House of Commons Debates.

FIFTH SESSION—EIGHTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 131)—from the Senate—for the relief of Edwin James Cox.—(Mr. Montague.)

EXODUS TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the government to a despatch from St. John, N.B., that I find in a Montreal newspaper :

St. John, N. B., April 4 (special).—The exodus from the maritime provinces to the United States is larger this spring than for many years. Every train and steamer leaving St. John for Boston carries away some young men and women from the city or the interior.

I may say that two or three weeks ago, I was travelling on the Intercolonial Railway train, and every car was so crowded that there was hardly standing room. The baggage car on that train broke down, and it took two hours at Rivière du Loup to transfer the baggage to another car to allow the train to proceed. I would like to ask if the government are doing anything to stop this exodus ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I think it will probably be found that the people referred to were on the way to Sydney to engage in the great enterprises which are being established there.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Unfortunately, they are going the other way.

Mr. McDOUGALL. A paid government officer was in charge of them to take them across the line to the United States.

REPORT OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am sorry the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) is not in his seat, and I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when the report of the Postmaster General will be brought down. It is a very important report, and it is almost impossible to discuss estimates until it is brought down.

THE MOUNTED POLICE ACTS.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). There are on the list of Public Bills and Orders three Bills, one an Act to amend the Mounted Police Pension Act, and if the right hon. gentleman will refer to a speech of his made in 1898, he will find he has accepted the principle of that Bill. Then, there is Bill No. 19, to amend the Mounted Police Act of 1894, and if he will read the discussion that took place in 1898 and 1899, he will find that he promised to consider the legislation provided for here. Then, there is the Land Titles Act, and I think the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will see no objection to the government taking the Land Titles Act in hand, because all that it provides for is that in regard to wills made in the United Kingdom, the same facilities shall exist in the North-west as exists for wills made in eastern Canada.

WELLINGTON BRIDGE, MONTREAL.

Mr. M. J. F. QUINN (St. Ann's, Montreal). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the government to an item which appeared in the Montreal Daily Witness, on the 2nd of April. It is headed: 'Wellington Bridge; Alarming statement from an Ottawa Civil Engineer':

Mr. J. L. P. O'Hanley, C.E., of Ottawa, has addressed a letter to the Governor in Council calling attention to what he terms 'the dangerous state of railway bridge on the Lachine Canal at Wellington Street, Montreal.' What he finds fault with is the construction of the pivot pier, which, he says, 'with the water out of the canal, and maybe with the water in, is liable to collapse at any moment, and sure to do so sooner or later. Its immunity hitherto has been due to the cohesion of the material of the foundation in resisting the disintegrating action of water. This being an unknown factor, cannot, and should not for an instant be relied on, nor, with precious lives and valuable property in the balance, should it for a moment hold.' This is now so far advanced, he adds, that if anything is to be done it must be done promptly and one of two alternatives chosen—either building a new pivot pier between this and the opening of navigation, which, with fair management, should not take more than three weeks, or to close the bridge to traffic till next winter.

I wish to ask if any inquiry has been made concerning the condition of the bridge, or if there is any proof of the danger mentioned here by the engineer.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The attention of the government has not been called to this correspondence in the Witness. But, I may say that I received a letter from Mr. O'Hanley on this subject, and the matter is now being investigated.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

Mr. R. TYRWHITT (South Simcoe). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the government to the fact that reports have been received almost daily from Col. Otter in South Africa, and these reports are not given to the public through the press until possibly the following day. I would like to remind the government that people in this country who have relatives in South Africa take great interest in what is transpiring there, and should receive at the earliest moment information with regard to their friends. I would like to ask if a message was received this morning.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). There was a report received this morning, which will be communicated to the press in a few minutes. It is necessary that the officers of the department should look over the reports before they are given to the public. The reports have invariably been given to the public at the earliest possible moment, and will be so in future.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). I can understand that under certain circumstances it may not be well for the government, for obvious reasons, to communicate all telegrams or information received; and there may be matters which could not be communicated to the House for a similar reason. I am not prepared just now to state what the reason might be. But I may say that when we had similar troubles in the past, though of less importance, but still deeply interesting to the public, the government not only chose to communicate the telegrams to the press, but the Minister of Militia of that day used to communicate to the House every day the telegrams as they came in, that is, when they were of such a nature that they could be made public. I do not at all find fault with the government in the present instance, except that I think it would be much more satisfactory to the public if they were to do as is done in England, when the Secretary or Under Secretary for War communicates to the public information which has been sent to him by the general in command. I think it would be possible for the Minister of Militia and Defence to communicate daily whatever information he receives officially, and that would be satisfactory to the people of Canada, who are so deeply interested in knowing as early as possible the official news from South Africa from the fact that so many of our young men are engaged in that unhappy conflict.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may add to what I have already said, that, so far as cablegrams are concerned, they are at once given to the press, so that, really, before the meeting of parliament each day, communication has already been made to the press, and the cablegrams are posted up on the bulletins in the city. So far as this report from Col. Otter is concerned, which I have here, it is a report of considerable length, and I think it would be more convenient, rather than reading it to the House, to, at once, have it published in all the newspapers of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Borden). He has the report in his hands and he certainly should pursue the course that is invariably pursued in the British House of Commons. The minister reads telegrams of that kind at once to the House. The first persons to be taken into the confidence of the government are the members of parliament who are here. I do not propose that the report should be held over and kept from the press for a single hour, but, when parliament is assembled, there can be no objection to a statement made on such an important subject being communicated at once, and I am quite certain, that, however anxious we are to get on with the business, we will all be ready to listen to the report which the hon. gentleman has received.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Would the hon. minister kindly inform the House at what time the report was received this morning?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as I know the report was received this morning.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Yes, but at what time?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not know. I was not aware that the report had been received until half an hour ago.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. minister read the report?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The report is as follows:

Paardeberg Drift, Feb. 26, 1900.

Sir,—I have the honour to report upon the part taken by the battalion under my command in the engagement at Paardeberg on the 18th instant.

The battalion arrived near Paardeberg Drift, with the 19th Brigade, at 6 a.m. of the 18th instant, having formed the rear guard of the brigade in its march during the night from Klip Drift, a distance of twenty-one miles.

Within half an hour of the arrival of the battalion orders were received to be ready to parade at 7 a.m., and at 7.20 a.m. the battalion moved out to support the artillery, about a mile away; the men in the meantime had had a biscuit and a cup of tea.

Hardly had the battalion reached the place designated than it was ordered to move to the drift and cross the river.

This was done, and the crossing began at about 8.30 a.m. The current ran nine miles an hour, while the water was sufficiently deep to reach up to the men's arm-pits—two crossings were used, about fifty yards apart, over one of which a rope was stretched, by which the men passed across, holding on to it, and at the other the men passed over in fours with linked arms.

The companies as they crossed were pushed forward, and at 9.30 a.m., 'A' and 'C' companies were in the firing line at about 500 yards from the enemy, who occupied the woods along the near edge of the river, but were totally hidden from view; they also occupied a series of dongas enflading our left flank, but this was not discovered until towards afternoon, when they disclosed themselves, although they were quietly 'sniping' from that direction all day. 'D' and 'E' companies formed the support, while as 'B,' 'F,' 'G' and 'H' came up they formed the reserve.

The remainder of the brigade was disposed of as under, the D. of C. L. I. on our right, the Gordons and Shrops L. I. on our left, in the order named, but on the other side of the hill on our left and behind the artillery. The battalion, however, was practically alone, and during the whole day received no orders or instructions from any one, until about 4 p.m., as noted later on.

In addition to the 19th Brigade, the 3rd (Highland) Brigade was engaged on the south side of the river, besides artillery and mounted infantry.

Firing began at about 9.30 a.m. from the enemy's right and continued along their front towards the centre.

The advance of the battalion took place over perfectly open ground somewhat undulating, and with no cover save the inequalities of the ground, and a few ant-hills.

The firing line attained a position from the enemy varying from 400 yards on the right to 800 yards on the left, where it remained until late in the afternoon. After the establishment of the firing line, the enemy's fire was for some time very severe, and Capt. Arnold, who at the time was doing most excellent service, was mortally wounded, and many others hit. During this time three or four men in the reserve were wounded at a distance of over 1,600 yards.

At about noon 'D' company reinforced the firing line, and shortly afterwards 'E' and part of 'B' company also reinforced the remainder of 'B,' 'F' and 'G' companies, becoming supports, with 'H' still in reserve.

Only one Maxim gun could be crossed, and that was soon got into position by Capt. Bell on the rising ground to the left, at a distance of some 1,000 yards, where it did most excellent service during the day, being in a position to keep down the fire of the enemy, who occupied the dongas on our left. A battery of field artillery occupied the hill on our left rear, and shelled the enemy's lines at intervals during the day. The fire discipline of the several companies engaged was excellent, and perfect coolness, as well as accurate shooting, was maintained throughout.

Throughout the day the fire was maintained, at times being comparatively slack, and then severe. The enemy evidently had the ranges marked, as their fire at certain prominent places was so accurate as to render them almost untenable by us. Interruption to our fire was occasioned several times during the day by the cry from beyond the right of our line to 'stop firing on the left,' as men in that part were being hit from the fire from our left. The fire complained of was, I am satisfied, from the dongas occupied by the enemy on our left, and not from our men.

At about 4 p. m., three companies of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, under Lieut.-Col. Allworth came up, and this officer informed me that 'he had been sent to finish this business,' and 'proposed doing so with the bayonets'; he then asked for information respecting our own position and that of the enemy, which I gave him.

One company of the Cornwall's was at once sent into the firing line, followed in half an hour by the other two, this reinforcement being received by a very heavy fire from the whole length of the enemy's front.

At 5 p. m. Lieut.-Col. Allworth notified that a general advance would take place, and about 5.15 p. m. the whole force, with the exception of parts of 'G' and 'H' companies, which I held in reserve, went forward with a rush; the fire of the enemy became intense, and after an advance of about 200 yards effectively stopped our men; and no further progress could be made. The loss to both the corps taking part in the charge was very severe. Lieut.-Col. Allworth was killed.

The position gained was, however, held, and a continuous heavy fire maintained until darkness set in, about 7 p. m., when I gave the order to collect the dead and wounded and withdraw to the bivouac at the drift. The enemy also withdrew from their position at the same time, to the Boer laager, some two miles up the river, leaving a few men in the dongas on our left, who continued 'sniping' our collecting parties until 2 p. m.

Many instances of individual bravery were displayed, as for example, the case of No. 8110, Pte. Kennedy, who led one of the ammunition mules right up to the firing line, where it was instantly killed. The company stretcher-bearers exhibited great pluck, and five of them were among the wounded; three were wounded in conveying Capt. Arnold from the firing line. The stretcher upon which he was being made a special object of attention by the Boer marksmen. In connection with this incident, I must note the courage displayed by Surgeon-Capt. Fiset, who, when the stretcher upon which Capt. Arnold was being brought to the rear was stopped a short distance from the firing line, but the wounding of one of the bearers, went forward and attended to Capt. Arnold, and subsequently assisted a bearer in bringing him to the rear. Capt. Fiset also attended to many others wounded under fire during the day.

Lieut.-Col. Buchan was in charge of the firing line, which he directed and controlled in the coolest and most effective manner, while my acting adjutant, Lieut. Ogilvy, rendered excellent service in carrying my orders about the field. The following N.C. officers and men distinguished themselves during the day, viz.: No. 6559, Sergt. Utton; No. 7117, Pte. Andrews; No. 7040, Pte. Dickson; No. 7043, Pte. Duncafe; No. 7376, Pte. Page; and No. 7306, Pte. Murphy.

The collection of the dead and wounded of both our own battalion and those of the D.C.L.I., was made by parties of the Royal Canadians, and continued all night. The duty was a most onerous one, and too much credit cannot be given to those who were engaged in it. By 7 a. m. of the 19th inst., all the dead of the battalion were buried, besides many of these of the D.C.L.I., and the wounded sent to the rear. I must here place on record the great services rendered by the R. C. chaplain of the battalion, the Rev. Father O'Leary, who was present in the field all day, and towards the end in the firing line, while during the night he was prominent in the search for the wounded, as well as officiating in the burial of the dead.

Several of the officers accompanied these parties up to midnight, while No. 685, Q.-M. Sergt. Reading; No. 7304, Sergt. Ramage; No. 7302, Sergt. Middleton, and No. 7258, Pte. Whingate, were out all night on this day.

Another incident of coolness and pluck was that of No. 7347, Pte. Hornibrook, who at daylight in the morning of the 19th inst. was down in the extreme right of the lines occupied by the enemy the previous day. He was unarmed, and came suddenly upon an armed Boer, looking for a stray horse. With great presence of mind Hornibrook pretended to be armed with a revolver, and called upon imaginary assistance, at the same time demanding the man's surrender. The Boer at once submitted, and on being brought in proved to be one of General Cronje's adjutants, and a most important officer.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) W. D. OTTER, Lieut.-Col.,
Commanding Royal Canadian Regiment,
2nd Battalion.

Mr. M. J. F. QUINN (Montreal, St. Ann's). I am sorry that the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), has gone out for a moment, because, I think, the matter to which my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt), referred, was more particularly relevant to the wounded and ill, who have not been heard of for a long time. I had occasion to ask in the Department of Militia and Defence—and I must say that the minister has been very kind under the circumstances—some information about one of the young privates of the first contingent, but for the last three weeks I have been unable to get any information whatever about him. I think it is the duty of the government—and if the minister does not possess the power, I think he should be vested with it—to obtain, as soon as possible, correct information about the Canadians who have been wounded or are ill in South Africa, and let their friends and relatives have information about them as soon as possible. I am told that it is utterly impossible for any private individual to obtain information concerning any relative who is wounded or ill at the seat of war. Cables have been sent, but they have had to pass through certain channels and have remained unanswered. The only source of information these people have is through the Militia Department here, and, I think, that the House should see that the minister is clothed with sufficient power to obtain that information in order that it may be transmitted at the earliest possible moment to the families of those suffering.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The information which we receive here is the information which comes through the Commander in Chief, and is precisely the information which is sent to the War Office in England. We get all the information which goes forward to the War Office, and I do not know that any action which can be taken by this House could add anything to our facilities. I think we are obtaining now all the information we could possibly obtain under the existing condition of things in South Africa; all the information which the Commander in Chief thinks it necessary to forward. I would be very glad to have representations made through the proper channels, if it is thought desirable to do so, but I do know that we receive all the information which the people of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and other parts of the empire (who are quite as much interested as we are), receive, and with which they seem to be content.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty; and the proposed motion of Sir Charles Tupper in amendment thereto.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Mr. Speaker, before I resume the debate upon the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), I should like to say that the Private Hornibrook, who was complimented in the official despatches from the seat of war, which have been read to this House, is a member of an old Haldimand family, and a brother-in-law to Mr. William Lount, Q.C., late member of this House for Toronto.

I regret, Sir, that you, yourself, and a large number of the members of this House were absent during the late hours of yesterday's sitting. I think I bear out the opinions of my colleagues who were here, when I say that we were treated to an acrobatic exhibition the equal of which has scarcely ever been seen in this parliament; and I venture to say that we shall scarcely ever witness its equal again, unless some time in the future the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) should take it into his head to announce to the House that he was the originator of the idea of sending contingents to South Africa, and of proving that the whole matter, in its conception and carrying out, rested with himself. We are not unaccustomed, Sir, to hon. gentlemen upon the Treasury benches swallowing themselves. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) each session since 1896 has swallowed himself in one of those characteristic speeches to which we occasionally listen; but he always does it with a grumble and a growl. The member for North Norfolk last night did it with evident pleasure and satisfaction. I ask hon. gentlemen from both sides to read his speech, and after they have done so, they will, I am sure, conclude with me that the hon. gentleman succeeded in proving, not only that every opinion which he expressed upon trade matters in this House for eighteen years was arrant nonsense and humbug, but that no one with half a measure of sanity would ever have expressed such opinions. There was a time, Sir, when the member for North Norfolk was supposed to have opinions of his own, and to be prepared at all times to express those opinions without the permission and with no fear of any one upon the Treasury benches. But the fleshpots of Egypt have been too inviting and too promising for the hon. gentleman; and if he still holds any opinions of his own, he dropped them, mildly and humbly following at the beck and nod of his masters in the administration, and growing louder even than they in denouncing the policy which he supported only a few years ago. If half a decade of years ago an hon. member of this House had prophesied that in this year of grace 1900 we should find the member for North Norfolk expressing those opinions he expressed last night, the House would have been surprised at the audacity of such a prophet, the opinion, for instance, that upon a trade matter it was dangerous for this House to express an opinion at all, as we might disturb the flow and increase of that Imperial spirit which is filling the empire to-day; so warm a devotion for the motherland that he was not only willing to give our markets for nothing, but to call the man who wanted to get something in return rankly disloyal; the opinion that we should stop truckling to the United States of America, whose policy had always been narrow, unfair, unjust and illiberal towards us. These are the things which Hansard says the member for North Norfolk said to this House last night; and by whom, Sir, are they said? They are said by a gentleman who for eighteen years urged and prayed the people of this country to discriminate against Great Britain; a gentleman who a few years ago poked ridicule at our Canadian volunteers who went to the front when the Fenians invaded our shores; a gentleman who only a few years ago thought it necessary in his speech in this House, to mention 154 times the necessity of getting the market of the United States and discriminating against Great Britain. They are said by the same gentleman who only a few years ago kindly wrote a letter to the Ways and Means Committee of the United States Senate, telling them that their tariff was not as effective as against Canada as it might be, and pointing out the methods by which the United States of America could bring Canada to her knees. No better illustration has ever taken place in this House of the truth of that old poem:

While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return.

We are glad of it. We are especially glad of it because the hon. gentleman in the old days expressed sentiments that were not likely to do Canada any good. But let me tell the Prime Minister that the hon. gentleman's earnest advocacy of this policy last night is not likely to impress the people of the province from which I come as to the Canadianism of that policy; for I submit, Sir, that knowing the opinions expressed by the member for North Norfolk in the past, the people of Ontario will have a very grave suspicion as to the Canadianism of any policy that is enthusiastically supported by that hon. gentleman, and they have very good reason for that suspicion. Only two or three months ago we had a case tried in the courts of the province of Ontario. It was a case against the province of Ontario brought by the lumbermen of Michigan, who hoped to compel the government of that province to pay some millions of dollars damages for the adoption of a Canadian policy—which, I may say by the way, was forced upon them by Mr. Whitney and his followers; and when that case came for trial, the first man whom the Michigan lumbermen put in the box to prove their contention and to rob the treasury of the province of Ontario was the member for North Norfolk. The hon. gentleman pushes his Canadianism when it costs him nothing; he does not push it when it costs him something. A few years ago we were discussing in this House the question of reciprocity in wrecking, and the hon. member for North Norfolk was opposed to it, while being in favour of every other kind of reciprocity; and during the debate it was established that the why and the wherefore of the hon. gentleman's Canadianism was the fact that he himself possessed a wrecking plant which would have been interfered with had reciprocity in wrecking been established between the two countries.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. MILLS. And it worked on Sundays, too.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman surely must have reason for his Canadianism and his support of the government policy on the present occasion; and I see it suggested in the press that his reason is not an unselfish one. We hear that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has gone away for his health, and perhaps it occurs to the mind of the hon. member for North Norfolk that by giving that humble and humiliating support to the government of the day, by reaching to expertness in the use of those vinegar-steeped adjectives which have characterized the speeches of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) for many years, and by making himself a very good second of the hon. member for South Oxford, in the science of the acrobat profession, he may take the place of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the government. The hon. gentleman brought forward some arguments to which I shall refer as I deal with the subjects in their proper order, and I venture to say that they will cause no little surprise to the members of the House who had not the pleasure of listening to him last night. When the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce addressed the House the other evening, in that modest manner of his, to which we are accustomed, he chided the ex-Minister of Finance for want of knowledge, want of ability, and took occasion to say that the ex-Minister of Finance had occupied fifty-five mortal pages of Hansard. Well, Sir, it is an extraordinary coincidence that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce occupied exactly fifty-five pages himself. Evidently knowing that in quality his speech was inferior to that of the ex-Minister of Finance, he struggled—and Heaven knows the House will never forget how hard he struggled—to supply in quantity what it lacked in quality, and to reach the fifty-five page limit. He stated to the ex-Minister of Finance that there was a very well-known declaration in the sacred book that we should hereafter have to give an account of every idle word used in this life. The hon. gentleman's caution must come home to himself, and I do not think that his chances, upon his final examination, will be the better for the reason of his having attributed to Solomon what belongs to Job. And if the hon. gentleman were here, I would like to give him, in view of the immodest exhibition which he made of his own opinion that he possessed great and superior knowledge, another quotation from his favourite author, words used when Job said to the men who bored him by the tendering of their advice: 'No doubt ye are the people and wisdom will die with you.'

Well, the hon. gentleman went on to give a poetical quotation, which was intended:

to be perfectly crushing, to the ex-Minister of Finance, which, he said, came from the Idylls of the King. Just a moment before, the hon. gentleman had been discussing a chapter in Locke, where that great philosopher had been discussing the wonderful and unseen influence of the association of ideas. The Minister of Trade and Commerce must have been under the spell of that influence himself, for instead of his poetical quotation coming from the Idylls of the King, it came from a poem known as 'The Grandmother.' And, it did, Sir, appear to me eminently fitting that the old lady, who in younger days, had dispensed sweets to these gentlemen opposite, when their house was not nearly so well furnished and their larder was not nearly so well supplied as it is now, should feel that his position as grandmother had been usurped by a much younger—old lady I was going to say—but a much younger gentleman in the person of the Minister of Finance, and that he, himself, in his old days, had largely been forgotten and crowded out. Would the members of the government permit me to give a quotation from Tennyson, too, which, I think, will apply to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, who, simply for the purpose of receiving the emoluments, hangs on to a position which he himself said some years ago should be abolished, because there was no earthly use for it. He has many sharp turns to make. He has many times each day to stultify himself, but with Tennyson he consoles himself.

'Tis the jingle of the guinea Helps the hurt that honour feels.'

The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce never forgets 1874 to 1878. He was bound to go back to that period, and did go back to it, and gave us some interesting information. He said: 'It is true we had hard times in Canada between 1874 and 1878, but there were hard times all over the world then, and I tell hon. gentlemen that the hard times in the world from 1892 to 1896, were like the hills of the Gatineau, compared with the Rocky Mountains, as compared with the hard times between 1874 and 1878.' Well, Mr. Speaker, I took occasion to look up Bradstreet's record to see how correct the hon. gentleman was, and I see that in the United States, between 1875 and 1878, the average liabilities of failures was $205,307,283, and between 1893 and 1896, the average was $239,479,510, or $34,000,000 a year more between 1893 and 1896, than between 1874 and 1878. That settles the fact conclusively as to which was the more disastrous period financially upon this continent. And, how did Canada stand comparatively in these periods? From 1875 to 1878, Canada had failures to the extent of an average of $25,947,750 per year, while from 1893 to 1896, she had only an average of failures of $16,100,902, or a decrease as compared with 1874 to 1878 of no less than nine million per year. Take the worst year, if you will, of these two periods, and you find that in 1878, under hon. gentlemen opposite, the failures in Canada totalled one-tenth as much liabilities as the failures of the United States, and in 1893, they had sunken to one-thirtieth. Does it need any other demonstration upon which to found the statement of a financial newspaper made 'that the one pleasing sight on this American continent, in that terrible time of depression of 1893, was Canada, under the policy of the Conservative party, standing upright, like a chimney amid the ruins of a burnt factory.'

The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce made a strong point, which was cheered by hon. gentlemen opposite, when he said that the trade of Canada is to-day, per head, actually twice what the trade of the United States is. Does the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce remember the years when he said Canada was being bled white, that it was being ruined, that it was travelling rapidly on the road to financial destruction? The trade, per head, of Canada in 1893, was $50, while the trade, per head, of the United States, in that year, was $25—the same ratio of 100 per cent more in Canada than in the United States, the same proportion of excess as the hon. gentleman now boasts of in 1900, as being the result of the policy of the present government.

Now, the hon. gentleman returned to that favourite subject of his, the exodus; and what he did not say upon it was said by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), when he came to deal with it. And the argument of the Minister of Customs was: We are doing splendidly; the settlers' effects coming in are increasing, and the household goods we are exporting are decreasing. Now, let us take 1899—the settlers' effects that came into Canada in that year were valued at $2,183,861, and the household goods which were exported were valued at $963,625—and, by the way, where there is $963,625 worth of household goods going out, there must be some exodus—the difference in favour of Canada being $1,220,236. Now, what about 1894, which, the Minister of Trade and Commerce says, was the worst year in our record? The settlers' effects which came in that year amounted to $2,665,893, and the household goods which were exported were $940,709, a difference in favour of Canada of $1,725,184, as against $1,220,236 in 1899. The cry of these gentlemen as to the exodus was the cry of office seekers. It never had any sense in it, and it injured Canada severely. I am only quoting these figures, Sir, to show how senseless was the bellowings of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his ilk when they grasped at this cry to injure their opponents—not caring how much injury was done to the country.

Now, the hon Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), when he was pleased to make his budget speech, added, for the information of the House, some very interesting tables. They are what might be called tables at sight—illustrations, so to speak. And I hope that every Conservative in the country will read them, for they are a commentary upon these hon. gentlemen's record as statesmen in this country. There are some omissions, to which I wish to refer in a moment; but, in the meantime, I wish to point out some admirable things in these tables. Those who look at them find that the deposits in chartered banks in 1874 amounted to $65,000,000, and, after four years of Grit statesmanship, they amounted to $62,000,000, while, after a few years of Conservative rule, the deposits in chartered banks increased to $185,000,000. They find that in 1874, the amount in the savings banks was $14,000,000, and in 1878, under Grit rule, they were still $14,000,000; while in 1896, the amount had increased to $85,000,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What were they in 1899?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have not the figures here; but, no doubt, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) will be able to give them. The hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce went back to 1874—1878, and I am following him there. Then, let us take the discounts in banks—in 1874, they amounted to $135,000,000; in 1879, they were $110,000,000, and in 1896, they had increased to $228,000,000. The deposits made with loan companies in 1879 were $9,500,000, and in 1896, $19,000,000. The failures in Canada in 1875 to 1878 averaged $27,000,000 per annum in liabilities, while in 1893, they had fallen to $14,000,000. At confederation, there were 2,278 miles of railway in operation. Under Liberal rule since that time 3,149 miles had been added, and during the Conservative regime the railways built amounted to 12,233 miles, as against 3,149 miles under the Liberals—not a very good showing for gentlemen who claimed to be nation-builders and empire-makers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How many years in each case?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That depended on the will of the people. The first term of Liberal rule was too long for the people; and I fancy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has had about all the years he will have in this term, and that very shortly, hereafter other gentlemen will make these statistics and publish these tables.

Now, as I have said, there are some notable omissions from these tables. When I come to examine these tables, I notice there is no column for debt; there is no column for expenditure, no column which would show that extravagant increases under hon. gentlemen opposite—but that is excusable, because there was no room on the page, the column was so long. I trust that when the hon. Minister of Finance republishes these tables of last year, he will add tables to illustrate the debt and expenditure; and, if the suggestion be not out of place, I would suggest that he add to these tables a picture of the Minister of Trade and Commerce—two pictures, in fact—one showing the Minister of Trade and Commerce out of luck and one showing that hon. gentleman in luck; because, for all time, these pictures will illustrate the disinterestedness and unselfishness of Liberal statesmen in this country.

I do not intend to go into details in regard to the expenditure, but in order to make the facts which I am presenting somewhat connected, I desire to repeat some figures. Robbed of all special pleadings and special explanations, the facts are that in 1896 we spent $36,969,759, and in 1899, we spent $41,903,502, or an increase of $4,933,750. This is on consolidated revenue account alone. The per capita expenditure was, in 1896, $8.14, and in 1899, $9.72, or about one dollar and fifty-eight cents more for each man, woman and child in Canada or about nine per family. Oh, says the Minister of Trade and Commerce, there is a great difference, though! There is a difference, and what is it? The difference is that the hon. gentleman is in power now, and he was out of power in 1896; and he believes with the late lamented Hosea Bigelow, whom he has quoted very frequently in this House:

I do b'lieve the people want
A tax on teas and coffees;
And nothin' ain't extravagant,
Pervidin' I'm in offis.

The hon. gentleman may be satisfied, but the people of this country are not satisfied. I would like to read to him the opinion of a paper which the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Burnett) will bear me out in saying, is one of the strongest Liberal papers in the Dominion of Canada; I mean the Oshawa Reformer—its name suggested its politics. On August 25, 1899, that journal expressed this opinion upon the expenditure of the Liberal government:

The government has done many good things, but, notwithstanding, the public expense is altogether too high and out of all proportion to the means of the Canadian public. The expenditure is growing at far too rapid a pace. The government might as well understand this at first as at last, that the financial part of their undertakings is not in keeping with their professions and that they are not approved by the people of Canada.

There is no gentleman in this House who will not say that that paper is one of the strongest Liberal papers in this country. Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Finance wonder at what it says when he remembers the cries of extravagance which hon. gentlemen opposite raised before we went out of office. I was amazed when, the other day, instead of charging extravagance against the ex-Minister of Finance, he described as the parsimony of the ex-Minister of Finance in starving the public works of this country. Well, I am informed that no such charge can be brought against the present Minister of Finance. Certainly, no such charge can be brought by his own constituents at any rate against a gentleman who, I am told, asked this House last year to vote money for fourteen harbours in the constituency which he represents himself, and for 173 miles of railway in which his constituency is more or less interested. Certainly, if parsimony belonged to the ex-Minister of Finance, it does not belong to the gentleman who occupies that place at the present time, at least for the riding where he hopes to be elected again.

Now, Sir, as to taxation. In 1896 the customs taxation of Canada was $3.94 per head; and in 1899, $4.84; and it will need more than all the thunder of the Minister of Customs, and all the poetical quotations of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and all the sunny smiles of the Prime Minister of this country, to make the people of Canada believe that they are not taxed more than they were in 1896. The Minister of Customs says, though, that they are saving a great deal to the farmers of Canada upon agricultural implements and tools of various kinds.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is a joke.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think it was a joke, I think it was really intended to be taken in earnest. But there is not a farmer in Canada who will not believe that it is a species of humour of which the hon. gentleman has attempted to be guilty. He gives in parallel columns what the duty would have been in 1896 and what it is in 1899. But I will read the whole table showing the saving to the farmers according to his figures:

Farm and field rollers.....	$ 16
Pronged forks	1,095
Hay tedders	35
Hoes	250
Hay knives	10
Manure spreaders	35
Post-hole diggers	28
Potato diggers	34
Rakes	490
Scythes, snaths, sickles, reaping hooks...	3,736
Spades, shovels, &c.....	2,000
All other agricultural implements.....	2,207
Wind-mills	1,800
Threshers and separators.....	3,600
All other portable machinery.....	4,974
Wire fencing, &c.	3,200
Stoves	3,300
Axes	4,100
Saws	1,800
Files and rasps	4,200

Adzes, cleavers, hatchets, hammers, picks, mattocks
Tools, hand or machine 29,000

On cutlery $19,000 is paid more than in 1896, his table shows.

Altogether, $87,602, which he says he has saved to the farmers of this country upon these articles. Now, I want to make a calculation. The farmers did not use all these stoves. I think out of the 3,200, it is fair to take 1,500 for other people. I am taking his own figures, and do not question their accuracy for this argument. He says that $4,100 were saved on axes. Well, I think probably the lumbermen will use half of them, and I will take $2,000 off that figure. Then $1,000 were saved on saws. I suppose the mechanics will use half of these, and I will take half away. Files and rasps, farmers do not use in most cases, and I take them all away. And so I go on with the rest of the list, taking out what I think very fairly may be said to have been used by other classes of people, and I find that for all Canada, according to the hon. gentleman's own figures, he has saved to the farmers of this country $53,000 on these articles. Now, then, there are, according to the returns of the Department of Agriculture, 416,600 farmers in Canada, and taking his own figures, which the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has shown to be absolutely astray and misleading, he has saved to the farmers of this country exactly 12 cents each. There are six members in each family on the average, which is 2 cents each. But then, when you come to figure up what has been undoubtedly demonstrated to this House, that on the one item of coal oil alone the consumers of Canada are paying about $600,000 more than they did in 1896, 12 cents appears at a great disadvantage. And yet, after giving these figures, the hon. gentleman, in a voice that would waken sleeping generations, says: This is the most magnificent policy which the parliament of Canada has ever passed.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why did you leave out barbed wire and binder twine?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I just took the table which the hon. gentleman gave himself. I am afraid the hon. gentleman did not like to put barbed wire and binder twine in, because they would not look well just now. The hon. gentleman says he relieved the farmers of the price of binder twine. Will he tell us how much percentage on the stock was paid by the Brantford Binder Twine Company? Will he tell us that any industry that is run under fair rules of competition in this country, can pay 100 per cent to the men investing their money in it? Yet that is what the stockholders of the Brantford Binder Twine works got last year. A man who had $500 in stock got $500 of dividend, and the farmers of Canada paid it, and they paid it because this gentleman's government promoted and aided that combination, and made it possible for it to squeeze the farmers to this extent.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Even so, that would not justify you leaving it out.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It would not justify the hon. gentleman leaving it out, and I took his table just as I found it. At least I intended to. If I am mistaken I shall gladly stand corrected. Now, the hon. gentleman had a good deal to say about a surplus, he said that the surplus was $4,837,749. Now, what is a surplus? A surplus is what is saved over after the necessary expenditure has been met out of ordinary income. In order to know whether we are exactly right in our comparisons, we must know whether the same policy has been pursued as was pursued in the past. I am rather astonished at the Minister of Finance who made this statement in his budget speech:

Let it be clearly understood that the accounts of the government, as respects these two classes of expenditure—

The consolidated revenue fund and capital account.

—are kept to-day exactly as they were in former times; and therefore the comparisons we make are those we have a right to make with the expenditures of former administrations.

Sir, I dispute that in the most emphatic manner. Two years ago we discussed Intercolonial Railway matters in this House. I will not turn up the debate now, but I will if the hon. gentleman wishes to see it. The Minister of Railways and Canals was asking us to vote his estimates, and what did we prove in this House? We proved, what the hon. gentleman had to admit, that the reconstruction of bridges, the repairs of bridges, the replacement of bridges, done by this government, were being charged up to capital, while the hon. gentleman was compelled to admit that in 1896, and previous to that time, they had been charged up to revenue account alone. We cautioned the hon. gentleman, we warned him, that, when he was making that change, in the way of voting that money, he was destroying for all time to come the figures, so far as comparisons between different years, as regards expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, on consolidated fund account are concerned. And then, too, what does the hon. gentleman do in order to make a good comparison with the last year of my hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster)? He charges up, to 1896, $2,394,000 of indebtedness assumed by this government, of the North Shore Railway Company in 1882, which has not been paid, which was not paid by the past government, and which is not paid to-day. What did we do? We paid each year, the interest on it, and the hon. gentleman is doing just the same thing. He is doing just the same thing, and yet, he charged up to 1896, not only the payment of $2,394,000 of capital, but the interest as well, in order to make the comparison show well for himself, as affecting his own expenditure. Sir, here is an illustration. The hon. gentleman got some running rights over the Grand Trunk Railway in 1898. We are paying for that $140,000 a year. If we charge up that $2,394,000, which we did not pay, en bloc, and upon which we are paying the interest annually, it would neither be honesty, nor good bookkeeping nor fair-play, not to charge up the whole sum which we became responsible to the Grand Trunk Railway for in 1898. And what would that amount be? Capitalized, Sir, at 2½ per cent it would be between five and six million, which, if we are to charge up the $2,394,000 in 1896, should be capitalized and charged up to 1898. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), upon being challenged, when he was discussing it, went around the question, and never attempted to answer that challenge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is all the difference in the world between the two.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the difference? There is no difference at all, the one being the assumption by the Dominion of a debt owed by another party, on which we are paying the interest, while, in the other case, the hon. gentlemen made the debt themselves, and paid the interest on it. If there is any material difference between the two, I should like the hon. gentleman to explain it. After all, are these surpluses good things? I think I see the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), in 1883, pounding this desk at which the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), is sitting now.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, it was the next one.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The next one? Well, it is a little more used up than this one. What did the hon. gentleman say in 1883?

When the government find that they have beyond doubt a surplus, when they can calculate to a certainty on having one, it is their bounden duty to reduce taxation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is what we did.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding), tell us where he did it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In our 33½ per cent reduction in the tariff.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We shall see about that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson), continues:

It is no part of the duty of the Finance Minister to extract more money out of the pockets of the people than is absolutely wanted to carry on public affairs.

Fancy—

Said he—

—what would be said of a Chancellor of the Exchequer in England if he could not estimate the requirements of the public service nearer than $2,000,000. He would be ridiculed as unable to grasp the financial conditions of the country.

In regard to the reduction of taxation how do these figures stand? The hon. ex-Minister of Finance did reduce the taxation. We have, at last—at long last—this admitted by hon. gentlemen opposite. We had it admitted by the hon. Minister of Customs the other night. He said: I admit that you reduced the taxation $5,900,000. The hon. gentlemen, instead of reducing the taxation, since they came into power, have, as I have shown, increased the taxation, and, as I want to show just a little further. In 1891, the customs taxation was $23,399,301. Then the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), began to reduce taxation. In 1893, the customs taxation was $20,984,003; in 1894, it was $19,198,114. He reduced the taxation again. In 1895, the customs taxation became $17,640,466. That is what I call the reduction of taxation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is a reduction of revenue.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And the revenue comes from taxation. What did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding), do? When the present government came in the customs taxation was $19,000,000. He reformed his tariff so as to reduce taxation, he says, and lo, and behold, we have, this year, a customs taxation of no less than $25,000,000. My hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance, reduced it from $23,000,000 to $17,000,000, while the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding), increased it from $19,000,000, to over $25,000,000. But, say the hon. gentlemen who compose the government, and the hon. members who support them: We have always guarded the interests of the people in the expenditure of this money; we are doing nothing of a political kind, but doing all for the public good. I want to say just a word or two as to the comments of a newspaper published in the city of Montreal, which is a tolerably strong friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. That newspaper discusses the question of the appointment of the harbour master in Montreal. It is the Montreal Witness, and it is a tolerably strong supporter, no better in the city of Montreal, of hon. gentlemen opposite. The Montreal Witness goes on to say that: Under the old regime, the harbour master got $3,400 of a salary, and Captain Bourassa, his assistant, $1,000, or in all, $4,400. I am giving this as an instance of how hon. gentlemen are working in the public service. While a new appointee, a Liberal helper, a worker, a gentleman who had to be satisfied by hon. gentlemen opposite, is getting $3,000 a year, his assistant gets $2,500. And why, says the Witness: Because the harbour master who was appointed, knows nothing about the business, and had to have a man to perform the duties, and in order to retain his assistant and make him look after the duties of the office, his salary had to be increased to $2,500 a year, making a charge of $5,500 upon the shipping of the port of Montreal, as against $4,400 under the old regime. Of that large increase the Witness says:

Therefore the shipping interest of Montreal pays so much more than in what the Liberals would call the palmiest days of Tory corruption.

As the individual cannot offend against common honesty with impunity, so the government will hardly escape some retribution for such flagrant offences against the public trust as these.

Hon. gentlemen will say that it is the harbour board, but the harbour board is a creature of this government, according to the statement of the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine). He said when challenged in regard to the position he had taken: I cannot do anything else; I must vote for this man, because it is a political appointment. In other words, politics first, business second, at the expense of the shipping trade of the port of Montreal. Now, then, what does the Witness say further?

Captain Howard was a fit man; James McShane is not. Deputations should be appointed to protest against such an appointment. By this means the government might be compelled to submit to reason. . . . It is a glaring act on the part of the government.

We know of just such instances all through Canada where the public interests are being neglected for the support of hon. gentlemen opposite. I would like to point out another matter in connection with the trade of Montreal. We had a discussion with regard to elevators in this House last year. We had the discussion as to whether elevators should be built by the government or whether they should be built by individuals. We had an application made by a Buffalo syndicate for the best place in the harbour of Montreal and for the best place in the harbour of Port Colborne to build elevators through which the wheat carried on our canals would have to go. Well, that application was refused by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), who had given it out as his policy: that they should be government elevators for the protection of the people of Canada. He was decided. He was strong upon that question. But at once a member of the Ontario government bobs up serenely. He joins the syndicate; he waits upon the Minister of Public Works, and the Minister of Public Works changes his opinion and hands over to the Buffalo syndicate the best part of the harbour at Montreal, and the best part of the harbour at Port Colborne, and so these men are going on with that great elevator scheme at the present time. Are there any dangers from it? Let the hon member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), a tolerably strong supporter of the government, the chief whip of the party, indeed, and a practical transportation man; let him say what he thinks with regard to that subject. On page 9263 of the Hansard, in 1899, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) said this:

I would like to point out to the government of the day the danger of elevators becoming the property of private individuals. It would be quite within the mark for any company in Buffalo to erect an immense elevator in the harbour of Port Colborne, getting a site from the government; getting one also in Montreal, and they could practically tie up all the work which the government has constructed at an expenditure of millions of dollars, by making the tolls so excessive that the grain would have to be shipped via Buffalo instead of via the Welland Canal.

Mr. GIBSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) gives assent to it, and I knew he would. He knows the danger from this policy. He dreads the results which may flow from it, and he is right. It is one of the most dangerous embargoes which has been placed on the transportation trade of this country, and it was done by wirepulling and not in the public interest, nor in the interest of the trade and commerce of Canada.

Now, Sir, the Prime Minister made an explanation in Winnipeg with regard to the expenditure. He is always happy in his illustrations. I think just then he was giving a promise with regard to the prohibition question, and he said to the people:

You have it in your own hands; our policy is to give a plebiscite, and if the people vote for prohibition they must have it.

They voted, but they have not got it. What was the hon. gentleman's illustration? He will remember it I am sure. He said this:

In olden days there was a king, one of whose subjects owned a donkey, and the king said to his subject: Can you teach the donkey to speak, and the subject said he could. The king said: I will give you ten years to teach the donkey to speak, and if at the end of ten years you cannot get the donkey to speak, then off goes your head. The subject accepted the terms, and one of his friends said to him: But why did you accept such onerous terms as that? Oh, he said, it makes no difference, for at the end of ten years either the king or the donkey or myself will be dead.

Well, Mr. Speaker, on the prohibition question, neither the king, nor the donkey, nor himself is dead, but it appears to me, that on that as well as upon the expenditure somebody's head will come off when this parliament is ended and the people have a chance to speak at the polls.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

There are many things upon which the government ought to be congratulated. They ought to be congratulated upon their good luck, the Minister of Trade and Commerce says. Yes, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) ought to be congratulated on being able to reap where others have sown. I congratulate the government (and I am not anxious to spare my congratulations), upon having secured for Canada a place for her securities in the charmed circle (as the Minister of Trade and Commerce told us) of the trusts in Great Britain. I not only congratulate him on having got that for Canada, but I congratulate him in this instance specifically on having been able to reap where the labours of others sowed years ago for Canada and Canadian interests. In 1889 an order in council was passed by the Canadian government calling for this justice to the securities of Canada. That order in council—the hon. gentleman will see if he looks up the records of his department—was transmitted to the present leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) who was then Canada's representative at home. And what did Sir Charles Tupper do? He called together the representatives of all the colonies and they waited upon the Treasury Board of the Imperial government with reference to this question of Canadian securities. The Treasury Board heard their presentation of the case and agreed to appoint a committee to deal with that subject. Fortunately, I have here the minute of the Treasury Board on that matter, and here it is:

Mr. CLARKE. What are you quoting from?

Mr. MONTAGUE. From the minute of the Imperial Treasury Board laid upon the Table of the House of Lords in response to a motion in that august body. This minute of the Treasury Board is dated November 1, 1889. The minute says that on July 9, the board had received representations from Sir Charles Tupper and other colonial representatives upon the question of the colonial securities. The Lord Chancellor deals with several phases of the question, and then goes on to say that they had decided to appoint a committee to deal with the subject, and then adds:

'But from communications which have taken place since last July he learns that the Agents General of the Colonies have elected to be represented on such committee by Sir Charles Tupper, Sir F. D. Bell and Sir Graham Berry, that the Lord Chancellor has consented to be represented by Mr. Muir Mackenzie; that Mr. Greene, one of the directors of the Bank of England, had been good enough to place his services at the disposal of the government. The Chancellor of the Exchequer therefore recommends that a committee be now appointed consisting of Sir Charles Tupper, Sir F. D. Bell, Sir Graham Berry, representing the colonies; Mr. Green, the Bank of England; Mr. Mackenzie, the Lord Chancellor; Mr. Bramston, the Colonial Office; Mr. E. W. Hamilton, the Treasury; and that Mr. Jenkyns, parliamentary draughtsman, should be asked to serve on that committee.

What did that committee do? They met and discussed this question—the Imperial government represented, the Bank of England represented, the Treasury Board represented, the colonies represented, the Lord Chancellor represented, the colonial department represented. That committee, Sir, made a report, and that report was in the form of a Bill to legalize the investments of trusts funds in these colonial securities, the Bill being drawn up by Mr. Jenkyns, parliamentary draughtsman who was asked to serve upon the committee for the specific purpose of draughting their conclusions into a Bill which would be introduced into the Imperial parliament. That Bill I now hold in my hand. It had all been agreed to by the Imperial authorities, but unfortunately at the moment came the crash in Australia, which, as hon. gentlemen know, was a most severe one, and for the moment the matter had to be dropped. Let us inquire, to whom is the credit for this due? The credit is due to the present leader of the opposition, who took hold of this matter, who had sufficient influence and standing with the Imperial authorities to press successfully upon them the high standard at which Canada's credit had reached. And let me ask the hon. gentleman whether we could ever have influenced the Imperial authorities with regard to this question if the credit of Canada had remained where it was when hon. gentlemen opposite went out of office, with our 4 per cents considerably below par, selling only at 90 or thereabouts, whereas, when the ex-Minister of Finance went out of office, in 1896, our 3 per cents were selling at a premium of 7 or 8 per cent. That is, Sir, briefly to say that when hon. gentleman left office in 1878, the bonds of Canada paying 4 per cent were only worth 90 cents upon the dollar, while in 1896, when the Conservative party left office, the bonds of Canada paying not 4 per cent but 3 per cent interest were worth 107 to 108 cents upon the dollar. I should like to ask the hon. Finance Minister whether he claims any credit for establishing the credit of Canada in the Imperial money market. The credit of Canada reached its high water mark during the career of the Conservative government of this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I claim no credit for it, but as a matter of fact the 2½ per cent loan placed by the present government was the best loan ever placed by the Dominion of Canada. I have not attempted to make any political capital on that ground, but my hon. friend should not make the statement he does.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As I understand, the hon. gentleman borrowed money at about 2½ per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When did any other government borrow for less?

Mr. MONTAGUE. We borrowed for 28-10ths per cent, which is pretty near the same figure, just a little less. The hon. gentleman cannot claim credit for raising the credit of Canada to that pitch, for our 3 per cents are four or five points lower to-day than they were in 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman makes a comparison with the English consols, he will find that Canadian credit stands relatively higher to-day than ever before.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend is trying to get out of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but my hon. friend is making a statement of fact, which I think he will find on inquiry to be wrong. He says that the credit of Canada reached its high water mark under the late government. In that he is mistaken, though in saying so I am not throwing any discredit on the late government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman admits that it was under the Conservative regime that the credit of Canada in the money market of Great Britain went up to such a pitch that our 3 per cents were selling at 107 or 108.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not remember the quotations.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman had better look them up, and he will find that that is the case.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That does not touch the statement which the hon. gentleman made, namely, that the credit of Canada reached its high water mark under the late government. That is the only point I am discussing, and on that the hon. gentleman is mistaken. The figure at which our 3 per cents were selling at the time does not affect the question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It affects the question to this extent, that had it not been for the fact that the credit of Canada had reached that high water mark, the hon. gentleman would not have been able to borrow money afterwards at so low a rate as he did.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is about as appropriate as it would be for my hon. friend to say that if Christopher Columbus had not discovered America—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, if Christopher Columbus came back now, he would never recognize the Liberal party. The bare facts which I have mentioned tell that under Conservative government Canada's credit climbed to a most enviable place in the money market of the world. But I want to point out that just at the time the credit of Canada was reaching that high point, and when Sir Charles Tupper was practically securing those advantages from the Imperial government, another agency was at work. It was the agency of the hon. gentleman who sits next to the Finance Minister—the agency of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); and what was he doing? Promoting Canadian credit? No; he was writing to the London Economist, telling the people of England that they had better look out for Canadian securities, because Canada was being ruined and her people were being bled white, and the country was on the road to destruction. Another thing: I want to ask my hon. friend in all candour whether he thinks that in 1893 we would have been in such a good position as we were had we adopted the policy of unrestricted reciprocity in 1891. We had an election in this country in 1891. It was the election in which the hon. gentleman and his friends were supporting unrestricted reciprocity with the United States of America.

Mr. McMILLAN. And what was the election brought on for, but for the government then in power to get authority to go down to Washington to discuss that very question?

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend is disturbed at these facts.

Mr. McMILLAN. Not a bit. I am disturbed at statements that are not facts.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask the hon. Minister of Finance if he will answer the question?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend does not seriously want me to answer that question. He asks me whether I think the position of Canada would have been as good in 1893 if the Liberal party had won in 1891. He would not take my judgment on that question, I am sure. I believe Canada would have been in a better position.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am delighted at the hon. gentleman's answer. What he has stated is that this country would have been in a better position in 1893 if unrestricted reciprocity had carried in 1891, with discrimination against Great Britain. The opinion he expresses is not the true and heartfelt opinion of two men who sit on his own side of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You do not know that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentlemen are there to answer for themselves. Why, Sir, the Minister of Finance says we would have been better off under unrestricted reciprocity. Why, then, are the men behind him ashamed to admit that they ever supported that policy? We should have had, as the hon. gentleman knows now, and as every business man in Canada knows now, the same sort of disastrous financial panic as they had in Australia.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Now, while we are touching the question of unrestricted reciprocity, I should like to have a word with my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). At his innocence I am greatly astonished. The hon. gentleman sat for many years on this side of the House; he campaigned in many parts of Ontario; and yet he had—I will not say the hardihood, but the assumption to get up here the other night and say that his party so far as he knew never had advocated the absolute removal of the restrictions on trade between this country and the United States. He said: 'I always thought that we should have a free list and a dutiable list, that there would be some things on which we could agree, and other things on which we could not agree, and that is the policy of the Liberal party of Canada.' I want to ask the hon. gentleman's friends behind him whether they corroborate that statement. As my leader suggests, why did the Hon. Edward Blake leave them if it was only an ordinary reciprocity that they advocated? Is there a gentleman on the other side of the House who was engaged in that campaign of 1891, who does not know that the cry of hon. gentlemen opposite from the greatest to the smallest was for absolutely unrestricted trade between this country and the United States of America—continental free trade, unrestricted reciprocity? Let me tell the hon. Minister of Customs what his leader said.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What did your leader want?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I shall come to that in a moment. He wanted a limited reciprocity which would give us a quid pro quo, but which would leave us in control of our own tariff, and with no discrimination against Great Britain. Of all the little attempts to answer an argument, the smallest is the attempt of my hon. friend to saddle on the gentlemen on this side of the House the policy which he is so ashamed of now that he declares he never supported it. What did the hon. gentleman say the other night? We proposed a broad treaty of reciprocity. 'I do not think anybody contemplated anything else than that there would be a scheduled list of goods upon which the parties might not be able to agree,' said he. One of his leaders said in Toronto, in September, 1899:

The policy which we advocate is the removal of every commercial barrier which exists between this country and the United States. The Liberal party, as long as I have anything to do with it, will stand by this policy. I am not expecting to win in a day, but am prepared to remain in the cool shades of opposition until this cause triumphs.

That is the speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The next year the hon. gentleman made another speech, in which he said 'the offer made by the government is a limited offer. Which government?' The government of the Conservative party he means. 'While our offer is of unlimited reciprocity.' All that pretty much disposes of my hon. friend's pretension.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It does not refer to the same thing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Here are the words of the hon. gentleman:

It is an offer of unlimited trade such as my hon. friend to my left proposes.

That was my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright).

My hon. friend has proved to the satisfaction of every one who will take a calm view of the matter that absolutely unlimited reciprocity is preferable to limited reciprocity.

No words could be stronger. If words mean anything, they mean that the policy of these gentlemen was the absolute removal of every barrier to trade between this country and the United States, and I say that if that policy had prevailed in 1891, this country would have been in the maelstrom of financial failure in 1893, just as were Australia and the United States.

But, there is another hon. gentleman who spoke on that question, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). The hon. Minister of Customs said that nobody in the Liberal party had ever advocated any such thing, so far as he knew. But, he must have heard this speech, because he is a tolerably good attendant in the House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think I said commercial union.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, unrestricted reciprocity, but, as the hon. gentleman mentions commercial union, I will, if he likes, read the description given by the hon. member for North Norfolk of commercial union too. They are both on the one page. As to unrestricted reciprocity the member for North Norfolk said:

I do not profess to speak for the world and all men. I speak for myself. I understand by unrestricted reciprocity an arrangement that would admit into the United States all the natural and manufactured productions of Canada, all the productions of Canada of any nature, character or name whatever, free of duty, and that the same thing would be given by the other country in return.

There is a definition which, I submit, is pretty clear, of absolutely unrestricted reciprocity, which the hon. gentleman said he never supported, and which was not the policy of his party, although every one in this country knows that it was in 1891. I come now to deal with another matter for the moment. The hon. Minister of Customs said, when discussing the question of industries:

The hon. gentlemen boast of having brought capital into this country. They boast of the millions invested in the iron industry through their policy. Where are these millions which they invested?

That is the question asked by the hon. gentleman. Let me tell him that some were invested in a town called Brantford, once represented by the hon. gentleman, but which rejected him in 1896.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was speaking of the iron industry.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman was speaking of general industries, and afterwards specified the iron industry. In the town of Brantford, which rejected the hon. gentleman in 1896, because it had no confidence in his policy, because it believed he was about to do what he said he would do, viz., uproot protection absolutely—in that town I am told that in 1878 the Massey-Harris Company employed 100 men, and in 1896, 400 men. The Waterous people employed 150 in 1878 in that same town, and 230 in 1896. The Buck stove works gave employment to 100 in 1878 and to 215 in 1896. The Cockshutt works had 10 men employed in 1878 and 70 in 1896. I am told that between 1878 and 1896 the bicycle works began with 300 men, a cotton mill was established with 250 men, a carriage works was removed from the United States with 150 men, a binder twine factory with 50 men, the Gould, Shapley & Muir Company with 100 men, and the Verity Plough works with 200 men.

I am told, too, that there is an industry in Brantford called the William Paterson Company (Limited), which makes biscuits, candies, pickles, jellies and jams, and in the history of the county of Brant, published in 1883, I find a paid notice written, of course, by the dictation of the firm themselves, giving a description of that business, in which there is this statement:

The Paterson business has doubled itself in the past five years, from 1878 to 1883, and has reached such dimensions that he is obliged to increase his facilities and enlarge his quarters.

Mr. COCHRANE. Have they reduced the duty on biscuits?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No. That would be disinterested patriotism. The high protection on these articles is kept up. I am told, too, that they have increased those quarters twice since 1883, so that, I think, so far as the hon. gentleman's locality is concerned, his answer is met by the record of his own business. Now, then, he asks where are the iron industries that were established under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite? I remember when those iron duties were put on in 1887. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce thundered against them. The then Finance Minister (Sir Charles Tupper) was abused right, left and centre by hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with those duties. It is true that the advantage resulting from them was not so great for the time, but the day came when we were able to take advantage of them. There came a time, in 1894, when the city of Hamilton began a great iron industry. When I made that announcement, seated where the hon. Minister of Customs is now, that there was about to be erected in Hamilton an iron industry which would expend $600,000, and employ some 200 or 300 men, the hon. member for North Norfolk and the hon. Minister of Customs laughed so that you could hear them all over the Chamber. I remember very well, because I took occasion to stop and answer them. I need only refer to the member for Hamilton to-day to show that those works have not only been established, but are increasing their capacity, at an expense of $6,000,000. There is a great increase going on in other portions of Canada, as the Minister of Finance himself says, in connection with the iron industry.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I said it took place under us.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman knows very well that if he and his friends had had their way there would not have been a tariff and bounty under which the shadow of an iron industry could have been established in this country. He says that they did not come in under the Conservative party. If they did not, it was because capital is nervous, and is not anxious to invest where it might very shortly, by adverse legislation, be destroyed, and here was the announcement of the financial critic of hon. gentlemen opposite when those iron bounties were voted. The hon. member for South Oxford said:

I disapprove of the whole business altogether. For my part, I refuse to be bound by it, and I say, expressly for the benefit of the manufacturers, that I for one utterly refuse to be bound by any such proposition. I take the opportunity to protest against it in advance, so that parties hereafter, should there be a change in the policy on the part of the people, may not be able to say they never had any warning.

What does that mean? It means to say to every man who was likely to invest a dollar in Canada in the iron business: If we get into power, we will take off the bounties, we will do away with this protection, and will destroy your investment without regard to yourself or your capital. Under these circumstances you could not expect much capital to be invested in this country under the iron bounties and iron tariff. But there came a change. There came a time when hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, when it was demonstrated that they were not going to do as they said they would do; and then, Sir, capitalists were no longer nervous because they had confidence in the policy of hon. gentlemen who now sit on the opposition benches, and they were willing to invest their capital because the time had come, it was thought, when both parties were agreed upon the promotion and protection of Canadian interests and Canadian industries. Sir, if we had not given more protection and more bounties in 1887, we should to-day have no iron industries. More than that, Sir, if the hon. gentlemen between 1878 and 1896 had not by their never-ceasing howl against protection and their declaration if they ever got into power they would destroy it root and branch, we should have had many millions more, how many millions we shall never know, invested in Canadian enterprises. The hon. gentlemen prevented development, and they did it for party gain.

