away with the monopoly in the purchase of wheat in the North-west is concerned, we can safely rely on the report of the commissioner, which has not been challenged, as safe guide in this matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to call the right hon. gentleman's attention to page 11 of the report, which says:

We believe that the erection of flat warehouses will not, in all instances, be called for. The knowledge that farmers will have the right, under certain restrictions, to get the same erected, or to erect same, will lead to a desire on the part of elevator owners and employees to give fair prices for grain rather than to stir up feeling which will lead to the erection of those flat warehouses.

The point is, that if we get the privilege, a means will be afforded the farmers of compelling the elevator owners to treat them properly.

The PRIME MINISTER. I can only reply that the report of the commissioners which states that argument makes recommendation for the building of one flat warehouse by any ten farmers, which, in the opinion of the commissioners is sufficient.

Mr. RICHARDSON. To what the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says, I would reply—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) has no right to speak again.

Mr. DAVIN. I think we have here proof of what a great mistake was made by my hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), who has charge of the Bill, in not accepting my amendment respecting the cleaning of grain. I call the attention—

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) ought to resume a discussion of a question on which we have just voted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. DAVIN. I argued that before in its connection with these flat warehouses. I say that if this Bill were made the Bill it ought to be, within twelve months there would not be a flat warehouse in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. And, that motion having been rejected, a moderate one dealing with the case on the lines suggested by an hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) on the other side, who is interested in milling—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has a right to refer to a question which has just been decided.

Mr. DAVIN. Very well, Mr. Speaker. I believe that this Bill, which is about to go into law, will be found insufficient to get rid of the agitation that the commissioners desire to get rid of. Let me say this, with reference to the argument of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The right hon. gentleman argues that they have in all respects acted on the recommendations of the commission. I will not admit that, but suppose it were true. Is it supposed that three or four gentlemen, who are not legislators, can prescribe a Bill that we must accept, excluding all suggestions from this House? All this commission had to do was to supply the evidence and give their report. Unfortunately the evidence is not printed, but I have had the privilege of going over it, and I had the privilege of attending a great many sittings, and I know that the cry that ran through the length and breadth of the North-west Territories was this: Freedom for the farmer in the shipment of his grain. But looking at the Bill I am sorrowfully afraid that it will not meet the great need that was felt in the North-west.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not been able to find in the report of the commission anything in support of this subsection 8 of section 40.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, you will find it on page 31.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I explain that I do not understand that the commission understood that that was to debar the purchasing of warehouses, as this Bill certainly does.

Amendment (Mr. Richardson) negatived on division.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE moved the third reading of the Bill. He said: I have read the Bill over carefully, word by word, and I find in it a number of small clerical errors, to which I draw the attention of the law clerk to have them corrected.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (1892) AMENDMENTS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 137), further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I wish to move the amendment of which I gave notice. But in the first place, I desire to call attention to the Criminal Code as it existed before the Bill was introduced, that is now under consideration in the Senate. Section 205 of the Criminal Code of 1892 related to lotteries, and in that clause there were exceptions. Section 6 reads as follows :

This section does not apply to—

(a) The division by lot or chance of any property or joint tenants or tenants in common, or persons having joint interests in such property ; or

(b) Raffles for prizes of small value at any bazaar held for any charitable object, if permission to hold the same has been obtained from the city or other municipal council, or from the mayor, reeve or other chief officer of the city, town or other municipality wherein such bazaar is held and the articles raffled for thereat have first been offered for sale and none of them are of a value exceeding $50 ; or

(c) Any distribution by lot among the members or ticket holders of any incorporated society established for the encouragement of art, of any paintings, drawings or other work of art produced by the labour of the members of, or published by or under the direction of, such incorporated society.

The Bill as introduced in the Senate had all these exceptions, and clause (c) of the original Act of 1892 was retained in the Senate Bill, but was modified. Clause (c) contained three qualifying provisions :

1. Such paintings, drawings or other works of art are themselves actually and bona fide so distributed ; and

2. The members or ticket holder is not given the option of taking in place of any work allotted to or drawn by him a sum of money or something else of value ; and

3. No other such distribution has taken place among the members or ticket holders for a period of two months less one day next preceding the date of or the date fixed for such distribution.

In the original Bill it was six months. Now, my purpose is to go back to the original Bill as it was introduced in the Senate. Of course I take it that the Bill was carefully looked into by the Justice Department before being introduced. I understand that the purpose for which these three subsections were added to clause c was to make it impossible that there should be any misunderstanding as to what was intended. The understanding that the distribution by lot among members or ticket-holders of the incorporated society for the encouragement of art, had been misused ; and in place of the original intention being carried out, money was taken for the ticket in place of a work of art. Consequently, the Senate Bill qualified it, making it impossible that that should be the case, and limiting this distribution by these three clauses, so that nothing could occur under the clause as introduced in the Senate, as I understand it, except the regular distribution that is known in other countries. The first condition in clause (c) is that the incorporated society, whether incorporated by the local legislature or by this parliament, is established for the encouragement of art or of painting. I am given to understand that under that certain persons used the power wrongfully. Well, I submit that the original Act was a considerable protection, because the first point that had to be established, and could be established, if there was any wrong, was that the incorporated society was not established for the encouragement of art. The Act we had previously, and which I am now seeking to have reinstated is exactly the English Act. It has been in use in England for nearly one hundred years, and it has been used for a good purpose invariably. Under that clause c there can be no violation of the spirit of the law if the parties wish to proceed. I am bound to say that the question as to whether there should be any tickets is a question that may be discussed. This question by some is considered to be a question of morals. Clause a of the Act is certainly a clause which has very high authority in its favour. The division by lot or chance of any property was the scriptural mode of dividing the land among the children of Israel, and that is a very good authority. When I come to clause b, I cannot say that it has the same authority, but if you were to discuss the question, as a question of ethics, if it is said that those who wish to encourage art, as it is in England, are violaters of the law, what will be thought about the raffles and prizes of small value, as if the fact of their being a small value made a virtue of these things at church fairs ? There is a clear invitation given to young people all over the country to go to a church fair and under the sanction of a bishop, or of any church, to engage in a lottery. Clause b is a thousand times worse than clause c. I do not want to discuss the question on the ground of morals, but, if there is a moral furore against doing what they do in other countries to encourage art, we might turn our attention when we get too enthusiastic in the moral role to that against which there is nothing said. I am not objecting to clause b. I am not saying that clause should not be there; I am only contrasting the two. Clause c is qualified by these three sections simply permitting a distribution by lot among the members, or ticket holders of any incorporated society established for the encouragement of art to be made every two months. I am told that in Montreal there is a misuse made of that clause under the original Act. I am told that there are those who are not distributing art, but who are simply holding a lottery. Two conditions will follow. If the clause is not put in there is not a man in Canada who can take a ticket in the Royal Art Society of London. We could not get a single picture in Canada. I am not anxious that the people should go into the business of lotteries even in that respect, but I submit that with the example of England and other countries no legislation should be passed to compel the people not to do that which they desire to do for the encouragement of art. It is well known that this is a mode of encouraging young men and young women in the study of painting and drawing of various kinds, and if there are those who wish to contribute in this way in place of taking up subscriptions, I think they should be encouraged. I know a number of people who have taken tickets, and they are just as good people as there are in this House or out of it. I know the names of those in connection with the society of London, for all that is the good in the realm, will challenge comparison with any people in England or anywhere else. All I want is that we shall have the same opportunity here, if there is an incorporated society established for the encouragement of art and paintings, to get these paintings, as they have in the old country, or if there are those in Canada who desire to get the best efforts that there are in Great Britain and France they shall not be put down as criminals if they take a ticket in this society. The proposed amendment contains a qualification that :

Such paintings, drawings or other works of art are themselves actually bona fide so distributed.

And nothing else.

The member or ticket-holder is not given the option of taking in place of any work allotted to or drawn by him a sum of money or something else of value.

That is to say, if a picture is valued at $100, and there are one hundred tickets of $1 each he must take the picture and he cannot sell it for $50 or $60. The third qualification is :

No other such distribution has taken place among the members or ticket-holders for a period of two months, less one day, next preceding the date of or the date fixed for such distribution.

I think the Justice Department understood the Bill when they introduced it. I think they must have looked into it. I think that in this country we have all the models and all the objects that nature can give for either artists or painters to employ their best skill upon. I think, in that case, that our young men and our young women should be encouraged. We have some very fair paintings made by our Canadian artists. There are some excellent paintings that have been made by foreign artists, and there will not come a time in this generation or during the generations to come in which there will not be new objects or old ones that have not been painted, and I simply want to go back to the idea contained in the original Bill and substitute that. No harm can follow, because if anybody attempts to sell tickets he cannot do it. In the first place, it must be an incorporated society and it must be established for the encouragement of art. I am not going to assume that either in Quebec or in any other province in this Dominion there is a legislature that is going to incorporate a society that is not such as should be incorporated for the encouragement of art. Because there may be those who are utilizing this privilege in a wrong way. I do not think it is any reason why we should not have a legitimate law on the statute-book such as they have in the older countries to enable us to encourage art. If there is any wrong at all, discussed as a question of ethics, it is in the previous section, but this section has been sanctioned for a long time in our code. It has not been objected to and I cannot see any reason why, in that case, there should be any objection to this. I therefore move :

That the Bill be not read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the whole House to have the following clause added:

(c) Any distribution by lot amongst the members or ticket-holders of any incorporated society established for the encouragement of art, of any paintings, drawings or other works of art produced by the labour of the members of, or published by or under the direction of such incorporated society; if—

1. Such paintings, drawings or other works of art are themselves actually and bona fide so distributed; and

2. The members or ticket-holder is not given the option of taking in place of any work allotted to or drawn by him a sum of money or something else of value; and

3. No other such distribution has taken place among the members or ticket-holders for a period of two months, less one day, next preceding the date of or the date fixed for such distribution.

Mr. POWELL. I am ignorant of the society altogether, but I would like to ask the hon. gentleman Mr. Fraser) if any of our leading artists such as Bremner, Bell or Hammond, belong to the society, or is it a society of amateurs?

Mr. FRASER. I have not the names of those who belong to it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. T. DIXON CRAIG (East Durham). I hope the House will not agree to this amendment. No doubt the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) has presented all the arguments he could, but all his arguments amount to simply this: That we should pass this amendment in order to encourage art. I have the idea that the real artists of Canada would not thank him for his amendment. I do not think they need it, and I do not think the fact of passing this amendment would encourage art in its true sense. The clause came to us from the Senate, after being thoroughly discussed, and the Senate sent us the clause in the shape it did because it was shown clearly that under the existing law great abuses had occurred; abuses so gross that legislation was necessary to prevent them. I shall quote an article from the Montreal Witness of May 29, and the Witness may be presumed to know something about this matter:

THE LOTTERY FIGHT.

Few things have ever given lovers of Canada more delight than the uprising of the French press against the lotteries which have under the shallowest pretenses circumvented the law which forbids them.

I stop here to say that if the lotteries circumvented the law before, I have no doubt they could do it again. The hon. member (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough) says he has provided safeguards, but it is always found that such safeguards are easily got around by those who wish to do so.

The archbishop showed himself a true pastor by denouncing resort to lotteries by the Church. Senator Dandurand has shown himself a true patriot by devoting himself to repressive legislation and he seems, or has seemed to be on the eve of a victory that would redeem the province of Quebec from being classed the world over with Monaco and Louisiana and Homburg and Honduras as a centre whence emanates one of the greatest blights that can seize upon society. So profitable a business is, however, not going to die without an extreme struggle. A postponement for even a year would be worth to it the expenditure of a hundred thousand dollars in the lobby. There probably never was more arrant hypocrisy talked across the floor of the House of Commons than the appeals which have been made to members on behalf of the young people studying art who might by the means of raffles be enabled to dispose of their productions and so pursue their predilections. We cannot conceive why artistic productions should have any gambling privileges accorded to them which are not accorded to any other industry. As a matter of fact, however, there is no such interest, and every word that has been said ostensibly on behalf of art has been said really in the interests of the lotteries which are disgracing our community. The vampires who are sucking not the money only, but the life blood, of our people, as testified by those who come most in contact with the people, have not given up heart. They are whispering into the ears of every member of parliament whom they think they can reach. Notice has been given of another endeavour to restore in the Commons the clause under which the evil would be perpetuated, and that without the limitations with which Senator Mills sought to hedge it.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). To show the character of that article: it is just exactly as Senator Mills introduced it.

Mr. CRAIG. They may have made a little mistake there.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It is a sample of all the rest. As to any one coming to us, I speak for myself when I say that no one came to me.

Mr. CRAIG. I presume the Witness thought that no member would champion these lotteries unless he was persuaded by some one to do so.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Craig) is speaking from his own experience.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not know what the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) alludes to by referring to my experience; perhaps he will explain.

An hon. MEMBER. Explain.

Mr. CRAIG. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I have no interest in this matter.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Not in connection with this matter. My reference was to the fact that the hon. gentleman will find remarks in the Witness about himself that he would not consider fair.

Mr. CRAIG. Yes, the Witness said I was a party man, and that is true. I do not think that is a reflection on me at all.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The Witness may make a mistake in the one case as well as in the other.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps the reflection is on the party to which you belong.

Mr. CRAIG. I will not discuss the party question just now. The Witness proceeds to say:

There never was in our parliament a more distinct issue between good and evil, between right and wrong, between principle and interest, between patriotism and money. It is painful to admit that in such an issue we should have any misgivings as to the result. To save our country from the disgrace of a surrender to vicious interests this would be a time for the leader of the opposition to join hands with the leader of the government in putting down a heavy foot on this attempt.

I read that article because I assume that the writer knew something about what he is writing. But I need not quote the Montreal Witness. Senator Dandurand proved conclusively that great abuses existed, and there are members sitting near me to-night who can endorse that. I do not agree with the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), that in order to encourage art we ought to encourage lotteries. That is the only argument he has brought forward in favour of the amendment. I do not think our young artists want lotteries, and I believe firmly the people who want them are not the artists of Canada, but are the men who are making money out of the lotteries. I do not say for one moment that any one has been whispering in the ear of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). I do not impugn his sincerity for a single moment, but I think he is wrong this time. As a rule he stands on the side that the Witness believes to be right, but this time he has got on the wrong side, and I trust the House will not listen to the arguments in favour of the amendment, and restore these lotteries to a position which has enabled them to perpetrate such gross wrongs on the people.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend (Mr. Craig) for once has used the Witness as an authority.

Mr. CRAIG. It is not the first time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. To my mind he has elected the worst opportunity he could to make use of the Witness. There have been abuses in the city of Montreal, and in Canada, in connection with lotteries. The hon. gentleman has attached more importance than he should to the whispers he spoke of which were communicated to the members of the House in reference to these lotteries. The first whisper I had about this law was from Sir John Thompson, his leader and my leader.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). He voted for it. There was not a word then.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was introduced by Sir John Thompson after serious consideration. Now, I wish to place myself right on this question. I draw a great distinction between the Art Union, the Credit Foncier, Franco-Canadien, and institutions which sell tickets at 10 cents each, and have three or four or five or six drawings per day. The Art Union is a copy of the Art Union of Great Britain, which, as my hon. friend said, was originated probably a hundred years ago for the purpose of helping poor artists who had not the means or the influence to make use of their talent without help from outside. In the case of the Art Union, no tickets are issued under $1, and drawings take place only every two months. It must be obvious to the mind of any man who takes the trouble to examine the question, that there is no similarity between the Art Union and these other institutions. In the one case you have a company organized with a large capital. I do not know what the hon. gentleman meant by stating that the capital had been used to influence members of the House of Commons. I was influenced the first time I voted for the Criminal Code of Sir John Thompson, and I do not often change my views. I stand exactly where I did then, and I imagine that the Senate forgot to make the distinction between the Art Union the other organizations privileged under that code, and the institutions which have been working all the harm complained of in the city of Montreal I have met clergymen there, who, when the difference was pointed out to them, immediately stated that the great trouble was in the institutions which sold 10-cent tickets. One clergyman told me that 109 children had left school during school hours to go on the canal and pick up coals and sell them at 10 cents a pailful for the purpose of investing the money thus obtained in these institutions. That is something which no well organized society should tolerate; but between the Art Union, which uses its capital for the purpose of encouraging art, and these companies, the difference is so great that it must appeal to the judgment of parliament not to place them on the same footing. I have no interest in the matter, except that I know men who belong to the art unions of Montreal, Toronto and elsewhere, and who are not men who tolerate the gambling which we want to put down. If the clause is carefully guarded, so as to apply merely to the issuing of tickets for one dollar, and the holding of drawings not oftener than once in two months, it will be quite impossible for it to permit the gambling which we all want to see put down. I have taken this position in the House, because people who had studied the question, pointed out to me the difference between the art unions and the companies which ought properly to be put down. If these matters had been laid before the Senate, I think that they would have acted in their wisdom as the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), has acted, and instead of striking this provision out of the code, they would have retained it, as it was introduced by Sir John Thompson.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, it is notorious that lotteries have been a common evil in this country. Complaints of them come to us, not only from the city of Montreal, though chiefly from there, but from almost every other city in Canada. Under the code of Sir John Thompson, lotteries were allowed; but the evil has reached such a point that legislation has become indispensable. The amendments to the code were introduced into the Senate this year by the Minister of Justice. I am bound to say at once, that the Minister of Justice, when he drew those amendments, made an exception in favour of the lotteries of Art Unions. But protests came, chiefly from the city of Montreal, but also from other places, so loud and vigorous, that they had to be heeded, to the effect that lotteries of the worst possible form were being carried on under the guise of art unions. These complaints were made to the Senate, which investigated them to some extent, and came to the conclusion that they were well founded. It may be that there are legitimate societies of the character of the Art Union which has existed in England for over a hundred years. But whether that be so or not, it seems to be beyond dispute that there are certain societies in Montreal ostensibly for the promotion and encouragement of art, which are, in reality, nothing less than art lotteries. Such being the case, the Senate came to the conclusion that art lotteries ought to be put under the ban of the law, like every other kind of lotteries. Perhaps the measure is drastic; perhaps it goes further than it should go, but the majority of the Senate came to the conclusion that the evil that existed in Montreal could not be eradicated, unless the whole system of lotteries, whether for art or anything else, were put an end to for the time being. This view was accepted by the Minister of Justice, and the Bill comes before this House in its present shape, that is, with a provision prohibiting lotteries of all kinds. The proposition of my hon. friend from Guysborough, is that we should restore the Bill to the shape in which it was introduced into the Senate by the Minister of Justice. That is to say, that we should exempt lotteries which are known to be for art purposes. I do not think the House ought to assent to this proposition. Although I am not an unbounded admirer of the Senate, and believe that it might well be reformed, still I think it will be admitted by both sides as a general proposition, that when a Bill has been carefully considered by that branch of the legislature, it should be accepted by us, unless we find that the Senate has proceeded on false principles or under misconception of the facts. The Senate were induced to prohibit art lotteries as well as others by the fact, established by evidence, that such lotteries were liable to great abuse and made a cover for lotteries pure and simple. That has not been seriously disputed in this House. If the lottery to which my hon. friend from Guysborough has alluded were of the character of the Art Union of England, if it were composed of artists or encouraged by men of that class, there would be no objection to exempting it from the operation of this Bill. But we have no evidence that it is, and I therefore, think the House would do well to leave the Bill as it has come to us from the Senate.

Mr. BRITTON. I would be much more pleased if subsection b had been dropped as well as the one referred to in this discussion. But it is too late to do that now. I tried my prentice hand in a good many ways to get amendments made to the code, and with some degree of success, but not as much as I desired. As to the amendment proposed, it is quite clear that it might be abused and be made use of for the purposes of a lottery pure and simple, and not at all for the encouragement of art. It is quite true that the amendment will not allow of the option to take money instead of a picture, but there is nothing to prevent any one taking the work of art or picture having an understanding with the parties who are running the lottery, under which they will give so much money for what is drawn.

Mr. J. H. BELL (P.E.I.) I am opposed to the amendment of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), partly on the ground of its liability to abuse and partly on the ground of principle. I should have been better pleased if the whole lottery business had been prohibited without exception. In the United States they had the same difficulty to contend with, and in all the states except one—and I think now in all the states—there are laws making lotteries of every description illegal. That is the kind of law I would like to see passed by this House. If you permit a lottery for any purpose—you are doing that which breeds the evil and perpetuates it. You cannot expect that the lottery spirit will die out of young people as long as we have lotteries in any form. There is where the evil begins and is perpetuated, and for that reason I would have preferred that all these exceptions had been struck out.

Mr. RUSSELL. When this Bill was before the House I was rather inclined to the opinion that we should support the views of the hon. member for Guysborough, but with an amendment that would make the clause less open to objection. If I had been present when the Bill was in committee, I would have endeavoured to frame such an amendment. It may be too late to do that now. I think the amendment would need to be drawn carefully and wisely so as to avoid any danger of the law being abused. The hon. gentleman is proposing to change the terms of the drawing from six months to two months. This has, I think, an element of danger, and I do not see my way to supporting him on that point. I think, however, that we are not going to accomplish very much in the city of Montreal by simply amending the law, for, I understand, that the law as it stands, if it had been properly enforced, would have prevented the evils which have arisen there. I think that those who pay attention too exclusively to the mere drafting of laws make a mistake if they think thereby to effect moral reforms. I cannot conceive of what has taken place in Montreal arising through fault of the law itself. The facts as they have been brought to our notice could not have arisen under the law properly administered. For instance, under the law, it was provided that a drawing should not take place less than six months after the preceding drawing. There could be no justification under such a law for drawings taking place three or four times a day, as we have been told they did. So, the evil in Montreal is due to lax administration, and not to imperfect legislation. At the same time, I think that the amendment proposed by the hon. member (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough) would be open to some of the objections pointed out, and for that reason, I am not inclined to support it.

Amendment (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough) negatived.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion for the third reading is carried, I desire to move that the order for the third reading be discharged and that the Bill be recommitted for the purpose of making certain amendments, which I have already brought to the attention of my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The first amendment which I propose is one which was discussed in this House. This was for the purpose of making it an indictable offence to put up at a hotel or boarding-house with the intention of defrauding the proprietor of the amount chargeable for board. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. MacLaren), in a very commendable manner, brought this to the attention of the House and urged it on the attention of the government on at least one occasion when I was present. After discussion with him and with the Solicitor General, my hon. friend from North Perth agreed that he would substitute for the provisions of his Bill, if it could be adopted as an amendment to the Criminal Code, the provisions of an English Act, which, I think, is a move in the right direction. The English Debtors' Act, 32 and 33 Victoria, passed in 1869, contained this provision:

Any person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year, if, in incurring any liability, he has obtained credit by means of false pretenses or any other fraud.

The section proposed here would follow section 359 and would read as follows:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to one year's imprisonment who, in incurring any debt or liability, has obtained credit by means of false pretenses or by means of any other fraud.

It will be seen that this is almost in the terms of the English statute. It seems to me that this supplies something that is wanting in our Act. It is now a criminal offence to obtain by false pretenses anything which can be the subject of larceny. There is no good reason why the same rule should not apply to fraud used to obtain something that is not capable of being stolen. A person is just as much a criminal who obtains credit by means of false pretenses as the man who obtains money or goods by false pretenses.

The next amendment that I wish to present is an amendment to section 679. Section 679 makes provision for issuing a subpoena to a person in another province than that to which the court issuing the subpoena belongs. There is provision in that section that the court issuing the subpoena may take proceedings for contempt or otherwise against any person who may disobey such subpoena. It has been brought to my attention by a member of our bar, Mr. Hector McInnes, that difficulty is experienced in enforcing such proceedings for contempt or otherwise. For example, in a late case in our province a witness was required from Prince Edward Island. Fortunately he attended; but if he had not done so, it would have been very difficult indeed to enforce proceedings against him, whether for contempt or by way of any other process. For this reason I suggest the following subsection be added to section 679. A portion of this is taken from a section of the Winding Up Act.

The courts of the various provinces and the judges of the said courts, respectively, shall be auxiliary to one another for the purposes of this Act; and any judgment, decree or order made by the court issuing such writ of subpoena against any such witness for contempt or otherwise may be enforced or acted upon by any court in the province in which such witness resides in the same manner and as validly and effectually as if such judgment, order or decree had been made by such last-mentioned court.

That is, if a court takes proceedings for contempt and makes an order for that purpose, that order can be enforced in the province in which the witness resides. It does not seem to me it could be validly enforced by the court issuing the original subpoena. Another amendment which I suggest is to add a subsection to section 683. This section 683 provides that:

Whenever it is made to appear, at the instance of the Crown or of the prisoner or defendant, to the satisfaction of the judge of any superior court, or the judge of a county court having criminal jurisdiction, that any person who resides out of Canada, is able to give material information relating to any indictable offence, for which a prosecution is pending, or relating to any person accused of such an offence, such judge may, by order under his hand, appoint a commissioner or commissioners to take the evidence, upon oath, of such person.

Subsection 2 provides:

Until otherwise provided by rules of court, the practice and procedure in connection with the appointment of commissioners under this section, the taking of depositions by such commissioners, and the certifying and return thereof and the use of such depositions as evidence at the trial, shall be, as nearly as practicable, the same as those which prevail in the respective courts in connection with the like matters in civil causes.

I have pointed out to the Solicitor General, when we discussed an amendment to the code some time ago, that in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia a good deal of difficulty had been found to exist about the use of these depositions before the grand jury. An order which provided that such a disposition could be read before a grand jury was discharged by the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia on appeal, and afterwards the trial judge decided that the deposition could not be read before the grand jury. I propose to add as subsection 3 to section 683:

Subject to such rules of court, or to such practice and procedure as aforesaid, such depositions, by direction of the presiding judge, may be read in evidence before the grand jury.

I think it desirable that these words 'by direction of the presiding judge' should be inserted in order to impose upon him the duty of seeing that the commission had been regularly taken before directing that the deposition should be used. I therefore, move that the order for the third reading be discharged, and that the Bill be recommitted for the purpose of making these amendments.

Motion agreed to, amendments adopted in committee, and Bill reported.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think we should provide by a special clause for appeals pending in Ontario, when this Act comes into force, in view of the suggested change with reference to appeals in Ontario.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the Bill ought to be referred back to the committee for the purpose of amending it in the sense indicated by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), and also for the purpose of adding a subsection in the sense suggested by the member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy).

Motion agreed to, amendments agreed to and Bill reported.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think a provision ought to be made that this Bill should not come into force until the 1st of January next.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Some hon. gentlemen, I think, desire that it should come into force on the 1st of September.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Bill will not be printed before the 1st of September; so if the object is to give the Bar information as to the nature of the amendments, it would be better to fix the coming into force on the 1st of January.

Mr. LAVERGNE moved that said Bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of inserting a clause fixing the time that the Bill should come into force.

Motion agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Amendment (Solicitor General) agreed to.

Mr. POWELL. While the Bill is in committee I will mention that I have been asked by some people, whose names it is unnecessary to mention, to move that section 183 be amended by extending its provisions somewhat further. At present the section only provides a punishment for whoever seduces or has illicit connection with any woman or girl employed in a factory, mill, workshop, or store.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think my hon. friend is out of order. Under the instructions of the House the committee can only amend the Bill in one direction.

Mr. POWELL. I think now that we have the Bill in committee, we are at liberty to amend it in another direction. However, I will call attention to the words that these people wish to have added. They are: 'or as a domestic servant.' They think that a domestic servant ought to be protected as well as a girl working in a shop or store.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Bill has been referred back to the committee for the special purpose of amending it with reference to the time of putting it into force, and I do not think we can consider the amendment suggested by my hon. friend. I would remind him, however, that we have extended the scope of that section quite far enough by the amendments that we have already adopted, and perhaps it would be better for us to wait and see how the section, as amended, will work before we go any further. Under the circumstances I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press his amendment, in the first place, because I think it is out of order, and in the second place, because it is perhaps extending this section a little bit further than is necessary at the present time.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, before you report the Bill, with the permission of the committee, there is a question which, perhaps, should have been brought up earlier in the discussion of this Bill, but which I have discussed with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and that is in regard to the forgery of copyright. I have a Bill before the House, which is No. 15, proposing an amendment to the Criminal Code, and I believe the hon. Minister of Agriculture is prepared to accept it. It says that the code shall apply to copyright on the same basis as it does to trade mark. A man who infringes a trade mark is liable to criminal proceedings.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) in order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Flint). The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) is out of order.

Mr. McCARTHY. If hon. gentlemen desire it, I can move that the Bill be referred back to the committee.

Mr. POWELL. Is the hon. gentleman strictly out of order? I may be wrong in my view of parliamentary practice, but in ten years I have known in the legislature of New Brunswick, and afterwards here, that when a matter is committed to the Committee of the Whole House, it is open to them to modify it in any way they see fit.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) is out of order. I had occasion to look up a similar case with the Clerk of the House this evening, and the rule is distinctly laid down.

Bill reported.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, before the Bill is read the third time, I would move that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering certain amendments contained in Bill (No. 15), which is to place copyright on the same basis as trade mark. As I have said, I have already discussed the matter with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, in whose department the jurisdiction is.

The SOICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I cannot agree to the Bill being referred back for the purpose of considering the hon. gentleman's amendment. I think the object of the Bill is not a matter that appertains to the Criminal Code. There is an amendment to the Copyright Act under consideration, and when the amendment is being made the hon. gentleman may move the amendment that he now proposes.

Amendment (Mr. McCarthy) negatived.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTER GASS, MOOSEJAW.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I gave the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) notice that at this stage I would call attention to the dismissal of Postmaster Gass, and to the incidents connected therewith. I asked the hon. Postmaster General why Mr. Gass was dismissed, and he stated that Mr. Gass was dismissed in consequence of the report of the inspector who had gone up and made an inquest into certain charges against Mr. Gass. Now, frankly, I do not think that was the reason why he was dismissed, and I will tell you why. I asked the hon. gentleman to bring down the report, and the date of the report is October 2, 1897. Well, this is the year of our Lord 1900—May, 1900; November, December, January, February, March, April, May—a year and five months afterwards. It is certainly an extraordinary thing that for a year and five months the hon. Postmaster General should incubate the decision that he would form on the report of his inspector. This report should have been read in this House before, because a reference was made to it and a promise was given that it would be read, but it was never read. I am going to read the report.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I said that I would read the part referring to Mr. Gass; I did, and it is in Hansard.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not mention the hon. gentleman's name.

Mr. POWELL.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I was the only person that promised to do it.

Mr. DAVIN (reading)

Post Office Inspector's Office,
Winnipeg, Man., October 2, 1897.

Sir,—I have the honour to return herewith the letter from Mr. Alexander Dalgatty preferring certain charges of offensive political partisanship against Mr. C. A. Gass, postmaster at Moosejaw, West Assiniboia, which you referred to me on the 9th ultimo for inquiry and report.

On the 21st ultimo I accordingly attended at Moosejaw and held an investigation into these charges, timely notice of which was given to the parties interested, and I beg to inclose copies of the evidence as taken by the office stenographer, Mr. J. R. Simons, whom I found it necessary to have accompany me.

Notwithstanding that Mr. Dalgatty, the complainant had a full week's previous notice of the inquiry in which he was requested to have his witnesses in attendance I was surprised to learn, upon meeting him on the train at Pasqua, on the morning of the day of the inquiry that he had taken no action whatever towards preparing his evidence or notifying his witnesses in the case and upon meeting Moosejaw, I had at his pressing request, to hurriedly prepare letters to a number of witnesses, some of them living 15 miles away, desiring their attendance. Mr. Dalgatty claiming that the witnesses would not appear without this being done.

The charges were in effect:

1. That immediately before the general election, in 1896, Mr. Gass, the postmaster, in company with another party, canvassed the coventry settlement in the interests of Mr. Davin, one of the candidates.

2. That previous to said election Mr. Gass, in company with Mr. Baker, canvassed the Stony Beach district in the interests of Mr. Davin, and took part in organizing a young people's Conservative Association in the district;

3. That a few days prior to the said election Mr. Gass accompanied by a Mr. Gordon, visited and attempted to bribe one Pierce Hans to vote for Mr. Davin;

4. That during the campaign Mr. Gass drove the speakers in Mr. Davin's interests to meetings in the Caron and Point Elma districts.

5. That Mr. Gass used his influence in securing the appointment of deputy sheriff for a Mr. Brecken, a Conservative, in opposition to Mr. O. B. Fish, a Liberal.

It was further charged that in the discharge of his duties as postmaster Mr. Gass showed preference to one class of the community over another; that mail matter was at times thrown out of the office through the wicket on the floor to persons applying; that Mr. Gass celebrated the withdrawal of the election protest against Mr. Davin's return, and further, that a few days before the election of 1896, Mr. Gass wrote a postal card to Mr. Davin at Regina asking that 'more stuff' be forwarded to assist in the election campaign.

I call the attention of the House to this: That the charge was that Mr. Gass had written a postal card to me, asking for some more stuff. I will show you, from the report of the inspector, that the statement is false, and I will show you that the lying press bureau that is here in Ottawa, or more likely still a gentleman who is proprietor of the Moosejaw Times who was here, has sent out that same falsehood to the Moosejaw Times, although on the face of the documents before parliament, it is proven to have been untrue.

Mr. Delgatty also complained of the conduct of the postmaster in regard to a letter to him from the department, which you had lost after receiving it from the post office, and which had been handed to Mr. Gass by a Mr. Little, who had found it on the road.

The charges having been read over to the postmaster, he declared them to be all untrue, and asked permission to state, at that stage, with regard to the complaint that mail matter was thrown out on the floor to parties applying, that nothing of the kind had ever occurred to his knowledge, but that he had known instances of school children applying for mail, of same being placed under wicket, and in the scramble of some fifteen or twenty of them for it some of the mail matter would fall on the floor; further, that he treated all persons on post office business alike. Regarding the letter from the department which had been found by Mr. Little and handed to him open, and which he retained for some time, he wished to say that Mr. Little handed him the letter on the street, and after some conversation, he asked and obtained Mr. Little's permission to show the letter to Mr. Brecken. Upon Mr. Little returning to him for the letter in a day or two, and Mr. Little offering it to him to be mailed to Mr. Delgatty in an open condition, he advised Mr. Little not to post it in that condition, but to put it under a new cover, which was done. He did not give the letter to Mr. Delgatty when the latter applied for it, for the reason that he had received it from Mr. Little and considered it his duty to return it to him.

Regarding the first charge, the evidence showed that Mr. Gass was in company with Mr. Baker in the Coventry settlement, and that the latter was canvassing, but it was not shown that Mr. Gass actually took part in this. Mr. Coventry testifies that Messrs. Baker and Gass were, as far as he could see, canvassing for the election, but that the talking was done by Mr. Baker, Mr. Gass not saying anything. Mr. Gass affirms that he and Mr. Baker went into the Coventry district, the latter on election and himself on private business, and that he did not do any canvassing.

With respect to the second charge, that Mr. Gass, in company with Mr. Baker, canvassed the Stony Beach district in the interests of Mr. Davin, and also took part in organizing a young people's Conservative association in that district, the evidence went to show that Mr. Gass was present on the occasion, but that he did not take any active part in canvassing or the organization of the association.

The third charge, of attempting to bribe Pierce Hans, was not clearly substantiated.

In connection with that, there is a letter from Mr. Gordon, saying that Mr. Gass could not possibly have done this, and, therefore, that charge is also disproved.

Mr. Hans swore that money was offered him for his vote, but whether by Gordon or Gass, he was unable to state, nor could he state what the amount offered actually was. Mr. Hans' evidence was not at all satisfactory. Mr. Gass denied, in a very positive manner, this accusation.

I inclose for your information a letter, dated at Silverton, B.C., the 28th ult., from Mr. J. G.

Gordon, who accompanied Mr. Gass on the visit to Mr. Hans, in which reference is made to this charge.

The fourth charge, of driving speakers in Mr. Davin's interest to Caron and Port Elma, is denied by the postmaster, and was not established. It was, however, shown and admitted that Mr. Gass became responsible for the hire of a rig to take some persons to a meeting at one of these places.

To be responsible for the hire of a rig for some friends to go to a public meeting; that is a very different thing from the charge, and surely it was a perfectly innocent thing.

Mr. Gass also denied on oath the fifth charge, of using his influence in securing the appointment of Mr. Brecken as deputy sheriff, and there was no direct evidence to show that he had gone to Regina in this connection, as charged.

Mr. Gass could not have done anything of that sort, and if he did, he would have to influence a man who is the leader of the Grit party in the North-west Territories, for Mr. Ross is the member for the Moosejaw district, and he had the appointment of the deputy sheriff. If he wanted to influence Mr. Ross, who certainly is politically—I do not say personally—an enemy of mine; politically he is the strongest enemy I have, and if he went to influence Mr. Ross, it would not be with my name on his lips.

Concerning the remaining charges, there was nothing submitted to justify the allegation that the postmaster showed preference to one class of the people over another, or that the mail matter was wilfully thrown on the floor to children or others, nor was it proven that Mr. Gass celebrated the withdrawal of the Davin election protest.

We have, therefore, the report that a number of these charges are utterly untrue, and I will read petitions from all the leading Liberals of Moosejaw against this man's dismissal, and in favour of his retention:

The charge that Mr. Gass wrote a post card asking for 'more stuff'—

I call attention to the extraordinary report of Mr. McLeod. I know Mr. McLeod. He is a very intelligent man, but it is quite clear that his notion of reporting on evidence, is very crude:

The charge that Mr. Gass wrote a post card to Mr. Davin at Regina asking for 'more stuff' was in the main sustained.

He never wrote to me a postal card, and, therefore, that charge could not be in any way sustained.

The communication was not by postal card to Mr. Davin, but by letter card, asking for 'What we were speaking about' to a Mr. Hamilton, barrister, who, it is understood, was chairman or president of the Conservative Association at Regina, the card itself, marked Exhibit 'B,' was produced, and is herewith sent you.

Here is the card, and it is not addressed to 'My dear Hamilton,' or 'Dear Hamilton,' but 'Dear sir':

Moosejaw, June 17, 1896.

Dear Sir,—We received word from Wood Mountain to-day by a man from there, who said there was only about four or five there going to vote for Mr. Davin, and the rest was for McInnes, you had better wire Thomson, also send that what we were speaking about by morning's mail or lend some.

Yours in haste.

C. A. GASS.

Mr. Hamilton,
Barrister,
Regina, Assa.

Is it to be supposed for one moment that that letter addressed to Mr. Hamilton could in any way be connected with me, or is it to be thought of that a man of mature years, and a sensible and able man like Gass would write about a criminal thing like money to be used in an election on a card, and he, the postmaster with letters and papers and stamps at his hand. But, Sir, the most monstrous thing of all is if a man were to argue that because some person coming up from Wood Mountain were to say there were only a few there in my favour, therefore there were only that few; but still more absurd if some one were to go on and argue that there were only that few, and that if more than that number voted for me, money must have gone down to bribe those people. I say, in the face of these documents there is not a tittle of evidence that money was so used; and I know as a fact that not a single cent went down to Wood Mountain from myself or any from any person being an agent of mine or from any member of a committee, and for two good reasons: I certainly would not sanction it, and if I would sanction it, I had no money, and having no money was the best reason in the world why it could not be sent.

Previous to its production, Mr. Gass, whose evidence regarding the part took in election matters was not as open and frank as it should have been, swore, as will be seen, as follows:

'I did not have any communication with Mr. Davin or any party in Regina in connection with the running of the election.

There is not the least doubt that is correct. I know it is correct myself. I know that Mr. Gass took no part. I wish he had. If he had taken part in the election, in one place where I did not get a single vote, and where he had the strongest possible connections, I should have had a large vote.

I do not know who Mr. Davin's representatives on the committee in Regina were. Mr. Hamilton may have been one, but I did not write him or any other person on the subject to the best of my knowledge.

I was told by one person that what he wrote about undoubtedly was some literature. I do not know anything about that; but it is perfectly clear that it could not have been about money.

Upon being shown the card he recognized the writing as his, admitting sending it and that it was upon election matters, and stated that he had nothing to say in explanation except that he had forgotten about it.

This card together with the accompanying notice, 'exhibit A' signed 'C. A. Gass, President,' concerning the annual meeting of the Liberal-Conservative Association, in February, 1895, and his presence at various political meetings go to show that Mr. Gass was to a considerable extent mixed up in election matters.

Now, fancy the reasoning of Mr. McLeod: because Mr. Gass attended political meetings as a listener, he was therefore mixed up in election matters.

The action of the postmaster regarding the Delgatty lost letter from the department, 'exhibit C' herewith, was somewhat extraordinary. He, it appears to me, should not have taken the letter from Mr. Little nor should he have read it or showed it to any one, but to have immediately instructed Mr. Little to promptly re-mail it in another cover or hand it to the owner. It will be seen by Mr. Little's evidence that the postmaster after reading the letter, asked permission to keep it till Mr. Little called again at the post office.

Further comment regarding this matter seems unnecessary.

I would respectfully invite your perusal of the accompanying evidence.

I should state that my inspection of the office showed the affairs thereof to be in an excellent condition.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,

Your obedient servant,
W. W. McLEOD,
Post Office Inspector.

I will now read the letter of Mr. Gordon, in company with whom Mr. Gass was most falsely charged with corruption.

J. G. Gordon,
Mining and Real Estate Broker, Conveyancer, Notary Public.
Silverton, B.C., September 28, 1897.

W. W. McLeod, Esq.,
Post Office Inspector,
Winnipeg.

Dear Sir,—I have just received the Moosejaw 'Times' of the 24th instant. In it I observe an account of an investigation into the course of C. A. Gass, postmaster at Moosejaw. I was not aware that there was going to be an investigation and had heard nothing about it until I saw the report of it in this paper.

I see that my name appears in the report brought in connection with a visit to Pierce Hans, of Caron. If the report is correct, Hans lies in his evidence. I canvassed Hans. I was from five to ten minutes with him. All the canvassing was done by me, Gass not being with us. He (Hans) told me he was a poor man and wanted something for his vote. He would vote for Mr. Davin, so he said, if I would give him a small sum, he came down as low as three dollars, or leave an order for that amount of groceries for him. I would not buy his vote, but as he was, as I thought, under obligation to me, I thought I could get it for the asking of it. I alone did the canvassing.

Had I been in Moosejaw on the occasion of the investigation, I would readily have given this evidence.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) J. G. GORDON.

Here is the notice referred to :

Important Notice.

The annual meeting of the Liberal-Conservative Association for the district of Moosejaw will be held in the dining-room, Ostrander Hotel, on Wednesday the day of February, 1895, at o'clock.

Election of officers and other business of great importance is to be brought before the meeting. All members are requested to attend, and all wishing to become members.

C. A. GASS,
President.

Would his being president of that society, of which he had been a prominent member before he was appointed, make him an offensive partisan? Evidently it did not in the opinion of the Postmaster General, who continued him in his office and spoke to him as a trusted officer. Now, with these documents which I have read before the House, fancy the villainy of a newspaper writer who will write in the Moosejaw Times as follows :

Last Friday the recent dismissal of postmaster C. A. Gass, of Moosejaw, was up for discussion in the House of Commons. Our member, Mr. Davin, did the government the kindness to insist that the correspondence relating to the dismissal he brought down. To satisfy Mr. Davin the correspondence was accordingly laid on the Table.

Why, Mr. Speaker, one would think it was a thing I should be ashamed of to ask for this correspondence. Mr. Gass is not ashamed of that correspondence, nor am I; but the fact is that the Postmaster General was very ready indeed to bring it down, and he or somebody else was very quick to get copies of it and place them in the hands of members, as though there was something in it which by some way of representing it would tell. I have placed the whole thing before the House, and they can judge.

In replying to Mr. Davin on the alleged West Huron and Brockville election frauds, Mr. D. C. Fraser said that before sitting down he would show that money was spent in Davin's constituency and it was by the aid of that he held his seat.

On that occasion, I believe the hon. gentleman went a good deal further than any evidence would justify, but I do not think he dared to go that length.

To do this he referred to the correspondence which had just been brought down in regard to the postmaster at Moosejaw, C. A. Gass, an old Nova Scotian. He was dismissed for partisanship, and Mr. Davin insisted that the correspondence was brought down to satisfy Mr. Davin. It disclosed that Gass had been taking an active part in endeavouring to secure the return of Davin.

Whereas that correspondence shows, by the emphatic words of Mr. McLeod, that Gass had not been taking an active part to secure the return of Davin. Here is an infamous heading, utterly false on the part of this man. Here is an infamous slander, utterly false. It is a lie. There is nothing to justify it.

There was a copy of a letter in the correspondence which showed Gass wrote to Mr. Hamilton, Q.C., Regina, asking for 'stuff.'

There is not a word about that in the epistle. It is quite false.

So that more votes could be secured for Davin. Gass said that at Wood Mountain there were only four or five votes for Davin, and he wanted them changed if Davin was going to get elected. . . . Mr. Fraser said he had shown that there was a very much stronger case against Davin than any one he had yet heard of in the debate.

I believe that Mr. Fraser did say something like that, but I cannot refer to a previous debate. He did not, I think, dare to go so far, but the documents I have placed before the House, shows how unfounded is any such assertion.

Mr. Gass is in possession of a letter written by the Postmaster General to a gentleman in Moosejaw, stating that the reason Gass was dismissed was, not because of this report, but because of the pressure put upon him by Mr. Sifton. I am bound, as a man of honour, not to give evidence on my own behalf, or I could prove that it was not because of that report that Gass was dismissed, but my mouth is sealed. Here I have a number of petitions. There is a petition :

Moosejaw, Mar. 12, 1900.

To the hon. Postmaster General.

We, the undersigned supporters of the present government, having heard with regret that C. A. Gass, postmaster at Moosejaw, was dismissed from office without real cause, request that, on account of the satisfaction he has given in such office to the public, you would reconsider the matter, with the view of retaining his services as postmaster at Moosejaw.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

The first name to this petition, is that of a prominent and wealthy farmer and a leading Liberal in the Moosejaw district, Mr. J. J. Gilmour. And other names of prominent Liberals follow, to the number of forty-one. Then the Canadian Pacific Railway employees, to the number of fifty-eight, sent in a petition to the Postmaster General to prevent his carrying out this unhappy stroke of Siftonian policy. Then comes petition No. 3, from one of the Moosejaw settlements, one of the most prosperous settlements in Canada. Thirty-seven of the leading farmers doing constant business in Moosejaw, petitioned against the wrong that was about to be perpetrated against the country, against Moosejaw, against the Liberal party itself. Then comes the fourth petition :

The Honourable
The Postmaster General, Ottawa.

We, the undersigned residents of the town of Moosejaw and surrounding district, hereby beg to affirm and petition as follows :

1. That it is with regret we learn of the proposed dismissal of Chas. A. Gass from the position of postmaster at Moosejaw.

2. That C. A. Gass has, since the time of his appointment as postmaster in March, 1889, ever proved a capable, painstaking, courteous and efficient official.

3. That his dismissal from the office of postmaster will, in our opinion, act as a detriment to the present efficient transaction of our postal business.

4. That we, the undersigned, believe and know the dismissal of Mr. Gass is contrary to the wishes of a large majority of the citizens of the town of Moosejaw and surrounding district.

5. That the order for the dismissal of Chas. A. Gass from the position of postmaster be rescinded.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

How many names are signed to this petition? One hundred and fifty-seven, and I need hardly say that if this man were not an efficient postmaster, such a petition could never have been obtained. The Moosejaw Times—a paper which, while professing to be independent, is a deadly enemy of mine, and is certainly most untrustworthy in any of its reports of what takes place in this House, whenever I am concerned—this paper thus speaks of this matter:

A Hurried Transfer.

Considerable inconvenience might have been saved the people of Moosejaw had the post office inspector taken a little more time in transferring the post office at this place last week. Inspector Phinney arrived Wednesday morning and relieved Mr. Gass. A dray was then ordered, and all the government belongings piled thereon, transported to the new office, and what a couple of tables would not hold was piled on the floor. In the meantime the carpenters were at work on the fittings, which at first consisted of a board partition with a couple of delivery wickets. Consequently, for the first few days our postmaster had to assort the mail without even a pigeon-hole. Had it been a small country office, the hasty manner in which the transfer was made might not have caused any inconvenience, but as the Moosejaw post office is one of the most important in the Territories in point of revenue and volume of business done, we think that the inspector could have afforded to devote at least a couple of days to the transfer, and thus have given time for the installation of at least some office convenience to facilitate the public service. However, chaos is now giving place to order, a number of lock boxes have been put in, other fittings are being added, two assistants have been secured in the persons of Messrs. W. D. McIntyre, of Sidney, Man., and Ed. Sington, and with a few more days' experience, the new incumbent should be on to the 'run' of things, and the public will have a right to expect a first-class service.

To give you some idea of the sense of indignation and disgust that seized this community when Mr. Gass was dismissed, here is a letter written to the Sentinel:

Moosejaw Post Office.

To the Editor of The Sentinel.

Dear Sir,—With the present chaotic condition of affairs in our new post office, consequent upon the dismissal of Mr. C. Gass from the position, I deem it expedient to bring before the minds of the public some of the manifold adverse results of such a change, to give some facts gleaned from certain indisputable sources, a brief resume of the existing circumstances, and the reasons leading to the deplorable state of incompetency which now exists.

On March 10 Mr. Gass was advised that the Moosejaw post office would be transferred to Mr. J. H. Grayson on April 1. Immediately this information was learned, several leading Liberals drew up petitions asking that Mr. Gass's services be retained, on the ground that he had ever proven a faithful, efficient and courteous official. These petitions were inspired by a feeling of British fair-play and justice, which predominated in the minds of these gentlemen, and they met with a hearty reception wherever the petitions were presented, not less than 162 names being voluntarily placed on this one petition. The independent element, desirous of having a voice in the matter, supported by some Conservatives, placed their wishes on record by enrolling 188 names on a general petition setting forth their protest to the dismissal of Mr. Gass. These petitions (containing names of 350 bona fide residents of the town and district surrounding) were forwarded to the Postmaster General at Ottawa on March 20. On the same date (March 20) Mr. Gass received advice from the department that owing to some changes in the original arrangement, the Moosejaw post office would be transferred at once. Mr. Phinney, post office inspector, arrived by next train, and made the transfer on March 21.

To even a casual observer, the cause of the 'change in the original arrangement' is at once apparent. No charge warranting Mr. Gass's dismissal could be produced, and the fact of his dismissal having aroused the just indignation of the people here, as evidenced by their petitions, the few prime movers for his dismissal—doubtless aware that no government could possibly ignore the emphatic petitions about to be presented—communicated the fears to the Minister of the Interior, who at once saved the position by the speedy use of his 'cold steel,' thus eluding all but the 'three chosen' at Moosejaw from having a voice in the matter.

'And where that frown of covetousness darkly fell,
Hope died and Justice sighed farewell.

From private sources we learn that a friend of Mr. Gass, at Ottawa, interviewed the Postmaster General as to the direct cause of Mr. Gass's dismissal, and was informed that personally there was nothing against Mr. Gass, but the dismissal was made on the demand of Mr. Sifton, who, being the western minister, his demands had to be complied with. The 'young Napoleon' doubtless had to have his unquenchable thirst for political opponents' gore satiated before retiring to hibernate on the banks of the Danube—doubtless aware that the storm of indignation which he had aroused would have so adjusted itself that on his return revenge on such a puny creature as himself would then be esteemed contemptible, the principle of striking a fallen foe being at present confined to the aborigines of South Africa.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) laughs as though this was a comical affair, the treatment of Mr. Gass. Mr. Gass belongs to a Nova Scotian family, as respectable as that of any man in this House, and there is nothing to laugh at.

Judging from the philosophical manner in which Mr. Gass takes his dismissal, he is in no sense the somnambulist of a shattered dream. On the contrary, he expresses himself as being surprised that the deceitful tactics of his opponents, who dare not face an open investigation, have not sooner been prolific of some good to themselves. The opportunity, however, presented itself in Mr. Sifton's willingness to perform their dirty work, under cover of his position as minister of the Crown. Its execution was well timed, as he will ere this have reached his desired 'Alsatian retreat,' or city of refuge.

Yours faithfully,

JUSTICE.

Moosejaw, March 26.

Mr. GIBSON. What is his first name?

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) asks me who wrote this. I do not know, but I will say that we have in Moosejaw, and also in other parts of the North-west, able men quite equal to writing admirable letters like that, and it is one of the best letters in the way of newspaper correspondence that I have ever seen.

Mr. GIBSON. I am afraid it was sent from Regina.

Mr. DAVIN. I am telling the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) that I do not know—

Mr. GIBSON. Of course, I am not saying that you did it.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman thinks I should equal anything like that.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It is very much like what I have heard from you.

Mr. DAVIN. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough) wants to know if I had anything to do with it, I can tell him—and I am sure that will fully satisfy him—that I do not know any more than he does who wrote it. Now, I think I have shown that the Liberals of Moosejaw, the Conservatives of Moosejaw and the whole people of Moosejaw have a crying grievance against the Postmaster General, and against the Minister of the Interior. The country has a grievance against them. Justice, whose sacred name is assumed by the eloquent writer of this letter, has a grievance against them for what has been done. After an investigation had been had and a report made, after that report had been dwelt upon and pondered over, after the Postmaster General had shown, by treating Mr. Gass with favour and confidence that he regarded him as an official to be trusted—after a year and seven months Mr. Gass is dismissed. And he is dismissed for a reason outside of the report, and aside from any question of efficiency. For Mr. McLeod found that he was then a good officer. These petitioners, of all political creeds, knew that he was a good officer, and that he was dismissed for reasons other than those found in the report. That reason is one not justified by our tradition or our constitution. Why, it is not even according to the rule that to the victors belong the spoils; because if that had been acted upon, his head would have fallen long before it did. It is not justified by any rule of administrative action that can be devised. The only reason that he was dismissed was that some local wire-pullers who have got the ear of the Minister of the Interior, and who want to throw such men as Mr. Fish and other leading Liberals on one side, said to the Minister of the Interior: We want this man dismissed. And the Minister of the Interior went to see the Postmaster General, and I can fancy what took place. 'Gass must be dismissed,' cries the Minister of the Interior, with his meat-axe in his hand. The Postmaster General has flashes of justice that do him credit. We can understand him saying: Why, Sifton, he is one of my best officers, I have found him an admirable man, I have not a complaint against him, how am I to dismiss him? I must have his head, cries Sifton. I must have this man's place, one of my henchmen want it. But how can I justify it in parliament, says the Postmaster General. Why, says Sifton, can't you say you have dismissed him on the report of Mr. McLeod? And so he comes here and tells us it is on that report, although Mr. McLeod's report would not and did not justify Mr. Gass's dismissal. That the Postmaster General could not justify it is proved by the fact that though he had notice he is not here tonight. Sir, it is not only a wrong only against Mr. Gass, but it is a wrong against his friends. Mr. Gass has relatives in Nova Scotia occupying high and respectable positions. His family would naturally feel that they had some claim upon this government because, though their traditions are Conservative, it is well known that they gave help to the Liberal party in the last election, owing to the great question that was then uppermost. The return for the substantial help they gave the Liberal party is the dismissal of Mr. Gass without rhyme or reason. Then, in order to justify this atrocious act, they slander the man; they put up some men in parliament to slander him and to say he is a briber. They set some of their journalistic assassins at work to stamp him as a corrupt man, and at the same time they attempt to slander Davin as well as Gass. I say it is a scandalous proceeding, and it is one that may fittingly occupy this House, even at twelve o'clock at night, on the eve of going into Committee of Supply. It is a grievance not only of the people of Moosejaw but of the people in other parts of the country. It is a grievance that justice has against a Postmaster General that could behave in such a manner, and against the Minister of the Interior that could tempt him to such a deed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I rise for the purpose of saying that I think I have not been fairly dealt with by the government. Yesterday, as a matter of courtesy only, I told the government that to-day when they moved the House into supply, I proposed to ask the House to consider an important question, the purport of which I explained. I have been in parliament for some time, and this is the first occasion when the government, after holding the attention of the House until twelve o'clock at night, have then moved the House into supply. Of course, under the circumstances, I do not feel justified in going into a question of so much importance at this hour. After this, there is only one course left for me to take, and that is to choose my own time, and not, by giving notice, to suffer this treatment at the hands of the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman saying he has not been dealt with fairly by the government. At this period of the session we cannot adjourn the House at twelve o'clock, and therefore we moved the House into supply, not expecting that the hon. gentleman would move his motion at all. I thought, after the conference I had with him, that he would find it convenient to move his motion to-morrow afternoon. Nobody expected that he would take it up at twelve o'clock at night. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of doing so to-morrow, if he chooses, or at any other time.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Civil government—Department of Agriculture..... $54,842 50

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the cause of the increase of $2,000?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). That is due to the statutory increases, and to the establishment of one second-class clerkship. Last year the money was voted for a clerkship, but it was not used. It was intended to pay one of our new patent examiners. The patent examiner who was intended for this position has left the service, and this year I hope that one of the young men who have come in will reach that experience which will entitle him to an appointment as a second-class clerk. I have already appointed two second-class clerks among these new patent examiners, and there is another one who is working under contingencies now, and who, I think, during the year, will be entitled to this position.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In making the statutory increases, will the minister tell us what system he follows?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I consulted with my deputy, and gave statutory increases where it seemed the responsibilities of the position were hardly compensated by the salaries enjoyed, or where unusual efficiency and interest in the work had been exhibited. Fifteen statutory increases were made.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the hon. gentleman a report from the deputy as to these?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Only a verbal report, having discussed it with him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many are entitled under the law to statutory increases?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Twenty-nine.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman give me the names of those who are getting the increase?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Jackson, chief clerk; Mr. Brymner, chief clerk; Mr. Jarvis, chief clerk; and Mr. Lynch, chief clerk; first-class clerks, Mr. McCabe, Mr. St. Denis; second-class clerks, Mr. Gerin, Mr. Bate, Mr. Doherty, Mr. Taché, Mr. Chittick, Mr. Casey and Mr. Thompson; third-class clerks, Mr. Powell, Mr. Bonneville.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is there anything against the other clerks?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, simply they did not seem to be singled out in any way for promotion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Were their names discussed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman give me the names of the other clerks?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. George Johnson, at the head of his class and not eligible; Mr. Routhier, same; Mr. Bailey, Mr. Dauray and Mr. Caron, Mr. Hanright, Mr. Ide, Mr. Richard and Mr. McGill. Messrs. Verner, Copping, Morrison, Wilkins, Gravel, Tremblay, and Skead were at the head of their class. Miss Reiffenstein, Mr. Duff, Miss Steacy, Mr. Desjardins, Mr. Walsh, Miss M. Loyden and Miss Graham did not receive the statutory increase.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When did this discussion take place?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the estimates were being prepared.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What does Mr. Bailey do?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is one of the patent examiners.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He is a very excellent man, is he not?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has had long experience. The reason that he was not given an increase was that he had six months' leave of absence with full pay last year, and I thought that was quite sufficient allowance for him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Ide is a very excellent clerk.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. His case was very similar to that of Mr. Bailey. He was away on leave of absence with full pay owing to slight ill-health.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, the hon. gentleman, unless there was some special reason, gave the increase.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, on the contrary, unless there was some special reason I did not give it. Mr. Ide is a good clerk who does his work well, but in consequence of the favour that was granted to him I did not think that it was necessary to give him an increase.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the name of the clerk that the hon. gentleman proposes to appoint as a patent examiner?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is Mr. Campbell.

Mr. CLANCY. How long has he been in the service?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nearly a year.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. gentleman is not promoting clerks who have been a very short time in the service. I do not care what their technical qualifications may be; as a matter of fact, it generally takes a young man about a year to get used to the office even though he may have some special qualification. This practice of promoting a clerk under the name of having technical qualifications may result in the advancement of clerks who are utterly undeserving to the injury of others who are deserving. I am not saying that he has not the qualifications that the hon. gentleman would probably state he has. But at the same time I know there are others long in the service who may have quite as good qualifications and who are not promoted. I think that the practice of taking a person who has practically only entered the service and promoting him under the name of a man who has special qualifications, is a subject that ought to be carefully inquired into.

Mr. DAVIN. Does it not require special knowledge to examine these patents?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIN. When the hon. gentleman is replying to the hon. member for Bothwell, I hope he will tell us what special qualifications this gentleman has?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This gentleman is a university graduate, who took his degree in natural and applied science and he is specially adapted for the work which has been placed in his charge. I have made it a rule of only accepting university graduates for these positions. I obtained the services of several young men at salaries of $600 a year, but in consequence of an offer to go into another service one of them left me and the others refused to stay. I had to hold out hopes that shortly I would be able to give them permanent positions of a good character, and it is in consequence of that that I have already given three gentlemen second-class clerkships. They are men of special qualifications, who have shown aptitude and ability in their work, and consequently I had to face the question whether I should retain them by paying them more or lose them and take in inexperienced men. I cannot retain men properly qualified in the service at the salaries which we can give except by appointing them to these clerkships. Mr. Campbell is one of these who came in a little later, and he has been working out his probationary term. It is only in cases where they are found to be thoroughly satisfactory that I propose to advance them.

Mr. CLANCY. How many of those who have been selected for the statutory increases were appointed by the present government?

The PRIME MINISTER. Two of them have been appointed by the present government.

Mr. CLANCY. In what year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One is a young patent examiner appointed three years ago, and the other is my own secretary, who was appointed when I came into office myself.

Mr. CLANCY. What was his salary three years ago?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He commenced at $600 a year, was raised to $800, was then given a second-class clerkship at $1,100, and now he is given a statutory increase which will make his salary $1,150.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How does the examination of patents compare numerically with what it was in 1896?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have a very large number of applications for patents. Until about eight or ten months ago we made very slight gains. When I came into office, I found a staff of three examiners and I found that they were falling into arrears with their work. I made some changes which involved a good deal of delay. Mr. McCabe, who has been a long time in the service, has been ill a good deal during the last two years and has been doing less work than he used to do. Mr. A. E. Caron, who is one of the examiners, and a very competent and quick worker, I was obliged to take off and put at the work which comes under the head of the classification of patents. I found that the classification of patents was very important and necessary for the proper carrying out of the work. This has been going on and is going, and I trust, as it progresses, it will facilitate the work very much although it has not yet made enough progress to assist the work to the extent that it will in a short time. But, we have been making great improvements and we have brought the examination of and the dealing with patents down to within a measureable distance of being up to date. I regret to say that we are not yet up to date, but I trust that from the gain that has been made recently that by a year from now we will be up to date.

Arts, agriculture and statistics $492,500

Mr. MONTAGUE. With regard to these estimates the government are anxious to make some progress, and it is getting pretty late. While we may have some discussion upon them, I think it is the desire of gentlemen upon this side of the House to facilitate the work of the House as much as possible, provided the Prime Minister will specifically agree that one item be reserved, and that when the discussion takes place upon that item the discussion shall be open on all the items without being ruled out of order.

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly, with great pleasure.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And that the fullest information will be given upon all the items.

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. CLANCY. We can have information on all the items the same as if they had not been passed.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I see that the Patent Record has cost more.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It costs more as the number of patents increases. In fact I will have to take a supplementary estimate to cover the expense this year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is it still printed at the Bureau?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Criminal statistics $1,800

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does not the minister think it is time to drop this in connection with his department?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like very much if a method could be devised by which we would get agricultural statistics from all over the country. I hope that, perhaps, if I am continued in office much longer, I will be able to devise some such method. I do not think that these criminal statistics are of very much value.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My judgment is that these statistics are a fraud. I do think it would be of great value if the minister could get a bureau of statistics organized for the purpose of collecting crop information which would be very valuable to the agriculturists of Canada, and would have its effect upon the markets.

Statistical Year-Book..... $3,000

Mr. CLANCY. What distribution is to be made of this book this year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I discussed the matter with Mr. George Johnson, the statistician, and we agreed that as many copies should be sent to the members as possible, after the ordinary distribution. Last year I ordered three copies to be sent, but this year I hope to be able to send members as many as six or seven.

Mr. CLANCY. Last year the minister promised that some system would be adopted with regard to distribution because then some members got a great deal more than others. The minister should adopt a system in this matter. Can the minister state how many are required for the general distribution?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the figures, but I will get them later. The members seem to look upon this book the same as the other blue-books which are placed at the disposal of hon. gentlemen. The difference, however, is, that this is taken from a special vote for the printing of this special book, and it is not as in the case of the blue-books got from the distribution office, published by the order of the House. The Statistical Year-Book is published under a special departmental vote, and that is the reason why the books are not available to members for distribution as the ordinary blue-books are.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the hon. gentleman cut the vote down?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cut it down slightly when I first came into office, but it has been the same for the last three years. It used to be $4,000. Although the vote was larger formerly, yet I was able to make some economies in the printing and preparation of it by cutting out duplicate tables, and for the smaller vote. I have been able to distribute a larger number of copies than was the case before this government came into power. I have been able to secure all the useful information that was contained in the book, and at the same time to reduce the size of the volume and the cost of printing. Although the vote is $1,000 less, for the last two years I have been able to distribute more copies of the book than were distributed when we came into office.

Experimental farms..... $80,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the same sort of work is carried on as in 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There have been some changes. The chief change has been the appointment of the agriculturist and the setting apart of about half the area of the farm, some 200 acres, to be worked as a farm, and not as experimental plots. I have given it over to the agriculturist to deal with as a stock farm, and have instructed him to deal with it as nearly as possible as a farmer would deal with the land for his own profit, utilizing as far as possible the information that has been obtained in past years on the farm.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the work of experimenting practically the same as in 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I should judge from what the hon. gentleman says that the experimental work is abandoned.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all. The parts of the farm which have been set apart to be worked in this systematic manner had been used for raising grain, just as a farm, and not for experimental plots. There is, in fact, a larger area devoted to strictly experimental work than ever before. The 200 acres which are set apart to be worked as a farm in connection with the keeping of stock are to be worked without any extraneous aid, and no work is to be done on it which a farmer could not do on an ordinary well-conducted farm.

Mr. CLANCY. Will this affect the distribution of grain ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all. On the contrary, we are distributing very much larger quantities of grain.

Printing and distribution of reports and bulletins of farms..... $4,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is the same as in 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that we have been sending out, during the last year especially, a very large number of bulletins. I thought it better to send these out as we obtained the information rather than wait for the annual report. I think we have sent out last year fourteen or fifteen bulletins.

Mr. CLANCY. I have not yet seen the Commissioner's report.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The commissioner has not prepared a report yet this year. His reports are somewhat intermittent. The last was made in 1897. The evidence which the commissioner gives to the Committee on Agriculture has been generally considered as a resume of the work of that branch ; but, he is now preparing a report, and I hope within a few months to have it ready to put in the printer's hands, so that it will be printed in time for the opening of next session of parliament.

Mr. CLANCY. We should have a report this year, as he has not given any evidence before the committee.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He will be here before the end of the session. He is to sail on Saturday, and I expect him to be in Ottawa in about ten days.

For classifying all Canadian patents and preparing drawings of same for classification, and for exchange with the United States in return for their patents..... $4,100

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is new work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has been going on for about two years.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How is it getting along ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Fairly well, I think. I gave it in charge of Mr. Caron. It requires technical knowledge and a good deal of care, and I could not see my way to putting it in the hands of any man who had not a good deal of experience in examining patents. We require to make copies of the drawings of our patents.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is making the drawings ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are done by Mr. Desjardins in the department, by a photographic process.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are you renting a model room now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a room rented on Sparks Street, in which a portion of the models are on exhibition.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is not necessary.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think it is.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What rent is being paid ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell off-hand. It is rented by the Public Works Department. I think the rent is $1,200 a year. It was felt by a good many people that the model room was one of the sights of Ottawa, and that it would, perhaps, be unfortunate to do away with it altogether. When the changes in the Langevin Block were made, the large rooms in the upper part of that building were utilized for offices, and the models were taken to the building on Sparks Street. For a number of years we have not required models with the applications for patents, so that these are old models. The examiners tell me that they can get along very well without models, although they are useful.

Census $150,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. What day does the hon. gentleman propose to begin taking the census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It cannot commence until January 1, 1901. The last census commenced, I think, on April 5.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will you take it on the same date ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not yet formed any plans ; I thought that it would be time enough to do so after July 1. I have consulted with the officers, and they tell me that they can easily prepare all the necessary schedules after that date.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The reason I ask the question is, that I saw an article in the paper published by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in which he outlines a line of procedure to be taken by the government. It appears we are not to have the election just now, but that we are to have the census started January 1, and then have another session and redistribution based on the new census. It is rather important that we should know the date.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will carefully read the article, and see whether I can get any enlightenment from it. Would the hon. gentleman promise to let the Redistribution Bill through, in case we should have another session. If an arrangement of that kind were made, I might begin the work of the census very early.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. gentleman would go to the country now, the probability is, he would not be in office to make the census.

Mr. CLANCY. Will this cover the whole expense of the census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the expense of the last census was nearly $500,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the system to be followed, the de jure or the de facto system ? I suppose it is not intended to make any change.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The census has always been taken by the de jure system, and the probability is that that system will be followed.

Mr. FISHER.

Paris exhibition..... $50,000

Mr. CLANCY. Is that all the hon. gentleman will require to finish that service ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am afraid not. When this vote was prepared, some months ago, I was in hopes it would have been sufficient, but I shall have to ask the House for supplementary estimates this year, and possibly also for a slight supplement to this vote next year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman be prepared to give all the details of the expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot bring down all the details, because I have not received all the details from Paris of the money spent there, but will bring down all I can.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is representing us now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Tarte is the chief commissioner in Paris. He has with him Mr. Perrault and Mr. Jardine, Mr. Scott, and Colonel Gourdeau, of the board of commissioners. Professor Robertson was there for about a month on some work in connection with the cold storage exhibit. Professor Saunders will go over a little later to represent Canada at the Horticultural and Agricultural Conventions. Possibly Dr. Dawson may go over for a short time, though he does not wish to. We have, besides the commissioners, a number of employees, of whom I will give a list.

Mr. MONTAGUE. A list of the people he sent from Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have already given it to the House, but will give it again.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is Mr. Pinault on the list ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Pinault has no connection of any kind or shape with our commissioners in Paris.

Mr. MONTAGUE. His work was done in Boston.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know anything about his work. His name was never submitted to me by anybody in connection with the Paris exhibition.

Towards compiling historical data in regard to Canadian families in Canada.... $1,400

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Gaudet is doing that work. He was professor in St. Ann's College, and recommended very highly by a large number of Acadians and others, as being specially adapted for that work. A large petition, signed by members on both sides, was presented to the government asking that he be appointed. He has been at work for over a year. When appointed, he said he hoped to get through in about two years, but I have had a report since, saying that he has found a great deal more work than he expected, and it is quite possible he may not get through in that time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If this work is well done, I think the money will be well spent. All historical works, that fire our young people with patriotic feelings, is good work, but why should it be done for the Acadians and not for the United Empire Loyalists? It is well known that, perhaps, the noblest lot of settlers that ever came into Canada were the United Empire Loyalists. Large parts of the province of Ontario are full of information with regard to these pioneers, information that will not be available soon, as those who possess it are passing away. If the government are going to take up the work of collecting historical data, I do not think it could do better than to begin in Lincoln, Haldimand and Hamilton, for instance,—

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) is rather selfish.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, I was just going to say—or many other parts of Ontario, as well as Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, where information concerning the United Empire Loyalists is to be had.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman forgot to mention the province of Quebec in which also there are many United Empire Loyalists. In my own particular section of the eastern townships they form a large percentage of the population. The hon. gentleman's suggestion is one worthy of consideration, and, in the course of time, no doubt such a work will be undertaken.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If it is to be undertaken it should not be delayed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—and possibly before the end of this session, something may be heard of it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) read the work of Mr. Richard, on the Acadians. He is a pioneer in researches of this kind, and published a book, I believe, at his own expense, without subsidy from any government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where does the gentleman reside who is to do this work?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For some months he has been making his headquarters in Prince Edward Island. I believe he came from Shediac, and was professor in St. Anne's College.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How did the arrangement come about?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In consequence of a petition largely signed by leading Acadians asking that this work be undertaken and entrusted to this gentleman. Some of the officials in the college in which he had been employed took the initiative, I believe.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not wish to offer any objection; I am only anxious that the work should be well done, and I suggest that it should be carried into a wider field.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) might have suggested also that a similar work should be carried on amongst the loyal Indians on the banks of the Grand River.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not profess to make a judgment as to this gentleman's qualifications. I have the word of those who recommended him. He was recommended by a large number of leading men among these people, and their recommendations appeared to be in every way justified.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) mentions the Indians apparently without thinking of the feelings of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who parted with them so recently by reason of adopting the provincial franchise. However, I merely rise to say that we shall expect very definite information with respect to the item covering the creameries in the North-west, information as to the return payments.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will see that that is prepared.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As to the suggestion of the hon. member for Lincoln, I shall be quite satisfied to have the government spend some money in gathering the materials for the history of our Indian tribes. They deserved it, not only by reason of their original ownership of our soil, but because they fought for Britain in her time of trouble, and even recently there were two companies of Indians anxious to go to the Transvaal—members of the 27th Battalion.

Quarantine—Salaries and contingencies of organized districts and public health in other districts.....	$55,000

Mr. CLANCY. I did not understand the question of quarantine was to be taken up.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The latitude will be the same as in the case of the other item.

Mr. CLANCY. But I am afraid we shall have the latitude without much substance.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that I am going to ask for a supplementary vote for these organized districts for the current year, and there will be abundant opportunity to discuss everything in connection with that item.

Quarantine—Tracadie Lazaretto... .. $5,500

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the hon. minister decided with regard to the lepers of British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The question has not been opened lately except on questions of my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior). My hon. friend (Mr. Montague), who preceded me in office, knows that the British Columbia people have been asking to have these lepers taken over and dealt with by us. I have never been convinced that the government at Ottawa was called upon to do that, and have not acceded to the request. No new arguments have been given that would cause me to change my opinion.

Mr. PRIOR. I understand that there will be an opportunity later on to discuss this matter. On that understanding, I shall reserve what I have to say on the subject.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the cause of the increase of $300 in this vote ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A slightly increased allowance to the nuns who take charge of the lepers there. They have been asking for it for some time, and, in consequence of a report of the superintendent general of public health, I thought it wise that it should be given.

Cattle quarantine..... .. $30,000

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the minister if he has considered the question I brought up last year, namely, the question of making compensation partially or wholly where diseased herds have been slaughtered for tuberculosis ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The question to which my hon. friend alludes will come up on a special vote for tuberculosis. However, I may answer him by saying that he will remember that when this vote for tuberculosis was first granted by parliament there was a distinct understanding that it should not be used for payment of compensation. I have felt all along that the vote as placed on the statutes would be utterly inadequate if we once commenced to pay compensation anywhere. The vote would have to be increased probably at least twenty-fold, and I do not think parliament would be disposed to make that increase. Moreover, our experience in paying compensation for hog slaughter and the Pictou cattle disease, has not been such as to induce us to continue it.

Mr. CLANCY. I admit that this would entail probably a new charge upon the public purse, but it is something that the government will have to deal with. I am convinced that this is a very important service, and is entitled to a very considerable expenditure.

Carrying out the regulations concerning the health of employees on public works under the Public Works (Health) Act, 1899..... .. $5,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is going to spend this money ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose it is in my department. The regulations are drawn up, but no officers have been appointed. I may say that the medical superintendent will be Dr. Montizambert, the superintendent general of public health. In addition we will have to have some local officers on public works to examine and report to the Superintendent General of Public Health.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose the remuneration will be somewhat nominal, and there will be a considerable number ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have not yet organized the matter. But the remuneration will have to be adequate for the service performed, and no more.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it proposed to have any of the persons appointed take up their whole time ? If their whole time is employed, this vote would pay for a very limited number.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Without binding myself to a scheme, my present idea is to have, besides the Superintendent General of Public Health, some man who would be permanently employed to go about the country and examine the public works, a man who might be considered a representative of the labourers who are engaged on those public works. In addition to that it may be necessary to employ some local men temporarily from time to time upon a particular work. But the scheme has not been worked out in all its details yet.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not feel inclined to pass that item to-night. My own idea is that it is an absolute waste of the $5,000. I do not think the money spent in the way the hon. gentleman has outlined would do five cents worth of good. What are you going to do with one man going around the public works of this Dominion looking after the health of the employees ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He will see if the regulations that have been published are carried out. But we will let that item stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). While the House has done excellent work, I think in view of the great news which has been received of the surrender of Pretoria, the hon. gentlemen should be permitted to go out into the streets and join in the general festivities. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 31, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 171) respecting the Central Vermont Railway Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

POSTING PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved:

That for the remainder of the session the time for posting private Bills, under rule 60, be reduced to three days, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the eighteenth report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

THE TRACADIE LAZARETTO.

Mr. PRIOR asked:

1. Are the two cases of leprosy from Manitoba, and the one case from Nova Scotia being kept at the Tracadie Lazaretto at the expense of the Federal government, or are the provincial governments of Manitoba and Nova Scotia paying for their respective patients?

2. Were the transportation expenses of these lepers paid by the Federal government or by the provinces?

3. How much did the expenses of transportation and other expenses incidental thereto amount to?

4. Does the amendment to the Quarantine Act of 1872 apply equally to Nova Scotia, Manitoba and British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. Yes. 2. By the Federal government. 3. Total expenses, $1,497.65. 4. Yes.

THE STEAMER KATHLEEN.

Mr. TALBOT asked:

1. Does the department of Agriculture pay the salaries and board of the crew of steamer 'Kathleen' during the season and while doing quarantine service?

2. Does the department furnish the coal?

3. How many men will compose the crew?

4. What is the salary paid to each?

5. How much coal will be consumed per month?

6. How much is allowed for the board of each man?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. The department pays salaries, but not the board, of the crew of the steamer Kathleen. The men working on that steamer, not especially its crew, are engaged to do what work may be required of them in connection with the Grosse Isle quarantine station. 2. Yes. 3. There are three new men engaged at the quarantine station—one engineer, one stoker and one deck-hand. They are not the crew of the Kathleen, being engaged for other work. If more hands are required, they are taken off the quarantine steamer Challenger. 4. The pay is $60 per month to the engineer, $40 per month to the stoker, and $40 per month to the deck-hand, for eight months in the year. 5. The amount of coal consumed depends on the amount of work done by the vessel. 6. The men board themselves.

PURCHASES OF HORSES AND HAY FOR THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Bergeron) asked:

1. Who is performing Prof. Robertson's duties during his absence in Paris?

2. Are the purchases of horses and hay for the British government made through this official of the Dominion government?

3. Has the government any record of hay having been purchased from J. C. Malone, of Three Rivers? If so, what was the price paid for it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. Nobody in particular is doing Prof. Robertson's work here. The work in the department goes on as usual when Prof. Robertson may happen to be absent for a short time. 2. There were no purchases of horses by any official of the Dominion government for the Imperial government. The hay which was purchased by the department for the Imperial government, acting as the agent for that government, was managed by Prof. Robertson. The work was all finished before he left. 3. My department has no record of any hay having been purchased from J. C. Malone, of Three Rivers.

YUKON—INSTRUCTIONS TO MR. W. H. LYNCH.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What instructions were given to Mr. W. H. Lynch, referred to in Sessional Paper No. 80, 1899 ?
2. What is the date of his instructions ?
3. Where is the 'main report,' referred to in his letter of March 20, 1899, in above return ?
4. When will the government bring down the 'main report' in compliance with the order of this House of March 29, 1899 ?
5. How long was Mr. Lynch employed by the government in this connection ?
6. When did his services begin and when did they terminate ?
7. What remuneration, if any, did Mr. Lynch receive ?
8. Out of what vote or appropriation was he paid ?
9. Under what authority and by whose was Mr. Lynch engaged ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In reply to the first question, I beg to say that he was instructed to make a special study of the mining regulations and to report to the Minister of the Interior upon what he might consider to be necessary amendments to the mining law. 2. July 12, 1898. 3. The report has been mislaid, but I have asked for a copy. 4. As soon as a copy can be procured. 5. Seven months. 6. July 9, 1898, February 9, 1899. 7. Two hundred dollars per month and expenses. 8. Yukon Provisional District Association. 9. Under the authority of the Minister of the Interior.

THE PLAINS OF ABRAHAM.

Mr. MARCOTTE asked :

1. Has the government under consideration any application in relation to the purchase by the state of a property in the vicinity of Quebec known as the Plains of Abraham ?
2. By whom has the application been made ?
3. Is the government aware that the last battle fought, in 1759, between Generals Wolfe and Montcalm did not, as a matter of fact, take place on the tract of ground which the government are now asked to purchase ?
4. Is it the intention of the government to purchase the said property ?
5. If so, on what ground ?
6. For what purposes ?
7. What is the price asked, and the superficial area of the property ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government has received no application from any one offering to sell to the government, the property known as the Plains of Abraham, but representations have been made to us by several public bodies and several persons to purchase that property, which belongs to Les Dames Urselines at Quebec. This property contains about eighty-five arpents, and no price has been mentioned. The government are disposed to buy that property, if it can be had for a reasonable price, and make it a public park in commemoration of the great historic event.

THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With reference to the Royal Commission to investigate the electoral frauds, I said the other day that we were awaiting the return of the Minister of Justice before issuing the commission. I am sorry to say that my hon. colleague has not yet returned, but whether he is still further detained by illness or not, the commission shall issue Monday next.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Would the hon. gentleman furnish us with the names of the judges and the instructions given them, and the time when we may expect them to enter on the discharge of their duties ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think I could be called upon to give the instructions issued, because that is a matter on which we want the advice of the Minister of Justice. As to the names of the judges, they shall be given on Monday next.

PARIS EXPOSITION—SUNDAY CLOSING.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). I rose to ask a question yesterday, with reference to the closing of the Paris Exposition on Sunday, and was requested by the right hon. leader of the government to repeat my question when the hon. the Minister of Agriculture was in his place. On May 10, when this subject was brought before the House, the Minister of Agriculture said that the attempt of the government to secure the closing of the Canadian portion of the exhibit had been unavailing, that the matter was in the hands of the Imperial authorities, and that the action of the Imperial authorities in the premises had prevented the wishes of Canada being acceded to. This, of course, was an outcome greatly regretted by the Christian people of Canada. I have since received communications from many organizations of the Lord's Day Alliance, and others having to do with this matter, and when I saw, a few days ago, a report in the press that the Canadian exhibit would be closed on the Lord's Day, I felt very much relieved, and I rise for the purpose of asking whether the report is correct ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I am happy to be able to inform my hon. friend that the efforts which have been made by my hon. colleague (Mr. Tarte), the chief of the commissioners at Paris, for the Canadian government, have been successful, and the Canadian pavilion at the Paris exhibition will be closed on Sunday. The Canadian exhibit is in three parts—one in the Colonial building, specially erected for the colonies of the British Empire. That building is occupied most largely by Canada, and also contains an exhibit from Tasmania and Western Australia. That whole building will be closed. In addition the Canadian Commission has a building for the display of agricultural implements in the park at Vincennes. That building also will be closed on Sundays. In addition there are Canadian exhibits scattered throughout the general building, along with the exhibits of other parts of the British Empire. Those exhibits cannot be closed, as the buildings are under the control of the commissioners at Paris, and the individual exhibitors have no control, and nothing can be done. But I am glad to say that last Sunday the Colonial pavilion and the Canadian pavilion at Vincennes were closed, and will in future be closed on Sundays.

Mr. MONK. Are the buildings of the United Kingdom closed on Sunday—the British building proper?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are no British buildings proper in the exposition.

Mr. MONK. I mean the English exhibits.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The English exhibits are scattered through the general buildings, and those buildings will be open on Sundays.

SCHOONER JAMES BECKWYTH.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the hon. the Minister of Marine a question in connection with an inquiry I put to him on Monday last, concerning the schooner James Beckwyth. The fishing bounty was withheld from that schooner, for some reasons or other, by the department in 1899. The owners are William Levesconte and Sons than which there is not a more reputable or respected firm doing business in the lower provinces. The application for the bounty was regular in every respect. It was sworn to, and all the regulations prescribed by the department were complied with. The time in which vessels are required to be engaged in fishing before they can get the bounty was fully occupied by that schooner. The owners were somewhat surprised that the bounty should have been withheld, and I put the following question upon Monday last:

1. Was fishing bounty paid the schooner 'James Beckwyth,' of River Bourgeois, owned by William Levesconte and Sons, for the season 1899?

2. If not, why has the bounty been withheld?

The minister said:

To the first question the answer is 'no,' and to the second question the answer is: Because she was not engaged the length of time in fishing required by law.

The length of time is three months. That she was engaged in fishing for that length of time is sworn to by the master and corroborated by the statement of the owner, Mr. Levesconte, who is known to me and whose word will be accepted wherever he is known. I asked the minister if he had a report from his officers to the effect that she had not been engaged the length of time in fishing required by the law and his reply in effect was that he had. I asked if he would bring down the report, and he said he would inform me the following day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No.

Mr. GILLIES. I will read the answer:

Mr. GILLIES. Will the minister give me an answer to-morrow whether that report will be laid on the Table or not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not a promise to bring it down.

Mr. GILLIES. I did not say the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) promised to bring it down; I said he promised to inform me the next day whether it would be brought down or not. I wrote a note to the minister across the floor of the House asking whether he could tell if the report would be brought down. I did not get the information I sought, and the matter seemed to have escaped the hon. gentleman's memory. I reminded him of it yesterday, and he said he did not know whether the report would be brought down or not. I would like to know whether the report will be laid on the Table, and I cannot see any reason why it should not. The master has made a sworn statement and all the regulations of the department have been complied with; yet, in the face of that the department is withholding the bounty to which this vessel is entitled.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can only say that I am not yet in position to state positively whether I will bring down the report or not. It is a confidential report on which action may have to be taken. I may have to consult the Department of Justice as to whether action should be taken or not. I have not had an opportunity to consult with Mr. Kent, the head of the fishing bounty bureau yet; and, until I have had an opportunity of consulting with him and, possibly, with the Minister of Justice, I cannot say whether the report will be brought down or not.

Mr. GILLIES. I do not appreciate the position taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. However, I will await a few days the action of the minister. I hope he will see his way to bring down the report. So doing cannot prejudice him in the least degree even if he takes the step which he indicates it may be necessary for him to take.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That remains to be seen.

PAYMENT OF SESSIONAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldmand). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if he has arranged anything in connection with the amounts due to the House of Common staff?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, I cannot report any arrangement as made. Yesterday, I sent for the Auditor General; and he assured me that there was no foundation for the impression that, so far as he was concerned, there was any discrimination between the Senate staff and that of the House of Commons. He did not seem willing to agree to the arrangement for payment that had been suggested, but he said he would put me in possession of a memorandum on the subject, which I hope to receive before this sitting is over. At present, I cannot give the House any assurance that the amounts will be paid until we can get a Bill through.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the minister state of his own knowledge that the Senate employees who are in the same position as members of our own staff have not been paid?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but the Auditor General assured me—though I did not need his assurance—that, so far as he was concerned, he made no discrimination but is treating both the Senate and House of Commons alike. There may have been found some other means which I do not quite understand by which the Senate employees are paid. Some time during the present sitting, I hope to have the Auditor General's memorandum which will explain the matter.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House do in resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, the rejoicing throughout the empire to-day brings many happy thoughts to the minds of Her Majesty's subjects. Perhaps, I may be forgiven if I break in upon that manifestation of feeling in view of the resolution that I propose to lay in your hands, as it relates to an evil which, as manifested elsewhere, was one of the causes that brought about the conflict of arms in South Africa. In that connection there is an unfortunate comparison to be made, not wholly to our advantage, with the government under the auspices of the present administration in a portion of Her Majesty's Dominions controlled by us. I need dwell on that aspect of the case but briefly, because we have threshed out on the floor of this House many of the conditions obtaining in the Yukon territory. Unfortunately many of the evils, as I believe, still exist. I will call attention to a criticism made by a gentleman who went to South Africa and investigated the causes and effects of the war there. Mr. J. A. Hobson, in a very impartial work reviewing the causes of the war, refers to the incompetency and corruption of a considerable part of the officials as among the grievances of the Outlanders, and said:

Set, in many of the most important and lucrative places, having no intention to live permanently in the country, they acted as officials have always acted under such circumstances—they sought at once to satisfy a lust for power and to feather their nests.

And, further, at page 79, he makes some observations the application of which will be understood as reaching beyond the continent of Africa:

But that a widespread practice, and even system, of corruption, largely by direct money bribes and blackmail, prevailed among minor officials, could not be questioned. The difficulty was to discover how widespread it is. On this head, the evidence I got was not vague, but perfectly definite, and given in many instances by men whose statements I did not doubt. I am inclined to believe that among the officials on the Rand, the secretaries and clerks in offices concerned with legal documents, the inspectors connected with mining and other industries, the police and detective services, and others, there was a wide prevalence of corruption. A good deal of this was of a comparatively venial character. For instance, a business man often told me that he could not get a matter of legal form pushed through without bribing at every turn; but on closer examination, it appeared that the payment of money was to induce celerity, or, in most instances, priority of attention, not to procure such official assistance or assent as ought not to be given at all. The Johannesburg business man was in a hurry, and had plenty of money, and was wont to spend it freely in getting what he wanted. The Boer official was naturally, and after due education, purposely slow; hence, a practice grew up of quickening the pace of official business by private presents. There is reason to believe that this form of habitual corruption was confined to the mining business of the Rand.

Now, the correspondent of the London Times paid a visit to the Yukon district; and the impression formed by the correspondent of that leading journal, for whatever it was worth, was, perhaps, more unfavourable than the impression formed by Mr. Hobson in the case of South Africa. I refer now to a statement of one of the most moderate of the critics who has passed any opinion upon the charges I ventured to prefer in this House against the Canadian administration, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). He might be excused on the plea of ignorance, because it is impossible to believe that the Minister of Finance had ever read, let alone listened to, the charges that I ventured to put in evidence, when he ventured to make a statement in New Glasgow, in the county I have the honour to represent, on November 28, 1899, on this subject, in which he observes, referring to myself:

His attempt to impress the country that he believed that there was any serious wrongdoing in the Yukon, has proved a total failure. The universal verdict to-day, after the long speeches of Sir Hibbert on them, is that it was a case of much ado about nothing.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, the hon. gentlemen who so readily shout 'hear, hear,' and give their assent to that statement, will, I think, be not so ready to give that shout when I have finished the speech that I propose to make on only one aspect of these serious charges. The speech to which the Minister of Finance referred was undoubtedly long, but my excuse is a reasonable one, and ought to satisfy reasonable men, that the crimes and misdemeanours committed under the auspices, and almost with the direct and open countenance of this government in the Yukon, have been many, and no man could attempt to deal with them in a short speech if he proposed to cover to any extent the ground. And so, in order to accommodate my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, I propose to direct his attention to only one of the charges which he treated so lightly, and to ask him, and to ask his colleagues, and the gentlemen sitting behind him, who just interrupted me, whether they are prepared to say before the people of this country that in their serious opinion, even in connection with only one of these charges, there has been much ado about nothing.

Before coming immediately to that point it is only right that I should deal with another criticism that the Minister of Finance took from the Toronto Globe. It appears that a gentleman in the Yukon had published a correspondence that he had with me, and that he was a United States citizen, and expressed surprise that I should have written to him for information. The Minister of Finance—it is true it was an after dinner speech, is only fair I should say so—went thus far, referring to myself:

From every possible quarter where he thought information could be obtained he solicited it, not hesitating even to ask citizens of the United States to give testimony against the government of his own country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is not treating me fairly, for the Minister of Finance is unable to give the slightest evidence, because it would be wholly contrary to the fact, that I ever solicited evidence, that I ever endeavoured to place myself in the position of a private detective. But the evidence was borne in upon me to such an extent, living in a certain part of the Dominion, coming in contact with men who knew that country, who had spent their money and a great portion of their time in it, it was impossible for me not to sympathize with them, and not to do, as I felt it was my duty to do, under the circumstances, on the floor of this House, to ventilate their grievances. In connection with the correspondence to which he refers, there was a Mr. Morgan. I did not know his nationality nor did I care, but one of my informants told me that Mr. R. J. Morgan, of the city of Dawson, could give valuable information concerning the maladministration by the government of that territory. I wrote to that gentleman, and he, for reasons best known to himself, wrote back and expressed surprise that I should write to him, a colonel in the United States army and a citizen of that great country, to obtain information against the government of my own. Now, it is only right, since the public have had this letter, and since the Minister of Finance has attached such importance to it, that I should give my answer. On the 6th of September, 1899, I wrote to Mr. Morgan as follows:

R. J. Morgan, Esq.,
Dawson City, N.W.T.

Dear Sir,—I have to acknowledge your letter of the 31st July last received by me yesterday, for which I am obliged, and I am glad to observe that your experience in Dawson has been so pleasant.

I note your expression of surprise in receiving a letter from me asking you for information touching the maladministration of public affairs in the Yukon district, and I regret that at this moment I am unable to give you the name of the person who referred me to you; but I may say that I was not aware that you were an officer of the United States army, nor did I know that you were a foreigner. I may add, however, that these considerations would not have deterred me from seeking information at your hands. In this country foreigners are not regarded as incredible witnesses either in our courts or before Commissions of parliament.

I may give an additional reason for considering these men as much entitled to be heard as the reason I have given from the speech of the Minister of Finance at New Glasgow, the fact that a great majority of the miners in that district have not been citizens of Canada, but they have been foreigners, and of course, in regard to any facts there of public notoriety, they would naturally be found among the list of witnesses in any event.

But I want to refer to a gentleman that was, perhaps, the sole reliance of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) last session, in order to convince the Minister of Finance that he has not treated me fairly if he had ever followed the debate of last session. Instead of there being much ado about nothing, whether he considered the charges I made were exaggerated or not, he will recollect, I am sure, that a Mr. Treadgold was one of the chief witnesses, if not the only witness, who was called by the Minister of the Interior to justify the course of the government, and to rebut the assumption that might be made from the facts I had brought forward. To-day I asked a question concerning this gentleman, and the government ordered it to stand, but I received this copy as a member of parliament from the Department of the Interior, this pamphlet published in 1899, price 50 cents. I have not the slightest doubt that when the Minister of the Interior is able to overtake that question he will inform this House that Mr. Treadgold has received a large amount of Canadian money since he became the only witness for the Minister of the Interior in connection with the administration of the Yukon. But even in that pamphlet, if you turn to pages 75 and 76, you will find that Mr. Treadgold not only admits there were real grievances, but gives the most positive contradiction to that light and airy statement of the Minister of Finance. It is headed in large type: 'The genuine grievances of the Klondike.' Mr. Treadgold points out the following respects in which that district has been misgoverned:

1. Unequal taxation. (The miner pays nearly all the taxes—he was the easiest to tax, &c.)
2. Want of publicity of claim records. (Every miner should be able to see what claims have been recorded in the district and that with as little delay as possible.)
3. Want of surveyors, following with a criticism on that point.
4. Certain obvious defects in the mining laws.
5. Want of roads.
6. Want of adequate mail service.
7. Want of recording officials on every creek.

This, he says, is a 'formidable list of grievances,' and those hon. gentlemen who followed me last year will remember that I argued from what had happened, from the other testimony brought forward, that it was this disorderly condition of the public offices, this want of publicity of the public records, this crowding of officers during office hours, that enabled the officers of the government in that country to commit the serious abuses they undoubtedly did commit, and to more than double and treble the salaries that were paid to them by the government out of the people who dealt with them. You will find in support of my statements that the hon. Minister of the Interior relied largely on this witness. You will find in Hansard of last year, what he said in regard to him, and the great importance attached to the statement of Mr. Treadgold was due to the allegation that he had no pecuniary interest in making these statements. There was no reward for doing it, but, unless I am greatly mistaken, and the government can correct that in this debate, Treadgold, whatever he had obtained before he made these statements in this pamphlet for the benefit of the government, was paid after he made these statements, as were also nearly all of the men who had been used to whitewash the record of the government. Mr. Ogilvie was paid, and handsomely paid, after he had gone through that farce of the so-called Royal Commission. Mr. Clement for backing him up and for bullying the witnesses, was handsomely rewarded after the work had been done, and so it was with Treadgold. In that connection I asked a question about W. H. Lynch. He does not seem to have been so handsomely treated. His report does not seem to have been paraded before the House, it has not been at any time, and yet, strange to say, this gentleman was commissioned to go into the Yukon, and he went into the Yukon. He had reported before the hon. Minister of the Interior made his speech last year, and when the order of this House passed directing that we should be put in possession of his report, to see what the impressions were of this paid officer of the government, all the government have so far brought down to the House is a skeleton of that report. This shows on its face that it is only supplementary to the main report. There is a mystery about the main report, it has apparently gone astray, it has not been produced, and all that has been produced is simply a code of mining regulations, which Mr. Lynch explains in the return are to be read in connection with his main report. That report of an officer of the government who was sent up to perform an important duty at an important time would be most valuable for the information of the House, and yet, a year has gone by since the House requested its production. Its absence, I claim, is very significant. In order not to pain the sensitiveness of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), not to weary him with a long speech, not to weary him with all the charges I have, and I have, unfortunately, a long list of charges, I propose to deal with one of the charges in the light of the evidence in the hands of the government, in the light of the returns on the Table of the House, in the absence of all that assistance I asked, in the absence of that co-operation that this government, at the public expense, so quickly granted to the hon. Minister of the Interior when he was not a member of this House, in the absence of the assistance of Mr. Howell, and of all the Grit lawyers of Winnipeg, in the absence of all the detectives who swarmed over the province of Manitoba to fish for evidence. I want the hon. Minister of Finance particularly to consider some of the facts connected with the direct and explicit charge made on my own responsibility last session, and to say whether he would venture to tell the House, in connection with that one, for example, that there was much ado about nothing. I am not proposing to take up one charge and not to run away from the others, but I am proposing merely to meet the views of the hon. Minister of Finance and those who think with him, to take up one at a time. I will follow this motion with other resolutions, in which I will show this House, that, without the advantages that I think I was fairly entitled to, there is much to make the country and the House ponder, and to consider whether the government were wise in their extraordinary treatment of most of these notorious facts last session. I had received this information in regard to an important matter; I had received information that Major Walsh, the commissioner appointed by this government, had gone into that country under a government commission, that he had used his power largely to exploit the Yukon for the benefit of himself and his family, that, at the public expense, at the cost and charges of the people of the country, he had taken a staff, composed of Indians and cooks, men whose services he could use in a rough country, that instead of these men going simply to discharge, under his supervision, the duties for which they were paid by this country, he took advantage of them, and indirectly entered into grub-staking agreements with many of them, that he not only did that, but, in order to carry out his fell purpose and design, he violated the laws of the country, that he made changes utterly without authority in regard to one of the most valuable creeks and localities in order to play into the hands of those who were really his servants paid by us. I had such definite information that I made a definite charge, to which I will refer in a moment. But, let me give you in some succinct form, the very serious statement made of what I know to be facts, from the public records, as to Major Walsh's illegal action in closing Dominion Creek. This statement came to me from a reliable source. It is as follows:

In September, 1897, Walsh took from Fort William, at the head of Lake Superior, six Indians of the Fort William Mission Band, in charge of a head voyageur, whose name was Coreytte.

The Indians stayed until October, 1898, when they were sent home at the expense of the government. This was according to the terms of their engagement. They each took up a mining claim—

These claims were on Dominion Creek. This is in advance of the returns, to which I will refer, in advance of the other facts, but it was borne in upon my conviction that it was a very serious charge, and one in which there was enough to warrant me in bringing it before the House.

They each took up a mining claim, and according to the best information, claims were on Dominion Creek. On the same information, these claims were taken by Major Walsh in the names of the Indians, who transferred them after their arrival home, to Lewis Walsh, a brother of the Major's. Lewis Walsh and Phillip Walsh another brother left for Fort William to exploit these claims about May 10, 1899. Phillip Walsh is said to be in the employ of the Dominion government. A large quantity of camping outfit, such as bags, blankets, furs, &c., were taken by the two brothers, and according to information, these were purchased by the Department of the Interior.

Before we go to the most extraordinary system of accounting, I want the House to observe that the charge was made in as small a form as possible and as direct. I charged:

That Major Walsh, while acting as chief executive officer of the Canadian government in the Yukon, was guilty of the crime of misbehaviour in office.

That Major Walsh was guilty of doing acts directly contrary to the design of his office as chief executive officer of the Dominion government.

That in September, 1897, Major Walsh employed six Indians from Fort William Mission Band, upon an engagement to send them home in October, 1898, at the expense of the government of Canada. That Phillip Walsh, a brother of the said Major Walsh, and employed by the government, was in charge of the said Indians (Return to Senate, March 17, 1898, No. 38B). That these Indians located and recorded mining claims for and on behalf of Major Walsh. On the return of the Indians these claims were transferred to Lewis Walsh, another brother of Major Walsh; and Lewis Walsh and Phillip Walsh, aforesaid, left Fort William on or about May 10, 1899, to look after the said claims.

There is no one in this House who has ever said that that was not a serious charge, there is no one in this House who has ever said that it was not a specific charge, there is no one in this House who has ventured to say that if there was truth in that charge it was not a most disgraceful condition of things in connection with the administration of affairs in the Yukon. The Minister of the Interior has never said that. The public accounts of this Dominion show that all the time they were in that country, the wages of these Indians and others were paid by the people of Canada. The wages of the men were increased when they became useful. Their wages were increased after they had reported claims for the Walsh family. They went in at comparatively low wages, but after they had served the purposes of the Walsh family their wages were in many cases nearly doubled. In the public accounts of this Dominion for 1898, we find the names of J. Collin and S. Collin and S. Serret, and it is quite clear from the accounts that Collin is sometimes called Callum. I find the Collin boys entered for salary from September 25, 1897, to September 25, 1898, and Ambrose Seret, in the same way. It is true they are not quite to October, but from August to a late date in September. The Minister of the Interior has been often asked questions by me in this House, and his answers do not always agree. Those who care to look at the returns, and in the answers given to the House will find that in some returns these Collin or Callum boys appear as guides, and in others as packers, and so on. From a statement by the minister in the Hansard of February, 1898, we find that Carbeno was employed as Major Walsh's cook at $600 a year. After Carbeno had grub-staked for the Walsh family, Louis Walsh and Phil Walsh, and under the direction of the major, Carbeno's salary went up from $600 to $1,200 a year, which was paid by the people of this country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When were the agreements signed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will come to that later. There is only one grub-staking agreement in evidence, and there is no contradiction of this evidence, that with Marcil and the other Indians there were similar agreements with Louis Walsh, and this agreement was signed on the steamer where the Minister of the Interior was when he was going up to that country. But remark that it is dated Port Arthur; it is ante-dated, and it was signed by order of Major Walsh, and as the evidence shows these men were paid by increased wages, and the only complaint Carbeno makes is that he was promised $125 a month and only got $100. That is an extraordinary feature in connection with the evidence which is in my possession. In the Hansard of April, 1891, page 871, you will find authority for the statement that Carbeno's salary went from $600 to $1,200. This year again in Hansard, there is a statement in regard to all these drivers and packers and cooks. At page 161, we have some more information from departmental sources, which says:

Philip Walsh entered service 25th September, 1897, at $60 a month; and left 31st August, 1898, when his salary was $100 a month. No extra allowances were paid apart from actual travelling and living expenses. (b) Louis Carbeno entered service 25th September, 1897, at $60 a month;

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

he is still in the service; his allowance for living expenses is $100 a month. (c) Two men named respectively E. V. and M. McBeth were employed as dog drivers. The former was employed in December, 1897, and January, 1899. His pay was $40 a month. The latter was employed from the 13th January, 1898, until the 13th March, 1899. His pay was at first $40 a month, but was increased to $45. Both received rations. (d) There is no record of boys by the name of Callum being employed; but two Indians named Isaac and Simon Collin were employed by Major Walsh from the 25th September, 1897, to the 25th September, 1898. They were both paid at the rate of $1 a day except during the months of May and June, 1898,—

There we come to what will be referred to later; the grub-staking time:

—when they received $10 each in addition to the $1 a day, and the months of July and August, 1898—

After they had grub-staked for the major's family:

—when they were paid at the rate of $40 a month instead of $1 a day. Their living was provided.

Again, in view of the susceptibilities of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), I must hurry on. I come to the place in which this company exploited, for it is important to remember where these people were proven to have operated. Dominion Creek is one of the most valuable spots in the whole of the interesting gold country. If any one doubts that I quote the authority of Mr. Treadgold, the authority of the Minister of the Interior, who in that little pamphlet apparently published at the public expense, says at page 30:

As already proved to be, in places, rich, we may accept Bonanza, Eldorado, Hunker, Bear, Gold Bottom, Dominion, Sulphur Creeks; and there are about 75 miles of gravels of varying width in these creeks, at any point in which rich pay may be expected, though not always found. Bonanza has been most worked, Sulphur least.

On Dominion the few claims at work showed an average of not less than two ounces per cubic yard, over an area of gravel nowhere less than 120 feet wide.

On the proved creeks (Gold Bottom, Bonanza, Eldorado, Bear, Hunker, Sulphur, Dominion) we may allow about 75 miles of auriferous gravel out of a staked length of about 120 miles on these same creeks.

In the report of Mr. R. G. McConnell, an officer of the Canadian Geological Survey; that very interesting preliminary report of the Klondike gold fields of the Yukon district, published at the Printing Bureau, I find at page 36 there is the following:

Mining has been greatly hampered by the excessive freight rates and consequent high cost of supplies and machinery, and the net product of the creek during the past season proved somewhat disappointing, notwithstanding the large gross output. A good wagon road has now, however, been constructed by the government, and prices will no doubt in future be materially reduced.

It is strange—from my standpoint it is not strange—but from the standpoint of any doubter it is strange that of all the places closed from location to the public; closed to the hardy miners who had worked their way into that country braving all the dangers of climate and travel; Dominion Creek was the only one on which Major Walsh put his hand in that illegal manner, contrary to the law of the land. In answer to a question put by me in the House of Commons, it was stated that Dominion Creek was the only locality closed in this way of which there is any record in the Department of the Interior. The creek was so closed by order of Major Walsh on the 15th of November, 1897. In the case of Nelson & Donnelly, which has been heard before the Minister of the Interior here, one of the officers, R. B. Craig, a clerk in the office of the gold commissioner in the Yukon district, who has been there since July, 1897, gives this testimony:

Q. Do you know Dominion Creek?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any order issued by the gold commissioner closing this creek to the public?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the closing of the creek?—A. No further records would be received on the creek.

Q. Was it a written or verbal order?—A. Verbal, so far as I know.

Q. Tell us what that order ordered?—A. My instructions from the commissioner were that I was to receive no documents pertaining to Dominion Creek from Upper Discovery to 120 below Lower Discovery.

Q. What date was this order?—A. Middle or end of November, 1897.

Now, while he got his order from the commissioner, who was Mr. Fawcett? Mr. Fawcett under oath has explained, as we shall see later on, that he got his order as to the hills and benches of the creek from the commissioner, that is, from Major Walsh, and he protested against the action in the interest of the public. He protested until he was severely reprimanded by Major Walsh, as the sworn evidence proves. It had no effect, however, because there was a reason, which was transparent all through, for the action of Major Walsh, and we shall see what it was. It is difficult to deal with this case unless we deal also with the case of Mrs. Koch, who, Mr. Fawcett swore, was a personal friend of Major Walsh. The Minister of the Interior has endeavoured to belittle that case, and make out that there has been much about nothing. What did the Minister of the Interior tell us in regard to the Koch case? Having in mind that that creek was closed, so that no location could be made upon it legally, as was believed, and no record of any location could be kept in the office after the 15th of November, 1897, it is almost incredible, but it is in no way contradicted by the Minister of the Interior, that this woman, a keeper of a restaurant, a personal friend of Major Walsh, was able not merely to obtain a personal and formal permit from the gold commissioner to go in and locate on this creek, which was closed to the whole public, but Major Walsh, knowing that she had got a permit and that the public could not get one, knowing that he had ordered the public to be refused, never attempted to have it cancelled, and under that permit she got a claim. With that serious case proved so that it could never successfully be contradicted, let us see what the Minister of the Interior said, and what Mr. Ogilvie, so closely connected with it, was bold enough to report. On page 6150 and 6151 of Hansard, of 1899, you will find what the Minister of the Interior said:

After a careful examination of the evidence, I say that with regard to that transaction, there is nothing in the evidence that shows complicity or impropriety on the part of any one, not the least. Here is a woman who, like other people there, was trying to get ahead of every one else. They all knew about this Dominion Creek; they were all trying to get claims, and the Indian servant overheard Major Walsh talking about it; the news leaked out; this woman got the permit from Mr. Fawcett, and Mr. Fawcett admits he was wrong in giving it. But where is the suggestion of dishonesty? Is there a suggestion that Major Walsh profited by that claim being registered? Is there a suggestion that Mr. Fawcett profited by it? And if they did not, and if it is not suggested, where is the question of dishonesty? Here is simply a question of official information leaking out to a servant, and of a mistake being made by an officer such as might happen under any circumstances or at any time, by the most honest officer in the world.

Now, there is the minister's statement, the best that can be said about the evidence to which I will direct your attention. I want to go further and show what the Minister of the Interior's commissioner says about that case while we are at it. At page 8, of Mr. Ogilvie's report, in return 87, he says:

The evidence shows that Mr. Fawcett misunderstood this woman, who didn't at the time she applied for the permit use very good English. The act of granting the permit was, we will admit, improper, but there was nothing to show that Mr. Fawcett in any way benefited by it, or any of his friends, Mrs. Koch being an utter stranger to him.

That is all that this commissioner says in relation to that transaction. There is not an intelligent man in this House or anywhere in the country who will read that evidence and consider that Mr. Ogilvie was attempting to do his duty when he ventured to conceal in that report the extraordinary reflection on the conduct of Major Walsh in this matter, whatever might be said about Mr. Fawcett—and his administration in that connection was most lax; but, according to the evidence, Mr. Fawcett was bullied from day to day by Major Walsh in this Dominion Creek matter; and when this woman came and whispered to him that by order of Major Walsh she should get the permit, she got it. But, why was she permitted to keep that permit? Why was it not cancelled? Why did she tell Major Walsh that she had it? And with his knowledge she staked a claim and got it, and enjoyed the fruits of that advantage. It is a thing not explained, and not dwelt upon by this most extraordinary commissioner. Now let us see some of the evidence, which both Mr. Ogilvie and the Minister of the Interior overlooked in dealing with this matter, which is so closely connected with the subject in hand. Mr. Fawcett tells us that Mrs. Koch came to him on May 7. In the evidence quoted on page 5984 of Hansard of 1899, Mr. Fawcett said:

I told her to bring me a written order from Major Walsh saying that a permit should be granted. I had had time to think the matter over a little. Major Walsh came down a few minutes later, and he said: 'Did you give Mrs. Koch a permit?' I replied: 'She came and told me you said she was to have a permit.' He says: 'I will have to get it from her; we will have to appoint a time for the issuing of these permits, and there will have to be public notice given.'

That is what he said to Mr. Fawcett. He knew he could get the permits back. If this thing had been obtained improperly, if this woman had lied to Mr. Fawcett, the permit was not worth the paper it is written on, and Major Walsh had his remedy. But instead of having the permit cancelled, this woman was allowed to retain it.

Then the woman Koch was examined and testified:

I heard in my restaurant the Dominion would be thrown open, and it would be a good thing to stake. Everybody had the fever at the time, so I got it too. I made up my mind to go and try and get a claim on Dominion. On the morning of June 28, word was sent me very early in the morning by Dr. Arrabella Merrill, 'I shall not go out without a permit. It needs a permit.' Do I have to tell who sent the news? It was from the Indian of Major Walsh, Ambrose Serett.

Serett was one of the grub stakers for the major, who grub staked under great advantage.

He heard the major talking in the tent over it—

I am reading from the evidence quoted in Hansard, of 1899, column 5985:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

So I went to the office and asked where the gold commissioner was.

Q. Mr. Fawcett, you mean?—A. Yes.

She told the major's brother that she had the permit. She said to him:

See what I have got. He opened it and said: Where did you get it from? I told him I went to the gold commissioner and he gave it to me.

Then again:

So I got a letter written to the major.

In that letter she gives the major a chance to take the permit back.

If it is wrong or any trouble, he will please take back his permit, but if it is possible and he can help a poor woman along, he should let me have a permit, but if it makes any trouble to send for it by eight o'clock. If not, I will go to Dominion and stake—

She acted with honesty at this stage.

—and then after I stake, I will fight for it. So I went over on Dominion and staked.

This evidence shows that this claim was recorded, and that though Major Walsh had the opportunity, he dared not take the permit back. He dared not interfere with that woman's desire in that connection, when she was simply one of those enjoying extraordinary favours through his illegal and improper course all through.

At page 5987 of the same Hansard, we will see what Craig, the witness, to whom I have already referred, said on this point:

Q. Do you remember Major Walsh coming to me that morning after the lady came for the permit?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect what he said?—A. He said he thought that the most simple solution of the difficulty would be to issue permits for a specific time for parties to prospect—something to that effect.

I need not comment on that. Again:

Q. Do you know of any understanding between Mr. Fawcett and Mrs. Koch about this permit, why it was given?—A. Not unless it was given on Major Walsh's suggestion?

Q. Have you any reason to know it was given on his suggestion?—A. I know Major Walsh came to the office to see Mr. Fawcett shortly before this lady came back the second time.

So that with every opportunity, with an offer from the woman to give the permit up, Major Walsh allowed this permit to be used, contrary to the rules enforced and the orders given to the rest of the public.

In connection with this, and coming immediately to the subject in hand, we find that after that creek had been closed against the public, a meeting of the council, that we understand something about, took place. At that meeting a resolution was passed on June 27, 1898, and on the 30th, notice was given publicly that Dominion Creek would be open on July 11, 1898, so that any one in Dawson, who intended to go to that valuable district, could go to other parts of the territory in the meantime, understanding that if he were up by July 11, that would be time enough, and the only time when he could obtain his location, and take up his claim. But on July 8, there was a notice cancelling this announcement and declaring that the place would be opened on July 8, three days before the date of the last notice, saying it would open on the 11th. On that date, July 8, this notice was sent down by one of the policemen or guides to be printed, and on the evening of the 8th, before it was published, this man, under the employ of the government, or under agreement with the Walshs, started out for Dominion Creek. There is evidence to show that the secret leaked out and that other people started for the creek also. Then we have the evidence of Louis Carbeno. If any one will take the trouble of studying that evidence carefully, be he a lawyer or layman, he will find it impossible to exculpate Mr. Ogilvie from the most transparent favouritism shown, due to his connection by marriage to the Minister of the Interior, and from an open desire to shield the Department of the Interior at all hazards. I will have, however, on another occasion, something to say about Mr. Ogilvie and the manner in which he discharged his duty.

But I want to point out that here is an officer of the government, Mr. Fawcett—no ordinary man on the street who had a suspicion of Major Walsh merely, but a man who had served under Major Walsh—calling Carbeno to prove the whole of this corruption. Carbeno was examined by Fawcett without the slightest assistance of any kind from Mr. Ogilvie or his so-called legal adviser, Mr. Clement. He was called by Mr. Fawcett, and never questioned by the commissioner on points on which he should have been interrogated. For instance, there were bills of sale, and not one of them put in evidence. There was nothing followed up, nothing in the way of a searching inquiry, though Mr. Fawcett had produced this man and examined him. But notwithstanding that, there came out some facts to which you will find no reference in the report of Mr. Ogilvie. He shuts his eye to all this connection of Major Walsh in the Koch case, and to this extraordinary traffic with employees and Indians at the public expense and to the advantage of his family. Not a line in the two reports of Mr. Ogilvie, will you find on that subject. With that evidence there, produced by the gold commissioner, there is not an attempt to palliate it by any one from any quarter. Here is Carbeno's evidence. This man went out on the 8th, and staked a claim in the morning of the 9th. He went out to the creek late in the evening of the 8th, and staked his claim on the 9th. He went out with the Collum boys and Marcil, and they had the same contract as he had with Lewis Walsh. This agreement, which some hon. gentlemen have asked about, is found at page 259 of the evidence :

Port Arthur, Sept. 23, 1897.

This agreement, made this day, between Lewis Walsh, known as the party of the first part, and Louis Carbeno, of the town of Brockville, known as the party of the second part.

Witness that in consideration of the party of the first part furnishing the party of the second part with an outfit, and paying all expenses necessary for the working of any claim that the party of the second part may discover or take up in the Yukon district, in the North-west Territories, the party of the second part hereby agrees to give to the party of the first part a one undivided three-quarter interest in the said claim, reserving to himself a one-quarter interest.

LEWIS WALSH.
LOUIS CARBENO.

Witness.

PHIL. WALSH.

Instead of being at Port Arthur, the witness, who is uncontradicted, says that he was ordered by Major Walsh to sign that agreement on the Quadra, as she was on her way up the Pacific coast toward Dawson. The Collum boys and the Indian Marcil had similar agreements. Major Walsh's brother told Carbeno that the creek was to be opened. That is uncontradicted. That claim was turned over, if you please, Mr. Speaker, to Phil Walsh, and a bill of sale, which is not in evidence, but which he says he has, is referred to in court. The witness says: 'Major Walsh told me to make that bill of sale to Phil.' That is not the agreement. He is asked: 'Why did you make that transfer?' And the answer is: 'Major Walsh told me to.' Major Walsh, through the whole business, was using the names of his brothers. He went up to that country using these men as his tools. And what do we next find? I am not surprised at it, in view of the protection that he has received from the government. He is found openly trafficking in the advantages which he gained by his position. When Carbeno was asked why he signed such an agreement, he said that he had to sign it in order to go as cook and get $100 a month instead of $60. He was promised $125; but his reasons for making a fool of himself was to keep his place and get $100 a month.

Mr. McINERNEY. And he was threatened that if he did not sign he would be sent back on the next boat.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As my hon. friend suggested, he says that he was threatened to be sent home on the next boat if he did not do it. And that man is still in the employ of the government. Apparently, they dare not touch him, or there will be more trouble for the Walsh people. And so we have the rush to that creek of the Walsh entourage, including Mrs. Koch, who was a friend of Major Walsh. And we have no report on that nefarious transaction. If Carbeno is worthy of the slightest credence, if he is not simply a blackmailer under oath, how is it that Mr. Ogilvie never refers to his testimony in his report, never says anything about this agreement. And if you look at the order in council of August 17, 1897, you find that this government directed—and it was one of the conditions of the appointment—directed Major Walsh to report to the government from time to time on all these matters of public concern. And all the reports of Major Walsh have been brought down, so the government says; and you will not find a syllable from the pen of Major Walsh in regard to any of these transactions, explaining, for instance, why he closed this creek, opened it again, closed it again and opened it again, so that he could let this gang in ahead of others, to his own advantage and the advantage of his family. There is not a report in regard to this matter of policy, though his duty, according to the formal terms of the order in council required him to report on such matters fully. Now, in his last report, with the evidence he has referred to before him, Mr. Ogilvie ventured to say this:

How did these rumours stated become to be so generally credited? In reply, I may state that there is a large percentage of the population here who are watching for a chance to make something. If they are forestalled by some one else—

And then he goes on to invent a theory for there being a general feeling in the community for these charges getting started; and so, he endeavours to minimize the feeling in this case by putting the query, how it is that these things start. To show the position in which this gentleman found himself, it is only necessary to look at page 163 of the unrevised Hansard of this session. I am not hitting below the belt—I have commented before on his connection with the Minister of the Interior, and the minister's responsibility for all these actions on the part of his employees, and have pointed out the reasons which should have made it impossible for any self-respecting government to put a man in the position in which they put Mr. Ogilvie. Mr. Ogilvie was in a position in which he could do much for the government, or, by conducting this inquiry properly, possibly put them in a very serious position. And they did not hesitate to treat Mr. Ogilvie in this manner, as shown by answers given February 7. I asked:

1. Has the salary or have the emoluments of William Ogilvie, Esq., Commissioner of the Yukon district, been increased since his appointment? 2. If yes, at what date was provision made therefor, and by what authority and what was the amount of such increase?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Yes. 2. The increase was granted under authority of an order in council of October 14, 1899. The amount of the increase was $1,000 per annum, and its payment dated from July 1, 1899. Under an arrangement made on September 15, 1899, instead of the government providing rations and supplies, Mr. Ogilvie was granted a living allowance of $2,000 per annum. In addition to this he is allowed $250 a year for house rent and $60 a month for a house-keeper.

And, at page 4878 of the same unrevised Hansard, there is in this connection a further reference to this subject. I asked:

1. Did the hon. the Minister of the Interior, on April 4, 1899, when referring to the Commissioner of the Yukon district, state in this House: 'I think the salaries are good; Mr. Ogilvie, the commissioner, gets $5,000. When he was employed by the late government he got $1,800 . . . now be it known that the government furnishes for their men both quarters and provisions'?

2. What does Mr. Ogilvie now get?

There is the reward. There is the evidence of that man's utter unfitness for the position in which he found himself. His salary was large, but, for that position, no one objected to it. But, we find it suddenly increased, increased after parliament separated, and increased by virtue of an order in council without a direct vote of parliament. And I say, there is one of the reasons for the payment, the conviction that they could get a man who, in the face of the evidence of Louis Carbeno uncontradicted, would make a report in which he never referred to that question in any way, shape or form. Now, we have a pledge from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) which, like all the other pledges of this government, whether made collectively or individually, is honoured more in the breach than in the observance. We have his pledge, at page 6147 of the Hansard of last year. I need not read it. But, in order to establish confidence on the part of the House, he said that this evidence would be carefully weighed and considered. I am quoting from memory now the substance of what he stated, when he said he would undertake that the matters would be followed up. There was an undertaking and a pledge that, under the circumstances of course, it was reasonable and natural that he should make. Will hon. gentlemen take the trouble to remember the often quoted case of the Manitoba election frauds so-called, the information that was before the government at that time, the money they spent, and the searching investigation they made? Will they remember, for instance, the appointment of Mr. Archer Martin to investigate into the conduct of the officials, and the management of the New Westminster timber office out in British Columbia, where everything was ransacked for specific charges, where Mr. Martin was given a roving commission, where he tumbled everything from top to bottom in that office, where he travelled over the province to pick up evidence here and there, and which ended in his turning some of the head officials out of office, and the institution of some suits for the recovery of money due to the Crown? Will they remember the evidence on which this government plunged quickly and by telegram into an inquiry into the conduct of Judge Spinks? Will they recollect how quick the government was to look into that; and then consider how extraordinary it is that this matter has not been dealt with? On that point, as Hansard shows this session, the Minister of the Interior said to me, in answer to a formal question, that no action had been taken by the government in connection with this transaction. There was the grossest misbehaviour in office, if these facts were established, laid at the door of Mr. Walsh, not merely by the charge that I have made, but by the uncontradicted evidence and statements to which I have referred, and there, on the part of the government, is a condition of absolutely refusing to do anything, taking the responsibility of doing nothing. And remember all their officers in the service saying: If you have the good fortune to be favourites of this administration, you may plunder, you and your friends, you may rob, you may defy the law, you may do all that is dishonourable and disgraceful, and there will come no trouble to you; but you must stand in with the government in some way. Now, I hesitate not to say—I have no proof of it—the Minister of the Interior asked me one one occasion if I made a direct charge against him in connection with some matter—I have no proof that he shared in this transaction, I have no proof that he got a dollar out of the Indians' work, as the Walsh's did; but I do say this, that if the government are afraid—and if there be no other reason—of following these matters up and of punishing the culprits, if they are not satisfied as to the innocence or guilt of men so implicated as Major Walsh, then the presumption would be that the Minister of the Interior, if not others in the administration, were equally guilty with Major Walsh in the whole business, and shared and profited in these improper transactions. It is only an inference, it may be unfair, it may be prejudice, it may rest on political feeling, but nevertheless the reasons for it I have given.

Now, Sir, I do not intend to dwell further on this phase of the serious case that I have brought under your consideration. I have prepared rather a long resolution containing the facts shown by the public documents, and I ask in that resolution the censure of the House upon the government for the responsibility that they have assumed in saying they would take no action, or that they had taken no action, in the premises in connection with these matters. If this debate is at all protracted,

I wish to give a warning to three of my hon. friend's opposite. I need not dwell on the fact that the government last year, whatever their intentions are now, did not show any keen desire to have a prompt, thorough and searching inquiry into my charges of maladministration. It was suggested to me, I think on that occasion, that these were not matters for judicial commissions; it was suggested, too, I think pretty openly, that if an inquiry were to be made it was a matter for a committee of the House. This year, however, we have seen a reversal of that position; and I want solemnly to warn the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), lest something should happen, that the very thing they did not wish to happen, last year, has happened, and that is a judicial inquiry. For this year, in the case of Brockville and West Huron elections, no sooner did these three gentlemen prove to their own satisfaction in this House that there was nothing in these charges, that they were based upon the utterances of a self-convicted liar, that the charges were without foundation and could never be proved, by this reasoning they induced the Prime Minister to show a little back bone and to say he was ready to send them to a judicial commission, to have a prompt, thorough and searching inquiry. So I warn these gentlemen that if, in meeting these statements they argue that there is nothing whatever in them, they will share with me the responsibility, probably, of a judicial commission. It is only, as I think, when the government believe that a case can be proved that they will not grant a judicial commission; but it may be said that when three of their most intelligent legal minds are convinced that there is not a shadow of a case then we may expect a judicial commission. Now, unless I am compelled by the House to do otherwise, I will put this resolution in your hands without reading it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let the clerk read it.

Mr. SPEAKER (reading):

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof: 'during the session of parliament in 1899, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, a member of the Privy Council of Canada and a member of this House, stated from his place in parliament that he was credibly informed and believed that with the same co-operation (and through the supervision of the Department of Justice) as was given by the government of Canada to the Hon. Clifford Sifton in the case of the so-called Manitoba election frauds, he could establish before a commission comprised of eminent judges and clothed with the proper and usual powers, the following, among many others facts and charges:

That Major Walsh, while acting as chief executive officer of the Canadian government in the Yukon, was guilty of the crime of misbehaviour in office.

That in September, 1897, Major Walsh employed six Indians from Fort William Mission Band upon an engagement to send them home in October, 1898, at the expense of the government of Canada.

That Philip Walsh, a brother of the said Major Walsh, and employed by the government, was in charge of the said Indians. (Return to Senate, March 17, 1898, No. 38B.)

That those Indians located and recorded mining claims for and on behalf of Major Walsh. On the return of the Indians, these claims were transferred to Lewis Walsh, another brother of Major Walsh; and Lewis Walsh and Philip Walsh, aforesaid, left Fort William on or about May 10, 1898, to look after the said claims.

That the following names of officials in the employ of the Department of the Interior in the Yukon were given to this House on the 14th day of February, 1898. ('Hansard,' 1898, p. 481.)

Louis Charbonneau, cook, with Major Walsh, salary, $600.

John B. Marcelle, guide, with Major Walsh, salary $365.

Isaac Collin, guide, with Major Walsh, salary $365.

Toussaint Collin, guide, with Major Walsh, salary $355.

That the following particulars appear in a return to an Order of the House of Commons asking for a statement of all persons appointed to office or assigned to duties of any kind in the Yukon district since August 1, 1896, giving the names, post office addresses, rate of salary and allowances or expenses of each person, the duties assigned, the date of his appointment, the date of resignation or dismissal, and the reason therefor in the case of each resignation or dismissal.

That the following note is appended to said return:

Note.—In regard to the payments made by Messrs. Fawcett, Walsh and Ogilvie, it is impossible to dissect the expenditure so as to apportion the amounts chargeable to each of the officials of the government who formed members of the parties going to Dawson with the commissioner. Major Walsh received advances amounting to $3,000 when he left Ottawa, and out of that sum he paid the travelling expenses of the officials and Indians who were with him on the trip to Dawson. Sums were also advanced to Mr. Fawcett and Mr. Ogilvie when they left, and they paid the expenses of all those who were with them.

A complete statement of the expenditure in each case, supported by vouchers, has been received from the commissioner, but to pick out how much of the expenditure should be charged to each member of the party is not possible.

That it appears from public documents and answers made in this House to questions put by members, that Philip Walsh, aforesaid and hereinafter mentioned, was employed from the 25th September, 1897, as timber agent at Dawson, N.W.T., with a salary and living and travelling allowances to the end of August, 1898.

That Louis Carbeno, aforesaid and hereinafter mentioned, was, on the 25th September, 1897, employed by the government as cook to Major Walsh and party in the Yukon, upon wages and living and travelling allowances, and was in the government employ on February 7, 1900.

That E. V. and M. McBeth, hereinafter mentioned, were employed as dog-drivers under said Major Walsh.

That two Indians, Isaac Collin and Simon Collin, hereinafter referred to as Cullum or Cullom boys, were employed at the rate of $1 a day, except during May and June, 1898, when they received $10 each in addition to the $1 a day, and the months of July and August,

That Dominion Creek hills and benches in the Yukon district were closed from the location of claims by order of Major Walsh, contrary to the protest of the gold commissioner (page 79, evidence taken before the commission appointed to investigate charges of alleged malfeasance of the officials of the Yukon Territory), on 15th November, 1897 (page 80).

That on the 14th February, 1900, the government stated in this House that this is the only case of the closing of a creek that is of record in the Department of the Interior.

That the following minute was drawn up at a meeting held in Major Walsh's office, 30th May, 1898, and the following evidence relating thereto was given by the gold commissioner:

'Any location made on a creek after it has been closed will not be recognized or put on record; this includes hill and bench claims as well as creek claims.

'Dominion Creek having been closed since the middle of November last it has been decided that the creek shall remain closed until further notice. This decision applies to hill and bench claims, as well as to creek claims.'

Mr. Fawcett.—I may say that this was moved by Mr. McGregor in council, and he gave as his reason for bringing up this resolution that he had told people on the creeks that the hills were not open, and said he was not going to be made a fool of, and so he presented this resolution.

Q. You were present at this meeting?—A. I was present.

Q. Did you object?—A. I did.

Q. On what ground?—A. On the ground that men had gone up there under my permission and had prospected, staked their claims, made applications at the office, and their applications had been accepted, and I thought that this would simply throw them out, undoing the work I had done. It was no longer the rule of the gold commissioner; I was overridden by the council. That occurred on the 28th of May, and the creek was considered closed then.

That Mr. Fawcett, the said gold commissioner, testified further:

By the Commissioner:

Q. Have you got a copy of the notice?—A. I have a copy of the notice which the council passed with reference to the issuing of permits.

Q. What is it?—A. I will find it in a minute; it is a notice of a meeting prior to that held on the 27th of June.

Q. What was resolved at that meeting?—A. I don't know whether it was passed on that evening or not; but I think it must have been, or on the evening following. The date is not given, but it says: "A meeting to discuss the questions of administration. Present: Major Walsh, Commissioner of the Yukon district, and Messrs. Fawcett, Wade, Bliss and McGregor, T. D. Pattullo, secretary to the commissioner. Agreed, that on the opening of Dominion bench claims for location, permits to be issued to prospect the ground, after which the claims may be recorded if the work has been done to the satisfaction of the mining inspector.

Agreed, that notice be given on Thursday, 30th inst., to the effect that permission to prospect bench claims on Dominion Creek will be issued at the office of the gold commissioner on and after 10th July, 1898. T. D. Pattullo, secretary of the commissioner. Yukon district."

The date 10th July, has been changed to the 11th.

Mr. Fawcett.—I don't know but what that was the last meeting of the council.

Q. Well, then, were the hill-sides open after all?—A. They were open upon the publication of that notice (pointing to the notice).

Q. What led to the issuance of this notice?—A. There was a good deal transpired between; there was a notice posted in June notifying the people that after a certain date permits would be issued.

Q. What date?—A. I think it must have been about the end of June, or somewhere near this; it was to have been posted on the 30th June or the 1st of July, stating that permits would be issued on the 11th.

Q. Have you a copy of that notice now?—A. No. The first time I noticed that notice with my name in large print was when I saw the notice posted up. My objection to the whole thing was, their considering that I didn't say anything that would seem to be in favour of my idea that there was no occasion for closing the hill-sides.

Q. Was that your signature?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you issue it?—A. Well, on one occasion Mr. Pattullo came with a notice asking me to sign it; it was in relation to closing the hill-sides, but I objected on the ground that I considered there was no basis for the hill-sides being closed; I still maintained my objection to what had been done in council as gold commissioner, and I refused to sign the notice. Major Walsh sent and summoned me before him, and he gave me a very strong reprimand. As near as I can remember he said: "Mr. Fawcett, I want you to understand that it is impertinent on your part to question anything that has been decided in council, and when I sent that notice for you to sign, I want you to sign it." On the spur of the moment I signed this notice without reading it.

Q. What was in this notice?—A. It stated that on and after the 11th July that permits to prospect bench claims on Dominion Creek would be granted—for prospecting and staking, and I think there was something that applications would be accepted if approved of by the mining inspector.

That touching the following notice:

Notice.

The notice recently issued regarding permits to be given of 11th July, 1898, is hereby cancelled and the following substituted therefor:

Hill and Bench claims of Dominion Creek are now open for location and prospecting by all free miners.

Those claims shown in the appended sketch, with one exception, will be open only to those who made application for them prior to the completion of the survey, which application was filed at the office of the gold commissioner.

Dated at Dawson, Yukon district, the 8th day of July, A.D. 1898.

By order,

THOMAS FAWCETT,
Gold Commissioner.

Mr. Fawcett testified: The words 'The notice recently issued regarding permits to be given on the 11th July is hereby cancelled' refers to the first notice; as far as I remember I put no date on it myself; the typewriter put a date on the notice. Of course what I had in my mind was that this notice would not be printed and would not be published on the date on which the permits would be given, and after when people came for permits they would be confronted with the notice: that is what I had in my mind, but it happened otherwise.

Q. What was the date of the issuance?—A. Dated Dawson, 8th July. By order. Thomas Fawcett, gold commissioner.

Q. Well, there was a clause there, 'These claims are now open?'—A. Well, had this been published on the date which I expected, on the date on which the permits were to be given, posted up on that date, then no one would have had any grievance, because instead of getting permits they would see they had permits already—they were open at the time.

Q. According to the purport of that notice they were open on the date they were printed?—A. That was my understanding of it; this was printed before I intended it.

Q. How did you understand it?—A. I handed it to Major Walsh simply as an exhibit to show the form of the notice that I thought would be fixed up on the morning of the 11th at the office.

Q. You say there were three days, so that those who had knowledge could take advantage and those who were ignorant would not know the creek was open until the 11th?—A. Certainly; I have already considered that that was a blunder and an oversight. I submit that it was an oversight primarily on my part, but I had nothing to do with getting it published. As far as I was concerned I submitted that notice merely as an exhibit to Major Walsh as to whether it would be extended or not. The date was put on by the typewriter himself, not by me.

Q. You didn't date it at all?—A. I didn't date it at all.

Q. And the executive part of it you left to others?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, under that notice had you any knowledge of any one taking advantage of the terms of it?—A. Well, at least, I heard some one saying people were starting for Dominion.

Q. Any before this was published?—A. The night of the 8th.

Q. Was that published on the 8th?—A. It was published on the morning of the 9th.

Q. Well, then, were they starting on the night of the 8th?—A. So it was reported; people were on the trail, and over there already, thinking it would open on the 11th.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of any one?—A. I have no knowledge.

Q. You didn't instruct any one?—A. None, and no one in connection with the office started.

Q. You gave no advice?—A. No.

Q. Didn't suggest to any one to take advantage?—A. No; there were two men working on my party who started about two o'clock on the 9th.

Mr. Fawcette.—If you wish to know whether I knew of any parties who had information, I think I knew of a person who I subsequently heard had information, who went and staked a claim and left Dawson on the evening of the 8th.

Q. Who was he?—A. Mr. Carbeno.

By Mr. Galpin:

Q. Does Mr. Fawcett know that before this notice could have effect with the public on the outside, that private information was given to somebody? Does he know that people were out stampeding before this notice was put up in town?—A. I don't know, I heard they did; I believe they did, and am going to call a witness who will probably know something about the matter.

That the following evidence was also given in this inquiry:

The Commissioner.—Mr. Carbeno, will you stand up? Can you give the names of those men who accompanied you out to Dominion Creek?

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. Carbeno.—The Collum boys.

Q. Can you say if they are in the country?—A. No, sir, they are not; they went out with Major Walsh. There was a man name Marseille; he didn't come into Dawson with us, he went out from Bennett.

Q. Do you know if he staked a claim elsewhere?—A. He staked a claim on Phil Walsh Creek, below the Big Salmon.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge that he was in the same contract that you were?—A. Yes, the same agreement was drawn up.

Q. And he had likewise to give a three-fourths interest?—A. He drew up an agreement on the typewriter, as I remember it, and Marseille got an agreement.

Louis Carbeno, called and sworn.

By Mr. Fawcett:

Q. Where were you on the 8th of July?—A. Well, I was in camp until about ten o'clock.

Q. Where?—A. It would be at the hospital.

Q. In what capacity were you working?—A. I was working for Major Walsh.

Q. Were you there all that day?—A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. On the evening of the 8th of July?—A. Until evening.

Q. Where were you later on in the evening?—A. I was up Bonanza.

Q. For what purpose?—A. Going up to Dominion.

Q. Why were you on the way to Dominion?—A. Because I was informed that it was going to be open on the 9th.

Q. Informed when?—A. About five o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. On what date?—A. The 8th.

Q. Where did you acquire the information?—A. I received that from one of our dog-drivers.

Q. Who?—A. McBeth.

Q. Is he here now?—A. Yes; he is an Indian.

Q. And he told you it was open?—A. Well, he didn't tell me; it was rumoured about the camp. I asked Major Walsh's brother if the creek was going to be thrown open on the 9th, and he said he thought it was.

Q. Where was McBeth at this time?—A. He had been down the street.

Q. Where was he when he gave you this information?—A. In camp.

Q. Where was McBeth?—A. He had been down the street, and he came back to camp.

Q. Was Major Walsh present?—A. No.

Q. Was McBeth working for Major Walsh?—A. Yes.

Q. And he told you that the creek would be opened on the 9th?—A. He said he heard it would be opened on the 9th.

Q. That was on the afternoon of the 8th?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you how he came by that information?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you stake your claim?—A. I staked it on the 9th about 10.30.

By the Commissioner:

Q. In the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Fawcett:

Q. You subsequently recorded that claim?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you start?—A. At 10.30 on the evening of the 8th.

Q. Would anybody have any interest in giving you any information as to this creek being opened on the 9th?—A. No, not that I know of, except Major Walsh's brother.

Q. What interests had he?—A. He didn't have any interests. I suppose it was his interest, in one way, to give me information.

Q. What arrangement was there between you and Major Walsh or any of his brothers with reference to any claims you might stake?—A. There was a document drawn up between him and his brother to give me a three-fourths interest in anything I got in the country, providing he paid all my expenses, and the working of any ground I took up in the country.

Q. Would you recognize that agreement if you saw it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you tell me if this is the document?—(showing an agreement between Louis Carbeno and Lewis Walsh)—which reads as follows:

Port Arthur, September 23, 1897.

This agreement made this day, between Lewis Walsh, known as the party of the first part, and Louis Carbeno, of the town of Brockville, known as the party of the second part.

Witness that in consideration of the party of the first part furnishing the party of the second party with an outfit, and paying all expenses necessary for the working of any claim that the party of the second part may discover or take up in the Yukon district, in the North-west Territories, the party of the second part hereby agrees to give to the party of the first part a one undivided three-quarter interest in the said claim, reserving to himself a one-quarter interest.

LEWIS WALSH.
LOUIS CARBENO.

Witness,
PHIL. WALSH.

Q. That is your signature?—A. Yes, sir; that is the agreement between me and Lewis Walsh.

Q. Where was that made?—A. That was drew up and signed at the Big Salmon last winter.

Q. Where was it drawn up?—A. In port Arthur.

Q. When did you sign it?—A. Last winter; there was another agreement which his brother drew up and I wouldn't sign it.

Q. Phil. Walsh drew it up?—A. This was made at Port Arthur and forwarded to Big Salmon.

Q. Why was it dated the 24th of September?—A. That was the date on which we made the arrangement.

Q. You were at Port Arthur on the 23rd of September?—A. Yes; that was dated then.

Q. You didn't sign it till last winter. Who was the witness?—A. Phil. Walsh.

By the Commissioner:

Q. You staked the claim in the way you said?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with that claim?—A. I turned it over as I agreed.

By Mr. Fawcett:

Q. According to that agreement you made for part of that claim, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom did you convey that?—A. To Phil. Walsh.

Q. Is that something like the bill of sale? That is the bill of sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was given after this agreement which you signed?—A. Yes, sir.

By the Commissioner:

Q. Why did you give this to Philip Walsh and not to Lewis?—A. Because Major Walsh instructed me he did not want Lewis' name brought into the office, and it would be just as well to have the property made over to him. I told him that it was not proper; that the agreement would not stand law and I couldn't get anything, and asked him to make out another agreement. He argued the point, and I told Mr. Pattullo, and Pattullo drew that agreement up; he said it would be all right, and I went to work and signed it.

Q. What consideration did you receive?—A. Not a cent.

Q. What were you to receive for the three-fourths; you were to receive one-fourth instead of what belonged to you?—A. He was to look after it, and pay any expenses of any mine I took up.

Q. Had this agreement been made before you left down east?—A. We talked the agreement over, but the agreement hadn't been drawn up, and it had to be signed at the Big Salmon.

Q. Did you think at that time that this was a fair agreement?—A. I didn't.

Q. Why did you sign it?—A. Because I was in a position, and I couldn't very well get out of it; I didn't want to go out of the country.

Q. If you had refused what would have been the result?—A. I wouldn't have been permitted to go; I would have had to have gone out.

Q. What position did you hold?—A. He promised me the position I have now—cooking for the officials, and I suppose if I hadn't signed that document I would not be in the position I hold now.

Q. Who promised you?—A. Major Walsh.

Q. Do you think you would have been in the same position now if you hadn't?—A. No, I don't think I would; nothing said about that.

Q. Was there any compulsion of any kind used to make you sign that?—A. He laid in his tent not over fifteen feet away; he knew it was wrong and I knew it was wrong.

Q. He didn't in any way try to compel you to sign it?—A. No.

Q. What reason have you for saying that you did not think you would be here?—A. I said I wouldn't have held the position I am holding now if I had not signed it.

Q. What were you doing then?—A. Cooking.

Q. How much were you getting?—A. $60 a month.

Q. What now?—A. $100 per month.

Q. When did you get an advance in your wages?—A. Last August; but he told me he would give me $125, then he cut it to $100. I said I would take the $100 and stayed on.

Q. You don't mean to connect his saying that with this bill?—A. No; I told his brother, when they drew it up, it was not right.

Q. What value would you place on the consideration you got for this?—A. The agreement was that we were to receive a prospecting outfit.

Q. What value would you place on the outfit you got?—A. Well, I couldn't say very well; my expenses the government paid coming in. What I spent on the outside of that—I mean on this trip to Dominion and back.

Q. The government paid your wages and living expenses so that has nothing to do with the case?—A. I think about $40 or $50.

Q. You would place the value of an outfit to stake a claim at $40 or $50. Well, before you left the camp to go on that trip did you ask Major Walsh's permission?—A. I did.

Q. Did you tell him what you were going for?—A. I told him I was going to Dominion Creek.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said yes.

Q. Did you tell him you were going to stake?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you think he knew?—A. Yes, he would not think I was going for a walk; that was in the evening between eight and ten o'clock.

By Mr. Tabor:

Q. Did any other officials go with you?—A. Yes, one, an Indian; and when I had gone five or ten miles I was joined by another Indian.

Q. Were these Major Walsh's Indians?—A. Just the two of them.

Q. Who were they?—A. Two of the Cullum boys.

Q. In saying an outfit worth $40 or $50, what do you mean?—A. Going to Dominion Creek and coming back.

By the Commissioner:

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of the standing of these Indians; were they going to stake on the same terms as you did?—A. Yes, going on the same terms; I don't know whether they signed a contract or not; I know there was an agreement, but I am not positive about the contract.

Q. Similar to yours?—A. Similar to mine.

Q. Did they transfer a three-quarter interest to Philip Walsh as you did?—A. Yes, you will find duplicates there in the recording office.

Q. Have you any other knowledge of any other person on behalf of any official of the government?—A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. No knowledge of any other but yourself and these two?—A. No other; that is all that went or came.

Q. Were these men employed in the camp?—A. They came in with us.

Q. Were they employed around the camp?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They would have to get permission from Major Walsh, the same as you did?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Fawcett:

Q. In your examination yesterday, Mr. Carbeno, in answering one of the questions, you stated that you thought that your present position was the result of signing that agreement, or something to that effect?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there not part of the evidence in that connection which you forgot to give us yesterday?—A. I forgot to say that other papers were drawn up and I would not sign them.

Q. When was this?—A. Coming up on board the 'Quadra.'

Q. You would not sign them, why?—A. I said the papers were not legal, and would not sign them until I got the legal ones. That afternoon I was called to Major Walsh's stateroom, and he asked me if I had made an agreement at Port Arthur before I left.

Q. You said you did?—A. He said, 'Why didn't you sign the papers?' I said I didn't because they were not legal. He said, 'If you don't sign those papers when this boat goes back, I will send you back on it.' That was all that was said until we got to Big Salmon, then other papers came on and therefore I signed them.

By the Commissioner:

Q. Why did you consider those papers illegal?—A. Because they were not drawn up by a lawyer. He drew them out with a lead pencil.

Q. Who?—A. Phil. Walsh.

Q. Where were they drawn up?—A. On board the 'Quadra' when we came out.

Q. You had made an agreement with Lewis Walsh, at Port Arthur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why were these not signed at Port Arthur?—A. Because he said he had not time.

Q. The document is dated the 23rd. It is the document we have here?—A. No. The document he drew up on board the 'Quadra' was not the same as I agreed to it.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Q. What was the nature of the terms?—A. He left it where I was to be paid my expenses in coming into the country, and furnished me with an outfit.

Q. How could that be, when the government was paying your expenses?—A. That was stated in the agreement before I left.

Q. That was understood at Port Arthur—that they were to pay your expenses to come into the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the same time you were employed as a government servant. Don't you think it was inconsistent to offer to pay your expenses if you came in as a government employee?—A. Well, I was giving the way it was agreed to.

Q. Then this lead pencil document admitted that?—A. Yes, it is in this way, only. (Mr Carbeno reads the document.)

The Commissioner.—There is no reference there for your expenses to be paid into the country. It would grant the expense of working the claim but not the expenses in connection with your entry here.

By Mr. Fawcett:

Q. You refused to sign this lead pencil document on board the 'Quadra'?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were told if you didn't you would be sent back?—A. Yes, sir; and I said I would not sign any until a proper one was drawn up.

Q. When you signed this at Big Salmon did it seem strange to you that it was dated at Port Arthur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the actual date of the signature?—A. I could not exactly tell you. I think it was in June some time.

Q. Three months after the agreement had been entered into?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any cause—was the question mentioned at all? Was it dated at Port Arthur—why not at Big Salmon?—A. Well, I didn't ask any questions; they brought in the document, and I signed it; that was all. I saw the signature, and I knew it came from him.

Q. Whose signature was it?—A. Lewis Walsh's. His signature is on the bottom of it.

Q. Have you reason to know his signature?—A. Yes; I will swear to it.

Q. You have no reason to assign why the document was dated 23rd September, and executed at Big Salmon some time in June?—A. No.

Q. This agreement you entered into at Port Arthur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This document you refused to sign, on whose behalf was that made?—A. Lewis Walsh's.

That on the 14th February, 1900, many months after the said evidence had been before the government, and in reply to a question as to whether it, or any department or official thereof, had taken action upon 'the action of Carbeno and other paid officials in staking claims, in Dominion Creek, and the Walsh agreement for staking of claims,' the Honourable the Minister of the Interior stated: 'No action has been taken in these cases.' ('Hansard' unrevised, 1900, pp. 454, 455.)

That the failure of the government to take any action in reference to the conduct of Major Walsh under the foregoing circumstances merits the censure of this House.

Mr. DECHENE. I want to have the motion read in French, if you please.

Some hon. MEMBERS. En français.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am pretty well conversant with the French language myself, but would not venture to make a translation off-hand of this document, and it would perhaps be unfair to ask the clerk at the Table to manufacture a translation.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would suggest that we should allow the hon. the Solicitor General to proceed with his remarks, and we will have a translation made and the members put in possession of it before the vote is taken.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I shall probably occupy the attention of the House until six o'clock, and we could have a translation prepared by eight o'clock.

Mr. TALBOT. I respectfully submit that we ought not to proceed unless we have a translated copy of the said resolutions in our hands.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not essential for the use of members in this stage of the discussion, and if the members are put in possession of a translation before they are asked to vote, that ought to be sufficient.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Having disposed of this incident, I may say that it seems to me that my hon. friend from Pictou, in common with all the other members of this House, must regret very sincerely the absence of my hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), because in view of the experience we had last session, when the same subject was under discussion, I am quite satisfied my hon. friend must be convinced that the Minister of the Interior would have given him as full and satisfactory an explanation on the points raised as he did last year. But in the absence of my hon. colleague, I shall endeavour to deal very briefly with the particular charges made by my hon. friend from Pictou. I do not propose to follow my hon. friend in his peregrinations to South Africa and the Yukon, and from the Yukon back to West Huron and Brockville, and finally to Manitoba in connection with the Manitoba election frauds. I do not know that I would be even disposed to follow him in his search for evidence, in which search he thought it necessary to appeal to a gentleman occupying a prominent position in the United States army, and who is supposed to have special knowledge with reference to these alleged irregularities in the Yukon. But as he was good enough to refer to this gentleman, I think it but right to give to the House the answer which my hon. friend got from Major Morgan, the American gentleman in question, to whom he applied for information on the administration of affairs in the Yukon. The letter is dated the 31st July, 1899, and is in answer to a communication from my hon. friend, dated 26th May, the same year, and the letter is written from Dawson City, where this American gentleman was at the time:

My dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of May 26, asking me if I would kindly furnish you with such information as I might possess with regard to the maladministration of public affairs in the Yukon. As an officer of the United States army, I was somewhat surprised to receive such a request from a member of the Canadian parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (reading):

In the United States it would, to say the least, be considered very undignified for a member of congress to seek information of the nature which your communication suggests from a citizen of a foreign country on a matter of internal economy. For your information, however, permit me to say that I have seen some of the reports which have been published in the newspapers—

I presume that would include my hon. friend's speech.

—in which exception has been taken to the administration of governmental affairs in the Yukon territory, and in which officers who were sent in here by the Canadian government were charged with incompetence, corruption and misbehaviour in their conduct.

Regarding the public administration of affairs in the territory, I do not say that there is absolutely no room for criticism; that is a matter of opinion; but in a territory situated so far from the seat of government, where communication with the outside world has been so difficult, and in a territory where perfectly new conditions presented themselves, to which could not be applied legislation long established by precedent, I cannot see any reason to doubt that the Canadian government acted upon the best information which was obtainable under the circumstances, and which they considered most suitable to conditions existent, and I am sure that such legislation has been enacted subject to adjustment, as circumstances might advise and experience teach. That is all one could rationally expect. As far as the conduct of officers of the government is concerned, I might say that I have been in Dawson since July, 1897, except when business called me to the outside. During my sojourn here I have acquired in the neighbourhood of fifteen or more mining interests—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (reading):

—and in consequence have had business to transact with most of the officers sent in by the government; with the commissioner of the territory, the gold commissioner, the Crown attorney, the Crown timber and land agent, and others, and have also met them outside of business circles. I have always, with one solitary exception, been treated with the greatest courtesy by every officer of the government with whom I came in contact, and my business was transacted in a most satisfactory manner. That solitary exception was an underling in the gold commissioner's office, now no longer in the service of the government. On behalf of the company I represent, I had particularly to consult Major Walsh, and on those occasions not only was I treated with every courtesy, but my business was put through in an expeditious and businesslike way, and I have always considered that he upheld the dignity of his office as a gentleman should.

As far as the charges of corruption are concerned, I have no knowledge whatever of any corruption on the part of officers of the government. I am at a loss to know from whom you could have learned my name, to write to me in this matter, but may say that I can refer you to any of the leading men of Seattle, as I was for several years deputy sheriff of King County, Washington, and also chief deputy collector of customs, No. 1 division, New York City.

I am, sir, respectfully yours,
R. J. MORGAN.

Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, Ottawa, Ont.

Coming now to the matter in hand—it seems to me that it is fair to draw attention to the fact that the investigation as a result of which a very serious attack has been made on Major Walsh was carried on in his absence, after he had left the country, and after he had ceased to be a government official, and that he was not represented at it, nor was any opportunity given him for the cross-examination of witnesses or for putting in any explanation of what had been said. Bearing the facts in mind, let us consider the matter with which my hon. friend has dealt at such great length. The statement was that Major Walsh went into the Yukon country for the express purpose of benefiting himself personally, and that he actually prostituted his office for his own personal advantage. That is the most serious charge that could be made against a gentleman occupying the responsible position of Major Walsh, and a man who has heretofore enjoyed in this country an unimpeachable reputation; a man, who, previous to this attack by the hon. member for Pictou occupied a position in this country which, I venture to say, was of such a high character that when he was appointed to the Yukon his appointment met with the approval of both Liberals and Conservatives. And in this connection, I would call attention to the fact that after Major Walsh had been assailed in this House in a manner which seems to be almost incredible, knowing, as I do, the character of my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) for fairness—I can scarcely believe it possible that he should have made such an attack—within a month after this serious attack had been made and the evidence, obtained in the manner I have indicated, Major Walsh having no opportunity of examination of witnesses or for explanation, quoted the neighbours and friends of Major Walsh the men with whom he had lived all his life were appealed to, and he got there a verdict that they believed that Major Walsh deserved well—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) know that this country is in a state of the most profound indignation at the infamous gang that was sent into that riding to steal the election which Hon. Peter White had fairly won?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), knowing very well what is in store for him as a result of the judicial inquiry which will take place in a short time, is endeavouring to forestall that result. That is an old trick, well known to those—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose that is why the hon. gentleman introduces the subject just now. He wishes to get the benefit of the Brockville election before the judicial commission exposes how it was obtained.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was going to say that was an old trick not known as such to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), of course, but well known to those who are expected to present cases in court—when you have a bad case, you must throw as much mud as you can on the other side. But let us deal with the case we have in hand. Major Walsh was appointed as commissioner to the Yukon, I understand, in the month of August, 1897, and started for the Yukon country in September. I wish to draw the attention of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to the dates, because, after all, there is nothing like dealing with the facts in chronological order. Facts speak eloquently at times, and if we deal with facts and leave insinuations alone, we are likely to arrive at something like the truth. Major Walsh started in September, taking this man Carbeno with him. He started from Brockville, where, I understand, he engaged Carbeno. On the way to the Yukon, he stopped at Port Arthur; and, on the 23rd of September, 1897, an agreement which was read by my hon. friend a few minutes ago was made. This agreement is on page 259 of the evidence taken before the commissioner:

Port Arthur, Sept. 23, 1897.