Now, I wish to say a few words on subjects of particular interest to the farmers of this country. Some men, Sir, are born too modest ever to be great;—but that is not the fact with regard to the members of the present government. And I think it is less the fact, perhaps, with regard to my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and his department than any other branch of the administration at the present time. Among the loudest boasts that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite, is the boast that they have done a great deal for the farmers of Canada, and first of all by appointing such a Minister of Agriculture. I am sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) is not here, because, I should like to refer to him in his presence rather than in his absence. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), at a meeting held in the province of Ontario, said this: I have given to you one of yourselves; I have given you a practical farmer. I have given you a horny-handed son of toil, to be your Minister of Agriculture. An hon. gentleman near me suggests that this was spoken at Orillia, but I think it was at Kincardine. At any rate, I have no desire to dispute the popularity of the Minister of Agriculture at five o'clock teas and other agricultural gatherings; but I submit that he can hardly be called a horny-handed son of toil, as he is described by the Prime Minister. The Minister of Agriculture boasts a great deal of his achievements. And I am prepared to admit that he is not without genius. We are told that there is a genius creative and a genius perceptive. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) has not much genius creative, but he has a good deal of genius perceptive and receptive; and he has done what hon. gentlemen opposite in other departments have sometimes failed to do—he has accepted what was done by his predecessors, and has had the good sense to continue the work. What can a government do for the farmers of Canada? In the first place, the government can make experiments for them at the public expense, it can establish experimental farms and experimental stations; then it can secure and preserve the markets for the farmers and can aid them in getting their produce to those markets as cheaply and in as good condition as possible; and, by proper regulation of the tariff, it can regulate to some extent the prices of articles which the farmer consumes. Now, I go back to the period between 1874 and 1878. I do not find any experimental farms in Canada. I do not find any experiments being made for the benefit of the farmer at the public expense. I do not find dairy commissioners at work or any interest taken on either branch of the dairying industry. But when I come to 1879 and thence onward, I find seed testing being carried on at experimental farms established by the Conservative party; I find seed being distributed in every portion of the country for the benefit of the farmers; I find manures being tested at the experimental farms for the benefit of the farmer; I find noxious weeds and insects being investigated, and the best means of limiting these evils developed at the experimental farm. I find the dairy industry being encouraged. I find the government establishing creameries, managing these creameries for the farmers, and marketing their products. All this goes on up to 1896. And I find no advance has taken place in these things from 1896 to the present year. The hon. gentleman continues the work, just as we had engaged in it long before he became Minister of Agriculture. Now, the Minister of Agriculture has been making some speeches in which he has taken credit for the relief of the depression in Canada by reason of the splendid condition of the dairying industry and of the facilities for cold storage—to which I shall refer in a moment. Now, I have here the report of the Minister of Agriculture published in 1897 and signed by himself. And what does that report deal with? It deals with the dairy industry in this country and shows what the government, the Conservative government, remember, has done for that industry. It takes one of the provinces, for instance, and I take that because it is a very good sample of the Dominion, because it is small and compact and you can grasp the figures in a moment, though what is true of the work which the Conservative party did for Prince Edward Island is true to a greater or lesser extent of what we did in every province, and especially the North-west and Manitoba. And not only do I take it for that reason, but I take it because it was virgin soil when we began in 1892, and therefore you can measure exactly what effect was produced. Here is what the report of 1897, signed by Sydney A. Fisher, says—and of course, the report refers to the work which the previous administration had done:

In Prince Edward Island the work of the dairying service was continued during 1896, but a less number of factories were managed by the agricultural and dairy commissioner than in 1895. In 1892 there was only one dairy station on the island. The building was put up by a joint stock company of farmers at New Perth. The Dominion government loaned the machinery to fit up that one factory on Prince Edward Island. All the cheese factories and creameries erected and equipped there since have been built and fitted up at the expense of joint stock companies of the farmers themselves. In 1893, eleven dairy stations were managed by the dairy commissioner. The farmers supplied the milk; a charge of 1½ cents per pound was made for manufacturing the cheese and marketing the same. After the cheese was sold, the proceeds, minus the manufacturing charge, were distributed to the patrons according to the quantity of milk which they furnished. In 1894 there were sixteen cheese factories and two creameries on the island; they were managed on similar terms. In 1895 there were twenty-eight cheese factories and two creameries, and they were managed on similar terms.

In other words, Sir, we, the Conservative party, when it administered the Department of Agriculture, found Prince Edward Island in 1892 without a dairy industry. We left it with 28 factories for cheese-making and two creameries in 1896, and exporting about $60,000 worth of dairy products to the markets of the world. That is a result of which we, Sir, are proud, and have reason to be proud. I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to deny the wonderful change we worked in the prosperity of that Island. Now, while I am touching on this matter—and I am sincerely regretful that the Minister of Agriculture is not present—I cannot allow a matter to escape me which has been submitted in the report of 1897. It is in regard to the 'Patent Record,' which is published for the Department of Agriculture. I read in this report of 1897, the following:

A change has been made in the manner of publishing the 'Patent Record,' which is now printed at the Government Printing Bureau, whereby the work is better and more economically done, the type, paper and illustrations being much superior to what they formerly were.

And the report adds, Sir, that a large saving is being effected. Now this is in the report signed by the Minister of Agriculture himself, and I submit to the House that what it is intended that the people of the country should think is that that change was made under the administration of the present Minister of Agriculture. The report is of 1897, and the change is mentioned without giving any dates. He simply says a change has been made, and so forth, and thereby great economies have been practised. Well, Sir, I pick up the report of the public printing and stationery for 1898, and I find there a report made by the Queen's Printer, who deals with this very subject of the change in the method of printing the Patent Record. This is what he says:

The work was taken into the Printing Bureau first in 1892.

The report of the Minister of Agriculture in 1897, says: A change has been made in the printing of the Patent Record, we have taken it out of the hands of a contractor, and we are having it done more efficiently at the Printing Bureau. Yet the change was made four years before the hon. gentleman took office at all, according to the report of Dr. Dawson, the Queen's Printer of Canada for 1898, published under the authority of this government.

Now, the next thing a government can do, is to secure and retain markets for the farmers of this country. On that point the Liberal party of Canada have a most unenviable record. They have never secured any market, and they have usually failed to keep the markets which naturally belong to our farmers. Let us see what took place between 1874 and 1878. In 1878, 2,071,513 bushels of oats came in free from the United States; of wheat, 1,519,703 bushels; of flour, 311,706 barrels; of lard, 2,345,807 pounds; of bacon, 2,825,169 pounds; of pork, 10,248,020 pounds; of corn, 3,400,562 bushels. These grains came in absolutely free. When we went to the border of the United States we had to pay a tax upon every pound of meat, upon every barrel of flour, upon every bushel of agricultural produce which we sold to that country. In other words, in 1878, Canada sold to the United States, $12,000,000 worth, on which she had to pay a tax of $4,000,000. The United States, under the regime of the hon. gentlemen in the same year, sold to Canada that year, $15,000,000 worth, and had not to pay 1 cent to get into our market. Between 1874 and 1879, we imported from the United States, $59,000,000 worth of agricultural produce free. 100,000 farmers petitioned to change that, and to hold our markets for ourselves, but the answer was given by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Mills), who declared that if the farmers lost the market, the railroads at least made money in carrying this produce which was imported into this country to take the place of produce which was raised by our own farmers. Sir, we changed that all in 1879. We said to the people of the United States: If you do not give us your markets you cannot have ours. And what did the present Minister of Agriculture say with regard to that a few years later? He thinks they were right between 1874 and 1878, for he says:

I am prepared to believe that the farmer can exist without protection. The protection which has since 1878 been given to our farmers is a delusion and a snare.

Sir, what do the farmers of Canada think of that opinion? Well, Sir, now we come to 1890. The ex-Minister of Finance had the question pressed upon him by many leading members of the Conservative party. It was found we were importing 33,000,000 pounds of lard, bacon, ham, shoulders and sides, from the United States. Why were we importing it? Prices were cheap there, and they could raise these products and ship them over here and undersell the Canadian farmer in our own market. Our duty was not high enough. What did we do? The Conservative government increased the duties, we put up the wall, and we put it up in spite of the protest of hon. gentlemen opposite. When the ex-Minister of Finance brought that tariff down, the hon. member for South Oxford, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), moved this resolution:

That the additional taxation now sought to be imposed will still further increase the burthens of the people.

And my successor, the present Minister of Agriculture, used these words:

This kind of protection, instead of helping the farmers, hurts them. The intention may be good, but the results will not be good. I do not believe the home market will do much for our farmers. How can this kind of policy help the export trade in meats? The thing is nonsense.

Now, let us see. I may say that six members of the present government, including the Minister of Customs, voted for that amendment, against retaining the market of Canada for the meats produced by the Canadian farmers. What was the result? In 1890, 33,000,000 pounds, as I have said, of these meats, came in. When the hon. gentlemen took office in 1896, there were only 5,000,000 pounds of meat coming in, in other words, we had given to the farmers of Canada a market to the extent of 28,000,000 pounds of meat for each of the years between 1890 and 1896. What was the result as regards the prediction of the present Minister of Agriculture, that it would not help the export trade? Why, Sir, it gave the farmers of this country their own markets, and the possession of these markets gave them confidence. It gave them encouragement to go into the raising of hogs, and the result was that whereas the export of this same kind of meats in 1891 was 8,000,000 pounds, in 1896 it had grown to 55,000,000 pounds, and Canadian meats were known in the largest and best markets of the world. We kept our own markets. We supplied them ourselves, and we encouraged the industry so that we reached out with millions of pounds to the other markets of the world. Sir, we continued to cultivate the home market and what we did in meats we did in every other produce which the farmer had to sell. In 1896 an estimate was brought down here by which we hoped to open depots for the sale of Canadian products in the great cities of London, Glasgow, Bristol, Liverpool and Dublin. We proposed to advertise those products of the farmer in the markets of Great Britain, to give him all the advantages of their excellence, and to spend the money of this country in putting those products of our Canadian farms in the best possible shape before the consumers of Great Britain. Well, hon. gentlemen need only look at the record to see that they would not allow a single dollar of that estimate to go through, and thus stopped the great scheme which would have been of immense benefit to the farmers of Canada. Now, as to what we did for the dairy industry in putting our dairy products upon the market of Great Britain, I want to give the opinion of the American Department of Agriculture. It was published in 1895, in the form of a circular of that department:

The department believes the dairy industry of the United States should receive immediate attention, and efforts should be made to improve its condition by collecting and distributing information on this subject, and in that matter educate dairymen. The results obtained in Canada—

Mind you, this was in 1895, one year before the hon. gentlemen took office.

—in this direction are very interesting and instructive. It is not many years ago that the dairy products of the United States were preferred to the Canadian products abroad, and brought a higher price. The Canadian government, however, began a systematic effort to educate the dairymen of the country, printed information was distributed, practical men were sent to demonstrate improved methods, and the importance of making a higher grade of products was constantly taught. The result of these systematic and persistent efforts has wrought such an improvement that Canadians have much enlarged their foreign market and secured better prices for their products.

I do not think that we could have a better testimony as to the nature of the work—and the result of that work too, Sir—which was being done by the Department of Agriculture under the predecessors of the hon. gentleman who now is in charge of that department. We are told by the hon. gentleman that we never increased the market for Canadian products in Great Britain. I would like the hon. Minister of Agriculture to look at the export of Canadian cattle to Great Britain, and I would like him to look at it for the year 1878, when we shipped a total of live cattle to Great Britain of 7,433 head, of a value of $686,700. The present hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and his colleagues, took up the question of getting Canadian cattle exceptional treatment in the markets of Great Britain. He secured the advantage that we had for a long time of our cattle going into the British market without embargo, and in 1891, the export of Canadian cattle was not 7,433 head, but it was 107,689 head, of a value of $8,425,396. The embargo was then put on, and it was from no fault of ours that that embargo was not removed. I see that the hon. gentleman, in his last report, tells many things which he did in the old land, but I do not see that he even discussed the question of the removal of the embargo against Canadian cattle. Well, there was a time when we gave this preference to Great Britain, when, if hon. gentlemen did not want to do a huckstering or a Jewing business as they said, they might very well have suggested to the Imperial authorities: You had better remove the embargo against Canadian cattle. They gave the preference, and they never made any such suggestion. The objection of the right hon. Prime Minister was that if he asked for anything in return he would be asking the people of England to desert free trade and go back to protection, but, on the contrary, if he had asked for the removal of the embargo, he would have been asking them to desert protection and to go back to free trade, because the embargo, as was admitted to me by a member of the Imperial government, was a domestic policy. They know our cattle are healthy. But, it is to please the farmers of Great Britain with whose cattle Canadian cattle come into competition that that policy is continued by them.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, no.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) says no; I say yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman knows nothing about the subject whatever.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know a great deal more about the subject than you.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman does not know what he is asserting. What is he saying? That our cattle are unhealthy! I speak of what I know—and of what I heard from the lips of a member of the Imperial government. The hon. Minister of Agriculture made a speech recently in the town of Sherbrooke. It was a speech in the Sherbrooke election, and that speech is reported in the Montreal Herald. I see that the hon. gentleman was given a very warm reception, that three beautiful little ladies stepped forward with flowers, and that each was rewarded with a kiss by the gallant bachelor Minister of Agriculture. This pleasing circumstance should have put the hon. Minister of Agriculture in a sufficiently good humour, to, at least, have not misrepresented his opponents, but, I am afraid that it did not have any influence upon him whatever. What does he say to the people of Sherbrooke? He says: If you now have a market of $3,000,000 in the United States of America, it is due to my efforts, whereas Dr. Montague tried for three years to remove these quarantine regulations and failed. I was only in the Department of Agriculture for six months. I must have been interfering with some one else's duties, but, the hon. gentleman is quite wide of the mark, because nobody ever tried to secure the removal of these quarantine regulations against us in the United States of America. Why were these quarantine regulations placed against us in the United States?

They were placed against us because we had a ninety days quarantine against them. We were the aggressors, and why? Because, to hold our free entry into the markets of Great Britain, to secure that market without an embargo being placed against us, we made a solemn compact with Great Britain that we would keep a ninety days quarantine against American cattle. We could have got the quarantine removed at any single moment we liked, but we did not attempt to get it removed, and we did not attempt to get it removed, because we were anxious to keep the compact that secured us a still greater market, the market of Great Britain, which we had the right to enter upon terms which we had obtained some years before, and remember this, Sir, hon. gentlemen never attacked us for keeping that quarantine up against the United States. They attacked us for not making it stricter and more severe. They hounded us because they said we were neglecting it. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman says: I have at last secured this great boon to you, a boon which we could have got in very short time providing we had abandoned the hope of securing the removal of the embargo which was against us in Great Britain. By the way, I may remark here, that, when the Prime Minister was up in the province of Ontario, he told the farmers there that the hon. Minister of Agriculture had got free trade in cattle for them, free entry into the markets of the United States, evidently not knowing the difference between quarantine regulations and duty, the quarantine regulations being removed and the duty still being enforced. There was after the time that I had discussed this subject fully with the Secretary of State for the Colonies and with the Right Hon. Walter Long—the present Minister of Agriculture in England, and I came to the conclusion that if this was a domestic policy, as they said it was, if this was a protective policy, as they really admitted it was, there was no use in demonstrating further, as it had been demonstrated by Sir Charles Tupper and successive ministers of agriculture, that our cattle were perfectly healthy, and just before I left office I instructed the gentleman in charge of the cattle quarantine to enter into correspondence with Dr. Salmon, chief of the quarantine branch in the United States, believing that this policy, being a domestic policy in Great Britain, there was no use of doing anything more in the way of trying to get the embargo removed. In other words, I felt that the time had come that it was useless to try further to get the embargo removed in Great Britain, and that we might better get any advantage we could by lessening the quarantine restrictions. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman boasts of his market. I want to ask hon. gentlemen opposite where the promise is to-day to get the markets in the United States for the farmers of the province of Ontario and elsewhere. I do not need to recount these promises. On every platform the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), the hon. Minister of Customs and other hon. gentlemen, held the hope up to the farmers of Ontario that: If you put us in power, within six months, yes, within a shorter period, you shall have reciprocity, you shall have free entry of your products into the markets of the United States. What is the result? The result, as I told the House the other night is, no markets, but a bill of $36,000 for a pleasure trip to Washington and Quebec. What does the hon. member for North Norfolk say now? Once he wept for reciprocity with the United States, once he declared that the government was mean, was unfair, was unstatesmanlike in dealing with the United States. What did he say last night? I take it from his utterance, notwithstanding the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister, that his mind is set against it, and that all hope of reciprocity has disappeared from the hon. gentleman's mind. He says in various places: The United States have been very illiberal, that their treatment of us has been very illiberal, that our treatment of the United States has been too liberal, and that, therefore, he is not in favour of reducing the duty. He says that he is not in favour of reciprocity, because they do not deserve it. And at page 3427 he said:

Everything in connection with the trade policy of the United States, everything in connection with the treatment we received at their hands, points to a narrow, selfish and unfriendly policy.

And then he adds—and I would have expected he would have added to it,—though no member of the government has said it, but it comes with full force from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) because he was a member of the commission:

In our negotiations at Washington we met hostility on every turn, because of the preference we had given to England.

Now let us see just how the hon. gentlemen stood when they went to Washington to get reciprocity. They had given free corn to the United States; they had given away one of the things that we had to trade—they are great at giving things away for nothing in return.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. 'There is that that scattereth and yet increaseth.'

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister of Finance, I have no doubt recognizes to the full the meaning of the quotation which he has just given. He says: There is that which scattereth and still increaseth. That is quite true. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) is lavishly scattering the funds of this country with the hope of increasing his term of office. He scatters it especially in his own county. Do not forget, Sir, those 14 harbours and 163 miles of railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Now let us see what the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) thought of free corn to the United States. He says:

I hold that to give the Americans free admission for their corn is granting them a concession to which they are not entitled.

That is good sense.

I hold that we ought to retain corn in the dutiable list until we can get some consideration from the United States in return. I know that the American farmers of the west hold our market for their corn as an important one, and I know that in the great majority of cases they will say to us: We will not object to giving you free admission of hay, free admission of potatoes and free admission of barley, in some cases, if you will give us free admission of corn.

Well, Sir, despite the protest of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) this government gave away this thing to the United States of America, this thing which we had to trade, and then they went to the United States of America to try and get something in return.

What else did they do? They gave to Great Britain a preference without getting anything in return, and as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) says: when they got down to negotiations with the United States, they were immediately faced with the preference which had been given to Great Britain and which, as he says himself, aroused hostility in the minds of the American people at every turn. I have said that these gentlemen on the Treasury benches are great at giving away things for nothing. I remember one morning when there were some gentlemen who made the air blue in the city of Hamilton. We have a large coasting trade in this country. That coasting trade has been rapidly increasing. As the prairies of the North-west have become cultivated the millions of bushels of grain have been coming down, and our shipbuilders and shipowners have been doing their very best to reap the advantage of that trade, and recently the shipping industry has developed a very great deal indeed. Some capitalists in the city of Hamilton put their money into a great enterprise; they organized a company, subscribed their stock, paid in their funds; sent their agent to Great Britain to order ships in order to accommodate this increased coasting trade of Canada. And after their man had gone to Great Britain and ordered their ships, they awakened one morning to find that these gentlemen in the government opposite, who give things away for nothing, had passed an order in council—absolutely illegally—turning the coasting trade of Canada over to the United States without getting a single thing in return. Well, Sir, the words which were spoken in Hamilton that morning are not to be found in the psalms of David, and these gentlemen came down to the city of Ottawa. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood) knows these things just as well as I do. He was interested in the company; interested in its success. They came down to Ottawa and they told this government opposite: You cannot do that for if you do we will turn you out of office. And turn them out of office for what? For giving away that for which they did not receive anything in return. That is just what I say: the farmers of Canada to-day would be justified in turning these gentlemen out of office because they are giving away of the farmers' products, what they are getting nothing in return for. It is a return to the old Liberal policy for the pursuance of which the farmers of Canada ejected these people from office, in 1878. Let me add here, not only have their promises to get reciprocity with the United States not been carried out, but to-day they know there is not a shadow of a chance of that being secured. We told them they would fail. Who was right? We told them they were humbugging the people, and the people have been humbugged accordingly.

As to the coasting trade, the Conservative government had placed upon the statutes a statutory offer, which said to the United States: 'When you give our vessel owners a part of your trade you can have a part of ours, but not until you do that can you participate in our coasting trade' Were we right? Yes, Sir. Every sensible man in Canada says we were right.

Now, Sir, how shall we get to the market of England in the best possible shape. At the present time, that can be accomplished by having cold storage for a large amount of our products, and upon this question of cold storage the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has taken every bit of credit in connection with its establishment in Canada. True, the other night he did say, that a one-horse system existed before 1896,—that is quite an admission from him. But just a moment before he used the phrase 'one-horse system,' he gave us some figures and these are the figures. He told us that in the following years, the amounts stated were paid the railways for cold storage:

1896.....	2,526 37
1897.....	3,734 17
1899.....	3,275 52

Who started the cold storage system? These figures answer, Sir—the Conservative government. And I submit to this House that if the expenditure of 1896 being $2,526. is a one-horse concern, the expenditure of $3,275, in 1899, is not a full team.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was only one horse and a donkey.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says it was only one horse and a donkey, and most people will agree that he is right. Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the sums which were paid by the government of Canada for cold storage on the steamships :

1896.....	7,718 09
1897.....	26,000 00
1898.....	33,090 78
1899.....	38,695 61

But as to the question: Who established the cold storage system in Canada, let me settle that once for all by referring to the hon. gentleman's own report. This is the report signed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), in 1897, and it tells the history of the cold storage movement. It says, and remember the report was made very shortly after the hon. gentleman took office, and therefore it refers to what had been done in our time :

A cold storage service for the safe carriage of butter was begun in 1895. Arrangements were made whereby refrigerator cars for carrying butter were run during the summer on the main lines of railways leading into Montreal. These cars were used to pick up small lots of butter as offered at the different railway stations. Shippers by these cars were allowed to ship butter at the usual 'less than car-load rates,' without any charge for icing or special service. As far as space permitted, merchants were allowed to use these cars for the shipment of dairy and creamery butter between points at which the cars touched. During 1895 cars were run for at least part of the season on the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways.

Arrangements were also made for the chilling of fresh-made creamery butter at the warehouses of the Montreal Cold Storage and Freezing Company, Montreal.

Arrangements were made for the fitting up of insulated and refrigerator chambers on steamships from Montreal to Avonmouth, Liverpool and Glasgow. The chambers were constructed to thoroughly insulate their contents, and thus prevent them from being heated during the voyage by any rise of temperature outside the chamber. Galvanized iron cylinders were filled with ice to cool the interior of the chamber and the outside of the packages of the butter, in so far as they were heated during the cartage from the cold storage warehouses to the steamships. Ten steamships were fitted up in 1895.

For the season of 1896 arrangements were made for the fitting of three steamships with mechanical refrigerating plant and insulated chambers, having a capacity of about 20,000 cubic feet each. It was proposed that the steamship company would carry, in cold storage, butter at a charge of 10 shillings per ton, and cheese at a charge of 5 shillings per ton, in addition to the current charge for freight on butter and cheese. Other steamships were to be fitted up with insulated compartments for the carriage of chilled butter. Owing to failure on the part of the company which had agreed to put in the refrigerating plant to do so in time, the arrangement for fitting up steamships with mechanical refrigerating plant was not carried out. In consequence, a number of the steamships between Montreal and Avonmouth were fitted with large insulated chambers for the carriage of chilled butter.

Arrangements were made for extending the area served by the cold storage cars on railways during 1896. Refrigerator cars were run on terms similar to those in 1895 on the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways leading into Montreal. The increase in the quantity of butter exported from the port of Montreal may be noted from the following figures:

Exported from Montreal during the shipping season of 1894, 32,055 packages.

Exported from Montreal during the shipping season of 1895, 69,664 packages.

Exported from Montreal during the shipping season of 1896, 157,321 packages.

Showing, Sir, that our cold storage was not only established, but was having a most admirable effect upon the exports of Canadian products to Great Britain. By reading these statements in the report of the hon. gentleman himself, I think I have settled for all time in this House and out of it, the question as to which government and which party established cold storage for the benefit of the farmers of Canada.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

GASPE SHORT LINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Gaspé Short Line Railway Company.—(Mr. Lemieux.)

On section 14.

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche). I would ask that the section of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway be inserted so as to remove any doubt as to what part of the line the amendment covers.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I think that by the Act passed in 1891, there can be no question that the Baie des Chaleurs section is intended to be covered by the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. However, to satisfy my hon. friend, I would have no objection to insert in my amendment the words, 'the Baie des Chaleurs section of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway.'

Mr. McALISTER. The Baie des Cheleurs section proper is from Metapedia to Paspebiac.

Amendment agreed to. Bill reported with amendments, and amendments concurred in.

RESTIGOUCHE AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 73) respecting the Restigouche and Western Railway Company.—(Mr. McAlister.)

On section 5,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I cannot understand why you are asking us to grant additional powers, under this section, to a corporation created by the legislature of New Brunswick, and not declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. McALISTER. I do not think there are any powers asked for beyond what are granted by the Nova Scotia legislature.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We can let the Bill go through and hold over the third reading.

Bill reported.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 104) respecting the Montfort and Gatineau Colonization Railway Company.—(Mr. Bourassa.)

Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the St. Mary's River Railway Company.—(Mr. Oliver.)

Bill (No. 96) respecting the Quebec Bridge Company.—(Mr. Talbot.)

Bill (No. 84) respecting the Bay of Quinté Railway Company.—(Mr. Hurley.)

Bill (No. 91) respecting the Oshawa Railway Company.—(Mr. Burnett.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 113) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Frost and Wood Company.—(Mr. Cowan.)

Bill (No. 114) respecting the Toronto Hotel Company.—(Mr. Osler.)

Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the Canada National Railway and Transport Company.—(Mr. Campbell.)

Bill (No. 117) respecting the National Sanitarium Association.—(Mr. Maclean.)

Bill (No. 120) to incorporate the Ottawa, Brockville and New York Railway Company.—(Mr. Frost.)

Bill (No. 123) to incorporate the Yale Mining District Railway Company.—(Mr. Bostock.)

Bill (No. 124) to incorporate the Lake Superior and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—(Mr. Dymont.)

Bill (No. 125) respecting the Algoma Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Dymont.)

Bill (No. 129)—from the Senate—to incorporate the Canadian Steel Company.—(Mr. Calvert.)

Bill (No. 130)—from the Senate—respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.—(Mr. Edwards.)

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I had referred before six o'clock to the statement of the Minister of Finance, that he had accomplished the work of getting certain securities placed upon the Trust Fund List in Great Britain. I wish to refer for a moment to a cablegram which I notice in the daily press of this day:

London, April 5.—In the House of Commons this afternoon Mr. F. F. Begg, representing the St. Rollox division of Glasgow, asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Canadian government securities were being raised to the rank of trust investments.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach replied that no final settlement had yet been arrived at, but arrangements were in progress which, it was hoped, would lead to a satisfactory settlement of the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). That is quite correct.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I hope that the negotiations were at such a stage that they justified the hon. gentleman's announcement, and I am sure the House and the country will hope that nothing will interfere to prevent the accomplishment of this end.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My announcement was that legislation, both by the Imperial parliament and the parliament of Canada was required, and that when these Bills were passed, then the matter would be final.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It certainly requires Imperial legislation, because the list of securities is given in the Bill passed by the Imperial House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I so stated in my speech.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before six o'clock I referred to the contention of the Minister of Agriculture that he had secured a great market, which we had failed to secure in the United States, for our cattle, by reason of a change in the quarantine regulations so that our cattle sent in there were quarantined for ninety days. I think I forgot to remark, as I was passing, that so far from the hon. gentleman having aided us to get these quarantine restrictions removed, there was the severest possible attack upon us from all sides among hon. gentlemen opposite because we did not keep up those regulations as strictly as we should have done for the purpose of securing the removal of the embargo against our cattle in Great Britain.

I have touched upon the question of the markets, and I think I have shown that from 1874 to 1878 hon. gentlemen opposite failed to keep the market of Canada for the Canadian farmers; that in 1879, under the national policy, that condition of affairs was changed, and the Canadian farmer was given the advantage of supplying at least the people in Canada. In 1879, we put upon the statute-books the tariff known as the national policy, and hon. gentlemen and the House know that it contains the agricultural protection clauses to which I have already referred. The statement I desire to make now is absolutely borne out by the facts, namely, that every time an effort was made in this House by the Conservative party to preserve the home markets for the Canadian farmers, that effort has been opposed by the Liberal party, and by the members of the Liberal government who have charge of public affairs at the present time. Not only did they fail to keep our markets for us here, but they have never got for us any markets in foreign countries. I want to state here to-night that the reciprocity negotiations with the United States are, to every intelligent thinker, practically a matter of the past. The Prime Minister says that the negotiations are still alive, that the High Commission will meet once more; but we had a member of the High Commission last night decrying the whole question of reciprocity, and saying that the United States are mean and illiberal. It means that these hon. gentlemen have found out the impossibility of making any arrangement with the people of the United States, and I want to add that not only have they lessened their chances by giving free corn to the farmers of the United States without getting anything in return for it, but, I want to assert, and it is an assertion, which, I think, hon. gentlemen opposite will appreciate in a moment, that the contention as to the condition of Canada, the helplessness and the hopelessness of the Canadian farmer and of Canada generally, made by hon. gentlemen from 1878 to 1896, put the American people into a frame of mind to imagine that they could get much greater advantages out of Canada and a much better bargain than any party in Canada could ever, with the approval of the people, concede. When they went to Washington their speeches rose up against them and destroyed them in their efforts to secure reciprocity for this country. Sir, these hon. gentlemen said to the farmers of Canada: 'Put us in power, and if we do not get you reciprocity and a market for your products in the United States within a very short time, turn us out.' The people, Sir, will take them at their word on many another count beside that. The right hon. Prime Minister, speaking at Brampton, I think, in 1894, made this statement: What do you farmers want? You want markets; I say you want markets, and it is the mission of the Liberal party to give you markets. The mission of the Liberal party, if that were the mission of the Liberal party, has been very badly fulfilled indeed. We have gone from 1896 to 1899, and what have the government to announce in the way of markets for the farmers of Canada? Only this, that negotiations are pretty well advanced for free trade between this country and the Island of Trinidad, a very unimportant island, which is absolutely unknown, I venture to say, in a great many of the agricultural sections of the Dominion of Canada. But, the hon. Minister of Customs, when he was speaking, said to the farmers of Canada: We have got you markets by reason of our preferential tariff. These are his words:

We have to-day, by virtue of our preferential tariff—there is no doubt about it in my mind—a decided preference in the British market. If it is not a legal preference, it is a preference through the good-will of the British consuming public themselves, who by this preferential tariff had their hearts drawn towards Canada as they never had before.

What does it mean to the great agricultural class?

Wealth to the great agricultural class of this country, which means wealth and prosperity to every man who dwells in it. Who will deny it? I have given you figures most gratifying had their hearts drawn out towards Canada as they never had before.

But if it had not been for our preferential tariff we could not have done it. He says that Canadian products exported to Great Britain in 1895-6, amounted in value to $62,718,941, and in 1898-9 to $85,114,555, an increase, roughly estimating it, of 33½ per cent. He gave another table in regard to the exportation of animals and their products. In 1895-6 the exports from Canada to Great Britain of animals and their products amounted to $42,074,384 and in 1898-9 to $62,000,000. The hon. gentleman, in making his subtraction was in error, or the reporter, in taking down his figures, may have made an error. The difference appears in Hansard as $17,000,000, but there is $21,000,000 of an increase, or about 40 per cent from 1895-6 to 1898-9, and I desire to give the hon. gentleman's argument full force. I looked up the figures to ascertain the increase from 1892 to 1896 when there was no preferential tariff in existence, when we were going along in the same way that we had gone along for years, and I found, that, in 1892, we exported, of animals and their products, $24,068,008, and that in 1896 we sent $32,523,071, or an increase of 33½ per cent, showing that the hon. gentleman is quite wrong in his contention that the increase in the exportation of these products to Great Britain has been brought about by the preferential tariff. It has come in the ordinary course of events. England has been importing more, and we have been prepared to ship more. I have shown how this came about in my figures in relation to meats and also by the facts I have given in regard to the dairy industry and cold storage. And in addition to that we see that the same increase took place where no preferential tariff had ever been passed in favour of Great Britain. I refer, Sir, to the United States of America. The United States of America give England no preference whatever, and yet hon. gentlemen will be amazed if they have not looked the figures up, at the increase in the exports of agricultural products in the last few years from the United States to England, bearing out this statement I have made that England has been importing more, and that, therefore, the people on the continent of America are able to sell her more. The following partial table will show the increases that have taken place :

Agricultural products imported into Great Britain from United States, 1895-1899.

	1895	1899	Increase. p.c.
Hams and bacon.....lbs.	452,199,328	662,201,232	45
Beef, fresh.....lbs.	232,360,128	308,761,152	33½
Pork, fresh.....lbs.	967,456	31,004,848	3,000
Other meats.....lbs.	15,246,784	21,708,288	40
Lard.....lbs.	180,109,104	232,014,384	25
Butter.....lbs.	15,853,936	17,823,344	14
Eggs.....doz.	477,030	1,941,050	400
Wheat.....bush.	57,297,150	64,681,209	12
Oats.....	14,996,479	23,296,000	60
Corn.....	54,854,600	78,920,800	45
	1896.	1898.
Cornmeal.....	205,553	810,532	390
Oatmeal.....	245,302	477,647	90
Flour.....	8,906,856	10,307,245	20
Poultry and game..	$92,564	$189,157	95

In these things, Sir, the increase has been very much greater indeed from the United States to Great Britain in the same period than it has been from Canada to Great Britain, and I want to know from the hon. Minister of Customs, if, in the face of these figures, which he will find in the trade returns of Great Britain, he will say that the increase we have made, come as a result of the preferential tariff passed by this House in 1897. I notice by The Miller, an American publication, that the United States sell 63 per cent of their barley to Great Britain, 43 per cent of their corn, 36 per cent of corn meal, 46 per cent of their oats, 60 per cent of their wheat, 58 per cent of their wheat flour and 45 per cent of all other breadstuffs, showing conclusively, I think, to any fair-minded man, that the preferential tariff has not had the effect that the hon. gentleman claims, in giving us a market, in Great Britain, much enlarged, by reason of the sympathy of the British people of Canada and for Canadian products. I do not believe that the government are spending money enough to assist the farmers of Canada to capture the market of Great Britain. There is no subject to which the government can, with better advantage to the country, pay increased attention, than to this subject. We are, as I have already said, in flowing times. We are in times when the treasury is full, and I am prepared, this night, to vote, if necessary, a million dollars, if well and ably spent, to improve our cold storage, to improve our transportation and to advertise, upon the markets of Great Britain, the produce of the farmers of Canada. It will be money well spent if well handled, for as we all know the prosperity of the great agricultural masses in Canada is the prosperity of Canada as a whole.

Now, Sir, I want to say a word—I do not desire to be considered offensive, when I say it—to some gentlemen who specially claim to represent the farmers' party in the Commons of Canada. You will remember that in 1896, there were off-shoots from the Liberal party and from the Conservative party, and that a new party was formed, called the Patrons of Industry. I have no hesitation in admitting that the great mass of people who joined that organization, were thoroughly conscientious, believed that they were doing right, and did it with a view to promote the interests of the agriculturists of Canada. But, I have no hesitation in adding too, that the men who were managing the concern, were not looking after the farmers—they were farming the farmers in the interests of themselves. Well, what do we find? We found that shortly after the elections of 1896, some of those leaders, whose hearts were bleeding for the farmers, took positions under the Liberal government. That was what they had been labouring for, and their only hope to get a government place, was to displace the Conservative party, and to put the Liberal party in power. They helped to elect the Liberals in many constituencies—these gentlemen have got their reward. In the celebrated letter to the Patron organ, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), wrote these words on October 1, 1894 :

To the patrons ; your plan is to remain distinct but friendly.

Well, Sir, they remained distinct, but friendly, and I may say in that they have their representatives in this House who still remain friendly to the government—but not distinct. Let us see. I do not say it at all to injure the feelings of my confreres in this House who were elected by the Patron support, but I do it as a matter of fairness to the people who supported these gentlemen, and may be asked to support them again for the same reasons as were advanced in the campaign of 1896. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), making a speech recently at the nomination of my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Hurley), said :

Mr. Hurley is an excellent representative ; when there is a vote the government whip has not to whip him in.

I wonder if the hon. member for North Wellington himself has ever had to be whipped in to support the extravagance of this government. Sir, the same compliment might be paid to our Patron representatives in the House of Commons at the present time. My experience has been, and the experience of the House of Commons has been, that when the government needed a vote, no whip had to be sent to get these gentlemen in. They were always in the House to vote, grateful for the patronage which they had received; always exercising, I am told, the patronage of the government in their ridings. And my hon friend opposite, Mr. Pettet (Prince Edward), takes off his hat and agrees to it. That being so, I say to the hon. gentleman: that no member exercising the patronage of a government in a riding ought to come before the people again and ask support as belonging to an independent party. I leave that statement in the hands of the House and the hands of the country. I felt it was my duty to make it because some of these gentlemen are going back for election as independent candidates. There seems to be a quiet understanding between them and the government. There is sitting over there, my smiling friend from West Bruce (Mr. Tolmie). He is in a constituency that is irretrievably and hopelessly Liberal. He was elected as a Patron. He could not be elected as a Patron again, and so my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) goes up and gets him the Liberal nomination.

Mr. TOLMIE. He has not got it yet.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the best thing to be done in that riding, and where it is the best thing to be done to defeat the Conservative party to let them run as Patrons again, they are permitted to run as Patrons. I felt it my duty to say this word of warning to my friends in the various constituencies in Ontario, that having been once misled, they should not be misled upon these same lines by these same gentlemen again.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said that the government have neglected the interests of the Canadian farmer. I now desire to say that the government have also neglected the interests of that other great class of this country—I mean the industrial class, the labouring class, the artisans who are engaged in toil in our various industries in almost every portion of Canada. We had the government a little while ago saying that they would adopt an alien labour law. A Bill was promoted by a private member of this House, and we had the statement of the Prime Minister that the government were unanimous upon it, that they adopted it; that they would support it and carry it through. Well, that Bill went up to the Senate, and what did we find there? We found a member of the government at every stage saying he was opposed to it, and trying to persuade the senators to drop it, and if not to drop it, to defeat it. Was it a game from the start? It looks very much as though there was an understanding between the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State (Mr. Scott), that the Prime Minister should favour the Bill in the Commons to catch the votes of the labouring classes and that the Secretary of State should defeat it in the Senate. The Senate, I am glad to say, having a majority of Conservatives, was true to the labouring men of Canada, and so the Senate passed that Bill.

The parliament of Canada passed that Bill, but what has become of it? Who has heard of it? Is it being operated? 'Oh, no,' says the Prime Minister, 'we have a modus vivendi between the United States and Canada, that pending these negotiations, that Bill shall be inoperative.' That means that in practice, Sir, the United States operated it, and we did not. Having failed to defeat it in the Senate, the government has allowed it to lapse, and the spectacle has been presented time and again in this House by the member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson), by various other gentlemen; of men being brought to Canada to take the place of the toilers who are trying to get a fair rate of wages from the great corporations and great industries in this country; and hon. gentlemen opposite have sat in their seats and made no effort whatever to prevent that state of things. We are told that the alien labour law has not been in operation in the United States. I see that a deputation waited upon the Prime Minister the other day, representing the Labour Congress of this country, and what did that deputation say to the right hon. gentleman? So far from it not being in operation and pushed in the United States, they told him that $87,000 had been spent last year to put that Bill in operation there. They told him that there were no less than 300 deportations under that Bill from the United States, and what was the right hon. gentleman's answer? I am told he said: These men who were deported cannot be from Canada; they must be from somewhere else. If the Prime Minister lived along the border; if he lived in the county of Welland; if he lived in the county of Essex; if he lived in the city of Hamilton—

Mr. CLANCY. Or in Lambton.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy), says is quite true. If the Prime Minister lived in any of these places, he would have known that not a week passes by that the United States inspectors do not send back people who go over from Canada to earn their bread in the United States, and not a week goes by that dozens do not come into Canada from the United States to earn the money of Canadian producers and to make their living on Canadian soil.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is the same in the maritime provinces.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is the same in the maritime provinces, and I have no doubt it is the same in every province of this Dominion, and notably in British Columbia, where the miners are up in arms because of the fact that foreigners are coming from the United States, and taking their bread out of their mouths—and yet this government sits silent in the face of these things. Another thing was pointed out by that deputation. That deputation said they were in favour of the Bill of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), which declared that there should be on government works, the current rate of wages paid. Surely the deputation must have been misled. I have not heard of the Bill. Has any member of this House heard of it? I have heard of a resolution which was moved in this House, and I have heard of the amendment moved by my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), which amendment proposed that the spirit of that resolution should be crystallized into a Bill. I had heard also that the government objected to it, and would not allow that resolution to pass. Sir, it is the same old game, as the game of the alien labour law. We are in the face of an election campaign, and hon. gentlemen opposite desire to catch the votes of the labour men of Canada upon a sham resolution passed by this House. I see that my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, was speaking at Brantford the other day. I have his speech here as reported in the Toronto Globe, and I see that he said there :

They had enacted that in all public works there should be a clause in the contract that the contractor should pay for the labour he engaged at the current rate of wages in that section of the country.

The hon. gentleman was speaking to the labour men in the city of Brantford. I tell him they had not enacted it. I tell him that an enactment of this House is a law of this House; but a resolution of this House may be broken as was that famous resolution moved a little while ago in the legislature of Ontario by a member of the provincial government that no civil servant should hereafter take part in election campaigns, while he turned and winked to the civil service, 'Go on and do your best;' and they did their best in every part of the province of Ontario in the election campaigns. Another word, Sir. I think it was in 1876, when labour was at a very low ebb in this country, when the industries were silent, that a deputation of labour men came and waited on the government here. Their families were in want; there is no question about that. Goods were coming here, manufactured by American and other foreign artisans, while our artisans were without employment, and their families in some instances, without bread. They sent a deputation here, and what did the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) say about that deputation? He said they were a raging mob, not many of whom appeared to be hungry, but a great many of whom appeared to be drunk. I say that is an insult to the labouring classes of Canada which they will resent when they get the opportunity. The right hon. First Minister smiles. To him it is a joke, but it was not such a joke to the men who were out of employment and out of bread.

The hon. Minister of Customs in his speech on the budget asked, what is the evidence that industries came into Canada under the national policy? I have some figures under my hand, which show as nothing else can the measure of the industries of this country, the quantities of certain raw materials used largely in the industries of the country, imported in 1878 and in 1896 respectively :

Crude rubber.....lbs.	458,000	1,716,925
Cotton..... "	8,000,000	40,000,000
Sugar tons.	9,000,000	117,815,000
Bituminous coal..... "	292,387	3,299,025

The production of bituminous coal in our own country was : In 1879, 1,126,497 tons ; and in 1896, 3,745,716 tons. The differences in working into finished articles the importation and production of the raw materials imported is the measure of the increased labour given to Canadian artisans in that period.

Now, I want to say a word or two as to the prosperity of Canada. I am prepared to admit at once that Canada is prosperous. Every gentleman on this side of the House, not only admits it, but is glad of it. We not only know that Canada is prosperous, but we know to what that prosperity is due. It is due to the policy which the Conservative party maintained for years in spite of the attacks of hon. gentlemen opposite. But these hon. gentlemen claim a great deal of credit for the prosperity of the country. As an evidence of what good luck, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce calls it, they have had, I want to show what a fortunate time they have struck as regards one particular matter—the total mineral production of Canada. They will not claim that their policy has had anything to do with that. In 1896, 1898, 1899, the total mineral production of Canada was :

In 1899.....	47,225,000

This was entirely independent of and uninfluenced by the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Another thing which has given them a great harvest has been the mining companies which were registered in England, and the capital of which was raised there and brought to Canada. In 1896 there were fourteen of these companies registered in England, in 1897 forty-three, in 1898 thirty-one, and in 1899 nine. They had got on to the management of the Yukon in the meantime. In these companies, according to one of the London journals, no less than $82,000,000 was actually subscribed and paid by British stockholders, which money came to Canada to help to swell the commercial prosperity of this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend says 'hear, hear.' Of course he knows that the change of government had nothing to do with that at all. It had to do with the mismanagement of the Yukon, however, and if that had not existed, we may be reasonably certain that the investment of British capital in Canadian mining fields would to-day be a great deal more than it is. The hon. gentleman cannot meet a British investor or the representative of a British investor who has come back from the gold fields of the Yukon who will not say that the condition of things there is simply outrageous—so outrageous that if it continues the investment of British capital there will be entirely stopped.

There is another reason why trade is booming and the manufacturers are busy. It is because they have got over their doubts a good deal, says the hon. gentleman. The factories were silent, the shelves were empty, the stocks of goods were low in 1896—why? Because the manufacturers were waiting anxiously to know what hon. gentlemen opposite would do. The late hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), whose decease I regret, speaking either outside or inside of this House, I do not now remember which, said: 'Business is paralyzed, and will be until the tariff is settled.' When hon. gentlemen opposite decided to bring down their tariff, which was practically at that time a re-enactment of the tariff of the Conservative party, at once the mills began to be busy, the shelves began to be filled, confidence was re-established, and business was a great deal better in Canada than it had been before. What was the reason? These hon. gentlemen had swallowed themselves; they had swallowed their convictions; they had compelled the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to swallow his. That was the reason why confidence was established again in the country.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Are you denouncing your own tariff?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not at all. My hon. friend may think that exceedingly clever, but I do not see that it is. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) last night discussed the question of the increased preference. In fact, he devoted to it the main part of his address. Now, I desire to say a few words upon that preference; and I have no desire to say them in any doubtful or hesitating way whatever. The old preference was largely a humbug. It was so constructed that I did not think it could do a great deal of harm to Canadian industries. It remains to be seen whether the new preference is as little dangerous.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My right hon. friend says 'hear, hear,' but time will tell. We are enjoying good times now, our manufacturers have orders ahead, our woollen mills have orders ahead for months, but let the ebb of the tide begin, let hard times come, and then we shall find whether this reduction of the protection to our manufacturers will not work serious results to the industrial classes and the people who have invested their money in these establishments. Perhaps all this may mean that the right hon. gentleman has some idea of carrying out his old policy. Perhaps it may mean that the hon. gentleman is thinking of his policy announced in 1896. It is interesting to read the speeches of the Prime Minister just then:

Our policy, he said, is the removal of every vestige of protection. That is our goal which we will ultimately reach, but the government cannot do it at once. It will have to be done gradually step by step, and I pledge you my word that in the end it will be done.

Beside this, Sir, we have the statement of the hon. Finance Minister that the end is not yet. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says: 'There is a great deal more in this than hon. gentlemen see.' And we have the announcement of the hon. member for North Norfolk last night: 'I say, make the preference greater than it is at present, and I will support the government in doing it.'

These hon. gentlemen seem still to be enamoured of their old doctrine of giving something and getting nothing in return. They have given free corn, free binder twine, free barbed wire, they have given our coasting trade, and they have given 12½ per cent and 25 per cent, and are now giving 33½ per cent reduction, so far as the goods imported from Great Britain are concerned. Are they gradually coming to the destruction of every vestige of protection which has been placed upon our statutes for the benefit of our industries? Let me tell the hon. Minister of Finance that he never spoke wiser words than when he said that confidence and stability of tariffs is the foundation stone of success; and if we are not to have that stability of tariffs, the hon. gentleman will see that the investment of capital will be retarded and the industrial life of the country as well.

But, there is another reason for this preference, and, perhaps, it is the main reason. These hon. gentlemen made a mistake upon the contingent matter. They waited to be pressed into service. They raised technical objections, they could not send the contingent without money they said, and they could not get money without parliament. But, these objections were overcome when the voice of the people spoke loudly in favour of assisting Great Britain in this her time of trouble. But, there has always been, and always will be, in the minds of the people, the conviction that these hon. gentlemen sent the contingents only because the force of public opinion compelled them to do so. The right hon. gentleman, I am reminded, said so more than once. At any rate, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), and the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Monet) made the statement down in the province of Quebec, just about the beginning of this debate, that the Prime Minister only sent these contingents because he was compelled to do so by Sir Charles Tupper, backed up by the strength of public opinion. Knowing that they missed an opportunity in connection with the contingent, and desiring to catch the electorate upon the cry of loyalty, we have them extending the preference to Great Britain, while at the same time they sent down to the province of Quebec, Messrs. Bourassa and Monet to say that the government only sent these contingents because they were compelled to.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) voted with you against the preference.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is an exceedingly pertinent remark. I stand by the position I took on the resolution of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell). I say that in this country, struggling along as a new country, while we have the very strongest devotion for the motherland, that is a matter of sentiment and an entirely different thing from business. When we come to business, it is the duty of the government to get something in return for what they give to the American manufacturers and the British manufacturers as well. Our last man, our last dollar in defence of the empire, but when it comes to business let us deal with it in a straightforward business way. And I am not alone in holding those sentiments. The hon. Minister of Customs smiles exceedingly, but let me draw his attention to the speech which the right hon. Prime Minister made in Brampton, when you, Mr. Speaker, were present. On that occasion, the right hon. gentleman gave his pledge that all the promises of the Liberal party would be fulfilled. I am not going to ask you now, Sir, to rule if they were, because that would place you in an exceedingly awkward position, but we have this statement of the Prime Minister on that occasion, which, in view of the statement I have made, I wish to present to the House, this is what the hon. gentleman said:

I think England can look after her own interests. And if I know John Bull at all he expects his son to follow his example and do the same, viz., to look after No. 1. I think he would have a contempt for a son who would not turn an honest penny.

All I ask this government to do is to look after No. 1—to look after Canadian interests and Canadian artisans, and see that they get a fair show in supplying the markets of our own people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is exactly what I am doing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Let me call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to this, that these words were not spoken when the right hon. gentleman was dealing with the preferential tariff in favour of Great Britain, but when he was defending discrimination against Great Britain and unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. And if his words were forceful then, in defence of discrimination against the motherland, how much more forceful are they now in defence of a fair and reasonable reciprocal agreement between the motherland and Canada.

At North Bay, the right hon. gentleman going westward on that splendid trip of his, made another speech—and I am quoting from Globe reports:

It was not a question of sentiment. He had no objection to trading with the colonies if sentiment were cash, but no banker would take sentiment and credit your account with it.

At Brantford he said:

The government went to the United States for an example and England for a market. He would reverse that when he got in.

But here is the essence of the whole thing, and I now ask the hon. Minister of Customs to smile again, as I again quote from his right hon. leader:

Business was business and sentiment was sentiment, but he did not believe that sentiment was business any more than business was sentiment.

These were the words of the Prime Minister in the city of Brantford, discussing not the question of preferential tariff, but the question whether we had a right to discriminate against Great Britain by unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. That was previous to the elections of 1896, just when the hon. gentleman was starting on his trip to the North-west Territories and British Columbia. I did not follow him any further west; I fancy he got still more businesslike as he went west and approached the Pacific coast. Now, what do we find the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) saying last night. We have had members of the government saying it was childish this idea of bargaining with Great Britain—

Mr. WOOD. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who says 'Hear, hear?'

Mr. WOOD. I do.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) says 'hear, hear.' I want to know from that hon. member whether he would give five pounds of nails one cent cheaper to a British subject than he would to an American? Would he give binder twine to the people of Canada cheaper than he would to the people of the United States. Why, if you went to buy nails or razors or axes from the hon. member from Hamilton, even if you were his great uncle, he would say: Business is business, sentiment is sentiment; I respect you as a relative; but I want full price for these articles. We find these hon. gentlemen saying that it is childish to think of bargaining with Great Britain. Are not all questions of international trade, whether between the motherland and the colonies, or between the colonies themselves or between different nations—are not they all questions of discussion and bargaining and arrangement? Will the hon. gentlemen opposite tell me that England ever asked us to do this? She never expected us to do it, she never wanted us to do it; she knew that we had a fight for life here, that we had a work to do in building up a nation that calls for all our energy. She knew that we had a great competitor to the south of us; she knew that we had to meet circumstances that she had not to meet, that we had to deal with conditions instead of theories. Therefore, she never asked us to give her any of our patrimony, to yield for her benefit any of our advantages; she was willing, and more than willing, that the revenues of the Canadian people, their zeal and their industry should be used by us as British patriots to build up a great British nation on the northern half of this continent, that in times of peace should be an honour to her, and in times of trouble might prove, as it has proven, an arm of strength and defence. What does the hon. member for North Norfolk say in his highness and in his mightiness, as to getting a return preference for the preference we have given? He says that it is useless, that it is senseless, that it is deceiving, that it is dishonest, that it is shameful, that it is sublimely and infinitely impudent, that it is positively disloyal. I said this afternoon that by the acquirement of facility in the use of bitter adjectives the hon. gentleman was qualifying for the position of Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I think I have proved it by the expressions I have just quoted. Well, Sir, if to seek a preference from Great Britain is useless, senseless, is deceiving, dishonest, shameful, sublimely and infinitely impudent and positively disloyal, what does the hon. gentleman think about his leader? The hon. member for North Norfolk says that it was positively dishonest to go to the country with any such policy as this—namely, a policy saying that we hoped to get a preference in the markets of Great Britain according to the lines of our resolution. Let the hon. gentleman ask his leader what he promised the people of the province of Ontario in the city of London; let him ask him whether he did not say that it was a good policy; let him ask him whether he did not say that that practical statesman, the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain had practically extended an invitation, and let him ask him if he did not say that the moment he got into power, he would send a commission to Great Britain to get for Canada this preference in the markets of Great Britain. And when he gets his answer from the Prime Minister, I will be able to tell him whether we are dishonest in regard to this policy which we are expounding for the people of Canada, and upon which we are prepared to take up the fight for supremacy in the confidence of the people. What did the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) say in London:

That practical statesman, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, has come to the conclusion that the time has come when it is possible to have within the bounds of the empire a new step taken which will give to the colonies of England—

What? Where are those adjectives? I have lost them now, but I hope they are on Hansard.

—a preference to their products over the products of other nations.

I think I may very well leave the hon. member for North Norfolk in the hands of his leader; I think I may well let him put his adjectives against the argument of the Prime Minister. Now, what does the right hon. gentleman still further say? He says that the leader of the opposition, when he stated that the Prime Minister had betrayed Canada when he went to the old country, was making an outrageous statement for which there was no foundation. What did the Prime Minister do when he went over to the old country? Mr. Chamberlain extended to these gentlemen an invitation to discuss this question. The Prime Minister did not ask for it, he would not even consent to discuss it on behalf of Canada, though the promise was still ringing in the ears of the London audience that he would send a commission to get preferential trade with the mother country. He said: No, we do not want anything in return; we give it to you as a gift—

Mr. DOBELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And one hon. gentleman, the originator of the bottle-necked steamship idea in this country says, 'hear, hear.' And I say that the Prime Minister of this country—knowing the promise he had made to the electors of Canada, and to his audience in the city of London and refusing to even discuss the question with these statesmen, betrayed Canada and the best interests of Canadian industries.

Now, the hon. member for North Norfolk says it is nonsense to talk of this, because we never can get it unless we adopt England's system of free trade.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is what Mr. Chamberlain said.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, no—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, only two days ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We will discuss that some other time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Now is the time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am going to quote what the hon. gentleman's leader said—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Give us Mr. Chamberlain's words.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the Prime Minister is a more important man in this House. I want to see how these hon. gentlemen agree among themselves. The hon. member for North Norfolk says that any man with half a brain will see that it is absolutely necessary, if we wish this preference in the markets of Great Britain, to adopt the free trade system of England. Now, this is what the Prime Minister said in London :

England does not expect that we should take her own system of free trade, such as she has it ; but I lay it before you, that the thing the English people would expect in return is that, instead of a principle of protection, we should adopt the revenue form of tariff, pure and simple. These are the conditions on which we can have that boon.

There is no free trade there. What did the Prime Minister mean ? He meant that we should lower our tariff to Great Britain, and they, in return, would give us a preference in their markets over the products of the various parts of the world. Well, why did the hon. gentleman go back upon his promise in England ? He has never opened his mouth with any explanation. Was it for fear he would offend the Minister of Trade and Commerce ? Was it for fear that when he came to negotiations with the United States, a mutual preference would work against him in discussing these questions with that country ? Was it love of the 60,000,000 market, and an idea that he would be able to get a wide reciprocity treaty with the United States ? It makes no difference what it was. I say that the leader of the opposition was right when he said that the Prime Minister having in view his promise in London, betrayed Canadian interests when he refused to discuss this subject. What did the Prime Minister do then ? He put arguments into the mouths of those people in Great Britain who are opposed to that mutual preference ; he said : ' It would be almost a crime to interfere with your fiscal system, we do not ask you to do it, we give it to you as a free gift.' What was the statement of the hon. member for North Norfolk last night ? When he was discussing this subject and practically appealing to the loyalty of the people of Canada, he said : It is positively disloyal to ask that we get something in return for the advantages which we are willing to give to Great Britain. Now, Sir, what is the hon. gentleman's resolution which he read, but which he cannot move ? I want to say to that hon. gentleman that all through the discussion of trade questions in this House, he, more than anybody else, he and the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), are responsible for misleading public opinion in the United States. They made the people of the United States believe that we were willing to do anything to get reciprocity, that we were in a bad way, that our very existence depended upon getting trade with the people to the south. He does the same thing now, and he puts the same arguments into the mouths of those people in Great Britain who are opposed to mutual preference. What does he say in his resolution, a resolution which would be funny if it were not upon a serious subject, a resolution written by himself, which he says he would move if he had an opportunity. Among other things it says :

So long as Canada furnishes not more than 5 per cent of the total foreign and colonial trade of Great Britain, this thing is impossible.

The hon. gentleman is a good negotiator for Canada. The hon. gentleman is fighting for Canadian interests as he fought for Canadian interests in days gone by, and he is putting into the mouths of men in Great Britain who are opposed to this argument, that perhaps they would not have thought of, to prevent Canada securing this boon in the markets of Great Britain !

Mr. DAVIN. And a fallacious argument.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, a fallacious argument, as the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), showed last night when he came to contradict the figures. But the Minister of Finance says : ' Oh, but this will bring it'—not exactly in those words.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This or nothing ; if we cannot obtain it this way, we cannot obtain it at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am satisfied, he says, to stand our chances of getting it. Well, that is an interesting off-hand statement. The Prime Minister says they do not want it ; the Minister of Finance says we will stand our chances of getting it ; the member for North Norfolk says it is positively disloyal to think about it. They seem to disagree upon this question. The member for North Norfolk says we are not entitled to it, and the Montreal Herald says that we never dreamed of getting it. The Montreal Herald, I fancy, expresses exactly the opinion of those gentlemen upon this question. Here is what the Herald says : ' Journals which imagine that the British preference was proposed by the government in the hope that Great Britain would offer a preferential tariff in return, and that Canadian Liberals are disappointed because their action has not had that result, are imagining a vain thing.' The hon. gentlemen knew that their preference would not get it, and they knew that by giving that preference, and by increasing it, they were putting off the day when this policy should be accomplished, as it will be accomplished before the empire is very much older.

I say, Sir, that the speech of the hon. member for Norfolk last night was a poor imitation of the speeches of the little Englanders who helped to keep England back in so far as the development of her colonies was concerned. What did the hon. gentleman say last night? He said: England has not time in these hours of competition, and is not in a position to deal with her colonies, she is meeting the severest form of competition in all her manufactures, she is being driven by the United States iron manufacturers practically from the markets of the world. I say, aye, aye, to what the hon. gentleman said; I say that England's hope for the future, England's hope of maintaining her strength and of increasing her influence, is to hold, as she holds to-day, the mistressship of the seas; and to people the colonies with sturdy British toilers, and to have a mutual preference between herself and those colonies as the best means of consolidating the empire. Sir, England's weakness to-day is not only that she has to meet with great competition; but her weakness in war is that her food supply must come from other countries, that she has to depend upon hostile peoples, peoples who may become hostile any day, for her food supply; and while she is depending upon those hostile peoples for her food supply, millions of acres of fertile soil in her colonies are lying waste. I say that the policy for England to adopt is the policy of a still greater Britain, the policy of sending her sons to cultivate those fields and to give them a preference in her markets at home, and thus to consolidate an empire which shall stand not only for this century but for all the centuries to come.

Mr. R. R. DOBELL (West Quebec). I desire to add a few words to this debate, and in doing so I feel as if I were almost trespassing upon the time of the House, because the subject-matter which I desire to touch upon is hardly pertinent to a debate on the budget. However, as the hon. leader of the opposition and his first lieutenant, the member for York N.B., (Mr. Foster), expended some time in talking about that unfortunate fast line enterprise—which I think it was rather needless for them to do—I may perhaps be justified in dealing with that question briefly. In doing so I feel the absence of my hon. colleague and friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), but I shall try and refute some of the statements to which the hon. gentlemen opposite have given such prominence. I may say that not only in this House but also as late as last week the hon. leader of the opposition in a speech he made in Quebec, reiterated very strongly the version of the negotiations which he claimed took place with Her Majesty's government with respect to this project. Now, Sir, before I sit down I hope that I shall satisfy not only the members of this House, but also my constituents in Quebec, that there is little ground for the statement that was made by these hon. gentlemen. If they were not experts, if they were without knowledge, if they had not the check of parliamentary experience, I would make some allowance for them. But, these hon. gentlemen, and none have a keener appreciation of what is necessary than they have—make the astonishing claim that they had made an engagement with Her Majesty's government and that the contract for the fast Atlantic service was only awaiting completion by the signature and acceptance of this country. I think I can show that this is a visionary assertion, and it has been made, not once or twice, but repeated in different parts of this Dominion, and many times repeated, that the fast line contract was made by Messrs. Allan, that it was accepted by the British government, and that it only awaited the approval of this country. I will read the exact words which fell from the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). Speaking of this government, he said when they came into power:

They found at their hand, when they came here a contract ready to be signed which would have put into work an ocean fast service in July of last year.

The hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), spoke in an even stronger way. He called it a magnificent project, and he used these words:

The contract was ready for signature, the British government joining with Canada and giving £75,000 sterling a year for ten years to enable us to have a fast Atlantic service. . . . When that contract was ready for signature, it was not signed, although the British government were perfectly satisfied.

What I wish to state, and very briefly, is that the British government had not even considered the document which had been submitted to them. It never was a contract. At the best it was only a submission, and that submission was for a contract to be made, but it was so one-sided that the contracting parties had several months allowed them before they became obligated, while they wanted to obligate this country at once. The document was merely a proposal, asking for an option to do this work. I know it was never submitted to the Treasury Board of Her Majesty's government, I know it was never considered by the Colonial Office, and I do not believe the submission was ever read over by the Colonial Office. This is a strong statement, but, I have good reason for claiming that it is correct. I ask the hon. leader of the opposition and his first lieutenant can go about the country, stating deliberately and distinctly that they had made an arrangement with Her Majesty's government, which only required the consent of Canada to have it carried into effect? I think I am perfectly correct in what I say. I want to say one word more about this contract. I would very much prefer that I had not to draw attention to it, but it is forced upon me by the remarks made by the hon. leader of the opposition. It is reported in Hansard that he said that this government had made a waste of money by sending gentlemen across the ocean to negotiate a fast line contract. As I was the only gentleman that was sent on that mission, I feel, perforce, that I must defend myself in this House, and I think I shall not have much trouble in showing that there was very little waste of public money. It is quite true that I went three times across the Atlantic. I will not say that it was not sometimes at considerable personal inconvenience, but, I always went willingly, because I had a very strong desire that this project should be carried to a successful end. I think, as I said before, that, in trying to carry it out, there was little waste of public money. The question of waste and extravagance, of care and economy are mere matters of comparison, and it is necessary to weigh one expenditure with another before extravagance can be estimated. It is not necessary to dwell upon the comparison I will draw. The hon. leader of the opposition left London, carrying with him the high office of High Commissioner for this country in England. He came to this country, and shortly afterwards he accepted the honourable post of leader of the government. But, I find that he charged this country with no less a sum than $1,762 for the expense of coming to this country. I want merely to state that the expense of the gentleman who went across the Atlantic, and he made six passages, was nothing like as much as the expense of the one passage made by the gentleman who became the leader of the present opposition. Therefore, I think he should be the last man in this House to draw attention to the waste of public money in the endeavour to carry out this fast line project. I will only say one word more about this undertaking. The hon. gentleman says that we have abandoned it. We have not abandoned it, but, to-day, the cost of iron and steel has increased, and the expenditure to be made on these fast line steamers is more than double what it would have been two or three years ago, and what I believe it will be in two or three years to come, or less. We shall have a great fall in the cost of materials.

Not only is the cost of material far too high to-day, to entertain such a project, but every shipbuilding yard is fully occupied building steamers, very largely, for Her Majesty's government, which prevents any reasonable attempt being made to carry out this fast line project. I believe there is nothing in this country that will bring such great credit, or will do us more good and establish us as a great commercial nation, more readily than having the very finest possible steamers we can put on the route from Great Britain up the St. Lawrence to Quebec, and Montreal. There was a statement made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), which deserves more serious attention than the matter I have already spoken of. The hon. gentleman made a very extraordinary statement. He said:

But, if you will think it over, not a single work which they have commenced, not a single expenditure that they have made, has yet come to the point of completion.

This is one of these extremely irresponsible statements which sometimes is used by men to draw off the attention of the people from more serious subjects. In answer to such a statement, I need only call attention to the completion of our great canal system, and I believe, Sir, that if that work, which has been completed by the Liberal government in three years, were left in the hands of the Conservative government and carried on as they proposed, it would not have been completed for ten years, during which we would have been losing the interest on all the money that has been expended on these canals for many years. I need not refer to the many other public works which the Liberal government have carried out, but I will mention some as they present themselves to my mind. One is the completion of the telegraph system to the mainland opposite the island of Belle Isle; I believe that before the end of the summer we shall have a cable laid to Belle Isle itself, so that nevermore shall we have an accident in any part of our Dominion such as that to the steamer Scotsman where the passengers of a steamer could remain isolated and their hardships unknown and uncared for during a period of eight days. I have listened with some attention to the debate, and I have listened for five hours to one gentleman piling up figures upon figures, with the sole object of trying to mislead and to throw dust in the eyes of the people. I believe, Sir, with the rank and file of the people of Canada, that the proper appreciation to make of the prosperity we enjoy now, is much as in the case of that poor unfortunate man who was born blind, and whose sight was afterwards restored, and, when his friends began asking him questions as to the reasons, how and why, of the things he saw, his only answer was: All I know is that I was blind and now I see. So, Sir, Canada may see to-day. She was in darkness for eighteen years; she is in the full sunlight of prosperity now, a prosperity which, I believe, will increase, and the keynote of which prosperity is the effort this government is making to carry out the pledges and promises which they have given to the country. Notwithstanding all that was said by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), notwithstanding all the piles of figures we listened to from the member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), I believe we can show conclusively that we have honestly, earnestly and diligently carried out our pledges, with all proper consideration for the vested interests that have been established for eighteen years and longer, in the shape of industries, and which we should have killed if we had jumped into what has been called an extreme free trade policy. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the speech made by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and his remarks were so pertinent and so forcible that I should like to read them for the benefit of the House to-night—

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, don't.

Mr. DOBELL. I shall give the substance of them.

Mr. WALLACE. Read them.

Mr. DOBELL. I am sure that hon. gentlemen opposite forget them, because I noticed that when the hon. Minister of Customs began his heavy fire one by one of these gentlemen opposite retreated from the Chamber. I saw the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) lean down and hide his head as the Minister of Customs poured out his artillery on gentlemen opposite. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) could not stand the charge. Shot after shot was fired by the Minister of Customs, against the arguments of gentlemen opposite, and so withering was the fire that when we looked across the floor, there were only three gentlemen present, one the member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. WALLACE. How many remained on the other side.

Mr. DOBELL. A good number remained here to hear the eloquent and truthful words of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. BERGERON. There were seven or eight, and they were sleeping.

Mr. CLANCY. I was safe, because they were blank shots.

Mr. DOBELL. At all events, they made the gentlemen on the other side of the House retreat. I should like to mention a matter which is of considerable importance to the future of this country.

Mr. WALLACE. You have not given us the speech of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. DOBELL. To oblige the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) I will give him the substance of it in order that he may mark and learn. The Minister of Customs told us that while hon. gentlemen opposite charged us with jeopardizing and injuring the manufactures of this country, we were actually stimulating the manufacturers to fresh exertions to improve their machinery, to produce a first-class article, and to economize in everything, so that our manufacturers would be able to compete, not only with the manufacturers of this country, but with the manufacturers of England and the world. And if Canada wants to take a proper position in the world's competition, if she wants to trade with other countries, then, she must get rid of all the barriers and all the hindrances to a free and open trade with all the world. I believe that Canada could live and her manufacturers could thrive under such conditions, but we must give them time. We all know that if you grow certain plants in hothouses, it would be folly to put them out on a frosty night. So, you must give our manufacturers time to get accustomed to less protection and less pampering. They must be trained up to stand alone, and to be free and independent, and then will our industries be established on a firm basis. I hope the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is satisfied with the theories of the Minister of Customs, which I perfectly believe in.

Mr. WALLACE. Sweet are the uses of adversity.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Are you finding it so?

Mr. WALLACE. I am pretty well content.

Mr. DOBELL. I was about to say a word in reference to the permanent lighthouse at the Traverse, and in that connection I shall read an extract from a letter which I received only this week from a practical ship-builder in the old country. He says:

As an old Canadian trader, I am deeply interested in everything that pertains to your splendid country. I quite agree the longer you can keep your navigation open the better it will be for the best interests of Canada. I am of opinion that with the ice bridge at Cap Rouge and the effective lighting of the lower St. Lawrence by permanent lighthouses (not light-ships), it will be possible to navigate the river as far as Quebec with safety until the month of February. Indeed, as you know, we have offered to prove this by one of our own steamers, commanded, of course, by a most experienced captain in the trade. The port of Quebec would thus be raised at once to a position of great importance. . . . As you are aware, my firm have decided to open direct steam communication between Quebec and London this coming season, and for this purpose we are setting apart four of our large steamers in order to provide a weekly service.

That letter is from Mr. Hine, of Maryport, who is the owner of nineteen steamers, many of which have been trading in the St.

Lawrence for many years. He is a thoroughly practical man; he has been here three times himself; he has looked into this question, and I am perfectly satisfied he would not risk his steamers here, as he has agreed to do up to the month of February, if he was not perfectly satisfied that the scheme was feasible and could be carried to success. I must not forget to draw attention to the vote for the bridge at Quebec, and in this connection let me give an example of what I call a political promise. How lightly it must sit upon the minds of conscientious men. In the year 1891, the hon. leader of the opposition went to Quebec and delivered a speech in Tara Hall. There he distinctly promised that the bridge should be built, and although his party remained in power five years from that time, not one dollar was voted, even for preliminary surveys to enable estimates to be made for its construction. Directly we came into power work of this nature was begun, the bridge company was met with the serious difficulty, because instead of finding rock bottom in the St. Lawrence, which previous surveys had indicated, they found that they would have to go sixty feet below the bottom of the river to get a proper foundation, and this increased the cost of the bridge very materially. Notwithstanding this, the government voted the bridge company a million dollar subsidy, and have extended to the company no idle promises, but sympathy and practical assistance.

I will only add one word more, and that will be with reference to preferential trade. I maintain that the words uttered by our Premier when he landed in Liverpool struck the keynote of all the future success which will attend our present fiscal policy. England has given us so much, and is giving us so much that we should do for her all we possibly can. She takes everything we can send her almost free; and if we make an effort to extend to her these preferential advantages, whether she asks for them or not, it will benefit us, and it will, I believe, eventually lead to Great Britain entertaining some scheme which will give us what we all want, which we shall get, not by bargaining for it, but by meeting her liberally and openly; that is, trade within the empire. And in saying that, I would wish that we could embrace in that trade a still larger empire. In such an arrangement I believe we ought to embrace our neighbours in the United States, and I believe that we shall live to secure fair reciprocal relations with that country, notwithstanding the fact that in the past they have treated us so selfishly, so ungenerously and so unfairly. But the very fact that we are drawing so close to Great Britain and that our trade with Great Britain is increasing at so great a ratio will, I believe, make the United States desirous of joining in such an arrangement. The United States are acquiring responsibilities in other countries, the Imperial spirit is growing among their own people, and they will be desirous of having not only closer trade relations, but better relations politically and otherwise with the British Empire than they have ever had before, and the advantage of that will accrue to Canada; and not only the advantage, but I believe also the credit and the thanks of the mother country will be given to Canada for making the effort to bring about such a result. Mr. Speaker, I thank you.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) who has just taken his seat must have imagined that he was working off some poetical quotation when he repeated that portion of Scripture which says, 'Whereas, I was once blind, now I see.' But it was very strange that the hon. gentleman had not his sight improved until he was honoured with a portfolio by the present government. From the way he discussed questions to-night from a party standpoint, one would imagine that he had been a Liberal of the old school all his life, whereas, I believe, he was a Conservative, upholding the policy which he has been opposing to-night, up to the time the Liberals came into power. While not desirous of prolonging the debate, and recognizing the difficulty of contributing much that would prove of an original character after the able and eloquent speeches we have heard from members on both sides of the House, still I desire for a short time to avail myself of one of the two opportunities occurring during the session to discuss the general policy of the government, without any restriction being placed on debate. The debate on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne was a very curtailed one, the opposition being desirous of getting down to business, were perfectly satisfied to rest their case as presented by the hon. leader of the opposition and the ex-Finance Minister, and they allowed the address to pass without further criticism. The government, however, not having their work prepared were caught napping, and so put up man after man to prolong the discussion on the resolutions to provide for the payment of the contingents, until they could whip something into shape to place before the House. It seems, though, utterly impossible to please hon. gentlemen opposite. Last session when the opposition in the exercise of their right subjected the speech from the Throne to a month's criticism, the government, the members supporting the government, and the Liberal press throughout the country raised a hue and cry that the opposition were pursuing a policy of obstruction. This session when we allow the debate to come to a close with but two speeches on this side of the House, we are derided, accused of having no case, and that the opposition had utterly collapsed.

So that no matter what tack we may take, how anxious we are to facilitate business, or how we endeavour to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen opposite, they are so inconsistent they will not be satisfied, but must carp at and condemn every act of their opponents. However, as we have a duty to perform to our constituents, and as we are the better judges as to how that duty should be performed, the question of whether it please or displeases hon. gentlemen opposite is of minor importance. The Finance Minister and those who have followed him on that side of the House lay great stress on the prosperity which they claim Canada is enjoying at the present time, and attempt by implication on the part of some of them, and by actually claiming in so many words on the part of others less intelligent and less well informed, that this prosperity is due to the beneficent administration of the government of the day. That trade has improved, our exports and imports have advanced and our revenue increased as a consequence, are matters for congratulation, and to no class of our people is this fact more acceptable than to Her Majesty's loyal opposition. By no word, by no action, on the part of any member of the opposition either in this House or out of it, has an attempt been made to belittle whatever prosperity we are enjoying to-day as a country, or to gain party capital by decrying the fair fame and credit of our country. In this respect our action will compare more than favourably with those of hon. gentlemen opposite under similar circumstances, who, when on this side of the House, never missed an opportunity to injure the credit of Canada and advertise it as an unprofitable field for immigration by their speeches both in and out of parliament, and lauding the country to the south of us. Recognizing, however, that we owe a higher duty to our native land than can be offset by any party advantage, we cheerfully join with our opponents in welcoming this expansion of trade, though taking issue with them as to the cause of that expansion. A party whose doctrine has always in the past been that good times are not the production of legislative enactments, who when in office from 1873 to 1878, repudiated the idea that the government could create prosperity, is scarcely in a position to-day to lay claim, consistently at any rate, to being the authors of whatever prosperity we are enjoying at the present time. If they attribute it to their trade policy, it is but paying another compliment to the policy of their predecessors which has been adopted by them, and entirely owing to the fact that the ruthless hand of the destroyer has been stayed, and they have preferred meeting with the ridicule of political friend and foe alike, and hearing truthful accusations of gross breaches of faith hurled against them, promises unfulfilled and pledges broken, confidence betrayed and an outraged public deceived, rather than run the risk of reversing the policy they had been abusing for eighteen long years. No better evidence of the character of the tariff of the present day is required than that afforded by the address of the president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association at their annual meeting which was held in Toronto a short time ago. And, remember this is an organization that was always referred to by our political opponents as a political organization for the purpose of assisting the Tory party when it was in power, and in whose interests it was charged the protective tariff was being maintained. This is what the president said:

The association has been in existence twenty-five years. The object of its formation was to educate the country on the advantage of protection to native industries, and greatly through its efforts was the present tariff enacted; and, while it is still necessary to carefully watch that this great principle be not interfered with, it is now felt that it is not a political issue, both parties admitting that protection is now here to stay. This object being, therefore, an accomplished fact, the association should further extend its usefulness by giving its attention to other matters.

Do you suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Manufacturers Association, hard-headed business men, some of the brightest minds in the business world of Canada, would have given this certificate of character to the tariff of this government if it were a free trade tariff—as these hon. gentlemen promise it would be, though they have since tried to repudiate their utterances on that score—or if it were a tariff for revenue only, as the right hon. Prime Minister and some of his more servile supporters pretend it is, or if it were anything else but a protective tariff. Still, in spite of this declaration on the part of those manufacturers of the Red Parlour, whom hon. gentlemen opposite have so frequently stigmatized as 'robbers great and robbers small' we have these hon. gentlemen proclaiming that they have fulfilled their pledges.

Let me read you an article that appeared in the official organ of the Manufacturers Association on the 15th September, 1897, after the present tariff had been adopted by the government:

As long as the main issue presented at our general elections was the maintenance of protection or a radical departure from it, just so long did the advocates of it receive the support of the manufacturers, and thus maintain their control of the government.

That is, the Conservative party received the support of the manufacturers.

Unfortunately for the party in power previous to the last election, they allowed other issues to become uppermost and of greater importance than that of protection; and, as might have been expected, having become neglectful of the vital interests of the manufacturers, they were retired to the cold shades of the vanquished. Having through their own unwise act forfeited the support of the manufacturers and the control of the government, and observing that the party now in power fully recognize the imperative necessity of maintaining the policy that so strongly attracts the manufacturers, they are unhappy, and seek to regain their lost prestige by shouting that their tariff clothes have been stolen and are worn by the other fellows. It won't do. The other fellows could never have captured the clothes if they had not been unwisely laid off.

What does that mean? That means that because the Conservative party, suiting the tariff to the times and circumstances of our country had enacted in the interests of the consuming population two or three tariff revisions, being convinced that some of those manufacturing establishments had enjoyed protection for a sufficient length of time to withstand competition from their rivals in foreign countries, the manufacturers, through their official organ, said that the Conservative party had laid off their protection clothes and that if they had not done so the Liberals would not have been placed in a position to put them on. The article goes on:

As long as those in power maintain the policy of protection, the manufacturers will ask for no change. The existing status is quite satisfactory.

That did not appear to meet the wishes of the western liberal representatives who declared in this House, in 1897, that they were not satisfied with the tariff brought down, but only regarded it as an instalment of what was to come. The manufacturers, however, seem to be perfectly satisfied.

The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who, I am sorry, is away from the country at present, knowing the dissatisfaction that exists in the west because of this duplicity that has been practised on the people, attempted during the recess to stem the tide against the government and against himself in particular, by visiting that country accompanied by the Minister of Customs, the Boanerges of the cabinet, and other Liberal members of parliament on what the Winnipeg Free Press was pleased to term an educational tour. But their schools of instruction were very poorly attended, and try as he might, beat the air as he would, stir up the faithful of the party to the utmost of his powers, he could create no enthusiasm. The people were too intelligent to be again deceived, and in many places his reception was so cool that he could scarcely summon a corporal's guard to listen to his eloquence, and those who did hear him were not slow to express their disappointment. The man who prior to the elections of '96, harangued the people of that western country on the crying evils of a protective policy and pledged the faith of the Liberal party to redress those grievances which he declared our farmers were labouring under; the man who denounced protective duties as so much robbery practised on the people, who were bled white for the purpose of amassing huge fortunes for the bloated monopolists of the east; the man who held up the Canadian Pacific Railway to the odium of the public as a soulless corporation that dominated the government of the day, that took one-half the farmers' crop to move the other half out of the country; the man who condemned the voting of large subventions of land and money by parliament to enrich railway corporations, and denounced in extravagant language anything savouring of corruption in elections, of scandals in connection with public enterprises and promised good, honest and clean government on behalf of his party; the man who denounced the subsidizing of steamships between Australia and Canada, that landed on our shores Australian mutton and subjected the mutton raised by our farmers to unfair competition—that man must indeed have found a difficult task confronting him, when addressing those same people, to explain why each and every one of those promises have been unfulfilled, why he now declares the tariff is a dead issue, why many of those manufacturers are now in the enjoyment of more protection than when the Liberals came into power, why he himself is one of the most servile instruments in the hands of that same corporation the Canadian Pacific Railway, ready and willing at all times to do its bidding, why millions of dollars are still voted for railway subsidies each session, why the steamships are subsidized exactly as they were prior to the Liberal party coming into power and cargoes of Australian mutton still landed on our shores.

Taking all these things into consideration, how embarrassing it must have been to him to explain away his maladministration of the Yukon with its opportunities for plundering the public treasury, opportunities taken full advantage of by his officials, party colleagues and those in authority to the consequent disgrace to our country and refusing an investigation by an impartial judicial tribunal. And no easy task was it for him to persuade the intelligent electors of the west that everything was square, honest, and statesmanlike in connection with the Mann and Mackenzie railway deal, the Drummond County Railway deal, the Crow's Nest Pass contract and other public actions of the government of a questionable character. Nor, I venture to say, did he touch upon that delicate subject of purity in elections which he so much lauded prior to his acceptance of office. Is it not a fact that his own entry into the cabinet was signalized by an immoral bargain, politically speaking, in connection with the settlement of the school question? And his subsequent actions amply prove that he betrayed his fellow-countrymen of the west for the sake of the emoluments of the office. And in the face of the recent exposures in the courts where it was proved not only bribery of a most unblushing character prevailed, but also that seats had actually been stolen from their Conservative opponents by means the most disgraceful in our country's history, by the operation of 'the machine,' controlled by a gang of disreputable men moving from constituency to constituency. Is it surprising the reception accorded the hon. minister was of a freezing character though from a naturally hospitable people, for the inhabitants of that portion of Canada pride themselves on their independence and never fail to chastise their public men when once convinced of their dereliction of duty. But, not only was the Minister of the Interior's trip to the west a failure, so far as Dominion politics are concerned, but his friend, or ex-friend, the ex-Premier of the province of Manitoba, gives him credit for having accomplished the defeat of his government. And, I have no desire to detract from whatever credit is due to the hon. Minister of the Interior on this score, but am quite ready to concede that he played no small part in contributing to that highly laudable and commendable object, even though unwittingly. This being the case, I have no doubt that the people, in the exercise of that charity for which they are noted, may throw the mantle of forgetfulness over many of the minister's shortcomings, seeing that he assisted, though unintentionally on his part, in having turned out of office, a cabinet of disreputable politicians whose disgraceful actions have only recently been disclosed. The lesson taught by the Manitoba elections, is plain, and our Dominion ministers, if they desire to consult their own interest will do well to profit by it. That lesson is that they cannot with impunity override the wishes of the people; they cannot preach one set of principles and practice another; they cannot play fast and loose with the sentiments of the public without meeting with well-merited punishment at the first opportunity that offers. I am aware that members of this government have been warned time and again by members of their own political household, that, unless the Liberal party purged itself of those vicious elements that are dragging it down and are causing it to be a by-word, if they do not strike off the shackles that bind the party to these people, a similar fate awaits them when next they appeal to the electorate. However, they seem to be living in a fool's paradise, eating and drinking and being merry, knowing that to-morrow they politically die.

The victory of the Conservative party in Manitoba is one which even many of that party do not fully appreciate. It was a glorious victory, particularly taking into consideration the enormous odds we had to contend against. It was not only a fight against the local government, but against the Dominion government as well—the combined influence of both with their hordes of officials openly and offensively working for the Liberal candidates, to say nothing of the large corporations, whose influence was thrown in the scale against us. I am sorry that the Minister of the Interior is not here, and that the acting minister also is absent, because I desire to draw the attention of the acting minister to something in this connection that I am sure the minister himself has cognizance of—and that is that officials of his department took an offensive part in elections. Some of these officials obtained their positions through their predecessors in office having been dismissed for their supposed partisanship. I can give two cases in my own constituency. Two officials had written letters, one to myself and one to a member of my committee, asking if they could not do something for me that would not expose them to the charge of partisanship, and expressing a desire for my success. This was the substance of each letter. The letters were not even replied to. These men never lifted a finger on my behalf, and not a single charge of partisanship has been entered against them; no suggestion has been made that they had taken part in elections. But these letters were stolen from the office of one of my committee men, and were sent to the Minister. And, because of these letters, he decapitated these men. And it will be remembered that on the floor of the House, the minister was asked how these letters came into his possession, and his reply was, that he was not at liberty to disclose that fact. In other words, the minister was in possession of stolen correspondence that properly belonged to myself, and on the strength of that he dismissed these innocent officials. This is the high politics he is noted for practising. But the point I desire to make is this—that the very men who superseded these gentlemen—the very men who took the places left vacant by their dismissal, left their offices, buttonholed electors, engaged in a personal canvass and resorted in some cases to means of political warfare which only the lower elements of the party would resort to. In an open and disgraceful manner, left their offices and canvassed electors, using their positions as government employees to influence votes, and in other respects resorting to acts that reflects anything but credit on them. His Yukon officials were on hand, debauching the electorate by the illegal and wholesale distribution of money, his timber inspectors, his homestead inspectors, his forest rangers, and other officials co-operating with provincial officials, setting at defiance the law laid down in this House, that officials must not take part in elections. Let the hon. gentleman, if he has any regard for consistency, institute inquiries into these cases, and I will furnish him with the names of officials and undertake to prove my accusations to the letter. We all remember the eloquent address of the Prime Minister in the first session of the present parliament, when he declared that no man would be dismissed without a fair trial, that no official would be dismissed because of his political opinions, that no man would lose his official position because of the exercise of his franchise; but if any official desired to be a partisan and engage openly in political warfare, the opportunity would be afforded him to do so freely by being dismissed from the service of the country. What hypocrisy it is to enforce such a law against Conservative officials, while permitting and approving similar actions on the part of Grit officials. It is quite certain that these officials would not risk their positions and engage in political warfare without being directed by their superiors in office to do so. The Minister of the Interior may view this question very much in the same light as did the ex-Attorney General of Manitoba, Mr. J. D. Cameron. When an hon. member of this House who was an engineer of the Department of Public Works of the province, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Macdonnell), was accused of being an offensive partisan, Mr. Cameron's reply was: 'He is not offensive to us.' That made all the difference in the world. I desire, in connection with this, as an illustration of how the official axe has been wielded, to draw attention to a despatch sent from the city of Ottawa recently, to the Free Press, the organ of the Minister of the Interior. This is evidently an inspired despatch:

The Official Axe.

It Works Both Ways—Two Winnipeg Government Employees Dismissed.

('Free Press,' Feb. 13, 1900.)

Ottawa, Feb. 12.—The Dominion government has dismissed Mr. Dan. Smith, inspector of public works in Manitoba, and R. S. Parks, formerly inspector of homesteads, and now of the Dominion Land Office, Manitoba.

This is where the venom comes in:

This has been done in view of the action of Hugh John Macdonald's government in dismissing provincial officials.

It was not because they were offensive partisans; had they been offensive partisans, they would have been dismissed three years ago. It was simply by way of retaliation for the action of Hugh John Macdonald in dismissing, in the undoubted exercise of his right, certain officials of his government. Because this was done, because this Czar was not consulted, he decapitated two officials who had taken no part in the elections whatever, simply because they were Conservatives. The despatch goes on:

Others will follow, and names will be given. There is said to be a considerable list ready, which will probably wait for the future action of Hugh John Macdonald's administration.

You see the threat held over the head of these gentlemen. But, any person who knows the Premier of Manitoba, will know that he will not be intimidated by such a puerile threat as this—he is not built that way. But this action of the Minister of the Interior is due to the fact that one of these officials who was dismissed by the Manitoba government, was his own father, who held a position which was created for him, a useless position. The hon. member for Selkirk was engineer of the Public Works Department. Hon. Hugh John Macdonald dismissed him. But the hon. member (Mr. Macdonnell), will not find fault. In fact, he stated on the floor of the House, that he expected to be dismissed. He admitted that he was a partisan. Hugh John Macdonald combined his position with the position held by the father of the Minister of the Interior and saved the salary that had been paid to the latter. He saved one salary by combining those two positions, and because he dared to do that, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), swipes off the head, to use a vulgarism, of those two innocent officials. It is just such actions as those on the part of the Minister of the Interior that have caused his political death in the west, and while no greater service could be rendered to the Conservative party than the retention in the cabinet of the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), still we recognize that it is at the expense of the good name of our country; something which all true Canadians will prize more highly than any mere party advantage. I desire to state also as a confirmation of this, that the Minister of Public Works had promised one year ago that not a hair of Mr. Smith's head would be injured, that he was one of his best officials in the Dominion of Canada; and when he was interviewed a short time ago as to why he had dismissed him, he admitted it was the Minister of the Interior who brought pressure to bear upon him to dismiss this man, admitted it was done in the way of retaliation. It seems, therefore, that the Minister of the Interior, not content with doing what he said he was going to do when he came down here, run his own department, so far as dismissals of officials are concerned, he is going to run some other departments as well. You would imagine that the Minister of the Interior claims a patent for this dismissal business.

Now, the government take a great deal of credit to themselves for the so-called success of their immigration policy, without specifying the particular character of a considerable portion of those immigrants. I do not know if the Minister of the Interior is as much enamoured of the Gallians and Doukhobors as he was prior to his departure for the west. If he is, it only shows that he has been blind to public sentiment on this question. Possibly no portion of the hon. gentleman's speech, delivered as it was upon many occasions on that tour, fell flatter upon his audience, acted more as a wet blanket, than when he pledged his reputation, of no great weight to be sure, but such as it was, to the statement that within five years these people would be among the most desirable class of our settlers. I say he has failed to appreciate the objections of the people to that class of settlers. Even the Liberal candidates at the late provincial contest, knowing how unpopular these people were, attempted to shoulder the responsibility on to the late Conservative administration; they repudiated all responsibility on behalf of the Greenway government for the location of these people on the western prairies. The Winnipeg Free Press, the organ of the Minister of the Interior, a paper which, by the way, deserves the thanks of every Conservative for having assisted the Minister of the Interior in placing the Hon. Hugh John Macdonald where he is to-day, attempted to prove that it was entirely owing to the policy of the late Minister of the Interior, the Hon. T. M. Daly, that the off-scourings of Southern Europe were dumped on to those prairies. The Minister of the Interior seems hard to be convinced on this question, but I can assure him that while the people of the west are desirous to see the country peopled by a good and desirable class of settlers, men with whom the people can feel that they have something in common, people of the Anglo-Saxon race whom we know by experience will become successful settlers like the Icelanders and the Scandinavians, they do object to the wholesale immigration of those Slavs from Southern Europe, who are reared in superstition, ignorance and filth, whose morals are of a low type, and who are grouped in large colonies where they may retain their own habits, and customs and language, refusing to consolidate with the general public, which if it took place, would have the effect of improving their condition. No doubt one object of the Minister of the Interior in encouraging a large immigration of those people was for the purpose of enfranchising them at the earliest possible moment and utilizing them, through the instrumentality of his officials, for party purposes. Now, however, that their own Franchise Act is about to react as a boomerang against themselves, by the adoption of the provincial lists, and as it is the intention of the present government of Manitoba to apply an educational test and refuse to enfranchise those foreigners until they have been long enough in the country to understand British institutions and a British form of government, and to know what the ballot means, the hon. minister may decide that further importations of a similar character are not desirable. I saw an article in a paper to-day stating that fifty of these Doukhobors were leaving Winnipeg for California, whither they were being taken by an immigration agent to work at 50 cents a day. The immigration authorities are becoming alarmed, as there are signs of a general movement in the same direction. The reason given by the Doukhobors for leaving Manitoba is that the country is too cold, a reason which I do not admit, because the country is a very comfortable country to live in.

Now, the Minister of the Interior made another trip to the west immediately prior to his departure across the ocean, no doubt to count the noses of those who have survived the election of December 7. The loss of those six constituencies out of nine in his own Dominion constituency has proved to be a sharp thorn in his side. So he goes westward to hold an organization meeting and see if he could not regain those laurels which he lost on December 7. At that meeting he made a speech, during the course of which he made some remarkable statements, remarkable in the light of his previous utterances upon these questions. During the course of his speech he got in a backhanded slap at his former friend, Mr. Greenway.

In order to clear his own skirts of any complicity in those secret railway deals perpetrated upon the people by the late Liberal administration, he says: I have nothing whatever to do with it. I was never consulted in reference to your Manitoba railway policy except cursorily. But, says he, I feel confident that my friend Mr. Cameron would not deliberately tell a falsehood upon this question. If he stated officially that a certain line of policy was beneficial, I believe that was true. But he had not a word to say about Mr. Greenway. He had known Mr. Greenway's record in the past for veracity, and he had not a good word to say about him. He only hoped that when the local legislature would meet Mr. Greenway would make a statement and give a plausible explanation to suit his own friends. That is all he had to say for Mr. Greenway.

But what did he state in reference to the duty upon agricultural implements? Probably if there was one question upon which the Liberals were united in 1896 it was in regard to the duty on agricultural implements. Every constituency was placarded with the words: 'Vote for the Liberal candidate and free agricultural implements.' They made a speciality of it, and they obtained the votes of thousands of our farmers upon this question that they would not have otherwise received, men who had broken away from their old-time party proclivities, and gave their votes to the Liberal candidates upon the strength of those pledges. When the Conservatives tried to persuade them that the Conservative government had been the true tariff reformers, by reducing the duty from 35 to 20 per cent, the Liberals would not hear of it, they stated that 20 per cent was still an outrageously high protective duty, that manufactures were being built up at the expense of the farmers in the west, that if the agricultural implement makers deserved raw material free, the farmers were as much entitled to raw material free of duty as they were. This was their cry on this question in 1896. But something took place since. The Minister of the Interior is now a cabinet minister; possibly that fact and the $7,000 he receives annually may have changed his views. There is, I think, another reason. He has been touring in the east with the manufacturers of those implements. He was, I believe, in the company of the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost), when he made that celebrated speech wherein he declared that the tariff was a dead issue, which produced such consternation among his friends in the west that they took him to task, inquiring how he could make so foolish a statement as that. Well, he was reported in the Liberal papers, and no one has denied the report, as saying: Yes, I did say that the tariff was a dead issue between the political parties, because the Tories have come round to our way of thinking on the question. A more simple and puerile explanation never fell from the mouth of man, let alone a cabinet minister, and I fear the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville is responsible for inoculating the Minister of the Interior with a good deal of his protectionist theories. He comes back now, but he does not say that 20 per cent is an outrageously high protective tariff, but he says: Gentlemen, when I was speaking in 1896, I was entirely ignorant of what I was telling you, or I was deliberately deceiving you. He must say either one of these things or the other, he cannot avoid one issue or the other. He now claims that far from the 20 per cent duty being a protective duty, it is not even a revenue tariff. He states that while the manufacturers of Canada have to pay 35 per cent on their raw material, the manufacturers on the other side of the line can send the finished product in for 20 per cent. The only deduction you can draw from this is, that, in order to make this duty a revenue tariff it would require to be raised another 15 per cent, making it what it was prior to 1894. The 20 per cent tariff was a protective tariff in 1896, while now it is not even a revenue tariff. When hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House attempted to explain their position, and when it was stated that year after year had gone by and no reduction had been made on agricultural implements while the duty upon the raw material entering into them has been reduced, he tells them not to look upon these questions from a narrow provincial standpoint, but from that broad Dominion standpoint that the hon. minister looks upon them himself. It was in his spirit of narrow sectionalism, that, in 1896, the hon. Minister of the Interior asked the people of Manitoba to strike down the Tory candidates because, if the Liberals get into power they would have free agricultural implements. I do not know what the Prime Minister must have thought of the indiscretion of the hon. Minister of the Interior touching the question of the duty on lumber when, for the purpose of self-laudation, the hon. Minister of the Interior told the people at Brandon that a deputation came down to Ottawa and waited upon the government that they were representing millions of dollars, that they had more power and influence in the constituencies than the whole province of Manitoba would be worth to the Liberal party, that they declared that they would give the government twelve months to put a large duty on lumber, and that if they did not do it they would support the hon. leader of the opposition. To say the least of it the hon. Minister of the Interior was divulging cabinet secrets. He said: I was called in, and I told the Prime Minister that if this were to be made the policy of the government I might as well write out my resignation. Then, of course, the whole fabric would tumble to the ground, the keystone being removed, so the coon came down. He states that every member of the government would be politically benefited by the imposition of a duty on lumber except himself. Is this a case of the tail wagging the dog, or Napoleon ordering his subalterns to duty their duty and obey his commands. It seems that tariff questions are decided not so much in the interest of the people as in regard to political exigencies.

What has been the policy of the government in regard to the binder twine industry? The House will remember that when the late Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice it was claimed that a large binder twine combine had been formed in the Dominion of Canada to increase the price of binder twine. Our prairies were becoming more thickly populated, a greater acreage was brought under cultivation every year, and an increasingly large supply of binder twine was required by our farmers. Sir John Thompson installed a plant in the Kingston penitentiary for the purpose of giving the farmers cheaper binder twine, which they did receive during the time of the Conservative administration. But, when our Liberal friends came into power they disposed of this twine, from year to year to their own political friends, to such men as Hobbs, of London, who was a member of the combine, and who held up the farmers, to Bate, of Ottawa, who, if not a member of the combine himself, disposed of his purchase to Hobbs, and it was controlled by the combine. These men, playing into each other's hands and into the hands of members of the combine held up the farmers and extorted from them hundreds of thousands of dollars out of their pockets more than they should have been called upon to pay. Yet, hon. gentlemen say that they are giving a great boon to the farmers because they are allowing them the privilege of purchasing twine at factory prices up to the 1st of May instead of up to the 1st of March. Every businessman and every representative of a rural constituency knows that there is not a farmer in five thousand who will buy a pound of twine before the 1st of May. Our farmers have not got bank accounts, they do not have sufficient money lying idle that they can afford to pay out money four months in advance of the harvest, they do not know how much grain they will have, they do not know the amount of twine they will require, and therefore this privilege is a valueless one. If the farmer had been accorded the privilege of purchasing twine during the whole of the season at manufacturing prices it would have been some advantage to him. As it is the government are simply playing into the hands of their own political favourites, such men as Hobbs, of London, and Bate, of Ottawa, who buy the binder twine for 4 cents a pound and sell it to the farmers at 14 cents and 15 cents a pound.

Mr. CLANCY. The combine has fixed the price.

Mr. ROCHE. Yes, the combine has fixed the price.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not trespass further on your time, but will merely say that a government with such a record as this, may well dread the honest verdict of the electors and put off the evil day as long as they possibly can, but come when it may, the people will bear in mind their deception and maladministration and ask them, how comes it that a party that promised reduced expenditure have increased it by $10,000,000; that promised a reduction of the national debt and have increased it $7,000,000; that promised free trade and have maintained protection, receiving the endorsement of the Manufacturers' Association in so doing; that promised a reduction of cabinet ministers and have increased them by two; that promised a fast Atlantic service and have entirely failed to secure one; that were so desirous to preserve the dignity of parliament and its independence, that the present Postmaster General, when in opposition, introduced a resolution into this House making it a misdemeanour for any member of parliament to accept a position of emolument under the Crown until two years after he had ceased to be a member, and who, since coming into power, have appointed fifteen or sixteen members of parliament to public positions? How comes it that the same hon. gentleman introduced a resolution providing for the reduction of the Governor General's salary, claiming it was outrageously high for a country like Canada to pay Her Majesty's representative, but who evidently thinks it all right now, for no move has been made to effect such a reduction? Why is it that a party that preached purity in elections, purity in administration, and purity in our public men, have given unmistakable evidence of a desire to shield the guilty, to stifle investigation, and to condone offences when committed by members of their own party? What is the reason that a party who railed against the Senate as the repository of worn-out political hacks, defeated candidates and men in their dotage, have since appointed, time and again, men who have been rejected at the polls, discredited politicians, such as a recent Manitoba appointment, and other youthful appointees only 83 years of age, who promised that with a Liberal government in power reciprocity with the United States would be sure to follow as a matter of course, and who, after having spent months in begging for this so-called boon, and spending thousands of dollars of public funds in visits to Washington for this purpose, now declare that the people of Canada do not desire reciprocity; who pledged themselves to introduce a prohibitory liquor law if the result of the plebiscite was favourable, and having expended $200,000 out of the public treasury for the taking of that plebiscite, afterwards refused to carry out their pledges, because of a secret agreement amongst themselves imposing an impossible condition, requiring at least 50 per cent of the total vote on the list to be polled in its favour.

It is because of all this and much more of a like character that might be enumerated, that it does not require a person to be blest with any great spirit of prophecy to foretell the result of the next contest. I have too much respect for the intelligence of the people of Canada, too much confidence in their judgment, too much belief in their uprightness and their integrity, to think it likely that they will condone these offences on the part of our public men. I believe, Sir, that the people of Canada will hold this government strictly to account for their boodling propensities and for their maladministration.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 9, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to mention to the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that there are two or three orders, made quite a while ago now, that have not been complied with, amongst them one calling for the correspondence between the Department of the Interior and Mr. Fred. White, the comptroller, and any person in the North-west Territories respecting contracts for supplying the North-west mounted police, more especially, with tea. There was an order made about six weeks ago, and no return has been brought down. I have been searching in the office. There was also an order made for a return in reference to the amounts paid for printing for the North-west Territories for ten years.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It seems to me that has been brought down.

Mr. DAVIN. I have been upstairs, and I find that it has not been brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is, two. I think the hon. gentleman said there were three.

Mr. DAVIN. There is a third, but it has escaped my memory for the moment. I found the order upstairs.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) when we may expect the report of the Militia Department to come down, and whether, when it is brought down, it will contain the report of the Major General Commanding.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The report, I think, is in the printer's hands now and has been for several days. The report will contain such portions of the General Officer's report as I think proper to submit.

GASPE SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Gaspé Short Line Railway Company.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, I just wish to mention to the House, that, in reference to this Bill, I received, this morning, two telegrams, one from Gaspé and the other from Paspébiac. The purport of the telegrams is that documents were mailed yesterday to Ottawa, and asking if the Bill could be held over until they arrived. I do not see that anything is harmed by holding over the third reading, and we will see what they are. I do not know what they are. I just suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) that it would be well to allow the third reading to lie over until these documents come from Gaspé and Paspébiac.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have received several petitions, within a month or so, favouring the purchase of this Baie des Chaleurs Railway by a good, sound company, from all parts of the county of Gaspé. I have received, also, petitions against the extension of any delay to the present company. The five years have lapsed for the construction of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway from Paspébiac to Gaspé Basin. This Bill has been discussed several times before the House, and I do not see why such opposition should be brought against the Bill. I have received a number of petitions, and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has also received quite a number in favour of the Bill.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). The very reasons which my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) has given, the number of petitions which he has received from his constituency, and also the strong influence which is brought to bear on him as representing that constituency, are good reasons why we should not hesitate to allow the delay of a day for the purpose of seeing these documents. It would look, in the light of the information which the hon. gentleman has received, as if he wished to hasten the passage of the Bill without knowing exactly what these documents, which are sent forward, will disclose. They may possibly be in favour of the position taken by the hon. gentleman, and if they are not, the hon. gentleman, with the strong support which he has received already, must be quite convinced that he is running no great danger in allowing this short delay for the purpose of allowing these papers to be laid on the Table of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. If there were anything lost by the delay I would not press it. But, I do not see that there is. I am not offering it any factious opposition at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the documents coming from Gaspé and Paspébiac, which are expected by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), are in favour of the Bill, I do not need to delay for them. If they are against the Bill, as I presume they may be, the parties who have signed these documents had ample opportunity of presenting themselves before the Railway Committee and of presenting their views during the week or so that the Bill has been before the House. I have waited a long time, and I think I should be given a chance of having my Bill passed. Any opposition can now be made before the Senate.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In view of the statement made by the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) that he has no desire to impede the passage of the Bill, but simply to present reasons, if there are any reasons, why it should not be passed, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) should accept that. The Bill is sure to come up on Wednesday evening, and it can pass then.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

RESTIGOUCHE AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 73) respecting the Restigouche and Western Railway Company.

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). There is a considerable amount of money still due by this company to Mr. Pigott, a constituent of mine, and I wish to ask the hon. gentleman if it is his intention to see that that amount will be paid?

Mr. McALISTER. The railway that my hon. friend (Mr. Wood) refers to is a railway incorporated by a local charter and running from Campbellton to St. John. This Bill is for a bridge to enable this company to cross the St. John River at or near Grand Falls. So far as the claims of the hon. gentleman or his friends are concerned, they have no connection with this Bill at all.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I have knowledge of a claim against the very company that is seeking this legislation. It is a claim by the widow of the son of the late Dr. Jack, of St. John, who was an engineer on that road and who never was paid. I would like to have some assurance that that account would be paid.

Mr. McALISTER. I cannot give any security or guarantee. Mr. Malcolm Ross and the others in the company have undertaken to pay all just claims against the road, and I am sure they will. I have nothing to do with giving a guarantee.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). We can get a guarantee by putting a clause in the Bill to that effect.

Mr. McALISTER. This Bill is for a bridge and not for part of the railway at all.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It is for the very same company.

Mr. McALISTER. But you cannot put a clause like that in this Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). You can do anything in this parliament. If that bridge is to be built by the company who built the railway and they have not yet paid their debts, then if it is worth while coming to parliament for this Bill they ought to pay what they owe. We inserted a similar clause two or three years ago with respect to a Hamilton Bill and I think we should do the same thing here. I would have brought this matter up in the committee but the papers only came to my hands a few days ago.

Mr. McALISTER. How long ago?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Within the last week. This is a peculiarly hard case. This young man had to go to work in British Columbia and died there, and the widow ought to have this money.

Mr. McALISTER. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Some five or six hundred dollars, and it is certified by the regular officers of the company.

Mr. BERGERON. Have they gone before the courts?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). No. This is the best way of getting before the courts without cost.

Mr. JOHN COSTIGAN (Victoria, N.B.). I would not like the House to come to the conclusion, from the discussion that has taken place, that the company asking for this charter, and who have undertaken to construct the Restigouche and Western Railway, are defaulters in the payment of their engineers or any other employees; or in respect to any debts whatever contracted by them. I know nothing of the claim referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser), but I do know that if, as he states, the account has been certified by the proper officers of the company, it would not be necessary to insert a clause in this or any other Act to insure the payment of one hundred cents in the dollar by this company for any just claim against them. They do not owe one dollar in Canada and they have never been one day behind in the payment of a dollar. Perhaps this claim may have arisen through a former company. That I do not know, but so far as the present company is concerned they do not owe any money that they are not prepared to pay. I do not think that the engineer referred to, the late Mr. Jack, was ever employed by this company; if he was ever employed upon that survey at all.

Mr. WOOD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) appears to know a good deal about this.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do know considerable about it.

Mr. WOOD. Will he tell me if the debt against this road owed to Mr. Pigott has been paid, and if Mr. Pigott has got his money?

Mr. COSTIGAN. All debts contracted by this company have been paid at 100 cents on the dollar, and always will be.

Mr. WOOD. It is not the Restigouche and Western Railway?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. There is some $600 owing to Mr. Pigott by that company and it has not been paid yet.

Mr. McALISTER. How did that liability attach to the Restigouche and Western?

Mr. WOOD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McAlister) knows quite as well as I do how it occurred.

Mr. McALISTER. I am sure I do not know.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I have no doubt in my mind but that the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) is entirely correct in the statement, that the claim of the late Mr. Jack, which my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) has referred to, is not a claim against this company, but is a claim against another company, namely, the Restigouche and Victoria. The matter has been before me on several occasions and in different ways, and when the fight was on between the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company and the Restigouche and Western Company, as to which of these two companies should be finally possessed of the charter and proceed with this work; an agreement was arrived at between the two contestants under which they were to submit the claims that were in contention between them; the liabilities of the old company, and I was to examine them and to determine as a sort of referee what amount I thought would be fair and reasonable for the Restigouche and Western Company to pay. A good deal of money no doubt had been expended by the Restigouche and Victoria—or a good many debts were incurred by the Restigouche and Victoria—and upon examination of these outstanding liabilities I became very well satisfied in my own mind that the whole claim, or that even a major part of the claim would not be a legitimate one to saddle upon the Restigouche and Western Company. I went over the items with some care, and I came to a conclusion with regard to the amount of the liabilities which I thought the Restigouche and Western should pay, and it was agreed that out of the first moneys which should be coming to the Restigouche and Western Company, that the amount I determined upon should be adjusted. I am free to say that the conclusion I arrived at was not satisfactory to either party. The Restigouche and Victoria people thought I had allowed too little, and the Restigouche and Western people thought I had allowed too much. However, the agreement was that they should abide by the conclusion I arrived at, and, out of the first moneys, according to the arrangement, half of this sum which had been fixed upon by me, was reserved out of the payment coming to the Restigouche and Western. One-half of the amount was distributed among these claimants; the other half, if my memory serves me, still remains, and will not be available until the next amount of the subsidy is earned by the Restigouche and Western Company. That is the way the matter stands. I know that the Messrs. Pigott had a considerable claim, but I could not see that they were entitled to be paid it in full. I went over the items which constituted their claim. I struck off a large portion of them, and they will be paid the balance. More than that I do not think it would be possible to do. I may add that I think it would be very unfair to introduce any clause into this Bill which would impose a liability in respect to those matters upon the Restigouche and Western Company. I believe they are carrying out the arrangement they made in good faith. I can discover no evidence of any unwillingness on their part to pay as they agreed. Therefore, I would not favour placing any clause in this Bill fixing any further liability upon them.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). That is all right as far as it goes; but I do not think we in this House should be bound—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I am going to put myself right. I suppose I can move the adjournment?

Mr. SPEAKER. Only by consent of the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

COMOX AND CAPE SCOTT RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 35) to incorporate the Comox and Cape Scott Railway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

On section 8.

Mr. A. MORRISON (New Westminster) moved to amend section 8, by inserting after the word 'in,' in the third line, the words following: 'Wellington district, thence northerly to a point in.'

Mr. BERGERON. What is the object of that?

Mr. MORRISON. It is to supply an omission made by the solicitors who drafted the Bill. Without the amendment, the point of commencement will be Comox, whereas they wish the railway to commence at Wellington.

Mr. BERGERON. Has that only been found out since the Bill was in committee ?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes.

Mr. W. W. B. McINNES (Vancouver). This is a very important amendment to the Bill, and no public notice whatever has been given of it. The notice to the public was that application would be made to incorporate a company to build a line from Comox to Cape Scott. A Bill was presented for that purpose to the Railway Committee, and the Railway Committee considered it and adopted it in the form in which it has come to this House. I think there should be some explanation as to the necessity for this amendment, which goes to the extent of increasing the powers obtained under this Bill as applied for by one-third. The distance from Comox to Cape Scott is about 150 miles. The proposition now is to start from Wellington, a point seventy miles south of Comox, and build a line from there to Cape Scott. This is a very considerable difference. The amendment makes another important difference, and it is this: The parties who control the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, are the principal applicants for this charter. Under their Act of incorporation, they have a right to build their line to Comox, so that there is no necessity, so far as I can see, for giving the additional power proposed by the amendment to this Bill. Should the amendment pass, other amendments would have to be made to conform the Bill to the amendment. For instance, the bonding privilege from Comox to Cape Scott, provides for $20,000 a mile, which for that portion of the road would not be unfair; but the portion from Wellington to Comox would be a very easy road to build, and, therefore, the bonding privilege should be cut down. Since we have had no explanation of why this proposed amendment is necessary, and no public notice has been given of it, I think it would be more satisfactory to refer the whole Bill back to the Railway Committee for reconsideration.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) The hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes), says that this Bill provides that the railway must be built from Comox. I would draw his attention to the fact that it says the Comox district, which is entirely a different thing from the town of Comox.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you not go through the Wellington district in going to Comox ?

Mr. MORRISON. No. The Comox district is north of Wellington. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes), stated that this railway began at Wellington. The amendment does not say so; it says at a point in the Wellington district—the town of Wellington or one of the terminals of the Esquimalt and Wellington Railway. I think the hon. gentleman is going a little too far in the statement he has made. I do not see what difference it makes whether there is a charter for another railway traversing part of the Wellington district or not. The terminus of this road is not apparently at Wellington, but at a point in the Wellington district, and I am advised by the solicitors who have charge of this measure, that the omission of these words was an inadvertence. The road is to be extended from some point on the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway up to Cape Scott. Speaking for myself, I consider it an objection that this charter does not explicitly say that the road shall begin at Wellington. What the people of Vancouver Island and British Columbia want is unbroken connection from Victoria up to Cape Scott. Then the scheme of this road could be carried out, namely, to get through connection to as near Alaska points and the Yukon from Victoria as possible. The idea is to have through connection from Victoria, at the south end of the island to Cape Scott, at the most northerly extremity, so as to have the whole island operated by a company which would see that the public were catered to in a proper manner. At Cape Scott, the passengers and traffic brought there from all parts of the continent would be transhipped on board the various steamers and taken out to the most important points in the north. This House ought to be glad of the opportunity of assisting people in a Bill of this kind. And I think the hon. gentleman ought to be one of the very last men to throw any obstacles in its way. The road goes right through his constituency, and I should think that his constituents would hail with delight the opening up of a district in which there are now no railways.

I can quite see the objection to beginning the road at Comox, which is some sixty or seventy miles from Wellington, the other terminus of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo road, so that there would be a distance of some sixty miles without a road at all. I am advised by the solicitors that these words were left out entirely through inadvertence, and I think my hon. friend should raise no objection.

Mr. McINNES. If it were through inadvertence that the solicitors left these words out, that is most extraordinary. If the intention was to run the line from Wellington to Cape Scott, that should have been expressed in the Bill, and the road called the Wellington and Cape Scott Railway Company, and not 'the Comox and Cape Scott Railway Company.' There is no inadvertence about it at all. As I have already pointed out, the people who control the E. and N. charter are the same parties who control this application, and they already have power to build to the Comox district. It was most natural, when they wanted to extend their line to the North End, that they should ask simply for power from Comox to Cape Scott. At this hour it is rather strange that they should endeavour to slip in an amendment giving the power to build from Wellington district. There is a reason for it, and this House should not deal with this thing in the dark.

Mr. PRIOR. What is the reason?

Mr. McINNES. If there is a reason it should be forthcoming.

Mr. PRIOR. What does the hon. gentleman imagine the reason is? Has he any idea?

Mr. McINNES. I have an idea, but do not care to assign any reason unless absolutely positive, and it is incumbent on those in charge of the Bill to submit some sufficient reason for this amendment.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). If I understand the hon. gentleman rightly, there is serious objection to this Bill. There is a petition in favour of building a particular line of railway, which was referred to the Railway Committee, and now, after the committee has passed on the Bill, we are asked to amend it and give something entirely different from what the petitioners ask. If this amendment alters the petition and is not included in it—as it cannot be, because it would make the road seventy miles more than the petitioners ask—I do not see how we can consent to the amendment. The first thing the Railway Committee does is to see if the railway is within the bounds of the petition, but what is the use of the committee doing that, if, after they have passed on the Bill, we are going to put through an amendment which makes the road entirely different from the one asked for.

Mr. MORRISON. There is a misapprehension in saying that there is a difference of sixty miles.

Mr. HAGGART. So I understood from the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes).

Mr. MORRISON. He is not correct in that. You will notice, the Bill is for a line from a point in Comox district, and the amendment asked that the road should begin at a point in the district of Wellington. It may be that there would not be half a mile of difference, so that it is not quite correct to say there is a difference of sixty or seventy miles or even ten miles.

Mr. COCHRANE. What does the petition ask for?

Mr. MORRISON. I have not seen the petition. I had nothing to do with drafting the Bill, but am simply stating what I am advised by the solicitors. The gravamen of the objection of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes) seems to be that there is another charter existing. I am advised that there is none such, either local or federal, traversing this same district.

The hon. gentleman's objection to this has developed within the last few days. I have no interest in the matter, except that I feel that we should not arbitrarily oppose an application of this kind, and I cannot free myself from the impression that the hon. gentleman's real objection is not the one he gives, and I am not saying that in an offensive spirit at all. I do not think that his objection is a valid one, or at least one cogent to us, and which would justify in losing the time it would take to have this thing referred back to committee. I have no ulterior motive; it is immaterial to me whether this thing passes or not, except that I think it is important to the people in business in these parts and to the people of Vancouver Island generally that this road should be built. I submit that the objection is not sufficiently strong to justify us taking the time that would be necessary to have this matter go back to the committee. I strongly urge that the amendment be allowed to pass.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the objection to the passing of this amendment is very strong. It would be most unreasonable if this House should pass a Bill providing for the building of a railway to points not covered by the petition. It would be a most unusual course, and even contrary to our rules. It is of great importance that we should consider the matter very carefully before passing such an amendment. It is an easy matter to get the petition. I have sent for it. And if it be found that the amendment is not covered by the petition I think that would be a very strong objection.

Mr. MORRISON. There is no doubt that the words sought to be inserted are not in the petition. But I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) if he would consider the objection a fatal one in any case. Supposing this made a difference of only a mile, supposing that they were adjoining counties and that Comox was used instead of Wellington, would the hon. gentleman consider that a sufficient objection? Is it not a matter of degree, a matter of distance? There is nothing to show that this is a matter of more difference than a mile.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be a difference of only a mile, but we have no knowledge as to whether it is one mile or one hundred. The only notice that the public has had is similar to what was in the petition, which asked for a charter to construct a railway between certain points; and now it is proposed to start at a different point. Thus, the public will have had no notice of the point from which it is really proposed to start.