This agreement, made this day, between Lewis Walsh, known as the party of the first part, and Louis Carbeno, of the town of Brockville, known as the party of the second part.

Witness that in consideration of the party of the first part furnishing the party of the second part with an outfit, and paying all expenses necessary for the working of any claim that the party of the second part may discover or take up in the Yukon district, in the North-west Territories, the party of the second part hereby agrees to give to the party of the first part a one undivided three-quarter interest in the said claim, reserving to himself a one-quarter interest.

(Sgd.) LEWIS WALSH.
LOUIS CARBENO.

Witness.
PHIL. WALSH.

What is the effect of that? Carbeno was at that time on his way to the Yukon country, and he entered into an agreement under which Walsh agreed to advance to Carbeno money for all the expenses necessary, or that might be incidental to his selecting any mining claim in the Yukon country. Walsh goes further and undertakes to provide the money necessary for the development of the claim which Carbeno may come into possession of. And it is provided that Carbeno gets for his interest one-quarter of the whole thing. What does that mean? Walsh takes all the risk. If the claim obtained under these circumstances turns out to be valueless, turns out to be what mines almost invariably turn out to be, a mere hole in the ground, all the money that Walsh spent to acquire and develop that claim so as to show what it was worth would be lost money. If it turned out to be valuable, Carbeno would get one-quarter, and the other three-quarters would go to Walsh. This was an agreement one part to which was a man who lived at Port Arthur, and at that time did not go into that country at all. From that point Major Walsh and the rest proceeded to the coast, and so on to the Yukon country.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the agreement was made at Port Arthur?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The evidence is to the contrary.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Absolutely.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not quite. The document was drawn at Port Arthur, and signed by Walsh at Port Arthur, and Carbeno says the agreement was signed by him not on board the Quadra, as my hon. friend stated, but on the Big Salmon. As a matter of fact, the document was made where it was dated and signed by one of the parties, and that was at Port Arthur. Major Walsh and his party, after the agreement was signed, proceeded to the coast and up to the Yukon. Now, I wish to draw attention to one fact, and it is well, even in the absence of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to be a little accurate about this. My hon. friend says that Dominion Creek was closed by Major Walsh. He made that statement.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As a matter of fact, it was closed on the 15th of November, 1897, by Mr. Fawcett before Major Walsh reached the country at all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) would be good enough to look at the reference I gave in the resolution read from the Chair, he will understand that there is no discrepancy between the statement I made and the fact. Mr. Fawcett swore that he had done this under the direction of Major Walsh. It was not necessary for Major Walsh to be in Dawson to give directions to the officials in Dawson. Mr. Fawcett did this against his own protest.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The information I have is that it was done on the 17th of November, 1897, before Major Walsh went into that country, and that it was done not by Major Walsh, but by Mr. Fawcett. That is the information I get from the officials of the department. Now, Mr. Walsh proceeds to the Yukon and arrives in Dawson somewhere towards the end of May. After he reaches there a meeting is held of this so-called council to which my hon. friend refers, and on the 30th June, it was determined—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman oblige me, as this is a serious matter, by telling me the name of the officer in the Interior Department, who informed him that Dominion Creek was closed, not by the order of Major Walsh, but by the order of an officer who never pretended to have such authority, and in fact never had?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What I said a moment ago is information that I got from Mr. Ryley. I do not know who the gentleman is at all. It is to the effect that on November 15, 1897, Dominion Creek was closed by the gold commissioner, Thomas Fawcett. I give the information that was given to me. I do not want to romance about it—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that he went a little further than Mr. Ryley has gone. The order is carried out by this man, there is no dispute about that, but the order was given by the commissioner to Mr. Fawcett, who swears he protested against it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand my hon. friend to say that my statement is inaccurate, because Mr. Fawcett swore he did this on the order of Major Walsh. My information does not enable me now to point out that portion of Mr. Fawcett's evidence, where this statement is to be found. It is likely I may have to go over it after six o'clock. I would be obliged to my hon. friend, if, in the interval, he will find out that statement. Now, Dominion Creek was closed as a result of the report made, as I am informed, by Mr. Fawcett, to the effect that people had gone in and taken possession of Dominion Creek, that the claims overlapped, that it was impossible to determine who was entitled to any particular portion of the creek, that it was absolutely necessary, under these conditions, in order to satisfy all the claimants, that the creek should be closed, should be surveyed, and that afterwards it should be opened up to the public. Mr. Walsh assuming that to be the case. I proceed now with my argument. Mr. Walsh reached Dawson somewhere towards the end of the month of May, it was then determined that as this creek had been surveyed, it would be advisable to open it up for settlement. On June 30, 1898, this council was held out in Dawson, and it was then determined that the creek should be thrown open on July 11, following, to all those who would have permits. So there was no secret about it, the whole country knew it, everybody there knew that on July 11 following, that creek would be thrown open to those who wished to go in, and who had permits for the purpose of settling. What did that mean? As I am informed, reading the regulations, I must admit, somewhat superficially, that meant that a man would have to take a permit out before going up to Dominion Creek, and then when he was on the ground he would fix a location, he would then stake out his location, and upon one of the stakes which determined the limits of his location, the number corresponding to the number which was on the permit he had previously obtained from the gold commissioner's office in Dawson City.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to give the reference now? It will be found on pages 78 and 79 of the evidence:

Mr. Fawcett.—The charge is true, inasmuch as he deviated from the said notice, for at the time this permit was given no arrangement had been made by the council with reference to issuing permits, and no notice had ever been made public or passed. The facts of the matter are these: From the beginning there was a difference between myself and the commissioner in reference to the closing of the Dominion Creek hills and benches. People had been permitted by myself to prospect these hills and have their applications at the office. Nothing prevented them from renewing their certificates except that the returns of the survey had not yet come in, and these returns would aid in identifying these hills, and show where they were; pending that, everything that was necessary to be done had been done with reference to persons prospecting and receiving their claims, so that on that ground I had objected to this notice, or this so-called legislation, if you wish, stating that Dominion Creek hills and benches were closed. I objected to that on the ground which I have stated, because had they been closed, it would have prevented those whom I had permitted to prospect from having their claims put on record and throwing their claims open with the rest, so that after going on and prospecting with my permission they would have no protection whatever; probably many of them would lose their claims.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was aware of the existence of that evidence, that reference to the dispute which took place between June 30, and July 8, when it was determined that instead of issuing permits, all could come up and occupy them, without any permit at all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He does not say so. I accept the sworn statement.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not want to make this as a matter of statement, I make it as a matter of inference, which I gather from the whole evidence. Of course, I may make it a matter of statement by and by, if I can get the necessary information from the department. But my hon. friend will remember what took place at the time that this question of permits was discussed. He will remember that the resolution was adopted at a meeting on June 30, that Mr. Walsh was on one side and Mr. Fawcett on the other. Mr. Fawcett wanted the location to be open to the first comer, and Mr. Walsh wanted the permit system. That is the whole trouble, as I will have occasion to point out a little further on, that that was the origin of the trouble, and that is the trouble to which the witness referred. My hon. friend will realize that in the autumn of 1897, Mr. Walsh could not have given these instructions, because he was then on the road to the Yukon; he did not give them, and he never was consulted about them, and Mr. Fawcett never acted under his instructions at all.

Now, we find that on June 30, it was determined to proceed by way of the permit system. It appears that the matter was referred to Judge McGuire, and to the legal adviser of the council, whose name I have forgotten. It was decided that it would be illegal to proceed by way of these permits, and as a result of that decision, on July 8, the notice about which there has been so much dispute, was issued by the commissioner, Major Walsh. Now, we have come to the point of the difficulty in this case, a point that requires some consideration. I would now state to the House that at that time, on July 8, Mr. Walsh then had this notice on the permit system, which was originally intended to be published, handed to him by Mr. Fawcett. That, it appears, is the true construction of the evidence. When this notice was given to him, it bore no date, and it is not apparent how it came to pass that the notice passed from the hands of Mr. Walsh or Mr. Fawcett, into the hands of the printer. But, however, that may have been on the night of July 8, the notice was handed over to the printer, type-written, for the purpose of having it printed and distributed around, to the effect that Dominion Creek was then open to prospectors for occupation. We have now reached July 8, and here is the argument of my learned friend. He says that this agreement had probably been formed in the month of September previous, that Dominion Creek, instead of being thrown open, as it was intended on July 11, was, in reality, thrown open on July 9, the 9th being a Saturday, the 10th being Sunday, and Monday being the date fixed almost a month previously. Now, what happened about it? The notice was issued on the night of the 8th, it came into the printer's hands, and it remained there until the morning of the 9th, when it was distributed throughout the country. The result of that was that instead of Dominion Creek being open for occupation on the 11th, it became ipso facto open from that time, in fact it became open from the 8th.

Now, my learned friend says that this man Carbeno had previously acquired knowledge which enabled him to go up to Dominion Creek and settle there, and get possession of a location, and that as a result of his getting possession of this location under an agreement with Lewis Walsh, Major Walsh benefited, and that is the justification for the serious charge which is made against him, to the effect that he prostituted his position for his own personal advantage. It was known throughout the whole territory, from June 30, that Dominion Creek would be opened for occupation on July 11. So much is that the case that Carbeno swears that he was going into the country on the night of July 8, and on the morning of July 9 he passed over 150 people going the same way. He goes further than that: Carbeno swears that he got information about the creek being thrown open for occupation from a dog driver, whose name I have forgotten, who communicated the information to him on the night of the 8th, in some part of the city, so that this information that came in this way, and which was general public property in Dawson at that time, was communicated to him, not by Major Walsh, but by this dog driver whom he met accidentally on the street. Then, he proceeds and stakes this claim, and from that day to this no charge or assertion has been made to the effect that a single dollar of profit has been derived by the occupation by that man of this claim on Dominion Creek. It is not established that Major Walsh derived any benefit, it is not established that Lewis Walsh derived any benefit from it, but the fact is, that Lewis Walsh, in attempting to go in and develop that claim, lost $5,000 or $6,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Where does that appear?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is a statement I make. It does not appear in the evidence.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at the dinner hour, I was stating briefly what I considered to be the position taken by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). As I understand, he argued that the agreement of September 23, 1897, was entered into between Lewis Walsh and Carbeno for the purpose of enabling them to get, with the assistance of Major Walsh, some unfair advantage, and that in execution of that agreement and for the purpose of enabling them to accomplish their design, Dominion Creek was closed by Fawcett as the result of a conference with Commissioner Walsh, and that it was opened afterwards in the month of July, 1897, again by Mr. Walsh, for the express purpose of carrying out the design which existed in the minds of those who entered into the agreement in September, 1897. First, what about Dominion Creek? Was Dominion Creek closed by Major Walsh or not? My information is that Dominion Creek was closed on November 15, 1897, previous to the coming of Major Walsh into the country, and further, that Dominion Creek was closed at that time without the intervention of Major Walsh. The answer made by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is, that there is evidence in this report of Mr. Ogilvie to the effect that Fawcett stated that Dominion Creek was closed on November 15, 1897 by him, he at the time acting under the control of the commissioner, and in support of his statement my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) refers to page 79 of the evidence. I would like all those within the sound of my voice to have this evidence before them at the present time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the evidence is read—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know the Solicitor General will show me the courtesy which he has always shown in debate to every one in this House. In order that the Solicitor General can meet the point from my position, I want to state what evidently he has not grasped, as I spoke hurriedly to-day. In the use of the word 'creek,' the Dominion Creek is a name that covers three different kinds of claims and that is where the confusion occurs. It covers the creek claim proper in Dominion Creek, the bench claim proper in Dominion Creek, and the hill claim proper in Dominion Creek. According to the evidence, and there is no contradiction as to this, Mr. Fawcett did, as a matter of fact, alone undoubtedly close the creek claims of Dominion Creek, not dealing at all with the hill or bench claims, and he swears that Major Walsh, to whom he reported immediately, endorsed that action. Now, the creek was still open to prospectors for the hill and bench claims and they were proceeding to record. Major Walsh in May ordered the hill claims and the bench claims to be closed also, and Mr. Fawcett protested on the ground, as he gives, of the confusion that would follow from the action he had been taking. Therefore, when I used the term that Major Walsh closed the creek, I did not mean that he closed the creek claims (except in endorsing Mr. Fawcett's action) but by closing all that was left of Dominion Creek, that is the bench claims and the hill claims, he and he only against Fawcett, closed Dominion Creek.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I must confess that the evidence so far as I have been able to appreciate it, as taken by the commissioner, is exceedingly lacking in clearness, and it is not very easy to come to any positive conclusion on any particular point, and especially upon this point that my hon. friend suggests. But, I cannot allow my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to escape from this position. I asked him to state where he got his evidence that the creek was closed by Fawcett, acting under the guidance and control of Major Walsh, and he referred me to page 79 of the evidence. They were dealing with the case of Mrs. Koch, and in reference to something that occurred on July 11, 1898 :

Mr. Fawcett.—The charge is true inasmuch as I deviated from the said notice, for at the time this permit was given no arrangement had been made by the council with reference to issuing permits, and no notice had ever been made public or passed. The facts of the matter are these: From the beginning there was a difference between myself and the commissioner in reference to the closing of Dominion Creek hills and benches. People had been permitted by myself to prospect these hills and have their applications at the office, nothing preventing them from renewing their certificates except that the returns of survey had not yet come in, and these returns would aid in identifying these hills to show where they were; pending that, everything that was necessary to be done had been done with reference to persons prospecting receiving their claims, so that on that account I had objected to this notice.

Now, everything turns on the notice. What is the notice? It is a notice that was issued as the result of this conference on June 30, and in order that there may be no doubt about that I asked my hon. friend to refer to page 92 where, dealing with this very subject, Fawcett has succeeded in changing the programme that had been settled on June 30, so as to open the creek to any person who wished to go in and locate without the necessity of permits being issued. It is evident that Fawcett did not act under the instructions of Walsh, but that Walsh acted under the instructions and as a result of the conference with Fawcett. Let there be no doubt on that because here is the evidence :

Q. According to the purport of that notice, they were opened on the date they were printed?—A. That was my understanding of it; this was printed before I intended it.

Q. How did you understand it?—A. I handed it to Major Walsh simply as an exhibit to show the form of the notice that I thought would be fixed up on the morning of the 11th at the office.

Q. Did you mention that after to Major Walsh?—A. I didn't, because, I suppose, I felt a little intoxicated at having succeeded in my contention.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

That is to say, he felt a little intoxicated in succeeding in convincing Walsh that Fawcett's contention was right and not Walsh's.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. To do away with the permits?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, certainly, and there is no evidence to show that the creek was closed except in the month of November previous.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh yes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) will see that it is a question between Fawcett and Walsh as to which controlled the other, and it is quite apparent from the evidence given by Fawcett that it was Fawcett who controlled Walsh and not Walsh who controlled Fawcett. Let me now refer to Carbeno. Here is the fact that this notice was issued on July 8, and it was handed to the printer on the evening of that day. It came back out of the printer's hands on the morning of the 9th. The argument of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is, as I understood, that as the result of the change Carbeno received information which enabled him in execution of the agreement entered into in September previous, to get possession of a valuable claim on Dominion Creek. If it were the intention to enable Carbeno to get possession of that claim he would have got some information about this change from Walsh, but what does Carbeno say about it. On page 258 of the evidence he says: He was informed that Dominion Creek was opened upon the evening of the 8th; he was informed about five in the afternoon.

Q. On what date?—A. The 8th.

Q. Where did you acquire the information?—A. I received that from one of our dog-drivers.

Q. Who?—A. McBeth.

Q. Is he here now?—A. Yes; he is an Indian.

Q. And he told you it was open?—A. Well, he didn't tell me; it was rumoured about the camp. I asked Major Walsh's brother if the creek was going to be thrown open on the 9th, and he said he thought it was.

There is the extent of Major Walsh's interference in the matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will my hon. friend go on and read further, where he shows how he got the information?

Q. Where was McBeth at this time?—A. He had been down the street.

Q. Where was he when he gave you the information?—A. In camp.

Q. Where was McBeth?—A. He had been down the street, and he came back to camp.

Q. Was Major Walsh present?—A. No.

Q. Was McBeth working for Major Walsh?—A. Yes.

Q. And he told you the creek would be opened on the 9th?—A. He said he heard it would be opened on the 9th.

Q. That was on the afternoon of the 8th?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you how he came by that information?—A. No, sir.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It seems to me that does not add much either way.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think so. He was one of the men in the employ of Major Walsh.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There were many men in the employ of Major Walsh. Now, we have to deal with this Koch matter. I do not think it is advisable or necessary, nor do I think it will interest the House, to have a rehash of that matter. I would refer any one who is interested in knowing the exact state of the case to page 14 of the speech delivered during last session by the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, in which the whole matter is satisfactorily explained. Now, I do not wish to detain the House any longer. It is proper, however, before I conclude, that I should apologize to the House for having taken up so much of the time of the members on this subject; and I am quite satisfied that I owe an apology to the friends of the hon. member for Pictou who sit about him, because, after all, I am sure that he has convinced them, as well as everybody else, that if this matter is not what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) called it, much ado about nothing, it is, at least, the old story of the mole hill taking on the proportions of the proverbial mountain.

Mr. G. V. McINERNEY (Kent, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, it is because I believe this is a matter of considerable importance that I venture to say a few words on it, even in reply to the hon. Solicitor General. I believe it is an important matter because I apprehend that there can be nothing in connection with government of more vital importance to the state than that men entrusted with functions of government in any part of the country, especially in remote parts, should have the white light of parliament turned upon their conduct, and should receive either blame or praise according to their deserts. It may not be out of place to refer to the fact that the greatest feats of eloquence that have been handed down to us from ancient times have arisen out of just such cases as this, where men sent out from the Roman Empire and the Republic to govern remote provinces maladministered the affairs of those provinces and were brought to book before the tribunals of Rome to answer for their misconduct. But for this we never would have had the great speeches of Cicero for Milo. If I might be allowed to diverge for a moment, Milo said that if Cicero had really delivered those speeches, he would not then be eating sardines at Marseilles. In this case we have an accuser as Milo had at that time. We have an accuser in the person of the ex-Minister of Justice, the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), a man who has launched his charges boldly against Major Walsh and this government whose official he was. We have Major Walsh, an administrator of public affairs in a remote part of this country, as the accused; but I fail to find in the Solicitor General a Cicero. I admit, Sir, the ability of the Solicitor General to turn a corner; I think he is an adept at that sort of thing, and at special pleading. His whole defence in this matter has been a piece of special pleading. Is it any defence of Major Walsh to say that the electorate of Brockville had acquitted him? Would that be a defence to set up in a court of law to any charge like this levelled against a defendant? I rather think not, and it does not reflect any credit on the Solicitor General to make use of the argument, that because the electors of Brockville elected their present member, Mr. Comstock, instead of the Hon. Peter White, Major Walsh, who happened to be a resident of the town of Brockville, is vindicated. But, Sir, I make bold to say that there never has been, during the eight or nine years that I have been in this parliament, a charge levelled with more precision than the charge levelled by the hon. senior member for Pictou; and never has there been in this House a weaker or more technical defence than the defence set up by the Solicitor General. It must be that his cause is weak, because we all know that he is a man of ability and a lawyer of the very first standing in this country. It is not, Sir, the weakness of the advocate; it is the weakness of the cause that has paralyzed the ability of the Solicitor General; and, Sir, a man of even greater ability than he is would, I admit, fail in the face of a charge so made and so substantiated by evidence as this has been. We have, I say, a grievous charge against a public administrator, and a very brief reference to the evidence will prove that the charge is made out up to the hilt. The evidence is uncontradicted. Major Walsh started out to administer the Yukon country, and took with him several men as a bodyguard, and other paid servants of this country. Among those were Louis Carbeno, John B. Marcil, Isaac Collum and Toussaint Collum. One case will decide the whole of this matter, and I will confine my remarks entirely to the case of Carbeno. Major Walsh took these men with him to that country as public servants, at the expense of the country, to do public work, he himself being the administrator of that country. It is a singular thing, which must strike every one, that at the outset, on his way out to form an administration, he endeavoured to intimidate, and, in fact, did intimidate, those public servants under him into signing contracts by which his brother was to obtain from these men three-fourths of all the stakes they should locate. There can be no doubt about that at all, and that seems to me the first important fact. Louis Carbeno swore to it, and his evidence is uncontradicted. Before they started this proposal was made to him, and he swears that on the Quadra this agreement was placed before him to sign. Where was he when asked to sign it? In the stateroom of Major Walsh, the administrator of that country. This servant was brought into Major Walsh's stateroom on board the steamer Quadra and asked to sign that agreement, and the Minister of the Interior was on the same boat as superior officer. Was that agreement signed under intimidation? It certainly was, because this man was told that unless he signed it he would be sent back on the return trip. He was told by Major Walsh himself that unless he signed that document, handing over three-quarters of the claims he might stake in that country to Louis Walsh, he would be sent back on the return trip of the steamer. If nothing else had taken place, if nothing had resulted from that, it was still enough to damn the character of Major Walsh as administrator of that country. I am not here to blacken Major Walsh's character. I hold no brief to do so, and I admit that Major Walsh, as far as I have heard, made an enviable reputation in the North-west, in many respects, as a bold and brave, and, in many cases, a just man. But, we should try Major Walsh here on the evidence we have in this case. His previous character might commute or help to change a sentence passed upon him, but it would be no evidence that this charge had not been proved against him. I am here to try him, as I think this House should try him, on the evidence offered here. He forced Carbeno, under duress, under 'force majeure,' to sign that agreement by which he was to hand over a proportion of all the claims he staked to Major Walsh's brother. There cannot be any doubt about that. There was not only the threat compelling him to sign the contract, but there was then the signing of the contract, and the reward for his turpitude in signing it. Because his wages were immediately raised from $60 to $100 per month. And all those other public servants, paid by this country and taken out by Major Walsh under his control, who signed those documents—each and every one had his wages raised to a proportionate amount.

The next thing we find in looking over the case is, that Dominion Creek—a very valuable creek—was ordered to be closed for the location of claims, and the order was given, under instructions from Major Walsh himself. It appears that this Dominion Creek was the only creek in all that country that was declared closed for the location of claims, and it is concerning this creek that this maladministration took place. The case is peculiar. You may say it is a case of circumstantial evidence, but that is the strongest kind of evidence. We cannot go into the mind of Major Walsh and photograph it and see how far it shows guilt. All we can do is to produce the facts, and this House is here to draw inferences from the facts.

There was one point that the hon. the Solicitor General attempted to make. He attempted to prove that Major Walsh was not responsible for the closing of the claims on Dominion Creek. If that were true, it would be a defence for Major Walsh, but that point the Solicitor General has entirely failed to establish. What have we in the evidence? Mr. Fawcett, at page 79 of the evidence taken before the commission, distinctly swears as follows:

From the beginning there was a difference between myself and the commissioner in reference to the closing of Dominion Creek hills and benches.

Mr. Fawcett shows in different parts of his evidence that he was opposed to it. If there was a difference between him and the commissioner, the commissioner must have been in favour of it, and the evidence proves further on that the commissioner forced Mr. Fawcett's hands, and forced him into the position of sending out the notice. What have we further on? We have a resolution of Major Walsh's council read by Mr. Fawcett in evidence, on page 81. Here is the evidence:

Q. Read the resolution; this question will come up again, but I want to understand it.

Mr. Fawcett reads from the minutes of a meeting held in the commissioner's office, Dawson City, May 30, 1898, to discuss questions of administration.

And what follows on in quotation marks as being read from the minutes:

'Dominion Creek having been closed since the middle of November last, it has been decided that the creek shall remain closed until further notice. This decision applies to hill and bench claims, as well as to creek claims.'

Mr. Fawcett.—I may say that this was moved by Mr. McGregor in council, and he gave as his reason for bringing up this resolution that he had told people on the creeks that the hills were not open, and said he was not going to be made a fool of, and so he presented this resolution.

Q. You were present at this meeting?—A. I was.

Q. Did you object?—A. I did.

There is Mr. Fawcett's direct contradiction to the statement made by the Solicitor General that it was he, and not the commissioner, who had closed this creek. There is the evidence that it was the order of the commissioner in council that closed the creek, and that Mr. Fawcett objected to such an order going out. But, that is not the only evidence, because later on we find this:

Q. When were the privileges stopped on the hillsides?—A. May 30.

Q. What led to it?—A. A resolution by Major Walsh and his council.

Q. How is that council constituted?—A. The commissioner was the council himself.

Q. You recognize that as his report?—A. I recognize that as Mr. Patullo's signature.

Q. Would you read the part relating to the closing of the creek?—A. Any location made on a creek after it has been closed will not be recognized or put on record. This includes hill and bench claims as well as creek claims.

Then, the evidence goes on:

Dominion Creek having been closed since the middle of November last, it has been decided that the creek shall remain closed until further notice. This decision applies to hill and bench claims as well as creek claims.

These council meetings were held after the office was closed. During office hours all the officials were busy, and Major Walsh himself was open to the public.

These meetings, therefore, took place in the evening.

Q. Did you object to that being done?—A. I did.

And, Sir, in the face of that evidence, that sworn and uncontradicted evidence of Mr. Fawcett, that he opposed his commissioner and his council in the minute they had passed, the Solicitor General stands up and says that Fawcett was responsible and not the commissioner. I think that the only point of importance attempted by the Solicitor General in his defence has completely broken down. And if we may judge the whole case by the point which seems to him to be the strongest, we can fairly conclude that his whole case has broken down. But that is not all. It appears in the evidence at page 89:

Was that your signature?—

Mr. Fawcett was asked.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you issue it?—A. Well, on one occasion Mr. Pattullo came with a notice asking me to sign it; it was in relation to closing the hillsides, but I objected on the ground that I considered there was no basis for the hillsides being closed; I still maintained my objection to what had been done in council as gold commissioner, and I refused to sign the notice.

That is, after the council had passed the resolution of Mr. Fawcett, whom the Solicitor General blames for making this notice, refused to sign it.

Major Walsh sent and summoned me before him, and he gave me a very strong reprimand. As near as I can remember, he said: 'Mr. Fawcett, I want you to understand that it is impertinent on your part to question anything that has been decided in council, and when I sent that notice for you to sign, I want you to sign it.'

In the face of Mr. Fawcett's refusal to sign the notice even when it had passed by the council, Major Walsh calls him and gives him a reprimand and threatens and bulldozes him in the fashion I have shown. Can there be any doubt as to who ordered these claims closed? Will the Solicitor

General now, after that evidence is before him, stand up and say that Mr. Fawcett closed those claims and not Major Walsh and his council. Is there a man in this House who will endorse that statement of the Solicitor General. I do not think there is. And I know the Solicitor General well enough to know that, having heard this evidence, he would not now assert that it was Mr. Fawcett and not Major Walsh who closed those claims.

Now we come to what I consider the next important point in this matter. The notice regarding the permits to be given on July 11, 1898, and signed by Thomas Fawcett, is as follows:

NOTICE.

The notice recently issued regarding permits to be given on July 11, 1898, is hereby cancelled, and the following substituted therefor:

HILL AND BENCH CLAIMS

On Dominion Creek are now Open for Location and Prospecting by all Free Miners.

Those claims shown in the appended sketch, with one exception, will be open only to those who made application for them prior to the completion of the survey, which application was filed at the office of the gold commissioner.

Dated at Dawson, Yukon district, this 8th day of July, A. D. 1898.

By order,

THOMAS FAWCETT,
Gold Commissioner.

On the 11th July, persons were going up to Dominion Creek to take up these claims. But what happened? That notice was cancelled, and on the 8th of July notice that anybody might go and take up claims was issued. What follows? It follows that this man Carbeno—I will confine myself to his case—having, on the evening of the 8th of July, before that was published—because, according to Mr. Fawcett's evidence it was not published until the morning of the 9th—Carbeno, under this contract with Walsh made under duress with Walsh or his brother Lewis, starts from Major Walsh's camp with others of Major Walsh's servants and goes up to Dominion Creek to locate claims. It is no defence to say that they passed others on the way up. I can well understand men who thought they had until the 11th of July to get there might have been taking their time loitering on the way, and that those who had an object in getting there on the 9th would get ahead of them. This man Carbeno and the servants of Major Walsh had far more knowledge than those who had gone before. Carbeno swears that they passed men going up. Carbeno got up on Dominion Creek located the claims, and got back on Sunday to Major Walsh's camp, and, on Monday had these claims registered. And of these claims, Major Walsh's brother Lewis got three-quarters. Now, there are the facts. The Solicitor General said: How can you connect the Walshs with Carbeno's going up there? Did the Walshs tell him?

There is a piece of evidence given by Carbeno which does connect the Walshs with this case. He distinctly swears that Major Walsh's brother told him that the creek would be open on the morning of the 9th—that is, Lewis Walsh, with whom his contract was made. And remember, this contract was made in the presence of Major Walsh, on board his boat and in his stateroom, and under threat that he would send Carbeno back unless he signed the document. It is quite clear to me that the case is completely made out, that the charge levelled against Major Walsh and this administration has been completely proven. There is not one bit of evidence to contradict it. And it is idle, it is merely drawing a red herring across the trail for the Solicitor General to say that the people of this country will give their verdict in the matter. They will give that verdict intelligently, if they are intelligently informed. But they will not give their verdict in this matter in favour of Major Walsh if they read and analyse the evidence as we have it before us to-day. I am bold to state without the slightest desire to do injustice to Major Walsh, without the slightest desire to do him an injury, that he so maladministered that country that even this government grew ashamed of him. Why did they withdraw Major Walsh from that country? Why is he not there yet? Because he so maladministered the affairs of that country that even his government grew ashamed of him and brought him back home. It will not do to say that the people of this country will give their verdict. That remark reminds me of a celebrated case that I once knew of in which a leading lawyer of the United States was defending a certain clergyman for a heinous offence. Members of the congregation gathered around and offered to give evidence in favour of the accused. One good old lady said she knew the clergyman was innocent because an angel from heaven had told her so. The remark of the lawyer was: 'I wonder if we could subpoena that angel.' Subpoenaing public opinion in this matter is something like subpoenaing that angel. It is rather a far cry from this to the general elections. And, while this matter of maladministration of the Yukon, not only under Major Walsh, but under others, will be a matter the electors of this country will take into consideration when they are giving their verdict, I do not suppose that will be the only thing on which it will be given. But I do not pretend that were these matters properly understood, all over this country, the honest element in Canada will say that in sending Major Walsh to administer the Yukon and keeping him there as long as they did this government committed a fault; and that in bringing him back they attempted to wipe it out.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). We have not heard these charges to-night for Mr. McINERNEY.

the first time, and I do not think very much will come out of the additions to those charges which have been made to-day. The resolution which has been moved, is so very long, that it is rather difficult to know just what the pith and point of it is; but so far as I have been able to follow it, and connect it with the speech the hon. gentleman has made, it is this: That Mr. Commissioner Walsh went into that Yukon country and took several persons with him, having made a bargain with them to share in the profits of the mines they might take up; that having that in view he closed Dominion Creek and then gave information to his men, and particularly to this man Carbeno, which enabled Carbeno to go to this place and to take up land in priority to others who were on the way. I think so far as Major Walsh is concerned, that is the substance of the charges. But there is another charge which I do not remember to have heard included in the motion, and that is that Mr. Ogilvie was an improper person to appoint because of his relationship to the Minister of the Interior and that he had been rewarded for unfaithful public service in the Yukon. I think that charge was definitely made although it does not happen to be in the resolution, but it is derived from the speech of the hon. gentleman. It must not be forgotten that these charges have been made before, not only on the floor of this House in substance, but by the committee of the miner's union in the Yukon, and that these charges have been the subject of an investigation. Now it is well to know here just what those charges are that were made on the ground, by persons there, and what the charges are that were investigated by the Royal Commission which was issued in this matter. This Royal Commission issued on October 7, 1898. The charges were that the government officials forfeited their claim to the people's confidence and respect by their conduct in certain matters. That, of course is a general charge, and does not amount to anything in itself, but it is explained by what follows. Now these are the charges:

The gold commissioner's office is practically closed, and has been for a considerable time, to the miners who had not the means and desire to bribe the clerks in order to obtain knowledge of the records which ought to be public. It is further charged that wholesale information with regard to the unrecorded ground is conveyed to certain individuals outside the office who obtain men to stake and record the ground in consideration of an interest in the same. Our minister further stated that it is charged that dissatisfaction has arisen with respect to decisions in claim contests, particularly owing to the Crown prosecutor who, while retained as advocate by one of the contestants, was giving legal advice to the gold commissioner. The Dominion lands agent is openly charged with serious breaches of trust and malfeasance in office, and some of the officials connected with the recorder's office are alleged to be incompetent. Our said minister further submits that it is stated in the communication that hardships have been caused to many of the claim owners owing to the want of experience of the mining inspectors. The committee further represents that the Crown timber agent has granted such concessions and laid down such stringent regulations that only a few parties have the privilege of supplying cordwood this coming winter.

These were all the charges that were made by the persons on the ground, and they were taken up and investigated by the commissioner. The results we have before us, and he who runs may read. We are not dependent upon the interpretation put upon this evidence by myself, and certainly not upon the interpretation put upon it by hon. gentlemen opposite. There is the evidence, 264 pages, and we may read it for ourselves to see to what extent this long list of eight or nine charges was proved. I take it that the result of all that evidence is placed before us in this resolution. All we can say with reference to it is that for reasons that have been given, Major Walsh went there to exploit the country, and that is shown by the conduct of Carbeno, as has been mentioned before.

Now, the first charge with regard to Major Walsh is that he took these men out under an agreement such as has been mentioned. I do not know that there is anything wrong in that. Of course, suspicion might attach to him for doing so, and persons with a tendency to suspect everything might suspect that Major Walsh was cognizant of all that took place between Philip Walsh and Lewis Walsh. But for my part, I do not think so. I speak subject to correction, but reading the evidence as I have done, I think we can come to no other conclusion but that Major Walsh knew nothing about the agreement that had been made with Lewis Walsh until this conversation took place on the Quadra. I do not remember that there was anything in the evidence that connects, even as to knowledge, Major Walsh with the agreement that has been mentioned and referred to. Assuming that is the case for the sake of argument, what is there on which we can attack Major Walsh? If his brother Lewis Walsh wished to make an arrangement with Carbeno or with anybody else by which he was to raise the money for the purpose of developing any mine that this man Carbeno could find, or any property that he might locate, is it a wrong thing on his part to get an undivided three-fourths of that money? It seems to me there cannot reasonably be anything wrong on the part of Lewis Walsh in doing a thing of that kind; and that is the agreement we have before us, witnessed by Philip Walsh, and made in Fort Arthur, although not signed for some time after. Now, what of it, these men having been hired to go out to the Yukon, if their names appear in the Auditor General's Report and in connection with the public accounts? Why should they not appear there? If they were hired to go out there, why should they not be paid for it? And yet the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) parades their names in his resolution as showing that these men received public money.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My object was to show that during all that period when these men were working under that agreement, they were paid their time by this country.

Mr. BRITTON. It is not disputed that they went out there in the employ of the government, and if they went out in the employ of the government they should receive pay for it, and if they received pay, it follows inevitably that their names should appear in the Auditor General's Report. Therefore, the object of parading their names as a part of this resolution is something that I do not understand. I do not think that the people of this country are going to be misled merely because these men's names appeared in the public accounts, and because the hon. gentleman argues there from that they are corrupt or have done something they ought not to have done.

The first point that the hon. gentleman made is that Major Walsh closed Dominion Creek. It is an easy matter to garble evidence. Perhaps the expression is not parliamentary, and I do not say that anybody did it. But, I say that it is an easy matter to do it. I do not propose to do that, but I propose to cite the evidence of this point and leave it to any man who either reads the evidence or the speeches that have been delivered in this House to say who did close Dominion Creek. Now, the evidence on that point is this; the book, as I said before, is before us. On page 11, are the charges that were made specifically by the parties on the spot, and which were placed before the commissioner for investigation. Among these charges is that Mr. Fawcett did close Dominion Creek:

That Thomas Fawcett did wilfully manipulate his powers, real and assumed, in the matter of closing and opening of Dominion Creek bench claims, to the defrauding of the miners and the benefit of officials and their friends.

Thomas Fawcett was the gold commissioner. The charge is that Thomas Fawcett did it. The statement in this House on the evidence was that Thomas Fawcett did it. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) says that Major Walsh did it. These people on the ground did not charge that he had anything to do with it, but they charged that Thomas Fawcett, the gold commissioner, did it. We will see what Mr. Fawcett said when he was called to deal with the charge himself. It is significant that in these charges which were heard of in the House, the result of which was the issuing of a Royal Commis sion, the result of the Royal Commission being that we have the evidence before us, one of the formal charges was that Thomas Fawcett closed and opened these Dominion Creek bench claims—

To the defrauding of the miners and the benefit of officials and their friends.

And in that connection nobody else was charged with it. Now, I want to distinguish, and I think the hon. gentleman who spoke last ought to have distinguished, and I think all ought to distinguish, between the discussion that took place as to the permits that were given after Dominion Creek was closed and the closing of Dominion Creek itself. A discussion had arisen in regard to the permits given and in regard to persons claiming to have permits and claiming to go there after Dominion Creek was formerly closed. This discussion appears at page 79 of the evidence. I think it has been read two or three times already, and I will only read part of it simply to emphasize the point. Mr. Fawcett says :

From the beginning there was a difference between myself and the commissioner in reference to the closing of Dominion Creek hills and benches. People had been permitted by myself to prospect these hills and have their applications at the office, nothing preventing them from renewing their certificates except that the returns of survey had not come in and these returns would aid in identifying these hills to show where they were.

And so on. Without desiring to refrain from reading and yet not desiring to take up time by reading, simply referring to page 79 as to the question of permits and dealing with them in contradistinction to the question of closing Dominion Creek, I pass to pages 80 and 81, which refer to the closing of Dominion Creek. It does not seem fair for any hon. member of this House or any lawyer when this is specific on this very point to try and make the evidence apply to another matter which is referred to in another part of the evidence. It is not fair to go away from the charge that is dealt with on page 80. Mr. Fawcett is under examination. The commissioner asks :

Q. I would like to ask you a few questions about the history of Dominion Creek ; when was the creek closed—not the hills and benches ?

The answer is given without evasion or equivocation.

A. The 15th day of November was the last date on which any applications were taken.

Q. What year ?—A. 1897.

Q. Why was it closed then ?—A. Just before this I had learned that a great many claims were being relocated over others that had been put on by description, but the last of the group that I heard of was just below second Discovery—Lower Discovery ; when it was recorded number two consisted of some three claims, and A, B and C were recorded.

Then it goes on in reference to miners' claims, which I omit. I do not omit it because it might not be read and properly read if no one had read the evidence, but I do it to save time. I leave out the next paragraph, and then go on as follows :

Q. You closed it ?—A. I closed it.

Q. The date of closure you have given ; did you immediately report that to Ottawa ?—A. Yes, and also to Major Walsh.

Q. Was it endorsed by Major Walsh ?—A. It was.

Q. He approved of the creek being closed ?—A. He was called in evidence on that same point in August up in court that would have been blocked on the ground.

I do not know just what that means.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
That is in Nelson and Donnelly.

Mr. BRITTON (reading) :

The question was brought up and at least one of the attorneys took the ground that the creek was never legally closed, so Major Walsh was called in. Major Walsh in his instructions had power over the mining regulations, and he was called in evidence. He was asked : 'Were you aware that Dominion Creek was closed ?' He said : 'Yes.' Then he was asked : 'Did you approve of it ?' He said : 'Most certainly I did.'

Q. That was given in evidence ?—A. That was given in evidence in the case of Nelson vs. Donnelly, and on which reply has since been received.

Q. Had you any written instructions from Major Walsh to that effect ?—A. I might have had a letter but I don't recollect at present, but I know he approved of what I had done. I have written instructions with reference to that remaining closed. There is a letter at present—

Q. That it was closed ? Did you permit prospecting to go on on the hill-sides ?—A. There was no recording or prospecting on the hill-sides until the spring, until the men were over their surveying.

Q. Then they began to prospect ?—A. Yes.

Q. When ?—A. In April—the first prospecting was in April.

Q. You received these applications, didn't you, in the office ?—A. Yes, we noted them.

Q. Didn't put them on record ?—A. No, because we were not in a position to designate them properly until the ground was surveyed.

Q. Was that privilege of prospecting and making applications for record abrogated ?—A. No, sir, that was open to every one.

Q. Was it afterward abrogated ?—A. It was under the resolution that declared the hills and benches closed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Hear, hear.

Mr. BRITTON. That abrogation, as it is called here, is the abrogation that appears in the evidence that the hon. member for Kent, N.B., speaks of. It is something entirely distinct from the closing of Dominion Creek. Then that resolution is read. Then, some of this evidence deals with the case of this woman, Mrs. Koch. The evidence on this point comes in again at page 84. I want to deal fairly with this man's evidence. I want to call the attention of the House specially to the evidence on page 84. This particular charge against Major Walsh had not arisen then. It was a time when the truth could be elicited without bias, or without having regard to any particular case against any one, but being dealt with as to the men who were there on the spot and who were able to defend themselves. Mr. Fawcett was the person being charged and Mr. Fawcett was there to answer for himself. The commissioner says:

The question is the closing of Dominion Creek to the public; that matter I understand. I am a surveyor and can understand why it was done. I have had something of the same kind to deal with myself; in this case I do not know what Mr. George's statements were to be, or what his contentions were to be. Whether Mr. George comes or not, the statements of these parties will be taken; I will take their statement as far as I can. It is only due to Mr. Fawcett, against whom this charge has been made.

You will see again that it was against Mr. Fawcett the charge was made for closing Dominion Creek.

For him to go out of the country without having put his view of it at least would be unfair; it would be unfair to refuse him a hearing.

Mr. Tabor.—In arguing that there should be no investigation of charges made subsequent to August 25, I do not do so with any idea of shielding anybody; I merely want to know the legal way in which evidence can be taken and the prosecution gone on with. Mr. Fawcett and the other gentlemen were anxious that these things should be investigated; they do not want this cloud resting on them. A great deal that has been said has been founded on rumour, and an investigation of this sort is the only way to get at things of that kind. I do not want the impression to go abroad that I make this objection for the purpose of shielding these officials.

The Commissioner.—I think we all regret the occasion for this.

Mr. Tabor.—I think you join with me in regretting that it had to be raised; and I think everybody else does; the fault is not with us, the fault is with the gentlemen who issued the commission; it was an oversight.

The Commissioner.—There is a charge here, Mr. Fawcett, that you closed Dominion Creek. You gave at some length statements in connection with that in a previous case. Mr. George is not here, and he laid the charge; the same charge is repeated by the aforesaid president and secretary of the miners' association as well; they are not here. I see some of the members of the miners' association here; are they willing to participate in this examination of Mr. Fawcett? I see Mr. McGregor, Mr. Galpin, Mr. Buteau. Are you willing, Mr. McGregor, to countenance this procedure?

Mr. McGregor.—On behalf of myself and some of the miners associated with me, I regret to be compelled to decline; I am not conversant with the matter—with that part of the catalogue; these other parties who were here yesterday were better up in this question.

The Commissioner.—Are you willing to stay and ask any questions of the witnesses you may see fit?

Mr. McGregor.—I have no objection as far as that is concerned, but, as I said yesterday, I beg leave to express disapproval of the commission being limited to August 25, as in doing so it would cripple the workings of the commission, and consequently would not fulfil the purposes for which it was granted. The spirit of the commission, I consider, cannot be carried out by limiting the time to August 25. It is nearly six months ago, and since that a great many of the people in connection with these charges have left the place. I do not wish to make any comments on the matter.

The commissioner says, and see how important this is in connection with the charge with which we are dealing now, namely, that Major Walsh closed Dominion Creek.

The Commissioner.—As to this particular charge, that does not apply; Mr. Fawcett is charged with crime; the clerks are all here in the office or the vicinity. I don't think any objection would apply to this particular charge; it is a very serious one.

Then on page 86:

The Commissioner.—We would like to know the reason why the creek was closed first.

Mr. Fawcett.—In 1897?

The Commissioner.—Yes; please go over some of the general statements again.

Mr. Fawcett.—I had learned from persons whom I considered reliable that claims were being staked over others that were already recorded under different descriptions; that the same land was being applied for and recorded by different parties; that is, there were a great many claims which had at first been put on by description as second, third or fourth below some tributary adjoining the creek at a certain point not defined to any place where that tributary came in. That was when I first arrived in the country. I took the description as near as I could, and after probably a month I found that there was no way of being positive as to what ground was recorded unless recorded under some particular number, and even then numbers would be duplicated.

By the Commissioner:

Q. That was owing to the vagueness of the description?—A. Yes, the people didn't number their stakes; they make their descriptions refer to the confluence of certain creeks, or the nearness to other natural objects. Of course, descriptions of that kind are not reliable. At a later date I found ground recorded in that way was being staked over, or recorded under certain numbers, and in every case that came up before the creek was closed it was found claims overlapped others which were on record, and these claims were cancelled. Finding this done to a great extent, I found it necessary to close the creek, and I accepted no more applications for that part of the creek which I thought might be covered by any claims.

All that on page 87 is material. After he has explained it fully and stated that he had closed it, and had given his reasons why he closed it, and leaving no possibility of ambiguity about it in any way, shape or form, then this occurs:

Q. On account of this complication, you closed the whole creek on November, 1897. Then you opened part of it?—A. After I found that all conflict would be confined within certain bounds, I opened the rest. I left considerable space on the creeks between the closed portion and the open portion.

That is the evidence, and I have read it with as much fairness as I am able to. I read all the points on this question which we have on hand to-night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You did not read page 89.

Mr. BRITTON. It has been read. I have read the particulars that refer to it with the exception of a word or two on page 98, and I will read that. This is in examination by Mr. McGregor :

By the Commissioner:

Q. That part of Dominion Creek which you closed is still closed?—A. Still closed.

Q. Still contests on there?—A. Yes.

Q. And likely to be?—A. Yes.

By Mr. McGregor:

Q. What part of Dominion Creek is that?—A. From Upper Discovery to No. 120 below.

Q. Who closed that?—A. I did.

Q. Still remains closed?—A. Yes.

Surely this evidence is just as good for the government and Mr. Walsh, as it is for the complainant, and if evidence is good for anything, I have proved out of the mouth of the witness beyond the possibility of a doubt that Mr. Fawcett, the commissioner, closed Dominion Creek, and that Major Walsh did not do it, and, therefore, there can be no charge against him. Did my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. McInerney), intend to mislead the House? I hope not, but yet he said that this agreement was signed under duress. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. McINERNEY. Read page 262.

Mr. BRITTON. I shall, it is as follows :

Q. In your examination yesterday, Mr. Carbeno, in answering one of the questions, you stated that you thought that your present position was the result of signing that agreement or something to that effect?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there not part of the evidence in that connection which you forgot to give us yesterday?—A. I forgot to say that other papers were drawn up and I would not sign them.

Q. When was this?—A. Coming up on board the 'Quadra.'

Q. You would not sign them, why?—A. I said the papers were not legal, and would not sign them until I got legal ones. That afternoon I was called to Major Walsh's stateroom, and he asked me if I had made an agreement at Port Arthur before I left.

Q. You said you did?—A. He said, 'Why didn't you sign the papers?' I said I didn't because they were not legal. He said, 'If you don't sign those papers when this boat goes back, I will send you back on it.' That was all that was said until we got to Big Salmon, then other papers came on, and therefore I signed them.

Mr. McINERNEY. And you think that is not duress?

Mr. BRITTON. No, it is not, and they were not signed.

Mr. McINERNEY. It is not duress for him to say :

If you don't sign the papers I will send you back on this steamer.

Mr. BRITTON.

Mr. BRITTON. He did not sign them and he did not go back.

Mr. McINERNEY. He did sign them.

Mr. BRITTON. My hon. friend says they were signed on the boat, because of the duress or vis major of Major Walsh.

Mr. McINERNEY. Would the hon. gentleman allow me? The next line proves it exactly :

That was all that was said until we got to Big Salmon. Then other papers came and therefore I signed them.

Mr. BRITTON. He signed them long after those were presented on the boat which were not signed. My hon. friend said that those papers were signed on the boat by reason of the duress of Major Walsh.

Mr. McINERNEY. The threat was there.

Mr. BRITTON. They do not pretend that they were. More than that, the papers which were produced on the boat, were not the papers which were signed. Carbeno said that those papers were illegal, that they did not represent the proper agreement, and he signed the papers which came on afterwards at Big Salmon. Now, I think we have this point clear, that instead of the papers being signed by Carbeno under a threat by Major Walsh, that if he did not sign them, he would send him back, we have conclusive testimony that Carbeno did not sign them. If I am correct in what I have said, then the gravamen of this charge is not proved by the evidence, namely, that Major Walsh knew of these agreements, and that it was part and parcel of a transaction between these men before they went out that they were to enter into such agreements. Carbeno was asked if he had made an agreement, why he did not sign it. He said it was because it was not legal, and it was only after he arrived at Big Salmon, that he signed it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why did Major Walsh make Carbeno give the bill of sale to Philip Walsh?

Mr. BRITTON. I suppose he did it because Philip Walsh was on the ground.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, Carbeno swears he did that because Major Walsh forced him to do it.

Mr. DAVIN. Look at page 260.

Mr. BRITTON (reading) :

Q. Why did you give this to Philip Walsh and not to Lewis?—A. Because Major Walsh instructed me he did not want Lewis's name brought into the office.

I do not see that there is anything particular about that. If Lewis Walsh was competent to make the agreement, and Philip Walsh was there representing Lewis Walsh, it seems to me that there was nothing criminal in asking Carbeno to make this offer to Philip Walsh who was on the ground and could deal with it. At this stage of the matter, when Major Walsh is out of the employ of the government, no one needs to hold a brief for him, or to shield him from proper inquiry. But let us look at the evidence with fairness, and see what it amounts to. If my hon. friend had supplemented his speech with proof or evidence from which a fair inference could be drawn, that money was made out of this transaction, there might be some reason for further pursuing the inquiry. But, in the absence of that, and with nothing more than we have here, the hon. gentleman shows a degree of persistency for which, if it were for some worthy object, he would be entitled to credit. But it is a persistency in the pursuit of a man whom for some reason or other, the hon. gentleman dislikes from the soles of his feet to the crown of his head. That is shown by the way in which this case is presented to the House. The only other point of evidence with regard to Louis Carbeno is the fact that he acquired knowledge that these claims were to be opened on July 8. I shall not follow the evidence on that point beyond repeating what the Solicitor General said, that if 150 people were on the road to locate claims, there could not have been very much secrecy about it. They were on the road, because these claims were expected to be opened on the 9th.

Mr. McINERNEY. No, the 11th.

Mr. BRITTON. Whatever date it was after the 8th. If these men were going there to locate claims on the 11th, they would require a permit, and there is no pretense that they had a permit, or were going for any other reason than caused Carbeno to go. Further than that, Carbeno says he got the information, not from Major Walsh, but from McBeth, his dog driver, and from Major Walsh's brother, who told him he thought they would be opened on the 9th. I mention this to show that there was no secrecy about this thing. McBeth knew it, and told him, and Major Walsh's brother knew it, and 150 others knew it, and were on the road after Carbeno, to locate claims on this Dominion Creek. If that is so, it does not seem to me that there is very much to investigate.

One other word, and I have done. My hon. friend will admit that it is a fair rule in the courts, that when a man calls any witness, he vouches for the credibility of that witness; and if you get evidence from a witness called by the other side, that evidence is worth more than evidence which you obtain from your own side. Now, the hon. gentleman did call Morgan, and presented him as a credible witness; and yet this man, if his evidence is worth anything, dispels all this noise and talk, this cloud of dust and dirt attempted to be thrown over the Yukon transactions, because he says the transactions out there were fair and square. Nobody can claim that in the administration of mining territory, of all other things in the world, in a new country, remote from courts and judges, and the ordinary officers who can be called in to settle disputes, there would not be contestations and charges of malfeasance that might have no foundation whatever in fact. From the evidence we have here, the wonder is, not that these charges have been made against the officials, but that there was not more foundation for them. To bring this matter up and take up the time of parliament discussing it, was hardly worthy of my hon. friend. He, however, has evidently ample time at his disposal, and the resolution which he has presented at such great length, indicates the greatest possible industry and zeal in the pursuit of a political opponent; but I think that unless something different from what has been yet shown, appears nothing will come of all my hon. friend's zeal and industry.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). As regards the observation of my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) respecting Col. Morgan—I think he must be a colonel because I imagine there is no one at Seattle under that rank—the hon. gentleman says that my hon. friend from Pictou ought to be content with Col. Morgan's statement, because he had called him as witness. That is rather an extraordinary remark to come from a gentleman of the standing of the hon. member for Kingston, because what it means is this, that if my hon. friend, in preparing a case for trial, should communicate with a witness and find that witness unreliable, find him a man on whom he could not depend, he would none the less be bound by any evidence that man might give, because he had appealed to him in the first instance to ascertain what kind of a story he would tell. That is my hon. friend's view of the responsibility of a person who communicates with a witness respecting the evidence which such witness could give in a suit at law or with respect to a matter like the present one.

So far as Col. Morgan is concerned, the hon. member for Pictou wrote to him, as he might have written to any one else, asking for information respecting the condition of affairs in the Yukon, which condition had attracted the attention of the press of this country and the United States and the old country; and in response to that letter, Mr. Morgan, who happens to have some fifteen claims in the Yukon, which he did not want sacrificed, wrote back that, with some trifling exceptions, everything was very lovely. And I have no doubt that a great many other people, holding claims in the Yukon, if appealed to in the same way, and if their answers were to be used in parliament or published, would be very apt to give the same reply.

My hon. friend, the Solicitor General, read, with a good deal of gusto, this letter of Mr. Morgan, but I venture to think that if he had been dealing with a court and had not been desirous of attracting some cheap applause from hon. gentlemen behind him, he would hardly have taken the course he did. What relevancy this particular letter has to the particular point dealt with by the resolution, I cannot see. My hon. friend from Pictou suggests by his resolution that the government ought to be censured because they did not further investigate the conduct of Major Walsh. My hon. friend the Solicitor General replies by reading a letter from Col. Morgan, in which Col. Morgan expresses the opinion that it is an undignified thing for a gentleman to apply to him for information.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend will remember that our mutual friend from Pictou read his reply to Major Walsh's letter, and I thought that, in order to make the record complete, I should read Major Morgan's letter to which our hon. friend had given this reply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend took about ten minutes in reading and discussing that letter, although he was dealing with a resolution declaring that the government deserved censure for not having further investigated the conduct of Major Walsh, and he read with a good deal of gusto the opinion of Mr. Morgan regarding a certain supposed lack of dignity on the part of my hon. friend from Pictou. I do not know that Mr. Morgan's opinions on the question of dignity are very valuable. Supposing he thought it was not dignified for my hon. friend the Solicitor General to read that letter, I wonder would my hon. friend have such a high opinion of Mr. Morgan as an authority in that respect.

My hon. friend the Solicitor General seems to think that a large portion of the sworn evidence could be disposed of by the statement of a gentleman, to whom he referred as Mr. Ryley. He did not give us much information about Mr. Ryley. I supposed at first that he was the same gentleman that kept the hotel, but apparently not. And this gentleman's statement apparently is to dispose of all the evidence and relieve the government from any obligation to investigate the conduct of Major Walsh. My hon. friend would not deal in that way with this matter before a court. It may do very well for the purpose he intended, and I do not for a moment say that it was not the best thing he could have done. I know the ability of my hon. friend, and I know that sometimes he has possibly to undertake tasks he does not care very much about, but, I do not think that, on consideration, he will say that any statement of that kind made by Mr. Ryley would outweigh the sworn testimony referred to by my hon. friend from Pictou.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)

I do not quite understand what the position of my hon. friend the Solicitor General with regard to this matter really is, when I come to consider the attitude of my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton). The Solicitor General says that Major Walsh's conduct was not being investigated at all, that he had no opportunity of defending himself, and that he had gone away. But my hon. friend from Kingston seems to think that this was an investigation of Major Walsh.

Mr. BRITTON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was the argument.

Mr. BRITTON. Not at all, and I must have been exceedingly obscure if I conveyed that impression. My point was this, that these men on the ground made charges against Mr. Fawcett, that there was an investigation into the charges against Mr. Fawcett, and that in that investigation Mr. Fawcett admitted that he was the man who closed up the creek.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I accept the explanation of my hon. friend, but I heard him state distinctly, over and over again, that these charges, which my hon. friend from Pictou made last year, were being investigated before this commission. Does he deny that he stated on the floor of this House, within the course of the last hour, that the charges which the hon. member for Pictou made last year were being investigated before that commission? I do not think he will deny that.

Mr. BRITTON. So far as the general charges are concerned, they were investigated by that commission, but I was dealing with the particular charge as to the closing of Dominion Creek. That is why I use the evidence given before the commission, and it was that evidence I referred to. But, speaking generally, I gave the charges before the commission, and said they were investigated by the commission.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought that my hon. friend really said exactly what I said he did, and I do not understand his statement just made to be very different. I certainly took a note of his words at the time, and Hansard will show to-morrow what he really did say. The hon. gentleman understands now that the charges made by my hon. friend from Pictou last year, included charges against Major Walsh but were made after the commission had nearly completed its work. Nine-tenths of the evidence had been taken before the hon. member for Pictou brought this matter up in the House, yet my hon. friend from Kingston is dealing with the matter as if that commission had been investigating the charges which were made last year, and one of which is now supported by the evidence from public documents this year.

Mr. BRITTON. They were only repeated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not aware that any such charge as that the hon. gentleman refers to respecting Mr. Fawcett was made by the hon. member for Pictou last year at all. I may be in error, but I do not understand that the same charge was made, either in the same terms, or of the same character. I do not understand that the same charge, or one in the same terms was made before. My hon. friend the Solicitor General was good enough to give another very cogent reason. The government, if you please are perfectly justified in refusing to investigate the conduct of Major Walsh, because the development of these claims which have been acquired by the Walsh Bros. has resulted up to the present in a loss of $5,000. In whatever straits the hon. gentleman may have been in the past, I think he never before was in such straits as to be compelled to resort to such an argument as that. I think he will admit that, because he is very fair. Was it from Mr. Ryley that he got this information about the loss of $5,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Oh, no.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not from Mr. Ryley? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) may have some secret mode of informing himself of these matters as to which he has not saw fit to advise the House. I cannot suppose that the government are still in communication with the Walsh Bros. with respect to these mining claims. I suppose he did not get the information from the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) or from the real Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). I really think it must have been from Mr. Ryley that he got the information. If it was not from Mr. Ryley or from the department I think he should be good enough to give the House the information. One further circumstance the Solicitor General mentioned, which, as he indicated, completely exonerated the government from any duty of investigating the case of Major Walsh, namely, the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Comstock) who now represents Brockville was elected by a substantial majority. Well, what will he say as to the Minister of the Interior being on his trial in the late local election of Manitoba, when he went in his own constituency of Brandon, which he represents in this House, and was snowed under by a thousand majority. If the government were on trial in Brockville I suppose the government and the Minister of the Interior were on trial in Manitoba; because the Minister of the Interior went there and asked the electors of Manitoba to make it a personal matter between himself and the leader of the opposition; and he wanted the electors of Manitoba, and particularly the electors of Brandon, to give the leader of the opposition his answer. But the Minister of the Interior got the answer instead of the leader of the opposition. And, eventually, after the battle was over, and the smoke of conflict had rolled away, Mr. Greenway, the late Premier, said the whole difficulty with regard to his government was the conduct of Mr. Sifton, who went into his constituency and made it a personal matter of his record as Minister of the Interior which record the people of Manitoba, particularly those of the constituency of Brandon, were not prepared to endorse. I was surprised, when my hon. friend the Solicitor General, who is usually a very modest man, had the hardihood to refer to the election in Brockville. I should have thought that the election in Brockville would be the last thing that he would have referred to in this connection or any other.

Mr. COWAN. How about Birmingham?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) wants to know about Birmingham. I would like to know from him what he thinks about Pritchett; and particularly I would like to know what he thinks about his own legal opinion given the other evening, that Pritchett could not be proceeded against for perjury or could not be proceeded against for offences under the Election Act, because his offences had been barred by the statute. The same argument was put forward by the Solicitor General. I say that such a statement has not the slightest foundation in fact. If any gentleman wishes to inform himself, on that subject, let him turn to section 117 of the statute. It does give a limitation of one year; but the very gentleman who raised that question previously stated that Pritchett was an absconder from justice, in which case, the statutory limitation does not apply. This the Solicitor General should have known—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) kindly explain what has become of the warrant for Pritchett?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That question ought to be answered.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This discussion is not in order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am prepared to answer the Solicitor General's question if I am permitted. Under the statute which was misquoted by two gentlemen in this House, it does not make any difference that a year had elapsed because Pritchett had absconded and the limitation does not apply.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Where is the warrant?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It makes not the slightest difference—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have already decided that this discussion is not in order.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the point of order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentlemen are referring to a past debate.

Mr. FOSTER. If you would allow me a moment, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and I will not refer to a past debate. Now, the point I make is, that the question whether the government should have ordered an investigation or not does not depend on trifling matters as to whether this agreement was signed at Port Arthur or on the Big Salmon, or anywhere else. It does not depend on whether a particular document written in lead pencil and submitted to this man Carbeno was signed, or whether another document drawn up under the same inspiration was the one signed. The point is that Major Walsh went into that country with practically the powers of a dictator, taking with him four ignorant men who were his servants and who were under his control, taking also his brother, who was a servant of the government and paid by the government, he having in that country already another brother. The point of the charge is that he used these servants as instruments whereby he and his brothers could obtain mining claims in that country secretly under cover of their names. And I ask my hon. friend the Solicitor General and every other hon. member whether he is prepared to say that that is the right kind of conduct on the part of an officer having the powers which Major Walsh had in going into that country. Is it right that a man having the powers of a dictator should use ignorant men in his service who may be discharged by him, whose salaries could be increased or decreased by him at will—is it right that he should take these men, and, under cover of their names, acquire mining rights in that country? I say that the proposition, irrespective of these other considerations, that conduct of that kind does not require investigation seems to me a monstrous proposition. But that does not cover all the circumstances. You have the further fact that these men are actually coerced. According to their uncontradicted evidence, they are told that they will be sent back if they do not enter into an agreement to carry out this scandalous scheme to which I have referred. Does my hon. friend the Solicitor General venture to say that conduct of that kind is not one to be investigated? Does any man on the other side of the House say that in justice to Major Walsh himself, that is not a matter which should be investigated? The Solicitor General says Major Walsh has had no opportunity of defending himself. I say that if the government have the reputation of Major Walsh at heart they should give him an opportunity of defending himself in this matter. It is due to Major Walsh as well as due to the country that this officer who has been coercing his servants for his own benefit, in the way which is shown by the evidence, should be given an opportunity of showing why it was, under what circumstances it was, for what reason it was, that he departed from the principles of good administration to that extent.

But that is not all. We have the fact that a particular district called Dominion Creek is closed so far as the hill and bench claims are concerned, in May, 1878. It had been previously closed so far as the creek claims are concerned in November, 1897, so it was completely closed by May, 1898. Then we have the fact that no claims are to be granted to any person in that particular district, and a woman described as very friendly with Major Walsh, described as the person who cooked for him, is granted a permit during the period when that claim is absolutely closed to all persons who might desire mining claims in the Yukon. I think that my hon. friend the Solicitor General exercised a very wise discretion in not making the slightest reference to that circumstance, and his example in that respect was followed by the hon. member for Kingston who made no reference to it. Now, what possible excuse is there for the government not taking some proceeding to investigate Mr. Walsh with respect to that? Is the whole administration of the Yukon, without regard to right or wrong, without regard to law or justice, without regard to rule or reason, to be left to Major Walsh, and proceedings of this kind to be carried out by him, and the government of this country to say that it is a matter which is not to be investigated?

But that is not all. Then we have this particular district of Dominion Creek to be opened on the 11th day of July, 1898.* The first project, so far as I understand the matter, was that it should be opened by means of permits, but Mr. Fawcett says it shall not be opened by means of permits, but shall be opened generally for location of claims, and he persuades Mr. Walsh to adopt that course. One would think that the course would be to give such a reasonable notice that every one, for a reasonable time beforehand, might become aware that on that particular day that district would be opened to location. What is done? Mr. Fawcett prepares a notice and the date of opening the district is left blank. The typewriter, under the direction of some one, fills in the next day. Now, is it not desirable to find out under whose direction the next day was filled in as the date of opening. What was the result of it? The result was that through information obtained from Major Walsh's own brother, through information obtained from Major Walsh's own servant, these men who were to take up claims for Major Walsh's benefit, started out on the evening of the 8th and located claims which were opened on the 9th, without any previous notice to the public at all. A great deal has been said by the Solicitor General and by the member for Kingston with regard to a statement that a number of people were passed on the way by those persons who had that private information which was to be used for the benefit of Major Walsh and his brother. Why, the very circumstance which has been alluded to by these gentlemen indicates that these people imagined that Dominion Creek was not to be opened until the 11th. These people were passed by the people who had private information that it was to be opened on the 9th, they overtook them, got ahead of them, and staked their claims. The Solicitor General says, from some private information which he has not disclosed to the House, that the Walshs have lost $5,000 in this enterprise. He has not seen fit to inform the House at what price the Walshs are holding these claims at the present time. Perhaps my hon. friend would be good enough to enlighten us with regard to the figure at which they are holding their claims at the present time. My hon. friend's information does not extend that far. Well, I am sorry for it, because it would be extremely interesting to the House if we were put in possession of that information.

Well, under these circumstances these people take up these claims and take them up for the benefit of Major Walsh. Now, in the first instance the agreements are made under the direction of Major Walsh, they are made in his favour. We know that claims have been taken up there to be held to the extent of a three-fourths interest for Lewis Walsh. Mr. Lewis Walsh was not in the employ of the government. I think he was at Port Arthur when Major Walsh went there. At all events, this curious circumstance which directly connects Major Walsh with the matter is to be found in the evidence, that after this claim was taken, Major Walsh, in contravention of this agreement and altogether apart from it, ordered this man Carbeno to transfer his claim to Philip Walsh, the brother of the director of the administration of the Yukon. Now, will my hon. friend the Solicitor General, or will the member for Kingston inform me by what right or by what principle of good administration Major Walsh, the dictator of the Yukon, had to go to this man Carbeno and order him, his servant, liable to dismissal at his command, to transfer the particular claim which Carbeno had taken up, to Major Walsh's brother, Philip Walsh? Is that not a matter which in all fairness both to Major Walsh and to the government, should be investigated? If it is not, I fail entirely to appreciate the significance of these statements that have been made to the House by the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

Now, Sir, I am sorry to have detained the House so long. I have merely another word to say in conclusion. This matter has been dealt with both by the Solicitor General and by the member for Kingston as if Major Walsh were on his trial here. It is not Major Walsh who is on his trial here, it is the government which is on its trial. The question is whether the circumstances which my hon. friend from Pictou has drawn to the attention of the House, were a sufficient ground for the government at once to order an investigation into the conduct of Major Walsh. That is the question. Major Walsh may be able to clear himself absolutely, but the point I make is that under the circumstances which are disclosed, every one of them by public documents and embodied in the resolution of my hon. friend, a case is made out which absolutely demands an investigation by this government. But this government did not make this investigation, therefore, I say that in my opinion, the government, not having made that investigation, not having satisfied the country with respect to these matters, deserves the censure of this House.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I intend to detain the House but for a few moments. The hon. gentleman who moved this resolution makes a very long speech and writes a very long resolution, so long, in fact, and so involved that it is difficult for any ordinary person to understand them. But I have been looking over this resolution, and I find that among the statements of the hon. gentleman is this one, that Dominion Creek hills and benches in the Yukon district were closed for the location of claims by order of Major Walsh, and contrary to the protest of the gold commissioner, on the 15th of November, 1897. The hon. member for Kent, N.B., (Mr. McInerney) also appeared to be very positive from the information he thought he had that this was a true statement, and on that ground he asked this House to vote censure upon the government. I think when a statement is made as serious as this, the hon. gentleman who makes it and who asks the House to vote for his resolution, ought to bring such evidence as would lead one to believe that the statement was reasonably true, or that there were reasons for believing it to be true. I do not think that he has done that, but on the contrary, I think that I can show clearly and beyond doubt that this statement on which he asks us to vote censure on the government is not true. In that case I hope the hon. gentleman, when he knows the true facts, will not press his motion. There is only one statement of any importance in this resolution, and I want to present some evidence in contradiction of statements made by hon. gentlemen, who have taken a little section here and there of the evidence, who have tried to prove them by the evidence, that was given, not perhaps relative to the present case, and who have tried to prove, in some way or other, that there was some foundation for the statement made in this resolution. The hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), seemed, for some reason or other, to make some insinuations against, or to make light of, the character of Mr. Ryley, who was referred to in the debate. All I have to say, is that Mr. Ryley is an able, efficient, capable and trusted officer of the Department of the Interior.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. senior member for Halifax has gone out, but I am quite certain the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland), has misunderstood his references to Mr. Ryley. There was a reference by way of a joke—I followed him very closely—in regard to the old rhyme, that went something like this:

Is this Mr. Riley

They speak of so highly?

Is this Mr. Riley who keeps the hotel?

It was in the humorous sense.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He had that joke, but he spoke seriously afterwards. He made several allusions to Mr. Ryley, and tried to belittle Mr. Ryley, but all I have to say, in answer to that, is that I am informed, and believe, that Mr. Ryley is a most efficient, capable and trustworthy officer of the Department of the Interior. He has risen to the position he occupies, by his straightforward conduct and application to the business of the department. I wish to read the following evidence to show the House clearly, that the statement made in the resolution, now in your hands, Mr. Speaker, is not true. The examination of Mr. Fawcett, made by Mr. Ryley, which I desire to read, will show that very clearly:

Q. At what date did you discontinue granting entries for claims on Dominion Creek?—A. November 15, 1897.

Q. What was your reason for closing the creek? A. A great many claims had been re-located over those that were recorded, but under different numbers as fractions, and to avoid still greater confusion and trouble, I decided to close the creek.

Q. At what date were the surveyors, Messrs. Cautley and Gibbons, instructed to make the survey of the creek?—A. They left Dawson about the 17th of April, 1898.

Q. When did they return to Dawson?—A. About the 28th of May.

Q. At what time did Major Walsh instruct you to reserve all the claims on Dominion Creek from entries?—A. I received verbal instructions sometime in May, 1898, and received written instruction on the 26th of July, 1898.

Now, the hon. gentleman, in his statement, says that Major Walsh gave instructions to close Dominion Creek, contrary to the protest of the gold commissioner, on November 15, 1897.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is proved clearly by Mr. Fawcett himself, that the statement is not true. I do not require to argue, as the Solicitor General so clearly pointed it out, that it was quite likely impossible, because Major Walsh was not in the country at that time. However, to show the House clearly that the statement I make is correct, I want to read the acknowledgement of these written instructions by Thomas Fawcett himself:

Gold Commissioner's and Mining Recorder's Office,
Dawson, July 26, 1898.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favour of July 26, instructing me to withhold from entry all unrecorded creek claims on Dominion Creek, in addition to all fractional claims. I have duly noted the contents of your communication and will be governed thereby until further instructions are received from the Minister of the Interior.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) THOMAS FAWCETT,
Gold Commissioner.

So, I say there is no question as to the facts. I cannot understand the hon. gentleman's position. The charges might be serious if there were any foundation for them, but when the hon. gentleman places in your hands, Mr. Speaker, a statement upon which he asks us to vote, he ought at least to furnish some evidence that the statement is true. He has not been able to do that, but on the contrary, I have been able to show clearly by Mr. Fawcett's own evidence, and by his own letter, that the statement upon which the hon. gentleman founds his resolution is untrue. It is to be regretted that the hon. gentleman, or any hon. gentleman in this House, would be willing to make charges against a reputable citizen or against the government, without better foundation than he has for this resolution that he has brought forward tonight.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, as regards the defence of the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland)—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would not reply to that. If that is the best answer of the Interior Department, I would let it go.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You are afraid he will make it worse.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, in regard to Major Walsh, I can have no personal feeling, because Major Walsh has been and is to this day, a personal friend of mine. I knew him well out in the North-west Territories, but I say here, as was said by the speaker who preceded the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland), who has just taken his seat that any one who reads this evidence, cannot but feel that there is a cloud over

Major Walsh. Major Walsh is placed in the position, by the evidence of Carbeno and others, of having gone up there—occupying the highest position that could be held by any one entering the Yukon, representing Her Majesty, even, in a way—representing this government with the fullest possible powers—of having gone up there with relatives of his and three or four others, of having co-operated with them, and if the evidence be true, of having misused his position, in order to place his brother in the way of getting wealth, and getting wealth improperly. Under these circumstances in the interest of Major Walsh there should have been an inquiry. There should have been an inquiry in the interest of the government, and in the interest of the people of Canada, because if we are to come to this that when grave charges are made against a high officer, like Major Walsh, the government are to laugh them off, it will be a very pretty pass to come to indeed in this country. What have we seen here to-night? There has been nothing but an attempt to laugh it off. Reference has been made again and again to the great ability of the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), and I have no doubt, that he is a most persuasive advocate. I heard him speak, but, after he was done, he left the case presented by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), precisely where it was, and during this whole debate, he has done nothing but try to laugh all this off. Notwithstanding what the hon. member for Pictou has said: I will just refer to the attempt at a defence made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland), who is representing the Minister of the Interior. What have we in answer to the charge that is now tabled, and in answer to the able speeches made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), by the member for Kent (Mr. McInerney) and by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), why in reply to these serious indictments, we had weak and unfounded statements and from the member from Kingston (Mr. Britton) we had a reply that was the most pitiful wobbling that any one ever witnessed in the course of debate. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) who represents the department which contains all the knowledge in regard to these matters, declares these charges to be founded on the statement that the creek was closed up at a certain time in November. That is not what the charges are entirely founded on. The charges are founded on the evidence of witnesses who declare that Major Walsh misconducted himself, and if the evidence is to be believed Major Walsh did misconduct himself. Yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) comes forward and says that all this structure rests upon the statement that a certain thing took place in November, when, as he alleges, it did not take place. To prove that it did take place I will read from page 80 of the evidence:

Q. I would like to ask you a few questions about the history of Dominion Creek; when was the creek closed—not the hills and benches?—A. The 15th day of November was the last date on which any applications were taken.

Q. You closed it?—A. I closed it.

Q. The date of closure you have given; did you immediately report that to Ottawa?—A. Yes, and also to Major Walsh.

Q. Was it endorsed by Major Walsh?—A. It was.

If it was endorsed by Major Walsh who at that time had complete control, was it not closed by Major Walsh? If the subordinate of Major Walsh closed it and Major Walsh endorsed his conduct, is it not done by Major Walsh? And yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) gets up and he thinks that because he says Major Walsh had not done this, that the indictment made against the government here to-night has been brushed away. My hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) puts into my hand a Hausard in which there is an answer made by the Minister of the Interior to a question asked by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper and perhaps this will convince the doubting acting minister. The minister replied:

The department approved of the action of the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory in closing Dominion Creek. This is the only case of the closing of a creek that is on record in the department.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That proves in addition to what I stated, that the statement made in the resolution is not true. Did you read the resolution?

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, yes, I have read it twice, and I say that the evidence is a conclusive answer to the position taken by my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland). I shall refer for a moment to what the Solicitor General said, as to the answer of Brockville. I was in Brockville.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That does not account for the result, does it?

Mr. DAVIN. No. If it did there would be no point in what the Solicitor General said. The Solicitor General said that the answer was given in Brockville by the neighbours and friends of Major Walsh. Sir, that was going very far afield, indeed, but let us refer to the verdict given in Brandon. I was through Manitoba; I spoke at thirteen places in Manitoba, and the one thing that affected public opinion most was the indignation of the people of Manitoba that this government refused inquiry into the scandals connected with the Yukon. That feeling was very strong in Brandon, and why? Because from that, the constituency of the Minister of the Interior, McGregor and other operators in the Yukon had come, and the attention of the public there was directed more than in any other part of Canada to what was going on in that northern region. They knew the character of the men that the Minister of the Interior associated with himself, and the character of the men he sent there, and this affected public opinion in that contest as nothing else did. And, Sir, since last session, wherever I have gone in the Northwest and Manitoba, I have found nothing stronger against the government of Canada than its refusal to grant an inquiry into these charges of maladministration. The Solicitor General referred to the answer Mr. Morgan made to the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). He told us in the same breath that Mr. Morgan has fifteen claims up there. I have talked with gentlemen who had not fifteen claims, but only one or two claims, and after those men had told me of grave and serious and criminal matters taking place in the Yukon, they put me on my honour that I would not let their names be heard of. And why? Because they said it will injure us; it will injure our partners; it will ruin our business, but if you have an inquiry subpoena us and we will give the evidence. Probably Mr. Morgan did not know my friend from Pictou, and he was afraid to put on paper what perhaps he knows, but regarding which he would be ready and willing to give evidence. We need not be surprised that he was not ready to say anything that would compromise him, loaded down as he was with fifteen hostages to fortune in the shape of Yukon claims. Mr. Speaker, I shall not further occupy the time of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad to hear that. Can I call that a cheer? It is a kind of a howl, and I would like to know what kind of animals usually give vent to such an utterance as that. An hon. friend has reminded me about the signing over of these claims on the boat. Can you fancy anything with a complexion of greater wrong-doing than this signing over the claims on that boat? Can you fancy anything worse than saying: I want you to give this to one brother, because I do not want the name of another brother brought into office? Can you fancy anything more suspicious than the whole circumstance? I did not want to go into that nor do I want to go into the unsatisfactory character of the tribunal before which this evidence was taken. Let us see what Mr. Ogilvie is paid:

Salary	$ 6,000
Living allowance	2,000
Servant as housekeeper	720
Rent allowance, $250 a month....	3,000

Total$11,720

Well, Sir, a man who gets $11,720 a year, from a minister who could dismiss him tomorrow, is not a very satisfactory tribunal to investigate his conduct. This government cannot persuade the people of Canada that that was a satisfactory tribunal to investigate these charges, and it cannot persuade the people of Canada that if the skirts of the Minister of the Interior were clean he would not be here. Why is he not here? Why has he gone to the continent of Europe?

Mr. DAVIN.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Order, order.

Mr. DAVIN. Why, Sir, I know what is the matter with the Minister of the Interior. Nobody will speak with greater delicacy in regard to the infirmity of any man than I will; but everybody knows that the aural affection from which he suffers is incurable, and he chooses the session of parliament to go to Europe to be treated for an incurable affection. We have the best aurist in the world in Montreal, Dr. Buller, a man who went to London and performed operations which excited the admiration of the world. Why is it that the Minister of the Interior stops away so long? He has been in Rome, in Paris, in London, and he has been enjoying himself on the continent and I am glad of it; and he will come back after the close of the session having stopped away because as in the case of the Minister of Public Works it was to the interest of this government that we should not have these men before us to face the charges which we could make against them. The people of Canada are aware of it, and nothing has dragged this government down to the state of discredit in which it at present wallows as the conduct of these two ministers, who have hardly dared to show their faces here this session.

House divided on amendment of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Amendment (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) negatived.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To provide for the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law $9,000

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) We want an explanation of this.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The amount demanded is the same as last year. In 1897-8 the amount expended was $114; in 1898-9, it was $1,093.38; and in 1900, $28.02, or a total of $1,635.40.

Mr. FOSTER. How is the $428 for this year spent?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. Keyes, of Montreal, is supposed to be an agent charged with the enforcement of the Act, and he got $405. Mr. McMurrich, of Toronto, was paid $23.02.

Mr. FOSTER. What did Mr. Keyes do?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He is supposed to keep the department informed of any infringement of the Act in Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what he is supposed to do; what did he do?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As to whether he made any reports or not—which, I suppose is the point to which my hon. friend refers—I am not in a position to say; but I am prepared to allow that item to stand until I get the information.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, we want full information on that.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the Solicitor General if he will bring down correspondence with the United States authorities with regard to enforcing the Alien Labour law on either side?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will endeavour to get all the information we have in the department. There are a number of reports which may or may not be of interest; but I will have the records so that we can refer to any piece of information the hon. gentleman wants.

Mr. CLARKE. Were expenses made by other departments of the government?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Department of the Interior expended sums amounting to $980.87, which expenditure was incurred in 1897-8. I have a detailed statement of that expenditure, and can give the amounts and persons to whom these were paid.

Mr. CLARKE. That is the only other department.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, so far as my information goes.

Administration of Justice—Office for the clerk of the court and judges' chambers, Prince Albert $240

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Solicitor General whether it has been decided who is to be chief justice of the North-west?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not in a position to say that; but there is a Bill of which I have given notice which is intended to provide for the appointment of a chief justice of the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. That is passed, is it not?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, it is not passed yet, because I thought we should be obliged, probably, to make another amendment to the statute respecting provincial judges, and I want to incorporate the new amendment with the Bill providing for the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. That would involve an increase of salary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, because the suggestion is to put the gentleman who may be chief justice of the North-west Territories in the same position, with reference to salary, as the chief justice of Manitoba.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman is going to interfere with the Bill which has been passed by both Houses?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, the Bill is not yet before the House.

Mr. BERGERON. I find here, and it was the same thing last year, we provided salaries for thirty-two judges of the Superior Court of Quebec. I wish to ask if there is that number. I think there are only thirty-one. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) bring down the names of the judges?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I speak from memory of what occurred a year ago, and do not wish to be understood as speaking with certainty. Last year we amended that portion of the statute which refers to the provincial judges. We always did provide for thirty-two judges, whereas the Act called for only thirty-one. But I think the Act was so amended as to make it thirty-two.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman's explanation is very good. But I think the case was last year that there was an intention to appoint one judge; but he was not appointed, as the royal proclamation was not issued by the province of Quebec. I do not see why we should vote salaries for thirty-two judges when there are only thirty-one. However, I ask the hon. gentleman to bring down the names.

Mr. MONK. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation to carry into effect the Quebec statute, and increase the number of judges in the city of Montreal?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That matter has been under consideration for some time, and I understand from the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that it was his intention to consult the Minister of Justice on his return as to the introduction of legislation on the subject. I understand that the matter is substantially settled, but the Prime Minister knows the circumstances better than I do.

Administration of Justice—Supreme Court of Canada—Reporter $1,950

Mr. BERGERON. There is an increase here.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not object to that. But I would like to ask as to the assistant reporter, Mr. Coutlee, whose salary has been standing for some years at $1,500, and why he is not given the usual addition. I think he was appointed at $1,500 in 1895.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of course, my hon. friend will realize that I know little of the reasons that may have influenced those who give the statutory increases. I think he will find that we have gone very far with respect to the increases in the Supreme Court. I know no reason why the statutory increases is not granted, except the exercise of the discretion vested in the Minister of Justice. I know this official, and know that he performs his duties well. But they are not the same as those of Mr. Masters, the reporter. He is the reporter simply as far as the province of Quebec is concerned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But the reporter for Quebec or any other province must be a qualified man. I think the Solicitor General will agree that Mr. Coutlee is eminently qualified for his position, and is a faithful officer. I think the government should take some notice of the testimony borne by the Solicitor General, who practices in that court, and is personally aware of the qualifications of Mr. Coutlee and his claims to some recognition. The government should give some reward for capacity and assiduous attention to duty. I would make no disparaging remarks about the reporter; he is also a qualified officer of long experience. But the disparity between the salaries of the reporter and the assistant is too great. Practically one is the chief reporter for one district of Canada, a very important and a very large one, while the other is practically the chief reporter for Quebec.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I might add in reference to Mr. Coutlee, that as the reporter for the province of Quebec, he is obliged to be master of the two languages, and thus have additional qualification to those that the chief reporter must have.

Mr. HAGGART. Are these officers entitled to the statutory increases. I thought the salaries were fixed for these positions, and that these officers did not come under the Civil Service Act?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Civil Service Act respecting the statutory increases applies to them as to others.

Mr. BERGERON. Since I spoke a short time ago about the number of judges, I find by the Auditor General's Report there are only twenty-nine who receive a salary of $5,000 and $4,000, and two who receive a salary of $3,500. But here we are voting for thirty-two judges, therefore we are voting money for men who are not yet appointed. Are the government making appointments without changing the Act, appointing new judges merely by Governor in Council?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman forgets the three circuit court judges in Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a different thing altogether. At page 25 we find the salary of the chief justice and of the senior and puisne judges of Montreal. Then there are fourteen judges at $5,000 each, fourteen judges at $4,000 each, and two at $3,500 each. There are thirty-two judges. So we are actually voting more money than is needed.

The PRIME MINISTER. It has been so for years.

Mr. BERGERON. No, the right hon. gentleman knows the whole history very well. We always voted thirty-one. Last year we were called upon to vote thirty-two, and I did not like it.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know whether this is the place to ask for information respecting the memorial that has been presented to the Department of Justice by the junior judges of the county of York, Ontario, asking for an increase of salary, and giving statistics as to the volume of work they do in comparison with that done by others. Is it the intention to increase their salaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say it is the intention to increase the salaries of those three county court judges. I know that representations have been made, and statistics have been furnished which go to show that these gentlemen really have to do a great deal of work. I know this is a matter that is seriously engaging the attention of the Minister of Justice, and has been for some time. I draw attention to the fact that the senior of the three judges, because of certain emoluments which he receives in the capacity of senior county court judge for the county of York, is in receipt of a much larger income than would appear by the vote.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no complaint as to the emoluments that are paid to the senior court judge. Statistics show that the junior county court judges seem to be underpaid in view of the immense volume of business which they have to do. The senior judge is one of the hardest worked men on the bench. I understand a memorial has been presented to the department showing that the volume of work done by the junior county court judges is also largely in excess of that done by the junior judges in other counties who receive a salary almost equal to that paid to them. So far as I can gather, they have made out a strong case and have presented it to the Department of Justice. I would be happy to know that the representations they have made would receive the favourable consideration of the Minister of Justice.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A strong case has been made out by those who represent the judges, and I do not think that case will be in any respect weakened by what has been said here to-night.

Mr. MONK. I hope the Solicitor General won't forget at the same time the memorial which I think is in his department since prior 1896, about increasing the salaries of the judges in Montreal. I think their case is as pressing as that mentioned by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke).

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If I could distinguish between my position as Solicitor General and my position as a member of the bar, I would have something to say with reference to an increase of the salaries of the judges all through the country. If there is a class in this country insufficiently paid it is the judges. That is my personal opinion.

Clerk in the office of the Registrar, second-class clerk $1,200

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to draw the attention of the Solicitor General to the case of Mr. Lawson whose salary we are now considering. He is a very faithful and efficient officer, and I would be glad if the hon. gentleman could see his way to increasing his salary. My experience in court has been that he is a very faithful, obliging and diligent officer.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not sure that he has not had an increase within the last three years. Certainly it seems to me that Mr. Lawson deserves great consideration, but we must endeavour as far as possible to keep within some bounds, especially when we bear in mind the natural desire of members of the bar to assist those who work in concert with them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I had something to do with Mr. Lawson when I was at the head of the department. He entered the service in 1881. I think $1,200 is a small salary for an officer having his responsibilities. If the Solicitor General will make some inquiry he will find that Mr. Lawson's salary has stood for many years at that figure, and I think he has an almost implied promise that under certain conditions it would be increased. I think if a satisfactory report is obtained from the registrar the course would be easy. I took the opportunity of asking the good offices of the hon. Minister of Finance as Mr. Lawson happens to come from Halifax. I have known him since boyhood, but I am very glad to believe that since I have known him here he is deserving of the good opinion of his superiors. I will add my word to that of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) and ask my hon. friend to be kind enough to bring his case before the Minister of Justice.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think my hon. friend can avail himself of the opportunity he now has of making an arrangement between himself and the hon. Minister of Finance. If he will only arrange that trifling matter, I will be responsible for the remainder of it.

One third-class clerk $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. Who is that ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. R. J. Davis. He is a very competent man ; in fact, I do not know that there is any one more competent than another.

Printing, binding and distributing Supreme Court reports..... $3,500

Mr. BERGERON. Who are these reports distributed to ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. To the members of the bar who subscribe for them, the members of the bench, and the general public.

Mr. BERGERON. If they are paid for why should the members of the bar subscribe for them ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This amount is not sufficient to pay for the printing and binding.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this a contribution made by parliament towards the printing and binding of books for the use of certain people ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, the books are intended for the use of the general public. It is open to the general public to pay for them and get them. The circulation is not large enough to make this a self-sustaining work. I think my hon. friend will realize that the publication of the reports of the courts is assisted in all of the provinces.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. CLARKE. It is really a contribution towards the printing of these reports ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Where are they printed ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. At the Printing Bureau.

For the purchase of law books and works of reference for the Supreme Court Library $4,500

Mr. MONK. Why should there be this increase ? It seems to me that $4,000 is ample for the yearly addition to the library and out of this $500 something might be done to give sufficient remuneration to the assistant reporter, Mr. Lawson.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think we have a library at the Supreme Court now that is a credit, and one which is extremely useful. The reason of the addition of $500 is, that we wish to have a few more French text books. I think that if there is a weak spot it is in so far as the French law of the province of Quebec is concerned. That is the reason of the increase.

Improvements to library, &c. $3,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Those who have occasion to go to the Supreme Court library realize how crowded it is, and they admit the absolute necessity for either increasing the space occupied by the library, or endeavouring to provide more space within the walls by husbanding the space we have already. The intention is to substitute for the present cumbersome shelves iron shelves, which will give us considerably more room.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the shelves now ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are cumbersome wooden shelves, which take up too much room.

Mr. BERGERON. Will these improvements be made by tender ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know. These shelves have been in existence since ever I have been going to the Supreme Court.

Mr. BERGERON. But, will the new ones be the subject of tender ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is a matter to be disposed of by the Public Works Department, and, of course, it will be done very properly by that department.

First-class clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $1,600

Mr. FOSTER. This needs some explanation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This means a statutory increase for Mr. Morse from July 1, 1900, and for the previous year, in fact, statutory increases for two years. I think those who have occasion to see Mr. Morse in the Exchequer Court will corroborate what I say, that he is an extremely competent man.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He has been in the service many years?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. The same thing applies to the gentleman whose case was discussed upon the previous item. This gentleman gets two statutory increases at once.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He has professional ability of a high order.

Mr. CLARKE. I have no doubt that he has, and I have no objection to this increase. But I think the same rule should apply in the other case. What plan is adopted in giving these statutory increases?

Mr. BERGERON. There is no plan whatever.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, there is some plan, because reference must be had to the work done. There must be the recommendation of the superior of the official to whom the increase is granted, this has to be considered by the deputy minister and finally by the minister. Mr. Morse certainly earns all he gets. He is an extremely competent man, and a very much better man than you would expect to find in the position he occupies.

Messenger $500

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a statutory increase?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, of $20. That brings him up to the limit of his class, $500. This messenger's name is Labelle, and he has been in the service for a long time.

Contingencies, judges and registrars, travelling expenses, salaries of sheriffs, &c., printing, stationery, &c., and $50 for judges' books $4,000

Mr. BERGERON. Is the judge bound to spend that same amount always?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know that there is any legal obligation to do so, but he manages, as far as possible, to reach the limit of $4,000.

Additional to registrar as editor and publisher of Exchequer Court reports..... $300

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As we have now come to the last of these items, I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General whether anything has been done in regard to the question I brought up at an early day this session respecting the deduction that was made by the action of the British Columbia government from the salaries of the county court judges there? The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was good enough to hear what I had to say, but, of course, the papers contained a great deal more on that head. They have been laid before the House and they show that the hon. Minister of Justice very properly came to the conclusion that there had been a breach of faith with these judicial officers on the part of the government of British Columbia. I do not wish to go into the matter, but suffice it to say at this stage, that having made an arrangement in old times with the British Columbia government to provide certain salaries for these judges, and the other party to the bargain breaking it, this Federal government, having authority over all judges, the question that the right hon. gentleman promised to consider was whether, having regard to all the circumstances this government would assume the liability that was on both governments, although the British Columbia government tries to evade their share.

The PRIME MINISTER. I remember the case very well. I know it has been engaging the attention of the Minister of Justice, but I am not in a position to-night to say what action he is taking. I shall be very happy at a future stage to give the information to my hon. friend.

Exchequer Court—L. A. Audette, increase of salary $275

Mr. FOSTER. What does that mean?

Mr. BERGERON. How much does that make his salary now?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It would appear that the salary is $2,000, and that he gets a special vote every year.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason of the increase?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give that now, but we will let the vote stand.

Penitentiaries $477,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the Solicitor General make a general statement in regard to this $60,000 increase in the vote for penitentiaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The explanation which I have from the Inspector of Penitentiaries in regard to Kingston, is : That there is an increase in officers salaries of $1,900, because of the amended schedule to the Penitentiary Act passed last session ; an increase of $7,000 in prison equipment, for new electric light plant ; $1,000 increase due to improvement in heating system, and $17,000 increase, owing to advance in cost of binder twine ; and an increase of $1,000 in buildings. With reference to St. Vincent de Paul, the salaries of a stonecutter instructor, and five additional guards, are added, owing to an increase of population. The balance in the increase of salaries is under the schedule. There is an increase for the police mess, which was underestimated last year. There is a provision for seventy-five additional convicts : provision for an electric light plant, increase in working expenses, and price of material, and an amount to purchase some additional land, if it can be obtained at a reasonable price.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the electric plant ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We are putting in an electric plant. At present the penitentiary is lit by coal oil lamps, and that is not desirable in a penitentiary.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the government erecting the electric plant themselves ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I presume the contract will be given as is customary.

Mr. MONK. What amount is provided for electricity at St. Vincent de Paul ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give my hon. friend the exact figures, but he will find that the equipment is increased from $2,000 to $10,000 ; and the inspector says that this increase is necessary to make provision for an electric light plant.

Mr. MONK. Does the government intend to generate electricity there or do they intend to get the electric power from Montreal ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I really cannot say. The Minister of Agriculture who has some special knowledge on this subject, says that while the plant is being purchased, the labour used to instal it is convict labour to a large extent.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How is it there is no report from the Inspector of Penitentiaries this year ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think there is.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There does not appear to be. It is not in the report of the Justice Department as usual.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I certainly was under the impression that the report was printed and published. I went on with the estimates, presuming that that report was before the House.

Mr. WILSON. What is the estimate made by the architect, for this electric light work, will it be done by contract or by day's work ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There must have been an estimate made and tenders called for, and the contract awarded. I will get that information.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the work being done ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This provision is made for the work now in progress, as I understand. Lest, I might be astray, I would like this to stand over till I get the exact information.

Kingston Penitentiary $190,400

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that you are making some improvement in the electric lighting at Kingston.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, substituting a new plant.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the work being done now ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is something I cannot tell.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the population increased there, too ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is an increase of six.

Mr. FOSTER. On these important points the Solicitor General has not the information in detail as we would like to have it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Unfortunately the Inspector is absent, or I would have him here to help me.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand that the Inspector makes a report, and that report has always been of great assistance to the committee, as it gave a complete resume of all the work done in the different penitentiaries in the previous year.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You will find his report at the beginning of the report of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. WILSON. I think the Solicitor General ought to be able to give us full explanations of the reason for any increases that are made.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I agree to that, and the best way for me to be able to answer as to the details is to have the Inspector here.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I had seen the document which the Solicitor General refers to in the report of the Minister of Justice ; but for the first time in the history of these reports the Inspector has apparently contented himself with covering the warden's reports. That of course will be a very serious departure if it has the sanction of the head of the department, because just the information which we want has always been contained in the regular and proper report of the Inspector, which gave an outline of the policy of the department, the improvements proposed, and so on. All that is absent, and Mr. Stewart simply says: 'I have the honour herewith to submit—not my report—but reports and statistics of the penitentiaries and jails for the different years;' and then he simply fastens together all these reports which he used to review, adding his own suggestions. He had a free hand, which I think was a good thing for the department, and certainly a good thing for the public. Many a time the committee, sitting here as we are doing, had a chance to contrast the recommendations in that report with the views of the minister, and it gave a healthy tone to the conduct and management of these important institutions to find an Inspector, untrammelled by any departmental rules or directions, giving his views freely as he went from institution to institution. He is very little good if his advice is not worth considering, and he should acquire expert knowledge. From what I know of Mr. Stewart, I should have expected that by this time he would have been a man whose views in regard to the administration of the different penitentiaries would have been well worth having; and it was for that reason, having seen this report, which is not at all what we have hitherto been accustomed to, that I wanted the Solicitor General to enlighten us as to whether this was done under the direction of the minister, and whether there is to be a departure, and this is the only kind of report we are to have.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to ask my hon. friend if he will be kind enough to give me, when he comes again, the tenders called for and the tenders accepted for the leather and supplies generally for the five penitentiaries for the last year. I might ask my hon. friend how many convicts there are at Kingston and how many at St. Vincent de Paul, because I see that the salaries are increasing rapidly at both places.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You can find the number of convicts at page 9 of the minister's report. At Kingston there are at present 771 convicts, and at St. Vincent de Paul 447.

Mr. POWELL. How many at Dorchester ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. At Dorchester there were, on the 30th June, 1899, 226, an increase of one.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the minister give the names of the parties from whom tenders for the electrical equipment were asked ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will get that.

Mr. WILSON. On what principle are the gratuities distributed ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Civil Service Act does not apply to the penitentiaries, and when a man has reached a certain age, and it is found necessary to dispense with his services, he is provided for by means of gratuity, which is given in proportion to his salary and the length of service.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did the investigation at St. Vincent de Paul cost ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will ascertain and give the figures to my hon. friend.

Mr. MONK. We also want the details about the electrical light plant.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an increase in the industries at Kingston of $17,000, and we ought to know how that is accounted for. Then the increase in the salaries at St. Vincent de Paul is more than what would arise under the special Act. As regards the maintenance of convicts, there is $3,000 additional, and the hon. gentleman has not told us how many convicts have been added. The increase in building and lands of $2,500 also requires explanation. Then when you come to Dorchester penitentiary there is a number of increases, and in the Manitoba penitentiary there is an increase of $9,000 in walls, buildings and lands. Better let the whole item stand over until we can have full details.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The increase of $17,000 in the working expense at Kingston penitentiary, is due to the advance in the cost of fibre. We pay three or four cents per pound more this year than we did last year. The increase is not in machinery. In St. Vincent de Paul, the increase in salaries is due to the appointment of five additional guards, who are required on account of the increase in the number of convicts. That increase is twenty-nine, and it is well to remember that some of those came from Kingston penitentiary.

Mr. BERGERON. How many guards at St. Vincent de Paul ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That can be got from the Auditor General's Report. In the explanation given to me by the inspector, he justifies the increase of $3,000 by saying he wants to make provision for seventy-five additional population over last year, but according to the report of the superintendent, the increase was but twenty-nine. It is intended to buy additional land to add to the farm, as there is no other work but farming to be given to the convicts in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose that piece of land will be bought after advertisements are issued ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The intention will be to buy the adjoining piece of land to the present farm.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course, that piece of land would be bought after advertisement ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not see how that could be done. I suppose if we want to buy land, we should have to buy that adjoining what we already own.

Mr. BERGERON. I see there is the same amount for uniforms this year as last year, though there are more guards. Will the new appointees be properly dressed ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, I think I can promise my hon. friend that.

Mr. BERGERON. The Solicitor General treats this in a jocular way, but it would seem from this that there is not to be an increase in the guards or else the amount is not large enough.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will have to get that information along with the rest.

Mr. POWELL. There was formerly a very stringent rule with regard to guards' age and physical capacity, and so on. Is that still in force ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand so, and there has been no departure from it. Of course, unless such a rule was observed it would be impossible to maintain discipline in the penitentiaries.

Mr. CLARKE. Do the guards undergo a medical examination ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They have to be up to a certain standard of height and weight, and less than a certain age.

Mr. POWELL. I know that that rule is transgressed in respect to Dorchester penitentiary. A guard was appointed last year who, I understand, is about sixty years of age. I know that he is old enough to be my own father. A medical inspection was made of the guards of Dorchester penitentiary a year ago, and some of the guards were dismissed, but I understand some have been put on again. How has that occurred ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not within my knowledge. I will have to get information on that point also.

Mr. POWELL. When the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was Minister of Justice there was a regulation fixing the salary of officials, including the teamsters, who were given about $400. This was a statutory regulation, not a mere regulation of the department. But, I understand that the rule has been introduced under which, last year, the teamsters waked up one morning and found themselves of quite military dignity, being horse guards or stable guards, with the result that their salary was increased to $500. The law was evaded in this way.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There was the schedule to the Act at the time the hon. member for Pictou was Minister of Justice. It remained in force until it was extended last year. It is proposed to remodel it this year also, but there is no provision for horse guards or teamsters, and never has been. However, I will inquire as to the matter my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) refers to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). There are some items in my own department which are not of a controversial character and which I would be glad to have passed if the House would agree.

Charges of management..... $163,793

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is an increase there in the printing of Dominion notes, $5,000. This is due to the increase in circulation. In the case of several of the officers in the assistant receiver general's office some small increases will be allowed. In the case of the country savings banks, there is a reduction, owing to the fact that in one case we have abolished the agency.

Mr. FOSTER. Where ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At Bridgewater, in the county of Lunenburg, the business being referred to the Post Office Department after the usual practice.

Mr. POWELL. I see that the increase in the cost of printing notes is a serious matter. Last year we had an increase of $10,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) is mistaken.

Mr. POWELL. No ; I have the estimates of last year before me, and they show that the estimate for 1898-9 was $40,000, while the estimate for 1899-1900 was $50,000. And now it is $55,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The cost of printing notes is not increased, except as due to the quantity. Practically, we are paying about the same amount as formerly and obtaining very much more work for it. The usual amount for this service is about $50,000. The expenditure in 1898 was $44,935, and in 1899, $49,943. There has been a very large increase in the circulation, as the hon. gentleman must know, owing to the expansion of business.

Mr. WILSON. Would the hon. minister explain how he pays for these notes—so much a thousand?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All the papers are before the House. It is so much a thousand, if my recollection serves me well.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose the price is the same no matter what the denomination of the Bill may be?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a price fixed for each distinct note.

Civil Government—Department of Finance and Treasury Board $50,137 50

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the usual vote, with several statutory increases. There are four statutory increases to clerks, $50 each, and one to a messenger, $30. Statutory increases are to be granted to Messrs. Garland, Jenkins, Saunders and Boville.

Mr. CLARKE. How long have they been in the service?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have been in the service for many years.

An hon. MEMBER. Were others eligible?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Three others were eligible, Messrs. Fraser, Treadell and Burns, but they are not receiving the increase.

Office of the Auditor General—Clerical and other assistance, $4,500; printing and stationery, $1,250; sundries, $700..... $6,450

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I desire to make a reduction in that item of $4,500 for clerical assistance, to $3,700. We propose, if the present Civil Service Bill should pass, to make some changes in the way of appointments to junior clerkships, and in that case, we will need a less number of temporary clerks. It is a change in the form. We reduce the amount here, but in the supplementary estimates we shall have to add it in another form.

Committee rose and reported progress.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know what business will be taken up to-morrow, as there are some members who take more interest in certain departments than in others, and who would like to know beforehand?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), will take his estimates, and subsequently the Minister of Agriculture will follow, and others, if time permits.

PAYMENT OF SESSIONAL EMPLOYEES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I promised to ascertain the views of the Auditor General on the question of the payment of certain officials, and he has sent me a letter, and I think he has also sent a copy to the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), who is interested in the matter. He writes me:

I inclose a copy of a letter which I have just sent to the Clerk of the Senate, which I hope satisfactorily explains my position, although we are all sorry that the public servants concerned are inconvenienced by the delay in receiving their salaries.

The letter to the Clerk of the Senate is as follows:

Your attention has been drawn to the discussion in the House yesterday regarding payments which have been made in the Senate, for which there are no appropriations.

Until money has been provided by an Act of parliament for any purpose, no expenditure can be made legally. Whenever direct applications are made to me for payments under such circumstances, I am obliged to refuse to pass the applications, as I have no authority to put myself in the place of parliament. When credits are given, as in your case, repayments must be made to the bank, no matter whether the drawing of the cheques was justifiable or not. However, after I have notified those in whose favour credits are given that it is illegal to make payments of a certain kind, and when they do not carry out the instructions which I feel it my duty to give, I have no alternative but to decline renewing their credits. I trust, therefore, that no such cheques will be drawn by you in the future.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. L. McDUGALL,
Auditor General.

S. E. St. O. Chapleau, Esq.,
Clerk of the Senate.

Without discussing the position of Mr. McDougall, who, I am sure, is only doing what he believes to be his duty, it is apparent that if the officials of the Senate have been paid, it is not by Mr. McDougall's direction, but with funds drawn from a credit, to which he takes exception.

THE FLAG ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House adjourns, I would like to read a telegram sent to me from Bathurst, N.B., this morning :

Caretaker public buildings refused to raise flag at relief of Mafeking also to-day.

There is no reason in the world why the caretaker of a public building should not raise the flag on such joyous occasions as the relief of Mafeking, or the capture of Johannesburg. Citizens there feel aggrieved that the refusal was made. I think I raised the same question from the same place when the Minister of Public Works was here, and he said that he had given general instructions that flags were to be raised on such occasions. The instructions do not seem to have been carried, or this caretaker does not seem to have carried out the instructions.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I do not know anything of the former incident, my hon. friend alludes to, that may have occurred at the relief of Mafeking. But so far as the present occasion is concerned, I may say that this morning I instructed the deputy to telegraph to the caretakers of every building in Canada, to hoist the flag, and through him every officer in Canada received these instructions. I not only gave these instructions, but I subsequently asked the deputy minister if he had sent the telegram, and he told me that he had done so. I do not consider it ought to be incumbent on the minister to give detailed instructions of that kind, but caretakers should, of their own motion, be alert on proper occasions to raise the flag. Occasional omissions of this kind may occur, but it seems that in this case some citizen had called the caretaker's attention to his duty, and he may have omitted to do it. However, I will inquire into it.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.20 a.m. (Friday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 1, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE COPYRIGHT BILL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to draw the attention of my right

Mr. FIELDING.

hon. friend to a matter of very great importance, and that is the Bill now down for the second reading in reference to copyright. The question of copyright is one that has always been regarded as of very great importance, and concerning which, down to the present, there has been but one opinion in this House. The government of the late lamented Sir John Thompson, when dealing with this subject, had the very hearty support of the late Sir James Edgar, who practically represented the Liberal party on that question. It was one to which he had given a great deal of attention and on which he spoke with the support of gentlemen on that side of the House, then in opposition. The question was regarded as one affecting the power given under the British North America Act to Canada. By that Act, Canada was given the control of the question of copyright, and that matter was the subject of discussion and controversy with Her Majesty's government. I do not think there is so much difficulty in settling that point as in meeting the immense pressure that can be brought on the British government by the parties interested in that subject. The Department of Justice sent a very able gentleman, its deputy minister, to England to discuss that subject fully with the Colonial Office, and he was able to report that in Lord Herschell's Bill there was a clause which would protect the claim of Canada to absolute jurisdiction in that matter. In the meantime, Lord Monkswell's Bill has been introduced, and I am anxious to know whether the government have obtained from the Department of Justice its opinion as to whether that Bill contains the same protection for Canada's rights. If the Department of Justice has not looked into the matter, it should immediately do so, and should report thereon, and lay its report on the Table. It would be a very anomalous thing if, under the Lord Monkswell's Bill, now before the Imperial parliament, the powers which Canada claims may be possibly invaded and weakened.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may say to my hon. friend that I quite agree with him in the views he has expressed. In fact, I never knew of any divided opinion in this House as to the paramount power of Canada over the subject of copyright. These powers, however, as my hon. friend knows, are disputed by the English authorities, but Canada has always insisted on standing by its own rights. The Bill which I intend to introduce is quite consistent with that view. What I would propose is, that we should have the views of the House on that measure, and, if possible later on, have the opinion of the Department of Justice before we submit it for the third reading.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Every one knows that this is a most complex subject, laden with technicalities, and it was a great advantage to have the report made by the Department of Justice, a year or two ago, as to the effect of Lord Herschell's Bill in connection with the rights of self-government which we claim, and as to the necessity of any action on our part and what might result from our taking no action. We ought to have a copy of this report, and also of Lord Herschell's Bill and Lord Monkswell's Bill, laid before the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask whether Sir John Thompson's memorandum has been laid before the House?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, his very full and extensive report on the whole subject was brought down to parliament and is printed in the sessional papers. In view of the very strong influence in the Imperial parliament of the English publishers and authors, we require all the assistance of the eminent legal minds we have at our disposal, and without such assistance I do not think we could pretend to deal with so complicated a question across the floor of this House in a discussion of the government measure on its second reading. But they take that Bill and send it to a select committee. I think that, without exception, every time they have had to deal with any amendment of the copyright law, that is the course that has been pursued. In Lord Herschell's time, in connection with his Bill, and also in connection with Lord Monkswell's Bill, they referred the matter to a special committee, and before that committee they called all the experts on that subject—and they are within easy reach—and so learned the wishes and opinions of the men who are best able to judge of the effect of the proposed legislation. Now, I for one do not wish to stand for a moment in the way of any safe compromise on this subject. I understand the Minister of Agriculture is promoting a Bill, which he believes is a safe compromise—otherwise, of course, he would not venture to introduce it. But, knowing the difficulty of the question, having had to deal with it officially at one time, I think it would be asking too much of the House for the Minister of Agriculture—who, himself, does not profess to be an expert on these matters, either on the whole question of copyright or on the complicated questions of law that surround it—to say that we should thresh the question out without the great advantage of knowing the opinion of those men who have specially followed it. May I, without being wearisome, just conclude by pointing out how much advantage it would be, for instance, to have Mr. Newcombe's report. We have a report from Mr. Newcombe in connection with Lord Herschell's Bill. I do not ask this because Mr. Newcombe is Deputy Minister of Justice, but because he has given special attention to this question. With the general approval of the House, he was sent to England when the late Sir James Edgar was giving great attention to the subject, to conduct a stage of the negotiations, which, unhappily, had been interrupted by Sir John Thompson's death. Mr. Newcombe was in communication with the expert of the Colonial Office, Mr. Jenkins. They together endeavoured to bring about some solution of the difficult questions consistent with Canada's claim, which is far and away more important than the interest or wishes of any publisher or author in Canada. A tremendous constitutional question is involved. They endeavoured to find some middle course consistent with Canada's position on that question. So Mr. Newcombe had the great advantage of preparing himself for that subject and the further great advantage of meeting this expert, who advises the British government. Consequently, when the Minister of Agriculture read his opinion as to the effect of Lord Herschell's Bill, I think it quieted the mind of nearly every one in the House—it certainly had great weight with me. I would very much like, instead of embarking on a discussion which, perhaps, would be unnecessarily long, in the absence of such opinion—for we should be to some extent in the dark—that the government would deem the suggestion worthy of following, that the opinion of the Department of Justice be obtained, so that we might know exactly the view of the department as to the effect of this Bill on the claim presented by Sir John Thompson, for Canada. That claim was presented by Sir John Thompson, not as Minister of Justice, speaking for the government, but as representing both Houses of parliament. For it will be remembered that the very important step was taken by our parliament of adopting a unanimous address, asserting, above all the interests of the trade or the authors, the right of Canada to legislate on this as freely as we do on the subject of patents. I, therefore, venture to add to what has been said, this earnest request which, I think, would save a good deal of discussion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Referring to what the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), has said, I may say that in the Bill that is now before the House, but one point is raised in connection with the great copyright question. That question, as my hon. friend has just said, is a most complex and far-reaching one. But, I was in hopes that this particular phase of it might be dealt with without bringing in the general question. I should be very loath indeed, at this stage of the session, to undertake to deal with the broad constitutional question of Canada's right to legislate on copyright, or to bring in the very complex questions involved in these different laws. But I had thought that the particular point dealt with in this Bill might be dealt with this session in response to the requests of those who are particularly interested in this part of the copyright question. It was only on that account, and for that reason, that, at this comparatively late stage of the session, when their views were put before me, I prevailed on council to agree with me in introducing this legislation. I may say, in reference to what the hon. gentleman has brought up as to Mr. Newcombe's memorandum, that it is true that two years ago in this House, I did read a short extract from that memorandum which Mr. Newcombe had placed in my hand. But, discussing the question with Mr. Newcombe since that time, I learned that this memorandum was looked upon by him as a confidential departmental document. I understand that, a part of it having been read in the House, it must be laid on the Table, if demanded by any hon. gentleman; but Mr. Newcombe has informed me that it was not prepared for that purpose, and he would prefer that it should not be made public, although there would be no objection to any hon. gentleman seeing it in the department. The question as to Lord Monkswell's and Lord Herschell's Bills, I do not wish to bring into the discussion at the present moment, because I venture to take the ground that we are empowered as the parliament of Canada to pass this amendment to our own copyright law, without acknowledging or without reference to the authority of the Monkswell Bill—though, I must say, in fairness, that those who asked for this legislation, based their request made to me and to the government, on the ground that this amendment is consistent with certain sections of Lord Thring's Bill now before the Imperial government; and it certainly does meet with the views of the interests in England, the Authors' Society and the publishers, who are supporting Lord Thring's Bill in the Imperial House. Those who support this amendment to our copyright law, point to the fact that, and probably for the first time, there seems to be pretty fair unanimity of opinion among all the interests specially concerned in this particular feature of copyright legislation. Under these circumstances, I felt it was only fair to those interests, and that it was in the public interest as well, that this amendment should be passed by parliament this session. Therefore, the Bill was introduced. I fear that the bringing in of a general discussion on the whole copyright question might complicate the consideration of the Bill. I had hoped that the other points in connection with the copyright law might not be discussed on this Bill. But, I receive, with great consideration, the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, that perhaps this Bill might be referred to a committee, if it is thought necessary to do so, in view of the single purpose of the Bill—although, on the other hand, it might be that the reference to a committee would complicate matters and prevent the passing of the Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I followed very closely the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture. I do not think he has caught the difficulty that disturbs me in connection with our claim. It might be that we could pass this Bill without injuring our case, so far as it is a substantive measure passed of our own motion for local consideration. This is a point in connection with which we have never yet taken, to use a common phrase, backwater with the British government. I have seen the Monkswell Bill, which proposes legislation on this subject for every part of the British Empire, it is just as if they introduced a customs law for the British Empire, as they have power to do, and provides how each colony should be affected. This Bill of my hon. friend will work in with that legislation, it will work consistently with the Monkswell Bill, whether we say it openly or otherwise, the two will run together. But this will be the position in Canada. After passing this Bill, not protesting to the British government against Lord Monkswell's Bill. I fear that our mouths would be practically closed. It would be said that we came, after all our discussion and our deputations, and proposed an Imperial measure. We shall be told: You practically receded from your position, and you carried legislation which undoubtedly contemplated your entire approval of the Imperial legislation, and you did not protest. Perhaps, I am exaggerating all the consequences of this measure, and on the other hand I may not. I do not profess to be able thoroughly to appreciate all the intricate points involved in this measure, and I think the suggestion the hon. gentleman let drop would be a very wise one, namely, that we should get the aid of competent men on this subject. Let Dr. Dawson, of the Printing Bureau, who is an expert, and Mr. Newcombe, give it consideration so as to set our minds at rest as to whether this Bill in its present form, or with some rider, would be a safe thing for us to pass, having regard to the other considerations that I have referred to. We might let it go pro forma to a second reading, and refer it to a select committee. But if the hon. gentleman would turn these things over in his mind I would be greatly obliged.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I fully appreciate the point the hon. gentleman has raised, but I thought that by ignoring the Monkswell or Thring Bill entirely in our legislation and in our discussion of that legislation, we could not be fairly accused of acting on the authority of the Thring Bill. Certainly, I am quite prepared, if necessary, to make the most emphatic statement that we do not pass this legislation upon the authority of the Thring Bill. I would do anything in that way to safeguard our position in case any such question arose as the hon. gentleman has pointed out.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In any event it would be wise to have a committee.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection to referring the Bill to a special committee, but I think we had better have a second reading of it, and my hon. friend will then give his reasons for proposing it.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 18) to amend the Militia Act (Mr. Borden) was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. MONTAGUE. I call the minister's attention to the fact that there is not a colonel in the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are many in the country, though.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. After this Bill goes through there will be more. The object of this section is simply a change of form, to leave out the words of the Militia Act 'Deputy Adjutant General of Militia' and substitute therefor the word 'officer.' The committee will observe, by looking at subsection 4 in the Militia Act, that the language is as follows:

Her Majesty may, whenever it is considered expedient, change the designation or name of the officer commanding the militia in any district.

While the power was given under the original law to make any change in the name, that law itself has the name 'deputy adjutant general.' As a matter of fact for many years the name has been changed under the authority of this law to 'district officer commanding,' and it simply proposed to leave out the word 'deputy adjutant general' and substitute the word 'officer.' Then there is no inconsistency in the powers given in the concluding portion of the clause to the administration to change the name from time to time.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there a necessary rank before?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. There is really no change whatever in this clause. The clauses which come later on affect the question of rank.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that in this substitution the officer appointed will have the rank of lieutenant-colonel, that is, it precludes you from appointing any one who is not a lieutenant-colonel. Is there any change from that?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But you do not give him the title now of deputy adjutant general.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. He has been called the district officer commanding from a time anterior to my taking charge of the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I must apologize to the Prime Minister for saying there are no lieutenant-colonels in the House, because I am told he is one.

The PRIME MINISTER. He is simply an honorary one.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But you have not a gun.

The PRIME MINISTER. I left that aside long ago, until I might be called upon to use it on the opposition.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Under the next two clauses we propose to take power to appoint colonels, a power which is limited by the Militia Act to the appointment of lieutenant-colonels. The object of the Bill is simply to raise the authority, so to speak, one step so that instead of being limited, as has been the case in the past, to the appointment of lieutenant-colonels as senior officers in the Canadian militia the power is increased to appoint colonels.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is that in clause 2?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Clauses 45 and 47 of the Militia Act are the clauses that are amended. I propose, instead of asking the committee to adopt the clause printed in the Bill now before the House, to adhere literally to the words of the statute as it now exists, except that I propose to substitute the words 'colonel' for 'lieutenant colonel' where it occurs in the law, and so also in the next clause, section 2, which is an amendment of section 47 of the law.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is not intended to make colonels indiscriminately?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, and I may explain that the use of the power will be limited to the creation of honorary colonels. I doubt if it will be used beyond that.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the purpose? Why is the minister proposing the change? There must be some reason?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The purpose is this: It has been the practice to appoint men who have distinguished themselves in the militia, or in the military life, or in other walks of life, to the positions of honorary lieutenant-colonels of the battalions in Canada. It is suggested that these men, particularly military men, should be rewarded after a considerable career as lieutenant-colonels and after passing off the active stage when they are made honorary heads of their regiments, by being given the rank of colonel instead of the honorary rank of lieutenant-colonel. It is proposed that men of that sort who have passed out of the ranks of the active militia of Canada should receive this honour.

Mr. FOSTER. That would mean that while men are in the active service they will be lieutenant-colonels, but after they get out, so that they are inactive and ornamental, they will become colonels.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, if the executive see fit to confer the honour upon them.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. minister think that this is the best way to induce great activity and real interest in the militia? I think that if I were working in the militia, and if I had an ambition for a higher title I would work better if I knew that the higher title was available while I was in the militia, rather than when I got to the period of ease and leisure of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at the present time. Unless it might be that it would minister a little to vanity, it would not reflect itself upon the active conditions of the force. I am afraid this is going backward. Is the hon. minister at liberty to make colonels out of men who have not served in the militia, simply honorary colonels, out of some clerk high in letters, or some person who wrote a celebrated poem or some civilian whom the minister wished to honour? Is it germane to this Bill to make such a person an honorary colonel? If so, you will have a good many men standing around who would have the semblance of adding to the military strength, but who would not add to it in reality, and you might at last come to the condition of things that the Spanish government had at one time in its existence when soldiery existed on paper and not in reality. Can you make any man an honorary colonel who has not passed through the active militia service?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, that can be done now.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think I have seen that in Europe a little baby is made a colonel.

Mr. FOSTER. And it adds tremendously to the importance of the army, without doubt.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not only is it proposed to make colonels, but major-generals.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Only in time of war.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, this is a time of war.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE moved:

That section 2 of the Bill be amended to read as follows:

Section 45 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

45. Officers holding commissions in the militia may be placed on the retired list with honorary rank not exceeding that of colonel, or without honorary rank according to and under regulations approved by the Governor in Council.

2. Officers from the retired list may be re-appointed to the active list or such other list as is from time to time authorized; but no officer so re-appointed shall be compelled to serve in a lower rank than that with which he retired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before that clause is passed, would the hon. minister tell us his opinion as to what service, outside of military service, would entitle a man to receive that distinction at the hands of the government?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think there is a regulation upon this subject now among our regulations and orders. I have not the regulations here, but I think this proposes to confer the honour upon men who have distinguished themselves in the state as well as in military life, or perhaps in letters. I think it is contemplated to apply particularly to men who have taken an active part in the development of the country, and also men who occupy positions in the old country. The honour has been conferred now upon several distinguished officers, for instance, the Commander-in-Chief, the Marquis of Lorne, the former Governor General, and I think, the present Governor General, and several others of being appointed to the position of honorary colonel or lieutenant-colonel of several of our battalions. I do not know that I can explain the matter any more fully than that. It is difficult to describe fully how wide-reaching this may be, but I think the object of any administration would be to restrict it so far, at least, as to maintain intact the honour which would be supposed to be thereby conferred.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman. I understand from the explanations of the hon. minister that there are two objects contemplated by establishing the rank of colonel. One is in order that the position of honorary colonel may be conferred upon a gentleman who has attained to such a position in the country as to be considered entitled to the compliment at the hands of the government. Another, I presume, is to make it more easy to remove lieutenant-colonels from the positions they hold without retiring them, so that they may be given an additional honorary rank. I suppose these really are the two main objects that are contemplated by the adoption of this Bill. I believe they are both practised in other countries. In England the rank of honorary colonel is conferred very much upon the same principle, and it is also used as a means of giving an honorary position or honorary rank to a party who may be leaving the active service.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the first proposition, but I think we ought to curtail the second. I do not see very much sense in calling a man a colonel who could not drill a company. I submit that this may be carrying the thing to the same extent as it is carried by our neighbours to the south of us. I remember one time having the privilege of going through the United States; I started in Maine as a captain and ended up in California as a general. But, coming back I began in California as a general and ended in Maine as a captain, and the fall was great. Everybody there is a colonel, a captain, a governor, or something else. I do not think any man unless he has military training, and after he has retired from active service and can do military work even then; I do not think he should be called permanent. Then, as to the honorary colonels of the regiments. I always understood that such an officer was a man who was a real officer beforehand, but who had retired and was made honorary colonel, in the same way as you make an honorary president of a society. This new phase of the case astonishes me. I trust the government will be very sparing in making colonels out of literary men, or indeed out of men who have added distinction to the state in civil pursuits. We have an order of precedence, and what if one of those civilian soldiers like myself, for instance, should dangle a sword at a function and fall over it, not knowing how to utilize it in the true military style. Well, Sir, this system may become ridiculous. We may have men who know nothing at all about war walking in as colonels and all that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps it will relieve my friend when I tell him that the honorary colonels are not expected to go to the front.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). My trouble would be going to the rear with a sword, and I say that the very fact that these gentlemen cannot be called to the front makes it all the more ridiculous. What is the use of calling a man by the name of 'colonel' if he is not fit to go to the front? Why, you will have men claiming to be colonels because they cannot get any other title. Really, these distinctions are too trifling in a body like the militia of Canada, who really do fight wherever they go and bring honour on the fair name of our country. Leave the title of colonel to the men who do the fighting and let us civilians go along gaining glory in some other way.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope that the attack which the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) has made upon the Minister of Militia and upon this Bill, is not intended as a reflection upon the distinction of honorary colonel having been conferred recently upon the present Prime Minister. If so, I must put in a word in defence of the Bill. Although the right hon. gentleman who leads this House has not been any more particularly noted in the military field than I have myself, yet he has had a good deal of experience in drilling a very insubordinate body of gentlemen behind him, and he is showing such admirable ideas of discipline in that respect that really he is entitled to the position of an honorary colonel.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I did not refer to the Prime Minister, but I would suggest at once that the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) should be immediately made a colonel. If ever there was a man that ought to be a colonel it is the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) at this present moment considering the insubordination of the men whom he commands. I made no special reference to any particular honorary colonel. I expressed a hope that the government should not utilize this power to too great an extent, believing as I do that in a country like this, the conferring of such titles upon men who have not won their spurs is not a good thing. There may be cases where it may be done, but there should not be very many.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). I do not see why a civilian should be called colonel. There is no more reason why a man who has earned distinction in politics should be called a 'colonel' than there is why the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), should be called a 'reverend,' although he is probably as much entitled to that distinction as any man in the pulpit to-day. We should not pass an Act of parliament enabling the government to call one of its ministers or one of its followers a 'reverend,' nor should we enable them to confer the distinction of colonel upon civilians who never had anything to do with military life. You are doing a great injustice to the military service by passing this Bill to confer the title on men who may or may not deserve it. It is a slur upon our militia service and upon our soldiers.

Mr. CHARLTON. May I ask for a personal explanation. I did not hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler), and I would like to know whether he called the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) a 'reverend' or a 'rebel.'

Mr. OSLER. Oh, reverend, right reverend.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why did you think he called you a rebel?

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). With all due deference to the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), I believe that the government should take power to confer this title of honorary colonel, so that they may honour certain men in Canada who have devoted half their lifetime and spent thousands of dollars for the promotion of the militia service of Canada. Take Colonel Turnbull, of Quebec, as an example. He has spent a large amount of money and has devoted years of his life to promoting the efficiency of the militia, and it is well that the government should have power to confer this honour on a gentleman like that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister of Militia has now power to make any man in the militia service a colonel, but the point we are discussing is as to whether a civilian should be made a colonel. I ask the minister how many colonels have been appointed since 1896?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will read the list: Field Marshal, His Royal Highness, Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.M.G., &c., 1st Battalion Prince of Wales Regiment Fusiliers, 1898; Field Marshal, the Right Hon. G. J. Viscount Wolseley, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., R.C.R.I., 1899; Hon. J. M. Gibson, A.D.C., 13th Battalion, 1895; J. J. Tucker, 62nd Battalion, 1897; the Right Hon. Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, P.C., G.C.M.G., 3rd Battalion, 1898; the Right Hon. Sir John Douglas Sutherland Campbell, Marquis of Lorne, 15th Battalion, 1898; J. Munro, 22nd Battalion, 1898; the Right Hon. the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, K.P., G.C.B., K.C.M.G., 38th Battalion, 1898; the Right Hon. Lord Aylmer, 54th Battalion, 1898; Lieut.-General J. W. Laurie, 63rd Battalion, 1898; H. R. Smith, 14th Battalion, 1898; J. I. Davidson, 48th Battalion, 1898; Sir L. H. Davies, K.C.M.G., 4th Regiment C.A., 1898; W. M. Humphrey, 66th Battalion, 1898; J. B. Forsyth, Q.O.C. Hussars, 1898; J. A. Renaud, 83rd Battalion, 1898; Hon. R. R. Dobell, P.C., 8th Battalion, 1898; W. White, C.M.G., 43rd Battalion, 1898; W. E. O'Brien, 35th Battalion, 1898; R. Wilson-Smith, 2nd Regiment C.A., 1898; A. E. Curren, 1st Regiment C.A., 1898; W. Mackenzie, 45th Battalion, 1898;—

Mr. MONTAGUE. What William Mackenzie is that?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He was colonel of the 45th Battalion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not Mr. Mackenzie, of Mackenzie & Mann?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE—Oh, no. His Excellency the Right Hon. the Earl of Minto, 1898; the Right Hon. the Earl of Aberdeen, 1898; G. T. Denison, G.G.B.G., 1899; the Hon. Sir John Carling, 1899; the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G.C.M.G., 1899; and the last, the former colonel of my own battalion, the 68th Battalion of King's, and one of the warmest supporters of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, L. De V. Chipman. That is all who are recorded here.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Will the minister read the list of honorary colonels made before 1896?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There was just one, the Hon. J. M. Gibson.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the remarks made by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) have been justified by the list which the hon. gentleman has read. Evidently a new rank of titled gentlemen is to exist in Canada under this exceedingly democratic government. I wonder if we are going to have colonels as common in Canada as they are in the American republic, where Max O'Rell, speaking a short time ago, said there were sixty million people, mostly colonels. I do not know of any special service which the hon. gentleman who bungled the fast Atlantic service and who invented the bottle-necked steamships has performed for the country that he should be made an honorary colonel; and surely the Prime Minister has had enough decorations—a Cobden medal, a Privy Councillorship, a G.C.M.G., and so forth.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Do you dispute my qualifications?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not dispute the hon. gentleman's qualifications for all these decorations, which demand great courtesy and politeness; but I do not think the right hon. gentleman is distinguished as a military man.

The PRIME MINISTER. You forget my former speeches.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I know that on one occasion the right hon. gentleman threatened to bring out his musket, but it was only a threat. But, passing that by, we, of course, all recognize that the Prime Minister of this country—I speak in a general way—is entitled to any distinction which any department of the public service can confer upon him; but, it does appear to me that the hon. Minister of Militia, in his administration, is making the Militia Department somewhat ridiculous. Who wants this long list of colonels? What does the Marquis of Dufferin, for instance, care about being made a colonel in the Canadian militia? It seems to me to be absolute nonsense; and at last it appears that the hon. gentleman has been making these spurious colonels without any authority whatever. I am told that there is no authority in the Militia Act under which he can make them; and what is the Act we are passing to-day except an Act of indemnification to relieve the hon. gentleman of all responsibility for having made these spurious colonels without any authority? It appears to me that the hon. member for Guysborough and the hon. member for West Toronto have echoed the true sentiment of this country, and that the less we have of this kind of thing the better for the country, and a good deal better for the militia. The only man who ought to get the title of colonel in this country is the man who has done good service for his country in the militia, and whose time of lieutenant-colonelcy has expired. I think it is then a very graceful act, and an act which will tend to the advantage of the militia of Canada generally, to put him on the list of honorary colonels. But it appears to me to be ridiculous to proceed as the hon. gentleman is proceeding now; and he tells us that the end is not yet. He tells us that they are getting along delightfully well, so that I have no doubt that next year we shall have to have almost a separate publication besides the civil service list to contain the list of honorary colonels made under the authority of the Act which the hon. gentleman is now asking the House to pass. It appears to me that we had better confine ourselves to confirming what the hon. gentleman has already done. We would not like to take the decoration away from the Prime Minister nor from the minister without portfolio. It is an ample reward for the magnificent service which the latter gentleman has given us in connection with the fast Atlantic service.

Mr. DAVIN. 'Commodore' would be a more appropriate title.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, commodore is a naval term.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Or admiral.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It appears to me that the best thing for us to do is simply to pass an Act confirming what the hon. gentleman has already done, and then turn the faucet, and not empty out any more colonels on the country.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). I imagine, Mr. Chairman, that one of the chief objections to the measure which we have under consideration for the creation of honorary military titles, is the fact that it will lead in a short time to a very great scarcity of privates. That feature of the case has been realized already in the United States, and I think it would be a bad example to follow. We had better adhere to the practice which gives us a rank and file as well as officers. If we continue the plan which has now been entered upon, we shall have a great number of colonels, and the title will become so common that any distinction which may attach to it will be lost, and it will become somewhat ridiculous. I quite concur in the opinion expressed by the hon. member for West Toronto, the hon. member for Guysborough and the hon. member for Haldimand, that it is not in the military interest of this country to adopt this plan. The possessor of a commission should be a man who is capable of discharging the duties which the possession of that commission involves. We have had in South Africa an instance of the great necessity that exists for care in the bestowal of commissions. The man who holds a commission should be an officer capable of leading troops and discharging all the duties of an officer in case of emergency. I simply rise for the purpose of saying that I believe we have entered upon a course which will be detrimental to the militia service and become ridiculous in itself if it is followed up, as it naturally will be, and we had better drop it right where it is.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have heard the very severe criticisms of gentlemen who know very much more about military affairs and the feeling of the militia of this country than I do; but I wish to point out to the House that in every case where an appointment of this kind has been made, it has been made after the officers of the particular battalion have asked that it should be made. Most of the men occupying these high positions are looked upon by the officers and by the battalions to which they have been attached in this honorary way, as patrons. It costs something to run the militia of this country—not only the votes taken in parliament, but the time and money of the officers themselves. In many cases the battalions have been named after the gentlemen who have been selected as honorary colonels. When the battalion was founded, the name of one of these distinguished men was given it, and later on it seemed to be in accord with the fitness of things that he should be chosen as the particular patron of that battalion, and in many cases, no doubt, these gentlemen, out of their wealth and influence, are able to assist these different battalions. I, therefore, entirely dissent from the view that anything prejudicial cial or derogatory to the militia of this country is going to result from associating with it the names of the men I have read to the committee.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I regret very much that I have to differ from the remarks made by hon. gentlemen on both sides. My hon. friends from Guysborough and Toronto deprecate the making colonels out of men without military knowledge. I entirely approve of what the Minister of Militia has done for this reason, that it is in entire consistency with the policy of the government. It is a humbug from the word go, and therefore, perfectly consistent with that policy all through.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Does the hon. gentleman get any authority in this Act for appointing to the position of colonel a man who has not been a lieutenant-colonel?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may tell the hon. gentleman that there is power in the executive to confer the honorary rank of lieutenant-colonel on any one.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the law as it now is?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the section which gives that power?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. minister contends that under the old Act the government have the power to make honorary lieutenant-colonels, but that this government will make two bites at it, and make a civilian a colonel.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentlemen made colonels have not been legally given that rank, and will have to be made over again, will they not? We are told that the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) and the Prime Minister, and the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, have been made colonels, but the Minister of Militia had no authority to do that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They have been made lieutenant-colonels and not colonels.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I asked the hon. gentleman for the list of colonels, and he read me these names.

Mr. ALEX. McNEILL (North Bruce). How many lieutenant-colonels were created before 1896, who were not connected with the militia force?

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None.

Mr. McNEILL. Then this is a new departure, and it seems to me a most extraordinary proceeding. I do not think it is altogether fair to the militia from another point of view. I do not see why a civilian should be allowed to encroach upon the prerogatives of the militia in this way without the militia being allowed a little chance to obtain civilian honours. Why should my hon. friend, for instance, not be given the title of archbishop or chief justice. I do not see why we should not be logical in these matters. If it is a correct thing to appoint to military rank a civilian, who is no way connected with militia, surely the militia ought to have a chance to obtain civilian honours. The whole thing seems absurd and mischievous. I would venture to ask my hon. friend not to proceed further with this matter, or to so amend the Act as to make it impossible for absurdities of this kind to be perpetrated in the future.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). The reasons given by the Minister of Militia for the retention of this clause are reasons which ought to defeat the clause. The hon. gentleman says it cost something to run the militia, and that the gentlemen who are being appointed honorary colonels, are appointed because they assist commanding officers of battalions to sustain the necessary charges in connection with their position. If that be the reason, why not give the officers power to appoint these civilians honorary members of their mess or patrons of their regiments. If the officers of the militia are not receiving sufficient sums from the public to enable them to maintain their position, their pay ought to be increased. I am entirely in accord with the remarks of my hon. friend from Guysborough. The multiplication of these tinpot titles, the distribution of honorary colonelships amongst civilians who have no military experience, is reducing the militia system to a little more than a farce.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there is a little misapprehension on the part of the Minister of Militia as to how far this clause goes. I do not believe it gives power to the Minister of Militia to appoint any one, who has not been a lieutenant-colonel in the active militia, to a colonelcy. I do not think there can be any objection, when a man has been lieutenant-colonel in the active militia and is retired, to making him an honorary colonel. But what we object to is selecting men who have never been in the militia and making them honorary colonels. We must have a large number of lieutenant-colonels in this country, very deserving men, and if there are any colonelcies to be distributed, these men ought to get them.

I would like to see the authority for this new departure. I find that previous to the advent of this government to power, there were no honorary colonels appointed from the ranks of civilians, and no honorary lieutenant-colonels. Only one was appointed and he had been a militia officer. Since that time, in two or three years, twenty-eight or thirty have been appointed. That is a tolerably swift progression, and if we go on at that rate we will soon have an army of honorary colonels, and the poor private will be neglected. I would ask the minister to point out the clause which gives him that authority.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia one or two questions. In the first place, does he consider that after the passage of this Act, it will be possible to appoint a gentleman as honorary colonel who has not been in the militia service. Because, I think that, if my hon. friend is under that impression, he is mistaken. I find no authority in the Bill to appoint any person to the position of colonel who is not a lieutenant-colonel at the time of his appointment.

The PRIME MINISTER. I beg to differ, I have no special knowledge of this subject, but I can say, without violating any confidence, that when General Hutton was in command, he advised the appointment of a gentleman who was a civilian. I pointed out the objection, and he said that it was always done, and claimed the power to do it under the Act as it is.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand that the Minister of Militia proposes to take authority under this Bill to appoint civilians to the rank of honorary colonels. I am not dealing with the propriety or policy of that amendment, but I simply say I do not find in this Bill the power that he says it contains. The Bill says :

Officers holding commissions as lieutenant-colonel in the militia may be transferred to the retired list with honorary rank not exceeding that of colonel, and officers now on the retired list holding commissions as lieutenant-colonel may be promoted to the rank of colonel, under regulations approved by the Governor in Council.

There is not a word here, so far as I see, that will enable him to do that, which he says it was the object of the Bill to give the power to do. I would ask another question, which may have some bearing on the policy of the measure. What would be the relative position of a lieutenant-colonel in the active militia, and a civilian who had been appointed honorary colonel, if they met on a public occasion? Would the title of honorary colonel give him precedence over the lieutenant-colonel?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Taking the last of the hon. gentleman's questions first, I think that, unless the honorary colonel was a gentleman who had a real substantive rank, the fact of his being honorary colonel, would not place him above a lieutenant-colonel in the active militia, and in command.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand that it would give the honorary colonel precedence?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, certainly not—in the field.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not talking about the field, but I am talking about the question of precedence on a public occasion.

Mr. DAVIN. Would it give the honorary colonel social precedence?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is what I was after.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the rank would undoubtedly, according to the date, give him social precedence. Now, with regard to the power conferred by the Bill, while there does seem to be a limitation, I think there can be no question as to the power of the Governor General in Council, to appoint any one a lieutenant-colonel, or colonel, or honorary colonel.

Mr. DAVIN. But there is no power in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, but the executive have power, and, under the Militia Act, the power to appoint colonels has been limited to two cases. According to the Act, there were to be only two colonels, the adjutant general and the quartermaster general. However, that rule has not been lived up to, because I find about the time of the North-west rebellion, one or two colonels were appointed. The Deputy Minister of Militia was made a colonel, though there did not seem to be any express authority under the Act, but, on the contrary, the Militia Act seemed to limit the power of the executive to the appointment of two colonels. It is proposed by this Bill, to extend the scope of the Act, and to confer upon the executive power to appoint colonels, other than the two provided for in the Act as it is now.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have limited the class from which you can appoint such colonels, to retired lieutenant-colonels.

Mr. DAVIN. Let me ask one question. Does not the language of the Act define, after all, the power of the government in this matter? The fact that it specifies what may be done is exclusive of what it does not mention. It seems to me, that the Act gives the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden), no power whatever to do what he has done, nor does it give the government power to do what it has done.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). Before the hon. minister (Mr. Borden), gets up to answer that question, I would like to ask what intimation these honorary appointees got as to what their title would be? Was it not that they were to be appointed honorary lieutenant-colonels? It must have astonished the Prince of Wales, Lord Dufferin, Lord Strathcona, and the others, to find that they had been appointed honorary lieutenant-colonels.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister says they are appointed lieutenant-colonels. I never heard of an honorary lieutenant-colonel before in my life; and I think it is something new in army circles to hear of an honorary lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. BENNETT. There is Cap. Sullivan too.

Mr. HAGGART. The only honorary title is that of honorary colonel. I do not see any power in the Act, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), who spoke before me said, that gives the Minister of Militia the right to appoint an honorary colonel, unless he has been a lieutenant-colonel. But I would like the hon. minister to say whether the intimation received by these gentlemen was, that they were appointed honorary lieutenant-colonels, and where he ever got the idea.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As to where I got the idea, I have no hesitation in saying that I got it from the very distinguished Imperial officers who have been in the country since I became minister.

An hon. MEMBER. General Hutton?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. I do not mind saying, from General Hutton. I confess it did not seem to me a matter of such great importance, that I need worry very much about it; I thought that these gentlemen ought to know. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), must be mistaken. I do not know that he has been following military matters very closely, and there may be some things in connection with military honorary titles that he is not aware of.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland). I do not pretend to be a military man, and I would not care to be one if I had to have every Tom, Dick and Harry thrust over my head after I had been serving my country to the best of my ability. It does seem to me a very strange proposition from the Minister of Militia to put the men he speaks of in the position of honorary colonels. It appears to me that the man who had a right to the title of honorary colonel, in the social scale would be ahead, but when it came to do any fighting he would be behind. Is not that the true position? I think it is a humiliating position for a lieutenant-colonel to be in for the Minister of Militia and Defence to tell him to-day that he is bringing in an Act to allow him to give honorary colonelcies to gentlemen who do not know anything about military affairs, to enable them to do—what term shall I use?—to sponge on these who have lost time by attending to their duties in drilling, and have spent their time and money to make the militia of this country efficient. I understand the Minister of Militia and Defence to say that it costs time and money, and that I know. Well, if it costs time and money for these officers to make themselves efficient, I for one as a farmer am prepared to pay them for their services. I think it is more honourable for this country to pay men for their time and services than to create honorary colonels, to reward them, to give them titles that they are not entitled to. To my mind it would be a very humiliating position for me to be in if I had been a lieutenant-colonel in the militia of this country, and had spent my time and money in the profession, as the minister tells me to-day that I would have to do in order, not only to make myself efficient, but the militia under my command, and then, when it came to attending a social affair, I would have some honorary colonel taking precedence and I would be behind.

Mr. DAVIN. Behind Cap Sullivan or Mr. McNish.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not joking—Cap Sullivan, Mr. McNish or anybody else. This is too serious a matter to bring in such names in connection with it. I say it would be a humiliating position for any honourable man who had spent his time and money to qualify himself and to drill the men under him, to have another man promoted over him in a social way by the favour of the government. I do not say this particularly in regard to the present government, as perhaps we may be doing the same thing very soon when we get into power. Therefore, I do not want to put into the hands of any Minister of Militia and Defence the power to place gentlemen in social affairs over the heads of those who, by actual merit and the expenditure of time and money, have qualified themselves to command the Canadian militia.

Mr. OSLER. Military matters are rather serious just now, and this is no time to play with them. It is out of place at this particular time, when we are all coming to know what war means, and what inefficient officers mean, for the Minister of Militia and Defence to bring in an Act creating tinpot titles. Military titles should be given only for military service. If you are going to make a military title honourable, as it should be, it should be given for military service only, and not for political or other services as has been the case in regard to that list that has been read out to us to-day. For the present government to bring in such a Bill as they propose now, I think is—well, it is only in accord with what they have all along been doing. If this Bill comes into effect we will have Cap Sullivan promoted to the rank of Colonel Sullivan, as well as other leaders of political organizations and henchmen of the government. I say it is a disgrace to our militia system, and I hope the minister will withdraw this Bill, and that he will advise the government not to consent to any appointment to military honours that the appointees have not earned by real service. It is very strange to find the Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia and Defence now quoting the greatest soldier that we have ever had here, Col. Hutton, in defence of what they are doing here to-day, after having belittled the great services he has rendered this country, shielding themselves on this occasion behind a gentleman who is now out of the country. I think this Act is a disgrace and a humiliation to the militia men, because it gives the government power to confer the title of honorary colonel on men for political services, or services other than military. Surely we do not want to start now where the United States have left off, after having appointed tinpot colonels all over the country and making them a laughing stock. Let us be more dignified. There is no man in the House who respects titles more than I do, no man who thinks that a gentleman like the Prime Minister is more deserving of the title that has been bestowed upon him, and who wears his honours with dignity. But to give military titles to civilians I think is very wrong. After the experience we are having in the war in which we are so deeply interested, I think it is humiliating to the country, and is a slur upon our military men who have gone to the front, that the government should take power to appoint men who will rank over them socially or otherwise.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has discussed this subject in a manner that is altogether unworthy of the occasion. There is no occasion whatever to bring politics into this question. The object may be praiseworthy or not, but the hon. gentleman has taken upon himself to cast slurs which, even if merited, ought not to have been uttered. The hon. gentleman has stated that it would not be proper to appoint civilians to these honorary positions. That may be so or not. I am not disposed to disagree with him, because I have no opinion upon the subject at all. I am quite willing on this subject to take the opinion of military men, and if military men think this thing ought to be done, I am quite willing that it should be done; if they think it ought not to be done, I am quite willing to abide by their opinion. All I can say is that I have discussed this matter with the highest military men that we have in this country, and they tell me—I can repeat it, because it is a matter within the knowledge of every one—that what we propose here is done in every civilized country under the sun where titles purely honorary are granted to men who are not in the profession. The hon. gentleman who is so prone to cast slurs upon other people, will, perhaps, not find fault if I tell him that if he was less ignorant of the subject he would not have made the remarks that he has just uttered, and he would have known that in England such titles are given to civilians as well as to men who are not in the military profession. But there is one thing that we should keep in mind, and that is the danger of abusing the power of granting honorary titles, the danger that they may be given to men who are not deserving of them, that they may be given so promiscuously that they cease to be an honour, and so become farcical. The hon. gentleman must have read, as we all have read, that the Emperor of Germany is made a colonel in the British army, that the Prince of Wales is made a colonel in the German army, that a royal baby of six months old is made a colonel in some regiment. These are purely honorary titles. But what is to be feared is that, perhaps, if we introduce this system we may carry it to the length that it has been carried in the United States, where almost every second man you meet is a general, or a colonel, or some other titled person. For this the government of the day will be responsible. If they abuse the power to carry it too far, they are liable to the censure of the House. But in proposing to take this power I do not know that we are doing anything beyond what is the practice in Great Britain and in all civilized nations. I do not know that we are doing anything in this matter but what has been the practice in Great Britain and in all civilized nations.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me whether such a thing does really exist in Great Britain, because I am told that it does not?

The PRIME MINISTER. My information comes from the highest military authority in this country.

Mr. HAGGART. Not honorary lieutenant-colonels but honorary colonels.

The PRIME MINISTER. Our military experts in this country have informed me that it does. I discussed this matter myself with the military authorities of this country. When it was proposed to appoint a civilian, whom I do not care to name at this moment, to a position of honorary colonel, I pointed out that this seemed to be an anomaly, but I was told that it was not an anomaly, but that it was done in Great Britain.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) spoke of the Prince of Wales and of the Emperor of Germany, but it is not a fact that they are attached to special regiments in all cases?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that there is any difference, so far as my information goes, if in every case they have been appointed to special regiments. If I may be permitted to be personal at all, I might mention my own case. I do not pride myself very much upon my military career. I know that my military career afforded a good many arguments for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and that when I said I was willing to defend a minority that had been deprived of their rights, hon. gentlemen opposite based some argument upon it. When it was suggested that I should be made an honorary colonel of the 9th Battalion Voltigeurs de Quebec, I represented that there were several other gentlemen more competent than myself, but when I was told that the officers had done me the honour of selecting me, and that they desired me to accept the honour, I said: If you want to have it that way, well and good. If this be the practice in other countries, I do not see why it should not be the practice in this country. But, if it be the practice in this country the government must hold themselves responsible for the appointments which are suggested. I would not like to see the thing carried too far or to see every man made a colonel, as it is in some other countries. I believe that, in this matter, we may rely upon the good sense of the authorities themselves. But, if under this power they make every man a colonel, I think they would be legitimately liable to censure. As to the thing itself, I am informed by the military authorities in the country that we are following the example of other nations.

Mr. OSLER. Mr. Chairman, the right hon. Prime Minister has pitched into me a little strongly, but I had a sort of idea that I was talking to a democratic lot of people. I find, on the contrary, that I have been talking to the most aristocratic gentlemen, probably, that we have on this continent. They have aristocratic tendencies in England and in Germany such as I do not think we would tolerate here. I am a democrat, I think, but I should be afraid to say that I am a democrat after the democratic assumptions of the right hon. gentleman. I can quite understand that in aristocratic England and Imperial Germany we have these titles. In the court of Germany any ordinary man, a physician or other professional man, is tabooed. The greatest physician in the world is treated like a flunky when he goes to the court of Germany. That is not the case in England, thank the Lord, but still, England has aristocratic traditions. I do not want to see these traditions carried out in Canada. I am anxious that we shall throw aside a great many of the old traditions of that sort. I do not want a man to be appointed to an office of this country that he has not gained. Would you, if you were undertaking to frame a constitution here, have a provision made to open the position of honorary colonels to the Prince of Wales, the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Marine, and have them appointed as colonels in imaginary regiments? No, you would not. Let us come down to ordinary common business sense. You are not now trying to undo something that has been done, but you are now trying to introduce something that has not been in effect in this country heretofore. You are trying to foist upon this country false titles. You are trying to create a tinpot value for services not to the state, but services to a party. I say, it will be wrong. I do not say it in connection with the present government, but I say it in connection with any government having the power to bestow such titles as these. It is a temptation to them to confer them on undeserving and unfit men, and the effect will be to demoralize the militia and the military spirit in this country. I have the honour to be president of the Ontario Rifle Association. I accepted the position with a great deal of reluctance. I know very little about it, but I may, perhaps, be able to help them in some other ways. I consider that I would be insulting the rifle association if I were, through my connection with that association, to accept a military title. I appeal to the hon. Minister of Militia to reconsider this proposal and to provide that if military titles are to be given they shall only be given for services performed by Canadians.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the clause is passed, I just want to say a single word. I must say to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that it is very unfortunate that we cannot discuss a question of this kind without any personal references. I quite agree with the right hon. gentleman, when he was able to state to the House that the title which he had accepted as honorary colonel was accepted at the request of a certain regiment which represented to him that they would be honoured to have him occupy that position. I am quite prepared to say that that is a sufficient reason why the right hon. gentleman should accept it, and I do feel that there is great force in what he said, and what has been accentuated by a number of hon. members on both sides of the House, in regard to the difficulty of preventing a thing of this kind being abused. The fact that the Prince of Wales has been made the honorary colonel of a German regiment, and that the Emperor of Germany is an honorary colonel in the British army, is not in point. These cases are exceptional, and the very circumstances under which such a condition happens are so entirely different from the conditions in this country that I think this matter ought to be most carefully considered on its merits. I would suggest that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence has, I think, not clearly appreciated the position. He stated, when he first gave the explanation in reference to the introduction of this Bill, that he proposed to take the power—a power which the government have not at present—to make honorary colonels. I find no such power contained in the Bill. There is no provision whatever in the Bill. There is a provision by which a person who has reached the rank of lieutenant-colonel may be appointed an honorary colonel, and I can quite see the propriety of that. I can quite see that in the administration of military affairs in this country, cases may arise in which a gentleman has great claims to consideration, and yet, the efficiency of the militia service would be promoted by his being removed from his active position as lieutenant-colonel, and, under these circumstances, I can quite see that there might be an advantage in this officer being allowed to retire with the rank of honorary colonel. That appears to be perfectly right. We are told, that if there is no provision in this Bill, there is power without it. I deny that; I cannot see where the Governor in Council has any power that is not bestowed by law. I am not aware of the Governor in Council undertaking to exercise powers that are not justified by some statute or by any authority of law. If the government already has the power, there is no necessity for incorporating it in this Bill. However, I do not think there is any power in the hands of the Governor in Council to appoint any person a colonel. The Militia Act not only made no provision for the appointment of an 'honorary colonel,' but it actually limited the power of the government to conferring the rank of lieutenant-colonel. That being the case, it is fatal to the claim, that the executive power of this country could deal with this matter without a statute. This Bill, in my opinion, should be reconsidered. I would not interfere with any action that may be taken to confirm what has been already done; but in future this rank should be confined to the promotion of lieutenant-colonels in the active service, and means should be taken to prevent the abuse of this power, as it will be abused if succeeding governments are to rival each other in the number of titles they shall distribute in the country. This proposition requires more thought and consideration than has been apparently given to it, and it should be carefully reviewed in that light. Suppose a gallant officer of our militia returns to Canada covered with distinction and having done great honour to this country in the South African war, that we trust is now approaching its termination; suppose he returns and he finds that in social life, although he has shed his blood in the defence of the empire, some gentlemen not of very marked prominence—I do not make any in-vidious distinction, but I run my eye over these appointments that have already been conferred and I find that there are some who have not been greatly distinguished above all others—suppose this brave officer returning to Canada finds himself playing second fiddle to a gentleman who has never rendered service to the Canadian militia; what would be thought of that? I do not think the Prime Minister would like to have a Bill passed that would bring about such a condition. I would suggest that the Bill should not be proceeded with at present, but that the government should carefully reconsider it in the light of this discussion, and amend it so as to enable them to promote lieutenants-colonels of distinction to the rank of colonels. The government might also consider how this very high distinction could be bestowed on others, without running the risk of making this power take a shape that it ought not to. I have no objection to bestowing the title on the right hon. the leader of the House under the circumstances, but if it is to be the policy to make such appointments, they should be restricted as they are in Great Britain and in Germany and other countries, to persons who by the consensus of the public opinion of the country are entitled to the position.