Mr. McINNES. I have seen the notice which has been given and also the petition, and the amendment which my hon. friend

(Mr. Morrison) proposes is entirely outside of the petition, and of the notice which has been given to the public. Now, a few moments ago, the hon. gentleman said that he had been advised that there was no charter in existence ever granted by this parliament or the local legislature of British Columbia authorizing a railway company to build up to Comox. In the statutes of British Columbia, 1883, is the Act relating to the Island Railway Company, and section nine of that Act reads as follows :

The company, and their agents and servants, shall lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work a continuous double or single track steel railway of the gauge of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also a telegraph line, with the proper appurtenances from a point at or near the harbour of Esquimalt, in British Columbia, to a port or place at or near Nanaimo, on the eastern coast of Vancouver Island—

Now, listen to this :

—with power to extend the main line to Comox and Victoria, and to construct branches to settlements on the east coast, and also to extend the said railway by ferry communications to the mainland of British Columbia.

There is no doubt at all but that the Island Railway Company already has power to build to Comox. That is a well understood fact by those who are familiar with the railway affairs of Vancouver Island. I have no objection, as has been insinuated by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), to the passing of this Bill in its present shape, with an amendment which I intend to propose later on, but I have a decided objection to the amendment that he proposes. Now, the Bill in its present shape will give the people of British Columbia every advantage which they can have under the amendment proposed of having a line from one end of Vancouver Island to the other. Under the section that I have read the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company have the right to build to Comox. By defeating the amendment that the hon. gentleman proposes, we do not defeat the object of having a line throughout the length of the island. For the life of me, I cannot see any sufficient or proper reason why this amendment should be proposed. As I said before, there must be some reason, but no reason has been assigned ; and I am going to be very slow in assigning any reason until I know that my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) or whoever else has charge of this on behalf of the applicants has exhausted his resources in giving reasons.

Mr. MORRISON. Perhaps, in making the remarks I am about to make, I may say that which will be regarded by some hon. gentlemen as an argument in favour of going back to the committee. But in justice to the promoters I may say there is no charter, local or federal, from Wellington to Comox, and the evidence in support of

that is the section read by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes). The power given under that charter is to build from Vancouver to Comox, but the points I mentioned were Wellington and Comox, the point covered by the amendment which I have proposed. The petition did not contain the words 'Wellington district,' and it is for the House to decide whether it is a sufficiently serious and fatal objection that it is proposed now. It strikes me that the hon. gentleman's objection is the fact, as he alleges, of the existence of another charter covering the same route. But I repeat there is no charter along that route, and if that is his only objection, I think he should not—

Mr. SPROULE. Is that charter not in existence now ?

Mr. MORRISON. From Nanaimo to Comox, yes, but this amendment reads, Wellington and Comox—a different matter.

Mr. McINNES. The E. and N. company have already built to Wellington under that charter.

Mr. MORRISON. I am not familiar with the geography of that particular district of British Columbia, but the E. and N. railway, were they to extend, would go by way of Nanaimo to Comox, may take a different direction from the road going from Wellington to Cape Scott via Comox district, which is a very large district. Now, the termini of the Nanaimo and Esquimalt road built or for which power has been given to build are Victoria and Comox, where there is a shipping point, wharfs, and so on. This goes from Wellington to Cape Scott through the district of Comox. It may be miles from the northern terminus of the Nanaimo and Esquimalt road. These remarks may be regarded by some hon. gentlemen as reasons why we should go back to the committee so that the matter could be explained. But I wish to place myself right, and to express my regret that an hon. gentleman is raising a point which seems to be that he objects to this going on because there is a charter covering the line, for such is not the case.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why did not you have this proposed in committee ?

Mr. MORRISON. I was not in committee when the matter came up ; and I am advised by the solicitors, who are reputable solicitors, that the omission was quite an inadvertence. The solicitors in Victoria omitted this, and a gentleman from Victoria who happened to be here and knowing the nature of the undertaking pointed out that it was evidently a mistake, and advised the Ottawa solicitors to put in an amendment ; and they put in an amendment, and I gave notice of it. As I understand the objection it is, that there is another charter covering the same route.

Mr. SPROULE. No, that is not the objection, so far as I am concerned. The objection that I urge is that we are proposing to build a railway where the petition never asked for it, so that the public have no notice of the legislation that is really proposed. Perhaps they would have taken objection to it if proper notice had been given, and if it was understood from the first that the proposition was to build a railway in that locality. But, the public know nothing about it, and the Standing Orders Committee could know nothing of it except what was placed before the committee, and they passed that upon the strength of the notice that was given for the building of a railway in a certain place mentioned in the petition. But this is an entirely different place. It makes no difference, in my judgment, whether there were a dozen railway charters in existence or none at all.

Mr. MORRISON. I have the utmost respect for the hon. gentleman's views upon matters of this kind, and I would ask him frankly if he considers this a sufficiently serious objection, and if he wishes to press his objection.

Mr. SPROULE. I do so consider it, and will press the objection.

Mr. MORRISON. Of course, under the circumstances, perhaps it is just as well to send it back to the committee.

Mr. PRIOR. No doubt there is a difference between the petition and this Bill, and sooner than antagonize the House, I think it would be better for the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill to let it go back to the committee. There is no other company that I know of, that wishes to build this road, or who opposes it. I think when the whole matter is explained, it will only show inadvertence on the part of the solicitors who framed this Bill, and when the matter is placed fairly before the House, there will be no opposition.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must be very particular, because if it went to the Railway Committee and if the Railway Committee reported it to the House, and if objection was taken before the Speaker, he would rule out the Bill. Even if the Standing Orders Committee reported that it had passed a petition for an entirely different line, I doubt whether, if objection was taken in the House, the Bill would not be thrown out.

Mr. MORRISON. I can see that the objection goes to the root of the matter. It is an objection ab initio, and makes it very doubtful whether a reference back to the committee will remedy the trouble. I have doubts about it. In order to avoid the complications that must necessarily arise upon referring the Bill back, I would strongly urge the committee to consider whether they would not be justified in allowing it to go on. There is no objection to the charter extending from Wellington north, the objection is that they did not put it in the petition. I would ask the committee if they cannot see some way of allowing the Bill to go on.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the Bill, if not reported, be of any use to you? Hadn't you better get it through as it is?

Mr. MORRISON. That idea occurred to myself, but I am not sufficiently instructed as to whether that would satisfy the promoters.

Mr. PRIOR. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether it could not be altered in another place. Put it through as it is now, and have it amended in another place, after it has passed this House.

Mr. McINNES. Before the Bill is reported, I beg leave to move that the following clause be added to section 16:

No Chinese person shall be employed in the construction or operation of the railway or undertaking authorized hereby, under a penalty of $5 per day for each and every Chinese person employed in contravention of this section, said penalty to be recoverable by summary conviction on the complaint of any person.

I would like to say a word in connection with this. In the first place I would like to point out that this charter is entirely provincial and local. It contemplates, as it stands, the building of a line from Comox to Cape Scott, a distance of 150 miles only. Now, inasmuch as this is entirely a provincial affair, I strongly urge upon this committee that the views of the people of British Columbia should prevail in relation to it. The people who are applying for this charter have applied to this parliament instead of the provincial legislature, notwithstanding that the work is entirely local and provincial in its nature. Now, if these parties had applied to the local legislature of British Columbia for this charter, there would, undoubtedly, have been a clause, similar, word for word, to the one which I have just read, inserted in it. Every charter which has been granted by the legislature of British Columbia since 1898, has included the following section:

No Chinese or Japanese person shall be employed in the construction or operation of the undertaking hereby authorized, under a penalty of $5 per day for each and every Chinese or Japanese person employed in contravention of this section, to be recovered on complaint of any person under the provisions of the Summary Convictions Act.

That section would, undoubtedly, have been inserted in the charter, had these parties applied to the legislature of British Columbia. In 1898, as you are aware, the Turner administration was in power in British Columbia. Succeeding them came the Semlin administration, and they following the same course, inserted the same clause in all private legislation, and the same way last session. So that every charter for the last three sessions in British Columbia, has had this clause inserted in it. If these parties who are now applying for this charter, had applied for it there, they would have had to submit to a clause of this kind being inserted. We may take these facts as absolute evidence that there is practical unanimity in British Columbia upon this matter.

Moreover, so far as the district affected by this charter is concerned, I may say that the proposition to extend this railway to the north end of the island is not a new proposition by any means; it is a question that has been discussed for years, it has been a live question in both Dominion and provincial elections for some years. During the last election it was a prominent issue in the part of the district affected by this proposed Bill; and feeling was strongly expressed there that should any application be made to this parliament for powers to construct a line to the north end of the island, some such amendment as I am now proposing should be inserted in the Bill. So I feel that so far as I am personally concerned in this matter, I have a direct mandate from the people who are most interested in it. Now, there can only be one reason, so far as I can see, why the applicants have applied to this parliament, instead of to the legislature of British Columbia, and that is simply to evade the undoubted desire of the people of British Columbia, in regard to this foreign labour question. The excuse is often submitted by parties who apply here instead of to the provincial legislatures for charters, that it is much simpler to finance under a Dominion charter than under a provincial charter. So far as these particular applicants are concerned, there can be no force in that argument at all for the reason that they represent what is probably the wealthiest family in British Columbia. It would be a small undertaking for them, out of their own resources, to construct the whole of this line. There is no reason, I submit, why these applicants should apply to this parliament for this charter except one, and that is simply that they may defeat the wishes of the people of British Columbia in regard to the employment of Chinese and Oriental labour. I was met with the objection, when I proposed an amendment of this kind in the Railway Committee, that this is a large question, that it must be dealt with in some comprehensive way, and it was insinuated or suggested, by some hon. members, that the government was preparing a Bill which would deal with this matter. I pointed out that so far as any contemplated action by the government is concerned, so far as I know, it only contemplates dealing with the immigration of Orientals into the country. I have never heard it suggested that the government contemplated doing anything to deal with the situation which has already been created in the province of British Columbia by the presence of these Orientals who are there now, and it must be apparent to every hon. member, that if it is desirable at all to keep out the Chinamen, it is just as desirable to deal with the situation that their presence in the country gives rise to. There is a particular reason, even if a general Bill cannot be introduced into this House and passed dealing with this whole matter so as to make it applicable to every one, why such a provision as I have proposed should be inserted in this Bill, dealing with these particular applicants, and that reason is that these applicants at present own and control the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, they own large collieries in British Columbia, and wherever they have been brought into contact with the labouring element, they have pursued an unyielding course of hostility to them, they have done everything in their power to lower wages, and they have used their influence to degrade the conditions of labour.

Mr. PRIOR. No. no.

Mr. McINNES. My hon. friend (Mr. Prior) will have an opportunity in a moment of denying everything I say, but I may tell my hon. friend that I am brought into as close contact with the labour element of British Columbia as he is, and I state, on the floor of this House, that what I say is a fact. What makes the treatment of labour, by these applicants, acting under another corporate name, more exasperating is the fact that they have probably received larger bonuses and subsidies from the people of Canada for a smaller return than any other corporation in the Dominion of Canada. For building a small line of railway from Victoria to Nanaimo, a distance of only seventy-two miles, they received $750,000 by way of a cash subsidy, they also received a land grant of 2,000,000 of acres, half of Vancouver Island, they have received extraordinary foreshore rights, they have been accorded the privilege of bringing in all their railway appliances and rolling stock free of duty, they have received an absolute exemption from taxation upon their land grant, indefinitely, as long as it remains their property, and notwithstanding the generous way in which they have been treated by the people, both provincially and federally, they have, as I say, treated the public with the greatest indifference, and the result of that characteristic has been particularly displayed in regard to their employees and labourers who are working for them. We heard, a few weeks ago, in this House, considerable in regard to fair wages. Every one seemed to be in favour of fair wages. If this amendment, which I propose to this Bill, is incorporated in it, it simply means that it will be a guarantee that, if this road is built, it will be built by white labourers, and these white labourers will receive fair wages. In view of these general expressions in regard to fair wages which we heard here a few weeks ago, I look forward with some confidence to this House passing this amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, I beg to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) if this is an amendment of which he gave notice.

Mr. McINNES. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes; then it will be regular so far. I take very strong objection to the ground upon which the hon. gentleman asked that this amendment should pass, and that is, that the company who propose to build this railway have been largely subsidized for doing so. I do not think that should be taken into consideration at all. It is, in my judgment, an important question whether we shall say that we will not allow people who have a right to come into the country, after paying a consideration for coming, to have the same freedom of labour as others who are in the country. I think the proposal of the hon. gentleman is wrong, and that it is unfair. If it is desirable that Chinese should not be employed on such works as this, there should be some general law applicable to the case instead of making an amendment to a railway charter limiting these Chinese, who have paid $50 a head for the advantage of living in the country and earning their living here, stating certain lines of employment in which they cannot be employed. It would be a drawback in the building of railways, because, one of the objects in the building of railways should be to get them built as cheaply as possible, and one of the elements in cheapness would be the element of labour. If the Chinese can do the same amount of work, and do it as well and more cheaply than others, that would be one substantial advantage to the localities where railways must be built. I think that the principle involved in the amendment is radically wrong. If it is in the interest of white labour in the country, or in the interest of the country, that these people should be excluded, they should be excluded by a law for that purpose, and not by this means.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with a great deal that the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes) has said regarding the objectionable features of employing Chinamen in the province of British Columbia, or in any other province in the Dominion of Canada. There may be a great deal of truth in all he has said about the name of Dunsuir, one of the firm, being somewhere attached to, or connected with this Bill. Doubtless they are disgustingly rich. They, doubtless, have received a great many subsidies, and franchises, but, so long as there has been nothing objectionable in the process of acquiring these things, I do not know why we should dwell long on this phase of this question, or why it should be even referred to. For the sake of argument, I will coincide with every word that the hon. member for Vancouver has said, and I might go further even than he went in my references to the feeling in British Columbia about the employment of Chinese. I might go on and prove to him conclusively that it was the most fatal thing, the most pernicious thing, that could possibly happen in the history of British Columbia that Chinamen should be allowed to come in and work there. At the same time, I say that it does not touch the point, and that is not the point of this amendment. The hon. gentleman is a lawyer; there are a number of lawyers in this committee, and I would ask them to reflect upon the effect of this amendment. The sole charter upon which and from which we must proceed before we can refer to or discuss matters here is the British North America Act, and if there is one thing clearer in that Act more than another it is the provision setting out what this parliament may do and what it may not do, and designating what the provincial parliament may do and what it may not do. Almost in the very first page of the British North America Act, from which we cannot escape, it is provided that this parliament may not touch on any matter of a local character coming within the purview of the provincial legislatures, and that it can deal with no matters except those of a most general import. I shall ask my hon. friend the Solicitor General to take part in this debate and if possible to corroborate what I am saying, and there are some other gentlemen here whose views I would like to hear. I submit that although it is competent for this parliament to say, that although no man from Halifax to Vancouver may employ Chinamen, yet we cannot go so far as to say that the individual, Mr. John Smith, of Comox or Nanaimo, in the province of British Columbia, may not employ Chinamen. I submit further, that while it is competent for us to say that no railway, which is being built in Canada, may employ Chinamen, yet I do not believe it is our constitutional right to say that the Comox and Cape Scott Railway especially may not be built by Chinamen. That is a local matter, it does not affect any other province or any other part of a province except that remote part of British Columbia. My opinion is—and I would only be too glad to find that my opinion was wrong in this particular instance—my opinion is, that if we passed this amendment it would not be worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. McINNES. If this is such a peculiarly local and provincial matter, why should we deal with it here at all. Why does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) withdraw the Bill and let the people of British Columbia deal with it, if it is so local in its nature as he says.

Mr. MORRISON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) knows that I have nothing to do with the conduct of the Bill, except in the sense, as he himself might do, allow his name to be attached to it. My name being to the Bill does not signify that I have any interest in it, and I trust that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) will not endeavour to associate me with it in any such sense as if I wanted Chinamen to be employed on that road. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) in his objection to employing Chinamen. But we are not all school children and we ought to know our position here. I am not going to shut my eyes to our constitutional powers whilst I am a representative in this House, nor should I even if I were not a member of this House. I cannot, in reason, support an amendment which, in my opinion, it is not competent for this parliament to insert in legislation which we pass. No matter how strongly I may feel or how much I may be in favour of the sentiment sought by the amendment, I cannot support it while I believe it to be unconstitutional. I have taken the trouble to hunt up authorities on this question and I have referred the hon. gentleman to them, and I do not suppose there is a lawyer in this House who has not at his finger ends two or three of these well known constitutional cases which bear on the point which I have raised in this instance. I refer the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) to the case of L'Union vs. Belle Isle, Law Reports 6 P.C. Appeals. Dealing with this aspect of our constitution, Lord Selbourne says in that case :

Their lordships observe that the scheme of enumeration in section 91 of the British North America Act—

That is referring to the matters which this parliament may deal with :

—is to mention various categories on general subjects which may be dealt with by legislation. There is no indication in any instance of anything being contemplated except what may be properly described as general legislation.

That is, it would be quite competent for us to insert in this Bill that no railways in Canada should employ Chinamen, but it would be contrary to the judgment in this case to pass such an amendment as this, and make it applicable only to a small piece of road in a particular province. In the case of Hodge vs. The Queen, a very well known case, Mr. Justice Burton, quoting Lord Carnarvon, says :

The real object of the Act is to give to the central government these high functions and almost sovereign powers by which general principles and uniformity of legislation may be secured in these questions that are of common import to all the provinces.

Mr. Justice Gwynne, in another case, refers to these matters, which are to be within the category with which this parliament may deal as follows :

Mr. MORRISON.

Matters in which, as being of a general quasi-national and sovereign character, the inhabitants of the other provinces may be said to have a common interest.

In the Queen vs. Robertson, the Supreme Court of Canada decided :

That the British North America Act gave to parliament the right to legislate in regard to matters of national or general concern; such general laws as are for the benefit of the public at large.

There are numerous other cases to show that our legislation in this parliament must be of a general character. It might be argued that there may be a potential aspect to this, and that potentially this parliament might pass legislation of that kind. There is no precedent for it, and it would be absolutely against usage in this parliament if any such amendment as that moved by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) should pass. Holding that view, I cannot see how the hon. gentleman, being a lawyer, and understanding that aspect of the case, can expect to successfully maintain the stand which he has taken in introducing this amendment. I contend that if the amendment were passed the promoters of this Bill could forthwith resort to the courts and be sustained by the legal authorities which we find in abundance. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) chooses to ignore the constitution in a case so palpable as this, for my part I shall stand by the constitution, though in the next moment my support of the constitution should result in sending me to political oblivion. It is a most dangerous stage to arrive at, if we should come here feeling so strongly on a certain matter that we should ignore the principles of law which govern us, and say: 'The constitution be blowed, let us get this law in and throw the onus on the other people to have it rectified.' As I have already said, I would not take a second place to the hon. member for Vancouver in my feeling in regard to this Chinese matter, but it seems to me there is a right and a wrong way to redress our grievances—and we have grievances. The government have assured us that they are going to bring down legislation dealing with the Chinese question in British Columbia. I believe the government will do so, and I am quite confident that that legislation when it comes before the House will be ample and satisfactory. Before that legislation is brought down, attempts at piecemeal law-making of this sort, in my opinion, do more harm than good. Let me refer to the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes) for a moment. There was a Bill before this House in his name the other day called the Cowichan Valley Railway Bill. It went through its different stages in this House, and that company got an extension of time for their charter. Now, that Cowichan Valley Railway is in the province of British Columbia and on the Island of Vancouver, and I am curious to know why the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) did not add a similar amendment to the Cowichan Valley Railway Bill as that which he seeks to add to this Bill.

Mr. McINNES. I will tell the hon. gentleman in a moment why. I did not do so because the applicants in that case did what was eminently proper. They applied to the British Columbia legislature for a charter, and in receiving that charter they had to submit to an amendment such as I propose to this Bill.

Mr. MORRISON. That means nothing. I would ask the hon. member (Mr. McInnes) what has become of the Disallowance Acts. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) stated that the reason these people came here to get this amendment inserted was that they were evading the legislature of the province of British Columbia. I say that the hon. gentleman has not given a fair statement of the case. I am not a champion of the Dunsmuirs; I do not know them, and I care less so far as that is concerned, but all the same it seems to me that we might deal fairly with these people. If the facts were known I do not think that the statement made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) would be considered as having the slightest foundation in fact. Suppose they had gone to the legislature of British Columbia this session, what would have happened? I presume that the Dunsmuirs or whoever are seeking this charter have applied to this parliament for the simple reason that they wanted to get their charter, whereas, if they had applied to the legislature of British Columbia, I think it would take a wiser man than either the hon. member for Vancouver or myself to say what would have happened; for we know what a broil that legislature is in at present. I know that the legislature were not inserting an anti-Chinese clause in their legislation, and I think they are entitled to a great deal of credit for their sagacity in leaving it out. It would have been child's play to have inserted it in face of the fact that this parliament would have disallowed it; and even if it had not done so, being ultra vires of the legislature of British Columbia, it would have been utterly useless, and would have been so declared by the courts. Therefore, I cannot see where any one of the objections urged by the hon. member for Vancouver has any foundation in fact or in law. The hon. member is not doing justice to the Dunsmuirs in saying that they came here for the purpose of avoiding the provincial legislature. They might have got their charter there, for the only time in which there were anti-Chinese clauses in their railway Bills was in 1898.

Mr. McINNES. They began in 1898, and they have had them since.

Mr. MORRISON. Precisely; they began in 1898. There was one session in which the Attorney General inserted anti-Chinese clauses, and they were disallowed. The next session was the last one, in which they were not inserted.

Mr. McINNES. I can inform the hon. member for New Westminster that they were inserted in every Bill reported from the Railway Committee to the legislature.

Mr. MORRISON. That is a matter of provincial history. I think the fact will be found to be that the day before the Semlin-Cotton government were dismissed by the Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Cotton, the Minister of Finance, got up on the floor of the House and read a telegram from the Dominion government, and stated that inasmuch as that government contemplated bringing down legislation against Chinese immigration, he would not insert the anti-Chinese clauses in the Bills then before the House. The meaning of that position can be gathered from the fact that the next day, before the legislature had time to pass any of these Bills, that government were out of office.

Mr. McINNES. I received Bills containing the clauses two weeks before that telegram was sent.

Mr. MORRISON. Grant for the sake of argument that since 1898 they did insert these clauses; that was not because they considered them constitutional, or expected them to remain there, but, as they allege, for the purpose of forcing this government to bring down the legislation which they had promised; and on getting the assurance from this government that they would bring down that legislation, they said, we will not add these clauses. That is the view the last legislature of British Columbia took of this matter. They did not go as far as the hon. gentleman says; and if he has a mandate from that portion of the province, I think a fortiori they have a greater mandate. Of course, at present we do not know who has a mandate, so far as the provincial legislature is concerned. As the amendment proposed by the hon. member is not constitutional, and cannot stand the test of the courts, we ought to be satisfied to wait for the legislation promised to be brought down by the government. It will do those of us who are urging anti-Chinese legislation more harm to keep tinkering at it in this irregular, unconstitutional way, than to leave it alone until the proper time and the proper occasion arise.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). I am disposed to agree with most of the views expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I cannot, however, agree with him on this one point. It seems to me quite clear that this parliament can attach any condition it pleases to a charter which it grants to a company. There is no question in my mind that this parliament can provide, as a condition to the granting of this charter, that no Chinese labour shall be employed on the railway. But, Sir, the question of Chinese labour is a question too large and too important to be decided by a side issue of this kind. It seems to me, whether we accept or reject the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver, Chinese labour is a question which must be decided as a matter of policy brought down by the government and voted on by parliament. It is a question more germane and more intimately connected with immigration than any other question that has come before parliament. If the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver were accepted by this parliament, it would simply mean that this company will not be permitted to avail itself of Chinese labour in the construction of its railway; and would there not be an anomaly in the fact that one company building a railway would be deprived of the right to utilize Chinese labour, while the next company might be granted a charter without this amendment, and would therefore be allowed to use Chinese labour? If, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, the government have decided to introduce a policy upon this very important question—important not only to the province of British Columbia, but to the Dominion at large—I do not think this House should discriminate against one company in respect to Chinese labour, when other companies have the right to use that labour. In view of the relations which exist between Great Britain and China, this question is one which requires on the part of the government all the attention they can bestow upon it; and if their promise to bring down a policy on the subject is not like some other promises which have not been carried out absolutely, it seems to me it would be far better to wait until it is submitted to parliament than try and get over this question by side issues and amendments tacked on to railway charters.

J. H. BELL (P.E.I.) I have every sympathy with the hon. members for British Columbia. They are dealing with a question which in that province is a live issue, namely, Chinese and Japanese labour. If the demands of these hon. gentlemen are reasonable, it is the duty of the House to accede to them; but if unreasonable, the House should reject them. The amendment to exclude Chinese labour from this railway, involves a principle, the adoption of which would be made a precedent for future action. We should, therefore, be exceedingly careful what course we take upon the amendment submitted by the hon. gentleman. British Columbia has been trying to exclude the Chinese altogether by imposing a tax of $500 per head upon all proposing to enter the province. They tried that by an Act of their local legislature, but failed because the Act was ultra vires. They imagined that under the head of immigration, they could deal with the matter, but the highest authorities decided that such action would be an interference with trade and commerce, and consequently ultra vires of the local legislature. Then they tried to accomplish their object by passing through their legislature an Act to prohibit the employment of Chinese labour, but the Act was disallowed because opposed to public policy.

Mr. MORRISON. To which Act does the hon. gentleman refer?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) The Act of 1898, preventing Chinese and Japanese labour from being employed on certain works.

Mr. MORRISON. You refer to mining?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) Yes.

Mr. MORRISON. That went to the Privy Council.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) It was disallowed mainly on the ground that it was opposed to public policy. It was considered impolitic, from the standpoint of Canadian and British interests, and consequently disallowed. What now are these gentlemen doing? Finding they could not accomplish their object through the local legislature, they have come to this parliament and seek to get inserted in a Dominion charter a provision, which in a local Act would be ultra vires.

I think that this parliament ought to take a wider view of matters. It is our duty to look at all questions from the Canadian and the British, and not merely from the provincial standpoint. Britain has her interests in China and Japan. She has been extending her sphere of influence over a large portion of China, she has many millions of Chinese as her subjects, and there is no doubt it would be contrary to Britain's policy, for the Canadian people to do what is contemplated by this amendment.

More than that, Canada has her interests in the far east, as distinct from those of Great Britain. We have our trade with China and Japan, which we are developing, and it would be contrary to our interests to do what would be construed as an act of hostility by the people of either country, and this House ought to hesitate before committing itself to an act which would involve a policy of hostility against any country with which we have trade relations, and with which we hope to have better trade relations in the future.

There is another reason. The Canadian Pacific Railway has been built across this country, largely by Chinese labour. At any rate, its construction has been expedited by Chinese labour. All the railways across the American continent have been built largely by Chinese labour. These Chinese, say what you like about them, have been a great benefit to this continent, and, I think, it would be ungrateful on our part, not to recognize the benefit these people have done us in the past, and exclude them from working on the construction of future railways. I do not think it will be in the interests of Canada, or even the province of British Columbia, to take the step proposed by this amendment, and for these reasons, I am opposed to it.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I am sorry that I do not find myself in sympathy with the hon. members who can find reasons from all the four corners of the earth why they should oppose the amendment, but who cannot find reasons from the interests of the people or any section of the people of this country why they should support it. I confess that my views are narrowed to some extent by the circumstances of the constituency which I am called upon to represent and to safeguard. I am so narrow-minded that I am perfectly willing to let the people of China take care of themselves, so long as they are in China. I am perfectly willing to let the Chinese and the British governments run their own business, and I am so near-sighted, that I am anxious to use my position and vote in this House to protect and serve, as far as possible, the interests of the people of this country, or even a section of the people. I take it that the question of the protection of labour is just as important and as proper for this parliament to consider as many other of the questions which, from time to time, have occupied the time—if they have not commanded the interest—of this House. So, when, on the discussion of a railway charter, the question of the protection of labour in a certain province or a certain part of a province of this country comes up, I, for one, am prepared to consider it on its merits. This country as a country, and this parliament as a parliament, has a direct interest in the welfare, in the well-being, in the well-doing of the labouring people of Canada, and there is no means whereby the House can shirk its responsibility. We are placed face to face in the province of British Columbia with a certain condition of affairs in regard to labour there. We find our fellow-countrymen, the men who, from time to time, are referred to as the bone and sinew of the country, crowded out of their occupation by another class of people, who, in themselves, may be a very good kind of people, who may be very desirable people from some points of view, but who are not our people. Inasmuch as they displace our people, displace our citizens, as they make life harder for our people who are compelled to earn their bread in our country; inasmuch as they are building up an alien, not to say a hostile, people and civilization in that province—in so far as they are doing that, it is our duty as a House, to prevent its being done; whether as a matter of general or of particular legislation I care not—it is something that should be done, and I am one to cast my vote to do it whenever the opportunity arises. For that reason, I support the amendment.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES (West Huron). I am sorry I cannot agree with the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) who has just taken his seat; and I think if he had made himself a little more familiar with the circumstances in British Columbia, he would have known the people of that province are not a unit on this question. The people of British Columbia, or a large number of them, are as anxious that the Chinese should be employed, perhaps, as any other people in the Dominion. The Chinese may not be a people I would like to engage, they may not be a class I would like to associate with personally, but—

Mr. OLIVER. Why not?

Mr. HOLMES. That is all right—never mind—but they are a class of the community, and if you allow legislation of this kind to come in, the question will arise where you shall draw the line. Whom does my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) consider as Canadians? We are endeavouring to assimilate all classes of people—English, Irish, Scotch, French, Teutons, Scandinavians and others. If you endeavour to prevent the Chinese securing employment, especially after paying a fee to come in, or to draw a line of distinction as against them, you will certainly be asked to pass legislation against other classes in the community. I think it is a very narrow platform for us to endeavour to embody in the form of legislation in this House. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Oliver's) remarks; but, while I am willing, as far as possible, to protect the interest of the Canadian labourers, and would gladly do all I can in this direction, my hon. friend ought to know, as an employer of labour, that the more he interferes, so to speak, with the free action of labour, the more injury he does labour. I think, therefore, the resolution ought to be voted down.

Mr. N. F. DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I am sorry that I cannot agree with the last speaker (Mr. Holmes). The hon. gentleman is supporting the present government, which is a protectionist government, supporting a policy that protects the capitalists and even the combinists. That being so, he ought to give support to a clause which sounds the note of protection to labour. I do not see any principle calling upon us to oppose this clause of my hon. friend. On the part of this government and parliament this Bill hands over certain of our sovereign power to this company. Now, this parliament and government represent not merely the capitalist, not merely the shopkeepers and stockholders, but they represent also the workmen; and, that being the case, in handing over certain powers to the capitalists, it is our duty to say: We will secure, at all events, as regards the men who shall work on this road, conditions which will prevent the bringing in of cheap labour, labour that can sell itself at a price that means starvation and degradation for the white man—we will see to it that that condition shall not meet our Anglo-Saxon, to use a phrase so dear to the Prime Minister, and our German, our Teuton, when they come to labour on the railway. I have no hesitation in saying that is a clause which ought to be made part of this Bill.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I think this clause should be adopted. If the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), has stated his whole case, he might well accept this amendment without objection. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), but say that if this was a case of General Railway Act, we should not insert such an amendment as this, but should deal with the question of Chinese immigration first. But this is merely a local matter. This is a railway to be constructed wholly in British Columbia. It is pretty well known where the citizens of British Columbia stand on this question of Chinese labour and Chinese immigration. In an Act of this kind, if granted by the provincial legislature, a clause such as is here proposed would be inserted. This company, by coming here, recognizes that we have the power to grant this Act, and they must recognize that we have the power to insert such a clause as this in it. It need not be said that we have no power or no right to insert such a clause. If we can grant such a charter as this, we have the power and the right to name the conditions upon which it shall be granted. If the company do not like the conditions, they can apply to the British Columbia legislature. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) shows, by the comparison which he makes between the Chinese and other immigrants, that he has not paid much attention to this question. The United States, Australia, and New Zealand have barred out the Chinese; Canada still has the door open, and we know that there is grave danger, and parliament should recognize that. British Columbia has tried hard for years past to impress this upon this parliament, but whether the warning has sunk deep into the minds of hon. gentlemen or not it is hard to say. I would ask hon. members to remember that this is not a question of Chinese immigration generally; it is a question of one railway charter and one condition that is proposed to be inserted in it. I think the proposition of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes) should be accepted.

Mr. DAVIN.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The discussion that has taken place in this House shows that there is some division of opinion as to whether this clause should be adopted. In my judgment there is a paramount reason why it should not be adopted. This question was discussed before the Railway Committee and the Bill was passed by that committee. Now, the policy, which, for my part, I have endeavoured to follow, and the policy which I think preceding governments have also endeavoured to follow in proceedings in this House, is to sustain the report of the Railway Committee as a rule. All these questions are amply discussed in that committee, and unless paramount reasons are given why the decision of that committee should not be sustained by the House, the House has usually sustained its decision. The Railway Committee having considered this question, have come to the conclusion not to accept the amendment of my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. McInnes), and I have not heard anything so far in this debate which should induce the House to refuse to sanction the conclusion of that committee. There may be a good deal to be said in favour of the contention of my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), who argued that this legislation was hardly within our constitutional power. I am not prepared to offer an opinion on this point, but it is a point worthy of consideration. Another reason which seems to me absolutely unanswerable is that which has been given by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), namely, that as this is an Act of special, not of general legislation, we are not now called upon to consider whether Chinese immigration is desirable or not. We hold in this House that it is not desirable, because we have put restrictions upon it, and the government has in contemplation to introduce a Bill to deal with the general question of immigration. But so long as Chinese are admitted into this country, I think the argument of the hon. member from East Grey is unanswerable, that we should not refuse them the privilege of working, for which they have come here. Either exclude them altogether, or, if you allow them to come in, give them the privilege of earning their living. But it would not be right to force them to pay a tax at the frontier to the Canadian government and, having allowed them to come in on condition of paying that tax, to deny them the privilege of working. We must take either one view or the other of this question: Admit them, or prevent them altogether from coming. But as long as we maintain our present policy of restricting them, but not absolutely shutting them out, putting obstacles in the way of their coming, but not absolutely excluding them, as is done in some other countries, it seems to me that the position taken by the hon. member from East Grey is absolutely sound, and that we should not deny them the privilege of working that is granted to every other class of residents.

Bill reported.

Mr. MORRISON moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. McINNES. Before this Bill is read the third time, I beg to move in amendment:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of adding thereto the following section:

No Chinese person shall be employed in the construction or operation of the railway or undertaking authorized hereby, under a penalty of $5 per day for each and every Chinese person employed in contravention of this section, said penalty to be recoverable by summary conviction on complaint of any person.

Amendment (Mr. McInnes) negatived.

Motion (Mr. Morrison) agreed to ; Bill read the third time and passed.

CARRIAGE OF MAIL BETWEEN VANCOUVER AND NANAIMO.

Mr. McINNES asked :

1. Who carries the mail between Vancouver and Nanaimo cities? Is it carried under contract, and at what cost?

2. Is there any provision in the law or contract (if any) whereby the carriers can be compelled to carry the mail regularly? If so, what is it, and has it been enforced?

3. Is the Postmaster General aware that the said mails have been carried lately very irregularly, to the great inconvenience of the business and corresponding public of Nanaimo?

4. Have any or will any steps be taken to secure regularity in the said mail service?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. This is a water service, which is being performed by the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, at an annual cost of $2,504. They refused to execute a written contract. 2. It is not possible to give a definite reply to this question. 3. The Postmaster General is not aware of the mails having been, lately, very irregular. No complaints of such irregularity have reached the department.

CUSTOMS COLLECTIONS AT MASKINONGE.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Morin) asked :

1. Is there at Maskinonge a cigar manufactory, the property of Sauciere et frères?

2. What amount of customs duty do they pay yearly?

3. Has Mr. Romuald Henault been appointed customs officer?

4. When, and at what salary?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 1. I have not the answer to the first question. 2. The department informs me that they are unable to answer this inquiry. It is not probable, however, that any customs duties were paid by this factory. Excise duties may have been paid. We have no customs officer at Maskinonge. If any customs duties were paid by the factory, the payments were made at some principal port or outport. 3. Mr. Romuald Henault has not been appointed as customs officer. 4. The answer to question three covers this.

I.C.R.—C.P.R. AND G.T.R. SHARES OF PASSENGER AND FREIGHT CHARGES.

Mr. POWELL asked :

1. What was the total amount of the Canadian Pacific Railway share of passenger fares and freight charges during the year ending June 30, A.D. 1899, collected off the Intercolonial Railway and accounted for to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and what was the total amount of the said fares and charges for the year ending June 30, 1897?

2. What was the total amount of the Grand Trunk Railway share of passenger fares and freight charges during the year ending June 30, A.D. 1899, collected off the Intercolonial Railway and accounted for to the Grand Trunk Railway, and what was the total amount of the said fares and charges for the year ending June 30, 1897?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The total amount of the Canadian Pacific Railway share of passenger fares and freight charges collected off Intercolonial Railway, and accounted for to the Canadian Pacific Railway, for the years ended June 30, 1899, and June 30, 1897, is as follows: 1899—Passenger fares, $178,534.89; freight charges, $354,644.21. 1897—Passenger fares, $111,040.22; freight charges, $323,467.18. The total amount of the Grand Trunk Railway share of passenger fares and freight charges collected off Intercolonial Railway, and accounted for to the Grand Trunk Railway for the years ending June 30, 1899, and June 30, 1897, is as follows: 1899—Passenger fares, $25,559.15; freight charges, $404,838.60. 1897—Passenger fares, $27,553.50; freight charges, $525,240.15.

I.C.R.—ADDITIONAL OFFICIALS EMPLOYED.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

What is the number of additional offices created or additional officials employed on the Intercolonial Railway since July 1, 1896, and what are the names of such officials or persons appointed to such offices, and their salaries?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The number of additional offices created or additional officials employed on the Intercolonial Railway since July 1, 1896, and names, positions and monthly pay of such officials, are as follows :

ANNUAL MILITIA DRILL.

Mr. BELL (Addington) asked :

1. What portion of the volunteer force will be ordered out for annual drill in camp in June next?

2. And what number will be ordered out in September?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell, Addington), wishes me to designate the particular corps that are to be drilled in June, it is impossible for me to do so now as the programme for the annual camps has not been made out, but, I may say to the hon. gentleman that the major portion of the militia will drill in June as usual, and the remainder in the month of September.

Mr. BELL (Addington). A larger proportion will drill in June than in September?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

SURVEY OF LAKE TEMISCAMINGUE.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Morin) asked :

1. Whether an appropriation of $3,000 was granted, giving or promised, for the making of a survey with a view to the lowering of the level of Lake Temiscamingue?

2. If so, when, and to whom?

3. What report was made?

4. Has the government in its hands a report from Rev. Father Paradis on the subject?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1 and 2. There is no record of any such promise having been made. 3 and 4. Yes. A report was submitted to the department in 1887, but it was destroyed in the fire of February, 1897.

LIGHTHOUSE TOWER AT OAK POINT.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Have tenders been called for the construction of a lighthouse tower at Oak Point, N.B.?

2. If so, what tenders have been received, and for what amount?

3. Has the lowest or any tender been accepted?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Yes. 2 and 3. As no tender has yet been accepted, it is contrary to the policy of the department to make the amounts public.

I.C.R.—DEFECTIVE WHEELS UNDER WAGNER CARS.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

How many cars were purchased by the Railway Department from the Wagner Car Company, when, and of what class?

Have any defects since become apparent in the wheels of said cars?

Have they, or any of them, been condemned by the mechanical superintendent or other competent officer?

Was any order issued that these cars go back into the shops for examination or repairs or for the replacement of wheels?

Have any changes or large repairs or replacement of wheels been advised or carried out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Sixteen cars were purchased from the Wagner Car Company. They were received on the road in May, 1899, and were of the following classes: Eight sleeping cars, four dining cars, four first-class cars. During the winter, defects became apparent in some of the wheels of said cars. The cars have been taken into the shops and the wheels are being removed and replaced with new ones. The wheels which were supplied under the cars by the Wagner Company, and which failed, were made by Krupp, the celebrated gun founder of Germany, who has a great reputation for the quality of his wheels. The Intercolonial Railway made a claim upon the Wagner Company and they informed Krupp, who sent his agent to Moncton: after examination Krupp assumed the responsibility and undertook to furnish new wheels without charge. Some Krupp wheels furnished the Intercolonial by the Crossen Company and the Rhodes Curry Company, under cars built by them about the same time, and some Krupp wheels bought direct from Krupp's Canadian agent about the same time, have also shown defects, so that it is probable a mistake has been made in the manufacture of a particular lot of steel, as the Intercolonial has used Krupp wheels and tires for many years and found them satisfactory.

MAINTENANCE OF LUNATICS FROM N.W.T. IN MANITOBA ASYLUM.

Mr. DAVIS (by Mr. Flint) asked :

1. How much per head per day does the government of Canada pay to the government of Manitoba for the maintenance of lunatics from the North-west Territories in the Manitoba asylum?

2. Is the government aware, from the Public Accounts of Manitoba, how much per head per day such maintenance costs in the Manitoba asylum? If so, what is the amount?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. $1. 2. No.

DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY.

Mr. FORTIN (by Mr. Flint) asked :

Has the government received a report from the commissioners who have investigated into the affairs of Dorchester Penitentiary?

If so, will the government bring down such report and place it upon the Table of this House?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Yes. 2. The report of the commissioner is being printed as an appendix to the annual report of the department.

HENRY J. PINEO.

Mr. MARTIN (by Mr. McCleary) asked :

1. Is Henry J. Pineo at present in the employ of the government or of any member thereof, and if so, what is the nature of such employment?

2. Did the said Henry J. Pineo come to Ottawa in connection with such employment, and if so, was there any correspondence between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or his deputy or other officers of his department and the said Henry J. Pineo, before his coming to Ottawa, and what was the object and nature of such correspondence, if any?

3. Is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries aware that the said Henry J. Pineo is a member of the legislature of Prince Edward Island, and does the minister approve of the appointment of members of the legislature to positions which prevents them from attending to their legislative duties during the session of the legislature?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Henry J. Pineo is not at present and never was in the employ of the government, or any member thereof. 2. If the said Henry J. Pineo came to Ottawa seeking any such employment he did not communicate with me, or, so far as I have been able to ascertain, with any of my colleagues, and I cannot say whether he came to Ottawa or not. There was no correspondence between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and his deputy or other officers of his department and the said Henry J. Pineo before his coming to Ottawa, directly or indirectly. In answer to the third part of the question: The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is aware that within the last twelve months a gentleman of that name has been elected a member of the provincial legislature of Prince Edward Island, but the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has never met him, has had no communication with him verbal or written, and would not know him if he did meet him.

SASKATCHEWAN LANDING—DEPUTY RETURNING OFFICER.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

Whether the government is aware that Geo. F. Smith, the deputy returning officer at Saskatchewan Landing, in the taking of the plebiscite in September, 1898, has not yet been paid?

Is the fault with the department at Ottawa or with the returning officer?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The Auditor General furnishes the following answer :

In reference to this question, let me say that no account from Geo. F. Smith has reached this office, but that on July 12, 1899, the returning officer for West Assiniboia, Mr. Jas. Balfour, forwarded an account from Mr. Geo. G. Smith for services and expenses as deputy returning officer at poll No. 55. A cheque was sent to the returning officer July 18, 1899, to enable him to pay this account—the items being as follows :

D. R. O. fee, $5; poll clerk's fee, $3.....	$ 8 00
Mileage: D. R. O., $18; clerk, $3.60.....	21 60
Rent of polling booth	4 00
	$33 60

The returning officer acknowledged the receipt of this cheque on July 25, and should have paid the amount to Mr. Smith.

SUBSIDY VOTED TO NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence between any member or members of the executive of the North-west Territories, or any member or members of the legislative council or legislative assembly, and any member or members of the Dominion government, respecting the amount of subsidy voted for the carrying on of the government of the North-west Territories, and the amount which should be voted.

2. Also copies of all memorials from the North-west council or the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories, to the Governor General in Council on the subject of the said subsidy.

He said: With the permission of the House, I will slightly amend this motion so as to save the department some trouble;—assuming that the motion will be carried as a matter of course. As it reads at present the motion might sound too wide and with the permission of the House I will confine it to any correspondence within the last two years and up to the end of last year. I find in the estimates that there is an increase of $50,000 for the item :

Grant for schools, clerical assistance, printing, &c., to be paid half-yearly in advance.

And under the item :

Grant to North-west government to enable them to restore public works lately destroyed by floods.

There is a special vote of $92,000. You will see, Sir, that these sums of $92,000 and $50,000 make up $142,000. If that were in addition to the grant it would be, in my opinion, quite insufficient. It will, however, be at once apparent to the House that the $92,000 is not in addition to the grant. As it reads here, it is specially confined to the present year and to the specific purpose of restoring the public works lately destroyed by floods. There is then no guarantee that next year the sum of $142,000 will appear in the estimates. I may say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the sum of $142,000 extra is quite inadequate for the needs of the Territories at the present time. The Territories have been making great progress; progressing in the area of land under crop; progressing in the wealth of the community; progressing in population, and owing even to the manner of the increase in the community in the North-west Territories special expenses are entailed upon the local government. I find that the reasons which were placed before the government for giving a larger grant are to be found in the journals of the legislative assembly, where it is specially mentioned that the Doukhobor immigration has entailed special expenses. On page 21, I read as follows :

The introduction into the Territories of colonies of people from European countries has not any tendency to simplify the education question or to reduce expenditure to a minimum. In the interests of the state, the children of these people must be educated, but they themselves are not of a class from whom assistance may be expected. The illiteracy and poverty of the parents are too powerful agents working against the attainment of any high ideal. It has already been found necessary to undertake nearly the whole cost of maintaining, for a time, certain schools in the Territories in districts occupied by foreign settlers and half-breeds, and a similar necessity may be anticipated wherever colonies of people are established who are unable, for any reason, to properly appreciate the advantages to be derived from the education of their children.

Now, last year, before the House met in 1899, there was an estimate, as I gather, laid before the government of $535,000 for the Territories, but the amount that was voted here was $292,979. Of course, there is a great disparity between those figures, and I have been led to infer that it has resulted in great inconvenience and in retarding progress. You will notice, Sir, the language I used: 'that I have been led to infer'; and the House might very properly say to me: Is it possible that you come to us to bring before us the needs of the North-west Territories, and you use the language 'that you have been led to infer': are you not in a position to place before us categorically and statistically the needs of the North-west Territories? Unfortunately, Sir, I am not in that position, and I will tell you why; and I will point out, moreover, that the fact I am not in that position, when taken in connection with the utterances of the gentleman who would be in a position to instruct the members of this House, implies the unreasonable on his part. I have here what might be called the budget speech delivered by Mr. James H. Ross, on the 26th of April, 1899, and he there states that they have framed a budget on the basis of asking from Ottawa the sum of $535,000. He mentions the services for which that sum would be required, and he gives a very curious argument which seems to imply that he does not want provincial government, but he wants a very much increased grant. Having given the figures that would result from taking the basis on which the subsidies to the provinces are calculated, he says:

In view of these figures, was there any man willing to believe that an arrangement on Manitoba's basis would be a good bargain for the Territories to make?

Later on, he says:

They believed the Territories should demand the accounting by the Dominion of the whole land area excepting those portions homesteaded. They believed that we were entitled to possession of all the public lands, and more than that, they believed that an accounting should be made for the lands which had been given away or alienated—given for railways, some of which were not built in the Territories. Those lands so alienated had been given by Dominion vote for Dominion purposes. Land was practically the only revenue-producing asset which a province could have—an asset which grew in value with the growth of population—the only asset capable of maintaining an equilibrium between revenue and expenditure. Mr. Ross made a computation of the lands. There were altogether 300,000 square miles—190,000,000 acres. One-half this area—the even-numbered sections—were set apart for homesteading; calculating pre-emptions, one-quarter of the one-half gave 120,000,000 acres. Then, 35,000,000 acres had been given away as subsidies to railways. It was fair to argue that those 35,000,000 acres had been used in lieu of Dominion cash. In Canada about $200,000,000 has been spent in subsidies to railways, and these land subsidies should be considered in the same light as cash subsidies—Federal payments for Federal purposes; and when local resources are used for Federal purposes, the province or the Territories whose resources are thus taken, should be given credit.

So, if 35,000,000 acres of our lands have been taken for railway purposes, the price should be capitalized for our benefit. One dollar an acre would be a low rate for these lands, and it would be fair to ask that interest be paid by parliament to the Territories on a capital account of $35,000,000 on account of lands so alienated. That would give a revenue of $1,000,000 a year. Then, there was the 85,000,000 acres not alienated, and which should be handed to the Territories. Set apart 35,000,000 acres of that, which probably the Federal government could properly claim represented the cost of having surveyed and administered the lands, and there was left 50,000,000 acres to be taken by the Territories as a revenue-producing asset, a tangible capital account, which would grow in value with every cent's expenditure, which would be made more valuable by every dollar's expenditure on schools, on road improvements, on any and every provincial object. As population increased, that asset would increase in value, because the law of supply and demand governed the price of land, as everything else. So, as our needs grew our revenue would also grow. This was the class of proposition that this government proposed to the people of the Territories. When they asked for provincial establishment, they would certainly ask for the power to borrow.

The proposition, as to the large amounts to which the Territories are entitled, is not a new one, for, as the House will remember, I made a statement some years ago in this House, that we were entitled to far more than we were receiving. I made a reasoned statement on that head, contending that we were owed vast sums in consequence of the fact that from year to year, we had been receiving less than we were entitled to. Mr. Ross thus concludes this part of the subject:

The lines between Grit and Tory should be obliterated for the time being, until the Dominion be brought to admit the principle that those lands were ours.

For my part, if the obliteration of the lines between Grit and Tory would be conducive to the prosperity of the Territories in any way, I should have no objection to it. But, this suggestion comes from a gentleman who is the most ardent and active Liberal politician in the North-west Territories, who spoke the other day at a Liberal meeting at Moosejaw, who attends all the little caucuses and conventions of the Liberal party. It sounds somewhat amusing to have this gentleman, who is an ardent Liberal, and ready to take part in all the small activities of the party, proposing that we should obliterate the distinction between Grit and Tory. I may say in passing that from any observation I have been able to make, whether in New Brunswick or elsewhere, I have never come to the conclusion that the destruction of party distinctions can be of any advantage in a community which endeavours to carry on government on the British system. I confess I cannot see how that constitutional system can be carried out effectively without party. It seems to me that the only guarantee against corruption is to have party. It may sound very unpleasant in the ears of some gentlemen, but I have read what Mr. Goldwin Smith writes, and I have read what others have written and have discussed this subject with able men, and I have never been able to get from any man opposed to party, a statement of a working formula that would be effective in carrying out the British constitutional system without it.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. DAVIN. When the House rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the question whether the fact that a people is divided by party allegiance renders it the less effective in carrying out any great project that might be in the interests of the country, and I was expressing the obiter opinion, that I could not understand how the British constitution could be worked without party. As Voltaire said, 'If there were not a god, we would have to invent one,' so, if there were not parties, we would have, in order to work the British constitution, to invent them.

Whether we have party in local politics in the North-west or not, I am quite sure that all North-west men, whether they call themselves Liberals or Conservatives, will be ready to sink differences of any kind should these differences conflict with the great object, so important to the Territories and to all Canada, of developing those territories, enriching them, and giving them every possible chance.

I was quoting from Mr. James H. Ross's speech, and let me further quote this sentence :

It was the duty of our representatives in parliament to act in concert on this question, which was the most momentous that could engage their attention probably this term.

That was on the 26th of April, 1899, and Mr. Ross seemed to think that we should have had some discussion of this great question in this parliament. But I never received the slightest information from him as to what his views were, or what he expected from us, and I am told by all of my friends in the North-west, except one to whom I have not spoken—and no doubt he would tell me the same—that Mr. Ross never asked them to give him the least assistance, either with the ministers of the Crown or in this House. A remark such as that I have quoted, being read throughout the Territories, would leave the impression on the people that we were divided on this most momentous question, and were, in some sense, derelict in our duty. But, Mr. Speaker, if we did not act in concert, it was because no question was ever presented to us on which to take action. I never heard much complaint about the inadequate vote that was brought down by this government last term. I know that responsible men in the Territories consider that the government did not do the right thing in bringing down so small a vote, and I should be very much surprised if Mr. Ross was not greatly disappointed. I believe that when the vote came down to this House, he was in the far North-west, beyond Edmonton, settling Indian treaties, and I have heard that when he learnt what the vote was he used anything but prayerful and pious language. Still, we did not hear anything of that, or even the echo of it, in the North-west Territories. Objurgatory eloquence of that sort does not do much good, unless it is heard by those against whom it is directed or by an audience to whom are responsible those against whom it is directed. It reminds me of the case of a man brought up before the magistrate in Cork, who, when asked how he could have been guilty of the offence with which he was charged, was very meek, and got off with a very small fine. But, when a considerable distance on his way home, he began to curse the magistrate, and in this way relieve his feelings, and when he got home, he told his people all he had said and how he had got off so easy. His brother, some time afterwards, was brought before the same magistrate for the same offence, and put the same question. Remembering what his brother had told him, he cursed the magistrate up and down, and was not only fined for the original offence, but also for contempt of court. When he got home he complained to his brother that he had fared much worse, although he had acted precisely the same, but his brother said : You fool, I was seven miles out of Cork before I ever said a word against the magistrate. On the Peace River, the use of a little strong language against this government would do it neither good nor harm.

The statement of the case which I have in my hand is one that seems to have been made before the Minister of Militia in January, 1899, and was intended to affect the amount that was brought down last session, and although that doubtless gives not the full case and the grounds for demanding more money, still it gives some idea. But, last session I could not possibly have had that before me. I had nothing before me, nor had my colleagues from the North-west, and yet here is Mr. Ross, the Provincial Treasurer, declaring from his place in the local legislature that he expected the North-west members to act in concert on this question. Again this year, Mr. Ross, the Provincial Treasurer, came up to Ottawa. He did not communicate with me. The bare fact that he is opposed to me politically never interferes with our social relations. We met at the same dinner table and in the same drawing room, and are very good friends socially. That being the case, and he appealing to us, that 'lines between Grit and Tory should be obliterated for the time being,' there was nothing to prevent him coming to me when he was here this year. But, if the fact that I am on this side of the House should constitute a reason—as, of course, it should not—for his not coming to me, there is no reason why he should not have gone to my colleagues who sit on the Liberal side. But he did not go to them. And, now I have before me a very good speech of a friend of mine in moving in the assembly the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. And, I must say, that my able friend, who made the speech, is under a complete misconception as to the attitude of this House to the North-west Territories. He is discussing the question whence they are to get what is absolutely needed if the Territories are to go forward—an adequate income to meet the needs of our ever-growing and ever-expanding life there. He says :

He did not believe we need look to Ottawa for any such increase as the circumstances demand. The case had been pressed at Ottawa for years, and while some increases were obtained, every year shows a bigger disparity between the amount we got and the amount we require. Has our case not been properly presented at Ottawa? He (Mr. Brown) thoroughly believed that our case had been presented as properly, as well and as forcefully as it could be presented. The leaders of the assembly, who understood the case at least as well as any man or collection of men alive, had gone year after year to Ottawa hat in hand, as had been said—

Well, I really do not see why they should come hat in hand. They are representing a rightful claim, or they are not. If it is a rightful claim, there is no necessity to come hat in hand.

He believed that the Federal government understood the case now as well as it can be hoped that they ever will understand it.

Well, we ought to have that case. I consider that, as a citizen of the North-west Territories, not to speak of a member of this House. I ought to know what that case is that the members of the government that control me in local affairs have presented. I think the whole North-west Territories ought to know what the case is. And, certainly this House ought to know what the case is, and the reason this House should know the case will be made plain in the succeeding sentences I am going to quote :

On this subject he did not believe that Ottawa's action depended on whether a Conservative or Liberal government was in power. Any government would do the best it could.

So, he credits the government, whether it is Liberal or Conservative, with doing the very best it can. And, yet, the proposition is laid down that the amount voted is utterly inadequate, and that from year to year, the discrepancy between the needs of the North-west Territories and the amount voted gapes wider.

Any government would do the best it could. Did the matter depend wholly on the government—the cabinet ministers—probably we might expect adequate remedy from Ottawa, from either a Liberal or a Conservative government. But it did not lie with them wholly. There were more than 200 members of parliament to be consulted, only four of whom were sent from the Territories.

So the idea that my able friend is setting forth in that speech in the assembly, is this—that any government, Liberal or Conservative, is ready to give what money is needed for the Territories, and that is demanded by the executive, but that the two hundred members, some on this side and some on that, frighten the government from its propriety and prevent it bringing down the amount they would otherwise bring down. That shows a complete delusion as to the attitude of this House, and as to the way the action of the government is regarded in bringing down votes for any such purpose as this. Why, I believe if this government were to bring down to-morrow a vote and say: We want a million of money for the North-west Territories, there would not be a quiver in the way this House would vote

it. I have been seventeen or eighteen sessions—going on this anyway—in this House, and I have never known, whatever government was in power, these 200 members who were supposed to have to be consulted, I have never known them to overawe a government in any way as to the amount they should bring down, but I have seen the leaders of the Liberal party sometimes carp at what was suggested should be done for the North-west; and I think it is very important that we should disabuse the minds of the members of the assembly and people of the North-west Territories as to the attitude of this parliament, and of members of both sides of this parliament, to the North-west Territories.

He did not want to convey the impression that the eastern provinces were hostile to us or that eastern members would not grant us what they thought was just and right, because he did not think that would be a true impression. The fact was that eastern men, notwithstanding their increased interest in and growing faith in this country, had no real understanding of its magnitude or needs, and could not be expected to have.

Now, I want to call the attention of the members of the House to this matter, because I know that every man in the House will repudiate this view—not with anger, because I am certain that my hon. friend in the local assembly who makes this statement, is not making it with the idea of being unjust to this House. There was a time when the House had to be educated into interest in the North-west, but that time has long been past.

He was not ranging in a speculative field. He was speaking of something that was well known to be the fact.

Now, of course, a speech like that made in the assembly by a leading member emphasizes the position I stated—that those of us who take a special interest in North-west matters should be posted thoroughly by those gentlemen who are in possession of all the facts as to the ground upon which they make demands. This year again something like the same amount has been asked for, something over $500,000, and something like $110,000 less than was asked for is given, and the greater part of that is given in a temporary form. But I am in ignorance. The treasurer was down here and saw the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). We learned from him that he discovered a paper relating to the North-west town sites that has been printed in extenso, but the vital thing as to the case he presented to the Minister of the Interior, we do not know. And how can any man say in this House that the government or that the Minister of the Interior have been unreasonable in the amount that they have brought down? I do not know the arguments that have been placed before the government, and the reasons urged as to why more should have been given. I cannot say whether the Provincial Treasurer is satisfied or not; I do not know whether the executive is satisfied; but I say as a North-west man that I am not satisfied with the amount in these estimates. I do not think it is at all adequate for the needs of the Territories; I do not think it is commensurate with what justice demands, and even supposing it was commensurate with what justice demands, there might be more demanded by expediency. I can easily understand how a powerful case might be made out. Those vast areas, the need for schools, the need for public works—I can understand what a powerful case could be made out for far more money than is in these estimates.

I want, now, to look back a little at the facts, because I see that a paper in the North-west Territories that cannot make any reference to me without speaking falsehoods, has indicated that for the sake of patronage I might be in some way influenced against the Territories. I am sorry to have to refer to this kind of writing, but I am forced to do it. Why, Sir, the first thing that I did in 1888 when I came here was to bring in a Bill providing for provincial government for the Territories, and I was then told that it was a very foolish proposal, even from my own point of view, because at that time a North-west member had ten times the influence of a member from any other part of the country, and why should a North-west member want to denude himself of all the influence and patronage: I said I didn't care a pin: what I wanted was to see the country go ahead; and I used language that my right hon. friend afterwards used himself, probably it was a case of two minds jumping on the same string. I said as early as that: Loose the young giant and let him free. My right hon. friend, when speaking in 1894 in Winnipeg, used language somewhat similar or identical. But on that occasion in 1888, Sir John A. Macdonald had a Bill before parliament dealing with the North-west Territories, but only touching the fringe and details of administration. When I brought forward this Bill of mine he called me over to him and said: You are going to oppose my Bill. Well, I told him, I was sorry to say he had the power to vote me down. But I will tell you what he did, he withdrew his Bill, and when it re-appeared he had in it a clause providing for the Advisory Board, which was the germ of the subsequent movement towards complete responsibility. In the next session I made the same argument, as will be found in the Hansard of 1889, page 353; I made an argument in favour of giving the North-west Territories an income based on the same calculations as the income that is given the provinces. In 1890, again, as you will find in Hansard, page 4470, I contended for a revenue on the same basis as the provinces. In 1892, when a gentleman of great influence representing the North-west was down here, he dealt entirely with the government in secret, as has been done ever since. It may be the best way, but if it be the best way it is not fair for any man who does that to speak as Mr. Ross did in the assembly, and imply that he expects us to be able to put the case here for him. In 1892, the demand was made for a lump sum, and for provincial control within the limits of the vote. But the gentleman who was here came to me and said that the government refused to grant what he wanted, and he asked me to bring it before the House. Of course I had to say to him: This is somewhat unreasonable, after being refused by the government you come to us. If I move in the House now my action can be translated into direct hostility to the government, whereas if I moved earlier there would be no such hostile aspect to my action. I said to him: How much will satisfy? He told me how much would satisfy, and I called the senators and members of parliament together, and I went before Sir John Abbott and we got the satisfying minimum he specified. Then in 1895 I again took a deputation of senators and members of parliament before Sir Mackenzie Bowell to press the argument in favour of consideration for the North-west Territories on a provincial basis. I cannot myself see that we can go on any other basis than that: we cannot demand, I think, more than a province of similar extent, of the same population: but I think we may fairly demand that. I think that so far as this vote falls short of what would be given under these circumstances it is wanting in justice to the Territories. Now, I have here a statement of the case presented in January, 1899. Of course we have not the reply of the Minister of the Interior to it. I see that certain papers have been brought before the assembly that will probably give us a little more light. The heads under which demands are made are as follows: Civil government: administration of justice. Under the head of administration of justice, the executive of the Territories consider, and they set forth their reasons at sufficient length to make their argument, that they practically ought to be placed, as to the administration of justice in the North-west Territories, in the same position as a province. They argue that if that were done not only would the administration of justice be more effective, but it would be more economically carried out. I quite agree with them. As regards the registrars of land titles, they think that registry offices should be placed under their control, and I agree with them. They point out the great needs of public works, the growing needs from education and the needs of helping agriculture by supplementing what the hon. Minister of Agriculture here does, and there again I entirely agree with the demand they make. They think that they ought to get $15,000 for hospitals and $10,000 for deaf mutes. Does any one doubt that they ought to be placed in a position to deal with that afflicted but interesting portion of the North-west community? One of the most pressing needs for giving them, at as early a day as possible, full provincial powers is the need of dealing with exemptions. The vast areas of lands exempted can be far better dealt with under the full powers of a province. The claim that is made that the present government of the Dominion should be treated as a trustee for the North-west Territories, and should be called to account for all the land that has been administered, for all the land that has been given to railways, is a stupendous one, but we should have a reasoned statement supporting it. I, myself, believe that a strong case can be made out. I consider that the demands, so far as I can infer them from the documents before us, made by the executive of the North-west Territories, are just demands, and that the amount that is in the main estimates is utterly inadequate to meet them. I move for these papers believing that in them we will be able to get the full case. I must say that I never can escape from the conviction that nothing more effective could be done in order to get any government, whether Grit or Tory, Liberal or Conservative, to do the most possible for the North-west Territories, whoever may be representing the North-west Territories, or whoever may be in power in Regina, when deputations come down here, than that they should say to themselves: Not only do we go with full powers, with our full case and the strength of our convictions before the government, before the Governor in council, before the Prime Minister, before the Minister of the Interior, but, we will go backed up by the representatives in the House of Commons, and, Sir, can any one doubt, for one minute, that the most powerful weapon any deputation can use that comes here to Ottawa, is the weapon of the influence of the men who happen to represent whatever part of the country that deputation came from? Hon. members of this House can give their support to the government, they can withdraw their support, they can threaten the government with adverse votes, and every student of free institutions knows that there is nothing so nervous as a constitutional government. There is nothing that a minister fears and hates so much as to hear an adverse vote behind him or to witness an adverse vote among his own ranks, and, therefore, there is no better lever for a deputation that wants to influence a constitutional government than the influence of even one member, but, in proportion as you multiply the number of members, you multiply the power; you raise the fulcrum and lengthen the bar. If you could multiply them sufficiently you would be able to coerce any government. I have pointed out the misconception of my friend, Mr. Brown, one of the ablest men in the territorial assembly, which he exhibited in his speech, as to the attitude of this House. He thought that the government was afraid to bring down an adequate sum, fearing the two hundred members of the House, and actually being convinced that no government, Liberal or Conservative, though desirous, would be ready to give an adequate sum for the fear of these two hundred members. This emphasizes the necessity of doing what I have done here to-night, as I have done a dozen times before, to bring before the House the needs of the North-west Territories, and urging upon the consideration of my brother members the pressing on the government, the bounden duty of doing everything they can to keep back these territories, not to grudgingly dole them this sum here that sum there, but to give them a full vote up to the measure of their needs, to meet the justice of their demands, and thus place the local government of the Territories and the local assembly in a position to develop to the utmost that great portion of the Dominion of Canada on whose prosperity the prosperity of the Dominion depends.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad to hear that loud cheer.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection at all to bring down these papers, but on the contrary, they will be laid on the Table of the House with great pleasure. The government of the Territories have been very energetic in pressing demands which they think this government should grant. It is true that up to the present time, we have not been able to meet their demands to the extent that they have been presented to us. This year in the grant voted to the Territories, we make an addition of $142,000 over the grant of last year. I am sorry to hear from my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) that he does not think the sum adequate, for it is his opinion that we should give at least half a million dollars or more. If the government have not given more this year than we have given, it is not because there is any hostility towards the government of the North-west Territories on the part of any one of the 213 members of this House. The government, however, cannot give, according to its own wishes in this matter, any more than it can in other matters, for we must follow some rule in these grants. The hon. gentleman stated that the North-west Territories should have at least the full measure of their needs. I submit to the hon. gentleman that there is not one province in the seven which form this Dominion, which today believes that it is receiving from this government the full measure of its needs. Every one of them thinks it should have more from the exchequer of the Dominion than it receives under the Confederation Act. We have to be guided by the rule of the constitution with regard to the provinces, and although with regard to the Territories the constitution is silent, still it is right that we should be guided at least by the spirit of the constitution, and that we should not attempt to give more to the Territories than we do the provinces; although in point of fact I believe I am within the mark when I say (keeping in view the population of the North-west Territories) they receive proportionately more from the Dominion treasury than any one of the provinces. We do that because they are a new community, and not so well able up to the present time to help themselves as the older provinces are. Although we exceed the rule laid down for the provinces in our grant to the Territories, still after all we cannot depart from it very much, and that is the reason why we have not done more for the Territories than we have done this year. There is no other reason. Every member of the House would be glad if we could do more, but we have not only to consider the Territories, for we must take into account all the other provinces that form the Dominion. As we have to be guided by this rule we cannot adopt any other that I know of. I will have great pleasure in bringing down these papers, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), will see that the council of the North-west Territories have not only been very diligent, but very energetic in pressing their claims.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I would regret very much indeed if the people in the North-west Territories should be under the misapprehension, that the members of this House are disposed to be parsimonious towards them in supplying the requisite funds to enable them to carry on the government of that country. For my own part, during the last ten or twelve years I have had the honour of a seat in this House, I can safely say that from no political party have I heard it said that we should withhold from the North-west Territories anything to which they are entitled. That is a great country, and will be a greater country. Immigration is increasing, we are told, very rapidly, and during the past year or two large numbers of people have been brought into the North-west Territories. It is hardly reasonable for us to suppose that the whole responsibility for providing educational institutions for those immigrants should be thrown upon the settlers there. We are putting settlers in that country, not only to benefit the country itself, but to benefit all Canada, and if we are to derive increased customs taxation and other revenue from that increased immigration, we certainly ought increase our grants to enable them the better to administer the affairs of that country, and to provide for the education and government of those people. We have besides many going into that country from Ontario, from Quebec, and from the eastern provinces, and it would be very poor encouragement indeed for the young men from the older provinces if they were to appear to be neglected by the government of Canada in providing what was requisite for carrying on the administration of that country, and providing at least proper educational facilities. For my part, I would hardly regard the appropriation as the fair amount of money that ought to be contributed by the Dominion for the support of the North-west Territories. Considering the large extent of territory, the sparsity of population, and the character of the immigration, it would seem to me to be essential that we should be more liberal towards that section of the country in the distribution of public moneys than we are even with regard to the other provinces.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Without entering into the general question, perhaps the House will be interested in knowing that the present government have not been unmindful of the needs of the North-west Territories. I find that in the year 1896-7, when this government came into power, the general appropriation for schools, clerical assistance, and miscellaneous items—which is the largest item in the appropriation—was $242,000. This government appears to have increased the amount almost immediately by $6,000—I am judging now from a hurried glance at the figures—and a year later there was an increase of $40,000, and this year we are adding a further increase to the annual allowance of $50,000, besides which we are making a special appropriation this year to restore works destroyed by floods to the amount of $92,000. The estimates for 1896-7, compared with the coming year show that whereas in 1896-7 the sums appropriated under head of 'Government North-west Territories,' amounted to $309,000, for the incoming year the estimates laid on the Table amount to $499,859, or within a fraction of half a million dollars, as against $309,000 voted the year that this government came into power. I do not offer any opinion as to whether this is or is not a sufficient sum, but in view of the discussion which has taken place, the attention of the House ought to be drawn to the fact that there has been under the present government a very large and a very liberal increase for the growing needs of the government of the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. Before you put the motion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that it would be very extraordinary if there was no increase.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIN. The country is expanding; it is growing.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. The growing time is not confined to places geographically extra to the North-west Territories, and, as is pointed out in Mr. Haultain's report, the number of Doukhobors that the Minister of the Interior sent in entails additional expense.

Mr. CLARKE. Some of them are going out.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, I have noted that reported. The Minister of Finance must remember that if he looks back to the years previous to 1896, he will see there was a proportionate increase in the grant as population increased, and he overstates the amount voted along the lines of the estimates from the North-west. Instead of $499,859, the amount is only $424,979. But, the Finance Minister does not answer the demand merely by saying that the regular income has been increased by so many thousands of dollars, and that there is a special vote of $90,000, making altogether $142,000. The question is, is that what justice demands. I have in my mind the way we dealt with Manitoba. We allowed Manitoba so much because we kept her lands. Look at the vast lands in the North-west Territories—the millions of acres. Look at the millions of acres tied up, exempted, in the North-west Territories, and then you will see—

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who exempted them?

Mr. DAVIN. The government of Canada. The hon. gentleman says, who exempted them? Does that interfere with the argument I am making?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should not make a second speech.

Mr. DAVIN. This is a substantial motion, and I am replying. My hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell), should rise a little above mere party feeling, in speaking of a country where in local politics we have theoretically no party. That we have so much land in the North-west Territories controlled entirely by the Dominion government, that we have so much exempted, and that so much has been given to railways, are all reasons why, on the same basis on which you calculated what should be given to the people of Manitoba, we should get a larger grant. The right hon. Prime Minister spoke of applying to us the same rule that is applied to the provinces. If he makes a calculation on the same basis on which the subsidy to Manitoba was calculated at the last settlement, he will find that we do not get, by a good deal, as much money as we are entitled to. I am very glad to hear that the Prime Minister takes such a kindly view of the matter, but I could not read into his remark anything like a definite promise that more would be done. As for the Finance Minister, the tone he took, alarmed me, because it was a tone of definite refusal and denial; it was the tone of a man who will not do more for us. Even if the $142,000 was an annual sum, it would not be enough. When the people of the North-west come to read the speeches of the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister, I am afraid they will be disappointed.

Mr. TAYLOR. They will never read them.

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, yes; the people of the North-west are among the most intelligent in Canada, and they are curious to see if this government will do anything for the North-west. To show you our disabilities at present, I may say that in the early part of the session, I spoke to my hon. friend, the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), about the need of placing the North-west Territories in a proper condition of defence, and I think he promised me across the floor of the House, as well as privately—at any rate, he twice promised me privately—that he would deal with the rifle associations in the North-west Territories, independent of any Militia Act, and independent of any restrictions upon the course I proposed, as suggested to him. I fear, by his deputy minister, and others. Well, nothing has been done; and on the 7th, in the North-west assembly, my friend, Mr. R. S. Lake, member for Grenfell, a son of a distinguished Indian officer, Col. Lake, proposed that they should urge on the Dominion government, the imperative necessity of extending the militia system to the Territories. This was supported by Mr. Bennett from Alberta, Mr. McKay from Prince Albert, and Dr. Patick. My friend, Mr. Haultain, also supported it, and it was passed unanimously. As the Minister of Militia has not dealt with the rifle association question in the North-west Territories, it is perfectly clear that the sooner we get up to the point of complete provincial organization in the North-west Territories, so that we shall be able to put forward all the powers and influences that are under the control of a province, the better it will be for us. I do not doubt for a moment that the two gentlemen who were down last year and this year—because they are able men and both friends of mine, although one is a political opponent—pressed their case strongly, and left no stone unturned; but if each man of them was a Pitt and a Burke rolled into one, if they had all the power of Pitt and all the diplomacy of Dufferin, I say it would be a strength to them to have the support of the members for the North-west in this House in going to the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior; because, after all—and this is the conviction clearly in the mind of my friend, Mr. Brown—it is in this House that the fight is to be made, as it has been made in the past; and if there is a strong case for the Territories, all we have to do, is to have that case properly placed before this House, and have it go from this House to the country, and we may be perfectly certain that we should have a public opinion so strongly in favour of doing everything, financial and otherwise, that should be done for the North-west Territories, that no government, Liberal or Conservative, would be able to come forward with a little cheese-paring vote, such as the Minister of Finance has boasted of, but it would have to submit to this House a large and liberal policy, applying statesmanlike provisions to that greater Canada of ours.

Motion agreed to.

JOHN C. McNEVIN'S CLAIM.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan) moved for :

Copies of all letters and documents of every description between the Department of the Interior, or any member of the government, and D. H. Macdowall, ex-M.P., or any other person, respecting the claim of John C. McNevin, of Kirkpatrick, Saskatchewan, for compensation for losses incurred during the North-west rebellion of 1885.

He said : I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I have brought this matter up in the House several times already. The case of Mr. John C. McNevin was, I understand, brought before the commission appointed by the late government to investigate claims for losses in connection with the rebellion in the North-west Territories in 1885. He produced his evidence and proved his claim, but although the commission promised that his claim would be paid, up to the present he has never had compensation for the losses he incurred. This is only one of hundreds of other cases in the Territories connected with the rebellion. This commission appointed by the late government took the evidence of a great many parties on the claims they put in, and afterwards arrived at a decision as to what claims should and what should not be paid. In nearly every case, the political friends of the late government were paid, but the other claimants who do not appear to have stood in with that government, either never got a cent or were practically paid nothing. A few of them got 5 to 10 per cent of their claims, while other parties, with a pull, friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, who had put in claims four or five times the amount they lost, were paid in full, or nearly so.

Mr. McNevin informed me that he had a great deal of correspondence with the late government and the late member Mr. Macdowall) in connection with his claim. During a couple of election campaigns, he was told by Mr. Macdowall that the government had promised him his claim would be paid, but up to the present he has received nothing. To show that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the North-west, I would like to read a couple of letters out of the many I have received—and I am receiving them by hundreds—from parties dissatisfied with the way the commission acted. Here is a letter from Mr. Carter :

Dear Sir,—Re 'rebellion losses' claim, of which I have as yet only received $15, but for no other reason, I believe, but that I was not a good enough Conservative, for when I asked Mr. Macdowall his reasons for not paying mine as well as my neighbour's in full, he said that he wanted to make my native neighbours—

That means the half-breeds in that district, very respectable farmers——native neighbours loyal to the country and the Conservative party when the next general election took place. Dr. Bain said he would see that Mr. Macdowall got my losses claim in full—

Doctor Bain was then president of the Conservative Association, and I believe is still. This Mr. Carter is a responsible man and a good farmer, living close to Prince Albert, and he says that Doctor Bain told him that if he would vote for Mr. Macdowall he would get his claim paid. Unfortunately, those gentlemen, after making promises, failed to deliver the goods and Carter had not yet had his claim paid. Carter said :

He said Mr. Macdowall could get my claim paid in full, but it was impossible now, as he was not certain how I had voted. He said that there was a lawyer by the name of McCliesh, who was solicitor for a great many half-breeds, not only at Batoche, but around Prince Albert, after the rebellion, who was pressing their claims on the government.

This is the same gentleman, who issued the famous circular to the half-breeds during 1889, informing them that if they did not vote for the Conservatives, the government would not recognize their claims. We have copies of that circular. This McCliesh is a prominent member of the Conservative Association, one of its leading stumpers, who made use of his position as solicitor to those parties to try and make them vote by holding this threat over their heads, that if they did not vote as he wanted them, they would not be paid. They did not vote that way and were not paid and have not been paid up to the present.

If it is not too much trouble for you to investigate, and see if anything could be done, I would be much obliged.

Your obedient servant,

WALTER C. CARTER.

There is sufficient in that letter, but I could go on reading dozens of others to the same effect. The Conservative candidate and the officers of the Conservative Association went about promising people that if they would vote in the proper way they would get compensation for rebellion losses. I do not think that that is the proper spirit in which to approach this subject, and there is a great deal of dissatisfaction. In the near future, a commission should be appointed to investigate and see that any one who has a just claim should be paid. Some parties may put in large claims to which they are not entitled, but any one who has a claim is entitled to have it investigated and to be compensated if he can establish it. It is not fair that one should be taken and the other left.

Hundreds of claims were presented and a portion paid and others got nothing at all. Those people will never be satisfied until there is a proper investigation and their claims passed on by a proper commission.

I have here another letter from a place called Henrietta, dated 9th of March, 1900:

Dear Sir,—Hearing that you are bringing up some rebellion losses in the House, I would like to write you with reference to the matter, and state some of the facts. As you are personally aware, I was the first prisoner taken in Batoche, on the charge of communicating with the police, and this being true, Riel said I ought to be shot. I did not have the fortune to be put in the cellar, but there were worse places than the same cellar where the prisoners were confined, namely, in a house close by, where I was threatened daily by the Indians, and no guard to protect me as the other prisoners had. The prisoners confined in the cellar received $500 apiece for their imprisonment, but I got nothing. I was no friend of T. McKay, who was the commissioner appointed for the district of Saskatchewan, or I might have got my claim paid

Yours truly,

GEORGE NESS.

Ness was one of the few friends in the district of Batoche the government had during the rebellion, and gave some valuable information at the risk of his life to the authorities. Some of the other prisoners confined by the Indians were paid $500 apiece, but Ness never got anything up to the present. I do not think that is fair—he happened to belong to a different political party from the gentlemen who were paid—I suppose that must be the meaning of it. I have another letter from a gentleman by the name of Dreaver, and he makes complaint that he was not properly treated in connection with this matter. Taking all this into consideration, I hope the government will, in the near future, do something to open up this matter and see that these people, irrespective of politics, are treated with justice.

Motion agreed to.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. SPEAKER having called the motion (Mr. Flint):

That this House has affirmed the principle that the prohibition of the liquor traffic is the right and most effectual legislative remedy for the evils of intemperance, and has also declared that as soon as public opinion would sufficiently sustain stringent measures, it was prepared to promote such legislation.

That the plebiscite of 1898, wherein a majority of the votes polled throughout the Dominion, including substantial majorities in all the provinces but one, were ascertained to be in favour of such legislation, as well as satisfactory evidence from other sources, shows that such measures will be thoroughly supported by the people of Canada.

That this House is now of opinion, in view of the foregoing facts, that it is desirable and expedient that parliament should, without delay, enact such measures as will secure the prohibition of the liquor traffic for beverage purposes in at least those provinces and territories which have voted in favour of such prohibition.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). I do not propose to move this motion this evening, but I would ask the Prime Minister to give me and the seconder of the resolution and the House generally the opportunity of a special day for the discussion of this resolution. We are on the eve of the adjournment for the Easter recess. The hour is late, and very few observations could be made, and there would be practically no opportunity whatever given for the general discussion of and interchange of opinion, and possible moving of amendments, which, in the ordinary course of events, will be necessary for full consideration of the subject. Considering these facts and considering the importance of the question and the wide general interest taken in it, I would ask the leader of the House if he would name a day when this resolution could be taken up.

An hon. MEMBER. Go on now.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No, I think the importance of this motion is such that it should not be entered on at this hour of the evening. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) could not do more than present his case, and there would be no opportunity for reply. Besides, the House is very thin. Moreover, I think it would be better that in the case of such a motion, notice should be given in advance, so that parties who take an interest in it—and they are very numerous—should have an opportunity of being present. Should the House concur in the suggestion, I would ask my hon. friend to take up this question as the first order of the day, after private Bills, the first day after the Easter recess.

Mr. U. WILSON (Lennox). I think it is unfortunate that the mover of this resolution has seen fit to allow it to lie over from time to time without bringing it up—

The PRIME MINISTER. It is called now for the first time.

Mr. WILSON. I think it has stood from time to time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It has only been called when we were going over the unopposed motions.

Mr. FLINT. This is the first time there has been an opportunity for discussion. I have been here every time when the motion has been called.

Mr. WILSON. I thought there had been an opportunity for discussion before. I am glad a day has been fixed, though I must say, from the action the government has taken heretofore, we have very little to hope for from anything they may do.

The PRIME MINISTER. You are hard to please.

REBELLION OF 1885—SCRIP FOR SCOUTS.

Mr. SPEAKER having called the motion (Mr. McInerney):

That during the rebellion of 1885, half-breeds at Wood Mountain and Maple Creek and at other points in the Territories were employed as scouts. That a number of persons who were employed as scouts during the rebellion aforesaid received scrip. That as a fact the half-breeds at Wood Mountain, at Maple Creek, Swift Current and Moosejaw, with one or two exceptions have not received scrip. That in the opinion of this House scrip should be given to those who are found to be entitled to it.

Mr. N. F. DAVIN (West Assiniboia). An hon. gentleman who takes an interest in this question is not present this evening, and I would be glad if the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would allow the question to stand. If not, I will go on.

The PRIME MINISTER. Stand.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR— PROTESTANT AND IRISH CATHOLIC CLERKS.

Mr. SPEAKER having called the motion (Mr. McInerney):

Return showing total number of Protestant clerks on the permanent staff, inside service, Department of the Interior, classified into chief clerks, first-class clerks, second-class clerks and third-class clerks, total salaries thereof, with promotion and increase granted in each individual case since July 1, 1896, to present date. the total number of Irish Catholic clerks on the permanent staff, inside service, Department of the Interior, classified into chief clerks, first-class clerks, second-class clerks and third-class clerks, total salaries thereof, with promotion and increase granted in each individual case since July 1, 1896, to present date.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Dropped.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I would like to know according to what rule certain resolutions are dropped while others are allowed to stand? In going over these motions, a few moments ago, we came to one standing in the name of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), but in his absence, at the request of the Prime Minister, it was allowed to stand. But, when we come to the motion of the hon. member for Kent, N.B., (Mr. McInerney) it is dropped. Is it with that hon. gentleman's consent that the resolution is dropped?

Mr. FLINT.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). It is evident to hon. members on this side of the House, that if a resolution was to be dropped, it should be at the direction of the Prime Minister, or some other hon. gentleman leading the House. I was pained to observe one hon. gentleman, the hon. member for Kent, Ont., (Mr. Campbell) I think, when one resolution was reached, call out 'dropped.' We should have our proceedings conducted on some better principle; and, referring to what my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) has said, I think there should be one rule laid down for both sides of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. The rule of the House is that if a motion is called and the hon. member in whose name it stands is not present, it shall be dropped, unless it stands at the request of the government. When a motion is called, it drops as a matter of course. It so happens, that sometimes, hon. members anticipating that they will not be present when a motion is called, come and ask the government to allow it to stand, and we do so. A moment ago, at the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I asked a motion appearing in his name be allowed to stand. As to this motion of the hon. member for Kent, N.B. (Mr. McInerney) I have had no intimation that he intended to move it. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), I know, wants to speak to his motion, and mentioned the matter, and it was for that reason that I asked that the motion be allowed to stand.

Mr. U. WILSON (Lennox). What objection can there be to giving this information asked for by the hon. member for Kent, N.B.?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is none.

Mr. WILSON. In the absence of the hon. member (Mr. McInerney), if the hon. leader of the government has no objection, I will move the resolution.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no objection. The moment a desire is expressed to let a motion stand, I will let it stand.

Mr. WILSON. Then, if the hon. leader of the House will allow the motion to stand until the hon. member for Kent, N.B., (Mr. McInerney) comes—

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection at all.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

TIGNISH, P.E.I.—CUSTOM DUTIES COLLECTED, 1898, 1900.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's) moved for :

Return showing the amount of customs duty collected at Tignish, P.E.I., from January 1, 1898, to January, 1900, by whom paid, and upon what articles.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The House, I am sure, would never grant such a motion, as it calls for a statement of the amount of duties paid by individuals. It would never do to expose private business in that way, so I hope the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald, King's) will drop the resolution.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Dropped.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS.

Copies of all correspondence, memorials, petitions, &c., in possession of the government, or any member or official thereof relating to the resignation of Mr. John McPhee as postmaster at Murray Harbour Road, in Prince Edward Island, and the appointment of his successor.—(Mr. Martin.)

Copies of all correspondence between George Hood and others and the Minister of the Interior or other members of the government in reference to the rising of the waters in Lake Duphin.—(Mr. Roche, by Mr. Taylor.)

Copies of all papers, correspondence, report of the physician, &c., relating to permanent night duty imposed upon certain officers of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.—(Mr. Fortin, by Mr. Talbot.)

Copies of all papers, petitions, correspondence and reports relating to a request made to the authorities of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, for the carting of waste stone along the banks of Rivière des Prairies, in St. Vincent de Paul, to prevent damage being caused by said river to the public highway, in said locality.—(Mr. Fortin, by Mr. Talbot.)

Copies of all correspondence, charges, investigations, reports and other papers in connection with the dismissal of J. P. Alexander from the position of sub-collector of customs at Deloraine.—(Mr. Rutherford, by Mr. Davis.)

Copies of all papers and correspondence between the government and the harbour commissioners of Montreal and the Connors Syndicate, in connection with the proposals made by the latter, and the arrangement finally made with them.—(Mr. Casey.)

CALLING OF PARLIAMENT ON A FIXED DAY.

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (West Elgin). With the permission of the House, I will go on with the motion that stands in my name, as this may be the last opportunity we may have of discussing it. I move :

That in the opinion of this House, the calling of parliament on a fixed day annually, or on a day between certain fixed and narrow limits, in December or January of each year, would be in the public interest, and would best consult the convenience of those who have business to bring before that body, and of the members thereof.

It is within the knowledge of all of us who have been members of this House for some time, that not only has the length of the session been gradually increasing, but that on the average the House has been called at a later date in the past eight or ten years than formerly. When I first became a member of this House three months was looked upon as a good long session. I remember well, when the late Mr. Holton pointed out as a consequence of increasing business, that we must expect the House to sit in the future three months or very nearly three months, and we thought that was a desperately big undertaking. Of late years we think we are getting off rather easily if the session closes at the end of four months ; I do not know how it may be this year. But when the session only lasted three months, or three months and a half, the date at which the House was called did not matter so much, we were sure to get away by late spring or early summer. We all know how far that is from being the case at present. We all know that for some years back the session has virtually spoiled the whole summer ; for everybody who has the honour and glory of being a member of this House has to pay for that honour and glory by the practical loss of all the winter and all the summer from any other business he may have. It goes without saying that members of this House universally feel, I think, that the session should be called earlier than it is usually called, in order that we may get away from here by Queen's Birthday at latest, which used to be the old-fashioned date for the ending of the session. In order to effect this with a four months session, we have to begin pretty well back, at all events with the opening of January.

Now, every government will be able to answer this argument with the claim that they have called the House as early as they possibly could under the circumstances then existing ; that they have made every effort to call it earlier, and to have business ready to proceed with when the House did meet. On certain occasions we have had to recognize that there were good reasons for a late session. When negotiations were pending with the United States about matters which were to come before the House, there was a reason to some extent for delaying the opening of the session. I need not go into all the cases which have occurred, in which there may have been an apparent reason for not calling the session as early as it should have been called. I beg to urge, in reply to all these excuses that, in the average of years, and in the average of circumstances, less mischief will be done by having a fixed day for the meeting of the House, than by leaving it to the convenience or the whim of the government of the day. In Great Britain, in the United States, I believe in France, in most self-governing countries, the legislature meets at a fixed time—not always on a fixed day—but always within a very narrow limit at the same season of the year. The convenience of this to members of the House need hardly be explained in this Chamber; it need hardly be explained outside. Suffice it to say, that for any man who has any business at all, outside of politics, it would be more than a convenience to be able to arrange that business beforehand in such a manner that he could be ready to attend the meeting of the House at the time when he knew it was going to be called. The convenience of a number of gentlemen, who are, as I suppose we may call ourselves, amongst the leading people in the country, is certainly no trifling consideration, especially when the manner in which we discharge our duties in this House, depends in a large manner upon that convenience being consulted. A man who has business calling him away every second day from the House, cannot attend to his duties as well as he otherwise could. And a man who does not know within a month or two when he is going to be called away here will not be able to arrange his business so that he will be able to give his whole time to the discharge of his parliamentary duties as he should.

But, the convenience of the outside public, now, more than in years past, should be consulted. Every year there is an increase in the amount of private Bill business done by this House, and it is essential. No, I will not say essential, to consult the interests of those who have business to bring before this parliament, but, it is highly proper that their convenience should be consulted, and that those who wish to apply for incorporation should know that they must apply before a certain time in order to have their Bills considered. In the present state of affairs, with the meeting of the House uncertain, people go on advertising their intention to apply for legislation, they go on taking the preliminary steps for the formation of companies, and when the House meets they are not ready. Consequently, the Private Bills Committee, the Railway Committee, and the Banking and Commerce Committee have to ask this House to lengthen the time allowed for putting in petitions, breaking the rules of the House, practically, in order to consult the convenience of those who have business before the committees. All this could be avoided if there were something like a fixed day of meeting.

The question, to my mind, resolves itself into asking: When should we meet? I think that nine-tenths of the people of the country would answer that we should certainly meet, at the latest in January in each year. I think that those of us who have had the most experience in the workings of the House, would say that it would be still better to meet in December.

Mr. PRIOR. No.

Mr. CASEY. I hear a gentleman from the far Pacific coast uttering a sound indicative of dissent to the view of the question. It must undoubtedly be admitted that some inconvenience would be caused some members from the Pacific coast, but, I would remind older members in the House, that that inconvenience, if it be a real inconvenience, was submitted to without complaint in December of the year 1880, when this House was called together to consider the bargain then made with the syndicate for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The result of the session was such that it impressed upon my mind the great convenience of meeting in December. We could assemble here about the middle of the month or a little earlier, take two weeks to get the business of the House under way, introduce such Bills as were ready, strike the committees of the House, and get the address out of the way, then adjourn for a couple of weeks for the Christmas holidays. During most of that time the printing of Bills and the preparation of reports for the House could go on. Then, we could meet at an early day in January with the preliminaries out of the way, set to work at business, get the Order paper cleared off, and get ahead with the affairs that we ought to busy ourselves with. We all know how it is in the early part of the session. We are busy enough for the first week or two with the address, with the introduction of Bills, and with notices of motion, and then a long period intervenes, two or three weeks perhaps, when there is little or nothing at all to do, when we get into long discussions, move the adjournment of the House, and do things of that kind, which are productive of no benefit, and which are sometimes productive of a good deal of ill-feeling. If we met in December, adjourned for the Christmas holidays, and came back all ready for work in January it would suit the convenience of all the members except those from the greatest distances.

Mr. PRIOR. How are we going to get home?

Mr. CASEY. You cannot have an arrangement that will suit the convenience of every one. The question for the consideration of the House is whether the convenience of the the most, or that of the fewest, should be considered.

While I express my own preference for a meeting in December, it is possible that the needs of the case would be served very fairly by the adoption of a resolution that the House ought to meet in the first half of January. I do not think that the House ought to meet later than that. There will always be the objection from the heads of departments, that they cannot get the business of the departments ready in time, and there will always be the objection on the part of the ministers, that they cannot be ready with the business, if the session is called at such an early day, but, that sort of objection will always be urged when any change is sought to be introduced. Those who are being hustled up on account of change, always do object and always will object to the change. This objection could be cured, even suppose it is made, in this way; if the House met about the 1st of January, and if it got through with its business in May, there would be two more months left for the ministers and the permanent heads of departments to get through with the business of the departments and prepare the new business for the House before the next session in the January following. For one year the working time of the ministers and their departments would be shortened, but after that they would have just as long before the session as they have now, and after a trial, they would be more ready to admit that this change would be suitable to their convenience. I think, if not now, at an early date, the convenience of the public and of members of the House must be consulted in settling that date of calling this House together. That date cannot be easily put later than the middle of January, and I think the ministers would be consulting their own interest by allowing this change to be resolved upon by the House. At all events, I would ask them to express what views they may feel on this question, and to allow their followers and supporters to vote on the matter as their own opinion indicates. I may say for the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as for the benefit of many on this side of the House, that the late Sir John Thompson was quite willing to agree to an arrangement by which the House should meet within certain fixed dates, either in the second half of January or the first half of February. I had a conversation with him upon the subject and he promised to give his attention to it in the coming session, but, unfortunately, to the great regret of us all, he was not with us in that next session.

I leave the question in the hands of the House. It is one which concerns us individually, which concerns us collectively, which concerns those whom we represent, and I would ask for a full expression of opinion upon it. I do not hope for as full a discussion of the matter just before the Easter holidays as we might have had at another period during the session, but I have availed of this opportunity such as it is to bring the matter before the hon. members of this House with the hope that they will take some interest in it.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Although the suggestion, if carried out, might be convenient to members, it would appear to me that it is impossible under our system of government to carry out such a scheme. The responsibility of calling and proroguing parliament must belong to the Crown, and I have no doubt that the exigencies of the situation will always govern the calling of parliament. It seems to me that this scheme would be unworkable because in the event of parliament being called and the government being defeated on some question of public policy, an appeal would be made to the country, and perhaps if the supplies were not voted parliament would have to be called immediately.

Mr. CASEY. A special session could be called.

Mr. SPROULE. Then that would interfere with any law calling parliament at a fixed time.

Mr. CASEY. This motion is only intended to apply to the regular annual sessions of the House, and would not at all prevent the calling of a special session under such circumstances as those mentioned.

Mr. SPROULE. And if the time for the regular session followed immediately, would it be called then?

Mr. CASEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it would be absurd, because the one session might overlap the other just as in the Congress of the United States, one session is sometimes not finished when another commences. It would undoubtedly suit the convenience of a great many people if a definite time could be fixed, and it seems to me that the most suitable period would be some time after the holidays in January. I believe, however, that it would be impossible to carry that idea out.

Mr. CASEY. I do not propose in this motion to enact a law fixing a special date for the calling of parliament. In England there is no law on the subject, but the House meets by custom in the early part of December and no difficulty has been found under such circumstances as have been alluded to. If the government is defeated and goes to the country a new session is called afterwards. This very autumn, on the occasion of the South African war, a special session of the British parliament was called, and it did not interfere with the regular session at the regular time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The difficulties in fixing a date for the calling of the session of parliament in this country are somewhat greater than they are in Great Britain. If you fixed a date in the early part of December you would not have these papers ready which are deemed essential before you can do a large amount of practical business. For instance, it would be impossible to get the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CASEY. Why?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because this document has become so bulky in form that although the Auditor General has a very large staff working at it, he cannot get it ready now when the House meets in the beginning of February.

Mr. CASEY. He would have to get it ready.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then, again, there are the reports of the different departments which are brought up to the end of the year; of course, I do not mean to say that you could not change that. At all events, there would be a great deal of inconvenience caused by such a change. As my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) reminded my hon. friend (Mr. Casey) there are more interests to be considered than the members who live in the vicinity of Ottawa. The maritime province members would find it very inconvenient to come up here before the Christmas holidays, then go home for Christmas, and then return here again, and I suppose that the members for British Columbia, Manitoba and the Territories would find it equally inconvenient. My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) has pointed out that this parliament is unlike the Congress of the United States. In the Congress they may vote down the policy of the President or vote in support of it, but it does not affect the administration in the slightest, whereas if the policy of the administration were condemned in this House the government of the day might advise having an election immediately and if their advice were accepted this whole arrangement would be upset. So long as you preserve the prerogative of the Crown in calling parliament together, and unless you say by statute that that prerogative shall not be exercised, there are difficulties almost insurmountable under our system of government in adopting the principle of this motion. I believe with my hon. friend (Mr. Casey) that a great deal could be done by ascertaining the desire of the members and conforming to that desire from year to year. I think the growing desire of members on both sides is, that the session should be called as early in January as the business of the country makes it possible shall be called. That has been the desire of the members and that has been the desire of the government, and I have no doubt that whatever government is in power they will find that desire expressed so strongly that they will conform to it.

Mr. CASEY. I did not conceive that the resolution would be so misunderstood as for any one to suppose that I proposed there should be a law on the subject. This is an expression of opinion on the part of the House, that the interests of all would be served by calling parliament at such a time. It does not prevent parliament being called for extraordinary reasons at any other time. I think the resolution is perfectly clear on that.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). It is certain that the convenience of members would be better suited if there were something more definite about the calling of parliament each year. It is a sort of understood thing that the session is to be called as early in January as possible, and we have all looked forward to that time for assembling together; yet, the rule has been more honoured in the breach than in the observance. It seems to me that parliament ought, in the interest of the members, to have more regard to some definite time of meeting than has been the case in the past. There is a general consensus of opinion, so far as I know, that early in January is the best time; and if it were understood that parliament would be called then, there are two things that would likely be accomplished of great benefit to the members. First, the members could arrange their own business matters with some definiteness, and with the minimum of inconvenience to themselves; and secondly I think the government would be more likely to be ready with their measures. We are all liable to the sin of procrastination, putting off things to the last moment, and I do not think that governments are any more exempt from it than individuals. If there were some rule under which parliament should meet at a fixed time, the departments would be instructed to have their business ready at that time, and the sessions would not be as long as they have been in the past, and as this one bids fair to be. The law being as it is makes it still more uncertain when parliament is to be called, because there must be a session within a year from the end of the preceding session; and if the sessions extend to such a length that the normal session is one of five months, all the greater uncertainty exists with regard to the time at which the next one will commence. If nothing better can be accomplished by the motion of the hon. member for West Elgin than what has been said by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), it will, at all events, be of some advantage to us to know that it is the intention of the government in the future to have the session begin as early as possible in January of each year.

Mr. CASEY. The House is not full enough to make a vote on this question of any great importance. I had hoped to have had a full discussion of the question, which I know interests many members; but, as there are very few of us here to-night, I do not intend to press it to a vote, and will ask leave to withdraw it. I take the words of the hon. gentleman who spoke for the government, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to represent the views and intentions of the government to call the House as early in January as the business of the country will allow; and I consider that having that much put on record is a very substantial result of the discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the aim and the intention for years. That understanding was come to years ago.

Mr. CASEY. It was the understanding come to several times and not carried out; and it was for that reason that I wished to renew the discussion on the subject. I should have liked to have replied to some of the arguments used against this proposal, but I suppose it would hardly be in order to do so on a motion to withdraw. Therefore, for the reasons I have given, I move for leave to withdraw this motion.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion, I should like to make one observation: that, after all, there is very little use in calling the House together unless the public business is ready and unless the public documents are ready to be submitted to parliament soon after it meets. Without that, what is the good of being here, whether the time be in January, or February or March? I have made no investigation further than a general remembrance, and I do not believe that the business of parliament increases very much notwithstanding the extent of the country; but, undoubtedly, the amount of talking increases. Whether calling the House in January would affect that or not, it is impossible to say. When my hon. friend submits his motion again, if he adds another section to it which will define absolutely the date of prorogation, I think it would be far more satisfactory than to define the date of the opening.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, I think it would suit the members generally very much better to have parliament called in January; but, under our system, I do not see how the date of meeting can be fixed definitely. There is a very important matter, however, that might be attended to, that is, to have the business ready when the House meets, including the departmental reports of the previous year. I do not say this government is worse than other governments in that respect. I think it has been the custom in this country to call parliament, and then to waste a month at least before getting down to business. In my judgment, that is not right. I think parliament ought not to be called until the business is ready, and then we should get down to business. If we did that, three months would be long enough in all reason for a session.

Motion withdrawn.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). As we have now gone through the Order paper, as far as notices of motion are concerned, as I do not see some of the gentlemen ready with public Bills and orders, and as the House is thin, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

REPORT OF THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. H. BOSTOCK (Yale and Cariboo). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received the report of the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, about which I asked him a question the other day?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In answer to the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Bostock), I have to say that the report was received last night.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day, I call the attention of the government again to some incomplete returns which have been brought down. I have three times spoken of the incomplete return from the Minister of Customs with reference to the case of Mr. Lemieux. It seems to me that there is a good deal to be added to the correspondence.

The PRIME MINISTER. When the hon. gentleman spoke of this matter before, he mentioned that a petition had been sent to the Minister of Justice, and he wished to have the opinion of the Minister of Justice upon it. I find that the petition was sent to the Minister of Justice, but referred to the Department of Customs, and nothing else was done by the Department of Justice.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be important even to have that fact. I did not suppose that the minister would give a report, but it must seem strange that such a matter would be brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice without his doing anything in the premises.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the correspondence is not complete with reference to the order in council allowing United States vessels to take part in our coasting. Again, the Post Office Department has not brought down, either for this year or last, the contracts and prices of carrying the mails into Dawson, as the order of the House called for. I have other complaints in this direction, but I shall not take up the time of the House now.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot speak at this moment with reference to the Post Office return, but the other two will be brought down immediately.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—COMMISSIONS IN THE IMPERIAL SERVICE.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the government to an item which appears in the Empire, of London, Eng., on the 28th of March last. It is as follows :

War Notes.

Lord Tennyson, Governor of South Australia, has been notified by Mr. Chamberlain that the War Office offers 114 commissions to Australians in the Infantry and Royal Artillery. Candidates must be between 20 and 30 years of age, and their selection is entrusted to the governors and military commandants.

I ask the leader of the government whether the offer made to Canada of a certain number of commissions in the Imperial service was made under the same condition, namely, that the selection of the candidates was to be entrusted to the Governor General and the military commandants of Canada. I see in the newspapers of yesterday the following statement :

Lt.-Col. Kitson, Commandant of the Royal Military College, says that the fourteen commissions recently granted to cadets were not cancelled because of any discourtesy of his towards the Minister of Militia. The statement that the commandant had sent the list direct to the War Office is untrue. The names were submitted through the Minister of Militia. The cancellation was due to a semi-private communication by Lt.-Col. Kitson to the Marquis of Lansdowne, suggesting to what class of cadets the commissions should be granted. The minister took the occasion of the presentation of the list of names to demand respect for his office.

I ask whether it is the intention of the government to insist upon being allowed to name the gentlemen who are to take these commissions, or whether it is understood that the selection will be left to the Governor General and the Commandant of the Royal Military College, as seems to be the case in Australia ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry that I am not in a position to give information upon that point at this moment. If the hon. gentleman gives this as a notice, I will endeavour to have the information brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). This is not a question of anything being brought down. It is information of the most urgent character that is wanted immediately. What I infer is about to take place will be one of the most fatal blows which can be inflicted upon this country, namely, the subordination of our militia to party politics. I believe we are in danger at this moment of having that militia system, which we are all so interested in maintaining in the very highest plane of efficiency, I believe we are threatened with having it dragged down into the arena of party politics, and made, by this government, subservient to party politics. This is a most urgent matter, and demands the fullest and most satisfactory explanation. I am sorry that the Minister of Militia is not in his place, as he ought to be at this period of the session and at times like these. We are told that the dignity of the Minister of Militia—the dignity of this Minister of Militia—is absolutely standing in the way of the nomination by the Governor General and the Commandant of the Royal Military College, of the cadets that the British government have offered commissions to in the Imperial service. Now, Sir, we have been accustomed for a good while to the mode in which the Minister of Militia has sustained the dignity of his office. We have had opportunities again and again of seeing that, apparently, his only object is to turn all the patronage of the Imperial government and of this government into a partisan channel.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will conclude with a motion, Mr. Speaker.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to my hon. friend. No notice has been given of this, and I am not in a position to give him any information on the subject at the present time. Therefore, he should not attempt to discuss the matter now, and that is the reason I appeal to him.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is entirely out of order. I am in order, because I have said that my intention is to conclude with a motion, and the hon. gentleman knows that it is the privilege of parliament, not to be required to give notice at all on matters of urgency, and this is an urgent matter. I am glad to see the Minister of Militia in his place ; and before it is too late to intervene, I want to call his attention and the attention of the government to an outrage of the most flagrant character attempted to be perpetrated on the militia service of Canada, and on the whole interests of the country. The Minister of Militia came to me some time ago, and stated that a despatch had been received from the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, pointing out the great importance of having a man of the highest ability and standing, and in close touch with military affairs in England, appointed to the position of General Officer Commanding the Militia of Canada. Mr. Chamberlain had suggested that a large addition should be made to the salary of that officer; and the hon. minister wished to know if I would be prepared to support that suggestion. I said, certainly, I would be prepared to support this government in anything that was necessary to place the militia service of the country in a state of the highest possible efficiency. To my amazement, this session, the Minister of Militia got up and stated that his proposal was, that we should not have an Imperial officer at all, but should sever the connection with England.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Does the hon. gentleman say that I made that statement in the House?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I deny it most emphatically.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will refer to Hansard, and will show that the statement made by the hon. gentleman was that he was not undertaking to speak for the government, but that in his opinion, the time had come when we should have a Canadian.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, what I said was this: I thought the time had come, when the door might be opened to include the Canadian militia as a field from which an officer might be selected in the future, if a fit one were to be found.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has exactly confirmed my statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. What was my statement? My statement was that the Minister of Militia, in his place in this House, had proposed to change the law by which we are bound to have an officer of the British army occupying that position, in order to enable him to appoint to the position an officer who was not an officer of the British army. Therefore, my statement is confirmed by the statement which the hon. gentleman himself has just made. Now, I say, to approach this side of the House with a proposal to increase largely the salary of the Officer Commanding the Militia in Canada, and ask our support to that proposal, and then to get up in this House and state that he proposes to change the law in such a way as to get rid of the obligation which this parliament deliberately adopted of having the Imperial force connected with our militia force, is in my judgment adopting a course most fatal to the best interests of Canada. I do not mean to say that a Canadian might not be found capable of filling that office, but it is not necessary to go outside of the law for that purpose, as the hon. gentleman knows. There are 80 Canadians at this moment holding commissions in the British army, and, no doubt, many of them will soon reach the position necessary, under the law to qualify them to be nominated to that position; and with the ability which they have shown in the British army, there is no doubt that there will be a large choice under the law as it stands. But, I understand the hon. gentleman's movement. From the moment he became Minister of Militia, down to the present moment, he has had no conception of the responsibility and importance of the office he has filled. He has only used it for the purpose of giving all the petty patronage and the supplies to partisans of his own at double prices. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) brought up a flagrant case in which the law had been violated, and the government had paid an exorbitant price for clothing to partisans of the hon. gentleman. But, when I find the statement made that the hon. gentleman had interposed to prevent the issue of the commissions which had been assigned by Her Majesty's government to the Royal Military College, it is time that this House understood that the purpose of hon. gentlemen opposite, is to degrade the whole militia service of this country down to the level of partisan politics. Take the statements made a few days ago, as to the manner in which the hon. gentleman had withdrawn his own appointment of persons who were to go to the Royal Military College for instruction, on some charge of politics. Does anybody in this House believe that either the late Commanding Officer of the Militia of this country, or Colonel Foster, ever dreamed of such a thing as introducing party politics into the militia of this country? Yet we find the position taken by the hon. gentleman, that appointments absolutely made should be cancelled, because the parties were not political partisans of this government; and the hon. gentleman has himself avowed on the floor of this House, as Minister of Militia, that he is prepared always to give the doubt in favour of his own party, and to make the militia of this country partisan as far as he is able to do so. Now, Sir, I happen to have a statement in Hansard, which the hon. gentleman made, and it confirms exactly what I say. He said:

In this connection let me refer incidentally to one matter which is of some importance, and, I think, which was referred to by nearly all who have spoken—the question whether we should limit ourselves any longer to the Imperial army as the source from which we should draw a commander of the militia force of Canada.

Does that bear out what I said or not?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) dare, in the face of this—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that he is reading from a past debate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If you wish, Mr. Speaker, to interpose, and prevent my giving evidence of the accuracy of my statement, I bow to your ruling. It is absolutely necessary to a discussion of this question that I should have the opportunity—and I think it is the first time, under similar circumstances, any question has been raised as to the impropriety—

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not because the hon. gentleman is concerned, that I make this rule, but I feel that for some considerable time we have been drifting into the habit of referring to past debates of this session, and unless a check is put to this habit, we will continually have questions springing up for discussion again which were supposed to have been settled by a past debate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt you are quite right, Sir, but at the same time I am sure you will feel, as I do, the difficulty of discussing a question of this kind without making reference to a previous debate; more especially when the statement I made as to what had taken place has been challenged. I have the evidence in my hand of the accuracy of my statement, and it would have been more satisfactory to the House if I had been allowed to complete the sentence and then been reminded that it was a little out of order.

What is the ground of intervention stated in this article? I have no hesitation in saying that if, when Her Majesty's government offers to the Kingston Military College a certain number of commissions, the Minister of Militia is allowed to interpose and say that those commissions shall not be issued as customary in accordance with the invitation of Her Majesty's government, this country will rise in revolt and strike down the college as an institution made to subserve party purposes. A more flagrant wrong cannot be done to Canada than to weaken the respect and confidence the people have in our militia service. Anything calculated to make the people believe that the whole thing is to be dragged down into the arena of politics by hon. gentlemen opposite will injure not this government merely—for that will pass away and the injury could easily be repaired—but injure the whole force and prevent our having a thoroughly organized, completely trained and independent militia force in this country.

The story we have this morning that these commissions have been withheld and cancelled on the ground that the commandant had made the recommendation without first submitting them to the Minister of Militia is flatly contradicted by the commandant:

Lieut.-Col. Kitson, Commandant of the Royal Military College, says that the fourteen commissions recently granted to cadets were not cancelled because of any discourtesy of his towards the Minister of Militia.

The commissions, therefore, had evidently been cancelled. These commissions offered by Her Majesty's government to the cadets of the Royal Military College had been cancelled according to the statement of the commandant. I had that information before I saw this in the paper, but was unwilling to believe it. People who had sent their sons to the college were indignant to learn that the commission had been cancelled by the order of the Minister of Militia. Here we have Lieut.-Col. Kitson saying:

The statement that the commandant had sent the list direct to the War Office is untrue. The names were submitted to the Minister of Militia. The cancellation was due to a semi-private communication by Lieut.-Col. Kitson to the Marquis of Lansdowne, suggesting to what class of cadets the commission should be granted. The minister took the occasion of the presentation of the list of names to demand respect for his office.

Is that the point to which we have come? Are gentlemen paid out of the treasury of Canada large salaries, because of their high military qualifications, to be sent to the right about, not because they have failed in their duty, but because the dignity of the Minister of Militia forsooth has been offended? The very object of having a high class official from the Imperial army, versed in the most recent discoveries in the science and art of war, is that we may have some one at the head of the college who will not be the mere puppet of a gentleman who knows nothing about the service, such as the present Minister of Militia, whose one object, ever since he has taken office, has been to sacrifice everything at the shrine of partisan politics. We have had two gentlemen of the highest standing and character turned down because it is pretended they said something about politics. Why, in our great exemplar, the British parliament, officers of the army and navy are allowed to sit as representatives of the people and to give expression to the strongest condemnation of the government. We had an illustrious example the other day of a gentleman high in the navy, leaving to take command of a most important section of Her Majesty's navy, giving utterance to the strongest criticisms and animadversions on the policy pursued by the government. But if, in this country, promotion is to be barred except to those who are subservient to the government of the day, if every gentleman in the militia service, who will not kneel at the feet of our dignified Minister of Militia, is to be turned down, then we can have very little confidence in our militia. And never, in the history of Canada, down to this hour has any government taken the position taken by the Minister of Militia to-day. The late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, who founded the Royal Military College, to his great credit be it said, took the ground that the head of the college must be an Imperial officer of high standing and of high character, and must have a free hand in matters which he understood better than the government of Canada understood them. That policy has been adhered to down to the present hour. Now, we are told that the commissions awarded by Her Majesty's government to the cadets of that college are to be refused and cancelled at the instance of the Minister of the Militia, who may choose to say that he wants advantages for the members of his own family or political friends. We were taunted not very long ago by being told that there was a contrast between the two sides of the House in the position occupied in relation to this war. They said: Every other gentleman on the Treasury benches has a son fighting the battles of England in South Africa; where are the representatives of the gentlemen on the other side? Had they been treated the same as hon. gentlemen on the other side more would have been heard of them. But the son of one hon. gentleman on this side resigned his position as captain and went into the ranks as private in order that he might assist in fighting the battles of England in South Africa. And to-day he lies low in illness, caused by the hardships of the campaign. But these others are gentlemen, who have the advantage of official position. There is not one member of the Treasury benches who has a son fighting in the ranks as a private. I may say that the only son of my only daughter is there to-day, a private in the ranks. And yet we are taunted by these gentlemen who have commissions galore to scatter among their relatives. Most of these gentlemen of whom they boast were officers in the British army whose duties compelled them to go there whether they wished to do so or not; and the others are persons who by favour of the Minister of the Militia were able to secure commissions. I would not have taken up a moment of the time of the House, if this matter were not one that I feel to be of an urgent character, one in which the character and standing of the militia of Canada are at stake. Some means must be found by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to smooth the ruffled dignity of the Minister of Militia, that British officers may work with him in a manner in which British officers expect to work with whatever government may be in power. I do not hesitate to say that feeling has been stirred up in this country by this course alleged, and that I know to be absolutely true, the cancellation of these commissions at the dictum of the Minister of Militia—a course never before followed by a gentleman occupying his position, and one that must greatly injure the militia service of Canada. I move the adjournment of the House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). As one who has taken and still takes a deep interest in the development of our national force, I should like to say a few words in reference to the matter which has been, very properly, brought up on this occasion. I think it would be fatal to the militia force of Canada if anything like what the paper read by the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) states approaches the truth in reference to the manner the department has taken of disposing of the commissions offered by England. This is not a new case. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that when in Egypt, Arabi Pasha rose in arms against the Khedive, England offered fourteen, as far as my recollection goes, fourteen additional commissions to the cadets who secured the highest points in the Royal Military College. The emergency having arisen, England required additional officers; and the position which had been gained by the Royal Military College of Canada was such that England turned with confidence to Canada to find some of the men she required, and offered fourteen additional commissions to the best men that that college could turn out. What was the course followed on that occasion? We followed the course which had been traditional in the Royal Military College from the very day that college was organized. Hon. gentlemen who have taken an interest in the matter will know that the six commissions regularly given by the Imperial government were given to the cadets who had secured the highest points in the examination. The one who stood highest was given the first choice, that choice being generally exercised in favour of the engineers. The next highest generally took the artillery, the one following the cavalry—although first, in rank, from the expense attached to that branch of the service was not often selected—and then the infantry. When these additional commissions were to be given, the commandant followed the traditional course. No politics interfered with the selection. I trust that what is reported in the paper read by the leader of the opposition will be contradicted by the Minister of Militia. Many men make large sacrifices of money to send their sons to the Royal Military College. It is supposed that by doing so, they secure for their sons an education equal to anything that can be found, not only in Canada, but at West Point, or Sandhurst or any other of the great military institutions. And this is actually the case, as shown by the fact that the Royal Military College cadets who have left Canada and have taken commissions in the British army have, when examined in competition with the men from Sandhurst and other military colleges, generally carried higher points than their English competitors. And the result is well known to men who have paid any attention to this matter. The men who have left Canada and gone into the Imperial service are to-day in the most important positions in the British army. Take Girouard, who was one of the great factors enabling Lord Kitchener to conquer the Soudan when he did; for that great general had with him, in Girouard, a man whose knowledge, whose experience, whose training were such that his commander could rely upon him to construct probably the most difficult railway that ever was constructed in the world, designed to carry to the front the troops, ammunition and ordnance and everything else required for the military movement that had been planned. Now, Sir, I say that I hope this will be contradicted. If the people of Canada must believe that after a man has made great sacrifices to educate his son, the merit of the son will not be recognized, but that another man will be preferred to him, though his only merit is that he has political protection, I say that it will be not only detrimental, as the leader of the opposition has said, to the position of the Royal Military College, but I think it will completely kill the militia system that obtains in Canada. I cannot express myself too strongly upon this point, because I think the true policy to follow is that which was followed during the Egyptian campaign, when commissions were sent to Canada, and the man was chosen who had the highest points, having passed the examinations of the Royal Military College, after the six ordinary commissions had been given. I say that the others followed according to merit, those who had preceded them; they were given commissions because they had followed a course in the Royal Military College, and they were entitled to the commissions from the points which they had obtained in their examinations. There was no attempt to drag politics into the Royal Military College. I fully believe, as the leader of the opposition has said, that the Commandant of the Royal Military College should have as free a hand as possible. I maintain, as I have always maintained, that every officer commanding, whether coming from Great Britain, or whether he is picked up from the ranks of the Canadian militia, must be under the control of the Minister of Militia and Defence; when the heads of that department occupy the prominent position of the officer commanding the forces and the commandant of the Royal Military College, they must necessarily be under the control of the Minister of Militia and Defence. But, I say that the Minister of Militia and Defence must recognize that the position which he holds in this country is different from the position of any other of his colleagues on the Treasury benches. He has to deal with the national forces of the country, he has got to make every man know that when he shoulders his rifle to fight the battles of his country or the battles of the empire, he is looked upon as a soldier, and he must be subject to military laws without regard to politics, owing no submission to politicians like ourselves, which, to my mind, would destroy his usefulness as a soldier, and would destroy the usefulness of the force which we are building up.