Mr. JAMES DOMVILLE (King's, N.B.). We have heard a great deal from the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) about honours, and no doubt the members in this House who have titles got them in one way or another. None of us feel unhappy because these gentlemen happen to have something flourishing in front of their names; although how they did get the title is sometimes very funny. I could go into the history, not only of Canada, but of England, and show some extraordinary instances of how titles were conferred. Some men want to have a title, and they are not particular what it is so long as it is a title. We have all seen the play of Bombastes Furioso, where the prime minister Fusbos had performed certain services and had asked for an honour, and when his sovereign conferred upon him the Royal Order of the Puppy Dogs, Fusbos was happy, and went around glorying in the honour of wearing the Royal Order of Puppy Dogs on his breast. Well, a good deal of this is puppy dog business all around. Now, while this system of conferring of titles may be abused, there are certain instances where it is all right. When our brave officers return from South Africa, the leader of the government and the Minister of Militia will reward them properly irrespective of politics, and if they do not we will all join together to insist that they shall. I have introduced a Bill into this House which will enable officers of the militia to take their places in the Senate or the House of Commons the same as they do in England. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) wants to debar our brave militiamen from honours, why should not the man who has shed his blood in South Africa, or the man who was willing to do it, not receive honours? Why, I believe that the hon. member for Cape Breton (Sir Charles Tupper) would himself go out in defence of the empire if there was any scrapping to be done. The Minister of Militia is right when he says he is anxious to place the militia of Canada on some firm and sure basis. In the past our militia has been played with in bringing men from England that we do not want here. When we have gallant Canadian officers who have distinguished themselves in the service of the empire in honour of the country, why should they not have the right to command our militia force. The trouble has been in the past that there was no inducement for our young men to go into the militia and little compensation to them for doing so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Every one agrees with what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) says, but the point we are discussing is that this Bill takes power to make colonels out of men who have never been in the militia.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I have no objection to make you one, but I do not want you to tell me what I should say. This Bill covers the whole of the Militia Act of Canada, and it is a deserving Bill. It is a shame that at present a man should spend his whole lifetime in perfecting and equipping his battalion, and then at the end of five years when his usefulness is about commencing, that he should be deprived of his command.

Mr. MONTAGUE. These are the men who ought to be made honorary colonels.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Certainly. Will the hon. gentleman say that any officer shirked going to the front? I have too much respect for Canada and Canadians to believe that we have men in the militia ranks that would not go to the front when duty calls them. If they have complied with every military requirement which the law demands, are you going to debar them on the ground that it is necessary to have a belted knight from England? No, Sir; we have peers in Canada by intelligence as well as peers in England—peers like Mr. Gladstone, who was too proud to go around with any title attached to his name, and he was a much greater man than many men who have titles. But that is not the point. The point I wish to make is that it is an inducement to men who have had to work up a regiment, to allow them to retire with an honorary title when the time has come when they can no longer remain in command of their regiment; and why should not these men have the proudest honour which Canada can bestow on them? I hope to see the day when we shall be able to provide Canadians for even higher positions than the command of the militia. I hope to see the day when Canada will be producing governors for Australia, New Zealand or Tasmania. Canada exists as a partner in the realm, not as a colony. We are not a colony at all, and we have shown it in this war. We have shown that Canadians can take their share with the rest of the empire in fighting, and if need be, dying for the cause. These are my views, given without consultation with anybody. Canada has taken a position in the world such as she has never before occupied, and I believe there is enough patriotism in this House and in this country to do anything that will advance the position of the Canadian militia in the eyes of the world. The militia of Canada no longer exists as a militia. Under the law, perhaps, we are unable to designate it as an army or an active force; but the word militia, as it was understood five or ten years ago, has no longer any application to our force. It is the first line of defence of Canada, and the first line of defence to join with Great Britain's first line of defence. I think both sides of the House should join together in endeavouring to produce some system that will make the militia effective in any hour of need. There is no doubt there have been many things to complain of in the past. I have never had anything in it myself except regard for what was best for the country. When my hon. friend throws a slur on the colonels of these various regiments, I tell him he is not doing justice to the country, for I can tell him that ninety-five per cent of these very colonels that he would turn down are of his own stripe of politics. Is that correct?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was not speaking to the hon. gentleman; I just noticed the entry of Colonel Davies.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Well, Sir, we might go further and make an Admiral Davies. I do not think there is any politics in this question, and I hope that this Bill will go through, and that those amongst us who have not received any title may come in like those in the play of 'Bombasto Furioso,' as belonging to the Royal Order of Puppy Dogs.

Mr. J. G. RUTHERFORD (Macdonald). Although I do not happen, at the present time, to belong to the militia, I have had the honour to serve in that body for a number of years in all ranks, from full private up to holding a commission, and therefore, I may be excused if I take a small share in this debate.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not a colonel.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I was not a colonel—not a full colonel, at any rate.

Mr. MILLS. They get full sometimes.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The question under discussion is as to the advisability of appointing honorary colonels in the militia of Canada, and precedents have been quoted, and statements made to show the loss of dignity that would be caused to the Canadian militia if any such course were pursued. It has been stated that the custom prevails in Great Britain. That has been denied except in the case of three crack regiments, of which three European potentates are honorary colonels. But we find that in every regiment of the British militia, in all branches of the service, there is an honorary colonel; and these honorary colonels are civilians. They are not always noblemen, but in many cases country gentlemen without any military qualifications or connections. So much is this system recognized that in the army list, not only the names of the honorary colonels appear, but in the case of a regiment which has not an honorary colonel, the title is inserted and a blank space is left for the name. That is to say, the office is recognized as being one proper to every regiment of militia. If that is the case in Great Britain—and our militia is modelled very largely on the militia of Great Britain—and if we consider ourselves, as my hon. friend (Mr. Domville) has said, as part of the first line of defence of the British Empire, I do not think our Canadian militia is going to suffer in any way by adopting the same system. Although some hon. gentlemen opposite have ventured to criticise this proposal, I consider it a source of strength to many of our militia regiments to have an honorary colonel, who would take an interest in the regiment, not necessarily financial, who would see that it is encouraged in every possible way, and who would assist in promoting a public spirit in the district to give the regiment that support which we are all agreed our militia regiments are entitled to. I merely wished to rise to correct the impression that this custom does not exist in Great Britain, where it has been thoroughly recognized.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. My hon. friend might have cited the state of Dakota, where there are lots of colonels—I do not know whether they are honorary.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. My hon. friend knows that it is not necessary to have any rank in the United States to get a title. A man graduates into it. I have no doubt that if my hon. friend went to the United States, he with his portly presence, would become a colonel in six months. The only possible danger is that the power of appointing men to this position might be abused; but I do not think the American argument applies for a moment. We have a great many judges in North and South Dakota, and a great many colonels, but they are not men who have any right to the title whatever.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). I did not rise to discuss questions concerning military hierarchy or military ethics, because, I am free to admit, I know very little about them. The question seems to me not one of military ethics, but of the meaning of plain, ordinary English. The Bill, as I read it, does not contemplate the doing of that thing which has been under discussion for nearly two hours, but it simply purports to give the rank of honorary colonel to officers holding commissions in the militia of Canada. The section cannot mean anything else, and I fail to see why we should have been discussing these two hours, whether civilians should be made honorary colonels.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman has demonstrated that he has not listened to the discussion. There can be no question that the Bill purports to do just exactly what the hon. gentleman has stated and no more. But if he had listened to the discussion, he would have known that in practice, the government have gone a great deal further.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did listen to the discussion, and heard all that has been said, and I still persist in the opinion that hon. gentlemen have gone outside the Bill altogether. The appointment of civilians to the rank of honorary lieutenant-colonel's may be a subject for blame and censure; and if the hon. gentlemen had come forward with a motion blaming the government for making these honorary appointments, I would understand the debate. But we are here discussing a Bill that has nothing at all to do with the matter we have been discussing at such great length.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The government have been making honorary lieutenant-colonels, and the Minister of Militia has been trying, without success, to find authority in this Bill, or somewhere else, for that action. Under this Bill, the government are taking power to make honorary colonels out of those men whom they have made honorary lieutenant-colonels.

Mr. BELCOURT. They must hold commissions in the militia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But when a man has been appointed an honorary lieutenant-colonel, he holds a commission in the militia.

Mr. BELCOURT. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then what is the Bill wanted for. There is a regular medley of opinion. We have the acting Minister of the Interior saying it means one thing; we have the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), saying it means something else; and we have the Minister of Militia trying to find out what it does mean. If it does not do what I have said it was intended to do, then it does not do anything. No one objects to a man, who has served his country in the militia and served it well, being made an honorary colonel, but what we have been objecting to is that men outside the militia force entirely—men who want to get tin-pot titles, who want the privilege of wearing a tin sword, and taking precedence on certain occasions, before those who have actually done service in the militia—should, through their pull with the government, be able to get the title of honorary lieutenant-colonel, and then, under this Bill, the title of honorary colonel.

Mr. DOMVILLE. It is not in this Bill?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, but we are discussing, in connection with this Bill, the practice of the government. Take the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies)—a very gallant and a very distinguished gentleman, a gentleman who has done splendid service for his party, who sometimes gets a little bit excited, too excited, I think, to command a regiment, but nevertheless a gentleman to whose promotion to any honorary place in the honour roll of the country we are not inclined to object. For some reason or other, which we have not had explained to us, he was made honorary lieutenant-colonel. He never performed any service in the militia, he does not come on the list that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) spoke about, yet he was made an honorary lieutenant-colonel, and now, under this Bill, he will be made an honorary colonel.

Mr. DOMVILLE. He was a lieutenant-colonel of militia now, without the Bill. Under the Act to-day, he is a lieutenant-colonel in the militia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Just so, and he can be made an honorary colonel. Take gentlemen absolutely outside the government circle, take gentlemen who have never held any prominent political or militia positions, some of them are now honorary lieutenant-colonels, and may be made honorary colonels—is the distinguished and gallant lieutenant-colonel from Prince Edward Island, going to take second place to these gentlemen in large receptions, is he going to walk behind them, as lieutenant-colonel, while they go in front as colonels? It is absurd, he will have to be made a colonel. If there are any honorary colonels to be made, the list must include the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the minister of the fast steamship line. The hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce is certainly entitled to the title of honorary colonel. And the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), he surely ought to have the title.

This whole question of the introduction of these honorary titles is not only absurd, but calculated to cause, through political pressure, titles to be given where they were never intended to be given.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It is not fair to say that there are any politics in this. Take, for instance, Colonel Curren, of the city of Halifax, who was a life-long Conservative—

Mr. MONTAGUE. But he was in the militia, and the same thing applies to Lieutenant-Colonel Gibson, of Hamilton.

Mr. DOMVILLE. And Sir John Carling.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not know he was a militiaman.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). What ails Sir John Carling?

Mr. CLANCY. I think what ails him is that he has been made a colonel.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I do not know whether this Bill would cover the case, but I am perfectly satisfied—whatever we may think of the wisdom of making the appointments—that the government have the power to do so. All you have to do is to go back and reason the thing up. The sovereign can declare war, and she is the only power that can. The sovereign is the only power that can declare war; and on declaration of war, if Her Majesty sees fit, she can claim the position of generalissimo. So, the authority in this matter lies in the Crown. The government, the Crown, has perfect authority, without any Act of Parliament, to create any position in the army.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who exercises these prerogatives in Canada?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I take it that the Governor General, being Her Majesty's deputy here, is in the same position as Her Majesty, as far as that is concerned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser, Guysborough) is wrong. He can only exercise such powers as are expressly designated.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I take it the Governor General has the power.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. COCHRANE. What do you want the Act at all for?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). We have the Militia Act; we have separate independent power, so far as that is concerned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, the hon. gentleman does not want the Bill at all. He objects to it in the strongest way.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Not at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Understand—I object to the use made of this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the Bill is intended to cover what the minister said it is, to appoint private citizens colonels—

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I rose for the purpose of saying that I trusted that the government would be exceedingly conservative in making such an appointment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I made the statement, and I make it now, that distinction of that kind should only be given to those who have fought and those who have the training. I stated specifically that I trusted that this government, or any government, would be exceedingly conservative in these appointments, and if my views prevailed, there would be none at all appointed. But, I feel satisfied that, so far as the inherent power is concerned, the power of making these appointments is in the Governor General.

Mr. HAGGART. Some time ago I asked the Minister of Militia under what authority he appointed honorary lieutenant-colonels, and I said that an honorary lieutenant was something I had never heard of before. I understood, and I understand now that, under the Militia Act, a person may be placed on the retired list with an honorary advance in title or promotion.

Mr. DOMVILLE. No.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) will read the Act, he will probably not be so ready to interrupt. It says :

Officers holding commissions in the militia, may be placed on the retired list with honorary rank, not exceeding that of lieutenant-colonel, or without honorary rank according to and under regulations approved by the Governor in Council; and Her Majesty may appoint officers from the retired list to commissions in the militia; but no officer from the retired list shall be bound to serve in the militia in a lower grade than that of the rank with which he retired.

I asked the minister by what authority he appointed honorary lieutenant-colonels.

Mr. DAVIN. Honorary colonels.

Mr. HAGGART. No, honorary lieutenant-colonels—that is what he called them. I asked further whether in granting the commissions, the title given was left lieutenant-colonel or colonel. I said it was a new thing to grant the title of honorary lieutenant-colonel to such persons as the Prince of Wales. I said that the evident intention of the minister was to amend the Militia Act so as to give him power which he intended to exercise in the giving of these commissions. But he does not get the power under the Bill which he is introducing. In answer to me the hon. minister said that this was a small matter, a matter of not much importance. He puts me in mind of a conversation I had at one time with several distinguished gentlemen. I think the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) was at the meeting. The conversation turned on the subject of birthday honours, and one of the gentleman present, who was an officer, colonel, I believe, in the Bengal Native Infantry—I will give no names, for that would hardly do—described the excitement manifested in military circles in India when the Gazette comes out giving the birthday honours. He described a couple of gentlemen going over the Gazette and finding colonel this and colonel that knighted, while they asked one another, 'What has that fellow done that he should be knighted?' But, finding that they had been made Knights of St. Michael and St. George, they both chimed in at once, 'It served them right.' While there are exceptions to the rule, that seems to have been followed by the government, I think they have reduced this honorary colonel business to about the same level. When the thing has been made use of to make an honorary colonel of our bottle-nosed friend in the government, I think people will be inclined to say, 'It serves him right.' And then there is my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). I do not know what he has done particularly to have the title foisted on him; but, I have no doubt it served him right. I notice the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was very careful about taking his commission. It is dated September of last year, at which time he held the idea which he expressed, I think, in October, in the celebrated interview of the Globe, as to sending Canadian soldiers to South Africa. He had the opinion that the troops would not be sent to South Africa, and he evidently thought he would be perfectly safe in taking his commission. I would like to find out from the hon. minister what it is that he wants. Does he want to make honorary colonels? If so, this Bill does not confer on him the power. He had not power under the Militia Act to make honorary lieutenant-colonels of the gentlemen to whom he gave that title unless they were serving in the militia. I am not aware of any civilian ever getting the rank of honorary colonel in any of Her Majesty's regiments. That title is always reserved for some old officer or some foreign potentate. The appointment of honorary colonel in the militia is sometimes made. If a gentleman takes an active interest in the volunteers or the militia of his county, he is, perhaps, made honorary colonel of a militia regiment; but that never applies to the regular service. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, King's) intends to give the title to the people who are deserving it, I have no objection. For instance, it might be well that it should be given to gentlemen who have filled the position of Governor General of Canada, and who have taken an active interest in the militia of our country. It is quite right to give it to a gentleman like Lord Strathcona, who has taken such an interest in the military force of Canada and the empire as to raise a regiment for service. But, there is no power conferred under this Bill to appoint such gentlemen. If the hon. minister wants that power he should confine it as much as possible to those who have been in the active militia, and to those who are distinguished in the highest degree. It ought to be an honour instead of being made so common that when a party is appointed honorary colonel he will be apt to be pointed out on the street by people who will say 'It serves him right.'

Mr. DAVIN. May I ask the minister if he has pointed out yet under what authority he made these gentlemen honorary lieutenant-colonels, or honorary colonels? Is he of the opinion that he has power under the Act, and if so, would he point out under what clause?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I was about to refer to that point. I have already said that we believed we had the power under the Act to appoint honorary lieutenant-colonels. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the militia of this country is not only controlled by the Militia Act, and by the rules and regulations which we formulate from time to time, and which we have the authority to do under this Act, but it is also controlled by the Queen's regulations and the Army Act, in so far as we have no special regulations of our own conferring the authority. I take the view that under the Queen's regulations we had authority to do what we have done. But I felt this, that as we had no power under our own Act to confer the substantive rank of colonel except in the two cases prescribed or limited in the Act to which I have referred, that is, the case of the adjutant general, and the case of the quartermaster general, if we were going to confer an honorary rank under the Queen's regulations, or under our own regulations, we should extend our power and take power to appoint substantive colonels in our Militia Act. That is the position which I take, rightly or wrongly. I am not a lawyer, but I may say this—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the Minister of Militia and Defence is going away from that point. Has he consulted the Justice Department at all on that point?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did he consult the Justice Department as to whether his Bill was right without this legislation, in the appointments already made, and what was the opinion?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not able to lay that opinion on the Table of the House, and I cannot say if that opinion has been formulated in writing; but I know that my deputy has conferred with the Department of Justice on this point, with regard to this Bill. Now, as the question has been asked under what authority this action has been taken, it is under No. 56 of the regulations and orders of the militia of Canada, and I understand—I have not verified this view—but I understand that the general officer commanding practically copied this regulation from the Imperial regulations:

The appointment of one honorary colonel or lieutenant-colonel to each regiment of cavalry, brigade of field artillery, regiment of garrison artillery and battalion of infantry or rifles, will be approved under the following conditions:

(a) The appointment will be purely honorary, and will not confer any right to command.

(b) No expense to the public will be incurred thereby.

(c) The appointment of honorary colonel, or honorary lieutenant-colonel of a regiment or corps will, in future, be reserved for special cases. This distinction will be conferred only upon individuals who become eligible by reason of high standing in the state; by honourable and faithful service to the country of an exceptional nature, or by distinguishment in the field.

(d) Honorary colonels and honorary lieutenant-colonels will be exempt from the operation of paragraph 45, part I., regulations and orders for the militia, 1898.

(e) Official applications for this high distinction are not necessary.

That is the authority under which I have acted.

Mr. DAVIN. In England, who would sign the commission for such honorary colonels as he describes there?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Why, the Queen, I suppose.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The Secretary of State for War.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman, therefore, in order to have the power to do what he has done, would have to place himself precisely in the position that is described in England. Did he do that? Did he have the approval of Her Majesty?

Mr. HAGGART. Before the minister answers that, let me draw his attention to this fact, that if there are such rules and regulations, they are beyond the power that the statute gives him:

Officers holding commissions in the militia may be placed on the retired list with honorary rank not exceeding that of lieutenant-colonel, or without honorary rank, according to and under regulations approved by the Governor in Council. Where do you get authority beyond that clause?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will give the hon. gentleman the authority. The 82nd clause of the Militia Act says:

The active militia shall be subject to the regulations and orders for the army.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not going far enough. The hon.

gentleman should give us the Queen's regulations under which this is done. There has been an attempt to adopt, as he says, one of the Queen's regulations for the obvious reason that these regulations do not cover the case of this kind in Canada. I think if he consulted the Department of Justice or any of his colleagues who are learned in the law, they would tell him that one reason for introducing this Bill is to make valid the acts that he has done without authority. It is quite clear that our statute does not cover the ground, and the hon. gentleman seeing that, falls back upon this regulation. Now, this regulation gets no force whatever from the Queen's regulations; there is no regulation there that contemplates an order of that character in Canada by the officer commanding. The officer commanding here makes regulations only by virtue of the powers given him under our Act. In connection with many powers in the Army Act in England, of course, they have to exercise the Queen's authority and powers by the exercise of her prerogative. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) suggested that, perhaps, as a justification for these appointments. But any one who looks at the abstract of the letters patent and the instructions to the Governor General, will see that the delegation of this royal prerogative is limited to comparatively few subjects, but in no case is that prerogative delegated. I do not think myself, speaking from anything I have heard to-day, that the hon. gentleman had any authority to confer those appointments, and therefore, I assume that one of his chief reasons for obtaining the legislation now is to give him power in future.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister quotes the authority. The Act says:

The active militia shall be subject to the Queen's regulations and orders for the army; and every officer and man of the militia shall, from the time of being called out for active service—

And so on:

—be subject to the Army Act passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom.

But, it specially excepts any parts of that inconsistent with this Act, and it is inconsistent with this Act where there is a special clause in the Act which states in what manner officers shall be appointed to honorary rank. It says:

The Army Act passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom and of all other laws applicable to Her Majesty's troops in Canada and not inconsistent with this Act.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The hon. gentleman is utterly mistaken.

Mr. HAGGART. I am giving you the wording of the Act.

Mr. DOMVILLE. There is nothing in this Act that we should get excited over. The Militia Act of Canada, under the British North America Act, places everything in the hands of the Queen, and the Queen is represented here by the Governor General. It says:

The command in chief of the land and naval militia and of all military and naval forces of and in Canada is vested in the Queen, and shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally or by the Governor General as her representative.

Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Let us go on:

There shall be a Minister of Militia and Defence who shall be charged with and be responsible for the administration of militia affairs—
Then it goes on to say:

Mr. DAVIN. What is the clause the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) is reading?

Mr. DOMVILLE. Do not interrupt me; you are always interrupting somebody. It does not make any difference to you; you do not understand the question. I am quoting section 4, subsection 3, of the Militia Act:

The Governor General in Council shall, from time to time, make such orders as are necessary respecting the duties to be performed by the Minister of Militia and Defence.

The Governor General has the right to make regulations for the militia. They are the regulations that we have for the militia to-day. These regulations are got up by the department, they are passed by order in council, and they have been sanctioned by the Governor General. They become the law because he has the power to sanction them. The law itself is incomplete in every respect. If you undertook to run the militia of Canada under the Militia Act without the regulations and orders, you could not do it. These are clearly the regulations and must be. I do not think that anybody would controvert the fact that they are the law of the land, because, without them you cannot enlist a man, or pay a man, or form a camp, or do anything else. Now, the General Officer Commanding, I do not know who he was—the last one has got out of the country—brought these before council in order and the Governor in Council had a right to make them.

Mr. HAGGART. Well, then what does the hon. minister want the Bill for?

Mr. DOMVILLE. The Bill is not dealing with private individuals at all.

Mr. HAGGART. To prevent mistakes, I suppose.

Mr. COCHRANE. Would the hon. gentleman read the clause?

Mr. DOMVILLE. No, because you would not understand it either.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think you would either.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not think you would know what it meant.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) should not address an hon. member.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am replying to the hon. member (Mr. Cochrane).

Mr. MONTAGUE. You are ?

Mr. DOMVILLE. Yes, I have a right to reply.

Mr. COCHRANE. I feel very much humiliated at asking the hon. gentleman for information, because I see that he cannot give it.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am glad you are humiliated sometimes ; it is not very often you are humiliated. It is all right ; he is a pleasant gentleman. I think a great deal of the hon. gentleman. The Bill, as I read it, does not give the government power to create colonels of private individuals. I do not see it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Put on another pair of glasses.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know what else it is for.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Has my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) a different Bill from that which I have ? The Bill says :

45. Officers holding commissions as lieutenant-colonel in the militia may be transferred to the retired list with honorary rank not exceeding that of colonel, and officers now on the retired list holding commissions as lieutenant-colonel may be promoted to the rank of colonel, under regulations approved by the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It has been changed.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Here it is :

Officers holding commissions in the militia may be placed on the retired list with honorary rank not exceeding that of colonel, or without honorary rank according to and under regulations approved by the Governor in Council.

2. Officers from the retired list may be re-appointed to the active list or such other list as is from time to time authorized; but no officer so re-appointed shall be compelled to serve in a lower rank than that with which he retired.

That has nothing to do with people outside who are not in the militia.

Mr. HAGGART. Let us get through before six o'clock.

Mr. DOMVILLE. There is no hurry. You have been talking all session, and I want to take part in this myself. Well, if you want to pass the Bill, I will give way.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DOMVILLE. No, no ; I have not taken my seat. I am going on. I intended to have said nothing more except to point out that I believe in a great deal that has been said by the opposition as to selection. I am not always pleased with some of the selections that are made. Six o'clock.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I think, Sir, that we need a change of the Militia Act when such things as we have listened to can be lieutenant-colonels. I still hold that the clauses from 42 to 48, clearly show that the hon. Minister of Militia and the government have not the power to make the appointments they made.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I give the hon. minister notice that I am going to move the six months' hoist when we reach the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. KAULBACH. I will move that the Bill be recommitted when it comes to the third reading.

Bill reported.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 157) to incorporate the St. Lawrence and Terminal Steamship Company.—(Mr. McIsaac.)

Bill (No. 170) to amend the Act respecting the Merchants Bank of Halifax, and to change its name to the Royal Bank of Canada.—(Mr. Russell.)

CANADA NATIONAL RAILWAY AND TRANSPORT COMPANY.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved that the House resolve itself in committee on Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the Canada National Railway and Transport Company.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to draw attention to the fact that a clerical error has taken place in the printing of the Votes and Proceedings. Yesterday afternoon I gave notice of an amendment which I proposed to move when the House went into committee on this Bill. Through some oversight or clerical error the amendment has not been printed in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. SPEAKER. The clerk informs me that it is no fault of the hon. member (Mr. Clarke) so that the House can either proceed with Mr. Campbell's consent or the Bill can lie over.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have no notice of that motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman gave notice.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not our fault that the members of the House have not notice of it, and therefore we should not suffer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In that case the Bill will have to stand.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all.

Mr. CLARKE. It will not be seriously contended by any hon. gentleman I hope, that after I have complied with the rules of the House, I should be debarred from moving the amendment because of a clerical error.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself in committee on Bill.

(In Committee.)

Mr. CLARKE. I beg to move that the following clause be added to the Bill.

Her Majesty may, at any time, with the consent of parliament, on giving to the company one month's notice in writing, take over the undertaking, property, rights and franchises of the company.

The notice may be given by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the expiration of the period of notification the said undertaking, property, rights and franchises shall vest absolutely in Her Majesty.

Compensation to the company shall be fixed by the Exchequer Court upon information filed by the Attorney General of Canada, and shall be based upon the reasonable value of the undertaking, property and rights of the company at the time of the giving of the notice, but shall not include prospective values or prospective profits.

The court shall, from its valuation, deduct all subsidies or bonuses paid to the company under the authority of the parliament of Canada, and judgment for the balance of such valuation shall be entered against Her Majesty.

In so far as they are not inconsistent herewith, sections 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31 and 32 of the Expropriation Act, chapter 13 of the statutes of 1889, and sections 29 and 30 thereof as amended by an Act of the present session, shall apply to any action taken under this section.

The compensation adjudged shall stand in the stead of the said undertaking, property, rights and franchises; and any claim to or incumbrance upon such undertaking, property, rights and franchises shall, in so far as Her Majesty is concerned, be converted into a claim to such compensation money or a proportionate amount thereof, and shall be void as against Her Majesty, and as against the undertaking, property, rights and franchises vested in Her Majesty under the provisions of this section.

I may say that when this Bill was being considered by the Committee on Railways and Canals, it was pointed out that another set of incorporators were applying for a privilege similar to that which is being asked for under this Bill. These gentlemen were somewhat later in applying for incorporation than the gentlemen who are asking for this Bill, and an effort was made by the committee to get the interests to unite and to have a Bill passed with the approbation of both parties. The gentlemen who are seeking incorporation under the Bill now being considered, refused to make any concessions that would be satisfactory to the other parties. I may say in this connection that the other parties are gentlemen who have been largely identified with the transportation question, and who have been making efforts for the past year or two, to obtain a satisfactory solution of that question; and they have memorialized the government of Canada on more than one occasion, drawing attention to the possibility and the utility of adopting the Toronto and Collingwood route as one of the transportation routes of the country. They sent a deputation last year to wait upon the right hon. Prime Minister; they laid the case before him; and they reported that he was very favourably impressed with it, and promised to bring the matter before his colleagues. They have also interviewed the Minister of Public Works, and that gentleman has spoken time and again in the most approving manner of the scheme. It is plain to those who are in a position to judge, that if a properly constructed railway were built between Collingwood and Toronto, when the work of deepening the harbours at both of those places is completed, a very large portion of the traffic that now finds its way by the upper lakes to Buffalo, would come by Collingwood and Toronto, and thence through the St. Lawrence canals to Montreal and Quebec. The gentlemen who have been seeking incorporation under the other Bill, have given a great deal of time and attention to the project, and have spent considerable money in making surveys and other preparations; but their notices were not given in time, and their Bill did not reach the House as soon as this Bill. These gentlemen have been prompted to ask for incorporation for the construction of this railway, because they feared that the recommendations they made to the government had not impressed the government as being sufficiently important to justify the government in building this road themselves. They have striven to present, in the most forcible way they could, the advantages that would accrue to the country, especially to the city of Toronto and the province of Ontario, from the construction and operation of this railway by the government; but failing in impressing the government with the necessity of building the road, as a government work, they have made application for this Act of incorporation; and failing to make a reasonable arrangement with the gentlemen who are named as the promoters of the Bill under consideration, they have agreed to a clause being inserted in their Bill when it reaches the committee stage, that the government shall be permitted to take over the road if the necessities of the country demand that that shall be done. I may say that before the Bill now under consideration passed the committee, the committee had the same assurance from the gentleman who is the sponsor for this Bill, the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell). He agreed also to accept the proposition that under certain conditions the government of Canada might take over and operate the road, and he went so far as to prepare a clause with that object, which was presented for consideration to the committee yesterday morning. The committee, however, in its wisdom, decided to report the Bill without that clause. Several draft clauses were submitted to the committee by different members; and at the request of the committee, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), agreed to draft a clause embodying the views held by those who thought provision should be made for government operation of this road. Neither clause, however, was entertained by the committee yesterday, and the committee decided to report the Bill without either of them. I have, therefore, given notice of the clause which I propose to have added as clause 13. It differs slightly from the clause prepared by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, because it provides that the consent of parliament shall first be obtained before the government can take over the road. It is claimed that this is an exceptional condition to impose upon gentlemen seeking incorporation—that a clause similar to this does not appear in any other railway Bill which has passed this House for many years. Admitting that to be the fact, I think it will be agreed by those who have given the question of transportation, by this route, any earnest consideration, that this is an exceptional Bill; that the territory between Toronto and Collingwood, some seventy miles, is the natural portage between the upper lakes and Lake Ontario, that the facilities for building and properly equipping a road between those two points are limited; and that if a road is constructed and aided by the government of Canada, and the government of the province of Ontario, that road should have embodied in its charter the special condition embodied in the clause which I have moved. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee at any great length. I need not point out the advantages which, it is claimed by the business men of the city of Toronto and the province of Ontario, will accrue to this province, and to the people of the Dominion generally, by the adoption of this route. It is known to most hon. members that it is some 300 miles shorter than the all-water route by the Welland Canal, therefore, a saving of 600 miles would be effected on the round trip; and it is held that the economic advantages in the matter of transportation are so great, that this Collingwood-Toronto line ought to be built and operated as a government work; and in the event of the government failing to undertake it, if a franchise is given to a private corporation to do so, that franchise ought to be surrounded with the most stringent conditions. Objection has been taken, in the Railway Committee, to this clause, that it would have the effect of preventing the flotation of bonds and the making of the necessary financial arrangements. I do not know whether that is the case or not; but the amendment which I have suggested has been submitted to the solicitor who is acting for the members of the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, who are asking for a Bill similar to this, and he has authorized me to say that his clients are prepared to accept a clause similar to this one, or to the one which was drafted and given notice of by the hon. member for Kent, if the Bill which they have before parliament receives our approval. I have no desire to take up the time of the committee or attempt in any way to prevent a decision being reached upon the merits of this clause. But, I emphasize the fact that the situation, so far as this road is concerned, is unique; that those who are asking for this charter are not asking for a charter under ordinary circumstances or conditions, but for a charter to establish a link between the great waterways from Lake Superior to the St. Lawrence, and under these circumstances it is the duty of parliament to place every safeguard around this charter, so that if it should be found that the road is not being operated in the public interest by the gentlemen who are asking for the privileges contained in this Bill, it may be taken over and operated by the public in the public interest. I may say that the feeling in the west, and especially in the city of Toronto, has been for many years very strongly in favour of the construction either of a canal or of a railway as a part of the great national route from the west to the seaboard, and charters have been given again and again for the construction either of a canal or a railway. But the depth of water at Toronto as well as at Collingwood, has rendered it impossible for the gentlemen who have those charters to construct a road under those conditions. But, now that the government have undertaken to deepen Collingwood harbour and Toronto harbour, this link becomes of very great importance; and it is for that reason I venture to submit we are justified in asking parliament to hedge around this franchise with more stringent provisions and restrictions than are usually found in a Bill of this kind. In view of the fact that the Bill was passed by the committee very largely upon the assurance that this clause, or a similar one, authorizing the government to take over the road, would be inserted, I think I have good ground for asking that this committee shall concur in the amendment I have proposed, and that this clause shall be added to the Bill.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL (Kent). Those members of the House who have been attending the meetings of the Railway Committee and have followed the discussions that there took place on this Bill, know very well the thorough discussion it received in this committee. I venture to say that there has not been a Bill introduced in this House in the last twenty years that has been more bitterly opposed than the one now before the House. No less than five whole days were taken up in its discussion, and it is most singular that the obstruction—if I may use that word—was headed and led by the members from the great city of Toronto. It is singular that the members from that city—a city that, above all cities in this country, demands the construction of this railway and will benefit by it—it is singular that after five long days have been spent in thoroughly discussing this question, and in which this very resolution was voted down, they should again attempt to delay the passage of the Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that this clause was voted down to the Railway Committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly it was.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was voted down when the committee voted that the Bill should be reported without amendment. I am surprised that the members from the great city of Toronto, should offer the most bitter opposition to this measure. One member from that city declared that the Bill was not worth the paper on which it was written. Another member from that city led the opposition to the Bill in the committee, and now leads the opposition to the Bill in the House. Let me say that the gentlemen who are asking for this charter are men of undoubted standing and wealth in this country and the United States. So far as their financial ability is concerned, they are quite able to go on with the work, and are of as good standing as the gentlemen who are asking for the other Bill. After the very thorough discussion this Bill has received in the Railway Committee, I want to see it passed and do not intend to delay the House any longer, and I certainly hope that this committee will not further delay the passage of this Bill and that to-night we will give it its third reading.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I do not think that the hon. gentleman was strictly accurate in saying that this clause was voted down in the committee. The amendment was moved in the committee, but it did not come to a vote. The motion of the hon. member for Hamilton was that the Bill be reported without amendment.

Mr. WOOD. Is not that tantamount to killing the amendment?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose in a sense that was really a vote against this clause, but the clause itself was not put to the vote. I think that there is a very great deal in the position taken by my hon. friend from West Toronto, and this much is certain. The hon. member for Kent assumes a spirit of bitterness towards those who are opposing the Bill, that is not conducive to getting it through any more quickly than he would under ordinary circumstances. It is quite true that a very bitter fight has been made on the Bill. But why? It has not been made out of any hostility to the hon. gentleman or to those connected with it. So far as I am concerned, I do not doubt the ability of the gentlemen associated with the hon. member for Kent to go on and construct the road, but the hon. gentleman knows that very strong opposition has come from the city of Toronto to it. He knows that the opposition made by the two members for West Toronto and the other members for Toronto has not been a factious opposition. He knows that they were simply voicing the sentiment of a very great part of the largest, strongest and best capitalists in the city.

Mr. WOOD. Not at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think that my hon. friend can dispute that statement. We have had practically the opinion of the Board of Trade of Toronto. The hon. gentleman, it is true, has a resolution of the Board of Trade of Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. At least of the City Council of Toronto, but that resolution does not say a word about the hon. gentleman's Bill. What it does do is to favour some Bill which will do what either of these two measures now before parliament contemplate. It favours the principle of the construction of a road as part of a great national highway from the prairies of the west down to the St. Lawrence River, but makes no special reference to the hon. gentleman's Bill any more than to the Bill of the hon. member for Kingston, so that to say that it is a resolution in favour of the Bill of my hon. friend from Kent is far very wide of the mark indeed. Now, what is the difference? What is the difference? The only difference between the two contending factions is this—the gentlemen represented at the committee by Mr. Watson and the gentlemen for whose side the member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) and his colleagues had been contending, contend that when that great link in the national highway is to be constructed, it shall be constructed with the greatest possible safeguard to the public interest; in other words, that the public interest shall be served rather than any private interest. Now, I do not attach blame to hon. gentlemen in this House or out of it who desire to go on and develop private enterprises, who take a certain amount of risk—who take, sometimes, very grave risk—and who ask that some protection shall be given in regard to their expenditure if their work is to be afterwards taken over by the government, but the position is this—we have the gentlemen supporting the Bill of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) who say to parliament practically, these words: Put into the Bill of the hon. member for Kingston under which we seek to get an entity any clause you like—

Mr. WOOD. Too liberal altogether.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend (Mr. Wood) must not judge of the motives of other people, but must take the offer as it is made. They say: Put into this Bill any clause you like that will protect the public interest, that will have the effect of enabling the government at any time to take this railway over as part of the government system of transportation, and we will accept the Bill. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), when that suggestion was made to those promoting the other Bill, said: I will do the same thing. But when we came to vote on the question, the hon. member for Kent voted against his own resolution and refused to accept the very amendment which he himself proposes;—because, if we in the committee voted down the amendment that has been moved by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) we also voted down the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Kent, and consequently the hon. member for Kent voted against the very amendment which he said he was willing to accept and which he proposed to have put in the Bill as an additional safeguard to the public interest. For my part, I am agreed pretty well with many of the suggestions that are made as to a certain amount of uselessness attaching to certain of these amendments; I do not know that they can be worked out to serve the purpose intended by those who move them. But this much is certain—they cannot possibly do any harm to the public, and it is possible they may serve the public interest in a very important respect at a very critical moment in the future. And, if such is the case, it is my opinion that it is the duty of parliament, especially after the offer of the hon. member for Kent, to put one of these amendments in, and more especially after his promise to put one of them in, on which, it is asserted—I was not present at the meeting of the committee and cannot state it as a fact, but it is asserted—a number of members in the committee voted to adopt the general principle of the Bill.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). One point I wish to call attention to, and that is that no matter what may be the willingness of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) to accept any proposed amendment, the representatives of the people generally have something to say as to whether that should be accepted by the committee or not.

Believing, as I do, that this amendment is wrong in principle I shall not support it. I desire to call the attention of the committee to another point, which may be urged at greater length if this passes the committee and the matter comes before the House—that is, that the resolution is out of order, because it practically interferes with the privilege of the Governor General to recommend all legislation that directly or indirectly controls the expenditure of public money. I shall not elaborate the point; I rise to give notice that it may be raised at a later stage.

Mr. DAVIN. What part of the resolution is the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) referring to?

Mr. FLINT. The whole of it. That resolution commits the parliament of Canada irrevocably to the purchase of that road at any time that the government sees fit to make that purchase; and, without further appeal to parliament, it gives the government the credit of parliament for the appropriation of as much money as may be necessary to purchase the road. I shall call attention to the decisions and authorities upon the point which strongly support the view that neither directly or indirectly can private members commit the credit of the Crown without the consent of the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Having reference first to the remarks of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), I must say that I cannot agree with the view that he has suggested as to the constitutional or legal effect of the words that are contained in the amendment. I do not think that the original amendment as it was drawn by me at the request of the members of the committee, without the words which have been inserted by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) who moves it, would have the effect which my hon. friend (Mr. Flint) fears. I think that the most that could be said with regard to the legal or constitutional effect of the clause is that it operates as a binding obligation upon the company which accepts the charter, but it in no sense involves the conferring of power upon the government of the day at any future time to exercise the authority to purchase. The only effect would be to impose upon the company that takes this charter the conditions contained in the clause.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It compels them to accept.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It closes the mouth of the company from saying that the conditions which are embodied in that clause are not operative against them in the event of parliament at a future time authorizing the government to take the expropriation steps which are referred to in it. So, I do not believe in the reality of the difficulty that has been mentioned by my hon. friend from Yarmouth. But I must say, however, that having been present at several meetings of the committee during which this Bill was discussed, I have felt, and I still feel, that it has evoked an amount of discussion altogether out of proportion to the importance of the Bill itself. I do not think—of course it is a matter of judgment in which others may differ from me—that the time will ever come when it will be the opinion of the government or the parliament of this country that a railroad constructed across from Collingwood to Toronto will be able to secure traffic from the west which cannot be secured and cannot be carried by the natural water route which we have under existing conditions. I do not believe that that time will ever come, and I pointed out to the committee during the time these Bills have been discussed, the reasons why I felt that that time would not arrive. The hon. gentlemen who are promoting this Bill, and those who are promoting another Bill that I imagine will be under the discussion of parliament before the close of the session, seem to be impressed with the idea that there will be a failure of our canal system, that the route by water from Fort William, Duluth, Chicago, and those points, will fail; and that it would be to the advantage of the country that we should expend, either through a corporate body or as a government work, an enormous amount of money to construct these forty miles of railway across that peninsula, and that we will thereby secure a traffic which will otherwise find its outlet through foreign ports. I cannot think that this result will ever happen. If you will look for a moment at the question of cost alone you will see that, judging from all past experience, it is only 375 additional miles of water route to be traversed.

Mr. CLARKE. The shortened distance is more than 300 miles each way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am speaking of the actual distance between the points where you would defect in order to take Collingwood, and where you would again reach the common point at Toronto. The difference in distance is 375 miles. I grant it is 375 miles shorter by the Collingwood and Toronto route than it would be by the waterway and by the Welland. But, hon. gentlemen on all sides admit that it would cost seven millions of money to build the railway in question, and to equip the harbour in order that this transfer may take place. Now, you would have to be able to carry grain as cheap or cheaper by that route than you would by the existing water route in order to make it of equal advantage with the water route, and I will show you why I arrive at the conclusion that this railway route cannot be cheaper or as cheap. In the first place, it is going to cost half a cent per bushel at the very least to make the necessary transfers, and it is going to cost half a cent per bushel upon 35,000,000 bushels in order to pay interest at 5 per cent upon the cost which will be entailed by the construction of that railway. You have, therefore, got one cent a bushel upon 35,000,000 bushels, and that is a greater quantity than that railway will ever carry.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman expect that it will stand at 35,000,000 in the future?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think this railway would not be capable of carrying 35,000,000 bushels, I am well satisfied it would not. That is my judgment as to the outside quantity; and if I am not correct, it will cost 1 cent a bushel more at least to transfer and carry that grain and to pay a moderate rate of interest upon the original cost of construction as compared with the water route. So, I cannot see for myself any reason why there should be such a strong desire in certain quarters, either to see that road constructed, or to see either of these Bills passed and the charters granted.

But, beyond that, it appears to me, coming down to this motion before the committee, that there are good reasons why the amendment as it stands ought not to be approved by parliament. I was present, as I have said, during many meetings of the committee when this subject was discussed, and during the discussion particularly, I think, in the fourth session of the committee, motions were made by two different gentlemen of the committee desiring to add a clause to the Bill imposing upon this company the obligation to accept expropriation by the government, and, at the same time, and as part of the expropriation principle, to deduct from the value of the road, as found by the tribunal appointed for the purpose, the amount which the Dominion government might give by way of subsidy in aid of the undertaking. Two different amendments were moved, and neither of them appeared to me to express in proper form the ideas which those who moved this motion desired to see embodied in the Bill. I pointed out what I thought were objections to them, and I was requested by members of the committee to draft clauses embodying the ideas which were in the minds of the gentlemen who moved those amendments. I consented to do so, but I did not thereby, as I said at the time, commit myself in favour of the principle, but was merely preparing amendments at the request of these gentlemen, if they desired to move them. An amendment was drafted by me, and among the clauses of the amendment was one which provides that out of the value, as it should be ascertained by the Exchequer Court, is to be deducted the amount, if any, which the parliament of Canada may have given by way of subsidy in aid of the undertaking. I pointed out to the committee in reading the resolution that I had framed, that I felt it would have a very serious effect in respect of financing the undertaking. I thought it would prejudice it very much, and I did not favour the idea myself. Therefore, I was not, and am not prepared to-night to vote for that clause. There would be no objection, I think, to incorporating the rest of the amendment as moved by the hon. gentleman. I do not think it would do any harm to do so. If the views I have expressed should prove ultimately to be erroneous, and it should turn out there were good reasons to expect this undertaking would prove useful and profitable, then it might be well that there should be conditions attached to the granting of the charter now, so that if the government in future desired at any time to expropriate the property they could do so upon conditions which would not ordinarily apply in expropriation proceedings. I do not think it would be wise legislation for us to include clauses which provide for the deduction of the value of the amount which the government might give in bonuses. The effect might be to reduce the amount which would be going to the bondholders, perhaps even below the amount which the bondholders might be entitled to. It may be said that is a risk the company would have to take, and so they would, but would the charter be of any value if what I have pointed out as likely to occur should occur, and if that should be anticipated by the men who are likely to undertake the enterprise? You will see there is good reason why those who are anxious themselves to see this work go on, who have faith in its prospects, should hesitate before accepting a charter or before asking any other company to accept a charter which contained a clause of this description.

I will add just one word. It has been pointed out that the hon. member for Kent, Ont., (Mr. Campbell) who is promoting this Bill, promised, when the matter was under consideration of the committee, that he would accept a clause of this character. I think he did say so; but I think it is only fair to the hon. gentleman to recognize that, not being versed in the law himself, and not knowing what the effect of any such assurance might be, he could not fairly be expected to stand to any such statement, particularly when he afterwards informed the committee that he could not do so. I think he put himself in a very fair position before the committee, and believing, at all events, that that portion of the amendment is likely to prejudice the Bill, I, as a member of this committee, could not vote in favour of the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Chairman, I would be very sorry to see the principle embodied in the amendment which I have presented.

defeated here to-night. After listening to what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has said, with the permission of the committee, I would be prepared to strike out the subsection dealing with bonuses that may be given by the Dominion parliament or by the legislature of the province of Ontario. It is due to myself and to the committee to state that after I took my seat I received a message from Mr. Watson's firm. I wrote to Mr. Watson yesterday telling him the action the committee had taken, and Mr. Watson advised me by telegraph, or his firm did, that, of course, if the committee will not impose on the gentlemen who are seeking incorporation, the same provisions which are contained in the amendment submitted by me, they would expect to be relieved from similar conditions when their Bill comes before the committee. I am perfectly satisfied that the gentlemen who are anxious to have this road constructed would be prepared to accept the amendment with the clause which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has taken exception to stricken out. I desire to offer the most emphatic protest against the statement which has been made here to-night and made two or three times previously without any cause, by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), as to our offering opposition and obstruction to this Bill. There has been nothing further from our views or desires. The hon. gentleman has never taken any interest, so far as the public are aware, in the matter of securing the construction of a short line between the Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario until within the past few months, and it does not become him, or any other gentleman to say that the members from the city of Toronto are obstructing this Bill, when, as a matter of fact, they are endeavouring to present the views and sustain the hands of the leading merchants and business men of Toronto who have been struggling for two or three years to bring before the attention of the public the importance of the Georgian Bay route, and the necessity for having a short line constructed to join the city of Toronto with the town of Collingwood. I just want to say two or three words more as to the views which the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), entertained and expressed in respect to this matter. I find in a speech delivered by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) in the House in 1899, that he quoted from an address delivered by the hon. Minister of Public Works at the Monument National in Montreal in the previous year, in which the hon. minister was dealing with the best way of solving this transportation problem. The hon. gentleman is reported to have said then that:

Negotiations were going on between the government and the Grand Trunk for a route between Collingwood and Toronto, so as to bring the upper lakes in direct communication over the Grand Trunk Railway with the Intercolonial Railway and the maritime seaboard. The Minister of Public Works says that he would recommend the future deepening of the Toronto and Collingwood harbours if the Grand Trunk, instead of carrying its trade to Portland, would take it to Montreal and deliver it to the ocean steamers in the summer.

The hon. Minister of Public Works two years ago was impressed with the importance of shortening the route from the west to the seaboard and he evidently placed some value on the Toronto-Collingwood route as one desirable to be constructed. I find also in the same speech delivered by the hon. member for Pontiac, in 1899, that he quoted a letter which the hon. Minister of Public Works had written to the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Liverpool in which these words were used :

The Toronto Board of Trade and a great many far-seeing public men believe that the construction by the government of a railway connecting Collingwood with Toronto would shorten the distance between the great lakes and the St. Lawrence route, and thereby develop a very large traffic.

I wish to place these views, held by the hon. Minister of Public Works two years ago, in respect to the importance of the Toronto-Collingwood route, before the committee, that it may realize that the charter which is being asked for by the hon. member for Kent is not an ordinary railway charter, but is a charter to construct a railway over the neck of land which is the missing link at the present time in what we believe to be the best and most direct, and which will be the cheapest route and means of communication from the North-west to the seaboard. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that it would be impossible to compete with the all-water route when the deepened canals are opened for traffic. But the fact remains that during the past two or three years a large volume of grain has been hauled hundreds of miles through Ontario from the Georgian Bay to Montreal in competition with the Welland and other canals. I am satisfied that if the committee were seized of all the facts in connection with the advantages which would be obtained by the construction of this route, they would see to it that the reasonable safeguard which we are prepared to accept is placed in this Bill. I would be prepared to strike out the clause to which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has taken exception respecting the return of bonuses that have been paid by the Ontario and Dominion governments to assist in the construction of the road.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. CLARKE. If the committee will permit me to strike out clause 4, the one to which the minister has taken exception, and vote on the other clauses, I will be prepared to strike out that clause.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It must be with the unanimous consent of the committee.

Amendment (Mr. Clarke) negatived.

Mr. DAVIN. Before you report the Bill I would say that I consider that a very unreasonable spirit has been manifested by the gentlemen who are promoting this Bill, and especially by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell). The hon. member for Kent intimated in the committee that he would put into the Bill a clause that would enable the government at any future time, should it desire to do so, to lay hold of the work.

Mr. WOOD. The committee voted it down.

Mr. DAVIN. On that condition—many members—and if there was only one member it is enough—many members supported it. The hon. gentleman from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) thinks he is making a point when he says that the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), could not bind the committee or bind this House. I grant that the committee as a whole was free to say it would have nothing to do with such a clause. But there was one member of the committee who was not free to take that course, and that was the gentleman who had declared that if the committee would support his Bill, when the time came, he would be ready to adopt such a clause.

Mr. WOOD. He never accepted the clause which was presented.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, Sir, one of the views that was presented to the committee and that I would like to present to the Committee of the Whole House is, that here is a national undertaking, and a minister of the Crown (Mr. Blair) was one of the members of that committee who declared that because it was a great national undertaking that, therefore, the nation should have the safeguard of such a clause as this. For my part, I consider that it amounts to almost a breach of faith on the part of the member for Kent, not to put in the clause that he agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 171) respecting the Central Vermont Railway Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

THE BANK ACT AMENDMENT.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 163) to amend the Bank Act.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This Bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

as the House will remember. We had a very large meeting, and it was carefully considered and gone over, and I think I am safe in stating that the Bill in its present state is likely to meet with the general approval of the committee. An hon. gentleman opposite desired to move one particular amendment, and I assured him that the third reading of the Bill would be postponed to enable him to do so, if on deliberation he wished to move the amendment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picou). Was it suggested in the committee that where a clause was amended, the whole clause should be struck out and re-enacted; a course which is very wisely followed in some of the government Bills. If this be done, instead of having to turn up the old Act and the new one, you have in the amended Act, the law, as it is.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no doubt that is the better form, and the point was raised in committee, and in most cases that very excellent rule has been adopted. The amendments in some cases were so slight that it was not thought necessary to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I raised that point, and I still think that whether the amendment is slight or not, we should re-enact the full section in an important Bill of this kind, so that any person looking at the Act will know exactly what the law is without having to turn up the statute. However, the changes in this case are very slight.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A change was made in this clause. The clause as it stands now provides that where a bank has suspended, it shall not be at liberty to issue notes during its period of suspension. The point was taken that a bank might resume business nominally, proceed to issue its notes, and suspend again, and thus defeat the purposes of the clause. To prevent that possible case, we have inserted the following amendment:

If, after any such suspension, the bank shall resume business without the consent in writing of the curator hereinafter provided for, it shall not issue or re-issue any of such notes until authorized by the Treasury Board so to do.

On section 15,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is that the same as before, or has it been recast?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A change has been made to enable the bank to take security for liability as well as for money actually paid.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a very important section of the Act, and is constantly referred to in business and in the courts, and I should have thought that that was one which might well have been drafted in the way suggested, so as to make it complete.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman will find that section 15 really explains itself. I think the intention is apparent on the surface.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman knew how often these apparently simple matters are discussed over and over again in connection with mercantile transactions, he would appreciate the difficulty that suggests itself to my mind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the point is of real importance, I shall have the clause recast; but otherwise I think it would be a pity to delay the Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My difficulty is not in understanding the action; but it is a nuisance in everyday life, to have to refer to these different Acts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, unless one re-enacts the whole measure, it would be necessary to read both Acts at any time to some extent; but I thought we had minimized the difficulty in this Act. At another session we may consolidate the several Acts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where changes in the law are made, I think the whole section should be re-enacted, for two reasons: First, you are less liable to make mistakes, and, secondly, it is much easier for reference. All the late books on drafting say that the section should be re-enacted. I think it would be an excellent idea to have all the banking Acts consolidated into one Act.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I would like to ask the hon. Finance Minister if his department has received any complaints from merchants with respect to defaced coin, a large amount of which is circulated and has become a great nuisance. Either it should be called in or something done to remedy the evil.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think we have any complaints recently on the subject. It is a thing that will always happen to some extent where you have a metallic currency.

Mr. INGRAM. In the city I represent, we have a large number of defaced coins which are becoming a public nuisance. Some people are willing to take them and others refuse them, and in many cases the banks do not like to refuse them. It is quite a common thing to receive a coin of which one-fourth has been taken off by some parties to be used for their profit. Something ought to be done to prevent this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall be glad to look into the matter. If the thing becomes a serious evil, the people have the remedy in their own hands, and that is to refuse to take it. I shall inquire if there is any thing in the situation which calls for action by the department.

Bill reported.

THE COPYRIGHT ACT.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher) moved second reading of Bill (No. 167), to amend the Copyright Act. He said: Perhaps before the motion passes, it would not be out of place if I should make a short statement as to what led up to the introduction of this measure. The copyright question is a very broad and complicated one, and I do not wish to raise the numerous points which might easily be developed. But this Bill aims at just one particular point in connection with the copyright law. Its object is to enable the publisher holding a copyright in Canada, and who has made a contract with the writer of a book, to be protected from the importation of the same book printed in other countries, including the other parts of the British Empire. At present an author who obtains a copyright in the United Kingdom has the right, under our law as well as under the Imperial Copyright Act, to have the book printed in the United Kingdom and copyrighted there, imported into Canada. It has become the practice of late years for authors to make a special arrangement with the publishers in Canada for the Canadian market. This is due to the increasing importance of the Canadian market for literary work, and to the enterprise of the Canadian publishers, who have shown themselves especially of late years, increasingly well able to issue editions of the works in Canada in very good style, on good paper, well printed and well bound, and in every way suitable to the demands of the public. At present in the United Kingdom, a work published in Canada, under Canadian copyright, cannot be imported into the United Kingdom when an Imperial copyright for the same work exists there. It, therefore, seems only fair that the same protection should be given our Canadian publishers under their contracts with writers as is given the Imperial publishers in the United Kingdom, and this Act is intended to give that protection to our publishers here and the authors who have made contracts with them. Demand for this has arisen from both sides of the business thus outlined. The Authors' Society both of Great Britain and of Canada, have asked for this amendment. The publishers of Canada have asked for this amendment. And, in addition to this, we have from the Toronto Board of Trade, the Manufacturers' Associations and the Printers' Association of Toronto, resolutions endorsing this amendment to our copyright law. It was only the other evening that the Royal Society of Canada, representing the writers and literary people of the country, passed a resolution in favour of this amendment, which they had before them for discussion, declaring that it was the interests of both parties to the agreement and in the interests of the United Kingdom and Canada. I do not wish to dwell upon disputed questions of our constitutional right to pass legislation of this kind. I think that there is no single public man in Canada who is prepared for a moment to question or doubt our constitutional right to legislate upon copyright questions. I make this motion to amend our copyright law with the full intention of asserting the right of parliament to pass this legislation, a right inherent in us under the British North America Act; and there is nothing in this Bill, and there is no intention in proposing this Bill, to derogate from that contention of our constitutional right, or in any way to minimize that right. And, in any future discussion which may arise as upon that phase of the question, I do not think that the passage of this Act can be cited as lessening our constitutional rights in copyright legislation. I do not wish to take up the time of the House. I would only say that I have under my hand a number of letters and copies of resolutions forwarded by the different organizations I have mentioned, and correspondence with the authors in England, and the Authors' Society here. I may say that Mr. Gilbert Parker, the well-known Canadian author, now resident in England, who is a member of the Society of Authors of the old country, with Mr. Herbert Thring, the secretary of the Society of Authors, visited this country last fall. They endorsed the principles contained in this Bill, and said we might feel assured that the Authors' Society, and the literary people of the United Kingdom, as well as the publishers, are thoroughly in accord with the proposals in this Bill. The reason of this, I think, is that, as our market in Canada for literary work is developing, the authors making arrangements with the publishers in the old country, have found that they could make more satisfactory financial arrangements, by making a contract with the publishers there for the other parts of the empire, and making a special contract with the Canadian publishers for the Canadian market. So they have found it to their interest to do this, and this Bill enables the Canadian publisher, having made such a contract, to retain for himself the market he has bargained for. Some people might say that this involves the question of monopoly for the Canadian publishers. But copyright involves necessarily, to a certain extent, the element of monopoly. It is a bargain by which certain individuals shall have the exclusive right of publishing certain works. A copyright would be of no value to the publisher otherwise, as there would be no security for any return as a result of a contract. In clauses of the Bill there is a sufficient safeguard erected for the public interest, so that the publishers who are getting the benefit of the provisions of this Bill, and are enabled by means of it to secure their rights in Canada, must serve the Canadian public sufficiently well, to secure the prohibition which would be brought about by the provisions of the Act; and if they do not serve the public here in a satisfactory manner, there are provisions in the Bill for the raising of the prohibition which the Act is intended to bring about. I do not know that it is necessary for me to proceed further in my explanation; but if there are questions to be asked in regard to the provisions of the Bill, I shall be glad to answer them before you leave the Chair. When the Act has received its second reading, which I trust it will without prolonged discussion, I propose to move that it be referred to a special committee, composed of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, Mr. Borden (Halifax), Mr. Fitzpatrick, Mr. Russell, and the mover.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was about to suggest the name of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Robertson), as a member of that committee, as he has taken great interest in the subject; but I am informed that he has gone to England.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved:

That the Bill be referred to a special committee composed of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, Mr. Borden (Halifax), Mr. Fitzpatrick, Mr. Russell and Mr. Fisher, with power to send for persons and papers.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), what information he can give with regard to the delayed report of Mr. Ogilvie, in connection with the Yukon district. It seems really an extraordinary thing that the department is unable to get any word from this gentleman to whom, I believe, the hon. acting minister sent a telegram on May 3, and that the hon. acting minister is unable to give the House any idea as to when that report will be brought down. I do not suppose that the hon. gentleman proposes to ask any supplies in connection with the Yukon district until we get that report. I would like him to state how that matter stands, and also, if he can, when I may expect a report and the papers in connection with the water-front questions which I mentioned last night?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As to the last question, I hope I shall be able to lay the papers on the Table at the next sitting of the House. As to the report of Mr. Ogilvie, a telegram was sent, as I informed the House, I think on the very day the subject was under discussion. I cannot account for the delay any more than the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) can. Surely we shall have an answer in a short time. Of course, despatch in these matters depends somewhat on the message catching the boat for Skagway, from which it is to be sent to Dawson. I do not think that report makes any material difference to the estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To meet expenses in connection with the superintendence of insurance $8,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). There is here an apparent increase in the vote, last year it being $8,000. But it is not really an increase, it is rather a vote in the interest of economy. There is a charge for printing which at present goes into the general account, and we propose to bring it as a special charge into the insurance department, and then we can reclaim the amount from the insurance companies upon whom we levy a tax for the support of that office. So, the increase of $500 will be repaid by the insurance companies.

Civil Government—Department of the Interior, including $2,400 to T. G. Rothwell and P. G. Keyes, $2,200 to G. U. Ryley, and $1,800 to J. White, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $102,524

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). I want to see if I can make an arrangement with the Minister of the Interior which would expedite the business of the evening in regard to one item about which I propose to raise a discussion, and that is the salary of Mr. Ryley. I want to know whether he will agree that that shall stand over. There is a proposal to increase Mr. G. U. Ryley's salary from $1,850 to $2,200. I would like Mr. Ryley to have an opportunity, through this notice, of knowing what I propose to say in regard to him, and for the purpose of raising the point. I would move that this salary be struck out altogether. I think it would be only fair to him that he should be in a position to meet what I have to say. I propose to discuss two memoranda that have been read in this House, on the score that they were not at all candid, that they were written in an improper spirit for an officer in the service of the government, that they show that he allowed himself to be used by the head of his department for the purpose of affecting a debate in this House, and that he suppressed in the first memorandum very material points in order that his minister might make a point against myself. I am speaking now of what occurred last session, of the memorandum which was read by the hon. gentleman, in which he deals with the observations I made as a member of the House of Commons, and which enabled his minister to make a misstatement to this House in order to contradict me. It is fair to him that he should have an opportunity to contribute to this discussion another memorandum.

I want to point out that, in connection with the statement that I made having reference to a return to this House touching the Philp leases and the means that Philp used in order to obtain dredging leases, he prepared a memorandum upon which his minister made a statement, that a return this session has shown to be absolutely incorrect, that is, that Philp had not obtained a lease at all. He suppressed in that memorandum the important consideration that although Mr. Philp, in many cases in the return to which I refer, did never obtain a lease, he had obtained what was tantamount to a lease by virtue of an arrangement that came into force for the first time under his supervision of the timber and mines department. That is what he calls an option. The acting minister has told me the date at which these so-called options were given. They were for all practical purposes leases, they are referred to time and again in the department as leases, they are negotiated as leases, they are as much leases. For instance, as in the case of the water front where no formal document was drawn up, still the party had all the rights and interests, and negotiated them. In the case of Philp, as the returns brought down this session show, he had the exclusive right of obtaining a formal lease covering various periods, extended from time to time from January 12, 1898, down until he offered to take the thing altogether for a fee of a considerable amount. He actually had leases, he had a hydraulic lease, and he had a dredging lease. I must be careful of what I say, because if, in speaking of these matters one makes a slip, he is liable to be branded in an unpleasant manner on the floor of the House, simply because some clerk will make a statement that is not complete and fair. Now, I can show by the returns brought down and by the correspondence in the department to which Mr. Ryley belongs, that there were these documents that are recorded as leases, that are sold and trafficked in as leases with the approval of the department, and Philp, one of the gentlemen who did the trafficking in them, walked off, for instance, with an option to Chicago and interested people in it; then, when he sells this option these leases are granted in form. Now, after all that comes up, this gentleman is not fit for the service, Mr. Ryley ought to be dismissed. He made a statement without any qualification whatever, a very serious statement used in debate, and which had an important effect on the minds of members of this House, namely, that I had made a mistake. I candidly admitted in debate that I had made a mistake, and endeavoured to show there was no bad faith on my part, because the return itself, through no fault of any one, was a bit misleading. It purported to be a return of the leases granted, and I did not watch the narrow column at the top where, in part of the document, it stated a number of miles leased, and then a blank. In going by that I did, according to that return, make a misstatement. He endeavoured to show it was a material misstatement, but it was sufficient for me to prove that one lease was granted, which would be the inducement to the charge that I then made. Then Mr. Philp went abroad and hawked options around, using the name of the minister. I am making a statement so that Mr. Ryley may have the advantage of it. Now, then, it became a very serious point if this man did anything which should bear upon the minds of all who took part in the debate that there was very little in the charge founded upon that introductory averment. Though no formal lease of these different properties had been issued to Philp, either in the name of Mitchell or of his wife, or in the names of others, still, he had the exclusive right to one, he had an exclusive option, he was using this exclusive option in a way leading up to a lease, so that a lease would be got as in certain cases leases were got, and if the House had known this it would not have been misled. Take the Parish case. The effect would have been very different in the minds of hon. members of the House if they had known of this statement. So that I say if I can make out, as I believe I can, from the returns that have come down to the House, that Mr. Ryley not only deceived parliament, but deceived his minister, that he, on the strength of a memorandum, made a positive statement to this House which is proved to be largely inaccurate by the returns of the department, that gentleman is not fit for the service. It is said by the hon. gentleman that we appointed him, that he was a Conservative, and all the rest of it. So far as I am concerned, I only knew him to be an officer of the very best standing in the department by repute. I never knew anything in regard to him that would warrant me in stating that he was making an unfair statement to prejudice any one. However, when this statement came down I accepted it myself at the time. I could not believe that there was anything kept back, but the return placed before this House put the matter in a very different position. That was an extraordinary use of any officer of the department. I do not believe that

Hansard or the records contain a case where a minister dragged in an officer, supporting him in a report like that in his criticism of a speech made in debate, in order to extricate himself from a difficult position before. But, this session, and I call the hon. acting minister's attention to it, another use was made of Mr. Ryley. A memorandum was prepared, the hon. acting minister made a statement upon it, and the accuracy of that memorandum I challenge. I say that the statement was unfair and misleading, and it is contradicted by sworn evidence in the possession of Mr. Ryley, as well as in the possession of this House. These are two statements made by this gentleman which are inaccurate and misleading. But, in connection with another aspect of his memorandum, to my certain knowledge another statement was inaccurate. I had some experience with the hon. Minister of the Interior and with Mr. Ryley, professionally. I went myself last session to the office where Mr. Ryley is in charge, and asked for certain information. I applied on behalf of a client for a lease of timber limits, and finding that there was an option covering these limits, I asked for information. I wanted to know who the parties were. The people that I represented were in such a hurry that they were perfectly willing to submit to buying limits, as others had to do, under the system by which people who have not put up any money, held options, and to my amazement and surprise this officer could not give me that information. He was in the position of the officers of the Klondike; these were secrets. I remonstrated for a moment with him, but he pointed out that he was only an officer of the department and, of course, I recognized that at once, and went to the minister. I said that I would go to the minister in order to obtain the information. I was referred to the minister by him in connection with the administration of this branch of his department, and I got from the minister the authority that alone enabled this gentleman to deal with me and give me that information. I got authority in writing from the Minister of the Interior, and it was not until this that I could obtain that information. Remembering that the hon. acting minister read over a statement where he represents the minister as having practically delegated the authority and discretion and as having handed over to this gentleman the administration in these matters. They were so troublesome, so numerous, and his time was so occupied that Mr. Ryley was the man who was dealing with these things, that Mr. Ryley was the supreme head of the timber and mines branch of the department. This is not consistent with the experience I had in that one case. I point to these three instances, and I propose to deal with this subject by a motion to reduce the vote by the amount asked for Mr. Ryley. Under these circumstances I think the hon. acting minister ought to agree to have that item stand tonight so that he can show Hansard to Mr. Ryley and have his explanation, whatever it may amount to when he brings this up again.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I do not think there can be any objection to allowing the item to stand at the request of the hon. gentleman, and under these circumstances, I do not think it is desirable that I should say anything in reply to the hon. gentleman at this time farther than this: I can hardly think it possible that a gentleman occupying the position that Mr. Ryley does, and which he has occupied for so many years in the department, and whose character is so high, would be guilty of bringing down what he thought to be in any way an improper report. I may say that I do not believe the department desires that any such conduct on the part of officers should be carried on. No department would be properly conducted unless it were done in the most business-like and frank way, so far as the officers of the department are concerned. I do not encourage, nor would I defend, any action on the part of any official of the department that was not perfectly straightforward in regard to these matters. I feel perfectly satisfied in my own mind, from what I have seen and heard of Mr. Ryley, that, in the transaction of the business of the branch of the department with which he is charged, no accusation of improper conduct could be made against him. He is one of the hardest working men in the service, and he is giving such great satisfaction, so far as my information goes, that I think my hon. friend will be able to see that he will give a very satisfactory answer to him in regard to the matters to which he has brought the attention of the committee.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No one would be more delighted than I if a satisfactory explanation will be given. Although I have a strong feeling on the subject, because I suffered myself from an official statement of that kind, I am not so blinded by resentment as not to be ready to make the most complete and the fullest withdrawal of any imputation against Mr. Ryley in this matter if he can satisfactorily explain it. I know nothing else against Mr. Ryley in any way, shape or form, but, according to the information before me, I think this is a very serious case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I believe it is the duty of every officer in the department to give full information and to defend the transactions of the department. While the ministers are responsible for what takes place they have to depend a great deal upon the ability and honesty of the officials of the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Does the whole item stand?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. DAVIN. I have not as strong a complaint to make against Mr. Rothwell as my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has against Mr. Ryley.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Surely the hon. gentleman will be satisfied to make it when we come to the item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The understanding is that so far as Mr. Ryley is concerned the item stands, otherwise we dispose of it.

Mr. DAVIN. The whole item with the exception of Mr. Ryley is before the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole item must be before the committee because it is one item.

The PRIME MINISTER. I understood that my hon. friend from Pictou was ready to allow the whole item to pass reserving the power to discuss Mr. Ryley.

Mr. FOSTER. You cannot do that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps not technically; but you can discuss the rest and leave Mr. Ryley's case over.

Mr. DAVIN. Very well then. I have not such a heavy charge to make against Mr. Rothwell as my hon. friend had against Mr. Ryley. But Mr. Rothwell in a letter which is published in the Auditor General's Report makes a statement,—and I believe he is a lawyer—for which there is not the least foundation; a statement which is altogether contrary to the fact. First, there was a misstatement made in a letter written by Mr. James A. Smart to the Auditor General. Mr. Smart made the statement that a letter had been written to me by an officer of the department with regard to a small amount connected with the Leader Company (Limited), of which I was the managing director, and he says I took no notice of it. The truth was that the moment I received the letter I at once wrote the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Rothwell the moment he saw this writes to the Auditor General and says, it is in consequence of a mistake of his that the deputy minister had fallen into the error. Mr. Rothwell says:

Ottawa, Nov. 9, 1898.

Dear Mr. McDougall,—My attention has been called to-day to an incorrect statement in the letter which the deputy minister wrote to you on the 8th October last, with regard to certain payments made to the 'Leader' Company (Limited) and to the 'Leader' Company for the printing of a volume of the North-west law reports. I may say that I am responsible for the error myself, as I prepared the letter referred to. It is stated in that letter that Mr. N. F. Davin, M.P., was advised on the 16th August last that the 'Leader' Company, of which Mr. Walter Scott is manager, had established that company's rights to be paid $259 for printing the volume referred to; that when the payment of $175 was made to the 'Leader' Company (Limited) no money was due to that company for printing, and that such payment of $175 should, therefore, be refunded. It was further stated that no reply to that letter had been received from Mr. Davin. This is the incorrect statement I refer to, as Mr. Davin replied promptly to the letter of the 16th August last by a letter dated 20th of that month, of which I inclose a copy for your information.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

T. G. ROTHWELL,

Acting D.M.I.

The Auditor General.

Mr. Rothwell here says:

Mr. Davin was advised on the 16th of August last that the 'Leader' Company, of which Mr. Walter Scott, is manager, had established that company's right to be paid $259 for printing the volume referred to.

Now, as a fact, Mr. Walter Scott or his 'company' did not establish anything of the sort, and there is no record of his establishing or being asked to establish anything of the sort. What happened was this. The old Leader Company (Limited), sold its business and good-will to Mr. Walter Scott, and subsequently agreed with him to stand in the shoes of the old Leader Company (Limited) in regard to the contract with the lieutenant-governor for the printing of the Supreme Court Reports, and Mr. Walter Scott agreed, (as he has admitted in his sworn evidence) to allow the lieutenant-governor $175. Mr. Walter Scott wrote to the managing director of that company subsequently—who happened to be a member of parliament—that the work had not come and that it might be pertinently asked why the work had not come and that the judges were asking for it. Mr. Walter Scott never gave the least notice that he did not intend to carry out his agreement until after the change of government had taken place, and then I suppose he thought that he could revise his contract with impunity and success. When the work was finished he sent in the work to the lieutenant-governor, with the bill for the full amount. The lieutenant-governor sends back, that that should not be paid unless credit is given for the $175. It is sent to Mr. Justice Richardson acting for the lieutenant-governor. Mr. Justice Richardson says that that shall not be paid unless the legal adviser declared that Mr. Walter Scott was entitled to the full amount. The legal adviser, Mr. Rimmer, who is now in the employ of the Department of the Interior, who was as legal adviser, an appointee of Mr. Sifton, and who was during the last election a very active opponent of mine, reported to the acting lieutenant-governor at that time as follows:

The following case, which is supported by facts, was placed before the legal adviser of the lieutenant-governor for his opinion. All reports of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories had been printed prior to Vol. 2, No. 1, by the 'Leader' Company (Limited), a company incorporated under the company's ordinance. On the 12th December, 1894, the lieutenant-governor made an advance to the 'Leader' Company (Limited) of $175 on account of printing the law reports for 1894, upon an express agreement by Mr. Davin, the then manager of the 'Leader' Company (Limited) to print the reports at the rate at which previous reports had been printed, and that at the time of payment it was expected that the reports would be ready to leave the hands of the reporter in a very short time, if they were not then complete. The reports for 1894 were afterwards ascertained by the reporter to be insufficient to comprise one volume, and that it became necessary to incorporate the reports for June term, 1895, thus necessarily causing delay in publication, the copy for the printer only leaving the reporter's hand about June, 1896. I am going to ask the right hon. gentleman's attention to this because there are circumstances connected with it that I will say that I do not think if he knew them he would countenance.

That in August, 1895, the 'Leader' Company (Limited) sold its plant and good-will to Mr. Scott, who has since carried on business under the style of 'The Leader' Company, but that prior to the printing of the reports the lieutenant-governor had no notice of the terms of the sale.

That the 'Leader' newspaper was before the sale and since has continued to be published from a building which now bears only the sign 'Leader,' 'the "Leader" immense circulation,' and the words 'The "Leader" Company' built into the front of the building. That by merely dropping the word 'Limited,' Mr. Scott does not identify himself from the company (limited), as the company did not adhere to the requirements of the ordinance with regard to the use of the word. In adhering to the old name and the old premises, Mr. Scott appears desirous of all the benefit which may accrue from the old connection.

In December, 1895, Mr. Hamilton, the court reporter, went to the 'Leader' office; and seeing Mr. Scott said, 'I suppose you will print the reports at the old rates,' or words to that effect. Mr. Scott offered to let him have quotations later in the day. Mr. Hamilton had no notice of the agreement between the 'Leader' Company (Limited) and Scott.

It is admitted by Scott that in December, 1895, he had an interview with Davin, who admitted the payment of $175, and suggested to Scott that since there was money in printing the reports Scott had better do the work, giving credit for $175, and thus maintain the connection. It is admitted also by Mr. Scott that he verbally assented to this; and that he made the tender of 14th December, 1895, with the intention of crediting the lieutenant-governor with $175.

The lieutenant-governor was informed by Mr. Davin verbally that the reports would be printed by Mr. Scott, he (Scott) giving credit for $175.

About July, 1896, in consequence of disagreement with Davin, Mr. Scott informed the latter that he would not print the reports in question, allowing credit of $175; but the lieutenant-governor was not so informed either by Scott or Davin.

The 'Leader' Company (Limited) has not been wound up, and Mr. Davin is still the manager thereof.

Upon this case, the legal adviser held the opinion that whether Mr. Scott entered into a sub-contract with the 'Leader' Company (Limited), through Mr. Davin as manager, or contracted direct with the lieutenant-governor, was not material. That in case of sub-contract he could only claim through the 'Leader' Company (Limited); and in case of separate contract, the facts pointed to the conclusion that the terms of the contract were not entirely stated in the tender, but they were partly verbal through Mr. Davin, who, for the purpose of announcing Mr. Scott's readiness to credit $175, was Mr. Scott's agent. That Mr. Davin's failure to communicate Scott's subsequent wish to withdraw from the arrangement did not bind the lieutenant-governor, whose agent Davin was not. That following the principle, Lake vs. Duke of Argyll, 6 Q.B., 477, it was a question of fact, which on the evidence might be found against Mr. Scott whether he, in carrying on business as the 'Leader' Company, and in signing his tender as manager of the 'Leader' Company, did not hold himself forth to the lieutenant-governor as being the then manager of the 'Leader' Company (Limited), and thus accept liability of the 'Leader' Company (Limited) to fulfil the subsisting contract entered into in 1894.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Richardson, then acting as administrator in the absence of the lieutenant-governor, was advised that, under the circumstances, Mr. Scott should be left to establish, if he thought proper, before the competent court, that his contract was entirely independent from that entered into by the 'Leader' Company (Limited), upon which $175 had already been paid, that payment of more than $84, the balance of the 'Leader' Company's account, after crediting $175, should not be offered.

On instructions from the administrator, the legal adviser tendered $84, which was refused; and he was informed that proceedings would at once be taken. He still retains, in accordance with instructions from the administrator, $85 on the amount paid him for purpose of tender, which sum will be available in the event of legal proceedings.

Now, although I have the papers, I am not going to trouble the committee, at least at present, with all of them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will my hon. friend permit me to ask: Is not this matter now a subject of inquiry before the Committee on Public Accounts, and if so, is it wise to have a discussion of it here?

Mr. DAVIN. I have a great grievance. There were two items. I cannot characterize the proceedings within this House, but in one of the newspapers my name is in a ruffianly manner connected with one of the items with which I had nothing whatever to do, which is perfectly regular and correct, but yet with which I had practically no connection. When a gentleman in this House who found, just as he did with regard to this item, he was driving himself against a snag, what happened? Ever so long a time has elapsed since there was a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, and there is no meeting called; but in regard to this item I think the inquiry was closed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not desire to raise the point of order, but I ask the hon. member to consider whether it is fair for him to continue discussing this question when it is before the committee?

Mr. DAVIN. How do I know that there is ever to be a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee again? I have the correspondence in this blue-book, and I want to put before the public at the earliest moment a complete refutation of the statements made by professional slanderers. Now, what happened?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I put it to the hon. gentleman, that it is quite impossible for the House to form any conception of what the facts are until they see the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee or the report of the committee based upon that evidence. At present we have no data at all to go upon.

Mr. DAVIN. I am perfectly in order. I am not going to refer to what has taken place in the committee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not the point of order that is being taken: but the hon. gentleman is being appealed to as to whether we can properly discuss the question which he is introducing now until the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee is submitted to the House.

Mr. DAVIN. If you do not discuss it now, you can discuss it at some future time. But just as I took the first opportunity to tender my testimony, and to ask to be sworn, although the man who was conducting the inquiry, as he stated, for the government would not call me, I want to take the first opportunity of putting the facts before the House and the country. I do not believe, if the Prime Minister knew what an abuse has taken place in this House, that he would sanction it. Now, subsequent to this, Mr. Walter Scott writes to the department, and he receives an answer from Mr. Smart, embodying this opinion of Mr. Rimmer, and saying that he would not pay it. Then, for some reason of which we have no means of judging, after Mr. Rimmer reports against it, and he, the Deputy Minister himself, in a reasoned and unwarrantable reply, refused to pay it, it is paid, and there is no evidence that there was any reference whatever to the Department of Justice. Now, Sir, what happened, as we have it here set out on the pages of the Auditor General's Report? The very moment I got a letter from Mr. Reginald Rimmer in August, as will be seen at the bottom of page H-63Q, I at once wrote:

Regina, N.W.T., August 20, 1898.

Sir.—Replying to your letter of the 16th August, 1898, I beg to say that the $175 referred to therein was advanced to the 'Leader' Company (Limited), on account of printing the reports of 1894. Nobody supposed any money was due to the 'Leader' Company (Limited), at that time, for, though the official reporter had the MSS.

ready, it had never been delivered and could not be delivered without direction; but the 'Leader' Company had the contract and was promised the MSS. immediately. In 1895, the 'Leader' Company (Limited), made an arrangement with Mr. Scott to print those reports and credit the lieutenant-governor's office with the $175. The lieutenant-governor's office had notice of this agreement. If, therefore, the $175 has been paid to Mr. Scott it has been improperly paid.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) NICH'S FLOOD DAVIN,
Man. Director, 'Leader' Company.

The Asst. Sec., Dept. of the Interior.

That letter was not before the Auditor General when he wrote me on October 9, 1898:

Audit Office, Ottawa, November 9, 1898.

Sir,—I beg to inclose herewith a copy of correspondence between this office and the Department of the Interior, with reference to certain payments made to the 'Leader' Company (Limited), and to the 'Leader' Company for printing law reports. Please make the refund of $175 without delay.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

I wrote the following letter in reply which appears on pages H-46 and 65:

Regina, N.W.T., November 5, 1898.

Sir.—Referring to your letter and inclosures I might well content myself with saying that the 'Leader' Company (Limited), will make no refund of $175; and the letter of Reginald Rimmer, one of your inclosures, might have suggested a doubt as to the propriety of the demand, Mr. Reginald Rimmer having been legal adviser to the lieutenant-governor. But, as in the letter of Mr. Smart, the material statements are quite incorrect, I think I will state facts which will be at once material and true. The 'Leader' Company (Limited), had a standing contract to print the Supreme Court reports at a certain figure. On the 11th of December, 1894, the lieutenant-governor sent, asking the managing director to see him. His Honour told that person that he intended to have the reports for 1894 published forthwith, and volunteered an advance of $175, and said the reporter would be directed to furnish the copy forthwith. In consequence the 'Leader' Company (Limited), kept its staff at a strength it would otherwise not have done, and this right on to August, 1895, when it disposed of its plant and business interests to Mr. Walter Scott.

In November, 1895, the 'Leader' Company (Limited), made a contract with Mr. Scott to print those reports and to allow the lieutenant-governor for the $175 advanced to that company. The managing director wrote the lieutenant-governor and his secretary, Mr. R. B. Gordon, that he had made this contract with Mr. Scott. In December, Mr. Hamilton, the official reporter, was instructed not to call for tenders, but to learn Mr. Scott's price. I made a point of asking Mr. Hamilton many months ago; I made a point of asking him to-day, and he re-asseverates that he did not call for tenders, and that what he was told was to ascertain the price, I suppose to see that no higher rates would be charged than the figure of the old company. That he had no authority to ask for tenders is proved by this, that no contract took place, that Mr. Scott seems never to have known of any contract except the one made between himself and the managing director for some seven months afterwards, that the late lieutenant-governor, who was in office at the time and for some years afterwards, and who would have direct knowledge of the facts, refused to pay his bill unless credit was given for the $175.

Some time towards the close of December, the managing director of the 'Leader' Company (Limited), had a conversation with Mr. Scott, in which the latter referred to the contract made between them, to the fact that Mr. Hamilton had asked for the price, but he (Scott) never indicated that he regarded it as asking for tenders, and he expressed a wish that the copy might come along.

On February 3, 1896, Mr. Scott wrote a letter to the managing director at Ottawa, referring to the arrangement made between them to print these reports, complaining that they had not yet come to the office, and suggesting that the managing director might ask 'pertinently why they are not printed.' In the summer of 1896, Mr. Scott having then received the copy, and having repudiated a written contract binding that 'Scott will in any event until after the next general election, and therefore until after the expiration of the balance of the said term of three years . . . support, with the paper he shall publish in Regina, and which shall be called the 'Leader,' to the best of his ability, Davin and the Conservative party generally, and will during that time give Davin full control of the first two editorial columns of said paper,' told the managing director of the 'Leader' Company (Limited), that he did not intend to abide by his contract to allow the credit of $175; but he gave no such reasons as appear in Mr. Smart's letter, but reasons which admitted the contract to allow the $175. On the face of the documents inclosed by you, it is quite evident that nobody ever heard of this supposed contract connected with the inquiry of Mr. Hamilton in December, 1895, until after there was a change of government; that Mr. Scott presented his bill for the full amount to the lieutenant-governor and payment was refused unless $175 was allowed, and, therefore, the supposed contract was repudiated by the only party who could make a contract; that no such contract would be acknowledged or regarded as having any foundation whatever was additionally shown by the fact that the legal adviser was told to offer Scott, and did offer him in legal tender, the balance of $85. The second paragraph of Mr. Smart's letter is incorrect. I inclose you a copy of my reply to the letter of the 16th of August. In the third paragraph of Mr. Smart's letter we are told that a decision had been come to that Mr. Scott was entitled to be paid $250. The statement made in the eighth paragraph, that Mr. Scott tendered, and that the tender was accepted, is not correct. The official reporter says it is not correct; the lieutenant-governor, who alone at that time had authority to make a contract, repudiated it in the most formal way; Mr. Scott seemed to have no knowledge of such a contract until the summer of 1896. In paragraph 10 we are told: 'It was therefore decided that no value whatever had been given at the time of payment, or was given after payment, to the 'Leader' Company (Limited), for the amount of $175.' This is not true. The value given by the 'Leader' Company (Limited), was to keep a staff under pay, which it would otherwise not have kept on, ready to do the work from the 12th of December right on until August, 1895, when it sold its property. The statement in the 11th paragraph has been shown cumulatively to be untrue. By the 12th paragraph it is assumed that no contracts whatever were or could be made by the corners of the written agreement. This is an absurdity on the face of it, and is contrary to fact; witness the agreement already described; witness dozens of arrangements in regard to subscribers, &c. I consider that the payment advised has been improperly made, and I think the following facts should have made Mr. Smart leave Mr. Scott to his proper remedy if he had a just claim, where it could have been thoroughly sifted. Mr. Scott is not merely the editor of the Liberal organ, but is the known and avowed distributor of patronage for Western Assiniboia.

Mr. P. McAra, jr., of Regina, is administering the estate of the 'Leader' Company (Limited), and there are ample funds uncollected to meet any claims against the company.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

N. F. DAVIN.

I do not intend to pursue this matter further at this time, because I think it is better to wait until we have the report of the committee. But the facts are now sufficiently before the right hon. the Prime Minister, and he will be able to judge whether a proper use has been made of the Committee of Public Accounts in regard to these matters.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). It seems to me that this is not a proper time to bring this matter forward and discuss it, for the reason that the case is still before the Public Accounts Committee. The hon. gentleman from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has treated us to a rehash of his own letter and some portions of the letter written as I understand, by Mr. Smart, to the Auditor General. That $175 should have been paid to the hon. gentleman without any work being done then or for several months afterwards appears to me a very strange way of doing business. I do not think that governments generally do business in that way. I understand from the letter the hon. gentleman quoted that the lieutenant-governor of the North-west Territories of that time sent for the manager of the Regina Leader. I suppose I am not at liberty to say what took place in the Public Accounts Committee, but I can refer to what I have seen in the newspapers. This letter to which I have referred says:

His Honour told that person that he intended to have the accounts of reports of 1894 published forthwith, and volunteers to advance $175.

As I understand the newspaper reports, they say the ex-lieutenant-governor of the North-west Territories, when placed on the stand, flatly denies that he sent for the manager of the Regina Leader Company.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, newspaper report is not correct, for the ex-lieutenant-governor did not flatly deny it.

Mr. DAVIS. According to the newspaper reports, the ex-lieutenant-governor said that he did not send to the managing director of the Leader Company to offer him this work, the managing director of the Leader Company came to him.

Mr. DAVIN. If this is to be gone into, I have here the sworn evidence of ex-Lieutenant Governor Mackintosh.

Mr. DAVIS. I think I have the floor.

Mr. DAVIN. I think I should be allowed to read the sworn evidence.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman—

Mr. DAVIN. I was not out of order.

Mr. DAVIS. I maintain that it would have been better to leave this question until all the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee had been taken and submitted to the House when we could discuss this question intelligently. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has seen fit to read a lot of statements that, so far as the House knows, have no foundation in fact. The House is not in a position to know whether he entered into a contract with Mr. Walter Scott for the completion of that work or not.

Mr. DAVIN. I have Mr. Scott's sworn evidence, in which he admits it.

Mr. DAVIS. The deputy minister states in the letter that there was no contract so far as he knew, that the work had been given to Mr. Scott after he had purchased this paper from the Leader Company and he was entitled to be paid. The $175 was paid to the managing director of the Leader Company the cheque endorsed by that hon. gentleman, and, I suppose, the money went to him, and no work had been done when he sold out to another party. There is no agreement produced to show that he entered into an agreement with any party to do the work. The hon. gentleman may talk of a verbal agreement made on the street corner. He has no written agreement that we know of. This is a dispute between this hon. gentleman and Mr. Walter Scott, and the time of the House should not be taken up with that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) entered into a contract with the lieutenant-governor to do certain work, and before any work was done, before a scratch of the pen was made, the lieutenant-governor handed him $175 of the public money; and the hon. gentleman takes that money, puts it in his pocket and sells out his paper to another party, who declares that he knows nothing about the payment made, that he had done the work and wanted to be paid for it. And the government, I suppose, has had to pay the party who did the work. I think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), in order to put himself right, should have handed back a cheque to the government for that money, and, if he had a grievance against Mr. Walter Scott, he could take the proper course to collect that $175 from Mr. Scott. In the meantime, this should be left until the evidence is all brought down. The hon. gentleman has made what he calls a clear statement; but the House will not accept that statement, and the hon. gentleman will find that after the committee reports he will have to go into the evidence.

If he can clear his skirts afterwards, nobody will object. The idea of taking up half an hour of the time of the House when there is no evidence before it at all, I submit, is absurd.

Mr. DAVIN. This hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) tells us that we should not discuss it, this thing—and then proceeds to discuss it to an extent that I did not discuss it. He says that there was no agreement between me and Mr. Scott. Unfortunately, there was a written agreement—

Mr. DAVIS. What I said was that there was no written agreement before the House, and I think the House understood me. If there is an agreement it should be produced at the proper time.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) said, as though he was making a strong point, that there was no written agreement between me and Mr. Scott, meaning that if there was a written agreement it would have a binding effect upon Mr. Scott that an agreement by word of mouth would not have. I had the most solemn written agreement, for which good substantial value was given, that this man was to support me and the Conservative party for three years, that he was to give me an absolute control of the first two columns of the paper. Yet, in the face of an election, in the midst of the battle, he broke away from the agreement before twelve months had elapsed. What good would a written agreement be with a man like that? Was it an extraordinary thing, in regard to a paltry sum like this, that I should not have thought it necessary to make a written agreement with Mr. Scott? He was at that time in the most intimate relations with me that one could be with a public man. He was the editor of my organ, bound to me by solemn agreement; and up to that time and some time afterward, I could not find the least fault with him. It would be interesting to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) and others in this House to take up the Leader of that time and look at the articles written by Mr. Scott discussing me, and telling the public what his estimate of me was. I have had a good deal of flattery, as I have had a good deal of abuse; but his articles were about as warm and as eulogistic as any one who might desire praise or might think journalistic praise necessary to a public man could wish them to be. So, it was not unnatural that I should not have thought it necessary to have a written agreement in regard to so small a matter with a man who stood to me in such intimate relationship. This hon. gentleman also suggests that I should have handed a cheque. Why should I do it? Why should the Leader Company (Limited), do it if it did not owe it? To have done it would have been to acknowledge that it owed the money. Do you suppose that the Leader Company (Limited), was in such a poverty stricken condition that it could not pay $175 if that was due? At the present time I am told by the gentleman who is administering it that there are thousands of dollars still outstanding that can be collected at any time. I will not refer to the insulting tone the hon. gentleman has adopted; but I can assure him that the people of the North-west know him, and when this thing comes to be fairly sifted, they will find that a member of parliament, and a friend of a government for seventy years in power, one who had the confidence of the political leaders and their personal friendship, in regard to him it cannot be found that he ever benefited himself in one iota. I am able to say here and to defy contradiction that during all those years I never spoke to a minister or a deputy minister of my own motion, and never but once, at the instance of another, and that about the veriest trifle of any matter in which I was personally interested. And now, one of these clever fellows finds that for the sake of $175 I boodled; they have taken the language of a man that I will not characterize, but it will be shown by and by what kind of a word he has. They have taken his ribald utterances, which he withdrew and apologized for when he was about to be placed on his trial; they have taken the ribald misstatements of that man as statements of fact, and an hon. gentleman gets up in this House and moves to have a reference to the Public Accounts Committee to make inquiry of that sort, in face of the opinion of Mr. Rimmer, the law officer, that the money was not due Mr. Scott. I will not refer to what has taken place in the committee at the present time; but I have done here what I did in the committee, I have taken the first opportunity of letting the public know what the facts are. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down has quoted a statement, which of course is a misstatement, that the lieutenant-governor denied that he sent for me. The lieutenant-governor said frankly that he did not remember, and he said he might have sent for me. It was very necessary that I should take the first opportunity of bringing all the amount of fact that I can bring without infringing on the rules of the House.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman has taken exception to the language that I used in discussing this question. I do not think I said anything that is not parliamentary. The hon. gentleman takes exception to my making a statement on the word of Mr. Walter Scott. I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that Mr. Walter Scott last winter published a letter in his newspaper that was scattered all over the North-west Territories and the Dominion of Canada, an open letter to the hon. gentleman. I have it here under my hand, and it is very nice reading. Now, when a letter of that kind is scattered all over this country accusing a member of this House of boodling, and when the member takes no steps to contradict this party who signs his name to this letter, and to drag him over the coals before a court of law, I think any gentleman in this House is justified in taking Mr. Scott's statement. Here is the letter, several columns long, published on the 9th of November, 1899, and from that time to the present the hon. gentleman never took occasion to contradict that letter. Now he complains that I have moved a resolution to have this account referred to the Public Accounts Committee. I think I have a perfect right to do so as a member for the North-west Territories when a letter of that kind is published. I do not want to inflict the reading of this long letter on the committee, but it sets forth the agreements between the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, as managing director of that company, and Mr. Scott. The hon. gentleman cannot deny that he is openly accused of boodling.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the hon. gentleman read that?

Mr. DAVIS. Do you want me to read the whole letter?

Mr. DAVIS. Read where he says that he accused me of boodling.

Mr. DAVIS. I will just read the paragraph in which he uses this strong language:

I am, therefore, driven to the necessity of repeating former tactics, and to again allege against you that in or about the month of April, 1895, you did, as managing director of the 'Leader' Company (Limited), obtain payment of the sum of $400 of public money of Canada to the said company for alleged advertising for immigration purposes in connection with the Territorial Exhibition, which said advertising had not been done nor such service rendered; and you further allege that on the 12th day of September, 1894, you did, as managing director of above-named company, by representing that the work was done, procure payment to the company of $175 of public money of Canada, for alleged printing of the law reports of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories, when, in truth, the work was not done. I allege further that you nor your company never did the work, and unless you have recouped the public treasury within recent months, which I doubt, you still retain that $175 of the public money of Canada. Common people might think that these payments savored of boodling. I myself have to admit that they bear a suspicious approximateness to that offensive term. Yet I would not go the length of calling you a boodler—it is a very indelicate appellation.

That is pretty strong language, I think. Now, when a letter of that kind has been scattered all over this country and the hon. gentleman accused takes no steps to contradict it from the 9th of November last down to the 1st of March, I think I was perfectly justified in bringing this account before the Public Accounts Committee. Here is a member of this House accused by a newspaper editor, over his signature, of having taken $175 in one instance of the public money of this country, while he was a member of this House, for which he returned no services; and in another instance of having taken $400 of public money while he was managing director of that paper and a member of this House, for which he returned no services. Of course the committee has not reported yet, but I think when the evidence is brought down the hon. gentleman will perhaps change his tune. Now, Mr. Scott is not here to answer for himself, and it is easy for the hon. gentleman to make statements of that kind; but, Mr. Scott is known in Regina and all through the North-west Territories, and I venture to say that his word will be taken any time as against the word of the member for Western Assiniboia. He tells us about having been fifteen years in this House and having had the confidence of the leaders of the Conservative party. Why, it is within the memory of all of us that on a certain occasion he came down here and told the members of the Conservative government that they were men without brains, that they were antiques. Now he speaks about Mr. Walter Scott as if this gentleman was a very ordinary kind of a man, and not to be believed. As far as I understand this transaction, which the hon. gentleman has gone into, I think if there is any person with a grievance, it is Mr. Scott. He said that he agreed, at a certain time, that he would sell this paper to Mr. Scott, and that Mr. Scott was to support the Conservative party, and to support himself. He says that Mr. Scott did not do that. I understand that Mr. Scott bought the paper for a certain sum of money, and that when the time came to hand over the paper, the hon. gentleman refused to carry out his contract with Scott, and insisted on mulcting him another $1,000. Now the hon. gentleman gets up and says that Mr. Scott refused to carry out his contract, and he gives us the language that Mr. Scott used in his paper in regard to himself. But, he seems to have taken a different ground more especially on November 9, of last year. I submit that it would be better to defer this discussion until the papers are before the House, and then we can have a general discussion of the question.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman wants to know why I did not notice that letter of Mr. Scott. There are four good reasons. In the first place, Mr. Scott had put it beyond his power by any slander or calumny to injure me. In the next place, I am well known in the North-west Territories; people know my character, and I can laugh at attacks of that sort. In the third place, these very statements that are made there were retracted by Mr. Scott, and in the fourth place—

Mr. DAVIS. Were they retracted after he published that letter? That is a fair question, and I want an answer to it.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will you keep that gentleman in order? There is another reason. These statements are a rehash of statements that were made, and for which I brought an action of criminal libel against Mr. Scott. He fenced off for more than a year, and I could not get him down to trial. He used every chicane of the law, and when we were going to get to the trial he withdrew it all. How could a man injure me or any one by making statements that he had withdrawn, and said there was no truth in? He could not injure me. No matter what any man might say against me in this country now, I would never bring an action for libel against him because I consider that action is as good as dead the way the law of criminal libel is at present. For more than twelve months I tried to get that case before the jury, and for more than twelve months Mr. Scott fenced it off through his lawyer. For these four reasons, why should I bother myself about the letter? This hon. gentleman seems to think I should not have taken Mr. Scott's unwritten word. But I may say, in regard to a solemn contract, a contract made in writing, for which he got a most substantial consideration, that he, before twelve months had passed, in the face of a great battle, when he thought it would be fatal to me, having pledged himself to support me and the Conservative party, turned around and left me in the lurch. I do not know whether that is the conduct of a man whose word is very good, and I am not dealing with that. I did not know that when I made an arrangement with Mr. Scott. He had been during part of his apprenticeship in the office of which I was the managing director, and I had a high opinion of him. He himself had spoken of my unfailing kindness to him, and nothing had occurred up to the early summer of 1896, that would lead me to think that Mr. Scott was not a man with whom it would not be safe to make a verbal contract. I made a contract with him; all the circumstances show that I made a contract, and he does not deny it. However, I am not going into that. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) says, we will have that later. But I think it is desirable that we should have the facts. The hon. gentleman says, that with statements like that, when a libel is uttered against a member of the House in a newspaper, another member is justified in moving what is a county court matter into the Public Accounts Committee. I do not think that would commend itself to the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not think it would even commend itself to the Prime Minister to say that it would be a right thing that anything like even the view of the facts that the hon. member for Saskatchewan presents should be moved into the Privileges and Elections Committee, but to move it into the Public Accounts Committee is monstrous.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman has said that Mr. Scott had retracted the statements made in this letter, but he has not told us whether it was done previous to the printing of the letter or after the letter was published. It appears to me when I read this short paragraph that Mr. Scott has not retracted anything. Of course, it is a question of veracity between the hon. member for Western Assiniboia and Mr. Scott. But, here is what Mr. Scott says in connection with it:

Regina, Nov. 1, 1899.

N. F. Davin, M.P.,
Regina, N.W.T.

Sir,—Following the transaction known as the 'Leader' deal between you and me in 1895, the exciting parliamentary session of the winter of 1896, and the incidents of the succeeding general election, you paid me the attention on the floor of the House of Commons in the first session of the new parliament of charging dishonourable conduct against me in connection with the aforementioned 'Leader' deal. You made the charge, as I thought, in a cowardly way, under your parliamentary privilege. So far as I could appreciate the circumstances of the deal, and the after incidents in its relation, your charge was absolutely unwarranted. I could not proceed directly to obtain redress. I determined, however, to make an attempt to obtain satisfaction. I decided, if possible, to lure you into a court of law, at the risk of a great deal of trouble and expense to myself, where I hoped to be able to make you swallow your false charge. With this end in view, I deliberately published an article making charges against you which, even if true, was libellous, and which, if untrue, would render me liable to heavy damages or imprisonment. My plan succeeded. You took the bait. I felt certain that if I once had you fairly into court in a case in which the 'Leader' deal might be sifted, I could abundantly show that if there were dishonour in the transaction it was not attached to my skirts. The preliminaries dragged on for a year. You made a big showing of fight. You played the game of bluff for all that was in it. But when it came to the show-down you wilted. At the very court door, on the morning of 23rd December, 1897, after the jury had been called, and when the judge was donning his gown, you sent me a letter retracting your false charge. I was satisfied. I had done that which I had set out to do, namely, choke your lie down your throat. I, a mere private individual, had compelled a member of parliament, shielded though he was by privilege, to reluctantly but publicly withdraw a slanderous statement uttered on the floor of parliament. I had compelled you to publicly acknowledge that you had violated and disgraced your oath as a member of parliament. I do not know that the incident has a parallel in the history of parliaments. I was satisfied. We shook hands at the court-house on that Wednesday morning and mutually said, 'Let bygones be bygones.' Since that date until now I have never uttered a word in breach of our compact. By it I deemed myself bound to avoid reference to the irregular money transactions you had had in connection with government printing and advertising that had formed the basis of the charge with which I lured you to the court-house door. I treated the whole matter of the transaction, case and surroundings as, between you and me, a sealed book.

Mr. DAVIN.

It appears from this letter that when Mr. Scott said at that time that he wanted to lure the hon. gentleman into court it was in connection with that charge about the $175 and the $400. He, however, was satisfied to withdraw the statement he made about Mr. Scott in this House if Mr. Scott would say nothing more about the $175 and the $400.

To-day in your organ, 'The West,' you publicly reopen this subject. I have been aware for months that you were privately pouring tales into people's ears which you lacked courage to relate to a jury of your fellow citizens. To-day you publicly break the compact, and I deem myself no longer bound by it.

It is a peculiarity of yours that whenever you make a libellous statement you make it from under cover of some sort. You either abuse the immunity afforded to members of parliament, or get under cover of a publishing company. Were I to take action against you for the libel contained in your organ to-day you would at once, and no doubt successfully, deny responsibility.

I have no doubt about that, because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has said more than once in this House that he has nothing to do with the West, although Mr. Scott says it is his personal organ.

I am, therefore, driven to the necessity of repeating former tactics, and to again allege against you that in or about the month of April, 1895, you did, as managing director of the 'Leader' Company (Limited), obtain payment of the sum of $400 of public money of Canada to the said company for alleged advertising for immigration purposes in connection with the territorial exhibition, which said advertising had not been done nor such service rendered; and to further allege that on the 12th day of December, 1894, you did, as managing director of above named company, by representing that the work was done, procure payment to the company of $175 of public money of Canada for alleged printing of the law reports of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories, when in truth the work was not done. I allege further that you nor your company ever did the work, and unless you have recouped the public treasury within recent months, which I doubt, you still retain that $175 of the public money of Canada. Common people might think that these payment savoured of boodling. I myself have to admit that they bear a suspicious approximateness to that offensive term. Yet I would not go the length of calling you a boodler,—it is a very indelicate appellation.

In your organ to-day you publish a paragraph from a document dated August, 1895, which standing by itself would seem to show that I agreed to give you and the Conservative party political support for a term. Your organ further alleges that I got 'good and substantial consideration' for such agreement. It is further asserted that I broke said agreement. Now, Mr. Davin, you ought to be perfectly well aware that the above statement of the matter as a whole and in each of its details is misleading and false. You ought to remember that as between you and me, man to man, I did not 'bind' myself to support you or the Conservative party. You certainly know that nothing was paid me and no consideration given me for such agreement. And you ought to know that the agreement, such as it was, was not departed from by me until I had received your assent. To bring to your knowledge and recollection these facts, I shall be compelled to relate some of the circumstances.

Notwithstanding that you had good reason to know that I was strongly inclined to Liberalism in politics, you had often held out to me inducements to join the 'Leader' staff. In 1888 you sent Mr. Young, your manager, with an offer of higher pay than I was receiving, which offer I declined. In 1889 you personally made an offer which I accepted, and I worked for sixteen months in your office as a printer. While you were absent at Ottawa, in 1890, I was refused an increase in salary to which I thought I was entitled and quitted the staff; on your return you told me it was contrary to your wish that I was not given the increase. In December, 1891, by your direction, your manager offered me inducements to join the 'Leader' editorial staff—in fact to take charge during his and your absence at Ottawa—which I declined. In 1893, you made propositions to turn over the paper to me, which I did not accept. In December, 1894, when I was living at Moosejaw, you wrote that you wished to see me and, when I saw you, asked me to make an offer for the outright purchase of the 'Leader.' Without consideration I said: 'I'll give you $4,000.' You said: 'I'll take it.' I said: 'Well, allow me until afternoon to see just what I can do about payments.' You said: 'Very well.' In the afternoon you said you wished a few days to think over the matter. When I saw you a week later you raised the price to $8,000, and I said: 'Good morning.'

I made the statement here that the hon. gentleman raised it $1,000, but it appears from this letter that he agreed to sell the paper for $4,000, but in a few days afterwards he said he must have $8,000. Yet, the hon. gentleman says in this House that every one in the North-west would believe his word before Mr. Scott's. The hon. gentleman said that the Leader Company was never hard up, but if that be the case, it is queer that it should be taking from the lieutenant-governor $175 and $400, for work that was never performed. Generally speaking, that is not the way that business men who are not hard up do business.

It was in the intervening week, I believe, that you made the scoop of $175 alluded to above from the lieutenant-governor. When a printing office proved its ability to get government money for work not performed it certainly had a right to be considered more valuable. In the following April, that is to say in April, 1895, you again wrote to me at Moosejaw that you wished to see me. The following agreement was the result of our interview:

Regina, April 8, 1895.

The 'Leader' Company (Limited), agrees to sell and convey to Walter Scott the 'Leader' plant and machinery, type, forms and paper and good-will of the company for the sum of $4,000, payable as follows: $1,000 down on execution of conveyance, $1,000 eight months from date of conveyance, $1,000 sixteen months from date of conveyance, and balance twenty-four months from date of conveyance with interest until and after due at 8 per cent; N. F. Davin agrees to lease the cellar and ground floor of the 'Leader' building for one year to Scott at $40 per month payable in advance, Davin to pay one-half of rates and taxes on real estate; Scott will take the goods above mentioned on the terms above mentioned and will execute the proper conveyances in connection therewith; he will accept the building on said terms and will execute lease to this effect; it is understood that the engine and boiler and appurtenances thereto are now fixtures and included in a mortgage now on the building, but the company will convey its interest and when the mortgage on the building is paid the engine, &c., shall be considered chattels and the property of Scott, and may be removed by Scott on termination of lease; Scott is to assume and pay outstanding notes and indebtedness on the part of the goods now ordered and not yet arrived or opened; property to be clear except as hereinbefore mentioned; the value of the engine, boiler and appurtenances thereto to be retained out of balance of purchase money until the said mortgage is discharged or the engine is released from the mortgage; Davin, or the 'Leader' Company (Limited), will not run another paper in the town of Regina for five years or publish or edit one directly or indirectly; Davin and the company will pay proportion of taxes for 1895 up to date of execution of conveyance; interest on land mortgage to be paid to date of conveyance and proof furnished; if interest on land mortgage falls in arrears during Scott's tenancy Scott is to be at liberty to pay same and credit payment or payments on his mortgage to 'Leader' Company; the oil engine now in basement of 'Leader' building is not included in the goods above referred to; Scott is to pay the company's proportion of premium on the unexpired portion of insurance and to keep the goods insured for the amount now carried; Scott is to have the option of purchasing for the sum of $2,000 over and above said sum of $4,000 the subscription books and all outstanding accounts, he, Scott, to assume all the 'Leader' Company liabilities, his, Scott's, decision to be given before six o'clock on April 16th inst. If this offer is accepted it is to be paid in three equal payments added to the three subsequent payments before mentioned; Scott pays half taxes on realty and the taxes on the personality; the 'Leader' Company and Davin will pay their total rates and taxes for 1895, on building and personality up to entry into possession by Scott. (Sgd.) 'Leader' Company (Limited), N. F. Davin, Mgr. (Sgd.) N. F. Davin. (Sgd.) Walter Scott. Witness: (Sgd.) N. Mackenzie.

The hon. gentleman says, that he was only managing director of the Leader Company, but he appears here as N. F. Davin right through, and the Leader Company is in the background. That is the true agreement between the hon. gentleman's company and Walter Scott, and I fail to see one word about law reports or the $175 in that agreement. The letter goes on:

You observe, Mr. Davin, that you agreed to transfer the 'Leader' to me absolutely and unreservedly for the sum of $4,000. By the agreement you were not to retain any interest or control, political or otherwise.

There is nothing in that agreement about supporting the Conservative party that I can see.

The transfer was to be made immediately, that is to say, within a few days. Was it made? Did you honour your solemn agreement, your solemn bargain? By pleas and excuses you blocked the transfer, and dishonoured your signature. I instituted legal action, but your attendance at a session of parliament stayed proceedings until August following. Meanwhile I successfully tendered for the North-west Assembly printing for a session to open in September. About the middle of August I saw you and you protested your inability to fulfil your bargain, but when I showed you my printing contract and assured you that I would have a third plant in Regina within ten days unless you carried out the April agreement, then you hurriedly changed your mind and offered to fulfil the agreement of transfer—

He is alluding now to the printing contract from the North-west Territories which Mr. Scott had applied for, and obtained on the strength of getting the paper.

—but you pleaded that the price was low—that crop prospects were good, that my printing contract made the property more valuable to me; and to save haggling and delay, I said that I would give an additional thousand dollars. By your agreement in April you had led to my abandoning other interests I held in Regina; you had injured my financial position; for four months you had kept me out of what was mine by agreement. You claimed that the fault was not wholly yours. Let me admit your claim for a moment. Would an honourable man not have endeavoured to fulfil his contract to the letter? Did you so endeavour? No. You used circumstances to squeeze another thousand dollars. However, let that pass. For a consideration of $1,000 you agreed to rehabilitate your honour and fulfil the terms of your solemn bargain. I repeat that upon my consent to pay an additional thousand dollars, you agreed to do what you were in honour bound to do. It was settled that the April agreement should be altered to stipulate payment of $5,000 instead of $4,000, and then to be carried out by you immediately. Undoubtedly I could have forced the fulfilment by you of the April contract by legal process, but time had become important to me, and I consented to be mulcted in the sum of $1,000 to save delay and trouble.

Now, there is the statement made by Mr. Walter Scott, that when he got this contract from the North-west Territories for a lot of printing—and of course he had to have a paper and a press in order to do the work—then the hon. gentleman swoops down on him and says: We must have another thousand dollars before we fulfil the agreement, although the agreement had been signed. Mr. Scott could have got possession by legal means, but in the meantime he would have lost the printing contract, and it was worth a thousand dollars to him to get the immediate possession of the paper, which he did.

Before you effected the transfer a further hitch arose. I note that just now you are very insistent that four years ago I was a Conservative. Well, have it so. I would prefer to concern myself more with principles than names. But four years ago I do not think you believed that the name 'Conservative' was quite applicable to me. Certainly your chief supporters in Regina did not consider me a Conservative. They objected to your selling your paper to me; and why? For the very reason that I was not a Conservative. And notwithstanding that you had made a solemn agreement to sell, and notwithstanding that you had renewed—for a consideration of $1,000—that solemn agreement, you again listened to the objection of your supporters. Then you suggested that we should put into the contract the clause which you quoted to-day in your organ. I flatly refused. Finally, again to save delay and the trouble of forcing fulfilment by legal process, I consented to the insertion of the clause on the distinct understanding suggested by you—to which Mr. Jas. A. McCaul, you and I were parties—that as between you and me the clause was to be a dead letter; it was inserted simply to still the fears of your objecting supporters. I took possession of the 'Leader' with no other intention than to support you politically, but I took it in the full belief and confidence that my political action was wholly within my own control, and that I was absolutely independent, which I would not have been had the clause in the contract quoted by you been what it purported to be. I say that not only did I not receive valuable consideration or any consideration for the agreement to support you, but on the contrary that behind the apparent agreement you and I had an understanding that it was void and of no effect. No one realizes so fully as myself the mistake I made. I can plead, however, that when I took the 'Leader,' I did so in the full belief that I was in reality as free and untrammelled as the April contract left. I most solemnly state that I should never have taken the paper under other conditions. To save delay might have been worth $1,000 to me, but could not have been worth the sacrifice of independence. You were under contract to make absolute transfer to me for $4,000. You now contend that you made only a limited transfer for $5,000. Do you not see that you are convicting yourself of a breach of contract? What position do you stand in to talk about any man's honour?

I have said that I will not quarrel with you over the statement that four years ago I was a Conservative. I have said that I bought the 'Leader,' intending to support you. Perhaps that entitled me to the name Conservative. As I say, I choose to be less concerned with names than with principles. When I concluded to support you, I simply did what many Liberals were thinking of doing. It was generally thought at the time that the contest in West Assinibola would be between you and the Patron candidate. Your attitude on the school and tariff questions was such that I felt I could support you without sacrifice of principle. You can bandy names now, but I challenge you to name a question on which my attitude now or since 1896 is or has been different from my attitude in 1895. In supporting you in 1895 I was supporting Manitoba's freedom and reform of the tariff. I continued to support you until April, 1896, not because I felt in any way bound to do so, but simply following the decision I had come to of my own accord. In April, 1896, did I change or did you change? The fact is so well known that the question needs no answer. You deserted Manitoba's cause. I refused to desert. Frequently between August, 1895, and April, 1896, I had asked you to erase the 'political support' clause in the August contract in conformity with our private understanding. You deferred. Your vote for the Remedial Bill brought matters to a crisis. Technically I did not violate the clause, but I plainly told you that were the clause strong or weak I could not continue to support you. But your accusation that I broke the agreement is false. The 'Leader' did not oppose your election. I could not follow you in your somersault on the school question, but I endeavoured to be not only just but generous. I gave your friends the 'Leader' to be used as an organ to fight for your election.

Mr. FOSTER. Dispense.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman thinks I should dispense. I just wish to tell him that some strong statements have been made by Mr. Scott, and as Mr. Scott is not a member of this House, I think this letter should be placed before it.

Mr. DAVIN. Read on.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Scott says substantially that when the election came on, he handed the paper over to the Conservative party for the purpose of fighting the election. As he was opposed to separate schools being forced on Manitoba, he could not conscientiously support the Conservative party, and, therefore, he handed the paper over to the political friend of the hon. gentleman. Mr. Scott has published all the correspondence and agreements, and in an open, manly manner, has placed all the facts before the public. Here is the agreement:

Regina, May 14, 1896.

Agreement between Walter Scott, of Regina, publisher, and William Cayley Hamilton and James Allan MacCaul, of Regina, gentlemen.

Said Scott agrees to transfer control of the Regina 'Leader' newspaper to said Hamilton and MacCaul until and including 23rd June, 1896, it being understood that all space now occupied as advertising space or that may be regularly contracted for as such shall remain under the control and for the benefit of Scott. The space for reading matter outside advertisements shall not be limited to less than eleven columns. The newspaper shall, while under such editorial control in its general departments, be maintained by said Hamilton and MacCaul in its usual state of efficiency. All editorial matter for the week is to be furnished not later than four o'clock of the Wednesday in each week preceding the day of issue, and all other matter shall be supplied with such regularity and promptness as not to interfere with or delay the regular issue of the paper. Scott agrees to allow office accommodation for one person to be placed and kept in the 'Leader' office for the purpose of this agreement until the expiry of said term. Security by bond or covenant is to be furnished by said Hamilton and McCaul to the effect that no defamatory article shall be published in the portion of the said newspaper placed under their charge, and that in the event of any such article being published, the said Scott will be fully indemnified against all claims for damages by reason of such article. After the coming election Scott is to be at liberty to pursue any policy he may choose in the 'Leader' newspaper, notwithstanding the agreement heretofore entered into between Scott and Davin and the 'Leader' Company, and said Hamilton and McCaul have Davin's authority for agreeing hereto on his behalf.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it in order, Mr. Chairman, for an hon. gentleman to keep us here all night reading an old newspaper from Regina. If so we can be kept here for any other old thing. It opens up a wonderful vista, if this kind of thing is to be allowed.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman raised no objection while the hon. member for Assiniboia read letters, but when I want to read other letters he says that our time may be occupied with any old thing.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I was not here when the discussion began, and would like to have an explanation as to how it relates to the item before the House.

Mr. DAVIS. In the Auditor General's Report there is certain correspondence between him and the hon. member for West Assiniboia and the Deputy Minister of the Interior and other parties in connection with the payment of $175. When the item came up for the payment of a certain amount to Mr. Rothwell, one of the chief clerks in the Department of the Interior, the hon. member for West Assiniboia objected to the payment because he had grievance against Mr. Rothwell for some correspondence which appeared in the Auditor General's Report, and he proceeded to discuss the whole matter although told he had better leave the question over until the report of the Public Accounts Committee was brought on.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My opinion is that the item we are now discussing will not allow of the discussion which is now going on and has been going on for some time.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope, Sir, that you will allow the hon. gentleman to go on. I wish to say—

Mr. DAVIS. If I am to be choked off, I object to the hon. gentleman taking up the matter again.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This discussion is not in order just now.

Mr. DAVIN. After you have allowed the hon. gentleman, Mr. Chairman, to make a lot of statements respecting me, you surely cannot rule that I have not the right to reply.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When an irregular discussion takes place, I am bound to give a ruling as soon as attention is drawn to it.

Mr. DAVIN. Am I to understand that an hon. gentleman can read a letter addressed to me containing a tissue of falsehoods and make a lot of comments of an offensive character and I am not to say anything.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am bound by the rules of the House and must rule the whole discussion out of order.

Mr. DAVIN. I will take another opportunity of dealing with this matter in this House. But, I find to-night that I am not only confronted with ruffianism, but with cowardice as well.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), does not, in these expressions, refer to any hon. member of the House. If he wishes to refer to members of the House, I shall have to ask him to withdraw the expressions.

Mr. DAVIN. I adopt the precedent set by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) and sanctioned by yourself, Sir, on a similar occasion when I, on a question of privilege brought his language before the House. He said: I have used a general expression. And no one on the Treasury benches called him to account.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not know what happened on the occasion referred to or what precedent may have been set; but I take it that the expressions of the hon. member (Mr. Davin), on this occasion are not parliamentary, and I would ask him to be kind enough to withdraw them.

Mr. DAVIN. I have said that I used a general expression. And it is on record, that the Minister of Public Works, on a similar occasion, used the same expression.

The PRIME MINISTER. I understand that the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Davin's) words do not apply to anybody in particular.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. After this long discussion, I may say that in view of the fact that Mr. Rothwell's duties have been increased lately, and that he now acts as deputy minister during the deputy minister's absence, I think he is quite entitled to this increase.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the deputy minister?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I said that Mr. Rothwell acted for him when he was absent.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the acting minister say that he is giving Mr. Rothwell a sum of money to recompense him for doing the duties of the deputy, when the deputy is absent, but drawing his salary?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, I did not say that. I said that in view of the increase of business of the department, Mr. Rothwell's duties were very heavy. And I understand that it is customary in every department, that there is some officer who takes the place of the deputy when the deputy is absent through illness or on duty. And, for the past year, when the deputy has been absent, Mr. Rothwell has assumed the responsibility of acting in that capacity, and will do so in future.

Mr. FOSTER. And this is compensating Mr. Rothwell for doing these duties—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not at all. I simply gave this as the additional reason. Formerly, during the absence of the deputy, the secretary acted in his place, and he received a salary of $2,800. That has been changed, and Mr. Rothwell acts, and the salary here proposed is $2,400.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the acting minister is entirely wrong in this. This is a grave case. It used to be the practice when the lower officer performed the duties of a higher officer in the absence of the latter, to give him an additional sum, to compensate him. But that gave rise to grave abuse.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster), surely will accept the statement I made. If he understood me as saying what he states, I can only repeat that I did not say that. I said that Mr. Rothwell's increased responsibility, was an additional reason for giving him this increase—not that he is paid anything for acting as deputy minister.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the acting minister takes back the statement he started with?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) understood me as saying what he has stated—certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad of that, because the hon. gentleman's position was not tenable. Now, why should Mr. Rothwell be given an increase of $400 in one year? Mr. Rothwell came into the service in what year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In 1883, I think.

Mr. FOSTER. And he now receives $2,000. He has had fairly rapid increase, I think, and his salary is at a good figure. It is proposed now not to give him a statutory increase, but to give him $400 of an increase. I do not think the acting minister has given any good reason for it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed, and I know of my own knowledge, that Mr. Rothwell's duties are very heavy, and he works many nights after hours. It was thought by the minister and the department that he was quite entitled to the salary here provided, and from my own knowledge of his work, and his close attention to his duties, I think he is well entitled to a salary of $2,400.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Here we have an illustration of the extreme undesirability of running a department without the minister who is responsible. What can we say to the acting minister? The acting minister simply says: I am not the head of the department, but the minister thinks that this officer should have so much. Now, I would like to have a good reason why the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is not in his place in this House. No good reason for it has been given. Nor can it be said that we on this side have pressed this point ; we have refrained from pressing it. But it is a thing unknown in the history of government that during an important session like this, two of the most important ministers in the government, should be absent from the House during the whole session, without any good reason given. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), the head of one of the most important departments in the government, is also absent. A good reason for his absence would be if he were unable to do his work here, and had gone away for rest and medical treatment. But, is that the case? Everybody knows that it is not. What is he doing? He has taken a position which, if he is able to perform its duties will throw upon him more worry and responsibility than if he had remained here with his officers about him and had conducted the affairs of his department. It is most important in the public interest, that a minister, at the head of so great a department, should be in his place in the House, above all during a session like this, the last before an election campaign. There were other men who could have performed the duties of looking after the exposition in Paris much better than the Minister of Public Works could do. It cannot be because he is so much required there that he is absent from this House. What, then, is the reason? And, even, aside from these two ministers who are out of the country, we have been treated almost every day to the spectacle of almost empty ministerial benches. There never has been a session of parliament since I entered this House in 1882, when that abuse has been so completely the rule, instead of the exception, as it has been this session. Now, why is it that the minister is not here? The acting minister says the minister knows, and he thought he ought to be recommended for $400 of an increase, but no good reason is given. I think we are entitled to an answer as to why the minister of one of the departments is not present to attend to his work.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not know that this is the proper time to discuss the question that my hon. friend has raised, but since he has done so I have no objection to give him the information to which he thinks he is entitled, though it has been given before. I will commence what I have to say by answering his reference to the minister of Public Works. My hon. friend was here at the opening of the session, and has been ever since. He saw the Minister of Public Works in his seat at various times from the opening of the session up to the time he left for France, and I think if I were to put the question to my hon. friend what he thought of the health of the Minister of Public Works, he would answer that he thought he was in poor health. It is notorious that the Minister of Public Works went to France last summer, where he underwent a serious operation ; it is notorious that in less than six weeks after he had undergone that operation he came back to Canada and resumed his official duties. That his health should be poor under the circumstances would not seem unlikely to anybody. Everybody would agree that Mr. Tarte would have consulted his own interest better if he had remained longer in France and continue to receive medical treatment. That he had a relapse, that the wound did not heal as rapidly as was expected, that his general health suffered, is not at all surprising ; on the contrary it was, in my estimation, the unavoidable consequence of what I thought at the time an imprudence on the part of the Minister of Public Works. He certainly was in very poor health at the time he left for France in March last. It is true that Mr. Tarte is very active in France, more active than I would like him to be. I think Mr. Tarte, with his usual impetuosity of character, does not consult his own interest. When he left Canada for France he did so under medical advice that a change of air and a change of work would benefit him if he followed the advice with circumspection. We all know that in many cases a change of air and a change of occupation is beneficial for a man who is subjected to a great mental strain. My hon. friend has come to the conclusion, perhaps, that Mr. Tarte's health is not very bad ; but he certainly knows the Minister of Public Works too well to be surprised that his activity and energy do not permit him strictly to follow the instructions of his medical adviser. So much for Mr. Tarte.

Now, I come to Mr. Sifton. Everybody knows that Mr. Sifton whose general health, I think, is fair, is afflicted with a chronic infirmity. Mr. Sifton spoke to me some time before the session, saying that he found to his alarm that this chronic infirmity was increasing, and he was advised that unless he consulted a specialist the consequences might be serious ; and it is not extraordinary that a man under such circumstances, a man in the prime of life, as he is, should desire at the earliest moment to seek the best treatment before it was too late, as in these matters prompt action is of the greatest importance. Of course under the circumstances, I had no hesitation at all as head of the government, in advising Mr. Sifton to seek further treatment. Accordingly he did so. After he reached Vienna his medical adviser had to go to Paris, and Mr. Sifton followed him to Paris in order to pursue a treatment which, as I understand from a letter I have received from him, has to be repeated every second day. Under these circumstances, I appeal to my hon. friend if he thinks he is justified in commenting so severely as he does upon the absence of the Minister of the Interior. For my part, I think that a man who is still under forty years of age, and finds this infirmity growing upon him, is more than excusable if at the earliest opportunity he seeks the best medical treatment he can find in order, if possible, to avoid the very serious consequences to his future in case that infirmity became incurable. This is the reason why the Minister of the Interior is absent. I can assure my hon. friend that if he regrets the absence of Mr. Sifton from the floor of this House there is some one who regrets it still more, and that is Mr. Sifton himself; and I can assure him that if there is any one who regrets it more than Mr. Sifton, it is myself. I think it is in many respects, unfortunate that he cannot attend to his duties, but the reasons that have been given for his absence seem to me so conclusive, that they should not justify the severe criticism that we have heard this evening.

Now, I come to the matter that we have in hand, the increase of salary to Mr. Rothwell. Mr. Rothwell is an officer of seventeen years service, who occupies an important position in the department. My hon. friend who has taken charge of the department in the absence of Mr. Sifton, says that Mr. Rothwell's duties are increasing. The hon. gentleman must know that the duties of all the officers of that department are increasing very rapidly, even if there were no other extra cause than the administration of the Yukon which belongs to that department. Now, how are we to treat a meritorious officer? The hon. gentleman knows that there are some officers who are good, some who are better than others, and some who have specially important duties to perform; and if the minister thinks that an officer who has to render important services in the department is entitled to an increase of salary, then the question is submitted to the judgment of the committee whether the increase ought to be voted. In this case, I think the increase is justified. In addition to these general reasons for the increase of work, the acting minister states that the position of Mr. Rothwell is one of the greatest responsibility, as when the deputy minister is absent, Mr. Rothwell has practically to take charge of the department, being next in rank. Those are the reasons which have been given for the increase of the salary of Mr. Rothwell, and I think they are sound and sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one part of my observations that the First Minister did not touch, he has not given a sufficient reason why there is such a continuous absence of ministers who are here in the city and at the seat of government, while matters pertaining to the department are under discussion.

The PRIME MINISTER. I can assure my hon. friend that the members of the government would find it more to their convenience, more agreeable to attend to their duties here on the floor of the House than to be constantly receiving delegations and deputations and having to answer questions. That is the only reason I have to give my hon. friend, and that is a reason which I prefer not to exist. But my hon. friend knows that there is a growing tendency with increasing publication, telegraphs, telephones, and postal and railway services to bring to Ottawa all the time a greater number of people to speak with ministers, and to have interviews with them. We are constantly besieged by people who wish to see the ministers on public business. I have sometimes, myself, engaged my colleagues to be as much as possible in their seats in the House, and this is the invariable reason I have received. If they are not in their seats it is not that they are out through indolence or neglect, but it is because they are attending to their duties.

Mr. FOSTER. Deputations come and deputations have to see the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) as well. There is not a minister probably in the departments that is so frequently and generally here as the right hon. gentleman. The hon. minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is here very generally, and I suppose there are not two more important ministers as regards deputations than the right hon. gentleman and the hon. Minister of Finance, and there are a great many hours when they are in their seats. It is the duty of a minister, I think, to the representatives of the people and a duty to the business they are called upon here to discharge, leaving their own homes, to come and spend the time here to carry it out. I am not speaking of this in any way of harsh criticism, but it has been notorious this session that the government benches have been vacant, and they have been vacant to a remarkable degree. The effect upon the House has been that the House has got into a completely careless and listless state. I never knew in my experience a session in which there has been less go, less business, less hand upon anything in the House than during the present session. Why? Because the ministers are not here, and if the ministers are not here the back bench members are not here, and there is not a minister who seems to care fiddle-de-dee whether business is done or not. There is another matter, and it is a matter of courtesy as well. My hon. friend behind me (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was discussing an important question in reference to the Yukon, when the hon. Minister of the Interior is away. The hon. acting Minister of the Interior did not think that it was necessary to remain and listen to what was going on.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was only out a short time.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. First Minister listened a while but he thought it was not his duty to remain when a charge of that kind was being pressed home. He went out also, and most of the time I do not think there were more than two or three representatives of the government here. That is an instance of what is taking place over and over again. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) is out of the House three-quarters of the time and more. When questions are asked information cannot be got because ministers are not here to answer questions. That all has its influence upon the interest in and work of the session; you take the whole spirit, the energy and the business out of the session. It has been taken out of this session. There has been a doleful lagging of business. Let us come to the statement that has been made in reference to Mr. Rothwell. Mr. Rothwell is a good servant; we will acknowledge that. So are very many; so, I believe, are most of the civil servants, but neither the hon. acting minister nor the Prime Minister has given any sufficient explanation of the work that Mr. Rothwell is doing. The extension of salary is a large one; it is a tremendous leap in the remuneration of a high salaried officer from $2,000 to $2,400. Why is it that a fair increase could not be made? Mr. Rothwell, the year before last and the year before, worked his hours, late hours and long hours, and he got his regular increase. I do not suppose that he has worked any more hours this year, and it has not been shown that his duties have been such as would justify such an addition to his salary. I do not criticise the absence of the ministers severely out of any feeling of animosity to the ministers. It is not that, but the Prime Minister knows that the country and the House remark upon this. If the hon. Minister of Public Works' state of health is such as to allow him to go to Paris and undertake with his peculiar temperament the headship of the Canadian representation at the Paris Exposition, with trips through the provinces, going to Belgium and addressing public meetings, being one night in Paris and the next night in London, the reason for his absence completely falls to the ground. The hon. minister is not away on account of debilitated condition, or of ill-health. He is away doing more active and more consuming work, I should think, for a man of his temperament than if he were to remain here. I grant that the right hon. gentleman is entirely right in saying that he returned from his first visit to Paris too early. If he had taken more time he would have given himself a fairer chance for recuperating. Instead of putting him in charge of the Paris Exposition the right hon. gentleman should have used his influence to have him go somewhere where rest and quiet could be got. But surely, if he is well enough, if a man like the hon. Minister of Public Works, with his temperament, is standing the strain of that peculiar work in Paris, if he can attend the multitude of banquets which are a necessary concomitant of it, if he can take these flights through the provinces, going to Belgium and addressing meetings, he is perfectly able to stand his work here, and if he is able to stand his work here, here is where he ought to be instead of there. And then, as to the hon. Minister of the Interior; the hon. gentleman, as I read the matter, and as I understood it, has good general health. His indisposition is a serious one, and he requires treatment for it. But it is not a sudden thing. The hon. minister was looking well, and one would have thought that at the end of last session when his infirmity was of just about the same character and seriousness as it was later, because his affliction, and unfortunately a great affliction it is, has been with him for a long number of years, he could have taken the opportunity of going for medical advice. But, he did not do it. Neither did he take any extra advice or any care. On the contrary, he engaged in very heavy work. In the early autumn and winter he undertook a large contract, in the first place, making a tour of Manitoba and the North-west Territories and going to British Columbia. I believe, on a general speaking tour in company with some of his colleagues, and then plunging with all the vigour that he is possessed of into a red-hot campaign in Manitoba. Then, coming back to parliament looking very well as a matter of general health and with the peculiar infirmity that follows him not accentuated, he immediately slides out from the whole work of the session. He immediately slides out from the whole work of the session, and leaves the department in which is the Yukon and the Interior and the immigration business, just at a time when it is of the utmost importance, from a public point of view, that he should be here. A man cannot be a minister and do just the same as he would do if he were a private person. He has duties towards the House and duties towards the public, and the pity of it is that in this case he had not chosen the holiday interim for his treatment and absence, when he could have been better spared than he could at the time of the session. I think that is not an unfair criticism to make in reference to these two ministers. I made it, not in the spirit of animosity, but because I think the business of this House has been most seriously interfered with by their absence, and besides, I think it was a very bad precedent that men shall undertake the responsibilities of cabinet ministers and then not consider that they are under very great obligations to be in their places, most especially at the time of the session of parliament.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Coming to the case of Mr. Rothwell, there seems something extraordinary in this $400 increase at a time when a great many meritorious men in the service cannot get even the ordinary statutory increase of $50, no matter how long they work or how arduous their duties are. What seems extraordinary in all these increases in the Interior Department is, that when we learn that the favoured person is in some way connected with the Yukon, then at once he comes under the favouring smile of the head of the department. Take the case of Mr. Rothwell. He is called chief clerk and law clerk; he entered the service in 1883. Go to the Justice Department, that has the heavy responsibility of the legal work, and you will find there Mr. Fraser, a gentleman much Mr. Rothwell's senior, and one of the ablest men in any department, who was appointed during the Mackenzie administration. Mr. Fraser is an exceptionally able man and a splendid officer. He has had the confidence of every one who has been in that department, and with that man's ability and long service, being the second officer after the deputy in the department, he is only receiving $2,400 a year to-day. The comparison becomes extraordinary if you look over the different departments in order to ascertain how it is that Mr. Rothwell is so favoured. For a long time, and until a year or two ago, when he got $2,400, the chief engineer of the Marine Department only received $2,000. The chief clerk of that department, who has been almost a lifetime there, is only receiving $2,400, while the chief clerk who has to deal with legal matters and all the shipping matters in the Department of Marine is getting but $2,000 after all his years of service. I do not want to go over all these different names, but I have mentioned officers holding at least as important offices as Mr. Rothwell, and who have longer service, and this favoured treatment is not meted out to them. It does seem extraordinary that on the reasons given, Mr. Rothwell should jump from $2,000 to $2,400 at one fell swoop.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not agree that there is anything extraordinary in the comparisons made by the hon. gentleman. It may be possible that some of the officers he has referred to have not received full justice, but I do not think there is any comparison in the amount of work they have to do as compared with Mr. Rothwell.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would you compare Mr. Rothwell with Mr. Fraser?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The ex-Minister of Justice has more knowledge of the work in the Justice Department than I have, but I can tell him that I believe Mr. Rothwell has to deal with legal matters requiring legal ability affecting the interests of the people of this country and involving a much larger amount of money, than has, perhaps, any officer of any department, outside the deputy ministers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What, for instance?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We will take the appeals from the Yukon, and there are a great many of them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What has he got to do with the appeals?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Surely as an ex-minister the hon. gentleman knows that it depends a great deal upon the officers of the department—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Rothwell has not a particle of right in law to interfere in an appeal from the Yukon. It has never been pretended in this House, that when the judicial discretion was vested in the minister, that he could call in the assistance of the chief clerk of his department. It is monstrous.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman is not going to be so unfair as to intimate that he has not called in the assistance of the Deputy Minister of Justice or of Mr. Fraser. What right had he as Minister of Justice to ask these officers to look into points of law and to draw up documents for which he was responsible?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The cases are not similar. I am speaking of the anomalous functions in connection with the appeal given to the Minister of the Interior. There is no similar case in the Justice Department.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, there is.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What?

The PRIME MINISTER. Here is an appeal given to the Minister of the Interior as to conflicts between claimants and so on, in the Yukon. The minister must have the facts reviewed. He cannot undertake himself to read all the documents. He has his officers to look over the case and prepare a synopsis, and the minister may discuss the law points with him. Take the case of the Minister of Justice. The minister has to revise a death sentence. The record is sent to Mr. Power, an officer of the department. Mr. Power reads it all, makes an abstract of it, annotates it for the minister, and even will discuss it with the minister. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) knows very well that the minister has not the physical time to do all these things. He cannot do the work unless he has some one to take the record, analyse it, and put the work before him. That is the work Mr. Rothwell is doing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Nothing could illustrate better the absolute absurdity of this system whereby appeals are taken to the Minister of the Interior. The Prime Minister says it is physically impossible for the minister to give such time to that which would enable him to deal with it as a judge would deal with it.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not what I said. I said it is impossible for the minister to do the work himself unless he has an officer to go over it to study the record and to make an abstract of it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then I say it is a scandal. It is nothing but a downright scandal that a man who is constituted a judge, an appellate court in connection with the rights of litigants, should resort to a brief, or discuss that case with any man outside of counsel. The hon. gentleman will not say that in the courts of this country the judges are assisted by the advice of clerks attached to those courts in regard to cases that have to be argued before them. It has never been suggested that such a thing happens or could happen. It would be a fearful scandal if any parties could approach or be in a position to approach the judge. The right hon. gentleman smiles.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, I do.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then, I will discuss the subject a little more fully, because the hon. gentleman should take a more serious view of it, and the public will do so whether he smiles or not. The minister acting as a court gives a decision which is not the result of the deliberation of the judge after counsel on both sides have been heard, but the result of the work and the assistance of a gentleman who has had an audience with the judge after the counsel have gone away or before they have appeared. It is the result of an ex parte hearing or an ex parte consultation behind their backs.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Suppose the minister did not happen to be a lawyer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What has been done by Mr. Sifton, who is a lawyer, is to call in the Minister of Justice to assist him. No one pretends that this man is called in and sits with the minister. No one has ever suggested that he should call a clerk in to advise with him. Think of the dangers that such a system suggests. This overworked Mr. Rothwell, this man whose hands are so full, might also on the same principle get other assistance, and the rival parties on their part might induce favourable views and favourable authorities to be sent in to the minister. I venture to say that none of the parties litigating before that tribunal have ever dreamed that its decision was prepared by Mr. Rothwell, who gave to the minister the assistance that Mr. Power, for instance, gives in totally dissimilar cases. The judicial work is always ended before these capital cases come before the Justice Department at all. The question of right is all settled, the question of liberty is begun, the punishment has been inflicted, and the question there is not a judicial one at all. It is a question of the exercise of the clemency of the Crown; and there, just as other matters are prepared for council the minister gets the assistance of his officers; but it is not suggested that the minister is ever acting between rival parties or rival interests who have a public judicial hearing before him. So that I think the attempted illustration is a most unfortunate one; but it strengthens a view which is rapidly obtaining, that that tribunal is totally unsuitable for the very important work that has to be performed. That work, according to the law of parliament, is the work of a judge or a minister put in the position of a judge, and, I think it will come with a shock to the public that this work is disregarded, not by the head of the department assisted by a colleague sitting in court, but is the result of the work of Mr. Rothwell. Now, what other work does Mr. Rothwell do? These law clerks are not in every department; there is one in the Railway Department, and there is one in the Interior Department; and up to this date it has been explained in parliament—whether by this administration or not I will not say, but by the last administration it certainly was—that these law clerks are appointed merely to prepare cases for the consideration of the department responsible for the law of the government, that is, the legal Advising Department; and that in the Railway Department, for instance, the law clerk has been used for the performance of simple work, though of a technical character, while the responsibility for legal opinions in any important matter always rests on the Department of Justice. The work of these law clerks is practically that of a solicitor, such as conveyancing or preparing a case for the opinion of counsel. What other work of the high character suggested does Mr. Rothwell as law clerk do?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend will pardon me, but I must tell him frankly that I am more than surprised at the criticism which he has made of the duties performed by Mr. Rothwell in connection with appeal cases. First of all, I disclaim the statement which the hon. gentleman has placed in my mouth, that Mr. Rothwell practically makes the opinion of the minister. What I say is that the Minister of the Interior would be lax in his duty, in connection with the important duties which devolve upon him in these appeal cases—putting aside the question whether he is or is not a lawyer—if he did not avail himself of the ability of a lawyer to prepare for him an abstract of the case and put the question in issue before him. For instance, here is a bundle of cases that come from the Yukon. There may be in the bundle a great deal of material which is important to the issue or not important, relevant or not relevant. He has an officer who goes over the record, prepares an abstract, and puts the case to be argued by counsel. Can it be pretended that the minister should not avail himself of the advantage of having a person versed in the law to prepare a statement of the case to be argued and on which counsel may be consulted? The hon. gentleman says there is no similarity between this case and the cases which come before the Minister of Justice involving the question of life or death. The hon. gentleman says that in such cases there is no question of right to decide. Can there be a greater right than the question of life or death?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before it comes to the minister, the right is absolutely gone.

The PRIME MINISTER. I deny it. It is not a matter of the caprice of the minister to say that this one is to be pardoned and that one is not. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should speak in that way. He has been a Minister of Justice himself, and he knows that there are no more important duties to be performed by the Minister of Justice than to decide whether the sentence of death is to be executed or not; and in deciding that question the Minister of Justice is not guided by his own caprice or his personal sentiment. He has to follow the rules just as much as the judge at the trial. How is he to arrive at that conclusion? He as an officer of the department, versed in the law, to look over the case and make a precis of it, and draw the attention of the minister to this point or that, which may aid him in coming to a conclusion, whether or not he will advise the Governor General to exercise clemency. That is the important work done by Mr. Power, and it is the kind of work that, in a lesser degree, Mr. Rothwell has performed for the Minister of the Interior. He has to prepare a precis for the minister, call attention to the points of law and fact involved, so that when the case is argued before the minister, he will be in a position to more clearly follow it, and make up his mind as to what weight should be attached to the arguments. Apart from these duties, he has to discharge the duties which every law clerk has to perform.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does Mr. Rothwell actually prepare a precis of the cases argued before the Minister of the Interior, and put that before him before the counsel appear?

The PRIME MINISTER. I understand that he goes over the matter and prepares the case so that the minister may familiarize himself with it, and call the attention of counsel to the points involved. There are some papers in the record which are relevant, and others which are not, some which are important and others not, and the minister would be lax in his duty if he had not the record sifted so that he might know what documents were really important before counsel came before him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will agree with me that I have some ground for surprise at his statement. Would it not be a scandal that a factum should be prepared by the clerk of the court, in cases appealed to, say, the Supreme Court, and this factum be put before the judges?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not said that Mr. Rothwell prepares a factum. But, taking the case of the Supreme Court, whenever an appeal is taken to that court, the clerk prepares an abstract of the record before it goes before the judges, and that work requires to be done by a lawyer. The clerk does not prepare a factum, but an abstract.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to know just what Mr. Rothwell does in connection with an appeal to the minister. Does he analyse the evidence or what does that abstract mean to which the Prime Minister refers?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I regret exceedingly that my hon. friend should put an explanation into my mouth, that I did not give. If Mr. Rothwell were responsible for the judgment of the minister, that would be a scandal, but I never said anything of the kind. I simply said that the increased business of the department had entailed considerable increased work on him, and I cited the business of the Yukon as an illustration.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have asked a very important question. We know what Mr. Power does in connection with capital cases, and I would like to know what Mr. Rothwell does in connection with these appeals from Mr. Senkler, the gold commissioner in the Yukon?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have said that Mr. Rothwell's duties were increased, and the hon. gentleman evidently misunderstood my remarks since he has so very vigorously misrepresented me. The policy of sending these appeals to a minister is not under discussion, and there are many appeals to the minister in which counsel do not appear at all, and in cases where counsel do appear there is nothing that Mr. Rothwell does, that would influence the mind of the minister in the matter at all. The minister can use his own judgment, after hearing what is said on both sides, but there is considerable work to be done of a clerical nature, and which at the same time demands a trained legal mind, and which the minister himself could not be expected to do. It is a great convenience, not only to the minister, but to the counsel, to have a synopsis of the regulations prepared, so that they may know what regulations were in force at the time the dispute arose, and some very eminent counsel are very glad to have this work done. But, I do not wish to be understood as having said that Mr. Rothwell assumes the position of judge or in any way acted as a judge in connection with these appeals. I know that his duties have been very much increased. Since I have been connected with the department, he has had to work until late at night every day to get up his work in connection with the department. As the hon. gentleman has been discussing this theory of referring everything to the Department of Justice, I would say, from my own experience, that that is utterly impracticable, and would cause great dissatisfaction. If every little matter in controversy were to be referred to the Department of Justice, the parties interested would be dead and gone in many cases, before a decision could be had, because that department could not possibly get through the work. It is much better to have an efficient officer in each department, and I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman has not cause for complaint at all of the way the business has been conducted in the department, with regard to these important matters.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As the Solicitor General is not here, it is hardly fair to say that the Department of Justice is in such a condition, that the other departments cannot afford to refer important questions to it, because the delay would be too great. However, that is not the point we were discussing. The Prime Minister said that he understood—and I want to get it from the acting Minister of the Interior, as the Prime Minister was not very certain—that Mr. Rothwell prepared an abstract of these appeal cases for the acting minister or the minister. I wish to find out if the Prime Minister was correct in that regard.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know what the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) calls an 'abstract.' But, whatever it may be called, it does not affect the case in the way the hon. gentleman suggests. If Mr. Rothwell is asked for information by the minister he prepares it for him. In many cases he makes an abstract. I know he has done so for me. The preparation of these cases involves a great deal of work, and it is work that can only be done by a capable, responsible man.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) knows what an abstract or precis of a case is. But he has avoided the question I put, and that was, whether the Prime Minister was right in saying that Mr. Rothwell made an abstract of the cases coming before the minister for appeal. For instance, he told how Mr. Power made a precis of cabinet cases which is laid before the Minister of Justice. That is very close to a factum of the case. If the question involved is one of fact, it means reviewing the evidence bearing upon that question; if the question is one of law, it means the selection and arrangement of the authorities. Now, is that the class of work performed by Mr. Rothwell, either in cases where no counsel appears or in cases where counsel appears?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know that he does this to the extent indicated by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then, what does he do? If the hon. gentleman is going to ask $400 additional for an officer's salary, he should be able to tell what his duties are.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think I have explained very fairly to the House and that the House has understood me. The hon. gentleman has made some comparisons, and I leave it to the House to say whether even on the basis of the comparisons he has made these other officers are not receiving larger salaries, in proportion to their duties, than Mr. Rothwell.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then, what does he do?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend must be reasonable. I expect to give all reasonable information with respect to every item. But I cannot be expected to be as familiar with all these details as one who has been in the department for a long time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But you have had some cases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Quite a number. Every member of the House is entitled to all reasonable information, and, so far as I am concerned, he shall have it. I shall not ask to be excused. I may not give it with the same ability as the minister himself (Mr. Sifton), but I will take care to acquire all reasonable information for every hon. member. In this case, I think the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is particularly unreasonable in expecting me to go into every detail of what an officer does day by day. I suppose the members of the House must, to some extent, accept the statement of the minister with regard to the duties of an officer in his department without furnishing in the merest detail every duty he performs. I say, from my observation and knowledge since I have been in the department, that Mr. Rothwell's duties are very numerous, onerous and responsible. The hon. gentleman has been a member of the House for some time, and I am sure he never heard of such a thing as making a minister go into details in such a matter. The business of the department has increased very much indeed, due largely to the business in the Yukon. These duties are such as the head of the department thinks it is necessary for Mr. Rothwell to perform. When an officer of the department is asked to furnish regulations referring to a certain matter—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Orders in council—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, orders in council, for instance, or statutes, and so on; these things must be done correctly. I have found Mr. Rothwell very diligent and very faithful. In cases I have asked him, he produced the statutes, which it must take him a considerable time to find, the regulations and so on. That facilitates the hearing of the case when the counsel have come and puts the minister in a much better position to deal intelligently with the matter than he otherwise could. Then, I have explained in a general way, that Mr. Rothwell takes the place of the deputy minister when the deputy is absent. I do not say he is entitled to remuneration directly for that, but being so called upon increases his responsibility. And I may also point out that, notwithstanding this change that has been made, there is a reduction on the whole item. The salary received by Mr. Hall before was $2,800, and the sum of $800 is divided equally between two officers, Mr. Rothwell and Mr. Keyes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has whittled down Mr. Rothwell's work in this appellate court almost to the fine end of nothing. It was a heavy job as the Prime Minister told it; Mr. Rothwell had to prepare an abstract of these cases, to select what was relevant and what was irrelevant on these questions of fact and so on, so that it seemed surprising that Mr. Rothwell could perform these duties, or act for the deputy of the department with so many other things to do. Now, the acting minister left us with the impression that if there are counsel in the case Mr. Rothwell is careful to abstain from any interference; if there is no counsel, all Mr. Rothwell does is to show the minister where the orders in council can be found. Then he finds out the statutes—there are not many of them, and the experience probably in one case would enable him at the touch of a bell to do all that work in a very few minutes. Therefore, in regard to this judicial work my alarm is largely allayed; the Prime Minister alarmed me, when on his explanation, I inferred that this gentleman was sharing a large amount of the judicial work thrown upon the shoulders of the Minister of the Interior. Now, I am not going to be unreasonable. Here is a gentleman whose name is up for a large increase, and it cannot be for that work. What other work does he do as a law clerk in the department?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suppose my hon. friend is somewhat familiar with the work of that department. Mr. Rothwell has a great many troublesome questions to deal with, especially in regard to the half-breed claims to land. Many matters also come from the Yukon that require a decision by the minister, and in his absence Mr. Rothwell has to deal with them. There are numerous matters to attend to in regard to titles to land, preparations of leases granted by the hundred daily, as it appears to me.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
On a printed form.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Even if they were in printed form, they require to be carefully examined and filled up.

Mr. FOSTER. Did he draw up that of Philp?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman has talked so long and so often on that subject, that I am not sure whether he ever got a lease or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the work of advising on titles does the Minister of the Interior take his opinion direct and act upon it, or is the matter referred to the Justice Department?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He reports either to the deputy or to the minister.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
And that is acted on directly?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think in most every case that comes under my notice they are referred to the Department of Justice when it is thought necessary; but in regard to titles, where he makes his report the deputy minister is satisfied and acts upon it.

Mr. CLANCY. I have been listening for some good reason for this increase that might not just as well apply to any other clerk in the department. I do not know a single clerk in any of the departments that the reason alleged by the hon. gentleman might not just as fairly be applied. We are told that Mr. Rothwell works well, that is to be assumed; that he is courteous, that is to be assumed; that he has increasing work, that is to be assumed. If a clerk starts out at the foot of the ladder in the third-class and goes to the maximum in the first-class, it is presumed that he has had increasing duties all the time that entitled him to an increase. If that be not the case I entirely misunderstand the reason for the advancement of these clerks. I have heard no reason alleged why Mr. Rothwell should be singled out as a special case to be given an advance of $400. I assume that Mr. Rothwell is a very efficient clerk, but that is not a sufficient justification. When the hon. gentleman had concluded his attempt to show what Mr. Rothwell's enormous duties were I had about made up my mind that he had no duties.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend must know that in all the departments of the service these increases are asked on the responsibility of the minister, and I am satisfied that this man is entitled to an increased remuneration. From my own knowledge of the work that he has to perform and the responsibility placed upon him, I think he is entitled to this at least, and in my opinion to more.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, what does the minister say with reference to the next one? Here is a man, Mr. Keys, to whom we are asked to vote $2,200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Whose place does Mr. Keyes take?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He succeeds Mr. John R. Hall.

Mr. FOSTER. What became of Mr. Hall?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was placed on the retired list.

Mr. FOSTER. At what age?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. His age was fifty-three.

Mr. FOSTER. And he got what allowance?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He got $1,456.

Mr. DAVIN. A year?

Mr. FOSTER. What did Mr. Keyes get?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. $1,550 in his former position.

Mr. FOSTER. What reason can the hon. minister give for taking a man who was getting $1,550 and giving him $2,400?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suppose it would not be fair for me to ask the hon. gentleman who was responsible for the salary of his predecessor, which was $2,800, I understand that Mr. Keyes has been twenty odd years in the service. He had worked up, and was thought well qualified to occupy this important position made vacant by the retirement of Mr. Hall, who received $2,800. He has received this promotion.

Mr. FOSTER. That is no reason at all. Does the hon. minister mean to take the ground that when an old officer retires anybody who gets his place has his salary immediately put up to that amount? The point is that Mr. Keyes was getting $1,550. That was the salary of a first-class clerk, not at the maximum. The maximum salary of a first-class clerk would be $1,800. So that it would take $250 to reach the maximum by regular grades of $50 each, which Mr. Keyes had to earn if he had been promoted in the line of a first-class clerk. Then, the hon. minister knows that the next rank is that of a chief clerk, and a chief clerk commences, not with a salary of $2,400. Does not the hon. minister think that it would have been quite a sufficient raise if Mr. Keyes had been made a chief clerk with the minimum salary of a chief clerkship instead of giving him $850 of a raise and making his salary $2,400? What justification has the hon. minister for giving Mr. Keyes an advancement of $250 to allow him the maximum of a first-class clerkship, and then adding this large amount to bring his salary up to $2,400. Why would he not put it at the minimum of a chief clerk?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The position is a very important one. I do not know that the salary is fixed at all except by precedent. Therefore, in positions of that kind there is no rule as regards salaries. Whatever parliament thinks fit to fix the salaries at has been accepted as the amounts at which these salaries should properly be fixed. I can give no other explanation than that Mr. Keyes has been for a great many years in the department. He was picked out as an officer who is qualified by experience and by ability in every way for the position. I suppose that if one who had never been in the department had been appointed, it would have been reasonable to have fixed his salary at a lower amount than one who had been in the department, and particularly one who had been for so many years in the department, whose ability and character are so well known. Mr. Keyes being the best man to appoint, I think, it is reasonable that he should be paid this salary, which does not approach to the salary of his predecessor within $400 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is quite a little less than the First Minister gets.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am inclined to think that the duties of the office and the ability of the man entitle him to this amount.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister has missed the point entirely. The minister thinks that these salaries are fixed at the caprice of parliament. But we have a civil service system, and when you get these first-class clerks or chief clerks they commence at a minimum and go up to a maximum by certain grades. If Mr. Keyes had been at the head of the first-class, the natural step would have been to have got a promotion to the chief clerkship, and to have commenced at the maximum salary. But, he was given $250 of a raise to get him to the head of his own class, and then given $600 more, and paid $2,400. There is no justification in the world for that. This is a case simply of the minister doing just what he likes and expecting the party to do as his whim dictates. No reason at all has been shown why you should take Mr. Keyes from $250 below the maximum of a first-class clerk, and then, not contenting yourself with making him a chief clerk at the minimum, you give him $600 above the minimum. Here is Mr. Hall, who is fifty-three years of age, and $1,400 is paid to him for superannuation. You save in salary, but by this inordinate jump, you are paying Mr. Keyes $600 beyond the maximum of a first-class clerk.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend is hardly fair to a man who has been so many years in the service, and who is so well qualified to occupy that position.