Although I cannot refer to a previous debate, I can refer to a question which is always new and always important to Canada, that is, the question whether the officer commanding the Canadian forces should be an Imperial or a Canadian officer. Sir, if there is any man who believes that Canada should be for the Canadians, it is myself; I do not pretend to love Canada more than anybody else, but I do contend that I love her as much as any other gentleman in this House or outside of it. The reason why I consider it all important that the officer commanding the militia forces of Canada should be an Imperial officer, I wish to state to this House. Mr. Speaker, is it necessary in these last days of the century, when we are engaged in a war in South Africa, for me to state that the science of war is developing every day and becoming more important, even to people who are imbued with the most peaceful ideas, as I claim that the people of Canada and of England are? Any nation who keeps up an army does so for the purpose of protecting its rights and defending its flag, and how can this be done unless you have at the head of your army a man who is thoroughly up to date in all that regards military science? Now, Sir, in Canada we have men whose abilities are equal to the abilities of any foreign officers, although we have not been placed in the same conditions to follow up the developments and progress of the science of war. I have always contended, and still contend, that the officer commanding the forces in Canada should be changed every five years, for this reason, that every year you have new developments going on in armaments and in the science of war, in discipline, in drill, and in everything connected with the preparation of bodies of men to fight the battles of their country. I know very well that some of the men who have been in the Imperial service for a number of years would be very useful as commanders of the Canadian militia; but I claim that it would be a mistake to make the change in the law which the hon. gentleman has suggested, because I think it is of the greatest importance that the militia of Canada should be commanded by a man who is in touch with the developments taking place every day in that very important branch of human knowledge called the science of war.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must ask my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to excuse me if I do not take seriously the scolding fit of which he gave an exhibition a moment ago, nor can I take seriously, either, the more solemn sentences of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron). What I complain of on this occasion is, that the hon. gentlemen have sprung upon the House a discussion upon a mere newspaper report which, at the proper time, the government will be able to show, is absolutely inaccurate, but which I do not discuss at the present time for a reason. I appeal to hon. members on both sides of the House that such a method of procedure is not only against the rules of the House, but against the well understood principle hitherto governing both sides, that no matter should be brought up for discussion except after notice is given to the other side. Not only does this rule apply to formal debates in the House which cannot be undertaken without notice put on the Order paper, but even to urgent matters that it may be necessary to discuss. I submit to hon. gentlemen opposite that it is only fair that notice should be given to the minister interested, and no business can be carried on unless this rule is observed. If the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) intended to bring this matter up to-day it was his duty to inform the Minister of Militia and Defence of his intention to speak upon it. But, instead of doing so, he has brought the matter suddenly before the House when neither the minister nor the government are in a position to discuss it. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that a matter of this kind, concerning which despatches have been exchanged with the Imperial authorities, can only be discussed by the government after preliminary communication is had with His Excellency the Governor General. In this case we have had no opportunity of making such communication. I have only to repeat to the hon. gentleman what I said a moment ago, that after due notice is given the government will be only too glad to bring down all the information they have. I say we had a right to rely upon the sense of fairness of the House in these matters, and to ask that notice should be given of an intention to discuss a subject like this, so that we may communicate with His Excellency and get permission to bring down all the information which it is permissible to bring down upon the subject. When this is done, the government will be ready to discuss the question, we have nothing to conceal; and the hon. member for Three Rivers will find that he has expended in vain a good deal of eloquence for which there was absolutely no occasion. We had the benefit of it all the same. But, we found that he would give himself undue pain in rounding the period with which he favoured the House a moment ago. I appeal to the sense of business and of fair-play of the House to give us an opportunity of placing the matter before the House before it is discussed, and especially discussed on a mere newspaper report.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was only asking for information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It was not the proper way.

Motion (Sir Charles Tupper) negatived.

MARINE HOSPITAL, VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders are called—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PRIOR. As soon as hon. gentlemen are finished I will go on. I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a statement I have seen in the Victoria papers in regard to the rumour that the Marine Hospital in Victoria is going to be taken by the Militia Department for barracks. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) whether there is any truth in the statement, as, by the British North America Act, the government is bound to maintain a marine hospital in Victoria.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It is true that the Department of Marine and Fisheries have consented to give the Marine Hospital as a temporary barracks to accommodate the 60 men of the Provisional Battalion for a month or two, until the time comes when they can go under canvas.

Mr. PRIOR. It is just temporary?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Just temporary.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). Mr. Speaker, I desire, as briefly as I can, to say a few words in connection with the subject that is now before us, and I propose to confine myself exclusively to the trade and financial aspects of the question. I know that it is customary to go over the four quarters of the earth for material, but I do not think it is desirable on an occasion like this. I will try and save, if possible, the 23 minutes which the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) wasted last Friday afternoon when he abused personally the hon. representative of North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I do not consider it is necessary for me at all, in the interest of the country to abuse anybody, and, therefore, I will immediately come to the consideration of this question. The first proposition that the hon. member for Haldimand advanced was on the question of failures. It was a gloomy subject, but, he opened the discussion of the problems that are before us by discussing the failures that took place during the hard times in the seventies, and he told us that the failures in Canada were one-tenth as great as those which took place in the United States. He showed us how much better off we were from 1893 to 1896 because the failures were only one-thirtieth as great in Canada as they were in the United States. This is exceedingly gratifying, because our friends on the other side of the House have been trying to make us believe that the last three years of their rule were famine years, and because they claimed that we need not take praise to ourselves for the prosperity that ensued. I am sorry to say that the Doctor made a mistake of 100 per cent, if Hansard represents him correctly. The failures in 1896 were $16,000,000, while the failures in 1899 were, on average of three years, $11,000,000, so that, on the question of failures, we need not reproach ourselves. Turning from the question of failures, the hon. gentleman adverted to the savings of the people. There is quite a contrast between the two subjects. Yet, even from the standpoint of the savings of the people we have nothing at all to reproach ourselves with. I noticed with what joy he alluded to the fact, that, during eighteen years, from 1878 to 1896, the deposits of the people in the banks increased by $118,000,000. I am willing to admit that $118,000,000 is a large sum of money, but it becomes small when we divide it by eighteen years, which gives us an actual average per year of $6,500,000. I am exceedingly glad that during the national policy period we were able to increase the deposits of the people by $6,500,000 a year. But, what would hon. gentlemen have said if the people had been able to do what they have done since 1896 and 1897? During the fiscal year 1896-7 they increased their deposits by $18,000,000, in 1898, by $26,000,000, and in 1899, by $31,000,000, or $75,000,000 in three years. The hon. gentleman would have done better by not alluding to failures or to savings, because, in respect to either one of these, the condition of the country is so much better than it was that it is apparent to every one. He found fault, however, with the present government in consequence of the condition in which the binder twine industry is, and in order to make a point he alluded to the fact that the Farmers' Binder Twine Co. of Brantford, was able to declare a bonus of $65,000. Because their capital stock was $65,000 they declared the ordinary dividend and in addition a bonus of 100 per cent. The hon. gentleman found fault with that and blamed it on the government. Although I have listened carefully to what has been said in this House, I do not see where the government is to blame because binder twine went up. He tried to connect the Kingston binder twine with the condition of the binder twine industry in this country, but I do not see any connection at all. Raw material will advance, and it did advance in spite of anything this government could do, and that was the actual condition. If the Farmers' Binder Twine Company had sold their raw material at the price they were offered for it, and had not converted it into binder twine at all they would have been able to have declared a bonus of not $65,000, but of $250,000. But, they did not do that. They brought this raw material into the country, they converted it into binder twine and sold it for, at least, $175,000 less as a manufactured product than they could have sold the raw material for. I do not think that our friends on the other side of the House should reproach the government for that; neither do I think they should, incidentally, cast a reflection on the management of the Binder Twine Company of Brantford. They have been eminently successful, they have been manufacturing the highest qualities of binder twine and selling it to the people at a slight advance on cost. They have had a tendency for years to keep down the price of binder twine, they have not gone into any combination, they have never joined any monopoly, and they have been a power in this country for some years back, keeping binder twine down to the low point it is at. When we take into consideration the fact that binder twine has free access to this country, that the duty upon it has been removed, there is nothing to prevent the Deerings, the McCormicks and those great binder twine producers on the other side, from coming into this country and selling their goods if they like. Yet, hon. gentlemen blame the government, when the government are in no way to blame. The government, surely, were not to blame because there was a war in the Philippines. If a combination exists, as it is charged, the government are powerless to deal with it because binder twine has been placed upon the free list. If a combination exists in respect to an article that is the subject of duty, we can remove the duty and put the article on the free list, but when you talk about free goods, what can the government do? At their institution down in Kingston where, I have been told, they turn out a low grade of twine, how could they influence combinations like the McCormicks, the Deerings and the great binder twine industries which have the power to combine? The reason why binder twine advanced in price was because the cost of the raw material advanced in price, on account of the war in the Philippines.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd), say that the raw material increased in price in the years 1896, 1897 and 1898?

Mr. HEYD. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite have been alluding to a particular year, when twine had increased to 14 and 15 cents a pound, and I know that the reason for that increase was that the price of raw material went up, because of the war in Manila.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman looks at the Auditor General's Report, he will find there was no increase whatever in the actual money paid out for the raw material, for the twine at Kingston Penitentiary in these years.

Mr. HEYD. I am not prepared to go into that question just now, but it strikes me that the binder twine produced in the Kingston Penitentiary was disposed of by the present government, before they had any reason to be aware that there was going to be a famine in binder twine.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague), found fault with the position of our securities in Great Britain, and he told us they had receded four or five points, and that, therefore, because of this depreciation our credit is not as good in the British markets as it was during the regime of the Conservative government. Well, there is no argument in that at all. If the hon. gentleman could have shown us that of all the 3 per cent securities similar to ours, Canadian securities, were the only ones that had shrunk 5 per cent, then he would have had a case. But, when he admits that all securities similar to the Canadian securities had depreciated to the same extent, then he has no argument at all. The facts of the case are these: The investors having large sums to invest at remunerative rates are not going to buy 3 per cents at a premium of 5 or 6 per cent, when they can get better investments for their money. The circumstances are entirely different now from what they were a few years ago. Large amounts of capital have accumulated, and capitalists finding more profitable employment for their money invested elsewhere, and so Canadian bonds have depreciated in common with all the bonds of all other countries in the English market. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague), alluded to the great manufacturing industries of the city of Brantford, for the purpose of trying to have a fling at the Minister of Customs. Well, Sir, I am very glad that the manufacturing industries of Brantford were prosperous, even during the reign of the Conservatives. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague), gave us a table, showing us the increase that had taken place in these industries up to 1896, and in order to enlighten him a little more on the subject, I will complete that table.

The number of employees in the factories he mentions, in 1896, was 2,816, and in 1898, they had increased to 3,381, an increase of 565 men. And, not only did the number of men increase, but the hours of labour increased also, because the factories were running from 12 to 15 hours a day, and for six days in the week, some of them were running night and day; the result being that they paid out for labour $1,150,000 and exported one-twelfth of the entire manufactured product that is exported out of this country. That, Sir, is the position of the Brantford industries, and one of the most successful among them I am glad to say—no matter what gentlemen on the other side may think—is that owned and controlled by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), which shares in that same prosperity which is now enjoyed by all manufacturing industries in Canada, where they are managed with intelligence, economy and honesty. The hon. member (Mr. Montague) went further, and he reproached the Minister of Customs with being rejected by the people of South Brant. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Customs was not rejected by the people of South Brant, because if these electors had had an opportunity of expressing their real wishes, Mr. Paterson would have been returned by hundreds of a majority. Our friends on the other side of the House know how the electors of South Brant were prevented from expressing their choice at the polls, and no man knows better than the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), who knew everything that was going on, and who lived in the next county to us. In that election, there were 222 spoiled and rejected ballots. There was enough difference between the spoiled and rejected ballots of 1896, and those in the election which took place some seven months afterwards, to have alone elected Mr. Paterson, quite independent of all the corruption that took place in the 1896 election. Why, there were 300 charges of corruption against the party who carried that seat at the general elections, and on the very first case that was put into court his opponent vacated his seat. When the hon. member (Mr. Montague) reproaches the Minister of Customs for having been defeated, he reminds me of the man who robs his neighbour's hen-roost, and then finds fault because all the chickens were not of pure breed.

Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) wandered off into finances, and that is a subject that a doctor should steer clear of, especially if he has not got his figures correct. This is the language used by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague):

The Minister of Customs says, though, that they are saving a great deal to the farmers. I do not think it was a joke. I think it was really intended to be taken in earnest, but there is not a farmer in Canada who will not believe that it is a species of humour of which the hon. gentleman has attempted to be guilty.

Further:

The Minister of Customs gives in parallel columns what the duty has been in 1896 and what it is in 1899. I will read the whole table showing the savings of the farmers according to his figures, and they give altogether $87,602, which he says he has saved to the farmers of the country.

Now, Sir, if any gentleman turns to his Hansard, page 3049, he will see that the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), deliberately omitted one-half of a column of figures given by the Minister of Customs, and which were lying open before him. The hon. member for Haldimand omitted Indian corn, nil under the present tariff, and under the old tariff, $549,000; binder twine, nil under the present tariff, and under the old tariff, $102,000; barbed fencing wire, nil under the present tariff, and under the old tariff, $126,000; galvanized iron or steel wire, gauge 9, 12 and 13, nil under the present tariff, and under the old tariff, $42,000; cream separators, nil under the present tariff, and under the old tariff, $45,000; totalling, with another small article, $867,000. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) deliberately omitted that, and said that the savings to the farmers were $87,600, when the actual savings to the farmers by the tariff reductions of the Liberal government, were $955,156 on the articles alluded to. Let me direct the attention of the House to another statement, that the hon. gentleman made in the line of figures. I may say that I verified these figures by reading the newspapers. I am aware that in the unrevised copies of our Hansard, errors may creep in, and I would not like to quote from the Hansard, until the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) had an opportunity of correcting the figures if there was any mistake. I do not want to do any man an injustice when I am quoting his argument or his figures. As far as I know, I am quoting them exactly as he used them, and I verified them from the Mail newspaper, which I assume would give his figures correctly, and they correspond with those in the Hansard. The hon. gentleman, quoting from the speech of the Minister of Customs, said:

We are doing splendidly; the settlers' effects coming in are increasing, and the household goods we are exporting are decreasing. Now, let us take 1899—the settlers' effects that came into Canada in that year were valued at $2,183,861.

I want to quote all these figures given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague). If they were my own, I would abbreviate them, at least by the hundred thousand, but my hon. friend from Haldimand quoted them whole, and I must do it because he did. He was wrong there, because the actual imports of settlers' effects, in 1899, were $2,805,956, or, in other words, he made an error of $622,095. The hon. gentleman told us that we were exporting, in 1899, household goods to the extent of $963,000 worth. He is wrong again there, because the exports in that year were $992,813, or, in other words, he made a mistake of over $28,000. He goes on to say: 'The difference in favour of Canada being $1,220,236.' He is wrong again. The difference in favour of Canada is $1,803,143. He made another mistake of $582,907. Every time the hon. gentleman quoted figures from the speech of the Minister of Customs, he was right; but every time he relied on his own knowledge of the question, he was wrong. Then he takes up another point:

Now, what about 1894, which the Minister of Trade and Commerce says was the worst year in our record. The settlers' effects which came in amounted to $2,665,893.

Mr. HEYD.

He is wrong again. They amounted to $3,322,499; or he made a mistake of $576,606. He goes on to say: 'The household goods we exported in that year were $940,709. He was wrong again. They were $964,000; so that he made an error there of $23,291. He says: 'The difference in favour of Canada being $1,725,184.' He was wrong again; the difference was $2,258,499. The hon. gentleman in that short statement made six errors; the first, $622,000; the second, $28,000; the third, $582,000; the fourth, $576,000; the fifth, $23,000; and the last, $533,000.

I think I have done my hon. friend all the justice which under the circumstances he is entitled to, and I will pass on to another phase of this subject. I want to lay before the House as briefly as I can the trade and financial position in which the country finds itself. In order to ascertain what the real expenditures of the present government and of the last government have been, so as to institute a comparison between them, I find that you have to adopt an entirely new theory. We are no longer to compare consolidated expenditure with consolidated expenditure, as we did in days gone by, because we are told that the total expenditure measures the extravagance of a government. I can see a motive in that, because the expenditures during the past three years have been greater than they were during the three years preceding; and therefore, by adding the expenditure on capital account to that on consolidated account, the expenditures of the present government are apparently greater than those of 1896. The hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), said:

It is all very well to manipulate surpluses and capital expenditure so as to enable you to make a large capital expenditure, and yet not increase the debt largely.

That is an impossibility. If the hon. gentleman means that it was possible to manipulate the consolidated expenditure and the capital expenditure, he would have been right; but you cannot manipulate a surplus and add it to the capital expenditure without increasing the debt, no matter how you try. He used the wrong word in speaking of surpluses; for he should have used the words consolidated expenditure and capital expenditure. He says:

The plain truth is told by the total expenditure, and it is this plain truth that this House requires and that the country needs.

Now, that is a new theory, and let us analyse it and see where it leads. He says:

The House will notice that the average total expenditure of the late Liberal-Conservative government from 1892 to 1896 was less by about $400,000 per year than from 1887 to 1891.

What, he asks, is the summation of the whole matter?

It is that the Liberal-Conservative government spent in totality $388,237 per year less from 1892 to 1896 than from 1887 to 1891, and that the present government has exceeded the Liberal-Conservative average expenditure from 1892 to 1896 as follows:

In 1897 by.....	$ 830,992
In 1898 by.....	3 192,518
In 1899 by.....	9,400,872

The hon. gentleman's reasoning is absolutely fallacious. In my opinion, his intent was to mislead the people. If he really believed that you can come to a correct conclusion by comparing the entire expenditure on consolidated and capital account, why did he not go back a little further? Why did he select the years from 1886 to 1892? He had only to select the year 1884 when the combined consolidated and capital expenditure amounted to $57,860,000, or $15,000,000 more than it was ten years afterwards. In 1885 it was $49,163,000. In 1886 it was $61,837,000. In those three years the average was $56,000,000 a year, while during the last three years before hon. gentlemen opposite left office it was only $42,000,000 a year, a difference of $14,000,000. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that they were extravagant in those years when their combined consolidated and capital expenditure exceeded the average of their last three years by $14,000,000 a year? No. And during that time they added $67,000,000 to the national debt. That is easily accounted for. They were building the Canadian Pacific Railway at that time, and the expenditure on capital account was greater by $20,000,000 a year than it has been in some later years. To compare a year in which you have spent $20,000,000 on railways with a year in which you have spent nothing is in my opinion the most absurd way to compare the expenditure of one year with that of another. In 1896, the last year in which hon. gentlemen opposite held office, they spent $44,000,000 on capital and on consolidated account, whereas ten years before, when the country was much smaller, they spent $61,800,000, a greater sum by nearly $18,000,000. The absurdity of the contention of the ex-Minister of Finance could not be better illustrated than by this. Suppose the present government came to the conclusion that in the interest of the country it was necessary to buy the Canadian Pacific Railway. I see that that railway is capitalized at $218,000,000. Suppose the government had bought the railway last year, and added that sum to the $40,000,000 spent in the regular way; their entire expenditure would have been $258,000,000. And yet according to the theory that has been advanced by the ex-Minister of Finance, he would say: 'See how much more economical we are than this government; we spent only $42,000,000 in the year 1896, whereas the new government has spent $258,000,000.' The absurdity of the hon. gentleman's contention is apparent in every line, and his whole motive in my opinion was to deceive the people and to lead them to believe that because we spent more on capital account than they did, we must necessarily be more extravagant.

Now, let me direct your attention to the actual condition of the financial affairs of our country, as I understand it, and I have boiled down these figures into the briefest possible compass, in the hope that those who have not the opportunity of working out these matters from the blue-books for themselves can see the actual condition of the country at a glance, and be both interested and instructed. I believe that the only way to arrive at the truth is to compare things that are alike. There is no use of comparing a turnip to a strawberry, nor a gallon of coal oil to a bottle of whisky; there is wanting the essence for a comparison. There is no use of comparing things which are utterly dissimilar. If you want to get at the truth, you must compare things which are alike. Therefore, I will allude to the expenditure on consolidated account, or the running expenditure of the late government. For the three years ending with 1896, that expenditure amounted to $112,666,000, or an average of $37,555,000 a year. The expenditure by the present government for the three years ending June last was $119,085,000, being an average of $39,695,000, or an average increase over the three years of our predecessors of $2,140,000. That is a plain and truthful statement, and the people have the right to ask how it is we exceeded the expenditure of the late government by this amount. We reply, in the first place, that we have had to meet obligations which our hon. friends opposite had not to meet. We have had to pay $253,000 per year additional interest, and that we could not help. Certain public works had to be constructed and the money borrowed for that purpose, and as the inevitable consequence, we had to pay $353,000 more in interest than our predecessors had to pay in 1896. We also had to pay into the sinking fund $427,000 per year more than our predecessors had to pay in 1896. What was the reason of this? Because our bonds, which were about to mature, had to be taken up and the credit of this country kept at the high standard it has enjoyed for many years. This is an increase of expenditure which was entirely beyond the control of the government. There is another expenditure of considerable magnitude which we had to make, and that is, the expenditure on the collection of revenue on our railways. Has the country benefited by that expenditure? Well, the hon. Minister of Railways said that that extra expenditure of $542,000 per year enabled him to put into the treasury $850,000 more in the shape of earnings, and that, it seems to me, is perfect justification for that increase. Then, there was the expenditure in the Yukon amounting to $1,674,000, an entirely new item. These four items altogether put up a total of $2,996,000, or $800,000 more than the annual increase in our expenditure. But the increase in the receipts from the Yukon alone amounted to $1,753,376 last year, and the increase in railway and canal earnings amounted to $850,000.

Let us approach another aspect of the question. We can justify the increased expenditure because we have assumed other obligations, but the question presents itself: Have we received an adequate return? Let me call your attention to the revenues for the three years, from 1893 to 1896. They amounted to $106,900,000, or $35,633,000 a year. During the following three years they amounted to $125,125,000, or $41,708,000 a year, showing an increase of $6,075,000 per year, or in the three years, an increase of $18,225,000. So that, admitting that our average expenditure had increased by $2,140,000 a year, we had still to the good $3,935,000 in the public treasury. I should think that such a financial result on a farm or a mercantile establishment would be regarded as exceedingly satisfactory by the stockholders in the concern. We expended in that period also, on capital account, $3,450,000 more than did our hon. friends opposite, and what is the result? The increase of our national debt during the last three years of our hon. friends opposite amounted to $16,816,000, while ours amounted to only $7,766,000, although we spent $3,450,000 more on capital account. Thus, we spent $3,450,000 more on capital account and added $9,000,000 less to our debt. But, that is not all. While our hon. friends opposite could only show a deficit of $5,700,000 in their last three years of administration, we can point in our three years administration to a surplus of $6,052,000, and the final result is that, while we spent $3,450,000 more on capital account, we added $9,000,000 less to the debt.

But our hon. friends opposite say that was easy to do, that we did it by simply increasing the burden of taxation. I deny that statement in toto. I say that this government did not increase the taxation. Although the revenue was some millions higher, that was not due to increase in taxation. I am willing to admit that in connection with the increased excise on spirits, the government did increase the burdens of the people, and whether that was justifiable or not I will leave it to the people interested in the liquor problem. I fancy myself that the great temperance classes of this country would be glad to have any obstruction put in the way of liquor drinking, and the obstruction calculated to do most good is to increase the price. Make the price high enough, and you can prevent the consumption of spirituous liquor.

The next charge was that we had raised the tobacco tax. I am not prepared to speak with the authority of knowledge, but I desire to uphold the opinion of men whose opinion is worth having, and I propose to give a quotation from the Canadian Cigar and Tobacco Journal, devoted to the interests of manufacturers and dealers in cigars, cigarettes and tobacco, and smokers' supplies. That journal says:

Notwithstanding the abuse which this journal, and with it nine-tenths of the trade, heaped on the tobacco tariff when revised by the present administration in 1897, and the statements then made that it was absurd to presume that Canadian tobacco could ever become a factor in the trade, the situation to-day is such that we are compelled in simple justice, and by force of facts, to admit the wisdom of the administration in the measure then adopted. Not only have our farmers grown tobacco quite the equal of that used for plug smoking and chewing by the foreign leaf factories; not only was upwards of $600,000 left in the hands of Canadian farmers last year that once went to American leaf markets, but the great masses of the people have been given just 50 per cent more tobacco of equal quality for the same money than under the old tariff. Beyond this, a practically new industry has sprung into life; twenty-five new factories are now turning out Canadian tobacco products, and this influx of capital is ample evidence of the importance and wisdom of the measure.

In view of these admissions, it is not right to find fault with the action of the government in increasing the duty on tobacco.

But let us go a little further. There is no doubt that $4,350,000 has been raised, for our revenue has grown that much bigger. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the government placed that increased burden on the backs of the people. I deny the statement altogether. There are three ways the government might have treated this financial problem when they assumed office. They might have increased the tariff. If they had done so, this $4,350,000 of increased revenue might justly have been charged as an increased burden laid on the backs of the people. But they did not do that. Everybody knows that they did not do it. Or, they might have left the tariff alone and neither reduced or increased the burdens of the people. In that case, they could have said: We did not do anything; we simply carried on affairs along the lines of your tariff; we did not raise a hand to either increase or reduce the burdens of the people. In that case hon. gentlemen opposite would have been glad to say that it was evidence of the elasticity of the national policy, that it was because of the successful operation of that policy that this revenue had increased by over $4,000,000. But the government was not even content to let it alone; they actually lowered the duties so that, had the tariff of 1896 been applied to the importation of 1899, there would have been a positive increase of $3,000,000. Now, by turning to Hansard, page 2658, hon. gentlemen will see that the tariff of 1896 was 19.18 per cent, while that of 1899 was 17.17 per cent. There is a reduction of 10 per cent in the actual duties levied. Now, they acknowledge that if the tariff had not been revised in 1899, a sum of $3,000,000 more would have been taken. I am aware for the ordinary mind—I do not allude to the hon. gentlemen in this House, but to ordinary people—it is hard to grasp a great financial problem; and I thought, therefore, it would be interesting for some people who do not conduct their affairs in millions of dollars to have this matter brought down to the every-day transactions that take place in a man's own household. So, these principles that we talk of in millions, I apply to the way the ordinary man manages his own affairs. It may be said that my application of the principle is childish, but you have to present figures in a childish way to make them comprehensible to all classes. Suppose that a father of a family in 1896 buys in a month 46 loaves of bread at 6 cents each—he will spend $2.76. He might reasonably find fault if the price was increased to 7 cents. But he learns that another baker will sell bread at 5½ cents a loaf, and so to this baker he transfers his custom. In 1889 he finds that his bread bill is $3.52 when it was, in 1896, $2.76. He goes to the baker and says: You told me that I would save money if I dealt with you, and here I find my bill is 76 cents higher than when I dealt with the former baker. But the baker would say: I am selling you bread at half a cent lower than you formerly paid; but, my dear fellow, you are using 64 loaves where you used 46 in 1896. Don't you see that your children are better fed, better clothed, that they look healthier than they did before? Surely you do not suppose that you can eat in a month 64 loaves where formerly you ate 46 and still pay no more than you paid in 1896, I have reduced your bread by 10 per cent, and if you will content yourself with what you were compelled to content yourself three years ago, you can effect a saving in a month of 23 cents. But the people are not willing to accept only 46 loaves of bread a month when their children want 64. They were compelled to do without many things three years ago, but to-day, the people of Canada are using millions more of the luxuries and necessities of life than they did; and, because they like to do it they willingly gave this increased revenue to the country. But the government have done exactly what they said they would do. They said: We will reduce tariff rates, we will reduce the restrictions upon trade, and by encouraging trade in this way they have secured increased revenue. That is how it comes that the revenue has been increased.

I have in my hands a table that has been prepared at my request. Table 19, page 124 of the Trade and Navigation Returns is a statement showing the value of imports entered for consumption in Canada from the British Empire and foreign countries for the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1899. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that that is divided into only two columns, giving the British Empire one side and foreign countries on the other side. There are practically only two countries with which the Canadian people trade, namely, Great Britain and the United States. Canada's dealing with other portions of the British possessions are so small as to be hardly worth mentioning, and the same is true of our dealing with foreign countries, outside of the United States. But, in order to ascertain what effect our free trade was having upon the condition of our people, I asked that the columns should be divided once more, so that we might have one column for Great Britain and one for British possessions outside; and, for foreign countries, one column for the United States and one for other foreign countries. I wanted to see whether the admission of free goods from the United States into Canada was actually injuring the people of Canada as some people say it does. For instance, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) says that since this government have come into power they have given the United States a preference in many things, they have given the United States free corn for nothing, they have given them free binder twine for nothing, they have given them free barbed wire for nothing, and they have given them a cut on iron for nothing. He talks as if things of that kind were injurious to the country. Let me quote to you some words from a man who knows what he is talking about:

It is a self-evident fact that all commerce between nations must be mutually advantageous, or it could not exist for a single decade. Hence it is quite immaterial whether our dealings with this or that country consist more of imports or of exports, or whether the balance of trade be for or against us. If our trade with any country be increasing, it is prosperous, and the ratio of increase will be the ratio of prosperity.

These words I read from 'Forty Years of British Trade,' by Mr. Michael G. Mulhall, one of the greatest statisticians in the world to-day, a man who speaks authoritatively upon trade and financial subjects. To show that in increasing the number of items on our free trade list is the reverse of prejudicial to the interests of the people of this country, that it is not specially beneficial to the people of the United States and that it in no way interferes with the prosperity of Great Britain, let me quote a few figures from this table.

Does any gentleman mean to say that the government, by admitting anthracite coal free into this country has injured the people of Canada? Would it benefit them to put on 50 cents a ton? A reason might be urged why we should put it on soft coal, because we produce soft coal in this country, and we do not wish to injure those who are engaged in that trade. But on hard coal there is absolutely no reason why the people of Canada should pay 50 cents or $1 a ton more than it is worth. That would be transferring from the pockets of the mechanic or the consumer of coal in this country, 50 cents or $1 into the pockets of the government. In buying our coal from the United States we have not conferred any favour upon them at all; they could live if we did not buy their coal. The quantity we buy from them is infinitesimal compared with the total quantity consumed there. But we have no recourse, we must get it there, and getting it there free of duty, it is certainly advantageous to the people. I want to quote a few more figures from this book, and I would ask the consent of the House to hand them in to be recorded without reading them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no, read.

Mr. HEYD. I will read them if you like, but I did not wish to waste the time of the House. I thought if they were recorded they would give the people who are interested in the question an opportunity of getting their knowledge collected for them without being compelled to wade through 600 or 700 pages of the blue-book:

Now, in the case of animals and their produce, to my mind the cause of this tremendous discrepancy between Great Britain and the United States arises from the fact that the conditions existing in the two countries are entirely different. Great Britain we might liken to a huge manufacturing establishment and a large departmental store. Great Britain is a trading and manufacturing people. The United States we might liken to a large manufacturing establishment and a producer of raw material. It is simply because we can buy our raw material at the place of growth, without the intervention of middlemen, that we can buy so many products of the United States cheaper than we can buy them anywhere else in the world, no matter whether you put on a duty or take it off. That discrepancy is more marked when we come to agricultural products. From Great Britain we imported, as will be seen by the above table, $592,000, of which $545,044 was undressed hemp. From the United States we got, of green fruits, $557,499; of Indian corn, $8,966,890, of which nearly $5,500,000 were re-exported, and on which a certain profit was made by our dealers.

Mr. CLANCY. What does the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) say to that statement?

Mr. HEYD. He said the same thing. Of seeds, our importation from the United States was $1,071,685; of goods for excise purposes, $1,878,733. From Great Britain our imports, exclusive of undressed hemp, amount to about $48,000. You see there is no competition in these articles with Great Britain, we do not injure Great Britain in the least by allowing these free goods to come in from the United States. It does not hurt us to allow Indian corn to come in. That is a question for the farmers to discuss. For myself I only know that if we can buy $6,000,000 from the United States and sell it to somebody else and make a profit, it cannot hurt us much. Now I pass on to manufactured and partially manufactured goods. It is in these lines where competition begins, it is only in these lines where Great Britain becomes a competitor with the United States. I think a careful analysis of these figures will convince any one who desires information that it is to our interest to do exactly what we are doing. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to direct your attention briefly to our trade returns; and I take for that purpose the goods entered for consumption and goods exported the produce of Canada:

1894.....	$113,093,983	1897.....	$111,294,000
1895.....	105,252,516	1898.....	130,698,000
1896.....	110,587,480	1899.....	154,051,000
	<hr/>		<hr/>
	$328,933,658		$396,043,000
	<hr/>		<hr/>
Average..	$109,644,658	Average..	$132,014,000
Difference in three years, $67,000,000.

Mr. HEYD.

Now I am willing to admit that the contention that was made by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), is correct that the corn that comes into this country and is re-exported should not be added in this column. I believe that our trade should stand upon its own basis, and when we speak of goods entered for consumption it should mean goods that are consumed by the people of Canada. I realize that if we are to buy $100,000,000 worth of corn this year and enter it for consumption, and send $100,000,000 worth out again we would apparently have improved the trade conditions of the country by $100,000,000; while as a matter of fact it would not be true. But deducting the $11,000,000 that have been the exports of the country for the past two years, we are still some $58,000,000 better off than we were three years ago. Now, in the question of exports the produce of Canada, this corn is not included although it goes out of the country as the produce of some other country. In 1894 our exports, the produce of Canada, were as follows:

1894.....	$104,000,000
1895.....	103,000,000
1896.....	109,000,000
1897.....	123,599,000
1898.....	145,594,000

Or, in the last three years a total of $405,000,000, an increase of $88,500,000 over the previous three years. I am exceedingly gratified to say in respect to the goods entered for consumption in the first eight months of the present year that the imports amounted to $115,000,000 being $5,000,000 more than the average of the three years up to 1896, while our exports for the first eight months of the present year amounted to $110,058,000 being $4,338,000 greater than the average yearly imports for the last three years. The exports of foreign goods for the three years ending 1896 amounted to $30,000,000, while for the year 1899 they amounted to $52,982,000, or an increase of $22,900,000. For the first seven months of the present year our exports amounted to $16,829,000 being $6,800,000 more than the exports averaged during the last three years. These are the trade problems and I have presented them in such a way that those outside of the House, who are anxious to familiarize themselves with the facts, will have an opportunity of doing so. I shall not have anything more to say on that particular aspect of the question, but, I would like to allude to a new interpretation we had placed before us a few days ago. We have always thought, when we increased our trade that we really had increased our trade. But, I find that we have not done that owing to a new system which has been introduced by the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster). I am not going to weary the House with an explanation of this system, but I am going to read something from the speech of the hon. gentleman which will prove exceedingly interesting. In order to remove the favourable impression which has been created by this tremendous development of trade which has taken place in the last three years, the hon. gentleman introduces what he calls Bradstreet trade barometer by which he seeks to convince us that this increase of trade has not taken place and that we are the victims of some deception. He says:

As every financier knows, there is kept up in the old country and in the United States, and to a certain extent in this country, what is known as a barometer of prices from year to year. There is none better on this continent than that kept by Bradstreet. . . . In 1890 the index price number was 105,996. In 1895 it had gone down to 71,672, or a drop of 47 per cent. What does that mean? It means that the average value of articles in 1895, taking all classes and kinds, was 47 per cent lower than in 1890.

He said, if the prices that ruled in 1890 were applied to the trade of 1895, the trade of 1895 would be increased by 47 per cent, or $95,645,000, but, fortunately, for the hon. ex-Minister of Finance he made a terrible mistake. He said it was 47 per cent instead of which it is only 32 per cent, and then he goes on and applies this 47 per cent to the trade of the country. He continues:

Suppose we work that out. Taking the exports and imports in 1895, their valuation in Canada was $203,504,332. We now want to find what the value of that 1895 trade would have been according to the prices of 1890. We add 47 per cent, which is $95,645,000, and you have $299,150,000 as the trade of 1895, and that would have been its value had it kept the level of prices attained in 1900.

In this the hon. gentleman made a mistake of 15 per cent. By taking 47 per cent instead of 32 per cent he makes a mistake of $30,000,000 in his ultimate result. Some people would think that this was a mistake of considerable magnitude, but, what is $30,000,000 when you consider how hon. gentlemen talk about things in this House. He must have known that this would be found out, he must have seen that somebody would discover an error of such magnitude. Some people might be under the impression that this was done intentionally, but I do not think it was, because, I see where the hon. gentleman made his mistake. He made a mistake of 15 per cent, and on the ultimate result he made a mistake of $30,000,000. Besides, he made a mistake in his application of 17 per cent which he gives as the difference in values between 1899 and 1896. He applies it to the imports of 1895 which were $203,000,000, and increased them to $238,000,000 instead of which he should have applied it on the trade of 1899, amounting to $292,000,000, and reduced that by 17 per cent which makes $50,000,000 of a difference. He should have seen that he was wrong because all he had to do was to turn over to the tonnage on the ocean to have found it out. With all these magnificent evidences of trade values he brought the increased trade down to $30,000,000 or 14 per cent while the actual increase was $84,000,000. In 1895 our ocean tonnage amounted to 19,000,000 tons, and in 1889, it amounted to 25,420,000 tons, or an increase in these four years, of 6,319,000 tons, or 33 per cent. He might have also satisfied himself by turning over to the railway tonnage of the country. The railway tonnage, in 1895, was 21,870,000 tons, and in 1899 it was 31,211,000 tons, or an increase of 9,659,000 tons, or 45 per cent. Although he can try to make himself believe that we are only dealing in values he cannot make the managers of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway believe, that, when they declared their magnificent dividends, it was only values that they were carrying. Any one may see, if he looks through the country, that it is not values that is causing the smoke to ascend from the chimneys of the workshops, it is not values that these trains are carrying from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is goods they are carrying; it is volumes they are carrying, and it is because the people have volumes that they are industrious and contented to-day. I may say that it is easy to understand the difficulty that some people would have in wading through Bradstreet's trade barometer, but, a man with the little arithmetical knowledge he may have attained in attending school for a year or two will be able to say: I know that this gentleman must be wrong. The other day an hon. gentleman ventured to quote from the Bible, and he was venturesome enough to say that if it was a friend that questioned the blind man who said: 'One thing I know; whereas I was blind now I see.' It was a Pharisee that did that, and I beg to assure my hon. friend that a great many people and a great many farmers, when they see this involved calculation of the hon. gentleman will say: Whereas I was out of work in 1896 now I have work, whereas I had no money in 1896, I have money, whereas, my land had no value in 1896, now, it has value and is in demand, whereas the workshops were idle in 1896, now, they are deluged with orders, whereas there was poverty in 1896, now there is plenty, whereas I was hungry in 1896, now I am fed.

Mr. BERGERON. What about coal oil?

Mr. HEYD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) asks me what about coal oil. Any man who is getting 25 per cent more wages than he did in 1896 does not care if he has to pay a cent a gallon more for his coal oil. I have just referred to this point to show how easy it is to make mistakes, and I may add that others have been made of a similar character. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce reproached the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) with making mistakes and the hon. ex-Minister of Finance apologized in this House, but, unfortunately, his apology did not go out of the House. His utterances go into the newspapers and into thousands of houses where they cannot be contradicted. I have referred to these exaggerations on the part of the hon. gentleman in the hope of counteracting the effect of the libels that have been sent broadcast through the country. Now, Sir, I regard this preferential tariff as the most important question that has been presented to parliament for many years, and I wish to discuss it briefly. Let me call your attention to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) classed as luxuries in his speech in this House, in which he said, that the preferential tariff favoured the importation of luxuries. Let me draw attention to what he considers luxuries so that hon. gentlemen in this House may have an idea of the kind of argument he indulges in. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) said :

I do not propose to say much more with reference to this question of preference. It is evident that the preference of 12½ per cent did not have much effect. It is equally evident from the statistics, that the preference of 25 per cent did not have very much more stimulating effect. What is one of the first effects of this cut of 33½ per cent, made hastily, without discrimination as to articles. It is that it places articles of luxury about the lowest on the list of dutiable goods coming into this country. If the 33½ per cent cut is effective it lets jewellery in at 20 per cent. It lets manufactures of gold and silver used by rich people in at 20 per cent; it lets in silks, which are used by the wealthy, at 23½ per cent; it lets in laces at 23½ per cent; it lets in pianos at 20 per cent; it lets in porcelain goods at 20 per cent; it lets ribbons in at 23½ per cent; it lets shawls and rugs in at 20 per cent; it lets in watches at 16½ per cent; it admits high class worsted goods at 23½ per cent; velvets at 20 per cent; Brussels carpets at 23½ per cent; cottons, gray and white, at 16½ per cent, and coloured cottons at 23½ per cent.

It is an acknowledged principle in the levying of tariff rates in every country that what we call the luxuries of life, which can be afforded by the rich and not much wanted by the poorer classes of people, shall pay a higher percentage of duty. Under this cut, if it be effective, these articles will be amongst those which pay the least duty, and our farmers and artisans will not derive any benefit compared with that derived by the richer classes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, assuming that what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) said, was true, and that these articles were really luxuries, was it worth while to try to create the prejudice in the minds of the farmers, the artisans, and the workingmen of this country, that the government were trying to favour the rich? Let us see what foundation he had for that statement, and in inquiring into that, we will discover whether his definition of an article of luxury is right or wrong. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), told us that 'cottons, gray and white will be reduced to 16½ per cent.' Does any man in this House believe that common gray and white and coloured cottons, which are used in every household in the land, are articles of luxury? Does it strike any one here, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), was wise in his selection, when he included cottons among the luxuries, which are used only by the rich? Well, Sir, we imported of cottons $3,891,000 worth under the preferential clause last year, and the tariff being reduced by one-ninth, on these, under the preference, it means that $100,000 will be saved to the people of this country in reduced duties on cottons, by the preferential rate. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) then quoted worsteds as luxuries, and of these and other woollen goods we imported to the extent of $7,686,431. Now, are worsteds and woollens regarded as luxuries? I do not think so. I have been throughout the length and breadth of this country, and everywhere I see the people clothed in comfortable woollen garments. Then, they are not luxuries. I do not myself know how the people are dressed in the part of the Dominion from which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), comes, but I can assure him that in Ontario, I have not yet met a man clothed in camel's hair, with a leathern girdle around his waist. We imported of silk, $800,000—I admit silk is a luxury—and the present duty is 23½, the reduction under the preferential tariff, amounting to $20,000. Let us ask ourselves the question: How it could be possible that a gentleman who has been Finance Minister of this country, should have made such a selection of luxuries as he did? We will go on now to what might be described as genuine luxuries. Admitting that porcelain is an article of luxury, our importations last year, under the preferential tariff, amounted to $58,000, and the preferential reduction in the tariff of that item, would be $1,450. Of jewellery, worn by the rich, as he says, we imported $30,000, and the reduction being 2½ per cent, the saving to the rich would be $750. Of gold and silver, we imported $20,000 (it is still 20 per cent duty), and the saving to the rich on that head, would be $500. Of ribbons, we imported $156,000 worth. Now, I am not aware that the rich and the luxury-loving classes are the people that particularly use ribbons. I have noticed in passing through my own native city and the city of Ottawa, how the ladies who are not luxurious, try and ornament themselves and make themselves still more attractive by a discreet use of ribbons. So far as I can see anything, I notice that ostrich plumes, and birds of Paradise are the luxuries of the rich, but for the servant girl and shop girl, and the daughter of the artisan and mechanic, they must content themselves with ribbons, and, therefore, in selecting ribbons as an article of luxury, used by the rich and not the poor, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) made a terrible mistake. Let us see the saving on a few more luxuries under the preferential rate: Of carriage rugs, we imported $26,000, saved by the reduction, $650. Of rugs and mats, we imported $22,000 worth, and by the preferential rate, there was saved $550. Of velvet plush, we imported $183,000 worth, and by the preferential tariff, there was saved $4,575. Of silks, we imported $193,000, saving by the preferential rate, $4,825. Of pianos—pianos, that is where the ex-Minister of Finance strikes. He is amongst that class, of whom the poet said:

The man that hath not music in himself,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), therefore, wants to prevent pianos from coming into this country, and suppose he were successful what would be the result? Why we imported last year $1,764 worth of pianos, so that there would be a saving on that score of $44 to the rich and luxury-loving classes of this country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), strikes at watches. Like Old Father Time, he knew that time was coming, and so he closes up with the watch, and he tells us that watches are the exclusive property of the rich. I suppose the farmer is governed by the blast of the tin bugle, and that the artisan in the city is called to dinner by the sound of the whistle, and so, according to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), there is only the rich and luxury-loving classes that use watches. Well, last year we imported of watches, $1,792 worth, and the preferential tariff would affect that just to the amount of $45 to the benefit of the rich. But, it is in silk shawls that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), excels himself. Ordinary shawls are included with the woollen luxuries of the hon. gentleman, and so are silk shawls, but they come in under a separate item in the tariff. Of silk shawls we imported to the value of $551 worth, upon which the saving under the preferential tariff, would be $19 to the rich and luxury-loving classes of this country. On all these items, I have quoted, from porcelain down to silk shawls, the saving to the rich, would amount when totalled up, to $17,939, and, I think, it was hardly worth while, in view of that, for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), to make a 15-minutes speech, to try and convince the artisans and farmers of this country, that the rich and luxury-loving classes were being favourably dealt with, by the government of Canada. Let us simmer down this $17,939, and see what it amounts to. Why, it amounts to exactly three-tenths of 1 cent to each individual in Canada, and it amounts exactly to one-two hundred-and-seventieths of 1 per cent of the total revenue of this country. But, it may be said that by reducing the tariff it will encourage the importation of these things. Well, suppose it does. Suppose it doubles the importation, it will give you $35,857 worth, and suppose it trebles it, which I think is not very likely, it will amount to $53,817 worth, or 1 cent per head of the population of Canada, or one-ninetieth of 1 per cent of the entire revenue of this country. That is all there is involved in these articles that are called luxuries. I do not think our friend was very wise in selecting them. Let me give you some reasons how I believe that this preference will work. In the first place, it is a revenue-producer; in the second place, it is a price producer. I will give you an example to show exactly how the thing works. I will address myself to the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). He is a dry goods man, and can grasp exactly what I mean. Suppose a merchant buys from Great Britain $1,000 worth of goods, and pays 20 per cent duty on them; that is $200, which make them cost $1,200 by the time they lie on his counter. He buys $1,000 worth of goods from the United States or from any other country in the world to which the preference does not apply; he pays 30 per cent duty on them, amounting to $300, which brings the cost of the goods to $1,300 by the time they lie on his counter. Then he puts on his 20 per cent profit, which on the British goods amounts to $240, making them cost to the consumer $1,440. His 20 per cent profit on the United States goods amounts to $260, making them cost to the consumer $1,560, or a difference of $120 between the $1,000 worth of goods from the United States and the $1,000 worth from Great Britain. Let us suppose that instead of buying $1,000 worth of goods, a man buys a coat. He buys one in England at $10 and one in the United States at $10. The 20 per cent duty on the English coat makes it cost $12, and the 30 per cent duty on the American coat makes it cost $13. Twenty per cent profit makes the English coat cost $14.40 to the consumer and makes the American coat cost $15.60 to the consumer—both coats alike in every respect. What are the people going to do? They will take the British goods. A man goes into a store, and says: 'What do you ask for that coat?' '$14.40.' 'What do you ask for that one?' '$15.60.' 'I don't see any difference between them,' he says. 'There is none,' says the merchant, 'except that the $14.40 one is English and the $15.60 one is American.' 'Well, I will take the English coat; it is good enough for me.' The American manufacturer of the coat comes along and says: 'Why are you not selling my coat?' 'It is too dear,' the merchant tells him, and he goes through the whole formula, and shows him that it costs more than the English coat before it reaches the buyer. Then the American says: 'I guess I will have to cut down my price; how much must I reduce it in order to enable you to sell it as cheaply as the English coat?' 'You will have to sell it at $9.23.' The result will be that the government will get 77 cents more revenue on the American coat than on the English coat, while the customer gets it at the same price.

Mr. BERGERON. How does my hon. friend explain that the imports from the United States have increased, while the imports from Great Britain have diminished?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where does the hon. gentleman get his information when he says that the imports from Great Britain have diminished?

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman deny that American imports have increased?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the question. The hon. gentleman said the imports from Great Britain had diminished.

Mr. BERGERON. I said the imports from Great Britain had decreased a great deal in proportion to American imports.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have not decreased at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, the story of my hon. friend does not amount to anything.

Mr. HEYD. I do not wish to get involved in any personal discussion; I have more important work on hand. Now, there is no doubt that some of the manufacturers, those engaged in the woollen and the spinning industries particularly, will come in contact with the reduced cost of goods. They will not be able to sell $1,000 worth of goods at $1,300 any longer. They will have to sell them for $1,200 to meet the English manufacturer. To that extent they are going to suffer from this competition, and I sympathize with them. I say that the increase in the preference can only be justified in so far as it reduces the price of goods to the consumer. In the first preference we did everything that was necessary to show our good-will to Great Britain. The additional one is to assist the government in carrying out the pledge they made that they would reduce the cost of the necessaries of life in this country. The Canadian manufacturer is in this position: 'It is true, my profits will be reduced one-ninth; I do not like that; but one thing I do like is the finality of this thing. I would rather submit to a reduction of one-ninth in my profits and know what is to come in the future than to have the sword of Mahomet hanging over me.' Now, I want to direct the attention of men engaged in business, especially in the woollen and spinning industries, to the following words of the Minister of Finance:

I submit that as things are to-day in Canada, that is a fair revenue tariff, and I do not think that the advocates of tariff reduction would ask us to go on that class of articles below the rates we have now named; and inasmuch as tariff stability is very desirable, and inasmuch as confidence in business is the secret, to a large extent, of prosperity, I want to say to all concerned that I regard that rate of 23½ per cent as a fair and reasonable tariff, with which, I think, the country will be satisfied, and I do not anticipate a reduction on that class of articles, for a reasonable time in the future.

The manufacturers of this country know that when the Minister of Finance says that, he speaks for the government, and he means what he says. If they are dissatisfied, they have a remedy provided by our hon. friends on the other side of the House. These hon. gentlemen do not tell them that if they obtain control of the government benches they will rescind that preference. On the contrary, they say it is an accomplished fact, and it is going to remain on the statute-book. There is no use of turning out this government to put them in, so far as the preference is concerned, because it is going to remain. But they have a new remedy, and this is the remedy, as moved by the ex-Minister of Finance:

That this House is of the opinion that a system of mutual trade preference between Great Britain and Ireland and the colonies would greatly stimulate increased production in the commerce between these countries, and would, therefore, promote and maintain the unity of the empire, and that nothing which falls short of the complete realization of such a policy should be considered as final or satisfactory.

That reads beautifully because of its indefiniteness. Why not round it off by adding: 'And that the said policy should provide for the equal distribution of the benefits resulting to all classes of the community.' Let us analyse this resolution, and see if we can extract any meaning out of it. I venture to say that there are no two gentlemen on either side of this House who, if asked to state what this resolution means, would agree. We are all in a position to put our own construction upon it, and I am prepared to give you mine. Let us read it carefully:

That this House is of the opinion that a system of mutual trade preference between Great Britain and Ireland and the colonies would greatly stimulate increased production in—

I do not suppose there is in this House to-day a man who knows what these words mean: 'greatly stimulate increased production in.' If it had said: 'greatly stimulate production,' I could understand it. If they had said: 'would greatly increase the trade of the country,' or 'greatly stimulate production,' I could understand that, but when they talk of 'greatly stimulating increased production,' that is too much for me and I do not profess to be much of a grammarian. I defy any man to get any sense out of it, but commenting on this resolution, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) said :

We believe that it will be the essence of fairness, that it would contribute to the good of this country and Great Britain herself, that it would be an immense binding power the empire through, if we could have a mutual preference, giving benefits to both parties, and creating a current in trade matters between Great Britain and all her colonies. No one will dispute that.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I dispute it. I do not pose as a great authority, but I dispute that statement in toto, and I am not alone in the opinion I express. I say it would be most disastrous, not only to this country but Great Britain as well. A preference by Great Britain in favour of her self-governing colonies on her imports from them of food products, amounting to $200,000,000, would involve placing a duty on her imports of foreign food stuffs, amounting to $941,000,000. A duty of 5 per cent on these would mean a tax of $47,500,000 on the people of Great Britain.

As regards the effect upon Canada, according to Mr. Chamberlain, the only thing that would induce Great Britain even to consider the question would be free trade among all portions of the empire. This would destroy our manufacturing industries with which British products come into competition and would jeopardize Britain's export trade to foreign countries, amounting to $991,000,000. Here are two propositions that I believe I can prove to any man who is open to conviction. It may be said that in using the phrase 'free trade between all parts of the empire,' I am drawing on my imagination, but I can assure you, Sir, such is not the case. Let me quote from the speeches of a man who holds this question in the hollow of his hand, and whose opposition would make it a moral impossibility. I have heard argument after argument by hon. gentlemen opposite to prove that we had refused British preference, but I do not think it worth while to take notice of them. Personally, I would refuse such a preference, because it would cost us too much. It would destroy our industries and it would also increase the cost of food to Great Britain. Business is business, and if there is one business which the devil delights to engage in more than another, it is the business of increasing the cost of food to the people.

Mr. hon. friends opposite may take what comfort they can from a forced construction of Mr. Chamberlain's speeches, but I have here the British Empire League report, covering three years, and I cannot find a speech in the whole collection which would convey the impression that we can ever get a preference in Great Britain. The only reference to it is by Mr. Chamberlain himself, and he says we can only get it along the lines of free trade. Alluding to the Ottawa convention, he said :

The principal resolution—principal, at all events, in regard to its importance—which was passed at that conference, was in the following terms: 'That this conference records its belief in the advisability of a customs arrangement between Great Britain and her colonies, by which trade within the empire may be placed upon a more favourable footing than that which is carried on with foreign countries.'

That is a very concrete resolution, which appeals to a man's common sense, because we know what it means. It is not an involved, confused resolution like the one before the House. Let us see what Mr. Chamberlain himself says, and remember where he said it. He said it to an audience of gentlemen representing the colonies of Great Britain, and if there ever was a time when he would strive to make his meaning clear, without at the same time hurting the susceptibilities, it was then. On ordinary occasions, when he was a free agent, he would have scouted the proposition in the most forcible manner, without using any ceremony. This is what he said :

Now, Sir, do not let us minimize the proposition we are asked to consider. It would involve, in the case of the United Kingdom, a most serious disturbance of our trade; it would be a great change in the principles which for many years past have guided our commercial policy. It involves the imposition of a duty, it may be small, but it is a duty, upon food and raw material, and whatever may be the result of imposing such a duty, as to which, if I had time, I could discourse for many minutes—whatever may be the actual results—the tendency is to increase the cost of living, which would increase the pressure upon the working classes of this country. (No, no, and hear, hear)——

The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), had he been there, would have shouted 'no, no,' as loudly as any of them.

And it would also have a tendency to increase the cost of production, which would put us, of course, in a worse position than now in competition with foreign countries in neutral markets. I see no use in shutting my eyes to the consequences of the proposition—(cheers)—which I desire to consider with an impartial mind. The first thing is to establish the facts, and the facts are as I have stated.

He goes on to say :

My fourth proposition is that a true Zollverein for the empire, that a free trade established throughout the empire, although it would involve the imposition of duties against foreign countries, and would be in that respect a derogation from the high principles of free trade and from the practice of the United Kingdom up to the present time, would still be a proper subject for discussion, and might probably lead to a satisfactory arrangement if the colonies, on their part, were willing to consider it.

In that case we would, as an indispensable condition, have to arrange among ourselves a strictly revenue tariff.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HEYD. Mr. Chamberlain goes on to say :

For instance, we cannot admit free trade in spirits or in tobacco, and to any gentleman who has any experience, other articles will suggest themselves, which in one part of the empire or another are the subject of strictly revenue duties, and might, by common agreement, be excluded from any such arrangement.

Mark the words 'strictly revenue duties.' What does Mr. Chamberlain mean? Does he mean that we are going to surreptitiously protect the manufacturing interests of this country? Not at all. He goes on to say :

But the principle which I claim must be accepted if we are to make any, even the slightest, progress is that within the different parts of the empire protection must disappear.

Is not that straight enough and plain enough? He told us distinctly and honestly that we must have free trade. That is the only proposition upon which Imperial preference can be entertained; but, even if we did consent to free trade, the reasons which Mr. Chamberlain would urge against a British preference to the colonies would be still so great that it would be impossible to presume for a moment that we would get it. Let me read you an authority which, if not satisfactory to everybody, will convince some people. Speaking of Britain's trade with Australia, he says :

Imports have grown with extraordinary rapidity, but our exports to Australia have been for some years declining, the colonists showing less disposition than before to take our merchandise.

And speaking of Canada :

This picture resembles that of Australia, imports increasing by leaps and bounds, while our exports to Canada are falling. . . . It is evident, in the case of Canada, as in that of Australia, that the colonists find it convenient to deal more and more with foreign nations, and hence any attempt at an Imperial Zollverein between Great Britain and her colonies would be ruinous to the latter, and would ultimately break up the empire.

These are the words of Michael G. Mulhall, one of the most eminent authorities in Britain. We have now also the opinion of Mr. Chamberlain. It appears that the plain language he used in the Chamber of Commerce was not plain enough, and some of us have gone fooling around after this preference still. Now, he has spoken again, and this is what he says :

We are not going to interfere in the domestic affairs of the colonies. Nor are they going to interfere in ours. I have never advocated, as has been reported, the formation of an Imperial Zollverein, but I have pointed out that if there were to be any kind of fiscal arrangements with the colonies, I believe the only form that would meet with the slightest favour would be an Imperial Zollverein in which there would be free trade between the portions of the empire.

Mr. HEYD.