Mr. FOSTER. How many years in the service?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Twenty-two years.

Mr. FOSTER. Cannot the minister run his eye over the civil service record and find scores and scores of men who have been there twenty-two years, and who are not getting $2,000 or $1,800?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And perhaps ought not to be there at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, it is the minister's duty to hunt them out. I venture to say scores of men are in the departments who have been there longer, and who are just as good clerks as Mr. Keyes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think my hon. friend will find that to be the case. There may be many who have not advanced in their positions. If a man is fitted by ability and character after long service to fill an important position, why should he not have it?

Mr. FOSTER. But the chief clerkship commences with $1,800.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As secretary of the department he has a great deal of responsible work.

Mr. FOSTER. Would not $250 have been a good advance for a single year?

Mr. DAVIN. I come from a country where we have mainly farmers, and in the interests of these farmers in other days, from these benches the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) and others, howled against superannuation, howled against the statutory increase of $50, and here we have in one case an increase by promotion of one-fifth of a man's salary, and in another case a still greater increase given, and a man in the prime of life superannuated at $1,400 a year. That is the style of thing we have to deal with in the Interior Department. It contravenes every principle of economy and goes in the teeth of all the professions made by the Liberals when in opposition.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Prime Minister say that such an increase is going to be made the rule? Here is a gentleman not at the head of the first-class, and he is made a chief clerk, the minimum of which is $1,800, and which would give him an increase of $250. That would have been sufficient for this young man in the first year. But, what justification is there that he should be raised from the first-class, put into the next class above it, and put at the maximum of that class?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is an easy answer.

Mr. FOSTER. Easy if you want to do it.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, the thing is not without precedent. This young man has been appointed secretary of the department, and he is given the salary attached to the position. Suppose, that instead of being promoted from the service he was brought in from the outside, he would have been given the salary attached to the position also. Here is a precedent in point. Mr. Burgess was an officer in the department who had a well-deserved reputation for ability. Mr. Burgess was taken into a relatively inferior position in 1876. He had risen somewhat when the position of deputy minister became vacant, and he was given the position. He jumped at once into the position, and he got the salary of $3,200 which is attached to it. Mr. Keyes gets the salary attached to the position.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. gentleman is quite wrong. There is no salary attached to the secretary of a department as secretary. You can make a first-class clerk secretary if you like. The deputy minister gets a minimum of $3,200 according to law, and Mr. Burgess, an old servant, came in at that.

The PRIME MINISTER. He was a young servant.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, he got the salary of $3,200 attached to the position, but there is no salary of $2,400 attached to the position of secretary.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no statutory salary as in the case of a deputy minister, but my information is that the secretary always gets more than $2,200. The salary of Mr. Hall was $2,800.

Mr. FOSTER. He came into the service in 1865.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He served three years more than Mr. Keyes, and still you paid Mr. Hall $2,800 for years, so that, you must have considered it an important position. The position of secretary of the Interior Department is very responsible, and the salary asked is not high in comparison with the $2,800 paid for several years to Mr. Hall.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Hall was in the service in a responsible position; but Mr. Keyes was a second-class clerk. You advance him from one class to another, and then you put him at the maximum of a new class instead of allowing him to work his way up. He gets very nearly what Mr. Hall got after having been a long time secretary of the department. The fact is that the minister (Mr. Sifton) helps his favourites to large increases of salary. They do his bidding, and there are men in that same department who work just as faithfully and just as well, and they cannot get even the $50 they ought to get as their statutory allowance. But the minister has favourites, and the minister has to pick and cull and choose, and he does so from his favourites in that department. He is doing it now, and he has done it from the time he came there. He commenced by penetrating a gross injustice on some of the best officers in his department, and then he picks out his favourites and advances them at the rate of $600 or $800 a year. Every one knows that this is eating all life and ambition out of the civil service and out of the department. The minister has not shown that Mr. Keyes is a man of such great ability that he must be put up by a leap of $850.

The PRIME MINISTER. Some one must be secretary of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. And some one could be secured at $1,800.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I do not think that will do. There is a salary attached to the importance of the position, and the salary ought to be more than that. Mr. Keyes apparently is a good officer, and he has been promoted to that position, and a salary is given to him, which he ought to have.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the acting Minister, when Mr. Hall was made secretary of the department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In 1883. I think.

Mr. CLANCY. Did he receive $2,400 then?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not in a position to answer that.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman could show that Mr. Hall commenced the secretaryship of the department at $2,400, then the right hon. Prime Minister would probably have something of a case; but if Mr. Hall discharged the duties of the office at a lower salary, then there is no salary in particular attached to the secretaryship.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend must see that that would be no fair comparison at all. In the last three or four years the business of the department has more than doubled; and it is not fair to say that the salary paid twenty years ago to an officer occupying the same position, would be a fair salary to-day, when the duties are ten times as great. There is no foundation for the statement that the minister has been picking out favourites.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I see that Mr. Roy, the secretary of the Public Works Department, only gets $2,100.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If any one can dispute my statement that the duties and responsibilities of this man are heavy, and that is the reason we ask for a fair remuneration for him, that would be a fair matter for discussion. But my hon. friend will go through with the whole list, and he will find that in no case has any question of politics or favouritism entered.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose other secretaries have a good deal of work, too. Here is a secretary in the Department of Public Works see what an immense amount of business is rolled in on him, with the minister away, and he only gets $2,100.

Mr. TALBOT. He is fresh, just coming in.

Mr. FOSTER. The one that went out was not fresh, and he only got $2,100. Then, there is a secretary in the Department of Railways and Canals, who has been a secretary since 1896, and he only gets $2,200. So that you cannot say that the secretary of the Department of the Interior is overwhelmed with business, and that other secretaries are not. The fact is that most of these secretaries came in as about first-class clerks, and worked themselves up by the increases; but this man is put at the head of the list at the start. Who is the secretary of the Finance Department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Treadwell.

Mr. FOSTER. He only gets $2,100. I am satisfied the Minister of Finance will not allow any invidious comparison to be made between him and Mr. Keyes, and Mr. Treadwell is an old officer. I venture to say that he does just as much work as Mr. Keyes, and does it just as well.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is a good officer.

Mr. FOSTER. But he must be satisfied with $2,100, because he is under a minister who has some conscience in these matters, or is restrained by his deputy, I do not know which, while the other has no conscience and is out of the arena. No deserving man who is at work in the departments, doing an equal kind of work and getting less salary, but will feel aggrieved when he sees you putting a man at a jump above the rest of his class, when you first put him in office.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What must they have felt like when my hon. friend paid his predecessor $2,800, while we are only asking $2,400?

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. gentleman not see a difference between a man who is in his first year in the secretaryship, and a man who has been in it many years ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When the hon. gentleman first paid Mr. Hall $2,800, the number of letters written in the department was 60,680, while last year, the number was 186,899.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has established his case ; Mr. Keyes has written 186,899 letters.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not believe you can establish that Mr. Keyes writes a single letter more than Mr. Hall did. In fact, neither of them writes the letters.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not object to the questions of the hon. gentleman, but I would appeal to him, if it is fair to put words into my mouth that I did not use. I said that I simply wished to show by these figures the increased business of the department ; and even if the secretary does not write these letters, he is responsible for them.

Mr. CLANCY. Upon the same ground, has the hon. gentleman increased the salary of every clerk in the department ? Because they all had their share of the increased work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have asked increases for a number of them. The duties and responsibilities of all the officers have not increased in the same proportion.

Mr. FOSTER. Does Mr. Keyes's name as secretary, go at the foot of every one of these 186,000 letters ? I think the minister is under the impression that Mr. Keyes reads all these letters, or signs them all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that Mr. Keyes does a bit more because the number of letters has increased.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The business of the department has increased largely, and consequently the duties of these officers.

Mr. FOSTER. It is an indefensible increase. Who is the accountant ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The late accountant, Mr. Pinard, died. He received a salary of $2,350. His assistant, Mr. Beddoe, was promoted. He was receiving $1,800, and now gets $1,850.

Mr. FOSTER. Why did Mr. Beddoe only get his statutory increase. Mr. Keyes was promoted to the maximum of a first-class clerk, and given $50 increase. And Mr. Beddoe was only given the $50 increase over his former salary. Why was he treated differently from Mr. Keyes ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

The PRIME MINISTER. To prevent the criticism of my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Beddoe has been in the service since 1883, and all he got on his promotion was an increase of $50, although he took the place of a man who was getting $2,350. Is it because he had not the pull that Mr. Keyes had. What about the increase to Mr. King ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think that any exception can be taken to the increase of $100 to Mr. King, the chief astronomer.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. King is a very competent man ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Would you think he was as competent as Mr. Keyes ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For his particular duties he is very much more competent, but he has not anything like the hours or the responsibility of the other man.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. King is a man of the highest class of technical service, but he has to be satisfied with $2,200. But Mr. Keyes, who has none of these qualifications, but is simply a clerk, gets $850 of an increase, and is made chief clerk at the maximum of a chief clerk's salary. Is that a fair way of rewarding real merit ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am willing to admit that, so far as Mr. King is concerned, he is a man of exceeding ability, but I think there is a very great difference between him and Mr. Keyes in the hours and class of work, and that sort of thing.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt the difference is that Mr. King does not do the work Mr. Keyes does, and consequently has not the big pull. He is simply a scientific man.

Mr. CLANCY. We had the Minister of Agriculture the other day urging an increase on the ground of technical qualifications, but here we have the acting Minister of the Interior saying that such qualifications do not count for as much as qualifications of an inferior kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is Mr. White ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is the geographer in the department. We are giving him $1,800. He was transferred from the Geological Department at that figure, but through some error last year the proper amount was not voted him, and I will have to ask for $200 to be paid him out of the supplementary estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has Mr. White been in the service ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Fifteen years, and he is a very competent man, highly recommended by Mr. Dawson.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is a thoroughly good man who has been sixteen years in the service, and you make him keep himself and family on $1,800, but Keyes jumps from $1,550 to $2,400. Is that treating real merit properly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I were to express my personal opinion, I must say that I do not think scientific knowledge receives from the government or the universities sufficient remuneration. It is unfortunate that men of such high scientific attainments can be engaged at these salaries, I believe that they are entitled to more—however, this is not a time to discuss that.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the acting minister inquire whether there were others who would take Mr. Keyes's position at $1,800 or $2,000?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman must know that while it would be easy to get a man to take the place, it is not easy to get the man of the ability to fill it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not Mr. King's character well known?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not saying anything against Mr. King: on the contrary, I have said that the salaries of scientific men are low.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. acting minister had an opportunity to show his fairness. The minister is away taking no interest in things. Here is the chief astronomer of the Dominion, a man who is known throughout the hemisphere, who receives a less salary than is given to Mr. Keyes. He might have given less salary to Mr. Keyes and added to that of Mr. King, and if Mr. Keyes did not like it, but decided to leave, it would be easy to get a man to fill the place equally well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I can get my colleagues to agree, I do not know but that the hon. gentleman may hear more of that.

Mr. DAVIN. In 1884, Mr. A. M. Burgess, first-class chief clerk in the Interior Department, received only $1,800.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What position did he hold?

Mr. DAIN. He is called secretary of the department. His ability was recognized by everybody, and the late Sir John Macdonald showed his appreciation of it by promoting him. He was appointed to the same position as Mr. Keyes, with $600 less salary than Mr. Keyes gets. I say this shows a perfect recklessness in dealing with the funds of the public.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are the three first-class clerks at $1,800?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are Mr. Clayton, Mr. Pereira, and Mr. Witcher.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has Mr. Clayton been in the department?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Twenty-eight years.

Mr. FOSTER. He is a good clerk is he not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. He has been in the department since April, 1872. He was there six years before Mr. Keyes, yet he is kept as a first-class clerk at the head of his class.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He was there before Mr. Burgess.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not have thought of that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) had not pointed it out. Mr. Clayton is a good officer and older in service than Mr. Keyes, yet he is kept at $1,800, and does not even get a statutory increase.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not this year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And Mr. Clayton was there longer than Mr. Burgess during the administration of hon. gentleman opposite, and he was not promoted.

Mr. FOSTER. Was not he?

Mr. LANDERKIN. He was not promoted as rapidly as Mr. Burgess, and yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) never complained. What makes him complain now? His own salary must have been cut down.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Burgess was appointed a first-class clerk by the Reform government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am glad that hon. gentlemen opposite were so considerate of those appointees. The fact that Mr. Burgess was an appointee of the Reform government shows that he was a good man.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there increases among the first-class clerks?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Checkley gets an increase of $50, from $1,650 to $1,700.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one here at $1,600, one at $1,500, and two at $1,400. Are there any increases to these?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they not good clerks?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They do their duty.

Mr. FOSTER. These clerks have been a long time in the service, and they have worked well, and they do not get even the $50 increase that they are entitled to, while these large increases are given to Mr. Rothwell and Mr. Keyes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the distribution of statutory increases, the increases were not given to those with the larger salaries.

Mr. FOSTER. Those that get lower salaries do not get any increase.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The increases are not universally allowed.

Mr. FOSTER. In the second-class clerks, who gets a statutory increase?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Cote, Mr. Peletier and Mr. Steers.

Mr. FOSTER. There are others that are eligible with lower salaries. What is the reason they do not get any?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The great majority of those in that class receive $1,400. Those who get the increase, I suppose, were recommended as specially efficient men.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, what about the third-class clerks?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Twelve third-class clerks receive the increase.

Mr. FOSTER. On what principle were these selected? Was it on the recommendation of the deputy that these were fitted for it and deserving of it, and that the others were not? Was there a report of the deputy on the matter?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed the deputy did make a report and recommendation.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, probably the hon. gentleman could find out what reasons were given why a large number were not given their increase.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman will see that the same policy was adopted as prevails in the other departments. The increases were not given by reason of favouritism, but they were given in almost every case on account of the efficient manner in which the clerk had performed his duties, or the extra intelligence which he had shown.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there an increase given to all whom the deputy recommended?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be interesting, then, to know on what principle the judge acted after the abstract had been prepared by the deputy. How many private secretaries has the acting minister?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Collier is the private secretary of the minister. My own private secretary is Mr. Hunter. It has been my custom ever since I have been a member of this House to bring my own secretary to Ottawa during the session. I pay him out of my own pocket, and still continue to do so, although a member of the government, and acting Minister of the Interior.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that that is a thing a minister without portfolio ought to do. If he takes an active part in administrative work, I think he is entitled to a secretary paid out of the public funds. How many secretaries has the Minister of the Interior?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. One.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Campbell is one, Mr. McKenna is one.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think Mr. McKenna is acting in that capacity now.

Mr. FOSTER. Miss Crawford is a private secretary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. She is a stenographer.

Mr. FOSTER. And Miss Ellis is a private secretary, and Miss Hawley.

Mr. DAVIN. They are not in the department now, are they?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think they are as private secretaries.

Mr. DAVIN. I suppose they are on the banks of the Danube.

Mr. FOSTER. If the acting minister will just inquire into that. The Department of the Interior as such has one private secretary, and there may be an extra, but I would like to know about the whole number that are actually doing private secretary work. Who is Mr. Marchand, second-class clerk?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is a new appointment in the accountant's office, a resident of Ottawa. I understand he was an experienced accountant.

Mr. FOSTER. Whose place did he take?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He took the place of Mr. Pinard who died.

Mr. FOSTER. Did Mr. Marchand take his place?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, I do not think so. Mr. Beddoe was appointed accountant and Mr. Marchand assistant accountant.

Mr. FOSTER. When Mr. Beddoe was appointed accountant, Mr. Marchand was brought in?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Was inquiry made as to whether there was any person in the department who could have taken the place by way of promotion? It does seem hard, where you have such a large body of servants as you have in the Department of the Interior, when a chance of promotion presents itself, that deserving clerks should not get that promotion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think if my hon. friend will look over the list, he will see that he is not correct in saying that there are many clerks available for promotion. A position of that kind requires special qualifications. I have no special knowledge of the qualifications of many of the second class clerks, but I am informed that there are none in the department getting less than the amount at which Mr. Marchand was appointed.

Mr. FOSTER. There are thirty-eight clerks over whom Mr. Marchand was placed, who are looking for promotion and working up in their class. Mr. Marchand was brought in and placed over all of them. Consequently, a step forward was denied to those who had been working for years. There are some good clerks there evidently. I do not want to name them, but there are numbers that have reached the maximum of a third-class clerk.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not understand my hon. friend as referring to third-class clerks. While possibly they may be well fitted for their work, they have not the special qualifications for this office.

Mr. FOSTER. What was Mr. Marchand's business?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was a bookkeeper and accountant by profession.

Mr. FOSTER. In a business place in Ottawa?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was in one of the wholesale houses in Ottawa before he was appointed.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister must remember that when you have a system of civil service, and promotions are not very many, it is rather a grievance when you go beyond men who are qualified and bring in a man from outside. There are thirty-eight clerks in this class, and I have not the least doubt that there are some of them well qualified. It seems hard that an outsider should be brought in, and that promotion should be kept from those who are old servants.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is a great deal in what my hon. friend says, but I take the responsibility of saying that there are none in that class.

Mr. FOSTER. If I were the minister I would not take that responsibility.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I take the responsibility on the information of the officers of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. I would recommend the minister that he be as refreshingly candid as the mayor of Montreal in regard to the appointment of Mr. McShane. While he could not justify it on its merits, he said that it was one of those political appointments that had to be made. If the hon. gentleman does, he will say the same thing in regard to this one.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If that was the case I would say so. I would be perfectly justified in making the appointment of a political friend to the department. But, I was not thinking of the appointment from a political standpoint at all. I told the hon. gentleman that the report of the deputy was that he did not think there were any clerks in the department qualified for that position. There are many clerks who have no special training as accountants whatever. I have given an answer as honestly as I can, and I believe it to be honest.

Mr. FOSTER. We have to take the minister's statement, but we are able to think our own thoughts in reference to it. I suppose this is simply and solely a political appointment?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all. I do not know Mr. Marchand, but I understand it is a good appointment.

Mr. CLANCY. Where there is a chief accountant, I am sure that the Prime Minister will know that any person who is a fairly good writer, and has ordinary qualifications, such as are possessed by one of the clerks in the department, when he is under the direction of the chief accountant, he can do the work. It does not require an expert accountant.

The PRIME MINISTER. Is that the case in Bothwell?

Mr. CLANCY. It is the case here. I am not willing that the right hon. gentleman should think that we require a lower qualification there than here.

The committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be taken up on Monday?

The PRIME MINISTER. The same order as that for to-day, Bills and supply.

Mr. FOSTER. What supply?

The PRIME MINISTER. We will finish the Department of the Interior.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On Monday, when we reach supply, I will move a vote of censure on the government in connection with the case of the John C. Barr.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.10 a.m. (Saturday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 4, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 172) respecting the Canadian Mining and Metallurgical Company (Limited).—(Mr. Casey.)

YUKON—STEAMSHIP YUKONER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved:

That sessional papers 33q., being correspondence in re ss. 'Yukoner,' be printed forthwith, and that rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call attention to some motions for returns that have not yet been complied with. I thought I had a memorandum of them, but, as I have not it under my hand at the moment, I will mention those I remember. One is the return asked for from the Department of Railways and Canals of correspondence with the Canadian Pacific Railway with respect to the arrangement between the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway on their passenger and freight arrangements. This was ordered a long time ago, but has not yet been brought down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Is the hon. member (Mr. Foster) sure that that order has not been complied with?

Mr. FOSTER. Quite sure—not a shadow of doubt. Then, the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) has not brought down the balance of the correspondence on the canteen business.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). No.

Mr. FOSTER. No. But, I would like to have that. I do not recall the others at the moment.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) desired a supplementary return with respect to the representation of the Yukon. I would be glad if he would let me have the first return, which I understand is in his possession, as I desire to compare it with the other.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) here; but, I would be glad if the First Minister would take a note of another return required—the papers in connection with the arrangements with the Bank of Commerce respecting the Yukon Commission. Part of that correspondence was brought down last year, and I should like to have it supplemented before the item with respect to it in the estimates comes up.

Mr. JOHN B. MILLS (Annapolis). On May 30, I asked for all papers, correspondence, telegrams, orders and agreements with reference to the chartering of eight steamships, one steamship for two trips, making nine trips altogether. An attempt has been made to comply with my request, but I have only about three or four letters, with no charters or agreements; and surely the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) will not say that this small return which he has laid upon the Table constitutes all that I have asked for. I would ask that that return be supplemented.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) will send me a memorandum of what he wants, I will try to meet his wishes.

Mr. MILLS. I sent a memorandum to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understood from the First Minister that what was wanted was the letters in regard to the chartering of vessels for carrying hay to South Africa.

Mr. MILLS. This is part of the memorandum that I sent to the Prime Minister: 'All papers, correspondence, telegrams, charters and agreements, with reference to the chartering of the following steamships,'—and then I named them. These papers refer to the chartering of only one steamship, the Manhanset, and very little about her.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) kindly send back the letters, and I will see that the return is completed.

ELECTION FRAUDS—JUDICIAL IN- QUIRY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would say I understood that the Prime Minister would give us to-day an explanation with respect to the proposed commission.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I was just rising for that purpose when my hon. friend rose. I do not know that I can better convey to the House information with regard to this commission than by reading the order in council on the subject :

On a memorandum dated June 2, 1900, from the Minister of Justice submitting that whereas allegations have been made that during and for several years prior and subsequent to the general elections of 1896 for the election of members to the House of Commons of Canada, frauds were committed by returning officers, deputy returning officers, or other parties, in several of the electoral districts either while the votes were being polled or thereafter by the spoiling of the ballots marked by the electors, or by the fraudulent substitution of other ballots for those so marked, or by other fraudulent conduct in respect of the ballots at any time before and up to the return of the writ, and it being most desirable that all such alleged frauds should be investigated, and the recurrence thereof, if any, prevented, to the end that the return may show the actual vote by the electors who vote in each electoral district :

And whereas, it is desirable to appoint a commission with full power to make inquiry, investigation, report and recommendations as hereinafter set forth :

Therefore, the minister recommends that under the provisions of chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, entitled 'An Act respecting inquiries concerning public matters,' the Hon. Sir John Alexander Boyd, Knight Bachelor and president of the Supreme Court of Judicature for Ontario, Chancellor of the province of Ontario (to be chairman), the Hon. William Glenholme Falconbridge, one of Her Majesty's judges of the said Supreme Court, and a member of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice for Ontario, and His Honour Duncan B. MacTavish, judge of the County Court of the county of Carleton, be appointed commissioners under the said Act in respect of the election of members for the House of Commons of Canada, to inquire into and investigate any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect of the poll books, ballot boxes, or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents of the ballot boxes, whether by way of fraudulent alteration, addition, withdrawal or otherwise, during and until the close of the election, and until the return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery :

That the said commissioners have power to hold such inquiry and investigation in every case in which they consider reasonable grounds have, in their opinion, been shown to them for holding the same;

That the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery do produce before the commissioners all poll books, voters' lists, and all other papers, letters, documents and memoranda, and ballot boxes, in connection with any such election whenever the same may be called for by the commissioners for the purpose of any such inquiry and investigation :

That the said commissioners have power to appoint two of Her Majesty's counsel learned in the law, to assist them in such inquiries and investigations, and also a registrar of their proceedings and necessary stenographers; that for the purpose of making such inquiries and investigations they may prescribe such rules and regulations governing the practice and procedure as seem to them proper for the initiation and conduct of such inquiries and investigations, and that in making such inquiries and investigations, they exercise all due despatch, proceeding in each case undergoing inquiry and investigation de die in diem unless for special and sufficient reasons they otherwise determine, and at the close of each inquiry and investigation they report to the Minister of Justice the result thereof :

That the said commissioners be vested with the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and requiring them to give evidence on oath, orally, in writing or on solemn affirmation, if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and to produce such documents and things as such commissioners deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine :

That such commissioners have the same power to enforce attendance of such witnesses, and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases :

That whilst for the purpose of such inquiry and investigation, the attention of the commissioners is specially directed to a period including and subsequent to the general elections of 1896, still such inquiry and investigation is not limited to such period if they deem it advisable to extend the same to a period prior thereto :

That at the close of such inquiries and investigations, the commissioners make such recommendations for amendments to the law respecting the conduct of the elections as are calculated, in their judgment, the better to preserve the sacredness of the ballot, and to enable the electorate in the most effectual manner to exercise their franchise :

And generally that the said commissioners may report any facts, circumstances or opinions that to them seem proper in respect of the matters hereby referred to them.

The committee submit the above recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

Clerk of the Privy Council.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has been able to fulfil the assurance that he gave to the House in reference to this matter. It is quite impossible to follow with exactness a lengthy document of that kind read for the first time. I would suggest, therefore, that this order in council be printed, and I would ask an opportunity to-morrow to offer any suggestions that may occur to me as to means to more fully attain the objects as we all seek, if I find any such suggestions necessary.

The PRIME MINISTER. I move that the document just laid on the Table be printed for the use of members of the House.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA NATIONAL RAILWAY AND TRANSPORT COMPANY.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL (Kent, Ont.) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the Canada National Railway and Transport Company.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto) moved in amendment that the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending the same by adding the following clause :

13. Her Majesty may, at any time, with the consent of parliament, on giving to the company one month's notice in writing, take over the undertaking, property, rights and franchises of the company.

(2). The notice may be given by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the expiration of the period of notification, the said undertaking, property, rights and franchises shall vest absolutely in Her Majesty.

(3). Compensation to the company shall be fixed by the Exchequer Court upon information filed by the Attorney General of Canada, and shall be based upon the reasonable value of the undertaking, property and rights of the company at the time of the giving of the notice, but shall not include prospective values or prospective profits.

(4). In so far as they are not inconsistent herewith, sections 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31 and 32 of the Expropriation Act, chapter 13 of the statutes of 1889, and sections 29 and 30 thereof as amended by an Act of the present session, shall apply to any action taken under this section.

(5). The compensation adjudged shall stand in the stead of the said undertaking, property, rights and franchises, and any claim to or encumbrance upon such undertaking, property, rights and franchises shall, in so far as Her Majesty is concerned, be converted into a claim to such compensation money or a proportionate amount thereof, and shall be void as against Her Majesty, and as against the undertaking, property, rights and franchises vested in Her Majesty under the provisions of this section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to ask whether that amendment is in order. We have had no notice of it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, it was printed in the Journals of Friday last.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). I desire now to press the point of order which I raised when the resolution was introduced the first time. Although the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) appeared to believe that from the peculiar form of this resolution it evaded the provision of the British North America Act, limiting to the action of the government measures involving the expenditure of money, yet I venture to think there is more in the contention I raised than at first glance might appear. Hon. gentlemen are familiar with the provision of the British North America Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. SPEAKER. Let me draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the first line of the amendment: 'Her Majesty may at any time with the consent of parliament.'

Mr. FLINT. I noticed that phrase, Mr. Speaker, but I respectfully submit that that does not seriously alter the question. That this resolution, if adopted, does commit parliament and the government to an expenditure of public money, I think, is quite apparent from the amendment; and that such expenditure of public money should be first recommended to parliament by the government of the day as a matter of public policy, can scarcely be denied. Looking at the form of this resolution, I think we can clearly see that if it is adopted, and if this amendment is adopted, without any further action by parliament than that provided for by this Bill, the House may commit the country to an expenditure of three or four million dollars. The resolution is :

Her Majesty may, at any time, with the consent of parliament, on giving to the company one month's notice in writing, take over the undertaking, property, rights and franchises of the company.

The notice may be given by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the expiration of the period of notification the said undertaking, property, rights and franchises shall vest absolutely in Her Majesty.

Compensation to the company shall be fixed by the Exchequer Court upon information filed by the Attorney General of Canada, and shall be based upon the reasonable value of the undertaking.

And so on. If this amendment is made to this Bill, I contend that parliament is ipso facto giving its consent to the assumption by the government and to further action by parliament in the direction of carrying out the form of the resolution that it is proportionally binding on parliament and on the government as well as upon the company, and I think, in a case of that kind, no step should be taken without the previous sanction of the Governor in Council and the permission of this House. I think the House will generally agree with me that this is a radical departure from anything that has ever taken place here before. Without quoting all the references that could be found on this particular point, and they are very numerous, I may say, in a general way, that Bourinot lays down, in reference to this very clause of the British North America Act, the principle, very broadly, that the adoption of a measure which either directly or indirectly involves government or parliament in the direction of an expenditure of public money should be recommended by the Crown. At page 532, he observes :

The constitutional provision which regulates the procedure of the Canadian House of Commons in this respect applies not only to motions directly proposing a grant of public money, but also to those which involve such a grant. The Canadian Commons, indeed, observe the rule respecting such motions with very great strictness. A member who has not received the permission of the Crown has not been allowed to move the House into committee on a resolution providing for the purchase and exportation by the government of certain depreciated silver coinage then in circulation. In 1871 it was proposed to go into committee on an Address to the Queen for a change in the Union Act, so as to assign the debt of old Canada to the Dominion entirely, and to compensate Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in connection therewith; the Speaker decided that it was just as necessary to interpose the check of a message before adopting an address which may be followed by legislation imposing public burdens, as in the case of a Bill or motion within the direct control of the Canadian parliament.

No cases can be found of any private member in the Canadian Commons receiving the authority of the Crown, through a minister, to propose a motion involving the expenditure of public money. No principle is better understood than the constitutional obligation that rests upon the executive government of alone initiating measures imposing charges upon the public exchequer.

All of the decisions and references that I have been able to find in the short time that I have been able to give to the question bear out that proposition very thoroughly. This resolution, in my humble opinion, comes within the spirit, if not within the letter, of the British North America Act, and I believe it will be found that this is the interpretation given to this Act by jurists, constitutional writers and others who have to deal with the subject. The incorporated action of this company under the Bill involves its clear assent of parliament to future action by the government and the adoption of the principle of the acceptance by the government of this public work without the previous sanction of the Governor in Council, and I therefore, think it should be held to be out of order.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) has raised the question it becomes necessary that you should express an opinion and make a ruling upon it, so that it would be desirable that the view which I expressed the other evening may be stated that it may be in your mind when considering the question that has been raised. I admit that my hon. friend has presented his argument in a very plausible form, and I think that to non-professional gentlemen and perhaps, even to some professional gentlemen, it might appear that the hon. gentleman's argument does not admit of any satisfactory answer. But, there were some considerations which suggested themselves to my mind which appear to be a complete reply to the contention which has been raised, and I will state them briefly to the House at the present moment. It appeared to me that the question which had arisen in respect to the Bill was a question as to private legislation. I take it that it is arguable that the clause of the Bill is similar in sense and meaning to the meaning which are attached to these words: 'The company hereby consents or is willing that the government should give notice and should follow certain provisions to expropriate the property of this company and will submit to such expropriation upon the following conditions': I would take it that it simply means that. The government may do that, not as thereby conferring upon the government, in the exercise of their constitutional powers to take any such expropriation proceedings, but that the company in their charter consent that whenever the proper steps are taken and the proper machinery is used the expropriation of their property will be satisfactory to the company. In other words: We will submit to the terms and conditions which are embodied in the Bill, as the terms and conditions which are to bind us when and if expropriation proceedings are ever taken. I do not think that the clause necessarily means anything more than that. Other Bills of very much the same character, involving precisely the same question, and intended to confer the same powers, have several times passed this parliament for instance, the St. Clair Canal Bill, and the Bill connecting the waters of Lake Champlain with the St. Lawrence. There are two or three Bills which to my own knowledge have passed during the last eight or ten years, and which contain a clause similar to this. If it had been seriously thought by any gentleman on either side, that the inclusion of such a condition in the charter powers went any further than to settle the question as between the company and the government, no doubt the question would have been raised and the legislation stopped. The question is perhaps new so far as the discussion is concerned, but it appears to me that it is clearly arguable that the view which my hon. friend (Mr. Flint) presented is not the view which ought to be taken.

Mr. G. E. CASEY (West Elgin). I am not familiar with the instances referred to by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) in which clauses something similar to this have been put in private Bills; and it would be interesting to know what was the phrasing of these clauses. It is quite certain that to put in a private Bill any clause which in so many words appears to authorize the government to deal in a certain manner with the public moneys, is a very grave innovation, and is contrary to the spirit of the legislation of this House. The idea of authorizing action on the part of the government in a private Bill seems to me to be quite absurd. If, as the Minister of Railways correctly says, words can be found to simply indicate the willingness of the company to submit to action of that kind, were it taken, I do not know that we could raise any objection; but when the clause begins by saying: Her Majesty may do so and so, and Her Majesty may use public money for so and so—whether with or without the consent of parliament—I think we are going outside the limits of private Bill legislation. The question raised by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) as to whether this clause, if passed, would authorize the government to spend this money without further legislation is a somewhat difficult one to decide. If it would, there is no doubt that the motion is out of order. Indeed, there is great reason for arguing that the particular words used might confer that power. If the amendment were phrased something like this:

Her Majesty may agree to expropriate this railway and pay for it out of moneys already voted for that purpose by parliament, the objection might be removed, because such moneys could not be voted without the recommendation of the Crown and without the responsibility of the government of the day. As the clause stands, it certainly gives a great deal of colour to the contention of my hon. friend (Mr. Flint), that it professes to give power to the government to act in a certain way with the public moneys. Apart from that particular contention, it seems to me that the matter of the amendment is so incongruous with a private Bill that it does not appertain to that class of legislation at all, and therefore should be ruled out of order as an amendment to a private Bill. Private Bill legislation is legislation regarding the company interested, and not legislation regarding the handling of public money. Ipsa facto, and in the nature of the amendment, it is incongruous and therefore out of order.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). On this question of order, I would like to point out that the proposed amendment is something that binds the company, but does not bind parliament. It is to protect the public interest as regards the company, but in no way does it commit parliament as regards the expenditure of public money. On that ground alone, the question of order raised by the hon. member (Mr. Flint) and the hon. member (Mr. Casey)—

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). In what way does this amendment protect the public interest?

Mr. MACLEAN. In this way: That if it is seen that on a subsequent occasion that the government of this country should control this railway, then, the provision is in the original Bill securing that control to the country and to parliament.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not at all. At most it could only be considered by the railway company as a notice that under certain conditions they might expect this to be done. Parliament has the power to do with this matter all that is necessary to do, and perhaps with more advantage without this amendment than with it.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is the old story. We are told here time and again that we are proposing to interfere with vested rights without any notice to the company concerned. This provision retains to parliament the right of taking over this road if it wishes to do so. In no way is parliament committed to the expenditure of a single cent. You cannot hold up the interpretation of the constitution prohibiting the introduction of a money measure unless the money is specifically voted, and there is no proposal in this amendment to vote money. It only proposes that in the event of something happening, this parliament can interfere with this private company, in any right it gets under this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not propose to deal with the right to put in a private Bill a provision to give the government power to make an expropriation. That is not the point before the House. I draw the attention of the hon. member from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) to the two particular examples he quotes from Sir John Bourinot, as to the precedents in this matter. The hon. gentleman has referred to the resolution introduced into the House providing for the purchase and exportation by the government of certain depreciated silver coinage then in circulation; and, the hon. gentleman's other citation was: An address to the Queen for a change in the Union Act so as to assign the public debt of old Canada to the Dominion entirely, and to compensate Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in connection therewith. It seems to me that those were direct examples of cases in which it was necessary to immediately make provision for additional cash burdens falling upon the community. The silver that was depreciated could not be exported without loss, and the debt could not be assumed without a direct public charge upon the Dominion treasury. This resolution, to my mind, does not impose anything on the Dominion, except in the one distinct statement: 'With the consent of parliament.' Taking that view, I am obliged to hold that with that provision, it is competent for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) to move the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Having settled that point, I may say to the House that the only objection I have to inserting this clause in the Bill is that I am advised by legal gentlemen, and also by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), who is acknowledged as an authority on these questions: That this amendment will cast as it were a cloud upon the title and prevent the issuing of bonds of the company. If it will have the effect that the bondholders would be unable to float their bonds, it would perhaps prevent the carrying out of this project. I am extremely desirous that this road should be constructed. I believe it will be of enormous advantage to the great city of Toronto as well as to the province of Ontario and the North-west. The Bill had been thoroughly discussed in the committee for four or five days and a large majority decided that it was not in the interest of the company that the amendment should be inserted. Being advised that it would throw some doubt upon the project, and perhaps prevent the company from floating the bonds which will be necessary in order to construct the road, I ask the House not to insist upon the amendment, but to let us have this Bill, as all other private railways have been granted legislation this year, without any blot upon their charters. Neither this company nor any other can ever build that road unless they are able to float their bonds, and everybody knows how very sensitive the money market is, and how very loth capitalists are to invest their money in any project upon which rests any doubt. I think it would imperil the undertaking and perhaps defeat the object we all have in view if this amendment were added to the Bill, and for these reasons I hope that it will not be carried.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, there is a good deal more in this proposition than at first sight appears. The circumstances under which this clause came to be prepared by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals are substantially these. A Bill was introduced by my hon. friend who has just addressed the House for the purpose of obtaining a charter for this company to construct a line of railway from Collingwood to Toronto, and a large body of gentlemen who were relied upon to furnish the means for accomplishing this work were foreigners: they were gentlemen who did not live in the country at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Six Americans to fourteen Canadians.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not speaking of the Bill as it stands now. I am speaking of it as it was introduced by my hon. friend.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They were then six to eight.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The gentlemen belonging to Canada whose names were attached to the Bill, as introduced by my hon. friend, I do not wish to disparage, but I believe they are not regarded as eminent capitalists. All the financial weight that lay behind the enterprise was furnished by American citizens. Under these circumstances, the Board of Trade of Toronto, represented by one of the ablest men, I have no hesitation in saying—for he is so regarded both in this House and out of it by gentlemen who know him—Mr. Kemp, the president of that body, appeared before the committee and urged very strongly that they should not grant this charter precipitately, because he, as president of the Toronto Board of Trade, represented a body of eminent capitalists in Canada who were anxious that if this work were to be undertaken, it should be undertaken and carried on as a Canadian enterprise, under the control of Canadian citizens. The Railway Committee naturally looked for guidance and advice in a matter admitted to be of such great importance to the company, to a gentleman who occupies a position at the right of the chairman of the committee, not as representing any party, but as representing the government of the country: I refer to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). The Minister of Railways and Canals expressed his decided opinion that it was rather premature to undertake this work at all, giving a very substantial reason for that opinion, and one which I supposed would have had a good deal of weight with this House. That was that it is only just now, after the expenditure of an enormous sum of public money, that the great waterway of Canada, the greatest line of inland navigation on the surface of the globe, connecting the head waters of Lake Superior with the Atlantic Ocean, has been completed to a depth of fourteen feet: and he suggested that it was a question how far any company should be allowed to tap that line of communication, by a line of railway intersecting it. So much weight was attached to that statement that a motion was made that instead of the committee proceeding precipitately with this Bill, and handing over, as we were asked to do, to a body of foreign capitalists, if they were capitalists, belonging to the United States of America, the control of so important a line of railway, the subject should be carefully considered: and the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) on the part of the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, and on the part of a body of Canadian capitalists of the very highest standing and character, together with the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Kent, Ont., (Mr. Campbell) should be referred to a sub-committee of the Railway Committee, for the purpose of hearing evidence, if necessary, and affording an opportunity for a combination of the two parties. I am happy to say that on that occasion the Minister of Railways and Canals and myself were found on the same side. We were both of opinion that under the circumstances it would be wise to have a measure of such admitted importance considered by a sub-committee. But we were defeated by the committee, and the hon. member for Kent was extremely pressing that not a moment should be lost, that no consideration should be given to anything except this one question, and that no further light should be thrown on the subject from any quarter. But when he was met by the statement, on the part of the Toronto Board of Trade and the body of Canadian capitalists who were anxious to have this important work kept in Canadian hands, that they were willing not only to amalgamate with this company, but to give them a majority of one, that one being the hon. member for Kent himself, that proposal was rejected. They also stated to the committee, as meeting one of the points raised by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that they were prepared to have a clause inserted in their Bill under which the company would agree to hand over the enterprise to the government of Canada at any time, upon receiving a return of the money which they had actually expended upon the work. My hon. friend, the member for Kent, who has been promoting this Bill with such energy and success—for I have never seen a Bill engineered through committee with more energy and success than this one—met the occasion promptly. He got up and said that if the charter were given his company, he would be perfectly willing to accept a clause of that kind, and it was upon that pledge the majority voted down the proposal to refer the Bill to the committee. Subsequently they withdrew their support, because they said that they had given their vote in consequence of the pledge given by the hon. gentleman to accept that clause. The next step was the proposal, when the Bill had passed through the committee, that the Minister of Railways and Canals should be requested to draw up a clause that would carry out what had been the agreement on all sides. When the committee next met, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals proposed a clause, not, I frankly admit, as embodying his own views, but to carry out the object which the promoters of both Bills had expressed themselves willing to accept. But the promoter of the Bill, the hon. member for Kent, then refused to accept the clause submitted by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and moved himself a clause in different words, but containing the same essential principles, namely, that the government should be in the position to assume this work and take it over on paying the value of the work to the company. No decision was reached, and when the committee next met it curiously occurred that the Minister of Railways and Canals was absent—no doubt called away by very important business. But in his place were the hon. the Ministers of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies), who had hitherto taken no part in the discussion and given no attention to the committee. There is an old saying that it is better to trust the devil you know than the devil you do not know, and without insinuating anything of the kind with regard to any of those gentlemen, we had lost the one we did know, and in whose attitude we had previously concurred and found his place taken, not by one, but by two we did not know. Under these circumstances, my hon. friend was able, with that engineering talent which he possesses, and which almost lead one to suppose that he has missed his proper vocation, to get the committee to overrule the very pledge he himself had made. No doubt he had wisely strengthened his hands by suddenly promoting to the important position of director two hon. gentlemen who are very influential members both of the committee and this House. But, at all events, by whatever means it was brought about, we found ourselves in a minority, and the very clause which my hon. friend had himself moved, was rejected. That is the position, and under the circumstances it becomes very well worthy, even at this late stage of debate, to consider whether a measure of such admitted importance should not contain a clause that would enable the government, without any undue expenditure, such as they are generally obliged to make when they expropriate a public work, to take over this enterprise. Supposing this American influence which stands behind this Bill—and it was upon the capital furnished by these gentlemen mainly the committee were asked to rely—supposing at any time the interests of the United States and of the gentlemen connected with this enterprise became antagonistic to Canadian interests, it becomes a grave question, whether we should not protect ourselves by inserting such a clause in the measure as the one proposed, and to which my hon. friend had given his consent. I am happy to see American capital and enterprise coming into Canada at any time, but I infinitely prefer giving scope to our own capital; and when you have a Bill now before the committee, sustained by the Toronto Board of Trade and bearing the names of fourteen gentlemen of the highest standing and character as capitalists and men of business and Canadians of both parties in this country, it becomes a very grave question whether we should not keep the promoter to his pledge, and embody either the clause proposed or some modification of it in the Bill, so that in case at any time the Canadian government should feel it was in the interests of the country that this important enterprise should come under their control, they should be put in the position of being able to take control of it.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I think the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), has used rather strong language with reference to my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell). He has practically said my hon. friend had bought up the committee—that he appointed some parties directors in this company, and for that reason he got the charter through the committee. I believe that is what the hon. gentleman said, and I think the language is rather strong. But, I suppose the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), has been a pretty good manipulator of railroad charters in the past; and we know the old saying: 'Set a thief to catch a thief'—he is evidently after the scalp of the hon. member for Kent. It is interesting to know that the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), has seen new light. I, myself, have heard the hon. gentleman denounce government ownership of railroads. I remember that on one occasion, he took the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock), to task on that very point and loftily told him that all young men who come into this House have a fad, and the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bostock's) fad was government ownership of railways. I think my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), is once more to be complimented. We can remember how on one occasion he dragged the hon. leader of the opposition into rising and opposing a proposition which he had publicly favoured before it came under the attention of the House. It is evident that he has converted his leader now to the idea of government ownership of railways. I am glad that hon. gentlemen on the other side have at last repented of their sins—and they have a great many to repent of. They controlled the legislation of this country for eighteen years, but I never heard their proposing the adoption of this principle before. Look at the immense quantity of public lands that they have given away to railroad corporations—about 64,000,000 acres—besides money grants. Now, after the steed is stolen, the leader of the opposition and his friends turn around and want to lock the stable door. That is practically what it means. I am bound to say that if the leader of the opposition and his friends had adopted that principle before, we should have been better off to-day. But it is rather late in the day for these hon. gentlemen to work up such a fad in connection with this tu'penny-ha'penny bit of a road from Georgian Bay to Toronto. I would remind the hon. leader of the opposition that, two years ago, we had before us a Bill relating to a main artery of communication from the great west, the Rainy River Bill. I never heard at that time of the hon. gentleman getting up and talking about the government ownership of railways, though the hon. member for East York and some of his friends did. If the hon. leader of the opposition had taken on that occasion, the stand that he does to-day, it might have been some advantage to the people of the west. But he rises now and proposes to apply this new principle to this little road on the plea that it is going to be a great advantage to the west. He, and his friends care very little about what the people of the west need. When the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), was discussing the railway problem, some time ago. I was surprised at one statement he made, which was:

I think that in considering this question, the inquiry should be limited to the transportation facilities from the head waters of Lake Superior.

That is, they were all quarrelling, like dogs over a bone, about what should be done with the wheat that had been raised by the farmers of the west, after it had reached the head of Lake Superior. Every man had his own particular fad, his own particular scheme for carrying it eastward from there. But the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals gave the whole thing away, because he made it apparent that they did not want to interfere with their friends, the railway corporations in the west, and so they would consider the question only from the time the wheat reached the head of Lake Superior. I have on previous occasions drawn the attention of the House to the fact that we were paying 14 cents a hundred, for hauling wheat from Winnipeg to Lake Superior, while from Buffalo to New York, which is about the same distance, it is carried for 4 cents a hundred. If the hon. gentlemen were sincere in the views they expressed with regard to this transportation problem, they would do something to get a reduction of the freights in the west. But as a panacea of all the ills that the west suffers from, they come forward with this fad—fake. I might call it—of having the principle of government ownership of railways applied to this little bit of link from Georgian Bay to Toronto. I must say that the opposition is like the Irishman's flea—when you put your finger on them, they are not there. I have heard them more than once denounce the principle of government ownership of railways, and point to the Intercolonial Railway as an object lesson. But the leader of the opposition, when he was in Winnipeg, said he was ready to adopt the principle as far as possible. But now he comes before us, like a lightning-change artist, ready to advocate the whole principle with regard to this little bit of a link of railway. I would like to know where we are to find him. For my part, although a great many people in the west are in favour of government ownership of railways, I am willing to say that I am not. I do not believe it is to the advantage of the country to have government ownership of railways. I believe that all the railroads should be controlled, the freight rates, passenger rates, tolls and everything else, should be controlled by the government, and we should have a railroad commission, to see that they are properly controlled. But to talk of having government ownership of railroads, why, it would simply mean that the poor people would have to pay more than they are paying to-day. The man with a pull, is the man who would get the advantage. The man who had a good political pull would get his freight hauled cheaper, and would get free passage for himself and his friends, and whatever the railroads lost in this respect would have to be made up out of the public chest, and eventually it would all come out of the farmers. Therefore, I say I do not believe that it would be a good principle to adopt. The government should control, in every possible way, the railroads under a good and efficient railroad commission, who would put into force any regulations that are introduced in their charters. But as for the government owning the railroads themselves, the thing is simply a farce. Look at the Intercolonial Railway, and the money that has been spent there. Why, it has paid no interest on the bonds. It has been run at a loss. It has been run chiefly by the late government as a political machine, as a means of enabling them to capture votes in the lower provinces. That road has cost some $50,000,000, and though it may have been of some accommodation to the people on the line, it has chiefly been used during the regime of the Conservative government as to help keep themselves in power. It has never paid any profit, except that I think last year there was a small surplus of $64,000. Just imagine $64,000 income on an expenditure of $50,000,000. Still, in view of all these facts, the hon. gentleman gets up now, on the eve of an election, and because he thinks a few people in the country believe in it, he goes back on all his record, as can be shown from the Hansard, from time to time, and tells us that he believes in adopting the principle of government ownership. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe in the principle, and can not vote for it, when applied only to this piece of road.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would point out to the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), who says it will prevent this company from floating their bonds, if this legislation is carried, that, on the contrary, it will help them to float their bonds. It will be considered as a good proposition that the parliament of this country should reserve the right to take the road over some day should it see fit. I have only to point to this fact that the present government, a short time ago, put certain conditions on the Crow's Nest proposition, and yet that in no way interfered with the floating of the bonds under which the road was built. There would have been, in a measure, a breach of faith on the part of the member for Kent, if he had agreed to accept this proposition and then had withdrawn that acceptance. But, he is not the only delinquent; I say that the delinquents are the government. They pledged themselves some time ago, that, in any railway proposition that controlled a portage, or an important link in the solution of the transportation problem, they would ask parliament to make provision to retain control over such road. Now, they have gone back on that. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), speaking here the other evening, expressed himself as being altogether opposed to the principle of the government ownership of railways, and the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) seems to-day to control the government policy in regard to railways. They laid down the policy in the Crow's Nest Pass Railway agreement, that running rights should be given to other roads, and they said: We have retained the right to this country to control that railway. They laid down a similar policy in regard to the Rainy River Railway. How far that legislation secures control of that railway to the country I do not know, but I know that the government have gone to the people and claimed credit for it. Here is another important link between Toronto and Collingwood, and the most important link of all. Instead of carrying out the policy that they have laid down, the government have allowed the hon. member for Kent to dictate a policy to them, and in this they are delinquent to the pledges they gave to the people in regard to these portage railways. This is an important link in the railway system of this country, and it ought to be kept under the control of parliament. In connection with the question of government ownership of railways, which was condemned so strongly by the previous speaker, I would like to point out that in every country where government ownership has been adopted, the people do not desire to end it, but they desire to continue it. They are retaining and extending the control of public railways wherever the principle has been adopted. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) said that if you take up the question of government ownership, you must take it up as a general question and apply it to every railway in the country. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, but, on the contrary, I say that we should take up each railway as it presents itself to our consideration, from time to time, and I say that the real solution is this: The government ought to retain control of the Intercolonial Railway, and the Intercolonial Railway should be extended through Ontario, to the Niagara and Detroit Rivers, and to Georgian Bay. The Intercolonial Railway can be made a paying road. If it is extended into Ontario, to the Georgian Bay and to the Niagara and Detroit Rivers, it will have more freight than it can possibly get now, because it ends nowhere. In addition to this, you can connect it with a line of steamers carrying produce from the North-west Territories at a small expense. This is the solution of the railway question in this country, and it does not involve any great expense. We would then have a government system and a paying line from ocean to ocean. That is the only way that relief will come.

We cannot afford to buy the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. As the country grows, as population increases, as the cultivated area of our farm lands increases, we will have more important work for the railways to do, and a government-owned road alongside of the roads of these two great corporations will regulate freight rates and will be in the public interest. Government ownership is a question of growing importance, not only here, but the world over. Government ownership is coming in England to-day; it has been justified in Germany, in Italy, in Austro-Hungary, in our sister colony of Australia, and there is an agitation in the United States in favour of government ownership that eventually will come. It will come in this country, not as a broad sweeping measure, but on the line of keeping our present national road, extending it in various sections of the country and retaining control of the various portages. This railway between Toronto and Collingwood is a complement to the canal system, not opposed to it, and it ought to be under the control of the government. The portage railway between Toronto and Collingwood, if owned by the government, would furnish a large amount of freight for the St. Lawrence canals and the St. Lawrence River route. If that road should fall into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Grand Trunk Railway, it would be of no assistance in the matter of providing freight for the St. Lawrence canals or the St. Lawrence River route, but, keep it under the control of the government and there will be a new industry established in this country. There will be a great forwarding industry in connection with the St. Lawrence River and the St. Lawrence canals, and not only will a great transportation industry be built upon the railway lines and canal routes of this continent, but relief will be given to the North-west Territories so long as the government control this railway. I do not wish to make this a party question. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman who preceded me took a party view of it. I apologize for even appearing to take that view of it, but I do hold the government responsible in view of the statements they have made, in view of the statements made by their organs and the credit they have claimed for themselves, that they were doing something to keep the control of railways in the hands of the government. I charge that they are going back on their railway policy, and that they are allowing the hon. member for Kent to dictate the railway policy of the country. It is not in the interest of the public that such a policy should be adopted, and I appeal to hon. gentlemen to-day, although I have appealed to them in vain before, to keep their pledge and insist upon the amendment offered by the hon. member for West Toronto being adopted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) who has just taken his seat, but I leave him to continue in the enjoyment of the opinion he entertains in regard to the government and in regard to their policy in connection with this question. I rise at the present time for the purpose of making a remark, or two, upon the question which is really before the House. I do not complain at all of the statement of what transpired before the committee which was made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). The question came up in this form, at least, it presented itself to my mind in this manner: Several gentlemen from Toronto and the west, interested in a number of Bills, at least, there were two different Bills, I think, providing for the construction of a railway from the Georgian Bay to Toronto, Collingwood being the harbour on the Georgian Bay. There were very strong expressions of opinion that this was the most desirable route for connection between the waters of the Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario, and at the same time there were very decided opinions that the time would come when that route would be found to be necessary and of very great advantage to the country as a means of carrying the products of the west to our Canadian ports in competition with American ports. From that point of view, I, myself, not being prepared to pass any decided opinion upon the question, not knowing whether this route was the most preferable of all the routes that could be selected between the Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario, not knowing what the advantages were that would accrue from such a railway, but taking the statements which these gentlemen who prepared this Bill made to the committee, I thought that the time had not arrived when such a railway could be turned to advantage. I thought it was premature, as the hon. gentleman has said, but I said, that if the view that these gentlemen entertained upon the subject was well founded, and if this railway was likely to be a valuable means of transporting the products of the west, and could accomplish what could not be accomplished by our great waterways, by way of competition with United States ports, I felt that that route should be under the control of the country. I still entertain that opinion. I do not think we are in possession of the information yet, we do not know whether there is a likelihood of this particular railroad between these particular points affording opportunities and facilities for the transport of western products superior to that which will be supplied by our great water route. Therefore, I think the proposition is premature. But assuming to be true what these hon. gentlemen who are promoting this Bill with such energy and zeal seem to believe, then I think that railway ought to be in a position in which it can be taken over by the government upon reasonable and favourable terms, not upon such terms as we would have to pay to the owners of that property in franchise and prospective profits, profits which they might be able to convince a board of arbitrators they could earn out of the future operation of that railway, but giving them the actual value of the property at the time when the expropriation was made. That being my opinion, and the hon. gentleman having eliminated from his resolution what I conceived to be an objection to it, I feel it my duty to vote for the amendment as proposed by him. I think we protect everybody's interest when we assure to them the value of the property. Nobody can complain. I do not think financial men will go into it less readily, because there is a probability that the government may take over this railway on those terms. I believe that if we included the other clause it would have a very injurious effect upon the financing of this enterprise, and therefore, I am prepared to vote for the resolution. I think we give every protection the government and parliament can afford. If we desire hereafter to give aid to this undertaking, no matter in the hands of what company the construction of the road may pass, we can grant that bonus, annexing to it a condition that on the sale of the property that bonus shall be refunded. The government have every means of protecting themselves in that regard without doing any serious damage to the financial prospects of the company. I had hoped the hon. gentleman would accept the amendment as it had been proposed, because it strikes me it carries out the idea which was commonly entertained by the committee that a clause of this kind might in future be useful, and it would be well to incorporate it in the Bill.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I have listened to the statements made by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), and I do not think they require any reply, they were so utterly irrelevant and inaccurate, as is usually the case with the statements of that hon. gentleman. Now, with reference to the statement made by the member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), I am amazed to find a gentleman who in the Committee of Railways and Canals made the statement: We will give you the opportunity of buying out this road, we will have a clause put in our charter to carry that out; and to-day he utterly repudiates it and says: Why not give us this as in all other Bills, without any blot on its charter. As has been so well pointed out by the Minister of Railways and Canals, it is no blot on the charter; on the contrary, it gives strength to his charter, it gives stability to his charter; it shows the government are contemplating the acquisition of this road, and that therefore, men may with confidence invest their money in this enterprise. But from start to finish, what is it? It is only a bogus concern. Look at the original promoters. I do not speak of those gentlemen, members of parliament and others, but particularly of the members of parliament who have so brazenly affixed their names to this charter at a later period when they thought there was something in it. I think it is high time that the attention of the people and parliament should be called to the fact that members of parliament do not think it beneath their dignity or their sense of propriety, to get up in this House and advocate Bills in which they are personally interested; and voting those Bills through committee and advocating them. I see our friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), the member for Kent, and the member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood)—all these gentlemen adding their names to this charter. What for? Because they think there is something in it for somebody. I point out to the committee that the names of these gentlemen were before the committee as going to build this road. There is one of the promoters of this Bill who was named to this committee as an eminent capitalist, who was going to build the railroad almost out of his own pocket, and I was in a court not long ago and heard him say that he had borrowed $300 to run his election, and he had not returned the money yet. And this is the man who is going to build a railroad costing millions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Name.

Mr. WALLACE. I can tell him the name. W. J. Hill, M.P.P. for West York. I did not desire to name him, but the hon. gentleman insisted on it. I was in court when I heard him make that statement. Now, the hon. gentleman can take the responsibility of having his friend's name paraded before the country. Well Sir, this railway, I consider, should be under the control and guidance—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did he not carry West York, without money and without price? He must be a good man.

Mr. WALLACE. No, it was by means of a series of scandals and disgraces that he carried West York.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You were seventeen days trying to prove it, and you could not prove a single case.

Mr. WALLACE. It was proved up to the hilt.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do not speak disrespectfully of the judges.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a matter of the utmost importance that this road should be under the complete control of parliament. We have to consider whether the control of an important link like this should be placed in the hands of the American people. We are told that American capitalists are going into it. I do not know whether they are or not, but if they are, then they will control a link in a great communication that takes the grain that comes down the lakes, transports it across this portage, lands it at Lake Ontario and sends it down to the seaboard. It is part of an important line of communication, and I think that line should be under the control, at any rate, of the Canadian people. I contend, Mr. Speaker, it would be better to have it under the control of the Canadian government, because it is essentially a national line. The Minister of Railways and Canals says we have built the canals at an enormous expense, and therefore, we should not start to-day to build a rival line to the canals before we see by experience how this fourteen-foot channel is going to work. There may be something in that, but at any rate, if we are to have that communication built, and I am strongly of the opinion that it should be built, it should be built and controlled by the Canadian government. The next best thing would be to keep it under the control say of the city of Toronto, or portions of municipalities whose interests are public interests, say, the counties through which it passes and the city of Toronto, or something like that. Their whole object would be the patriotic one of promoting traffic on this line of railway to connect with the waterways on each side. That is an important matter which should not be lost sight of. But, the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) proposes that there shall be no such power, and that this line of railway shall be used as a weapon if necessary. The city of Toronto, which is most largely interested, has been promoting this enterprise for a long while, but they have been proceeding cautiously, because the time has not arrived for the construction of the work. Now that the canals have been deepened to 14 feet this road becomes an urgent necessity. The city of Toronto through its municipal corporation and board of trade, are now prepared to go on with the work, but another company steps in ahead of them and says: Why did you not go on before? The answer to that is, that they were proceeding cautiously and in a business way, and were not discounting too largely the wants of the future. This company now comes in and says: We are ahead of you a week or two, and we will keep ahead.

Mr. WOOD. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. I can quite understand why the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr.

Wood) says 'hear, hear,' because he is one of the crowd who got in. It is another evidence of how much this company has the interests of the city of Toronto at heart, when they get the member for Hamilton to help them. We know there is a rivalry between these two cities, and that the one is not assisting the other to build up its business to any great extent. If it were desirable to have members of parliament at all, and I do not think it is, it would seem to me that they might secure the support of a member from Toronto rather than the support of a member from Hamilton. I say, that the control of the road should be given to the government itself, or to the corporation of Toronto and the municipalities through which it runs.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There are rivals in Toronto too, are there not?

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has anything to say relative to this question, he will have an opportunity of doing so. If he has something to say that has no reference to it at all, he can do as he pleases about that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am just waiting until you get done.

Mr. WALLACE. We on this side are not afraid of anything the member for Grey may say. Now, Mr. Speaker, this line of railway should not be controlled by a private company, but by those who are directly interested in maintaining it as a part of our canal system. The city of Toronto has that interest in the undertaking. At all events, I contend that the line should not be placed in the hands of foreigners whose interests may be directly antagonistic to Canadian interests. The member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) gave his pledge that he himself would propose that the government would have power to acquire this railway at any time, but now when he thinks he has a sufficient number of members of parliament at his back he goes back on that pledge made voluntarily to the committee. I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that there are four members on the opposite side of the House on their feet while I am speaking. Three of them have their names on this charter, and I will now resume my seat to hear what these gentlemen have to say.

Mr. PETER MACDONALD (East Huron). I attended the five sittings of the committee at which this Bill was discussed, and I wish to express the opinion I arrived at after hearing the pros and cons on both sides. We are all agreed that this is a most important national work. We found two parties who wished to obtain charters for the same road, and one of the parties had its Bill before the House six weeks prior to the other. Other things being equal it was the duty of the committee to give its consideration to the first proposition made to parliament. It appeared that a compromise was sought to be arrived at between the parties, but that that idea was not successfully accomplished. Now, Sir, the committee had nothing to do with that compromise. It did not matter a fig to that committee whether the parties made a compromise or not: their duty was to act in the public interest. The real question before us was: Whether the first parties to apply were financially capable to give us a reasonable assurance that the work would be accomplished. That, I think, was apparent to all. I am sorry to say, and I say it advisedly, that the discussion turned practically into a party issue, and the committee invariably separated upon party lines. I found, on inquiry into the incorporators of both Bills, that the board of trade proposition is largely supported by the Conservatives of the city of Toronto, and it would appear also that the members from Toronto supported that contention. Perhaps, on the other side there was an element of the same kind, but that I cannot say. Our duty was to decide what was in the best interests of the country, irrespective of these two parties. If the railway is considered to be for the advantage of Canada it does not matter to us which of these companies should build it. If the company which first applied was competent to construct the work, then it appeared to me that that company was entitled to our consideration. The hon. leader of the opposition urges as an objection that amongst the incorporators of the first company, a number of foreigners were associated with a number of Canadians. Well, Sir, to my mind, that, instead of being a weakness is a great strength. This is not simply a local road from Collingwood to Toronto. It is a great international transportation route, and if it gets freight it expects to get it from the Western States as well as from Manitoba and the North-west. It is therefore of some importance that we should have prominent men from the Western States connected with this railroad, so that it may have the benefit of their influence to divert to this railway the trade which now goes via Buffalo and the Erie Canal. If men on the other side who are worth millions, and who are largely engaged in transportation, become interested in this enterprise, will not their influence be used for the purpose of directing trade through the very channels which we are establishing, which influence we would not have if the enterprise were wholly Canadian? Then, the hon. leader of the opposition said that there were about an equal number from the United States and from Canada connected with this company. But, we are not now considering the Bill as it originally came before the committee; we are considering it as it is before us at the present moment; and I understand that there are now fourteen Canadians to six Americans; so that his argument does not count for much at this particular period. Then, the hon. leader of the opposition gave the opinion of the hon. Minister of Railways that it was not in the interest of the government to expend money on this road while the deep waterway is under test. So far as that is concerned, the hon. Minister of Railways is perfectly right. It was urged in the committee as well as out of the committee that the government should make this a government road; but, I think, the government would not be discharging its duty if it did so until it had tested the deep waterway on which we have spent so many millions. I am not in favour of the government having anything to do with this railway. It is a private enterprise; and if this company came to-morrow to ask for a bonus for it, I would be one to vote against granting a bonus. I think the government should not bonus a road of this kind until it tests the deep waterway which it has constructed. Nor do I suppose that for four or five years at any rate the government would be asked to take this road over. Suppose this company had fourteen steamers on the upper lakes and sixteen or eighteen steamers on the lower lakes, with all the appurtenances belonging to them, who would agree to the government taking over such an enterprise and trying to run it in the interest of the country? Not a single soul. Why then do hon. gentlemen urge an amendment in favour of the government taking a position which no one would endorse? Why encumber this Bill with a proposition which the Minister of Railways says would compromise the floating of the enterprise by private energy? Then, again, supposing that for the first ten years, instead of making money, the company should actually lose money; because it would take those ten years to divert sufficient trade to compensate them for their investment; and suppose that at the end of those ten years, besides having expended $5,000,000 on the original cost of the road, they had expended $2,500,000 more in establishing it on a paying basis, would it then be right for the government to give a month's notice of their intention to take over the whole enterprise, and leave the company with a large loss as the result of their energy, enterprise and perseverance in placing it on a paying basis? I do not think the government would be justified in doing so. Then, the principle contained in this amendment is not usual. One or two measures have been mentioned to-day to which a somewhat similar condition has been attached; but it is not usual. The government have power now to appropriate any public work, and if they have not the power they can secure a special Act giving them the power; so that at any future time that they may wish to do so, they can take over this work or any other work in the interest of the Dominion, by the general power inhering in them as a government. Why then provide special powers in this Bill, which would probably have the effect of compromising the floating of the bonds and defeating the enterprise altogether? Believing that if this amendment were attached to the Bill it would compromise the floating of the bonds and the construction of the road, believing that the number of Americans connected with the company as corporators will be a source of strength instead of a source of weakness, and believing that the amendment will not place the government in any better position than it now occupies in regard to expropriating this or any other property in the public interest, I have concluded to vote against the amendment.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, when this Bill was considered by the committee, I was greatly surprised that this amendment or the one submitted there as a substitute did not carry. I regard it as of the greatest importance that an amendment of this character should be placed in this Bill, more especially as this is a very important line—one that is sure to become a highway for the carrying trade of the west. I think an exception might very well be made in this case, because it may become extremely desirable that the government should take possession of this road at a later day. If so, why should not the parliament of Canada now insist on a clause being inserted in this Bill providing that if at any future time parliament deems it desirable in the interest of the country to take possession of this road, it may do so on the conditions laid down in the amendment of the Minister of Railways? That amendment struck me as a very fair one. I differ from my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) in regard to omitting the clause providing that if this were done the public subsidies given to the road should be deducted from the price. If the city of Toronto or the parliament of Canada choose to give subsidies to this road, I do not see why they should be held to belong to the company. These public subsidies are given for a public enterprise, and if at any time the public desires to take over that enterprise, I do not see why the price paid for it should not be exclusive of those subsidies. I have no sympathy whatever with the contention that no precedent should be made, and that it would be monstrous or extraordinary for us to take this opportunity to establish a precedent. It has been said, why not pass a general Act? That might be well enough, but I fear we should have great opposition to such an Act. Here is a very important railway, and why should we not place in the Bill such a clause as the promoter of the Bill himself agreed to? Why should we not create the precedent? Is the parliament of Canada going to let it go abroad that it is not willing to establish any precedent, or make any progress? I think that would be a monstrous proposition. It is a fair condition to attach to this Bill that the government of Canada may, with the sanction of parliament, take possession of this railway at any time, if it deems it in the interest of the public to do so. We are granting what may prove a very valuable franchise, and why not grant it subject to this condition. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) takes the position that the parliament of Canada has power at any time to assume possession of all the railways. That may be quite true, but the conditions under which the parliament of Canada may take possession of these roads will be limited. But here we have the opportunity of saying what the conditions shall be, and it is most important that we should serve notice on the bondholders that the government may take possession of the enterprise at any time. But this, we are told, will prevent the selling of the bonds. I do not think it will. It just takes away from the charter a speculative value and makes it impossible for this company to dispose of its charter as railway exploiters have been doing with other charters for years back. This parliament has no desire to give any set of promoters any valuable franchise out of which they can make a large sum of money. If the franchise is valuable let it belong to the people. The people the world over are beginning to realize the value, not only of state ownership of railways, but of a municipal ownership of all franchises in the municipality. These franchises become valuable because of the existence of large centres of population and of people who live along these lines of railway, and if these railways are making money, let that money go to the people. That government ownership is an advantage to the people is shown by the experience of Austro-Hungary, Germany and the Australian colonies. People point to our experience with the Intercolonial Railway, but that is not a fair criterion, because that road has been managed very largely as a political undertaking. Why could not the Intercolonial Railway be managed by a commission of independent men with powers entirely apart from the parliament of Canada. Put these men beyond political control at all, and if necessary disfranchise every man connected with that railway. Is there any reason why men of experience and ability should not manage that railway in the interests of the people? If it has not paid, it is simply because it has been managed as a political road. Must we admit that the parliament of Canada is unable to manage any enterprise intelligently and honestly? If we do, we have come to a pretty pass in this country. Therefore, I claim that this parliament should not hesitate to glance in the direction of government ownership of railways. That, I believe, will be the great issue in this Dominion within the next decade, and I regret exceedingly, as a Liberal, that any hon. members on this side should apparently appear as antagonistic to that view.

I entirely dissent from the view taken by the hon. member for Saskatchewan when he twitted the hon. leader of the opposition for supporting a measure of this kind. I am delighted to see any great party take up a reform of this kind. When we had a similar question up last session in connection with the Rainy River road—a road which is bonused to an enormous extent by the people of this country—I moved a clause similar to the one under discussion, namely, that parliament could at any time take possession of the road. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that such large subsidies were given that road, that motion of mine was voted down, not only by members on this side, but by members on the other side as well. I feel very deeply on this question and will give my warmest approval to the amendment before the House.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) is no doubt very sincere, but it is very clear to any one, who has any experience in the building of railways, that the hon. gentleman never was a railway builder, that he never built a mile of railway in his life and knows nothing about it. He has been hoodwinked into supporting the amendment introduced by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) for the purpose of killing the Bill. In the committee, when it was found that the other Bill, which these hon. gentlemen are promoting, could not go side by side with this one, they made every possible objection, and the hon. leader of the opposition drew on his enormous fund of tactics to obstruct in every way the passage of this measure. Any one who has any knowledge of the floating of bonds or the negotiations of loans upon railways will understand that a franchise which would be clouded by such an amendment as the one proposed could not float a bond. I would like to know whether the Canadian Pacific Railway would be willing to accept the intrinsic value of its entire line from the Atlantic to the Pacific. That road has cost the Canadian Pacific Railway an enormous amount in addition to the actual cost of construction, in the working up of its business and the establishing of connections, and it is only after years of effort that it has succeeded in reaching the creditable position it now occupies. Would the paying of the actual intrinsic value of that road recoup that company fairly and honestly for the expenditure it has undergone? It certainly would not. There is nothing to prevent parliament taking over the Canadian Pacific Railway at any time, and if you pass this Bill, without the clause proposed, the government can take this particular road over when it chooses. There is another point and that is this. By this amendment you will fetter the government in taking over this line. I contend that the passing of this particular amendment would commit parliament, if it should decide to act on it, to take over all that this company possesses.

The hon. leader of the opposition objects to Americans having anything to do with the Bill, and thinks that the scheme should be in the hands of citizens of the Dominion. He was not of that opinion when the company for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was incorporated. He was a member of the cabinet at the time, why did he not seek to keep out all Americans? He was quite ready to allow Americans and other foreigners to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway. But, it suits his purpose for the moment to use the connection of these foreigners with the scheme as a bugbear. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) had said something with regard to the great waterways. We all hope to see our great waterways a success. But, if any person will look at a map of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, he will see that but a very small portion of that country is now under cultivation. Even with so little under cultivation, from twenty-five to thirty million bushels of wheat has been exported. This has tested the carrying capacity of our canals. This being the case when so little development has taken place, what should we look for when half or two-thirds of the wheat belt is under cultivation? It will test the carrying capacity of every canal and every railroad, including the one under consideration, to carry that wheat to the seaboard. I do not see why this clause should be forced on this committee. It has never been incorporated in the charter of any other line. As I said, the government have the power to take over this road the same as any other public property. I do not think that a specific clause of this kind should be inserted, because it will undoubtedly cripple the company. The object of the hon. member for West Toronto and the hon. member for West York is to kill the Bill. They may accomplish that, if they can get this clause passed. They think that with this clause inserted the company will be so crippled that it will not be able to float the scheme for the construction of the road. The Minister of Railways and Canals has expressed, no doubt, what are his own opinions. But, I feel sure that he does not express those opinions as a member of the government, nor do the members of the cabinet unite with him in his opinion. He may possibly have reasons for holding these views; but there is no just reason why this Bill should be crippled when other companies have been chartered without this limitation to their privileges. I am struck with the bitter, determined opposition of the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) to this Bill. In the Railway Committee he was on his feet nearly the whole time it was before the committee, and as soon as the third reading is proposed here, he makes a long speech. I think I can see the reason for it. No doubt he hopes, if returned to power, to transfer his Chignecto Ship Railway from Nova Scotia and lay it down over the route from Georgian Bay to Lake Ontario. That may be the end he has in view. The ship railway is a monument of folly where it is, and I suppose he would hope to use it to transfer ships from Georgian Bay to Lake Ontario. But, if it should come to that, it will cost the country vastly more than this company will. I do not see how the hon. member for West Toronto can face his constituents and justify the position he has taken. The hon. member for West York made some reference to the fact that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood), the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), and myself appear as directors. I can only say that the promoters of the other Bill were anxious to add these names to their Bill, and the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), in order to meet them so far as that is concerned, suggested that the names should be put in his Bill. I had no desire to go on the Bill, but I went so far as to meet the request of my hon. friend. I know that the promoter of the Bill only went on the Bill himself as a guarantee of good faith and at the earnest solicitation of some members from Toronto, as well as others who were here. So, there is no scheme in that. I have been in parliament a good many years, and I have never benefited to the extent of ten cents. It comes with very bad grace from the hon. member for West York to insinuate that there was some attempt on the part of some members of this House to line their pockets out of a scheme of this kind. I may say I have never bought ordnance lands at a quarter their value and sold them afterwards at ten times what they cost me. I never went to the Minister of Railways and Canals and coaxed him to sell me property that I might sell it afterwards at ten times what I paid for it. When the hon. gentleman catches me in any transaction of that kind he can charge me with doing what is improper, but he need not make such insinuations when he himself is the man who used his position here as a member of the House and supporter of the late government to advance his own interest. He had better not try to make any insinuations with regard to the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), a gentleman who has a clean record, a record which is a credit to him. The hon. member for Kent has promoted this Bill from the start as a matter of pure patriotism and with a desire to do what he could for the city of Toronto, and he is getting a poor reward from the hon. member for West Toronto and the hon. member for West York for the gallant manner in which he has fought to get this Bill through. I believe that if the Bill goes through, as it should, the enterprise will be a success, and it will be a great advantage to the city of Toronto. And I believe the time will come when my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) who insists on the passage of this clause will hide his face in shame, and will regret that he has played into the hands of men who are merely trying to prevent the success of this enterprise in order that their little scheme may come in, and the hon. member for West York and the hon. member for West Toronto may some day in the future take part in the scheme or get their friends in to control it in place of my hon. friend from Kent.

Mr. GEORGE GUILLET (West Northumberland). I desire to take this opportunity of saying that I am in favour of government ownership of railways as far as practicable and of the application of that principle by this amendment, and I have not heard any sound argument why it should not be adopted. I am not desirous of killing the Bill as has been charged from the other side of the House. I believe the whole discussion of this Bill proves that the promoters of this amendment desire that when parliament are granting such powers a reservation should be made in the charter that if at any time public interest should demand it the government may resume those charters. This is a national enterprise. This Bill provides for diminishing the distance between the points of shipment and ocean ports by 300 miles. That is no small matter especially when we consider that it will also avoid the most dangerous navigation of the water route. There is this important advantage in this route that not only will it save time but it will diminish risk of danger and loss of property. We know that the navigation on the south part of Lake Huron and the navigation on Lake Erie to the canal is the most dangerous part of the route that is to be traversed by shipments from Duluth, Chicago, Port Arthur and other points west to the St. Lawrence. This company will also be able to carry freight by vessels of an enormous capacity from these points in the west to Collingwood, and will thus be able to carry it much cheaper than smaller vessels and therefore much cheaper than it can be done via the canal. This being the case I think it desirable that the government should control that route in order to prevent discrimination in favour of an American route against our own ports. For instance the route via Ogdensburg to New York. A syndicate is now establishing in Montreal extensive elevators and would be able in conjunction with such an enterprise as this, if they should combine, to control the export trade of grain to the exclusion of independent shippers or at least be able to discriminate against them in the way of charges. If that should be found to occur at any time in the future it would be most important that the government should have power to take control of this enterprise. If we found in future that our own ports were being discriminated against we would then have it in our power to prevent it. I think we should preserve in our own hands the powers that the amendment of the member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) provides for reserving in the hands of the government.

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). I would not take part in this debate but for the remarks made by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who said that I was in this Bill for what I could make out of it. I tell the hon. gentleman that I am not there for that purpose. I joined my hon. friend from Kent, Ont. (Mr. Campbell) for the purpose of building the road, and if any of his friends in Toronto, in case the Bill passes through the House and the company is formed, wish to take my place, I would be glad to resign in their favour. The member for West York is much concerned because I, as a representative of Hamilton, should be doing anything that would assist the city of Toronto in enlarging its borders in any way. I may say to the hon. gentleman that the boats connected with this road are supposed to start from Hamilton, therefore Hamilton has an interest in the success of this undertaking. I may also say to the hon. gentleman that I have considerable interest and considerable property in Toronto, perhaps a good deal more than he supposes, and in promoting this Bill I am advancing my own interests in Toronto just as much as in Hamilton. But we must give the hon. gentleman a little leeway in his remarks, because he has just returned from an expedition through the country where he has been treated by a number of clubs in a most enthusiastic manner. Of course he comes back here highly elated after having been greeted as a conqueror up west. I congratulate him on obtaining once more the position he has held for so many years among his friends, and I hope he will long continue to enjoy the enviable position of grand master. The leader of the opposition has spoken strongly about the wealth, respectability, responsibility, and so forth, of the gentlemen who were connected with the other Bill. I have not a word to say against the respectability individually of the gentlemen connected with the board of trade. The board of trade seems to be in his estimation the very strength and essence of that company. Well, I may say that perhaps he does not know all about the board of trade in Toronto. There are certain things connected with that organization that possibly, if they were known, would not increase his estimation of it. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) knows what I refer to, therefore, I need say nothing more.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman knows anythings derogatory to the character of the gentlemen who were applying, he should be man enough to say all he knows about them.

Mr. WOOD. I say nothing about the gentlemen—

Mr. CLARKE. Yes, you have.

Mr. WOOD. If the hon. gentleman wants to answer me, let him wait until I get through my speech. I simply say this, that there are some things about the board of trade at Toronto that the most respectable people of this country would not care to have attached to themselves.

Mr. CLARKE. Now let us hear what it is.

Mr. WOOD. The hon. gentleman knows quite well what it is, and he need not ask me the question. He is fully posted.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. WOOD. Well, if the hon. gentlemen will apply to the member for West Toronto, he will explain it to them. I was simply going to remark to the leader of the opposition that all the wealth, and all the energy, and all the respectability are not bound up in the board of trade of Toronto. There are many men of means, many men of energy and enterprise outside of that board of trade. Some of the gentlemen connected with my hon. friend's Bill in Toronto are quite as able financially to finance a large scheme like this as any gentleman connected with the board of trade. I can only say that the gentlemen connected with the board of trade are certainly very respectable gentlemen, and when they come down here and bring their Bill before the House, I am quite satisfied it will receive fair treatment, but, if they were willing to accept a clause in their Bill that would simply make it useless, I am inclined to think they would show a great want of business knowledge. I have had some experience in building railways and floating bonds, and I can say that it would be utterly impossible to float a bond on the English market with any cloud over the bonds of the road such as this amendment of the hon. member for West Toronto would place upon them. To do such a thing as we are asked to do by the hon. gentleman would be to show that we really did not know what we were about, and did not understand our business. I am quite satisfied that in the hands of the hon. member for Kent and his friends, the enterprise will be vigorously pushed forward. Although several of the gentlemen seeking incorporation are Americans, they are the very men who are able to furnish traffic for this road, and they can do it far better than men connected with the board of trade. I believe that these Americans, with the assistance of the Canadians who are connected with the enterprise, will make this route the success that in other hands it would not be. We have been told that these men have been working at this enterprise for three, four, five or six years. They have had several opportunities of coming before the House, but they did not make their appearance until the hon. member for Kent brought forward his Bill. I can quite understand that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is anxious that this Bill should not go through. He is afraid that this Bill might give a little eclat to the hon. member for Kent who, I understand, is going to meet him in West York, and therefore, he is doing his best to clip the wings of the hon. member for Kent and prevent him from getting this measure through the House. I think that if the hon. member for Kent goes into West York it will be the last we will see of the hon. member for West York. The man with the knife will take care of himself. The promoters of the Bill that has yet to come before the committee will have an opportunity of showing their good faith in the building of the road by joining my hon. friend's company. They can go in and subscribe for the stock, and if they subscribe for a sufficient amount of stock, I am sure that the hon. member for Kent will feel quite pleased to give them a seat at the board, and he will have their assistance and energy in pushing this thing to a successful conclusion. I did not intend to take part in this discussion but for the references that were made to my name in a way that I do not think my hon. friend intended, because I think he knows me too well to suggest that I am in this to make any profit out of it. I hope the businessmen in this House will see the absurdity of accepting such an amendment to the Bill as will prevent the road from being built. If this amendment is put in it will simply kill the Bill, and make it impossible for the promoters to push the road through.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Mr. Speaker, the members of the House know that no private Bill that has come before parliament for a number of years has created the interest that this Bill has created, and I think the House ought to have some declaration of policy upon two or three points from the government of the day. We have had this amendment drawn by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), to meet the views which prevail in the committee, but we are without a declaration of policy by the government on that amendment. Then, there is another matter which, it appears to me, we ought to have the declaration of the government upon, and it is this: This Bill is for an enterprise for the possession of which we have seen capitalists on the American side and capitalists on the Canadian side reaching out. We are led to believe that this franchise is valuable, and that this is an enterprise that will pay. The hon. Minister of Railways in speaking upon the question, goes rather against the contention I am making, by saying that it has not been demonstrated that the road is necessary, because the canal system has not been tried. There are these two views, first, that it is an exceedingly valuable franchise, and next, the declaration of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that the enterprise is not necessary just at present. In view of either fact, in view of the fact that it is very valuable, or in view of the fact that it is not necessary at the present time, I, for one, would like to know how the government will treat a request for a subsidy for this line. It appears to me that this, perhaps, is a more important matter even than the amendment moved by the hon. member for West Toronto.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Better wait until we pass it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, then, we will accept the declaration of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), that he does not intend to apply for a subsidy.

Mr. WOOD. He did not say so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood) says that he did not say so, and that is an admission that he intends to apply for one. It is a simple matter for the government to deal with. Here is the declaration of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, who says that the time has not come to deal with it, here we have a company promoted by hon. gentlemen who say that they do not intend to try to make money out of it. I am not charging that they do, but I think the House ought to receive a declaration from the government, because it appears to me that it would influence the House a great deal in giving a vote. Does the government intend to grant a subsidy to this road in view of the declaration of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, or does it not? It appears to me that this is a matter of importance, and that this House should have an answer to the question.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) that I do not view this question at all in the light in which he views it. It is not a question that the government, as a government, have anything to do with. It is simply a question of the private Bill, of a private company for the construction of a railway. We have dozens of applications every session of this character. The only new feature that is introduced into this Bill is that the provision is incorporated in it, that the government, at some future time, if they choose, may acquire the charter and all that depends upon it. If there were here a question as to the ownership of railways by the government, or even the introduction of the principle, it would require very serious consideration at the hands of the government, and I do not at all accept the statement made by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) a moment ago, that the government have pledged themselves to the principle of the government ownership of railways. The government never did anything of the kind, nor is the principle of the government ownership of railways introduced in the amendment of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). The amendment of the hon. member for West Toronto, as it has been properly characterized, is simply a notice to those who invest their money in their enterprise and to the promoters of the road who invest their money, that, at the proper time, if parliament or the government so determine, their franchise may be acquired by the government. The amendment does not go further than that; that is what it is in a nutshell. As to the duty of the government, I have to say to my hon. friend, that it is not a question for the government to consider at all. The Bill has been discussed before the Railway Committee, and they have determined upon it in a certain way. The position I have always taken upon Bills that come from the Railway Committee, is, to sustain the decision of the committee as far as I possibly could do. I do not say that this is a principle that should be adhered to, under all circumstances, because there may be exceptions in this case as in any other. But I have more than once submitted to the House, that upon questions which are referred to any of the Standing Committees, it should be the policy of the House to sustain the decision of the committee, unless—and in no other case—there is a very strong case made out that the committee has erred in some gross manner. There is no evidence in this case that the Railway Committee has been in error. There is as much to be said on one side as upon the other, and, for my part, having listened to the discussion very attentively, I have come to the conclusion, that in this instance, I should support the decision of the Railway Committee.

Mr. WALLACE. Before the question is disposed of, I ask the indulgence of the House to make a personal explanation in reply to a statement made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). His statement was: That I used my position in parliament; that I went to the government and bought some lands at one-tenth of their value, or one-tenth of what I sold them for—one-tenth of their value too, and that I, therefore, defrauded the government of the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will just state the circumstances of the case and nothing more. We had bought a property comprising a number of acres on the canal bank outside the city of Ottawa, and we discovered that there was a narrow strip between it and the roadway that runs along the canal bank. This narrow strip started at a point and ran to a few feet in width. It amounted to a quarter of an acre or half an acre of land, or something like that; I cannot remember the quantity. We applied to the government to purchase it, because it was between our property and the roadway, and was only four or five feet in width. It could have been no possible use to any one else; no one else could possibly desire to purchase it, and the government did not want it. We asked the government to place a price upon it, and the government did place their price upon it. We had nothing to do with fixing the price. We paid them that price, which, according to my recollection, was about the same price as we paid for the other portion of the land. The land was of no value whatever to the government. The government fixed whatever price was fixed, and we paid that price and purchased it from the government, as we had a right to do. It was a fractional part of an acre of land. The government got the price they themselves fixed, as the proper value for it, and everything was done fair and square, and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and some other gentlemen investigated the matter at that time, and tried to make a scandal. This was many years ago, and they utterly failed in their attempt.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. WALLACE. They utterly failed in their attempt.

Mr. McMULLEN. Not at all.

Mr. WALLACE. They utterly failed to prove a single particle of wrong-doing. They bring the matter up to-day when it is ten years old. They failed ten years ago to prove a single particle of wrong-doing, because the facts are as I state them now, and there was no wrong-doing or intention, or desire of wrong-doing on our part, in any way, shape or form whatever.

Mr. McMULLEN: As the hon. gentleman has misrepresented me, I might be allowed to say a word.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman stated that he—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hon. gentleman opposite evidently fear a threshing out of this question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) represents that he bought a strip of land as the owner of the adjoining strip of land, and that the Railway Department put a price upon it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman knows that the owners of that land tried to buy that strip from the Railway Department, and they would not sell it to them until after he bought the land.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) states is not true.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to make a personal explanation in reference to the statement of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). It is not true that I have any desire to block the Bill. I told Mr. Campbell that I certainly would vote for this Bill. I intend to vote for both Bills, and I refrained the other night from speaking, lest the Bill might be prevented from going through. I intend to vote for the Bill, although I will support the amendment which is in line with the course I have taken for a considerable number of years.

Mr. CLARKE. I desire to add one word—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, spoken.

Mr. CLARKE. I merely moved the amendment and did not speak.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, spoken.

Mr. CLARKE. I am sure that the people of Toronto—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CLARKE. I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is a word of explanation to the House, I do not think the hon. gentleman should be denied the privilege.

Mr. CLARKE. The question of order was immediately raised when I presented the amendment, and before I had time to say a word about it. I do not desire to take up the time of the House more than a minute, because I presume it would suit every one's convenience to take the vote before six o'clock.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman can give a personal explanation, but he has no right to speak on the general question.

Mr. CLARKE. If I have no right to speak I will take my seat and let the division be taken.

Mr. MACLEAN. The question of order was raised—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on the motion for the third reading of Bill (No. 115), and Mr. Clarke's amendment thereto.

The House divided on the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, before you declare the motion carried, I would like to have the names read by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before that is done, I should like to say that I was paired with the member for West Bruce (Mr. Tolmie).

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not for that purpose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The intention is to challenge the right of certain members to vote on this question, and in order to do that, it is necessary to have the names read.

The Clerk of the House having read the names.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of challenging the right of certain hon. members to vote, under the well-known rule of the Canadian House of Commons, following the old order of the English House of Commons, which will be found in Bourinot's 'Parliamentary Procedure and Practice,' at page 455 :

No member is entitled to vote upon any question in which he has a direct pecuniary interest, and the vote of any member so interested will be disallowed.

I have no personal feeling whatever in this matter, but I think it is very necessary that the House should understand what the position of members who are interested in this Bill is, and whether they do not come within this rule. I hold that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), and the hon. senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood), are all disqualified under this rule from voting for a Bill to incorporate a company in which they hold the very important and influential position of directors, and have, therefore, the most clear and decided pecuniary interest in the measure that could possibly be established. I ask therefore that their names be struck from this division.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I wish to say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that I have no pecuniary interest, in any shape or way, in this measure, never having contributed a cent to this company in any shape or form. My hon. friend says that I am a director. My name is only placed on the provisional board which will have the right to elect the directors. Had I had any interest in the measure that would have disqualified me from voting, I certainly could not have voted ; but I consider that I have no interest whatever in it that affects my rights as a member of this House.

Mr. ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL (Kent, Ont). I have only to say, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, that when the Bill was placed in my hands, my name was not on the board. At the request of the other gentlemen I allowed my name to go on as one of the provisional directors ; but up to this date—I do not know what may happen in the future—I have no pecuniary interest whatever in this Bill. I have not contributed one single farthing, and I have not been asked to contribute one single farthing. I think, therefore, that I have a right to vote.

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). I think it is needless for me, Mr. Speaker, to repeat what the other gentlemen have stated. I have not contributed one cent, though, as the promoter of the Bill has stated, I do not know what the consequence may be in the future. I am interested in the Bill going through and the road being built in the public interest, in my interest, and in the interest of my constituents ; and I think it is very small business for any gentleman to take exception to my vote.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. leader of the opposition has quoted correctly the rule of the House :

No member is entitled to vote upon any question in which he has a direct pecuniary interest, and the vote of any member so interested will be disallowed.

I am not aware that the question in this particular form has ever before arisen in this House within my parliamentary experience. I hesitate to instruct the clerk to strike the names of the hon. members from the division list when they state that they have no pecuniary interest in the measure. We have always accepted the statements of members.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the statement made by these hon. gentlemen, that they have not contributed anything, was evidently made under the impression that the point was taken on the ground of their having done something to promote the interests of the Bill ; but one of the hon. gentlemen was candid enough to say that while he had not so far contributed anything, he did not know what might be in the future. I want the House to understand that it is in no party spirit that I raise this point ; but because it is very necessary that we should have a clear understanding of what that rule means and whom it includes. I hold that it includes a member of this House whose name appears on a Bill as a provisional director, and who is in a position to become a permanent director. I have no hesitation in saying that I would regard this Bill with much less favour than I do if the names of these gentlemen were not among the provisional directors, with the possibility of becoming permanent directors and having the permanent influence in the company that such a position would give them. The fact that these gentlemen are in a position to become directors of that company and to receive an annual payment as such, is what brings them within the rule of having a direct pecuniary interest.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, this is a point which involves some delicacy, and a cursory examination of the book on the subject adds still more to the doubt which I entertained with regard to it. In May's 'Parliamentary Practice,' the last edition, at page 355, the following occurs:—

The votes of members, who are subscribers to undertakings proposed to be sanctioned by a Bill, or who were interested in private Bills, have frequently been disallowed. In 1800, the votes of three members were disallowed, as having a direct interest in a Bill for incorporating a company for the manufacture of flour, wheat and bread. On May 28, 1825, notice was taken that a member who had voted with the yeas on the report of the Leith Docks Bill, had a direct pecuniary interest in passing the Bill; he was heard in his place, and stated that on that account he had not voted in the committee on the Bill, and that he had voted in this instance through inadvertence. His vote was ordered to be disallowed. Instance also may be given of motions to disallow the votes of shareholders in the company which was the promoter of the Bill on which the division was taken, that have been negatived. And in like manner, on the second reading of the Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Bill, May 15, 1845, objection was taken to one of the tellers for the noes as being a land-holder whose property would be injured by the proposed line. A motion for disallowing his vote was withdrawn. On July 15, 1872, objection was taken to two of the tellers in a division, who had voted against the Birmingham Sewerage Bill, on the ground of personal pecuniary interest; but the Speaker stated that they had no such pecuniary interests in the Bill as would disqualify them from voting against it.

The extent to which the rule of personal interest in a vote given by members against a private Bill, which would create a project intended to compete with an undertaking in which he had a pecuniary interest, is as yet undecided. As the Speaker stated, May 12, 1885, there is no rule of the House on the subject. He recommended that each member should be guided by his own feelings in the matter, and should vote, or abstain from voting, as he thought fit, though the Speaker added to his statement a reminder that members should be aware that they ran the risk of having their votes disallowed by the subsequent action of the House.

I have referred to authorities for the decision of the Speaker, who is in a somewhat delicate position as to whether he should allow the vote to be taken or not. What I would suggest is that the matter be left over for his consideration, and for the guidance of the House on future occasions. Whether these gentlemen vote or not, the result of the division could not be affected, and, therefore, I think, while not taking this vote as a precedent, we should allow it to stand as it is and let the subject be investigated by Mr. Speaker for the information of the House on a future occasion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is quite satisfactory. These votes do not affect the division, and we will have, no doubt, a more satisfactory settlement of the question, after careful consideration by Mr. Speaker.

Amendment (Mr. Clarke) negatived.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved third reading of the said Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. On division.

Mr. RICHARDSON. With reference to that, I would like to be recorded as voting for the Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. We all know your sentiments.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time (on division) and passed.

The Speaker left the Chair at 6.20 p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

POSTMASTER OF ST. THOMAS, ONT.

Mr. CASEY asked :

1. Was the postmaster of St. Thomas, Ont., suspended, and on what grounds?
2. Did any delegation see the Postmaster General about the suspension? If so, what did they ask, and what answer did they receive?
3. Was the investigation held, and by whom? Was it under oath?
4. Has the postmaster been reinstated as the result of such investigation?
5. If so, will the Postmaster General lay on the Table the reports on which the suspension and reinstatements were based?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Complaint having been made that at the St. Thomas post office only one wicket was kept open in the general delivery, and that the attention of the staff was slow and unsatisfactory, causing annoying delays, Mr. W. E. Bennett, who has been acting as inspector of city post offices, proceeded to St. Thomas to investigate such complaints, and, from personal observations, having become satisfied as to the correctness of the complaint, and having come to the conclusion that the service was negligent, and that the postmaster had been negligent in the discharge of his duties, suspended the postmaster. He further expressed the opinion that the postmaster was indolent, incompetent and negligent in the discharge of his duties, and was entirely to blame for the unsatisfactory condition of affairs which he found on the occasion in question. The postmaster having taken exception to this finding, the matter was referred to Controller Armstrong and Inspector Henderson, two experienced and reliable officers, who personally attended at St. Thomas and conducted a thorough and careful examination, under oath, and who also personally investigated the books and affairs of the office. They concur in the finding of Mr. Bennett in so far as that officer reported the postmaster as guilty of negligence in not having two wickets kept open, and the public properly attended to; and in not promoting greater activity on the part of the staff; but, they report the rest of the work in that office as being very well performed. They did not concur with Mr. Bennett's finding that the postmaster was indolent or incompetent, or entirely to blame for the state of affairs; and expressed the view that the postmaster is not indolent or incompetent, and was not wholly to blame for the state of affairs complained of; and they further expressed the opinion that one of the officers, who received complaints from the public as to the unnecessary delay in the service, failed to inform the postmaster of such complaints, or to take any means to remedy the same, and was disloyal to the postmaster and to the public. They found the books kept in a neat and careful manner, and that the reports of errors on file at Ottawa and in the office of the post office inspector and of the superintendent of the railway mail service were comparatively few, and that any irregularities which occurred were of a trifling character; and that apart from the complaints made as to the want of accommodation at the general delivery wicket, the work of the office upon the whole appeared to have been conducted in a satisfactory manner. In view of the conclusions of Messrs. Armstrong and Henderson, that the postmaster was not indolent or incompetent, and was not entirely to blame for the state of affairs, that he had not received loyal services from one of his staff, and that the work of that office, upon the whole appeared to have been conducted in a satisfactory manner, I came to the conclusion that the public interest did not call for the dismissal of the postmaster, but that his suspension and the anxiety to himself that must have been consequent thereon was a sufficient mark of the department's disapproval of his shortcomings, and sufficient punishment therefor, and would, in all probability, effectually prevent any such further grounds for complaint. Accordingly, I directed his reinstatement.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. minister has not answered the second paragraph of the question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My attention had not been called to that. I can only say, from memory, that I had the advantage of a number of delegations upon the subject, pressing upon me to reinstate the officer pending inquiry. This I refused to do, but allowed him to remain under suspension until the merits of his case had been finally determined upon. That is the substance of what passed at the interviews, but if I find myself in error my hon. friend (Mr. Casey) will permit me to supplement this answer.

AN ENGLISH EXPERT ON THE KLONDIKE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

1. Did the government purchase any copies, and if so, how many, of a pamphlet published by A. N. E. Treadgold, M.A., entitled 'An English Report on the Klondike'?

2. If such purchase was made, how much has been paid for it?

3. If the purchase was made, when was it made?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. The government purchased from G. N. Morang Company (Limited), of Toronto, 665 copies of a pamphlet published by that company, entitled 'An English Expert on the Klondike,' by A. N. C. Treadgold, M.A., (late scholar of Hertford College, Oxford), special commissioner of the Mining Journal, Railway and Commercial Gazette, London, Eng., on the Goldfields of the Klondike. 2. Fifty cents per copy. This work was considered the best of recent publications containing valuable information in connection with the Yukon, and by a man of special qualifications, and, consequently, the department felt that, in the public interest, its publication should be encouraged at the outset. 3. These books were purchased on November 16, 1899.

PAYMENTS TO GLOBE, MONTREAL HERALD, WITNESS, AND WINNIPEG FREE PRESS.

Mr. ROSS-ROBERTSON (by Mr. Clarke) asked :

What sums of money on all accounts have been paid by the Dominion of Canada to each of the following newspaper offices: The Toronto 'Globe,' the Montreal 'Herald,' the Montreal 'Witness' and the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' from January, 1883, till May, 1900?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have a letter from the Auditor General, that it is impossible to give my hon. friend the whole of the information he asks for, because the information in the Auditor General's office only goes back to July 1, 1883, and not to January 1 of that year. With this explanation, I give a statement of the payments made to the different newspapers, as follows :

YUKON—THE JOHN C. BARR.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

(a) Is there any report from Mr. Ogilvie relating to the ss. 'John C. Barr,' not brought down to the House ?

(b) If so, what is the date thereof ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). There is no report in the Customs Department from Mr. Ogilvie relating to the ss. John C. Barr, not brought down to the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). There is none in the Marine and Fisheries Department.

REPRESENTATION OF THE YUKON DISTRICT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government this session to ask parliament to provide for the representation of the Yukon district in the House of Commons ?

2. If not, why not ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no intention on the part of the government this session to ask parliament to provide for the representation of the Yukon district in the House of Commons. The government deem it advisable to wait until the next census, when the exact condition of the population and the condition of the country will be better known.

COMPENSATION TO ROBERT DEWAR.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

What sum has been paid to Robert Dewar or other party in compensation for loss of mill property at Barney's River, Pictou, Nova Scotia, by the Railway Department ?

To whom was the payment made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The sum of $1,500 was paid to Robert Dewar in settlement of a claim for damages for loss of mill property at Barney's River, N.S. The payment was made to Dewar and to Laura McGregor, who, I understand, has some interest in the property.

YUKON—J. E. WHITESIDE, CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. What position, if any, had J. E. Whiteside, in 1898, in the Customs Department at Bennett and at Summit ?

2. What were his duties ?

3. Did he so report to the collector of customs at Victoria, B. C. ?

4. If he did report, will the hon. the Minister of Customs cause his reports to be laid on the Table of the House at an early day ?

5. Did Mr. Whiteside report to Major Walsh, or any other officer, on customs work in detail ; and if so, did this report reach the Customs Department at Ottawa ?

6. If the report last mentioned reached Ottawa, will the hon. the Minister of Customs cause the same to be laid on the Table of the House at an early date ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 1 and 2. Mr. John E. Whiteside was sent by Collector Milne of Victoria, to Skagway on the 24th February, 1898, and subsequently he was transferred for service at White Pass. On the 27th May, 1898, which was shortly after he had been transferred to White Pass, he resigned his position and his resignation was accepted. 3. Mr. Whiteside may have reported to the collector of customs at Victoria, but no reports from him to such collector are on file in the Customs Department. 4. The answer to No. 3 answers this question. 5. No report to Major Walsh from Mr. Whiteside, when he was a customs officer, appears to have reached the Customs Department. On the 28th June, 1898, however, Mr. Whiteside wrote a letter to Major Walsh, with reference to his actions as a customs officer ; such letter is now on file in the Customs Department.

Mr. PRIOR. Would the hon. gentleman apply to the customs at Victoria and see if there was such a report sent by Mr. Whiteside to him, and if he can get it, will the hon. gentleman lay it on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will see when I get it.

EXAMINATIONS FOR RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

Mr. MONTAGUE asked :

When were the last examinations held for the railway mail clerks of the Ottawa division ?

What percentage did each clerk obtain ?

Is it the intention of the minister to make promotions on the result of those examinations as the increase of the estimates of 1900 and 1901 calls for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). In reply to the first question, I have to say that the examinations were held in Ottawa for the Ottawa district in the months of September and October, 1899. In reply to the second question, perhaps the hon. gentleman will be satisfied if I give him the information personally rather than publicly, as it is perhaps of a semi-confidential character. I have no other reason for not placing it upon the Table. To the third question, it is the intention of the minister to live up to the law and the amendments to the Post Office Act, and to have promotions made upon the merits.

MAIL SERVICE, INVERNESS, N.S.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness) asked :

1. What was the total cost to the government of Canada of carrying Her Majesty's mails in the county of Inverness, N.S., during the financial years ended 30th of June, 1896, and the 30th June, 1899, respectively ?

2. What was the total cost to the government of Canada of the maintenance of the post offices, including the salaries of postmasters in the county of Inverness, during the financial years ended 30th of June, 1896, and the 30th of June, 1899, respectively ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Cost of mail service in Inverness County on 30th of June, 1896, was $14,922.31 ; on the 30th of June, 1899, the cost of this service was $9,850.93.

THE MARCHMONT PROPERTY, QUEBEC.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Morin) asked :

1. Has the government been approached in relation to the purchase of a property in the vicinity of Quebec, situated west of the Plains of Abraham, known as the Marchmont property, and now belonging to one Georges Tanguay, an alderman of the city of Quebec ?
2. Who has applied to the government in relation to this matter ? Is it Mons. Tanguay himself, or Mons. S. N. Parent, mayor of Quebec ?
3. Is it the intention of the government to acquire the said property ?
4. Under what form of title and for what purpose ?
5. What is the price set upon it, and what is the superficial area of the tract of land ?
6. Is the government aware that the Marchmont property is in no sense entitled to be considered historical ground, and that no person, except the parties interested, recommends that it be purchased by government ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government have not been approached by anybody in relation to the purchase of the property known as Marchmont.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—COMMISSIONS AND PROMOTIONS.

Mr. ELLIS asked :

1. What is the total number of officers from Canada who have received commissions in the forces sent out from Canada by the government and Lord Strathcona for service in South Africa, including officers specially appointed and extra appointments, combatant and non-combatant ?
2. How many of such officers resided in the province of New Brunswick when so appointed ?
3. How many resided in each of the other provinces of the Dominion when so appointed ?
4. Is it the intention of the government to promote officers now serving in the ranks in South Africa to fill present or future vacancies as they may arise, or is it the intention to continue to fill such positions by sending officers from Canada who have not given up their commissions in order to serve with the Canadian forces ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. 146. 2. 5. 3. Ontario, 55 ; Quebec, 34 ; Nova Scotia, 6 ; New Brunswick, 5 ; Prince Edward Island, 3 ; Manitoba, 8 ; British Columbia, 5 ; and the North-west Territories, 30. 4. The question of promotions is in the hands of the officers in command of contingents in South Africa. I may also mention that twenty-four of the Imperial commissions given to Canada have been allotted to Canadians serving in South Africa, regardless of their present rank, and that Lord Roberts has been invited to make the selection. The number of officers and men taken from each military district was regulated by the strength of the militia therein, with reference to the different arms of the service for which volunteers were required in the respective contingents. Lord Strathcona's force was raised exclusively in Manitoba and the North-west and British Columbia, His Lordship having himself imposed this condition.

BASIC SLAG FERTILIZER.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Did the Minister of Agriculture, in answer to the following questions:

BASIC SLAG FERTILIZER.

Mr. DOMVILLE (by Mr. Fraser, Gusborough) asked:

1. Has the Agricultural Department any knowledge or experience of an English fertilizer known as Basic Slag or Thomas' phosphate powder ?
2. If so, has any of it been experimented with on the government Experimental Farm at Ottawa ?
3. What fertilizers have been experimented with from time to time on the Experimental Farm at Ottawa ?
4. In experimenting with various fertilizers does the officer having charge of such experiments take cognizance of analysis, with a view to ascertain the commercial value of such fertilizers to the various crops ?
5. If so, what steps does he take to verify the analysis of the manufacturer or seller ? Does he keep a record of such analysis ?
6. Has he analysed the Thomas' phosphate powder ; if so, what results did he get ? What percentage did he find of moisture ? Of phosphoric acid citric soluble ? Total phosphoric acid ? Average citric soluble phosphoric acid ? Average of phosphoric acid ?
7. What method did he adopt in his analysis, and for what reason did he adopt such method, and what result ?
8. Did he use the process used by the scientific chemical analysers of London, Paris and Germany, known as the Wagner method, and what were the results ? If not, why not ?
9. Is he aware that there has been in use in the United States a process for determining the available phosphoric acid in bone and mineral superphosphates and mixed manures ?
10. What has been the results of such tests as compared with the Wagner method ?
11. What method do you consider would be in the best interests of the producer, the manufacturer, the consumer and the farmer, and for what reason ?

12. Has the departmental officer above referred to any knowledge of the Wagner method ? Has he any knowledge of Dr. Bernard Dyer, district agricultural analyst for the counties of Bedford, Cornwall, Essex, Hants, Herts, Leicester, Rutland, West Suffolk and East Essex, Analytical Laboratory, 17 Great Tower Street, London ?

Professor Wagner, Ph. D., Privy Councillor of the Imperial Research Station, Darmstadt Germany ?

A. Maret and Ch. Delattre, Paris ?

Dr. Augustus Voelcker & Sons, London, Consulting Chemists of Royal Agricultural Society of England.

13. Is he aware that these chemists sent direct analysis to the Department of the Interior at Ottawa from samples drawn by an officer of the Department of Inland Revenue for the purpose, with the following results:

Analysis of Dr. Bernard Dyer—

Percentage of total phosphoric acid.....	16.77
Including phosphoric acid dissolved by a 2 per cent solution of citric acid, employed precisely according to the method of Prof. Wagner in 1899.....	14.60

Analysis of A. Maret and Ch. Delattre —

Phosphoric acid soluble in citric acid (Wagner's method)	14·71
Total phosphoric acid	16·63

Analysis of Dr. Augustus Voelcker—

Percentage of phosphoric acid dissolved by a 2 per cent solution citric acid (Wagner's method)	14·44
Total phosphoric acid	16·47

Analysis of P. Herlwig—

Percentage total phosphoric acid.....	16·83
Percentage citric acid soluble phosphoric acid	14·53

14. Are these professional chemists well and favourably known in the scientific world and would their analyses be accepted by the department in this case or on an arbitration of analysis generally? And is their professional services in such respect accepted in Europe?

15. Why have they adopted the Wagner method or methods in preference to the method or methods now in use in the United States, or said to be in use?

16. Are the methods said to be in use in the United States applicable to the analysis of the Thomas' phosphate powder to get most perfect results, or has it only been applied to it for reasons that this powder not being produced in the United States, no special analysis was considered necessary? If not, why not?

17. Who are the largest producers of this fertilizer?

18. Is it produced in the United States?

19. With such samples of the Thomas' phosphate powder as you may have access to, would it be possible for analysis to give—

Nitrogen—total including that of nitric acid or ammonia, if present	·16
Total calculated as ammonia	·20
Potash	1·88

Or take another analysis—

Nitrogen, including that of nitric acid or ammonia, if present	·1·81
Total calculated as ammonia.....	2·19
Potash	·14

20. If so, where did the nitrogen and potash arise?

21. If not, how do you account for such analysis?

22. Are you aware that under the Adulteration Act all articles not containing certain percentages are classed as adulterated, whether actually adulterated or not?

23. Are you aware that the Adulteration Act and Fertilizers Act must be read together on percentages to be contained in certain fertilizers?

24. Are you aware that clause 7, subsection 2, chap. 24, 53 Victoria, reads: 'No fertilizer shall be sold or offered or exposed for sale unless percentages to be contained in certain fertilizers?'

25. Are you aware the chief analyst of the Inland Revenue made the following report:

Laboratory of Inland Revenue Department,
Ottawa, September 15, 1899.

Sir,—I return herewith file No. 80772 and have to report that the samples referred to in Messrs. Wallace & Fraser's letter of the 1st instant, have been analysed in this laboratory with the following results:

	Moisture.	PHOSPHORIC ACID.		Total.
		Reverted.	Insoluble.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
No. 17,661	0·14	7·16	5·44	12·60
No. 17,662	0·18	4·75	7·85	12·60
No. 17,663	0·14	6·72	6·40	13·12

26. Under such analysis would it be possible to offer or expose for sale Thomas' phosphate powder in the face of section of Fertilizers Act quoted, which calls for 8 per cent?

27. Why was 8 per cent available made the standard?

28. If it was to protect the farmers, is there any good and sufficient reason why the standard should now be reduced to 5 per cent, except to meet the government prohibitive analysis which brings it under 8 per cent?

29. Is it not detrimental to the farmer and manufacturer that this fertilizer should be branded adulterated in consequence of a difference of opinion as to what system of analysis should be adopted, the Wagner or an obsolete method in use for many years in the United States and Canada before Thomas' phosphate powder was discovered and manufactured, and in no way applicable to the correct analysis of the Thomas' phosphate powder?

30. Is it not in the interests of the farmer that a high grade Thomas' phosphate powder should be imported and sold, rather than reduce the standard of available phosphoric acid and open the door to low grade fertilizers?

31. To meet the difficulty between the producers of the Thomas' phosphate powder and the farmer who consumes, what system of analysis should be employed that would be in the interests and fair to both and thoroughly in the public interests?

32. Do you see any good reason why this fertilizer should be prohibited from importation and sale, or is it in the interests of the farmer that it should enjoy a portion of the field with other fertilizers?

33. Would the adoption of the Wagner method or any other similar method, lead to confusion? If so, in what way?

34. Have the experimental farms the proper facilities at the experimental farms to carry out such method?

35. Would it not be in the interests of the agricultural community that the actual analysis be given irrespective of any particular view of any particular analyst, so that it might be known exactly what the buyer was buying and paying for, irrespective of any personal views on the utilization of antique and obsolete methods of analysis?

36. Did the Minister of Inland Revenue make the following statement: 'The department cannot alter its system at the instance of any special manufacture, but it is ready to adopt the latest and best scientific methods approved by the Society of Public Analysts in England, or recommended by any such body as the Royal Agricultural Society of England. It is also prepared to adopt that system which the authorities of the Dominion Experimental Farm recognize as giving results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice.'

37. Has there been any protest to the method of analysis adopted by the chief analyst for the determining the availability and total phosphoric acid in Thomas' phosphate powder? If so, when and by whom?

38. When such protest was made, were any steps taken to obtain the opinion of the Society of Public Analysts in England, the Royal Agricultural Society in England, or the authorities of the Dominion Experimental Farm, as to what method of analysis gave results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice?

39. Will the government submit an explanation of the methods of analysis adopted by the Department of Inland Revenue, viz., 'the citrate of ammonia solution,' and forward a copy of the explanation of the method used in England and Europe, viz., 'a 2 per cent solution of citric acid,' to the chemist of the Dominion Experimental Farms, consulting chemist of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, and the director of the Agricultural Research Station, Darmstadt, Germany?

40. Will the government submit the following question to such authorities: 'Which method of analysis for determining the availability of the phosphoric acid in basic slag or Thomas' phosphate powder would, in your opinion, give results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice?'

41. Will the government adopt the system recommended by those authorities as giving results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice?

42. Has the Department of Inland Revenue received sample of Albert's Thomas phosphate powder during the month of April, 1900?

43. If any samples were received, have they been analysed by the chemist of the department, and what was the result of such analysis?

44. Who is the consulting chemist of the Royal Agricultural Society of England?

45. Were certificates of analysis of Albert's Thomas phosphate powder received by the department? If so, by whom were the certificates signed?

46. What was the result of the analysis of Albert's Thomas phosphate powder, as expressed in such certificates?

47. Upon what basis or analysis will the 'relative value per ton of 2,000 pounds,' as given in the bulletin of the Inland Revenue Department, be calculated or determined?

48. Does such relative value so calculated or determined give a fair and correct result of the agricultural value of Thomas' phosphate powder as a fertilizer?—make the following replies?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. Yes. 2. Yes. Experiments were tried in the spring of 1895. First by applying the Thomas' phosphate powder in the proportion of 400 pounds per acre to half an acre of mixed clover and timothy in the second year's growth. The half acre on which the Thomas' phosphate powder was used gave 1 ton 740 pounds of cured hay, while the check plot adjoining, on which no fertilizer had been used, gave 1 ton 320 pounds, a difference in favour of the crop treated with the Thomas' phosphate powder of 840 pounds of hay per acre. Another half-acre plot of red clover was similarly treated, 400 pounds of the Thomas' phosphate powder being used per acre. In this instance the fertilized plot gave 1 ton 530 pounds per acre, while the untreated check plot alongside gave 1 ton 453 pounds, a difference in favour of the plot treated with the Thomas' phosphate powder of 154 pounds of clover hay per acre. In 1898 and 1899 the Thomas' phosphate powder was used on the Central Experimental Farm on thirty-eight plots, consisting of five each of wheat, barley, oats, Indian corn, carrots and potatoes and four each of turnips and mangels. Particulars of these tests are contained in the Experimental Farm Reports for 1898 and 1899. 3. The number of plots permanently devoted to experiments with fertilizers at the Ottawa Experimental Farm is 105, each measuring one-tenth of an acre. The following fertilizers are used either singly or in combination: Barn-yard manure, fresh and rotted; Thomas' phosphate powder; nitrate of soda; unleached wood ashes; mineral superphosphate; bone, finely ground; muriate of potash; sulphate of ammonia; sulphate of iron; common salt (sodium chloride); and land plaster, or gypsum. 4. The analysis of all commercial fertilizers sold in Canada being made and published annually by the Inland Revenue Department, only occasionally, as our experimental work makes it necessary, are analyses made of the fertilizers employed. 5. The bulletin issued on commercial fertilizers by the Inland Revenue Department is consulted. In certain cases analysis may be made in the farm laboratory. A record is kept of all analytical work done in the farm laboratory. 6. We have not as yet made any official analysis of Thomas' phosphate powder. 7. See answer to question 6. 8. See answer to question 6. 9. Yes. 10. The Wagner method is used solely in the analysis of basic slag or Thomas' phosphate powder. The neutral citrate method is used for superphosphate and other phosphatic fertilizers. The latter method would not show as much so-called available phosphoric acid in Thomas' phosphate powder as would be obtained by the Wagner method. The reason of this is that the basic slag or Thomas' phosphate powder contains some 15 per cent free lime, and the presence of this interferes with the solvent action of the neutral citrate of ammonia solution on the phosphate. The Wagner solution, containing free citric acid, neutralizes this lime, and thus the difficulty is overcome. 11. The chemist of the Dominion Experimental Farm is of the opinion that a method by which the free lime is first got rid of or neutralized would be, to all concerned, a fair one to use in the analysis of basic slag. He also considers that the fineness of the Thomas' phosphate powder should be taken into account when estimating the fertilizing value of this material. Dr. Bernard Dyer has shown (Journal of Chemical Society, March, 1894), that the solvent action of the exudation of plant rootlets is practically equivalent to 1 per cent solution citric acid. It, therefore, seems that the process using such a solvent, after the neutralization of the free lime, would show the amount of phosphoric acid present in a more or less available condition. 12. The chemist of the Dominion Experimental Farm is aware of the details of the Wagner process. He has a knowledge of the chemical reputation of Professors Wagner, Maret and Delattre, and Dr. Augustus Voelcker & Sons. 13. He is not aware that the analysis quoted was sent to the Department of Inland Revenue, as stated. 14. These chemists are well and favourably known, and their work is accepted in Europe as reliable. 15. It must be supposed that they adopted the Wagner method for the reason already stated, viz., that it takes cognizance of the free lime present in the basic slag. 16. If by the methods said to be in use in the United States' is meant the neutral citrate of ammonia method, then it must be stated that owing to the presence of free lime in the basic slag, such a method is not strictly applicable when the percentage of phosphoric acid more or less available is sought. 17. Its largest producers are firms in England and Germany. 18. Yes, in Pottstown, Pa., U.S. 19. Basic slag or Thomas' phosphate powder is sold per se, i.e., unmixed with other fertilizers, and consequently does not contain any nitrogen or potash. 20 and 21. With regard to the analyses quoted, it is impossible to make a statement without further information respecting the same. 22. Yes, that is, when the percentage of a certain constituent falls below a stated standard, the material is classed as adulterated. 23. No. 24. The words quoted are in the clause, as stated. 25. The chemist of the Experimental Farms has no knowledge that the chief analyst of the Inland Revenue Department made the report, as stated in the question. 26. It could not, if the so-called available phosphoric acid were determined by the neutral citrate method. 27. The Fertilizers Act was framed many years ago, and he has no knowledge as to the reasons for the adoption of 8 per cent available phosphoric acid. 28. He is not aware of any reason, save that it allows the Thomas' phosphate powder to be analysed by the neutral citrate method. 29. Basic slag or Thomas' phosphate powder, when pure and finely ground, has proven itself to be a useful source of phosphoric acid for crops, especially on peaty and sour soils and soils deficient in lime. 30. There is as yet, comparatively speaking, but little Canadian data as to the value of basic slag as compared with other phosphatic fertilizers, but it is certainly worthy of a trial, especially on such lands as mentioned in answer 29. Any proposed alteration of the Act that would have the effect of lowering the standard would, naturally, require very careful consideration. 31. A fair method of analysis of basic slag would, in the opinion of the chemist, be one that took into consideration the basicity of this fertilizer; in other words, one that dissolved out or neutralized the free lime before applying the solvent for the so-called available phosphoric acid. Dr. H. W. Wiley, chemist to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D.C., U.S., says: 'A slag rich in calcium oxide (lime) would deport itself differently with a given ammonium citrate solution from one in which the lime had been chiefly converted into carbonate. If possible, therefore, all samples should be reduced to the same state of basicity before the action of any given solution is determined.' 32. There is no good reason why the importation or sale of basic slag should be prohibited. 33. Provided that the nature of the solvent used for dissolving out the so-called available phosphoric acid was clearly stated, there is apparently no reason why the adoption of the Wagner method or a modification thereof should lead to confusion. 34. The laboratories of the Experimental Farms are equipped to make analyses of all fertilizers. 35. As far as possible the analyses should be made by methods giving results in accordance with those obtained by agricultural practices. 36. The chemist believes the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue made the statement. He is of the opinion that a series of methods for the analysis of fertilizers, &c., approved of and issued with the authority of the Society of Public Analysts of England would be of great value to Canada. 37. He is not aware of any such protest. 38. He is not aware of any such steps having been taken. 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. (Evidently not for the chemist of the Experimental Farms to answer.) 44. Dr. J. Augustus Voelcker. 45, 46, 47. (Evidently not for the chemist of the Experimental Farms to answer.) 48. In determining the relative agricultural value of Thomas' phosphate powder it would be necessary to estimate the so-called available phosphoric acid by some method which took into account the basicity of the sample.

INSUFFICIENT POSTAGE ON LETTERS.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

Has the Postmaster General come to any reciprocal arrangement with the United States post office authorities in regard to the collection of insufficient postage on letters posted in the United States for Canada, so as to obviate the delay which now occurs by letters being held for insufficient postage in the United States?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Application is being made to the United States to enter into a reciprocal arrangement that will to some extent get over the difficulty that my hon. friend refers to. Of course, it must be reciprocal, we have not control of the matter ourselves. I have asked the Washington authorities to consent to some arrangement in regard to insufficiently prepaid letters between Canada and the United States, the same as obtains between Canada and all countries which are members of the postal union.

INDIAN GRAVES ON SONGHEES RESERVE.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the attention of the Department of Indian Affairs ever been called by their agent in British Columbia, or by any other person or persons, to complaints about the disagreeable proximity of Indian graves on the Songhees Indian Reserve to some residences occupied by white people?

2. If so, did the department have any investigation made into the matter; and if so, what was the reported state of affairs?

3. Has the department given any instructions to have the alleged nuisance abated?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. Yes. The attention of the department was called to this matter in the year 1898. 2. The department referred the complaint to the Indian Superintendent for British Columbia for investigation, and received a report from him to the effect that upon inquiry, he found that the cemetery in question is situated at a point at the entrance of Lime Bay, and the houses of the city of Victoria are across the bay, at least one hundred yards distant; that the grounds are tidy and well kept and could hardly be considered in the light of a nuisance; that in the event of interments in the cemetery being forbidden, the Indians have no other plot on the reserve that could be recommended, either for convenience or from a sanitary point of view, and to bury in the public cemetery would cost from $10 to $20 for each burial, and that it was not considered that there were sufficient grounds for preventing the Songhees Indians from interring their dead in their burying-ground. 3. In view of this report, the department informed the Indian Superintendent that it was not willing to take any steps at that time to prevent the Songhees Indians from interring their dead in their own burying-ground.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

Mr. BOURASSA asked :

Has the government, or any of its members, been consulted as to the conditions upon which the South African war should be settled? Is it the intention of the government to offer any suggestion or opinion on the matter?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Neither the government nor any of its members have been consulted as to conditions upon which the South African war should be settled. They are not considering the advisability of offering any suggestion or opinion upon the matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

QUARANTINE SERVICE AT GROSSE ISLE.

Mr. TALBOT (by Mr. Campbell) asked :

1. Does the hon. the Minister of Agriculture believe that he can properly do the quarantine service at Grosse Isle with one crew for two boats?

2. Does he think it prudent and safe to allow one of the boats lying at anchor while the crew go to shore for their meals?

3. Will an economy of one thousand dollars per month be realized by the above arrangement?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. No, the minister has not attempted to do this. 2. No, the minister does not think that this would be safe. 3. No, as arrangements have not been made, no question of the economy has been considered.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 163) to amend the Bank Act.

Mr. BENNETT ROSAMOND (North Lanark). Mr. Speaker, I was not present when this Bill was before the Committee of the Whole, as I wished to be, in order to ask for the adoption of an amendment, but, I would like now to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), if he would kindly consent to have the Bill referred back to the Committee of the Whole, in order that I may discuss the amendment which I propose to introduce. If he will not do so, I will have to move the amendment now. The amendment I propose is :

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to add the following as clause 45 :

Section 77 of the Bank Act is amended by adding the following clause :

Any bank advancing or lending money upon the security of the goods, wares and merchandise or collateral security or property mentioned in sections 73 and 74 of this Act, shall file in the office of the registrar of the registration division of the county or township where such advance is made and such lien created on the said property pledged to the bank under this Act, a statement describing the said goods, wares and merchandise or property so pledged, the name of the bank and the name of the debtor and the amount of the advance and the date upon which it was made, and unless and until such legislation is effected, the warehouse receipt, bill of lading, pledge, lien, charge or other security, shall not give to the bank any prior lien or charge upon such goods, wares and merchandise or other property referred to in said sections 73 and 74, notwithstanding the provisions of section 77 to the contrary.'

The object of the amendment is to remedy certain complaints which have been made, as to the evil effects which are felt in the working of the Bank Act. Banks have, under the old system, and under the present Bill, will have the continued right to advance on securities pledged to them, without these advances or securities going to the registrar for registration. As I understand it, no other institution, or no private person, has the right to advance money, or take security, without having the security registered in a certain way in the registration office. It was said before the Banking Committee, that the amendments that were asked for there, involved class legislation. I may say that this is class legislation as far as these advances are concerned. Why should the banks have the right to take security without being registered, when no private person has that right? The effect of it is that creditors are not aware that the banks have taken this security, and they go on giving credit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rosamond), speaking of an ordinary warehouse receipt, or of a special security?

Mr. ROSAMOND. Not a warehouse receipt alone, but pledges and liens of different kinds.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The banks are in no different position from anybody else.

Mr. ROSAMOND. The banks take security now without giving any notice as to the persons from whom they have taken security. Take the case of a farmer, for instance; a farmer may sell his produce to a merchant and give him thirty or forty days. He supposes that the merchant is perfectly good, and before the thirty or forty, or sixty days, as the case may be, expire, the merchant fails, and the farmer finds, to his disgust, that the bank has in its control all of the merchant's property. Even the very property that the farmer sold to the merchant, is taken possession of by the bank, and he has no recourse. That is only an example, and the same thing holds good with securities given in different ways. I do not see why banks should be given this power any more than any private banker or institution. Why should banks have the power more than a private individual? Why should this class legislation be given? I think it is an anomaly that should be corrected, and I am proposing the amendment to have it corrected now. I hope the hon. Minister of Finance will consent to it, because I think it is only a fair request, and one that will be in the interest of the public generally.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I regret that I am unable to agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Rosamond), as to the desirability of having this Bill sent back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, for the purpose to which he has referred. Where you desire an examination into the details of a measure, the services of a body like the Committee on Banking and Commerce may be usefully employed, but, I think, my hon. friend will agree with me, that, where you are dealing with a matter of principle, as I submit you are in this case, it is better to discuss the question in the open House, than to attempt to refer it back to the committee. The amendment proposes to strike at the root of the system of banking credits, which has, for a great many years, played a very important part in the management of the trade of the country. Whatever may be said as to the desirability of having securities in other transactions registered, it has been admitted for a great many years, that in order to give the necessary facilities for banking, in the carrying on the business of the country—

Mr. ROSAMOND. The minister has misunderstood me. I did not mean to refer it to the Committee on Banking, but to the Committee of the Whole House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is correct. This is a question of principle, involving no detail, and we might just as well discuss the amendment here. I was proceeding to say that for many years it has been deemed necessary in order to carry on the business of the country, and to facilitate transactions between customers and the banks, to permit these liens to be established without any registry. This principle has been in the Banking Act for a very long time, and I think I may safely say that it has been accepted by parliament and by the country as a necessary element in banking business. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rosamond) abolishes it as he proposes, and declares that hereafter there should be no such security without registration in the same manner as you are obliged to register bills of sale in some of the provinces, then my hon. friend (Mr. Rosamond) would be striking at the foundation of the system of credit as between the banks and their customers which on the whole has worked successfully for a great many years. Apart from the general principle, my second objection is: That while the clause might be workable in the province of Ontario—and it seems to have been designed with special reference to the conditions in Ontario—yet I am advised that in some of the provinces, (at all events in the province of Quebec), there is no machinery by which this method could be worked out. My hon.

friend (Mr. Rosamond) says he is not aware of any other cases in which parties are permitted to take securities without registration, but I think he will find on inquiry that he is mistaken in that. If this amendment should be adopted, the banks would no longer be permitted to make these advances and take security, although every private individual in the province of Ontario would be permitted to do that which he is not willing to permit the bank to do. In the Ontario Mercantile Amendment Act, we have provisions very much the same as in the Bank Act, and it is set forth that any person, (not any bank), but any person may have priority of lien in transactions of this character. I will quote section 11. of chap. 145, of the Revised Statutes of Ontario :

All advances made on the security of any such cove receipt, bill of lading, specification, receipt, acknowledgment or certificate as aforesaid, shall give and be held to give to the person making the advances, a claim for the repayment of such advances on the cereal grains, goods, wares or merchandise therein mentioned, prior to and by preference over the claim of any unpaid vendor, or other creditor, save and except claims for wages of labour performed in making and transporting such timber, boards, deals, staves or other lumber.

My hon. friend will therefore see that this prior lien exists, outside the Banking Act, in the general business of Ontario—

Mr. WALLACE. Have not they to be registered ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This Act says nothing of registration required. There is a general Act in Ontario about registration, but I am advised that this is excepted from the general Act and that this lien exists without registration. Gentlemen of the legal profession would be better informed as to that, but as I am instructed we have this system in the province of Ontario to-day. Even if it were not so, the experience, one might say of generations, has shown that this system of giving the banks a lien for advances made under the conditions referred to is a very convenient and necessary feature of our banking system. For a man of limited means who requires to go to the bank for accommodation to enable him to carry on his business, it is very necessary. While I quite understand the object which my hon. friend (Mr. Rosamond) has in view, and while I believe that occasionally instances may arise in which the system may seem to admit of abuse, still I hold that the experience of banking and business conditions has shown the present practice to be wise and useful, and I trust that on reflection my hon. friend will not press for so important a change as is contemplated by his amendment.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). There is one class of men in this country who will not offer any violent objection to the Bill as proposed by the Minister of Finance, and that class comprises the bankers themselves. They will hail with delight the provisions of this Bill from start to finish. Indeed it looks to me as if the bankers had drawn up the Bill and placed it in the hands of the Minister of Finance to carry it through the House. I would not say that, because I know that the Minister of Finance has sufficient ability to formulate a Bill himself, but if he did so, I am afraid he has some way got under the control or domination or influence of the bankers of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Malign influence.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, malign influence. The whole Bill is a surrender to the banks. The banks of this country are indispensable to carry on our business, but unfortunately they have too strong a grip upon the members of this House.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Hear hear.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) at once records his approval of that.

Mr. WOOD. The member for Hamilton did not say a word.

Mr. WALLACE. The members of the House of Commons are like the rest of the community; they are either borrowers or lenders—most of us are borrowers I am afraid—and we are therefore under the control of the banks. Those who are lenders are owners of bank stocks and they are controlled by the bank too, because they are the bankers. Between the bankers like my hon. friend from Hamilton, and those in the other class, this House of Commons has a pretty hard time in putting through effective bank legislation. We see the result of that in the Bill before the House. Under this Bill the banks are permitted to have rights and privileges with regard to securities which are not accorded to any other individual or corporation. Others, except the banks, have to register their liens so as to warn the public that that property is under lien, in order that people may be cautioned against lending money on the same property. The banks have not to do that, and other parties finding nothing in the registry office against the property go on trusting the owners on the strength of that property.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). What security does the hon. gentleman refer to? Is it the chattel mortgage?

Mr. WALLACE. The chattel mortgage is given by the man who has the property in his possession, but a warehouse receipt is not of that class.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Warehouses receipts are not registered whether the bank takes them or any one else.

Mr. WALLACE. I except them, but bills of sale and chattel mortgages are not and have not to be registered. Here is an association formed during the present session called the Bankers' Association, and which is given enormous powers in case of the insolvency of a bank. This Bankers' Association is to act as agents to wind up the affairs of an insolvent bank. They are giving other enormous powers. They are making the banks a close corporation. New banks are almost prohibited from starting. We have increased the amount that is required to start a bank, therefore you have practically a close corporation of the banks already existing in the country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. We have not increased the amount required for starting a bank.

Mr. WALLACE. The amount was increased at the time the last amendments were made. Though that was done by our own government, I consider that it was a step in the wrong direction. The whole tendency of the legislation, both the last time and more conspicuously in this Bill, is to concentrate power in the banks. I do not remember any banks starting since the last charters were granted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One was chartered; none was started.

Mr. WALLACE. That is what I thought, proving practically that the tendency of all the legislation has been to make a close corporation of the banks, to make all of us who want to borrow money more largely under the control of the banks, and to prevent that system of free trade that should prevail.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, a system of free trade within our own borders. That is the true protective policy; protect us from outsiders, but give us absolute free trade within our own bounds. We do not charge duty on goods going from one province to another or from one portion of the Dominion to another. With regard to the other clauses of the Bill, the banks are permitted to hold real estate for a longer period than they were before, which I consider to be a step in the wrong direction. What reason is there for it? Simply to give the banks further and larger control. It is against the interest of the country for the banks to have power to hold land for what is practically an unlimited length of time. Then, a bank may lend money on the security of standing timber and the rights or licenses held by persons to cut or remove such timber. That is an additional power. Then, in section 17, it is provided:

The bank may also lend money to any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in products of agriculture, the forest, quarry and mine, or the sea, lakes and rivers, or to any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in live stock or dead stock and the products thereof, upon the security of such products or of such live stock or dead stock and the products thereof.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

There is no registration required. That includes the products of everything. You cannot mention anything, I think, that is not included in this clause. I think the government should have restricted the powers of the banks instead of adding to them without limitation. I have no doubt the Finance Minister to-day thinks so, too, and I have also no doubt that these banks were able to present a pistol to his head and compel him to accede to that proposition in the interest of the banks, but not in the interest of the people. These are my objections. The banks are given enormous powers. They are given power to issue circulation up to double the amount of their paid-up capital. A bank with a capital of a million dollars can loan that million dollars; it can then loan another million dollars simply for the cost of the paper in the bank notes; that is, $2,000,000 which it can loan on a capital of $1,000,000.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. The right hon. First Minister says 'hear, hear.' Is that right?

The PRIME MINISTER. Is it wrong?

Mr. WALLACE. I think it is.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have never seen any evidence of it so far.

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot lend $200 on a capital of $100, but a bank can.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You can if you can get a man to take it.

Mr. WALLACE. It is not getting a man to take it. You make it legal tender; you force it on the people. A bank with a capital of $1,000,000 is able to lend and get interest on $2,000,000. I can only say that under such conditions the banking business ought to be the best business in this country, and so it is. I would advise the First Minister, if he desires to accumulate wealth, to go into that business. I would like to be in it myself under the splendid conditions which have been given from time to time, and which are enormously enlarged by the Bill now under consideration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is nothing to prevent you starting a bank.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, these bankers are the owners of the banks now, and, as I have pointed out, they have put a practical stop to the rest of us starting a bank if we had the money.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not the point of view at all. The point of view is whether, if the banks had not that power, the facilities for lending or borrowing money would be increased or decreased.

Mr. WALLACE. My opinion is, that where you have close corporations banding themselves together and fixing the rate of interest, and preventing other banks being established, because that is the practical effect of our legislation, you have conditions which interfere with the freedom of trade in that regard, and inevitably raise the rate of interest. I object as one of the payers of interest. Those millionaires across there, like the Minister of Marine, may think this is all right; but I do not. I represent more people than he does in that regard, at any rate. The borrowers are much more numerous than the lenders, and we borrowers want our rights protected and the rate of interest kept down to the lowest notch, which it will not be under the conditions of this Bill, which from start to finish bears the impress of having the combined support of the bankers of this country. I say that that looks a suspicious circumstance and one that we should look more carefully into. The Finance Minister himself should be able to come before this House and say in this Bill: We are giving more rights to the people, we have restricted the power of the banks where it was necessary in the interests of the people, but you cannot point out to a single line where that is being done in the present Bill.

Amendment (Mr. Rosamond) negatived.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—THE JOHN C. BARR.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). I have once or twice, Mr. Speaker, referred to the precedents laid down by this government—almost before it got into office, and at any rate, just as soon as it obtained the reins of power—in connection with procedure where there was suspicion of fraud. To be precise, I refer to the letter of Mr. Sifton on July 17, 1896, when he wrote to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that the result of the late elections in some of the constituencies in Manitoba indicated to him that a fraud of some kind had been perpetrated in the interests of the government candidate. He went on to say what he had done, and then asked for help, and the Prime Minister, on the 24th July, promptly assured him that all the funds necessary to unearth these frauds would be forthcoming.

To come down quickly to a more recent date, I would refer to the pledge which the Prime Minister gave last session, on June 29, 1899, when he said:

We must probe these Yukon delinquencies, so called, to the bottom. No officer of the government must be allowed to rest under any suspicion.

With that introduction, I come to the case of the John C. Barr, a case that was prominently brought to the notice of the government on many occasions in the last session, not merely by myself on several occasions, before the formal resolution that I moved, and the formal charge I made, but also brought to their attention by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), also through correspondence addressed to the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Customs Department, and also by the firm of Belcourt & McDougal, a firm of barristers and solicitors practicing in Dawson City, and of which the senior member is one of the members for Ottawa supporting the government in this House. These charges were pressed in detail; they were not merely general statements emanating from a particular party in the heat of debate, but were pressed in a more serious form.

The charge that I made was coupled also with the very serious statement and charge that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) had shown great partiality and favouritism to a foreign trading company in Dawson, the North American Trading and Transportation Company, and in connection with that I charge favouritism shown in the permitting, if not directly, the violation of the laws relating to merchant shipping and the violation of the customs laws, for the benefit of that corporation or company.

In this connection I would call attention to the provisions of the law. In the Merchants Shipping Act of 1894, provisions are made respecting a very serious offence—and an offence that the government alone can deal with—namely, where an abuse is made of the flag, where by false declarations of ownership a foreign vessel is enabled to obtain a British register and to fly the British flag. That is so serious an offence that it is punished by confiscation of the vessel and other very serious penalties. Powers are given, of course, to naval officers, but specially given to the collectors and other officers of customs in the different ports, to take these vessels and impose upon them the consequences, the obtaining of a decree of forfeiture. The mere act of obtaining in this improper way the benefit of the British flag ipso facto forfeits the vessel to the Crown. In such a case, no private individual can do more than lay before the qualified officer the information which he has, and it then becomes the duty of the government to sift the charge to the bottom.

In connection with the Customs Act—the Minister of Customs will correct me if I am wrong—for a vessel to obtain low appraisal, for instance, to be entered by the owners for the purpose of customs, and in connection with this change of flag at an undervaluation—for such fraudulent undervaluation and false representations in that connection, confiscation of the vessel is among the punishments that may be inflicted.

There is another clause under which, it seems, in this case, the Inspector of Customs acted, and that is under clause 8, of the Customs Act, where an additional duty is provided for in case the true value for duty of goods as finally determined has not been stated. In section 172, the penalty of forfeiture is provided in connection with the offence of making false statements or in any way attempting to defraud the revenue or to evade the payment of the duty or any part of it. It would be ridiculous to suppose of course, in the stringent provisions of the Customs Act, there was any doubt of the power to confiscate a vessel where that vessel has been fraudulently entered at a lower valuation than was proper. Bearing in mind these provisions of the law and the general statements in the House of Commons as well as the statements made by the parties interested, we come to the first statement I made. And, as some evidence of favouritism to this company, I may say that it is a matter of general belief in many parts of this country that Mr. Healy, the general manager of the American Trading and Transportation Company, that Mr. Walsh, and Mr. Sifton the Minister of the Interior, were formerly very intimate and close friends, and by the Auditor General's Report we find that this company supplies an enormous quantity of goods to the department presided over by the Minister of the Interior. Each report contains an account. In the last report of the Auditor General at page H-38, we find that $10,305.60 was paid to this corporation by the Department of the Interior. Among some papers brought down this session, I find mention of an application that Mr. Healy is making—and he or his company will be found making a considerable number of applications in connection not merely with the patronage of the department, but in connection with timber limits and mill sites and things of that kind. In connection with that, the following letter speaks for itself, and while it does not corroborate the statement of the close connection, there is no doubt as to the knowledge of the Department of the Interior of an acquaintanceship between the minister and Mr. Healy :

January 14, 1899.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior.

Sir.—I send inclosed a copy of an application by Mr. J. J. Healy for a mill site on an island near the mouth of the Klondike. As you know, he is manager of the North American Trading and Transportation Company, and already has a mill site on the island. I would ask you to hold the documents without acting on them until such time as I can report to you more fully.

It may be asked: Why do you bring in, in connection with a matter relating to the Marine Department and the Customs Department, this reference to a charge of partiality and favouritism toward that trading corporation by the Minister of the Interior? I frankly answer that question by saying that after reading the papers that have been brought down, I can come to no other conclusion than that the partiality shown and the violation of the law committed in this case can only be due to some such reason. I can imagine no other reason that would account for these things being done and the manner in which they have been passed over. In the correspondence that has been brought down and that is now on the Table, we find some points worthy of notice. For the sequence of the statement I had better refer to the charge that was made by me which reference is as follows:—

That official favouritism and partiality had been shown and intended to the representatives and interests of the North American Trading Company, of Chicago and Seattle, in the Yukon district.

That grave and scandalous abuses have occurred in the Department of Customs in the Yukon district, United States vessels having been admitted to the Canadian registry in the said district upon fraudulent undervaluation, as in the case of the steamer 'John C. Barr,' which was worth at least $60,000, but was allowed to be passed at the customs at a valuation of $10,000.

We find that the Customs Department sent Hansard of May 12, and I think, of another date, to Mr. Ogilvie, the commissioner of the Yukon, who was also an inspector of the Customs Department, with the request to investigate the valuations. Now, I stop just for a moment to call attention to the peculiar instructions given. The instructions are limited to ascertaining and reporting on the subject of valuation. On May 28, Mr. Kersey, the representative of a very energetic and active company there, a gentleman of great experience, who has been the manager of the White Star Line of steamships between New York and Liverpool, for many years and who is manager of this company, writes on May 28, 1899, to the inspector of steamboats at Dawson. In this letter he refers to the John C. Barr, being owned by the North American Trading and Transportation Company of Chicago and Seattle. On June 8, 1900, we find from Mr. Ogilvie a report or letter. And I may say that around these reports and letters there seems to have been a mystery. It took nearly all this session to find out exactly what was Mr. Ogilvie's report and what he did under the instructions of May 16. This is all he says in this report to the customs:

There is another boat entered by the North American Trading and Transportation Company, the 'John C. Barr,' which, I understand, is entered at a valuation of $7,500. Now, this boat is a large one, 150 feet in length (I would say), with an iron hull. The hull alone I would consider worth that sum at least.

I state these facts without prejudice to any one—

That is a great expression in the Yukon papers.

--simply considering it my duty to do so for your information.

Then, the paper that was brought down in the return and which, on its face, could not have been the report in answer to the instructions to investigate. It did not profess to be the result of any investigation, but is an off-hand statement of Mr. Ogilvie. So that through the courtesy of the Minister of Customs, after considerable questioning in the House, and I am afraid after considerable trouble outside of it, he was good enough to give me the only other report that was sent by Mr. Ogilvie on this subject; and to-day we have been told across the floor of the House that there are no other papers in the Marine or Customs from Mr. Ogilvie that could possibly be in reply to these instructions sent him to investigate.

June 20, 1899.

Sir,—I am in receipt of yours of the 6th—

That must be May 16, as no letter was sent on June 6.

—inquiring the valuation of the 'John C. Barr' for Canadian register. I have already written to the minister on the valuation of that boat, and also on the 'Pingree' and the 'Lowe.'

And here comes another misstatement. I accept in its entirety, the statement of the Minister of Customs, which is as follows:

No letter was received by the minister as referred to. The letter which Mr. Ogilvie, no doubt, refers to was that of June 8th to the commissioner of customs, and that I have already read.

Then this gentleman goes on:

As I have intimated to my letter to the Minister of Customs, it appears to me the value of these steamers is placed very low.

And, mark this, Mr. Speaker, that while I am only asking the House to follow the history of one of these boats, the correspondence shows, as my motion pointed out, that it was not a case merely of one vessel obtaining undue favours and an illegal advantage to the crew to use the British flag in British waters, but there were many United States bottoms there, that were permitted to obtain the use of that flag, by the same means as occurred in this case.

I have asked the minister to have an appraiser sent in here. Mr. Davis simply took the valuation of people whom you might reasonably expect would be fair and exact.

And whom do you suppose these people were? You will see how lightly Mr. Ogilvie treads upon this subject. There is a responsibility put upon him, he is the chief inspector of customs there, and he is asked by the minister to report on the solemn statements made in the House, and he practically appeals to the minister to get some one else to do the duty. But he ventures to say that Mr. Davis simply took the valuation of people, whom you might reasonably expect to be fairly exact, and those people turn out to be the president of the North American Trading and Transport Company, along with, I suppose, the captain and a pilot, although there is no evidence of that—all in the employ of the company. These are the men who appraised this vessel at that low rate.

This I do not think may have been the case of these three steamers. In my letter to the minister I intimated that these steamers were worth from $25,000 to $40,000.

I call the attention of the Minister of Customs to this. The letter that he thinks is the letter that Mr. Ogilvie refers to, as the letter to the minister, cannot have been brought down as fully as it should have been, if this statement of his is correct, for he says that in that letter to the minister that cannot be thoroughly explained, he intimated these steamers were worth from $25,000 to $40,000. There is no such reference in the letter of June 8, which the minister has suggested, and the only letter to him must have been that which was addressed to the Minister of Customs.

Of course, I have not had time to go over them personally, and it would take several days to make a detailed examination, so that the above is only an approximate statement. I can only urge you to send in a properly qualified appraiser to deal with these three steamers and any others that may seek admission to the Canadian register.

This is the one that the minister was good enough to send to me, as the only other document he could find bearing on the subject of the John C. Barr, and it was after the papers were brought down to the House and printed, that this copy was sent to me. Now, Mr. Speaker, I stop for a moment, to call attention to this: I urged across the floor of this House, as the minister will remember, that it would be a grave injustice to the owners of British vessels there to delay this matter, that if these vessels on these rivers, so close to American waters, into which they could run at any moment, were permitted, while officers were being sent from here, actually to navigate and do business on Canadian waters, half the injury, or all the injury, might be done before any redress could be had. There is the extraordinary thing, that though instructions were sent out and the Hansard referred to, Mr. Ogilvie takes a course, weak on its face, perhaps I would be misunderstood if I used the word 'cowardly,' in its tone; but he says : Let the matter go on, let all these vessels ply backwards and forwards, and send some one out here, do not press me to report as to the reasons for thinking there is an undervaluation, I do not care to be troubled, and I would rather be out of it. That is practically the gist of that letter. Now on June 28, 1899, Mr. Kersey's letter of May 28, was sent to the collector of customs, Mr. Davis, at Dawson, by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and on June 19, 1899, Mr. Davis sends a very meagre report, which is found on page 12 of the return. He has been ordered to report, and he says :

Re file No. 42,568. I beg to hand you herewith report asked for.

That is all. Turn over to page 13, and this is all we find, just the name of the ship, her tonnage, her owner, the appraiser of the hull, $7,000, engine, machinery, $3,000, duty paid $1,456, appraised by J. E. Nansen, M. A. C. Co., Dawson, Captain J. M. Gilham, Dawson. The other names I gave in full from the proper return. That is a nice statement for an officer to give to matters of so serious an import. At any rate, these false statements are made. On June 29, 1899, this matter came up in the House, and was discussed fully. I am not going to repeat it, I am merely showing how often the matter was pressed. On July 21, there is a letter from Belcourt & McDougal, who were acting for these British vessels affected by all this legal business. At page 13, is something I will trouble the House to allow me to read. After explaining for whom they acted, they respectfully wish to call the attention of the Minister of Customs :

To what we believe the serious cases of contravention of the Merchant Shipping Act and of infringement of the customs regulations of Canada by which we believe that the customs of Canada have been defrauded.

The rest of the letter refers to other vessels.

With regard to the 'John C. Barr' the register reveals the fact that this vessel, which is also foreign built, was entered at Dawson in the name of one John Stinehoff, of Dawson, miner, on the 3rd day of June, 1899. The boat formerly belonged to the North American Transportation Company, and by bill of sale bearing date the 3rd day of June, 1899, one Ely Weare, a director of that company transferred to Stinehoff in his capacity as a 'director.' The appraised value of the boat is $10,000, although from its size and general appearance it must have cost for construction and delivery at least $50,000. Our clients believe that the transfer in this case was also a colourable one, and that the beneficial ownership in the boat still remains in the North American Transportation Company, and one reason for believing so, is that in the month of June and after the transfer above referred to, the vessel appeared at the Canadian port of White Horse Rapids, flying the flag of the North American Transportation Company, and bearing on her stern bulkhead the inscription: "John C. Barr," of St. Michaels' although she at the same time flew the Canadian ensign.

In view of the above facts they go on to point out that there is a clear case, or that one can be made out, and they refer to the hardship inflicted upon their clients. On July 24, the hon. senior member for Victoria put upon the paper series of questions, and they relate to this ship as well as to others, and to the facts involved. The Customs Department in a letter to Belcourt & McDougal, dated August 12, state that Mr. McMichael left some weeks ago to examine into the valuation, and that the registration is a matter for the Department of Marine and Fisheries. In regard to this matter you will find that there has not been the slightest kind of an attempt to probe that to the bottom. On the 6th of July the matter was gone over in the House and the strongest evidence was before the department of the fraud, as well as circumstantial proof of these serious statements which were being made and not one single attempt to investigate the question of fraudulent ownership, or the declaration of ownership, has ever been made. We will find, and I ask your attention to this important fact, that just as in the case of the Yukoner, when Wade & Aikman were against the ship, the law was disregarded entirely, the ship was seized and the wishes of Mr. Wade were carried out. In this case, Mr. Wade was for the ship, and the ship ran through every Act of parliament relating to shipping and the wishes of Mr. Wade were adhered to until it became too scandalous—and scandalous in the extreme it was—in regard to the very low undervaluation which was made and in regard to the punishment which was simply to increase the valuation, still being below the true valuation, in addition to which there was a relatively small fine that would not amount to the proper duty had the vessel been entered at a proper value. These gentlemen have been able not only to run through the hands of Mr. Davis, but they have been able to run the gauntlet of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. On the 21st of July, 1899, there is a full statement of the facts from Belcourt & McDougal, and it will be found on page 5 of the return. I am not going to read it over because I recite a large part of it in the resolution, but I simply call attention to the fact that this firm, representing the parties interested in the other properly registered British vessels, go into the question of the undervaluation and improper registration. They sent a copy of this letter to the Board of Trade in London, and the Board of Trade in London sent it to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, who in Canada are responsible in regard to the question of the nationality. On the 7th of September, 1899, the Department of Marine and Fisheries wrote that the valuation is a matter for the Customs Department, and that in regard to registry there is no evidence but that Mr. Kersey may take such proceedings as he likes—a more extraordinany document I never read. Mr. Kersey cannot take any proceedings; he has not the right to take any step. This is the official letter which was not only sent to Belcourt & McDougal, but practically the answer that was sent to the board of trade by the Department of Marine and Fisheries:

If Mr. Maitland Kersey can obtain evidence which he considers would justify him in taking proceedings, I am not aware that there is any legal objection to his doing so.

Here, they are given the strongest prima facie evidences of fraud in that connection that can be produced. It is shown by the firm and the record supports the statement, that the president of the company transfers to some British subject in Dawson, a miner, the title on the registry that the appraisal is allowed by the collector to be made by this man who is the party interested and his captain, and that after the transfer is made that vessel flies the flag of the company of which Mr. Weare, a foreigner, is president. The letter of Belcourt & McDougal, at least should have been investigated. Their circumstantial statements are of the most important character. Mr. Kersey had done all that he could; he had retained these solicitors and asked them to report the facts to the proper department. They report these facts to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, they are turned down in the end with not a particle of investigation and with the statement that if he:

—can obtain evidence which he considers would justify him in taking proceedings, I am not aware that there is any legal objection to his doing so.

There is no court in Christendom where he could take proceedings; there is no court under the sun where Mr. Kersey could enter and produce his evidence. The place for him to submit his case was the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and he did submit it to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. As my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) says, the statements made by these people on the customs side had been shown to have foundation, it had been shown that there had been gross violation and fraud perpetrated on the Customs Department, and with these facts before the department and after the right hon. Prime Minister had pledged himself to probe these matters to the bottom that there should not be any suspicion on the shoulders of these men, we find how they treated the matter. Mr. McMichael, on the 28th of September reports, and what does he say? The case was so bad that it was impossible for him to attempt to whitewash this matter and to report that the vessel had not been undervalued. But, Mr. McMichael's report is remarkable in this respect that it does not give any sufficient reason; it does not even state the manner of the examination which he made or the manner in which he managed to content his conscience after raising the valuation from $10,000 to $25,000. That vessel was, according to reliable information, which can be corroborated by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) who was up there and saw it, worth $60,000 at Dawson City. But, Mr. McMichael has been able to report that the vessel is worth, at any rate, $25,000. He does not pretend that he went into a thorough examination in order to see whether there was any foundation for the statements that had been made and pressed in this House. Shipping men will understand something as to what that vessel was worth, leaving aside that under the Customs Act the value is to be considered not what she actually cost to build at a port where ships can be built cheaply, but the law requires that the value shall be the value in the market where she is being entered and not in the market at the time where she was built. Take from Mr. McMichael the different items in regard to this vessel:

The steamer 'John C. Barr,' a stern wheel river steamer, 144 feet 6 inches long, 28 feet 2 inches beam, and 4 feet 8 inches depth in hold, of 546.89 gross tonnage and 315.70 registered tonnage, was entered at customs at the port of Dawson, per entry No. 270, October 6, 1898, by John Steinhoff, as owner, at an appraised valuation made by Ely E. Weare, president of the North American Transportation and Trading Company, J. M. Gilhan, master of the steamer 'John C. Barr,' and J. E. Nansan, licensed master, of $10,000, subscribed as follows, namely: hull, $7,000; machinery and fixtures, $3,000, and the duty to the amount of $1,450, was paid on such valuation as per copy of entry inclosed.

It appearing to me, in connection with this entry, that the steamer had been erroneously appraised, and allowed entry at an erroneous valuation by the collector of customs at Dawson, I examined the steamer and made careful inquiry and investigation respecting her. I learned that the hull of the steamer was rebuilt in Unalaska, Alaska, in 1898, that her engines were built by J. Reiss & Son, of Pittsburg, Pa., in 1894, and her boilers by Moran Bros., of Seattle, Wash., in 1897; that she was entered at customs at the port of Dawson as above stated for the purpose of obtaining Canadian register; and that she was registered at the port of Dawson as a British vessel on June 2, 1899, in the name of John Steinhoff, a British subject, as owner.

This was an investigation, the details of which he does not report, but which we were entitled to in every sense, in view of the attention that had been given to this question in this parliament. At all events, he reports that after investigation of the hull and appurtenances, and the boilers, machinery and engines, he placed the valuation at $25,000. Thus, he lets these favoured people off with this valuation of a vessel which is really worth $60,000 by charging the regular duty on a $25,000 vessel, and doubling that, and imposing a small fine. There was no suggestion of punishment for false declaration, or for the fraudulent statements that were made in regard to either the flag or the undervaluation. Then, we have a part of the secret of this extraordinary violation of the law on page 19, for when Mr. McMichael has been driven to raise the valuation from $10,000 to $25,000, and to impose this small fine—the additional duty being only $1,800—we find this protest from the gentleman appointed to look after the interests of the Crown, a gentleman who, in connection with these vessels, appears in every case to be simply looking after the interests of Mr. F. C. Wade. On August 16, 1899, this gentleman had the audacity to write, acting for the Trading Company, or Mr. Steinhoff, as follows:

Re Steamer 'John C. Barr.'

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 14th instant herein to John Steinhoff, Esq., registered owner of the steamer 'John C. Barr,' has been handed to us with instructions to reply thereto and to protest against the re-appraisal under the alleged provisions of the Customs Act, and also against the penalty as set out in your said letter.

Inclosed herewith you will please find cheque payable to your order for the sum of $3,600, being the amount of additional duties demanded by you as per the statement contained in your said letter. This money is paid to you under protest on the following grounds: 1. The steamer 'John C. Barr' was appraised by appraisers duly appointed by you in your capacity as collector of customs prior to the entry thereof in this port. 2. The appraisers appointed by you duly appraised the said steamer prior to the collection of duty thereon, which appraisal was duly ratified and accepted by you as collector of customs for said port.

Yours truly,

Note the first protest, as to the appraisers. These were the president of the company: that is, the real owner, was the real owner, and is undoubtedly the real owner, and, indeed, if you look at that record, the technical owner of the John C. Barr, because the whole transfer was irregular and void on its face. The appraisal was, no doubt, accepted by the collector, as advised by this legal representative of the government: the Crown prosecutor of the Yukon. Then, we find at the end of this correspondence, page 10, the wiping off of this from the records of the Marine Department. They ask what they are going to do with this reference from the board as to the fraudulent representations, and a letter comes from the Department of Marine to Mr. Joseph Pope, Under Secretary of State, as follows:

When Dawson City was made a port of registry, the collector of customs, who is the registrar of shipping, was supplied with the Merchant Shipping Act, a book of instructions to registrars of shipping, and all the necessary papers and forms to enable him to register a ship, and he was particularly instructed to be careful as to the ownership of foreign vessels alleged to have been purchased by British subjects for the purpose of registering them as British vessels. The department cannot, therefore, do anything more in the matter, and as far as I can judge, it may now drop. You will, I suppose, as the reference came from you, report back to council in the matter. At all events, I will assume that you take that step.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

That was the extraordinary conclusion of a matter which was brought to the attention of this House solemnly by myself; a charge which I said, if I were given the opportunity that was given to Mr. Sifton on that other occasion, I was warranted in assuming the responsibility of proving up to the hilt. I took that responsibility. I was denied a commission, but was promised by the Prime Minister the pledge I read to-night: That these matters must be probed to the bottom, and that not even suspicion should attach to an officer in the Yukon. Consequently, it is now my duty to deal with Mr. Davis or Mr. Wade. These are officers over whom parliament has no direct control or authority. We can bring scandals to the surface when they exist. We can call the attention of the government, as we have done, to grave injustices suffered by British shipping interests in the Yukon. Consequently, it is not my duty to the part of officials. But, when the opportunity has been enjoyed by the government of probing these matters to the bottom, and they have not done their duty in that respect, and when they retain these officers in their positions and allow these frauds to be perpetrated, then, if the facts are as stated, it is our duty to hold the government responsible and to censure them in order to prevent the continuance of this condition of things. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I propose to move:

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof: 'on the 6th October, 1898, the United States ss. 'John C. Barr' was entered for Canadian registry at Dawson, N.W.T., before the collector of customs, by one John Steinhoff, and was valued for customs purposes by Ely E. Weare, the president of the North American Trading and Transport Company, J. M. Gilhan, the captain of the said steamer, and John E. Nansan, a pilot, as follows:

Hull	$7,000
Machinery	3,000

And $1,450 was paid as duty thereon.

(See Return, Sessional Papers, 1900, No. 107, Ref. No. 120, 1899. Sessional Papers, No. 63a, 1900, Ref. No. 26.)

(See also 'Hansard,' May 8, 1899.)

That on May 12, 1899, Mr. Aulay Morrison, from his place in the House, stated:

'I would go so far as to say, that if the 'John C. Barr,' a boat which I have seen myself, and which I quite agree would be worth $60,000 or more, if that boat was valued at $10,000 by that customs officer at Dawson he should be dismissed at once. I am surprised to think that Mr. Davis, the incumbent of the customs office at Dawson, so far forgot himself as to value a boat like the 'John C. Barr' at $10,000.'

That on May 28, 1899, A. Maitlan Kelsey, manager of the Canadian Development Company of Victoria, advised the inspector of steamboats at Bennett, as follows:

'I would beg to call your attention to the following facts relating to steamboats on the waters of Lake Bennett, the Upper Yukon and its tributaries:

1. There are steamboats owned entirely or practically so by United States citizens and other aliens that have no right whatever to run on these waters. Some have, no doubt, formed bogus companies registered in Canada; others have made false declaration of ownership; others have taken no such step.

(b) On the lower river there are 'Pingree' and 'Lowe,' now, I believe, called the 'Bonanza King' and the 'Eldorado,' American boats owned by Pingree, of Seattle, and his associates; the 'John C. Barr,' owned by the N.A.T. Co., of Chicago and Seattle; the 'Merwin,' 'Gold Star,' 'Closset' (alias 'Mascot'), 'Clara,' and other American boats, all owned by Americans and all illegitimately running in Canadian waters.

(Return, Sessional Papers, No. 63a, 1900, Ref. No. 26.)

That Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, a member of the Privy Council for Canada, from his place in this House, stated on the 27th day of June, 1899, that among other facts and charges he believed he could establish before a commission of eminent judges, were he given the same co-operation (and through the Department of Justice) as was given the Hon. Clifford Sifton in the case of the Manitoba election frauds, so-called, the following:

'That official favouritism and partiality had been shown and extended to the representatives and interests of the North American Trading Company, of Chicago and Seattle, in the Yukon district.

That grave and scandalous abuses have occurred in the Department of Customs in the Yukon district, United States vessels having been admitted to the Canadian registry in the said district upon fraudulent undervaluation, as in the case of the steamer 'John C. Barr,' which was worth at least $60,000, but was allowed to be passed at the customs at a valuation of $10,000.

That on July 21, 1899, the legal firm of Belcourt & McDougal (the senior member thereof being Mr. N. A. Belcourt, one of the members of this House) addressed the following letter to William Ogilvie, Commissioner, Yukon Territory:

Dawson City, July 21, 1899.

Wm. Ogilvie, Esq.,

Commissioner, Yukon Territory.

Dear Sir.—Acting on behalf of the Canadian Development Company of Victoria, who are operating the principal line of steamboats plying on the Upper Yukon River, the British American Corporation, the John Irving Company, and other Canadian steamer lines, we most respectfully beg to call your attention to what we believe to be three serious cases of contravention of the Merchants Shipping Act, 17 and 18 Vic., chap. 104, and of infringement of the customs regulations of Canada, by which we believe that the customs of Canada have been defrauded.

There are three steamers registered as British vessels and doing business in the Yukon River, all of which were until recently foreign-owned. The names of the vessels are the 'Gov. Pingree,' the 'Philip B. Low' and 'John C. Barr.' The first two, viz.: the 'Gov. Pingree' and the 'Philip B. Low' are registered as belonging to one Philip Sheridan, described as a lawyer of Dawson. The dates of registry are respectively May 27 and 29, 1899. The register here shows that Sheridan acquired the steamboats on the 2nd day of April, 1899, from one Nils. Peterson, a foreigner, the consideration for the transfer being the sum of $100. Sheridan, in his declaration, deposes that he is the owner of the full sixty-four shares in the said vessel or the full vessel, and that no person or persons other than himself has any interest, either legal or beneficial, in the said boats, as acquired by the Act. We have reason to believe that the transfer of April 2, 1899, was a colourable transfer to Sheridan, who is a Canadian, in order to acquire the British national character for the steamboats; that Sheridan is merely an employee of the real owners, and that the true and real ownership is still vested in Peterson and in Pingree, of Michigan, and others, and we submit as a reason for so believing that the steamers in question are so advertised here in Dawson to-day as belonging to Peterson & Co. Under the provisions of 17 and 18 Vic., chap. 104, sec. 111, ss. 1, such a transfer for the purpose of acquiring the British national character is, we submit, punishable by forfeiture. With regard to the valuation of the steamboats in question, the register shows that the appraised value of the two vessels in question is $8,600 apiece. It is a noteworthy fact, however, that although the boats were so valued in the last days of May, 1899, that on the 8th day of July, or just about six weeks later, we find a mortgage registered against each boat for the sum of $13,333.33, making in all an encumbrance on the two boats of $26,666.66, whereas the total appraised value is $17,200; we submit with all due deference, that circumstances are at least suspicious. Quite apart from the state of the title as it appears on the register, however, we must respectfully submit that considering the size of the steamboats and the fact that they were both built in 1898, and considering the conditions that have hitherto and still prevail in Dawson for placing boats on the river here ready for work, that the appraised value in each case is so notoriously out of proportion as in itself to contain prima facie evidence of fraud. The boats of the Canadian Development Company of equal size, cost in the neighbourhood of $55,000, and before Mr. Maitland Kersey, the managing director, had his boats here ready for business, an additional $10,000 was added to the cost of each vessel, and we submit that it is not possible to replace any one of the boats complained of for less than $50,000.

With regard to the third boat, the 'John C. Barr,' the register revealed the fact that the vessel, which is also foreign-built, was entered at Dawson in the name of one John Steinhoff, of Dawson, miner, on the 3rd day of June, 1899. The last boat formerly belonged to the North American Transportation Company, and by bill of sale bearing date the 3rd day of June, 1899, one Ely Weare, a director of that company transferred to Steinhoff 'qua' director. The appraised value of the boat is $10,000, although from its size and general appearance it must have cost for construction and delivery at least the sum of $50,000. Our clients believe that the transfer in this case is also a colourable one, and that the beneficial ownership in the vessel is still in the North American Transportation Company or in Weare. The boat in question appeared at the Canadian port of White Horse Rapids, after the date of the transfer, flying the flag of the North American Transportation Company, and having inscribed on her stern bulkhead the inscription 'John C. Barr' of St. Michaels, although she at the same time flew the Canadian ensign.

In view of the above facts, we most respectfully submit that a clear case of contravention can easily be made out and that immediate action ought to be taken in the matter, and the penalty for infringing the Merchants Shipping Act be enforced. Our clients, who are Canadian and British companies, and whose boats have been entered at their full value and who have always and in all respects lived up to every requirement of the law, feel that it is a great hardship on them to have such boats fraudulently undervalued and wrongfully assuming the British national character, contrary to the law in that behalf competing with them, and we therefore pray that immediate action in the matter be taken.

We have the honour to be, &c.,
(Signed) BELCOURT & McDOUGALL.

(Sessional Papers No. 63, 1900. Ref. No. 26.)

That a similar letter was addressed to the secretary of the marine department of the board of trade, London, Eng.

That, as appears by 'Hansard' of May 12, 1899, statements were made in parliament respecting the change of flag and undervaluation of foreign vessels, and referring to the 'John C. Barr,' Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper said: 'Here is a foreign boat, the real value of which is $60,000, allowed in to compete with British vessels which have complied with all the regulations and that vessel is only valued at $10,000.'

That the following letter was sent to Mr. Ogilvie (who was clothed with the powers of inspector of customs):
42568.

Customs Department, Canada,
Ottawa, May 16, 1899.

W. Ogilvie, Esq.,
Commissioner of the Yukon District,
Dawson, Y.T.

Sir.—I send you herewith pages 3162 and 3163 of the 'Hansard' of May 12, 1899, containing statements respecting the valuation of the steamer 'John C. Barr' upon application for Canadian register.

Please investigate this matter and ascertain by the best means in your power the fair market value of the vessel at the time of application of Canadian register and report the facts for the information of the Honourable Minister of Customs.

The question of undervaluation can be dealt with in due course under the provisions of the Customs laws.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner of Customs.

('Hansard,' June 29th, 1899. Sessional Papers, No. 62a, 1900. Ref. No. 26.)

That Mr. Ogilvie, on 8th June, 1899, reported to the Commissioner of Customs as follows:—

'There is another boat entered by the N. A. T. & T. Company, the "John C. Barr," which I understand is entered at a valuation of $7,500. Now this boat is a large one, 150 feet in length (I would say), with an iron hull. The hull alone I would consider worth that sum at least.

'I state these facts without prejudice to any one, simply considering it my duty to do so for your information.'

(Sessional Papers No. 87d, 1899.)

That the following is a copy of a further letter from Mr. Ogilvie with notes from the Department of Customs attached thereto:—

Commissioner's Office,
Dawson, Y.T., June 20, 1899.
2656--L.S.

Sir.—I am in receipt of yours of the 6th* inquiring the valuation of the 'John C. Barr' for Canadian register. I have already written to the minister on the valuation of that boat, and also on the 'Pingree' and the 'Lowe.'

As I have intimated in my letter to the Minister of Customs, it appears to me the value of these steamers is placed very low. I have asked the minister to have an appraiser sent in here. Mr. Davis simply took the valuation of people whom you might reasonably expect would be fair and exact. This I don't think they have been in the case of these three steamers. In my letter to the minister, I intimated that these steamers were worth from $25,000 to $40,000. Of course, I have not had time to go over them personally, and it would take several days to make a detailed examination, so that the above is only an approximate statement. I can only urge you to send in a properly qualified appraiser to deal with these three steamers and any others that may seek admission to the Canadian register.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) WILLIAM OGILVIE,
Commissioner.

John McDougald, Esq.,
Commissioner of Customs.

*The letter above referred to is the letter of May 16th, as none was written on June 6th.

No letter was received by the minister as referred to. The letter which Mr. Ogilvie no doubt refers to was that of June 8th to the Commissioner of Customs, a copy of which has already been brought down.

'J. McD.'

That on the 24th July the Honourable the Minister of Customs informed this House that the question of the unfair valuation of the said steamer remains undecided pending the report and action of S. W. McMichael, chief inspector of customs.

That on the 28th September, 1899, Mr. McMichael reported to the Customs Department as follows:

'The steamer 'John C. Barr,' a stern-wheel river steamer, 144 feet 6 inches long; 28 feet 2 inches beam, and 4 feet 8 inches depth in hold, of 546.89 tons gross tonnage and 315.70 registered tonnage, was entered at customs at the port of Dawson, per entry No. 270, 6th October, 1898, by John Steinhoff as owner, at an appraised valuation made by Ely E. Weir, President of the North American Transportation and Trading Company, J. M. Gilham, master of the steamer 'John C. Barr,' and J. E. Nansen, licensed master, of $10,000 apportioned as follows: namely, hull $7,000, machinery and fixtures $3,000, and that duty to the amount of $1,450 was paid on such valuation as per copy of entry inclosed.

'It appearing to me in connection with this entry that the steamer had been erroneously appraised and allowed entry at an erroneous valuation by the collector of customs at Dawson, I examined the steamer and made careful inquiry and investigation respecting her. I learned that the hull of the steamer was rebuilt at Unalaska, Alaska, in 1898, that her engines were built by J. Roiss & Son, of Pittsburgh, Pa. in 1894, and her boilers by Moran Bros., of Seattle, Wash., in 1897; that she was entered at customs at the port of Dawson as above stated for the purpose of obtaining Canadian register; and that she was registered at the port of Dawson as a British vessel on the 3rd of June, 1899, in the name of John Steinhoff, a British subject, as owner. After investigation and careful examination of the hull and appurtenances and the boilers, engines and machinery, I made a fresh appraisement and valuation of the steamer on the 14th August, 1899, as follows:

Hull and appurtenances.....	$20,000
Boilers, engines and machinery..	5,000

Total....	$25,000

and thereupon instructed the collector to call upon the registered owner, John Steinhoff, to pay duty on the re-appraised value, and as such re-appraised value exceeded by 15 per centum or more the value as stated in the bill of entry, additional duty as required by the provisions of section 8 of the Customs Act.

(Sessional Papers No. 63a, 1900, Ref. No. 26.)

That according to the report of Mr. McMichael, of September 28th, 1899, the firm of Mr. F. C. Wade were legal representatives of John Steinhoff, the registered owner.

(Sessional Papers No. 63a, 1900, Ref. No. 26.)

That Mr. F. C. Wade was appointed Crown prosecutor, clerk of the court and acting Dominion lands agent for the district of Yukon on the 26th day of August, 1897, and was subsequently appointed legal adviser of the executive council.

'Hansard,' 1899, p. 1831, April 19.)

That on September 7, 1899, the Department of Marine and Fisheries wrote Messrs. Belcourt & McDougal, as follows:—

Department of Marine and Fisheries,
September 7, 1899.

Gentlemen,—I have to acknowledge receipt of copy of your letter addressed to Mr. Ogilvie, Commissioner, Yukon Territory, dated July 21 last relative to the steamers 'Gov. Pingree,' 'Philip B. Low' and 'John C. Barr.'

I have also been supplied by Her Majesty's Board of Trade with a copy of your letter addressed to the Secretary of the Marine Department, Board of Trade, London, England.

In reply, I have to state as regards the question of valuation of these steamers it is a matter for the Customs Department to deal with.

So far as regards the registry and ownership of these vessel, the department has, so far, no evidence which would warrant it in taking proceedings to have the vessels forfeited to the Crown on account of the ownership being vested virtually in foreign subjects.

If Mr. Maitland Kersey can obtain evidence which he considers would justify him in taking proceedings, I am not aware that there is legal objection to his doing so.

I am, &c.,

(Sgd.) JOHN HARDIE,

For Deputy Minister of Marine, &c.
Messrs. Belcourt & McDougal, Dawson City, Yukon Territory.

(Sessional Papers No. 63, 1900, Ref. 26.)

That on March 3, 1900, the following communication was addressed to the Under-Secretary of State for Canada:—

(Copy No. 15947.)

Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, March 8, 1900.

Sir,—With further reference to your letter of September 30 last in regard to copy of despatch with Privy Council Reference from the Honourable Mr. Chamberlain to His Excellency in regard to alleged fraudulent transfer of the steamers 'Philip B. Low', 'John C. Barr' and 'Gov. Pingree' registred at Dawson City, I have now the honour to state that no evidence have been furnished the department in any way establishing the allegation made in the case of these vessels, and the department has no evidence which would warrant it in taking proceedings against the vessels on account of the ownership being vested in foreign subjects.

When Dawson City was made a port of registry, the collector of customs, who is the registrar of shipping, was supplied with the Merchant's Shipping Act, a book of instructions to registrars of shipping, and all the necessary papers and forms to enable him to register a ship, and he was particularly instructed to be careful as to the ownership of foreign vessels alleged to have been purchased by British subjects for the purpose of registering them as British vessels. The department cannot, therefore, do anything more in the matter and as far as I can judge it may now drop. You will, I suppose, as the reference came from you, report back to Council in the matter. At all events, I will assume that you will take that step.

I have the honour to be, &c.,

(Sgd.) JOHN HARDIE,

Acting Dep. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.
Joseph Pope, Esq.,

Under-Secretary of State.

(Sessional Papers No. 63, 1900, Ref. No. 26.)

That this House is of opinion that the conduct of D. W. Davis and Mr. F. C. Wade who were at the times aforesaid and are now in the service of the government, or their connection with the entry to British registry of the said United States vessel, and with the undervaluation of the said steamer for customs purposes called for a prompt and searching inquiry under oath.

That this House is further of opinion that the administration by the government of the laws relating to merchant shipping and to the collection of customs has been lax and ineffective in respect of the matters aforesaid and deserves censure.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I will take but a very short time in replying to the hon. gentleman. The resolution he has proposed is a very long one. I cannot remember all the points, but I think it is largely taken up with a repetition of documents that have been laid upon the Table, some of which are letters from a leading firm, acting on behalf of a rival line to the one that owns the John C. Barr. There is very little to be said further than a mere narration of the facts. The John C. Barr had been an American boat, and was transferred to a British subject. He had to pay the customs duty in order to obtain a British register, and the Departments of Customs and Marine were both concerned in this matter. The Department of Customs had to see that the proper duty was levied, and the Department of Marine had to ascertain that the parties to whom the boat was transferred were British subjects.

The hon. gentleman says he has reason to believe that the transaction was not a bona fide one, and that the owners of the boat are not British subjects. But there is no proof of his belief. As far as I was able to follow what the hon. gentleman said, I could not find that he had advanced any evidence whatever. The mere statements of a legal firm that they believed so and so, is not proof, and certainly ought not to form the basis of a resolution calling for a vote of censure upon the government.

With reference to the alleged fraudulent undervaluation, the facts are these. Before the hon. gentleman brought up the case at all, the department had instituted inquiries into the values at which this boat had been transferred to a British register. A letter came from Mr. Ogilvie, the inspector of customs at Dawson, in reply to a communication from the Department of Customs, asking him for particulars with reference to the John C. Barr. In this letter he states that he finds there was an undervaluation made, that the hull is entered at $7,000, but he considered it should be valued at $7,500. Well, that was not a very great difference of opinion. Subsequently, in replying to a letter which had been sent to him from the Customs Department, he refers to that and to some other boats, but says he is not able to report definitely, because he does not consider himself a judge in these matters; but, in his opinion, they are worth from $25,000 to $40,000. Messrs. Belcourt & McDougal, of Dawson, in preferring their complaint of this boat on behalf of the rival line, I think, put the value at something like $40,000. The hon. senior member for Pictou, when he made his statement to the House or asked his question with reference to it last year, stated, in his opinion, which, I suppose, he got from Mr. Maitland Kersey, that it was worth $60,000. And the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), who had been there, said he had seen the boat and she was worth $60,000. Under these circumstances, the House will see that before the hon. member for Pictou brought this up at all, as soon as it was brought to the attention of the department by a letter, I think from Mr. Maitland Kersey, communication was had with Mr. Ogilvie with a view to ascertaining whether these valuations were proper or not. Then, when the hon. gentleman brought the question up in the House and asked questions, those questions were at once forwarded. Subsequently, remarks were made by the hon. member for Pictou, which appeared in Hansard, and these were taken and sent to Mr. Ogilvie that he might read them and send replies in reference thereto. Further than that, the Customs Department thought it desirable that these questions, as well as other questions connected with the Yukon district, should be carefully investigated. Prior to that, in the early history of the Yukon, that country was almost wholly inaccessible, and there was not the communication with the customs there by means of inspectors that was thought desirable. The inspector of customs of British Columbia had gone as far as the passes and had made an inspection there. But, when the White Pass Railway was opened last year, the entrance to that country became more easy and more expeditious. It was then thought that the chief inspector, Mr. McMichael, a gentleman who has been long in the service of the government, and who occupies the highest position as inspector—a position that he held under the late government as he does under this—should proceed to the Yukon and inquire into all customs matters in the passes. Yukon and Dawson, having particular reference to these entries. He was clothed with special power. He possessed sufficient powers by reason of his office, but the letter from the commissioner gave him instructions, that if he found any officer deserving suspension, he had full authority to suspend him. Mr. McMichael went there and examined into this matter. He went carefully into a reappraisal of the John C. Barr, inquired into her history, as to when the boilers were built, as to when the hull was repaired, and generally made a searching examination. Mr. McMichael is a Dominion appraiser, and went there with full power to reappraise. He came to the conclusion that the vessel had been entered too low, and the fair value for duty, in his opinion, was $25,000. This is a considerable difference from the $60,000 of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), or even the $40,000 of Messrs. Belcourt & McDougal. Section 8 of the Customs Act provides that if goods are entered at more than 15 per cent under value, they shall pay a double duty on the extra value by way of fine. So, Mr. McMichael raised the valuation of $25,000 and required a double duty on the $15,000, the difference between the value at which she was entered and the value he appraised here at. Now, hon. members may say that that was a considerable undervaluation. I grant it. Allusion has been made to the gentleman of whose advice the collector of customs availed himself in estimating the value. No matter upon whose advice he acted, he is responsible. But, it must not be forgotten that she was a second-hand boat, with second-hand machinery, and it is not an easy matter to appraise a vessel of that kind.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When was the boat built?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. She was rebuilt, I think in 1894. That is shown in the return which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) has. These are the circumstances in connection with the case. Now then that $15,000, I grant, looks to be a great difference. If there had been anything in the report of the inspector at all that pointed to fraud, or collusion, or wrongdoing on the part of the collector, then he would have been dealt with at once by Mr. McMichael, because he went up there expressly instructed by his commission that if he found that any officer there had committed any act that warranted suspension he was to suspend him. He reported that he found nothing of that kind, but he found that the collector had committed an error of judgment, and that being the case, he took the power which I mentioned before. There was no danger of the revenue suffering, this boat had become a British boat, if it was not found at Dawson it could have been found somewhere else, a remedy was always available, and wherever found the vessel would have been liable. But there was no fraud found, as Mr. McMichael reported, merely an error in judgment, as he considered. Now, if we were to dismiss collectors of customs because of errors of judgment, so considered by the Dominion appraisers, I question if there are many collectors in this country who would not have to be discharged. Questions of revaluation and reappraisal are continually coming before us, and the difficulty of reappraisal and revaluation is enhanced when the article is not an original article, but when it has been depreciated in value through wear and tear. Instead of censuring Mr. Davis, I can have no object whatever in trying to shield him. I try to administer the Customs Department without regard to the political views of any persons who are concerned; but if we were to be guided by such considerations, hon. gentlemen opposite would not say I could have any object in shielding the collector of customs at Dawson, who was appointed by themselves, who had been a member of this House and supported them until the close of the session in 1896. They then sent him to Fort Cudahy, and he was subsequently removed to Dawson, to a point almost inaccessible. The late government, in sending him to that country and entrusting him with such powers, at a point from which there was hardly any communication with the outer world, from which the collections came down to us in gold dust months after they had been taken—the late government, I say, in sending a collector up there where he could not be supervised, and when the department was dependent on his character and ability, surely must have believed they were sending there a man in whose ability and honesty they had confidence, otherwise they were very deficient in their duty. I take it that the fact they sent Mr. Davis there was an endorsement of his character, and that they believed him to be a thoroughly honest man. Now, I ask the hon. gentleman what he wants us to do when the highest officer in the department, the chief inspector, goes up there with full power to suspend any one who has done anything wrong, and when he comes back and reports to me that while this was an error of judgment, he believed Mr. Davis, taking all things into consideration, had discharged the duties that pertained to his office under the peculiar and exceptional circumstances that prevail in that country, remarkably well.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman say Mr. McMichael reported that?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. McMichael told me that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not in his report.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not sure, but that it is in his report.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, it is not here.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not sure, but it is, at any rate he told me that. Mr. McMichael went there under instructions from the department that if any officer in the Yukon had done anything that was not right he was immediately to suspend that officer, and the fact that he did not do that, is a proof that in his opinion, while there was an error of judgment in the appraisal and valuation of that boat on the part of the collector, there was no fraud and no collusion in connection with the matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is still an oral report.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the minister must lay the document on the Table.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am laying it before the House now so far as I am able, I am telling what the collector reported to me.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A nice kind of an officer to leave that out of the report.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Now, Sir, I have just related to the House the whole circumstances in connection with this case. If there can be any wrong-doing shown, anything that is improper, of course the officer will be dealt with at once, but nothing of the kind has come before the department. I am not pretending to justify him in connection with this matter. All I can say is that after I had the conference with Mr. McMichael when he came back and told me how the business was conducted up there, the commissioner wrote to the collector there regretting there had been this error of judgment in the valuation of these boats, and hoped that in future in any appraisements he had to make, he would bring his very best judgment to bear upon it, and endeavour to arrive at a fair valuation for customs duty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That document the hon. gentleman just alludes to has not been brought down.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That letter was sent, I think, and, I think, it is brought down.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not in the return.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it was down, they told me they had sent all the papers. That of course has nothing to do with this case. These were instructions sent to him after the case was settled, warning him with reference to the future to be more careful in his valuations. In addition to that, we have sent into that country an appraiser, a gentleman who will assume the peculiar duties of appraiser of goods that may go in there. This is more necessary now, perhaps, than it was before. Goods are going in now in greater quantities, entries are going in in greater numbers. Since the railway has been constructed, though goods are not going in in large cargoes as they did when they went up the Yukon River, a greater quantity is going in, and there is now a greater need for a qualified appraiser who is conversant with mercantile work, to assist the collector in his duties. The staff has been strengthened otherwise, and I have reason to believe that Dawson is now being carefully worked. As I say, the inspector reports, that, taking what had transpired into consideration, the exceptional circumstances that prevailed, he considered, taking all things into consideration, that the collector had done his duty fairly well, not only in this matter, but in other matters. I consider it a very unfair thing to place in the hands of the Speaker a resolution, and ask the House to pass censure upon the government upon the strength of a lot of documents among which are to be found letters from a legal firm acting for a rival company in which they state as their belief so and so and setting that up against the ascertained facts by the department through their chief inspector. As to the action of the chief inspector and what he has reported, it is before the hon. gentlemen, it is in the papers in their hands, and, I think, that the hon. member for Pictou was not fair enough in his resolution to put in the report of the chief inspector. I speak subject to correction.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
I read it in full.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In the resolution ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Yes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Then, it speaks for itself.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand).
But not the invoices.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Invoices as to what ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. As to the purchase of boilers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You would not have invoices as to the purchase of boilers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has sought to make light of the whole transaction which has been referred to by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I think that any one who has spent a moment upon the return which has been brought down, dealing with this matter, will not, if he desires to offer a fair and impartial judgment upon it, say that it should be passed over in the very light manner in which the hon. Minister of Customs has referred to it. He has treated it with a smile and a toss of the head and he has said that the government are not at all responsible for this matter, that Dawson port is being well worked, and from this correspondence, I am bound to say, that this statement is correct. I think it could not have been better worked than it has been worked by Wade and some other officers, who are defended by the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. To come back to my former statement, the hon. Minister of Customs has treated the matter in an exceedingly light manner. I believe that if the evidence which is given to the House were placed before a judicial commission of inquiry they would say there is evidence upon the face of these documents and upon the face of this correspondence of collusion of the very worst kind between two paid officers of this government, one sent there to protect the public revenue, and the other sent there in the pay of the government and of the people of Canada to see that justice is administered in the Yukon territory on behalf of the Canadian government. I am saying what I draw from the return as a layman, having no particular knowledge of the law, and I say that you find these two facts which were mentioned by the hon. member for Pictou, first, that the steamer Yukoner. I think she was called, against which Wade was advising the authorities at Dawson, is treated in a most harsh and illegal manner, that he receives a large sum of money for his own work in connection with the Yukoner, $750; then, when you come to the John C. Barr, you find this same Crown prosecutor, paid by the money of the people of Canada, not acting against the John C. Barr, as he was acting against the Yukoner, but acting for the John C. Barr, receiving a large fee, I have no doubt, in connection with her advising the collector of customs as to what he ought to decide upon this matter of the John C. Barr and the greatest possible favours are granted, allowing her fraudulent registration and allowing her to come in at a valuation that the Department of Customs is now, by the report of its chief inspector, compelled to admit was only about one-third of its proper value. You have these two bald facts, and they are facts that cannot but convince any impartial tribunal that Wade has committed fraud on the Canadian people.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Where is the statement that Wade was instrumental in getting this boat entered at $10,000 ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is no statement at all, but we have not to state it. The fact is that Wade was acting on behalf of these people is apparent.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Did he make these entries ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where would he be acting ? Would he be acting outside in the yard while the entry was being made ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It does not appear to all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Common sense teaches us that it was he who looked after their interests. He was the attorney of the owners of the John C. Barr. He was the man who would make the entry. He would make it with Davis, to whom he was adviser in many respects, under the Crown. He was the Crown prosecutor, it was his duty to protect the public revenue, to see that justice was done, and yet, with the permission of the hon. Minister of the Interior, because we have the statement here in Hansard, that he had been instructed that he could practice, we have Wade acting on behalf of the owners of the John C. Barr who succeeded, whether by Davis or by Wade, or who else we cannot, of course, find in the return, in getting their boat valued at $10,000, when it was really worth $60,000, according to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), and when it was worth, at least $25,000, according to the report of Mr. McMichael, the chief inspector.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman has made a very serious statement. He has said that Mr. Wade was the means of entering that boat at $10,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman may quibble if he likes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman has the documents before him. Does not Wade simply appear in the case, after the demand is made upon the owners to pay double duty, not only to pay the duty but the extra $15,000 by way of penalty. Then, the legal firm of Wade & Aikman appear, and in their name a protest is sent in. The hon. gentleman has no authority to say that Mr. Wade was a party to making this entry or that he was a party to a fraud.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman thinks he scores a strong point because Wade only appears when the protest is being made. There is no necessity of him appearing until then. If the hon. gentleman disputes the inference I am drawing I will refer him to the evidence.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The inspector did not so report. The inspector does not say whether it was a fraud or a mistake of judgment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman for twenty minutes shouted to this House that there was no fraud, but that it was a mistake of judgment. There is not a line of the report which says any such thing. If the inspector makes one report viva voce and another one which can be brought down, the hon. Minister of Customs is wrong.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Does he report that there was a fraud ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He does not report that there was a fraud, but he does not report that there was not a fraud.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Then, why do you charge it ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the inspector made a report that the boat was worth $25,000 and she was previously entered at $10,000 has a necessity ever assumed there was a fraud over and above mentioning the mere fact, then I do not understand the meaning of the English language. What else would the minister call it ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would call it an undervaluation. That is what he termed it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that what the Minister of Customs would term it ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is how he dealt with it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How did he make the mistake ? This boat came in and asked for an entry. I do not know whether Mr. Wade was present to make the entry or not, but I do know that Mr. Wade, the Crown prosecutor of this government, was acting for the American Trading and Transportation Company, which he had no business to be acting for when it had business of this kind with the government. What did the collector of customs do ? He seeks to value the boat, and who in the world suggested to him to get the owner of the boat, the pilot of the boat, and the captain of the boat, to make the valuation ? That looks to me seriously like the advice of Mr. Wade.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Who was the pilot of the boat ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. You will find it there. He is called a licensed master, I think.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You are making rash statements.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not.

Mr. WALLACE. It was made by J. M. Gilham, master of the steamer, and J. E. Nansen, licensed master.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not of the John C. Barr.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Suppose the Minister of Customs was valuing a boat, and there was a dispute, would he go to the captain of the boat, and to the owner of the boat, and to one of the employees to make a valuation, or, would he take an independent man, whose opinion would be a disinterested opinion? Why, the very fact that Mr. Davis went to these men, is almost proof positive that there was intended to be a fraud, perpetrated on the revenue of this country. I say further, that when Inspector McMichael found that these men had sworn to the value of the boat as $10,000, and that the value was $25,000, according to his opinion, he ought to have punished these men, as the government would punish any men who undervalued goods brought in by them through any port in Ontario. The Minister of Customs has told us that we had to take with a grain of salt the statements made by Belcourt & McDougal, because they are the representatives of a rival line. That is throwing considerable distrust upon the member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt).

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The minister says that they are the representatives of the rival line and that in effect they are not acting as fair and honourable men. Which was the rival line, I want to know, properly speaking? There was a number of Canadian lines there equal to the task of doing the business, and we find this American line coming in, undervaluing their boat at $10,000, when it should, at least, have been $25,000, and when the hon. member (Mr. Morrison), says it should have been $60,000. We find them taking up the business which could be done by Canadian boats which had observed the law in every particular, according to the statement of Messrs. Belcourt & McDougal, and under these circumstances we had better find the Minister of Customs dealing with the American line as the rival line. Yet the American line is the line which he is defending in the House to-night; whose fraud he is defending—because undoubtedly who ever performed it, it was a fraud upon the Treasury of Canada.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As well as upon the rival line.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, as well as upon the Canadian line. The Minister of Customs tells us to-night that there is not a word of fraud, or of collusion, or of wrongdoing attributed to Mr. Davis, or attributed to the conduct of the whole affair, at the customs port at Dawson. What evidence of fraud does the minister want? Here we have the evidence that the boat was only valued at about one-third of what they eventually had to pay duty on. That is fraud. Here we have the evidence that the collector of customs (Mr. Davis), advised. I have no doubt—although it does not appear in the return—by Mr. Wade, the Crown prosecutor, who was acting for the owners of this American boat; we have Mr. Davis getting the owner, and the captain, and another employee of the boat to make the valuation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where is your proof of that?

Mr. MONTAGUE. If that is not collusion, and if that is not wrong-doing, I do not know what these can be defined to be by the Minister of Customs. The Minister of Customs says that Mr. McMichael reports that this was simply an error of judgment. Where does that statement occur? There is no such language in the report of Inspector McMichael. He finds that the boat was grossly undervalued, and that false invoices were statements by the owners of the boat. He found that a fraud had been committed, and that a false oath had been taken as regards the valuation. But why has he not reported more fully upon the circumstances, and reported that severer and sterner justice should be meted out to these men. Sir, there are other government employees in connection with this matter. It is not Mr. Davis alone. I venture to say that Mr. Davis would receive very little sympathy, at the hands of the Minister of Customs, if he came to deal with Mr. Davis alone. But there is another gentleman pretty close to Mr. Davis. That gentleman is Mr. Wade, and he is pretty close to some other gentleman. The minister has refused to investigate the conduct of Mr. Wade, when there can be no doubt about the fact that there was a collusion between Mr. Wade and some one regarding the whole circumstances of the valuation of this boat. Then there comes the other question as to the registration of this boat as a British bottom. She was built at St. Michael's, was undoubtedly an American boat, and before she could do business upon Canadian waters she had to secure British registry. How was it secured? Her record shows that the boat was sold for $100 to a Canadian in Dawson; a boat that is valued at $10,000 by themselves, $25,000 by the government, and $60,000 by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where is that evidence?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is my information.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was one of the other vessels.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, it was one of the other vessels, and the fact that the other vessel was sold for $100, and transferred to a Dawson owner, may be taken as evidence, that the same thing was worked in regard to the John C. Barr. The whole system was to get fraudulent registration from these men, by these American owners. Will the hon. Minister of Customs, or the hon. Minister of Marine stand up and say that the profits from that boat did not go to the American owners? Will they say that the Canadian in whose name that boat is registered, has anything more than a pittance of interest in it? The boat is still an American boat, owned by Americans, and they get the advantage of it. That statement has been made by the counsel acting for the other line, and when the inspector, Mr. McMichael went there, he never investigated that matter at all. He might very well have been expected to inquire into these things; but in a report which he makes to the Minister of Customs, there is not a single word as to the national question at all. He never inquired into it; and so we had the statement made by Belcourt & McDougal that this is a fraudulent and colourable transaction.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They do not say that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You will see in their letter the statement that it is a colourable transaction, and they ask to have it investigated: and there are other people who wish to have it investigated. The English Board of Trade has been written to; and Mr. Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, thinks it important enough to communicate to the Governor General, and in order that it may be attended to immediately, he sends a copy of his letter to the Department of Marine and Fisheries and asks that a report be made on the matter. What report does he get? The letter of Mr. Hardie, acting Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in which he says that there is no evidence, when they did not look for evidence—that there are no facts which have been brought out, while the statement has been made that if they will inquire they will find the facts. But the very kind suggestion is made that Mr. Maitland Kersey, the manager of one of the lines, will be permitted to take the matter up if he will. I am told by my hon. friend, who knows the law, that it is impossible for Mr. Kersey or any other private citizen to take up the matter, that the duty and the power remains in the hands of the government, and that only the government can act in such a matter, according to the Shipping Act of Great Britain, which applies here. That is a legal question, into the discussion of which I shall not enter. But there can be no question that the boat was undervalued. The inspector, when he makes his report, fails to give the evidence on which he comes to the conclusion that it is worth only $25,000. What object would the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) have in coming into this House and saying that the boat was worth $50,000 or $60,000 if that were not the case? He knows something about shipping. He is not—if I may be permitted to use the word, which I use quite respectfully—fool enough to come into this House and say that a boat is worth $60,000 if it is worth only $25,000 or $10,000. There can be no doubt about the undervaluation, there can be no doubt about the fraud, and, to my mind, there can be no doubt about the fact that Mr. Wade was mixed in it for the purpose of receiving the large fee, and he received that fee while in the pay of the Canadian government as their officer in the Yukon. I want to call the attention of the government to the impudence—and I say it without any stint—of Mr. Wade in his letter of August 16, 1899, which has been read in this House, about paying money under protest and acting for the owners of the John C. Barr. What does he say:

This money is paid to you under protest on the following grounds: 1. The steamer 'John C. Barr' was appraised by appraisers duly appointed by you in your capacity of collector of customs prior to the entry thereof in this port. 2. The appraisers appointed by you duly appraised the said steamer prior to the collection of duty thereon, which appraisement was duly ratified and accepted by you as collector of customs for said port.

THE MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It had no legal value.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Wade the Crown prosecutor, and the government's legal adviser up there, seems to think it has. I put the opinion of Mr. Wade against that of the Minister of Customs.

THE MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Which would you take?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will take the opinion of Mr. Wade, because I think these men were undoubtedly appointed by Mr. Davis for the purpose of acting as valuers, and because the Minister of Customs seems to show that he does not know where there has been an infraction of the law. Therefore, I do not take his opinion as worth anything on a legal question.

THE MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There was an infraction of the law, and the penalty imposed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And yet the hon. gentleman says there was no collusion and no fraud. If there was not, why should there be any penalty?

THE MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Because section 8 of the Customs Act provides that if there is undervaluation exceeding 15 per cent, whether there be fraud or not, double duty becomes payable.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the minister tell me now whether he thinks there was fraud?

THE MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think there was undervaluation, and it was punished under section 8 by the chief inspector of customs, who had full power, and whose duty it was, if there had been fraud, at once to suspend the officer. In his opinion there was not fraud in the sense in which the hon. gentleman is speaking.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me whether the undervaluation was intentional or unintentional?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it was unintentional. My reason for saying so is that the chief inspector of customs, if he had thought it was intentional, was in duty bound to suspend the officer, he was under express instructions from the commissioner when sent there to do that; and when he did not do it, I feel convinced that he was convinced that there was not fraud in the sense in which the hon. gentleman means it; and when the chief inspector takes that view, I am prepared to follow him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is going a long way around. He has not given me his opinion yet. He hides himself behind the opinion of the inspector of customs. What I want to ask the Minister of Customs again is, whether he thinks there could have been an unintentional undervaluation of $15,000 on that boat?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it possible, yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman's judgment, then, I must say, is a very generous and kindly one towards those who make errors of undervaluation. I must accept the hon. gentleman's parliamentary statement; but, at the same time, if it were outside, I would say that the hon. gentleman knows there was a fraud, and could not help knowing it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The people outside would not pay any attention to that statement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That may be; but, if you put before any business man in the province of Ontario the bare statement of facts as produced in these papers, that this boat was valued at $10,000 by Mr. Davis, advised by some of the officers of the boat, and I have no doubt assisted by Mr. Wade, who was paid for the work he undertook in regard to this, when the valuation ought to have been at least $25,000, and when good men say it ought to have been $50,000, I believe the most ordinary business man of the country would admit that there has been a fraud, and a great big fraud, as an hon. gentleman suggests.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Then, you condemn the chief inspector?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I condemn not only the chief inspector, but every gentleman who had anything to do with the transaction who has not done his work properly. The inspector may have done his work properly, of course, but the minister cannot hide behind him. I do not rise for the purpose of condemning anybody unnecessarily; but I say that when the chief inspector reported that there was an undervaluation of $15,000, it was his duty to report specially how that had occurred, if he could find it out, whether it was done intentionally or unintentionally, whether a fraud had been perpetrated; and that he has not done in any shape or form. Whether it was done intentionally or unintentionally and whether a fraud had been perpetrated or not, he did not report to the minister in any shape or form. The hon. gentleman says he got a verbal report, but we have no such report before this House. We have the report which my hon. friend from Pictou has read, which says that there was undervaluation, and that he increased the valuation to $25,000, imposed a slight penalty and then let the matter at rest. He will find cases in the history of his department in which seizures was made for much slighter offences. He will find confiscation of articles in which the undervaluation was much less than in this instance. The hon. gentleman has not one excuse to make for the easy treatment he meted out to these men. The only excuse that can be made is that Mr. Wade was acting for them, influencing perhaps the Collector of Customs, and the friend and appointee of hon. gentlemen opposite.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman has waxed exceedingly warm and made very many violent statements, but I do not think he has at all strengthened the case which the hon. member for Pictou submitted to the House. The case is very simple. The hon. gentleman draws certain conclusions from the evidence, and one is that Mr. Wade,—a gentleman for whom he appears to have very special affection—was present acting as attorney for the parties during the entry and registration of the vessel. Well, there is not a scintilla of evidence to justify that statement. There is not a line to show that Mr. Wade was either present or that he advised any of the parties when that vessel was entered and the duty paid. Mr. Wade comes upon the scene many months afterwards. After Mr. McMichael had investigated the matter, Mr. Wade comes in making a protest. For the first time, he appears on August 16, 1899, whereas the vessel was purchased and entered in during the March previous.

The hon. gentleman, not having any case, and not daring to attack Mr. Davis, dragged in an imaginary opponent. Supposing we withdraw that imaginary opponent, that man who was not there at all, what is the hon. gentleman going to say then? The other inference he draws is that because there was over valuation, there must necessarily have been fraud. The hon. gentleman may draw any conclusion he pleases, but I would ask whether he is as capable of forming a fair conclusion as was the independent officer who was sent to investigate the facts? The chief inspector, Mr. McMichael, a man of great experience and high character, who, for many years, has been engaged in investigations of this kind, was much better qualified to form an impartial judgment than the hon. gentleman, who, from a hasty examination of the papers, draws his conclusion. I hold in my hand Mr. McMichael's report. He does not insinuate that there was fraud. On the contrary he reports to the collector:

It appearing to me, in connection with this entry, that the steamer had been erroneously appraised and allowed entry at an erroneous valuation by the collector of customs at Dawson, I examined the said steamer and made careful inquiry and investigation.

So far as his report goes, he reports that there was undervaluation only.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. minister does not think there was any frauds.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think it follows at all. I am not able to judge. I have not the facts to enable me to judge. The hon. gentleman draws a very hasty conclusion, and all I have to say is that the officer who went there to investigate concluded there was an erroneous valuation, and a double duty was charged and paid into the treasury.

Mr. WALLACE. Where did they pay the double duty?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On the additional valuation under section 8 of the Customs Act, $1,800, and the penalty on undervaluation $1,800, so that the total they paid, over and above what they have previously paid, amounted to $3,600. The chief commissioner McMichael made a proper recommendation or he did not. Taking into account his experience and the fact that he went on the spot and examined the vessel, I would prefer to take the conclusion of Mr. McMichael rather than the hasty judgment formed by the hon. gentleman from a hasty perusal of the papers and from his imagining that some party, whom he hates, was there, who was not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In the case of the Yukoner, the charge was more than imaginary.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are not discussing the Yukoner case. The hon. gentleman is not able to form an opinion on this case from the papers and facts, and so rushes off into another case. Because this man Wade appeared in the Yukoner case, therefore, the hon. gentleman argues he must have appeared in this case. He does appear, but not until the following August, after the chief commissioner McMichael had been sent to the Yukon and re-valued the vessel and enforced the double liability.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He is the only solicitor that appears for these people.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was no solicitor appearing at all at the transfer of the vessel and its valuation. The hon. gentleman will find out that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, a solicitor never appears at the transfer of the vessel. There is only one other point. The hon. member for Pictou charges some fault in my department. What has my department to do with it? This vessel was transferred in the name of a British subject. Mr. Davis reported to the department that he was personally aware that the applicant was a British subject. The applicant made an affidavit that he was a British subject. Nobody suggested to us that he had made a false affidavit. All we had was the report of Mr. Davis that this man was personally known to him as a British subject. What evidence have the department beyond that? The only evidence was a letter written on behalf of the Canadian Development Company by Belcourt and McDougal, also of Dawson City. That letter was sent to the secretary of the Marine Department of the board of trade, London, and forwarded by him to the Secretary of State who forwarded a copy to my department. The only statement in that document, which was before the officers of my department, is this:

With regard to the third boat, the 'John C. Barr,' the register reveals the fact that this vessel, which is also foreign built, was entered at Dawson in the name of one John Steinhoff, of Dawson, miner, on June 3, 1899. The boat formerly belonged to the North American Transportation Company, and by bill of sale, bearing date June 3, 1899, one Ely Weare, a director of that company, transferred to Steinhoff, 'qua' director.

The appraised value of the steamboat is $10,000, although from its size and general appearance, it must have cost for construction alone at least $40,000. Our clients believe that the transfer in this case is also a colourable one, and that the beneficial ownership of the boat is still in the North American Company, or in Weare.

Not a scintilla of evidence to show on what they founded their belief. If it was a colourable transaction, as their clients believed, and if the affidavit made by Steinhoff that he was a British subject and entitled to receive transfer, was not in substance true, the law provides that Steinhoff might be proceeded against for perjury. Is the Department of Marine and Fisheries to do that? It is news to me that that is our duty. And there is nothing else in it. Mark you, in reply to that statement the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries wrote to Messrs. Belcourt and McDougal:

So far as regards the registry and ownership of these vessels, the department has, so far, no evidence which would warrant it in taking proceedings to have the vessels forfeited to the Crown on account of the ownership being vested virtually in foreign subjects.

In the face of the report from Mr. Hardie, the acting deputy minister, was there one scintilla of evidence offered to the department? Not a single thing was ever tendered, not a letter was written after that. They simply dropped the matter. Here we had a regular transfer, with the sworn affidavit of the transferee that he was a British subject, and entitled to the transfer—everything correct; the attention of the department is asked to this by two lawyers who say that their clients believe that the transaction is a colourable one; they are told that there is not sufficient evidence in the opinion of the department to justify any action on the part of the department, and they drop the matter and do nothing further.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What could they do?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Bring forward some evidence if they had any. Is Steinhoff a British subject or is he not? Nobody has denied it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In every case of fraudulent transfer and obtaining improperly registration under the British flag, the transferee is, of course, a British subject. The question is where the beneficial ownership is.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is another point, and I want to come to that. It is not disputed that this man is a British subject.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Do they raise that point?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, they do not. They say it is a colourable transaction.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They raise the point.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They raise the point that their clients believe it is a colourable transaction, but that is all. I do not know whether they mean that he was not a British subject or that he was not a bona fide purchaser; but when asked for evidence, they do not offer evidence of any description to justify the suspicions of their clients. They never wrote to the department afterwards or made any statement as to what they based their opinion on that the transaction was colourable. Therefore, Mr. Hardie informed them that there was nothing to proceed upon. What could he proceed upon? What scintilla of evidence had he? None whatever. If these rivals of this concern thought that this was a colourable transaction, the courts were open for them to proceed. From the beginning to the end there is in this case but one fact that there was a marked undervaluation of the vessel. But that fact was rectified by the chief inspector of customs who went there to make investigation. He reported that there was an undervaluation, but made no hint of fraud—simply recommended that double duty should be collected, and that was all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The line of argument adopted by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries seems to me a remarkable one. When the statement was made, that there is reasonable ground to believe that Steinhoff, to whom the vessel was transferred, did not hold the vessel in his own right, but as trustee for the North American Trading and Transportation Company—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where is the evidence?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will show you in a short time. The way the hon. minister, who, I presume, has been listening to this debate meets that is by saying that there is no evidence to show that Steinhoff was not a British subject. The whole point is that although he is a British subject, he does not hold this vessel in his own right, but as trustee of this foreign company.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He swore that he held it in his own right.

Mr. BORDEN. The defence of the minister for the action of his government and his department is simply to say that Steinhoff was a British subject.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was nothing to go upon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will show the hon. minister that there was before I get through.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was nothing before the department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Let me point out another curiosity in my hon. friend's speech. He said that Mr. Wade had nothing to do with this matter until months after the vessel was entered and transferred. He reiterated that and seemed very triumphant over it. But, if he had seen fit to read the evidence taken before the Ogilvie commission of inquiry, he would have found that this Mr. Wade, who held the position of Crown prosecutor, and I do not know how many other offices, had a yearly retainer from the North American Trading and Transportation Company which he says may be called a yearly salary, and which, as he says, would be called large in the east—how large it was he does not say. But he comes just after a witness who tells us that $10,000 was the amount that Mr. Wade received from Mr. McDonald as a yearly retainer, and Mr. Wade does not regard that as a large one. He does not regard this retainer as a large one, but he does not tell us what the amount of it is. We have this state of affairs—the president of the North American Trading and Transportation Company, and the captain of this vessel, came over to have the vessel entered and transferred to the British flag. We have Mr. F. C. Wade, the Crown prosecutor and the holder of some half dozen other offices under the government, acting as solicitor—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not true.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Wait until I get through.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Tell the truth.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax.) There is an old expression in use among the boys which I do not want to use, but which I shall have to use if my hon. friend the Minister of Customs does not keep quiet.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Keep within the record.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am keeping within the record.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax.) What was I about to say, does the hon. minister suppose?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You said he was acting as solicitor, and we say that is not correct.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) is excited, and so is the Minister of Customs. They did not wait until I had finished my sentence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman had finished that sentence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I had not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes you had.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I said we have this Mr. F. C. Wade acting at that time as the solicitor upon the yearly retainer, which he says is not small, of the North American Trading and Transportation Company. That is what I said or was about to say, if my hon. friends had not been so nervous. What do we have then? We have Mr. Weare, president, I believe, of this company, which is retaining Mr. F. C. Wade at a yearly salary which is not small, coming over to transfer this vessel to the British flag and enter her in the customs. And what have we further? We have Mr. Weare acting as the agent of Steinhoff, being a director of the company, to whom this vessel purports to be transferred. Now, is there any evidence of that? Let us see whether there is any evidence of that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is all right. That is in the papers which we have been reading half an hour ago, when you were not in.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister thinks that is all right. Very well, he can enjoy his opinion with regard to that:

I, Ely E. Weare, do solemnly and truly swear that I am the duly authorized agent and attorney of John Steinhoff.

Now, this vessel formerly belonged to the North American Transportation Company, for whom Mr. F. C. Wade was the paid solicitor at that time, paid by the year, and Mr. Ely E. Weare acts for the president of that company, attends to the transfer of this vessel to the British flag, attends to the entry in the customs, and swears that he is doing so as the duly authorized agent and attorney of John Steinhoff, who is a director of that company. The bill of sale which transferred that vessel from Mr. Weare to Mr. Steinhoff transferred it to Mr. Steinhoff as director of that company, else the statement made by Mr. Belcourt's firm, which has not been denied in the correspondence, is absolutely false. That is repeated over and over again in his letter to the board of trade which came to the minister's attention, and which he does not seem to have taken the trouble to read. I venture to think he would not have made the statement he made here to-night if he had realized the fact I am now stating to the House, namely, that this vessel was transferred by a director of the company which owned her to another director of the company which owned her, a transfer to him, not in his personal right, but as a director of that company.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not construe that sentence to mean that at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I say that is the statement of Mr. Belcourt in two distinct letters, one to the board of trade, which came to the minister's attention, and which, I think, he could not have read, and in another letter to the Department of Customs, it is stated twice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman reads that sentence one way and I read it another. The sentence reads:

The boat formerly belonged to the North American Transportation Company, and by bill of sale bearing date June 3, 1899, one Ely E. Weare, a director of that company, transferred to Steinhoff, 'quâ' director.

He would not transfer it to Steinhoff quâ director, but quâ director transferred it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) reading :

One Ely E Weare, a director of the company, transferred to Steinhoff, 'quâ' director.

It is remarkable English if it means that, because on page 13 exactly the same thing is stated, only more explicitly, in this way :

The boat formerly belonged to the North American Transportation Company, and by bill of sale bearing date the 3rd day of June, 1899, one Ely E. Weare, director of that company, transferred to Steinhoff in his capacity as a director.

Now, if it means what my hon. friend suggests, it seems to me he might pass a very just criticism on the firm of Belcourt & McDougal with regard to their use of the English language.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Did my hon. friend ever hear of an instance in his life where a register contained the name of a transferee quâ director, or in any other trustee capacity ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A transferee quâ director, if the English language means anything, means quâ director as applied to Steinhoff.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do you think they do there ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would say so, if the English language means anything.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I read it the opposite way. I read it that he other man quâ director transferred it to Steinhoff.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Ely Weare, director of that company, transferred to Steinhoff in his capacity as a director. If the firm of Belcourt & McDougal means what my hon. friend suggests, they would not have expressed themselves that way ; they would have said that Ely Weare, in his capacity as director of the company transferred to Steinhoff.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They could not have transferred to a man quâ director in a foreign company, they could not put it on the register. You cannot put that on the register of a ship.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is clear that if Belcourt & McDougal are to be believed in this case, that vessel has been transferred by a director of the North American Transportation Company to Steinhoff, when in reality Steinhoff had no interest in the vessel at all, but held her simply as trustee. Now, my hon. friend may say it means that or it means the other thing. You might raise the same difficulty with regard to a single director transferring. How could a director transfer ? I do not know how a single director could transfer. All I can say is, that this vessel could have been forfeited, and there was a case for inquiry by the government in this instance. I say the letter of Mr. Hardie, written, I am sure, without consultation with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, is a letter not justified by the facts. I do not know what evidence the Minister of Marine and Fisheries wants to support the statement of Belcourt & McDougal, whether he wants them to make a solemn declaration or not ; but they state as explicitly as any man can state that after that boat was transferred she continued to be operated by the North American Transportation Company. Now, if that vessel continued to sail under the flag of the North American Transportation Company, and to be operated by that company, if she continued to bear the same name and hailed from the same place, and passed as a vessel of that company subsequently, is not that surely some evidence which would have justified the hon. gentleman in making the further inquiry, or even in bringing proceedings for the purpose of having her forfeited ? What kind of evidence are you to bring to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in a case of that kind if this is not sufficient ? I venture to think that evidence such as that which has been brought out by my hon. friend from Pictou, statements such as those contained in the letter written by a firm of reputable solicitors in Ottawa, the senior member of which is a member of this House, the facts which he brings to the attention of the House with reference to the subsequent operation of this vessel, were all amply sufficient to make it necessary and expedient that the government should have made further inquiries.

Now, so far as the valuation is concerned, I do not know that I can add much to what has already been said. There is a large discrepancy even between the amount at which the collector fixed the value and the amount which Mr. McMichael fixed it at. A difference between $10,000 and $20,000 cannot very well have been unintentional. I say there must have been an intentional undervaluation of that vessel. The Minister of Customs very naturally sheltered himself behind Mr. McMichael. I do not care what action Mr. McMichael took or failed to take in Dawson, the responsibility still remains upon the Minister of Customs. The fact is brought to his attention that a valuation of $10,000 for a vessel worth at least $25,000 could not have been an unintentional valuation, therefore, he should have taken proceedings for forfeiture, particularly in view of the fact that the valuation of $10,000 was practically made by the owner of the vessel, and was not really made by the collector of customs at all. The valuation given by the owner was really only 40 per cent of the valuation which Mr. McMichael ascertained, and which does not seem to have been a very high valuation, if we take into consideration the statements made by Belcourt & McDougal. Now, in view of this, I venture to think that the administration of the law, both with regard to the valuation and to the national character of this vessel has not been prompt or vigilant in Dawson, and that the government, and particularly these two departments are deserving of censure in that respect.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word or two as to the valuation. I think I can quite understand Mr. Davis's position. Here was a man who knew nothing of ships, a man who had been accustomed to the west where they have no ships, where there is not a man who knows anything about ships, and I can understand that it is very difficult to come at the real value of a ship of that age. Of course, experts can do it, but a man like Mr. Davis, accustomed to the west, I would venture to make the statement would not know as to $15,000 of a difference between the real and the appraised value of a ship. There is a good deal in a man's view of it. I have seen, for example, a reputable citizen, a clergyman, go into court and swear that a property was worth $11,000. He believed it thoroughly, and he got witnesses there to support him, and Justice Burbidge found an award against him for $500, that being the value of the property.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not against him surely.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). No, but in his favour. He found that the value of this property that had been placed at $11,000 was really $500. Such discrepancies occur, and I will venture to say that a vessel like this coming up to Dawson and coming before a man who knew very little about shipping, it is quite easily understood how he would come to the conclusion that after all $10,000 was its value. Do not think that Dawson is a port like Liverpool in Great Britain, or Halifax, or St. John, where everybody knows about shipping. I do not know what the ship is worth, but I will venture to say that Mr. Davis honestly thought the vessel was worth no more. Mr. McMichael found that she was worth $25,000. There is a man who knows all about it. But, will anybody contend that Mr. Davis, who is a reputable citizen, actually, for the difference, between the duty collected on a valuation of $25,000 and of $10,000 committed a fraud? If you do you are going to vote that Mr. Davis is dishonest, that he is fraudulent and incapable of holding that position. I do not believe that. I believe that if a man is going to do wrong, he is going to do wrong on a larger scale than that. When Mr. Davis was in this House he was held up to us as a certain Conservative amongst Conservatives who was an honest, outspoken and manly fellow who would not cheat for anything.

An hon. MEMBER. It was the company he got into.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I know that when he was here no member of parliament had a better reputation for stern every day rough honesty than had Mr. Davis. People up in Dawson say that he has not changed. Mr. McMichael went up there, and I ask particular attention to these words:

You are authorized to suspend any customs officer from duty in the Yukon district and frontier when, in your judgment, the public interests so requires.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have not only to come to the conclusion that Mr. Davis committed a fraud, but they have to come to the conclusion, that not only did Mr. McMichael commit a fraud, but, worse than all, that after he discovered a fraud he did not act. Therefore, he must also come in, but he must come before the other man because he is far worse. Mr. Davis, according to the statement of hon. gentlemen opposite, only committed one fraud, but Mr. McMichael, according to their statement committed two frauds. Mr. McMichael has been in the Department of Customs for years. Is it reasonable, or will it appeal to the common sense of this country to believe that Mr. McMichael went up there, that he made an investigation, that he discovered that there had been an erroneous entry of this vessel, that she ought to have been entered at a higher figure and that he would say that no wrong had been committed if there had been wrong doing? We must conclude that he did not find any wrong-doing because the absence of fault-finding shows that everything was all right. Was it to be expected that he would say, for example: I find no fault. Everything is presumed to be right till the wrong-doing is discovered, and his report shows that there is nothing wrong. I do not know but we had better deal with these two men. Not the only legacy are the officers left us by the late government, and they are the men that we should move swiftly at this rate. If their character is so much assailed by hon. gentlemen opposite the government had better perhaps move in the matter because hon. gentlemen opposite appear to have discovered that they are bad men. They have discovered that Mr. Davis, their own chosen friend and brother, wilfully and deliberately commits frauds. If he commits fraud it is only for the purpose of making money. There must be some consideration. Nobody would enter a ship at $10,000 when she ought to have been entered for $25,000, and do it for nothing. He must have pocketed the money. There is no other conclusion to be arrived at, and Mr. McMichael must have received something for closing his mouth: men do not act fraudulently for nothing: they get something for it. Is that the position that hon.

gentlemen opposite are going to put Mr. Davis and Mr. McMichael in? Are they going to say that both these men are dishonest and fraudulent, and that they must have done this for a wrong purpose. I decline to believe that these Conservative officers, appointed by the Conservative government, have come to that low pitch. I conclude that when the inspector finds no wrong there is no wrong. As to the case of undervaluation I will make the statement that if you take a sea-captain that knows all about ships and who can tell you everything about a ship as easily as any hon. gentleman in this House can tell the letters of the alphabet, if he went out into the west and you asked his opinion as to the value of a herd of cattle, he would make as great a mistake as Mr. Davis would make in the valuing of a ship. I am perfectly well aware that men make mistakes, and I can understand how Mr. Davis would make this one, but to say that Mr. Davis, the chosen, bosom friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, who supported them right and left would commit a fraud of the difference between $10,000 and $25,000 for the sake of the duty collected is to make a statement that I cannot accept. The absence of any statement of wrong-doing in Mr. McMichael's report satisfies me that there is nothing wrong and that there is not much in the homeopathic dose which we have had from the hon. gentleman. I would be pleased to have them in this direction day after day. They are pleasant; they take up our time so amusingly that we ought to be satisfied. It reminds me of the foolish old farmer who thought he could fertilize 100 acres of land with a single barrel of manure.

Mr. WALLACE. I object to the manner in which the hon. member (Mr. Fraser) bandies around the name of government officials, and says that this man is dishonest and that man is dishonest, and that they were appointed by the Conservatives.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I said that the argument of the hon. gentlemen opposite went for anything, that these men were dishonest.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member (Mr. Fraser) said that they were appointed by the Conservatives, but he did not take the trouble to inquire whether they were or not.

Mr. FOSTER. He is not responsible.

Mr. WALLACE. That is true. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) talks about valuation and he says that if a sailor went to the prairies to value a herd of cattle he could not do so, and therefore a cattle man might be excused for not valuing a ship properly. What had the collector of customs to do in making the valuation? When the owner enters the vessel he makes his own valuation on oath, and the collector accepts it. The whole discussion by the

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough).

Minister of Marine and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) was based on the idea that the collector of customs had made this valuation, whereas the collector of customs had nothing to do with making the valuation. There has been some attempt to cast a reflection on the chief inspector of customs Mr. McMichael. Well, I had a good deal of experience with Mr. McMichael for some years and I know there are few men in any department of the government service that are as capable and as conscientious and as careful as is Mr. McMichael.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He must be the very reverse if what your friends say is true.

Mr. WALLACE. If what is charged on that side of the House be true he is the very reverse. I think the government might be better occupied than in casting slurs upon their own officers and trying to get behind them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You are with them, are you?

Mr. WALLACE. With whom?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. With the men who are denouncing Mr. McMichael as a fraud.

Sir CHARLES HIBBEHT TUPPER. Who denounced McMichael as a fraud?

Mr. WALLACE. I say that the members of the government ought to be better employed than in casting slurs on Mr. McMichael and getting behind him for shelter when it suits their convenience to do so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I might almost say that is not in order.

Mr. TALBOT. It's all right for the Grand Master of the Orange Order.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a post of honour which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) is not likely to occupy, no more than any other post of honour.

Mr. TALBOT. Do not be alarmed. I would not take it as a gift.

Mr. WALLACE. I said any post of honour. I do not think any one who knows him would select the member who is interrupting for any position of honour. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) said the collector of customs was not experienced. What has the collector of customs to do with the case? The owner and the solicitor were the parties who got the valuation through at $10,000, and it may be that the collector was imposed upon into accepting the false affidavit of these men. Mr. McMichael then comes upon the scene and he is asked to make a valuation. Just as a painstaking business man would do, he takes steps to ascertain what the value is. He gives the dimensions, the tonnage, the owners, and the valuation when the boat was given British register, and then he goes on to say ;

It appears to me, in this connection, that this entry has been erroneously appraised, and allowed entry at an erroneous valuation.

He said it was a 'allowed' entry. The entry is not made by the collector but by the owner. He says :

I examined the steamer and made careful inquiry and investigation respecting her.

It is asked why the inspector did not do this or that, but the inspector according to this statement did all he was condemned for not doing. Mr. McMichael says :

I learn that the hull of the steamer was rebuilt at Unalaska, Alaska, in 1898—

In face of this statement, we have the excuse made by the Minister of Customs and by the hon. member (Mr. Fraser), that this was an old hulk and that in such a case it was impossible to make anything like a correct valuation. Why the steamer was built just a year before and Mr. McMichael's report continues :

—that her engines were built by J. Reiss & Son, of Pittsburg, Pa., in 1894, and her boilers by Moran Bros., of Seattle, Wash., in 1897; that she was entered at customs at the port of Dawson as above stated for the purpose of obtaining Canadian register; and that she was registered at the port of Dawson as a British vessel on June 3, 1899, in the name of John Steinhoff, a British subject, as owner. After investigation and a careful examination of the hull and appurtenances and the boilers, engines and machinery. I made a fresh appraisement and valuation of the steamer on August 14, 1899, as follows:

Hull and appurtenances	$20,000
Boilers, engines and machinery..	5,000

Total	$25,000
-------------	----------

Mr. McMichael increased the valuation two and a half times what was made by the owner. The owner knew what it cost to rebuild the steamer at Unalaska the fall before, and the owner knew what the boilers cost in 1897, a year and a half before. The owner knew what the engines and the other machinery cost, and yet he made a solemn affidavit that the vessel was only worth $10,000. This North American Transportation Company and these individuals connected with it, got Mr. Wade and he assisted them in getting this false entry through, and they tied up the hands of the collector. The worst I can say about the collector is that this man terrorized him, that Mr. Wade was dominating all the officials there, and was getting fat fees from all companies doing business with the government, so that he had to render a service to these companies, and the service he rendered to this company was, that by some improper influence he compelled the collector of customs to accept this as a proper valuation, by which the government was defrauded out of several thousand dollars.

Mr. WALLACE.

The duty that was paid was $11,450; the duty exigible, on the valuation of Mr. McMichael would be $4,875, a difference of $3,425. These gentlemen say that there was a double duty imposed according to section 8 of the Customs Act; but I am afraid they had not before them the Customs Act which they were quoting so glibly.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Do you know it better than I?

Mr. WALLACE. I think I do, and that is not much of a compliment to myself either. Here is section 8, which says that on an under valuation of twenty per cent or more, a sum equal to the duty and one-half more shall be payable. The minister has been saying that on an under valuation of fifteen per cent or more a double duty shall be payable.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What is that?

Mr. WALLACE. It is the Customs Act in the Revised Statutes of 1887.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It has been changed since then.

Mr. WALLACE. That is the only Act we have here. At any rate, the inspector of customs increased the valuation two and a half times what it was, and the owner of the vessel had the opportunity of refusing to accept that valuation; yet apparently he did not do so, but paid the double duty; so I am told by the minister.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, but under protest.

Mr. WALLACE. What did he do with the protest?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He paid the protest. After he had been fined under section eight by Mr. McMichael, he had to pay the full amount immediately. Then they paid the amount under protest. If they had not done so, the ship would have been seized. They do not admit now that Mr. McMichael's dealings towards them were fair?

Mr. WALLACE. Almost a year has elapsed since Mr. McMichael made that valuation. I ask the minister whether anything further has been done about that protest?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There has been nothing done further. I think; at least, it has not reached Ottawa.

Mr. WALLACE. And I presume it will not. After investigating the boiler, the hull, the steam engine, and all the machinery, Mr. McMichael put down the valuation at $25,000; and I am quite sure he would make a very conservative estimate. So that there was a fraud practised on the government to the amount of the duty on $15,000. But the point I want to make is that the owner of the vessel gave $10,000 or some other very large sum—perhaps less than $10,000, or may be more than $10,000—to Mr. F. C. Wade as a retainer to him to engineer things through for him, and this was one of the things he engineered.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is not there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is sworn to by Mr. Wade.

Mr. WALLACE. It was read out to-night.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not that Mr. Wade had anything to do with the entry.

Mr. WALLACE. I am saying that Mr. Wade's client had to do with the company, and Mr. Wade got a retainer of $10,000, or less or more, and he had to earn the money, or the man who gave him the retainer would be dissatisfied at the end of the year, and would want to give him a less amount.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How could he earn the money?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. By defrauding the revenue.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How could he do that without the inspector being a party to it?

Mr. WALLACE. The minister gets behind the inspector and stays behind. He says that if the inspector thought there was a fraud, he should have suspended the collector. I ask the gentleman who is placed over the inspector, and who is responsible directly to us, to state what he thought about this matter?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I thought that Mr. McMichael had done what he thought was right. I have confidence in him; but I see that the hon. gentleman has not, and the gentlemen about him have not. He talks about my getting behind the inspector. I will not do that, for if I were led to believe that he defrauded the revenue, he would have to go; I would not be behind him or anybody else.

Mr. WALLACE. Evidently the minister cannot answer a question without misrepresenting. I have not said a word to-night to imply that the inspector of customs was guilty of any fraud. On the contrary, I have said that he is an officer who I believe does his duty honestly, conscientiously, intelligently and well.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why should not I be guided by his report, then?

Mr. MONTAGUE. His report shows that there was a fraud.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It does not. If there had been fraud, it would have been his duty to have seized the vessel.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. I must insist on the minister paying a little more attention to the rules of order. He has to justify his own course, and it will not do for him to say: I have an officer there, and will get behind him, because he is a capable and honest man. The minister has a duty to perform as well as the inspector. The inspector says: My opinion is that the article, which was valued at $10,000, should have been valued at $25,000 at the very least. What does the hon. minister think of that? He will not tell us. Does he think that the man who made that entry should have got clear with the penalties inflicted under clause No. 8? There are other clauses which inflict higher penalty.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The department did not inflict the penalty. It was Mr. McMichael who inflicted it himself.

Mr. WALLACE. That is where the hon. minister makes his mistake. The minister inflicts the penalty.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You are wrong.

Mr. WALLACE. The report is made to the minister by the inspector, and has to be signed and approved by the minister.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is wrong. Mr. McMichael went there with full power to deal with the case. If he considered it a case of deliberate fraud, his duty was to have seized the vessel; but from the fact that he did not seize it, but inflicted the penalties provided by section 8, he evidently did not consider it a case of fraud. Mr. McMichael imposed this penalty himself, without the consultation of the department, and the fine was paid before he left Dawson at all.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. minister has told us that half a dozen times already, and instead of adding to our information, is simply giving further proof of his cowardice in having no opinion of his own. He says that he sent the inspector out there with full powers. He cannot clothe the inspector with any powers which parliament does not confer on him, nor can he take away any power that parliament confers. The minister cannot escape his responsibility in that way. He knows that this money was paid under protest, and that everything came before him. The question is whether Mr. Wade, who was found closely connected with other frauds against the country, and his clients were to be punished, or whether the influence of Mr. Wade was so strong with the Minister of Customs, as it had been previously with the Minister of the Interior, and the Minister of Marine, that these parties escaped with a punishment altogether incommensurate with their offence.

Amendment (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) negatived.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Contingencies—Department of the Interior
—Clerical and other assistance, including $760 for J. D. Bollard and $455 for T. W. Hodgins, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act
	$5,335
Printing and stationery	8,500
Sundries	7,000
	20,835

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). Mr. J. D. Bollard was transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the immigration branch of the Interior Department, and in the transference his salary was reduced from $700, which amount he received in the Department of Agriculture, to $500. As the maximum salary of a temporary clerk is $600, in order to bring Mr. Bollard's salary up to the former amount received by him, his name was included in the vote of civil contingencies, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act. He has received one statutory increment of $30 and another statutory increment is asked for this year, which will make his salary $760. Mr. Bollard has passed the civil service examination.

Mr. FOSTER. What about Mr. Hodgins ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. T. W. Hodgins has been in the employ of the department for a number of years. He has not passed the civil service examination, and for that reason his name has been placed in this vote, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act. The usual statutory increase of $30 is asked for.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). In what year was Mr. Hodgins appointed ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Many years ago, I do not know exactly when.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has he usually been paid in this way out of contingencies?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Every year for the last four years, at any rate.

Government of the North-west Territories—Insane patients $50,000

Mr. DAVIN. This sum, though voted for the North-west Territories, is really paid to Manitoba, is it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, under the same regulations as formerly.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the time has come when the North-west Territories should be put in a position to deal with their own insane patients. Even from the point of view of economy, this should be done. We send, at great expense, insane patients from the North-west Territories to Manitoba. In the present stage of development of the North-west, I think this should be changed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it can be done in this way more economically than by establishing an asylum in the Territories, we had better continue it. Still, I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) that, as a considerable amount of money is involved, the matter would be worth inquiring into.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Where are the patients sent to?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The asylum is at Brandon.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you pay for them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A dollar a day for each patient. Last year the amount paid was $45,026.13. The average number of patients was 135.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that it costs the Manitoba government only 54 cents a head to keep these insane patients.

Mr. BERGERON. They are quiet.

Mr. DAVIS. That does not make any difference. The Manitoba government gets a dollar for what only costs them fifty-four cents.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). A dollar a day seems a heavy rate, but if we attempted to run an asylum of our own in the North-west Territories, it is probable $50,000 would not cover the maintenance. The present arrangement is better, if the price is reasonable.

Mr. FOSTER. The probability is that in the fifty-four cents a day, the cost of the establishment is not taken into consideration—merely maintenance and medical attendance.

Mr. J. G. RUTHERFORD (Macdonald). That is quite true—the cost of the building and the establishment is not included. This is simply the cost of maintenance.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the minister whether the insane patients are all provided for at public expense, or whether their friends pay for them when they are able?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My deputy informs me that the government pays for all of them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the time has come when the public should be relieved of a part of that burden. In the province of Ontario, when the patient has property or his friends are able to pay for him, he is not a charge on the public.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Practically he is. I have had some cases come to my notice, where the friends of patients had property and were well able to pay, but they declined to do so, and the state had to take care of the patient in the public interest.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The minister must be mistaken in the majority of cases. There is no question that people who are able to pay do have to pay for the maintenance of patients I know, because, I have examined a large number of patients who were sent to the asylum, and a regular form has to be gone through, and affidavits made, and evidence brought as to the ability to pay.

Mr. CLANCY. The Postmaster General is wrong. In the province of Ontario, there is case after case where the patients or their friends are liable if they are able to pay.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am aware of no law that will make the relatives pay for the maintenance of the patient. Whilst the law may reach the estate of a lunatic, to pay for his maintenance in the asylum, there is no law that I am aware of that can reach the estate of the friends of a lunatic.

Mr. DAVIN. In the Auditor General's Report, page H—26, I notice several cases where the North-west Mounted Police charge various sums for conducting insane patients to Brandon. I say it is not good economy to send insane patients such a long distance. After all, this is North-west money, and it ought to be spent in the North-west Territories. Now that the population is increasing so rapidly, the government should consider whether the time has not come to arrange for the care and maintenance of the insane at a central point in the Territories.

Grant for schools, clerical assistance, printing, &c., to be paid half-yearly in advance $332,979

Mr. DAVIN. In regard to this item, I am not going to take up the time of the committee protesting against it as too small. At an early period of the session, I have expressed my opinion, that it is quite inadequate.

quate for the needs of the Territories, and I content myself now with simply uttering a protest against it.

Mr. BERGERON. How is that money expended ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is the usual grant made to the government of the North-west Territories. They expend it for various local purposes. This year, in consequence of the increasing population, and the increasing demands in that section, we have increased the grant by $59,000. But the direct expenditure is in charge of the local government.

Mr. BERGERON. This item for clerical assistance, how is the division made ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a subsidy. We have nothing to do with that, no more than we have to do with the expenditure of the subsidies given to Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. BERGERON. No, this is a special subsidy. You pay Ontario and Quebec so much per head, but this is a different thing altogether. We are paying here public money for schools and clerical assistance, and we have a right to know how that money is spent, we want to know if it is spent in a just way, according to the different creeds and nationalities in that part of the country.

Mr. DAVIS. Did you ever hear any complaint in the North-west Territories about the way the money was spent on the schools ?

Mr. BERGERON. I am asking the minister for information. I want to know how this money is spent ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The department is furnished with a detailed report in regard to the expenditure. Before this estimate is asked for, reports are obtained from the officials of the department, showing what they expend this money for. There is an estimate of the expenditure the same as we would have ourselves, if we were to take a sum of money, showing the various services, for schools, public works, and so on. The amount proposed is very much less than the amount they would like to have. I think it has been brought down to the lowest possible amount commensurate with the requirements of the Territories, which are becoming greater in consequence of the increasing population. I think the department receive a very satisfactory statement always in regard to the expenditure.

Mr. BERGERON. What amount of money was asked for by the government of the North-west Territories ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The estimate that they gave was $535,000.

Mr. BERGERON. And that has been cut down ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The amount is increased to $50,000 over last year, although it is below what was asked.

Mr. BERGERON. They wanted $500,000, and you are giving them $332,000 ? Although this is $50,000 more than the last year, it is over $100,000 less than the amount they asked for. What particular service is it that will suffer on account of this reduction ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is probably cut off the Public Works Department.

Mr. BERGERON. But it is all for schools ?

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. minister know whether they supplement this grant to the schools by any vote from their own revenues. There is a certain amount of money given, and they ask for $500,000. Is that $500,000 the contribution from this government for schools ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For all purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount is asked for schools ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They have a system of municipal government to some extent, and they levy a tax for school purposes in addition to this. Their estimate for schools is $175,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, they give for schools out of their own revenues, $175,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, they ask us to give that.

Mr. DAVIS. They put into their estimates something over $500,000, and they give the minister the items such as schools, public works, and so on. If the minister has that there will he be good enough to give the items ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The recapitulation of the detailed statement is as follows: Civil government, $40,000; legislation, $30,000; administration of civil justice and ordinances, $15,000; public works, $200,000; education, $175,000; agriculture and statistics, $50,000; hospitals, charities and public health, $15,000; education of deaf mute children, $10,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the amount for schools ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. $175,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You are giving $332,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, that covers everything.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, it is wrongly put in the estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It follows the wording of last year, but that word 'etc.' covers a multitude of sins.

Mr. FOSTER. What does that cover ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have just read the items. Civil government, legislation, administration of justice and ordinances, public works, education, agriculture and statistics, hospitals, charities and public health, and education of deaf mutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Are those all included in the $332,000?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I would recommend the hon. minister to use a little more printer's ink, because it is important that the estimate should show, as nearly as possible, all the different services that it covers. Any one looking at that would think that it is almost entirely for schools.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Suppose we put in 'public works and other purposes.'

Mr. BERGERON. Why not put in all the words which are sent down in the statement of the Territorial government? The wording of this estimate is misleading.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved:

That after the word 'printing,' the following words be inserted: 'civil government, legislation, public works, &c.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. When the government of the North-west Territories asked for $500,000, they were supposed to be honest, and I would like to know on what basis the hon. gentleman struck off $160,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suppose that any of the provincial or territorial governments might be trusted to ask for a little more. While we have struck off this amount, we are giving them $50,000 more than they ever had in any previous year. The mere fact that the Territorial government ask for a great deal more, I do not think is conclusive. They might be content to do with $50,000 more than they ever got before, and to hope for something better in time to come.

Mr. BERGERON. Must it be accepted as granted that they always ask for more than they need?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not say more than they need. They might make use of it if we gave it to them.

Mr. DAVIN. Does not the hon. minister think that they are entitled to more than this? Has he gone into the real claims of the North-west Territories? Take the position of the Territories at this time, take their population, take the extent of the Territories that the local government have to deal with, take the area of the land that this government administer, and in regard to which a sum should be put into the estimates, take these things into consideration, and it seems to me that $550,000 would be a very moderate sum to give them.

Mr. FOSTER.

The PRIME MINISTER. We are giving them $500,000.

Mr. DAVIN. I say that for the purposes contemplated of this vote of $332,000, $550,000 would be nearer the mark. I do not suppose we have any right here to do what my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) would think of doing, namely, to go into the items, because they have practically responsible government now. I do not think we have the right here to inquire into the way that they spend their money.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not if we pay for it.

Mr. DAVIN. If we had the power here I certainly would be inclined to criticise a portion of this item. I find from a return that was brought down this last session at Regina, that there were 500 copies of the Public Accounts Report, ordered in 1898, from one Walter Scott, and the price per page was $4.80; and there were 2,000 copies of the Public Works Report ordered for 1899 from the aforesaid Walter Scott, and the price per page was $4.80 with an extra charge for tabular work and use of small type. The Minister of Finance is an expert on a question of that sort, and he will find the Public Works Report and the Public Accounts Report in the Library, and he will see that $4.80 a page for one and $4.85 a page for the other is an enormous and monstrous charge; a great deal more than double what any fair charge would be.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that done by tender?

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS. I think it was let by contract. They manage their own business there and you have no right to criticise their action.

Mr. DAVIN. If as some hon. gentlemen seem to think, we could criticise it, we might go into that; but I myself lean to the view that they are in precisely the same position in regard to this vote as the provinces. They have a ministry up there; they have a responsible government, and the government is responsible to the assembly. I do not think it is our part to criticise it.

Mr. FOSTER. It used to be that we administered the money and then we had a perfect right to criticise all the items. We administered it then and the accounts came back and the Auditor General did his duty with reference to them, but an arrangement was made by which we considered this as a subsidy. They have responsible government, they elect their own members, they have not a very flourishing treasury, but their own members and the needs of the country I should think would be a better check upon them that even anything we could do here at so great a distance. From that time on, this has been considered a subsidy and they have been going on spending it just as they pleased. They are responsible to their own representatives. You will see now in the Auditor General's Report that these items are not audited at all.

Mr. DAVIN. Since 1891 the Auditor General does not interfere with them.

Schools in unorganized districts—Clerical assistance $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. There was the same vote of $2,000 last year, and yet there seems to be an expenditure of $4,276.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Auditor General must be more lenient with them than with others.

Mr. MONTAGUE. While the minister is looking for that explanation, I should like to say to the Postmaster General, that I have still less confidence in his law after reading the Revised Statutes of Ontario.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let us not go back to that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I intend to do it, because the Postmaster General was not only dictatorial in regard to his statements, but I thought he was impertinent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not intend either.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose not, but the Postmaster General said there was no law by which a relative could be made to pay for an inmate of an asylum in the province of Ontario. He said he knew all about it. Section 220 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario says :

Where any lunatic sent to any asylum is under the age of twenty-one years, and has a father or mother able to pay for his maintenance, or a guardian or committee, it shall be the duty of the bursar and medical superintendent to send a copy of the certificate mentioned in sections 8 to 10 of the order of the lieutenant-governor (as the case may be), attested under their hands, to the father or mother, guardians or committee (as the case may be), of such lunatic, to which copy the said medical superintendent and bursar shall subscribe a certificate of the admission of such lunatic, and of the amount which will become due for him each quarter, the asylum, by the regulations of the asylum made in that behalf. (34 V., c. 18, s. 9.)

It shall be lawful for the bursar, conjointly with the medical superintendent, on the first day of each of the months of January, April, July and October, and during the time the lunatic remains in the asylum, to demand from the father or mother, guardian or committee (as the case may be) of the lunatic, such sum as may be due for the lunatic to the asylum, which sum shall be forthwith paid on such demand. (34 V., c. 18, s. 10.)

On the first of the said quarter days after the admission of the lunatic, such demand shall be for a sum proportionate to the broken period elapsed since the admission of the lunatic, and on the discharge of the lunatic a like demand shall be made for the sum due for the broken period since the then last quarter day. (34 V., c. 18, s. 11.)

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am very sorry that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) drew the inference from my observations that I was either dictatorial or impertinent. I intended nothing of the kind. The statute read by the hon. gentleman covers the case of a father or mother, and the reference to the guardian or committee is as to the estate of the lunatic himself. I made that exception. I spoke of a friend.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I instanced the case of a husband and wife and the hon. gentleman said 'No.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I took issue with the hon. gentleman as to friends being responsible. I still say there is no law to compel friends or relatives unless they are in a close relationship like a father or mother. The father or mother would be responsible for a child up to a certain age. However, that is not the case I alluded to at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know about this over expenditure for schools in unorganized districts. There is a vote of $2,000, which the minister says is expended by the lieutenant-governor. He has no business to spend more than is voted, but last year he did spend $4,200.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There was a considerable balance at the credit of that fund.

Mr. FOSTER. There cannot be any fund, for our vote is only for one year, and if the money is not expended in that year it lapses.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed that it does not lapse in this case, and that they have had the money on hand.

Mr. FOSTER. It is expended under the supervision of the department here.

The PRIME MINISTER. I apprehend that it may be explained in this way. We put so much at their disposal every year, but they have their own estimates, and if they have a balance of one fund in one year, it does not revert to our hands, and in the following year they apply it in some other way.

Mr. DAVIN. I think my right hon. friend is under a misapprehension with regard to this vote. This vote is to the lieutenant-governor, who is responsible to this government for the way he spends it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I understand that my hon. friend is right, and I am wrong.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have the same difficulty as the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). The deputy minister states that for some reason which is not clear to me these votes do not lapse. I think the matter should be looked into, and I will look into it.

Grant to the North-west government to enable them to restore public works lately destroyed by floods $92,000

Mr. DAVIN. I hope that we may consider this vote as a permanent one. I really do not think that there is any great need this year which did not exist in another year, and it would be unfortunate if this vote were regarded as exceptional and temporary. There can be no doubt that the Territories, instead of needing less money than is voted, need more.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason given for this vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The reason is, that owing to the severe floods of last year, various bridges and dams were carried away or seriously injured.

Mr. FOSTER. This is really an addition to their public works subvention, but for a special occasion?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For a special occasion. I had a statement in which Mr. Haultain and Mr. Ross have given a list of all the works in detail.

Mr. BERGERON. Does this cover the whole amount passed by the local government?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The amount they have set forth in the schedule is $92,700.

Mr. FOSTER. That is expended by the local government entirely?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the business for to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER. In the afternoon the Elections Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, but it is rather a scandal that that committee has not been called for a long time. I hope the First Minister will see that a meeting is called for Thursday.

Mr. DAVIN. The other night I protested against the long interval, because there are some things being inquired into there with which my name is connected, and I want them to be examined into.

The PRIME MINISTER. All right; I will see the chairman.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m. (Tuesday).

Mr. FIELDING.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 5, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Order called for the introduction of a Bill intituled: 'Act to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts.'

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Might I ask the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) when this Bill respecting judges of provincial courts is likely to be introduced?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). It is necessary to have another consultation with the Minister of Justice with reference to the terms of the Act which has been drafted, and I expect to-morrow to bring it down. It will contain a provision with reference to a chief justice of the North-west Territories, and one for the appointment of three additional judges in the district of Montreal.

THE QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 173) respecting the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. He said: The Bill is a very simple one, and is designed merely to meet a difficulty that arose as a result of the legislation of last session. The House will remember that by 61 Vic., chap. 48, it is provided that the Quebec Harbour Commissioners might borrow the sum of $300,000 to make some necessary improvements in the harbour of Quebec. The statute provided that this amount should be a first charge on the revenue of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, but by the legislation of last session provision was made for an additional sum to be borrowed, and this additional sum ranks with that borrowed the year previously. This is to restore to the original position the loan of $300,000.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 174) to amend the Penitentiary Act. He said: The object is to amend the schedule respecting the penitentiary employees with respect to certain persons who were omitted from the schedule.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION—JUDICIAL INQUIRY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to be permitted to make a few suggestions to my right hon. friend in regard to the very important matter which he submitted to the House yesterday. In arriving at the conclusion that this commission should be appointed, he stated that we must have immediately a tribunal composed of the best judges of the land to make the fullest, most complete and most searching inquiry into all that we know, into all that has come to the attention of the House, and of the press and of the courts. That is a statement which has the entire concurrence of this side of the House, and I am sure my right hon. friend will be glad to receive any suggestions, in a matter of so much importance, in regard to some points that I conceive, having looked over the order in council, need to be considered in order to carry out that which my right hon. friend has promised to the House. The first question that arises is naturally the scope of the commission. That is a most important question, because unless the commission has sufficient scope to enable it to deal with this matter in the spirit in which my right hon. friend has declared his intention to proceed, I am afraid it might fail in accomplishing the object in view. This order in council is made under the provisions of chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, entitled 'An Act respecting inquiries concerning public matters.' The commission goes on to provide afterwards for an inquiry and investigation into :

Any alleged fraudulent alteration, defacing, marking, spoiling, substitution or tampering in respect of election ballots, or by reason of any fraudulent conduct in respect of poll books, ballot boxes, or the lawful contents, or what should have been the lawful contents of the ballot boxes, whether by way of fraudulent alteration, addition, withdrawal or otherwise, during and until the close of the election, and until the return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Now, that is all very well so far as it goes, but I beg to suggest to my right hon. friend, that in order to give this commission the far-reaching character that is involved in his pledge to the House, it appears to me it would be necessary to add : 'And any fraudulent practices, persons or means connected therewith.' In order to have that complete and searching inquiry that is necessary, the terms of the commission would fall short of what the right hon. gentleman suggests ; to meet what has been indicated by the press of the country in regard to what is admitted to be a question so important as to necessitate a measure of the character now before the House, it would require that we should go a great deal further than to deal with a certain number of individuals who may be either local official or parties in their employ, or, perhaps, who have acted in connection with them in pursuing these fraudulent practices. In order to reach and cure the evil we must be able to investigate the means that have been used in order to induce these parties to take such extreme measures in violation of the law of the land, and to discover any persons who may be associated with them for that purpose. I may say that the Act under which this order in council is passed does not seem to me to clothe the commissioners with the authority and powers that are absolutely necessary in order to make their work effective. I shall draw the attention of my right hon. friend to a very high authority on that question, and it is the authority of a gentleman who is recognized in this House as a very eminent authority in all questions of law. I refer to the Hon. Edward Blake. It will be found on the 208th page of Hansard, of February 3, 1876. When introducing the Bill in regard to corrupt practices at elections, Mr. Blake used the following language :

The Bill gives full powers for the calling of witnesses and for punishing those who do not attend, and contains also a very ample clause for indemnifying those witnesses who may have answered truly, in the opinion of the judges, all questions put to them on the subject of the election. I may say that the earlier Act of England contains a more limited clause, and it was found wise afterwards to extend it. The object one has in view in an inquiry of this description, where corrupt practices appear to have extensively prevailed, is to get at the proof, to search to the bottom, and ascertain how far corruption has prevailed in the constituency; and I think it is wise, under the circumstances, that a very liberal indemnity clause should be placed in the Bill.

We can see very clearly what the consequence of this may be. In the first place, it adds strength and vigour to his testimony, supposing he was guilty; in the second place, it proves the fact, morally at any rate, that he is guilty, and is consequently some argument in favour of a more extensive indemnity clause.

But whatever the argument may be, it is absolutely essential for this part of the investigation, that there should be a clause to indemnify witnesses who attend and give evidence, but not for witnesses who refuse to speak or who cannot claim a certificate of indemnity on other grounds.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this language is most pertinent to the present occasion. I am instructed that there is no such clause in the Acts under which this commission is appointed. I have no doubt that the commissioners may undertake that no prosecution should be founded on the testimony of any person who had admitted his own complicity, but it requires, I think, to go further than that. It requires to go the full length that Mr. Blake went in regard to that question in order that the judges may be in a position to absolutely grant immunity from prosecution to a witness. Otherwise, while you do not prosecute him upon the testimony of the witness himself, he may, in giving his evidence, be obliged to refer to the names of other parties, who can be used, and he can be put upon his trial. I think it does not require, addressing myself, as I am, to gentlemen of standing in the legal profession, any argument to show that this Bill, would, in my judgment, fall altogether short of realizing the far-reaching effects that my right hon. friend has committed himself to, if it did not in some way provide for that. I would, therefore, suggest that it would be necessary to introduce a short Bill that could be passed, I am sure, by common consent of the House, in a single day, that would provide that which, under the authority under which the commission would be acting, would be found to be required. Now, the order in council also refers to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery as a person who is called upon to produce certain ballot boxes and things of that kind, but there is no power, as I am advised, to compel the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to do that which he is required to do in order to prevent the acts of the commission being reduced to a nullity. I do not insinuate anything, nor have I the slightest personal reference to any person holding the office, but I do not think that in a matter of such importance as this, there should be any possibility of any person, whatever might be his position, being in a position to obstruct the work of the commission, and to a large extent, to defeat it.

There is another matter that I think only requires to be mentioned to satisfy my right hon. friend that in order to hope to obtain anything like a vigorous investigation of this most important question, it is absolutely necessary to provide for the payment of witnesses, and their maintenance during the time that the commission may require their services, probably at a considerable distance from their homes. It would be extremely difficult to carry on such an investigation unless provision of that kind were made. That same provision is made in the Corrupt Practices Act, and, therefore, it is establishing nothing that is not already a well known precedent. Then, I may say there is another point, and that is that the statute in the criminal law, which deals with witnesses, does not provide for the punishment of a person refusing to answer. Therefore, it would be necessary for the commissioners not only to have the power to bring witnesses before them, but that the commissioners have the absolute power to compel them to give their testimony, and not simply refuse, which would also, to a large extent, defeat the investigation. There is another matter that I think I may fairly suggest to my right hon. friend, as an act, not only of justice to both sides of the House, to both of the great parties in this country, but as a matter that will be absolutely necessary if this investigation is to be what my hon. friend assures us it is to be, a determination to have a most searching, thorough inquiry, and probing to the bottom of these practices, and it is that the commissioners should be expected, in the selection of the counsel that are provided for under the order in council, to communicate with my right hon. friend and myself as leader of the Liberal-Conservative party in this House. That is a suggestion that I do not think will be open to any question, because, this is not a party matter at all, and in order that all parties in this country may know that everything that can be done to deal with that which is now recognized as an admitted evil of the gravest and most important character, it is necessary, looking to its effect on the public mind, that there should be entire confidence that both parties have had an opportunity of bringing to the aid of the commissioners, everything that can be suggested in regard to it. I need not remind my hon. friend that no two counsel that could be engaged by the commissioners, could for a single moment, undertake to deal with a question of such gravity, of such far-reaching importance, and extending over such a large surface of the country, unless these two counsel were in a position to call to their aid such assistance as would be necessary to obtain the information and to go to the various points in the country, where it was necessary to investigate matters in such a way as to secure the absolute submission to the commissioners of all the evidence that could be brought forward, touching the important subject with which we are concerned.

There is another matter which makes it also important that we should have a short Act dealing with the scope of this commission and enlarging its powers; and that is the power to examine witnesses as to how they voted. My right hon. friend will remember that during the discussion on the motion of my hon. friend, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), it was stated to the House that a very serious question arose in the Privileges and Elections Committee as to whether they had the right to ask an elector how he had voted. I believe there are one or two decisions of the courts in Ontario that under the present law there is no power to ask the witness how he voted. In dealing with this question—not a question touching the seat of a member—but in dealing with this question of the prevalence of corrupt practices of a most formidable character, the Prime Minister will see the absolute necessity of giving the commissioners power to ask a man how he voted, because that is the very crux of the question, remembering what has already taken place in the West Huron election inquiry. These propositions which I make are so self-evident that I do not feel it necessary to enlarge upon them. I feel that I have merely to name them to suggest their importance, and I trust their prompt adoption by the right hon. gentleman. There is another important matter, and that is as to using the testimony already taken before the Privileges and Elections Committee. It will be remembered that in opposing the motion which led to the appointing of this commission, the Minister of Marine took the ground that some $10,000 of public money had already been expended in obtaining testimony on oath before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Now, the question of expenditure is very subordinate to the question of efficiently dealing with this matter, and I think it would save a great deal of trouble and in other ways be found useful, if the commissioners could avail of the sworn evidence already reported to this House by the committee. I especially can urge this upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and upon the Solicitor General, and upon the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), because they have stated that in their judgment there was nothing in that testimony of very serious import to the parties who practically were on their trial. Under these circumstances, I hope there will be no objection to utilizing this testimony which would so greatly facilitate the work of the commission.

I have only one more point to add, and that is upon a matter not dealt with at all by the order in council. I suggest to the right hon. the Prime Minister the absolute necessity of dealing with the Brockville and West Huron elections. This commission has grown out of the excitement produced in the country by what has been proven to have taken place in these elections, and we cannot put out of sight the fact that evidence given in the local elections of Ontario has also thrown a flood of light upon this subject, showing how widespread was this particular form of corruption which strikes at the very foundation of what the Prime Minister very properly termed, the sacredness of the ballot. It is this which led the right hon. gentleman to the very sound conclusion, that the time had come when it was absolutely the duty of the government, the duty of parliament, the duty of every person, to take means to secure that electoral contests in Canada shall result in giving the independent verdict of the honest electorate. Every Canadian is bound to facilitate by all possible means the exposure and the prompt punishment of acts that contravene the sacredness of the ballot. I may say to my right hon. friend, that while I feel that as matters stand—this commission having grown out of the discussion of the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) to refer the evidence taken last session, and to continue the investigation before a committee of this House—while I feel that my right hon. friend is warranted in saying that a still more satisfactory tribunal than that, would be a commission of independent judges to deal with the subject; yet I believe I am justified in pressing upon him that in the present temperament of the public mind the evidence reported to this House should be available to the commissioners. I do not want my right hon. friend to suppose for a moment that any person on this side of the House shrinks from the fullest and most complete investigation, and the going back as far as in the judgment of the commissioners is necessary, to bring to the light of day wrong-doing on the part of any one. If it can be shown that any persons acting for the Liberal-Conservative party have lent themselves directly or indirectly to the perpetration of these frightful frauds upon the independent electors of Canada, I want to see them exposed. I speak in the name of the great party I have the honour to lead when I say, that the commissioners should go back as far as hon. gentlemen may wish, so that the fullest investigation may take place irrespective of who it may strike. On both sides of this House we have a common interest in this: every man in Canada who has regard for the purity of elections; every man who has regard for the character of Canada as a free country; all have a common interest in having this matter investigated in the most complete manner possible, and in having any persons who may have infringed on so vital a law of the land as that which deals with the independence of the electorate, brought to condign punishment whoever they be, and wherever they may be found.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, though I am not prepared to agree in every particular with the remarks which have been offered to the House by my hon. friend, I certainly have no fault to find with the manner and the tone in which he has offered them; and indeed, I may say, it affords me and the government some gratification to find that on the whole the personnel of the commission and the scope of the commission appointed to investigate these electoral frauds, seem to be satisfactory to himself and that side of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As far as it goes.

The PRIME MINISTER. As far as it goes. The object of this commission, as the hon. gentleman has stated, is to probe to the bottom the electoral frauds which in a free country cannot be tolerated if we are to preserve what is after all the basis of parliamentary government, that is to say, an absolutely free electorate. I am glad to observe, from the remarks made by my hon. friend, that he thinks we have that object in view; but in his opinion this object would be better served if we were to amend the commission in a few particulars. My hon. friend suggested at the outset that the commission should be instructed to investigate fraudulent practices or means connected therewith. I may say that our purpose was to clothe the judges with the amplest powers possible to reach the object which we all have in view. I will not say at this moment that my hon. friend is perhaps hypercritical. I will simply say that all his observations will be carefully reported to the Minister of Justice for his advice; for I am sure that my hon. friend does not expect me to be prepared at this moment to give an answer, yea or nay, to all his suggestions. All I can say at present is that his suggestions will be conveyed to the Minister of Justice who must be our guide in these matters, and who will determine whether they are acceptable or unacceptable. There are one or two points, however, raised by my hon. friend to which I would briefly refer. With regard to payment of witnesses, this is not a question that comes within the scope of the commission; but it is our intention to ask for an ample appropriation from parliament to meet all the expenses of the commission. There is one suggestion of my hon. friend which I doubt that it will be proper for the government to accept. He said he thought the judges should be instructed to communicate with himself and with myself as to the counsel who are to be appointed. For my part, I have some hesitation about agreeing to this suggestion. We have thought it best, in the framing of this commission, to make the instructions as wide and ample as possible, and not to restrict the eminent gentlemen who are to form the commission, nor to advise them as to how they should discharge their duties. We thought two counsel should be appointed to assist them in the investigation; but we thought it best not to give them any advice as to the particular gentlemen whom they should employ. We thought it preferable to leave that to themselves; and for my part, I may say to my hon. friend that it never entered my mind that I should in any way communicate with the commissioners and tell them that I hoped or desired that Mr. So-and-so would be employed. We thought it better—and I think my hon. friend on reflection will agree with us—that on this point we should trust to the judgment and discretion of the commission. They know the object for which this commission has been appointed. Apart from the instructions which have been given to them within the four corners of the commission, they know what has taken place in this parliament, and they know that the object not only of this parliament, on both sides, but of the country, is to ferret out the system which I am afraid has too long prevailed, and expose it, and make its recurrence absolutely impossible. Under these circumstances we have thought that if we were to offer any advice to the commissioners as to how they should discharge their duties, or as to the appointment of counsel or the registrar or any of the officials, we should perhaps, while desiring to serve a good object, rather detract from the confidence which on all hands ought to be reposed in this commission. What I say with regard to the appointment of counsel applies also to the last suggestion of my hon. friend, that the commissioners should commence by inquiring into the Brockville and West Huron elections. I doubt whether I should accept that suggestion of my hon. friend. I think we should rather give free scope to the eminent gentlemen who have been selected for this commission, and leave them to approach their task absolutely unfettered with any suggestion whatever, and in the way they think best adapted to meet the justice of the case, and to serve the object for which they are appointed. I have only these observations to offer to my hon. friend at the present time. As to these points I do not know that we are prepared to agree to my hon. friend's suggestions. As to the others, I shall be only too happy to refer them to the Minister of Justice for his consideration, and at a future day I will give my hon. friend the answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would suggest that the hon. leader of the opposition put himself in order by moving the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. After what the right hon. gentleman has said, I do not expect an immediate answer; but I think my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) merely desires to make a suggestion which I am sure the right hon. gentleman will be glad to hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I merely wished to make a suggestion, because the right hon. First Minister said that he was going to convey the suggestions of the leader of the opposition to the Minister of Justice, and I would like to have my suggestion brought to his attention at the same time. Chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes provides that no witness shall be compelled to answer any question by his answer to which he might render himself liable to a criminal prosecution. I suppose that has already been brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice; and, as the leader of the opposition points out, that is not a provision which would be very suitable to a government commission of this kind. It may be suggested that any difficulty with regard to that is removed by chapter 31 of 56 Vict., passed in 1893, the Canada Evidence Act. With regard to that, in the first place it is doubtful whether the words, 'criminal proceedings, civil proceedings and other matters respecting which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction,' would apply to a commission of this kind, because the words 'other matters' might be restricted by a well-known rule of construction to matters other than commissions of this kind. Further than that, this Act of 1893 does not contain any repealing clause which would remove from chapter 114, the provision to which I have already directed attention; and it seems to me that in order to get rid of that provision, we should require in the Act of 1893 something which we do not find there. It is true, I do find this provision :

No person shall be excused from answering any question on the ground that the answer may tend to incriminate him.

It might very well be said that that would only apply to investigations not controlled by a special statute. The Act of 1893 does not go so far as the provision contained in section 9 of chapter 10 of the Act introduced by Mr. Blake. That goes further than the Act of 1893, because it provides that no prosecution shall be brought against a witness in respect of any matter as to which he has answered a question. The Act of 1893 does not go that far, because it merely provides that his answer shall not be used in evidence against him, but leaves him still open for prosecution. It would be very desirable that in a commission of this kind, we should have the provisions contained in Mr. Blake's Act, which are wider than those contained in the Act of 1893.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the hon. the Minister of Customs when I may expect the return with regard to applications for a new steamer, a revenue cutter, in British Columbia. The Minister of Marine brought down what was in his department and we are waiting for what is in the Customs Department. I would ask the right hon. leader of the government when we may expect the report on the labour troubles.

Mr. DAVIN. Might I mention that return about the tea.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will try and get it.

SALE OF CREAMERY PRODUCTS BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I wish to ask the hon. the Minister of Agriculture with regard to a matter of some importance, as to which I have some correspondence from the Kootenay district, British Columbia. The government have taken charge of a number of creameries in the North-west Territories, and their products were supposed to be sold to the general consuming public through various dealers. That was the system under the late government, but I am told that last year a change was made, in consequence of which the whole product is sold in the district to which I refer, to one firm, and I am told by my correspondent that that firm is making a much larger profit than the dealers think it ought to make. The dealers complain that they applied to purchase the butter and were told on May 25, of this year, that they must apply to J. Y. Griffiths & Co., of Nelson, who, for the present, have the exclusive agency for the sale of this butter produced in the creameries under government supervision. They very properly object to that. They object to any combine supported by the government. They say they are willing to pay a fair ordinary price, but not an extravagant price for the purpose of enriching one special firm favoured by the government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I have heard something about the question the hon. gentleman has brought up, but was not aware of the facts he has stated. I will inquire of Professor Robertson as soon as he returns from England, which I expect will be this week.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And I suppose that if the hon minister finds one firm selected and others excluded, in short a combine, he will not permit that system to continue.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will see that no injustice is done.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Might I ask when we may expect the return respecting Dominion Creek?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Some of the papers are in the Yukon, but one or two are here and will be brought down to-morrow.

ELECTION ACT—AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 133), to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members to the House of Commons. He said: The object is merely to consolidate the law as it exists. The only two new features were those applicable to the North-west Territories representation and also with reference to the qualification of certain voters, that is to say, persons belonging to the militia and North-west Mounted Police, and the intention is to eliminate from the Bill all those clauses which have reference to the North-west Territories representation. Further, it is my intention to drop that portion of paragraph 7, which has reference to the disqualification of men in the permanent force and in the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is a good day to withdraw that clause.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is always a good time to do what is right. As a consequence of what I have just said, clauses 24, 27, 29, 33, 65 and 78 will require a slight amendment, and also schedule 3, providing for the repeal of the North-west Territories Representation Act.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorncy). I congratulate the hon. gentleman upon withdrawing some sections of the Bill, especially that section which has reference more particularly to the disfranchisement of the members of the militia, those who are serving now in Africa and the North-west Mounted Police. I am sure, Sir, we are all interested in having a good election law; we are interested from a general standpoint in having elections carried on in as pure a manner as possible, but I take it that every man in this House is personally interested in securing an honest vote from the electorate of this country. It is, unhappily, well known that elections nowadays cost a good deal of money—as one of my hon. friends on the other side so aptly put it, elections are not made with prayers. The object of the several amendments of which I have given notice, and which are printed in the Votes and Proceedings of this day, have these results in view, to banish corruption as far as it can be banished, and to make elections as pure as they can be made. Now, I think that the Bill before the House is a step in the right direction; but it seems to me, on the other hand, there are some parts that could be improved or supplemented by provisions taken from the Imperial statute, and also, I may say, from a statute passed in the province of Quebec in 1895. I may explain that no man gave me more help in passing that Bill through the Quebec legislature than my hon. and learned friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick). One good turn deserves another, we know; and, I think that, as I am on this side of the House as he was in 1895 in the local legislature, I can extend to him the right hand of fellowship and help him to make this Bill as perfect a Bill as possible. In a very few words, I may outline the general purpose of the amendments of which I have given notice, because I think it is only fair that the House should know exactly what my object is, and a few remarks from me will enable the House to come to a right understanding of what I suggest. First, I endeavour by certain amendments to preserve, as far as possible the sanctity of the ballot. We have heard a good deal of that recently, but I take it that the provisions of the Bill are not quite strict enough to preserve the sanctity of the ballot in the way it is understood. I propose to ask the House to amend the Bill so as to render it more difficult to forge, alter, or, as the parlance is now, to 'switch' ballots. There is another question also of deep interest to those who have seats in this House and who intend to go again before the electors, and that is the preservation of good order during the elections. There is nothing so conducive to immorality in elections as the use of intoxicating liquor during the time of an election. It is well known that, unfortunately, in some parts of the country, and probably in most parts, intoxicating liquor plays an all-important or great part in procuring votes or in having men vote, not as their conscience dictates to them, but from other motives than those which should sway them. I propose stringent measures to prevent disorder and intoxication and illegal and immoderate use of liquor during election time, especially on the day previous to the election, and on the day of election. These provisions are taken from the Quebec Act, and I think in the last general elections in 1897 they worked out very fairly. Another point in which I propose to ask the House to amend the Bill is this: While there is no doubt that the man who bribes is guilty of a grievous offence and should be punished, I take it that the man who allows himself to be bribed and especially the man who wants to be bribed is guilty of a greater offence. For instance, the man who waits around until four o'clock in the afternoon, saying: I will not go to the polls unless I get something, should be punished more severely than the man who holds out a bribe. It is well known now that elections have grown so expensive that certain parties vote not because they think one party better than the other, but simply because they are holding themselves out to be bought like so many cattle. This has got to be an abuse—I may call it a crime—which calls for the strictest measures; and if we can put down this kind of thing, we shall not only make elections cheaper, but also banish from our electoral contests much of the corruption which unfortunately exists to-day. It is my object to so amend the law as to punish the man who accepts the bribe, not only the man who accepts money, but the man who accepts drinks, the man who accepts refreshments, the man who holds himself out to the candidate as a tempter, and without whom the candidate sometimes cannot get along. There are abuses in this way, of which, I have no doubt, many of my hon. friends are aware. For instance, on certain days, especially on nomination day and polling day, a great number of electors will hang around the place where the candidate is dining until they are invited to have part of the refreshments that are going. And, if one of these men does not get the invitation he is looking for, he goes away disgruntled, and in many cases, votes for the other candidate. It is this man I want to punish, as well as the man who holds out an inducement to another to vote against the dictates of his conscience.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You want to punish a man for being thirsty?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, on election day. He should have a good drink of water before he comes to the election.

Then, as to the matter of election expenses, the keeping of the accounts; I will explain the general purview of the amendments I shall propose when we reach that part of the Bill. The manner in which the accounts are kept by the general agent of the candidates to-day is loose; the accounts are not kept in such a manner that any one inspecting them can see whether corruption has taken place or not. I intend to ask the House to adopt provisions which will cause the accounts to be so kept that any one at a glance can see how much was contributed towards the election and how much the expenses have been. Under these amendments, the agent of the candidate must not only keep a daily account of the moneys he expends in carrying on the organization and in running the election, but he also will be obliged to keep an account of all moneys which he receives for the purpose of the organization of the election; and no money can be expended in the constituency which has not passed through the hands of the general agent, who keeps an account of these moneys. On the other side of the book, he enters the moneys which he has expended; and therefore, it will be seen the agent has to show a clean bill, he has to show that the money he has received and the money he has expended balance each other; and if he cannot show that, he is obliged to explain the difference. It will be seen that this is an effective mode of checking the custom that has prevailed of contributing large sums of money to the election by persons who are not in a position to be able to contribute this money in an honest and straightforward way. It will be seen by this that any moneys that come into the hands of the candidate's agent and are expended in the election, must be accounted for, and persons inspecting the accounts can see where the money comes from, and how it is expended.

I take from the Imperial Act another provision. I propose to establish for each county the maximum expenditure which will be allowed by the law, and also to designate specifically in the Act those persons that can be legally employed in carrying on or organizing an election. For instance, I say that in certain polls so many messengers, or so many secretaries may be employed, so many carters may be employed, and those are the only persons who can be employed legally in the election. Anybody who is employed in any other capacity is illegally employed, and the employer is guilty of a corrupt practice, and the person who allows himself to be so employed is guilty of a corrupt practice also.

Then, again, the amount which can be legally expended in any one constituency is fixed by law, the salaries of those persons are to be determined. For unforeseen expenses a certain amount is allowed, but there is a maximum fixed for each constituency, and the expenditure of any sum over and above that maximum is by itself an illegal payment and a corrupt act, for which those who have taken any part in it are liable to punishment. These are in a general way the outlines of the amendments which I shall ask my hon. and learned friend the Solicitor General to accept when we come to those provisions of the Bill.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I am glad my hon. and learned friend has reduced my quantitative interest in this Bill, but, of course, I feel just as intense an interest in it as before. I understand that he does not intend in any way to interfere with the present election law in the North-west Territories. I congratulate him on his sober second thought in retiring from what was certainly a most untenable position, that of disfranchising the mounted police, of disfranchising the permanent corps, of disfranchising many of the very best citizens that we have.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I have carefully read the Bill introduced by the Solicitor General, and I am prepared to congratulate him on having embraced many new ideas that were not in the old Act. The government have now adopted the several franchises in force in the various provinces as the basis of representation in this House; and I venture to think that the hon. gentleman will find a great many difficulties when he comes to consider the various franchises of the provinces, many more perhaps than he foresees at the present time. We know that the Franchise Act passed in 1898 is largely embodied in this Bill, and when this Bill is passed you are partially taking into it the Franchise Acts of the different provinces. There are in the neighbourhood of some 66 amendments to the old election law, and I am satisfied there will be three times that number of amendments proposed to this Bill before it becomes law. Now, with respect to some changes the hon. gentleman has made, I congratulate him on abandoning section 7 with respect to the North-west; also, for paying more attention than has been paid in the old Act with respect to those who have become criminals by committing frauds in elections. I am glad to notice a provision for the employment of resident officers instead of strangers, as could be done under the old Act. Then there is the important question of marking ballots. Many hon. gentlemen know by experience that not only red, black and blue lead pencils have been used, but pen and ink have been used in marking ballots. This has been the subject of a good deal of controversy in the courts, and I am glad to note that the hon. gentleman has accepted the suggestion that no ballot marked otherwise than with a black lead pencil shall be called a legal ballot.

Now, with respect to the opening of the polls, I propose to move an amendment which shall be a direction to the officials to open the polls at 9 o'clock in the morning. I find that the hon. gentleman has amended the old Act in a slight degree, but not sufficiently to meet the present requirements. As to the limitation of the granting of certificates, we all know by experience, and it has been found by experience in Manitoba and other portions of the Dominion, that the issue of certificates to the scrutineers in the different polls has been abused, and I notice that the hon. gentleman proposes a remedy for that in his Bill. Then, again, there is one offence that I think has been overlooked by the hon. gentleman, and that is intimidation. There are only two means by which that can be avoided; one is to make the punishment more severe, and the other is to add a section to the Act as it now stands making a half holiday on every election day, so as to allow all persons to vote without being intimidated by their employers. I desire to draw attention to a difficulty that is found to exist under the present election law of Ontario and perhaps in other provinces. This Bill provides that returning officers have a right to divide a constituency into polling divisions. Take, for instance, East Toronto, which, at the last election, which was on the plebiscite, had 114 subdivisions, and in some of those subdivisions there were not more than three votes polled. I say that it is an unnecessary expense to the city. Take the east riding of Simcoe, we find there are 63 divisions, when in my judgment 50 would be ample. I complain of that because it is a source of expense to all the candidates. A returning officer receives $30 for his services when there are not over 30 polling subdivisions, and $2 for each additional polling subdivision above 30. Evidently you offer an inducement to the returning officer to create a large number of polling subdivisions. Now, what does that mean to every hon. gentleman in this House, and to every one who has been a candidate? In the constituency of East Toronto where there are 114 polling subdivisions, under the Franchise Act the charge for a copy of the voters' list in each polling subdivision is ten cents, which would mean to a candidate running in East Toronto $11.40 for a voters' list. You will see that is a large cost for a man to pay for a special voters' list. In East Simcoe a candidate will have to pay $6.30 for a voters' list. I say it is wrong to offer such an inducement to the returning officer. I think that in a large number of constituencies in the older sections of the country it would be better to pay a lump sum to the returning officer, thereby tending to reduce the number of polling subdivisions, and consequently the cost to the candidates, and to the public who have to pay for the additional officers and polling booths. I do not know what induced the hon. gentleman to change the form of the ballot. My idea always was that it was the duty of parliament, in framing legislation, especially of an election character, to try and frame that legislation in order to prevent fraud. To my mind this ballot which has been used in the last election or two, is the best ballot we have ever had. I say that for this reason: No fraud can be committed by the use of that ballot if the instructions are properly carried out, because the marking of the ballot is confined strictly to the disc. But, the hon. gentleman has abandoned that ballot, and has gone back to the old form of ballot. Any one who understands or knows anything of the way in which elections have been conducted in the past, will know perfectly well that with this ballot a man who wishes to conduct a dishonest election, will have a large scope to do so. Take that ballot as we have it in the Bill here; you have a space between these two black spaces where the ballot must be marked, in order to be a good ballot, while under the system of the disc ballot, it must be marked in the disc to be a legal ballot. Instead of opening the door wider, by adopting this ballot that is proposed in the Bill, we should confine ourselves to the disc ballot, and make the directions more explicit, showing the form of the ballot and where it is to be marked. As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to do all in my power to oppose going back to the old style of ballot. These are some of the things in the Bill, but there are some things that the hon. gentleman has not seen his way clear to incorporate in it. Proper directions should be given as to the form of the ballot, and provision should be made by the hon. gentleman as to the character of the parcels, how they are to be sealed, and instructions to that effect should be given. Next, provision should be made for the proper return of the ballot boxes. We all know perfectly well that days elapse sometimes without any reason whatever, during which officers, appointed by the government, neglect to return their ballot boxes. The hon. gentleman should have recognized that point and placed something in the Bill that would have done away with this delay. The next point I would speak of, is in regard to withdrawal of candidates. In municipal elections, there is no difficulty about a municipal candidate withdrawing after the lapse of a certain period, from the nomination. I do not see why a candidate for parliamentary honours should be allowed to remain in the field from nomination day, to four o'clock on polling day, and then be permitted to hand in his resignation. A man who is nominated, ought, within a certain length of time to withdraw, if he intends to do so; if not, he should go to the poll. The next subject that I wish to mention is the $200 deposit. I am opposed to that. The province of Ontario does not require it, and I do not see that any suffering has resulted therefrom. I also object to the provision which requires a $100 deposit for a recount. I see no use of it. Then, I submit in reference to the statement of deputy returning officers, that more attention should be paid to that, so that candidates and their friends would be able to secure a correct statement of the poll. In respect to the form of ballot, I am sorry that what I suggest has not been adopted, and I trust that these provisions that I have mentioned will find their way into the election law before this Bill is passed.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, in February of the present year, I introduced a Bill to amend the Elections Act, but seeing that the hon. Solicitor General has now introduced a general Bill, I propose to move several amendments when we are in Committee of the Whole, such as are embodied in my Bill. There are two or three very important ones, to which very great attention has been given. One is the abolition of the $200 deposit, which is something that is very generally asked for throughout the country, and the hon. Solicitor General should be able to advance very good grounds for desiring to retain it. Another important amendment which I suggest is that in electoral divisions containing or being part of a city of 10,000 people and more, the poll should be open until eight o'clock, as it is found absolutely impossible to poll the vote of a city up to five o'clock in the day. I do not agree with the last speaker (Mr. Ingram), that the old disc ballot should have been retained, or that it was a good ballot in any way. But, at the same time, this ballot, which is proposed, still retains one of the very plain objections to the old ballot, and that was that it was distinct on the back of the ballot as on the face of the ballot, the reason for that being that the ballot has a black background. Take the present ballot; you will see that the disc on the front shows clearly on the other side, and that it is plain to see. With the black background of this ballot, it will be just the same, as hon. gentlemen can see here, if they will turn over to the opposite page. On page 60, I see that the city of Winnipeg has still a special note under this proposed Bill, providing for the extra payment of clerks and deputy returning officers. I think that would be worthy of an explanation before we get through with the Bill, because the government refused to pay this extra allowance at the last election.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take up much of the time of the House just now. I want to express my great satisfaction at the modification which the hon. and learned Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), has announced, in regard to a proposal which was made at the most inopportune period that could be selected, that the government do not propose doing anything that would seem to interfere with the rights and privileges enjoyed by the mounted police, the permanent force, or any person connected with the militia service of the country. I want simply, in reference to what fell from my

hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain), to express my great satisfaction that he has taken hold of what I regard as a most important matter connected with the election law. The House knows how strongly I was opposed to the very radical and vital change that was made in reference to the franchise of this parliament, resulting in abolishing the franchise of this parliament, and handing all its members over to the tender mercies of the local legislatures of the different provinces. It was a most retrograde step in my opinion; it was a step entirely unjustified on any ground whatever. It was perfectly possible, I am sure, to find some mode of conducting elections without much more cost than really will be incurred under the present system. You may say, it is true, that under the policy of the present government, we have transferred some of the expenditure to the local legislatures and the municipalities, but I doubt very much if we had the right to do that. At all events, it has been attended with very great inconvenience that we had no election law at all. We had the important city of Winnipeg absolutely unrepresented for a whole year, because there was no election law under which an election could be held in Manitoba. That is a matter of the most serious import, but it would naturally accrue out of an attempt to break down the independent franchise of the members of the House of Commons of Canada. Sir, I regard this Canadian parliament as second only to the greatest deliberative assembly in the world, and to break down the franchise under which our members are elected, and to relegate it to the various provinces with all kinds and varieties and shades and colours of franchises, making it a complete mosaic instead of a uniform electoral law, I have no hesitation in regarding that as a retrograde step. It is objectionable, not only because it deprived this House of one of its highest functions, but it has also the very grave objection that gentlemen will sit side by side in this Chamber each elected upon a totally different system of franchise. Hon. gentlemen opposite pledged themselves that they were going to hand over the franchise to the various provinces and to commit the election of members to the Canadian House of Commons to the unrestricted legislation of the different provinces, but they were not able to keep that pledge. They soon found out that the very matters with reference to which they condemned the Conservative party for acting in a partisan manner, they were themselves obliged to adopt. Why, Sir, they enfranchised persons who are disfranchised under the law of the various provinces, and they disfranchised persons who are enfranchised under these laws. They made a mosaic work of the whole thing, and they left themselves dependent upon the action of local officers over whom we have no control. As a fact, there were no means provided in the law by which we could absolutely compel the local officials to discharge the duties which this legislation imposed upon them. We were thus exposed to the monstrous absurdity of not being able to hold an election in the province of Manitoba for a whole year. On more than one occasion when the government of the day were inclined to take a plunge and appeal to the electorate, they found they had no law under which they could do so, and that if they attempted it they would make confusion worse confounded. It is too late, I suppose, to make an appeal to gentlemen opposite to reconsider this policy, but it is, perhaps, well to point out the unwisdom of the course they adopted, and to suggest to them that the sooner this House of Commons of Canada is in a position to have an independent franchise of its own, the better it will be for the credit and the character of this country. In view of all that has come to light recently, in view of the reports which have flooded the press of the country, the prominent feature of this Franchise Bill ought to be a provision for the purpose of taking every means to secure the purity and independence of elections. In my judgment, offences which formerly were punished with a fine should be made punishable by severe imprisonment without the option of a fine. I say that those who violate and bring into contempt the election law of the land, and who undertake to steal elections from the honest electors, should be in the penitentiary instead of being free men. I hope that by the common consent of the members of this House, before the Bill leaves the Chamber it will be so amended as to inflict most condign punishment upon any man who undertakes to indulge in these fraudulent and frightful malpractices which have so disgraced this country, and have made the fair name of Canada almost a by-word with regard to elections. I trust that the Bill will be amended by common consent that it will be made impossible for any man to be bribed to stoop so low as to commit an outrage on the freedom of our honest electors. I trust that the free men of Canada will be able in the future to feel that it is worth their while to exert themselves in the interests of their country, without the fear that when the poll is closed the election may be stolen from the candidate of the people's choice, and that the man who is the patron—or, if not the patron, the person to be benefited by the acts of a band of ruffians—may be returned to this House. I trust that every stringent provision possible will be adopted to prevent the repetition of these malpractices which have become so common and notorious as to compel the Prime Minister to declare that nothing short of the immediate appointment of a Royal Commission to investigate and prevent these things, if possible, should be sanctioned by this parliament. It will be more convenient to discuss these matters in committee, but I wished before you left the Chair, Mr. Speaker, to say that which I believe is the sentiment predominating in the mind of every man of independent character—and I hope that includes every gentleman on both sides of this House—viz., that full and complete effect shall be given to the will of the people, and that no measure, however severe, will be left untried to bring about that result.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should like to ask the Solicitor General if he has any reason for changing the present ballot paper. In my experience in elections, this ballot was an improvement on the last, and, on the whole, gave satisfaction. I do not see any improvement, far from it, in the ballot which appears as the model ballot in this Bill. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is restoring the objections which we found in the ballot which was used before the disc was introduced.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. leader of the opposition appears to have not quite understood that we are now dealing with the Election Act and not the Franchise Act. The Franchise Act, as we now have it, by which we adopt the provincial franchise in federal elections, is merely a return to the condition of things that existed from confederation down to 1885. The change made in 1898 is not to my mind responsible for such a condition of things as the hon. gentleman states exists in Winnipeg. There is no reason why, under the Franchise Act as we have it, any electoral division in Canada should be unrepresented for one year. Section 9 of the Franchise Act provides for the very difficulty pointed out by the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman explain, then, why the government which he represents so ably as a law officer of the Crown, should have left the constituency of Winnipeg unrepresented for a year?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As I understand it, the reason the Winnipeg election was delayed was that it would take two or three months to prepare the lists, whereas, as a provincial election was then impending we would have the benefit of the provincial lists as prepared for the provincial election. Under the federal Franchise Act which we had before, the hon. gentleman knows that elections have been held on lists four years old. Surely that condition of things was not to be tolerated or continued if any change for the better could possibly be invented. The hon. leader of the opposition is very keen about the necessity of providing machinery to prevent corruption in elections. In my judgment, an election Act is one that should appeal very strongly to every member of the House of Commons, because it is a matter that affects every member. Every member should approach such a question with an open mind in order to improve the Act and make it as well adapted as possible to bring about that which we all desire; and I for one approach the consideration of this question with an absolutely free mind and a genuine desire to obtain what assistance I can from any hon. gentleman on either side of the House who has had experience in these matters. It is rather to be regretted that it has been left to this year 1900, to make these changes in the direction of greater severity for offences in elections. It is within the knowledge of all of us that offences in elections are no new affair, but have existed for many years; and this is the first time, within my knowledge, that a serious and honest attempt has been made to provide means to protect the public in such matters. It is a remarkable thing that this attempt should be left till this year 1900 and to this government.

Mr. INGRAM. There have been some new methods since 1896.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If we examine the comments which have been made on elections held in 1896, we find a remarkable family resemblance to those made upon the elections of that year. If you could apply to the Brockville and West Huron elections all that has been suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, you would find that they are not isolated cases by any means in this Dominion. Dealing with what my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) said, I shall be very glad to consider all his proposals; but I would suggest that the amendments he desires to make be taken up as each section to which they relate comes up for consideration. Some of his amendments may be adopted, but others I consider unworkable. When the hon. gentleman proposed his Bill in the Quebec legislature, he got more sympathy for it from where I sat on the opposite side than he got from those in his own immediate vicinity. I hope that the co-operation which I gave him on that occasion will bear fruit at the present time, and that I shall have the benefit of his wide experience; because he established a reputation in the province of Quebec as one who desired to improve the Franchise Act and who knew how to go about it. He does not forget, I hope, that some of the amendments he suggests were in his mind at the time the Quebec Election Act was under consideration, and that although in his mind they did not get to the House; and perhaps he will explain why his colleagues were not so anxious to adopt those amendments for the purpose of purifying the elections.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not know what amendments my hon. friend refers to. The amendments of which I have given notice come from the Bill passed in 1895.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not all of them.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is not one of them that does not come from that Bill.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will point out some that come from the Imperial Act, especially that limiting the amount to be expended in an election. That does not come from the Quebec Act.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, it does; it comes from the schedule of the Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will accept my hon. friend's correction. With regard to the form of the ballot, that is one of the questions which I think ought to be considered. I am not at all wedded to the form which appears in the schedule. My intention is to produce a great number of forms of ballot which have been suggested to us, and have them placed on the Table here, so that we may consider them in committee and determine which form will best meet the object we all have in view. I have in my mind a form of ballot which will prevent the substitution of ballots. I would like to draw the attention of those in favour of the existing form to the results of the last election. I have taken twenty-two electoral districts in the province of Ontario, in probably the most intelligent portion of Ontario, and what is the result?

Mr. BERGERON. Name the counties.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They begin with Addington and end with Wentworth. As the result, we had in those twenty-five constituencies 3,057 spoiled ballots.

Mr. INGRAM. That is where I find fault with the directions, as given in the old Act, for the guidance of voters in voting. While the mark 'X' is put up in that form 'M.' what I maintain is that the form of the ballot should also be included in the form, so that when the elector came to the poll to vote he would see the proper way to mark the ballot.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We will have occasion to consider the improvement of the ballots, because I consider it is very essential that we should first improve the ballot so as to make it almost impossible for an elector to destroy his vote by ignorance. The second thing we should have in view is the prevention of any interference with the ballot that may prevent the voter giving expression to his intention with reference to an election. The total rejected ballots in these twenty-five constituencies in 1887 was 586; in 1899, it was 555; and, curious to say, in 1896, it grew to 3,057, or an increase of 500 per cent. Whether that result was due to the form of the ballot or any other cause, I am unable to say.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was probably due to the fact that the ballot was then new, whilst in 1887 and 1891, the ballots were the same as those that had been in use for some time. We can discuss that, however, more at length in committee.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I give the statistics to show that the ballot was not perfect by any means since it led to such results.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not consider it perfect, but better than the one proposed in this measure.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). I consider this, Mr. Speaker, an opportune time, whilst this Election Bill is being submitted to the House for a second reading, to bring up the subject of the penalties that should be inflicted on election officers who have wilfully violated their duties at elections. I agree with what the hon. leader of the opposition has said with respect to the punishments that should be inflicted. In the last local election in the county I represent, the sheriff was the returning officer, and, as was alleged, was guilty of such conduct in his position as returning officer as to make him an object of reproach by nearly every elector in that county, irrespective of party. I brought it to the notice of this House, on the first opportunity that offered, together with the facts connected with that election, of certain corrupt practices that had been perpetuated. The two candidates were the late mayor of the town and a cabinet minister in the local government. At the close of the poll, it was found that the cabinet minister had been defeated by seventeen votes, but the cry went forth in every quarter that the party supporting the cabinet minister did not care a damn what might happen, as the cabinet minister was bound to be returned anyhow. It became evident to the friends of the late mayor, Captain Wolfe, that a recount would be demanded; and so it was, and in that recount the ballots were so manipulated that instead of a majority of seventeen in favour of Captain Wolfe, the majority was turned the other way. I brought the matter to the notice of this House, and showed the iniquity that was alleged to have been committed by the sheriff, acting as returning officer, and asked for an investigation. I was advised that I had better allow the elections in other counties, in which frauds were committed, to be investigated first. However, I brought the matter to the notice of this government, and contended that it was the duty of this government to investigate it, and if it were found that this sheriff was not worthy of the position he occupied, he should be removed from office at once. All my representations and demands, however, fell unheeded, and this same man is still in office, who is capable of doing almost anything, provided he can see some hole through which he may escape conviction. He will, no doubt, be the returning officer at the next election, and, no doubt, will submit the candidate to whom he is opposed to similar treatment.

I appeal to the government not to reappoint that sheriff as returning officer without first having the charges referred to against him fully investigated. I look upon the conduct of the sheriff as worse than robbery. To deprive a man of his franchise is bad enough, but to rob the electorate of the county and the elected candidate of his right to a county seat is still a worse act, and one that should be met with swift condign punishment. I earnestly solicit the government to investigate the matter. I might give to the House charges which have been brought against this man previously, but, no doubt, I would be ruled out of order in doing so; but, I feel that the government have been remiss in their duty in not bringing this party to justice when they knew the charges that had been brought against him, not only by me in this Chamber, but also some years ago in the Senate by a member of that body. I now repeat my request that the government should not appoint this man again returning officer, but should see that his conduct is investigated first before giving him any further position of trust.

Mr. FLINT. I would like to ask my hon. friend if the protest was not withdrawn, and why it was?

Mr. KAULBACH. There was a protest, but the position in which I was placed—or the party was placed—in connection with that protest, was one that does not reflect a great deal of credit upon the government now in power. I think the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) is aware of the fact; and if he will explain the facts to the House I think they will see very clearly that he had better not have asked that question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Perhaps, the most of the members of the House would like to know as much about it as the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), and the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). I have not the good fortune to know anything about the facts of the case, but I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) is dealing with something that occurred in regard to a recount in a local election. Now, the province of Nova Scotia is one of the most civilized portions of the Dominion, and if any officer engaged in a local election has misbehaved, there is ample machinery in the courts of the country to deal with him; and, if there should be any lack in the local machinery, we have a local government and a local legislature that will deal with the matter. I cannot see what object the hon. gentleman has in dragging in a question of local politics here. If he has a difficulty with the sheriff of the county, I have no doubt that he can find a way to settle that difficulty without asking us to intervene. I have no doubt that the local government, the local legislature and the courts of Nova Scotia will afford all the remedy that is necessary.

Mr. KAULBACH. I cannot endorse the views of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) as to the certainty that the local government will adjust these matters.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, spoken.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). Perhaps the House will indulge me for a moment, as, perhaps, I may not be here when we are in committee and dealing with section 90 and subsequent sections—

Mr. MONTAGUE. I hope the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) has no intention of shutting off the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) from making his explanation.

Mr. BRITTON. I thought the discussion on that point was out of order, and so I wanted to bring the House back to the Bill under discussion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Britton) will allow me to make an observation on the question of order, I would just say that the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) brought to the attention of this government what is notoriously true—the disgraceful conduct of the sheriff of Lunenburg—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has spoken, and I protest against his using—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. member (Mr. Kaulbach) brought up that subject, and he has a right to do it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He has not.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot admit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) has the right to do that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will explain my point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to explain this point of order. What was the ground on which my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) had the right to draw the attention of this government to the conduct of the sheriff of Lunenburg? It is that the sheriff is the person appointed by this government as returning officer, and will be in a position to commit the same frightful frauds in a Dominion election. Nobody knows that better than the hon. Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has not stated his point of order, and I deny his right to be heard.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think there is any ground for impugning here the conduct of a sheriff in a provincial election and bringing in issues of that kind in this House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think, however, Mr. Speaker, that that was the point of order the Minister of Finance raised.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I objected to the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) making another speech, that is all.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) made a speech in the middle of the hon. member for Lunenburg's (Mr. Kaulbach's) speech.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He had sat down.

Mr. KAULBACH. By way of explanation—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. KAULBACH. I wish to explain. I say I had the right to bring this matter to the notice of the government—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. KAULBACH. Because the sheriff of Lunenburg—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, chair, sit down.

Mr. BRITTON. The question was discussed a little while ago of the abnormal number of rejected ballots which appeared in the election of 1896. The question came up in my own election, because on the return of the poll, though Kingston is not a large constituency—the total number of votes being only in the neighborhood of 3,200 in the last election, if I recollect aright—it appeared that there were 215 rejected ballots and 23 (if I remember well) spoiled ballots. That naturally suggested the query why it was, that in an intelligent constituency like Kingston and with a comparatively small number of voters, there should be such a large number of rejected ballots; and the natural thing to do in order to discover if possible what was wrong, was to have a recount. I wish to say now, that the deputy returning officers in that city were all, so far as I know, local men, and I have not the slightest suspicion of any of them. Nor have I any suspicion in regard to the scrutineers. They were all men known to myself, and I am quite sure that those appointed by the opposite party only wanted to do what was fair and right, as did the scrutineers on our side. We were not up to the tricks that were alleged to have been perpetrated in other places; so far as I know, we knew nothing of that kind of thing in Kingston. But the question arose how there came to be 215 rejected ballots, and we felt that a recount would have tended to explain it. This brings me to the point—I wish to point out a defect in the section referring to a recount. As the law is now, and as it is proposed by the Solicitor General in the Bill before the House—

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) to say that there were 215 rejected ballots in Kingston. For whom were they marked?

Mr. BRITTON. I do not know; there was no recount.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Britton's) majority?

Mr. BRITTON. One hundred and fifty-two.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, we may have the wrong man in the House.

Mr. BRITTON. That is so; and you may have a man in the House returned as only having 152 majority when he had 252 or more. It will be remembered that I or the Liberal party had nothing to say about the appointment of the returning officer or the deputy returning officers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) said there was a recount.

Mr. BRITTON. No. I was going on to say that there was a defect in the law in regard to recount. I think the law should be, and I think it is in fact that any candidate has the right to have a recount even if he is returned.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is only in the local where there is any restriction as to recount.

Mr. BRITTON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) will allow me to make my explanation, he will see the point that I am trying to make. While a recount is open to any candidate, it is contemplated under the law that the only candidate who will apply for a recount is the defeated candidate. As a preliminary to a recount, the candidate who applies for it must deposit $100. At the conclusion of the recount, if the result has not been altered—I do not mean the result as to majority, but if the same person who has been declared elected by the returning officer, is declared elected on the recount by the judge—the person applying for the recount, even though he may be the successful candidate has to pay all the costs. That is objectionable.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He would rather pay it than have the result changed.

Mr. BRITTON. Yes, but a candidate might wish to ascertain, as in our case, what was the cause of there being so many rejected ballots. But the successful candidate was not in a position to look after these ballots or to find out anything about them, unless he was prepared to sacrifice the cost of a recount. In many cases the successful candidate has no object in having a recount unless it is to increase his majority or to gratify his curiosity to see why certain ballots were rejected. But now under section 90 he cannot ascertain that unless he is prepared to pay $100, and not only that, but the costs of his own side as well as the opposition side.

Mr. BRITTON.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I am glad to find that the Solicitor General and the government have come down from the position they took in this Bill wherein they say that the following persons shall be disqualified and incompetent to vote at any Dominion election:

Officers and men under the Militia Act in the permanent force, officers and men of the North-west Mounted Police.

The Solicitor General and the government have once more sounded public opinion. But this is no doubt what the government desired to have done. It embodies their idea of what kind of legislation we should have, and what persons should be disfranchised. And who do they put alongside of them?

Persons disfranchised for corrupt practices, persons disfranchised for taking bribes under section 15.

And so on. I do not think it is necessary to use any argument why officers and men of the permanent force, and officers and men of the North-west Mounted Police should be permitted to vote, because the government are now going to remove the disabilities which they had decided to place upon those men. I hope they will go further in the same direction, and will make such a provision as was suggested in the early part of the session, to enable those who are in South Africa to have their names recorded on the voters' list. I would suggest that the names who are already on the list be continued there notwithstanding their absence. Besides, a good many have become of age within the last six or eight months, many of those who have gone to South Africa, and they should be accorded an opportunity of having their names placed on the list. I would, therefore, call the attention of the Solicitor General to the desirability of making such a provision. A little while ago the Solicitor General, in answering the leader of the opposition, said that this was an Election Act and not a Franchise Act. Well, if it is not a Franchise Act, why does he disfranchise men in it? Would he explain that to the House? He proposed, as I have said, to disfranchise all the men in the permanent corps, and all the men in the North-west Mounted Police. I think that would constitute this a disfranchising Bill. Now, I wish to say with regard to this Bill, and with regard to the previous legislation on the same subject, that it is undoubtedly a retrograde step. It is going backwards in the conduct of elections, and giving control over our franchise to the local legislatures. As has been pointed out in this House, and will be pointed out again, the proposition that a man may have half a dozen votes in one province, and only one in another province, and that for the same parliament, looks so incongruous, so unfair, and so unjust, that we have only to mention it to secure its condemnation by the electorate. Take the last election that was held two or three years ago, that on the plebiscite. In the province of Quebec a voter could vote in half a dozen different constituencies, whereas in the province of Ontario he had only the right to vote once. That is a practical point showing the injustice of the Act. But it is unjust all the way through. We are abdicating some of the important functions that the Confederation Act confers upon us, and we are handing them over to the local legislatures on the plea of economy, or some other plea. It cannot be on any plea of justice or fair-play, because I think that the members of the parliament of Canada are the best qualified to say what the franchise should be for this House, they are the only parties who can make that franchise a uniform one, or as near uniform as possible. It may be said that the last Franchise Act was not uniform. It is true that it was not exactly uniform, but it embodied the principle of uniformity, and where it deviated from that principle, it was because of some practical difficulty. But in this Act there is a deviation in every province, not because of any practical difficulty, but on the pretended plea of economy. You may say that it will work all right while the present government is in power, and while the local legislatures are in sympathy with the present government, and that the Dominion and local legislatures will work hand in glove together. But, Sir, that may not always be the case; in fact the indications just now surrounding us on all sides point to an early change, when not only the Dominion government, but the local government will altogether go Conservative. It looks so much like it on all hands, that I say we have to face that eventually, and in that case the evil that I am now predicting would not be so likely to occur, because the Conservative party, recognizing, as they do, the necessity for a Dominion franchise, would find it to be fair and equitable that they should again adopt a Dominion franchise and have future elections held under some other Act. Difficulties are cropping up; they have had to make amendments to this Act which we will refer to as we proceed, showing the impracticability of the working of the law as laid down by the government of the day. I have no faith that they will do so, but, if they consulted the best interests of the country, if they consulted the interests of the parliament of Canada, they would go back to the old franchise, to the laws that we had enacted which were not perfect in the working out, but which, if the proposal made by the hon. leader of the opposition had been adopted, would have been made most effective and useful legislation, and would have given us a truer index of the will of the electors of the country than could be obtained by any other legislation.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Mr. Chairman, I just desire to say a word or two in reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace). I certainly think that the proposed change particularly in the province of Ontario, to one man one vote, is a most desirable one. We know perfectly well that in the suburbs of Toronto, during the last two or three Dominion elections, there has been any number of faggot votes polled for candidates whose constituencies include those suburbs. I do not wonder that my hon. friend should advocate very strongly the continuation of the Act that contributed very materially to his election in West York by permitting of a dual vote. I dare say that he fears a return to the one man one vote principle. The hon. gentleman complains that under the new law electors in Quebec will not be confined to one vote, while in the province of Ontario they will only have one vote and he cites the case of the plebiscite. If there is any case in which an injustice might have been done it might have happened in connection with the plebiscite, but in connection with a general election it cannot happen for the simple reason that the people of Quebec elect a certain number of representatives fixed by statute. They cannot elect any more and they are not required to elect any less. The people of Quebec know best themselves what franchise to adopt for the election of members of this House. I would like to know what difference it makes to the people of Ontario under what system or method the people of Quebec elect the sixty-five representatives that they send here. We elect in Ontario some ninety members, and the people of Ontario have a right to adopt their own franchise. It is a matter of no concern if we elect a certain specified number of members as to how we elect the number that we send here. As far as that is concerned it makes no difference to Quebec. In the republic to the south of us, where they have 70,000,000 people, each state appoints its own franchise, and it is under that franchise that the president is elected. The United States do not make a franchise of their own.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But they have manhood suffrage.

Mr. McMULLEN. Of course, they have manhood suffrage, but they have their state methods by which the registration is carried out. I look upon it as a desirable thing that we should go back to the system of the provincial franchise. I contend that municipal councils and the men elected by the popular vote of the municipality are in a better position to complete the list of voters of the municipality than a judge or a revising barrister. When hon. gentlemen opposite brought in their election Bill in 1884 they proposed to have revising barristers; they would not even take the judges of the land. My hon. friend characterized it as being absurd and tyrannical when it was proposed to disfranchise the mounted police. Perhaps it was from their standpoint, but when they introduced their franchise Bill they proposed to ignore the judges altogether. They would not take a judge to be a revising barrister; the government would hold it in their own power to say who that revising barrister should be. We fought that, and eventually shamed hon. gentlemen opposite out of it. After three days and three nights' discussion of that point they agreed to come down and appoint judges as revising barristers where they were willing to act, and that a revising barrister should not be appointed except in cases where the judge refused to act or where there was no judge to act. I do not think there is any ground at all for the complaint that the hon. member for West York has made, and I heartily congratulate the government upon the introduction of this Bill. I do not think that there is, at this moment, on the statute-books of Canada, an Act that requires amendment in the direction of purifying our election law more than the Election Act, and I hope now, since we have entered upon the duty of putting through the House a law to cover the irregularities that have taken place under the application of the old Act, we will unite in trying to remove all the objectionable features of the old law, and that we will put the law in such a shape that every man who is returned to the House will be returned by an honest ballot of the electorate without corruption or fraud in so far as it is possible to protect the people against corruption and fraud.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I want to ask the attention of the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) for one moment to a point in the dealing with which he will perhaps find some difficulty, but, which, if not remedied, will work a good deal of hardship under the local franchise law. The object of the franchise in the province of Ontario is to give every citizen, not specially disqualified, a voice at the polls, but in the working out of the Act, that is not done. The hon. gentleman knows that when the voter goes to the poll the test oath may be put to him as to his residence, and if he is not resident in the constituency where his name is upon the list and where he seeks to vote, he cannot take the oath and consequently cannot vote. What I would suggest to the hon. Solicitor General is that he would look into the question as to whether he cannot produce some clause which will enable a man either to vote in the constituency where he is upon the lists and from which he has removed, or permit him to transfer his franchise to the constituency to which he has removed. I have an instance in the section of the country from which the hon. the Speaker and myself come. A gentleman owning 200 acres of land in my riding was placed upon the local voters' list. He purchased another 200 acres of land in South Wentworth, still holding the 200 acres of land in my constituency. His name was on the list in the constituency of Haldimand and not upon the list, and he has no means of getting it upon the list of the constituency of South Wentworth. When he came to the constituency of Haldimand, to vote in the local elections, he was, of course, unable to take the oath as to residence, and he was refused the right to vote. That surely is not the intention of the Act. The intention is to give every man the right to speak once at the polls as regards public affairs, but to refuse him the right to speak more than once. The instance I have given is only an example of thousands of instances which might be referred to in the province at large. I was proceeding to say that I recognize there is some difficulty in dealing with the point, but, nevertheless, the government will see that it is a point which ought to be dealt with if possible. There is no reason why any man, and especially a man with large property interests, who happens to remove from the riding in which he was placed on the list, should be refused the right to express his opinion on public affairs at the polls. Yet, under the Act as at present operating in Ontario, he might be owner of half the county for which he was then on the list, and if he removed to another county before the election, he has no right to exercise his vote at all. That is a thing which will disfranchise a number of high-class electors, because they are usually high-class men who own property in one riding and then buy property in another riding. I am sure the Solicitor General does not want to disfranchise these men.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the effect under the provincial Act?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, and you are adopting the provincial Act.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). Before we consider the Bill, I would ask the Solicitor General if he does not think it advisable, that while he is amending the Election Act he should also amend the Controverted Elections Act, because, however severe the provisions of the electoral law may be, if it is possible to pair one controverted election with another, or to 'saw-off' as is generally said, I think the provisions of the electoral law will be nullified. The difficulty that was found in the province of Quebec in carrying out the law that was passed there—and the provisions of which are contained in the amendments I propose to the House—the difficulty was found in the fact that we have no public prosecutor as they have in England. In England the public prosecutor attends all election trials, and ex-officio he takes up the prosecution of any of the offences against the election law. I would suggest, first: That the Controverted Elections Act be amended, and second, if it be found possible, to have such an officer as in England is designated the public prosecutor. Under the Act of 1895, in the province of Quebec, amending the Controverted Elections Act, no petitioner can discontinue an election protest without taking the following oath:

I (description of the petitioner or one of the petitioners), being duly sworn, depose and say:

That in discontinuing the election petition (or the proceeding, as the case may be)—(describe the petition by the names of the parties, the number and date)—I do not act in collusion with the defendant, or with any other person for him or in his interest; nor on account of any undertaking or agreement, express or implied, with the respondent, or with any person representing or acting for him or in his interest; nor on account of any promise, agreement or undertaking, express or implied, by reason whereof I have received, or shall or may receive, any gift, sum of money, reward, profit or advantage whatever; nor on account of any agreement or understanding, express or implied, by reason whereof any election petition that is now pending, or which is to be taken, or any judicial proceeding whatever now pending or to be taken, will be discontinued, abandoned or suspended;

That the only reason for my discontinuing the said petition (or proceeding) is that, after having personally made all possible efforts, I was unable to find and procure proof of the facts alleged in the said petition (or proceeding), and that the efforts that I made to find and procure the said proof are the following: (describe here in detail all steps taken and the means employed);

That, in discontinuing the said petition (or proceeding), I do not act in any way to favour the respondent, but solely in the interests of justice and truth.

No election petition, or proceeding in an election petition, could be discontinued without the following oath being taken:

No election petition or essential proceeding therein, which, being dismissed, would cause the petition to fail, shall be dismissed by the court or judge, nor taken under advisement, unless the petitioner or petitioners have produced, before the hearing, an affidavit in the following terms:

I (description of the petitioner or one of the petitioners), being duly sworn, depose and say:

That in the prosecution, conduct and trial of the present election petition (or proceeding, as the case may be), I made all diligence in my power to discover and adduce evidence of the corrupt practices alleged in the petition and in the bill of particulars; that I have not acted and do not act in collusion with the respondent, or with any person on his behalf, or in his interest, to shield him from the penalties against him by law enacted, or to favour him in any way whatever, or to maintain his election; that I have taken no part in and have no knowledge of any agreement or understanding, express or implied, by reason whereof the present petition (or proceeding) should be withdrawn, abandoned or dismissed for want of proof or otherwise; that I exerted all my efforts to have the respondent condemned and his election set aside, and that, in the prosecution, conduct and trial of the said petition (or proceeding), I acted in good faith, without fraud or collusion, and in the sole interests of justice and truth.