What is the use of discussing the case? If these hon. gentlemen are honest, they will concede that the resolution they have on the paper is a sham; and if it is a sham, it is a sham of which they certainly ought to be ashamed. Bad as my opinion of them is, I cannot think that they have fallen so low as to go before the country with a policy which is a mere sham. Mr. Mulhall and Mr. Chamberlain have spoken, now let us hear what Lord Rosebery says. I shall quote some extracts from his address before the Manchester Chamber of Commerce in 1897 :

Of all the mad things we have heard in our days, the re-enactment of the corn laws is the maddest we can possibly conceive. (Cheers.)

What is the giving of a preference to Canada but the re-enactment of the corn laws, at least in part. It means making the imports of foodstuffs from foreign countries dearer in order that the colonies may have the benefit. Let us hear what Lord Rosebery says, for he deals with this very problem. We shall then have the opinions of three of England's great men, Mulhall, Chamberlain and Rosebery; but if you could get the opinion of the workshops of England, you would find the same, for it would be upon those who work in British shops that this tax would rest with the greatest weight. There are a great many people in England who are attached to free trade, and it would be difficult to move them. Addressing the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, he would be addressing thousands of such men. He says :

But these are not the sole services that free trade has rendered us. In my judgment, whatever that may be worth, free trade has preserved the empire.

And he quotes a speech of our own Premier :

'There are parties who hope to maintain the British Empire upon lines of restricted trade. If the British Empire is to be maintained, it can only be upon the most absolute freedom, political and commercial. In building up this great enterprise, to deviate from the principle of freedom will be to so much weaken the ties and bonds which now hold it together.' Well, that is a view that I hold, and that I believe you hold in this hall. (Cheers.)

I presume those cheers were from a thousand throats, endorsing that statement.

I believe that anything in the direction of an Imperial commercial league would weaken this empire internally, and excite the permanent hostility of the whole world.

Then he goes on with a nice little bit of humour, which hon. gentlemen, I am sure, will appreciate, even if all do not admit the truth of the statement made :

Now, I begin to feel that in approaching this subject I ought to tread tenderly and delicately, because, though the proposition has been often made, it has been recently made from a political point of view, and therefore I ought perhaps to avoid it altogether. I treat it, however, not with regard to its recent development—which is only its latest—but as regards the doctrine which has been held forth for many years by men of both political parties, that such a league is eminently desirable. I tread delicately near the subject for another reason, because I believe that the idea is dead. (Hear, hear.) I tread near it with the reverence due to a corpse. (Laughter and cheers.) Now, I respect all serious proposals for binding our empire more closely together. A great part of my life I have been studying those proposals, and I respect their motive and try to support them, but this particular proposal, I believe, would have a directly contrary effect to that which its promoters claim for it. In the first place, it would be a disturbance of free trade. Free trade need not be considered an idol or a fetish, but it is, at all events, the system on which our commercial greatness has grown up and developed, and he would be a rash man that would endeavour to lay hands upon it. (Cheers.) In the next place, the proposal, if I understand it rightly, would tend to interpose checks upon the free import of the food of the people. I believe that that is absolutely impracticable, but that if it were practicable, and were done in the name of the empire, it would only succeed in making the empire odious to working classes of this country. (Cheers.) And there is another objection not less fatal—although it is external and not internal.

Gentlemen, I think it must have occurred to you that such an empire as ours cannot be built up without exciting great jealousies. The aggrandizement of nations is something like the aggrandizement of individuals. If you see a person who was very poor suddenly blossom out with a prodigious fortune, you are apt to envy him, and further, to believe that that fortune may not have been too honestly acquired. I suspect that something of the same sensation comes over foreign nations when they look at the chart of the world and see how largely the British Empire bulks in it. (Cheers.) Well, apply this fact to the proposal to which I have been alluding. Suppose, in the face of this suspicion, that it were proposed to establish an Imperial customs union. I believe that to be an impossibility, but supposing it were possible, it would be something which would place all the nations of the world in direct antagonism to it. It is something which, if possible, they would all combine to destroy.

Our empire is peace, it makes peace, it means peace, it aims at peace. (Cheers.) Its extension under free trade is for the benefit of all nations. Its motto is the old one of the volunteers, 'Defence, not defiance.' A scattered empire like ours, founded upon commerce and cemented by commerce, an empire well defended, so as not to invite wanton aggression, can mean and make for nothing but peace. We have on our side, in the long run, all that makes for peace and free commerce in the world. That is a fact that all nations know in their hearts. It is a fact that no wise statesman can hope to disregard. But an empire spread all over the world, with a uniform barrier of a customs union presented everywhere, would be, in comparison—I will not say an empire of war, but a perpetual menace, or, at least, a perpetual irritation.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. HEYD. Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned at six o'clock I had shown that Lord Rosebery said that any preferential scheme, or any scheme of customs union that would have a tendency to increase the cost of food to the consumers, was a mad scheme, and if it did not disrupt it would jeopardize the empire. I quoted from Mulhall's words to the same effect, that it would ruin the colonies and break up the empire. I also read from Mr. Chamberlain's speech that free trade was the only basis upon which this question could be discussed. I intend to give briefly what I believe to be the reasons that caused these gentlemen to express themselves in this manner. When we are talking of Great Britain and of making a commercial union with Great Britain, let us realize of whom we are talking. Let us realize that we are proposing to make an arrangement, not with a bankrupt country, but with the greatest commercial nation which this world has ever seen. The trade of Great Britain last year amounted, for the first time in the history of the world, to £815,000,000. At $4.86 to the pound, her trade amounted to $3,960,000,000. The trade of Great Britain is not paralyzed, notwithstanding what has been said by some hon. gentlemen who profess to be more friendly to Great Britain than is evidenced by their acts. The imports of Great Britain last year over the preceding year amounted to $70,000,000, while her exports amounted to $175,000,000 over the figures of the preceding year. The increase of her trade last year amounted to $246,000,000, as large an amount as the entire trade of this great Dominion of ours. It is to this country that we are making a proposition to alter the trade conditions that have grown up there during the past 40 years. And what do we offer them as an inducement?

Now, let me show you what her exports and imports were last year. I take these figures from the British blue-book, and we will then be able to judge why it is that the scheme of preferential trade is pronounced to be the emanation of brains that are mad. The imports of Great Britain last year from foreign countries were $1,802,000,000; from her colonial possessions, $270,000,000, and from her protectorates, $214,000,000. Her exports were $991,000,000 to foreign countries; $214,000,000 to the colonies; and $223,000,000 to her protectorates. These figures are reduced from pounds, $4.86 to the pound. Her imports of food products amount to $1,141,000. I leave out the small items. It strikes me, Great Britain would have to put a customs duty upon these products in order to establish this trade preference with her colonies and naturally to all her protectorates.

A great many gentlemen assume that this will simply involve placing a duty on Canadian wheat. They must realize that amongst the colonies and protectorates of Great Britain every conceivable kind of food is produced. She would get her fish from one part of the empire, her wheat from another part, her sheep and beef from another part, her tea principally from India. Taking it all in all, there is not an article of food product that goes into Great Britain but comes from some of her colonies or protectorates. Assuming, then, that the intention is to levy a certain rate of customs duty upon the food importations of Great Britain, we have first to ascertain, approximately at least, what that amount would be. That amount, as far as I can make it out, is $1,141,000,000. Now, what is the sum proposed to be levied upon these goods? Each man, according to his humour, paints strange landscapes, dark or bright. But I heard the ex-Minister of Finance say 5 per cent. He might as well have said 10, or 20, or 50 per cent. But, assuming it is 5 per cent, I have based my calculations upon that figure. At 5 per cent it amounts probably to about 2 cents a bushel on barley, maybe a cent and a quarter on oats, probably 2 or 3 cents on wheat. I have not made out the calculation, but it amounts to a big sum when you apply it to $1,141,000,000 of importations. Now, let us apply it in that way and what is the result? We find that Great Britain imported from her colonies $200,000,000 worth of stuff. If she levied 5 per cent on all foreign food products, it would amount to $47,000,000. If the amount was less than 5 per cent, or did not apply on all goods, it would lessen this amount, and the benefits all round.

Now, I assume Great Britain would levy 5 per cent upon her imports from the rest of the world, amounting to $941,000,000. Five per cent on that amount would be $47,000,000, and that amount would be added to the taxes of the people, to enable Great Britain to pay her colonies $10,000,000 more for their products. That is the first proposition.

Now, take the second proposition. Her exports of dutiable goods to her colonies amount to $150,000,000. There are no trade returns available, but applying Canada's proportion of dutiable to total imports, that would be the approximate amount—they may be larger or they may be smaller—but, for the purpose of my argument, I assume that they are the same with all countries, the dutiable goods going into the colonies amount to $150,000,000, while Great Britain's export to foreign countries amount to $991,000,000. Assuming that we could establish a customs arrangement with Great Britain whereby a tariff wall would be placed against the world, assuming that it would have the effect of enabling Great Britain to supply her colonies with twice, or three times what we are now getting, what would be the result of confining her market to $450,000,000 worth of her products, she would still have to find a market for $691,000,000 worth in foreign countries. In my opinion we would have the world against Great Britain and her colonies. We would have two hostile tariffs, one of the world against Great Britain and her colonies and one of Great Britain and her colonies against the world. I will read to the House a quotation showing how exceedingly close the competition is now in certain markets of the world between Great Britain and the United States, Belgium, Germany, France and other producers of manufactured articles. It would have the tendency that it would necessarily increase the cost price of food, it would increase the cost price of the materials which Great Britain has to export, and as competition is keen now, it would certainly be keener to the extent that this duty upon her food would increase the cost of her products. I will show you how close, in the opinion of the hon. ex-Minister of Finance, the competition is to-day. Everybody knows that the United States towers above every other country in the world in the production of iron, and that she has practically a complete monopoly in her own country, and a very large hold upon every neutral market in the world. The hon. ex-Minister of Finance says:

There is—and everybody knows that the United States of America to-day towers above every other country in the world in her production of iron—that she practically has a complete monopoly in her own country and a very large hold upon every neutral market in the world. To-day there is no competition which faces Great Britain so keen, so threatening, as the competition of the United States in the markets of the world in iron goods of every description.

That is the position which presents itself now. What would be the condition of affairs with a hostile tariff arrayed against Great Britain and her colonies, and with the cost of the production of her goods greater than it is now? You can easily see that to get the limited market that now exists among her colonies and in her protectorates it would never be in the interest of Great Britain to sacrifice the foreign markets of the world. Furthermore, widely separated as her colonies are, is it probable that we could make any combination of that kind without menacing her trade with every other country in the world. The proposition stares us in the face: Will it increase the cost of food products in Great Britain, and if it does increase the cost of food, will it increase wages? If it increases the wages of Great Britain it necessarily follows that it will increase the prices of her wares in foreign countries, because the goods that Great Britain would export would be less able to compete in neutral markets. We know what effect it had upon Belgium and Germany the moment we gave the preference to Great Britain. They immediately wiped us off the list of countries that were permitted to trade with them under the favoured-nation clauses of existing treaties. It did not take Belgium and Germany long to tell us that we could not send our goods into those countries on the same basis as other people which enjoyed favoured-nation treatment, and how long would it be if England were to adopt the same course until other nations would adopt the same course towards her, and the favoured-nation clauses in treaties would tumble to the ground? In order to be able to sell to the colonies of Great Britain probably twice as much as she sells them now, she would be required to make this sacrifice. In view of such a condition as this, is it reasonable that Great Britain should be expected to sacrifice a foreign trade of a thousand million dollars for the sake of a paltry $200,000,000 worth of trade with her colonies? Assuming that she would have a trade of $400,000,000 with her colonies, why should she jeopardize her foreign trade of a thousand million dollars for that consideration? It would unite the world against her, it would destroy her foreign market and it would destroy the colonial foreign market, because the world would raise a barrier against her colonies, and we would be debarred from going into neutral markets, as we expect to be able to do. The result would be that we would be tied down in our trade with one particular country. We believe that nature has placed us in such a favourable position that, within a reasonable period of time, we may become an exporter to the foreign nations of the world, and here, the proposition is made to tie our hands, to strangle every effort we may put forth, to limit ourselves for a period of time, to confine ourselves to trade with Great Britain, with British colonies and with the protectorates of Great Britain. That is altogether too limited for my idea, and it is inconsistent with the destiny of the people of this country. I say, furthermore, that to increase the prices of food products in Great Britain would create a rebellion in the mother country. We have heard to-day from Mr. Chamberlain, from Lord Rosebery, from Mr. Mulhall, but we have not yet heard from the 2,300,000 domestics, from the 1,600,000 commercial men in Great Britain, from the 9,000,000 men engaged in the mines and in the woollen mills and in the various industries of Great Britain, we have not heard from the million mechanics, we have not heard even from the 1,100,000 paupers that there are in Great Britain, we have not heard them state to us whether they are willing to have their food products taxed in order that Great Britain may make a present of $10,000,000 a year to her colonies. These are the men who will settle this question, and not the men who occupy exalted positions. The men who consume the food, the men who look upon a dinner as a matter of great importance, these are the men who will decide it over and above any amount of patriotism that people may shout from the platform. These men have not spoken yet. We have not yet heard from the men engaged in the mills and the men engaged in the industries of Great Britain, the men that make and unmake governments, and when they say that you can tax their food it will be time enough to talk seriously about preferential trade. Let us look upon it in a reasonable and rational way. I know that there are manufacturers on the other side of the House, I know that there are some of them shaking in their boots, I know that there are those who are ready to oppose the 33½ per cent preference to Great Britain; what would be the result if they had to face a reduction of 100 per cent? How long would the spinning and woollen mills last if we had free trade with Great Britain? These manufacturers tell us that they cannot compete with Great Britain now. They say that they have to exercise their brain constantly, to be always on the alert, to introduce new machinery, to compete with the cheaper and more expert labour of Great Britain, that here, they are confined to certain lines, while in Great Britain production is largely specialized. These men would rather stand by the present government with the 33½ per cent preference than face a 100 per cent preference in favour of Great Britain. There is no use of us trying to disguise the fact or to look at it in any other light. What does Mr. Chamberlain tell us:

We are not going to interfere in the domestic affairs of the colonies. Nor are they going to interfere in ours. I have never advocated, as has been reported, the formation of an Imperial Zollverein, but I have pointed out that if there were to be any kind of fiscal arrangement with the colonies, I believe the only form that would meet with the slightest favour would be an Imperial Zollverein, in which there would be free trade between the portions of the empire.

Do not let us disguise the facts. Do not let us conceal from ourselves that a man who speaks with the authority of knowledge, and also with the knowledge of authority, declares that it must be free trade. Our Conservative friends opposite have been for eighteen years catering to the manufacturers, who in return have kept them in power, but these gentlemen on the other side now propose a new dodge, and so, they say to themselves that they will tackle the farmer and try to fool him awhile. Do they think that our manufacturing friends are going to stand that? Not at all. Why, if the manufacturers believed that the Conservatives would carry out a mutual preferential tariff based on free trade, the same manufacturers would leave them like rats departing from a sinking ship. But, Sir, the majority of manufacturers in this country believe that this is a political dodge of the Conservative party.

I admit that some men, I won't say they are in the House, believe sincerely in the theory. They sleep with this idea of Imperial federation, and a mutual free trade preference; they carry it around with them, and they dream of it, and the idea has been so incorporated in the molecules of their brains that it becomes a fad with them. Sometimes you find a poor man who thinks he has a snake in his stomach, and sometimes he may think he is the Queen of England. If he gets into that sad frame of mind and cannot help it, I have sympathy with him, but I have no excuse for the men who go around saying that the Liberal preferential tariff is going to ruin the industries of Canada when they do not believe a word of it. I have no sympathy with men who try to play upon the prejudices and ignorance of the people of this country, and endeavour to stir up discontent for the simple sake of trying to make a party advantage of it. Sir, we have others to deal with and to consider in this matter. I am waiting to hear some day of a great meeting in Hyde Park, and you will hear a shout from the people who will have something to say if any attempt is made to increase the cost of food products in Great Britain. I believe that in such a case there would be a revolution in England. We have it on the testimony of such men as Lord Rosebery and Mr. Mulhall that a tax on food would disrupt the empire. No doubt Mr. Chamberlain was as polite as he possibly could be to those gentlemen who waited on him, but if I waited on the government and were turned away with such polite language as Mr. Chamberlain used, I would be sure I would not get anything from the government, and I would not try it the second time. What is the use of my discussing this question any longer.

Mr. BERGERON. Hear, hear.

Mr. HEYD. Yes, it is just as plain to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), who said 'hear, hear,' as it is to me, only he has a different motive for his course from that I have for mine. I have only one interest, and that is not to involve Canada in any undertaking that will tie up her hands in the future. On the other hand, it is amongst the possibilities that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) has a political object in saying 'hear, hear,' and that he does not speak quite so disinterestedly as I do on this question. Personally I have nothing to gain, but I have a sincere desire that this great empire of ours should increase and prosper, and I am anxious to do everything in my power to further that end. I have no fear for England from hostile foes without, but my fear is that the power that can injure Great Britain is a power that sleeps within the confines of Great Britain herself. Arouse that inert mass in England that is just beginning to realize their power; arouse in them the idea that an increase in the taxation on foodstuffs is done for the purpose of making their condition in life harder, and then the real menace to Great Britain will be found amongst the masses of Great Britain's own population. I am not afraid that anything from South Africa or from the continent of Europe will injure the position of Great Britain, but I do say that the condition of her working classes must be made better, if there is to be real prosperity and happiness. I do say that the great inequalities between the highest classes and the lowest masses of the people must be to some extent removed, for it cannot exist for all time to come that one million one hundred thousand paupers shall receive aid from the state. Something better has to be done for the working classes of England than taxing their food, no matter how good the object of that taxation may be. For my own part I believe that business is business, but I do not want to become a party to any policy which would carry out what I regard as the devil's business. I believe that the idea of taxing the food of the English people is something that could only originate in the brain of a man who does not love his fellow man. I believe that righteousness exalteth a nation. Some people may have forgotten that, as I know some nations appear to have forgotten it, but there are still a few old-fashioned people who believe in the truth of the good saying. If we have a wise direction of our internal affairs in the empire, then I have no fear of a hostile combination against England, whether it be in commerce or by force of arms. With wise and prudent government and proper treatment of the people within the bounds of Great Britain herself, and within the vast territories beyond the seas, which owe her allegiance, I believe with that assurance that is born of certainty, that all the powers in the world cannot combine to injure us, and that we may always be in a position to joyfully sing with the Greater Britain:

Confound their politics,
Frustrate their knavish tricks,
God Save the Queen.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). The hon. member (Mr. Heyd), who has just resumed his seat can boast the possession of one characteristic of his party, namely: That we cannot rely on his promise. When he rose to address the House he told us that he would speak for only a few minutes, but he has entertained us here for two and a half long hours. His speech was divided into two parts—the first comprising a great deal of figures, and the second a dissertation on the preferential tariff. Well, I shall not follow him in all his figures—

Mr. WOOD. You cannot.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not for the reason given by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood), for if necessary I could point him to the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), that involved and intricate figures were valueless in a speech, because the electors of Canada would never take the trouble of wading through them. During the last few days we have had from the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) what I may call one of the nicest budget speeches I have ever listened to in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course I must at once say that I entirely dissent from the conclusions at which the Finance Minister arrived. However, he gave us lots of figures, and the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) who sits beside me, rose immediately after him, and if any electors of this country had been listening in the gallery, the result would be that at the end of the speech of the hon. member for York, N.B., the impression left on their mind would be such that they would entirely have forgotten the figures given by the Minister of Finance. Then the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke, and after him the chief of the opposition conclusively showed that the figures quoted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce had no bearing at all on the facts they were intended to prove. Then the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), spoke and unfortunately he had to address empty benches. However, he made a very long speech, entirely composed of figures, which evidently were not quite understood, for after they had been shown up in their true light by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), the hon. gentleman from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) had to get up in the House to-night to explain the figures of the Minister of Customs. That is my reason for saying that I shall not enter at any great length into figures. Let me dwell for a moment on this preferential tariff which the Liberal party laud so highly and think so much of. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) made a very favourable speech from the point of view of the English manufacturer and the English workmen, but he seemed to forget entirely that he was a member of parliament for a Canadian constituency. It was perhaps truly said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the average elector in Canada would not sit down to study out the percentages on so much, and the comparisons between millions of dollars one year, and millions of dollars another year, but that he would simply take the results of the policy pursued by the government and compare them with the results of the policy pursued by their predecessors in power. I like that better. I shall leave my hon. friend from Brant in the hands of my hon.

friend from Stanstead (Mr. Moore), and my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). They will have plenty of pleasure from his figures, and they will give the House and the country plenty of pleasure from them. I have read of a man who said that with figures he could do anything. Therefore, I do not want to bother the House with all these millions and hundreds of millions, which I am sure the electors will never read about. There is one thing we are sure of, that is, that the debt is higher to-day than it was in 1896. If my hon. friend from Brant were speaking on the hustings before the electors, and made the beautiful speech he has made to-day, and a man asked him, 'Mr. Heyd, is the debt higher to-day than it was in 1896?' My hon. friend would be obliged to say, 'Yes, it is higher by over $8,000,000. The man would say, 'That is enough; I am satisfied; you may go and smoke your pipe all night now; you may give me all the explanations possible; but, you promised me before your party came into power, that the debt would not be increased, and it is increased.' Has the annual expenditure increased? That is another question the elector would put. Yes, it has increased, and increased very largely. These are the things that the electors understand. Does the consumer to-day buy cheaper than he did in 1896, I ask my friend the Minister of Customs? Does he buy his coal oil cheaper to-day than he did in 1896? Does the farmer buy his binder twine cheaper than he did in 1896? Do the tradesman, the joiner, the carpenter, the blacksmith, buy their tools cheaper to-day than they did in 1896? On the contrary, the consumer pays more for everything to-day than he did before 1896. Does the farmer sell more of his products at a higher price than he did in 1896? No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. He may have had bigger crops, but surely the right hon. gentleman will not say that it is due to him and his party, if there have been good crops since 1896. The crops have been larger; but have the prices been better? No. That is what pertains to a government, whether the prices which the farmer obtains for his products are higher than he formerly received—not the fact of his having had larger crops. Is it due to the government if the times are better to-day than they were in 1896?

Mr. HEYD. Certainly.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all. Will my hon. friend say that the better times in the United States are due to the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite? No; and it is the same all over the world. The thing that is surprising is that with such good times, the debt has increased, the annual expenditure of the government has gone up and the consumers of the country are not in a better condition, but in a worse condition than they were in 1896. Do the workmen of the country receive higher wages than they did in 1896?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all. If they do, how can my hon. friend explain the different strikes in the factories that we hear of every day? Less than a month ago, there was a strike in my own county, with thousands of men doing nothing, because they wanted an increase in their wages, which had been decreased; and the same thing is going on all over the country. These are things that should not be satisfactory to those who pretend that they have brought prosperity to the country. Is the country richer to-day than it was in 1896?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose it is, because the debt has increased. I want to say a word to the Minister of Finance about the keeping of books. I read a day or two ago in one of the important Liberal papers of this country, a very severe criticism of the way in which my hon. friend keeps the books of the country, with regard to capital account and annual expenditure. That paper says it is extraordinary how governments succeed each other and how they deceive each other. It says that Mr. Fielding made a very good speech, in which he said he had a surplus of $5,500,000 this year, and expects another surplus of $7,000,000 next year. If my hon. friend had been here a few years ago, when the Conservative Minister of Finance brought down his budgets and announced surpluses year after year, he would have heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), then in opposition, criticising these surpluses, and asserting that they meant that the government was stealing from the poor people of this country. This paper goes on to say that the Minister of Finance, instead of boasting of his surpluses, should say that the debt has increased over $8,000,000; because after all, it is the electors of Canada who pay the debts of Canada, and the expenditures, whether they are charged to capital account, or to ordinary account. I was speaking about my old friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Some of the new members of this House, who did not hear him in the old days, should take a day or two during the recess, and read those speeches. It would do them good. They will find them in Hansard—those from 1882 to 1890, particularly, when we had large surpluses. They will find how cleverly the hon. gentleman can change his opinion. The hon. gentleman says now: 'Oh, things have changed; these are growing times; under the Conservative administration, it was wrong to have surpluses, but now that things are blooming everywhere, surpluses are a great boon to this country, because everybody is satisfied.' He is satisfied, and, of course he thinks everybody else is. He never said anything about the money that was spent for the American conference. What was that money spent for? For the benefit of whom? Who will ever derive the benefit of a cent from that $35,000 which was spent by our ministers in promenading between Quebec and Washington? When we ask them what is the result of that conference, they are divided. Some say it is finished, and we shall never hear of it again; others say, there is a ray of hope that something may yet come of it. I believe myself, that nothing more will be heard of it, except that the country will have to pay the accounts of the gentlemen who took part in it. The hon. gentlemen never said anything about the $200,000 which was spent on the prohibition plebiscite for the purpose of deceiving the good prohibitionists of this country. They do not say a word about the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, on which nearly $2,000,000 was spent above what the Conservative government was to pay. We have not heard a word about the Drummond County Railway, for which $1,600,000 of good Canadian money was paid, which should not have been paid, and in connection with which we have incurred a charge of $140,000 a year, to be paid to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for 99 years, besides $300,000 on the Victoria Bridge. This was discussed on a former occasion, and will be discussed again, but the hon. gentleman knows well it was the worst possible route the government could have taken by which to bring the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal.

There is not a word said by hon. gentlemen opposite about the money squandered at Coteau, of course it was but a small amount, $16,000, but it was money absolutely thrown away, the only object of the expenditure being to help some friends and relatives of the ministers.

When the hon. Minister of Finance discourses on the great things the government have done with the tariff, what has he to say about cotton? That is an article on which the tariff was not lowered. On the contrary, the late tariff, was raised by hon. gentlemen opposite. What their object was I cannot say.

The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has changed his mind very often, and there is one question in particular on which those who entered parliament some years ago will remember he pronounced himself with even more than his usual distinctness and positiveness. I refer to the bounty on iron. When the late government proposed a bounty of $2 per ton on iron, my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, fulminated against it in his most stentorian tones and his best sardonic style and did all he could to prevent the measure passing. But what has he done since? He has supported a bounty of $3 a ton until 1907, and given it all the weight of his moral support.

Take my hon. friend the Postmaster General, who would know him to-day as the same man who was so prominent in opposition ten years ago? He has given us penny postage.

An hon. MEMBER. That is a good thing.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, for those who write many letters. It is a good thing for the business man, but what good is it for the farmer, who writes very few letters in a year. Our farmers will have to pay this deficit of about half a million dollars due to the reduction in postage. Those who do not write letters will have to pay for those who do. That is one of the great boons given to the people by the Postmaster General, and is just on a par with that other boon of which he made such a display the other day, when he brought in a resolution compelling government contractors to pay their labouring men on government contracts according to the rates of pay prevailing in the locality where the work was being constructed. But when we asked the hon. gentleman to convert that resolution into a statute and make it the law, he refused. Why did he refuse? Because the whole thing was simply a device to make the workmen believe that hon. gentlemen opposite were friends of theirs, working in their interests, while at the same time there was nothing serious at the bottom of the resolution at all. We all remember how the same hon. gentleman, when in opposition, was the father of a measure to prevent members of parliament accepting government positions. He then thought it something terrible that a member of parliament should be appointed to a government position during his term of representation. But no sooner does my hon. friend become a minister than all his qualms disappear, and we now find that this government have appointed more members of parliament to office during their short term than the late government did in the eighteen years it held office. No wonder the people of Canada are daily losing confidence in these gentlemen. I am told also that the mail service in the Yukon has been done by the mounted police, and the expense is charged, not to the Post Office Department, but to the Militia Department. It is no wonder then that the Postmaster General, by being enabled in this way to very materially reduce the cost of his administration, can boast that although he has given penny postage there is hardly any deficit in his department.

Then there is my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, of whom I would not say what I think, if I were to say anything uncomplimentary. I think he has been a good minister, so good that he has carried out what his predecessors in office had started. The only fault I have to find with my hon.

friend is that he arrogates to himself all the merit of establishing cold storage, but I think he should have the decency to remember that that system was established by the Conservative administration. He may have extended it and I hope he has. It would be something dreadful if we could not find some minister in this government who has done something good. But my hon. friend knows very well that the cold storage policy was inaugurated by the late government. In fact we must go still further to find the origin of that policy, because it was the government of the province of Quebec which first advocated it, and the Liberal party then in opposition in that province sneered at the Conservative as a butter and cheese government, pretending that the policy was one which would never amount to anything, but to-day that policy is the thing on which my hon. friend plumes himself the most.

There is another subject, on which nobody thundered more loudly than did my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and that was the question of railway subsidies. On the iniquity of voting money for railway subsidies, no one carried conviction further than the hon. Minister of Customs because there is no one whose voice carries so far. The money voted for railway subsidies, according to that hon. gentleman, was spent for no good purpose. It went into the election fund, and there is always something crooked at the bottom. Well, when the Liberal party came into power, did they do away with railway subsidies? Not a bit of it. On the contrary they doubled the amount. Instead of giving $3,200 per mile, they raised the subsidy to $6,400 per mile. So that if there was corruption by the late government in giving $3,200 per mile, how much more is there not by the present government in giving double that sum?

Hon. gentlemen opposite are divided on many questions but on none more than the tariff. One of the ministers, whom I do not see here to-day, was strongly in favour of protection. I refer to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). He gave himself a dinner in my county, in 1897, to which he invited the farmers, and I am told that as many as thirty accepted his invitation. He told them there, and his words were published in the papers, that the manufacturers need not be anxious because the protective policy would be upheld by the present administration. So it has been for some time, but I am afraid the hon. Minister of Public Works has lost his grip on his colleagues, because to-day we seem to be drifting towards free trade except in cotton, but that exception may be due to the promise of the Minister of Public Works to the manufacturers at Valleyfield, where there is a large cotton factory, that the tariff would not be changed.

Mr. MONET. Nevertheless there is a strike there.

Mr. BERGERON. Because prices have been lowered. The preferential tariff has brought down the normal tariff to a point at which it is not altogether in favour of the manufacturers, as it would have been if the tariff had not been touched.

There is a word I would like to say to the hon. minister without portfolio at Quebec (Mr. Dobell). We have heard a great deal about the fast line, and we would have had a fast line between Canada and England if the late government had remained in power. I was surprised the other day to hear the hon. member for Quebec West speak as he did in the absence of the leader of the opposition. He said that the leader of the opposition, on two or three different occasions, and also the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), had said that his government, in 1896, had actually passed a contract with the Messrs. Allan for the building of a fast line of steamers to ply between Canada and England. The hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) went so far as to say that he had pocketed his self respect and had gone to the Prime Minister and told him: If you will have the Governor General sanction that contract, I and my party will stand by you in the House, because I think it is most important in the interest of Canada. But the Prime Minister, as we know, refused to do so. The other night, for the first time, we heard the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) say that no such thing had ever happened. The hon. gentleman has been in Europe very often; he has been across five or six times since taking office. From what he told us the other day, one would gain the impression that instead of working for the fast line, he was trying to find out whether such a contract had ever been signed. He told us that he had gone to the Treasury Board, and they had not heard of it; he went to some members of the government in England, and they knew nothing of it. It is childish for the hon. gentleman to speak in that way and there is no use attempting to answer him, because there is no answer to give. We have it from the leader of the opposition, and never denied by the Prime Minister, that everything was ready with that contract, so that if it had been carried out, we should have had to-day four steamships crossing the Atlantic giving us the 20-knot service, which is a matter of such vast importance to Canada.

Now, the hon. member for Quebec West spoke about all the good his government had done—the hon. gentleman spoke of it as his government—in the construction of the canals. The canals were nearly all finished when hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. What have they done in the matter? They have broken contracts with Conservatives and put them in the hands of the Liberals, but I do not think that that has hastened the work very much. They did more than that. To try to make people believe that they had finished the work, they inaugurated the canal last fall. I suppose hon. gentlemen may have read something about that in the papers. The Minister of Public Works inaugurated the canal with great fla-fla. The inhabitants along the canal must have been simply astounded when they saw the beautiful yacht of the Minister of Public Works flying the flags of all nations of the world going down the canal. It was taken down with great care. But the proof that the work was not finished, though they declared that it was, was found in the fact that three or four days after that the Beauharnois Canal broke and navigation was interrupted for five days. Now, to-day, we are told by the member for Quebec West that they have done a great deal in the construction of the canals. But we need not pay very great attention to what the hon. gentleman says on that subject; for we know on one occasion he spoke that way and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) told him that he was quite wrong. I need not increase the hon. gentleman's discomfiture. He forgot to tell us about the Stewart case. The canal is not finished any sooner than it would have been by the Conservatives had they remained in office, but the people of this country will have to pay heavy damages to Mr. Stewart, though they pay as much to the contractors who are finishing the work that he commenced. But Mr. Stewart is a Conservative and the new contractors are Liberals. In fact, that is the whole policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for Quebec West finished his speech by telling us in a paternal way that we want free trade, but that his government has decided to go quietly, that they do not believe in going so quickly as to frighten the manufacturers. Who would suppose that that hon. gentleman was elected as a Conservative on the 23rd of June, 1896. For eighteen years he was preaching protection, and now he is the Minister of the Exterior in a government speaking on behalf of whom he says that their policy is to go on toward free trade, but very quietly.

I come now to the second part of the speech of my hon. friend who spoke before me, in which he dealt with the subject of the preferential tariff. We hear of preferential trade, Imperial federation; and, in fact, to read the papers which come from different parts of the country, it seems evident that they do not know where we are at. Have we a new policy, and, if so, what is it? Are we going to have free trade within the empire as has been said by my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd), or are we only to have a higher tariff for other countries and a lower tariff for England. Will it bring us ultimately to free trade with England or what will be the result? How do we happen to find ourselves in this predicament? Let us go back a few years. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) will admit that the Liberal party never had any policy; they have preached commercial union, they have preached continental free trade, they have preached unrestricted reciprocity, they have preached free trade as they have it in England—they have preached everything but what they have to-day.

Mr. WOOD. They have got good times just the same.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to refer to an address delivered by the Prime Minister in 1891, which my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood), I think, has never read. When the address in reply to the speech from the Throne was moved in 1891, the leader of the opposition, the present Premier, spoke on the question. It was just after the general election when hon. gentlemen opposite had gone to the country with a policy of unrestricted reciprocity, a policy that would put our tariff entirely in the hands of the Americans. They had gone to the country with a policy which was so utterly anti-Canadian that Hon. Mr. Blake, who was their chief at that time, left them. They came back a minority, but declared that they were not discouraged. The leader of the opposition of that day delivered one of those nice speeches that he knows so well how to deliver. Whatever the subject may be or whether he speaks pro or con, he always speaks well. And he finished with these words, which I wish to put in Hansard, compared with some that have been delivered since. In his peroration, he said:

Now, Sir, we are agitating and we have agitated this policy of unrestricted reciprocity, because we believe that it is in the best interests of the country, and not because we love England less, but because we love Canada more. I have again and again affirmed, for my part, that I am as fondly attached to British institutions as any man of English blood, but I have never hesitated to say, and I again repeat, that whether for ill or for good, whether for my condemnation or my justification, whether for right or for wrong, as long as there is in me the breath of life, my guiding star and my only guiding star, shall be: Canada first, Canada last, and Canada for ever.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. That is very nice. The sentiments are very fine. But how was he so much for Canada first, last and for ever, but by unrestricted reciprocity with the United States and by discriminating against England. That was the policy of the leader of the present government in 1891. It did not amount to anything. They kept it up for about four years until something which they had not expected came to their rescue in the shape of the school question. Then they went to the country. Before they went to the country something happened which I want to mention to the House. In 1896, of course, the Liberal party having no policy then any more than they had before, were looking for something which they might call a policy. The present leader of the opposition came to Canada as High Commissioner in 1896, and was invited by the Board of Trade of Montreal to deliver an address upon the question of a preferential tariff between England and her colonies, which was already being discussed by many public men in England, as it is still, although attracting less attention since the Prime Minister of this country practically killed it. Sir Charles Tupper accepted an invitation to speak before the Board of Trade in Montreal. In the meantime, he was called to a seat in the government as Secretary of State. There was some discussion as to whether he should address that body as Secretary of State when he had been invited to do so as High Commissioner of Canada. But, it did not make any difference, those who had invited him had invited Sir Charles Tupper. He went down there and made a speech, and what did he say? He discussed the whole preferential tariff question between England and the colonies, and gave at some length his views, which, I have no doubt are pretty familiar to the public generally. He thought it would be well for England and the colonies to have a preferential tariff against the rest of the world. His speech created such a stir in public opinion at the time that the then chief of the opposition, now the right hon. gentleman leading this House, was called upon by his friends in Ontario to express his opinion upon the question, and he went to the city of London and spoke there. He said: Sir Charles Tupper made a speech before the Board of Trade in Montreal the other day in which he declared himself in favour of preferential trade between the mother country and her colonies. I am in favour of that policy, said Mr. Laurier, and he gave very good reasons why it would be a good policy, both for the colonies and for the mother country. Those who heard him and those who read his speech in the papers the next day, were satisfied that whether he came to power or whether Sir Charles Tupper remained in power, something would be done in favour of a preferential tariff, which was regarded as likely to be of great importance to the whole British Empire. But the right hon. gentleman went further than that in Quebec. He spoke in that city a few days before the election, repeating the speech that he had made in London, and saying once more that he was in favour of the very same policy as was propounded by the then Prime Minister (Sir Charles Tupper). He said to his audience:

I will be in a better position to make a bargain with Mr. Chamberlain than the hon. baronet, because we all know that Sir Charles Tupper's policy is a protectionist policy, while my policy is one of a tariff for revenue only.

Now, this afternoon we heard a friend of the right hon. gentleman reading a speech from Mr. Chamberlain and extracts from speeches of other prominent Englishmen in and out of parliament; and I asked myself whether the right hon. gentleman knew whether he was expressing the opinion of Mr. Chamberlain or not when he spoke in London and Quebec. If he did express the opinion of Mr. Chamberlain, one-half the speech of the hon. member for South Brant this afternoon goes for nothing; if he did not express the opinion of Mr. Chamberlain, then he was involuntarily deceiving the people of London and Quebec when he spoke as he did. Well, the right hon. gentleman attained to power, but did he bring his policy with him? We all know he did not. Did he bring his policy of unrestricted reciprocity, or of commercial union, or free trade as they have it in England, or a tariff for revenue only? No, because he reached power on the 24th of June, 1896, through the favour of the good people of the province of Quebec, and not upon a tariff issue at all.

Mr. WOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend was not there, and he was very much surprised when he saw the way Quebec had voted. Well, I need not repeat the first budget speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). His tariff was the same old tariff. Then, the right hon. gentleman went to the Jubilee celebration in England, and there, I believe is the beginning of the whole history of what we have heard so much about for the last two years, there is the beginning of the predicament in which we find ourselves. His trip across the water explains many things. When the right hon. gentleman, who had never been to Europe before, saw those immense docks at Liverpool, he simply lost his head. When he saw those twenty-five or twenty-six miles of docks he simply lost his grip on the situation. Before he met Mr. Chamberlain or any of the gentlemen whose names have been mentioned on this side of the Atlantic as favouring a conference to discuss this question of a preferential tariff, he immediately declared himself against any such conference, and said that Canada would be glad to give a preference to English goods without any quid pro quo at all. He went so far that Mr. Chamberlain afterwards said: After a speech like the one delivered by the Prime Minister of Canada and the position he has taken upon that question, I would not touch it with a ten-foot pole. Somebody has mentioned the name of the Duke of

Mr. BERGERON.

Devonshire, and there was some controversy about what he had said. But, one thing is sure, that in a letter which was written by the Duke of Devonshire, he said: I do not pretend that England should abandon free trade immediately, but I am prepared to say that free trade has not done what was expected of it by those who abolished the corn laws in 1845. But, the right hon. gentleman killed the project, and all we have left is a preference of 12½ per cent in favour of English goods, increased to 25 per cent, but with no other result than to make the British merchant and manufacturer smile at a Canadian whenever he meets one in that country.

Now, I contend that this preferential rate as we have it to-day has not done Canada any good, and has not done the English manufacturer or merchant any good. This afternoon, when I interrupted the hon. member for Brant, and told him that the importations from England since that preferential tariff have been smaller than they were before, the hon. Minister of Finance said that I was wrong. Well, I will give that hon. gentleman the figures, which I hope he will accept, as they are taken from the volume of Trade and Commerce for 1899. What I said was that we had imported a great deal more from the United States since that preferential tariff came into force than we had before, and that on the average we had imported less from Great Britain than we had before, and I am going to prove it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was no question of averages this afternoon.

Mr. BERGERON. What did the hon. gentleman mean when he said that I was not right?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman said the British imports were less than before, and I said he was mistaken, that is all.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, I am going to show the hon. gentleman that I was right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You cannot.

Mr. BERGERON. I can; of course I can. I would not have said so unless I was able to prove it. In 1894, under a Conservative regime, which will be found at page 5, part I, of the Trade and Navigation returns, we imported from England $38,717,267; in 1895, under Conservative administration, before the preferential tariff was introduced, we imported from England $31,131,737; in 1896, again under the old administration, we imported from England, $32,979,742, or altogether $102,828,746, which, divided by three, gives an average annual import of $34,276,249 under the Conservative regime.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You were not talking of averages.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not interrupt my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) when he made his fine speech. In 1897 we imported $29,412,188 from Great Britain.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Under the old tariff.

Mr. BERGERON. Under the old tariff, if my hon. friend wishes it. We imported, in 1898, under the new tariff $32,500,000, in 1899, $37,060,123; or altogether, $98,972,311 from Great Britain. Divide that by 3 and you have an average annual import of $32,990,770, or a diminution of 3.90 per cent. I hope the hon. Minister of Finance will not again contradict these figures that are taken from his own books.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You are all wrong.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, I want to make the case complete. I want to show what we have done with the United States, to whom we have given no preference. We are supposed to have put up a barrier between the United States and Canada, and my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs, smiles whenever he talks to an Englishman about the preference he has given him. In 1894 we imported from the United States $53,034,100, in 1895, $54,634,521, in 1896, $58,574,024, or, in all, $166,242,645, which gives an average annual importation of $55,414,215. That is what we imported from the United States under a Conservative regime. How much have we imported since hon. gentlemen opposite came into power and profess to be anxious to do so much good to England? We imported, from the United States, in 1897, $61,649,041 in 1898, $78,705,590, and in 1899, $93,007,166, or altogether, $233,361,797, or an average of $77,787,266, or 40 per cent more under the Liberal regime than under the Conservative. It shows a growing time, but it does no good to Canada, and it does not do much good to England.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, we only buy where we sell.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to ask hon. gentlemen opposite who were saying so much about their preferential tariff: Where will it lead them to? Is it purely and simply a matter of sentiment? If it is, it is misplaced. It is business. My hon. friend (Mr. Heyd) said a moment ago that business is business. We have heard of that before. The Anglo-Saxon will laugh at you if you give him everything and do not ask anything in return. He is a business man before anything else. The hon. Minister of Finance has said that we must commence in this way, that we cannot expect that England will put a duty upon foreign goods, and accept our products at a higher price. We have to commence, he says, in this way and in time we will obtain what we are looking for. That is our hope. Since then, however, we have heard the remarks of the hon.

member for South Brant who declared emphatically that we need not expect any preference. He read speeches from Lord Rosebery.

An hon. MEMBER. Mr. Rosebery.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, Mr. Rosebery; and he read speeches from Mr. Chamberlain. There is a paper in Ottawa, a very good paper, too, called the Free Press, which writes very discouragingly as far as that goes. Here is what the Free Press says of the criticisms of this side of the House and of Conservative newspapers throughout the country:

Whether the Premier asks for such a tariff or not is immaterial.

Whether the Premier asks for reciprocity or not is immaterial.

If he did ask for it, he acted very indiscreetly, because he doubtless knew, when on his visit to Britain at the time of the Queen's Jubilee, that the commercial instincts of Great Britain will never permit the people of the United Kingdom to adopt any such course.

And then the article goes on to speak of Lord Rosebery. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether, when he was in England, it was purely and simply a present that he was giving the English merchants and manufacturers without getting anything in return for Canada? If it was that he did give such a present, he has not been faithful to the people of this country. If he did, he has forgotten the speech he delivered in London and in Quebec and he has deceived the people of London and of Quebec, and the other electors of Canada who read his speech. I want to go farther than that, and I want to ask: Where will this policy land us? Some people say that it is a pace towards free trade. If the goal of the right hon. gentleman's policy is free trade and if all his colleagues believe as he does, and there is no division in the government, why do they not come out in a manly way and give entire free trade to the people of Canada? Why do it in this way? What do they expect? My impression is that when this growing time is succeeded by a lull the manufacturers of Canada will not be in a position to stand the competition of the English manufacturers in certain lines. If they close their doors, or if they reduce wages, it will bring in merchandise, not of English manufacture, but of American manufacture, and the markets of Canada will be swamped by importations from the United States as they were in 1878, when the Liberal party was swept from power. The destruction of our industries will follow. Hon. gentlemen opposite would like the people to believe that they have introduced a British policy, that they are Britishers to the core, that they are in favour of everything British, but, they are working purely and simply for the American manufacturer and they hope the people will not see it. The illustration of my hon. friend from South Brant about a coat made by the American merchant and one made by the English merchant, while a nice little story, did not prove what he wanted to prove at all, and I will leave it to my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) who has a ready answer for it. He is a man of the trade and he will explain a great deal more clearly than I can that it is not in the interest of the English manufacturer or the Canadian manufacturer, but entirely in favour of the American manufacturer. Some gentlemen opposite, referring to the Conservative party this afternoon, said: You dare not say that if you came into power you would abolish that preferential tariff of 33½ per cent which we have given to England. The hon. gentleman from Brant (Mr. Heyd) told us it was a fait accompli, and he nearly broke his mouth trying to speak French in saying that. Well, there is a very plain answer to that, and it is: If you want to give preference to English goods raise your ordinary tariff towards other countries, and leave the tariff between Canada and England high enough to protect Canadian manufacturers; then you will be giving a preference to English goods and at the same time you will not hurt the Canadian manufacturers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that your policy?

Mr. BERGERON. I am merely saying that it is an answer to the question put to this side of the House this afternoon.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that to be your policy?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not speaking for the opposition, but I will tell you that my policy would be to do everything in my power to protect the manufacturers of Canada, the workingmen of Canada, and the farmers of Canada, and I believe that is pretty much the policy of the Conservative party.

Mr. COCHRANE. We will tell you what our policy is when we get you out.

Mr. BERGERON. Let me speak for a moment on the history of this preferential tariff. When the Prime Minister was in England he offered this preference to the English people without receiving any return for it, and no doubt those who met him in England thought it was a very generous thing for him to do. They probably admired the Prime Minister and thought he was a very nice man indeed to give all this without asking a quid pro quo. But the Prime Minister went further than that. If he was astonished at the docks in Liverpool, how much more astonished was he when he got under the shade of the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral. He was very eloquent in London and he offered everything.

Mr. BERGERON.

At a dinner given by Lord Lansdowne, he said:

Lord Lansdowne has spoken of a day when the empire might run risk of danger. England has proven to us all the time that she knew how to defend herself alone, but if ever the least danger should threaten her, let her sound her bugles on top of the hills; let her light her signal fires, and then there will come from her colonies help in every possible shape and form.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am afraid my hon. friend is translating from the French.

Mr. BERGERON. I have seen it in English too. Does the Prime Minister deny that he said that?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think I used that language.

Mr. BERGERON. The right hon. gentleman no doubt said it in more eloquent language, but I am here to state facts and not to make eloquence for him. At all events he spoke in that sense, and I have no doubt he wanted to please Lord Lansdowne and those around him. That language was used on the 18th of June, 1897.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do you object to that?

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, no, but I will prove in a few minutes that the right hon. gentleman forgot all about using that language. On the 25th of June the Prime Minister in his capacity of colonel, I suppose, was inspecting the Canadian soldiers in England, and he said to them:

In the name of the government, in the name of the Canadian people, I congratulate you on your splendid appearance. From every side, I receive most eulogious reports of you. As Canadians we hope that there will be no war, but I can express the general sentiment in saying that if by unfortunate circumstances, the empire was dragged into war, Canadian troops would fly to the help of the mother country, and you would do your duty there as well as you have this morning at the parade.

My right hon. friend will not deny that he used that language. It was quite natural that the people of England should think that he was the most generous Premier of the most generous colony of the British Empire. He had offered Great Britain a preferential trade without any return for it, and now he was offering from Canada, men, money, and blood for the defence of the empire. That would explain why in the month of October, 1899, some people who remembered these speeches in England were surprised at the interview which the Prime Minister gave to the Toronto Globe. My right hon. friend, for this preference which he gave to England without anything in return, got the Cobden medal, and—I do not say it in the least offensive spirit—for offering men, money and blood, he got the decoration which he so nobly wears. I say sincerely to my right hon.

friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that in looking over our past history there are words which were once used by Lord Durham which every French Canadian particularly should always remember. That English nobleman, in writing to the British authorities, once said :

So far as the French Canadians are concerned, do not mind them; they will always be amenable to you through titles and honours.

I mention that word of caution for fear that the Prime Minister would be tempted to offer any more of Canada to the British Empire.

However, Sir, the war broke out and then the Prime Minister, forgetting these fine pledges which he made in England, gave an interview in the Globe to state that he could not do anything to send men to South Africa and pay for them. There was a cry not only from Ontario, but even from the province of Quebec against this policy. A great many people in Quebec who knew the position taken by the Prime Minister when he was in England, looked on it that we were a British people, that we are under the protection of the British flag, and that it is the duty in honour bound of every man to defend the flag which protects him. So a great many people in Quebec thought that when there were men offering their lives to the British Empire for the defence of the flag, it was our duty under the circumstances, (whether the constitution was there or not), to do what in the long run was done. I said a moment ago that the Liberal party never had any policy, but that they always looked to what they thought was the wave of public opinion to carry them along. It was that expectant policy that led them into the blunder they committed with regard to this matter, a blunder politically speaking, and much more a blunder from a party point of view. They expected to go to the country at that time, but they found after a while that they could not do so. Why? Because some people in certain parts of the country thought that the government had not done their duty in the crisis, or had only done it because they were forced to. The right hon. gentleman probably under some evil influence wavered in his policy, and so he and his colleagues feared that they could not carry their full strength in the English provinces if they appealed to the people. Then my right hon. friend became English to the core—more British than Mr. Chamberlain or the Duke of Devonshire; more British than the Queen. He himself launched us on what people understand to-day to be Imperial federation, which is not at all dear to the heart of my hon. friend from Napierville and Laprairie (Mr. Monet). My right hon. friend—and to give him his due, this is one of his great talents—rose in the House some time ago and made a beautiful speech—a pro-English speech; a speech which was hailed everywhere as one of the finest ever delivered, not merely by my right hon. friend, but by anybody, in the Canadian parliament. It was spoken of in England in splendid terms. I will quote from an article in the London Times, to show the way in which it was understood in England :

With these remembrances he can look forward, past the present strife, to the day when Africa will be as Canada now is: to 'where beyond these voices, there is peace.' To-day, in our western Dominion, as the Premier himself has testified, 'the juxtaposed races march side by side, leaning on each other with loyal hearts, towards the one goal—the grandeur and glory of the British Empire.' To-morrow it will be the same in South Africa.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech raises one great political question, a question which will, month by month, come more and more before us. 'I would say to Great Britain: If you want us to help you, call us into your councils,' the Premier declares. Why should not he and the great leaders of our splendid antipodean colonies have a share in the direction of Imperial affairs? They are sharing in our perils, they are helping our strife. The honour of our flag as closely concerns them as it does us. We cannot pretend that the British subject in London is more fit to guide the destinies of empire than the British subject at Wellington, or Sydney, or Toronto. In our common Imperial concerns all should have a voice. The problem of federal union is admittedly difficult, but the difficulties can be overcome. Sir Wilfrid Laurier may yet live to see himself, as he once said he hoped to be, a representative of Canada in a truly Imperial parliament meeting at Westminster.

Now, I put these two together—the speech of 1891 in favour of unrestricted reciprocity and discrimination against England, and the speech of 1900 not only in favour of a preference to England in trade, but in favour of Imperial political federation, with the right of the Prime Minister of Canada, or some other man representing Canada, to take a seat in the Imperial House of Commons. But when my right hon. friend makes a pro-British speech, which is applauded by his English friends and heralded all over the Dominion to show where he stands although he is a French Canadian, and when that speech is published in the London papers, he has some of his most intimate friends, who, though they seem to differ from him here, stand by him and will stand by him, to go to the province of Quebec and say to the people there, 'Oh, don't be afraid; the right hon. gentleman does that simply because he is pressed by Sir Charles Tupper and the Conservative party.'

Now, Sir, where do we stand on this question of preferential trade. This is not, as I said before, a matter of sentiment; it is a matter of business. When Canada decided to send some help to fight for the British flag, and decided to pay the expenses of those who went, I say that Canada did her duty; but should do it willingly. She was not obliged to do it. That has been stated by the Premier and by others who sit in this House, and the constitution of our country is there to prove it. But whenever you want to make a trade arrangement, that is not a question of sentiment; it is a question of business; and I repeat that my impression is that we shall be the laughing-stock of the Anglo-Saxon manufacturers and merchants for offering them everything and asking for nothing in return. Upon that question I stand, with the chief of the opposition and the Conservative party, by the resolution which was voted down by the House, but which was voted for by us, in favour of any possible arrangement with the British government by which we shall get a quid pro quo for Canada. We are not here legislating for England; we are not here legislating for the workingmen or the farmers of England or for the millions of people of whom the hon. member for Brant spoke to-night. We are here legislating for the workingmen, the farmers, and the people of Canada. You will see every day two or three brothers doing business separately in the same place. When they do business, they treat each other like strangers; but when it is a question of helping one another, they help one another like brothers. That is the position I desire Canada to hold towards the British Empire.

Now, Sir, with regard to Imperial federation—because we have to talk about that. There is no doubt that the policy propounded by the present government, and those offers of the right hon. gentleman with regard to tariffs, and with regard to men and money and blood, bring us, as the English papers say they do, towards Imperial federation. I want to know if my right hon. friend is serious when he acts and speaks in such a way as to be understood either in England or in this country, as being in favour of political Imperial federation, and if he still cherishes the idea that before he goes up to heaven he will get a seat in the Imperial parliament.

An hon. MEMBER. He is in purgatory now.

Mr. BERGERON. So far as I am concerned, I will not speak for anybody but myself on this question. I am opposed, strongly opposed, to any political Imperial federation. I do not expect nor do I desire to see any man from Canada sitting in the Imperial parliament, to be one of two or ten among six or seven hundred members. I pray every day that Canada may never become a little Ireland.

The PRIME MINISTER. Every day?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend judges other people by himself; he does not do it, I suppose. I am strongly in favour of the unity of the empire, but holding our own independence as we do to-day. I want Canada to stay as she is until events, which are probably far away, will show us our destiny. I want this parliament to be supreme in Canada. I do not want any dictation from any where. Let Canada be as generous as she was some time ago, and as she may be again if she desires; but I do not want Canada to be bound to do so. I want to see Canada ruled by Canadians for the best interests of Canadians under the British flag. I think I could not do anything better to show that that is pretty much the opinion of my own people—if I can speak for them more than for others, although I believe it is shared by the majority of the people of this country—than to read an article which should have a place in Hansard, coming from one of our principal papers in Quebec after the slaughter at the Modder River on the 16th or 18th of February. I will read this article, so that our friends in the other provinces, who may not know the Quebec people very well, may be able to form some idea of the opinion of our people, for this article might have been written by every man in our province. La Presse says:

The Sowing of Blood.

Two thousand leagues away from our country there has just been signed and concluded, amid the shrieks of the deadly grape and shells, on a field of carnage, as it were, a treaty or concordat of lasting friendship, between the various races who are working out the destinies of the Canadian people. Our mourning is deep and our sorrow great, but our hope is greater still. If our first thought, that of the heart, goes out to the bereaved families of the dead, our second thought, derived from reason itself, dwells on the land which adds fresh leaves to the annals of its heroes. These were men, then, whom we sent to the far-off field of death! What could we have known of our capabilities during the long period of peace enjoyed by Canada? The art of war is not a thing to be learned; it is in the temperament. Our men have just proved it.

In these days, and since the news of yesterday, under many a roof-tree there have been tears and grief and terror; for our people are not merely weeping for those whom they know to have fallen, but shuddering to think of the names to be posted to-morrow. The only consolation it is possible to offer is that strange mingling of the beautiful with the horrors of war. A wonderful glow of enthusiasm and heartfelt admiration takes full possession of the mind. The sacrifice of life is a sad thing indeed; but how glorious a thing is valour!

As to our country, it looks as though the roots of this new people were to be nourished and strengthened by this pure fertilizer drawn from our veins. There is no bond of unity like a common fate, common dangers and solidarity in a common glory. We have just sown our blood, side by side, in the same furrow; the future harvest will be union, mutual understanding and mutual confidence; for it is a law of nature that life springs from death. May this confraternity of the last sleep in a far foreign land, be also the fast confraternity of our joint existence on the soil of Canada, and away with the odious suspicion and distrust of the past!

I believe that this article expresses, not only the sentiments of the province of Quebec, but of all Canada. These are sentiments which I share; but, I repeat, when it comes to a question of business, my impression is that the government of Canada have made a contract which is one-sided and which cannot have the approval of the people of this country. But this need not surprise anybody for we have a very extraordinary government. It is a government which had no policy when in opposition and has none in power. It has no public spirit, no guiding star. My right hon. friend has had too many guiding stars, and has dropped them one by one. Once it was continental free trade. He has lost that. Another time his guiding star was unrestricted reciprocity, and he swore he would stand or fall by that, but he lost that also. Then he was in favour of a revenue tariff, but that seems also to be covered by some cloud. Then he advocated 'free trade as we have it in England,' and that has disappeared, and I am afraid that after the elections he will find himself in the moon.

But this is an extraordinary government. Where are the ministers? Do you ever see them in their seats? In the old days when we had a Conservative government, we used to see the ministers always in their seats. But how often this session have we not had to postpone our questions because the ministers were away, away from the House and away from their department. Where are they? They have been travelling at the country's expense. Nearly all of them have taken one or more trips to Europe and charged up the expenses. And if not to Europe, they have gone somewhere else, and all these trips have cost the country a good deal of money.

Where is the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton)? We are told that he has left the country for some surgical operation. But could not he have had that operation done before he went to help Mr. Greenway in Manitoba. Why did he choose for his trip that particular time when parliament is sitting, and when we have so many things to discuss concerning the department of which he is the head? Although he is replaced by a very intelligent man, still no one can take the place of the responsible head. If he has gone for an operation, what kind of an operation?

An hon. MEMBER. A financial operation.