No petition can be dismissed or discontinued by the judge without that affidavit appearing in the record. Moreover, if an election was controverted the member who was elected, or supposed to be elected, could not take his seat in the assembly without subscribing to and filing with the clerk of the House, the following affidavit, which was immediately transmitted to the court before which the election petition was pending:

I swear that, in the organization, conduct and holding of the election, by which I became a member of the legislative assembly of Quebec, I did not knowingly commit any corrupt practice prohibited by the Quebec Election Act, 1895, nor given my consent to the commission of any such practice by any of my agents or by any person whomsoever, in my behalf, nor personally participate in any such practice; that I have done nothing to delay the trial or hearing of the election petition now pending against me; that I have not entered upon, commenced or concluded any agreement or bargain, express or implied, by reason whereof the said election petition should be abandoned, suspended or settled in any way whatever, and that the trial and hearing of the said petition follow the ordinary course of law.

If it was afterwards found, upon the oath of two persons, that this candidate or member elected had committed any of the offences enumerated in the election law, he was disqualified for five years. I do not say that these are the best provisions that can be made to prevent the sawing-off of election protests, but, it seems to me, that in order to put this Act of the Solicitor General into proper shape for operating it, some provisions should be made on the lines I have indicated.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) will realize that it is not possible to prepare an amendment to the Controverted Elections Act until such time as we have this Act in reference to elections passed. The amendment of the Controverted Elections Act will depend, to a large extent, upon the amendments of the Elections Act, which we are now called upon to consider. Dealing with the Act which my hon. friend from Montmorency introduced into the Quebec legislature, I may say that the last general election was held under the election law, which contains very stringent provisions against bribery and other corrupt practices, and yet it is not within my knowledge that any elections were voided; so that in the province of Quebec either the elections have been carried on in such a manner as to be free from reproach, or the stringent provisions of my hon. friend's Bill had not much effect.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am convinced that there was less corruption in the general elections of 1897 than there has been for a long time. I may give an instance. In my own county, all I spent during the whole time the election lasted, including cab hire, &c., was $24. I can only say that there was a vast difference between that sum and the sums I had to spend in other counties on other occasions.

Mr. INGRAM. The law should be amended in some way to prevent a combination of men meeting at a central point and entering protests promiscuously against different candidates, for the purpose of trading off, or making a speculation. I think the law should provide that the only person who could enter a protest, would be the defeated candidate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That would be to provide against an impossible condition of things.

On section 6,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the reason there is a separate provision with respect to a member of a provincial legislature who is disqualified, which does not appear to apply to others? I imagine there is some good reason, because this provision is contained in the present Act, but it does not occur to me off-hand, why there should be such a distinction.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It does not occur to me either.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The reason of the section will be seen in the last words of it. The question arose, I think, in connection with the election for Queen's County, P.E.I., some years ago, and I think the clause was inserted in consequence of that. The sheriff made a double return of Mr. Macdonald and Dr. Robertson. The one who had received the highest number of votes was a member of the local legislature. The sheriff did not know whether he was disqualified or not, and he returned both, and this House passed upon the question. The idea of this is to enable the returning officer to ignore the votes polled for a man who was a member of the local legislature, and to return the other man, although he received a minority vote. Otherwise the question might come up whether there should not be a new election altogether.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There would be some danger in this. For instance, suppose a man had been guilty of some corrupt practice and had received the largest number of votes, it would then rest with the returning officer to decide sometimes a question of law as to whether this was one of the corrupt practices which the law provided for, whilst in the case of a member of the legislative assembly there could be no doubt as to his being a member of such assembly. The returning officer would have nothing to decide, but would simply take a record of the facts, and proclaim the minority candidate elected. But, if he had to decide that in a certain case the majority candidate had been guilty of corrupt practices, he would be acting in a judicial capacity. That is, no doubt, the reason for the distinction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see why a person disqualified by sections 9 and 10, by reasons of his holding certain offices of emolument, should be in a different position from a man who is a member of the provincial legislature. A sheriff may have personal knowledge of the fact that one of the candidates is a member of the provincial legislature, but he might equally have the same knowledge with respect to some of the matters contained in subsection b, and we should be consistent. If we are going to permit a sheriff to make a finding of the fact that a candidate is a member of the provincial legislature, surely he ought to be able to make a finding of the fact that the candidate holds a public office. The one is as publicly known as the other.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The criticism of the hon. member for Montmorency is very strong. The holding of an office of emolument under the Crown by a candidate, or his being interested in a contract given by the Crown, would be a matter sometimes difficult to decide. But, being a member of the provincial legislature is such a notorious fact that the sheriff might well be permitted to take judicial notice of it. Everybody knows if a man is a member of the local legislature, but everybody cannot say whether he is holding an office of emolument under the Crown or not.

It being six o'clock, the committee took recess.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in Committee.)

On clause 6,

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). It seems to me that clause 6 is scarcely as definite as it ought to be, inasmuch as it leaves great doubt as to who shall determine whether a candidate is a member of the local legislature or not. It says :

If a member of a provincial legislature, notwithstanding his disqualification, as in the next preceding section mentioned, receives the majority of votes at an election, such majority of votes shall be thrown away, and the returning officer shall return the person having the next greatest number of votes, provided he is otherwise eligible.

I can conceive that a returning officer would be at a loss to know whether a member of the local legislature had resigned or not. Hon. members will recall a case that occurred in the province of Ontario. Mr. Conmee, who was a member of the local legislature, handed his resignation to his solicitor, when he prepared to contest a riding for this parliament in 1896. His solicitor, instead of handing his resignation to the Speaker of the legislature, retained it until after the elections were over, and then returned it to Mr. Conmee, who was defeated in the contest for a seat in this House. Now, had Mr. Conmee been elected, his resignation would have found its way into the hands of the Speaker of the legislature, and he would have been held to have resigned as a member of the legislature, and would, no doubt, have been declared elected to this House. It seems to me the section should be so arranged that there would be no possible doubt as to whether a man had resigned his seat in the legislature or not, in fact that some evidence should be produced to the returning officer at the time of nomination, by any candidate who holds a seat in the local legislature, to show conclusively that he has resigned that seat. I hope the Solicitor General will so frame the law as to make it impossible for such a case as that I have referred to to arise again. I do not claim to be able to suggest the necessary words, but it seems to me that it ought to be possible to amend the clause, for instance, so as to make it necessary for a candidate who is a member of the local legislature to place in the hands of the returning officer a certificate from the Speaker, that he has resigned his seat in that House.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot conceive of any form of clause that would serve the purpose better than the one we have. The fact that a member of the local legislature has been declared elected by the returning officer, does not finally settle the question, it can still be disposed of by the courts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If a deputy minister, collector of customs, or other well known officer, who is disqualified, were to become a candidate, and receive the majority of votes, it would still be necessary for the returning officer to return him, but it would be possible to unseat him by an election petition. It seems strange that in case of a member of the provincial legislature, the returning officer should be authorized to adjudicate on the question of fact. I think it would be better not to give this power to the returning officer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think we could overcome the difficulty, by amending the first clause of section 6, so as to read :

If a person declared ineligible by paragraph (a) or (b) of the next preceding section or a member of the local legislature is returned as a member, his election and return shall be null and void.

—and then take out the second paragraph of this clause. Because, if you allow the second paragraph to remain as it is, the same difficulty may present itself. For instance, how is the returning officer to judge whether or not the resignation of a member of the provincial parliament has been made according to law? Some returning officers have sufficient knowledge to enable them to judge of the validity of a resignation, but others have not. I believe that in all the provinces, it is required, as it is by our Act, that a resignation should be signed and sealed. Perhaps the seal may not be affixed. But you leave the returning officer to judge of that matter, which, properly, comes within the purview of the courts of law.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). Under the amendment, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) suggests, the same difficulty would arise—for the returning officer must return somebody.

Mr. CASGRAIN. He would return the man having the highest number of votes.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). But if there was only the first part of the section, he would return a man who was disqualified. It seems simply a choice of evils.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is an inconvenience either way. But what we are striving to do, is to get the best clause, and the one under which the least difficulty would arise. You would leave it to the courts then to decide whether the resignation is really a valid resignation, as in the case of a man who is disqualified under subsections a and b.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). You would have to go to the court in the same way if the return is made, so there must be some way for making a return. It would amount to the same thing if, under the first, you had to go to the court and find out if the second was not here in the return.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would ask my hon. friends to consider, in connection with this clause, section 2 of chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. This clause is new in the Election Act. It has been taken from section 2, chapter 13, that we have had for many years. Section 2 reads :

If any member of a provincial legislature, notwithstanding his disqualification, as in the next preceding section hereof mentioned, receives a majority of votes at any such election, such majority of votes shall be thrown away, and the returning officer shall return the person having the next greatest number of votes, provided he is otherwise eligible.

This is simply adopting the law that we have had for the last twenty years ; therefore, I feel some reluctance to make an amendment off-hand without carefully considering the reasons for it. I prefer myself to stand in the ancient ways as far as possible, unless some good reason is pointed out for a change. Persons who are disqualified under subsections b and c, if they are returned, their election shall be null and void.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). In 1887 we had an instance of that in the North-west Territories where a person who was ineligible, ran. Suppose he had been elected, somebody would have been put to the trouble of taking steps to unseat him, that is, if the returning officer had declared him elected. He was a member of the legislature.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In that case the law says the returning officer could not have declared him elected, he would have had to declare the other candidate elected.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I think the difficulty might be got over by adding to section 4, this clause :

The nomination of any person who at such time is a member of any provincial legislature, shall not be received until the party so offering himself shall have filed with the returning officer a certificate from the Speaker of the local legislature that he has resigned his seat.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That would lead up to the difficulty that occurred in the Baird case, that is to say, the returning officer would be required to pass upon the validity of the resignation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Further than that, you would be interfering with the mode of resignation in a provincial legislature. It would be better to leave as little as possible to the returning officer except as to questions of fact.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We will let that clause stand.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough).

On section 9,

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think if some of my amendments are adopted this section will have to be amended. I propose to ask the House to amend the Bill in this way : That if temporary works are commenced during an election with the intent to get those who are working to vote for a certain candidate, they shall be deprived of their vote. If my amendment passes, this section will have to be amended so as to include these persons also. We do not yet know the number of the clause.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As I am allowing other sections to stand, I see no reason why this should not stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it the intention that persons disfranchised for taking bribes or for bribing in the local elections, should be disqualified from voting in Dominion elections ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not in my mind at the present time any provision which would be applicable to such a case as my hon. friend refers to.

On section 11,

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does not my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) think that it would be well, as far as possible, to appoint as returning officers men who occupy official positions ? I think there is more security in it. In the Act in Quebec we provided that registrars, sheriffs, prothonotaries and clerks of courts should be appointed returning officers. It seems to me that the public would have more security if public officers were appointed returning officers instead of having anybody that the government may choose to appoint. Of course, a public officer has a reputation at stake, and also his office, and therefore he is less liable to commit any frauds, or misfeasance of office, or any other act which is derogatory to himself personally, or in contravention of the law. This is merely a suggestion. I am not prepared to say that it should be adopted, because I am aware that in many parts of Canada it would be difficult to find, in all the constituencies, such men to act. I would suggest that as far as possible these persons should be selected. I think it has worked well in the election of members to the local legislature. I might say that the clause did not come up in the original Bill, but I accepted an amendment from the opposition at the time.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I appreciate what my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) says, but I would like to draw attention to the fact that we are now dealing with this amended Act on the assumption that we are going to adopt, as much as possible, the old law, and the old law provides for the issue of the writ to the persons mentioned here. It says the writ is to be addressed to such person as the Governor in Council may select.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Of course, as we are consolidating the law, it seems to me that if we find something in the law which existed in the old law and which we did not consider to be absolutely correct we could amend it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I quite agree.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is no prescription which will bind us to accept the old law.

Mr. J. G. RUTHERFORD (Macdonald). I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) as to the necessity of having reliable men to act as returning officers. Of course, in some parts of Canada, it would be difficult to find, in every constituency, an official such as he mentions, but there is one amendment I would like to see introduced into this law regarding returning officers. I would like to see some provision in the Act whereby returning officers would be compelled to give bonds for the payment of deputy returning officers and others. I am sure there is hardly a member of this House who has not suffered an endless amount of inconvenience and trouble owing to the failure of returning officers to properly make these payments. I think it is nothing short of a disgrace that a public officer, acting under the Crown, as a returning officer does in elections, should act as many of them do. Not all; I do not mean for a moment to say that there are not many returning officers who act in an honourable and creditable way. But there are numerous instances of returning officers who have failed to pay their accounts, and who have brought the Crown and the government into disrepute, besides causing an immense amount of annoyance. I am in earnest about this matter and I would ask the government to make some provision whereby returning officers could be compelled to act decently and honestly towards those that they employ.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I would also suggest, in the matter of deputy returning officers, that the various municipal clerks ought to be, by virtue of their positions, deputy returning officers.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I would suggest that what has been said by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) as to the appointing of returning officers should be carefully considered. I know, during the past ten years, where men were appointed who could not pay a dollar, and who squandered the money supplied to them by the government before the election was over. In local elections in Nova Scotia we always appoint sheriffs, and everybody has confidence in them. But, in place of these officers, during the last two elections, any person has been appointed. In my county a man was appointed against whom six judgments were obtained at the instance of the Crown, and who had been in jail six months previously for fraud. He was appointed to hold the election in my district. I had obtained a judgment against him, and he wrote me a letter beforehand in which he boldly made the statement that if I could clear him from the judgment he would see to it that he would make the district right for me.

Mr. A. A. C. LARIVIERE (Provencher). I would suggest that the simplest way is for the government to pay direct to the respective people their accounts. Instead of issuing one cheque to the returning officer the government should issue a cheque to the different individuals who are entitled to receive the money.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I may say that I have made provision for an amendment of the law which will enable us, I think, to reach the returning officer who fails to account for the moneys he may receive. I will take occasion to deal with that amendment when we reach section 148. The provision will be made there to render the returning officer who receives money for disbursement in the election liable to section 66 of the Audit Act, and section 66 of the Audit Act provides that if he fails to distribute the money as he is instructed to do he will be liable criminally.

Mr. LARIVIERE. When the account has been audited in Ottawa by the Auditor General it is returned to the returning officer, and he alone knows the amount which is allotted the respective parties. He only pays the deputy returning officers, and the other officers whatever sum he thinks proper and pockets the rest. They do not know anything about the account. It will be a little more trouble, but it would give better satisfaction if the government, after the account had been audited, would issue cheques to the respective parties in detail for the amount that each individual is entitled to receive and forward them to these individuals. The returning officer would only get his own share.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That point will come up when we reach section 148. I have an amendment prepared for the express purpose of meeting the difficulty which has been pointed out. If the amendment does not go far enough I am in the hands of the House. I may mention that the amendment I have has been prepared by the Auditor General for the purpose of meeting this difficulty, and in view of the experience we have had as a result of the last general elections it is thought to be necessary that some change should be made.

On section 12,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The only change here is in the last clause which adds an additional disqualification. Any person who has been proceeded against under the Criminal Code is disqualified from acting as a returning officer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does not my hon. friend think that goes a little far? It says:

Persons who have been convicted of an offence under the provisions of the Criminal Code, 1892, or any amendment thereof.

Suppose that a man in the heat of passion, strikes another and is guilty of assault and battery, or of common assault and is convicted under the Criminal Code, I think it is rather hard to say that he is disqualified from acting as a returning officer. Could not my hon. friend replace that subsection by one which would provide that if a man has been convicted of an offence for which the penalty is two years imprisonment, he would be disqualified.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would be better to proceed in this way. Any one found guilty of an offence under special sections of the Criminal Code. The intention is to prevent people with bad records being appointed to these offices.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There are offences in the Criminal Code which should not prevent a man holding an electoral office. He might have been technically guilty of an assault and convicted and fined 25 cents, and that offence should not debar him from acting as returning officer.

Mr. INGRAM. Section 540 of the Criminal Code deals with bribery, undue influence, personation or other corrupt practices, and I notice that the amendments to the Criminal Code are only to take effect on 1st January next. But if this Bill becomes law, it will take effect immediately, and how will you harmonize the two?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If we create a criminal offence by this Bill, the criminal court can take cognizance of it just the same as if it were in the Criminal Code.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. We are proceeding on the Criminal Code of 1892, but if a man had committed an offence in 1891, no matter how great, that would render him ineligible. The man who committed a criminal offence after the Criminal Code came into force would be ineligible to act as returning officer, but not one who had committed an equally serious offence before that code came into force.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is something in the hon. gentleman's objection that we must begin somewhere.

Mr. H. CARGILL (East Bruce). I would like to know why we prohibit ministers, priests, or ecclesiastics of any religious faith or worship from being returning officers? I think that in view of the ballot stuffing and other frauds perpetrated during the recent elections, it would be advisable, for the proper conduct of elections, to appoint such men.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am afraid I must retort by suggesting that as my hon. friend has been in this House very much longer than I, he might explain how it came to pass that this has been the law for so many years?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that what the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) has suggested, has really some point, and his objection could be met by a section framed in this way:

Persons who have been convicted of an offence under the provisions of the Criminal Code or of any offence that would be punishable under the Criminal Code of 1892.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I thought it was understood that we would allow this paragraph to stand.

Section 12 allowed to stand.

On section 14,

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that this section is rather indefinite. It provides that town clerks shall be obliged to act as election officers, &c. But in Ontario, the expression 'town clerk' means the clerk of an incorporated town. A municipal clerk would not come under that description, and municipal clerks are the best fitted persons to act as deputy returning officers. They make out the lists and are really trained officers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They may act.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, but if we can compel town clerks to act, there is no reason why we should not compel municipal clerks to act. They should be included in the list of persons who cannot refuse to act if called upon.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There will be no objection to adopting my hon. friend's suggestion, and make it town clerk or clerk of municipality, but perhaps we had better allow the section to stand so that I may have an amendment drafted to meet the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. INGRAM. I think the Ontario Act provides that the municipal clerk shall act as returning officer.

On section 18,

Mr. BENNETT. I think this is an objectionable clause. While a thoroughly responsible man might be appointed returning officer, he might appoint as clerk a person not so trustworthy and reliable; and by an arrangement between the two, the returning officer might divest himself of his duties and relegate them to the other party. Would it not be better to strike this out, and rest on clause 11, which provides that the person to whom a writ is issued shall act as returning officer, and in the event of his refusing or being unable to act, the government may appoint another person?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This has been the law since 37 Victoria, and it is not within my knowledge that any inconvenience has resulted from it.

Mr. INGRAM. That is no reason why we should not change it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think before we change it, hon. gentlemen ought to be able to point out an instance in which some inconvenience has resulted from its operation.

Mr. INGRAM. The same rule applies to the returning officer as to the deputy returning officer; and in West Elgin, a deputy returning officer who was supplied with a ballot box and all the paraphernalia for the election went to the polling booth on election day, and put them in the hands of a stranger, and played off sick. A section like that might be abused in the same way.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The objection seems to be that the returning officer might appoint as election clerk an objectionable person. Suppose the clause were amended by providing that the election clerk must be one of the persons qualified to act as returning officer.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That might make it absolutely inoperative. There might be some difficulty in getting another person.

Mr. BENNETT. While the government might in the first instance appoint a thoroughly responsible returning officer, he might by a concerted plan drop out and transfer his duties to a thoroughly unreliable person who would be objectionable to all concerned. If this clause were struck out, then in the event of the returning officer failing to act, the power would remain with the government to appoint a new man.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). An honest returning officer will appoint an honest clerk.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman mentioned a dishonest returning officer a short time ago.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). You cannot have a law to meet a special case. I do not think you should anticipate that returning officers are going to act dishonestly. The case I mentioned was not that of a clerk at all, but a deputy returning officer. I never knew a case in which a returning officer did not appoint an honest clerk.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If the conditions were such that it were possible to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), there might be something to be said in favour of it. The election clerk is called upon to replace the returning officer in cases of emergency, such as sickness or sudden death on the eve or on the very day of the election, when it would not be possible for the government to appoint another returning officer.

Mr. BENNETT. Then let the government appoint both officers at the outset.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think what I said a moment ago would apply here. This has been the law for a number of years, and I think my hon. friends have failed to point out a single instance in which it has failed to effect its object.

Mr. INGRAM. I pointed out a case a while ago.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That was a deputy returning officer.

Mr. INGRAM. But the same thing applies to returning officers. How are the election clerks appointed? On the recommendation of the supporters of the government in the constituency; and what is to prevent him recommending some one who would not be acceptable to the opposite party?

Mr. BENNETT. Why not provide that in the writ the election clerk shall be named as well as the returning officer? This would make the government responsible for the appointment of both.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I think there would be great danger in preventing a returning officer choosing his own clerk. In the province of Quebec, the returning officers are guided only by their own judgment in choosing clerks, and I think if you allow the government to impose on the returning officer a clerk of whom he does not approve you are likely to cause trouble.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the only thing you could do would be to provide at the end of the section, that wherever practicable, should the returning officer become disqualified or fail to act, the government should appoint another returning officer.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the law was fairly well framed, and we had better follow it, unless there is some special reason for a change.

On section 20.

Mr. INGRAM. There ought to be imprisonment added to the penalty here. What is the use of a penalty of dollars and cents in the case of these people? They do not consider it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will bear in mind that in subsequent sections of the Bill we make special provision for deputy returning officers who are guilty of special infractions of the law. This covers merely general misfeasance or omissions and the penalty seems sufficient.

On section 21,

Mr. INGRAM. This section is not clear enough. We want to prevent such things as took place in East Middlesex, where they ran short of ballots during the election day—as a matter of fact, they had to have the election on the following day. It may come in better on a later section of the Bill, but we should provide that such inspection should be allowed as will offer an opportunity to point out a possible shortage of ballots, so that a sufficient supply may be brought in.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We will consider that section when we come to it.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN (P.E.I.) In portions of Canada where there are voters' lists, this portion of the section would apply, but special provision should be made for Prince Edward Island. I propose to amend this section by inserting after the words 'one copy of this Act,' 'and, in Prince Edward Island, one copy of the Franchise Act of 1898.' The reason for that is that the qualification of electors in Prince Edward Island is decided on polling day, and, to have the qualifications decided, you must have the Franchise Act in the hands of the returning officers. Then, in lines 43, 44 and 45, after 'such instructions by the Governor in Council as are required to carry out the election according to the provisions of this Act.' I propose to add 'such instructions in Prince Edward Island to contain such sections of the provincial law as relate to the qualification of voters and the oaths required to be taken by sections 65, 66 and 67 of this Act, having been made applicable to the elections being held.' Go on a little further to line 50:

A sufficient number of blank poll books and all the blank forms necessary for the purposes of such election.

Insert the following:

Such notice or advertisements regarding the qualification of voters as require to be posted under the provincial law.

If the hon. gentleman will turn to the local statutes of Prince Edward Island he will see there is an election poll notice required to be posted in the neighbourhood of the polling booth. I think this is very necessary, as the qualification is decided on election day. Turn to 56 Victoria, chapter 1, and you will see the qualification of every voter is to be posted up. The voter has the advantage of seeing that notice, and knows how his vote stands. In Prince Edward Island then, all elections will be carried on as in the local elections, the only difference being that one is a vote by ballot and the other an open vote. I know the Solicitor General has amended the Bill in some respects to meet the case of Prince Edward Island, but this is an important omission. I beg leave to move the amendment.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As the suggested amendments have reference to the Island of Prince Edward with the local laws, of which I am not familiar, I would invite my hon. friend to allow this clause to stand, and when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is here, who is better acquainted with those laws than I am, we can discuss his amendments.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). In line 44 it says only one copy of this Act should be sent to a returning officer, and also that one copy shall be furnished for every polling subdivision. These copies that are given for the polling subdivisions are to be kept by the returning officer until the night before election. Therefore, there will only be one copy in the returning officer's hands that will be available. The election will probably follow in a few months after this law is passed, and the amendments will not be generally known, and it will be impossible to procure copies of this Act. That difficulty has arisen before, and I think it could be provided against in this section.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think there will be any difficulty about getting copies of the Act. I presume immediately the Act is passed it will be convenient to have it reprinted together with the Franchise Act for the purpose of distribution. I am sure there will be enough copies of the Act available to meet the difficulty suggested by the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee).

On section 22,

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the Solicitor General what is contemplated by this clause? In the preceding clause the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery at Ottawa supplies the printed lists, which are prepared at the Printing Bureau. Now, this clause refers to the procuring of such provincial voters' lists which, in the province of Ontario, would be from the clerks of the peace. Now, is there to be an option exercised by the department, that they might supply the returning officer for a riding with printed lists from here, or on the other hand, they might direct that he should obtain his lists from the county authorities?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The returning officer is obliged to obtain the list from the officials who are the legal custodians.

Mr. BENNETT. But in the preceding clause it is pointed out that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of voters' lists, those are the lists that are printed here at the Bureau. Now, what is contemplated by this clause? Does it give an option that instead of forwarding printed lists from here, recourse may be had to these lists that are to be found in the office of the provincial authorities?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. For the purpose of a Dominion election, the certified copy which is in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, is the list. He is the legal custodian of it. Look at paragraph 10 of the Franchise Act, and he will find that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has a copy. The list which has reached the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is the copy which is in possession of the legal custodian, copies of which are to be taken by the returning officer.

Mr. BENNETT. Assuming that the returning officer in my riding had not had sent him, under clause 21, copies of the printed list issued from the Printing Bureau, what would he do? Turning to section 22, he would have received the writ for the election, and he then would have to apply to the legal custodian for such provincial lists. Does that not follow by the reading of this clause 22?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think not. If there is any doubt about that we will let the clause stand for the purpose of considering it. We ought not to allow any doubt to exist on an important matter of that sort.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems to me plain that if the writ is received by the returning officer, and it is not accompanied with the printed voters' list, transmitted from Ottawa, then under section 22 it devolves upon him to apply to the local custodian for such provincial voters' lists as may be in his office. Is that not correct?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. That is a point that should be avoided. The whole stability under the Franchise Act, as we contend, was that the lists should be printed and not the mutilated lists that are in the hands of the clerk of the peace.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The legal custodian referred to in section 22, cannot be the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, because if you look at subsection 2, you will find that it indicates he is not.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In the province of Quebec, the municipal council of each county is obliged, when it makes a list, to divide the municipality into polling divisions, which shall not contain more than 200 votes. I take it that in some provinces this is not provided for, and I would like to know where this Bill provides for the division of the constituency into polling divisions.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think section 23 provides for that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me that section 23 leaves too much discretion in the hands of the returning officer, in dividing up these polling divisions. We should provide here that not more than 200 or 300 electors can be comprised within one polling subdivision.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would not object to that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I wish to call the attention of the Solicitor General to another matter which I would like him to take a note of. There may be some electors whose names by error, are not mentioned in the list, which are forwarded by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. There may be a misprint.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That might happen.

Mr. CASGRAIN. At the last election in Sherbrooke, some twenty prominent citizens could not vote because their names were not upon the list which had been transmitted to the returning officer by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, although their names were upon the official list in the hands of the clerk of the city. It seems to me that some provision should be made in the Franchise Act, so as to remedy this grievance.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I would point out to the Solicitor General the danger arising from the word 'extract' in this section, and I would like to know what is the object of providing for an extract of the voters' list. In every case in Ontario, we have a certified list, and that being so, why should any provision be made for taking extracts from it? Now, we have in the province of Ontario, practically three legal custodians of the voters' lists, namely, the county judge, the clerk of the peace, and the clerk of the municipality; and here the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery may be the legal custodian to some extent. It is, therefore, a difficult matter to decide who may be the legal custodian for the time being. I wish to have it made perfectly clear in this law, that in the transcribing of lists or otherwise, there shall be no error, and that nothing but the legal lists shall be in the hands of the returning officer. I do not know what extracts from the list should be provided for, and why that uncertainty should be brought into the law.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You may have in your province as we have in our province, an electoral district with a different boundary in the federal from that in the local election. You would require then to take from that list an extract to make it applicable to the portion which would be in the other constituency. Quebec West for federal purposes extends into the county of Quebec, and it would be necessary to take out of the list for Quebec West, a certain portion of the voters in the county of Quebec for federal elections.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is sacrificing the whole Bill to meet the case he has pointed out. In the province of Ontario, no matter how much a county may be divided, it is supposed that in no case shall the municipalities be divided. When the lists, therefore, are intact for the municipality, the certified lists, and not copies thereof or extracts, are what are needed. There may be the case the hon. gentleman points out, but I am afraid it leads to great difficulties.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are fifty cases in Quebec, and I venture to say there are almost as many in Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. Will my hon. friend point out one?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Take the case of Elgin.

Mr. CLANCY. There is registration in the city, and it would not affect that in the least.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice the following section in the Franchise Act, and I suppose this is the reason why it is in the Election Act. Section 13 of the Franchise Act says:

Section 13 of the said Act, as amended by section 1 of chapter 19 of the Statutes of 1891, is hereby repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:

13. Forthwith after the receipt of the writ for a Dominion election, the returning officer shall obtain from the officers who are the legal custodians thereof, or of duly certified duplicates, or copies thereof, such provincial voters' lists or such certified copies thereof or extracts therefrom, and such certified copies of by-laws, orders, proclamations or other documents or proceedings defining the several provincial polling divisions situate either wholly or partially within the territory comprised in the electoral district for which such election is to be held as are necessary, or as he deems necessary, to the performance of his duties as returning officer; and every such officer who omits or refuses to furnish within a reasonable time any such—

And so on, is subject to a certain penalty. I suppose that this is the reason why this section is put into the Election Act?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is a necessity.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for Montmorency draws your attention to certain facts in the province of Quebec in respect to 200 voters' lists in a polling subdivision.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That would come in under the next section. I think we had better let this clause stand because we had better make it absolutely clear as to what is the meaning of the words 'legal custodian.'

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). It seems to me a difficult task to make it clear. The difficulty arises from mixing up provincial with federal law. We are taking lists that we do not prepare and with the preparation of which we have nothing to do. It requires a great deal of care, and I confess that I cannot understand what section 22 does mean. It seems to me to be wide and broad enough to cover every possible case. In Ontario, I have no doubt, it is as complicated as it is in Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is not complicated in Quebec at all.

Mr. TISDALE. It is complicated in the way that the hon. gentleman speaks of.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What is the difficulty?

Mr. TISDALE. One of the main difficulties is in regard to the instance that the hon. Solicitor General pointed out. He says that they must have extracts in some cases because one list sometimes covers a provincial election in one case and a federal election in another. The case the hon. gentleman mentioned was that of Quebec city and the county of Quebec. The returning officer may have to take a part of the list, and therefore the returning officer becomes authorized to get these extracts. In other words, in a case of that sort he must, in some way or other, get from the officer not a copy of the list which has been passed and which has been capable of being contested on both sides, but an extract, and the only safety we have is that the officer, the legal custodian, whoever he may be, certifies to the extract. It has never been passed upon by a judge; there has been no chance of appeal or anything else. It is a material matter that I do not see how any legislation can correct unless there is some officer who is authorized to make that extract, and there is chance to appeal from it. But, you cannot do that because there would not be time. This placing of the franchise under provincial law is full of such cases as this. It takes us back to the old question. Here is one of those difficulties that was the cause of one of the objections from this side of the House, to attempting to apply to the federal parliament the acts of others and to be controlled by them in the settling of their vote. Now a case confronts us, according to the hon. gentleman's own showing, in which we have to rely upon a provincial officer to make part of a list without appeal. Suppose he certifies it wrongly there is no remedy.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. When we adopted the Franchise Act last session I understood that the lists would be printed at Ottawa under the supervision of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and that a compilation of these odd lists or parts of lists, was to be prepared by himself, that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery would be responsible for the legal list for each electoral district. There are cases in my own provinces too where the limits of the local electoral divisions and of those for federal purposes are not coterminous, and, therefore, it will be the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to take from one list and another the necessary number of names to make the list for each electoral district. If the lists for the electoral districts are so prepared by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and are printed here as official lists, I do not see the necessity of making a provision for the returning officer to apply elsewhere for legal or proper lists. I think the returning officer should look to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the lists, and that he only should be the custodian of the lists of each electoral district. I do not know why there should be any provision to go outside of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. INGRAM. I can quite understand the difficulties you are going to run up against in framing a Bill of this kind. In the city of London, Ontario, they have a system of registration. If the list is not more than twelve months old at the time that list will be in the Printing Bureau, and it will be the legal list for the city of London. Registration applies there, but a portion of the city of London, known as East London, is in the constituency of the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmore). In order to get the list for East Middlesex the returning officer would have to take a portion of the registration list of the city of London, and take from that the portion which belongs to the constituency of East Middlesex. In that case he would have to make an extract from the registration list of London. I have no doubt that cases of that kind will be met in other constituencies which include a portion of a city. Take East York, for instance. St. Matthew's ward, one of the several wards of the city of Toronto, belongs to East York. There is no registration in East York, but so far as the city of Toronto is concerned, registration applies to the whole city. There is another instance where you will have to take these extracts from this portion of Toronto and add them to the list for East York. The same applies in West York. All these difficulties have to be contended with. I say that it is much more difficult to frame this Election Act in view of the provisions of the Franchise Act. These are some of the difficulties we will have to contend with in the province of Ontario.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) must not overlook the fact that this is nothing new in legislation. The hon. gentleman would appear to be under the impression that we are dealing with a novelty that never was dreamt of before in Canada. As a fact, we are dealing with a condition of things that existed from confederation up until 1885.

Mr. INGRAM. No. We never had a system of registration in any portion of the Dominion of Canada until quite recently in the province of Ontario, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman's argument does not apply.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am dealing with the question of the overlapping of constituencies as between the federal and the local, and I am also dealing with the question of provincial voters' lists. We had the provincial voters' lists in the Dominion elections from 1867 to 1885, and we had the overlapping of constituencies as we have them now. The only difficulty I can see is that suggested with reference to these migratory votes in the province of Ontario, a voter having to be a resident of the constituency in which he has a right to vote at the time of the election. That is a real difficulty, and one I think we will have to deal with. In view of the real difficulties, I do not see why we should be conjuring up imaginary ones.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Two sessions ago, the Solicitor General promised to inquire about the matter, and he promised to ask the provincial authorities to help him out of the difficulty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a difficulty in sections 21 and 22. Under section 21, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall furnish a sufficient number of copies of the voters' lists. I suppose the draftsman had in mind the fact that the certified copy forwarded by the provincial officer to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is to be the original list for Dominion purposes. Therefore, he took section 124 of the Election Act, chapter 8, Revised Statutes of Canada, and he added this particular provision to it which does not exist in that section as it stands in the Revised Statutes. The Solicitor General will see that section 124, from which this is taken, did not provide for forwarding copies of the voters' lists at all.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Because he was not the custodian.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes. Then, in 1897 the Solicitor General amended section 13 of chapter 8, Revised Statutes of Canada, providing that the returning officer should, on receiving the writ of election, obtain from the revising officers the electoral lists. You see the difficulty is that you have added to section 124 a provision that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall provide voters' lists; the Franchise Act having provided that the lists in his possession shall be the original voters' lists for Dominion purposes. But, you have also included in this Act the enactment of 61 Vic., by which you also say that the returning officer shall get the list from some one else. Therefore, it seems to me that you have two provisions which cannot be reconciled. It may be that I am mistaken in my view, but it does seem to me that there is an anomaly between these two sections which should not be permitted to exist.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My trouble arises in paragraph 10, subsection 2, of 61 Vic. I would rather gather from that, that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is the legal custodian, and that the copy in his possession is the original list for Dominion elections.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend will observe that the legal custodian so intended cannot be the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, because the section provides that the legal custodian from whom such documents shall be obtained shall be paid the same fees—if any—as in the case of such document being obtained by a returning officer for the purposes of a provincial election. That clearly indicates that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is not intended.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under section 22, he would have to apply to the provincial officers to get these other documents, and, of course, that provincial officer would be the person entitled to the fee, if any.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But, you have a provision that the returning officer should get the lists from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and you have also a provision that he should get them from the provincial authorities.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It says that the returning officer shall obtain from the officers who are the legal custodians thereof such provincial voters lists, and under section 10, the legal custodian for the purposes of a Dominion election would be the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that these two sections conflict.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The returning officer, so far as the Dominion list is concerned, would be obliged to obtain it from the legal custodian, and that legal custodian is the person mentioned in subsection 2, section 10, of the Franchise Act.

Mr. BENNETT. In the province of Ontario, the clerk of the peace would be the legal custodian, because he has these provincial voters' lists right in his office. He sends to the Printing Bureau the list that he has in hand, and from it the list is printed which is referred to in section 21, as that to be furnished by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would suggest that you strike out the words 'such provincial voters' list,' because I do not think they are necessary except in the contingency I will mention in a minute. Under section 21 it is the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of copies of the voters' lists, of which he is the legal custodian. As I remember the Franchise Act, the lists in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery are the original lists and the only lists which can be used in the election. Therefore, it seems to me that it is absolutely unnecessary to repeat the words, 'such provincial voters' lists,' in section 22, except in the contingency of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery not having on hand the lists in force. Suppose the clerk of a municipality should neglect to supply the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery with the list; is there anything to provide that the last list in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall be the list to be used in the election? If no such provision exists, then the list to be used is the list in the hands of the clerk of the municipality or other legal custodian, and application would have to be made to him for a copy of it. But if provision is made that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall have the custody of the list, then the words I have mentioned should be erased from the section, and the whole thing would be made plain.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend has forgotten that under the Franchise Act the list sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is the legal list. To that list should be added on revision all the names of persons entitled to vote and from it should be struck the names of persons disqualified. The list in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, with these alterations, is the list for the purposes of the election.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then, what is the use of keeping in section 22 the words, 'such provincial voters' lists'?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will show where they are useful. In section 10 of the Franchise Act it is provided, that if the clerk of the municipality should not send the list to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in that case the clerk of the municipality becomes the legal custodian, and application can be made to him for a copy of the list.

Mr. MONK. Under section 22 the returning officer is at liberty to apply either to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery or to the registrar for the county in the province of Quebec for a copy of the list. Has he also the choice to apply to the secretary-treasurer of each municipality?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Undoubtedly, under certain contingencies.

Mr. MGOK. I think that would give rise to a great deal of difficulty in the province of Quebec. Suppose the returning officer thinks fit, in the exercise of certain patronage, to get his list from the secretary-treasurer of each municipality. If the secretary-treasurer fraudulently omits names from the list or adds names to it, is there any means of reaching him and punishing him? In the province of Quebec our registrars, who are the legal custodians of the lists after they are completed, deny that they are subject to any control by the Dominion authorities. It is their general opinion that this penalty provided in section 22 is illusory, and that they will never be subjected to a fine if they defy the demands of the returning officers. They go further; they contend that they are not obliged to give copies of the lists to Dominion authorities, or I suppose to the returning officers, unless they are paid previously. I know several instances of that kind. But what concerns me most is to know whether if incorrect lists are furnished by the secretary-treasurers of the different municipalities, we can reach these officers, who are municipal officers under the control of the provincial authorities. I think this is important, because in many instances I am afraid these lists may not be faithful. The returning officer may divide the work and get the lists of certain municipalities from the local secretary-treasurers, and get the rest from the registrar of the county; and here again another element of confusion is introduced. My opinion is that it will be found impossible to provide for many of the cases likely to arise in carrying on the elections under the provincial franchises.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the discussion which came up in this House in connection with the Franchise Bill, I cited cases to show that we undoubtedly have control over provincial officers, and can force them to give us copies of the lists. My learned friend would oblige me if he would read section 10 of the Franchise Act, which provides that the legal custodian of the provincial list in each province is obliged to send a copy of that list without delay to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. When the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery receives that list, a copy of it becomes the voters' list for the purpose of our Dominion elections.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do I understand that my hon. friend holds that the term 'legal custodians,' in the third line of section 22 includes the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery? I would add, in addition to the reasons which I previously suggested, why it could not bear that construction, this further reason that the reference to the legal custodian of the provincial voter's lists. These lists that are in the possession of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery are not provincial lists at all, but Dominion lists. They are copies of the provincial lists which have been forwarded for the purpose of the Dominion elections to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under section 10 it is provided that the custodian of a provincial list must send a copy within a certain time to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. That copy then becomes a Dominion list. But it may happen that a custodian of a provincial list did not send a copy to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, so that there may be two custodians—the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who is in possession of a certain number of provincial lists and has had them printed, and the clerk of a municipality, who may have omitted to send his list to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. That is the condition we have to meet, and we have to provide that the returning officer may get his lists from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; and if that official is not in possession of all the lists, then he may go to the person mentioned in subsection 10 and get the lists that are missing.

Mr. DAVIN. There cannot be contemporaneously two custodians. The moment the provincial officer sends the lists to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the latter is the custodian of that list. The Solicitor General contemplates the possibility of a provincial officer not sending the list to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, but if he does not the latter cannot be the custodian, because he has no list to be custodian of. Then the hon. gentleman contemplates that the only custodian available would be the provincial officer. What a commentary on our legislation is this confused state of things. Comparing sections 21 and 22, it seems to me that the hon. gentleman will have to recast the wording of section 22, at all events, in order to make it fit in with section 21. What should be done would be to legislate in such a way that this confusion could not exist.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Take a constituency in which there are ten municipalities. The clerks of nine municipalities send in copies of their lists to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and consequently for these nine lists that official is the legal custodian. But the clerk of the tenth municipality omits to send in his list. An election comes on. You apply to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the ten, and he sends you the nine which he has in his possession. Then for the tenth you apply to the registrar or clerk of the municipality, who has it in his possession.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I cannot see how you can say that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is the legal custodian of the voters' lists. It is true that certified copies must be sent to him, but the holder of the original is the custodian of the provincial list. Subsection 2 of section 10, of the Franchise Act, says :

For the purposes of Dominion elections, such certified copy shall be deemed to be the original and legal list of voters for the polling division for which the list of which it is a copy was prepared, so long as that list remains in force, subject, however, to such changes and additions as are, subsequent to revision, made in such list under the provisions of the provincial law.

Then there are further provisions in this Act as to these changes. What I desire to provide for is that the returning officer shall get his list from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who is the custodian of the original and legal list of voters for the district. You have provided for that in section 21. I understand. Now, if you merely provide in section 22 for the case to which the Solicitor General has referred, the case referred to in subsection 2 of section 10 of the Franchise Act, I agree that that should be done, but it seems to me that you are doing more by this section. You are providing generally that the returning officer shall obtain lists from some person other than the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. If he gets such a list from a provincial officer he is not getting the list referred to in the section of the Franchise Act, and so there would be risk of an election being voided for irregularity. What I would suggest is that you should, in section 22 provide that if the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery does not transmit his lists in time, or if he transmits only a portion of the lists, the returning officer, under such safeguards as may be proper, can complete the lists from the record of the provincial officer, who, in the first instance should have sent them to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. If the section already covers that, it satisfies me.

Mr. INGRAM. In Ontario the duty of the municipal clerk is to prepare the municipal list. He prepares three original copies of the finally revised list, one for the judge, one for the clerk of the peace, and one for himself. The clerk must do that under penalty, and as a matter of fact it is done. Under section 22 you provide that the custodian in the first instance, of the provincial list, shall forward the same to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, under penalty for negligence so far as the Dominion is concerned. If in a constituency of eight municipalities he should send the lists for seven and omit that for the eighth, only one thing could be done besides inflicting the penalty on the clerk—you must fall back upon the last revised list of the municipality in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. To my mind, this section provides that, and I do not see anything wrong with it.

Mr. BORDEN (Hallifax).

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). I would draw the attention of the Solicitor General to another difficulty in this clause. It is provided that the returning officer shall obtain from the custodian a copy of the list to be used during the election. But take the case of one of the constituencies of York, Ontario. The voters' list there is in two parts, one relating to the county of York, and one to the city of Toronto. Suppose that that for the county of York has been duly prepared and forwarded, while that from the city of Toronto has not been. As I understand the Solicitor General, it is the duty of the returning officer to get a list from the proper party in Toronto to be added to the list which has been furnished by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. But the list to be used for the city of Toronto is the local provincial list, and that is prepared only immediately after a writ for an election, and so there may be no proper list in the city of Toronto.

Mr. TISDALE. I would call attention to section 9 of the Franchise Act in this connection. Still I agree with the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart), that the point is not properly covered by section 52, and I think if the hon. Solicitor General will re-read the section, he will agree with that contention.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Solicitor General said he would allow this to stand. I think it is well that it should be redrafted in order that it may be more clearly understood by members of the House. It seems to me very clear that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in sending these lists, will choose the proper lists to be sent to the returning officer. I take it that the man who is the custodian of the Dominion list is the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. But, of course, he must have the lists which, under the law, are in force in the particular constituency for which the elections are being held. Failing that, then the returning officer has to fall back upon the municipal officers, or those who are the legal custodians of the lists. But it must be made plain in the law, that it is only when the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery cannot send the list which is then in force, that the returning officer shall fall back upon the custodian of the provincial list. This should be made so plain that there could be no misconception on the part of any of the officers who have anything to do with it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are not two different custodians for the same list, but two different custodians for the different lists which may be in force in a constituency. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is the custodian for that portion of the list which has been received by him and the clerk of the municipality is the custodian of that portion of the list which has not been sent forward. Then you have got your list under the Manhood Suffrage Act in the province of Ontario, which is prepared on the eve of an election, and which is not in the hands either of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, or of the clerk of the municipality. I am inclined to think the member for West Elgin is right. If you take the terms of this Act, they are just wide enough to meet all these cases. He is immediately to apply to the legal custodians of all these different lists.

Forthwith after the receipt of the writ for a Dominion election the returning officer shall obtain from the officers who are the legal custodians thereof—

That is to say, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the clerk of the municipality, and whoever he may be who has the manhood suffrage voters' list in his possession. These are all legal custodians. I think if you eliminate the word 'provincial' you will meet the whole difficulty. I am anxious to have all the discussion possible on this clause, which is probably one of the most important clauses in the whole Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is possible that leaving out the word 'provincial' might do.

Mr. TISDALE. There is one danger in that. I am afraid if you strike that out, we will be left without any list at all. If you cannot use the provincial lists, what are you going to use?

Mr. INGRAM. Subsection 3, of section 22, covers the point taken by the member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart). When the Franchise Act was before this House in 1898, I drew attention to the short period that is left between the calling together of the board of registrars in the province of Ontario, and the election day. It was the great difficulty the provincial government had to deal with. If some amendment could be introduced in the case of a Dominion election where a list is over one year old, and if more time could be given for issuing the writ by the Dominion government before election day than there is given by the provincial government, then it would be much better for us; because under the provincial Act, after dissolution of the provincial legislature, or after issuing the writ for a by-election, the board of registrars sits when seven days have elapsed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The concluding lines of section 9 of the Franchise Act gives power to the Dominion government to extend the delay.

Mr. HAGGART. I have not got clearly yet from the Solicitor General what is the legal list for the province of Ontario. What would be the legal list to be used in the city of Toronto, for instance, when you say the provincial list must be used for Dominion purposes, and if there is no list prepared after the writ is issued? The only legal list of voters is that prepared after the writ is issued under the provincial Act, and how are you to provide for that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We do not require to provide for it. I am sorry I cannot make myself clear on such a simple point. Take the municipal list for the city of Toronto. You have got there the ordinary municipal voters' list, which is in possession of the clerk of the city of Toronto. That is returned by him to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. But in addition to that list, which is the basis of the election franchise, you have got the manhood suffrage voter. For the manhood suffrage voter a special list is prepared on the eve of a general election. Now, there are two lists, or one list prepared after two different fashions. You have got the list returned by the clerk of the municipality to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and then you have got the manhood suffrage list prepared on the eve of the election. The returning officer would apply to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for his list, and he would apply to the revisers, or whoever the parties may be, who are the custodians of the manhood suffrage list.

Mr. HAGGART. But under this clause, the returning officer, immediately on receipt of the writ, shall apply to the proper officer for the provincial list. But the lists are not prepared for three weeks after he gets the writ.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Where does the hon. gentleman get the three weeks?

Mr. HAGGART. Immediately the writ is issued, it may be a week or ten days before the courts, and the court may take a couple of weeks. As a general rule, the list is not ready for about a week before the election. But your direction to the returning officer is that he shall immediately apply to the proper person, and get the list. How can he get it, when the lists are not prepared for three weeks afterwards?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. To be absolutely accurate, he applies forthwith.

Section stands.

On section 23,

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does not the hon. Solicitor General think that he should fix the number of voters in a polling subdivision?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not more than 200.

Mr. INGRAM. Cases have been known where polls have been held, and these polling booths have not been mentioned in the proclamation. Therefore, I say in respect to this provision:

Where under the laws of the province there are no polling subdivisions for the purpose of provincial elections.

It should be made necessary to state in the proclamation where the polling shall take place.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When we come to have this section properly drafted we can make it read that no polling subdivision shall have more than 200 voters.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think that 200 is sufficient.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT. There may be added to clause 23, a statement to this effect: 'And all such added polls shall be placed in the proclamation.' It is a well known fact that there are many polling places which are generally known to the public. But, if, on the other hand, the power is vested in the returning officer to designate certain other places which are not generally known it should be insisted upon that they should be stated in the proclamation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Will my hon. friends draft an amendment to meet that, or will I have to trust to having it done in the department?

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The section stands.

On section 24,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As I pointed out when I introduced the Bill it will be necessary to amend this section by striking out all the words after 'British Columbia' in the 45th line to the words 'territories,' inclusive, in the 46th line, which are 'and in Alberta and Saskatchewan in the North-west Territories.'

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I would draw the hon. Solicitor General's attention to another fact. You have made provision in the section for publishing the proclamations in French in Quebec and Manitoba. I want to have the word 'Saskatchewan' put in after the word 'Manitoba.' About half of the constituency that I represent is French, and there are polling subdivisions in which there is not an English-speaking man.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am afraid I cannot put that in here because we are not dealing with the North-west Territories in this Act. It will be necessary to amend the North-west Territories Representation Act, which provides for elections in the North-west Territories. We omit all reference to the North-west Territories here.

Mr. DAVIS. You are going to cut it off.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Everything.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, then, that is all right.

Mr. BENNETT. Were there any ridings outside of Algoma in which the election was held subsequent to the general election?

Mr. INGRAM.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the province of Quebec there was Gaspé, Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

Mr. DAVIN. What about British Columbia?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is new.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the reason for that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inaccessibility of these constituencies is the only reason I know of. As we have taken out these two districts in the North-west Territories I would like to consult the Prime Minister about these districts in British Columbia before going any further upon that subject.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether there were any complaints in reference to Burrard, Yale and Cariboo? I never heard of any.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I never heard of any.

Mr. DAVIN. I think it may be laid down as a general principle that it is desirable to have all elections for this House held at the same time, unless, either from distance or some other cause, there are overwhelming reasons against that course.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved:

That the words 'and of Alberta and Saskatchewan in the North-west Territories,' in the 45th and 46th lines be stricken out.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I see that subsection a fixes the place and time for the nomination of candidates. Has my hon. friend provided in his Bill as to what time shall be taken, whether it shall be solar or standard time, because in many instances conflicting courses have been followed. In our province especially in most places standard time is half an hour different from solar time. In some polling subdivisions they follow solar time and in others standard time. The local legislature have adopted standard time as being the time. I believe some provision should be made that standard time shall be regarded as the legal time. If this is not done for the eastern provinces I would suggest that it should be done for Manitoba and the North-west Territories because there, we follow standard time, and it is the legal time for legal purposes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was not aware that standard time was not followed in any part of Canada.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It is not legal unless you make it so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They do follow local time in the maritime provinces in a great many of the districts.

Mr. LARIVIERE. In some instances this has created a great deal of discussion and inconvenience, and litigation, in fact.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand that we will remedy it.

Mr. PUTTEE. Why not strike out 'Yale and Cariboo'? Surely we do not want to make any exceptions, if there is no necessity for so doing?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is necessity for this exception in the province of Quebec with reference to Gaspé, Chicoutimi and Saguenay; and as this is a new departure, I do not wish to recede from the position in the Bill without consulting the ministers. Therefore, we will let it stand.

On section 27,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I want to strike out the words 'And Alberta and Saskatchewan in the North-west Territories.'

Mr. BENNETT. That is agreed to.

On section 30,

Mr. CLANCY. I think this is decidedly a bad clause.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Why?

Mr. CLANCY. Because we will have a repetition of what we had in Russell, where the returning officer found it convenient not to get there, and the election was held over practically to make a by-election after the general elections. The same thing happened in Manitoba, and the government that was defeated at the general elections had the control of the elections that were delayed through the negligence of the returning officer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How can you remedy it? Would you allow the constituency to be without a member?

Mr. CLANCY. There is very little danger of that occurring. I understand this is a new provision in the law.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It exists in the old law, and it exists in the English law, too.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is substantially a provision of the old law.

On section 32,

Mr. GEORGE LANDERKIN (South Grey). Would not the mover of the Bill consent to have the time for the nomination of candidates changed to one o'clock. Twelve o'clock is a very inconvenient hour.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You would have to make it cover two hours, because in some constituencies the people have to come a long distance.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then, make it from one to three. Many who come to town cannot get their dinner before the nomination; the consequence is that they meet under circumstances of privation.

On section 33,

Mr. LARIVIERE. Should there not be a time limit for the signing of the nomination paper? Sometimes two or three months before the day of election agents go about to get nomination papers signed, and when the election time comes some people are very sorry to see their names on certain nomination papers, because their candidate has come to the ground. In the province of Manitoba the nomination paper must be signed within a month prior to the day of the election; if it is signed before that, it is not valid. I think that is a very wise provision, because we ought not to accept a nomination paper that has been taken around the riding two or three months before the time of the election. Then, I think names which appear on two or three different nomination papers when there is only one candidate to be elected should not count, but should be struck by the returning officer off all the nomination papers on which they appear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think I would like to interfere with the right of an individual to sign different nomination papers when only one candidate can be elected, because it seems to me that curiosities of that description ought to be encouraged. We ought to know a man who will sign two nomination papers for two rival candidates.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Suppose a candidate whose nomination paper I sign becomes unworthy of my support. I ought to be free to sign the paper of another man.

Mr. CLANCY. A candidate might find that his nomination was rendered invalid by the fact that a person who had signed his nomination paper had without his knowledge signed another. It seems to me it would be very dangerous to enter on ground of that kind.

On section 34,

Mr. INGRAM. I propose to move in amendment to this section:

That all the words of the section be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

2. Upon receiving a nomination paper the returning officer shall give a receipt therefor, and such receipt shall in every case be sufficient evidence of the production or filing of such nomination paper and of the consent of the candidate.

My object is to do away with the deposit of $200. In the local elections in Ontario at present no deposit is required, and no evil has resulted. Therefore, I do not see why we should be called upon to put up the deposit in Dominion elections. It is provided in section 38, that a candidate may withdraw up to an hour before the closing of the polls, so that if he should withdraw at four o'clock in the afternoon of polling day he would not lose his deposit.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Try the Auditor General and you will find out that he will. I have a case in Prescott where a man withdrew on the day of a nomination, and the Auditor General refused to return his deposit.

Mr. INGRAM. How does it occur that in the province of Ontario, where no deposit is required, they do not suffer from bogus candidates?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You are extra good people there.

Mr. PUTTEE. I heartily support the motion of the hon. gentleman. I have exactly the same amendment myself, and I believe that this matter is exciting a good deal of attention in the country. The nomination of a candidate should depend only on the signatures to his nomination paper, and I would be willing to see the number increased from twenty-five to fifty or seventy-five. The ideal of an election law is to give the people every opportunity of selecting one of their number to represent them in the Federal parliament, and it is not our business to place any restriction upon the people nominating as many candidates as they choose. This exaction of a deposit also had led to injustice. We all know of a case, which has been referred to several times this session, where the seat was given to the minority candidate because of some alleged irregularities in the deposit of the one who had got the majority of votes. There is something in this deposit altogether opposed to the spirit of our election law. Property qualification has gone, and this deposit will follow soon.

Mr. ANDREW SEMPLE (Centre Wellington). I am in accord with the proposition of the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), and with the position taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee). I remember when there was no deposit exacted in Dominion elections, and there is none required now in Ontario in provincial elections. No purpose can be served by insisting on this deposit of $200.

Mr. ROGERS. I give my hearty support to this amendment also. There should be every liberty allowed in the selection of candidates.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would suggest to my hon. friend from East Elgin that he should give notice that he will move his amendment on the third reading. We might then consider it when the House is full, and when he may be able to get more support than he has to-night. My own view is that the deposit of $200, which is not a large sum, insures a certain amount of earnestness on the part of those presenting themselves for election. If a man is to be a candidate, it is always easy for him or his friends to provide that amount, and it only means a deposit for a very few days. He runs no risk.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I have known some very serious candidates who lost their deposits, and their seriousness did not decrease. Why not let the clause stand?

Mr. PUTTEE. If the $200 is any good, why not make it $1,000. The Imperial parliament get along without a deposit.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It costs more there to be elected than to be elected for the Dominion parliament. Candidates have to provide their election expenses, and it usually costs £500.

Mr. PUTTEE. If there is any virtue in the deposit, let us have more of it. I would prefer that the amount should be raised to $1,000, so that we might make it an issue, because I am certain the electors do not want that deposit left in the election law. I do not think we have a very sound way of getting at the will of the people, but I believe we will improve on it. The objection to do away with the deposit is that it would open the door to a number of candidates. Well, have we any business to tell the people how many candidates should run. We ought to adopt a method of voting by which, no matter how many candidates may run, the one who stands best in the favour of the people would be the chosen one. If the people want a half dozen candidates to run, we have no right to stop them. If we must have it, why would not $100 do instead of $200, or $25. I do not know a candidate has necessarily friends who will put up $200. The whole business, when you come to consider it is found to be, if not exactly a return to the idea of property qualification, a provision to keep some people from being candidates. As the Solicitor General has said he has an open mind on this subject, we might let the clause stand over.

Mr. CLANCY. There is no doubt some merit in what was said by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), but I am afraid the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), has entirely lost sight of the primary point—that you must draw an arbitrary line somewhere. He says that this provision has the effect of preventing an expression of the will of the people. In many cases it may have the effect of preventing an interference with the expression of the will of the people. Two or three men may put up a candidate, and his running may be the means of defeating the will of the people. If I should consult my own pocket, I should be glad that no deposit should be required, but I believe the law has a wholesome effect.

Mr. INGRAM.

I am not certain that it is not a good safeguard to prevent men coming into the field to overturn the will of the people. Such a man may get in by a 'fluke,' to use an inelegant, but expressive term, though the people did not want him. It is unreasonable to say that it might as well be $1,000 as $25. All the experience goes to show that the figure at which it is fixed is about right. It is pointed out that in Ontario there is no deposit required, but I do not think it will be said that the results have been better than under our Dominion system. It is inconvenient for a candidate to be compelled to put up $200, but it is a smaller inconvenience than some others that he might have.

Mr. INGRAM. The absurdity of the thing is perfectly plain to me. A man who thinks he can thereby win an election, and who has the money can easily say to a would-be candidate: I will put up your deposit if you will run; if you can get sufficient votes from the other candidate to elect me, I shall not feel sad at the loss of the $200. I do not know any case in which this deposit of $200 has prevented any candidate coming into the field; it is a mere myth so far as that is concerned. In my election in 1896, the third man had no hope of election, and he told me on nomination day that he was in the field simply to defeat me. He was man enough to admit that. Do you think for a moment, that he paid that $200? No, it was paid by my opponent, who was really in the running, or some person on his behalf. There has been a considerable feeling in many parts of the Dominion, especially in the cities, in favour of wiping out this provision for a deposit of $200 altogether. You have abolished the principle of property qualification, so far as the elector is concerned and so far as the candidate is concerned, why retain the principle under the form of this $200 deposit. There are men in this country who are not blessed with as much money as some hon. gentlemen in this House, who would make good candidates and who might be induced to become candidates but for this.

Mr. ROGERS. Another argument is that to abolish this, it would do away with the unfortunate demoralizing practice of packing conventions. Those who are guilty of this kind of thing could not work their little schemes, when candidates could come forward freely; and if that were the law, these manipulators, knowing that fact, would leave more to the free choice of the people. But they feel now that the necessity for putting up $200 deposit will keep candidates out of the field, and so it makes it easier for them to arrange things to suit themselves in conventions.

On section 35,

Mr. TISDALE. Why should not permission be given to make the oath that is required here before a commissioner, instead of before the returning officer?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If the nomination paper is already attested, the returning officer does not need additional attesting. This is a clause we have had in the election law for some time. It might be changed so as to provide that the person who produces and files a nomination paper shall be ready to declare that either he or some one else has given this attestation. We will get that clause redrafted.

On section 38,

Mr. INGRAM. I propose to move an amendment to that section. I see no reason why a candidate should be given until polling day to withdraw. Why men should be nominated and put the county to expense almost to the last day, and then withdraw, is something I cannot understand. Indeed, he may have got himself nominated for the purpose of selling out. I think the time should be confined to forty-eight hours after nomination. I propose to move to insert after the word 'time' in the first line, the words 'within forty-eight hours'; and to strike out the words 'before the closing of the poll' in line two.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would prefer that the hon. gentleman should bring up that amendment on the third reading.

On section 41,

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to call attention to the fact that the conditions in Prince Edward Island require an amendment to this section in order to carry out the franchise as it at present exists in that province. I propose to move, after the word 'mentioned,' in line 39, to insert the following words:

And in Prince Edward Island such notice or advertisement regarding the qualification of voters as required to be posted under the provincial law. (See section 43. Act P.E.I., 1893.)

And further on, in subsection c, after the word 'Act,' in line 77, insert the words 'And in Prince Edward Island with a copy of the Franchise Act of 1898.' That is the same as the amendment that I proposed in section 21. Further on, in subsection c, at the end thereof, insert the following words, 'and one copy of the instructions approved by the Governor General in Council, as provided in section 21.' I think these amendments will be required in order to make this Bill applicable to that province.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. For the same reason I gave in regard to the suggested amendment to section 21, I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow this section to stand until the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is present.

On section 42,

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if there is any sanction for this section, and if so, where is it to be found?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, except the sanction which is provided by section 19. I think it is quite sufficient for the purposes of this section.

On section 44,

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to a case that occurred in West Elgin where some of these very clever people went in the morning, and with a piece of iron opened up the mouth of the ballot box, so that they might unfold the ballot and slip it in the box after having held it up between him and the windows to see how it was marked.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Very curious things occur in Ontario, if we are to believe all the things that we hear. I hope my hon. friend is not maligning his own province.

Mr. BENNETT. You drop the box into the cellar in your province.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We only did it once.

On section 45,

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why he introduces the word 'postmaster.' The ballot box under the old law is deposited with the registrar or sheriff.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have simply added the postmaster, who is also a government official, to avoid expense. This is a suggestion which was made by the Auditor General. It may not be convenient in a particular locality to deposit the box with the sheriff, so we provide that it may be deposited with the postmaster.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not understand how you get it into the hands of these officers.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That will be provided for after this section is passed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By a later section?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

On section 48,

Mr. CASGRAIN. I cannot see the usefulness of paragraph 2, of this section:

Where two members are to be elected for the electoral division and there are more than two candidates, the candidates may, within an hour after the time appointed for the nomination, agree to their names being arranged otherwise than alphabetically.

What is the use of it? It is a change in the law, and there seems to be no use for such a change.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not wedded to it at all. It is one of the devices of experts who have never had an election to run in their lives.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Now, we come to an important clause. I propose, as the hon. Solicitor General will see, at page 561 of the Votes and Proceedings, to amend section 48, by adding thereto the following subsections:

4. The ballot papers must be bound or stitched so as to form a book and be numbered on the annex by the printer from No. 1 to No. 250, which form the book.

5. The ballot shall bear the name of the printer who printed it.

6. The printer shall, upon delivering the ballot papers to the returning officer, file in his hands an affidavit setting forth the description of the ballots so by him printed, the number of ballots supplied to such returning officer and the fact that no other ballot papers have been supplied by him to anybody else.

Under the first subsection that I propose to add, the ballot must be bound or stitched so as to form a book and be numbered by the printer. By this means it seems to me that it would be impossible to import into the polling booth, or put into the box, any other ballot than the ballot the voter receives from the returning officer. Suppose the ballot bears the number on the counterfoil 150; the voter goes into the place where he is to retire to vote and he will come out with the ballot bearing on the counterfoil the same number 150. It will be almost impossible for a voter to guess beforehand what would be the number of the ballot that he would get, or to have such a ballot prepared or printed so that he could come out of the compartment with a spurious ballot, a forged ballot, or a ballot which had been substituted for the one he had received. It would be almost impossible to duplicate that ballot. Then, I may say, that if the ballots are stitched together and form a book it will become almost impossible for anybody to substitute any other ballot for the one which he receives, especially in view of the other subsections which provide that the printer's name shall be printed upon the ballots, thereby showing who is responsible for supplying the ballots to the returning officer; and the affidavit given by the printer that he has printed so many ballots of such a description, that he has delivered so many to the returning officers, and that he has delivered none to any one else. It seems to me that with these provisions it would be practically impossible to substitute spurious ballots. That is, of course, provided we accept one or other of the ballot papers provided in the schedule of this Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have had a number of ballots submitted to me which I have placed in the hands of the Clerk of the House. There is one which I think would make it impossible that there should be any substitution. The ballots would be stitched together, and there would be two counterfoils, on each of which there would be a number. When the ballot is given to the voter, the returning officer would take off one number, which would form part of the book he retains, and, when the voter brought back the ballot, the number on it would have to correspond with the number on the counter-foil retained by the returning officer, and in that way the returning officer would be certain he got back the ballot he gave to the voter. The only difficulty is, that assuming that the ballot is put in the box, we could not be sure that this was the ballot which came out in the recount, although I do not see that the initials could not be put on it.

Mr. INGRAM. There is too much space allowed to mark the ballot. Suppose a person goes to three men and says to one—I will take my own name as an example—I will give you $5 if you mark an 'X' over the 'I,' and to another, I will give you $5 if you mark an 'X' over the 'N,' and to another, I will give you $5 if you mark an 'X' over the 'G,' then the person who would so bribe would be sure the men voted for him, and such a ballot leaves the door open to fraud. The whole ballot should be black, and the name and the disc should be printed in white, and if you do that there is no place else to mark the ballot except in the disc, and there could be no fraud committed. I think that is the best form of ballot.

Mr. BENNETT. Another trouble is, that the white space left after the name is the same length in all ballots, and the white space in the case of a short name will be greater than in the case of a long name. In East York Mr. Frankland was one of the candidates and Mr. Maclean the other, and with the name Frankland the whole white space was occupied, whereas with the name Maclean there was a large white space left. A number of the voters, intending to vote for Mr. Maclean, placed their votes in the white space opposite his name and not in the disc, while in the case of Mr. Frankland there was no white space left to mark the cross. A number of the deputy returning officers threw out the Maclean ballot so marked, but on a recount they were allowed. It is my opinion there is no necessity for putting a candidate's name and his occupation and his place of residence on the ballots. The candidates are well known in the riding, and if you have two men named Brown running, you can simply mark the ballot John Brown or George Brown. If they have both the same surname and Christian name, it might be necessary to describe them, but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the simple names of the candidates would be sufficient, and it would prevent a good deal of mistakes occurring.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I am very much in favour of the black ballot with the name in white, but I would call the attention of the committee to the danger arising from allowing the deputy returning officer to handle the ballot after the voter has marked it. There is where the difficulty came in in the Macdonald election. If it can be arranged that the voter should put the ballot in the box after the deputy returning officer has identified it by sight, there would be no slipping of ballots, as was done in the Macdonald case.

Mr. INGRAM. What about tearing off the counterfoil?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. It was in tearing off the counterfoil that the trick was done.

Mr. PUTTEE. This question of ballots is very interesting, but the more it is looked into the more we see how hard it is to get a ballot there is no objection to. As to the black ballot with the white name and disc, it should be remembered that all these ballots have to be printed between nomination and election. You cannot print in white, in half the constituencies in this country. There is no such type as that. You would have to get special blocks, and it would be necessary to go to a large city with a well-equipped foundry to be able to pierce blocks for white printing. Then, you could not get your ballot papers bound and counted and circulated in the constituency in time. I do not believe that the black-faced ballot would suit, because the ink would soak through far enough, so that you could see the slightest mark upon it through the paper.

Mr. BENNETT. Fold the ballot to avoid that.

Mr. PUTTEE. Most ballots have only two names on them, and are only folded once. Subsection 3 shows that we have tried before to get a suitable paper, and we have most dismally failed. It states what the weight of the paper shall be; but the returning officers are usually men who understand nothing about paper. They are likely to go to a wholesale house and get the most expensive paper, which is probably the most unsuitable for the purpose. I think we shall never get the right ballot paper until it is issued from the stationery office in Ottawa. It should be specially made, with a watermark, which might be the date of the election or the election year, with some other government mark. This paper should be sent out from the stationery office in reams. The returning officer could then issue to the printer a certain number of sheets. We will say that he issues 500 sheets, or a ream, and that each sheet will give six ballot papers. That would give him 3,000 ballots. The printer would be required to return to him all the ballot papers and all the spoiled sheets as well, so that there could be no chance of a miscount without it being detected. In that way you could get a suitable paper. There are papers which, when marked on, will show the mark on the opposite side; there are others which will not show the mark, and these are the kind to select. A cheap paper is more likely to be suitable than an expensive paper. The most expensive paper will not fold well; one fold is probably all that it will take, and it will open up unless the deputy takes care to pinch it close before putting it into the box. As to the form of the ballot, I am sure we have not got the right one yet.

On section 51,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it is important that the voters should be provided with a black lead pencil, I do not know that the clause makes adequate provision for it. There have been suggestions that information as to the way in which voters have marked their ballots has been given by changing the pencil. That has been brought to my attention within the last year as having actually occurred.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I may say that the Quebec Act provides for that contingency. It says the pencil shall be tied to the table.

Mr. PUTTEE. If a voter goes into the compartment and sees that the point is broken off the pencil, he may use his own pencil, and it may be a blue one.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is his loss.

Mr. PUTTEE. He may do that before the deputy finds that the pencil is not in working order.

Mr. INGRAM. In West Elgin men whose votes were bought were provided with red lead pencils which were marked with the name of the man they were voting for; and it was with the idea of stopping that kind of thing that we provided a black lead pencil.

On section 52,

Mr. PUTTEE. I have a couple of amendments to move to this clause. The first is to insert after the word 'day' in the 21st line, the following:

And in electoral districts containing, comprising or being part of a city of upwards of 10,000 inhabitants, the polls shall be kept open till eight o'clock in the afternoon.

This simply extends the time of polling in cities from nine o'clock in the morning till eight o'clock at night. At present the polls close at five o'clock in the afternoon. It is utterly impossible to poll a city of any size by that time. A large proportion of the people in cities still work ten hours a day. They start work at seven o'clock in the morning, they have the noon hour, and they do not leave till six o'clock at night.

Mr. PUTTEE.

We take the provincial lists and make them the Dominion lists. In some cases they might be two or three years old. Everybody is aware that in two or three years a large proportion of the people in a city change their residences, sometimes across the city, and it is impossible for a man to cross the city in the middle of the day to poll his vote. It is very desirable that we should remove all causes for suspecting an employer of using any intimidation over his employees; but if an employee asks for time to vote, that is brought into question. A man cannot possibly go across a city within a hour or a couple of hours without using a rig, and we want to discourage the use of rigs as much as possible. For instance, the last election in Winnipeg was held in the middle of January when the temperature is sometimes 30 or 40 degrees below zero, and when you could not induce a man to cross the city in the middle of the day. It is now generally held that eight o'clock at night is a fair time to close the polls in the city. I would have made my amendment to include all districts, but I find that the farmers think it would be a hardship for them to have the polls open until eight o'clock. It is exactly the other way in the cities. It is not possible to properly poll the votes before five o'clock. The labouring men should have an opportunity of voting on their way home and on their way to work. It is not in accord with the democratic idea to close the polls at five o'clock, and there is no object in declaring the result of the poll the same night. I hope the Solicitor General will take these amendments into consideration and let the clause stand if he does not choose to accept them now.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I propose an alternative resolution of which I have given notice:

In cities or towns having a population exceeding 10,000 souls, the poll must be open at seven o'clock in the morning, and from that hour until nine o'clock a.m., workmen, artisans and employees in factories shall be given the precedence of other voters in recording their votes.

It would not be advisable to keep the polls open until nine o'clock, because in winter you have hours of darkness between 4.30 and 9 p.m. It is much more difficult to keep good order during those hours than in the day. I also would propose another clause:

Masters and employers and all others who have employees under them, who are electors and live in the electoral district where they are qualified to vote, are obliged to allow, without molestation, or any reduction of wages, such employees reasonable time to vote, under a penalty of $200.

The hours of polling in all cities, where the population exceeds 10,000, are from seven in the morning to five at night; and if a workman presents himself at a polling booth between seven and nine in the morning, he passes before anybody else. The other section provides that employers must give their hands sufficient time to vote.

In the province of Quebec these two sections work well and the workmen in the city have come between seven and nine o'clock and have voted.

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. gentleman is trying to get at the same end as myself, but I think my amendment is the better one. In the winter the morning hours would be very little used. As to the counting of votes at night, in England it is eight o'clock at night when the poll closes, and the ballots may be all taken to one place to be counted, taking sometimes five or six hours, and so in some cases it has become the custom to postpone the counting of the votes until next morning. I would be willing to make a compromise and accept an amendment proclaiming the afternoon of polling day a half holiday.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would vote for that.

Mr. BENNETT. In view of the fact that there are a number of constituencies which embrace not only cities but rural districts, I think that the proposition of the hon. member for Winnipeg to keep the polls open until nine at night would be a great incentive to bribery and corruption. Yesterday you, Mr. Chairman, were announced as the prospective candidate in West York. In that constituency there is a country vote, and it is quite possible that your opponent might be in the minority in the rural districts at six o'clock. What bribery and corruption might not be resorted to then to secure a majority. Take the case of the Minister of Customs, who intends to desert North Grey for his old love, South Brant. When the news would come from the country districts at six o'clock showing the position of the two candidates, you would have hundreds of men in the cities waiting for the price of votes to go up before recording their ballots.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What are we going to do about these amendments? We have come now to the beginning of the section when the amendments of which I have given notice will come in.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We will take up these clauses again, and, on the reconsideration, the amendments can be proposed.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think my hon. friend from Winnipeg will see the force of the objections made to his amendment by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). Suppose the elections between parties were close and the vote of a city constituency like Winnipeg, or Quebec, or Montreal, would decide the election, it would be quite a temptation held out to many electors between six and eight o'clock.

Mr. PUTTEE. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) is joking, but I do not see it at all.

Mr. BENNETT. Say that in West York there are four or five townships from which the returns come in after the closing of the poll there. Then the city voters, who have not voted and who are waiting to see, let us say, if there was any money going, would mark their votes according to the result of the elections in the townships.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. As I understand the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), it applies to the whole constituency, even if part of it is in the country. In that constituency all the polls are closed at eight o'clock. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) has shown, this system prevails in Great Britain, and I do not see why it should not be adopted here. The hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) is endeavoring to deal with the same difficulty, but the workman who is at work at seven o'clock in the morning, could not vote between seven and nine without the special permission of his employer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You have to give him time.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. According to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Casgrain's) amendment. But, as the hon. member for Winnipeg has said, the only way a man can vote untrammelled is to vote in his own time.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not in favour of either the proposition of the hon. member for Winnipeg or that of the hon. member for Montmorency. If neither of those hon. gentlemen will move it, I am prepared to move that the government shall declare a half holiday on the day of general election. That would get over the difficulty.

Mr. PUTTEE. My amendment certainly includes the whole constituency, and all the polls in the constituency would close at the same time. But, in any case, three hours is too short a time for correct information as to results to be sent into the city so far as to affect the vote between six and eight. But, in any case, the thing is so important that I think we should make eight o'clock the time for closing the polls in cities. I do not think we should accept any amendment that would make it the law that the employee would have the right to vote on his employer's time. I do not believe in that principle. I would rather keep the polls open from Monday morning to Saturday night, than to make the employer pay for the time the employee uses in voting. Better have the employee vote in his own time and vote as he pleases.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). I believe not only that there should be a uniform time of closing, but so far as the cities are concerned, the earlier the better. There are reasons, which dwellers in large cities know, why it is desirable that this should be, the principal being that it would avoid the excitement and worry of the returns coming in late at night. I would greatly prefer to give the time in the morning than to keep the polls open later.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have never observed any difficulty in men having an opportunity to vote in my own city, but even if there were difficulty, I should not favour keeping the poll open until eight o'clock as a means of overcoming it. I would rather see the government proclaim a half holiday on polling day. One great objection to keeping the polls open until eight o'clock would be that you could not get scrutineers to act for you. They must be ready for their work about 7.30 a.m., and if you keep open the polls to eight o'clock they would not get away until ten. Men will not do that.

Mr. INGRAM. The greatest difficulty about workmen is not to have an opportunity to vote, but to have an opportunity to vote without intimidation. If a half holiday were given, say in the forenoon, the workmen could cast their votes in the forenoon and resume work in the afternoon, and there need be no interference by employers or others to see how they voted.

Mr. PUTTEE. I am perfectly willing to accept the half holiday. But to say that in the restricted polling time allowed the vote can be polled is simply to say that you do not believe in every man being able to cast his vote, because you cannot poll a city vote and close at five o'clock. The effect is that you are disfranchising a very large number of men. It may be deplorable but it is true, that the majority of workers are working for ten hours a day, and that means that they are away from their homes from 6 in the morning to 6.30 at night, and they cannot poll their votes unless we give them a half holiday and keep the polls open to eight o'clock.

Mr. INGRAM. I would draw the attention of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) to the fact, that when the plebiscite was taken in Winnipeg the polling subdivisions, with one exception, had less than 200 voters on the list. There is plenty of time to poll these votes between nine and five. Therefore, there are 43 polling subdivisions in the city of Winnipeg, and none of them contain over 200 votes except one, 203. No one will pretend that these men could not have an opportunity of voting between nine and five.

Mr. PUTTEE. My knowledge of Winnipeg is gained from personal experience, and I submit that it is not sufficient to take the plebiscite vote as an illustration of the polling strength of the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. INGRAM. That is the total vote on the list in your division.

Mr. PUTTEE. If Winnipeg only were considered we should have twelve hours of polling. In the middle of January, when the thermometer may be 35 degrees below zero, it is not always an easy thing to get the votes out. When we voted last January, there was one candidate whose friends had no rigs, and we were very much in the same position as Wellington, we were praying for either rigs or night. I am free to state that if the polls had been closed in Winnipeg half an hour later at the last election, I would not have been here, and if they had been open until eight o'clock at night, I would have had twenty times the majority that I did. We could not get our men out in the afternoon, it was impossible, especially in the winter. I wish further to amend section 52, by inserting the words 'standard time' after the word 'clock' in each instance.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I propose to introduce a special clause which will make standard time applicable to all places. If my hon. friend wants to move his amendment with reference to the extension of the hours for voting, it will be better to move it on the third reading, when we will have an opportunity to discuss it in full House.

On section 64,

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to call the attention of the Solicitor General to subsection 5, in connection with the oath that is prescribed. The hon. gentleman knows that we have absolutely no Dominion revision, they are all provincial revisions. Take a Dominion riding composed of three townships in three separate electoral districts for the local. The local franchise in the province of Ontario is what we call one man one vote. If an elector, previous to 1898, moved from one electoral division to the other, then he might be struck off the list. That is still the case. But by the change that was made in 1898, in Ontario, although an elector is required in order to get his name upon the list to be a resident in the municipality, if his name appears upon the list afterwards moves into another municipality, still a portion of the same electoral district for the local, he remains on the list. Now, the question arises, the voter ceases to reside in the electoral district for the Dominion, but his name cannot be removed from the voters' list, because he still remains in the same electoral district for the local. Could he vote in two electoral districts for the Dominion, namely, in the one in which he is a resident, and in the other by reason of his name appearing upon the list? Now, there is no protection against a person who resides in another electoral district coming in and voting, so far as I can find in the oath, which forms part of the Act. Although he does not reside in the electoral district for the Dominion really, he would be entitled to vote because he still resides in the electoral district for the provincial, and in that case he would be entitled to vote at the two elections, so far as this Bill appears, namely, for the electoral district of the Dominion in which he resides, and in the electoral district in which he formerly resided. But the change brought him into another electoral district for the local. I hope to make myself clear to the hon. gentleman. It is a very difficult thing to think out the different complications that arise in a case of that kind. If I understand the hon. gentleman aright, his intention is, so far as the province of Ontario is concerned, to endeavour to carry out the principle of one man one vote. Am I right in that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. In this case the hon. gentleman will see the difficulty I have pointed out, namely, that you cannot remove a man's name from the list. If he is still in the local district, because we have absolutely no Dominion lists.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is your remedy?

Mr. HENDERSON. He could only vote where he resides.

Mr. CLANCY. But that is in the local. He has to be a resident within the Dominion electoral district. There is no provision of the law that prevents him going there and voting, and you cannot get him off the list for the reason I have stated, because he is still a resident of the local district. I point out the difficulty in order that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) may think the matter over. I have no doubt his attention has been drawn to it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, not in that shape. It is a new difficulty. I would ask the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), and other hon. gentlemen, to meet me in the Department of Justice to-morrow and we might go over this and see if we can draft a clause. I have already asked Mr. Fraser to consider it, and he is all at sea about it. He does not seem to be able to draft a clause that will meet the difficulty that has been suggested.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that the section where voters move from one municipality to another, but not to different electoral districts?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Before this clause is passed, I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General for an explanation of subsection 3:

If the elector named is found on the list of voters for the polling district of the polling station he shall be entitled to vote.

Does that mean all names on the voters' list given to the returning officer by the legal custodian, no matter where the elector resides?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is my view of it, and I do hope that is going to meet the difficulty that we have had to grapple with in Ontario.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any oath in the schedule that the voter may be called upon to take that will debar him under this subsection?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not if his name is on the list, except that the ordinary oath may be put to him as to identification.

Mr. INGRAM. Supposing a man lives fifty miles from here, if his name appears on the Ottawa voters' list, you would not pretend to say that he would not be entitled to vote?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Why not?

Mr. INGRAM. Then, he is a non-resident.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It does not make any difference. His right depends on the fact that his name is on the list.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, you are going against the principle of manhood suffrage?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not care anything about manhood suffrage as far as I am concerned. I only adopt it because it is adopted in Ontario. I would not be prepared to adopt it if I had anything to do with it. I believe property has some rights in this country yet. I think we may allow sections 66, 67, 68 and 69 to stand.

On section 72,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think we had better let that stand. It provides for the form of the ballot which we have not yet adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Stands.

On section 75,

Mr. CLANCY. What is the change in that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Subsection 2 is new:

And in case no interpreter is found, such elector shall not be allowed to vote.

Mr. CLANCY. I know of a case in one of the electoral districts where there are two very intelligent men who are deaf and dumb and who desire to vote. The difficulty has arisen as to an interpreter. No man can take the oath that he interpreted the language. The statute says, the language of such person.

Mr. CLARKE. Can they read ?

Mr. OLANCY. No, they cannot read at all.

Mr. ELLIS. Then, if signs are used for the purposes of language, it is the language.

Mr. OLANCY. But they cannot read, and there is absolutely no language.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We will carry that. Let that go.

The committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When does the Solicitor General propose to take up the Bill again?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If it is convenient to those who take an interest in the Bill, we will say Tuesday next.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Might I ask the minister what business will be gone on with tomorrow ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We do not know yet, the Prime Minister is not here. Time will tell.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. (Wednesday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 6, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RETURN ORDERED.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior), some time ago, called for the production of the report of Mr. Clute. The report was brought down a few days ago. I may say to the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) that the report which he has called for in regard to the purchase of provisions for the North-west Mounted Police is a very long one, but I hope to have it down on Tuesday next.

Mr. CLANCY.

MR. CHARLES R. DEVLIN.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. When was Mr. Charles R. Devlin appointed emigration agent for the Dominion of Canada in Ireland?

2. What amount of money has been paid the said Charles R. Devlin in travelling expenses, salary and incidentals since the date of his appointment up to the present time?

3. What has been the total amount paid out by the government of Canada in connection with the agency since Mr. Devlin's appointment?

4. How many emigrants were sent to Canada from Ireland by Mr. Devlin since he was appointed emigrant agent?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. Mr. Devlin was appointed to his present office on March 15, 1897. 2. There has been paid to Mr. Devlin, since the date of his appointment up to April 30 last, for salary, $6,254.30; travelling expenses, $2,898.56. 3. The total amount paid out by the government in connection with the Dublin agency, which is in charge of Mr. Devlin, since the latter's appointment, is as follows: Salary, $6,254.30; travelling expenses, $2,898.56; all other expenses in connection with the office, including rent, furnishings, &c., $4,927.87, or a total of $14,080.73. 4. No record is kept of the number of emigrants sent by each emigration agent in the British Isles, consequently, the department is unable to answer this question directly.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DAVIS asked :

1. Is the Postmaster General aware that during the present session Tory campaign literature consisting of Montreal Tory campaign sheets entitled: 'Crushing Reply—Hon. G. E. Foster to Canadian Electors.' 'A scathing exposure.' 'Facts versus fiction.' 'Foster, the greatest living orator, annihilates the Grit Pygmies.' 'Sir Charles Tupper, mightiest of thunderers, pulverizes his craven opponents.' 'The Piles of Bones Bard.' 'Sweetest of Pianolas,' &c., and speeches of Sir Charles Tupper, have been franked broadcast to the electors of Prince Edward County, under the frank of H. Corby, M.P., and stamped thereon as sent with the compliments of Mr. Geo. O. Alcorn, of Picton, Ont.?

2. Is the said Geo. O. Alcorn a member of the House of Commons? If not, has he the right to have Tory literature sent through the mails on the frank of Mr. Corby, M.P.?

3. Has any person who is not a member of parliament a right to have his political campaign literature sent through the mails free on the frank of a member of parliament? If not, by what right did Mr. Alcorn obtain free transmission through the mails of his campaign literature?

4. If Mr. Alcorn had no right to escape payment of postage, does the Post Office Department intend to take steps to recover from Mr. Alcorn the amount of postage which he should have paid on his complimentary Tory literature to the electors of Prince Edward County?

5. If one person, not being a member of parliament, is entitled to free transmission of mailable matter through the mails under the frank of a member of parliament, what is to prevent every person in Canada resorting to a similar method in order to escape payment of lawful postage?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Under the provisions of subsection 2, of section 42, of the Post Office Act, being chap. 5 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, letters and other mailable matter, addressed by a member of parliament at Ottawa, during the session, are entitled to free transmission through the mails to places in Canada. The Act does not appear to place any limitations on the character of such mail-able matter.

TIMBER LICENSES COVERING INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. How many timber licenses are now in force covering land under control of the Indian Department?

2. By whom are such licenses held?

3. Are they renewable yearly; and if so, on what conditions?

4. As a rule, are all the conditions promptly met by each licensee?

5. Are any of the licensees now in arrears for dues, fees, ground rents, &c.? If so, to what extent in each case, by whom payable, and have the licenses been renewed? If so, what is the date of renewal?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. Twenty-four. 2. Philetus Sawyer, John Charlton, Cook Bros., Beatty, Wilcox & Beatty, The McArthur Bros. Co., Victoria Harbour Lumber Co., Ltd., No. 1., Victoria Harbour Lumber Co., Ltd., No. 2., W. C. Edwards & Co., Gilmour & Hughson, St. Maurice Lumber Co., Burton & Bro., Hitchcock & Foster, Saginaw Lumber and Salt Co., The Charlemagne and Lac Ouareau Lumber Co., A. J. Beveridge & Co., Geo. T. Baird, The Rathbun Co., of Deseronto, Spanish River Lumber Co., Henry Atkinson, J. R. Booth, Frank Perry, Chew Bros., J. W. Munro and R. H. Klock & Co. 3. Yes; on the conditions that the limits shall have been worked the preceding season or satisfactory reason assigned for not working. That the annual ground rent and renewal fee and all dues on timber cut, as shown by sworn returns, shall have been paid, and that the timber regulations shall have been complied with. 4. Yes. 5. No. There are none of the licensees in arrears.

BASIC SLAG FERTILIZER.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

1. Did the Minister of Inland Revenue make the following statement: 'The department cannot alter its system at the instance of any special manufacture, but it is ready to adopt the latest and best scientific methods approved by the Society of Public Analysts in England, or recommended by any such body as the Royal Agricultural Society of England. It is also prepared to adopt that system which the authorities of the Dominion Experimental Farm recognize as giving results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice?'

2. Has there been any protest to the method of analysis adopted by the chief analyst for the determining the availability and total phosphoric acid in Thomas' phosphate powder? If so, when, and by whom?

3. When such protest was made, were any steps taken to obtain the opinion of the Society of Public Analysts in England, the Royal Agricultural Society in England, or the authorities of the Dominion Experimental Farm, as to what method of analysis gave results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice?

4. Will the government submit an explanation of the methods of analysis adopted by the Department of Inland Revenue, viz., 'the citrate of ammonia solution,' and forward a copy of the explanation of the method used in England and Europe, viz., 'a 2 per cent solution of citric acid,' to the chemist of the Dominion Experimental Farms, consulting chemist of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, and the director of the Agricultural Research Station, Darmstadt, Germany?

5. Will the government submit the following question to such authorities: 'Which method of analysis for determining the availability of the phosphoric acid in basic slag or Thomas' phosphate powder would, in your opinion, give results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice?'

6. Will the government adopt the system recommended by those authorities as giving results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice?

7. Has the Department of Inland Revenue received samples of Albert's Thomas phosphate powder during the month of April, 1900?

8. If any samples were received, have they been analysed by the chemist of the department, and what was the result of such analysis?

9. Who is the consulting chemist of the Royal Agricultural Society of England?

10. Were certificates of analysis of Albert's Thomas powder received by the department? If so, by whom were the certificates signed?

11. What was the result of the analysis of Albert's Thomas phosphate powder, as expressed in such certificate?

12. Upon what basis or analysis will the 'relative value per ton of 2,000 pounds,' as given in the bulletin of the Inland Revenue Department, be calculated or determined?

13. Does such relative value, so calculated or determined, give a fair and correct result of the agricultural value of Thomas' phosphate powder as a fertilizer?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). 1. Yes. 2. Objections were made by Messrs. Wallace and Fraser and Mr. Fred T. Wedderburn, St. John, N.B. 3. No. 4. Under consideration. 5. The department proposes to ask the opinion of the Society of Public Analysts in London. 6. The department would be inclined to adopt the system recommended by the above-named Society of Public Analysts. 7. Yes; two. 8. Their analyses resulted as follows :

	No. 1146. per cent.	No. 1147. per cent.
Phosphoric acid, soluble	0·16	0·23
“ reverted	8·19	6·60
“ insoluble....	9·95	10·77
Total	18·30	17·60

9. Not known to the department. 10. Yes; by Augustus Voelcker & Sons. 11. The analysis showed as follows:

	No. 1146. per cent.	No. 1147. per cent.
Total phosphoric acid.....	18·32	18·18
Phosphoric acid dissolved by a 2 per cent solution of citric acid	15·87	15·87

12. Upon the results given above under No. 8. 13. Yes.

INSPECTOR OF BOILERS AND MACHINERY, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. PRIOR asked:

- Who were the candidates who competed at the examination held in Victoria, B.C., in March, 1898, for the purpose of qualifying for the position of inspector of boilers and machinery?
- What were the names of those who succeeded in passing the examination?
- Who was appointed to the position of inspector in April, 1898?
- Had that gentleman ever before held a similar position under the government?
- If so, had he been dismissed, and for what reason?
- On whose recommendation was he appointed in 1898?
- Is he still in the employ of the government in any capacity?
- What candidates appeared at a similar examination held in Vancouver, B.C., in April, 1900, and what were the names of those who successfully passed the examination?
- Who has been appointed in the place of the late inspector?
- How long has the present inspector been a resident of Canada?
- Was Mr. W. J. Cullum one of the successful candidates at the examination held in March, 1898?
- Was he ever officially notified that he had passed? If so, when, and by whom?
- Is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries aware that Mr. Cullum was informed that it was unnecessary for him to go up for examination in April, 1900, as he had already passed in March, 1898?
- Was a petition received by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries at the beginning of this year, signed by some thirty-one British Columbia marine engineers, praying that Mr. Cullum be appointed to the position of inspector?
- Is not Mr. Cullum thoroughly qualified for the position?
- For what reason was Mr. Cullum passed over and the position given to somebody else?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Nicholas Thompson, Vancouver; William B. Kemp, Vancouver; William James Cullum, Victoria. 2. None of them passed a successful examination, Mr. Cullum showing the best. 3. William A. Russell. 4. Yes. 5. Was dismissed for doing work for outside parties contrary to orders of the department. 6. On the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. 7. No. 8. Samuel Baxter, Victoria; Thomas Wyatt, Vancouver; Frank M. Richardson, Vancouver; Frank M. Richardson successfully passed. 9. Frank M. Richardson. 10. Frank M. Richardson produced voucher to show he was in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., at Vancouver, as apprentice and improver, from October, 1888, to January, 1892, and states previous to his sea service lived in British Columbia, since 1887. 11. No. 12. No. 13. No, chairman having Mr. Cullum's previous examination, and learning that since examination taken he was solely employed as second engineer on the Quadra, considered it unnecessary to waste any more time in examining him, he not having had any opportunity while so employed of gaining the essential knowledge in which Mr. Cullum showed his weakness in former examination. 14. Yes. 15. Was not considered as such by the examiners, but they were of opinion he might be trained for office. 16. Showing lack of practical knowledge of construction and staying of boilers.

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

LICENSES TO CUT TIMBER ON DOMINION LANDS.

Mr. DAVIN asked:

On what date were the regulations of the order in council of July 1, 1898, governing the granting of yearly licenses and permits to cut timber on Dominion lands in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, brought into force in Manitoba?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The regulations embodied in the order in council dated July 1, 1898, governing the granting of yearly licenses and permits to cut timber on Dominion lands in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, came into force on August 13, 1898.

ISSUE OF TIMBER-CUTTING PERMIT TO MR. T. A. BURROWS.

Mr. DAVIN asked:

What is the date of the permit granted to Theodore A. Burrows to cut timber in Tp. 30, R. 21; Tp. 31, R. 21; Tp. 30, R. 22; Tp. 32, R. 23? Did he get more than one permit? If so, what is the date of each? On what date would the permit or permits expire?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Permit No. 33,523 was issued in favour of Mr. Theodore A. Burrows to cut timber on berth 827, comprising lands in the above townships, on January 17, 1899. This permit expired on May 1, 1899, and was the only one issued to Mr. Burrows to cut timber on the berth in question.

ALBERTON HARBOUR, P.E.I.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's) asked :

1. What amount of money has been granted or expended by the government to stop up a break through the Sand Hills, near Alberton Harbour, Prince Edward Island?
2. How was the amount expended, and under whose control and authority, and what rate of wages was the party paid?
3. Is the work still incomplete?
4. Who inspected the work?
5. Is the government aware that nothing was done to secure the brush placed there, and that consequently it has been carried away?
6. Is the party dispensing the grant held responsible for the loss?
7. What does the government intend to do about the break in the said hills, which threatens to lessen the water of the harbour, thus menacing navigation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). No orders were issued from the Department of Public Works to do this, and no information in department to show that the work is being done. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has made a mistake in the works to which he has alluded.

QUEBEC ELECTORAL LISTS.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Have any electoral lists for any constituency or electoral division in the province of Quebec, under section 10 of the Act 61 Victoria, chap. 14, been received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery since April 1, 1900?
2. If so, from what constituency or electoral divisions, or parts thereof, have such electoral lists been received?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Yes. 2. The following lists have been received : Bagot, Beauce (part), Beauharnois, Berthier, Bellechasse, Brome, Chambly and Verchères (part), Champlain (part), Charlevoix (part), Chicoutimi and Saguenay (part), Compton (part), Dorchester, Drummond and Arthabaska (part), Huntingdon, Kamouraska, Laprairie and Napierville, L'Assomption, Laval (part), Lévis, Lotbinière, Mégantic (part), Missisquoi, Montmagny, Montmorency (part), Nicolet, Pontiac, Portneuf, Quebec County, Richmond and Wolfe (part), Richelieu, Rimouski, Rouville, St. Hyacinthe, St. Johns and Iberville (part), Shefford (part), Sherbrooke (part), Soulanges, Stanstead (part), Témiscouata, Three Rivers and St. Maurice (part).

FISH HATCHERY AT SYDNEY, C.B.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I availed myself of the opportunity to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), a question that requires prompt consideration. I am advised :

That the sale of the government fish hatchery at Sydney, C.B., is advertised for Saturday next. The intention is to establish it in Inverness County. People here protest vigorously against removing the fish hatchery, which is of so much importance to the county of Cape Breton. Sydney Board of Trade and town council forwarding resolutions protesting against it.

If this statement is correct, I would ask the minister to suspend the sale until after he receives the representations of the Sydney Board of Trade, and the Sydney town council.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I would be glad to do that if it would accomplish any good result. This matter was fully discussed when my estimates were going through. The building, which I am told is old and rotting down, is built on admiralty ground, and the Admiralty is desirous of getting the ground back. I notified the Admiralty that inasmuch as we had determined, upon the advice of Commissioner Prince, to build a new hatchery at Margaree, where the salmon ova could be obtained, we would be in a position, in a short time, to give the Admiralty the ground back. The building is of no use whatever, but such as it is, it is being sold by public auction for whatever it will bring. If the hon. gentleman is really anxious that I should postpone the sale until after I receive the petitions, I will be glad to do so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the sale does not touch the question of removing the hatcheries from Sydney, I do not see that it is so important.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It does not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Has the minister made up his mind on the question of removing the fish hatcheries ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and building a new one at Margaree, on the report of my officers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not refer to the building of a new one at Margaree, but I would ask the minister not to take any action to remove the Sydney hatchery, until he receives these remonstrances which are now on their way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The decision has been reached some time ago, and this would not affect, it in the slightest degree, because the work will go on at Margaree anyway, and the hatchery will not be opened at Sydney.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Is the minister aware that any quantity of salmon ova can be found within a few miles of Sydney, without going to the Margaree ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The report says to the contrary.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Why, they have been getting the ova there for the old hatchery, and sending it to the Margaree and other streams in Cape Breton.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is directly contrary to the report I received from my officers.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That cannot be possible. There is a salmon river only a few miles from Sydney, where any quantity of salmon are caught.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My information is not of that character, and the determination to remove the hatchery to Margaree was because of what I have stated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the minister bring down these reports to the House? I do not understand that it is necessary to build the hatchery near where the ova is obtained. One of the greatest fish hatcheries in the world is at Washington, and the ova is brought immense distances. When representing Canada at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, I had the ova taken from Canada to London, and the salmon were hatched out in the exhibition, and raised until they were actually caught with a fly in the place, before the exhibition closed. I should like to see these reports, so that we may have some evidence of the necessity of bringing the hatchery to the ova, instead of the ova to the hatchery.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not aware whether the reports may be in writing or not, but they may be. I had a conversation with Mr. Prince about it, and as it is a purely scientific question, I acted upon his advice. If the report is in writing, I will bring it down.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). I can hardly credit that the minister can have such a report from his officer, because I know from my personal knowledge that very many salmon have been taken in a river only six miles distant from the Sydney hatchery, and they have been spawned there for a great many years. I cannot, therefore, understand how any officer can make a report such as the minister mentions.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I again call the attention of the government to a grievance that I have aired on several occasions, and which has now become chronic. It seems to be utterly impossible to get answers to the order of the House for returns, and it will be my duty to lay the case pretty completely before the House. In the first place, I call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact, that I have two notices of motion on the paper for returns, and I suppose it will be impossible to reach these. However, before the railway estimates are brought down, I should like to have this information, and as I cannot get it by motion, I imagine there will be no objection to having it brought down on this request. Then, I sent to the Postmaster General, a little return, with reference to a postal route in Albert County. I had made a mistake in the name, and after making the mistake good, I sent the return to the minister, and he promised to have a return brought down according to what I intended, and not according to what was on the paper. Will he just make a note of that, and see that it is brought down?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I think the hon. gentleman informed me of the mistake, and I gave instructions to have a return made in accordance with his wishes.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman put a tracer on that, and see where it is side-tracked. Then, there was a return ordered by the House on the 7th of February in regard to correspondence with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say a word about that? He mentioned it the day before yesterday. I was under the impression that the return had been prepared and handed in. I know it was prepared and sent to the House, and I was quite certain in my own mind that it had been handed in; but when the hon. gentleman mentioned it, I could not find the copy that had been prepared. Yesterday afternoon I gave instructions that another copy should be prepared immediately, and yesterday evening I was informed by the secretary of the department that it was ready and that he had sent it to the Secretary of State. I expect that it will be here to-day. There has been no delay.

Mr. FOSTER. There has been delay since the 7th of February. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did with that as he once did with another return—brought it down and laid it on the Table here; but I am glad to know it is in esse.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What return does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not remember. I know it took me a year to find it, and I at last found it in one of the desks in the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like the hon. gentleman to tell me what return it was, for I have brought down no return except in the proper formal way.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman was younger then. On March 19 the House ordered a return about military canteens. The minister was good enough to bring down the unimportant part of the return, but not the important part. I jogged his memory about it, but I have not yet got the second part of that return.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I made inquiries for the letters which the hon. gentleman refers to, but have not yet been able to find them. They may possibly be among my own private correspondence. I will have another search.

Mr. FOSTER. On March 19 the House ordered a statement of the living scale allowed in the Yukon; that has not yet made its appearance. On March 28 the House ordered papers in reference to Col. Domville; they are not brought down. On March 28 it ordered a return with reference to scrap iron sales by the Railway Department; that still remains in the capacious mausoleum of the Minister of Railways.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. May I ask what return the hon. gentleman refers to in regard to Col. Domville? I was told by my deputy that all the returns ordered had been brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, here is a case which illustrates a prevailing characteristic of this government. I want to speak in all moderation and without anger; and I must say that for the right of members of this House to have information, and for the orders of this House to the government to bring down information, this present aggregation shows the most cynical disregard, and is one of the most devil-may-care governments that ever had an existence in this or any other country. Having expressed myself thus moderately, I want to show the reason for this statement. The government commenced a system of commissions to investigate the poor Liberal-Conservative officials who had the good sense to vote for Liberal-Conservative candidates in the election of 1896. They had a double object; they could provide for a good many of their own friends in these commissions, and they could make a good many vacancies to which other and more lucky ones could be appointed.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman had better not transgress the rules of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not force me to make a motion, and I will not. From the time these commissions were appointed to the 6th of June, 1900, we have been trying anxiously to find out how many have been appointed, what was paid to them, and what were the results as regards dismissals from office. We commenced in 1897 by asking for a return. In 1898 returns were asked for. In neither of these years did we get a satisfactory reply, or even what might be called a partial reply. In 1899 I made the very same motion, and it reads as follows:

For a statement of all persons or commissions of inquiry appointed to inquire into the conduct of employees of the government since August 1, 1896, giving the names of the commissioners, their rate of pay and allowance, the aggregate paid to each as pay and allowance, also the names and post office addresses of all persons dismissed on the reports of the commissioners.

Last year, towards the end of the session, there came down what purported to be the answer to that inclusive order of the House. Return No. 103 is signed by F. Gourdeau, Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and a note at the bottom says:

The information required by this motion, from August 1, 1896, to April 5, 1897, will be found in the return furnished on June 17, 1897, and which forms the sessional paper No. 73a of the House of Commons.

That is a bulky return of some 300 pages, but from the first page to the last, not a single name of an official dismissed is given. That return gives the papers connected with the appointment of the commissions, and the evidence taken in the course of the investigations; but no name of any official dismissed; and yet Mr. Gourdeau is so lax in his duty, and his minister exercises so little care over him, that they both bring to this House a foot-note saying, 'We have not brought down any information from the 1st of August, 1896, to the 5th of April, 1897, for that is all given in a return brought down on the 17th of June, 1897.' Having made that mistake, the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries goes on to supplement the information from the 5th of April, 1897, up to the date of this. That is given in return No. 103 and seems to be tolerably full; I do not know whether it is complete or not. In connection with that there is a return from the Department of Indian Affairs giving the names of a few dismissals. Shortly after there comes down return 103a, which gives nothing more than a supplement to the information given in No. 103. So that, as far as these returns are concerned, we have only got a return from the Department of Marine and Fisheries and a short return from the Department of Indian Affairs.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The return of the Department of Marine and Fisheries is complete, if I understood the hon. gentleman right.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I know, it is, with the exception of a very important hiatus from the 1st July, 1896, down to the 5th April, 1897, on which they give no information at all. They told me it was in a return already brought down, but of course, it was not as I have shown. We have no information with reference to that period of about a year. In 103d I have a remarkable document, from the first to the last. We cannot tell where it comes from. It does not bear the sign-manual of any department or of the official of any department. From what I can make out, I would not be surprised to know that it belongs to the Department of Railways, but I am not sure. It may be the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which seems to be handling this work in sections. Anyhow it is only a fragmentary report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not signed by anybody?

Mr. FOSTER. No, except the Secretary of State, and it certainly does not belong to his department. There is nothing in it to show whence it came from or whither it was intended to go. 103g bears no signature of any minister or deputy minister, and bears no official stamp to show where it comes from; but by the names that appear in it, I am led to believe that it belongs to the Department of Railways and Canals, but I do not know.

That is all that was brought down in answer to the order of the House for a return from the 1st July, 1896, to the present year. When this session began, I took time by the forelock, and submitted a motion which the House passed, but the government and the department have gone one better than last year. Last year they brought down a few fragmentary reports which were not reliable, but this year they have not brought down one. I have paid out of my own pocket in order to get at what would be a fair approximation of the expenditure of this commission, but as to the dismissed officials, I cannot get any record of them. Is there any reason why the House should not have these returns? None at all. Ought it not to be a point of pride with the ministers to see that the orders of the House are carried out? Is it utter negligence or cynical contempt of the rights of the House that causes this sort of thing to go from year to year? It is simply intolerable. I am not angry, I have used very soft words considering the provocation. There never was a government which so cheerfully drew its salaries and is so negligent in doing its work, and so cynically careless in responding to the orders of the House for information.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will not imitate the moderation of my hon. friend. I will simply remind him that I believe he has forgotten his deeds when he sat on this side. My hon. friend has referred to this last report, to which he has alluded as a very serious cause of complaint. With regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway correspondence, the Minister of Railways was under the impression that he had taken steps to have it brought down, and he has taken new steps and will have it down to-morrow. The hon. gentleman has given notice as to the military canteen and scale of living in the Yukon, but the Minister of Militia has explained that matter. With regard to the investigation, I will call at once the attention of the Secretary of State to the matter. The House is entitled to have returns brought down as speedily as possible, but sometimes delays take place, and the only thing we can do is to bring the matters to the attention of the Secretary of State.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). I must add my quantum of complaint against the government, which my hon. friend has so softly qualified as the devil-may-care government. On the 28th April, I moved for a copy of the contract between the government and the Beaver Steamship Line for the carriage of mails and the orders in council in relation thereto. Also a statement of the lengths of the voyages of these steamships between Liverpool and Halifax and back during the winter season of 1899-1900. I have been patiently waiting for these returns, and they are returns which must be had before the estimates can be passed. The work is not very lengthy and would not take very much time in doing. It seems to me that the clerk in charge of that branch of the Post Office Department could have made out the return in half an hour.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I would remind the hon. gentleman that the contracts for carrying the mails by steamship across the Atlantic are a matter which belong to the Department of Trade and Commerce. At the same time, I will bear a share of any responsibility devolving on the government as a whole, and in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I will make it my business to see his deputy and have the order of the House complied with.

Mr. GILBERT W. GANONG (Charlotte, N.B.) I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to the fact that the return called for of the documents relating to the building of the lighthouse on the Grand Manan has not yet been complied with. Would he kindly look the matter up?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ganong) say that an order was made, and what date?

Mr. GANONG. Yes, on the 26th February.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ganong) say that the return is not yet down?

Mr. GANONG. I have not found it.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. minister say that it is down?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). I think I have the greatest reason for grievance of any member of the House. On the 14th of February, I moved for the only return I have ever asked for in the thirteen or fourteen years I have been in this House, and I have not got it yet. I would call the attention of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to it. The order was for copies of letters, telegrams, evidence, reports, documents and papers, with reference to or in connection with the investigation and dismissal of Henry Hall from the Customs Department. I am sure that there has been ample time, yet the return has not been brought down.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) is the last to whom I would show discourtesy, if I showed it to any, which I hope I would not. I am certain that the return was prepared, and, if it is not down, I will see that it is brought down.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—HOISTING OF FLAG ON AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY BUILDING.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I desire to call the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), and perhaps, more particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), to the fact that while every loyal citizen of Ottawa is celebrating the victory of British arms in South Africa—we have an institution, imported here from New York or somewhere else, and getting its living from the people of this country printing the postage stamps and currency bills, that has erected a fine building, and put a flag staff upon it; and I desire to know whether their attention has been drawn to the fact that they have not run up the flag.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The attention of the gentlemen concerned, has not been drawn to the point by the government, mainly for the reason that the government prefers to mind its own business. The concern in question is a private enterprise, and the question whether they fly a flag or not is entirely their own affair, and we would not presume to offer any suggestions. All I know is that we have saved hundreds of thousands of dollars by dealing with that company, and that is what the public are chiefly concerned in. But I may say further that I know that on several occasions of a national character, the handsome building put up by the company was illuminated and adorned in honour of events which all Canadians unite in celebrating.

Mr. MILLS. I suppose it was the business of the Nova Scotia government, at the time of the Queen's Jubilee—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MILLS—that it raised the flag—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no question before the Chair.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—VITALINE RATION.

Mr. FREDERICK D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the House and the country to what I consider a very important matter, a matter of grave concern to the whole country. And to put myself in order, I will make the necessary motion before I resume my seat.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) that the procedure he adopts is certainly not at all in accordance with the rules of the House. The House will be moved into Committee of Supply during the day, and that will be the proper time to bring forward any grievance that he has.

Mr. MONK. I do not think so. This is a matter more urgent than anything else, and the course I intend to pursue will probably save lengthened discussion at a later stage. I think the matter should be brought to the attention of the House immediately. Perhaps, as I wish to be very brief, the best way in which I can introduce this matter, and bring it to the consideration of the House is to read a short article which appeared in the Military Gazette as far back as April 3, last. This will show to the House what is the question I desire to deal with, and I will supplement it by stating some facts which are within my own personal knowledge. I will make no comments—I think the facts speak eloquently for themselves—but will leave hon. members to draw their own conclusions:

Calls for Investigation.

The 'Canadian Military Gazette' has reason to believe that a very serious charge is attributable to the Militia Department, as represented by the minister. The matter is one which, from a political point of view, would be a scandal; but with that the 'Canadian Military Gazette' has nothing to do. Evidence is forthcoming, however, which goes to prove that the question of the comfort and good health, and even the lives, of our troops in South Africa has been sacrificed to consideration which we can only say call for strict investigation.

In a recent issue a remark was made about the extraordinary price which the government was paying for an emergency ration, i.e., $2 per pound; and attention was called to the fact that the German iron ration is furnished for about 18c. per ration. The price paid for the ration is not now the point with which we would deal. Two dollars may have been, and we should say was, a very high price to pay for any ration whatsoever; but so long as that ration had been analysed and properly tested as a reliable emergency food, that was all that could be said. A short history of the facts will, perhaps, be to the purpose.

We believe the government some time ago purchased $5,000 worth of a certain ration called 'Vitallin' or 'Vitaline,' from contractors in Montreal at the said price of $2 per ration. We believe no tenders were called. We believe the individuals who supplied the ration had no experience as manufacturing food chemists, and have no standing as such. And further, we believe that the ration purchased can be duplicated in the United States and in Canada by any ordinary prepared food—of which the name is legion—for the sum of from 12 to 15 cents. It transpires, moreover, that this food was not given any practical test. It was packed in tins which were not sterilized, with the consequent probability that the tins might burst before reaching Cape Town. Some of these goods have already been shipped, and more are to be sent shortly. So much for the ration which the government has procured for our men on active service. There is another side to the case which would seem to make the matter worse.

One year ago at Kingston the government had a very severe test made of another ration, the name of which is registered at Ottawa. The test was made at the direction of the minister, under the supervision of Director General Neilson, and was imposed upon soldiers of 'A' Batt., R.C.A., and others, whose sworn statements with regard to all particulars connected with the test were afterwards taken, and form documentary evidence as to the genuineness of the article. These men—three normal subjects and two cases of obesity—were selected by the agents of the government, and put for a period of thirty days entirely on this ration, not being allowed to take any other food during that time. The last question put to them, and one which they answered in the affirmative, was as follows: 'Having carefully read the preceding questions, and answers you have given thereto, and knowing fully and realizing that in consequence of this sworn testimony Her Majesty's troops of the different parts of the empire might be sent on active service for a period of twenty-five or thirty days with no other food but the diet you have taken for the last twenty-one (thirty) days, do you swear that your answers contain the truth and nothing but the truth?'

Though the contract had been promised for this food, it was not bought; but, instead, the contract was given to other persons in Montreal. A peculiar circumstance is that the label on the 'Vitaline' ration contains the following words: 'On this diet, with tea and coffee, Canadian soldiers have lived in perfect health twenty-one to thirty days.'

This and other matters are likely to be aired elsewhere; but, in the meantime, it might be explained on what consideration such a contract was taken from a reliable and experienced food chemist, whose ration had been specially tested, and placed in the hands of others who do not possess the same qualification of experience, and whose food was accepted without tender, untested and unanalysed.

All this under the hand of a minister who is himself a medical man, and must have appreciated the facts of the case. What were his reasons?

Now, Sir, I am not giving this explanation vainly. I will not be able to conclude otherwise than as I announced, but at a later stage, when the House will have had time to think over these facts which I intend placing before it, I will move for a committee of investigation in order that this matter may be sifted to the bottom. I think every member of this House will agree with me that in respect of the Militia Department it must be known throughout the length and breadth of this country that no fraud can go unpunished, and that people who are low enough to traffic in the health of our brave soldiers will see their acts revealed to the world at large, and punished. Now, supplementing the facts which I have read from this article, I will say at once that it seems to me strange that that article, written in the month of April last, should have provoked no investigation, no inquiry. I know as a fact that in certain directions the department, surely aware of this strange revelation, might have made immediate inquiries. Nothing was done, none seems to have been the word. Now, proceeding with the facts, in October, 1898, long before there was any question of this dreadful war which happily is now drawing to a close, Colonel Neilson, the director general of the medical staff of the Canadian militia, wrote to the manager of the Hatch Protose Company, about which I will have a word to say in a moment, wrote to him personally in Montreal, and told him that the Minister of Militia and Defence was very much interested in the Hatch protein food, and was impressed by the favourable results which had been obtained in the hospitals throughout the country. Lieut.-Colonel Neilson asked immediately for samples of this food, and two samples of 80 and 50 per cent protein strength were without delay sent to him. The statement made is that the food which I have just named, the emergency ration prepared by this specialist in Montreal, has been tested in most of the hospitals of this country, in the hospitals of Montreal, in St. Luke's Hospital, Ottawa, and also in Winnipeg; and it has received the commendation of several medical men well known to this House, amongst others, of Sir William Hingston. Well, in February, 1899, the Minister of Militia and Defence promised this company in Montreal, a reliable and solvent company, a responsible company, first a trial order for the mounted police in the Yukon, and inquired from this responsible company if they had a sufficient quantity of this food to deliver to the department should an emergency at any time occur. To this the manager answered that he had the necessary control, and would keep ready for the department from half a ton to one ton of this food over 60 per cent protein strength, like the food samples sent by him to Colonel Neilson. In March, 1899, the manager of this company sent his agent to Ottawa, Dr. Devlin, asking that the Militia Department make a thorough test of the efficacy of this food, and that that test should be made upon soldiers in active service chosen by the government. The minister then said that he, being a medical man, must insist upon a test of a very severe character, and he dictated himself the conditions which were accepted by the company without hesitation. What were these conditions? Firstly, there were a certain number of questions to which the soldier would have to answer after having undergone this test, which was to last two months; secondly, the test was to last two months; thirdly, the test was to stop at once if a single one of the private soldiers should feel the slightest uneasiness. Then the test had to be controlled by chosen officers of the department. That test was carried out, and in this pamphlet which I hold in my hand, and which I will lay upon the Table of the House, will be found the answers of the soldiers and the reports of the officials, which showed that the test proved thoroughly satisfactory in every respect. Not one of the soldiers was inconvenienced in any way, and although the men, five in number, were of different temperaments, the test was perfectly satisfactory.

The war broke out, and the company I have just referred to communicated with the Minister of Militia and Defence to know whether any of this food which had been so thoroughly tested to the entire satisfaction of the government, would be purchased and placed at the disposal of the troops leaving for South Africa. The answer received from the department at that time was that the government had nothing to do with provisions for the first contingent, and that letter was sent on by the company to the war office in England. In January last the company became aware that a very large quantity of a certain kind of food had been purchased from a chemist by the name of Lyons, in Montreal, supposed to be in partnership with this Dr. Devlin that I have just referred to—I think the value was $4,000 or $5,000. This had been purchased at a price of $2 a pound. No information whatever was given to the parties whose food had been so satisfactorily tested some months before in Kingston. On the 25th of January the Hatch Protose Company, through its manager, sent a registered letter to the Minister of Militia and Defence, a copy of which I have here, inquiring whether it was true that this food had been purchased, and whether the troops had been provided with this food untested and unanalysed, and without anybody having had an opportunity to tender. Strange to say this letter received no answer whatever. The facts that I have stated and everything connected with this affair seem to have been kept secret from the very beginning.

Now, coming to the serious part of this matter, the company having secured this information, sent a reliable man, whose evidence is easily procurable, to the chemist in question and asked for some of this emergency food which the Militia Department had purchased in such large quantity for our troops. He was given a box of this stuff called vitaline, and he was asked to pay $3, a dollar more than the government had to pay. Upon his remonstrating as to the price, he was told that the government not only had bought a very large quantity of this food, but that great promises had been made for the future, and that it was in consequence of this that food, in reality worth $3 a pound, was sold to the government at the low rate of $2 a pound. However, a sample was procured, and that sample was placed in the hands of one of the most important and reliable analysts of this Dominion. I refer to Mr. Milton Hersey, formerly demonstrator of chemistry at McGill University, and one of the most reliable and best known analysts in Canada. I have here in my hands the result of a very careful analysis made by Mr. Hersey, and that result shows as follows: The sample in question contains 6.27 per cent of moisture, only 17.55 per cent of crude protein, 61.91 per cent of carbohydrates, or expressed as dextrose, 68.79 per cent. Whereas, the food tested at Kingston contained over 60 per cent of nutritive substance, this food analysed by Mr. Hersey is shown to contain scarcely 17 per cent of nutritive substance. It is nothing but an ordinary breakfast food, and, as I am informed, what the government pay nearly $5,000 for, can be bought retail in New York, not at $2 a pound, but at from 10 cents to 12 cents a pound. The whole of it, placing it at the highest assumption, is certainly worth less than $400. But, the price, I consider, is immaterial. What is important, and what I think we should investigate and probe to the very bottom is, that this food, as an emergency ration, was absolutely valueless. It was not even sterilized. The contents of this box opened by the chemist were, to a certain extent, putrid. The box had not been sterilized. A gross fraud had been perpetrated. Upon the large case containing the smaller boxes in which the rations were there was printed these words: 'Upon this food Canadian soldiers have subsisted without any other food during thirty days,' a statement which could only refer to the food tested at Kingston, and not to this worthless stuff, which had no other value than that of ordinary gruel. There is no government that purchases emergency rations for its troops but takes the precaution to open a certain percentage of the tins in which this precious food is contained. In this case no such precaution was taken. The whole of the stuff seems to have been shipped over to South Africa without any preliminary examination whatever, and I feel particularly grateful to-day that Pretoria has fallen into the hands of the British troops, because we may hope, with some degree of confidence, that our own brave soldiers will never have occasion to use any of these rations. I think the matter calls for investigation, prompt, searching, immediate. I think, as I said at the beginning, that it cannot be known too soon throughout the country, that, whereas, men of broad and liberal mind are prepared to put up with a certain amount of wrong-doing when you come to the health and lives of the soldiers who are fighting for the honour of our country, we will all be severe and merciless, and those who are cold-blooded enough and selfish enough to wish to make money to gain their selfish ends at the expense of the health of our soldiers. They will be held up to the contempt of the country, and will be punished, if possible. As I stated at the beginning, I do not wish to take up the time of the House uselessly. I think there will be unanimity of opinion upon this subject, that the hon. Minister of Militia is gravely compromised in this matter, and that he himself should court investigation, which I will call upon the House to give us the opportunity of going into before the end of the session. I may say that the witnesses, all credible men, all responsible men, are in Montreal, and can be brought up at any time to substantiate the facts that I have briefly stated to the House. I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior), the adjournment of the House.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), I think, has shown to this House how exceedingly well fitted he would be to be a member of the committee which he tells us he intends to propose. The hon. gentleman does not need any committee; the hon. gentleman has settled the question in his own mind. He does not need any evidence. Although he has waited, it seems, for nearly two months, before bringing forward this question—

Mr. MONK. I only learned—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Although the hon. gentleman had in his hands the newspaper which he read to this House, for the past two months—

Mr. MONK. I had not.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was published in April. The hon. gentleman said it was published in April. This is June, if I do not make any mistake. Let that go for what it is worth, but, let the House and let the country understand, at the very outset, the temper in which the hon. gentleman has proposed to make this investigation. Let the House discount, to a very large extent, the statements which the hon. gentleman has made under the ill-concealed desire to cast some imputation upon the head of the Militia Department, and in some way, if possible, to damage the government. That is as clear and transparent as anything can be. The hon. gentleman's heart goes out to these troops in South Africa.

Mr. MONK.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman's heart, I say, goes out, but the hon. gentleman has given himself away by his manner here to-day, and has proved to the House that he is far more zealous in his desire to injure his political opponents, to stab them unjustly and unfairly, than he is to do something in behalf of the troops in South Africa. Let me say a single word, at the outset, in reference to the article which the hon. gentleman read with such evident relish. My attention was called to that article, but I took very little notice of it, as I do of all articles which appear in a paper which is published in the interest of the Conservative party. It has long ago lost its respectability, and every claim that it might have had for support from the militia of this country. I find in that article, which I read casually, a misrepresentation and a false statement at the very outset. That statement is that this government paid $2 per ration for the food sent to South Africa. Now, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this government paid 50 cents and not $2 per ration. It was $2 per pound that was paid, and the ration is composed of four ounces, so that there was four rations in the pound, and the price paid for each ration was 50 cents and not $2, as the hon. gentleman stated. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), has adopted the article which he has read, and he must take the responsibility. The hon. gentleman stated that there had been no practical test of this food, and I will deal with that later on. He said it had been sent to South Africa in tins not sterilized. How does he know? I can tell the hon. gentleman that there are tins of that food here to-day, and this very day the Director General of Medical Affairs, showed me a tin of that food in an absolutely perfect state of preservation. The food has been issued to the troops in South Africa, and so far as I have heard, there has not been a single complaint in reference to it. Now, although the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), was very zealous to bring this matter forward at the earliest moment, he has waited two months, and I have no doubt he has waited in the hope that something might come from South Africa, which would sustain in some way, the charges which he has made against this department and against the government. He has failed. No charges or complaints have come, and no charges and complaints will come. Then with reference to the practical test. The hon. gentleman said that there was a certain food which he praised. I think the hon. gentleman might almost—it would not be parliamentary to say such a thing—but if I were as reckless as he is, or disposed to take advantage of my position in parliament, as he has been, it might almost be insinuated that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) stands here as the paid advocate—

Some hon. MEMBERS. 'Oh,' 'shame.'

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes—of the food which he says was thoroughly tested at Kingston, and which he has no doubt about. No matter what the price might have been, if that food had been sent to South Africa, everything would have been lively, and the hon. gentleman would have patted the Militia Department on the back. Now, Sir, I want to point out to the hon. gentleman that this is the food which the Department of Militia did send to South Africa, and I will prove it by the papers which I have before me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. By way of preface, let me say this: The hon. gentleman has referred to Dr. Devlin, of the city of Montreal, as the agent of some one else. Let me tell him, that Dr. Devlin, of Montreal—a respected and able physician, I believe of that city—a son of the late Bernard Devlin, a former respected member of this House, with whom I had the honour to sit here many years ago—Dr. Devlin was the first man to call to the attention of the Department of Militia, the food which the department has sent to South Africa. So far as I know and believe, the food which was bought, and which was sent to South Africa, is the food which was examined and tested for thirty days.

Mr. MONK. Surely the hon. gentleman knows that is not so.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman will please wait till I get through. I say by way of preface, that Dr. Devlin came to see me and called to my attention an important food which was being manufactured by him on his premises in the city of Montreal. He brought letters from Sir William Hingston, from Dr. Ruttan, one of the leading chemists in Canada, and a professor in McGill University, and letters from other physicians, which were absolutely conclusive to me as to the value of the food which he asked the Department of Militia to test and examine as to its fitness for an emergency food. On the representations made to me by Dr. Devlin, supported by the distinguished men whose names I have quoted, and upon the recommendation, of course, of the Director General of Medical Affairs, to whom the whole matter was referred, and without whose advice I have not moved one hair's-breadth, the food in question was sent to the Kingston depot to be tested, because I believed, and still believe, and am more than ever confirmed in the belief, that it was my duty as the head of the department, to adopt the advice given to me by my subordinate officer, the Director General of Medical Affairs, and have a thorough test made. It was a matter not only of consequence to the Dominion of Canada, but of great consequence to the Imperial army, and to humanity at large.

Well, Sir, we agreed that tests should be made. Dr. Devlin furnished the food with which those tests were made at Kingston, and from time to time Dr. Devlin visited Kingston, and, I may say, conducted the experiments which, according to my hon. friend, were highly satisfactory, and which established beyond question the value of this food. I have here the full details of those tests which, however, I will not trouble the House with.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the date of those tests?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The date of some of them was April, 1899.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman state what was the name of the food?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The name of the food was 'Protose.' I find that Edmond Ebba, a driver in 'A' Battery, Royal Canadian Artillery, was one of the parties who took this food for thirty days. I may explain that there were five soldiers, including, I think, some non-commissioned officers of the Royal Artillery, Kingston, who were fed almost exclusively upon this food for thirty days; and at the end of the thirty days they were able to make affidavits that they had suffered no inconvenience, that they believed the food was such as to sustain life, and in the case of some of them, they had actually improved in physique and condition during that time.

Mr. McNEILL. Does the hon. gentleman say that that food is 'Vitaline,' or whatever it is called?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I said 'Protose.'

Mr. McNEILL. Oh, that is another food.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. That shows how much the hon. gentleman knows about it. Now, Sir, having spoken to the director general of medical affairs about this matter coming up to-day, the hon. gentleman having called my attention to it. Dr. Neilson wrote me this letter:

Ottawa, June 5, 1900.

To the Hon. F. W. Borden,
Minister of Militia and Defence.

Sir,—Together with Col. Drury, who conducted the investigation, Col. Twitchell, Consul General of the United States, who was throughout much interested in the test and its outcome, and other officers of the Kingston garrison, I was present at the examination of five soldiers who have voluntarily submitted to the one month test of feeding exclusively on protein vegetal. The examination of each individual was made under oath. I personally knew four of these men, and could have no reasonable doubt as to their veracity. I at the time secured samples, which I have since preserved in my office—this with a view of future test or comparison. When, in January last, it was thought advisable to provide the second contingent five days' emergency for each man of the contingent, for use on occasion of great exertion, short army rations, &c., I could think of nothing more suitable than the protein vegetal I had seen tested at Kingston. When Mr. Devlin submitted samples with his tender, unknown to this gentleman I compared them with the specimens I had preserved since April, and found them identical. The specimen I had kept was perfectly preserved.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,

F. H. NEILSON,
Lt.-Col. D.G., M.S.

As to the purchase of this food, I do not think I need take up the time of the House to discuss the propriety, the urgency, the necessity, the wisdom of providing for an emergency. We were sending out our second contingent; we had had experience of the trouble and the starvation which in some cases attended our soldiers in South Africa; and therefore, I think even the hon. gentleman will agree with me that it was a prudent thing to provide these men with the very best we could of everything, and we believed we were doing it. This is the authority upon which I did it:

Ottawa, January 4, 1900.

To the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Sir,—I recommend that the troops of the second contingent be provided with five days rations of protein vegetal, as tendered for by Dr. F. E. Devlin. This substance has been thoroughly tested on five members of 'A' Battery, Royal Canadian Artillery, during one month of last year. It proved itself then to be a complete food in a most concentrated form. It is palatable, light, agrees with delicate stomachs, and does not deteriorate if kept dry. As an emergency ration, under conditions of great exertion, fatigue, forced marching, &c., it appears to me to be admirably adapted.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

F. H. NEILSON,

Director General of Medical Affairs.

And on the side, in my own handwriting, is my approval of the purchase of that food. Here is the tender of Dr. Devlin to supply the Department of Militia and Defence 2,233 pounds of vegetable protein powder; and on the strength of the offer made and of the statement and recommendation of the director general of medical affairs, I authorized the purchase.

Mr. MONK. May I ask the hon. gentleman whom he purchased from?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have already stated from Dr. F. E. Devlin.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. MONK. What about the Hatch Food Company, whose food had been tested?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not know anything about Mr. Hatch or his food company. I have only known Dr. Devlin from the first. I believed I was dealing with a reputable member of the medical profession, and I have not yet seen any reason to change my mind. As I said at the outset, Dr. Devlin proposed to the Militia Department the idea of trying and testing this food, and he did it on certificates which he held from Sir William Hingston, Prof. Ruttan, and others. I acted on the advice of my director general of medical affairs, and gave that test and purchased that food—as I supposed and believed, the same food—to send to South Africa; and that is the food which has been sent to South Africa, and which, I believe, when we get the results of the experience there, will turn out to be all that it has been represented to be. At any rate, even the hon. gentleman, with all his zeal for fair-play, his regard for the interests of the soldiers in South Africa, and without any feeling of malice against me or the government, has been unable to bring forward a single tittle of evidence to show that there has been the slightest complaint against this food.

Mr. MONK. Have you any of the present food on hand?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. Now, I wish to emphasize Dr. Neilson's letter to me, in which he states distinctly that he had kept in reserve, for purposes of comparison, samples of the food which was actually used in 1899 at Kingston, and that unknown to Dr. Devlin, when he furnished the samples of food to be sent to South Africa, he had instituted a comparison and satisfied himself that the foods were identical.

Mr. TISDALE. As I understand the minister, these analyses were made from the samples produced, not from the body of the food purchased.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have samples taken from the different large boxes which were sent. Now, I do not know where the hon. gentleman got his information; presumably from Mr. Hatch, if there be such a gentleman. There is some doubt about it, I believe.

Mr. MONK. He is well known.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not well known. Nobody knows that his name is Hatch. There is a man, I believe—

Mr. MONK. Well known.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not well known. I want to ask the hon. gentleman where he got this information. He said here that the Minister of Militia promised Mr. Hatch or somebody else an order forsooth for the North-west Mounted Police. Does not the hon. gentleman know that the Minister of Militia has nothing to do with the North-west Mounted Police?

Mr. MONK. I beg to correct the hon. gentleman. I never mentioned the North-west Mounted Police.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I took the hon. gentleman's words down, and he said that the Minister of Militia promised an order in Montreal for the North-west Mounted Police, and Hansard will show whether the hon. gentleman used these words or not. I do not wish to prolong this debate further than to say that I understand the hon. gentleman to adopt the language contained in the article which he read from the Military Gazette, and which contains these words: 'What consideration did the people in authority get for this order?' Does the hon. gentleman adopt that language. If he adopts that language and has the courage of his convictions, if he will stand up here and say that he applies that language to me, the hon. gentleman need not wait five minutes for his committee. He can have his commission at once, but let the hon. gentleman understand that when he adopts that language as his own and makes that statement, he is making it with the full responsibility of the place he holds in this House.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman allow me? I did not adopt that article, but I asked for an investigation. I make no insinuations against anybody, but I say that this article calls for an investigation.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then the hon. gentleman does not take the responsibility of the language which, after two months careful consideration, he read in this House.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman is again mistaken. I only became aware of that article and the facts I have stated to the House within the last few days. I wanted to bring them to the notice of the House at once, but at the hon. gentleman's special request, I waited until to-day. I do not adopt that article. I do not insinuate that the hon. gentleman has received any consideration. I would not dream of any such thing, but I ask for an investigation, and I think we must have one.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman has not any insinuation to make, he would have done better not to have read that portion of the article, or, when he did read it, to have disclaimed any responsibility. It is only after he has had the opportunity of leaving me under the shadow of an imputation of that kind and after my calling his attention to the fact, that he states to this House that he did not intend to adopt that part of the language of the article, and I think I have a right to complain of the want of generosity and fair-play on the part of the hon. gentleman.

I have here the words of the hon. gentleman, as taken down by the Hansard reporter, and this is what he said: That you promised in Montreal to give an order for the mounted police in the Yukon. I did not promise and never promised an order to anybody for anything. All the promise I made was that I would have this food carefully tested at Kingston, and I had it carefully tested after I was advised to do so by the director general of medical affairs.

The hon. gentleman wants an inquiry. It seems to me he is taking a new departure in this House. I have been a member of it for a good many years, but it is the first time I ever knew of a question of this kind brought up in this way. I have known hon. gentlemen who had the courage of their convictions, who had charges to make against ministers of the Crown and members of parliament, and who had the courage to stand up in the House and make those charges and stand or fall by them. I have known of investigations before the Public Accounts Committee, which is the proper place at any rate to initiate and make the first inquiry into anything that may be considered a questionable transaction. I understand such has been the practice in the past. I understand, too, that heads of departments have received from responsible members of this House, occupying leading positions on the opposition benches, demands that investigation should be made in their own departments as to certain matters going on there. I think that the hon. gentleman might have called my attention to what he says he believes to have been an imposition practiced on the Militia Department. I think that that would have been the wiser course. I believe that this is a proper question for departmental inquiry. I may say on this head, however, that I hold in my hand a report from Dr. Ruttan, Professor of Chemistry, I think, in the University of McGill, and official analyst of the city of Montreal, upon a sample of this food which I believe to be the same as that sent to South Africa. His report is certainly of a most satisfactory character, and perhaps I ought to read it. His test was made on the 18th of May, and he reports as follows:

May 18, 1900.

Dear Mr. Devlin,—I find on analysis of the two samples of food matter submitted that they give the following results:

Sample No. 2867, consisting of a mixture of starch and proteids, was used for the experiments on digestion, and the results of the tests of the digestibility of the proteids and starch in this sample of food were, briefly, that the proteid of the foodstuff was intermediate in ease and digestion between fresh fibrine of blood and white of egg. As an average of three experiments, I found fibrine digested in one hour and ten minutes; the proteids of the foodstuff in one hour and forty-five minutes; white of egg in two hours and twenty minutes.

The starch was, of course, found to be readily digested in any form of diastase after being properly cooked. I examined the sample of pure protied food No. 2868, and found that it contained 88·8 per cent of proteids, which is a larger quantity than I have found in any other proteid food.

I remain, sincerely yours,
R. F. RUTTAN.

Mr. PRIOR. That was not the food sent to South Africa.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, it was. This, mind you, was submitted by Dr. Devlin and not by me. I am going to give the House the full benefit of the facts; I have nothing to conceal. That was submitted to Prof. Ruttan, and this is the letter which he has written to Dr. Devlin, and which was forwarded to Lieut.-Colonel Neilson, the director general of medical affairs—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was this sample from the ship?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot say.

Mr. MONK. When was this food purchased, or sent to South Africa?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In January. Dr. Neilson has now in his possession samples of that food.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) misunderstood the minister.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What I wish to ask is whether the minister knew whether the samples on which this report was made was actually from the ship?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The minister has some now on hand.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The director general has some on hand. I think I correctly understood my hon. friend (Mr. Montague). I had already stated to the House that I had not submitted this sample. But Dr. Devlin assures me over his own signature. Here it is in his own handwriting:

2867 is the exact emergency ration supplied to Militia Department for troops.

Mr. MONK. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) give the date of the purchase?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have given it a dozen times already—4th of January. That is, I do not know the date of purchase, but, on the 4th of January, the director general of medical affairs made his recommendation. This is the original document, and across it I wrote my approval; and, of course, the food was purchased after that date—I presume very soon after it, because it was shipped in January.

Mr. MONK. As a matter of fact, you do not know the date?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, now, with reference to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Monk's) demand for a committee, I have only to say that he is welcome to any inquiry that he wishes. He can have this committee at any time he wants it, and the sooner the better. That is all I have to say to the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I am much at a loss to know the cause of the wonderful heat with which the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden, King's) has approached this question. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier brought before this House in temperate language—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER—in temperate language, language as temperate as such a case would admit of. The statement he made, if well founded, was one of the most startling statements that could possibly be made to the House. It was that the Minister of Militia had had submitted to him by a gentleman an emergency food which this gentleman represented as of great value. The Minister of Militia took the very wise precaution of having that food tested in the most thorough manner by actual test, by putting a certain number of people to subsist wholly upon it. It was found upon analysis that this food contained 60 per cent of nutriment. The result of the tests was to satisfy the Minister of Militia that it was a most valuable food product in cases where circumstances made it necessary to have, in small bulk, nutriment upon which human life could be sustained for a considerable number of days. The hon. member (Mr. Monk) stated to the House that we had reason to believe that a monstrous imposition had been practised, that, instead of having claimed that food so tested and approved, parties had been able to substitute a comparatively worthless article; and that, in fact, the Minister of Militia had been induced by somebody to pay $5,000 for an article of food for which $400 would be a large price.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Will the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) allow me one moment—I know he would not wish to give the impression without information at any rate, that the Militia Department had declared the label. It was part of the understanding that these packages should be put up in a certain way, and that they should be labelled by the manufacturers who signed them. The label was entirely made by him, and the responsibility is entirely his.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, King's), has not improved his position at all by his explanation. The question is whether by any means any man living was able to commit such a fraud on the Militia Department, as to have substituted a worthless article, and have it sent for the use of our troops in South Africa, labelled as the identical food upon which a number of persons had subsisted for thirty days. If that were true, as my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has reason to believe it is, instead of the Minister of Militia having any ground for temper or for complaint against the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), he is under the deepest obligation to him for the opportunity to have that story so frightful—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, is it not a frightful story, if we have had shipped to South Africa material only worth 10 cents a pound which has been represented as an emergency food upon which men have subsisted for thirty days? A more frightful fraud never was brought to the attention of parliament, if true. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier has reason to believe, from the evidence placed before him, that this was the fact; and I would ask the Minister of Militia whether he would have any member of this House so far forget what he owes to the country and to the gallant men who have taken their lives in their hands and gone to fight our battles in South Africa, as to fail to bring the matter to the attention of the minister, and give him an opportunity for explanation. Now, the point in which, it seems to me, the minister has altogether failed to give a satisfactory explanation to the House is this—he says that Dr. Devlin was the contractor from whom he purchased—the party who received the money. Then, I say, that makes Dr. Devlin's certificate and Dr. Devlin's assurances perfectly worthless. And in a matter of such grave moment as this, the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence was bound by the duty of the high position he occupies, and by the relation in which he stood between the vendor of this product and the men who were to use it, to have other and different testimony as to the quality of the material he was buying than any certificate or statement furnished by the vendor. He was absolutely bound to have that examination in such a way as to satisfy himself that he was not sending a worthless product worth only ten cents a pound, and containing 17 per cent of nutriment, instead of an article that he himself had tested and found to contain 60 per cent of nutriment, and to be worth $2 a pound. Now, what happened? It appears that the chemist who has produced this article was applied to for a certain quantity of it, and the applicant got a box for which he was asked $3. Why? Because the chemist said that he had received an immense order from the Militia Department, and had much greater orders in prospective, that he had let the department have it for $2, but he would not sell a tin of this food containing a pound for less than $3, and $3 was paid. And the highest and most respectable chemist that can be found in the country, as the member for Jacques Cartier asserts, examines that tin of food and declares it to be food of the same description as was sent to South Africa, and labelled as the protein upon which men had subsisted for thirty days, and he finds it utterly worthless. I ask the leader of the government whether any man who has such information placed in his hands by respectable parties, by men whose statements he has reason to believe reliable, would not fail in his duty if he did not do what the member for Jacques Cartier has done, that is, give the Minister of Militia and Defence notice that he intended to bring that question up and discuss it, as it has been discussed here. The matter is one of too grave a character to be dealt with by personalities bandied across the floor of this House, or insinuations of any kind whatever. It appears that the member for Jacques Cartier used the words 'mounted police' instead of 'permanent force'; but he referred to the fact of the Minister of Militia and Defence having stated to this party that he intended, having found the food of an admirable character, to send a portion of it to the Yukon, where it would be convenient to have a food of small bulk containing a large amount of nutriment. I do not intend to offer any opinion, but, I say the facts detailed by the member for Jacques Cartier, and the explanations offered by the Minister of Militia and Defence, make it absolutely necessary, in vindication of the character of the Minister of Militia and Defence, and his department, that this matter should promptly be referred to a select committee of this House. It is highly necessary to have testimony taken, not merely ex parte testimony, not merely the personal views of men, however respectable, in order that we may arrive at a conclusion on a matter of so grave moment. When we have these parties brought face to face, and evidence adduced before that committee, let that committee report to this House in vindication of the Militia Department, if it can be vindicated, from one of the most frightful charges that was ever brought against any department or any minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Who makes the charge? Nobody has made a charge up to this moment. A mere newspaper rumour is not a basis for a charge.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say the bitterest enemy of the Minister of Militia and Defence, the bitterest enemy of this government, would be the man who, in face of the statements made and the names given by the member for Jacques Cartier—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What name? No name is given.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He has given the name of the inventor of the food tested at Kingston, he has given the name of the chemist who examined the food, and the test; he has given the name of a high chemist who has examined the food, and declared it to be a portion of the same food that was sent to South Africa. I say the Minister of Finance would be the bitterest enemy of the Minister of Militia and Defence if, in face of these statements, he was to interpose the slightest difficulty in having such a charge promptly referred to an independent committee of this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On a mere newspaper paragraph.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, it is exasperating to find a gentleman, a member of the government, listening to a detailed statement of the names—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No names.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER—and all the circumstances connected with this matter, as detailed by the member for Jacques Cartier, and then talk about a newspaper paragraph. Why, Sir, even if it be a newspaper paragraph—and the paper is the Military Gazette—if there was no foundation for the statement, the Minister of Militia and Defence ought to have taken these parties into court months ago in order to vindicate his department from the foul aspersions that were made against it, if he was in possession of facts that would vindicate him from these aspersions. I believe my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will be the first to say that this matter cannot be too promptly referred to a committee to be thoroughly investigated.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry this matter—which may, perhaps, turn out to be a grave one, but which, up to this time, does not seem to me to be of that character at all—has not been approached in a more temperate manner by the hon. gentleman who brought it to the attention of the House. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence, notwithstanding anything that has been said by the leader of the opposition, had only too good reason to resent the manner in which the hon. member (Mr. Monk) brought this charge. The hon. member bases the charge, first of all, upon a newspaper article, which he read from the first to the last line, in which there was a base insinuation against the Minister of Militia and Defence, in which the question was asked: What consideration has been paid by the vendor of that food to the military authorities to induce them to purchase it? If the hon. member thought proper to bring that matter to the attention of the House, he had no reason to endorse the statement of that paper; he did not at first disclaim responsibility, but, later on, when his attention was called to it, he disclaimed any responsibility; but at first he endorsed it and made it the basis of his charge. Now, I appeal to the sense of justice and fairness of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House if, upon a matter of this kind, too important to be considered as a personal matter, we should not approach it, not for the purpose of trying to make any political capital out of it, but from the point of view of the public interest, and of the interest of the militia, and of the brave men who are now fighting in South Africa. But, no reserve was made by the member for Jacques Cartier—I listened to him carefully, I do not think I lost a word of what he said—I appeal to the sense of every man in this House if the member for Jacques Cartier did not discuss this charge from first to last as if it had been already proved. He discussed the conduct of the Minister of Militia and Defence, not as an accused, but as a culprit. Well, under such circumstances my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence would not be the honest man that he is if he had not resented the manner in which the charge was brought against him.

I will now give to the House what I think myself to be the case, so far as it has been made out. The member for Jacques Cartier evidently thought that the Minister of Militia and Defence had not taken the due precaution which, in a matter of this kind, should have been taken for the protection of the health and the lives of the men who were sent to South Africa. That is the charge. Now, in face of that charge I want the House to remember what was the defence—I will not say 'defence,' because I do not wish even to use that word—but, what was the explanation given by the Minister of Militia and Defence? More than a year ago, he was approached by Dr. Devlin, a reputable physician, a man who, I believe, is one of the leading physicians in one of the leading hospitals in Montreal, to bring to his attention an emergency food, a food which might be found available in circumstances of emergency. He was recommended to the Minister of Militia by whom? By Sir William Hingston; no greater authority exists in Canada than Sir William Hingston on matters medical. He was recommended again, by whom? By Professor Ruttan, a gentleman who is understood to be the leading chemist in this country. With such recommendations it was the duty of the Minister of Militia to test the food offered to him. It was tested; it was found to be satisfactory. The test was conducted with great care, to see if protein food would have all the virtues which were claimed for it by the man who had introduced it to the attention of the Minister of Militia. That was some time in the winter of 1899. In the following year, unfortunately, there was a war. Our troops were sent to South Africa, and Dr. Devlin came to the Minister of Militia to suggest the advisability of supplying the troops with the food which he had previously brought to the attention of the minister. The matter was referred to the director general of the medical staff, Dr. Neilson, to report upon it. Dr. Neilson recommended that the Department of Militia should purchase a certain amount of the food for the use of the troops. The Minister of Militia then entered into a contract. Now, it is in the minds of some hon. gentlemen that the Minister of Militia, at the time that he purchased the food, did not use proper care and precaution. That is what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had in his mind, and that is evidently what several other hon. gentlemen had in their minds. But now, I call the attention of the House to what was done by the Department of Militia. The Minister of Militia referred the samples furnished by Dr. Devlin of the food to be supplied, and which was to be purchased, to the director general; they were found by the director general to be the same as those produced last year, and they were found to have every character of the food which had been examined here. They were found to be absolutely identical. The department took the precaution of keeping these samples, and they are in the Department of Militia to be tested when the time comes to have them tested. I want to know, in the name of common sense, what other precautions the minister could take? That is what has been done. What comes next? The hon. member for Jacques Cartier says the food which was sold has not the character of the food which was tested by the Department of Militia. The food which was sold, therefore, if we are to believe the statement made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, a moment ago, you would have to come to the conclusion, was not the same. He says that a box was purchased, and that the contents were analysed, but he does not give the name of the party who purchased the box and analysed the contents.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. MONK. I gave the name of the analyst.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, but the name of the purchaser, who made the charge. But, now, I go one step further. Dr. Devlin sold a certain quantity of food for which he received $4,600. He gave the Department of Militia a sample of the food which he sold. The Department of Militia analysed it. It was found to be good, it was found to be proper, and if that same food has gone to South Africa, there is no complaint to be made.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the whole point.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have to come to this supposition, and the insinuation is, that Dr. Devlin did not deliver to the troops the same food of which he had given a sample to the Department of Militia; that is to say, that Dr. Devlin, who is an honest and respectable man, one of the leading citizens of Montreal, one of the leading physicians of one of the leading hospitals in that city, who was recommended to the Minister of Militia by such a man as Sir William Hingston, one of the most respectable men in public life to-day, one of the most able men in his profession, had committed the unspeakable crime of having substituted other food for that which he sold. That is the charge. There would be no crime against my hon. friend the Minister of Militia if he had been imposed upon in this manner. But, to accept the statement made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, we must assume and believe, not that anything wrong has been done by my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, but that Dr. Devlin, the man who contracted with the government, has been guilty of a crime which would stamp his name with infamy, which would be reckoned as one of the most odious and heinous crimes ever perpetrated in any civilized country. That is the charge that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier makes against Dr. Devlin. Let me say to the hon. gentleman that it is not against my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, that he makes any charge to-day. But he charges Dr. Devlin, upon his responsibility—I do not know if he would go to that extent or not—but, at all events, he has in his speech to-day, charged that Dr. Devlin a respectable citizen, with having committed one of the most infamous, one of the most heinous crimes, ever committed in a civilized country.

Mr. MONK. I never made any such charge.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER. Of course you did.

The PRIME MINISTER. What does the hon. gentleman mean then, when he says that we have sent to South Africa a food that is spurious, stuff which is not worth 10 cents a pound, for which we have paid $2 a pound? Now, the hon. gentleman says that he never made any such charge.

Mr. MONK. Who did it?

The PRIME MINISTER. The man who sold the stuff to the department. Who else could do it? That is the charge we have before us. If there were such a crime ever committed, there is no punishment in any penitentiary in this country which would be too great for a man who committed such a crime. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier knows the consequences of his act, and perhaps now he thinks that he has been a little too previous in speaking as he has done. It would have been far better if he had gone a little more cautiously than he has done. Governments can be imposed upon. History has recorded that Sir John Franklin lost his life because a contractor imposed upon the Imperial government. We know that Sir John Franklin lost his life because that which had been supplied to him as food, was not food at all. All governments can be imposed upon, but it is not fair for the hon. gentleman, or even for my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, to assume that there has been any wrongdoing. For my part, I am not willing to do that. I cannot believe that any such crime has been committed, but after all, whenever, and wherever the hon. gentleman brings his charge, it will receive, so far as the government is concerned, the amplest consideration.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), has cleared up some things which seemed to lie in doubt in the mind of the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden). The hon. Minister of Militia attempted to make capital against the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), by charging him with maliciously preferring a charge against himself. The Prime Minister has devoted the last half of his statement to making it clear to the House that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier never intended to, and in fact, did not bring any charge at all against the hon. Minister of Militia.

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not say that he did not intend to, but that he did not.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister of Militia might be imposed upon or he might not be, but he acquitted the hon. member for Jacques Cartier of bringing any charge against the government because he says, governments may also be imposed upon. That is very true. I think my right hon. friend was very close to the kernel of the question, but it does seem to me that three things were evident. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is not, I think, an excitable, or a rash or an imprudent man. I will take the sense of the House on that. Since the hon. gentleman has been in this House he has commended himself to both sides as a careful, a very intelligent, and a very honourable member of this House. That is a fact upon which we will all be agreed. I listened very carefully to the representations made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and from first to last he made no insinuations, and did not intimate that he made any charge of corrupt dealing against the Minister of Militia. The only thing that could be tortured into that was the fact that he read an article from the Military Gazette in which that paper intimated that some of the authorities may have had some interest in the matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was that a fair thing to read?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly it was fair to read. And what could be fairer? Do you believe the hon. member for Jacques Cartier or not?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister without portfolio from the province of Quebec stands in this House and declares that he will not believe his brother member from Jacques Cartier.

Mr. DOBELL. I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman did.

Mr. DOBELL. I most distinctly did not say so. What I intimated was that I did not believe the statement made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the hon. gentleman need not believe the statement, but the question I put was whether the hon. member believed the member for Jacques Cartier and I understand the member for Quebec to say he did not.

Mr. DOBELL. I simply intimated that I did not believe the statement.

Mr. FOSTER. The question was this: Do the members of this House believe the word of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk)—my hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) will not say 'no' to that. When it was brought to the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) by the Minister of Militia that the article in the Military Gazette imputed improper transactions, my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) rose in a moment and stated that he did not take the responsibility of that article; and he did not make by inference, as he did not make in his speech, any insinuations of corrupt practice against the Minister of Militia, any charge against the government, unless it was the implied charge of negligence in not taking all the precautions that might have been taken to insure that there was no fraud. A sentence spoken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) at the end of his speech evidently comprised his intention. He asked that the matter be investigated in order that if any person had so imposed upon the brave soldiers who were sent to South Africa, that that person might be exposed and punished. That was the statement my hon. friend intended to make, and that is what he did make before this House. It may have been the Minister of Militia who so did this; my hon. friend did not say so. It may have been the director general of medical affairs who so did it; my hon. friend did not say so. It may have been Dr. Devlin; my hon. friend did not say so. It may have been the chemist who prepared the food or it may have been any other person whatsoever, but my hon. friend did not make a charge against any one of these. But, having looked into the matter himself, having obtained the evidence he has under his hand, having talked with the men who were the prime actors in this thing, and whose evidence he is prepared to bring before the committee, he considered that his information warranted him in bringing to the attention of the government the facts that he thought he had found out, and he asked that these be inquired into. Now, what could be a fairer position than that? My right hon. friend tried, as the Minister of Militia tried, to throw the onus on the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, of making a charge against a physician in the city of Montreal. The hon. member made no charge against Dr. Devlin. What he simply brought to the attention of the House was the facts as developed under his investigation, in which he says that a spurious food was in some way palmed off upon the soldiers, and that it went to South Africa, and what he wants to know is: Whose fault it is that that took place. Who are the actors in the matter? The prime actor is the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Militia is to be held responsible for everything for which he can fairly be held responsible. He is certainly to be held responsible for the exercise of every possible care, that the troops should not be imposed upon with a spurious food. Every one will agree with that. Was that care exercised or was it not? I will tell you a point in which I do not think it was as well exercised as it should have been. Whenever you are dealing with a man who wishes to be a contractor, and to get money for supplies that he offers, you have to deal with him as a third person and not at first hand. What I mean to say is, that whatever that contractor may be offering the government; whether it be stones for building material or saddlery for the cavalry, or medical stores, or whatever it is, you have no right to make the purchase and pay the money on the word and testimony of the man who is getting the contract to furnish the stores. Where I think the Minister of Militia did not go as far as he might have done was in this: That he cannot stand up to-day and say that he is certain that the last samples that were analysed were samples taken from packet after packet of what was actually shipped to South Africa. The hon. gentleman was fain to say half a dozen times over, that he believes it was the same food that was sent, and he thought it was, but as the Prime Minister says, the Minister of Militia may be imposed upon and it is possible for the substitution of a spurious for the tested food to have taken place, between the order that the Minister of Militia gave for buying from Dr. Devlin and the placing of the stores so purchased upon the troopships for South Africa. If this evidence is proved to be correct when it comes to be investigated that is where the case lies. We do not know who did it, neither did my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) say who did it. He does not say it was Dr. Devlin, he does not say it was the director general of medical affairs; he does not say it was the Minister of Militia, but his evidence makes it patent to him that there was a substitution of the spurious for the proper material and that it is the spurious material that went to South Africa. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is perfectly within his right. He makes no charges he ought not to make in this House, he does not go beyond his legitimate duty as a member of this House, and instead of calling down the ire of the Minister of Militia and the First Minister upon him, both ought to thank him for having brought this matter where it can be thoroughly tested by evidence before the committee. After all the main business is as between ourselves and the soldiers who went to South Africa. It is a smaller matter the lapse of the Minister of Militia in the way of carefulness; it is a smaller matter with reference to Dr. Devlin. Let me say that I do not know Dr. Devlin. I should be very sorry to know that it could ever be proved to be true that a medical doctor in Canada, occupying the position Dr. Devlin occupies, could be guilty of substituting a spurious for a tested food, which he had agreed to send to South Africa for the use of the troops. No man in this House has charged that or proposes to charge that; but the question is this: It is believed there has been a substitution of spurious food for tested food, and what the investigation ought to bring out is how that was done, if it was done, and who did it, in order that the proper punishment may be inflicted on the proper party.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that those who have been present throughout the whole of this discussion, and who will take the trouble to compare the speech of my hon. friend from York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) with the speech with which this matter was introduced into the House this afternoon by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), will discover a very wide difference in tone and temper between the two. At an early stage of this discussion, possibly somebody may have thought that something was wrong. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) has been for five or ten minutes explaining that there is absolutely no wrong at all, that nobody makes any charge against the Minister of Militia, nor against Dr. Devlin, nor against anybody; there is nobody at fault, nobody has made a charge, there is no complaint.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend think that is a fair statement?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do. I think that a comparison of the moderate, quiet, analytical, hair-splitting, apologetic speech of my hon. friend from York, with the speech which initiated this discussion this afternoon, will show a wide difference between them. My hon. friend from York has been labouring in vain to help his friend out of the uncomfortable hole in which he has placed himself. I have not been a member of this House very long; but I have come from another arena where party contention is warm and keen, and I say without the slightest hesitation that I have never known a more outrageous proceeding on such a small foundation; and I confess I am surprised that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has been the offender. My hon. friend from York was not far astray when he spoke of the moderate and temperate tone which usually characterizes the speeches of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. There are hon. gentlemen opposite who might have made these statements without our being the least surprised; but I am surprised that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier should so far depart from his usual moderate, fair and generous course, to make the statements he has made this afternoon. Now, let there be no mistake. In dealing with these charges across the House, we deal not with a point here or a point there, but with the whole tone and tendency of the speech; and throughout his whole speech this afternoon the hon. member for Jacques Cartier gave it to be understood that there was a great scandal. He appealed to this House to protect the rights of the troops who have gone to fight the battles of the empire in South Africa; he appealed to it in the sacred name of loyalty and devotion to the Throne, in order that he might cast an aspersion upon my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence. What are the facts?—not the facts, the statements, there are no facts before us. The hon. gentleman has found an article in a Conservative paper; and what hon. member of this House would like to be tried on a mere newspaper article? I suppose that if many of us were to take offence at the statements made from time to time by our opponents in the newspapers, we would have to spend a great deal of time in defending ourselves. Happily, with one or two exceptions, the members of this House do not waste time in discussing these matters. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier took up a vicious and infamous article, and he so far forgot what was due to himself as an hon. member of this House, a fair-minded and generous member, as to read the abominable charge that the Minister of Militia or somebody else in authority had been bribed to send this rotten stuff to South Africa. I ask the hon. gentleman to think the matter over again, and not try to excuse himself with the story that somebody else wrote it and that all he did was to read it in the House. If somebody else starts an infamous slander, and I, knowing nothing about it, take it up and repeat it at the street corners, I am no better than the man who starts it.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. MONK. I will send the article to the hon. gentleman, and he will find that there is no such insinuation in it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman read the article, and others drew that inference from it. The substance of what it said was: Who is it in the Militia Department who has received the consideration for this fraud? That is the substance of the statement which the hon. gentleman read. I say it was an unfair and unjust thing for the hon. gentleman to introduce this newspaper article at all, and I say he has not done himself justice. Now, it appears that there is a row between two rival food manufacturers in Montreal. One got the contract, and the other did not. It appears, so far as we can judge—because the names have been kept in the background—that the man who did not get the contract wants to make a fuss, and to make it appear that his rival defrauded the public interests of Canada.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is no ground for that statement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If it is not a rival manufacturer, who is it that makes any accusation against anybody? It is not the analyst. All that the analyst certifies is that a certain thing submitted to him gives certain results; but whether or not that is the thing sent to South Africa no one here knows. We have not testimony that one can of that went to South Africa; and in the absence of any testimony it is an outrageous proceeding to make any such charge, and I trust that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier will do, not the Minister of Militia justice, but himself the justice to say that he has made a grave mistake. I admit that in a case of this kind there are some things which an hon. member might bring to the notice of the House. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had the information which he claims he had, there are several ways in which he might use that information for the public good. He might, if he wished, make a personal and friendly call on the Minister of Militia and give him the information in a friendly way; but if for any reason he preferred to bring it up in the House, then he might have said that information of this kind had reached him, that he knew nothing of the matter whatever, that he did not wish to make any complaint, but that he would simply call the attention of the Minister of Militia to these reports and ask him to look into the matter and see if there was any foundation for them. If my hon. friend had proceeded in that way, he would have been within his rights and within the bounds of propriety. I ask him to reconsider the matter now, because I agree with nearly everything the hon. member for York has said as to the manner which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier usually adopts in addressing this House. I ask him not to do justice to the Minister of Militia, who is not assailed any longer, but to do justice to himself by withdrawing the imputation which he has been the means of presenting to the House.

Mr. ALEXANDER McNEILL (North Bruce). I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to follow the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat in his discourse with regard to the manner of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) or the particular form in which he may have framed the observations which he has made to the House. We have something very much more serious than that to consider. We do not intend to be drawn from the question we have to consider by discussions of the kind with which my hon. friend has just favoured us. What we want to know is the truth with regard to this 'emergency ration,' as it is called, which has been supplied to our troops in South Africa. We want to know whether or not those rations were what they professed to be. We want to know whether they contain 60 per cent of proteids. From the evidence laid before the House by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, we have reason to believe that they do not contain anything of the kind. We have reason to believe, on the statement of my hon. friend—and there is no man in this House who will question his statement—we know upon his statement that a reputable person went to the manufacturers and purchased from them a tin of the rations which they said were the same as those supplied our troops, and that that tin did not contain 60 per cent or 88 per cent, as the hon. minister said, but something less than 17 per cent. When I asked the Minister of Militia with regard to the matter, he said I knew nothing about it or words to that effect. I do not pretend to be a chemist, but I do profess to know something about the value of ordinary farm feeds, and I know that pease contain over 23 per cent of muscle-forming food, and this stuff supplied our soldiers contained only 17 per cent, according to this analyst.

The question we want to have determined is what was the nature of this material.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Does the hon. gentleman know that the food supplied South Africa only contains 17 per cent?

Mr. McNEILL. I say that we want to know whether it did or not, and we have reason to believe it did not contain more, and the very strongest reason, on the evidence supplied by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What is that?

Mr. McNEILL. The evidence he laid before the House was this. On his responsibility as a member of this House, he stated that a person, who, he says, is reputable and reliable, purchased a tin of this food from the manufacturers, which the manufacturers declared to be identical with what the Militia Department paid two dollars for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is the name of the manufacturers?

Mr. McNEILL. I do not care in the slightest degree what the name is. It was the firm that supplied this material to the Militia Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend did not say that.

Mr. McNEILL. That is just what he did say; and I want to call attention to this fact, that it does seem a most remarkable circumstance that the Minister of Militia should have purchased another food—a food distinct and different from the food the minister had tested.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He says he did not.

Mr. McNEILL. But he did. He said that it had been examined and reported to be of the same character, but at all events it was not manufactured by the same parties. We will not split hairs about words. As Bacon says, 'words are the counters of wise men, and the money of fools.' We want to get at the facts, and the fact is that this stuff which was supplied to our troops in South Africa was purchased from a different firm from that which supplied the food, a sample of which was tested.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. McNEILL. I say it was. Why, it has even a different name. It is called 'Vitaline,' which was not the name of the material provided to the troops.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The food which was tested at Kingston and sent to South Africa was supplied by the same man.

Mr. McNEILL. I did not say a word about the man, I spoke of the firm, Dr. Devlin is not the manufacturer, as I understand it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, he is.

Mr. McNEILL. Then he is not associated now with the same persons with whom he was associated before?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not imputing anything improper to the hon. gentleman, but I say there is sufficient evidence before the House to call for a most rigid and thorough investigation.

I want to ask my hon. friend a question. He knows, as he has admitted it, that the firm from which he purchased this food is a different firm from the one from which he purchased the proteid food.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. McNEILL. He said a moment ago it was.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). You are getting mixed.

Mr. McNEILL. Does my hon. friend say that the persons who supplied this food were the same as those who supplied the other? I am not speaking of Dr. Devlin, but of those who were associated with him. Were the same persons associated with him when the food was supplied to Kingston?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have nothing to do with the persons associated with him. I have said that Dr. Devlin supplied the first food, the food tested at Kingston, and he supplied the last food. He supplied the only food that I know anything about.

Mr. McNEILL. Is that what the hon. gentleman means by saying it is the same firm?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I gave the name.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not think he will say that Dr. Devlin is a firm. This food was supplied by different parties.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It seems impossible to make the hon. gentleman understand I dealt with no firm except Dr. Devlin from first to last.

Mr. McNEILL. Quite so, but the food that was supplied was food of a different name manufactured by a different concern.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Prove it.

Mr. McNEILL. Why was the name of the food changed? Did my hon. friend ask why the name of the food was changed?

Mr. McNEILL.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I had no occasion to ask.

Mr. McNEILL. Did my hon. friend, after he received samples of that food, or after the director general of medical stores had pronounced that it was identical with the other—did he inquire whether he had made a chemical analysis of the sample?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The matter was in the hands—

Mr. McNEILL. I am not asking my hon. friend whose hands it was in. He said it was examined and pronounced to be identical. What did he mean by examining? Was it analysed by the director general?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have read the director general's statement.

Mr. McNEILL. Exactly, the hon. gentleman knows no further than that. He does not state it was analysed at all. There is no statement at all that it was analysed, and we have no proof that it was. It was simply examined, and the hon. gentleman does not venture to say it was analysed. I want to ask my hon. friend another question.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 116) to incorporate the Acadia Loan Corporation.—(Mr. Russell.)

Bill (No. 158)—from the Senate—for the relief of Gertrude Bessie Patterson (on division).—(Mr. Richardson.)

J. W. ANDERSON'S PATENT RELIEF BILL.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 108) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of J. W. Anderson.—(Mr. Cargill.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is this Bill?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). A gentleman had a patent, and, by inadvertence, failed to pay the money for renewal at the time prescribed by the law. He lost his patent, and now asks leave to revive it on payment of the money. This Bill went through the committee. We lost two or three days of the committee on it. A number of amendments were moved which were not accepted, and the Bill stands now as it was originally introduced. This is simply a case where a man, in consideration of paying a portion of his premium, gets the time extended for a certain number of years. At the end of that number of years, if he wants to continue it, he must pay to the Commissioner of Patents a certain amount. He failed to do so on that day, he was a little behind, that was all.

Bill reported; Bill read the third time and passed.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EMERGENCY FOOD RATION.

House resumed debate on proposed motion of Mr. Monk, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McNEILL. At six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to the fact that it appeared from the statements of my hon. friend that there had been no analysis made of the sample given to the director general, and that, therefore, the statement that this vitaline was of equal value with the protose which had been supplied to the department and had been carefully tested, the statement that it was identical with protose, was a mistake. There has been no analysis of the substance, and it was quite impossible to tell by looking at it whether it was the same substance or not. Now I think there has been a good deal of misconception on the part of members of this House with reference to his protose. I am quite sure the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), had no desire to mislead the House in any way, I do not desire to impute to him for a moment, any desire to mislead the House in reference to this matter, although the answers that he gave to the questions that I put to him before six o'clock were, in my judgment, misleading, though not intentionally so. It was stated over and over again by hon. members on the other side of the House, while I was speaking, that this substance, vitaline, was manufactured by the same people who manufactured this other substance, protose. That, I wish to inform the members of the House, those who desire to know the facts with regard to this matter, as I presume we all do, is not a fact. Those who have manufactured this vitaline are not the people who were manufacturing the protose. The protose was tested by the department in the manner described by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, and also as described by the Minister of Militia and Defence, but the vitaline has never been so tested.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It has been.

Mr. McNEILL. When?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Recently.

Mr. McNEILL. When?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Recently. Later on, there will be a statement read to the House as to that very point.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman says that this vitaline which was supplied to our troops has been tested in the same manner in which the protose was tested at Kingston, that is to say, that soldiers were fed upon it, as they were in the case of protose. Is that the statement the hon. gentleman makes?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Let the hon. gentleman make his speech.

Mr. McNEILL. Well, but I want to know the facts as I go along.

An hon. MEMBER. You should know the facts.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend has interrupted me, and contradicted the statement I made as to a fact. All I want to know is what the fact is that the hon. gentleman states.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). You have no right to interrogate an hon. member across the floor.

Mr. McNEILL. I have a right. I presume that the hon. Minister of Militia does not wish to conceal any of the facts, and if he does not wish to conceal any of the facts I want to know the import of the fact he states. If he does not state the fact I would consider that he wishes to conceal something. I repeat the question. He has stated that this 'vitaline' has been tested, that this 'protose' has been tested, and I want to know whether they have been subjected to the same test.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Go on and make your speech.

Mr. FOSTER. Surely the hon. minister does not object to answer a question put in that way.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I want to say just one thing. In my whole experience I never knew of such an attempt made as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) is trying to make here to put an opponent, a minister, in a false position by throwing questions across the House, trying to get from me partial answers. I have made my statement; I shall be prepared to make statements later on when the opportunity offers. Let the hon. gentleman go on and make his statement, and he will be answered.

Mr. McNEILL. Never since I have had the honour of a seat in this House have I heard such an extraordinary statement. The hon. gentleman says that I want to get partial answers.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. I am asking him to give me a full answer, and his objection is that I want a partial answer. That is what I am objecting to. He interrupted me, and said that this 'vitaline' has been tested, and that 'protose' had been tested, and I asked him to explain that statement and to give a full answer to my question. Yet, he says that I want a partial answer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman wants to get answers.

Mr. McNEILL. I will ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), who seems to be very much stirred up in regard to this matter, to preserve order. I have not asked him to interrupt me while I am speaking; I have submitted to his interruptions, but I would feel obliged to the hon. gentleman if he would now be kind enough to preserve order in this House. The hon. Minister of Militia does not venture to say that the same test has been applied to this 'vitaline' as has been applied to 'protose.' He cannot make that statement, or, I am sure, he would make it. The facts of this case seem to me to be very grave. I am very sorry that the hon. minister should have accused me of desiring to put him, or any other member of this House, in a false position. I have no desire to do anything of the kind, but I have a desire, and I think there is a desire and a determination on the part of hon. members on this side of the House to have the fullest information in regard to this matter. If this information exonerates the hon. minister from any blame, all the better, but, at all events, it is right that the country should know what the truth is in regard to this matter, and we intend to know. I am sorry for the minister if an exposure of the truth and a knowledge of the truth should place him in a false position before the people. The fact is that the hon. minister purchased and tested a certain quantity of this substance called 'protose.' He obtained that from Dr. Devlin. He also obtained from Dr. Devlin another substance called 'vitaline.' I wish the House to understand that this 'vitaline' is not manufactured by the people who manufacture 'protose.' It is manufactured by a different firm altogether. The people who manufacture 'protose,' which had been so fully tested and approved by the department, are a firm well known in Montreal who are registered and who are responsible. The people who manufacture this 'vitaline' are an unknown firm comparatively, they are not registered, they are not responsible, and it is not possible to obtain any recompense or redress, if it be proved up to the hilt that they have been defrauding, in the manner in which we could have obtained redress from the other firm. There was a good deal of confusion in reference to this matter before six o'clock. The position of things is that the minister purchased this other substance, this 'vitaline,' and he did not purchase, for some reason or other the substance called 'protose,' which he had thoroughly tested and approved. That is the fact that stares us in the face to begin with. Then, there is another fact; we know that this new substance, 'vitaline,' which has been purchased, is submitted to the director general of military stores, and that he pronounces that it is identical with the 'protose,' but, he makes that statement without having analysed the substance. I say that any such statement without an analysis is of no value whatever. There is no man living who, by merely opening a case of this kind and looking at it, can say whether it is identical with the other substance or not. It is only by a careful analysis that that can be discovered. We find that the hon. minister, on a statement of that kind, without having had any analysis, determines that he will purchase this new, unknown substance 'vitaline,' and reject the well-tested and approved substance 'protose.' I think this is something that requires an explanation without going any further. Now, we have something more. The people who manufacture this 'protose,' a substance which has been tested and approved by the department, but which, for some absolutely unexplained reason, has now been rejected by the department, are people of standing, people well known to the medical profession, as food specialists, men who had been recommended by the highest medical authorities in the country. We find, if my memory serves me right, that on the 25th of January, this firm addressed a registered letter to the hon. Minister of Militia calling his attention to the fact that this new substance which he has purchased is a fraud, that it is not of the nature which he supposed it to have been when he made the purchase. The writer of this letter gives him a most explicit warning of that fact. I will read the letter:

I just happened to hear of a large purchase of 'proteide food' from Messrs. Devlin & Lyons, of this city, for the Canadian contingent. If such is the case, I consider it to be my right and my duty to inform you that such a supply can only rest upon a poor and fraudulent adulteration of my 'protose,' as it is done without my knowledge, and has nothing in common with the product tested in Kingston last spring. This will be easily detected by analysis of the food supplied, to which end I intend to take the necessary steps in order to protect my interests. A sample of mine could, of course, have been easily obtained from any druggist, but the articles, if already supplied, are not mine, and cannot be identical with those used at the military test. This I thought advisable to bring to Your Excellency's knowledge for any emergency.

Your humble servant,

Some hon. MEMBERS. Who signs that?

Mr. McNEILL. That is signed by 'H. H.:' by Mr. Hatch, the manufacturer of the protose, the substance which had been accepted by the department, and which had been tested and thoroughly approved. Now then, what I want to know from the minister is this: Whether, upon the receipt of a warning of that kind—which he might fairly, without any impropriety, assume was not altogether an unprejudiced statement, because it would be reasonable enough to suppose that the man who had not succeeded in getting the contract might feel a certain amount of jealousy with regard to the person who had got the contract—but, on the face of a statement of this kind, from a thoroughly respectable and reliable firm, which has been recommended to the minister by the highest medical authorities in Canada, as he himself said, whose products had been tested by the minister himself, what I want to ask the minister is this: Whether, having received that warning, he did take any steps to have this substance analysed? I would like to have an answer from the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. McNEILL. Will the minister answer that question?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on with your speech.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He is afraid to answer it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Thank you.

Mr. McNEILL. I must say that I think this is a very disgraceful exhibition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I agree with you.

Mr. McNEILL. In my judgment, it is a most disgraceful exhibition. The people of this country have a right to have an answer to that question. Here was this new substance, this untested substance, this unanalysed substance, purchased, or about to be purchased, by the minister, and he received from this thoroughly reliable company a solemn warning that it is a fraudulent substance, and is not of the nature that it was described to be—I say that the country has the right to know whether the minister had that substance analysed before he sent it out to be used by our soldiers in South Africa. If the hon. minister refuses to answer the question, he is within his right, but I do not think it is either very courteous or very candid.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot learn courtesy from you.

Mr. McNEILL. If my hon. friend will tell me in what respect I have been discourteous to him, then I shall be very glad to apologize to him. But, Sir, I do not think it is want of courtesy to state facts, and I have stated nothing but facts. I have made no imputation whatever in regard to the minister, except that if he has not had the substance analysed, I impute to him very great negligence at the least; I would call it criminal negligence in a case of this kind. If the minister considers that discourtesy, then I must say that I repeat the statement. Now, the hon. minister refuses to say whether this substance was analysed or not at his request, and we have the right to assume—unless he states to the contrary before the conclusion of this debate—that it was not analysed at his request. I would like to ask the minister another question, but I suppose it is almost useless. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he knows if there was any analysis made of this substance either at his request or otherwise?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on with your speech.

Mr. McNEILL. Very well. The minister will neither say that he had the substance analysed at his request, nor will he say that there was any analysis made of it in Ottawa at all. We are, therefore, face to face with this most extraordinary condition of things: That our Canadian volunteers are being sent out to South Africa to be supplied with those emergency rations, which I have the right to assume under the silence of the minister, were not analysed, notwithstanding the solemn warning he had received that it was a fraudulent compound. What are emergency rations? Emergency rations, as we all know, are rations that are to be used in case of extreme need at the very time when it is most important of all that they should be thoroughly reliable, and here are these rations, which had been sent out to South Africa and which the analysis of a gentleman in Kingston proves were not nearly as valuable for sustenance as is pea-meal. The value of pea-meal in muscle-forming food is twenty-three and a fraction, and this substance is less than seventeen. That statement is made on the evidence of an analyst in Kingston—

Mr. FOSTER. Montreal.

Mr. McNEILL. That statement is made by an analyst in Montreal, who is one of the most famous analysts in Canada. The substance which was analysed was bought from the company manufacturing it by a Mr. Moore of Montreal, a gentleman who, I am informed, is thoroughly reliable and above suspicion or reproach. We learn, therefore, that the men who went out from Canada, taking their lives in their hands, to fight the battle of equal rights, and to fight the battle of equal justice, and to fight the battle of our own empire in South Africa, we learn that the men who have covered this country with honour, have been treated in this manner by the head of the Militia Department in this country. If the hon. gentleman would have done me the courtesy to answer the question I put to him, it would have been more satisfactory, but, in the absence of his answer, in the absence of his statement that there has been any analysis, I must assume that this substance was purchased and sent out there for our brave soldiers without analysis, so far as the minister is concerned, and in the face of this solemn warning he had received. Under these circumstances, it is surely only right and just that we should have a full and searching investigation into this matter. If any one was ever justified in bringing a case before the House, I think the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was justified in the course he pursued to-day. When I sit down my hon. friend the Minister of Militia would not do me the courtesy of answering the question while I was on my feet. I would like him to give me an answer, as to whether or not, in the first place, he ordered an analysis of this substance, and if he did not, whether he knows if any analysis at all was made of it after delivery in Ottawa. I think the country has a right to know.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McNEILL. Is my hon. friend going to allow the Minister of Militia to answer that question?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In January last, a certain quantity of this food, called emergency food, was bought by the Militia Department, for the purpose of being served to the contingent, then on the eve of leaving for South Africa. The contingent left for South Africa, and after arriving there, took part in what has been described as the biggest forced march on record, from Beira to Mafeking. This shows what the Canadians were able to do; and without any complaint from any of the soldiers of the quality of the food provided for them, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), this afternoon proceeded to make a charge against the Minister of Militia, taking for his text an article published in the Canadian Military Gazette, in April last; and, in order that the House might thoroughly understand the nature of the charge he made, he proceeded to read from this article, among other things, the following paragraph:—

Though the contract had been promised for this food, it was not bought; but, instead, the contract was given to other persons in Montreal. A peculiar circumstance is that the label on the 'Vitaline' ration contains the following words: 'On this diet, with tea and coffee, Canadian soldiers have lived in perfect health twenty-one to thirty days.'

Here is the paragraph on which most emphasis was placed by my hon. friend.:

Mr. McNEILL.

This and other matters are likely to be aired elsewhere; but, in the meantime, it might be explained on what consideration such a contract was taken from a reliable and experienced food chemist, whose ration had been specially tested, and placed in the hands of others who do not possess the same qualification of experience, and whose food was accepted without tender, untested and unanalysed.

My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier made this article his own; he took it as the text from which he delivered his oration to the House. What was the result? The leader of the opposition, after having heard the statement of the Minister of Militia, got up and apologized for the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker. I give the hon. gentleman a full and flat contradiction. On the contrary, I said the very reverse. I said that the member for Jacques Cartier would have failed in his duty to the House and the country, if he had not done exactly what he did.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I accept the contradiction of the hon. leader of the opposition, and I am content to find that as usual, hon. gentlemen on the other side approve of it. But I was dealing, not with the contradiction which the hon. leader of the opposition has now made, but with the speech which he made; and I am certain that I simply interpret what is now uppermost in the minds of all those who heard him, when I say that previous to his contradiction, I would have repeated what I have just said, that he apologized for the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not a word.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. And now I proceed to say that the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), amplified the apology made by the hon. leader of the opposition, which he did not find full and sufficient enough. The hon. member for York proceeded to say that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier did not attack the Minister of Militia nor the director of medical supplies, nor Dr. Neilson, nor the contractor. Then, whom does he attack? What are we discussing?

Mr. McDougall. Tell us something about the stuff.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have no doubt my hon. friend is anxious that I should go on to something that perhaps would be more agreeable to him, than to hear pointed out the delinquencies of some of those for whom he is responsible as his leaders. I say the hon. member for York, who appears to be the only one who has dealt with this matter, as one who wanted to reason it out, apologized for the attack on the Minister of Militia, apologized for the attack on the contractor, apologized for the insinuation made against the director of medical supplies.

Mr. FOSTER. Now that the hon. gentleman has made all his statements. I beg leave to give them a most unqualified and courteous denial.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When he went on to say what is in the minds of all—and they will appreciate the value of the denial—that the only thing he would deal with, was the possibility of the contractor having substituted for the material purchased, some spurious article to send to South Africa.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me, I beg leave to say that he has misrepresented again, unwittingly, my position in this respect.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not going to say anything further than this: what I have said will go on Hansard, side by side with what the hon. member has said, and I am content to allow the House to decide between us.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What about the country?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Some hon. gentleman may interrupt once too often. I was going to say, dealing with the matter in hand, that in the month of April, 1899, this material, which has been called in the course of this debate, emergency food, was tested by the Department of Militia, at Kingston.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Which food is that?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman has made a statement, and we have a right to ask a question. Which food does the hon. gentleman refer to?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This food known as emergency food was tested in the month of April, 1899.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he refers to protose or vitaline?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was about to say, when I was interrupted, that the food called emergency food was tested in the month of April, 1899.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Both foods were emergency foods, so-called. Was the vitaline tested in Kingston, or was it the protose?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was about to say, when I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, that in the month of April, 1899, this food which has been known throughout this discussion, as emergency food, was tested at Kingston.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. I shall have to ask the House to come to order. We cannot make any progress in this way.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I rather like this sort of thing, myself, Mr. Speaker. It was tested at Kingston, and found to be eminently satisfactory. I am now dealing with that substance which has been called throughout this debate 'emergency food.'

Mr. FOSTER. Which branch of it?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. On the 27th of November, 1899, Dr. F. E. Devlin wrote the following letter to the Minister of Militia:

Having made a food test last spring, at the instance of the Department of Militia, through your kind permission, upon Her Majesty's soldiers of 'A' Battery, Royal Canadian Artillery, and the Royal Military College of Kingston, Ont., the official evidence of which at the time I had the honour of submitting to you, I would now call your attention to the same, as I am desirous of bringing to the attention of the Home War Office the value of the food I used on that occasion for the further service of Her Majesty's troops elsewhere.

This was written on the 27th of November, 1899, and signed by F. E. Devlin. In that letter he referred to the official test which had been made at Kingston by the director general of medical stores in the month of April preceding. On the 4th of January following, the director general of medical stores gave this certificate:

I recommend that the troops of the second contingent be provided with five days' rations of Protine Vegetal, as tendered for by Mr. F. E. Devlin.

The examination or the test made in the month of April, 1899, was made without reference to any contract then foreseen or intended to be entered into with the government. The test was then made in the abstract, merely for the purpose of testing the quality of the food. This test was made by the director general of medical stores, who reported as follows:

January 4, 1900.

I recommend that the troops of the second contingent be provided with five days' rations of the Proteine Vegetal, as tendered for by Mr. F. E. Devlin. This substance has been thoroughly tested on five members of 'A' Battery, R.C.A., during one month of last year, that is to say, the month of April, 1899. It proved itself then to be a quality of food in a most concentrated form. It is palatable, light, agrees with delicate stomachs, and does not deteriorate if kept dry. As an emergency ration, under conditions of great exertion and undertaking, forced marches, &c., it appears to me to be admirably adapted.

There is a report made by the director general of medical stores to the Department of Militia on the 4th of January, 1900. Acting on the report of the director general, based upon previous examination in the month of April, 1899, a contract was entered into on or about the 29th of January. So that you have got these three facts. First, that without reference to any contract which was then in contemplation, this food was submitted to a thorough test by the officials of the Militia Department. It was tested in Kingston in April, 1899, and in the month of January following the official who was at the head of the medical stores department, reported that that test was eminently satisfactory, and it was thought proper by the Department of Militia to make the purchase.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman lay that contract on the Table?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I did not refer to the contract, but simply gave the date.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The contract was entered into towards the end of January, 1900, as a result of the test made in the month of April of the year preceding, and in consequence of the report of the natural adviser of the head of the Militia Department.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman give us communication of that contract?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Now, you have got the fact that the food was tested in 1899, that the proper adviser of the Militia Department represented that that test was in every respect satisfactory, and that, as a result of that advice, a contract was made. But you have more than that. You have got this further certificate.

Mr. MONK. With whom was the contract made?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You have got this further fact, that in the month of February—

Mr. MONTAGUE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman surely is compelled to answer a question that is material. I do not think we have ever had such an exhibition as this before. We are only asking for information, and the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Justice Department, surely ought to give us this information.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When a minister of the Crown refers to a public document, he is bound by the rules of the House to lay it on the Table. He has been asked to lay on the Table the contract to which he has referred.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I submit that by the rules of parliament, a minister of the Crown or a member of the government, using a public document and referring to it in a speech, is bound to lay it on the Table.

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question raised by the hon. member for Haldimand was how far a member having the floor is required to answer questions, and the hon. the leader of the opposition is out of order in discussing the point whether he is bound to lay certain documents on the Table. That is an entirely different question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will you allow me, Sir, to point out—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The question arose as to with whom that contract was made, and it was relevant to that question that I rose to ask that the rules of the House be enforced requiring a member of the government, using a public document or referring to it, to lay it on the Table.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question raised by the hon. member for Haldimand had no connection with public documents whatever. He asked a question once or twice of the Solicitor General regarding certain statements he was in the act of making.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And the contract.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, the point raised was the right to ask and have a reply to a question.

Mr. MONK. I asked the hon. gentleman to furnish the contract.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. leader of the opposition raised a point which is not in issue before the House. Now, with respect to asking questions across the floor of the House, I am obliged to say that in all my experience I have never listened to a debate where there seemed to be so much disposition to interrupt members who are speaking as in this discussion. If I may be allowed to say so, it seemed to me not so much discussing the question as endeavouring to inquire from speakers what were the conditions in the case. It is clearly the right of a member of this House to make his speech without interruption. If he chooses to answer the questions, he may do so; he is the judge whether these questions interfere with his statement. Members, by courtesy, are allowed to ask questions; but if the hon. member who is speaking does not see fit to answer them, I have no authority to make him answer them. Now, my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) desired to raise a question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I raise a question of order, Mr. Speaker, and that it is the rule of parliament that when a member of the government refers to a public document, he is bound to lay that document on the Table. And I ask you to rule that the Solicitor General, having referred to a contract in this discussion, and having founded an argument upon it, he is bound to lay it on the Table.

Mr. SPEAKER. I undoubtedly agree with the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) in this case. I think that any member of the cabinet in possession of an official document has no right to quote from it without putting the House in possession of it at the earliest opportunity. I am sure the House does not wish to interfere with the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Fitzpatrick's) use of the document, but I think that the rule is clear that these documents this discussion began.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I did not quote from any document. I merely referred to a contract that was entered into towards the end of January, 1900—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid Mr. Speaker, before we proceed further, my hon. friend the Solicitor General must say that he will comply with the ruling of the Chair, and, having referred to a contract, that he will lay it on the Table. But the hon. gentleman, instead of complying with the ruling of the Chair, evades your ruling, or attempts to evade it by saying he has not done certain things.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have done nothing of the sort, Mr. Speaker; I had not sought to evade your ruling, nor have I read an extract or referred to any extract from any public document, nor have I done anything that can be considered as having founded an argument on a public document.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) refuses to obey the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. Perhaps, it would be simpler to let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) complete his statement. He is not bound to lay the document on the Table before he has completed his argument. Perhaps, the Minister of Militia being the legal custodian of such documents, he might be the proper party to look to for them. But I think there is no doubt that the House is entitled to the document.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say I object to these interruptions. There must be some reason for them. If there was so much force in the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite through the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), they would not be so irritable. But, Sir, it does seem to me that it is time to ascertain whether the majority in this House have any rights, or whether the House is to be governed by the minority that sits on your left.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) comply with your ruling?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Monk) is out of order.

Mr. MONK. But, I would like to ask—

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is out of order in raising that question.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This exhibition of temper is admirable evidence in support of the position taken by the Minister of Militia. As I said a moment ago, in the month of April, 1899, this food was tested. In January, 1900, application was made to the Department of Militia for the purchase of some portions of that food. In January, 1900, before this contract was entered into, the director general of the medical staff again examined the food and ascertained that the food which it was proposed should be purchased was the same food as that which had been tested in April, 1899. But that is not all. We have a letter of date 23rd February, 1900, from Mr. Cotton, hospital sergeant, addressed to Lt.-Col. Neilson, director general of the medical staff, which says:

I beg to certify that I have tested the vegetable protein powder, made by the Vitaline Company, of Montreal, marked 'emergency ration,' and find it exactly the same as the vegetable food taken by me in Dr. Devlin's test in Kingston, beginning in March last, for a period of four weeks.

This is the statement of a gentleman who was used as a means of making the test which was made in April, 1899, and he declares that it is the same food. But we have, besides this, evidence from a source absolutely beyond the control of the Department of Militia. We have evidence furnished by the chemical analyst of McGill University, Montreal, who made an analysis of this food and came absolutely to the same conclusion as that reached by the director general of the medical staff in January, 1900.

Mr. MONK. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) allow me. Will he say on his responsibility as a minister, that the food tested in Kingston was the food supplied to our troops in South Africa?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am now discussing the question of the contract—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Hon. gentlemen opposite may imagine that they can badger me to such an extent that they will prevent me from making the speech that I intended making in this House. They may succeed in many things, but they cannot succeed in that.

Mr. MILLS. Brave boy.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not lay any special claim to bravery. But that is not a thing that ought to be tested here; there are other places where that can be tested.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, you will soon be a baron.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the sort of thing that one might expect from the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). That is what one might expect from the chairman of the nest of traitors—from the presiding genius of that combination. Now, when that contract was entered into in the month of January, 1900, the Department of Militia had taken all the precautions I have pointed out; and it seems to me that, up to that stage, it is impossible to lay any blame at the doors of the department. The only question here is—and it is a serious question to be considered—whether or not, this contract having been entered into in the manner I have indicated, and surrounded by the precautions I have indicated, was not carried out by the contractor, because he substituted one article for another. That is the point, that is to say, whether we are now face to face with a contract similar to the one that we are now dealing with in the Exchequer Court, in which a contract was made by which it was agreed that steel engraved stamps should be supplied to a department of the government, and lithograph stamps were supplied instead—whether we are face to face with another fraud of that description. Now, I say that the hon. gentlemen opposite dare not make that charge; they dare not make the charge that the contract entered into for one species of food was filled by the contractor who supplied an entirely different quality of food. I say they dare not make that charge, because it would imply a criminal act on the part of the contractor that they dare not charge him with.

Mr. MONK. I here state to the hon. gentleman that I intend to make that charge.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is a brave act, and worthy of the commendation of hon. gentlemen opposite. As the hon. member sits here securely where he enjoys immunity, he makes a charge which I repeat he dare not make without those walls.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. MONK. If I must now declare positively what my charge is, I will do so. I am satisfied from the statements that have been made from the other side of the House this afternoon, that the food supplied to our troops in South Africa was not the food tested at Kingston. That is my charge. Who are the guilty parties, I do not know. I will refer to that presently. But, I do charge that the food tested so carefully at Kingston, under the direction of the military authorities, was not the food, not one ounce of it, that was given to our troops in South Africa. That is the charge I now make, and I make it with the full sense of my responsibility as a member of this House.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman makes that charge with the full sense of his responsibility as a member of this House, and surrounded with the immunities that his position gives him, but I say he dare not go outside and make that charge. I dare him to make that charge face to face with Dr. Devlin.

Mr. MONK. I claim no immunity whatever in making this charge.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is a brave thing to do. I say that no man who knows Dr. Devlin and who knows the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, will believe the charge. I repeat that no man would believe it, and I defy the hon. gentleman to go outside the doors of this Chamber and repeat that charge in a newspaper, where he may be held liable for it. Now, we have got the charge narrowed down to this, that the hon. gentleman charges a contractor instead of the department. He relieves the Militia Department from all responsibility.

Mr. MONK. I rise to a point of order. I think, at this stage of the proceedings, when the Solicitor General has referred to this contract so often, and to the contractor, that we should have that document laid upon the Table of the House. We should know who is the contractor, for I do not know yet who he is.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Driven from corner to corner, starting out with a charge that some one in the Militia Department, or some one in authority had received a consideration for this contract, he is now reduced to making this cheap charge against the contractor.

Mr. MONK. I made no such statement in this House, there is no such statement in the newspaper from which I quoted.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman says he made no such charge. This is what he read to the House:

This and other matters are likely to be aired elsewhere, but in the meantime it might be explained on what consideration such a contract was taken away from a reliable and experienced food chemist, whose ration had been specially tested, and placed in the hands of others who did not possess the same qualification and experience.

I appeal to every rational man within the sound of my voice, not those who are carried away by passion, not those who appear to be unable at the present time to appreciate what is coolly said to them, but I appeal to all those who are still in possession of their rational common sense, to say what is meant by this paragraph :

This and other matters are likely to be aired elsewhere, but in the meantime it might be explained on what consideration such a contract was taken away.

What is the meaning of that? What is implied therein? What is the covert insinuation that is there intended to be conveyed by the use of those words? I say that the hon. gentlemen brought face to face with the Minister of Militia and Defence, having made their charge, are obliged to withdraw it, and they now come and make this cheap charge against a gentleman who is not within the precincts of this House, who cannot defend himself, who is not in a position to defend himself, against the attacks that are made upon him. They first begin by attacking the Minister of Militia and Defence, but they soon have to retreat, they soon knew what was in store for them; and now, they adopt the other and cheaper method of attacking a man whose hands are tied behind his back. That is a braver method, and better suits the hon. gentleman opposite.

Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence referred to a letter received from the director general of medical stores, dated June 5, 1900, in which he says again that the food that was purchased for the use of the contingent that went to South Africa is absolutely the same food that had been previously tested in the month of April previously. He says it is the same food that was purchased, and about the identity of that food there can be absolutely no doubt. So, you have got this food tested by a gentleman occupying the responsible position of Dr. Ruttan, chemical analyst of McGill University, Montreal; you have got that food tested also by the director general of medical stores at Kingston, in April, 1900; you have the examination of that food made again in January, previously to the passing of this contract, which reveals the fact that the food is the same as was tested in Kingston. You have the further fact that of all the food sent to South Africa, samples have been preserved here, and those samples have been examined within the last few days, and they are found to be exactly the same as those that were examined in April, 1899, and in January, 1900. So, you have got all these facts; and now, the hon. gentleman, driven from one corner to the other, takes refuge in the cheap charge that the contractor substituted for the food that he promised to supply under his contract to the Department of Militia, another and entirely different article. That is the charge they make against the contractor, who is not here to defend himself, and they make the charge because they know full well that he cannot defend himself, because they know that no civil responsibility attaches to those who make the charge, because they know full well that the contractor is not in a position to hold them responsible for it. In conclusion, I repeat the challenge that I made before, that the charge they make here they dare not repeat outside this House of Commons, because they would not enjoy the same immunity as they enjoy here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask for the enforcement of the decision of the Chair that the documents shall be laid on the Table to which the hon. gentleman has referred in his speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair chair.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not know that there is any regular form of contract, but so far as the correspondence in reference to the purchase of this food is concerned, there is not the slightest objection in laying it on the Table of the House, and all the papers that I read or used in my argument, I am prepared to bring down.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are entitled now to have the contract referred to by the hon. Solicitor General. The Chair has ruled that he must lay it on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Let me say one word in answer to the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. The Speaker has ruled.

Mr. FOSTER. Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order, Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I rise to a question of order. I wish to point out the fact that when the hon. Minister of Militia made his statement he made it perfectly clear that there was no expressed written contract, but that there was an approval endorsed upon the paper. He read no other papers. There was no other paper embodying the terms of the arrangement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise to a point of order. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has not risen to a point of order. Mr. Speaker, you have ruled that the paper that the hon. Solicitor General referred to as a contract in this discussion should be laid on the Table. We should not be told now that there is no contract. We should have the paper referred to by the hon. Solicitor General, and which you have declared he was to lay on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order; chair, chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, I think it is a matter of courtesy to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that the House should allow him to make his statement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When the document is laid on the Table.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. minister ought to be allowed to make his statement. I have allowed the hon. leader of the opposition to speak several times to-night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is for Mr. Speaker to say whether I shall sit down or not.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is only fair to the House that whatever papers the hon. Minister of Militia has that fix the contract, whether it is in the form of a contract or of an endorsement of the offer, should be in the possession of the House. If he has a copy here that he could give the House I think he should give it at once.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Minister of Militia is prepared to lay on the Table of the House every document from which he has read and to which he has referred. I do not think that he has referred to a written contract embodying all the terms of the arrangement, but such papers as he has he is prepared to lay on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine the reason of the rule is that a minister may have no unfair advantage over any other hon. member of the House. We are discussing this question to-night, and other hon. gentlemen are to speak on this side. Some of us, unfortunately have spoken already, and we cannot avail ourselves of this information. The information which the hon. minister has is information which the next man who follows him has a right to have on the Table of the House, so that he may not be at an unfair disadvantage. That is what we require.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no objection to it.

Mr. FOSTER. We want it now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As the hon. Solicitor General constantly referred to the contract and made reference over and over again to the contract it should be placed on the Table of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. SPEAKER. Whatever was the nature of the arrangement between the two parties I think it should be laid on the Table of the House, whether you call it a formal contract or simply the endorsement of the proposition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. These papers are the original papers, and I read portions of them. I read the whole of the letter of the director general, and I read the principal part of the offer of Dr. Devlin. The only paper which I did not read is a letter of the deputy minister accepting the offer. Perhaps the better way would be to read the whole of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me, your ruling is not that the minister shall give a viva voce explanation. We want the papers ourselves. The hon. Solicitor General has the papers in his hands that he quoted from and that he referred to.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When the Speaker says that you shall have them you will get them and not before.

Mr. FOSTER. We have a perfect right to insist that you shall obey the Speaker. There is no man in this House big enough to defy the Speaker and the rules of the House even if he be the representative of justice, as the hon. gentleman is purporting to be here. There is no man big enough to do that.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is an unnecessary discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. The Speaker cannot enforce the rule if the ministry propose to give the spectacle to the House and to the country of defying the Speaker.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is an unprecedented thing in this House for hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches to set the Chair at open defiance.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the House will come to order I think we can settle this matter; if the House will give the hon. Minister of Militia an opportunity of presenting his papers to the House.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In reference to these papers—

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order; sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. MONK. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. State the point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. We must keep order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) state his point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MONK. Reference has been made—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is your point of order?

Mr. MONK. This is my point of order. Reference has been made to a contract you, Sir, ruled that it should be produced. I ask that your ruling be obeyed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MONK. We cannot go on until I have been heard.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no point of order in the statement of the hon. gentleman. I hope the House will accept my ruling.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will you give the hon. Minister of Militia an opportunity of presenting the papers?

Mr. MONTAGUE. My point of order is this.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order; sit down.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am quite in order, and I stand here until I state my point.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). With the Speaker rising?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am quite in order because no Speaker has the right to prevent me raising a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am quite in order, because no Speaker has the right to prevent me raising a point of order, neither when he is backed up by the ministers or opposed by the ministers. My point of order is this: That the question was raised as to whether the Solicitor General or the Minister of Militia should lay upon the Table of this House the document to which he referred in the House, and the Speaker decided and decided definitely that he was compelled to do so, and my point of order is that no business can be proceeded with in this House at any time whatever until the ruling of the Speaker has been complied with.

Mr. TAYLOR. And it will not either.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Do I understand that the ruling is, that if an hon. member refers to a contract, simply as giving the date of a contract, without making an extract from it and without referring to its contents, that he is obliged to produce the document?

Mr. FOSTER. And the hon. gentleman founded an argument upon it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And the ruling of the Speaker has been made.

Mr. FOSTER. They are afraid of the contract, they dare not bring it down.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the House will come to order we may be able to do something. In this case the ruling has been made and the Minister of Militia, who is the custodian of the document, was proceeding to comply with the order of the House when this discussion began.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. We should give the Minister of Militia an opportunity to speak.

Mr. FOSTER. Not to speak but to lay the document on the Table.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. I will ask my hon. friend to sit down for once and respect the Chair.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask your ruling, and I am perfectly in order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. I ask the hon. member (Mr. Montague) to take his seat.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And I ask for your ruling on my point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would ask the hon. member to take his seat.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask your ruling on that point of order and the Chair must give a ruling.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will hon. gentlemen come to order. We cannot proceed with business amidst all this confusion. If the hon. member for Haldimand is not satisfied with my ruling he has the alternative of appealing to the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. I ask the hon. gentleman to accept my ruling.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Speaker has not ruled on my point of order, and I therefore cannot appeal to the House against it, even if I desired to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask for a ruling as to whether there can be a discussion before—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. I ask the hon. member to come to order. I do not propose to discuss the question with him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And I ask for your ruling.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Speaker has no right to ask me to sit down. The Speaker has not decided my point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. My view is that the hon. gentleman has raised no question in the present discussion, and I ask him to accept my ruling.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. May I rise to a point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman allow the Minister of Militia—

Mr. FOSTER. May I raise a point of order?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it possible that things have come to this pass, that a member of this House cannot stand in his place and raise a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I ask the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) not to press it.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to raise a point of order. Have I the right to do it or not?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. It seems to me, if the hon. member for York will allow me, that it will be better to allow the minister to produce these documents and let the business proceed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But he must not discuss the papers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Bring down the documents.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hand them over.

Mr. SPEAKER. The minister had better lay the documents on the Table of the House.

The Minister of Militia having laid documents on the Table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the House now come to order?

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the discussion of this important question has unfortunately strayed over a very wide range—

Mr. MONK. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I regret to interrupt the hon. member (Mr. Tisdale), but it seems to me that some documents are missing here. Something has been detached from these papers.

Mr. SPEAKER. The minister must be allowed to use his own judgment.

Mr. MONK. I think we must have them all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Have you not ruled, Mr. Speaker, that we should have all the documents?

Mr. SPEAKER. Not all the documents, but all the documents in connection with the matter that were read from.

Mr. FOSTER. Here are some more coming out.

The Solicitor General having laid a document on the Table of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you any more?

Mr. SPEAKER. I trust the business of the House will proceed.

Mr. TISDALE. I am in favour of the wisdom of the rule which I am glad to see the Speaker has upheld, that these documents should be laid upon the Table of this House, because I could not come to a conclusion on this matter without being able to see what are in these documents. This is not a question of making a charge against any one, but it is a question as to whether it is a case for investigation. I think that it displays a weakness on either side of the House when gentlemen in discussing a subject like this wander away from the subject. There is a very serious matter underlying this whole question and I think we should deal with it seriously. Now, as to the manner in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) introduced this question, I must say that I was surprised to hear hon. gentlemen opposite attribute to him any unfairness. In justice to him and in justice to myself, I must say that I had not the slightest idea that when he read that article from the paper, he did it for any other purpose than by way of introducing the matter to which he wished to refer. The whole course of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) was proper and dignified. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier was bringing to the attention of the minister the grave things he found charged in that paper. True, as some hon. gentlemen have said, a newspaper article by itself does not amount to much ; but the hon. member, in introducing it, explained that it would give the gravamen of what was represented in regard to the transaction, and he read it in that spirit. Then he went on to state the circumstances and facts in regard to the transaction, and what he thought was the offence or the fraud committed ; and if he showed any indignation or excitement, the last thing I would attribute to him, would be that he showed it in any spirit of attack. On the contrary, as I understood him—and I agreed with him that far—his indignation was at the fraud, if a fraud had been perpetrated. If the hon. gentleman's statement had been accepted in the same spirit, and the discussion carried on in that spirit, we would probably have had this debate closed long since. Some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side, notably the hon. Minister of Finance, and the hon. Solicitor General, did not acquit themselves in the way they usually do in discussing questions before this House. I thought both those hon. gentlemen exhibited an undue amount of excitement over the simple question, whether a case existed, which under the circumstances would make the Minister of Militia or the government feel that they should grant a committee. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier stated that he intended later on to move for a committee, and that in bringing the subject up now, it was with no idle view of airing his own views by moving a motion to adjourn. I am sure there is not an hon. gentleman on either side of the House, who will not agree that if a fraud has been committed, it should be investigated, and that no matter who is to blame, punishment should follow. I think, in justice to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence himself, it certainly ought to be investigated. The instant it was suggested that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was making a charge against the minister, he rose and relieved the minister. Do you want me to believe that that is not the proper course for a member of this House to take, or that it ought to be called backing down or making charges which he is not prepared to maintain ? I say it requires more courage, and more sense of what is proper, to at once get up and relieve an hon. member under such circumstances, than not to do so. The minister himself acknowledges his responsibility as head of the department, whether he was personally to blame or not. Therefore, what more manly or commendable course could any hon. member take than at once to say frankly that he did not intend in any way to make a charge against the minister further than that ? He stated the facts and gave the names of the parties except one, and that name was subsequently supplied, with his permission, I believe, by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). Therefore, he backs up the statements he made with the facts, so as to enable the minister and every other member of this House, to judge whether he has made out a well-founded case on which to ask for an investigation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will my hon. friend allow me to intervene just there ? He has stated correctly, I think, that the single issue before the House is whether an inferior kind of food was substituted for the food which the minister thought he was buying. Will he state what scintilla of evidence is given to show that an inferior kind of food was substituted ?

Mr. TISDALE. Though I prefer to make my speech without interruption, I am always willing to allow pertinent questions to be asked. I do not quite agree with the hon. gentleman, that that is all there is to be investigated. If there has been gross fraud, it goes a little further. The bottom question is: Did the Militia Department, or did they not supply an inferior article of food ? There are two things to investigate. The first is whether there was any fraud or not in a criminal sense. That is a matter serious enough for an investigation ; because, as the hon. member for North Bruce has said, there might be gross negligence amounting to criminal negligence. I hope sincerely that if an investigation is granted, it will be found that there has been a mistake somewhere, and that this food is good. I hope, for the sake of Canada, and the brave boys we sent to South Africa, that the food will be shown to be good. For one, I am sure I would rather forego the greatest possible political gain to be derived from any such matter, for the sake of having everybody cleared of blame, and the food proved to be good. Since the question was raised in the press, and with the evidence which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier had, it was his duty to follow it up, and ascertain, if possible, whether or not there was any basis for the statement made. I hope the Militia Department will, at all events, be cleared from any charge of negligence ; and if fraud has been perpetrated, I hope the department will have surrounded themselves with such safeguards that it will be somebody else who will have the blame. I want to say to the Solicitor General that he did not do himself justice to-night. He said the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had gone from one charge to another, and from one corner to another. The Solicitor General knows the use of language, and he knows as well as I know, that there was no charge made against any particular person. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier would not make a charge against any individual—and I thought the Solicitor General was a man of the same sort—when he had not sufficient evidence to sustain such a charge. Do we want any better argument than the speech of the Solicitor General to-night, to show that this matter ought to be investigated? Because we requested and demanded information to enable us to understand this question. When he got through, I must say I was more confused over the subject than I was before he spoke. It did seem to me that his attempt to-night, instead of being logical and judicial, as his speeches generally are, was a lamentable failure, in respect to enabling us to understand the question any better than we did before. I confess I understood it less. I confess that I have not been able, from what the Minister of Militia or the Solicitor General, or any other hon. gentleman speaking on that side of the House, has brought before us, fully to understand what the minister admits and what he denies. I was grieved to see the manner in which the hon. Minister of Militia dealt with the question, whether it was from loss of temper, or because he thought members on this side were hardly fair in the way they plied him with questions. I was surprised that he did not do what he generally does when similar questions come up, that is, give us all the information possible. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier only stated certain facts which he gleaned outside. He took the usual course, and would have been unworthy of his position as a member of parliament if he had not brought this matter before the House. He notified the hon. the minister of his intention, and that hon. gentleman had all the information at his hand to furnish the House with a proper explanation. During the short time I had any connection with the Militia Department, I always endeavoured to keep politics out of it as much as I could. The militia of Canada is now prominent in the eyes of the world as one of the great defences of the empire, and it behooves this House, in matters connected with that department, to display as little party politics as possible.

Mr. McNEILL. I rise to make an explanation. My hon. friend has said that no charge has been made with regard to any individual. I do not want to have any misapprehension on that point, and therefore, wish to say that I did make a charge and now repeat it. I charged distinctly that if the Minister of Militia did not have an analysis made of the new food which he was providing for our soldiers in South Africa, after the letter of warning he received from a gentleman who had supplied the food which had been thoroughly tested, he was guilty of gross negligence.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There was no new food. The food which we had tested in 1899 was the food which we bought and sent to South Africa.

Mr. McNEILL. I simply want to explain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TISDALE.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. TISDALE. I quite agree in your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that when a member is asked a question, it is quite within his province to reply or not. But the case is different with regard to public documents. If these papers had been laid on the Table before recess, I would have been able to get at the exact facts. What is the trouble? The charge we wish to have investigated is whether this food is genuine emergency rations or not. An emergency ration is a prepared article which contains, in very small compass, an enormous amount of strengthening food, and such an article would be worse than nothing if it did not, because the men would go on long marches relying on its being up to the mark, and if it were not, the disaster would be great indeed. There is no dispute that the Hatch Company is the well-known and well-established firm that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier alluded to, and the word 'protose' used by them to describe the article they sell is their trade mark. 'Protose' is the trade mark and 'protein' is the article itself. There is no question that it was the Hatch article, which was tested by the authorities at Kingston. If the second food supply was guaranteed to be the same article by the contractor, then it would be the right article. If on the other hand the minister knew, as I understood him to admit, that the second was another article, did the hon. minister know that while the director general reported to him that the second article was equally good or the same sort of article, it was not from the same maker and the same firm as the first?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The whole dealings of the department with reference to this matter from beginning to end were with one gentleman. That gentleman is Dr. Devlin, and he provided the food which was tested at Kingston and sent to South Africa. These vegetable active principles are described by different names. I do not set very much store by that, and did not inquire particularly into it. That is a matter of detail left to the director general of the department. But I believe that the food supplied Kingston was the same, and it was stated by the director general to be the same as that furnished the second contingent.

Mr. TISDALE. I understand then that the defence of the minister is that the director general said it was equal in quality to the first, but did not examine it to see whether it was made by the same firm. So, I understand, we are still in the dark as to which article was bought, that is whether it was the article of Hatch & Co., that was first tested, or the article subsequently made by some other gentleman and called 'vitamine.' I understand further—and I should like to be right about this, because much turns upon it, that the analytical and chemical test made in January or April, 1899—the Solicitor General at one time said one, and at another time the other—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There were two.

Mr. TISDALE. I prefer the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) should tell me. I understand that only one test was made, whether in April or in January.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Kingston test was made in March and April, 1899.

Mr. TISDALE. And what other test was there?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think this other test was made about a year later.

Mr. TISDALE. I understand that there was a report of an examination made by the director general of the medical staff.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not know what tests were made. I have his letter here, and would like to lay it on the Table.

Mr. TISDALE. A great deal turns upon this, and we should understand it clearly. When I speak of a test, I mean a chemical test, or, what is still more important in a military sense, such a test as that made by the soldiers, which was an excellent test, and one that every fair-minded man would be satisfied with if properly made, as I am sure it would be in the Kingston schools. This letter which the minister has just laid on the Table is dated June 5, 1900.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is the letter I read.

Mr. TISDALE. This is just a letter. Then, as I understand the minister, the only soldiers' test was the test in January or April, 1899. Afterwards, when the purchase was made, he relied entirely on the report of his director general, and no test, either by the soldiers or by a chemical analyst, was made—only the test by the director general, if he made one. Now, let me ask: Did the director general communicate to the minister whether he had made a medical test? And is he capable of making such a test—for very few medical men are chemists in the sense of being able to make an examination of this kind? Is there any other report than this letter before the House?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Take the letter of the director general of January 4, 1900, which is among the papers laid on the Table.

Mr. TISDALE. Here it is:

Ottawa, January 4, 1900.

To the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Sir,—I recommend that the second contingent be provided with five days' rations of protein vegetal, as tendered for by F. E. Devlin. This substance has been thoroughly tested on five members of 'A' Battery, R.C.A., during last year. It proved itself to be a complete food in the most concentrated form. It is palatable, light, agrees with a delicate stomach, and does not deteriorate if kept dry. As an emergency ration, under conditions of great exertion, fatigue, forced marching, &c., it appears to me to be admirably adapted.

Now, I think we have got to the bottom of it at last. The only test relied upon was the test made in the Kingston school. The article there tested was the Hatch protose. This letter that I have just read renders it, in my opinion, beyond all question that we must have an investigation, because the papers submitted by the minister shows that he acted upon a report from his director general referring to a test of the year before, and that this was the same article. So far, there is evidence of good faith in the conduct of the Minister of Militia that he took the precaution to have his director general make a report which was in favour of it; and I have no doubt that the director general did not take the responsibility without believing that this article was good. We find that the person who went to the place where this vitaline is sold, and it was found that on the packages in which it was kept there was printed the boast—and it was a good one, if true, and of great value to their article—that it was the article that the Militia Department had tested so thoroughly. But, it has been stated that this was examined analytically by one of the greatest chemists on this continent, and was found to have only 17 per cent of nutriment. Now, I am not saying that convicts the minister, because, unless we are refused an investigation, I do not wish to make any inferences. But if the government take the responsibility of saying that, under these circumstances, it is not due to us, it is not due to the department, it is not due to the people of this country, it is not due to our brave soldiers in South Africa, that the facts should be brought out, then an inference would arise in my mind that I do not feel it proper to say anything about at the present time. But I do say that there is room for an important difference. This director general is not a skilled scientist, and he might be honestly mistaken, believing that this other article under a different name was an equally good article. I would not like to impute any motives to him, on the contrary, I believe up to this time that he is a straightforward man. But that is not the point. The point is: Shall we have an opportunity to vindicate the Minister of Militia and Defence, to vindicate the department, and more than that, to vindicate the government and parliament, and the country, and to relieve the people from uncertainty in regard to it. This matter has been brought up in no light spirit, and so far as I am concerned, I would not tolerate its treatment in any but a serious way. I believe that the members on both sides of the House, after we get over the somewhat rough and violent way in which we sometimes discuss matters, are in the bottom of their hearts desirous only of getting at the facts. Inasmuch as this matter affects the health of our dear ones that we have sent to South Africa, I hope the government will not rest a moment longer under the breath of suspicion. I am not prepared to make any charges except on evidence; but it looks very much as if somebody had either made a great mistake or possibly had committed a fraud. The investigation may show that though this food was inferior, there was no corrupt motive in supplying it, and it may show that the food is not inferior at all. But to my mind there has more than enough come out already to warrant an investigation, and I trust the government will grant one. But if the investigation is not granted, I believe, speaking politically, that no course the government could take would do themselves more injury. I believe the honest-minded people of the country as well as responsible members of parliament on both sides are of the opinion that this matter should be probed to the bottom.

Mr. R. R. DOBELL (West Quebec). I think that when the members of this House in their calmer moments begin to analyse this debate, they will be ashamed at the manner in which it has been carried on and at the way in which it was introduced. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) spoke of the unpleasant duty that the member for Jacques Cartier had to perform, but I think it was apparent to every one that when the member for Jacques Cartier read that article in the paper it was with a feeling very different from pain. He evidently showed that he was pleased to think that he had found a mare's nest. I followed very carefully the statement made by my colleague the Minister of Militia and Defence, a statement clear and distinct, wherein he showed every step that had been taken in respect to this protose, or vitaline, or whatever it may be called, showing how carefully it had been tested, and stating that the department had samples put away which could easily be produced and tested again. Why, Mr. Speaker, do you think that those of us who have friends or relatives in South Africa could for a moment excuse any negligence on the part of the Militia Department in selecting food for their use in that campaign? I think when this debate is read in the Hansard, hon. members will be ashamed that it has taken up so much valuable time, and they will wish that the member for Jacques Cartier had adopted the suggestion of the Premier and introduced this question in another way and at another time. There was no necessity for hasty action, because nothing can be gained in testing the food now that our troops will soon be back again from South Africa. After listening to the statement of the Minister of Militia and Defence of the care he took to have this food tested, and to prove that it was really the right kind of food, and not what the member for Jacques Cartier called spurious stuff. I want to ask where is the legal acumen of those gentlemen who see a fraud in the fact that some one bought a box at some shop for which he had paid $3. Who bought that box? Was he a responsible party?

Mr. MONK. His name was given to the House, Mr. Moore.

Mr. DOBELL. Well, it might have been Smith or Jones. Is it on such a flimsy circumstance that so grave a charge is made? I think the hon. member for Jacques Cartier should join with the leader of the opposition, and with the member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) in yielding to the invitation of the Solicitor General, and apologize for the time of the House, that they have taken up in making and pressing this charge. I believe they will, because I think some times they have a sense of doing what is right, and I am positive that if they want to do what is right they will say that they have done wrong to-night. That article in the paper—I have gone over it—is full of errors. It states there that we paid $2 for a ration. We paid only 50 cents for a day's ration. How do you account for an error of that kind? In that article it states distinctly that the hon. Minister of Militia paid $2 for a ration, whereas, instead of paying $2 for a ration he paid 50 cents for rations for twenty-four hours. I do not see why hon. gentlemen should challenge the accuracy of the test made under the orders of the hon. Minister of Militia, but, they take for granted this cock and bull story of a box being bought and taken to some chemist. We do not know the name of the chemist.

Mr. MONK. I rise to a point of order. I do not think that the hon. gentleman has a right to qualify a statement of mine as a cock and bull story. I gave the name of the party who went to get this box, and the party who analysed the contents of the box—Mr. Milton Hersey, the well known analyst of Montreal. The hon. gentleman does not seem to know what he is talking about.

Mr. DOBELL. I know very well what I am talking about. Who is Mr. Moore? What guarantee have we that Mr. Moore may not be the agent of an opposition company?

Mr. MONK. You will very soon see when he comes as a witness.

Mr. DOBELL. The hon. gentleman has made his charge. He has made a charge against Dr. Devlin. He has said—

Mr. MONK. I never charged Dr. Devlin with anything at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DOBELL. I will appeal to my hon. friend the Solicitor General. You stated distinctly—

Mr. MONK. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) to attribute language to me that I never used.

Mr. DOBELL. You distinctly made the charge.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DOBELL. We have already proved the hon. gentleman to be inaccurate. He said that the hon. minister had promised an order for the North-west Mounted Police, and you denied that you had said so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. Address the Chair.

Mr. DOBELL. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) had to take that back.

Mr. MONK. I never did.

Mr. DOBELL. Well, then you should have. I am not going to say another word to prolong this discussion. I claim that the hon. Minister of Militia has proved, to my mind, distinctly, that every care was taken to test this food, and we have not the slightest evidence that any care was taken to test this box that was bought by Mr. Moore and analysed by some one else. I have no doubt that the analysis of it was quite correct, but as to who Mr. Moore is, and whether he tampered with the box or not we have no evidence.

Mr. MONK. I can tell the hon. gentleman that he is just as good a man as the minister is.

Mr. DOBELL. We can talk over that when the trial comes. The hon. Minister of Militia offers you an inquiry.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is all we want. I do not know what all this discussion is about.

Mr. DOBELL. This is nothing more than a mare's nest founded on an article in the reptile press. Slander will grow; it will do harm. It has done this House harm to-night by wasting very valuable time, and I have no doubt that we shall all feel ashamed of ourselves for having wasted it.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in the presentation of the case which has been made by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) there can be very little doubt, that there is a great deal of mixing and mud-dling of this question, even in the minds of the members of the government themselves. I do not know that we have ever had a more painful exhibition than the hon. gentleman has just given in attempting to make an argument in defence of the Militia Department, and in explanation of that charge made here this afternoon. However, I was very glad to hear the hon. gentleman utter what may be a promise in his closing sentence: as I understood it, that we should have a committee to investigate, and I am sure that the hon. Prime Minister, the Minister of Militia and the Solicitor-General will hardly for a moment recede from the position that has been taken by our good natured friend who treats us with such condescension, and who instructs us upon matters of deportment as well as upon matters of law sometimes in this House. We have been rebuked by the hon. gentleman as to the manner in which this debate has been conducted, and I should like to ask the hon. gentleman how he likes the manner in which it has been conducted by hon. gentlemen on his own side of the House, how he likes the hon. Minister of Militia, for instance, sitting still in his place and stubbornly refusing to answer the most civil question asked in the most civil way by a prominent gentleman, speaking from the front ranks of this side of the House; how he likes, for instance, the exhibition of the very genial, the very good-natured, Solicitor General who has a judicial air, whose face was white, whose temper was hot, but who, challenged us to say that he was not treating it in a very judicial manner, and I am bound to say, to borrow the words of another hon. gentleman, that he did not do his record for fairness and his record for geniality in the House justice by the exhibition which he made here to-night, and which, I think may be attributed to the weakness of his case, a weakness which he knew, from the moment he stood up until the moment he concluded? The legal representative of the government made an argument in which there was not one single logical conclusion drawn and not one single answer made to the statements which had been made by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. Now, we are asked to apologize. To apologize for what? Apologize for offering a criticism upon the manner in which this food was purchased by the Minister of Militia? Apologize for demanding our rights in this House? We were charmed with the simplicity with which the hon. Solicitor General turned to his friends and said: Have the majority no rights in this House? The majority have rights, but the minority have rights as well, and we propose to assert these rights, notwithstanding the anger of the hon. Solicitor General, and notwithstanding the platitudes of the hon. gentleman who has distinguished himself for rapid transit across the Atlantic. What is the argument of the hon. member for Quebec West? He agrees that the food should not have been purchased until it was thoroughly analysed and the answer is given that this food was purchased without having been tested or analysed. I challenge him now to stand up and say that this protoid 'vitaline' was never tested.

Mr. DOBELL. I said most distinctly that it was tested; not only so, but we have samples now which can be compared with the cases that have been sent to South Africa. I stated also that no doubt some of these cases could be sent back and tested with the samples that are now in charge of the Minister of Militia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My challenge to the hon. gentleman was to show that before this food was purchased it had been tested or analysed.

Mr. DOBELL. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where is your answer?

Mr. DOBELL. I said it was tested some months before.

Mr. MONTAGUE. By whom?

Mr. DOBELL. By some one under the charge of the Minister of Militia.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) has demonstrated either that he is bound to mislead the House—and I do not desire to charge him with that—or that he is totally and absolutely ignorant of it. There is not a word of evidence in these papers that proto-vitaline was ever tested by the department or for the department, or under the direction of the department. I will tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) how the test was made, but I must first refer him to the refusal of the Minister of Militia to say to this House that the proto-vitaline has been tested. The Minister of Militia will not stand up in his place now and give me the name of the tester, the date of the testing and the circumstances under which proto-vitaline was tested or analysed by his department before it was purchased. He will not do it, because he knows it never was tested. And yet, here were the lives of men who were defending the integrity of the empire, depending upon this food, and the hon. gentleman purchased it without a test, or, if a test was made, he has never given it to this House, and it is not contained in the various documents which we have before us. It is a grave and important matter. The purchase of any supply for the militia use is a grave and important matter, but this is still more important than the ordinary, when we come to consider that the lives of our soldiers might depend upon it. I say to the members of the government, I say to the Solicitor General, and I say to the Minister of

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Militia: That when a suggestion was made that a fraud had been practised upon the government of this country—whether with or without collusion—that might have brought death to our soldiers who are fighting in South Africa, it was their duty, without a moment's hesitation, to stand up for the honour of the government and for the honour of the country, and to say: We will have the question investigated to the fullest extent, and will punish the wrong-doers, if wrong has been done. Instead of that, what have we had? We have had an exhibition of temper from beginning to end; an exhibition of temper rarely equalled in this or any other parliament, and we have had the refusal of the minister to bring down information until compelled by the ruling of the Chair to lay upon the Table the public documents which, under the ordinary rules of the constitution, are the property of this parliament, and not the property of the government of Canada.

Now, Sir, what is the fact? The fact is, that an article called protose was tested in Kingston. This article was manufactured by Hatch & Co. It was shown that 60 per cent of protose was albuminoid or protoid food. We have the evidence here as to who did the testing. Mr. Hatch was the manufacturer of that food. The agent that he employed to negotiate with the government was a gentleman named Dr. Devlin, of Montreal. He was employed by Mr. Hatch to request that the government should test this food, and to take charge of the questioning of the men in 'A' Battery, Kingston, who had subsisted on that food. We have had the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) declaring that the proto-vitaline was tested in Kingston, but I tell him that there are no records of any test but that of protose. The questions that were asked of the soldiers in Kingston were asked by Dr. Devlin, of Montreal, the agent of Mr. Hatch, who was endeavouring to get his food adopted by the Canadian government, and what is one of the questions put by Dr. Devlin, of Montreal? The question, No. 9, is this:

What has been the nature of the solid food you have taken for the last twenty-eight days?

And the answer of the soldier is:

Hatch's protose, bread, butter and biscuits, and one pound of butter in twenty-eight days.

Where is there any proto-vitaline in that? Proto-vitaline is never mentioned, and in every one of the affidavits which were brought to the attention of the Minister of Militia, there is not a single mention of proto-vitaline, but the mention is once, twice, and all the time, of Hatch's protose food, which I want to state here, once for all, was the only food tested in Kingston upon soldiers or upon any one else. But, the hon. minister comes behind that and he says: Oh, but we had a test made of proto-vitaline by the medical director general, and upon his report we go a great deal. A report made on June 5, 1900, he was asked by the government to test proto-vitaline, was he? Well, if he was asked by the government to test proto-vitaline he never tested it; he never analysed it, and no member of the government will stand up now and say: that they have a certificate from the medical director general as to proto-vitaline. The Minister of Militia will not do it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman has under his hand a statement of the director general that the food which was furnished by Dr. Devlin and which was sent to South Africa is identical with the food which was tested in Kingston.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Now, I want to read the opinion of the director general. It is of date June 5, 1900.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yesterday.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is there not one in March?

Mr. MONTAGUE. This report was evidently got up for the purpose.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES: Is there not a report of March or April under your hand?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have not seen it, but if it is here I am perfectly willing to read it. This letter was got yesterday, and what does it prove. It proves a fraud somewhere, and by some one from beginning to end. Does the director general say that he tested proto-vitaline? Not at all. He says he compared protose that was left over on his shelves from a former test in April, 1899. He says he had two cans left; that he tested these two cans, and on June 5th, only yesterday, he gave this opinion:

I at the time secured samples, which I have since, together with Col. Drury—

Mr. FOSTER. What time?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It says:

—which I have since, together with Col. Drury, who conducted the investigation, Col. Twitchell, Consul General of the United States, who was throughout much interested in the test—

Mind you this is a test of protose, and when you come to get at the bottom of the matter, it was the hospital experience of protose that ever put this in the mind of the Minister of Militia at all. He saw the reports of the wonderful success which protose had as a food in the hospitals of Montreal and elsewhere, and he immediately set about—and I commend him for the speed with which he did it—to investigate that food and the result of his investigation was the test which was made at Kingston subsequently. What do we find? We find that the test was made of protose in Kingston and protose is mentioned all through, but never proto-vitaline.

I was present at the examination of five soldiers who had voluntarily submitted to the one month test of feeding exclusively on protein vegetal. The examination of each individual was made under oath. I personally knew four of the men, and can have no reasonable doubt as to their veracity.

Now, listen to this statement, which proves what I have said:

I at the time secured samples, which I have since preserved in my office; this with a view of future test or comparison.

So that the letter which was got yesterday from the medical director general to bolster up this case, evidently is an opinion as to protose, and has nothing whatever to do with protoid vitaline, which was by order of the Minister of Militia and Defence sent to South Africa.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Will the hon. gentleman read the last sentence of that letter?

Mr. MONTAGUE (reading):

When, in January last, it was thought advisable to provide the second contingent with five days' emergency for each man of the contingent, for use on occasion of great exertion, short army rations, &c., I could think of nothing more satisfactory than the protein vegetal I had seen tested at Kingston.

That is, protose—

When Mr. Devlin submitted samples with his tender, unknown to this gentleman I compared them with the specimens I had preserved since April, and found them identical. The specimens I had kept were perfectly preserved.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask the hon. gentleman if there was an analysis? There was no analysis, and the minister will not say that there was any. The next question is: Supposing he did have an analysis made, which food was submitted? Does he know that it was the food that was sent to South Africa? I say, without hesitation, that upon a question of so much importance as this, upon which life depended, it was the bounden duty of the Minister of Militia to see, when these goods were supplied to the department, without any putting up of samples by Dr. Devlin, or anybody else, that they should be examined—a case taken here and a can there indiscriminately—in order that a sure and certain test might be made as to the albuminous strength of the food purchased by this government at $2 a pound. Will the minister say that any such test was made? We observe as much care in the shipment of butter to the old country, in which the trade and commerce of the country and the honour of our producers are concerned. We have had a Bill recently introduced even to measure the size of our apples, in order that our credit may be maintained among the traders of Great Britain. How much more important was it that in regard to this food to be supplied to soldiers, when other food was absent—emergency food on which life was to depend—the minister should have made the most careful test of the samples selected by himself or his agents, when the food was supplied under the order given to Dr. Devlin. Now, Sir, there are some very peculiar things in connection with this contract. First of all, such an important matter as this is not usually dealt with in an hour. A government usually takes some time for the consideration of the purchase of supplies such as these. What time was taken for the consideration of this subject? When was the tender of Dr. Devlin put in? The tender of Dr. Devlin was put in on January 5, and the contract was given to Dr. Devlin on January 5. What time was there for tests? What time was there to exercise care and to make an examination? Why was the thing rushed through so quickly? Were the public interests served or guarded, or did Dr. Devlin come to Ottawa and pull his wires with the Department of Militia and Defence, and get the contract put through in a few hours, in a matter where serious care and consideration should have been given for the protection of life as well as for the protection of the treasury of Canada? Another thing: Under ordinary circumstances, after having purchased this food, after it had been supplied, it would have been the duty of the minister to examine some of the cases, and take samples; but there was a very special reason why he should have done it in this case. Here we have a letter from a reputable firm in Montreal, written to the Department of Militia, in which the minister is addressed as 'His Excellency'—I suppose that refers to the future—and in which he is told over the signature of Mr. Hatch, a responsible trader in Montreal, that the food he had purchased and was being supplied, was a fraud—that instead of containing 66 per cent of albuminous food, it only contained from 16 to 17 per cent. What is the answer? The answer is that there is no investigation, that it is passed over in silence, that the account of Dr. Devlin was rendered to the department, and in four days was paid. I say, Sir, that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has done a public duty. There can be no more serious matter than a fraud practised on a war department, at a time of danger and a time of national calamity; and whether the charges are against Dr. Devlin, or the officer of the department, or any one else, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, upon his responsibility as a member of this House, has said to the government: Here are the facts; I believe a fraud has been practised; if you will appoint a committee, I am prepared to establish my charges. I hope, Sir, we have not come to that condition of public sentiment and public feeling in Canada, when a government, however it may quibble, will refuse the request of a responsible member of this House upon a matter affecting life and death among the soldiers of the Canadian people.

M. MONTAGUE.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. (Sir Louis Davies). I regret that I cannot congratulate my hon. friend on having made either a calm or a logical speech. I want to call the attention of the House to the marked contrast between the sensible, calm, judicial speech made by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), and the wild, unreasonable, declamatory speech made by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague). The hon. gentleman, I think, was convinced, when we adjourned for dinner, that a more painful and pitiabie exhibition never was made, than that made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. Members on both sides felt sorry for him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are one or two very extreme men who say no, but his best friends were sorry for this reason. Heretofore the hon. gentleman enjoyed the character of being a quiet, calm, judicial, fair-minded man, but after he had made the speech he did, one was either obliged to come to the conclusion that he had lost his head or completely changed his character. He indulged in vituperation, invective and unfounded charges, in a manner never surpassed by any hon. gentleman on the other side. In the first place, he opened his speech by making an utterly unjustifiable charge, which he was afterwards obliged to retract.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He read an extract from a newspaper.

Mr. PRIOR. He did not make a charge.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would ask my hon. friend to have the courtesy not to interrupt. He read a newspaper extract, and made it the basis of his charge, and the only reason which would justify his reading that extract was the sentence on which he laid particular emphasis, namely, that my hon. friend for some consideration had entered into this contract. The only conclusion to be drawn was that my hon. friend had made this contract for a consideration, and unless he made that charge—a charge which outside this House would be described as cowardly—he had no reason for reading the extract from that newspaper, which I am told is a vile Tory sheet. The hon. gentleman made that article the basis of his charge, and when shown that the charge had not the shadow of foundation, and when asked: Are you prepared to take the responsibility of making it? He replied:

I made no charge. And when the matter was pressed to him still further, and he was asked: Do you then make a charge against Dr. Devlin? He said: No, I do not. And he made this denial after he had taken up three-quarters of an hour of the time of this House making a statement which, if it meant anything at all, meant that Dr. Devlin had been guilty of one of the greatest crimes a Canadian could commit against his fellow citizens. What was the reason of his speech if he did not charge either the minister or Dr. Devlin, or both with wrong-doing? Was the whole thing a farce? Then we had the spectacle of the leaders of the opposition, recognizing the pitiable exhibition which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had made, coming to his rescue, and endeavouring to get him out of the hole he had fallen into. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) made a clever attempt to drag him out of the hole by saying: You are bound to accept his statement, that although he brought this matter before the House, he made no charge of any kind against the Minister of Militia or Dr. Devlin, or the director general of medical staff. So that we have the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier crawling into a hole and saying: I make no charge against anybody. And then you have the hon. member for York saying: Let us accept the declarations made by the hon. gentleman who introduced the resolution, and see what it all amounts to. And what it comes down to is this, that while there was a proper test made in the first instance to ascertain whether that was good food or not, the question is whether or not there was a fraud practised in the substitution of some inferior article for that which the minister thought he was buying. The hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), who has had himself the experience of administering the Militia Department, saw that point, and with a manliness which did him credit, and which he often shows in this House, said: This is a question on which I decline to make a charge against anybody, but the whole question is, has there been a fraud practised on the department by the substitution of an inferior article to that which had been tested. I ask hon. gentlemen to go back over the facts and see whether there is any ground on which the scintilla of a charge can be built up against the department. Let me repeat what the Minister of Militia was obliged to say, not once but two or three times over, that in this matter, from beginning to end, he had no dealing, direct or indirect, with Mr. Hatch, who appears to be a rival of Dr. Devlin in the production of a rival food.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Dr. Devlin was his agent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minister of Militia knows nothing about Mr. Hatch, and never saw him or had any communication with him. All he knew was that Dr. Devlin came to him in the spring of 1899 and claimed that he had discovered what was called an "emergency food," which would enable soldiers to sustain life for a great length of time on a small package of compressed food. That was tested in a way that the ex-Minister of Militia and other gentlemen have said fulfilled every condition the House could desire.

Mr. DAVIN. That was the first test.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, no one complains of that. We need not trouble our minds with the technical name of the food at all. There was only one man that the Minister of Militia ever dealt with, only one man who brought a food to him to test. That food was tested in a way that everybody approved of and with the most satisfactory results. The Minister of Militia did not immediately enter into any contract for the purchase of that food, but when the second contingent was going away, in January, 1900, Dr. Devlin said: Now is the time for you to purchase some of my food, a sample of which you tested last April. The head of the department referred the matter to the director general of medical stores, and that gentleman, in January, 1900, in a very strong letter, strongly advised the department to purchase that food.

Mr. DAVIN. It does not say that there was any test made.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, but it referred to the test which had been previously made, and there could be no other test.

Mr. McNEILL. But the food supplied in January, 1900, was called vitaline.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am astonished, and almost ashamed of my hon. friend in making this trivial interruption, when I am trying to put the point that there was a test in April, 1899, which proved satisfactory, and that in January, 1900, when the second contingent was going off, the owner of that food which had been tested came to the department—

Mr. McNEILL. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The only man whom the department had ever known in connection with that food was the man who came to them in January, 1900. I am taking the statement of the Minister of Militia, and I presume he knows more about what took place between himself and Dr. Devlin than the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) does. The Minister of Militia says he never saw this man Hatch, never saw anybody in connection with the matter but Dr. Devlin, and when the doctor on the going away of the second contingent asked the head of the department to purchase some of this food, the hon. minister at once referred it to the director general, who reported that the tests showed such excellent results, that he advised that a purchase should be made.

Mr. McNEILL. That is, of Hatch's food.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no mention of Hatch in it.

Mr. McNEILL. Hatch's food was the one tested.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So far from that being the case, the director general recommends, as shown by his letter, that the troops of the second contingent be provided with five days' rations of protein vegetal as tendered for by E. E. Devlin. So, not only was the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) wrong in introducing Hatch's name, but it is clear that Dr. Devlin's name was put in as that of the man who owned the food which the director general recommended as that which he had tested. The contract was made in January, 1899. The hon. member for Haldimand tried to make a point out of that. Why was there such a hurry? he asked. I felt ashamed of the question. My hon. friend knows that only ten days was allowed to send off a contingent, and there was no time to be lost. To talk about another test of 30 days on living subjects is trifling with the intelligence of the House. Surely, having made the test in April, 1899, unless there was a fraud being practised upon you by the men who pretended to provide the same article, you were justified in saying: Yes, if it is the same food that we tested last spring we will buy it. And the director general assumes and states it to be the same. The contract was not made hastily: it was made in the only way in which it could be made. The troops were going away in ten days and the food had to be taken with the troops if it was to be of any use. If you speak of a chemical analysis of the samples produced, what evidence would that be that it was the same food tested in 1899? It is simply a question of bona fides—was there or was there not a fraud committed? You come back to that every time. We have here Mr. Cotton's letter, and he was one of the very men upon whom the experiment was made, one of the men who used the food in 1899.

Mr. McNEILL. Hatch's food?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) seems to be mad on the subject of Hatch. Nobody else ever heard of Hatch. There is not a document produced by the minister that has Hatch's name in it, and yet the hon. gentleman repeats that it is

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Hatch's food. Now, on the 23rd of February—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This year, Mr. Cotton writes to Lieut. Colonel Neilson, director general:

I beg to certify that I have tested the vegetable protein powder made by the Vitaline Company of Montreal, marked 'emergency ration,' and I find it exactly the same as the vegetable food taken by me in Dr. Devlin's test—

Not Hatch's—

—in Kingston, beginning in March last for a period of four weeks.

What I am leading up to is that there is not a thing to justify the assertion that there is a fraud. No letter or any other document can be produced to show that the food supplied was not the food that was ordered. There is not an hon. gentleman in this House who will stand upon his feet and take the responsibility of asserting that there was evidence of a fraud—not a man is in a position to say that the food supplied is not in every respect the same as that tested in April, 1899. Yet, though there is not a scintilla of evidence, the House and the country are asked to believe that one of the foulest frauds that a man could commit has been committed by the substitution of innutritious food for the nutritious food that should have been supplied to our troops to be used in a great emergency. To quote the language of the right hon. First Minister, a more heinous crime could not be committed than to substitute a fraudulent food for that ordered by the minister. I ask hon. gentlemen, in heaven's name, on what do they base this foul charge? The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) took twenty minutes to declaim—for he did not argue—against the government on the assumption that this charge was proved, though there was no scintilla of proof whatever.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He has gone away.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) went out. I hope he was ashamed of the charge he made. Then, we have further the letter sent to the minister immediately the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) gave notice that he would bring this up, and this letter states that exactly the same food was sent to Africa as was tested in April, 1899.

Mr. PRIOR. He had not analysed it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) know that?

Mr. PRIOR. He does not say he analysed it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He had before him the letter of Mr. Cotton, one of the men who took the food, and he says it is the same.

Mr. PRIOR. How does he know? No one can tell by eating it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, my hon. and gallant friend (Mr. Prior) is in a better position to judge than the director general who examined it and kept the sample, and Mr. Cotton, who lived on the food for thirty days. I will tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) what he knows about it—he knows absolutely and literally nothing, and the reason why I say so is that he has never examined it, he has never tested it chemically and is no more capable of testing it chemically than I am. He never tested it personally—he certainly never lived on it for thirty days—yet he is prepared to get up here and contradict both the director general and Mr. Cotton. That shows what fair-minded men we have on the other side of this discussion. They are prepared to assume fraud against the minister, they are prepared to assume fraud against the director general, they are prepared to assume fraud against Mr. Cotton, they are prepared to assume that Dr. Devlin was in that fraud—they are prepared to assume fraud all round if thereby they can smirch the government. That is the one point that they had in view, and I am sorry for it. With one or two rare exceptions, the debate on the other side has been conducted on that line, and apparently with that object, not to discover a great fraud, if there was a fraud, but if possible to throw some blame upon my hon. friend, and upon the government of which he is a distinguished member. I say, therefore, that the only question before the House is, whether there was a fraud by the substitution of a food different from that which was submitted to the Minister of Militia and Defence, and tested in April, 1899. I say that up to this moment, and I followed the debate very closely, there has not been one fact, chemical, chronological or other, stated by any one gentleman on the other side, which would lead an honest man to come to the conclusion that there had been a fraud committed. In point of fact, Mr. Speaker, if one may be allowed to repeat himself, I say that there has been no evidence at all to justify anybody in coming to any other conclusion than that the food that went out was the identical food that was tested in 1899. What does it all come to? It comes to this, that there was a rival who, after the food went away, and I believe after Dr. Devlin was paid, wrote a letter, signed H. H., saying that there was something wrong about it, and in which he stated that his food should have been taken, and not Dr. Devlin's. That is all there was in it from beginning to end. I am the last man in the world, when any evidence whatever is given to show fraud, that would shrink from having that fraud thoroughly investigated and sifted to the bottom. But I say it is disgraceful that ministers of the Crown, officers holding high positions, directors general, physicians, such as Dr. Devlin, should all be subjected to this attempt to take away their characters by statements made in this House, by men who are not responsible for their statements out of the House, and when there is not a shadow of foundation to justify these statements.

Mr. C. KLOEPFER (South Wellington). I have listened very carefully to this discussion on both sides of the House, and I am prepared to draw my own conclusions. I find that Dr. Devlin went to the government, taking some samples with him, which the government had tested at Kingston, and found it to be a good article. Then Dr. Devlin went to the government and made arrangements to supply a large quantity of food. He went to work and manufactured this food and put it into boxes. I do not know where it is made, that is something we cannot ascertain from the Minister of Militia and Defence. But this food was boxed up and shipped away to South Africa without being analysed at all. It seems to me as though the government had entirely failed to handle this matter in a business-like manner.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Would the hon. gentleman permit me to recall his attention to the letter the Minister of Militia and Defence read in the afternoon, produced by Dr. Devlin at the time he sold these articles to the Department of Militia, containing a certificate from the eminent chemist, Dr. Ruttan, of McGill College, Montreal, that he had analysed the food, and found it to be the same.

Mr. KLEOPFER. He analysed samples only. During this session of the House, I bought $4,000 to $5,000 worth of goods of a certain party on samples be produced. I looked over the samples and bought several car-loads of goods, which I assumed to be like the samples, but when the goods arrived they were not at all like the samples. When I found the goods were not like the samples, I put them back in the car, and returned them, and the party wrote to me saying that his warehouseman took them off the wrong pile. Well, it may be that Dr. Devlin took this food off the wrong pile. When a farmer buys a horse, he never pays the money until he has examined the horse from its ears to the tail. These foods were never examined at all, they went away to the ship just as they were. That is where I consider that the government acted in a very unbusinesslike manner. Before sending off the goods, they should have sent a man to examine a can here and there in the shipment. Why, when you send a shipment of apples to the old country, you cannot get paid your money until every third barrel has been opened and examined, and the government ought to have acted likewise in this case. Therefore, I claim that the department has not looked after this business properly. These goods were not properly examined, they were not up to the mark, otherwise the member for Jacques Cartier would not have made this charge. Whenever anything leaks out, there is always something wrong. A bell does not ring for nothing. For all these reasons, I come to the conclusion that this thing ought to be investigated.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). After the most cogent speech that has been made by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Kloefer), who has given us his business experience, showing how very easily a fraud might be committed, it will be easier for me to answer my hon. and learned friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It is extraordinary that there has been so much heat amongst the ministerial party in regard to this debate, and so much incredulity as to the possibility of fraud, when it is notorious that in England, in the United States, in France, in Germany, there has to be the most sleepless watchfulness, and even then they cannot prevent frauds being perpetrated upon the war office in respect of provisions and materials of war. We know that in a trial that took place some years ago, it came out that cutlasses sold to the English navy by English firms of highest repute, were found of no more value than pasteboard. In the recent war that took place between Spain and the United States, we had the head of the American Army, General Miles, giving his evidence that the food supplied to his army by reputable firms was utterly unfit. Therefore, there is no reason to doubt the suggestion that something might be wrong in the supply of food to our war department. I think you will agree with me that our colonels are not strong either in the defence or in the offensive movement they make. Now the Solicitor General was, in my opinion, very instructive. He was angry; he was inconsequential; he was, contrary to his usual practice, discourteous, he, one of the most courteous men in this House, as a rule. As the Hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), has said, it is impossible to complain of the usual demeanour of the Solicitor General. Why was the Solicitor General angry? I think if we could see into his heart we should find that he was not angry with this side of the House, but he was angry with his own friends who had given him such a bad case to defend. And what was the defence? It was the same kind of defence that has been made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, harping on the fact that the Department of Militia dealt all the time with one man. Why, Sir, that is not the thing that we have to consider. It is not whether they dealt with one man but whether they got the same food. Nothing could be easier than for a woman to go with a basket of good eggs at one time to a house, and be told to come back and the eggs would be bought at a certain hour, and she comes back, not with the same eggs, but with eggs that have passed beyond the period of their sublunary existence. The suggestion is that Dr. Devlin, having negotiated with the department, originally for protose, for the goods manufactured by Hatch, at another time comes and says to the department—we have his letter here—he does not say in a word that it is protose, but what he says is that he will supply a certain prepared powder food. At that time it was most necessary to be quick, to use despatch. No one can read these letters, all of the same date—there is no evidence whatever that any chemical test was made—without feeling that there was a volatility on the part of the Department of Militia, that, to say the least, is not very creditable to us. This is the justification of some of the remarks which have fallen from this side of the House as to the manner in which that contract was made. There was fraud, possibly, if fraud was intended. Let me say one word in reference to the statements made in regard to the speech of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). He was accused, I think, in a very harsh and unjust manner by the hon. Solicitor General of making charges, and when he repudiated that he had made these charges the proof advanced was that he had read an article from the Militia Gazette. Why, Sir, I read the article, and the parts that were marked and the sentences that were emphasized did not amount to the charge that was attributed to the hon. gentleman. The hon. Solicitor General fell into a very curious lapsus, because he defied the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to go outside and make the same statement as was made in the Gazette, presumably threatening an action, but the same charge was made in the Gazette months ago, and no action has been taken. Now, here is this precious letter on which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries lays so much stress, the letter of Mr. Cotton. It is a most charming document. It is dated St. John's, Que., on February 23, 1900, and it arrives in the Department of Militia in May, 1900:

(From Hospital Sergeant Cotton, R.C.R.I., to Lieut.-Col. Neilson, Director General Medical Staff.)

St. John's, Que., Feb. 23, 1900.

Sir,—I beg to certify that I have tested the vegetable proteid powder, made by Vitaline Company, Montreal, marked 'emergency rations,' and find it exactly the same as the vegetable food taken by me in Dr. Devlin's test in Kingston, beginning in March last, for a period of four weeks.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd. A. COTTON,

Hospital Sergeant, R.C.R.I.

What happened when the test was made at Kingston was that he had been placed under scientific experiments for a protracted period. He was constantly under the care of scientific men, he was under their surveillance, and he was able to take an oath, that, having taken that food for a protracted period, it produced certain results. All that there is any evidence that he did on the second occasion is that he tested the food, that he found that it tasted somewhat similar, but there is no evidence that the food had the same nutritive properties that the food tested at Kingston had. Then, we have Mr. Moore. I suppose the word of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier will be taken as soon as that of any other hon. member of this House, and he tells us that Mr. Moore is a responsible person, that Mr. Moore went and got a case of this food, that he had it tested, and that it only tested 17½ per cent in those properties in which the other had tested over 70 per cent. What is the use of a trumpety letter like that on which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries laid so much stress? The hon. minister gave the thing away when he said that the whole matter was a question of bona fides. If it is a question of bona fides on the part of Dr. Devlin, or of somebody in or near the government he operated with, then, this contention on the part of a distinguished member of the government shows that the Department of Militia was very far aside of its responsibilities, and that it had not been mindful of the trust imposed upon it when making this contract. I was surprised, however, to hear so humanitarian a gentleman as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and one who bears Imperial honours, rebuke the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) for referring to matters of life and death in regard to a question of this kind. Could there be anything more proper than to remind the House and the country and the government that in a matter of this kind it was a question of life and death? Suppose that the war had been protracted, suppose that our victorious troops, instead of being in Pretoria, were sitting down before it, and that the war had been protracted for months, was it not on the card that the second contingent that went out there, and which had the honour of the empire and of Canada upon its shoulders, might be placed in a position in which a question of food would be of vital importance, and in which it would not only be a question of life and death, but it would be a question of importance that every man should have that strength and power and valour which, after all, are intimately connected with a well-nourished physique, to fight the battles of the empire and uphold the honour of Canada. So, I say, that the reference of the hon. member for Haldimand is perfectly germane, and I say further, that this question is now in this position that the hon. Minister of Militia, nay, that the government of Canada, cannot do other than institute an inquiry, unless, indeed, they should feel, and I would be sorry to believe it, that there is something to cover up, something that the eye of heaven must not pierce. Let the government have an inquiry, let them probe this matter to the bottom, and if, probing it to the bottom, it should be found that everything has been plain and square, no one would be more rejoiced than myself.

Mr. JAMES DOMVILLE (King's, N.B.)
Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to this debate. It is a great mixture—one that I might call kaleidoscopic in its character. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia has used the word 'suppose' very often. I think it is a word used in the North-west Territories among the Indians. They say out there that 'they suppose.' The hon. gentleman has dealt a great deal with the question of adulteration. How can you adulterate that food? What could you put into vegetables to make the food cheaper than it is? Suppose they had wanted to adulterate it, how could they put anything in it cheaper than the real article which is made out of vegetables. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) spoke about bravery and theology—perhaps I had better not call him my 'hon. friend,' and perhaps if I call him the 'hon. member,' it will be more parliamentary—he spoke about bravery and about what the newspapers said, but he is the last man in the House that dare take up what the newspapers say, and he would not like me to quote them. Very often the newspapers speak the truth, and very often they do not, but anyhow wherever there is smoke there is some fire. The hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Foster), who ran off from King's with a carpet bag in the last hour, he should not stand up and talk about bravery. If he is a brave man he should stand up and take his punishment. The hon. gentleman from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) talked about the troops suffering, but how could they perform these glorious acts of bravery if that food was bad. They would have wilted under it if the food were bad, but we have not heard a complaint in regard to it. The truth is that hon. gentlemen opposite have so failed in everything they brought forward this session, that at the last moment they have to resort to this question of dried vegetables to detain parliament in discussing something that is not pertinent to the hour. If they were so anxious in regard to the matter why did they not bring it up earlier in the session. It just shows that they are anxious to grapple with something that they think will bring discredit on the government. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) spoke about chemical tests. What chemical tests could be applied to vegetables. Are you going to look for sugar in them? I am addressing my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and I ask him, would he test them for alcohol.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) want an answer?

Mr. DOMVILLE. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. I would if I were making a post mortem upon you.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The hon. member (Mr. Davin) always falls back upon something that is offensive when he fails in argument. I would not be so rude as to make any remarks about what a post mortem test would show on him. I would not be so rude as to talk about a man being taken home on a wheelbarrow. I am more gentlemanly than to insult any gentleman or acquaintance of mine or to intimate that in a moment of weakness he has been trundled home in a wheelbarrow. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) poses as a leader here and we have been compelled to listen to his abuse in speech after speech. We have all seen the play of Punch and Judy where Punch knocks Judy over and Judy knocks Punch over, and finally the clown gets up and rules. If the hon. gentleman sticks to something that is not offensive, we will all be glad to assist him in endeavouring to do something that is right, and if he thinks he is doing what is right to-night we will assist him in that or any other good cause. I do not think this debate is going to be productive of much credit to this House of Commons. We shall see to-morrow in the newspapers big black headlines: 'Disgraceful conduct in the House of Commons.' 'The Right Hon. Sir Charles Tupper rises in his seat and the leaders of the government quailed before him in fear.' 'The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) threatens.' Well, he put his two fingers out and he said something, but there was such a row that we could only see him gesticulating. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) talked about the English government and the American government. Does he pretend to be able to put the whole world right. We know that in England the contractors made bayonets and sabres out of pot metal, but was the government of England to blame; was the government of England to inspect every sabre and every bayonet? Certainly not. The hon. gentlemen opposite cannot hold the government responsible for what occurred even though there should have been something wrong. I point out again that when you endeavour to substitute something that is cheaper than vegetables you will find it hard to do so, and so would the contractors find it difficult. Here you have potatoes worth half a cent a pound, and how could the contractor put anything in the place of potatoes that would be cheaper. If he had taken starch, it costs more; if he had taken sugar, it costs more; if he had taken molasses, it costs more. Tell me what article of human food he could have used in compressed form which would have been cheaper than the material used. I have seen the stuff and worked with it, and I do not think there would be any object in adulterating it. The hon. member for York talks about theology. I am not as well up in that subject as he is. I have never had the chance of going around the country as a theological exponent of right and wrong, as he has. I have met my hon. friend on many occasions and heard him discuss a great many questions, but I have never had the pleasure of being present when he discussed theology, although I believe he did very well. Now, I think the country will view this as a lost day, as a vast expense on nothing, as a charge made against somebody but with no basis. It can only be summed up in the words of a poet whose name I forget:

Mr. DOMVILLE.

What caused the Adullamites to rise,
And fill the butcher shops with large blue flies?

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just taken his seat says this is a most trifling question. I do not think the country will agree with him. He thinks the country will say that a day has been lost. I do not think the country will agree with him in that either, except in regard to speeches like his, which have wandered all over creation and discussed the real subject very little. It has been rather amusing to-day to hear members on the other side, most of them cabinet ministers, charging members on this side with being excited and violent and partisan, when the fact is that if they could only have sat here and seen themselves, they would have said that they were what they described members on this side to be. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was very violent and extreme. Indeed, it would strike an independent observer, one not interested at all in politics, that there must be something wrong when members on the government side were so excited and discussed the question with so much heat. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier was charged with having made a most violent speech. I think I am a judge of a violent speech, and I do not think he made a violent speech at all. I do not think that his speech could compare with the speech of the Solicitor General for violence, or for partisanship either.

An hon. MEMBER. Or the speech of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. CRAIG. I will not say that, because I do not think the speech of the Minister of Finance was quite as bad as that of the Solicitor General. But I thought the hon. member for Jacques Cartier made his statements calmly. It is true, he spoke rather strongly at times; but that was when he said that if this fraud was committed on the country, it ought to be condemned by every one, because it was a most serious thing to send food to our troops which was not up to the standard, and would not do what it was claimed to do in a case of emergency. The Minister of Militia said there was only one man known to him in the matter, and that was Dr. Devlin. If I thought there was anything wrong in this matter, I would say that was a suspicious circumstance. Dr. Devlin first came here handling the food known as Hatch's protose. That was the food that was tested at Kingston on the soldiers there, and pronounced a very good article. Well, it has been brought out conclusively to-day that the food purchased by the government for South Africa was not Hatch's protose at all, but a compound known as vitaline, manufactured by the Vitaline Company. It may be claimed that this is just as good; but there is no proof of that. Protose was tested by the government; vitaline was not tested, and, more than that, it was not analysed by the Militia Department. It seems to me that the real question is this. Here was nearly $5,000 worth of this vitaline bought as an emergency food to be sent with our troops to Africa. The question is, did the government inspect any of that food, and find out whether it was up to the standard or not? I hold that the government had no right at all to take the word of Dr. Devlin, because he was the man who was selling this food; and it is a most unbusinesslike method—and hon. members, if politics were left out of the question, would say so themselves—to accept the statement of the seller as to the quality of the goods he sells.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What does Cotton say about it?

Mr. CRAIG. Sergeant Cotton is only one man; and I do not know whether he knew what he was using when he made the test. We have only his own word for it, and I am not satisfied to accept the word of only one man on a question of this kind. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries asks, what time was there to make this test? It may be that there was no time to make the same kind of test as was made at Kingston; but there was ample time for the Minister of Militia to see that certain samples were taken out of the different boxes shipped, and were analysed and found to contain 60 per cent of food. That is what I would have done, and what the Minister of Militia would have done if he were sending this food out to any one in whom he took a great interest. Here were our soldiers going to Africa, and here was a food which was not bought as an ordinary food at all, but as emergency food, only to be used by the soldiers when they could not get any other, and when, without it, they might be liable to starvation. Here was a food tested at Kingston and found to contain 60 per cent.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying that. It was tested at Kingston purely as food to see how it would sustain life.

Mr. CRAIG. Yes, I made a mistake there. I was going to say that this protose which was tested at Kingston was analysed afterwards and found to contain 60 per cent of real food products.

Mr. McNEILL. The minister said 88 per cent.

Mr. CRAIG. I say 60 per cent. While the Minister of Militia accepted the word of Dr. Devlin, and the word of some of his officers, who said this was just as good, I say he should not have been satisfied without making a test of samples taken from the cases that were being shipped to South Africa, and finding from analysis whether they contained the same amount of food as the protose that had been tested at Kingston. The department is charged with negligence in not doing this. The Minister of Militia states that he saw this article published in the Military Gazette on April 3, stating that this vitaline was not as good as the protose, but he paid no attention to it. I think that in that he was negligent, too; because, while it may be as he says that the Military Gazette is a Conservative paper—

Mr. PRIOR. It is not a Conservative paper.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not know anything about that. It is said by hon. gentlemen on the other side that it is; but even in Conservative papers there are statements made which the government ought to pay attention to, and this is one of them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I might, perhaps, make a statement in this connection which I did not think it worth while to make in my general statement, and it is this, that the owner of the newspaper, Mr. John B. McLean, spoke to me some time after that article was written, and informed me that he did not know anything about it at the time or it would not have appeared, and that he had satisfied himself it was not well founded, and that the individual who wrote it was no longer connected with him or that newspaper.

Mr. CRAIG. I think the hon. minister owes me thanks for having drawn that out. I am very glad to hear that statement, but I go further. I notice that there was a letter written, I presume, by Mr. Hatch, since it was signed 'H. H.' with reference to this food. While it might be known that he was a rival manufacturer, still we sometimes find out things even from our rivals, and I think the hon. minister should have looked into this matter and investigated it. But that he did not do. When this matter was first brought before the House by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, he did not make a charge; but, on being challenged by the Solicitor General, he did make one. Of course, the Solicitor General then ridiculed him for making a charge in the House under the protection of parliament. He challenged my hon. friend to make a charge, and then, when the charge was made, ridiculed him for having done so, and paid no attention to it.

I really did think, when the statement was made first, that the Minister of Militia should have at once asked for the committee, both for his own sake and that of the country. The statements of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier are serious, and for the honour of the country and the Militia Department they should be investigated. I am not saying this from a political point of view, though it may seem idle for any man in this House to say he is not speaking politically, for nobody seems to believe him, either in the House or in the country. But, I do say this frankly, if I were on the opposite side, and statements of this kind were made on a matter of life and death—for the lives of our Canadian soldiers were dependent, in a great measure, on the quality of the food supplied to them—I think I would have been in favour of a committee, and I hope that even now the government will see their way to grant one. If nothing is proved, all the better for them and the country. I hope that nothing wrong will be proved. I should be only too glad to learn that this food was up to the standard and that the statements concerning it were wrong in every respect. I hope, for the sake of the country and the government, that we will be given a committee of investigation.

Mr. JAS. McMULLEN (North Wellington). I have listened very attentively to every word spoken on that side on the subject brought before us by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. If that hon. gentleman had thought calmly over the whole subject, if he had considered the position in which he was placing himself by the course he has adopted, I am convinced that he would never have brought the matter before this House. It is to be regretted that such a matter should have been brought up just at this juncture. Our troops are in South Africa, where they have so far discharged the duties devolving upon them with honour and credit to themselves and the Dominion. They have been now four months in South Africa, and yet, we have not heard a word of complaint, by private letter or otherwise, of the quality of the food supplied them. We have not heard one word of complaint that the viteline is not up to the standard. But if, after the troops return, we find complaint that it was not what it was represented, or if we find before they return that any complaint is made of the inferiority of this food and the food supplied generally, it would be then quite proper for the government to investigate the whole question. My hon. friend said that a sample was got in Montreal and subjected to a test and proved inferior. This very statement showed that the foundation of the whole trouble is the jealousy between two rival companies in the city of Montreal. The men who did not get the contract became exasperated and felt bound to have revenge in some way or other. With this view, they rushed into print, and published an article in the Military Gazette, which the owner of that newspaper told the Minister of Militia he was sorry had ever found its way into that paper. And he stated further that if the writer himself had to pen the article over again, he would not do it. He says that he regrets the article was ever published. We have the hon. member for Jacques Cartier bringing forward a charge against the minister and then withdrawing it, and afterwards making a charge against Dr. Devlin, and then withdrawing it. So that, we have nothing but insinuations that something may have been wrong. I do think that we have spent the whole day very unwisely. The hon. member for Haldimand blamed the Minister of Finance for waxing warm in his address, but that hon. gentleman himself was perfectly wild before he got through. You would fancy he was addressing a gathering of back-country hoboos, with empty heads, ready to swallow everything he said. Then, the hon. member for Haldimand did a thing I was a little surprised at, but not very much. When he began to quote a document which had been sent to him, he quoted a portion to suit his object, and it was only after continual forcing that he was got to read the balance of the document, and when he did so, the bottom was knocked completely out of his argument.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It was not forced out of me. I was asked to read it, and immediately did so. I had never read it before, but it had only been placed into my hands a few moments, and the portions marked I read.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman read the portion so far as it suited himself, and then he stopped.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not know that the other part was there.

Mr. McMULLEN. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but it just shows with what little information hon. gentlemen opposite will try to make out a case. When a member gets up to read a paper before the House, he should give its full contents. I do think that the hon. the Minister of Militia has come so far very creditably out of the whole charge. The hon. the leader of the opposition complains that a test of the food was not made before it was shipped to South Africa. Yet, this is the same hon. gentleman who got up here day after day and belaboured the government for being so tardy in sending off the troops. If the Minister of Militia had waited to test every article of food and to shoot off every gun to see that it shot straight, and make an examination of all the material sent, the men would not have got started yet. But, hon. gentlemen opposite are bound to condemn the Minister of Militia, no matter what course he has taken. They are evidently badly in need of political food—

An hon. MEMBER. Emergency food.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, emergency food. They thought there was something in this case, but after threshing it out for five hours, there is nothing proven, there is no charge even made; it simply ends in wind. I think they might have allowed the troops to return without raising a trouble of this kind in parliament, simply because there was an article in the Canadian Military Gazette, and because there was rivalry between two companies in Montreal, both of which wanted the contract that only one could get. It is contended that we should investigate matters of this kind. But if we were to investigate every lie published in the Mail and Empire, the Montreal Star, and other newspapers, we would be sitting here all the year around. As the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says, if he allowed himself to be troubled by the statements made concerning him in the public press, he would soon be a candidate for a lunatic asylum. He appears to have the faculty of allowing the papers to talk as they like, and that is a grand thing. This is like other insinuations made in the Tory press. I hope that there is nothing in it. Hon. gentlemen should have waited until the troops returned and the food was analysed, if any of it is left, or until some complaint is made by the officers—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Or the men.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, or the men. But no private letter that has come to Canada since they went away has contained a single suggestion that there is anything wrong with the food, or with anything else that was supplied them. But, hon. gentlemen make one charge, and then they take that back and make another, and so they have gone on withdrawing them, until now there is no charge and nothing to investigate.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria). At this early hour of the morning, I do not intend to trespass long on the patience of the House. But, having been connected with the militia for some years, I may be allowed to make a few remarks on this question. I was much struck by the statement made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). Hon. gentlemen on the other side seemed to think he showed great temper in bringing this matter forward, but I think he spoke in a most moderate manner, and laid his case before the House in an able way. And, as this is a matter of importance to every man who is interested in the country, and especially in the militia, and should be thoroughly ventilated, I think the hon. gentleman deserves great credit for bringing it forward. I have listened to the speeches made on both sides, and I must say that I can come to only one opinion, and that is that the food that was so successfully tested at Kingston, was not the food that was sent to our soldiers in South Africa. I do not believe that hon. gentlemen opposite have contended that it was, but have only said that it was just as good. I would draw attention to the fact that the food tested at Kingston was a registered food, and a registered food cannot be copied, without the man who copies it laying himself open to a penalty. This food was made by the Hatch Protose Company, and the man who brought it to the notice of the minister was Dr. Devlin, who came as the company's agent. The next thing we hear of Dr. Devlin is that he has nothing to do with the Hatch Protose Company, but he comes before the department on his own account and tries to sell a food, which he succeeds in doing, and he names it viteline. Evidently he appears in two capacities—first he acted as agent for the Hatch Protose Company, and then for himself. First he acts as for a registered company and subsequently for what we must look upon as an imitation of their food. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), stated that he did not think there was a scintilla of evidence to prove that the food was not the same. Well, we were told by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, that a Mr. Moore went to Mr. Lyons, who had put up the food sent to South Africa, and obtained a tin of the same, and took it to a good analyst, and the result of his analysis was to show that there was only 17½ per cent of crude protein in it, whereas in the Hatch Protose Company food, which was used by the men in the Kingston test, there was 84.78 per cent of crude protein. Surely that proves that the food was not the same. It has been stated that charges of fraud were made against the Minister of Militia and Defence, and that the same charges have been made against almost everybody whose name has been brought forward. I have sat here all day long, and I have yet to hear the first man make a charge of fraud against the Minister of Militia. I say distinctly that I believe there has been fraud somewhere, but I do not say that the minister is guilty of it. But, I do say that he is guilty of culpable negligence in not having the food tested, as the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Kloopfer) said in his businesslike speech, it should have been. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), saw fit to chaff me on my utter ignorance of this food. He said that I had had the effrontery to put my opinion before that of the medical director general, and that of Sergeant Cotton. Why, Sir, I think my opinion about that food is just as good as that of those two gentlemen, for the reason that neither of them have made an analysis.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is a good food, I have eaten it.

Mr. PRIOR. Well, if he has eaten it, I hope it did him good. But even a medical officer could not tell from looking at or even by eating it whether it was the same food.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You have neither eaten it nor seen it.

Mr. PRIOR. I dare say it is a very good food. Perhaps it might not do me any harm. But I will say this to the Minister of Militia and Defence, that if he can assure the House that his deputy has been fed on it, we will agree that it is good stuff to send to South Africa, for, if there is anywhere a good-natured, jovial man, who has his wits about him, I think the Deputy Minister of Militia is the man. In that case we would have no fear for our troops in South Africa.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will ask him.

Mr. PRIOR. There is one more matter that I shall mention, and that is a remark made by the Minister of Militia and Defence in regard to the Canadian Military Gazette. He saw fit to state, if I took his words down correctly, that it was a Conservative paper, that it had lost its respectability and influence in Canada. The hon. minister without portfolio (Mr. Dobell) also spoke of it as a reptile press, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said it was a Conservative paper. Now, I challenge all these statements. I say distinctly that the paper is not a Conservative paper, it is a thoroughly independent military paper, and always has been. Some times it sees fit to criticise the Minister of Militia and Defence or any other member of the government, and it did the same thing when our party was in power. I have taken it for many years, and I know it has always been a thoroughly independent paper, and is looked on as such by militia men on both sides of the House. It sees fit sometimes to criticise men on either sides of politics. Instead of the paper having lost its influence, it is gaining in influence every month. I do not think there is a paper printed in Canada whose issue is looked forward to with so much expectancy by the officers and men of the militia of Canada, as the Canadian Military Gazette. Its columns are open to every man, be he Conservative or Liberal, officer or private. You will see in it all kinds of opinions about military matters, properly written by men who know what they are talking about. If the Minister of Militia and Defence thinks that that paper has lost its influence, it shows how little he is in touch with the men under his direction, for if he were in touch with them he certainly would have known that they are heartily in accord with the leading articles that appear in that paper. If it is a Conservative paper at the present time, and if the articles that appear have mostly a Conservative tendency, it must be owing to the fact that the minister stated the other day in this House, that at least 90 per cent of the militia men of the country are Conservatives. I know the owner of the paper, Colonel McLean is a high-minded gentleman, and one of the very best and smartest officers that we have in Canada. He has the respect and esteem of every officer who has ever come in contact with him. The editor of that paper, I think it is Capt. Macdonald, is a gentleman of character and ability, and I cannot believe that he ever wrote that article. I am glad to hear that Colonel McLean has stated that he did not think that article should ever have appeared in the paper. As I said before, I do not believe anybody has charged the Minister of Militia and Defence with fraud in this matter, but I do believe in my heart that the food that was shipped to South Africa was not the food that the Department of Militia thought they were buying. I have nothing more to say except that I think an investigation should be held for the sake of the Militia Department, for the sake of the militia, and for the sake of the good name of Canada.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). I think that independent members of the House, anxious to arrive at a fair conclusion on every matter submitted to their attention, may justly complain of the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) for the way in which he chose to bring this important matter before the House. In the first place he makes a motion to adjourn the House in order to bring it up, and although a majority of the members at this hour would be inclined to support his motion to adjourn, they are unwilling thereby to indicate any endorsement of his views. There are so many other ways in which he might have brought this question before the House that I am surprised that an hon. gentleman of the ability and experience of the member for Jacques Cartier had not chosen some other form of bringing it up. He could have waited until the House was in committee on the militia estimates, when there would have been an admirable opportunity for a full inquiry into every possible phase of this question without any hon. member trenching upon the rules of the House, as we have seen done too often during this debate. We have seen hon. members attempting to cross-examine and catechise the Minister of Militia and Defence, which he of course, standing upon his rights as a member of this House, properly resented. It was impossible for him to reply to all the questions put to him other than by a brief answer. In the next place, if one hon. gentleman had the right to ask him one question or half a dozen questions which called for a brief answer, then every other hon. gentleman would have the same right. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier could also have brought this matter before the country by way of a letter addressed to the department or to the public press, asking the Minister of Militia and Defence to make an explanation upon the question in writing. I think that we must all be gratified to see that at last the more serious phases of the charge made by the member for Jacques Cartier have disappeared. I am certain from the solemn manner in which he insisted upon going on with this question, notwithstanding the remonstrances of the hon. leader of the House, claiming that it was a matter of great emergency, of vital importance, and that it must not be delayed for a single hour, every one expected that there was something of a very grave and serious character impending, and the House listened with great gravity to the statement of the hon. gentleman. Perhaps the hon. gentleman was not conscious of it—it may have been unconscious—but there was a tone running through the whole of his speech as if the case that was quoted from the Military Gazette had been proved, and the comments which were made upon it were based upon the assumption that the charge had been proved. The House was treated to eloquent periods portraying the suffering of our gallant lads in South Africa owing to the neglect of the government of the country. I am certain that a tone of that kind in discussing a question of the nature of that which is before the House is highly improper. At any rate, I now ask the House: What does the question present for the consideration of the House, or for the consideration of an inquiry that may subsequently be made, because we are all aware that the Minister of Militia informed the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that if at any time, if now or later, he chooses to make a charge of any kind in connection with this matter he will be granted a proper inquiry into it? It all depends on these alternatives; either that the hon. Minister of Militia is guilty of grave wrong-doing, almost sufficient to justify his impeachment at the bar of the House, or that he is guilty of neglect in the management of his department which would justify a severe censure being passed upon him by the representatives of the people in this House, or, if the hon. minister is acquitted of any negligence, then, an important functionary of his department must be charged with a grave offence, and if he is acquitted, a reputable citizen and a professional man of eminence in Montreal is charged with a criminal offence of a serious nature. As far as the discussion has gone the more candid gentlemen on the other side of the House seem inclined to minimize the whole gravaman of the charge down to the fact that in purchasing the concentrated vegetable food which the hon. minister ordered, and which he supposed that he was obtaining for the contingent in South Africa, he was imposed upon by the contractor. That is the whole question now before the House. It has been proved from the records, as they appear, here, that the emergency food which was tested at Kingston, and which was brought forward by Dr. Devlin as a candidate for a contract, which was included in the contract and which was charged to the government, is the identical food which was tested at Kingston and which was subsequently compared with the food sent to South Africa by the medical director. Several hon. gentlemen have used a phrase, intimating that the hon. minister or his advisers had said that the food which was sent to South Africa was just as good. No such phrase as that appears in the documents presented to the House or in the remarks made by hon. gentlemen who are defending this transaction. The phrase in every one of these reports is that the food is identically the same. Mr. Cotton says that this is the vegetable food which was tested upon him personally, and the medical director says that it is the identical food which was tested in Kingston. Now, we come to this other phase of the question. What evidence is there to go before a committee, assuming that they have a case for inquiry, that the food purchased by a certain Mr. Moore, of whom further identification has not been furnished, was identical with the food sent to the troops in South Africa. There is no evidence to identify what I may call that fraudulent food with the food that the soldiers in South Africa received. I would be disposed to distrust any complaint coming from South Africa from any quarter, at any time, unless it happened to come from a professional man or an officer. I think that no statement, coming from a non-professional man ought to be received as any evidence whatever as to the character of this food. Apart from the fact that no private soldier is at all competent to tell whether the food is of good quality or not except by reason of his having made a careful study of the subject, and apart from an officer or a professional man such evidence ought not to be received. Apart from the painful episodes of the discussion I think we should all feel gratified to realize that at least, as far as any officer of the government is concerned, no charge has been made against any one for anything more, perhaps, than negligence. I do not say that there has been any negligence in this matter. If the minister has been deceived, if the medical director has been deceived, either of them must have been deceived deliberately by the man who fraudulently intended to palm off upon the government an article that the government had not bargained for. I trust that if the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier still believes that he has any reason for making a charge that the charge will be inquired into. I hope that in justice to himself, to the government, to parliament, as well as to the hard-working officers of the department who discharge their duties, as far as I know, in a painstaking and honest manner, he will bring this charge in such a form that it can be fairly investigated to the satisfaction of the public.

Mr. MONK. I am now in a position to speak more positively than I did this afternoon in respect to this matter. I made no charge. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) with a want of logic, which, I think, I am justified in saying is characteristic of him, insisted that I had made a charge against Dr. Devlin. I made no such charge. I brought to the notice of the House certain facts which I think call for investigation, and I am now more than ever satisfied that we must have such an investigation. I stated during the speech of the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) that I was prepared to give certain information in my charge in this respect, that I said that the food tested at Kingston was not the food supplied to our contingents, and that is my charge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not the same manufacture?

Mr. MONK. By no means, not the same manufacture, not the same ingredients. That is my charge, and I ask for an investigation upon that charge. I will go farther and say that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence has been guilty of gross negligence in regard to emergency rations supplied to our troops, and I think I will be able to justify the charge if a commission of inquiry is granted. There were very kind observations made by gentlemen on the other side in respect to my conduct as a general rule in this House, and I feel grateful for these remarks, but at the same time I am bound to say that this is a matter which calls for serious investigation. I may have been heated in some respects when I made this charge. I am familiar, as every member of this House, no doubt is, with every form of human perversity, and reluctantly do I believe that people will be found low enough, and greedy enough to wish to take advantage of the military enthusiasm in this country over the war, in order to make money for themselves. It is difficult for me to believe that, but still I think I will be able to produce evidence before this committee that this is a case of that kind. Regretfully and sadly do I believe it is a case of that kind. It has happened before, it happened in France in 1870. We had there military contractors who did the most shameful things to betray the interest of the French troops and the French government was not to blame.

Mr. TALBOT. It was not in the way of food; it was clothing.

Mr. MONK. Not only in the way of food, but in every way, and the boots and shoes which the troops wore in 1870 were not according to contract. The food was not according to contract. The French troops were betrayed in every way, and the United States in the recent Spanish war had similar examples. It seems incredible, but it is the case, that very often people avail themselves of these circumstances to make contracts with the government and to supply articles which were not as they should be. Now, Mr. Speaker, this tender of food was made on the 4th January, and it was accepted on the same day. The House will note this. It was accepted on the same day and there was no analysis. There is no question whatever about that. The protose food is a registered food, and it is well known. The hon. Minister of Finance said I gave no names. I give names.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said my hon. friend gave no names of any person becoming responsible for the charge.

Mr. MONK. I will give names at once to the House. Mr. Hatch is a man well and favourably known in Montreal. He is a food specialist, a man who is responsible, and if he had not supplied the government with such an article as was analysed and tested in Kingston, he would have been able to make good any damage which the government would have incurred. The Minister of Finance, or some gentlemen on the other side, very unjustly hinted that I was the paid advocate of this company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I made no such assertion.

Mr. MONK. I do not know them. I had clients in 1896, but I have lost most of them through the fact that I have been obliged to attend to my duties in this House. As regards this company, I never had any dealing whatever with them. I know it is a most responsible company, and the information which was given to me was given by a physician of Montreal, who occupies a good position, and who can be summoned before the committee, if the House decides to have a committee. He gave me the facts and asked me to seek confirmation of his statement with the Hatch Company itself.

Mr. FLINT.

I applied to this Mr. Hatch, who is a well known man in Montreal, and he confirmed these facts, and he is the principal witness that I would summon if an investigation is granted. I would summon the gentleman who went to Mr. John T. Lyons, who purchased the sample of this very food which was supplied to the troops and sent to South Africa. I would summon assuredly this most respectable chemist, Mr. Hersey, who is well known in Montreal, and who would give his testimony as to what the food was that he analysed. Assuredly, I would summon Dr. Devlin. I have nothing against Dr. Devlin, and from what has been said in this debate, it seems to be evident that he has played a very important part in these negotiations, and we would summon him, and summon Mr. Lyons. Therefore, the Finance Minister is mistaken when he says that I give no names and make no charge. I make this charge against the Minister of Militia: That he has been grossly negligent of his duty in regard to the selection of this food, and the making of this contract. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that strong evidence would have to be adduced before me, before I would reluctantly admit that any member of this House would be a party to such a fraud as that. It would have to be absolute proof to me that the Minister of Militia or anybody connected with that important department had really been a party to this. I never charged anything of that kind. What I said was that the Minister of Militia himself had insisted long before the war broke out, that this protose food should be tested. It was tested, but subsequently he bought an unregistered food, an article which has no reputation whatever from the Vitaline Company, a company which has no existence in the province of Quebec, and from which he could claim nothing.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him. I bought no food from any Vitaline Company. The papers have been laid on the Table of the House, and there cannot be any excuse for that statement. The food was bought from Dr. F. E. Devlin, the only man with whom the Department of Militia had any dealing from beginning to end with reference to this food.

Mr. MONK. I place myself in the hands of the House when I say, that it seems most extraordinary that the Minister of Militia, upon a tender made on the 4th January, should have on that same day concluded a contract—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are straying from the point that was raised.

Mr. MONK. It seems a most extraordinary circumstance that on the same day he should have purchased nearly $5,000 worth of this food from parties who had nothing at all to do with this food that was tested. He had before him the Hatch Protose food, a registered food, well known in Montreal, but on the same day, the hon. gentleman made a contract with these other men, without taking the trouble to ascertain whether this was really the food tested at Kingstou in April, 1899. That seems strange. I must say. As to myself, Sir, I can only say this: For four years I have been familiar, to a certain extent with the members of this House, and I do not believe there is one who would take any part in such a transaction and if the investigation, which I have asked this House to institute, proves that no member of this House has been a party to such a shameless transaction, a transaction which we cannot condemn too strongly. I shall be glad to go before my constituents afterwards, and state that nobody who represents the electorate of Canada in this House has had anything to do with this nefarious transaction, for such I believe it to be; and I have no fear that my electors will condemn me on that point. I have fulfilled nothing but a duty in bringing this matter before the House, and I think the government have not at all taken my suggestions in the spirit in which I made them. It is more than possible that the hon. Minister of Militia has been deceived; and if he has been, we will exonerate him; but it is most important at this moment, when this country, as one of the great dependencies of the empire, has so to speak, entered upon a military career, that everybody should know that while we are prepared to tolerate a great deal in other departments, a great many small affairs, we will not, for a single moment, tolerate any nonsense in the Department of Militia, but will bring to the knowledge of the country those who are cold-blooded enough to wish to speculate upon the soldiers who have been sent to the Transvaal in this war.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed a word before the vote is taken, I should like to hear from the First Minister, whether he proposes to carry out what was promised, I think, by the Minister of Militia and by the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), or whether he will say to-night that he will take the matter into consideration, and let us know at an early day, whether a suitable and adequate committee will be granted for the probing and investigation of this matter. I think any person who has listened to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, either in his opening remarks, or certainly in his closing remarks, must believe that he is honestly endeavouring to trace what he believes to have been a fraud. I think a motive of that kind backed by his statements and by the investigation which he has personally made, demands that it be met by the government and parliament, with a thorough investigation before a competent committee. A select committee of this House, I should think, would be quite competent to deal with it.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the hon. gentleman remembered the remark I made this afternoon, he would not take the useless trouble of putting to me the question he has done, because I answered this question in the closing remarks I addressed to the House. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier makes a statement upon his own responsibility that he has reason to believe that a fraud has been committed, he shall have his remedy; but I am not prepared, either now or at any other time, for my part, to consent to the appointment of a committee to investigate any charge based on mere newspaper rumour or report.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia if he would bring down all the papers connected with this matter. There is no opportunity for giving formal notice and moving for the papers; but this matter has assumed an importance which I think makes it necessary that all the correspondence, reports and papers connected with it be laid before the House as soon as possible?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will do it to-morrow.

Motion (Mr. Monk) to adjourn, negatived.

SUPPLY—THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORSHIP OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the right hon. leader of the government to a telegram which I have just received, as follows:

Victoria, B.C.,
June 6, 1900.

To the Hon. E. G. Prior,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

W. W. B. McInnes has stated his father desired the government to relieve him for past two years. Get government to state if true.
Answer.

(Sgd.) T. EARLE.

The gentleman who has signed this telegram, is Mr. Thomas Earle, the junior member for Victoria City, in the British Columbia Legislature. The W. W. B. McInnes mentioned in this telegram, is the late member for Vancouver, in this House, and his father is the present Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia. The gentleman who signs this telegram seems anxious that the government should state whether the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia has been trying for the last two years to be relieved of his office. If the right hon. gentleman can give me the information, I am sure it will be gladly received in British

Mr. FOSTER.

Columbia, and if there is any correspondence in regard to this matter, between the government and the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, I trust that he will see fit to have it laid on the Table as soon as possible.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have read in the press, a telegraphic summary of the remarks made by Mr. W. W. B. McInnes. I do not think they will bear out the construction which my hon. friend has just placed upon them. Of course, he has to take what is given to him by his correspondent. The remarks made by Mr. W. W. B. McInnes were to the effect that the Lieutenant-Governor had been anxious to be relieved of the duties with which he is now entrusted as Lieutenant-Governor of the province. I do not remember at this moment that there is any correspondence on this subject; I do not believe there is; but if there is any, I have no objection at all to bring it down.

Mr. PRIOR. Might I ask whether the Lieutenant-Governor, when he was here a few months ago, applied to the right hon. gentleman to relieve him of the office?

The PRIME MINISTER. If there is correspondence, I can bring it down.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you not bring down the oral correspondence?

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Exchequer Court—L. A. Audette, increase of salary from July 1, 1900, to June 31, 1901 $275

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I have a statement from Mr. Audette explaining this increase, in which he shows that the late Sir. John Thompson had decided to increase his salary by an addition of $50 per year up to a maximum of $2,500. This takes the place of the statutory increase.

Kingston Penitentiary $190,400

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the salaries there is an increase of $1,900, due to the adoption of the amended schedule of the Penitentiary Act by the Act of last session. It is due to that alone. There is $7,000 to provide for new electric plant. The old plant had become useless, and it is proposed to replace it by up-to-date plant. Circulars were sent to the electric plant manufacturers in Canada, as well as the Canadian representatives of American establishments. The Royal Electric Company of Montreal, the General Electric Company, of Toronto, the United Electric Company of Toronto and Hamilton, Messrs. Ahearn & Soper, the Northern Engineering Company of New York sent in tenders, but the latter company withdrew its tender. The tender of the Canadian firms are now under consideration and will be decided upon as soon as the appropriation becomes available. The different tenders sent in are for different systems of electric lighting. This $7,000 will provide a completely new electric light plant. There is a decrease of $1,000, due to improvement in the heating system. There is an increase of $17,000 in industries, due to the advance in the cost of fibre for binder twine. Last year the cost was $30,000 more than the appropriation, and it will be necessary to take a vote for that amount in the supplementaries. This year the shortage is less owing to the fall in price.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) How many persons are employed in this industry?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Forty. They are employed practically the whole year round. There are 579 male inmates of the Kingston penitentiary.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the others kept at to give them the reasonable healthy exercise they ought to have? If the binder twine industry has provided good employment for forty, could it not be extended?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not sure that the experiment, up to the present has been so successful in its financial results as to justify the extension of it. A considerable loss has been suffered since 1894, when the system was inaugurated, and though the loss now is considerably smaller than it has been, if we succeed this year in having our income balance our expenditure, that is as much as we expect. As to the occupation of the other inmates I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the report of the Minister of Justice, page 143, where he will find the different items representing the value of labour of the carpenters, blacksmiths, masons, quarrymen, shoemakers, printers and others who are employed.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that the shoemakers do the work in their line for the inmates?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the intention. Except in the binder twine industry, the object is not to enter into competition with outside industries. Perhaps I should say that the total annual value of labour in the penitentiaries is $40,836.10.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion of supplies other than food are supplied by prison labour? Is it a considerable percentage?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It must be, if you add the products of the farm.

Mr. FOSTER. What are they?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The report of the farm instructor, found at page 209 of the minister's report, shows the total revenue to be $4,627.59, and the expenditure in connection with the farm, $4,096.60, balance, $530.99.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the expenditure on the farm include?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Farm implements, hardware, freight charges, seed, and so on, and then I see that the convict labour is charged up, 2,851 days, which, at 30 cents a day, will give $855.30. That is to be added to the balance of $530.99, making a total balance of about $1,400, if you include convict labour. I should explain, in speaking of the binder twine industry, that the convict labour is charged at 30 cents a day.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the present condition of things, are the convicts kept fairly well employed?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the intention, and I understand it is fairly well carried out by the employments to which I have referred.

Mr. FOSTER. As the object was not to make money in the binder twine business, but to give helpful and remunerative employment to the convicts, if, in the past, the accounts have balanced or nearly balanced, I do not see why it is not considered successful, and why, if more work is necessary, the industry should not be extended.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The extension of this industry would call for space which, perhaps, could not be afforded. Then, it would mean, I understand, the installation of an entirely new plant. These would throw additional burdens upon the debit side of the account and might make the industry, which is not now profitable, very unprofitable.

Mr. FOSTER. In the calculation that is made is interest included?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand that interest at 3½ per cent on the capital is charged, and that the capital would represent mainly the outlay in machinery. But, I cannot say whether 3½ per cent is allowed—as it ought to be—on the money used in the purchase of the raw material.

Mr. PRIOR. Where do the government buy their manila and sisal?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the open market, wherever it can be got to the best advantage. Whatever may be said on other points, I think there can be no reproach so far as the purchase of the raw material is concerned, because it has been reduced rates as compared with the rates paid by our competitors in the market, because it was purchased when it was most plentiful.

Mr. PRIOR. Do the government buy it at first hand or do they buy it through some commercial house?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand it was bought at first hand; the manila is bought in England and the sisal in New York.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the buying officer?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inspector. I think the inspector has an absolutely free hand.

Mr. D. D. ROGERS (Frontenac). I think it is time for the government to increase the manufacture of binding twine rather than to decrease it, also manufacture other cordage. They sometimes get manila or sisal that is very suitable for twine, and this they could use just as well for the manufacture of cordage. I feel that we are sent here to legislate for the greatest good to the greatest number, and the consumers of binder twine are the greatest number. We know that enormous profits have been made in that line by manufacturers within the last three or four years. We realize that there has been a combine of the strongest character which has succeeded in closing up seven or eight factories, and the consumers cordage company and some of the manufacturers are paying these factories a heavy rental yearly to keep them closed. Of course, the consumers of twine have to pay that rental in the end. Now that these facts have been brought to the attention of the government, I think they will be justified in increasing the output of binder twine. The manufacturers have no reason to complain when they are able to make 100 per cent. I think the government, instead of manufacturing 500 tons, ought to manufacture 5,000 tons, and break up that combine. We hear a good deal said against touching vested rights or vested capital. I claim that the farmers of this country have the greatest number of vested rights of any people on the face of the earth.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Would the hon. gentleman tell us how he is getting on with that farmers' combine, in which he has a certain amount of stock?

Mr. ROGERS. Farmers would be fools if they did not take stock in a concern offering so many advantages. I have every reason to believe, by the experience of the past, that the cordage company is a very heartless lot. It was reported a few years ago that they made 300 per cent. That has been stated on the public platform, and has not been denied, and that was when they had a protection of 25 or 30 per cent. The Binder Twine Company of Brantford made 100 per cent. If that company could manufacture 1,000 tons, and make 100 per cent on it, it is natural to suppose, that these other companies would make double that, manufacturing 3,500, especially when they had 25 per cent protection on other cordage.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I do not always agree with the member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), but it appears to me that the manufacture of binder twine is one of those industries that can be carried on in the penitentiary, and in which the prisoners can be furnished with an abundance of labour, without interfering materially with the industries of the country. Now, we have put binder twine on the free list, with the result that a large proportion of the twine used in this country comes in from the United States. There can be no possible objection to our engaging our prison labour in the manufacture of an article which is not made in Canada. If we manufacture brooms, boots and shoes, or other such articles that are made in this country, then our prison labour is brought into competition with our own working men. But in the matter of binder twine, very largely, that is not so, because the bulk of our twine now, I think, is made in the United States, and consequently our working men are not going to suffer much by reason of that class of work being done in the penitentiary. I therefore, think it would be wise on the part of the government, if they are carrying on any other industries there which would compete against honest labour outside, to reduce that class of work and increase the work that does not come so much into competition with the honest labour of the country. I think it would be advisable for the government to put in a much larger plant, and increase the output of binder twine very materially, yes, even to ten times the amount they manufacture at present. I believe it will do no harm, but it will prevent the combining that we see at the present time between such companies as the Brantford Company and the agents of American companies. I am sure it will help to maintain a level of prices.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no industry to compete with outside labour in the penitentiary except the binder twine industry. The only boots and shoes made there are for the inmates.

Mr. TAYLOR. What disposition has been made of the binder twine this year, or has it been contracted for?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This year there has been a new departure. We are offering binder twine in small lots to the farmers, and it is being disposed of as orders come in. Up to a few days ago when I addressed the House on this subject, I think about 140 tons were disposed of.

Mr. HENDERSON. Could the Solicitor General say about what quantity has been made this year?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The average output of the Kingston plant is in the vicinity of 500 tons.

Mr. ROGERS. If the seven other factories were running as they should be there would be none coming from the States at all.

St. Vincent de Paul $113,600

Mr. FOSTER. Why do the salaries go up so high ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The first item of increase on account of salaries is $5,400. That results first from the increase that is brought about by the schedule to which I referred in connection with Kingston penitentiary. That represents $2,200. I may explain that there are two items, one in reference to the school instructor, and another in reference to the engineer which are still in abeyance, and that sum is outside of these. We have not yet determined as to whether these two salaries will be increased. In justification of the increases at St. Vincent de Paul, I may say that a new stonecutter instructor and five additional guards have been appointed. This is due to the increase in population.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the increase in population ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is in the vicinity of 50.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be one guard to every ten convicts.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The general allowance is one guard to 12. The intention is to have one guard to 12 convicts in that penitentiary.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the actual allowance at Kingston ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know, but it is somewhat larger at St. Vincent de Paul because of the fact that there is more outside work done at St. Vincent de Paul. The work done there is on the farm to a large extent, and it is necessary to have a greater number of guards because the men work outside.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What are the industries at St. Vincent de Paul ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The only thing that may be called an industry is the farm work. Whatever other work is done inside is work done for the use of the convicts.

Mr. FOSTER. A large number of convicts are really idle, are they not ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. At page 143 of the report, of the Minister of Justice it shows the different heads of employment at St. Vincent de Paul. I find that the quarry absorbs 5,481 days in the year.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does the stone go ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is used for building purposes, largely in connection with the penitentiary.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they yet completed the work on the wall ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand the wall has been completed. The inspector tells me that the whole of the wall is now complete with the exception of the front gate. The tailor shop absorbs 10,579 days making clothes for the inmates.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they make sufficient clothes for the inmates ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The clothes for the inmates are made in addition to the discharge clothes and officers' uniforms. The stonecutters' work takes up 10,000 days, and the work in the stonebreakers' shed 11,000 days.

Mr. FOSTER. What is done with the broken stone ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is used for the purpose of levelling up the yard ; none of it is disposed of outside. Two or three years ago some stone was disposed of to the harbour commissioner of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the hon. gentleman think that a great deal of the trouble they have had at St. Vincent de Paul is due to the fact that they have not the whole of the people employed ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a farm which employs a great number of the inmates in a useful and healthful occupation, and the intention is to extend the farm premises so as to provide additional employment for a great number of convicts. The question of employment of convict labour is one of the most serious questions that can engage the attention of those who have to deal with penitentiaries.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any attempt made to solve it ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inspector has made a report in which he states that convicts may be usefully employed in making bags for the Post Office Department and in making other things that are used in connection with the administration of the government. That is a matter that has been suggested by the inspector and it is engaging the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. Minister of Justice show any evidence of an intention of carrying it out ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is a matter that is engaging the attention of the minister. The inspector has looked into the matter closely and has made valuable suggestions in the direction that I have mentioned. I am not in a position to make a statement as to how far these suggestions will be carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know why a number of supplies such as post office bags, uniforms for troops and the like of that could not be made by the employment of convicts.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Still, you must remember that this is coming into conflict with honest labour in the cities.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is nothing in that; if they do not work in the penitentiary they will work outside.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are now in competition with honest labour.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General if the entire expenses of the members of the commission named to investigate the condition of affairs at St. Vincent de Paul have been paid?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. MONK. There was one commissioner who charged something like $2,500, another who charged, $2,500, and a third who charged over $7,000. In that connection I asked a question some two years ago, and the Solicitor General answered that the account was still in abeyance. Has that account, exceeding $7,000, been paid to this third commissioner? Mr. Lafortune was the one who was so much in excess of the other commissioners.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A claim was made, exactly as stated by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), for $20 per diem allowance by Mr. Lafortune. This account was not allowed, and was eventually paid at exactly the same rate as the two other members of the commission received, $10 per diem. The position of Mr. Lafortune was somewhat different from that of the other commissioners. The other commissioners were appointed to investigate the affairs of the Kingston penitentiary at the outset, and it was then stated in the commission that they should receive a per diem allowance of $10 per day. When they got through with the Kingston investigation they were appointed to investigate the affairs of St. Vincent de Paul. As they were both gentlemen from Ontario, and neither could speak French, it was desirable to appoint a man who knew the French language. The gentleman who was appointed was Mr. Lafortune, a member of the Montreal Bar. He received no notice about the per diem allowance. He accepted the commission, and he made his claim for $20 a day, which was not an unreasonable claim in view of the fact that he was a barrister in Montreal. Unfortunately for him, the government could not see its way to make a distinction, and he was obliged to accept the same allowance as the others.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the total amount for this investigation into St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. $18,372.20.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Solicitor General show where $18,000 could possibly have been spent in any reasonable and businesslike investigation into the affairs of that penitentiary? It seems incredible.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot just now give the details, but I can say from general knowledge that the condition of things which existed at St. Vincent de Paul required investigation. For instance, prisoners were constantly employed in the neighbourhood of the prison without any reference to prison rules and the warden at that time used the penitentiary to a large extent as his own private property. There was a yacht built by the officials out of material supplied by the penitentiary; and in one case there was an account which was paid twice over to the same firm in Montreal. There were on the whole gross irregularities which necessitated very close inspection. The charges against the warden were so grave that he applied for what was practically a trial, after the ex parte examination, and considerable expense was incurred in that.

Mr. FOSTER. As a business man the Solicitor General knows that he could have sent down one or two men who would have done everything at a trifling cost that this commission did at a cost of $18,000. I assume that the whole investigation into these penitentiaries, cost about $25,000 and a large amount of the money has been wasted.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is quite $35,000.

Mr. MONK. The result obtained did not justify such an expenditure. I believe if the Solicitor General had gone down himself he could in two days have discovered all there was to discover. Can the Solicitor General tell us what was the practical result of this inquiry? What was found out that could not be found out by the officials of the department. I heard that these commissioners sat and sat and adjourned and adjourned from day to day, and that a great deal of time was lost.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The commissioners made a report which was distributed amongst the members of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but what action did the department take?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The warden, and the surgeon, and the warden's clerk, and the clerk of industries, and eight or ten guards were dismissed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Here we had three commissioners at $10 a day each, and if we allowed the secretary $10 a day, that would be $40 in all, and they would have to sit for 450 days, or a year and a half of working days, to get away with $18,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There were other expenses incurred. There were yards and yards of stone and an immense quantity of cement that had disappeared and had to be traced.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the commissioners make detectives of themselves to do that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They probably employed other people to do that for them.

Mr. FOSTER. Why could not the superintendent of penitentiaries do that instead of having three men at $30 a day?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think the superintendent of penitentiaries should be employed to ferret out these matters.

Mr. MONK. I have been informed that the commission used to meet in St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal, and repeatedly, on the most trifling pretext, adjourn to another day, and this cost the country $40 each day. I am far from saying that there were no abuses; but I really believe the superintendent of penitentiaries or any other official of the department could have done this whole work without it costing the country a dollar. I am informed that there were formal adjournments from time to time, when the commission did not sit for more than twenty minutes or half an hour.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There were certainly very grave abuses at St. Vincent de Paul. This fact was admitted long ago, but nothing appears to have been done. With reference to the adjournments, if the hon. member for Jacques Cartier makes that statement of his own personal knowledge, I would admit it; but I would scarcely think that the gentlemen on that commission would do what he says.

Mr. FOSTER. Who were the commissioners?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. Noxon, inspector of prisons in Ontario; Mr. Fraser, a lawyer of Brockville; and Mr. Lafortune, a lawyer of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt they would like to nurse the job as long as possible.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am satisfied that Mr. Noxon would have no such desire, and Mr. Fraser and Mr. Lafortune, are both men of standing in their profession, to whom $10 a day could not have been an inducement.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the Solicitor General get for us an itemized statement of the number of sittings they had, and the length of each sitting?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We can easily get the number of sittings. I will ask the commissioners for the other.

Mr. MONK. Does the Solicitor General think the charges made in the case of St. Vincent de Paul could not have been disposed of by the department without the expense of this commission?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot help admitting that the expense is very large; but the commission was necessary, and it revealed a condition of things which it was absolutely necessary to change. There were not only irregularities, but absolute plundering going on, which could not be tolerated.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there anything of that kind going on now?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know. It seems very hard to keep the penitentiaries in any sort of order, but we are trying to bring about reforms.

Mr. HENDERSON. If it is the intention of the Solicitor General to have another commission appointed to ascertain what is being done now, I think it would be well to enlarge the scope of that commission and have it investigate the doing of the last commission.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an increase of $3,000 for the maintenance of convicts at St. Vincent de Paul.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is to make provision for an additional population of seventy-five.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cost of maintenance per capita?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The gross cost at Kingston is $237.49, at St. Vincent de Paul $233.50, at Dorchester $216.44, at Manitoba $416.03, and at British Columbia $456.13.

Mr. MONK. There is contemplated at St. Vincent de Paul the installation of an electric plant. Have tenders been invited for that? As the penitentiary can be supplied with electric light from Montreal, why should it have a special plant?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think we can do it to greater advantage by having an electric plant of our own. The motive power is already in existence, and all we require is the generator and the wire.

Mr. MONK. Is there a special amount for the installation of the electric plant?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The increase of $8,000 in the vote for prison equipment is for that purpose. I believe the intention is to take the tenders already sent in, in answer to a circular sent out with reference to Kingston, and after a selection is made for Kingston, to take out of those tenders one for St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. MONK. I am inclined to believe that the electric light could be supplied more economically from Montreal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is always useful for the government to be absolutely independent of an outside corporation because otherwise it is not dealt with as private individuals are. Our intention is to acquire about forty acres of land in the immediate vicinity. An offer has been made of the property at $100 an acre, which we refused. We have another offer of $75 per acre, which we also declined, and we have one at $55 an acre. We think the land could be got at $50 per acre, which is not high for land in that district.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.10 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 7, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OTTAWA AND HULL FIRE RELIEF FUND.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa) moved :

That all the rules and orders be suspended in relation to the Bill entitled 'An Act to incorporate the Ottawa and Hull Fire Relief Fund,' and that leave be given to introduce said Bill.

Motion agreed to; Bill introduced, and read the first and the second time.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—RECENT VICTORIES—ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, in view of the recent events which have taken place in South

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Africa, and the successes which have crowned the forces of Her Majesty, I have the honour to submit to the House a motion which, I hope, will commend itself to the favourable judgment of every member thereof. I beg to move, seconded by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), that the following address be forwarded to Her Majesty the Queen :

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign,—We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, desire to offer to Your Majesty our heartfelt congratulations on the approaching termination of the war in South Africa, as foreshadowed by the recent successes, culminating in the fall of Pretoria, which have attended the British arms.

The feelings of pride and satisfaction with which we hail every fresh addition to the long and glorious roll of deeds wrought by British valour and resource are enhanced on the present occasion by the proud consciousness that through the active co-operation of her sons on the battlefield, Canada is entitled to share in a new and special manner in the joy of the present triumph.

We rejoice that the conflict, now happily drawing to a close, will result in the removal of those disabilities under which many of our fellow-subjects have laboured for so long, and we cannot doubt that the extension of Your Majesty's gracious rule over the whole of South Africa will be attended by those blessings which flow from a wise and beneficent administration of just and equal laws.

We pray that for your people's sake, the blessings of Your Majesty's reign may long be continued.

The language of this address, Mr. Speaker seems to me to be sufficiently explicit, and I have but few observations to offer in support of it. We British subjects of all race origins in all parts of the world, are inspired with sentiments of exalted and chivalrous devotion to the person of Her Most Gracious Majesty. This devotion is not the result of any maudlin sentimentality, but it springs from the fact that the Queen, the sovereign of the many lands which constitute the British Empire, is one of the noblest women that ever lived, and certainly the best sovereign that England ever had, and the best that probably ever ruled in any land. War is abhorrent to the delicate nature of woman. We may safely assume, indeed we know, that the present war was particularly painful to Her Majesty. She had hoped that the closing years of her long and prosperous reign would not be saddened by such a spectacle, but it was not in the decrees of Divine Providence that this hope and wish should be gratified. War came, and it came with the surroundings of horror, of grievous sufferings, and of blood-shed. It came with alternating periods of successes and reverses. But, Sir, happily the end is now within sight. The troops of Her Majesty are now in Pretoria, and the British flag, which is to us the emblem of liberty, is floating over the public buildings in that far-famed city. This happy result is due, above all, to that fine soldier, who has proved himself a great general, and who, on this occasion, has, as ever before, raised himself to the greatest expectations that the people of the empire entertained of him. Lord Roberts is the great leader of whom each soldier can say, as the soldiers of Napoleon said in the campaign of Austerlitz: 'He won battles, not so much by making use of our weapons, as by making use of our legs.' The recent British victories are due to the fine character, to the solid qualities of the troops, who, under the command of their victorious general, have proved themselves ready for every emergency, ready to do everything that was expected of them; ready and anxious to do their duty to the empire, and in this way we may, perhaps, remark with pardonable pride, that on more than one occasion, when the fate of battle was trembling in the scales of destiny, the scales were turned in favour of the British arms and the victory decided by the dash of our Canadian soldiers, who proved that though many years have passed since last they were called upon to take the field against a foe, they are yet worthy of the races from which they have sprung, and that the blood which courses in their veins is the same as that which inspired their ancestors to gallant deeds.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Happily, as I said, the end of the war is in sight; though we cannot hope that the war is finished. Many battles have, doubtless, yet to be fought, and indeed we may say that when the war is terminated greater problems will face the British authorities. But, even though the campaign is not finished, we to-day utter the hope and the prayer that the long reign of Her Majesty may nevermore be disturbed by war, and that what remains to her of her natural life may now flow in peace. We pray that when the end of this long and glorious reign comes, the subjects of Her Majesty in South Africa shall have learned to appreciate these British institutions which in this age and in every land signify liberty and equal rights.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. We hope and pray that when the end of this long and glorious reign comes, it shall close upon a united empire wherein peace and good-will shall prevail among all men.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It gives me great pleasure to second the address which has just been moved in such fitting terms by the right hon. the leader of the House, and the government, and to associate myself in warmest manner with the eloquent terms in which he has moved that address. Attention has been drawn by my right hon. friend to the glorious reign of Her Majesty the Queen, and while, no doubt, it was a matter of great regret that war should at this late period of her reign, disturb the peace of any portion of the empire, I do not think it can be a source of unqualified regret that that war has taken place. It has been the boast of the empire that that illustrious reign has never been surpassed by that of any other sovereign in the world, either in regard to the qualities of the sovereign, or the great events that have occurred, or the great expansion of the empire over which Her Majesty has been called to rule. One of the most signal and important events connected with the expansion of the British Empire was the confederation of Canada. That was an event that is now regarded, and will continue steadily to be regarded in every section of the empire, as a very great and remarkable step in the unity and consolidation of the empire. The condition of British North America, where on half a continent Her Majesty reigned, not over the united and consolidated country, but over a wide expanse of territory, in which several provinces were separated and dis severed from each other by hostile tariffs, and by want of adequate means of intercommunication, has all been changed. We have had, since Her Majesty ascended the Throne—in fact, within comparatively recent years—the consolidation of the whole of British North America, with the exception of the Island of Newfoundland, which I trust will at no distant day become a portion of the Dominion. We have not only that consolidated and united country, but we have reached a position enabling us to give most important material aid to Her Majesty's troops in South Africa. That example of Canada has just been followed by the great island continent of Australia, where the various provinces under an Imperial Act soon to be passed, will shortly be united in a strong and powerful confederation—another great step towards the complete consolidation of the empire. But in regard to the unity and consolidation of the empire, there was a cloud on the horizon in the condition of South Africa. To-day we have fairly in sight, as my right hon. friend has well expressed it, the complete consolidation of South Africa under British rule; and then we shall have three great kindred nations—the Dominion of Canada, the commonwealth of Australia, and at an early day, the great dominion of South Africa—all consolidated under the same wise and happy British institutions that have made Canada and Australasia the flourishing countries that they are. My right hon. friend has referred to the position of the Boers, which is a most important consideration. When, on a recent occasion, I was invited to deliver an address in Tremont Temple, in the city of Boston, to a large body of persons of the strongest British sympathies, who had formerly been, and many of whom were still, British subjects, and entertaining the warmest and strongest feelings towards the great empire of which we have the pleasure to form so important a part, I was enabled to draw the attention of that great and enthusiastic audience to the very important position which the Boers would occupy; and I ventured to say that in my judgment what has taken place was the substitution of the civilization of the nineteenth century for the civilization of the seventeenth century, which hitherto was all that the Boers enjoyed; and I was able to show by the most cogent evidence what the natural effect of that great change would be upon the inhabitants of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, which had previously enjoyed the position of comparatively independent states under the suzerainty of Great Britain. When the question is asked, what is to be the position of the Boers? My answer is that history teaches by example, and I am able to point to an illustrious example within the knowledge of those who are here present, as to what that position will be. When some 140 years ago, France ceded Canada to the English Crown, the entire population of Canada was French, and that population from that hour came under British institutions. With what result? With the result that one of the most eminent French Canadians, the late lamented Sir George E. Carter, when asked by Her Majesty the Queen, 'What are French Canadians?' his answer was, 'Your Majesty, they are Englishmen speaking French.' And when, on another occasion, at a great banquet in London, the late Sir Etienne Taché, had occasion to refer to the position of the French in Canada, he ventured upon the prophecy that the last gun that would be fired in Canada in defence of British institutions, would be fired by a French Canadian—and why? Because under these British institutions, they enjoyed freedom, progress, prosperity and everything else that could make life dear to a citizen, in such an eminent degree that they felt that no change of allegiance could benefit them. And I said, if you want to understand how completely freedom is enjoyed and how thoroughly satisfactory British institutions have been to the French Canadian race, I need only point to the fact that although the French population has attained to about 2,000,000 out of nearly 6,000,000 British subjects who inhabit Canada, the Prime Minister of Canada is at this moment an eminent French Canadian. Therefore, you can have no anxiety as to what the position of the Boers will be. They will have a freedom which, under the corrupt oligarchy that was carried on under the name of a republic, they had no knowledge or conception of; and the result will be, as my right hon. friend has eloquently expressed it to-day, that at no distant day we shall see a united South Africa, in which all races, all classes, all creeds will enjoy equal privileges in the eye of the law—a united, happy, loyal population sustaining the Crown of England. I have adverted to this, because I feel that it can scarcely be a matter of regret that the later years of our illustrious Sovereign should have been clouded by war, when out of that war has grown such beneficial results, not only to the British Empire, but to the whole civilized world. I may say that the British Empire is greatly indebted to the late President Kruger, whose unhappy action, so far as his own interests are concerned, left no alternative to Great Britain, but to accept the gage of war, which he threw down. By that act he accelerated the accomplishment of that unity of the British Empire which it would have taken many long years to bring about under any other conditions.

But there is another feature of this war that I regard as of the utmost importance, not only to the British Empire but to the whole world, and that is, it has demonstrated that the power of England, the might of that great empire, of which we form so important and conspicuous a part, is appreciated to-day as it was not appreciated by the nations of Europe six months ago. Had any one then ventured the prediction that England, powerful as was her navy, would, in a few short weeks, certainly in a few short months, land an army of 200,000 men on a territory separated from Great Britain by something like 7,000 miles of ocean, he would have been laughed to scorn. That great feat has been accomplished, and it has not only demonstrated to the world that England is admittedly the greatest naval power, but has established her position as one of the greatest military powers.

That is not the only happy result of this war, although it is one of the greatest, because I believe that this demonstration of the might and power of England is going to contribute to the peace of the world and prevent the interruption of that peace to an extent nothing else could. But, there is another element in this matter, one with which we are intimately associated, and that is, that not only has England shown her might and power and prowess, but she has shown the world that she has the great Dominion of Canada, the great island continent of Australasia and South Africa at her back. She has shown that she has what will, in a very brief period now, be three great practically independent nations, but bound to her by the closest ties that can bind one section of country to the other in maintaining the might and power and prestige of the great empire to which we belong.

That is one of the most important features, and deeply as we lament, deeply as at this moment every one in Canada laments, the sad fact that the blood of Canadians has been shed, that many of the gallant yeomanry of Canada who volunteered their services to aid Her Majesty the Queen and British arms in South Africa, have visited that country never to return, we feel that that sacrifice has not been in vain. Just contemplate the report of Colonel Otter, that at this moment the first Canadian contingent, which went away something like 1,050 strong, has only an effective strength of 450 to-day, and you can in a moment realize the suffering that has been occasioned, as well as the loss of valuable lives, by engaging in that conflict; but never has anything occurred more calculated to cement and bind together and promote the unity of this great empire. No event in our past history has ever occurred more conducive to that unity than the glorious part which Canada has taken in this struggle. The fact that men of all races and parties and classes have shown their utmost readiness to give up their lives, if necessary, in the defence of British institutions, has given us a position and prestige of the greatest possible importance. We have the proud satisfaction of knowing that we have sent 3,000 of our men to aid Her Majesty's arms in South Africa. We have the satisfaction of knowing that in all the heroism, gallantry and bravery, which has been exhibited by the best troops of England—great as has been the gallantry and the heroism of the men who fought England's battles on the plains of South Africa—none have surpassed the valour, gallantry and bravery of our Canadian troops.

I may say that in this struggle you look across the whole of this great empire in vain to find one subject of Her Majesty in any part of the empire playing a more noble, disinterested and generous part than an eminent Canadian has played, namely, Lord Strathcona, the representative of Canada in the mother country. I do not believe that there is a man or woman throughout the whole Dominion of Canada who does not sincerely rejoice that Her Majesty has marked her appreciation of the patriotism of that eminent Canadian by providing that the title which he wears with such honour to himself and to Canada is to descend to those who come after him—his children and his children's children.

I shall not say more than express the pleasure which it gives me on this occasion to heartily support the appropriate address moved by the right hon. the leader of the House. This is an occasion on which I believe every portion of the empire is to be congratulated upon what has been done as the result of this struggle, in which it has been our pride and pleasure to take so important a part.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I regret that I cannot agree in the sentiments that have been expressed by the right hon. the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition. Of course, I know very well that what I am going to say is not in accordance with the feelings, or at least with the apparent feelings, of all the members of this House. But since the opening of this unfortunate war, I have made up my mind that I was not siding with any popular cry or any mob or crowd, and therefore I will still upon this occasion express the views which I have already stated. I will make the protest which I think is the expression of a large proportion, if not of the majority of the Canadian people; and not only of the French Canadians, but of all the nationalities and creeds of the Dominion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. BOURASSA. Hon. gentlemen may say 'no' if they like, but I know the popular feeling as well as they do.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. BOURASSA. Anyhow, that is my opinion, and I am going to express it. As to the bravery of the Canadian as well as of the British soldiers, during this war, I cannot but agree with the right hon. the Prime Minister, and the hon. the leader of the opposition. The bravery of the soldiers, the courage of their officers, have nothing to do with the cause of the war, and, therefore, I can heartily join with the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition in congratulating the gallant men who have fought the battles in South Africa. But, as to rejoicing in the results of the war, as to congratulating Her Majesty, or rather Her Majesty's government, upon the causes of this war, upon the policy which has brought this war upon England and upon the empire, I cannot agree with them, because, to my mind, these causes were unjust and success does not make them just. It has been said by the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) that before this war the might of England was unknown to the world, and that one of the results upon which we should congratulate ourselves as British citizens is that now all nations of the world acknowledge the power of England. Sir, I am not a prophet any more than the leader of the opposition; I have not the experience in politics that the honourable gentleman has; but, I think I can venture to say that future events will prove that this war is one of the most unfortunate events of English politics during this century. What has it proved to the world about the power of England? Why, as the leader of the opposition has said, the British government sent to South Africa an army of two hundred thousand men, composed not only of the best regiments of England, Scotland and Ireland, but including also the best soldiers that could be gathered from the British colonies; and it took eight months for that powerful army to conquer a gathering of poor peasants drawn from a total population of two hundred and fifty thousand souls. I acknowledge the power of England, I admire the might of England, I admire many and many of the deeds that England has done throughout the world—but, Sir, this war will not add an ounce to the glory of the English flag—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame!

Mr. BOURASSA—and to the greatness of England—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame! Shame!

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This is a free country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame! Shame!

Mr. BOURASSA. Is this a free parliament? Is free speech allowed here?

Mr. FOSTER. Such a speech from a member of this House! Shame on him!

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a free parliament.

Mr. WALLACE. Not for traitors.

Mr. FOSTER. Shame on him!

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame!

Mr. BOURASSA. I have just heard the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) speaking of treason. Never in any part of Canada has my voice been raised to ask any portion of the Canadian people to rise in arms against the British government and the British Crown as the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Wallace's) has.

I will maintain in this parliament, as well as in this country, the opinion that has been upheld in England, Ireland and Scotland by men who have proved themselves as loyal British subjects and as ready to maintain British rights as any of the Tory and Jingo members who sit in this House. I have said, and I repeat, that I regret that this war took place; I regret the policy which, I will not say the British people, I will not even say the British government, but the Jingo wing of the Tory party in England has followed, bringing upon England and upon the British Empire this unfortunate war. What will be the outcome of this bloody contest? It will at first have the result of forcing England to keep in South Africa a standing army of over 100,000 men for years and years. It will force on the British colonies in South Africa a policy of hatred amongst races which the broad-minded men of both parties had succeeded in removing, not only in South Africa, but throughout the British Empire. I have always believed, and still believe, whatever the crowd may shout to-day, that the true British policy must be founded on respect of all nationalities, must proceed upon the principle, not of forcing British institutions upon an unwilling people, but of making them accepted freely and willingly. That policy had succeeded in winning to the love of the British flag and British institutions the Dutch population of Cape Colony and Natal, and the same force would have won to the same side the Dutch population of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal. I cannot approve a policy that goes back on the best traditions of England; a policy that will, probably, leave race hatred for years and years in the newly-conquered states, and renew it in Cape Colony and Natal; a policy that may bring trouble throughout the British Empire by spreading a spirit of jingoism and pride, which is certainly not a sign of strength and generosity. Such a policy I cannot approve; I cannot join hands with the great majority of this parliament who wish to congratulate—who wish to congratulate Her Majesty? No, this war is not the deed of Her Majesty; it has not been brought on as a tribute of love to her or an addition to her glory. It is a war that has been forced on Her Majesty, as well as on the free people of England and the colonies, by the ambitious men who joined hands with financiers who are anxious to increase their dividends in South Africa. We are asked to pass this address as a compliment to Her Majesty? No, Sir, I cannot agree to that.

The leader of the opposition has reminded this House of a word attributed to Sir George Etienne Cartier, that the French Canadians of the province of Quebec were Englishmen speaking French. I do not know whether Cartier said that; but, if he said it, he said what was not true. I think I can speak in the name of my countrymen, as well as any other member of this House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes, I can; I express their feelings—not with more eloquence or capacity—but with more sincerity than many men who are withheld by other reasons from saying what they think. When I speak of the feelings of the French Canadians, I think I can venture to say that they are amongst the most loyal of British subjects, but they are not Englishmen. They are French-speaking British subjects: they have accepted loyally those British institutions that were offered to them as a protection for their rights and their traditions. So long as those institutions were imposed upon them by the will of the British government and by the strength of the sword, they resisted, and they did well to resist. The unfortunate policy that kept Canada in rebellion for fifty years, is the policy that Mr. Chamberlain and his followers are trying to impose upon South Africa. As a representative of the French Canadians, I declare in this House that for any sound British policy extended to South Africa, I am ready to join with any government of Canada that will support any British government in that good work. But, again, as a representative of the French Canadians, remembering the past, remembering the nefarious policy that sent to the gallows free men asking for their countrymen the rights of British subjects, I protest against the same policy which to-day those who happen to be in power are trying to impose in South Africa.

I say, therefore, I regret that I cannot join with the majority of this House in voting for this address.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the best answer we can make to the hon. gentleman is to give three cheers for Her Majesty the Queen.

(Cheers for Her Majesty having been given, and God Save the Queen having been sung.)

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). After listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), I feel called upon to present my own opinion with regard to the matter dealt with by that hon. gentleman. I think, Mr. Speaker, that when the hon. member has a greater weight of years resting upon him, and acquires a larger amount of experience, he will be able to see matters in a different light from the light in which he evidently sees them to-day; and in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for a gentleman to be more utterly, more radically wrong and misinformed than the hon. gentleman is upon this occasion. Sir, this crisis that Great Britain was called upon to face, this crisis through which she has passed, or very nearly passed, so triumphantly and with such great credit to herself, is an epoch in her history, and it is useless for any member to rise in this House, or for any speaker to rise elsewhere, and attempt to belittle the achievements of British arms, or to belittle the importance of the struggle in which those achievements have been attained.

The hon. gentleman tells us that he recognizes the bravery of the British troops. Well, nobody can fail to do that. It is unnecessary for the hon. gentleman to say that, and it would be an evidence of an utter want of appreciation on his part not to have been able to say it. He tells us that he cannot congratulate the country and rejoice at the result of the war. Now, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, we have never had greater cause for rejoicing and for congratulation than we have over the results of this war in South Africa. He tells us that the causes of this war were unjust. Why, is not the hon. gentleman aware that the Boer forces had invaded British territory; that the governments of the two African republics had annexed British territory; that they had declared war upon the British Empire; that the governments of these two republics had issued an insulting ultimatum to Great Britain forbidding her to land troops, forbidding her to exercise the attributes of sovereignty in her own colonies, issuing an ultimatum which, if England had accepted or bowed to it, would have made her the laughing stock of the world? And was England to bow to the dictation of oligarchs like Paul Kruger of the Transvaal and Mr. Steyn, of the Free State, who led their brave but misguided men to their ruin?

It was necessary that England should assert her sovereignty, it was necessary that England should assert her power and rights in South Africa. England has purposes in South Africa. Providence has purposes in South Africa, and makes England its instrument. Providence has purposes in other lands, and England is the instrument of Providence. It is evidently the intention of Providence that the English-speaking race shall exercise a great influence upon the affairs of this world. It is evidently the intention of Providence that great nations shall be founded in different quarters of the world, such as the Dominion of Canada, the commonwealth of Australia, and the Dominion of South Africa. English statesmen realized the importance of the issue that was at stake. They realized that a great prize had either to be won or lost at this time. It was a question whether Dutch civilization or English civilization should prevail in South Africa. It was a question whether it should be a civilization characteristic of the seventeenth century, represented a slave holding, marauding population under an old oligarch who had no respect for the rights of men, or whether it should be the beneficent, the just, the righteous rule that prevails under Queen Victoria and under the British flag.

What sane man, Sir, can throw his sentiments, his aspirations, his desires, his hopes, in favour of the Boer and against the British in this struggle? What had the world to gain by the success of the Boer? Nothing to gain, everything to lose, the cause of civilization ruined in South Africa, the hopes of humanity blasted, all the aspirations of a great country—the railroad from the Cape to Cairo, the civilization, the evangelization and the redemption of a continent, all swept away, all lost by this rebellion, if this rebellion had been successful. No, Sir, we cannot, I cannot, look upon this war in the light of an unfortunate event. I think it is a most fortunate event. I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that the fruits of this war are commendable, and are of a character to make us realize that the war was not a misfortune, but was on the contrary, something that led to the development of our power, and to the breaking down of the rebellion against that power. I thought at the outset, and I said at the outset, that this war—it is not a little war, although it is not a great war—that this war would serve a most useful purpose, that it would enable the British Empire to test her military strength, and to adapt her modes of warfare to the changed conditions as to armaments and so forth, and put us in a position where, if a great crisis confronted us, and a life and death struggle should overtake us, we would not be striking blows in the air, but we would have acquired through this war the knowledge of the conditions of modern warfare that would enable us to plant our blows in any part of the world where they would tell. In that respect the war is a blessing to us. The war has not only saved us an empire, but it has taught us the necessary conditions of success if we are confronted with a greater crisis, as we may be in the near future.

The hon. gentleman tells up that we have nothing to boast of when, with over 200,000 men in South Africa, we have succeeded in overwhelming 50,000 peasant Boers. Why, Sir, the conditions of this contest have not been unequal. These men knew their country perfectly. The British troops had to overrun almost half a continent, they had to overcome the greatest natural obstacles, they had to contend with a foe thoroughly conversant with the country, they had to move their supplies hundreds and thousands of miles into the interior with a single slender thread of communication, they had to maintain that line of communication, they had to maintain their position, they had to assume the offensive in every case, and to meet troops armed with modern rifles, entrenched and on the defensive, so that in reality the balance, so far as military advantage was concerned, was in favour of the Boer. There has never been in the whole history of warfare, a more magnificent series of strategic movements than those of Lord Roberts in his flanking operations, as he enveloped time after time the Boer forces, and as he forced them to retire from positions that were well-nigh impregnable. We are told by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), that the result of the victory is to place upon our shoulders an intolerable burden, and that we must keep in Africa, a garrisoning force of 100,000 men, to suppress the Boers. Well, it may be necessary to keep some soldiers there, and the question is whether the possession is worth the cost. The question is whether England can better afford to keep 100,000 in South Africa, than to lose Cape Colony, than to lose her prestige, and to have her flag trailing in the dust. If it takes half a million men, I say, send them rather than surrender. But, the hon. gentleman overrates the difficulties, in my opinion. The Dutch Boer element in South Africa is capable of being made just as loyal as the Dutch Boer element in Cape Colony. A Dutchman is the Premier of Cape Colony to-day. These men will speedily realize that they have been deceived. They will speedily realize when England offers them magnanimous treatment, the protection of British laws, the rights of British citizenship such as are given to any other British subject, that they had no cause to go to war, that they had no cause for any complaint against or hostility to England. The result of this war will be like a storm in the atmosphere, which is necessary to settle the elements, and they will have the peace and stability of English institutions in that country. I believe that the actual cause of the war rendered it a just measure. I believe the prize at stake was infinitely more valuable and worth infinitely more than the cost of the war. I believe that the war is one honourable to England, that she had treated these people with forbearance, with magnanimity, that she disliked to take up arms, and she permitted them to acquire a position of great advantage before she would engage in the business of coercion. And, at last, after she had to do it under circumstances which placed her at a disadvantage, many loyal friends of England in this House and elsewhere trembled for the result. But, everything has come all right, England is victorious, the honour of the empire has been saved, the result of the war is pleasing to England, and pleasing to humanity, and if the result had been otherwise, the world might have had reason to lament that such was the case. For these reasons, I could not refrain from rising in my place to protest against the utterance of sentiments such as the hon. member for Labelle has uttered to-day. I think he is honest in these sentiments, but he could not be farther from the truth, or farther from a sound position, than that in which he stands at the present moment. I shall most cordially support the motion moved by the hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and seconded by the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), for an address to Her Majesty, and I shall, in doing so, feel that I cannot go as far as I wish to go, in congratulating her and felicitating the English people, and the people of Canada, upon the result. I cannot take my seat without saying that, as a Canadian, I feel great pride in the record that our own sons have made in South Africa. I feel that the world has looked upon this struggle, and has learned a lesson, and that we, ourselves, have learned a lesson. We have learned that this bond of sympathy, which unites the colonies with England, which is not on the statute-book, which is not obligatory, is stronger than bands of steel, that it unites all of the colonies with the motherland in one great homogeneous, Imperial power, and that these colonies are prepared in case of a great crisis confronting us, to spend the last dollar and send the last man for the purpose of maintaining the British Empire, and British institutions. And, Sir, the world understands that. The world looks on, the world sees what is the result of this war, and the world realizes that England's basis of military strength is infinitely greater than ever before. It embraces the four parts of the United Kingdom, it embraces all her colonies, and she can, if necessary, draw from the millions of India, and arm and place millions of soldiers in the field. England to-day is the greatest military power on the globe. There is no doubt about that. She has not the millions of men that Russia has enrolled, she has not the number of men that Germany has enrolled, she has not the number of men that France has enrolled, but she could put them in the field and she has resources and money to keep them in the field, and that is her source of strength. With her overpowering navy, with her power to place soldiers in the field, and with the demonstrations of this war, we, recognizing the fact that all the colonies will stand at her back, may felicitate ourselves on the result of the war. I assert freely that the war was one which was in the highest sense conducive to the forwarding and advancement of British interests, that the war was just, that the war redeemed South Africa from the rule of a slave-holding oligarchy, and that it will bring it under free and progressive institutions in the future.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the House to preserve its calmness under these circumstances. This is a free country; this is a free parliament. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) and myself differ in toto upon this question. He thinks this war was not just; I have stated my opinion before, and I believe in my heart that England never fought a more just war than this. I will not debate the question over again with my hon. friend, but I will simply ask this of him. He has a right to his opinions like every British subject.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, he has a right to his opinions. It is the right of every man in this country to have his opinions, but though my hon. friend has a right to his opinions, I ask him if this is the occasion to utter them? What is the object of this motion? Is it open to controversy of any kind? There is no controversy. The man who thinks this war just still regrets it just as much as the man who thinks it unjust. Where is the man, I want to know, who would allow his convictions upon this subject to prevent him from rejoicing today that the war is coming to a close? Where is the man who does not rejoice that in a few days, we hope, peace will be proclaimed and liberty, civil rights and equality of all races will be proclaimed once more in South Africa? We are offering simply our congratulations to Her Majesty, that the day is dawning upon us, and to her we address our congratulations. Is there, to-day, in the world, a more august person than Her Majesty the Queen of England? The hon. member for Labelle spoke as a French Canadian. I have the right, as he has, to speak as a French Canadian. As a French Canadian, I say that the occasion is badly chosen to utter the expressions of opinion which my hon. friend has uttered. The day is past for controversy upon this question. We are here simply to proclaim that we all hope that this war will soon be at an end, and that the result will be what it was not before—liberty, justice and an equality of rights for all men.

I beg to move, seconded by Sir Charles Tupper:

That a Message be sent to the hon. the Senate requesting their Honours to concur with this House in the said Address of congratulation to Her Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the South Shore Line Railway Company.—(Mr. Britton.)

THE CITY AND DISTRICT SAVINGS BANKS, AND LA CAISSE D'ECONOMIE DE QUEBEC.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 177) to amend chapter 32 of the Statutes of 1890, respecting certain savings banks in the province of Quebec. He said: This Bill relates to two old savings institutions in the province of Quebec—one, the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal, and the other, La Caisse d'Economie de Québec. Unless this legislation is adopted their charters will expire at the same time as the ordinary bank charters. This Bill, therefore, follows the Bank Act with a proposal to extend these charters for a further period of ten years, just as in the case of the banks. The directors of these companies desire some extension of their privileges with regard to the investment and lending of moneys, but that had better be considered when the Bill comes to committee, and, at the proper stage, I will move that the Bill be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee for consideration.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. When the right hon. the Premier used the following expressions on May 30, 1900 (see revised 'Hansard,' p. 6253) : 'Had I had notice I could have brought numerous resolutions of other meetings of Catholics expressing their satisfaction with the settlement of the school question,' did he have in view any other resolutions than those which have already been laid on the Table of the House and printed ?

2. If so, how many such resolutions have been received by the right hon. the Premier or the government ?

3. By whom are such resolutions signed, and from what part of the province of Manitoba do they come ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). When the Premier made use of the language quoted in the question, he had in view the resolutions that have already been laid upon the Table of the House, and which are to be found in sessional papers No. 35, of 1897.

FENIAN RAID MEDALS.

Mr. DUGAS asked :

Whether the widows of colonels, majors, officers of every grade, soldiers, &c., who almost at their own expense, furnished the means of living to the regiments ordered to the front, or concentrated in the several towns of Canada, to protect the country during the Fenian raid, are also to receive the medals of honour awarded to those who were sent to the frontier and who served during the said campaign ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The warrant of Her Majesty under which the medals were granted, did not contemplate bestowing the medal upon the persons mentioned, and, therefore, neither the government nor the department has power to do so.

MAIL SERVICE IN PROVENCHER.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to, at an early date, reorganize and enlarge the mail service east of Red River, in the electoral district of Provencher, by securing railway transportation instead of the present mode along the line of the Manitoba and South-eastern Railway and the Emerson branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in accordance with requests made to that effect in several petitions and letters addressed by the people interested in the change asked for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The question of using the Manitoba and South-eastern branch of the Canadian Northern Railway for mail purposes is now receiving the attention of the department. The use of the Emerson branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the conveyance of mails has already been authorized, and will go into operation so soon as the necessary contracts have been made. The petition asking that this railway be used for mail purposes was received at the department on the 5th instant.

Mr. FIELDING.

PAYMENT OF SESSIONAL CLERKS.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the government if any understanding has been arrived at with the Senate so as to pass unopposed the estimates which are required to pay the clerks and the messengers of the House. I trouble the government with this matter because there are real cases of very great hardship. Some of the employees have not been paid for a length of time, and in order to enable them to keep their families alive, they have had to pay usurious rates of interest. I know some of the men here who are not in a position to stand that much longer, and I trust the government will take immediate steps to remedy the evil.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I propose that we shall proceed, on government orders to-day, with the necessary steps to give effect to the passing of the estimates, and I have no reason to think there will be any difficulty in the Senate. An interim Supply Bill will be sent to the Senate without delay.

ELECTORAL FRAUDS—JUDICIAL INQUIRY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I ask the Prime Minister when we may hope to have the decision of the government on the points I raised in connection with the Royal Commission to inquire into election frauds.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). At the latest, on Monday.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to facilitate the order of the House moved by Mr. Hale with reference to the purchase of hay by the Agricultural Department, as agent for the British government. That order passed some weeks ago, and on behalf of Mr. Hale, I should like to ask the minister to hurry it down.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Arrangements have been made for the copying of that correspondence. It is very voluminous and if the whole correspondence is required it will take some time. I could not find, from the language of the hon. member who made that motion, just what it was he wanted, and it would take some time before the whole correspondence could be brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. What more particularly is wanted is the correspondence, and the results with respect to the actual purchase of the hay—the parties who purchased it, from whom it was purchased, the price paid, where it was delivered, and the like of that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will try and sift that out.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Might I ask the hon. Postmaster General, who was kind enough to say that he would attend to the matter, whether he has been able, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to get the papers relating to the contract with the Elder-Dempster Line, so as to lay them on the Table.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did as I promised my hon. friend yesterday, and in reply to an inquiry, I received a letter to-day from the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, in which he says :

With reference to the order of the House of April last for copy of contract with the Beaver Line, I find that the order was received at this department on May 3; a return to the order was sent to the Secretary of State on the same day, and was acknowledged by him on the same day.

I find, upon inquiry at the office of the Secretary of State, that it was sent to council on the following day (the 4th); and upon further inquiry at council, I find that it was sent from council to Sir Richard at the House of Commons the same day; and as Sir Richard is out of town, I have no means of tracing it further.

My impression from this letter is that the papers have been laid on the Table, but I will make a search among the records and see if I can find them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) to the fact that yesterday he complained to the House that a return which he had moved for last February had not been brought down to the House. I at the time thought he was entirely wrong, because I had a very strong recollection of having brought down that return a short time after it was moved. I immediately made inquiries, and I found that that return has been down two months, and the hon. member has never taken the trouble to look for it.

Mr. GANONG. I think the difficulty arises from some other source. However, I am obliged to the minister. It must be a surprise to the whole House that the government have succeeded in bringing down a return when it was asked for.

SUPPLY BILL.

Resolutions 280, 281, 282 and 283, reported from Committee of Supply, read the second time and agreed to.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means to consider the following resolution :

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $96,618 be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated revenue fund of Canada for the financial year ending June 30, 1900.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No 178) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th of June, 1900.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 110), to amend the Weights and Measures Act.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière).

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This question has come so often before the committee, that I think all the members are now familiar with it. I have listened with the greatest attention to the remarks and suggestions which have been made by my hon. friends on both sides of the House, and I will now ask leave to propose a few amendments which I think will meet exactly the different opinions expressed in the committee. I propose that the words 'for export' be inserted in the clause, and I propose that at the end of the clause, after the dimensions of the barrel are given, the following words be added: 'representing as nearly as possible the capacity of ninety-six quarts, or three bushels.' The next clause, as amended, provides that when apples, pears, quinces, or potatoes are sold by the barrel, as a measure of capacity, such barrel shall not be of lesser dimensions than those specified in the previous section. In other words, we do not limit the capacity so that any barrel of larger capacity, such as has been used in Ontario and Quebec, and flour barrels can still be used under this law.

Mr. HENDERSON. Ninety-six quarts and three bushels of potatoes are not the same thing. Potatoes are sold by the heap measure, and you cannot put three bushels of potatoes in ninety-six quarts. It would just be as well to leave the second definition out, and there will be no contradiction.

Mr. J. B. MILLS (Annapolis). If the hon. gentleman will look at the Dominion statutes he will see that the measure is fixed by statute.

Mr. CLANCY. A bushel of potatoes is sixty pounds, and the capacity which the hon. gentleman gives, will not give three times sixty. It will not be three bushels. It takes a bushel heaped to weigh sixty pounds, and when sold by the bushel there is sixty pounds.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think that perhaps the objection will be met if we strike out the words 'when potatoes are sold by weight,' and say 'when potatoes are sold by the barrel,' the contents shall be considered equivalent to three bushels. This would bring us in line with the old Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. That would not meet the difficulty. You say that a barrel of potatoes is to have a weight of 174 pounds. The weight of a bushel of potatoes is sixty pounds. A barrel containing three bushels of potatoes would contain 180 pounds. You have a direct contradiction. You had better leave out the latter part altogether. There would be no difficulty in simply saying that a barrel of potatoes should be 174 pounds, and a bushel sixty pounds.

Mr. MILLS. I do not agree with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). The addition made by the minister seems to me a perfectly proper and correct one. It is to protect the farmers against the speculators, because if that is not in the Act, the farmer will be selling his barrel of potatoes sometimes three and a half bushels, or three bushels anyway, and will not get the full value for his potatoes. If you specify that the barrel shall contain ninety-six quarts or three bushels, the same as the law in the United States—and that is where we have to meet the competition—the farmers of Canada shall be trading on an even basis with the farmers of the United States.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose a man entered into a contract to deliver 300 bushels of potatoes. By the Weights and Measures Act, that would mean 300 times sixty pounds. And if he put them in 100 barrels and delivered them, there would not be 300 bushels of potatoes, because a barrel has not sufficient capacity to hold three bushels. If you leave it at ninety-six quarts, and omit the reference to the bushel, there is no opportunity of evasion. It does not alter the capacity.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If we can meet the difficulty that way, I can see no reason why we should not do so. Every one knows that ninety-six quarts make three bushels.

Mr. CLANCY. But the reference to the bushels is simply superfluous; it does not alter the capacity, because the ninety-six quarts is an inflexible rule.

Mr. MILLS. That is all right.

Mr. ROGERS. You cannot get thirty-two quarts of potatoes out of a bushel. The finer you divide it up, the harder it is to get the measure. It would be better, with potatoes, to fix a weight, and not mention the measure.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The people of the maritime provinces ship enormous quantities of potatoes to the West Indies and to England, and it is very important to them that this should be set right.

Mr. HENDERSON. Leave it as it is; it will save trouble.

On section 2,

Mr. McMILLAN. I gave notice of an amendment, and I may say, for the information of the House, that when I first introduced the Bill, it read that unless otherwise specially agreed upon by buyer and seller, eggs shall be sold by weight, the weight of a dozen being one and one-half pounds. There was a little difficulty in regard to understanding that clause, and notice was given of an amendment, which will read:

When eggs are described as sold by the standard dozen, the dozen shall mean one pound and a half.

Eggs may still be sold by the dozen, and the Bill will make no difference in such cases, but will only affect cases where the agreement is to buy and sell by the standard dozen. The egg trade between this country and Great Britain is a growing one, and in England, eggs are sold by a standard dozen, the weight of which is one and one-half pounds. The men who deal in eggs in this country desire that there should be a standard dozen for this country, so that there may be a better basis for their transactions in England.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), allow me to ask him a question? Suppose that the weight of a counted dozen was say, 25 per cent more than a pound and a half, would the seller get the benefit of that?

Mr. McMILLAN. Certainly, when the dealers sell in England, they sell by weight. Dealers in the old country buy by the standard weight, they weigh the eggs there in bulk. This is not intended to interfere with the single dozen, but it is only intended to regulate sales of eggs made, perhaps, in western Ontario to be sent to Montreal; but if the parties do not agree that they are to be sold by the standard dozen, this does not interfere with them. It is only where they agree that the eggs shall be sold by the standard dozen that the packages are to be weighed. I had a long conversation with a gentleman in Liverpool who buys a large quantity of eggs, and he stated that it would facilitate trade and make it much easier between the dealers in this country and the dealers in Great Britain, if such a provision was adopted. It does not inter-ferre at all with the local trade, and unless a bargain is made that the dozen shall be the standard dozen, it does not interfere. I hope therefore the committee will allow this to pass. I have no personal interest in it, but I am well acquainted with a good many egg dealers, and every one of them has asked me to put this through if possible.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend introduced successively two Bills to which I saw some objection. But as he has prepared one now to which I see no objection. At first it contained this provision :

Unless otherwise specially agreed upon between the buyer and seller, eggs shall be sold by weight.

I saw a serious objection to that, I could not see how you could expect people to make a special agreement every time a person sold half a dozen of eggs. But now as my hon. friend has framed his amendment that objection disappears completely, because he says now :

When eggs are described as sold by the standard dozen, the dozen shall mean one pound and a half.

This is perfectly fair. It is only when the parties agree to sell and to buy by the standard dozen that the weight of the dozen shall be fixed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to oppose the clause, because I understand it is desired by exporters of eggs to the old country. I would like to ask, however, if that is the standard in Great Britain ?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is the standard in Great Britain. They are exactly the same.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I do not see that we can raise any objection to the amendment. I only wished it to be distinctly understood that we have the same standard as in Great Britain.

Mr. HOLMES. I desire to move an amendment to the Weights and Measures Act in accordance with a notice given by myself :

Section 1 of chapter 25 of the Statutes of 1888, intituled: 'An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act as respects the contents of packages of salt,' is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

'1. Every barrel of salt packed in bulk, sold or offered for sale, shall contain 280 pounds of salt, and every such barrel or sack of salt, sold or offered for sale, shall have the correct gross weight thereof, and in the case of a barrel the net weight also, marked upon it in a plain and permanent manner.'

Section 3 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

'3. The name or the registered trade mark of the packer of the salt, if it is packed in Canada, or the name and address of the importer, if it is packed elsewhere than in Canada, shall be marked, stamped or branded on every barrel or sack of salt sold or offered for sale in Canada.'

The Act at present requires that the net and gross weight shall be stamped on the barrel of salt. The amendment is simply to provide that sacks shall be included as well, and that the gross weight shall be stamped on the sacks. I am not asking that the net weight shall be stamped. A sack as known to the trade is supposed to contain 200 pounds of salt. I am given to understand that some sacks have been put on the market of considerably less weight, and the amendment is to provide against an imposition of that nature. It has the full approval of the Minister of Inland Revenue and also of the largest dealers in salt in the province of Ontario. It is intended entirely for the benefit of consumers.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have considered the amendment carefully. The only change it makes is to add the word 'sack' for the word 'barrel.' When the Bill was passed in 1888 it appears that salt was shipped in barrels more generally than at present, whereas the greatest part of the salt is now shipped in sacks.

Mr. HENDERSON. I remember when the Bill fixing the weight of the barrel of salt was passed in 1888, and it was given very full consideration. I hope that an amendment brought in at this late date will not undo the careful work that was done at that time. I desire, however, to draw attention to this point. We all know that salt will lose weight after it is packed, that a barrel of salt put up with 280 pounds seldom reaches its destination having that weight. Now, if there is a penalty attached, if you have in your possession a barrel that has less than 280 pounds, it might become a serious matter. I hope the matter of shrinkage has been carefully considered, and that some percentage has been allowed to cover that point.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). In regard to the marking of salt it simply means this, that the salt is marked with the original quantity that is put into the sack or barrel, but the net weight is placed upon the barrel, because a barrel is not supposed to lose any of its weight. Sometimes a sack may be exposed to rain, and may lose part of its weight therefrom, or from other causes. The mark on the sack will indicate that the original quantity was put in when the sack was filled. That is what salt buyers are anxious to know. It is charged that sometimes sacks are put upon the market which contained a less weight than 200 pounds when they were filled, and there is the additional loss that takes place subsequently. We simply desire that the original quantity shall be marked upon the sack.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I fail to see where there can be any valid objection to placing the gross weight upon the sack, more especially when it has the sanction of those who are the producers of salt. It is in their interest. They are desirous that it shall be put on, and it is the desire of men who are interested in the business that the gross weight of salt shall be put on the sack. The amount of loss by shrinkage or from dampness is very trifling from a bag or a barrel of salt. All that we are asking, and it is asked really in the interest of the consuming class, although we are asking it at the instance of the manufacturers, is that the gross weight shall be stamped on the sack just the same as it is on the barrel at the present time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not think this interferes with the weight that was arranged in 1888, as it refers entirely to sacks or bags. To my own knowledge, bags that were marked as containing 200 pounds have been sold containing only 140 and 150 pounds. This is unjust to the honest dealer. This amendment is asked for by honest salt men and they are men who would scorn to do an act that is not honest. It is in favour of the honest dealer and of the consumer that the sack which is marked 200 pounds should at least weigh 200 pounds. I have weighed a sack marked 150 pounds and found that it only weighed 110 pounds. This law is in favour of the honest salt manufacturer, and in favour of the consumer of salt throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think there may, perhaps, be an objection, which strikes me all of a sudden, and which we could get rid of at once. The amendment says :

Every barrel of salt packed in bulk, sold or offered for sale, shall contain 280 pounds of salt. That is all right.

And every such barrel or sack of salt, sold or offered for sale, shall have the correct gross weight thereof, and in the case of a barrel the net weight also, marked upon it in a plain and permanent manner.

Evidently the intention of the amendment is not to affect in any way the weight of a barrel of salt, but, if we do not explain it it may be assumed that a sack of salt should be of the same weight as a barrel of salt. I do not understand that a sack, according to the hon. gentleman's amendment, must contain 280 pounds. That cannot be the intention.

Mr. HOLMES. No.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think we can meet the difficulty by adding the words after the word 'salt,' 'whatever the weight of its contents.'

Mr. HOLMES. The whole intention of the amendment is simply that the gross weight shall be stamped on the sack. It may be put on the market as a 150-pound sack, but all we want is that 150 pounds shall be stamped upon the sack, and the same thing applies to a 200-pound sack.

Mr. MacLAREN. Does that apply to English salt also ?

Mr. HOLMES. It applies to all salt sold here. The object is that the gross weight shall be stamped upon the bag.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would say that it should apply to a sack, or bag, because there are bags of salt which hold five, ten, twenty-five or fifty pounds, and every bag or sack should have the quantity legibly stamped upon it.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think that the 280 pounds mentioned as the contents of a barrel touches the question of sacks. I understand that the promoter of the amendment does not attempt to fix the size of the sack, but that he asks that the weight shall be stamped upon the sack. The hon. member for Halton asks what would be the consequence if a sack is found to be short of weight. Everybody knows that salt will vary a good deal according to the condition of the atmosphere, so that, I do not think there would be any serious ground for complaint in that way.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The law provides for variations in weights according to the condition of the atmosphere. It says :

But no deficiency in the weight of the salt contained in any package shall be deemed a contravention of this Act, unless such deficiency exceeds 5 per cent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to know if that 5 per cent will apply to the sack as well as to the barrel ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Certainly.

Mr. ELLIS. Do I understand that the hon. minister consents to this ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. ELLIS. Well, then, I beg to congratulate him, because last year I endeavoured to get the minister to consent to an amendment providing that the weight should be stamped on canned goods, and he resisted me with the whole strength of the government. I am glad to learn that he is making some progress, and next year, I hope the minister will have advanced so far in knowledge and light that he will sanction the legislation which I proposed, because it is of the same character as this.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have been ready for my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis) since last year. I have here the very notes I took last year when I was going to oppose his Bill. I kept them in my desk expecting that the hon. gentleman would once more bring forward the Bill that he proposed last session. I beg leave to remind him of a letter I sent last year, a copy of which I have here.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I want to explain that I am not dealing unjustly with my hon. friend. After he introduced his proposed legislation in connection with canned goods, I was obliged to explain to my hon. friend the reason why I would have to oppose the Bill, and here are the reasons summed up in few words. I will take the opportunity of reading them.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. gentleman is out of order. Canned goods has nothing to do with salt.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Here is the letter :

In respect to the proposal to affix on cans the exact weight of their contents, I have before me the opinions of several boards of trade. The board of trade of the maritime provinces has passed a resolution in favour of making the weight on each can. I have also a resolution of the board of trade of St. John to the same effect, which opinion the Ottawa board seems to endorse.

The Montreal board approves of the marking of weight on packages containing dry products, such as tea or coffee, but not for cans the contents of which are not all dry matter, and naturally of a varying specific gravity. The Halifax Board of Trade does not recommend the legislation proposed by the St. John Board of Trade. Those of Quebec, Hamilton, Vancouver, New Westminster, Victoria and Toronto are not in favour of it, on the ground that it is apparently utterly impossible to put goods, other than dry goods like tea or coffee, in exactly uniform weights, solidity of contents, air space, &c., making it almost impossible to conform to an absolute weight test.

It appears to me that they are logically right in coming to that conclusion.

I have kept the resolutions of all these boards of trade, so that my hon. friend will not think I am treating him unjustly, when I refuse to support his views.

Mr. F. T. FROST (Leeds and Grenville). Before the Bill is reported, I have an amendment which I wish to propose in the interests of the consumers of binder twine. As hon. members are aware, for many years the raw material for the manufacture of binder twine was obtained in Manila, but during the last couple of years the price has increased so rapidly that manufacturers have been going to other countries in search of a suitable material, out of which to manufacture twine, and for the past year they have been obtaining a considerable quantity from Mexico and New Zealand. The result of that has been the production of many varieties of binder twine, and many varieties too, in regard to the number of feet of twine to the pound. This is creating a certain amount of confusion, and I believe also a loss to the farmers of Canada, and in order to give the farmers an idea of precisely what they are purchasing, I move the following amendment, seconded by Mr. Cowan :

Said subsection 1 of section substituted by section 2 of chapter 28 of the Statutes of 1899, as aforesaid, is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

'18a. Upon every package, ball or parcel containing binder twine offered for sale, there shall be a stamp, or a stamp shall be attached thereto, stating the number of pounds in such package, ball or parcel, and the number of feet of twine per pound in such package, ball or parcel.

'Every importer, agent or dealer who neglects to comply with the provisions of this section shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $20 for each offence, to be recovered under the Summary Convictions Act, but no deficiency in the number of feet contained in any such package, ball or parcel shall be deemed a contravention of the above section unless such deficiency exceeds 5 per cent of the amount or length stated upon such stamp. Any proceedings under the above section shall be taken within thirty days from sale of any such package, ball or parcel.

This subsection to come into force upon the 1st day of September, 1900.

In view of the fact that a majority of our farmers, with the exception of those in the west, have already purchased their twine, and as the stock of twine for this season's harvest is distributed generally throughout the country, I thought it only fair to add a rider, that the section should not come into force until September 1 next, so that it will not apply to the harvest of this year. This amendment is in the interest of the consumers of binder twine. I know of my personal knowledge, that some balls of twine weighing the same, have from 25 to 40 per cent more of length, and consequently the farmers do not know that they are being defrauded.

Mr. M. K. COWAN (South Essex). I rise to second this amendment, which I believe must commend itself to every member of this House. Some farmers in western Ontario, have drawn my attention to the fact that prior to the Philippine war, all balls of binder twine were practically of the uniform length of 600 feet to the pound. At the present time, in consequence of the substitution of raw materials other than manila in the manufacture, in some instances, a ball of twine weighing four and a half pounds, has only 400 feet per pound of twine. The result is that the farmer accustomed to the purchase of binder twine made from manila, which may be considered a standard, is getting in four and a half pounds of manila twine, at say 10 cents per pound, being 45 cents, he is getting 2,700 feet, while if he buys other twine, with only 400 feet to the pound, then in point of fact, he is only getting 1,800 feet in the four and a half pounds. The result is that the 2,700 feet of manila costs 45 cents, while the twine not made of manila, would only amount to 1,800 feet for the same weight and price, and the farmer would pay 60 cents for 2,700 feet of that instead of 45 cents for the other. Under these circumstances it is desirable that the farmer should know the exact number of feet per pound in the article they purchase. This amendment compels the manufacturer, the importer, or the dealer, to attach to every ball of twine, the number of pounds within the ball, package or parcel, and the number of feet per pound.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all right.

Mr. DAVIN. I think so.

Mr. CLANCY. The amendment is in the right direction. I would point out, however, that there are no new conditions existing now to what there were previously, because if any gentleman goes to the library, he will find the report of a thorough investigation made in Toronto some years ago, which shows that the higher grade of manilas will spin finer and, therefore, to each pound there will be a greater number of feet, than in the lower grades. The lower the grade of manila, the greater the bulk, and the greater the weight without any corresponding number of feet. I see no objection to the amendment. I think it is in the right direction, and if it passes, the farmers in future will pay for whatever twine they get and no more. They will know, when they are buying a ball of twine, that they have at least some security from the manufacturer that it contains so many feet to the pound. The number of pounds to the ball may or may not be useful. What the farmer wants in any case, is to get as many feet to the pound as he can of a class of twine that will stand sufficient tension to run through his binder. If it is surrounded by these safeguards, I heartily agree with the object of the measure.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I quite agree with my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. I think the Bill is in the right direction; but that, while it makes provision for putting on the ball the number of pounds and the number of feet to the pound, there may be a little confusion. I think it would be better to give the weight of the ball and the number of feet in the ball. There should also be some provision made for reaching the manufacturer who violates the law by putting a false stamp on the ball.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The amendment proposes a penalty.

Mr. McMULLEN. It will not do simply to provide a penalty for the man who sells the twine. When any twine is found not to contain the number of yards represented by the stamp, I think the consequences should fall upon the man who manufactured the twine, and not on the retail merchant.

Mr. COWAN.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has anticipated a portion of what I intended to say. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right in holding that in the event of the twine not turning out to be of the requisite length or weight, the penalty should be visited not on the country dealer, but on the manufacturer. If it were visited on the dealer, you would not be able in country places to get a man to handle twine at all. The result would be that the trade would be thrown back into the hands of the manufacturer or such men as the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution, who, I understand, handles twine in pretty large quantities, as all implement men do. These men make an arrangement with the manufacturer as to the weight and measurement of the twine; but the ordinary dealer in a country village or at a corner, who handles one or two tons, would have to take the whole risk. The result would be that men would not engage in the trade, and farmers would not be able to get their twine unless they bought it from two or three large dealers in the country. A farmer may not know in the morning how much twine he will require during the day, and he is obliged to stop his machinery until he gets it. If he has to send to Toronto or Kingston to buy it from a large dealer, he is going to be greatly hindered in his operations. I fear that this matter will require a little more consideration than we are able to give it this afternoon. It may have been very well thought out by the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion, but I conceive that it will be a very mischievous amendment so far as the farmers are concerned. The intention to secure to the farmer the right quantity and weight of twine is all right. To that extent I am with the amendment; but if the man who handles the twine is to be held responsible for any shortage, and is therefore compelled to abandon the business and leave it in the hands of a few large dealers, it will be a very serious matter. With regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for North Wellington that the dealer would fall back on the original manufacturer; suppose the dealer imports flax twine from Belfast or other twine from Plymouth, Massachusetts, or from any other part of the United States, how are you going to reach the manufacturer in those places?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Would you substitute the word 'manufacturer' for 'dealer'?

Mr. HENDERSON. The manufacturer may be living in Ireland or in the Western States, and may not have any brand on the twine which he sells.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If you substitute the word 'manufacturer' for 'dealer' then you bring it home to the importer, his agent and the manufacturer.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would certainly want to leave out the agent or dealer, so as not to make these men liable.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I would like to ask the hon. member for North Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost), who proposed this motion, how he buys his twine. He receives an invoice for so much twine. When that twine arrives, the first thing he does is to put it on his scales and compare its weight to see if its weight as shown on his own scales agrees with the weight given in the invoice. He buys it by the pound, as every merchant does. It is impossible for any manufacturer to run his twine so as to make every ball the same weight. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) said that according to the quality of the material used, there was a greater or a less number of feet to the pound. So, that, if the manufacturer is using a fine grade of raw material, his pound of twine will make more feet, but he cannot get that to the exact inch or foot so as to make it weigh two pounds or four pounds. It is probably put up in four-pound balls, but you will find balls of $3\frac{1}{4}$ pounds and 3 pounds, and the country merchant puts the twine on the scale to sell to the farmers just as my hon. friend puts it on a scale and weighs it when he buys it from the manufacturers in large quantities. Compel the manufacturers to say how many feet of twine, each ball of twine runs per pound, but to brand the quantity of pounds in each ball, you would have to weigh each ball separate, because you cannot make each ball weigh to the fraction of an ounce the same weight. Besides, it is sold at so much per pound, and each ball is charged for according to its weight. It is not necessary to put the pounds on the ball, because the ball is put on the scales and weighed by the dealer. I think it well worthy of consideration to compel the number of feet per pound to be stamped on the ball, but not the weight.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). The great difficulty is the working out what seems to be a very useful measure. We have to take good care that we do not injure those we are now endeavouring to protect. It is an easy thing to compel the manufacturers to stamp on each ball of twine the number of feet to the pound, but the great difficulty is with the large importations of foreign twine, principally from the United States. Out of some 12,000,000 or 13,000,000 pounds consumed in Canada, over 10,000,000 pounds is brought from the United States. It is impossible for us to reach the United States manufacturer by any legislation we pass here, but I would suggest that it is an easy matter to deal with our own manufacturers by providing that each ball of twine shall have stamped on it the number of feet to the pound without mentioning how many pounds are in the ball.

If foreign twine imported is found to be short—laying down the same standard for foreign importations as for our own products—let it be subject to confiscation. I would suggest that all foreign twine should be stamped before it is admitted into the country, and if any be found short it should be confiscated. It would be a difficult task to impose on the farmers the obligation of measuring their twine. That could not be carried out. Men buy their twine and use it and have not time to detect the fraud; but if the fraud is detected and punished by our own officers in the way I have suggested, our farmers would be protected against fraud.

Mr. FROST. Binder twine is sold in balls, and these balls are generally supposed to contain four and a half pounds. They do contain four and a half pounds when they leave the factory, but, perhaps before the season is over, there might be a quarter or nearly a half a pound of shrinkage. But it is a four and a half pound ball. We sell it at so much per ball. We never put a ball of twine on the scales and weigh it, and a farmer never asks to have it put on the scales and weighed, so that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is a little astray. As the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says, the object of the amendment is to define the number of feet to the pound. The balls are marked, say $4\frac{1}{2}$ pounds, and we buy in boxes of twelve balls, making fifty-four pounds. You know that in buying a bar of soap, you buy a box of sixty-four pounds, or a 4-pound bar ordinarily, but that bar weighs only $3\frac{1}{4}$ pounds on account of the shrinkage, although it weighed four pounds when it left the factory. In like manner the ball of twine weighs $4\frac{1}{2}$ pounds when it leaves the factory, but three or four months in the warehouse will cause it to shrink a quarter of a pound by the evaporation of the oil. The newer qualities of raw material that have been coming into Canada during the past year or two have caused a variety of twines to be put on the market, some of which are not very good. As one hon. member has said, it is lumpy and coarse, and sometimes it will knot in the knotter of the binder and break, and compel the farmer to come off his seat and come down and tie his twine again. And there is no thing that annoys a farmer more than to have to fix the knotter in the machine.

Mr. COCHRANE. Your amendment will not take the knots out of the twine.

Mr. FROST. No, but it will compel the seller to show how many feet there are in a ball, and when you reach that point, you will save the farmer many hundreds of dollars in this country. The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) put the case.

very plainly. A man has two balls of twine which look very much alike, and they are both ten cents a pound. One ball has 600 feet to the pound and the other may have but 400 or 450 feet to the pound. The man who buys a ball of twine with 600 feet to the pound is getting 25 per cent more twine than the man who buys the other ball. A large farmer in Manitoba will buy $100 worth of twine on an average for his harvest. It usually takes about two pounds to the acre, and if he has 160 acres in wheat, he will have to buy 320 pounds of twine, which, at ten cents per pound, amounts to $32. If he buys the poorer twine, he would practically be giving $40 for it, and would be out 33½ per cent. But he does not know that.

Mr. COCHRANE. You must think our farmers are mighty ignorant.

Mr. FROST. He does not know how many feet to the pound are in a ball, and consequently he is buying in ignorance. He is buying a pig in a poke. This amendment is intended to give exactly the number of feet to the pound that is in the ball, so that he may know what he is paying for. That is the object of the Bill. It has been said that perhaps the manufacturer in the United States will not brand the ball with the number of feet to the pound. So far as I know, manufacturers everywhere observe the requirements of the law in the country in which they do business. Personally, I do. Goods shipped to foreign countries, for instance, Germany and Spain, have to be marked in a peculiar way under their laws. We conform to those laws. The manufacturers of binder twine are not going to lose the trade of this country, amounting now from eight to ten thousand tons, for the lack of making a plain honest statement. They know the number of feet in a given weight of twine, because their reels register it as it is going through. I have no fear but that the law will be carried out. If the amendment passes, as I hope it will, I think it will be found workable and be very much in the interest of the farmers of this country.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I agree with a good deal of what has been said in criticism of this amendment. It says that every package or ball of twine shall be labelled. I think the provision for branding packages should be eliminated, because it includes the original package in which there are, perhaps, a dozen balls making up 56 pounds, and the brand would not be on each ball, for the man could comply with the law by simply branding the weight and length on the outside package. Then, I think the amendment should be made to apply to every manufacturer or importer, and not to dealers and agents. We cannot get at the foreign manufacturer but we can get at the importer and compel the observance of the law by him. I think we should give more careful consideration to the amendment with reference to these points, so that if it is passed, it may be as efficient as possible. It seems to me that in its present form, it will not meet the case.

Mr. EDWARD COCHRANE (East Northumberland). I am very much pleased to see the anxiety displayed by the manufacturers in the interest of the farmers. I wonder if the hon. gentleman is as much interested when he makes farm machines. I have used machines made by a firm I need not mention that were not just what they were represented to be by the agent. Some hon. gentlemen seem to think that the farmers are bigger fools than I take them to be. I admit that they hardly establish a claim for intelligence by some of the men they send to represent them here. I am a farmer, and I know, as my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) knows, what I am buying. We generally know by the brand of twine how many feet to the pound it runs. The farmer who does not know whether he gets the number of feet in each package that are represented to be in that package will not be long using the machines for which the twine is intended—he will be at some other business that he is better fitted for than farming. I do not object to the Bill, but I do not want to injure the farmers through it. It is a question that needs to be carefully considered, otherwise we may hamper the trade and put difficulties in the way of the farmer getting his twine that will do him more harm than having a stamp on the ball will do him good. I agree with the hon. gentleman from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)—I do not agree with him often—that it would be sufficient to have the importers who bring the twine into the country made responsible for the branding, and also to brand each ball of twine.

Mr. FROST. The amendment provides for that.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have not had the advantage of seeing the amendment, but the hon. member for North Wellington says that the amendment does not provide for that, but that it provides that the brand is to be put upon the package.

Mr. FROST. It provides for branding the package as well.

Mr. COCHRANE. It will not do any harm to put it on the package too, if you put it on the ball. It seems quite reasonable that we should know how many feet we are getting when we buy a ball of twine, because twine is of use to the farmer, not according to its weight, but according to its length. Now, it is generally understood that one brand of twine contains more feet to the pound than another brand of twine. But I think that would be a very prudent regulation so that the farmer may know when he is buying a ball of twine, how many feet he is getting. I think if that can be done, it will be a great protection to him, that is to say, if it can be done without hampering the trade, and without doing more harm in one direction than we are doing good in another. But I do not see why the manufacturers who send goods into this country should not be compelled to comply with the laws of this country. If we can make them do it, let us make them do it, and so protect our own people.

THE MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Evidently this amendment deserves serious consideration, and I would not like to hurry it through the committee until it has been well considered by both sides of the House, seeing that it affects so many different interests. Therefore, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 168) to amend the Patent Act. He said: Perhaps it would be well, before going into committee, that I should give a little explanation of this Bill. I have had a number of communications in regard to it, which show that not only amongst members of the House, but in the country at large, there is a little misapprehension in regard to the scope of this Bill. It is designed to amend the Patent Act in only one particular, that is, to provide a machinery by which, under certain circumstances and conditions, an extension may be made to the life of a patent in this country. By our Patent Act, a patent is issued for a term of eighteen years, divided into three periods of six years each. The patentee, on obtaining his patent, may pay a fee for the whole eighteen years, $60, and get a patent for the whole period at one act; or he may pay one-third of the fee, $20, and obtain a patent for six years, and before the expiry of the six years, he may pay another $20 and get another six years life for his patent, and before the expiry of that second six years, twelve years from the beginning, he may again pay $20, and get a third term of six years, making in all the eighteen years for the life of a patent in this country. There have been brought to my attention, and in some measure to the attention of the House, certain cases in which an apparent hardship may exist from the fact that the patentee has not been able to make any practical use or profitable use of his patent until a time very near the end of the life of the patent, and the consequence is that the inventor, from circumstances entirely beyond his control, and through no fault of his own, has failed to obtain any remuneration for his invention. When these representations were first made to me, I felt that it was a thing which should be very carefully considered, and it was not until it was pointed out that in the Imperial Patent Act, there are the provisions which are contained in this amendment, that I concluded to ask for this amendment. In the United Kingdom, under certain circumstances and conditions, and with a certain procedure, the life of an English patent may be extended for a further term than the ordinary life of a patent under their law. I have examined the provisions of the Imperial Patent Act, and it seems that under that Act, careful provision is made against abuses of this privilege, and the public interest is carefully protected. I therefore agreed, on the representation of those who asked for it, that I would introduce a Bill which practically embodies in the Canadian patent law the provisions of the Imperial Patent Act. It enables patentees in this country, having fulfilled certain conditions and having given certain proofs, upon application, to have the life of their patents extended. I fully appreciate, that, without safeguards, this provision would be, perhaps, a dangerous one. The patent law is practically a law which gives to certain inventors the exclusive privilege of and right in their own inventions. The reason of the existence of this law is that people may be encouraged to invent, and to publish their inventions so that the public at large, the whole community, may reap the advantages of them. Before patent laws were in existence inventors maintained secrecy, they carried on the manufacture of their inventions with the utmost secrecy, and the public at large were prevented, to a considerable extent, from reaping the benefit of the inventive genius of the patentee. Under our patent laws the inventor is tempted to place his patent at the disposal of the community, because he knows that he has protection under the patent law for his patent, and that he may reap the full advantage which the law of supply and demand will grant him from his invention. The reason why the patent may, on certain occasions, be extended, is that by reason of circumstances over which the patentee has no control, reasons which were not personal to him or particular to his invention, he has not been able to receive a fair reward for his invention. Such conditions may be these, as I have instances brought before me: The patentee has invented something and has failed to bring it to the attention of those who are engaged in the business in which this patent would be useful. He has failed sometimes from lack of means, sometimes from the fact that those engaged in the business do not recognize early in his life of his patent the value of the patent, and consequently are not willing to take it up. Sometimes the patentee has had to go through a long term of perfecting his patent and applying it to the particular industry or manufacture for which it was intended and it took him a long time, a large portion of the life of his patent to bring it to the attention of that portion of the public that might be interested in it or might use it with the result, that, although the patent had existed for anywhere from ten to twelve, or fifteen, sixteen, or seventeen years, the public had reaped no advantage from it and the patentee, himself, had reaped no advantage from it, but on the contrary, he had spent large sums of money, as well as having put into it his own inventive genius. Under these circumstances, it seems as though it would be a fair thing that the patentee should have a further extension of the life of his patent so that he might enjoy the fruits of it and reap some profit and advantage from it. This is the general reason for this Bill. I may say in explanation of the number of letters I have received that this Bill grants to no individual patentee or corporation any extension of the life of his or their patent. It simply provides machinery as follows: The patentee must apply to the Governor in Council, before the expiry of the life of his patent and upon explaining that he desires an extension, the application will be referred to the judge of the Exchequer Court, notice will be published to the community at large that the application is being made, and when the cause will be heard. Anybody taking exception to the application of the patentee will be heard just as the patentee himself will be heard in the advocacy of his cause. The judge of the Exchequer Court, after having heard the case, will report to the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council will act upon that report. The action, therefore, is taken, practically, entirely, out of the hands of the Governor in Council, and put into the hands of a judicial tribunal which is given the opportunity of hearing the case, of dealing with it on lines of proper investigation and of making a report which will have a judicial character and bear the weight of a judicial opinion. Under the Imperial law, it is the same procedure, with the exception that under that law the case is referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which reports to the Queen in Council, who then issues the order. The Bill, as before the House, contains exactly the same provisions with, I may say, one single exception. Subsection 5. of section 2, of the Bill reads :

Mr. FISHER.

The court shall, after hearing the persons interested, report upon the petition to the Governor in Council.

Under the English law there is a condition and direction as to the nature of the report, and I think probably it would be well that the Bill should be changed so as to conform to that condition of the Imperial law. The section of the Imperial Act reads :

If the Judicial Committee report that the patentee has been inadequately remunerated by his patent, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty in Council to extend the term of the patent for a further term not exceeding seven, or in exceptional cases, fourteen years; or to order the grant of a new patent for the term therein mentioned, and containing any restrictions, conditions and provisions that the Judicial Committee may think fit.

This provision somewhat limits the ground on which the court may recommend the extension of the patent inasmuch as it requires that the Judicial Committee must report that the patentee has been inadequately remunerated by his patent. The intention of the Bill was that that should be a condition of his getting the extension. It does not say so in the Bill, and I think, perhaps it would be well that it should say so as it does in the Imperial Act. The Imperial Act, however, goes a little further than this does, and prescribes that the report may contain any restriction, conditions and provisions which the Judicial Committee may think fit. The Bill, as it stands before the House to-day, does not give that power to the Governor in Council, and it may be better that the Governor in Council should have that power; that is to say, to give an extension of the patent subject to certain conditions and restrictions. The Bill, clause 7, on the second page, says :

If the court reports in favour of an extension of the patent, the Governor in Council may extend the term of the patent for a further period not exceeding six years.

It does not give the Governor in Council the right to impose restrictions or conditions. On these two points I am quite open to change the Bill in the same way, and I would submit the Bill with the expectation that in Committee of the Whole we shall have a full discussion and a full ventilation of the whole question which is a new one in our patent legislation, and which, therefore, deserves and requires the full consideration of the House before being proceeded with. I venture to say that the provisions that are submitted are fair and just to the patentee that they are safe and careful and provide against any improper exercise of these powers as against the public at large. Therefore, I think that the extension provided for can be fairly and justly given to the patentee with safety to the public at large. Under these circumstances, I beg to move the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. JAS McMULLEN (North Wellington). I have listened carefully to what has fallen from the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and while, perhaps, there are, under certain circumstances, grounds upon which a renewal of a patent might be fairly considered, I think we should legislate very slowly in this direction. A man who has enjoyed a monopoly of a patent for eighteen years, whether he took out his patent for that number of years at first, or extended it by stages of six years, has had during that time an absolute monopoly of the patent right, and it is rather hard that the public should still be subjected to that monopoly six years longer. I am not disposed to extend the lives of patents, but rather to shorten them. All those patents tend to create monopolies. I am quite willing, when a man by his ingenuity has produced something that is an advantage to the public, that the public should be asked to pay some reasonable remuneration to the inventor. But, by this Bill, after a patent has been in existence eighteen years, a petition for its extension may be referred to the Exchequer Court, and any person objecting to the extension, is called upon to show that the patentee has made a sufficient sum out of his patent. If the person objecting fails to prove that, then the patent right may be extended. How are you going to prove that? Suppose a man enjoyed a patent for eighteen years, and then applies to have the monopoly continued, we know well how ready people are to present a case in the very best light in their own behalf. They will, no doubt, plead very strongly to have the renewal for six years more, and will, no doubt, represent that they have made little or nothing out of the patent. How are you going to prove that they have made a sufficient sum? What sum is to be considered sufficient? I do not know that you can make any fixed standard by which the courts can be guided. While I have always great respect for the opinions of the Minister of Agriculture, and while, no doubt, he is actuated by a desire to do justice, still I am inclined to question the propriety of extending the life of a patent. I do not care what the rule is in England, we live in an age of progress, and it may not suit us to treat patents here as they are treated in England. And it might likewise be very unwise for us to follow the policy of the United States. With all due deference to the opinions of the Minister of Agriculture, we should go exceedingly slow in the direction of extending the life of patents. Canada has suffered seriously in many lines of manufacture by the exorbitant imposition and the extortionate demands of the owners of patent rights. In many cases they ask very much more than a fair remuneration for the use of their inventions. In place of legislating to extend that condition of things, we should legislate in the other direction, and give all owners of patent rights to understand that, under no circumstances, will their patent be extended after the eighteen years. If you once initiate a system of extension, you will not have a patentee in Canada who will not, at the end of the eighteen years, demand another six years, and then the onus of proving that he is not entitled to that renewal will fall upon those who are averse to paying the excessive charges they had to submit to. He will plead poverty and try to show that he is entitled to the renewal, and it would be difficult to prove that he is not. I have several letters with regard to this Bill. There are several patents to-day in existence with regard to which the public are looking forward to being released from the extortionate charges levied by the owners of these patent rights, and to allow such patents to continue six years more would be most objectionable. For my part, I cannot say that I am in favour of legislation along these lines.

Mr. WILLIAM GIBSON (Lincoln and Niagara). In the early part of the session, I gave notice of a Bill to amend the Patent Act. In view of the statements then made by the Minister of Agriculture, I am rather astonished to find that instead of trying to protect the interests of the general public against the encroachments of patentees, he is proposing a Bill that is entirely in the interests of the inventors and not of the public. One of the reasons he gave for the extension of the patents was, that many patentees had received no benefit from their patent until almost the close of the time allowed under the Patent Act. But, let me call attention to a company that has had more than a sufficient monopoly under this Patent Act. I put on the Order paper a question asking if there had been any complaint with regard to the use or abuse of the patent rights held by the Auer Light Company. The Bill I introduced, and which I hope the hon. minister will see fit to accept as an amendment to his Bill, is one that does not specifically deal with any particular company, but is intended to protect the public generally against extortion. Its purport is to this effect, that any party complaining of an overcharge, under patent rights, could apply to the Exchequer Court to have a reasonable price fixed, provided he gave a month's notice in the official Gazette, and deposited in court a sufficient sum to cover the costs. As the law stands now, I believe the judge of the Exchequer Court has the right to annul a patent when he considers that an exorbitant price is being charged for the patented article. If power were given to the judge to say what would be a reasonable price to charge, and then give the owner of the patent the option to sell at that price or have his patent annulled, I think the amendment which I have before the House would meet the case. With regard to the Auer Light Company, what we have been trying to find out has been when the rights of this company under the patent law would cease. Under the present law the Minister of Agriculture says that the extension of time can be made in three periods of six years each. I find that the Auer Light Company first obtained a patent for the usual period of eighteen years. That particular patent would have expired long ago owing to the irregularities in its renewal; but parliament in 1892 passed the Act 55 and 56 Victoria, chapter 77, under which, in effect, the patent was allowed to be extended for a period which would have expired on 2nd of March, 1901. Pending the renewal the Auer patentees obtained another patent for improvements, No. 26162, expiring 7th March, 1902, thus indirectly gaining another year. Then in 1896 they obtained further patents, expiring in 1914, Nos. 5165 and 5174, for further improvements, and again in 1897 still another patent, expiring in 1915, No. 57558, for further improvements, so that virtually a patent can be made perpetual by taking out further patents for alleged improvements. Time and again this company has been asked, not only by the consumers of gas, but by the gas companies to place a reasonable price on the Auer light. The same article which can be purchased in the United States for 25 cents and 50 cents each, the people of Canada have to pay $2.50 and $3.50 for to the Auer Light Company; that is, a lamp for burning two and three feet of gas per hour. As I do not wish the Bill of the minister to be sent to a committee, I would like to give an object lesson to the House with regard to the Auer light patent. The lamp which I have in my hand was purchased in the city of Chicago for 50 cents retail; it has a three-foot burner. Mr. Holt telegraphs to me from the city of Montreal as follows:

Bill (No. 168) to amend the Patent Act, will give the Auer Light Company an extension of six years. It is most important for gas companies that they should not receive this extension, as they are charging $3.50 for burners that we can buy for 35 cents. Will be much obliged if you can help us in this matter.

H. H. HOLT.

I may say that at Niagara Falls on the American side, any person can go to a retail store and buy for 35 cents this article for which the people of the city of Montreal have to pay $3.50. The fact is that the patent has long run out in the United States; and yet the Canadian government allows this company an extension of time to make the people of Canada pay $3.50 for that which can be purchased in the United States for 50 cents. For the mantle alone the Auer Light Company of Canada charge 50 cents, whereas in the United States it can be bought for 15 cents retail.

Mr. PRIOR. In Victoria it is 75 cents.

Mr. GIBSON. The Auer light is not one of the cases which the minister spoke of in which the owners of a patent are obtaining a benefit from their patent only at the end of the life of the patent; because, I can point back to the first time the Auer Light Company were asked to sell one of their burners. There was a lawsuit, because the company charged $100 for the mantle and the lamp; and to-day they will not sell this article to the gas companies at a less rate by the thousand than $2.50 each. The following letter was addressed on June 8, 1898, by the Hamilton Gas Light Company to the Auer Light Company of Montreal:

Dear Sirs,—We shall be pleased to have you quote us your lowest prices on mantles, to be used for incandescent gas lighting, in lots of 1,000.

If we can buy them at a reasonable price, we propose to apply them to burners we shall make or have made for us, guaranteeing the burners we propose to use to be more artistic in design and equal in efficiency to those supplied by you.

We are satisfied, with a good incandescent burner to handle, and placed before the public at a reasonable price, we should boom incandescent gas lighting business; of course, with the primary object of pushing our own business, in fact, we feel there should be a closer business relationship between the two interests, and if you can see your way clear to meet us, we will in return do our best to sell your mantles. But, under any consideration, this company, with others, have decided to push the gas business with the assistance of a good incandescent burner, and as already stated, would prefer to do the business with you, and which I believe would be mutually beneficial.

A reply at your earliest convenience will oblige.

To this the Hamilton Gas Company received the following reply:

Montreal, June 11, 1898.

The Hamilton Gas Light Co.,
Edmond Cathels, Supt.,
Hamilton, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 8th inst. is at hand. We note that your gas company, in connection with others, have decided to push their gas business with the assistance of a good incandescent burner.

These we can supply you in lots of any size per complete light, including gallery, mantle, shade and chimney, at $3.50 each. We note your opinion that you could boom the incandescent gas lighting business, provided we sold you the mantles at an exceedingly low price, but this, we are advised, we need not do at present.

Without going into the matter at any length at this writing, it must be evident to you that there is no object in our assuming 'closer business relationship' with your company and the other which you do not mention on the plan which you refer to, viz., of your selling mantles alone to the gas interests at low prices.

We should be glad to meet you or any other representatives of the companies which you do not name, in order to ascertain upon which basis the two interests could be brought together in a mutually profitable manner.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) W. R. GRANGER,
Superintendent.

Notwithstanding that they only have a patent on the mantle, yet as far back as 1898, this company refused to sell a thousand of the mantles and burners, complete with shades and chimneys, for less than $3.50 each. Every gas consumer knows that with the Auer light he can save from 30 to 50 per cent in the consumption of gas, in addition to getting a better light. The gas companies now have to meet strong opposition from the electric light companies who can produce their power very cheaply at the present day, and the result is that the gas companies are being forced out of the business. They feel that if this article were placed at a reasonable price that they could, for their own preservation, place Auer lights in the houses of consumers of gas. Of course they cannot do that at the present price charged for the Auer light. When I call the attention of the House to the fact that in most houses, people use from five to ten burners, you will see that they would have to pay $35 for the use of ten mantles, which practically do not belong to them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The company rents them.

Mr. GIBSON. They practically rent them. They are of such a fragile nature that the sudden slamming of a door will destroy them, and you will readily see what the objection is to paying $3.50 for replacing an article which, as Mr. Holt says, is in reality worth only 33½ cents. This company has no patent on the shade or burner, and yet this article, which is sold retail in every store in the United States for 50 cents, is charged $3.50 for here. The patent given to the Auer Light Company, and extended from time to time, enables them to perpetrate this injustice. In the interests of the general public, I would ask the minister to consider the provisions in the Bill I have introduced, and to see if they cannot be incorporated as an amendment to the Bill which he has now before the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I heartily sympathize with what has fallen from the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson). I have no special knowledge of the subject, except that I am compelled to pay the prices to which the hon. gentleman has referred. There is no question that you can buy upon the American side of the line, these mantles for from 7 to 10 cents, which are charged 60 cents for by the Auer Light Company. In fact you cannot buy the right to use this system of lighting at all. They simply rent you the lamps and the right to use, and charge you an exorbitant rate. If there is any remedy which the government can apply, it is their duty to do it, in the interests of the gas consumers of Canada.

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). I can corroborate the statement made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson), in reference to these Auer lights. On the recommendation of the president of the Hamilton Gas Company, I bought several of these mantles for $2.60 each, and they certainly afforded a splendid light. But in consequence of their fragile nature, I found it more profitable to continue to pay the high price for the gas, than to renew these Auer lights every time they got broken. If they were at a reasonable price, one could afford to renew them and they would afford a very excellent light, with a much smaller quantity of gas than is consumed in the ordinary way. I hope the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson), will be entertained by the Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. gentlemen who have spoken, have made out a somewhat strong case against the price charged by the Auer Light Company, but I do not think they have made a strong case against the proposal of the minister to amend the Act. Under this Bill it appears to me to be perfectly clear that the Auer light would not receive an extension of their patent.

Mr. CLARKE. Under what provision of this Bill could the Auer Light Company not apply for an extension of their patent?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We cannot prevent any one applying for a patent, but if the facts are as stated, and if they are charging $2.50 for what can be bought in the United States for 25 cents, or thereabouts, I do not imagine that the court which has to pass on the facts of the case, would recommend a renewal of their patent. I know nothing about it personally, except that I have had to pay for a good many of these broken mantles. The Minister of Agriculture thinks that he himself, as the executive of the department, should not have the right to determine whether or not the patent should be extended, and so in this Bill, he provides for an inquiry before the Exchequer Court, as to the facts, and the court may determine, after full examination, whether the parties interested have received a fair compensation for their patent.

Section 2 says :

The patentee or the assignee of any patent may, after advertising in the manner directed by any rules made under this section his intention so to do, present a petition to the Governor in Council, at least three months before the time limited for the expiration of the patent, praying that his patent may be extended for a further term.

Any person may enter a caveat, addressed to the commissioner of patents, against the extension.

The Governor in Council may refer any such petition to the Exchequer Court of Canada, and the said court shall proceed to consider it, and the petitioner and any person who has entered a caveat shall be entitled to be heard, by himself or by counsel, on the petition.

The court shall, in considering the petition, have regard to the nature and the merits of the invention in relation to the public, to the benefits conferred on the public by such invention, to the profits made by the petitioner, and to all the circumstances of the case.

The court shall, after hearing the persons interested, report upon the petition to the Governor in Council.

If the court reports in favour of an extension of the patent, the Governor in Council may extend the term of the patent for a further period not exceeding six years.

It is quite clear that if the company referred to had been making the extravagant profit that was represented by my hon. friends who have spoken, they would have no case to lay before the Court of Exchequer and that no extension would be granted under my hon. friend's Bill.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). It seems to me that this is a step in the right direction, as it provides a place where patents can be inquired into more efficiently than before parliament. It cannot affect such a case as that brought forward by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson). These people have their patent for a certain length of time, and can well understand that if they make an application for extension, as the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has said it would not be listened to. This is exactly the English law. And under that law, it is necessary for a petitioner for the extension of a patent to show how the invention has paid, and what is the prospect of its paying in the future. He must show year by year, without inaccuracy or discrepancy how the profits have been made, and what prices he has charged. And so, everything must come before the court, and the Bill of the hon. minister is exactly a copy of that law, except that the tribunal before which the case is tried is different. The extension of a patent is a matter of favour and not of right, and it is for the petitioners to prove distinctly how much the public has paid. The onus is upon the petitioner to satisfy their lordships that, when all the circumstances are considered, his remuneration is less than he is entitled to. I understood from my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that it was for the public or somebody else to show the profits that had been made. On the contrary, it is the man who is seeking the extension that must satisfy the court that he has a claim. But that is only one part of it. I am sure members will agree, in consideration of the Bills that we have had before the committee, that it is high time that we had a way of equitably and upon proper evidence deciding these questions. They come before us year by year, and we have to inquire into them. But nobody can say that we are as well able to inquire as a court would be, where witnesses would be heard, and where parties who were interested could appear to oppose the application if they wished. I should think there would be no objection to reading the Bill the second time and letting it go into Committee of the Whole where it can be discussed fully. I admit that in such a case as that cited by my hon. friend from Lincoln, the parties should be debarred from getting an extension. If there could be no other way, if an Act could be passed having that effect, I would vote for it. But we must not think that one case of wrong-doing is a sample of all the cases that would come up in which an extension would be sought. The patentee is entitled to some rights, and if he goes before a proper court and shows, upon all the evidence, that he has not received all that he should have received, it is no wrong to the public to grant him an extension. However, these are matters that can be better discussed when we get into committee on the Bill.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I am inclined to think that the case mentioned by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), which is, undoubtedly, prima facie, a case that requires investigation, would be met by clause 37 of our existing Patent Act, which provides that every patent granted under the Act shall be forfeited unless two conditions be complied with, one being that the manufacture of the article shall be established and carried on in Canada within a period of two years, and the other being, as stated here, that the construction or manufacture of the invention patented shall be carried on in such a manner that any person desiring to use it can obtain it at a reasonable price. And if any one chooses to apply, to the minister under this Act, for the forfeiture of the patent, it appears to me, looking at the clause I have referred to, the patent could be declared null and void. The words are tolerably express, and though I do not presume to give a legal opinion, and though I am not aware that the power here granted has been invoked under the late government or under ourselves, it seems to me that it provides a means of preventing exorbitant charges such as the hon. gentleman has referred to being made under a patent.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister the judge?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, the words are—section 37:

If any dispute arises as to whether a patent has or has not become null and void under the provisions of this section, such dispute shall be decided by the minister or the deputy of the Minister of Agriculture, whose decision in the matter shall be final.

It appears to me that cases such as that referred to by my hon. friend from Lincoln, which do, undoubtedly, deserve attention, are met under the existing law. As I said, I do not offer that as the legal opinion, but clause 37 appears to be expressly intended to prevent such abuses as he has called to the attention of the House.

Mr. T. DIXON CRAIG (East Northumberland). It seems to me that this Bill introduced by the Minister of Agriculture is rather retrograde, and I do not think there is any special need for it. Patents to-day are used more generally and more quickly than they used to be. If a patent is worth anything people now are enterprising and are willing to use it and pay for it, so that if it is likely to be of any use to anybody, the patentee is sure to receive ample reward in eighteen years. If we are going to make any change—I do not say we should, as the country may be satisfied with the present time allowed—instead of increasing from eighteen years to twenty-four years, we ought to cut it down from eighteen years to twelve years. While we must not do injustice to a patentee, we must remember that the interests of the great body of the people are more than the interest of any one man. As a rule, those who have patents take all they can get out of them and do not require much sympathy from the public, and as a rule they do not get much either. I think the cases which this law would affect would be very exceptional, and when there is an exceptional case of that kind, let the patentee come before this parliament, and if he shows that he has not derived as much profit as he should have derived from his patent, he will be sure to be given an extension by this parliament.

But I do not believe in making a general law of this kind for the sake of one or two cases. I do not know whether there are any cases just now, it may be that there are some who are anxious to have the law amended in this way, and they may have urged this matter on the Minister of Agriculture. But if there are such people, that is no reason why we should amend a general law in the direction indicated, but let these parties come before parliament and state their case, and I am sure they will get justice. With reference to this Auer light, the Minister of Finance said that after all that was no argument because he felt that they would not get an extension of time if the matter was brought into court. I am not so sure of that. The Auer light people are making large sums of money, and they would engage an eminent lawyer to start with. Now, who is going to engage the lawyer to compete with him? This lawyer would come into court and urge his arguments, and bring many witnesses to show that the prices were not exorbitant, and to show perhaps that they had not made any more than they should have made. Now, who is going to the expense of engaging an eminent lawyer to oppose this application? That is the great trouble. People generally do not combine to do these things, and that is the reason why corporations have such great power. But in a case of this kind I imagine some eminent lawyer would be engaged to go before the court and persuade the court to grant this for reasons, some of which, perhaps, might be very good reasons, and the party opposing might not be able to engage a lawyer as eminent, and we know that would make a good deal of difference. So, I do not think the argument of the Minister of Finance is very strong, or affects the question very much. I think we ought not to pass this law at all. I think that eighteen years is long enough for patents as a general rule; and, as I said before, if there is any exceptional case I am sure the applicants could get justice if they came before parliament.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Just one word to show that I entirely agree in the criticisms that have fallen from my hon. friend the member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), and from the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). It seems to me this Bill is unnecessary, and it is vicious. It is a Bill that does not look to the public interest generally, but looks to the interest of a few, and these a rich few. If I might make a suggestion to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), after the criticisms that he has heard from some such weighty quarters around his own desk. I think that the best thing he could do would be to withdraw his Bill.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I must confess that I do not know enough about the operation of the patent law or the merits of the case which has been presented here to-night, to form a very definite opinion about it; but I do know that I have had a great deal of correspondence from persons who are interested in this matter, and who have asked me to oppose the Bill which has been introduced by the Minister of Agriculture, the objection being to the exorbitant prices which are being charged, as is alleged, by the Auer Light Company. I have used these lights myself for several years, and after having used them I certainly would not like to be compelled to read by gas light without them. They have become an absolute necessity, and if the company have enjoyed the privileges and immunities which are secured to them under the patent law, I think that in view of the transition state in which the methods of artificial lighting are at the present time we ought to be very careful before we extend the privileges that the monopoly now enjoys. I understood from what the minister said in presenting the Bill for the second reading that the law in England is that the Judicial Committee have to determine whether the patentee has been inadequately remunerated for his patent, if he applies for an extension of it, before they grant it. It seems to me that if applications of that kind are to be made to the Exchequer Court of Canada the least that should be done is to make a provision that in the case of this company under consideration, or of any similar corporation seeking for an extension of their patent, counsel should be employed by the government to represent the public, and witnesses should be called, and the expense in connection with contesting the right of the patentee to an extension should be borne by him. At present, as I understand, we have an opportunity, if an extension of a patent is asked for, of hearing something of the merits or demerits of the case before parliament. But it seems to me if some provision is not made in this Bill whereby the public shall have a right to be heard, any wealthy corporation, as has been pointed out by the member for East Durham (Mr. Craig), will be able to employ the very best counsel, and all the best counsel that are available, to make the strongest possible case before the judges for an extension of their patent. What is everybody's business is nobody's business, and the public generally will not have their side of the case as strongly and as fully argued before the court as they would have a right to expect. It seems to me that the suggestion is a good one that instead of extending the life of a patent, the trend of legislation should be to reduce the time for which it is given, and if it is found that the patent is of great value to the public, some provision ought to be made in the law whereby the government should have the right to assume the patent for the whole or a portion of the unexpired time, so that by its abolition, or the abolition of the restrictions connected with it, the public generally might get the advantage that is given entirely to the patentee now.

Then again who is to determine after all whether the patentee has been sufficiently remunerated? It seems to me this legislation will have a tendency to cause the patentee not to push his business to the extent that he ought to be expected to push it, because having in view the possibility of getting a further extension of his patent for six years, he might fail to exercise the same vigilance and to expend as much energy in pushing the patent as he otherwise would. There may be reasons why legislation of this kind should be passed, but speaking of the case which has been specially mentioned here I can say that I have received several communications directing my attention to the fact that under the operation of this Bill, if it becomes law, it is possible that this Auer light, which is looked upon now as a monopoly, will be able to get an extension of its patent for a further term, and will be able to charge for that length of time prices that are considered exorbitant by those who are compelled to use that light on this side of the line. It seems to me that in view of the statements that have been made as to the cost of the mantle, which is the only part that is patented, there should be some special provision made exempting the Auer Light Company from the privilege of obtaining an extension of their patent, so that the public will be able to get the advantage of a substantial reduction in the price of these mantles as compared with what they have to pay for them now.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). I would ask the hon. minister whether, in the amendment, comparing this section with section 8 of the old law, any change is made in the relative position of patents running both in foreign countries and in Canada as to their expiry or the like of that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At the end of section 8 there is a clause which says that a Canadian patent shall expire at the same time with the expiry of the patent of the same articles in any foreign country. Foreign patents are not generally granted for so long a period as ours, and if we extend our patent as it is proposed to do under the provisions of this Bill, it is necessary that the patent should not expire at the same time the foreign patent expires, and in that way section 8 will have to be amended to conform with the other provisions of the Act. That amendment has been asked for for some years, and in the opinion of the judge of the Exchequer Court, is a very necessary amendment, as difficulties are constantly arising leading to litigation, which is very inimicable to the patent law. This is almost the only country in which that provision of our Patent Act exists, other countries having eliminated it out of their law.

Mr. FOSTER. Leaving out, then, that proviso would give the inhabitants of a foreign country a cheap right of user for a patented article which would not be enjoyed by the inhabitants of this country. As far as I remember, this has been the law ever since the Patent Act was a patent Act in Canada. I have never yet heard that there were any strong objections to that so far as the right of people to the use of a patent is concerned. It certainly does look an unfair thing that when a man patents his invention in a foreign country, say the United States, and patents it here, and the two patents are running concurrently, that, in a country like the United States, when the term of the patent has expired the people there get the benefit of the user of the patent, while the people of this country can be obliged to pay more. That is an unfair case which was brought up by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), that, in the United States, a man who wants an Auer light gets this mantle for ten cents or fifteen cents while we have to pay fifty cents. It strikes people of this country as a very great injustice. I think it is generally understood that eighteen years of the life of a patent to-day is worth more than thirty-six years of the life of a patent ten or fifteen years ago. With the tremendous rapidity of this age, with the capital and combinations of capital, with the facilities for manufacturing and the great enterprise with which capital seizes hold of every new invention which has profit in it, and the more common the article which is patented the greater the profit which is to be derived out of the manufacture of it under the patent right, a patent for eighteen years is more valuable now than one for thirty-six years at the period I have mentioned. It seems to me that all these things make a difference, so that the keeping of the usual length of time gives to the inventor, whose rights should be protected, almost double the chance that we were giving to the inventor, as far as the time limit is concerned, ten or fifteen years ago. I think there is a pretty strong case against giving a longer term than eighteen years. Eighteen years is a mighty long time. It is half of a man's lifetime, and be as generous as you like as to the reward which should be given to the inventor, you are doing far more than you did if he has eighteen years in which to utilize his invention. But, is it not a well known fact, that in nine cases out of ten it is not the man who spends his long years, who makes the invention himself, who reaps the benefit, but, for one reason or another, the product of that man's intellect passes into the hands of capitalists who never spent an hour's labour of intellect or travail of mind on the invention, but, simply by means of their capital, are enabled to work it and to work it to very great financial advantage. Whilst I want capitalists, like my hon. friend in my eye, to have a fair share of all it is worth, I think eighteen years for a patent they may get hold of, or ten, or twelve years give them a pretty fair chance of getting the full advantage out of it. I think we have had very few difficulties or complaints under the old patent law, and I think we should be pretty well certain that there is an absolute call for this change before we interfere with the present Patent Act. I do not like that feature by which you eliminate what has been the practice in Canada for all these years, that when a patent right in a foreign country goes out it also goes out here, and puts our people on an exact parity with the people of the foreign state.

Mr. ALVIN H. MOORE (Stanstead). Mr. Speaker, the objections which have been urged by previous speakers are, perhaps, all the objections that are necessary to convince the House of the impropriety of this proposed legislation. I have received a communication from parties that are interested in the Auer light. This is a foreign patent by an Austrian, owned by an American, and any extension of time given to the Auer light would be taking so much out of the people of Canada and putting into the pockets of foreigners. There comes to my mind the principles of the Liberal party while they were in opposition. They were opposed to combines and monopolies, and they accused the Conservative party of legislating in such a manner as to encourage them. When they came into power they availed themselves of the opportunity of passing an Act under which, when a combine existed which enhanced the price of anything to the consumer in this country, they had the right to take off the duty if it were an imported article, or to reduce it. They were very much elated over this invention of theirs to prevent monopolies and combines, and I think that if they had the same opinion now they could well leave this matter in the hands of the House and of the government, because it evidently is designed to encourage the combines contrary to the interests of the consumers of this country. We wish to protect our own people and our own consumers, which we would not be doing if we granted further extensions to eighteen years, when my hon. friend to my right says, that twelve years is sufficient. I appeal to the business men of this House not to place the power in the hands of the Exchequer Court to increase monopolies that are burdensome to the people of the country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). There is just one observation that I would like to make, and that is as far as the second section of the Bill is concerned. It proposes that instead of the patentee, or assignee, of the patent coming to parliament after his patent has expired, or is about to expire, and asking for a special Act to extend it, before such an extension can take place, there shall be a judicial inquiry into the matter, and I ask hon. members of the House whether it would be better to have a haphazard vote in the House or to adopt the English practice and have the application judicially determined upon. It would appear to me that this would be the more reasonable course to take in the interest of the public. The patentee who applies for the extension of his patent cannot hope for success unless he is enabled to satisfy the court to which the case will be referred, the judge of the Exchequer Court, that he has a thoroughly good case, and that for some reason or other, although he has had his patent for twelve or eighteen years, the circumstances have been against his deriving any material benefit from it. If he proves sufficient facts to the court to satisfy the judge that he has not been able to get any advantage from the patent, the court makes a report of the facts and the government may act. That is the English way of proceeding. That is the method which has been in vogue in Great Britain for thirty-six years, and I have never heard the suggestion made on the part of any person in England that the law should be repealed.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the government to adjudge finally?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Act merely says that upon the report of the judge the government may then act. The judge reports the facts, and that in his opinion the circumstances justify the extension, and then the government may act. To-day we find ourselves confronted with numerous applications for the extensions of these patents.

Mr. FOSTER. Not many.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On one ground or another we passed two or three Bills this year and two are pending. Is it not better to trust to a judicial report upon facts than to trust to the perhaps hasty decision of the Private Bills Committee, where there may be eight or ten men and where very rarely evidence on oath is taken.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there not this advantage, so far as the public are concerned, in the present method: That when these applications for Bills are made to parliament, the constituents of a member have an opportunity of writing and placing before him the facts as to why or why not the patent should be extended. How is that information going to be communicated under this Bill?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The very best way to do that is before a court. The Bill provides that the application for an extension shall be advertised three months before, and any person may enter a caveat, and he will be entitled to be heard. Ample notice is given by public advertisement and they can go before an exchequer court and be heard. It does appear to me that every precaution is taken to ensure that the public interest shall be looked after. I am pointing out the distinction between the present procedure where a Bill has to be passed through this House, and the procedure provided for under this law. The course set forth in the Bill is the one that commends itself to me. If we had a Judicial Committee to sit as a court and take evidence well and good, but every hon. gentleman knows as a matter of fact that it is not so in this House.

Mr. CLARKE. I believe that the persons applying for an extension of a patent will be in a much more advantageous position before a court than before a committee of parliament. The machinery provided in this Bill is that any person may write an objection to the government, but he will be in a much worse position than now, because he will have to attend before the Exchequer Court at his own expense.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). I must dissent from the view of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). A patent is given for the purpose of protecting, for a certain number of years, the inventive genius of the man who devises something that may be useful to the public. Eighteen years is a very long period to protect any invention, and it occurs to me that if you extend that period, then instead of giving a protection, you will be giving a monopoly that will prevent further inventions to develop the thing already patented. If a man enjoys his patent for eighteen years, why should the person who objects to the extension be under the necessity of putting in a caveat and opposing the extension at his own expense. Parliament has provided in its wisdom that eighteen years should be the period, and in my opinion it is long enough. I cannot agree with the minister that the applicant had better apply to a judge than to this parliament, because here you have the highest court in the land, and my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies), who so well represents the government in the Private Bills Committee knows that there have been very few applications of this nature, and that the law as it stands has not been fraught with any disadvantages. When the Conservative government was in power I represented the government on that committee, and during a period of many years I can hardly call to mind more than two or three applications for extensions of patents. That proves that the law as it stands to-day provides quite a long enough period for the patentée to bring his invention to a successful issue. If you are going to allow these extensions to be obtained by application to a court, or by any other means outside of parliament, I think you will be opening the door to so many applications for extensions, that it will be almost impossible to control them. My hon. friend has given the only reason that I have heard in favour of an extension, and I believe it is the reason given in the case of the Bill now before the Private Bills Committee. My hon. friend has said that the patentee may not have succeeded, during the period of eighteen years, in working out his problem, or in making it remunerative. But if he has found it impossible during eighteen years to convince the public that his invention is a good thing, an extension would be keeping out of the field competitors who might, and probably would, succeed in bringing before the public other inventions which would be very much more useful.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Suppose he had only succeeded in inducing the public to believe in his invention in the last year or two of the eighteen years, and suppose he was able to show that he had not really made any profits out of the patent for twelve or fourteen years, but that on the contrary, it had lain fallow, that nobody had taken it up, and that only during two or three years had he derived any profits from it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend has given exactly the reason why the matter should not go before a court of justice. Parliament has granted that man a patent, which has remained idle for fifteen or sixteen years out of the eighteen years, and if the man comes before the Committee on Private Bills, that committee will understand his case far better than a judge would. I think you are introducing an element into our legislation which, instead of being useful, will be very detrimental in more ways than one. I believe it is a mistake to saddle the judiciary with questions which really do not appertain to the bench. This is a question which properly comes before parliament. Patents are connected more intimately with business than with law, and commercial and industrial men understand these questions far better than any judge on the bench. My hon. friend says that we very seldom examine witnesses under oath in our committees; but what is to prevent us examining witnesses if we require evidence? We have the power, and it is for us to decide whether we shall call witnesses or not; and if we do not call them, it is simply because we are convinced of the goodness or badness of a cause, without examining witnesses at all. I believe it would be a great mistake to introduce that amendment into the law. I think the law as we have it is a very good law, and should not be interfered with.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). It seems to me to be always a doubtful thing to consider the extension of a patent under any circumstances whatever. The moment you commence to extend one man's patent, you open the door to every other man to come and urge the same thing in his case. A man gets a patent in Canada for eighteen years. This gives him protection for that length of time; on the sole ground that the invention shall become the property of the people at the end of the eighteen years. If we accept it as a reason for extending the patent that the owner of the patent has not made any profit on it, I know of no enterprise that could not come to parliament and ask for an extension on the same ground. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated that some one might protest. I would like to know who is likely to protest? This is the business of the people. It is the parliament of Canada and not the courts who are to protect the people. It is the business of parliament to see that no such extension is made—why? Because it would be an invasion of the rights of the people. I have no hesitation in saying that the fact that a man's patent has not paid him, is no ground for granting him an extension. It may be said that this has been done in England; but we are not bound to adopt it for that reason, if it is a bad thing. Parliament and the courts cannot undertake to take care of men's failures. It is not the business of this parliament to relegate to the courts the question whether a man has been successful or unsuccessful.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But I put this to my hon. friend: If you do not go against extensions altogether, is it not better to refer the facts on which extensions should be granted to the courts, rather than to the haphazard decision of one of our committees?

Mr. CLANCY. The question in this case, is not whether it is in the public interest or not, but whether the man has profited by his patent or not—an entirely different question. The courts should not be called upon to consider whether a man has been successful or not. That is the only question involved in this case, and I say that parliament should protect the people, and has no right to consider that question. I could understand the justice of extending a patent in a case when, owing to some oversight, the life of the patent had been cut short, but when the owner of a patent has enjoyed it to the full extent of the eighteen years, it is absurd to give power to refer an application for an extension of that life to the court.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Has the hon. gentleman read subsection 4 of section 2:

4. The court shall, in considering the petition, have regard to the nature and the merits of the invention, in relation to the public, to the benefits conferred on the public by such invention, to the profits made by the petitioner, and to all the circumstances of the case.

Mr. CLANCY. The moment you relegate such cases to the court you deprive a poor man of this remedy. The poor man cannot go to the court, because it is too expensive. It is only the wealthy men and corporations, the wealthy monopolists, who will benefit by this. It is no ground for an extension of time, that the patentee has not made money out of his invention. A man who had leased a piece of land and paid a certain rent, and made no money out of it, might as well come to this parliament and ask to have an Act passed extending his lease.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Is it not a fact that a large element of the people of this country are opposed to having their grievances submitted to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council solely because it entails too heavy expenses? But in this Act we are providing precisely for something on the same line. The evidence has to be produced before the Exchequer Court, and that court reports. But supposing that court reports in favour of the extension of the patent, and the Governor in Council should nevertheless refuse to grant it, what would happen?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They would not get the extension.

Mr. INGRAM. Then what was the use of sending them before the court. If the Governor in Council is not going to adopt the recommendation of the court, why put the parties to the expense of going to the court at all? This measure will entail very heavy expense on any one who wants to proceed against any corporation owning a patent right. It would be much better that parties desiring an extension of time should apply to the representatives of the people. Let them come before the Private Bills Committee and in that committee state their case, and I have failed to find any case in which that committee has done injustice to any one seeking an extension of the life of a patent.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I regret, when I explained the provisions of this measure, on moving the second reading, that so many of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken were not present, and consequently failed to catch the explanations I then gave. I would like, in the first place, to say a word in reply to the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). He spoke about the expiry of a foreign patent. At present our patents are given for eighteen years, but most foreign patents are given for periods varying from fourteen to seventeen. The result is that Canadian patentees get their patents in Canada before taking them out in foreign countries, and the foregoing patents generally expire about the same time as the Canadian. At the same time there has arisen, in consequence of the expiry of foreign patents, owned by foreigners, who sold to Canadians their patent rights taken out in Canada, a great deal of litigation, and in many instances great injustice was done to the people in Canada who purchased patents obtained in Canada by foreign inventors, without knowing when the foreign patents would expire. Some of the foreign countries give very short terms of patents, and a foreign patentee may obtain a patent in Canada for an invention which has been also patented in one of the foreign countries which gives short terms. He then enters into a bargain with the Canadian and sells his patent right in Canada. The Canadian is very often deceived with regard to the right of the foreign patent, and the result is that the Canadian purchaser suffers a great injustice.

Mr. CLANCY. Has he not a means of learning the life of a patent before investing his money?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He may have, but at the same time it is frequently very difficult, and the vendor may frequently omit to give the purchaser a full list of the foreign patents which cover the invention.

Mr. CLANCY. He is not dependent on him.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He would have to examine the records of all countries where patents are issued, a very difficult and expensive operation, one which, I grant, is quite within his powers, but still, a difficult thing for him to do. And the result has been, in actual experience, that it is not done; and I have been appealed to by the judge of the Exchequer Court, in consequence of the difficulties, to amend that section and eliminate or make clear the condition that the Canadian patent shall expire on the expiry of the foreign patent on the same article. It is reasonable that that provision should be repealed. It was expunged from the United States patent law in 1898, as it has been from the patent law of England, France and Germany. So far as I know, Canada is the only country in which patents expire on the expiry of the patent on the same article in a foreign country. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) explained the necessity for the patent expiring here when the foreign patent expired, on the ground that it would not be fair for the Canadian people using a patented article to be obliged to pay the price for a patented article, while in other countries it sold at a lower price. But, if you follow that out logically, you reach the conclusion that an article should not be patented in Canada unless it is patented everywhere else. Suppose an article to be patented here and not patented in the United States, the Americans have the benefit of the free use of it, while we must pay the price for a patented article.

Mr. CLANCY. But, the inventor can protect himself by getting the article patented elsewhere.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But he may not have done so, and, under the present law, that does not invalidate his patent in Canada. While the patent law is generally considered to be a law of monopoly, it is not fairly to be considered such. The law is for the purpose of encouraging invention by protecting the inventor in the enjoyment of the benefits of the product of his genius. It is well known that in the United States and in Canada, where patents are more easily procurable than they are in many foreign countries, the effect has been to stimulate inventions to such an extent that these countries are the homes of a larger number of inventions than others. We must not forget the aim, the avowed intention of the legislature in making patent laws, and that a great many of the most beneficial inventions of modern days would not have existed, nor would the enormous industrial progress which is the particular sign of the age in which we live have been made but for these laws.

Mr. CLANCY. But the extension of patents defeats the very object for which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) is arguing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not under the conditions imposed by this Act. The object of the Bill is simply to extend patents where the inventors are able to show that they have not reaped adequate advantages from their patents.

Mr. CLARKE. When does the Austrian patent of the Auer light expire?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say. While the Auer light seems to fill the mind of most hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this Bill, it has nothing to do with this Bill. Many of my correspondents seem to imagine that it is a Bill to extend the Auer light patent. As a matter of fact, the Bill is brought forward in consequence of various applications that have been made for the benefit of the law of this kind, of the fact that my intention has been drawn to the existence of similar provisions in the English Patent law, and of the fact that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) introduced into this House for the purpose of giving one individual company the privilege which, under this Bill, will be given to the public generally, under definite conditions and with well-considered rules of procedure. I believe that, under certain circumstances, it is right that an extension of patents should be granted, but, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) has just explained, the present law has this effect—that individuals who are able to secure the passage of an Act through parliament are able to secure this privilege and its consequent benefits, but those who are not able to do so cannot secure the same concessions. I believe it is better that parliament should pass a general law, a law which will safeguard the public interest, which provides rules of procedure just and fair to both sides, rather than to go on as we have been doing dealing with these matters in the Committee of Private Bills. Sometimes they have to be dealt with with few members of the committee present. With certain members of the committee who are desirous of putting through a certain Bill present, that Bill will go through, while, with other members present, such a Bill might be rejected. In fact, we are now dealing with these matters in an uncertain, unfair and hap-hazard manner, while under this Bill the procedure will be regular and similar in every case, and the judgment will be the judgment of a court dealing with the matter in a judicial spirit, and recommending to the Governor in Council the action that ought to be taken.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) allow me to ask him a question? Does he think it a sound principle that either the courts, under powers relegated by parliament, or parliament itself, should prepare to consider such questions, or that these cases should be treated as the rare exceptions?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it better that they should be referred to a court such as I have described. And to prove the reasonableness of my position, I refer to the present patent law, which provides that the Commissioner of Patents when he exercises his judicial functions, may refer to the Exchequer Court any questions in regard to the expiry of patents under section 37 of the Act. The reference of the matter to the Exchequer Court is merely an extension of principles already embodied in the Patent Act. It is for that reason that the Exchequer Court was chosen for the reference of these questions.

Mr. CRAIG. How many applications for extensions of patents have been made during the present parliament?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Only one, I believe. But, I have had two applications asking that it should be done during this very session, and the question has been discussed by patent solicitors and others interested in the working of the patent law for a year or two back.

But there were one or two other points I wish to touch upon. I may say that the question of the Auer light seems to be misunderstood by members who have spoken of it here. If the patented article which is sold in the United States is exactly the same as the patented article sold in Canada, the patent in the United States cannot have expired. It must be sold in the United States under the United States patent, because if the United States patent for the Auer light has expired the Canadian patent for the Auer light must have expired also under the present patent law. I have not studied this Auer light question, that has not been before me in my discussion of this question at all; I simply take the statements that have been made here this evening. But if the Auer light patent in the United States as sold there is identical with the Auer light mantle and burner as sold in Canada, either one of two things must be the case: The Auer light patent in the United States has not expired, or else the Auer light patent in Canada would have died a natural death in consequence of the expiry of the United States patent; because under our present law a patent expires in Canada at the same time it expires in a foreign country, if the article is the same. But, I believe the fact is that in the United States the Auer light company are manufacturing under their patent an article on a large scale, and perhaps are manufacturing it in competition with other things of a similar character, and therefore sell it more cheaply than they do in the smaller market of Canada. I have no other explanation of the fact. But, I know that if their patent is identically the same in the United States as it is here, it has not yet expired in the United States. Therefore you see that the question of price in regard to the Auer light is not a question of a patent monopoly, but must be controlled by something else than a patent monopoly; and if they are selling an article under greater control in Canada than in the United States, it must be a control by something else than their patent monopoly. Now having dealt with the various points that have been brought up, and having tried to explain some of the reasons for the introduction of this Bill in the earlier part of the evening, I now beg to move that the Bill be read the second time, and that it be referred to a select committee who will take into consideration the various suggestions that have been made and report to the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I move to refer this Bill to a select committee composed of Messrs. Borden (Halifax) Casgrain, Clarke, Fielding, Fraser, (Guysborough), Gibson, Russell and the mover, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Dorchester Penitentiary $53,600

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) We were not through with the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. What we wanted was the details with reference to the $18,000 which was spent on that commission.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The amount really expended in connection with that commission appointed to investigate the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary was $17,208.63. The payments are: James Noxon, commissioner, 252 days, and $643.58 for disbursements; O. K. Fraser, 241 days, and for disbursements, $591.11; Mr. Lafortune, 234 days, and for disbursements, $39.75. Clerical assistance and other expenses, $8,664.19, making a total of $17,208.63.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Solicitor General give us an idea of what those other expenses were?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There were expenses connected with bringing witnesses before the commission, there were two secretaries, and it was necessary of course to have a stenographer to report the evidence. The secretaries got $6.50 a day. I apprehend the limit of their employment would be the 252 days which appear to be the number of days Mr. Noxon was employed.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FOSTER. What record has the Solicitor General as to the number of meetings?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is to be inferred from the report made by the commissioner. On the first page of the report it will be found that the sittings began on April 19, 1897, and continued to August 24, in the same year. There was then an adjournment at the request of the warden, who wanted time to explain certain charges made against him. The commission resumed on the 22nd, and sat until September 30. Then, there was another adjournment to October 25, when the commission resumed and sat until October 29. There was an adjournment to November 12, when the commission resumed and sat until November 20. There was an adjournment to December 4, when the commission resumed, and sat until December 7.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The number of hours they sat each day?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give that from the report, but the report of the Minister of Justice for 1898, page 221, says that the adjournment took place from the middle of August to the month of September for the purpose of enabling evidence in his defence to be produced by the warden.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not giving us any idea as to the number of hours they sat each day.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I presume the number would be ten hours a day.

Mr. CLARKE. Who were the stenographers employed—the Hansard staff?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, I think Mr. Duggan was one of the stenographers. But, in the meantime, I will get the names.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who were the secretaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inspector informs me that the Auditor General's Report will show in detail how this amount was expended which is mentioned, $8,864.19, for clerical assistance and other expenses. That is the report for 1897-8.

Mr. CLARKE. Were the stenographers members of the Hansard staff?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is my impression. There were two stenographers, one English and the other French. I am almost absolutely certain that the English stenographer was a member of the Hansard staff. I think that has been the rule followed, as far as I am concerned, in connection with all these investigations.

Mr. FOSTER. The Solicitor General does not propose to say that every day these men met they spent ten hours at their work?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not mean to say that, but I assume that they could not possibly have given less than eight hours a day, and charge $10 a day for their work. That is the least they possibly could have given.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the least they should have given. What is the evidence upon which the Solicitor General bases his conclusion that they sat ten hours a day?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I base that conclusion on the assumption that it would be the part of honesty to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Solicitor General has no better evidence than that he might as well keep his mouth shut.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have just to give the evidence that I have got.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the duty of the Solicitor General to have the information here for the House. He has had plenty of time to get it, and he is not going to carry on in the same way that he did last night, and get his estimates through. When he is asked a question he is not to turn his back on the question and say that is the way he deals with such cases. He is to give the information. He has had fair notice that he would be required to give us some idea based upon facts as to how many hours these men sat. The statement is that the commission met, spent an hour, adjourned, and charged $10. If so, that was not an honest thing to do.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not understand that any one made the statement that these gentlemen met for an hour and charged for a full day's work.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that is the statement.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If that is the case, if they have acted in that manner, then I say that they have not dealt honestly with the government. No one could pretend that under those circumstances they have. I did not understand that I was asked to state to the House how many hours these gentlemen sat each day. In so far as the records of the department go they do not give such information, and the only way to obtain that information would be to apply to the commissioners themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. Was no record kept? You had two secretaries and paid them $6.50 a day to keep a record of the proceedings. Do you mean to say that the hour at which this commission met and adjourned was not noted in the minutes, and have not these minutes been forwarded to the department?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The minutes were not kept in the manner suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). It is not to my knowledge that any such minutes will be found in connection with any investigation that I have found to have taken place in connection with the Department of Justice. The return upon which we have to rely is the report made by the commissioners. I know no other minutes than the report.

Mr. FOSTER. The minutes and proceedings have not been reported to the Department of Justice?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. You came before the House and asked for an amount to investigate St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. You insisted upon $6,000 or $7,000 at the very outset. You go on and you appoint a commission to do work that the highly paid officers of your department might as well have done, and you allow them to go their own way. Then, you come down and ask this House for $18,000. There is not a man in this House who will attempt to get up and justify that expenditure with the results you have got out of the investigation. I am quite sure the Solicitor General will not attempt to do it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We are not asking for that vote now.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have got the money.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have the money, and the money has been disposed of. I am asked to explain transactions that occurred in 1897, and because I cannot give detailed information I am reproached. I am willing to apply to the commissioners and ask them by telegraph, each one, to say how many hours they sat each day. I cannot do better than that, because I have not the minutes, and there are none that I know of.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a strange thing that you have commissioners doing this work, paying them by the day, expecting them to do the work in a businesslike way, with two secretaries who are to attend upon these commissioners, and that you have no minutes of the proceedings.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the fact.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it is a fact that does not reflect very much credit on the Department of Justice. Whether the Solicitor General is responsible for it or some one else, I do not know. I think this is an enormous expenditure for what has been accomplished, and it is only one of many instances of the lavish and useless expenditures of this government to appoint commissions largely for the sake of giving fat fees to their friends.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The condition of things that existed in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, and which was tolerated for years, certainly was a disgrace to this whole country. For instance, at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, with the knowledge of the government, or, at all events, with the knowledge of the officials, it was proved that a quantity of stone to the value of $65,662.52 was paid for and not one inch of it can ever be traced as having entered into possession of the government. It was proved, for instance, that flour was bought in 1889 and paid for at the rate of $8.75 per barrel, when at the same time flour was selling in Montreal for $4.89 per barrel.

Mr. FOSTER. That is in the report of the commission?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. PRIOR. At what page is that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is the report of the Minister of Justice for the year ending June, 1898. There is, in addition, the report of the commission. At page 223 of the report of the Minister of Justice will be found the reference to the flour, and the reference to the stone will be found at page 224. I will read exactly what they said:

The prices paid for goods purchased by public tender are invariably higher than similar goods could be purchased by large private consumers in the open market. In some instances the price paid for goods purchased by public tender, notably in the case of flour at $8.75 per barrel in 1889, is so greatly in excess of the market value which in Montreal averaged $4.89 per barrel for the year, as to indicate wilful disregard of the public interest in awarding the contract. It is also shown that provisions and other goods, the property of the penitentiary, were in some cases given away to the officers, and in other cases sold to officers, not only of the penitentiary but to the ex-inspector of penitentiaries, at prices less than was being paid by the institutions for similar goods. The practice has likewise been permitted of allowing officials to sell supplies to the institution using the name of others to conceal the transactions, and on one occasion the warden had been a serious offender in this respect.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that refer to the same quality of flour?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There would be no value to the statement by the commissioners unless it did.

Mr. FOSTER. That is true, but it is unfortunate they did not mention that. Now, the idea is to justify the expenditure of $18,000 on this commission by reciting that there were irregularities, one of which was that flour was paid for by contract higher than it could be bought for at the current market prices. In the name of goodness what are your inspectors and accountants of penitentiaries for if they are not capable of going to the books of the institution and finding out that such prices have been paid, and that they were above the market prices. Why get three ten-dollar men for 152 days hunting up facts like that. As for the stone, any intelligent inspector keeping himself en courant with the affairs of the institution ought to know that.

Mr. FOSTER.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I should say that the present inspector of penitentiaries is not responsible for this condition of things.

Mr. FOSTER. I quite understand that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I want to speak as to the present inspector. He is certainly not responsible for that. I would not like the impression to prevail for a moment that the present inspector is responsible for the condition of things to which I refer.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend said that the officers should have discovered these things and reported them. Let me say that as far back as 1882 an investigation was held by Messrs. Tache and Miall for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of things in that penitentiary, and they made a report charging a man named Daignault with conduct so gross that it practically amounted to larceny. This man was dismissed as storekeeper but he was taken back immediately as head of the public works. That is what investigation resulted in in these days.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the Solicitor General deduce from that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That the investigations then were held by apparently competent men, but as I say had no result.

Mr. FOSTER. And if the fact as stated be correct, it simply proves that it was the fault of some one who had the appointing power. Surely the government in 1897, does not propose to say that it would follow out the plan of dismissing an officer for an offence and then put him in another place. That argument of the hon. gentleman is simply against the government of the day. When was the present inspector of penitentiaries appointed?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In 1885.

Mr. FOSTER. He was the officer when my hon. friend went into office, and the hon. gentleman will not say that it was not possible to have sent the inspector down there and with a proper staff have him find out these things and correct the abuses.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inspector, with the ordinary duties he was obliged to perform from Dorchester to Westminster, could not give time to this investigation, and further, there was a natural hesitation and reluctance on his part to investigate those who had gone before him, unless it was made absolutely necessary by the head of the department he should do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Reluctance of a man to undertake the work is not quite a reason, why, if he is paid for the work and has the capacity he should not do it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There was the question of want of time.

Mr. FOSTER. But these commissioners took a much longer time than the Solicitor General thought they would, and after the inspector had done his duty at Westminster and Dorchester he could have gone to St. Vincent de Paul. Or, if that were impossible, any honest, square man could have found out everything at the cost of a couple of thousand dollars.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman, I think, minimizes the difficulties of the position. If he has the leisure to read the report he will find that there was an absolute conspiracy at the penitentiary to prevent the commissioners arriving at any result. For instance, it was discovered that where the officials of the penitentiary desired to purchase a piece of land they made an offer and it was not carried out. The property was valued at $3,000, another person bought it for $6,000, and inside of twelve months it was sold for $18,000 to the penitentiary. The investigation showed that the discipline of that penitentiary was such that we had two revolts there within two years.

Mr. FOSTER. It was bad enough, I have not the least doubt. Now, will the hon. gentleman tell us what was done with the perpetrators of the stone and cement business?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was impossible to reach the particular individual. Many years had elapsed. But those who were in charge at the penitentiary, and who could be held in any manner responsible either for the laxity of discipline or for any of these irregular transactions, were dismissed.

Mr. FOSTER. They could not have been very grave abuses, or the government did not do its duty.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was ascertained that the government paid $107,796.25 for 539,435 feet of stone, and that only 215,448 feet, worth $42,000, could be accounted for.

Mr. FOSTER. Did this commission find out where the rest went?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They could not find it out. There was absolutely no record to show how anything had been done at that penitentiary. The explanation given was that the stone had been supplied, but had been wasted by the convicts and prevented being utilized. If the facts are as stated, that explanation, of course, cannot stand for a moment. With respect to the cement for the same work, that is, the wall, it was ascertained that 1,367 barrels were paid for by the Department of Public Works, and only about 650 barrels were accounted for. If these are facts, as I have no doubt they are, even if you look at the evidence given by Warden Ouimet and other officials, there was clearly some justification for this investigation. Then, there were two revolts in the space of a few years, in one of which one of the officials was killed and the warden severely injured; and in the Senate an attack was made on the Department of Justice by Senator Bellerose, who said that this revolt had been fomented and brought about by one of the officials at the time, Mr. Ouimet, who was afterwards made warden.

Mr. FOSTER. After all the expense of this commission, they have not been able to apportion the blame and allot the penalty.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They have apportioned the blame, but they have not gone beyond that. It is a question for every one to consider whether, after all these facts, other steps should not have been taken.

Mr. FOSTER. We have spent a lot of money, we have found that there was blameworthy work, we have found out the persons who were blameworthy, and we have stopped short of punishing them.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). Admitting, perhaps, the necessity of a commission of inquiry, I think all must admit that the commission was unduly prolonged. There was one thing to which the hon. gentleman made reference that was not a matter for the commission to report on. They reported that $8.75 per barrel was paid for flour at St. Vincent de Paul in 1889. That was no new matter at all, because it was in the Auditor General's Report. At the same time, at the Dorchester penitentiary, flour was bought for $5.50 per barrel. I have no doubt there was a wrong; but these things are so palpable that it is not necessary to have a commission to sit for four years to find them out. I do not say that there was not wrong-doing which ought to have been ferretted out and punished; but hon. gentlemen have not even adopted the report of the commission. Many of the suggestions made in the report of the Kingston penitentiary commission were entirely disregarded. I am not going to say whether the government were wise in that or not; but it casts a degree of discredit on the commission; either the government or the commission was wrong. After a commission has made a report, to say that a great part of it is utterly useless is, I think, a pretty strong case that a great deal of time was spent for nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Solicitor General say whether any improved methods have been adopted in that institution to avoid in future the evils which the commission brought out? I think that is really an important point, and on that we have had no information as yet.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A number of the officials have been removed, and the methods which have heretofore been pursued at St. Vincent de Paul have been changed, and a more careful supervision is now exercised over the penitentiary by the inspector. The result is that there is certainly a great improvement in the discipline. There is no more trading of employees with convicts such as formerly prevailed.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the contract system followed in all these penitentiaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Absolutely. The result has been that last year, for instance, we bought goods at the different penitentiaries at prices far below the market rates which have prevailed ever since. Notwithstanding the fact that this system of purchasing supplies by contract appears to have been in existence some time previous to the coming into office of the present government, that system did not obtain at St. Vincent de Paul. It appears to have been practically impossible to have it carried out there. According to the report of the commission, although tenders were called for and the lowest tender was initialled for certain classes of goods by the Minister of Justice, the contract was given to the highest tenderer.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman been able to reduce the cost of maintenance of the prisoners generally in all the prisons?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inspector informs me that they have succeeded in reducing the cost to some extent, notwithstanding the increase in the price of articles used in the penitentiary. They have reduced the cost of maintenance, by obtaining more advantageous terms in the purchase of supplies.

Mr. FOSTER. How many grades of prisoners are there now?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no difference in so far as the grading of the convicts are concerned. They have done away with that system.

Mr. CLANCY. I observe in the Auditor General's Report, giving the per capita cost for Kingston, that it is probably the highest that has ever been. In 1887-8, the cost was 56 cents; in 1897-8, it was 68 cents, and in 1898-9, it was 78 cents.

Mr. CLANCY.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a local reason which applies to Kingston penitentiary. When estimating the per capita cost, they take into account everything purchased, including the binder twine, and there has been a considerable increase in the cost of the latter. The fairer way would be to take the average cost throughout all the penitentiaries. In 1895-6 it was 61 cents; in 1896-7 it was 70 cents; and in 1898-9, it was 53 cents.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will remember that Mr. Hughes gave evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. He said that after keeping a very careful account of the binder twine business, and after charging for depreciation of machinery and so on, there was $5,000 to the credit of the binder twine business last year.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is not possible.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend was present when Mr. Hughes gave the evidence. It may, or may not have been true.

Mr. TAYLOR. Might I inquire from the hon. the Solicitor General, the names of the two secretaries at St. Vincent de Paul?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. Ellbeck, was the English secretary, and Mr. Errol Bouchette, was the French secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the cost of the Dorchester Commission?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There was but one commissioner, Mr. E. M. Bill. He charged 140 days, and he was allowed $15 per day, making $2,100. He made a charge for disbursement, which was allowed, amounting to $632.18. He charged for secretary and other expenses, $1,475.05, making a total of $4,207.23.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was Mr. Bill?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He was a barrister and a judge of probate in one of the counties of Nova Scotia.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He made a report which will bear favourable comparison with any of the others. He succeeded in showing that he made an examination for the purpose of ascertaining the truth with reference to the charges against the wardens.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the changes?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are on the first page of his report. The first charge is the usual political charge.

Mr. FOSTER. Unusual—it is a new crime that has been made under Liberalism.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That may be. The second charge was:

The said warden is charged with using his position as warden for his own private gain and advantage by availing himself of convict labour without accounting therefor, and also of the guards, trade instructors and others under his jurisdiction as warden of the penitentiary.

That charge is proved. Then, there is the charge :

That the said warden has appropriated to his own use and benefit property belonging to the institution without paying therefor; that a farm called 'Willow Farm,' owned by him, has been worked by guards and prisoners without a full and accurate account of such work being rendered to the department; that stock belonging to his farm has been fed free of charge at the government farm, which farm is held in connection with the penitentiary; that all sorts of swaps and exchanges have been made between the warden and the government farmer at the penitentiary, of the warden's cattle, horses, machinery, &c., for those that were the property of the government.

The result of the finding on that, as I read it, is that, so far as appropriating government property to his own benefit is concerned, there is no absolute proof. But, the relations of the penitentiary to 'Willow Farm' were evidently of a character not to be encouraged. The warden was virtually the contractor with reference to the supplies from Willow Farm. As to the charge respecting the feeding of stock, I think that was fairly established, though the warden makes a counter claim for supplies that he says he supplied the penitentiary. He virtually says: While I was feeding your stock at 'Willow Farm,' you were feeding mine at the penitentiary. The balance of evidence goes to show that if his stock got into bad condition he would send them up to the government farm, where they would be looked after, while he would take the well-fed government cattle down to 'Willow Farm.' I think that charge is fairly well made out. There were a lot of charges of the same general character.

Mr. CLANCY. I see that Mr. Bill is credited with 140 days at $15 a day. This appears at page 1-42 of the Auditor General's Report. He also has board and laundry, and a parlour—which costs $64—making a total, exclusive of his salary, of $239.69. Is Dorchester a large place ?

Mr. FOSTER. You could go through the whole of Dorchester penitentiary and trace the history of every man in it, back to his great grandfather, in thirty days.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) say what other cases there were that practically six months were occupied ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There were fifteen charges made against the warden.

Mr. CLANCY. How many of them were made out ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The fourth charge was :

That the warden built barns for himself out of the materials which belonged to the government, and that the convict labour for which no value was returned or payment on account of the same was made by him was supplied at his instance.

And so on. So far as the material is concerned, I do not consider that that was made out. But, it appears quite clear that convict labour was used to build barns, for which no account was rendered.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the amount involved ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give the figures accurately. But, the amount is indicated by the fact that before the investigation began the warden attempted to explain how this convict labour was given and made up an account of $340.

Mr. FOSTER. When did Mr. Bill commence his work ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It appears by the Auditor General's Report that he began on December 12, 1897, and ended on June 29, 1898.

Mr. FOSTER. Was he at Dorchester all that time ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would appear by the Auditor General's Report that he was at Dorchester during 100 days, as he charges for board during that time.

Mr. FOSTER. What check was there on Mr. Bill's time ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The account was sent in to the department of justice certified by Mr. Bill and handed over to the Auditor General. I presume the Auditor General would take such steps as were necessary to ascertain whether the account was correct or not.

Mr. FOSTER. What seems strange is that a man should occupy nearly half a year of working days to investigate a report on charges against the warden. For, as I understand it, there was no investigation into the discipline or management of the penitentiary.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a reference at page 40 of the report to the general management, and at page 41 there are recommendations with regard to the reduction of the staff. I gather that there must have been some investigation into the general management to justify a reference to that subject.

Mr. FOSTER. How did the political charge turn out ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are two pages with reference to that. That seems to be summed up in the fact that he sent one of the rigs of the penitentiary to drive a man from the penitentiary up to a political meeting. In addition, there are two of the guards who say that on one occasion the warden sent for them, had some conversation as to how they were to vote. But the warden denies that.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems too bad that a man like that should be allowed to walk about this green earth. How many witnesses were examined?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot tell that at the moment, it does not seem to be in the commissioner's report. But, of course, he returned the evidence with his report, and, of course, the number of witnesses and their names could be ascertained.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Solicitor General please ascertain that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the warden of the penitentiary now?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. J. A. Kirk.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is he from?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He was formerly member for Guysborough.

Mr. FOSTER. He has come to his reward at last, has he? That is a case of final perseverance. It is not many years ago when he and some others were around these corridors, and I do not think that the objurgations of Mr. Kirk were at all gentle with reference to the conduct of the Liberal party as regards their recognition of the merits of an old servant. But better times seem to have come for these wanderers in the desert, and old Liberals at last have been getting a little of their due. And so Mr. Kirk has been translated to Dorchester, not inside the penitentiary but on top of it. What salary does he get?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, he is a good man. I do not know whether he knew anything about prison work. But what was the age of Mr. Kirk when he was appointed?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Supposed to be about 54.

Mr. CLANCY. Does Mr. Kirk not know his own age?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think he has ever been asked. The inspector informs me that it is not customary, when the individual is known to the department, to ask for his age.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not an advantage to put into offices like that men who have comparative youth on their side, so that, unaccustomed as they are to that kind of work, you have the advantage of their riper years after they have become more adept in the work. It would seem as if there ought to be some system by which the officers should be graded up into higher departments of that work, which is a very responsible work, and requires skilful men. This, of course, was merely a political appointment.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They have all been, unfortunately. The inspector informs me that the grading up applies to subordinate officers, but when it comes to higher officers they have been political.

Mr. FOSTER. That is so, I am sorry to say, but I think age should be considered.

Mr. CLANCY. Who formulated these charges?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say. Certain specific charges were made against the warden, and the department assumed the responsibility, on proper evidence, of stating these charges for investigation.

Mr. CLANCY. Have the following charges been made good?

1. The warden, John B. Forster, has been charged with subordinating his position to the furtherance of the interests of the Conservative party in both federal and provincial politics by warning certain guards or other officers that were suspected of being Liberals against voting on that side under pain of being dismissed from the penitentiary service; that certain trade instructors were likewise threatened; that in all transactions of buying and selling in connection with the institution he favoured unduly, and to the prejudice of the public interest, tradesmen of the Conservative party to the exclusion of tradesmen of the Liberal party; and that since the accession to power of the present government he has caused the dismissal from office of those to whom he was politically opposed.

Now, was the charge sustained that he had bought from Conservatives in preference to Liberals?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Was it investigated?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It must have been, because the commissioner finds that it was not substantiated.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would not have been a very high crime.

Mr. CLANCY. The man who made the charge considered it a sufficiently high crime to cost him his position.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not the man who charged it, it was the government that took the responsibility of making that charge so the Solicitor General says.

Mr. CLANCY. I was asking my hon. friend if it is a crime in the Liberal party or in Mr. Kirk to give the preference to Liberal tradesmen?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand that the principle now adopted is to buy by tender, and no matter who happens to be the lowest tenderer, he gets it. That is the rule that is followed out.

Mr. CLANCY. I ask if the Liberal party have laid it down as a policy that it is a crime to purchase from the Liberal party or to give them the preference in buying in open market?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The word 'unduly' there governs. We had to pass an Act to strike that out of another statute.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to ask the hon. gentleman how it came that Mr. Bill charges 160 days in Dorchester for board, while he puts in 140 days for which he receives $15 a day?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The only explanation that occurs to me is that he would naturally make his charge simply for the working days, and of course he would be entitled to his board on Sundays when he would be in Dorchester.

Mr. CLANCY. Then he charges for trips to Halifax and Amherst. Does the hon. gentleman know whether he was paid for Sundays?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say that he was. I do not think it possible that the Auditor General, with the knowledge that I have of him, would pay for Sundays. The inspector informs me that the attention of the Auditor General was naturally drawn to the fact that the same account charges for remuneration for 140 days, and board at Dorchester for 160 days. Some satisfactory explanation was given to him, but the explanation I have not got, and cannot give to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLANCY. At which of these three places, Halifax, Yarmouth, or Amherst, does he live?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He lives at Shelburne.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, oh; now, it is coming out.

Mr. CLANCY. He lives at Shelburne?

Mr. FOSTER. That is as good as a post office.

Mr. CLANCY. What would take him to these places, for which he charges $80.74?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Looking over the report, I cannot find any reference to anything that could have taken place at any of these three places. But, I would say that the accounts sent in to the Department of Justice are not dealt with by us. They are transmitted to the Auditor General who takes the necessary precautions to see that nothing is paid except what is proper.

Mr. CLANCY. If these accounts were sent in, under the scope of the commission, it would be hardly within the scope of the Auditor General's duties to find out what had taken him to these places.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Before accounts are paid by the Auditor General, it is certainly his duty to see that they are properly verified.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that there is a credit granted by the Auditor General.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Auditor General paid the accounts directly by his own cheque. There is no credit, as far as expenses are concerned, in any of these cases we are considering now.

Mr. CLANCY. There was no investigation held at any of these places?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. If I understand the Solicitor General correctly a few moments ago, he said that the commissioners appointed to inquire into the affairs of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, were paid for 252 days. I see that the commissioners were handed their commission on the 12th April. Their first meeting was on April 9, and they sat continuously until August 24. From April 12. to the end of the month would leave eighteen days in April; there were thirty-one days in May; thirty days in June, thirty-one days in July, and twenty-four days in August, making 134 days including Sundays. Then, in September they sat nine days, in October, four days, in November, nine days, and in December, three days, making, in all, 161 days. Yet, the Solicitor General says that they were paid for 252 days. This makes a difference of ninety-one days, for which they have been overpaid. I want the Solicitor General to explain that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have absolutely no evidence in reference to the number of days occupied by the commission, except what I find in their report.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, I want my hon. friend to count it up, as I have counted it up, and I want him to tell me how it is that while they sat 161 days, they charged for 252 days?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They may have been employed in the interval preparing their report, and making the investigation. This statement in the report refers to the number of days they sat taking evidence.

Mr. FOSTER. That would give them about ninety days for making their report.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Ninety days for making their report and making investigations, and doing one thing and another, outside of the time taken up by the examination of witnesses.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Solicitor General should bring an explanation of these charges by the commissioners to investigate Dorchester penitentiary, for travelling to these points.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have made a note of it.

Manitoba Penitentiary..... $52,500

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. gentleman explain the $9,000 increase there?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The intention is to purchase a quantity of grazing lands, and erect new stables and a stock barn. This money is taken for the purpose of incurring this expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. What arrangement has been made in reference to this vote of $9,000? Have any negotiations taken place?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No arrangements have been made for the purchase of the land, but there is land in the vicinity of the penitentiary which we have reason to believe is available, and can be acquired.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it lie up against the penitentiary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Immediately adjoining. It is grazing land. In reference to the stables and stock barn, the estimate is $4,000. The intention is to have a stone foundation with a wooden superstructure.

Mr. FOSTER. Is a stock farm, a part of the industry carried on there now?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. To what extent?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They now have a herd of fifty, and the intention is to add to it by natural increase until they are able to supply all the meat consumed in the penitentiary. The inspector tells me that the present stable building has practically fallen into decay, and this vote is to replace it.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been the success of the experiment of stock-raising so far?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inspector says that in the opinion of the warden it has been successful. They grow enough wheat there to supply flour to the penitentiary; but the question of supplying milk and butter has not been considered.

Mr. CLANCY. How many acres in the penitentiary farm?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. 800 acres, two hundred of which are not arable land, and the other 600 is not good grazing land. The intention is to buy 640 acres of good grazing land.

British Columbia Penitentiary $48,000

Mr. PRIOR. Is there not more accommodation needed in that penitentiary than is at present provided?

Mr. FOSTER.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. We have been obliged to transfer several convicts from British Columbia to Stony Mountain penitentiary, because of lack of accommodation. The inspector informs me that the intention is to start this year by adding new buildings to the British Columbia penitentiary.

Mr. PRIOR. It will be cheaper and better to do that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. The extra expense of the cost of transportation would justify that, independent of any other consideration.

Mr. PRIOR. Is it not a fact that the inspector has not been out there for quite a number of years?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inspector has not been there since 1895, and the explanation is that he is so busily engaged in one direction and another endeavouring to bring order out of chaos, that he has not been able to get there.

Mr. PRIOR. The government ought to see that the inspector should visit the British Columbia penitentiary this year.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I agree that if we are to have an inspector at all he should go there at least once in five years.

Mr. PRIOR. The doctor in British Columbia penitentiary only gets $600 a year, and the doctors in the other penitentiaries get from $1,500 to $2,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, but the other doctors are obliged to devote their attention exclusively to the penitentiaries.

Mr. PRIOR. The cost per year per capita for each convict in British Columbia is $436.11, which is more than double that of some other penitentiaries. I am aware that things cost a good deal more in British Columbia, but that seems an enormous amount.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There have been a great many internal improvements which have been all charged up to the British Columbia penitentiary, and as the result the cost of maintenance has been increased. The other institutions are more or less producing something.

Mr. PRIOR. In British Columbia the net per capita cost is $436, and in Kingston it is $173.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of course, where there are a greater number of convicts they could be maintained at a less cost.

Mr. PRIOR. I see there is an increase of $1,200 for discharging convicts.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That would be accounted for by the cost of the transfer of prisoners to Manitoba. Before I leave

I want to understand exactly what is expected of me. Will it be necessary for me to telegraph to the commissioners to ascertain the number of hours per diem they sat at St. Vincent de Paul? I do not think that any information which they could give us now without the minutes would be of much avail. At the same time, I want to do it if necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood the Solicitor General to say that the minutes are not in the possession of the department.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is nothing but the evidence and the report, which has been printed.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the minutes ever in the possession of the department?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not believe they were. I have no knowledge of ever having seen them.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not press for that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The other matters are the number of witnesses examined at Dorchester and their names, the amount of travelling, &c., and the visits to those three or four places.

Government of the Yukon Territory—
Salaries and expenses in connection with the administration of the territory $235,000

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any details given?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is an increase of $22,800. That is accounted for altogether by the increase for living allowances, and for the transport and maintenance of lunatics in the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the acting minister give us a complete account of how he proposes to expend the $235,000?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The amount required for salaries and living allowances of officials is $160,000; that is, only the officials of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not the complete cost of the government of the Yukon territory. It does not touch the judges, nor the militia, nor the public works, nor the mounted police, nor the customs, nor the post office. Will the acting minister group these officials and tell us how many there are in each group, who they are, and what salaries they get?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The total for salaries is $83,720, and the total for living allowances $74,360. The commissioner receives $6,000 salary and $2,000 living allowance. The gold commissioner receives a salary of $5,000 and a living allowance of $1,200. I may say that the living allowances of all the officials, with the exception of the timber rangers, is at the same rate, namely, $100 per month.

Mr. PRIOR. Does the commissioner get any other salary or allowance?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No other that I know of. The assistant gold commissioner gets a salary of $4,000; the legal adviser, $5,000; the comptroller, $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the legal adviser?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. W. H. P. Clement.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary had he to start with?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My recollection is $2,500.

Mr. FOSTER. What reason is there for making his salary $5,000?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand that he was at first allowed to practice his profession and engage in other business; but last year he was required to devote his whole time to the work of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Have there been any letters of complaint with reference to Mr. Clement since he was first appointed, addressed either to the department or to the minister presiding over the department or to the Prime Minister?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand from the deputy minister that there were some complaints with regard to fees.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the nature of the complaint, and what were the replies?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was as official administrator that he got fees, and these were fixed by the court. The only complaint was that the fees allowed were too excessive. There was only one complaint, and it was in connection with an estate. The next is the comptroller who gets $2,000, Mr. Lithgow, financial controller.

Mr. FOSTER. What is his status? It was said that he countersigns with the commissioner all cheques for payments, so far as concerns moneys disbursed belonging to the Dominion. It was also stated that he countersigns cheques for all disbursements of local revenue as well. Does he do the latter by instructions from the government here or by virtue of regulations of the council itself?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is by regulations fixed by the local council.

Mr. FOSTER. He has no status as representing the government, so far as the expenditure of the local revenues of the council is concerned.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think so. He is accountable for the moneys that go through his hands. He has practically control of the books.

Mr. FOSTER. He is responsible to the Yukon council alone for all that part of the expenditure which is taken out of the local revenues ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as the other is concerned, he is responsible to the government here. So that the council there may, if they wish, have another person countersign ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the way I understand it. In addition to that there is the accountant, Mr. Montgomery, who gets $1,200 a year. He is under Mr. Lithgow, and performs all the duties required of him.

Mr. FOSTER. Only with reference to Dominion moneys.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are three clerks in the commissioner's office—one at $900, and the others at $720. They all get the living allowance of $1,200. There are seventeen clerks in the gold commissioner's office.

Mr. FOSTER. You mentioned three.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are in Mr. Ogilvie's office, not the gold commissioner's office. In the gold commissioner's office, seven receive $900, and ten receive $720. Mr. Gosselin, Crown timber and land agent, gets $1,800, and the same allowance, and there is a clerk who gets $900. There is a clerk to the mining inspector at Dominion Creek who gets $720. Then there are three stenographers—one at $1,200, another at $1,080, and a third at $900. They are employed in the gold commissioner's office. There is the stenographer to the commissioner, who gets $1,200. There are two stenographers in the territorial court, getting $1,200. One in the police court gets $1,200. Then there is one in the Crown chamber who gets $1,200. There are two draughtsmen getting $1,200 each. Then we come to the registrar, who gets $4,000. Mr. J. E. Girouard is registrar.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the M.P.P. for Quebec ? The acting minister with his business instincts, repudiates the idea that an M.P.P. would go up there and be an official. He evidently had not then the advantage of a conference with the First Minister. Would it not be well for the First Minister to give us his reasons why he thinks it good policy to get local members and send them to the Yukon, keeping them away from their duties as members, and paying them large fees as officials in the Yukon.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We appointed Mr. Girouard to go to the Yukon in the fall of 1898. At that time the Yukon was very new and it was felt imperative that the government should have a man of some experience to go there. Mr. Girouard was sent for. We would not appoint him permanently. He is paid by the month simply, and I have been expecting, in fact, I think information has been received, that he would return. He has remained longer than I expected. As to his qualifications, they are unimpeachable. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows that the case is not without precedent. Local governments have been employing members of this House, such as lawyers, to do work which properly belonged to the local government. For instance, it is not an infrequent thing for a member of this parliament to be employed by the local legislature to be Crown prosecutor. I think it is not without precedent that members of this parliament should be inspectors of schools. And I do not know that any particular inconvenience has resulted to the administration of justice or to the school system. In this case, likewise, I do not know that any particular bad results to this government have followed. If any people have suffered, they are the constituents of Mr. Girouard, who were left unrepresented in the legislature during last session. But if they choose to put up with that inconvenience, I do not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has any right to find fault.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. What were Mr. Girouard's special qualifications for a registrarship in Dawson ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He is a member of the Quebec bar and a good business man, a man whom I look upon as possessed of very superior practical ability.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has undertaken any elaborate defence of the principle—for he has now established it as a principle—that it is perfectly proper for the government of the Dominion to take hold of their friends and make them officials in the pay of this government. The case he cites of lawyers whose professional skill is enlisted by a local government, I think is hardly a case in point. A lawyer's profession is a very wide profession, and his clientage is taken wherever he can get it. Because the local government uses the professional services of a legal man, who is a member of this House, on the ground that he is the best man you can get, that is hardly a justification for taking the offices of the Dominion government and bestowing them on members of the local government. See just what may come from it—if it is perfectly proper for the Dominion government to put Mr. Girouard, a member of the provincial parliament, and belonging to the Prime Minister's own party in the province of Quebec, into an office in the Yukon at $6,000 a year, it is equally proper for the government to take any member from any local legislature belonging to his own side. Everybody knows that these selections are made for party considerations. And once that principle is adopted, what an engineeryou place in the hands of the Dominion government. You put a piece of machinery into their hands by which they can build up their party and sap the independence of party men and make them subservient to the aims of this government. If you admit the principle, you can carry it to any extent; you can make all the Dominion patronage an organized system by which you can sap the independence of members of the provincial legislatures. All sorts of political combinations can be made, all sorts of political schemes can be carried out. Appointment to office can be given wherever it will do the most good. And wherever you have a local government of the same stripe as the Dominion government aiding and abetting and winking at that sort of thing you do not have a healthy condition of public matters. Do you think that for a single instant it would be allowed, if a Liberal-Conservative government were in power in Quebec, that a member would absent himself under pay of the Dominion government? But it is allowed because the whole force of the party is used to uphold it, simply because Mr. Girouard is a party man. Here is Mr. Girouard, a good party man, a good supporter of Mr. Marchand. While he represents the county, Mr. Marchand cannot have an opponent from that county, and, if he has a sufficient majority without him, Mr. Girouard can serve him just as well by staying away as he could by being in the legislature. Let these instances be multiplied, and you put into the hands of the government here a tremendous power in the chance it gives for the collusion between the local and Dominion governments, a power which, I think, does not make a healthy and honourable political life in this country. What a scandal it is, too, that a man should go to the people of the country and, backed by the force of a party strong enough to elect him, gets the votes of that county on the representation that he is going to do what—carry out the duties of registrarship in the Yukon? Not at all, he would have no chance of being elected if he told the people that that would be done; the implied contract is that the member is to serve the people in the local legislature. He is helped into that position by the force of the party, he is kept there afterwards by the strength of the party; but the implied contract he entered into with his own constituents has been violated. If I am correctly informed, Mr. Girouard has been two sessions in the Yukon instead of attending to the duty of his constituents in Quebec, and all because he is a party man and a tacit agreement has been made between the party here and the party in Quebec that Mr. Girouard should have this plum. His party in the legislature is able to get along without him, and he is simply keeping the seat warm and preventing an opponent getting in. No man would have been more vehement in his denunciation of that kind of thing if it had been carried out by the Liberal-Conservative party and hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition, than would the right hon. gentleman who leads the government in this House. And I think he would be right in denouncing it. I do not think he would go before the people of this country and uphold that as a proper principle to be carried out. The patronage question is a difficult one enough, even if you confine local patronage to local members and Dominion patronage to Dominion members. But to carry out the system of which this is an example is to put into the hands of the Dominion government an engine that is liable, to put it mildly, to lead to the gravest kind of abuse. It is a power which I think a party would be better not to exercise, and a power the temptation to exercise which is great. In a way it is not for the good of public life. Take the case of Prince Edward Island, that lamentable exhibition of political—I do not like to trust myself to give it a name, but it is an exhibition of practical politics that is doing immense damage to public life, not only in the province of Prince Edward Island, but everywhere. There is a man who was elected by a party against the whole opposition of the opposite party to support a certain side of politics, elected and sent to the legislature to support that party, and he is found turning suddenly around and supporting the opposite side, and by the force of this one vote keeping in power the party which he was selected by his constituents in a party fight to oppose and turn out. Now, grant that a good deal has been said backwards and forwards that Dominion influence was brought in there. I am not going to say how much was or was not, but I think you cannot help but conclude if you read between the lines of what has been said, that Mr. Pineau had an idea that he was going to get some kind of benefit in some way or other from the fact that the Liberal party was in power in this Dominion. Whatever may have gone crosswise to prevent that from being carried out, it is evident that something like that was quite near. Now, how easy it would be for the party in power here to seduce him from his allegiance if it were necessary, in the first place, and after he had once left his allegiance to keep him there, and so by that manipulation to keep a party in power which, on a straight verdict of the people, should not have been kept in power by that man's vote.

The PRIME MINISTER. I certainly have no fault to find with the criticisms which the hon. gentleman has offered on the appointment of Mr. Girouard. They have been temperate, and, on the whole, I think pretty well founded. I agree with a great deal of what he has said, and for my part I have thought for some time that Mr. Girouard should be made to elect either to serve the federal government in the Yukon or to serve the people of Quebec in the local legislature. I think that is a fair principle, and ought to be acted upon. I may remark to my hon. friend that if the thing were to become, as he said, a general practice, it would be most objectionable. He says that this may be, perhaps, the introduction of the thin edge of the wedge. I would not say that, because the wedge has been introduced long ago. This is not the first time that things of that kind have occurred. Let me call his attention to a case nearer home. There is a member of this House who, when the former government of Quebec was in office under the premiership of Mr. Flynn, was Crown prosecutor for the city of Montreal. That is an office to which a yearly salary is attached. For some time he occupied the position of a member of this House at the same time that he occupied the position of Crown prosecutor. When a change of government took place, he was replaced as Crown prosecutor by another gentleman, though, no doubt, he would still have retained that office had not the change of government taken place. Doubtless there have been transgressions of this principle on both sides, and I do not say that by way either of excuse or explanation. I fully recognize that my hon. friend's criticisms are, to a large extent, well founded, and I say frankly that if Mr. Girouard does not choose to make the choice himself, he will be asked to elect for one position or the other.

Mr. FOSTER. The deputy registrar in the Yukon gets how much?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. $720. The next are the mining recorders. There are three mining recorders. One at Tagish gets $1,500; one at Fort Selkirk, $900; and one at Stewart River, $720. There are two inspectors of mines, one at $1,800, and the other at $1,500. One is Mr. William Madden, and the other is Mr. R. W. Cautley. The clerk of the court gets $900; the private secretary to the commissioner gets $1,200; acting assistant gold commissioner, $1,200; three timber rangers receive $1,200 each; one surveyor, who receives $1,500.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Cautley seems to be put down as a surveyor as well as a mining inspector.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, Mr. Cautley is a surveyor. James Gibbons is the surveyor. There are five janitors who receive $720 each. Then, there is a messenger and a night watchman, $720 each; matron court-house, $840; housekeeper to commissioner, $720; and housekeeper to gold commissioner, $900.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they get $1,200 living allowance?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The messengers and janitors have their living allowance, the housekeepers have no living allowance.

Mr. FOSTER. On what basis were these living allowances placed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The living allowance was first fixed at $75 a month. On the representation of the commissioner himself and other officers there, who stated that they could not live at that rate, we have allowed $100. I have received some representations that at some points they cannot live even at that rate. Some of these officers have to live at hotels. Those who live outside of Dawson cannot get board for less than $100 a month.

Mr. FOSTER. When you give a man a salary of $5,000 down here, he pays his living expenses. You give him $5,000 up there, and you pay all his living expenses as well. It does not seem to me that under the present circumstances the whole of his salary should be given, and then the whole of his living allowance. He is making as much here in point of salary as he would have to pay all of his living expenses, there you pay all his living expenses. The living expenses must be getting lower there year after year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman will see that there are only four high salaried officials in the whole lot.

Mr. FOSTER. There are only a few down here that are high salaried.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I dare say we will have more knowledge as to what the living expenses are, but we have a full report from Mr. Ogilvie. In some cases outside of Dawson he says, that the allowance ought to be increased, because they cannot get board at $100 a month.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the government provide a house for the commissioner?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Besides the $2,000 living allowance?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Do other officers have their houses as well?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No special houses are provided, but I think some of them live in what they call the barracks, or over their offices.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice that there are accounts for the building of houses, and the like of that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has Wade a house?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Yes, he has a very nice house of his own.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is not a salaried officer of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Which of these officers have houses as well?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am almost certain that the commissioner is the only one provided with a house.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he a housekeeper?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that provided by the government?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to know what the commissioner is getting. He has $6,000 salary, $2,000 living allowance, making $8,000, and he has a housekeeper. Has he any servants besides?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No servants.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the housekeeper cost?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. $720 a year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the rent of the house?

Mr. FOSTER. The rent will be a couple of thousand dollars a year, the way rents go there, so that Mr. Ogilvie is getting about $10,000 a year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It just depends on how you look at it. He gets a free house and $6,000 a year salary.

Mr. FOSTER. He gets a free house, a salary of $6,000 a year, an allowance of $2,000 a year, and a housekeeper, and the housekeeper gets her living allowance.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not suppose the commissioner could live on $2,000 a year there.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all according to his scale of expenses. I do not suppose that he has any royal state—if he does not go out too often and stay out too long.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I might just give a little explanation of that, because I have been on the ground. As to living expenses, I may say that one of the inspectors and I went up Dominion Creek. For a very ordinary room, with just two boards standing up between the rooms, you pay $3 a day. Sometimes one of these men is sent 100 miles, and he pays $3 and $4 for a meal. You can get, in Dawson, a very fair meal for $1, but nothing less than that, and if you go to the leading hotel, you pay $2, and you will very likely see on the wall a notice that potatoes are 50 cents extra. Two thousand dollars will not pay the expenses of the commissioner. A large number of English gentlemen come in there, engineers and men who are interested in mines. Now, there is a fairly good hotel which was being put up when I was there, but the commissioner has to pay them some attention, and he has to have them at his house. I do not want to say anything about the house, except that it is a very ordinary house, although it is the best than can be got. Food is very dear, and to give you an idea of the fearful cost of food, I may say that I went in there with a San Francisco gentleman, who owns some land in the Yukon. He took in some fruit, which he had bought in San Francisco for $250. We went to Dawson together, and the next morning I saw him, and I said: Mr. Johnston, how did you come out with your fruit? He said: I have disposed of all my fruit. I will pay the freight, the duty, my own expenses coming in, and I will have a little more than $2,000 to the good on the transaction. That will give you an idea of the cost of things in the Yukon. Eventually, when the railway is finished to Whitehorse, you will get things somewhat cheaper, but nothing is grown there at all, and you will have to pay dearly for taking it in. Averaging everything, living there is between three or four times dearer than it would be in Ottawa. A pound of ordinary fresh meat there costs between 25 cents and 50 cents, and everything is in proportion. I thought it was very extraordinary at first, when I learned of the prices that were paid there. I used to think they could live cheaper there, but if you go in, you will discover that it is the dearest country you ever saw to live in. There is not a man in the Yukon who can live on the allowance granted to him. Any man that is in there with a salary will have to pay more than the living allowance granted by the government for clothing and other things in that country. Judge Dugas, who gets $4,000 salary and $2,000 living allowance, I will venture to say, will not begin to be as well off at the end of the year, as a judge in Nova Scotia, or in Ottawa, who gets $4,000 a year, and has to support himself.

Mr. FOSTER. You will not go up there, then?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). No, I have no need of it. Of course, a man does not take such a position as that for the money there is in it, but for the honour there is in it. When you pay a man the same salary as you pay here, and give him his living allowance, he is not in as good a position as a man on the same salary in any other part of Canada, except British Columbia. There is a rise in expenditure as you go west. The first blow I got, was that a man carried a little luggage about 100 yards for me, and he charged me 75 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. He charged according to your size. Does the government own the house in which Commissioner Ogilvie lives?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. They pay $250 a month rent. This is only a temporary arrangement and the intention is to build for ourselves.

Mr. FOSTER. Who owns the house?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It is owned by a Catholic clergyman who was there.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Ogilvie gets $3,000 for rent, $6,000 for salary, $2,000 for living allowance, and $720 for a housekeeper.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If he entertains many friends like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser), who has spoken so highly of him, he will not have much left.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but we all have to take in our friends and we get low salaries. Under what conditions was Mr. W. H. Lynch sent on to the Yukon?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was sent to make a report with regard to the working of the mining regulations and the royalty, &c. He was allowed $200 a month and expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Has Mr. Lynch's report been brought down?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. The report was mislaid, but I have ordered a copy and hope to have it in a day or two.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Lynch now in the employ of the government?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. He was only employed for a few months, and was not employed after he came back.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the department carried out the recommendations in his report?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not that I am aware of.

The PRIME MINISTER. I know Mr. Lynch for a long time. When he returned and filed his report, the Minister of the Interior, at my suggestion, sent it to me and I read it. I was under the impression that I returned it to the minister, but when the report was called for I received notice that it was in my hands. I made a search but could not find it, and Mr. Lynch is making another copy of the report which will be laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that only a partial report or does it cover the whole investigation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The full report, I believe, so far as it goes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has Mr. Lynch been settled with, and all his claims been paid?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, so far as I know, and there are no claims pending. He was paid $1,400 for seven months.

Mr. CLANCY. And $679 travelling expenses besides. There are some clerks here, who are not mentioned by the hon. gentleman. I see Mr. Gross was paid over $600, what was that for?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was a detective in Montreal who was sent over the Edmonton route.

Mr. CLANCY. For what purpose?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On special service.

Mr. CLANCY. What was it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope my hon. friend will not press that.

Mr. CLANCY. No, I will assume that he was a friend who had to get something. Who recommended him? Perhaps the Solicitor General can give the information?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I know who Mr. Gross is very well. He was for many years employed by the Canadian government in connection with the detective service. He is at the head of a detective bureau in Montreal, but I know nothing about his going to the Yukon.

Mr. BERGERON. He went there on his own hook, and not as an employee of the government.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know about that.

Mr. BERGERON. He is not in the detective service any more. He is a theater manager.

Mr. CLANCY. Then he never was in the employ of the government at all.

Mr. BERGERON. He went there as the head of a company.

Mr. CLANCY. And yet he was paid $638.15. What service was given for that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not able to give the information just now, but if the hon. gentleman wishes, I will make a memo.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman can give that later.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount of this $235,000 is for expenses outside of salaries? Is this simply for the salaries and expenses of officials?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Practically so. There is about $10,000 for the transportation and maintenance of lunatics. The department made an arrangement with the province of British Columbia to maintain them at the same rate as in Manitoba, but the expense of sending them down is very heavy. Then, there is $6,000 for printing and stationery, and a grant of $10,000 to hospitals.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the government have a hospital of its own?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. This covers grants made for destitute and sick people. There has been a great deal of sickness.

Mr. FOSTER. What hospitals are there ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not the details of the grant. The deputy informs me that this payment was made on account of officials in the hospitals.

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say, without having any official knowledge, but from what I have been told by travellers who have been there, amongst others Mr. Girouard, whom I spoke of a moment ago, that about the time of the rush to the Yukon, a Jesuit father, whose name I forget, established a hospital. He had no resources of his own, but a local committee, consisting of officials and miners, helped him, and have contributed, from time to time, to carry on the hospital.

Mr. BERGERON. Do we subscribe that $10,000 for our officers ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not only our officers. There has been a good deal of typhoid fever and other sickness, and everybody who is sick is taken to the hospital.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose we pass this item with the understanding that any general remarks to be made with reference to the Yukon can be made on some of the other items for the Yukon. We have let the acting minister off very mildly and softly, because we simply understood that he did not know anything about the matter. I am not saying that in a deprecatory sense. He could not know, because he has not been connected with the management of the Yukon since the beginning. There is where we feel the absence of the minister himself. But, there are some things with reference to the general management of the Yukon which it is too late to discuss to-night.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite appreciate that position, as I naturally could not be familiar with all the details. I would like to state for the information of the committee, from a statement which I have had prepared, that the local revenue of the Yukon, from July 1, 1897, to December 31, 1899, was $3,869,930.70, and the total expenditure, $2,215,765.01, an excess of revenue over expenditure of $645,165.69.

Committee rose and reported progress.

ADJOURNMENT—RETURNS, ETC.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would like to say, with regard to a return which the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) asked for yesterday, that I made inquiries to-day personally, and I found that it had left the department on March 26 and the Secretary of State's office on March 28. I am unable to find what became of it. It has not been laid on the Table as it should have been. I ordered a copy to be made, which I would like to lay on the Table of the House now. That is with regard to living allowances in the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not official.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The other seems to have got lost, and cannot be found. The clerk told me that this is properly endorsed. There is also the report of Mr. Ogilvie. As the report asked for from Mr. Ogilvie for publication in the annual report of the department, and with regard to which the department has been in communication with him, has not been received, in the absence of an answer, I gave instructions that a copy of a report sent by Mr. Ogilvie last autumn, which was not considered by the department in proper form for the annual report, not being sufficiently concise or up to as late a date as was wished, be prepared, as I am desirous of giving to the House the fullest information in the possession of the department on the business transactions of the territory, and would ask to lay the report on the Table of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. (Friday).