Mr. BERGERON. Some people say he has gone to float debentures, and I do not think the country would approve of an hon. minister leaving the House when in session for such a purpose. Has he gone for some other kind of an operation? Or has he gone so as not to hear anything more about the Yukon scandals or the Yukon revelations? We have heard a great deal about the Yukon revelations. Last year the hon. Minister of the Interior was very bold when he stood up in this House and refused to grant an investigation to the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) although that hon. member promised to resign his seat if he did not prove before a royal commission all the charges he had made in the House. But the hon. Minister of the Interior denied everything and said: Give us proofs. He was told that if an investigation were granted, the names would be given, and he would have all the proofs he could desire, but he refused, and he had such an ascendancy over his colleagues and such a hold on the party that they stood by him. An old man, whom I saw last fall in my county, could not find words strong enough to condemn the right hon. gentleman and his government for their mismanagement in the Yukon. This old man, who was a French Canadian, said: I am ashamed to say I am a Canadian when up there in the Yukon. The mining laws are the worst of any in the world. He went further and said that last spring a meeting of the miners was held to discuss the mining laws and the government administration. 'These men were peaceable, and there was no use in the government sending out mounted police or soldiers because miners are not fighters but peaceable men, they are quiet men; they are friendly to one another and stand by one another.' And he says: 'In the thirty-five years during which I have been a miner, I have never seen any difficulty between miners.' But he tells us, that last spring they had a meeting of the miners to consider what they should do with the officials of the government—to shoot them or hang them. The question of destroying them was decided, but they left it over to this spring to give the government a chance to redeem themselves. Whether it has been done or not, I do not know. But, I have here a letter which I wish to put in Hansard. It was sent not to me but to a gentleman in my county; I take it from the newspaper in which it was published. It is signed by a man whom I know, who is known by some of the members of this House, a strong political friend of the present Prime Minister in 1896. He is known by everybody in Valleyfield, and respected and esteemed by everybody, and you can get thousands of people, if necessary, to declare, not merely that they would believe him on oath, but that they would take his word. He writes as follows:

Dominion Creek, March 3, 1900.

Dear Sir,—I have already written to you, and having had no answer—

I suppose the mail service was so bad that the letter was not delivered.

—I hope you will get this letter, and that you will let me hear from you. I am happy to learn that the Conservative party has been victorious in Manitoba. I am no longer a Liberal. The corruption here is something frightful; there is a great deal of gold here, but the mining laws are all against the workers and in favour of the petty officers and the dissolute women. You cannot imagine the quantity of gold that is being taken out of this country and going to the Americans.

The best claims in the country are held by the Americans, and Canadians have no chance, for the officials are corrupted by the Americans. If there is a contract to be given out here, the Americans are nearly sure of it every time, and even the carrying of the mails to the creeks is given to them.

Just to think that one may have the chance of striking on a gold lead of untold wealth!

I found $100 in a shovelful of dirt, and to think that it is all going to the United States, when we need it so much in our own country!

It is outrageous, and I hope the Liberal party will be beaten at the next election.

You may show this letter to Mr. J. G. H. Bergeron, M.P., and when you see him tell him to write to me if he needs further information.

ALEXANDER CLARK.

Hon. gentlemen opposite are calling for names. Here I give them the name of a man who is known by everybody in Valleyfield and by some members in this House. The hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) knows this man, and will tell my hon. friend that he is worthy of belief. I suppose it was on account of these things that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) found that it was necessary to have an operation performed and left while parliament was sitting.

And where is the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte)? Is he in Paris? Is he in London? Is he in Brussels? Is he in Johannesburg? What do we know about him? All that we know is that he left here not long ago with a suite larger than that of Li Hung Chang when he was touring through this country; and we know that 'he is "doing the grand in a far-off land" three thousand miles away.' We read the papers and see that he is in Paris and ill-treating poor Mr. Perreault for not preparing accommodation for his suite. The next morning we read that he is in London and trying to make an arrangement between the British government and Mr. Kruger. Next, we read that he had an interview with Dr. Leyds. Is he authorized by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to do that work? The right hon. gentleman says he is happy to tell us that the Minister of Public Works is doing all this work for nothing. We are happy in Canada to have a man of his intelligence and resources to do all this work for nothing. It is true, he is paid $7,000 a year as Minister of Public Works; and we know that we can get no information concerning his department, because, of course, the officers do not know the affairs of the department as well as the minister does. And we know that he was right to go away, because we had a good many questions to ask him. No doubt he counted on the fact that we have a warm place in our hearts for the gentleman who represents him, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). But the Minister of Public Works, had he remained, would have had a hard time, and he knew it. He is doing the work for nothing, but he has $50,000 at his disposal to do the work for nothing. Now, the Minister of Public Works is an extraordinary man. The right hon. leader of the government may think that he can change his mind pretty quickly, but he is nowhere in comparison with the Minister of Public Works. That hon. gentleman can change entirely in one day. He is not as eloquent as my right hon. friend, but he can change quicker. No doubt the Minister of Public Works was the man at the bottom of that interview in the Globe, because, probably, he had prepared the pamphlet in Quebec against the purchase of rifles and other munitions of war by the old government, which drew forth such eloquence from the hon. member for St. James Division (Mr. Desmarais), when he spoke for young Canadians going to fight in South Africa if Sir Charles Tupper remained in power. Before he went away, the hon. Minister of Public Works was called upon to speak in Toronto. He went to a meeting of a political club there. Of course, they could not do anything but receive him well, for they were friends of the party and he was Minister of Public Works. And how did they receive him? They had heard of his French proclivities and speeches he made in Quebec, in which he declared that if he were not allowed to call himself a Frenchman he would leave the cabinet—if he could not only but call himself a Frenchman, he would not remain in politics; that he was a Frenchman before anything else; until even the Le Soleil, the organ of the government, told him that he was making a fool of himself. He might say he was a French Canadian, and be proud of it, as we are all proud of it. But, even so, there is no use in standing at the church door and provoking everybody by saying: I am a French Canadian before everything else, when, as a matter of fact, you are simply a Canadian. They received the hon. gentleman in Toronto to the tune of the Marsellaise. But, in the meeting he was so pro-British, that at the close, they let him go to the tune of God Save the Queen. And now he has gone across the ocean. What does he say there? He is more English than my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) now. He is more English than Mr. Chamberlain. He is more English than the Duke of Devonshire. Here is what I read of him:

Hon. Mr. Tarte arrived in London yesterday afternoon, coming from Paris. He fills the world—

The PRIME MINISTER. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) what he is reading from?

Mr. BERGERON. From a despatch in the newspaper.

The PRIME MINISTER. What paper?

Mr. BERGERON. It is a reproduction from the Times.

The PRIME MINISTER. What paper?

Mr. BERGERON. It appears in La Presse, but it is a reproduction of the Times.

Hon. Mr. Tarte has arrived in London—

The PRIME MINISTER. What is the date?

Mr. BERGERON. It was the date the Society of Arts gave a dinner. It was not long ago, and the date can be ascertained.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. If it so important to my right hon. friend, I can ascertain the date. I simply wanted to show what the minister said. If it is denied, we can bring the proof. But, the Prime Minister will not deny it.

The Hon. Mr. Tarte arrived in London yesterday afternoon from Paris. Speaking at a meeting of the Society of Arts, where Sir Charles Dilke read a paper entitled, 'A century in our Colonies,' Mr. Tarte said that the Canadians were good British subjects, but they wished to be British subjects in the fullest possible sense, which they could only be by having representation in the Imperial House of Commons.

No doubt when that hon. gentleman comes back from London, or Paris, or wherever he was, he will deny every word of that; he will go into the province of Quebec and declare that he never said it, but that Sir Charles Tupper said it. That is the kind of political warfare that we have to meet in the province of Quebec. But that is not all. The hon. gentleman, perhaps it is because he is paid no salary in Paris, has charged himself with fixing the destinies of the Transvaal. He has been a great deal with Dr. Leyds. I suppose the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), having proved himself able to lead one government in this country, is emboldened to attempt to lead another government in England, and he is trying to bring about a settlement between Great Britain and the Transvaal. He took the trouble to show Dr. Leyds the interest he takes in the difficulty between the Transvaal and the mother country, and he said to Dr. Leyds: You are, after all, only a colony of England; if you are not, you will become so, because you are going to be crushed; you are rebels, you are a rebel, Dr. Leyds. He went on to show by example how happy the Boers could be if they wanted. Why, says the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte), my father was a rebel. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, his father was thirteen or fourteen years old in 1837. But that doesn't make any difference. Dr. Leyds could not know anything about that. And so the Minister of Public Works advised the Boers to do as we did in Canada, accept the sovereignty of the British flag and become British subjects, promising him that they would be as happy as we are in Canada. Now, this son of a rebel has the faculty of saying whatever comes into his head. Of course, it doesn't amount to anything, because he can deny it afterwards. He went to Sorel one day with the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and addressed the people assembled from three or four counties. To show the interest that he had in them he shed a few tears and exclaimed: Ladies and gentlemen, I remember when I was a boy and used to come here with my dear old mother selling carrots and fruits on the market of Sorel. Well, the people thought he was a very good man, of course, and away off in Paris he can say whatever he likes with just the same freedom as he did in Sorel. This is one of the ministers whose presence we miss in this House, and who is spending so much money in Paris for the good of Canada and for the good of his followers.

Now, the only conclusion that we can come to is that the whole history of this government and their various policies, both when they were in opposition and since they have come into power, is a huge farce, or would be if it did not expose Canada to so much ridicule. The sooner the people of this country, Mr. Speaker, are called upon to express their opinions of this government the better. I only wish the hon. gentlemen opposite had decided to go to the country last fall as they were meditating to do. The people of Canada are tired of men who have deceived them; they are tired of the men who told them that they would not increase the debt, but who have increased it by over $8,000,000; they are tired of the men who told them that there were too many ministers in the Conservative government, but who have now two more ministers than the Conservatives had, with the corresponding increase in the money paid in salaries to ministers, who, although more numerous, do not perform the amount of work performed by those who preceded them. Sir, the people of this country are anxious to show hon. gentlemen opposite what they think of them. We have already had an example of what an outraged public opinion can do. There was a powerful provincial minister in Quebec, Mr. Mercier, who squandered the people's money as hon. gentlemen opposite have done. He obtained letters of credit enough to cover the road from Montreal to Quebec, and committed many other deeds which were against the spirit of the constitution. The people of our province took his measure, and in 1892 they sent Mr. Mercier back to the place from which he never should have emerged. A similar fate awaits the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues, and a great many of their supporters opposite. Just so soon as the people of this country have an occasion to express their opinion, they will send them back to the position which they never should have left in 1896.

Mr. J. H. BELL (P.E.I.) I am in favour of short speeches, and will try to practice what I preach. I shall make an effort to confine my observations well within the space of an hour. In order to do so, I shall have to pass over many of the interesting questions discussed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat; questions respecting debt, annual expenditure, capital, tariff, postage, cold storage, and subsidies to railways, and proceed at once to consider what is generally conceded to be the most interesting and important subject connected with this budget debate, viz: preferential trade with the mother country. I shall endeavour to discuss this question as far as possible apart from partisan politics, because I believe that the man who introduces that element into a question of this character is simply creating a prejudice against his views—is simply shutting the ears of half the people of Canada against the strength of his argument.

Sir, there are two propositions before us; one suggested by the Minister of Finance, the other by the leader of the opposition. That suggested by the Minister of Finance and the Liberal party of Canada, is simply this: They say we are under obligations to the British Empire for the protection of our commerce, our harbours and our homes, and for that reason, as well as in view of the benefits that will result to Canada, we favour a reduction of the duties on English goods, and that without asking from the British people anything more than that which they are already giving to us. That is the Liberal proposition. Then, there is the proposition of the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). He says, the Conservative party are opposed to a 33½ per cent reduction, to a 25 per cent, to a 12½ per cent, to any reduction upon goods imported from England, unless the English people will depart from their past policy, and will create a tariff against foreign goods in favour of Canadian products. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not told us what the extent of the tariff is, that they demand England to impose. Writers on the subject have put it down at 15 per cent, but for the sake of argument, we may consider it a tariff of 10 per cent. The proposition, on the part of these hon. gentlemen then, is that England shall impose a tariff upon foreign goods for the benefit of Canadian products, so as to make Canadian products worth 10 per cent more in the British market than the prices now obtained.

Mr. CLANCY. That is the hon. gentleman's rate.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) That is the proposition. The question is: Which of these two propositions commends itself to the judgment of the House? On behalf of the Liberal proposition, there seems to be four distinct arguments. The first is that the reduction upon the import of English goods has the effect of giving English goods to the Canadian consumer at a cheaper rate than before—cheaper to the extent of the reduction of the duty. If, for instance, during the year 1896, there was collected upon British goods, a duty of $8,000,000, by taking off 25 per cent of that duty, you lessen customs taxes by $2,000,000. That would be the measure of the benefit to the Canadian consumer. Of course, if you reduce the duty by 33½ per cent, there would be a corresponding decrease in the taxation, in all amounting to between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. But, that is not all. There are goods in Canada of domestic manufacture, and goods imported from foreign countries, and these wherever they come into competition with goods imported from England, are affected by the reduction in the English tariff. The reduction in the English tariff not only benefits the consumers of Canada, in the manner I have referred to, but to the extent of many millions more, by reason of the lowering of prices of goods of domestic and foreign manufacture that come into competition with English goods. That is the first argument.

The second argument is, that it gives to Canada a substantial preference in the English market. There is no doubt that our voluntary reduction on English goods has been a splendid advertisement for Canada. This generous act of the Canadian people has produced a correspondingly generous sentiment in the hearts of the people of England. The name of Canada, heretofore associated in the British imagination with distance, with snows, with hostile tariffs, is now a familiar and endearing word in every shop, in every manufactory, in every household throughout the bounds of the United Kingdom. I do not say, as some have contended, that an Englishman will pay more for Canadian goods, because they are Canadian, than for goods from any other country. He will buy in the best and cheapest markets. But often the Englishman is placed under circumstances where he can make his choice between markets, the quality and price being equal. He can buy his butter in Denmark or in Canada. He can buy his cheese or his bacon in the United States or in this country. What we say is that where the conditions are equal, the Englishman will give to Canada the benefit of his choice. The trade returns indicate that he has already done so. In 1896, the British imports of butter, from Canada, amounted to 5,000,000 pounds; in 1898, 19,000,000 pounds. In 1896, the British import of cheese amounted to 164,000,000 pounds, and in 1899, 189,000,000 pounds; and in the last six months, to 137,000,000 pounds. In 1896, the British imports of bacon amounted to 47,000,000 pounds, and in 1899, to 111,000,000 pounds. The total British imports in 1896, were $66,000,000, and in 1899, $99,000,000, an increase of 50 per cent. There is no man who looks at these figures, squarely, without prejudice, but will be forced to the conclusion, that Great Britain has, already, for some motive or other, given us a substantial preference in the English market. That is the second argument. The third argument is that this preference will benefit England. It will benefit her by giving her another open door for her manufactures. It will increase the trade between England and Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron), who has just resumed his seat, has produced certain figures which, of themselves, prove my contention. In 1898 Canadian imports from England, were $32,000,000, and in 1899, $37,000,000, showing a substantial increase of $5,000,000 in one year. The hon. gentleman by a system of averages contended that the reduction in the tariff caused a decline in our imports from England. I deny this, but if the argument were sound it would prove more than he desires—it would prove that free trade between Canada and England would not injure our manufactures.

The English people regard this generous act on the part of Canada, as being a substantial contribution towards the support of the British navy. I quote an article from the St. James Gazette, written after the introduction of the Fielding tariff in 1897 :

Canada at the present time does not contribute directly to the cost of Imperial defence, but indirectly has a very just claim to be considered as making by far the largest contribution. By the preferential customs duties which come into force on the first of August, 1898, Canada gives to Great Britain what is practically considered to be an allowance of £400,000 sterling annually. That is a magnificent contribution from the Dominion.

Well, if we can pay our national obligations and at the same time benefit Canada, that is the highest and best policy to which Canadian statesmen can devote their attention.

The fourth argument is that reduction of the tariff has tended to strengthen the ties that bind Canada and the mother country, and it has brought approximately nearer the consummation of Imperial federation. There is no doubt about the manner in which the mother country has treated Canada. To give this country birth, she poured forth her blood and her treasure as freely then as she is pouring it out to-day in South Africa. And, since our birth, she has extended over this country her protecting arms—the right arm of her navy; the left arm of her military power. She has given to the colonies, the blessings of civil, religious and political liberty. So full are these blessings that the cup may be said to be overflowing; there is nothing more to ask. Not only that, but she has given Canada power to impose whatever duties she may see fit upon importations. She has given Canada independence in her fiscal arrangements. How has Canada repaid her? By exercising the power that Britain gave to raise a hostile tariff against the mother country. The colonies have treated the commerce of the mother country just as they treat the commerce of Russia, or of Turkey, or of China. We have raised hostile tariffs, and sometimes preferential tariffs against the motherland. The heart of Mother England has been made sore by the ingratitude of her children.

But, Sir, there happily came a change. Three years ago this parliament resolved to pass an Act by which the duties upon English goods were to be reduced 12½ and subsequently 25 per cent. How was that Act received in England. We read of the great jubilee procession through the streets of London. Who were the personages in that procession, whose appearance evoked the highest enthusiasm? After the Queen and Lord Roberts, the man whose face before the British public evoked the highest enthusiasm was Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the honoured representative of the Dominion of Canada. The generous enthusiasm manifested that day for Canada has been continued unabated. Apart from our sending a contingent to Africa and paying the expenses Canada has done nothing that has drawn more closely together in ties of kinship and affection and loyalty the bonds which bind her to the mother country, than that reduction of the tariff upon English goods. Therefore, for these reasons: First, because it has been a benefit to the consumers of Canada; second, because it has given us a substantial preference in the English market; third, because it has been a benefit to England and has been considered by England as a substantial contribution by Canada towards the payment of our national obligations; and fourth, because it has drawn more closely the ties which bind us to the motherland. I am prepared to give my support to the proposition of the Liberal party of Canada respecting our trade relations with England.

What are the arguments advanced by the Conservative party in favour of the policy they propose? The first is that the creation of a tariff by Great Britain in favour of Canadian goods would be a great benefit to Canada, by giving to our producers a better price for their products, by causing a flow of English capital to this country, by developing the north-west, and by producing an era of general prosperity. The second argument is this: 'We are opposed to this jug-handled, this unilateral policy of the Liberal party, because it has not benefited either England or Canada. The third argument is: 'While we are ready to expend our treasure and to give our men in defence of the empire, when it comes to a matter of tariff, business is business.' In reply to these arguments, I say to our opponents. First: You are asking from the British people a trade preference which you have no reasonable hope they will ever grant; you are seeking the impracticable; you are outside the pale of practical politics. What support have these hon. gentlemen in England for their proposition? It was at one time claimed that the Duke of Devonshire favoured it; but the Duke of Devonshire in a letter swept away the basis of that hope—denying that he had ever made the proposition or that he had any authority to make it. It was at one time contended that Chamberlain favoured it; but Chamberlain within the past few days has repudiated the proposition. Then, it was argued that these hon. gentlemen would have the support of the Fair Trade party in England. Last year the Fair Trade party manifested their strength in the House of Commons in a vote on a somewhat similar matter to the one now under consideration—that of the Australian wine duties. They marshalled their forces under Sir Howard Vincent, and all the strength they could muster in the British House of Commons was 37 votes. But these hon. gentlemen would not have even the support of the Fair Traders. There is a vast distinction between the policy held by the Fair Traders and the policy propounded by the Conservative party in this House. The Fair Traders say, with regard to manufactures: 'If France, for instance, will not allow English manufactures to enter its markets, let us put on a tariff against French manufactures; let us have a fair trade between the two nations.' But they have never yet gone the length of advocating a tariff upon raw materials or food products. If they did so, they would have no status either in the Commons or before the people of England. But, Sir, what do hon. gentlemen opposite propose? The very essence of their proposition is, that the British parliament will put a tax of 10 per cent upon food products and raw materials—upon 70 per cent of the total products of the colonies. In that proposition they would not have the support of the Fair Traders. Would they have the support of the British people? What is there to lead us to suppose that they would? The British people would say: We have had experience of protection and of free trade. For thirty years we had preferential tariffs and protection, and what was the result? From 1811 to 1841 we read the history of what protection did for England. The population increased 50 per cent, yet there was no increase in the export trade; it was an era of low wages, of dear food, of bread riots, of incendiarism, of poor rates doubled, of parliamentary committees to inquire into the state of agriculture, of decline in general prosperity. It was well represented by a London labourer, who said: 'I be protected, yet I be starving.' But what took place after 1846 under free trade? The conditions became reversed. There was cheap food, no more bread riots, no more parliamentary committees, the wages of the workmen were increased, the common labourer gets to-day in England 65 per cent more wages than he did in the days of protection, the factory operator, 75 per cent more, skilled mechanics, 90 per cent more, and they have easier work and shorter hours, and are better fed.

The general progress of England under free trade has been marvellous. The wealth of the country increased threefold, her manufactures fivefold, her commerce sevenfold, and her shipping ninefold. The British people would naturally say: How can you expect us to go back to the old system of protection that was fraught with such evil results? So neither among men of influence who control public opinion, nor in the public press, nor among political parties in the Commons, nor among the British electorate, can hon. gentlemen opposite find any support for their proposition. It is, therefore, clear as the noonday that they are demanding the impracticable—they are outside the pale of practical politics.

My second argument in reply, is this: You are asking concessions which you have no right to expect under the circumstances and which you ought to be ashamed to demand. What, Sir, is the condition of things? Of the revenue which England raises, how much is devoted to civil purposes? Only 36 per cent. Sixty-four per cent goes to the support of the army and navy. How much of the revenue of the colonies goes for civil purposes? Ninety-six per cent of Canada's, 98 per cent of New South Wales', 96 per cent of Victoria's, 99 per cent of Queensland's, 96 per cent of New Zealand's, 97 per cent of Cape Colony's, 94 per cent of Natal's. If Canada were called upon to contribute to the same extent as England, to the support of the British army and navy, her contribution, based upon her present revenue, would be from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 a year. I do not say that that is the just measure of our national responsibility, but I do say that it gives to us some idea of that responsibility. It gives a glimpse of the nature and extent of the debt of gratitude which we owe to the motherland. I have heard the statement made in this House, and reiterated, that England owes more to Canada than Canada does to England. I have no sympathy with such a sentiment. I say that Canada owes more to England than she will ever be able to repay. We have been living in the past upon the charity of England. I am speaking to men who are honest and manlike and who desire to pay their debts, and I ask is it fair that Britain should have to pay for Canada, as much as she does for the support of her army and navy? We get as much benefit from those services as the people of England, we are as well able to pay.

Why then, should we insist that the English labourer, the artisan, the great manufacturing classes should bear the whole burden ?

But what is the proposition involved in the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition ? Is it that we should pay a portion of our national obligation ? No, it is that England shall add to her responsibility by taxing her food products and raw material 10 per cent for the benefit in addition to the great burdens she has already assumed. Under these circumstances, I say we are asking for a concession to which we have no right to expect, and which we should be ashamed to ask.

My third argument is this : In view of the welfare and predominance of the empire, it is neither in the interests of Britain to offer, nor in the interests of Canada to accept, such a preference as the Conservative party demands. Of course, if Canada were an independent country the case would be different. But the interests of Canada and England are bound up indissolubly together, and, Sir, we have got to look at this matter, not alone from the standpoint of Canada, but from the standpoint of the empire, not as Canadians but as British citizens, and in that light how does it present itself ? Look at the proportion of these hon. gentlemen and see exactly what it means. It is that England shall place a tax upon her raw materials and upon her food products for the benefit of Canada, so as to give Canada 10 per cent more for her food products in the British market. Now, what effect would that have ? If you add 10 per cent to the cost of raw material for manufacture, the necessary consequence is that you add 10 per cent to the cost of your manufactures. And what would be the result of adding 10 per cent to the price of food products ? It would produce the same result. You charge the workmen 10 per cent more for his food. The workman must live, he has a right to live and to a fair enjoyment of life. He has to charge that 10 per cent more to the price of his labour. The result is that that also must be added to the cost of the manufacture. So that both of these propositions, adding to the cost of the raw material and adding to the cost of the food product, tend to the same result, namely, to increase the cost of the manufacture. And, if you increase the cost of the manufacture, what then ? To-day England holds predominance in the manufactures of the world. She holds it, but she has to fight for it. What would happen if you added 10 per cent to the cost of her manufactures ? Or let me put the argument in another light. The ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) stated a few years ago that England had been driven from the markets of the civilized world. The leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) stated, in a speech he made upon Imperial federation, that England's commerce and manufactures were on the decline. I deny both these propositions. They are not founded, in fact. But, Sir, admitting, for the sake of argument, that they are true, what then ? Add 10 per cent to the cost of manufactures, under these conditions, what will be the result ? Why, the decline of England's manufactures will be accelerated ; they will soon be driven out of the markets of the world ; soon the time will come when the sails of England's commerce shall no longer glisten on the distant seas. And, with the decline of her commerce and her manufactures, what will follow ? The decline of her wealth—because England's wealth is created by England's commerce. And, with the decline of her wealth will go, necessarily, the decline of England's naval supremacy. Whence will you have your battle ships if you have not the money to build them or maintain them ? England's commerce, England's manufactures, England's naval supremacy are all bound up indissolubly together ; and if England's commerce and manufactures go, then England's naval supremacy goes with them. In that case you will have hastened, the time foretold by Macaulay, when the New Zealander will take his stand upon a broken arch of London Bridge, and gaze upon the ruins of St. Paul's, and the ashes of England's departed greatness. And, Sir, if England's commerce and manufactures and naval supremacy go, what will happen to Canada ? What was the lesson taught us by the last Spanish-American war ? It was this—that the parent country holds her colonies only so long as there is power in her right arm to protect them. When that right arm is paralyzed, the colonies go to the highest bidder, or to the first predatory robber who has power to seize them and to hold them. It is for this reason that I say that it is neither in the interest of Canada nor in the interest of the empire that England should place a tax upon her raw material or on her food products for the supposed benefit of Canada.

For the reasons that I have indicated : First, that we are asking something that is impracticable, that is outside of the pale of practical politics ; second, because we are asking something from England which we have no right to demand, and which we should be ashamed to ask ; and, third, because we are asking from England something which is neither in the interest of Canada nor the empire for us to obtain—for these reasons I am opposed to the proposition presented by the hon. leader of the opposition.

Now, Sir, we have before us the problem of Imperial federation—the problem of forming and consolidating an oceanic empire. The question is, in what way shall we accomplish it ? We have no precedent to guide us. We must make a precedent. Confederations have been formed, but none under the same conditions. There are vast distances to traverse ; oceans lie between the elements we wish to consolidate. There are diversities of climate, diversities of productions, diversions of fiscal policy. And yet, the difficulties are not insurmountable. We have smoothed away many of these already. That of distance has been practically removed. At present, the distance between Australia and England is no greater as to time than, years ago, was the distance between the several parts of England. We have removed the difficulties of sentiment. The feeling favouring Imperial federation is paramount in this House and throughout Canada and the colonies and the empire. We have removed trade obstructions in denouncing the Belgian and German treaties. We have established Imperial penny postage, and agreed upon the terms of an oceanic telegraph cable. We have other strands of empire yet to weave. We must establish a fast Atlantic service. We must improve our cold storage facilities so as to enable us to place our products on the English markets in the best possible condition. The colonies must agree with England as to their political status in the confederation that is to be, upon how they are to be represented in the supreme council of the empire, upon the powers and duties of the council, and upon the share the colonies shall bear in the defence of the empire. These are matters of detail that present no insuperable difficulties, these are matters that could be settled now, and the adjustment of the trade difficulties could be left to the future. But it is the trade difficulty that presents the most serious obstacle to complete federation. That must be solved sooner or later before confederation is complete. The difficulty arises chiefly from the different and opposing fiscal policies. All the colonies, except perhaps New South Wales, are protectionist. They inaugurated a system of protection with a view to their ultimate independence, to make each colony self contained and self existing. The mother country is for free trade with every vestige of protection excluded from her fiscal policy.

Now, how are we to propose a scheme that will harmonize these diverse elements? Some advocate a customs union, the extension of England's free trade policy to the rest of the empire. The colonies would not consent to that, because it would involve the doing away at one fell sweep of that protection under which our industries were cradled and developed. It would not be fair to them, it would produce discontent and disaster. Some advocate a Zollverein based upon the experience of Germany or upon the experience of the United States—free trade within the empire and protection against the rest of the world. That, so far as it is based upon experience, ought to commend itself. But nevertheless it is open to two serious objections. The first is that the colonies are not ready for free trade within the empire; the second is that the empire is not ready for protection against the world.

The third proposition is the compromise suggested by the resolution moved by the leader of the opposition, and in so far as it is a compromise, it ought to receive favourable consideration. The suggestion is that on the one hand the tariff wall should be taken down, on the other hand, that duties in favour of the colonies should be created. But that scheme is open to the objections that I have already indicated. Besides, if the fiscal policy of England and the colonies were upon an equal footing, if England had treated Canada as Canada has treated England, if England had a duty of 30 per cent against Canada as Canada has against England, a compromise could easily be made by which there would be a reduction of duties on both sides until they would ultimately be removed. But that is not the condition that exists. On the one side you can take down the tariff wall; on the other side to make a change involves a departure from principle, involves the creation of a tariff the effect of which will be disastrous. The proposition involves two ideas essentially obnoxious to the people of England, namely, taxation of food products and taxation of raw material. No doubt the difficulties are great, but I have confidence in the British people that they will be able to evolve order out of the chaos of these conditions and consummate a complete and final confederation of the empire.

In what way is it to be done? I believe it is to be done along the lines suggested by Mr. Chamberlain, namely, by approaching the difficulty on the side of least resistance. How is that? Exactly along the line suggested and adopted by this government, simply along the line of a reduction of the tariff upon British goods. I say that is along the line of least resistance. Why? Because it has brought benefits to England and benefits to Canada. And while it has done so, there is no gentleman of the opposition who has been able to point out that in any respect the lowering of the tariff by 12½, 25 and 33½ per cent has had the least prejudicial effect upon the manufactures of Canada. Therefore, it has been along the line of least resistance. This government has taken down the tariff to a certain extent, and I hope to see the day when a succeeding government, or this government, if it again comes into power, will take down another portion of the tariff wall until the time eventually comes when we will be able to meet Mr. Chamberlain face to face and say to him: You have laid it down as a condition precedent to the federation of the empire that there should first be free trade between Britain and her colonies, now we are ready to comply with your first condition. It must be manifest now that if we wish to consummate a scheme of Imperial federation, we cannot do it successfully by adopting the policy of the Conservative party. The effect of that will be to raise a barrier like a Chinese wall between us and the object which we desire to attain. The only way we can accomplish it is by developing the policy that has been adopted by the Liberal party of Canada.

Now, Sir, what would happen if the tariff wall was taken down in its entirety? What would be the effect upon Canada if we had free trade between this country and England? First, the effect would be vastly to increase the trade between England and Canada; England would buy more from Canada and Canada would buy vastly more from England; second, the consumers of Canada would get the benefit of cheaper manufactured goods; third, English capital would be directed to Canada to develop the production of raw material and food products; fourth, immigration would be stimulated from the British Isles towards this portion of the empire. British capital would establish manufactories in Canada, partly because they would be nearer the markets of this continent, and partly because they would be closer to the raw material to be manufactured. We have in Canada vast manufacturing advantages yet undeveloped. In this age there is a contest between the power of steam and the power of electricity. Each strives for the mastery, for the control of our great manufactories. Soon steam as a power, will be relegated to the past, and soon the manufactories will be operated, heated and lighted by electricity, just exactly as the cars upon our streets are operated, heated and lighted by electricity. To produce that electricity cheaply, we require enormous water power. England has not water power. Canada has the greatest, the finest, the most magnificent water power on this earth. Under free trade, England would establish vast manufacturing concerns in this portion of the empire and of which our people would get the full benefit. Canada would not only be the country where raw material and food products were produced in abundance, but one of the greatest manufacturing countries of the world.

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). Mr. Speaker, it is getting to be rather late in the evening, the House is pretty empty, and I will ask that the debate be adjourned.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on, go on.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who is leading the House?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Go on, go on.

Mr. MOORE. Is it possible that I have to go on at this late hour?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the hon. gentleman

(Mr. Moore), may very well go on until twelve o'clock, if we expect to get through the debate at all. I do not want to ask anything unreasonable, but, he may go on now, and if he cannot finish at twelve o'clock, he can then move the adjournment.

Mr. MOORE. I have listened with interest to the speech which has been made by the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Bell). It has been mainly made up of reasons why England should not grant to this country preferential trade. I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman, but I can say that I think it will be high time for England to refuse when Canada asks her. It is our business to make the proposition, to enforce it by every argument, and every force we have, and not to put arguments into the mouths of the English people to show that Canada does not desire it, and that England should not give it. I listened, also, with some interest, to the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd), who submitted a mass of figures to prove that the government have administered the affairs of the country in a satisfactory manner. I was reminded, in regard to the position he took, by his gyrations and wanderings out and in, in order to make a favourable showing in regard to the financial position of the country, of a provincial land surveyor in the province of Quebec. He was asked to survey a village municipality. The law requires that there should be a certain number of houses on a certain quantity of land. In order to comply with that law, he would go along the street, take in a house, and come back again to the street, and in that way secured the legal number of houses required. When the matter was brought before the county council, a witness was examined and asked what kind of a line the surveyor ran. He said it was a very crooked line, that it went out and in, and that there was nothing straight about it. It was very zig-zag. How zig-zag was it? It was so zig-zag that you could stand with one foot on the zig and the other foot on the zag. That makes me think, in regard to the position of the hon. member for South Brant, that he was so zig-zag in his arguments, that a person could stand with one foot on the zig and with another foot on the zag. I can only say, in regard to his financial figures, that they were very voluminous. We have only to take one straight course, and that is taking the average of expenditures from 1891 to 1896, and comparing them with the expenditures from 1882 to 1891, we decreased the expenditure of this country by $388,000 a year. Since the present government came into power, hon. gentlemen have increased the expenditure, they have increased the public debt, and increased the taxation. Consequently, we need not go rambling all over the country to undertake to prove to the people of Canada, that the government have conducted the financial affairs of the country in a satisfactory manner. There was a clergyman that employed a man to work for him, and on Sunday, he went to church to hear him preach. He took down notes, and when the sermon was over, the clergyman came to him and saw them, and he said: Why did you put down these things? I did not say anything like that. The man replied: I know you did not say that, but you were preaching true doctrines that would send me to the devil, so I put in something that would save me. The course that the hon. gentleman has taken is, instead of preaching the true doctrine, to put in something that will save himself and his party although he is deceiving the people. I listened with a great deal of attention and interest to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and I was very much charmed with his facility and ease of expression, and the ingenious manner in which he presented his views upon the intricate questions which are agitating the minds of the people as to the best means to employ, and the most efficient policy to pursue in developing the valuable resources of our country, and to hasten her gait in the great race of nations. Her strides have been long and rapid, and the progress she has made since confederation must fill the hearts of all patriotic citizens with pride and satisfaction. I listened with interest to the ingenious manner in which the hon. Finance Minister presented his case, and was reminded of what was once said of a very eminent man in the old country, which, I think, is applicable to the hon. Minister of Finance, 'that he had the faculty of making the worse appear the better case,' very strongly developed. The chief argument of the ministers and their supporters, is that the country is prosperous; that the people are contented and satisfied, and that the Liberal party is the prime cause of this prosperity, claiming in effect, figuratively speaking, that they in some miraculous manner have come into possession of Hiawatha's magic mittens and enchanted moccasins, with which they have clothed the hands and feet of young Canada, by which she is breaking down all opposition to her progress in the race in which she has entered. The grand old Conservative party, the father of young Canada, the author and the instigator which set the young industrial heart of her Dominion throbbing with pulsations of new and vigorous life will never fail to rejoice when her illustrious offspring is found successfully battling her way to the front and building up a country of which her founders will have every reason to be proud. But, Sir, I regret to have to say that in all the great schemes which have proved to be so advantageous to this country, the Liberal party have, figuratively speaking, put the ball-and-chain on the feet of Canada to prevent her from making progress in the great race which she has undertaken. But, Sir, the grand policy of the old Conservative party carried out for eighteen long years, has placed this country in the proud position which she now occupies, and which gave to the worthy representative of our noble Queen in this country a chance to congratulate Canadians upon the great prosperity which they are now enjoying. The great Conservative party therefore claims that the measure of prosperity which Canada is enjoying is mainly due to their wise fiscal policy in protecting Canadian industries, in giving the control of the Canadian markets to Canadian producers, and in opening up the country to colonization and settlement by the construction of railways and canals. On the other hand the succession of good harvests, the fair prices obtained in England, famine in some countries and drought in others from which England usually draws her supplies, these things are what have made us prosperous in this country, and not the policy of the Liberal government, who have been frequently challenged on the floor of this House to point to one single important scheme of which they have been the originators, which has contributed in any respect to the prosperity of our country. It is a well-known historical fact that good times or bad times do not run continuously; but that one succeeds the others in almost regular intervals. It has been an historical fact every since Pharaoh's dream of the seven lean kine eating up the seven fat kine in Egypt, that times of prosperity follow times of depression in cycles. Just before the Liberal government came into power the times began to improve in 1895. Various countries in the world had, previous to that time, been swept by a wave of depression which affected Canada the least owing to the wise fiscal policy of the Conservative government. The good times of which the Liberals are boasting are prevailing all over the world, and Canada cannot be said to be in a more prosperous condition than many other countries, and cannot be said to be progressing as rapidly as she would be had she the full benefit of that protective tariff which enables her to rejoice over her present condition. It is without doubt that Canada has not progressed to the extent she would have progressed had the Liberal-Conservative party remained in power with that old policy in full force.

Before proceeding to discuss some special subjects, which did not engage the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), I desire to call the attention of the members of this House to some of the pre-election pledges of the Liberal leaders. The speech of the Minister of Finance was the most conspicuous for what it omitted. He was not as reckless as some other ministers and some of his followers, in claiming as they have done that the Liberal government has carried out all the promises made previous to the elections of 1896. I know of no principle in ethics or philosophy which justifies individuals or governments in breaking their pledges and their promises. Those who make pledges and promises and benefit by them, and then break them, forfeit the respect and confidence of the people. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) omitted to state that his government had increased the public debt since he came into power, by over $7,000,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I did not.

Mr. MOORE. The hon. minister denies that his government has not increased the debt by over $7,000,000. If he does that he denies what is a positive fact and which I can prove from the blue-books. I have in my possession the public accounts which show that the debt was increased by over $7,750,000, since the Liberals came into power.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who denied it?

Mr. MOORE. You did.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend said I omitted to state it, I did not omit it; I showed it in my budget speech.

Mr. MOORE. I understood you to deny that your government had increased the debt by over $7,000,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said that the hon. gentleman was mistaken in saying that I omitted to state it.

Mr. MOORE. Then it is a fact that the public debt has increased by over $7,750,000. The figures which the Finance Minister submitted to the House proved that his party has greatly increased the burden of taxation in this country, and that the load which we are carrying this year, is more than $7,000,000 greater than it was in 1896. Neither did the Minister of Finance deny, that instead of reducing the expenditure, as the Liberals promised to do if they got into power, by from two to five millions dollars a year, they have increased the expenditure by over $8,000,000, making an amount of annual difference between their promise and performances of from ten million to fifteen million dollars a year. The Liberal party when in opposition never tired of calling the Conservative party corrupt and dishonest and other hard names. They promised that when they got into power they would elevate the standard of political morality in the Dominion. Well, Sir, the charges in reference to their administration of the Yukon and the manner in which they carried the election in Ontario go to prove, that the standard of morality has never been so low in the Dominion as it is at the present time. The appointment of members of the House of Commons to offices of trust and emoluments was most vigorously condemned by the Liberals when in opposition, as a violation of the independence of parliament, and yet we find that thirteen members have been appointed to office by the Liberal government within the last three years and several others, it is said, are anxiously waiting for translation. The Liberal party when in opposition vigorously condemned the letting of contracts without first advertising for tenders, but after they got into power this principle was also violated. The Liberals also bitterly censured the Conservative party for incurring obligations, or paying money without first securing authorization from the people's representatives in parliament assembled, but notwithstanding that, they paid out large sums of money on Governor's warrants and incurred great obligations without such consent of parliament, immediately after getting into office.

There is another very important question which the Minister of Finance did not touch upon, and that is the subject of prohibition. It is a subject which has agitated the minds of the people of this country for many years, which is agitating the best minds of this country at the present time, and which will continue to agitate them until it is finally settled; and when it is settled it will have to be settled to the satisfaction of the highest thought and the best element in the Dominion of Canada. The liquor traffic is looked upon by a very important portion of the population of this country as a great obstacle to the prosperity of Canada. They look upon it as an enemy to the home, an enemy to the church and an enemy to the state. It has crossed the pathway, directly or indirectly, of every man, woman and child in this country; it has crossed the threshold of otherwise happy homes; it has laid its blighting hand on some of its victims, and left sorrow and sadness in its train; it has invaded the sacred precincts of the church, and desecrated this the most sacred institution in the land; and we are told that it has insinuated itself into our parliamentary halls and is sapping the very foundations of our state. The Liberal party, previous to the elections of 1896, for many years claimed that they were the only temperance people of this country who could be depended upon, and that the only way we could get prohibition was by turning out the old corrupt Tory party and putting the Liberal party in power. They put a prohibition plank in their platform of 1893, promising to submit a plebiscite on prohibition to the people. When they came into power, they did not present the plebiscite the first session; they did not present it the second session; and they would not have presented it the third session had they felt that it would be safe to play any longer with the prohibitionists and temperance reformers of this country. In the third session of this parliament, they came down with a plebiscite measure. They submitted it to the people, with a pledge from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), that if the voice of the people, as expressed at the polls, was in favour of prohibition, the party had promised it, and the party could be trusted. The Prime Minister made the statement, in answer to questions put to him at different places, that they were pledged to submit a plebiscite on prohibition to the people, and that if a majority of the people asked for it at the polls, they should have prohibition, even if it cost power to the Liberal party for ever. These words went through the country, and they were repeated on every temperance platform and by ministers in their pulpits, and reiterated by associations and organizations of temperance men; and the man who uttered them was looked upon as a hero, as a Moses who had arisen to conduct them out of the wilderness of intemperance to the promised land of prohibition. The plebiscite was submitted; a large majority of those who voted, voted in favour of prohibition; and then, I was sorry to hear the hon. Minister of Agriculture stand up and say that he had consulted a great many of the prohibitionists on both sides of politics and had communicated with others, and that the consensus of opinion was that the government would not be justified in bringing down a prohibitory law with such a small vote. I had in my hands at the time resolutions passed by hundreds of organizations throughout the country, condemning the government in the strongest possible terms for their violation of this sacred pledge which they had made to the people; and I was the more astonished when I heard the Prime Minister say that there was an implied agreement between him and the members of his party, including, I presume, the Minister of Agriculture—and if he was not privy to it, he can deny it here to-night—that unless there was a majority of the votes on the lists in favour of prohibition the subject should be dropped and not agitated any more by the party.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). There was no secret arrangement made of any kind whatever.

Mr. MOORE. The right hon. Prime Minister made the statement that there was.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, never.

Mr. MOORE. The hon. Minister of Agriculture was asked by the Hon. Mr. Ives if that was so, and he did not deny it. If he denies it now, it is very late in the day; but, at the same time, we must accept his denial. Hansard will show what was said in regard to that matter; but, I think I am correct, and I have no desire to misrepresent hon. gentlemen. We found ourselves in this position, after the government had spent $200,000 of the people's money, and the people themselves had spent large amounts in purchasing printing matter, and in employing people to lecture all over the country. The temperance people rejoiced when it was flashed through the length and breadth of this land that they had won a great victory at the polls. Imagine their sorrow and disappointment at the conclusion at which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture came, that they would not introduce a prohibitory law, although a majority of the votes cast were in favour of prohibition. I do not intend to extend my remarks further on this matter, because it has been discussed so thoroughly and so generally all over the country that it is unnecessary for me to say more; but, Sir, from the temper and the tone of the resolutions which have been passed by the temperance organizations of this country, it is evident that they are not going to be satisfied with the answer which the government have given, and that the time is coming when this government will have to meet face to face the temperance reformers of this country, whom they have misled and deceived, and will have to answer for the violation of their sacred pledge.

Another subject, which I will not occupy very much time in discussing, is the subject of protection. The Liberal leaders pledged themselves that if they obtained power they would kill protection, they would eliminate every vestige of protection from the tariff. The hon. Minister of Finance has not pretended that they have done so; consequently, they have violated that amongst their other promises. They have accused the Conservative party of saying, from the political platforms in the country, that if the Liberal party succeeded in getting into power in 1896, all the industries of this country would be ruined. When that statement was made they expected that the Liberal party, if they got into power, would carry out their promises and kill protection. Had they eliminated every vestige of protection from the tariff, the greatest disaster and depression would have come upon this country that has ever been known in its history. The Liberal party claim that the farmers have been exporting more of their produce and have received better prices for it since they got into power than before.

I have a few figures to submit which I think will throw a little light upon that matter and be perhaps a surprise to some hon. gentlemen. I think that hon. gentlemen will admit that horses, cattle, sheep, butter, cheese, lard, wool and other articles are very important Canadian products. Here is a statement of the exports of horses, cattle and sheep in 1896, under Conservative rule, compared with the same exports in 1899, under the Liberal administration :

	No.	Value.
1896—Horses	21,852	$2,113,095
1896—Cattle	104,451	7,082,542
1896—Sheep	391,490	2,151,283
		$11,346,920
1899—Horses	12,384	898,063
1899—Cattle	211,847	8,522,835
1899—Sheep	405,322	1,540,857
		10,961,155

More exported in 1896 than 1899.....$ 385,165

We have heard the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and others boast of the great impetus that our trade in butter has received, and there is no one who can fail to rejoice when any industry is prospering. But they would lead us to believe that there never has been a time in our history when we exported so much butter and received so much for it as within the last few years. Well, here is a statement of our exportations of butter from 1879 to 1881, the first three years of the Conservative government, compared with the years 1897 to 1899, under hon. gentlemen opposite :

1879	$2,101,897
1880	3,058,069
1881	3,573,034
	$8,733,000

Average per year first three years of Conservative rule after Mackenzie's time

Average per year, first three years Liberal rule—	$2,911,000
1897	$2,089,173
1898	2,046,686
1899	3,700,873
	$7,836,732

Average, three years.....$2,612,244

More in 1879-80-1 by.....$ 896,268
Or more each year on average..... 298,756

Lard is another important item, and the following will show the comparative exports under each administration :

1894	$ 76,689
1895	104,130
1896	12,872
	$193,691
1897	16,965
1898	19,096
1899	67,869
	103,930

Or nearly $90,000 more lard was exported in the last three years under Liberal-Conservative rule than during the last three of the present government.

In cheese there has been an excess of exportation, but not an appreciable excess in the price. I have looked in vain to find a large increase in the price of cheese, on the encouragement of which industry we have spent a large sum. It brought, according to the blue-books, 8·474 cents in 1896, and 8½ cents in 1899, a very small fraction in advance. Then our exports of wool and beef and canned meats were as follows :

Wool exported—

1894	$ 16,156
1895	1,049,459
1896	823,920

Last three years Con. rule..... $1,889,535

1897	1,427,957
1898	177,154
1899	14,420

The hon. Minister of Agriculture has taken a great deal of interest in eggs. I have here a statement, taken from the Statistical Year Book, of the amount of eggs exported since 1879, and I find that the average export during the eighteen years of Conservative government was 1,438,207 dozen, and during the three years of Liberal government since 1896 it amounted to 1,166,948 dozen, or the average export each year under Conservative rule was 271,259 dozen in excess of the average under Liberal rule. It is now between 12 and 1 o'clock, and I am getting a little exhausted; and if the leader of the House will consent, I will move the adjournment of the debate. I can stay here until to-morrow morning if necessary, but I think it is hardly necessary.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Wednesday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 11, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 137)—from the Senate—further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier.)

Bill (No. 138)—from the Senate—to amend the Admiralty Act.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier.)

ESQUIMALT DRY DOCK—DOCKING CHARGES.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the hon. the Minister of Public Works received any letters or petitions since last session in regard to the docking charges now in force at the Esquimalt dry dock? If so, what is their nature?

2. Did not the minister promise last session that he would look carefully into the question as to whether the present rates are in the best interests of the port of Victoria and the trades connected with the ship-building industry in British Columbia?

3. If so, has the minister decided as to whether the rates should be kept as they are, or whether, having due regard to the above interests and those of the government, the rates could be raised to a figure more in unison with those charged at the other government dry docks in Canada?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Yes. Two communications have been received, one representing that the changes made in the tariff were not justified by existing facts; that the statements made by the dockmaster urging a reduction in the rates, were not correct, and suggesting an inquiry by a competent commissioner on the spot, as well as in the statements made by the dockmaster concerning the marine railway. The other communication stating that the writer desired his name to be considered as not having been placed on a petition which had been sent to the department asking for a reduction of rates. 2. The hon. the Minister of Public Works has given serious consideration to this matter, but before taking any further action, he desired some time to elapse in order to see what effect the change in rates would have upon the receipts of the dock. 3. No final decision has yet been arrived at.

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

What amount was collected for newspaper postage under the one-quarter of a cent a pound rule, from January 1 to March 31?

What amount was collected for same purpose under the one-half a pound rule during the same period of the year 1900?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The postage collected on newspapers during the quarter ended 31st March, 1899, was $10,832.39; during the two months ended 28th February, 1900, $17,982.39. The returns for the month of March are incomplete.

THE GENERAL OFFICER COMMANDING.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the right hon. leader of the government whether there is any truth in the following report in the Gazette :

Ottawa, April 10.—Major Drummond, military secretary to His Excellency, is the new commandant of the Canadian militia. He left Cape Town last Saturday for Canada. He will receive his promotion to colonel in the Imperial army and hold the local rank here of general. Major Drummond is an officer of the Scots Guards, and previous to going to South Africa as Colonel Otter's chief of staff, had seen active service in Egypt.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). What paper is my hon. friend quoting from?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Montreal Gazette.

The PRIME MINISTER. He might be sure that the statement is not correct. It is not correct. I may say that we have no information on the subject.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I thought that, possibly, the fact of my quoting this paper was the reason the hon. gentleman would not reply in the manner in which he generally does, and in which I expected he would reply.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT ANNUAL REPORT.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he can give us any information as to the probable time when his report for last year will be brought down. The estimates may be discussed within a short time, and it is quite impossible to discuss any matter connected with my hon. friend's department until that report is brought down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The hon. gentleman is quite right, and is most reasonable in his observations. I think that the printing of the report is completed, or about to be completed, and I have no doubt it will be laid on the Table immediately after the Easter adjournment.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I want to take a single moment, and only a moment, before the Orders of the Day are called, to draw the attention of my hon. friend from West Quebec (Mr. Dobell) to a very serious misstatement he made in the House in my absence the other night, in regard to the charge for my travelling expenses when I came out from London on the last occasion. The hon. gentleman a good deal more than trebled the amount in the statement he made. He will find, by reference to the Auditor General's Report, that the figures he quoted were for an entirely different service—an expenditure carried on by the Deputy Minister of Finance in transferring my household effects from London to Canada; they had no reference whatever to my travelling expenses. I may be permitted to mention that even if they had been a little larger, I think I would have been justified, when it is remembered that I brought a contribution from the Imperial government of £750,000 sterling for the fast Atlantic service.

Mr. R. R. DOBELL (West Quebec). I am very grateful to learn that the figures I took from the Auditor General's accounts did not cover the amount of the private and personal expenses of the hon. leader of the opposition, but certain expenses attending the removal of his furniture.

PURCHASE OF HORSES FOR BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I beg to draw the attention of the government to an item which appears in the Montreal Gazette :

New York, April 10.—The 'Journal and Advertiser' to-morrow will print the following:

'A contract to buy 30,000 to 35,000 horses for the British government was about completed in this city yesterday. The horses are for cavalry regiments and the artillery service in South Africa, and they will cost several million dollars.

'This is the largest single order of horses ever placed in this country.

'The horses must conform practically to the United States army strict requirements in size, breed and soundness. This limits the choice practically to the breeds reared on the producing centres of Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Iowa. Buffalo has been selected as the point of inspection where the horses will be brought by the contractors who will act as the British government's agents. When accepted at Buffalo, the horses sufficiently rested, will be shipped to this city and loaded on transports in lots of about 1,000 each.

'The British army's purchasing agent will go to Buffalo to-day (Wednesday) to inspect the yards there. He hopes to get his horses at the rate of 5,000 a week.

What I wish to ask is, whether the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence and the Minister of Agriculture has made any effort to induce the British government to purchase a portion of their supply in Canada, where, I think, we have many suitable horses for the purpose?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend can rest assured that representations have been made to that effect to the British authorities, and I have reason to believe that a result will follow immediately.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I have repeatedly cabled the High Commissioner in London that we would be able to supply a large number of serviceable and useful horses to the Imperial army in South Africa, and I believe that before long purchases will be made in Canada.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty, and the motion of Sir Charles Tupper in amendment thereto.

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). In speaking upon one portion of the subject which I attempted to place before you, Mr. Speaker, last evening, I made a statement with regard to the action of the government on the subject of prohibition. I said that the right hon. the First Minister, had declared that there was an implied secret agreement between the prohibitionists and non-prohibitionist members of his party, according to which, if there was not a majority sufficiently large in favour of prohibition as a result of the plebiscite, the matter would be dropped, and I asked the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), if he had been implicated in that agreement. The hon. gentleman denied that any such agreement had been made. I do not wish to do him an injustice, perhaps I spoke a little too strongly, and I am very glad indeed, to be assured by him, that he was not connected with any bargain of that nature. But I find, on looking at the Hansard report of the remarks of the right hon. the First Minister, on the 21st March, 1899, the following :

Let me say this: When we put that plank into our platform there was an implied agreement between the members of the party who believed in prohibition and those who did not believe in prohibition. The implied agreement on the part of those who did believe in prohibition was that if the voice of the people spoke unmistakably, if it should be shown that the great majority of the electorate were in favour of prohibition, then those who did not believe in it would surrender their views to those of their brothers, and work honestly for the success of that policy.

I think that is sufficiently clear to prove that there was an implied secret agreement between the members of the Liberal party—between those who were prohibitionists and those who were not. If the hon. Minister of Agriculture was not connected with that agreement, I am very much astonished indeed that he, the father of the plebiscite, would have been so deceived by his Prime Minister as not to have been made acquainted with an implied agreement of that kind.

I now go on with the connection of my treatment of the financial question where I left it last evening. Liberal leaders have submitted that they have greatly lowered the rate of customs duty. Well, the trade returns show the following :

The duty, on the total value of goods imported, dutiable and free in 1894, 1895 and 1896, amounted on an average to 16·32 per cent. From 1897 to 1899, it amounted to 16·09 per cent. Thus they did lessen the tariff to the extent of 22-100ths of 1 per cent, an infinitesimal reduction. The amount of customs duties, per head, from 1894 to 1896, averaged, for the three years, $3.77½. From 1897 to 1899, they average $4.26½, or the average was 49 cents per head more in the three years of Liberal rule than in the last three years of Conservative administration.

The Statistical Year-Book of 1898, page 190, gives us this information: From 1879 to 1896, eighteen years, the average was 28·39 per cent, and from 1897 to 1899, it was 29·50 per cent, or 1·11 per cent greater under Liberal rule than the average of eighteen years of Conservative rule.

The total duty collected in 1899 on dutiable and free goods was $154,051,593. The average rate of duty on dutiable goods was 28·71 per cent, and the average rate on dutiable and free goods was 16·70 per cent. The average rate on goods dutiable and free from 1894 to 1896 was 17·13½ per cent, and from 1897 to 1899, 17·17½ per cent. That means that the rate under the Liberal government has been ·04 per cent more than under the Liberal-Conservative administration. I think I recollect the hon. Minister of Finance made it over 2 per cent; but I have taken it just as the account stands in the Statistical Year-Book and the Trade and Navigation Returns, and I find he made a mistake by including 16,000,000 bushels of corn which he ought not to have included, and the exclusion of which from his figures would, perhaps, make his figures and mine agree more closely than they do. The Minister of Finance condemned the late government for their deficit, and exulted over the surplus of the present year of somewhere about $4,000,000 and the anticipated surplus of the present year of somewhere about $7,000,000. Now, I do not think that it is in all cases an evidence of good financial management to have, either in municipal corporations or in the Dominion, a large surplus. Municipal officers may levy a rate of taxation on the taxable property in a municipality which will return many thousands of dollars more than they require; but I am sure the taxpayers would not feel that it was good management. I think the same principle should hold good here. If our Finance Minister taxes the people seven or eight millions more than is necessary to carry on the financial affairs of the government, it is nothing that they should exult over. Between—

Mr. COWAN. Would you lower the duties?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. COWAN. I have the right to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Moore) a question, with his permission.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. MOORE. Would I lower the duties? I will let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) know before I get through that I would lower the duty on one article, and I will give my reasons why. I have always been a protectionist, and would not take the duty off any article where that duty was necessary to secure the control of a Canadian industry for the Canadian producer. During the rule of the Liberal-Conservative party, from 1890 to 1896, when hard times began to bear heavily upon the people, the Liberal-Conservative government began taking off duties on the necessaries of life. Ten per cent was taken off common window glass, and 15 per cent off molasses. And in 1891, the entire duty was taken off raw sugar and the duty on refined sugar was reduced. From 1890 to 1895, the reduction of the tax on sugar represented a remission of taxes to the amount of $19,851,995. On common window glass, used by the labouring classes more than by the wealthy people, the reduction meant $185,989 to the people, and on molasses, $335,775. On these three articles alone the reduction of taxation was $20,373,750. After the present government came into power, what was the result in regard to sugar? They put the duties up, and now the poor people of this country have to pay a dollar for 20 pounds instead of getting 25 pounds for a dollar, as they did under Conservative rule. But there is one test which, I think, must be convincing to every hon. gentleman on both sides of this House, and that is a comparison of the expenditure under the two governments. The annual average expenditure from 1887 to 1891 was $42,530,000, while the average annual expenditure from 1892 to 1896 was $42,141,763, making a difference of $387,237 less between 1892 and 1896 than between 1897 and 1891, showing that the Liberal-Conservative party required less to carry on the financial affairs of the country in the last three years they were in office than in the five years previous. But now that the Liberal party are in power, they have increased our expenditures by seven or eight million dollars a year. This gives a fair comparison between a financial management of the two parties. By referring to the Public Accounts, page 30, we find that the taxation in 1898-9 was $34,958,069.21. In 1895, it was $27,759,285.42, or an increase of 1898-9, under Liberal rule, over 1895-6 of $7,198,783.79. On page 28 of the Public Accounts, we find that there was in 1899 an increase in the public debt over 1895-6 of $7,776,013.83, and an increase in the expenditures of 1899 over 1896 of $9,840,251.85. These figures are taken from the public accounts, which are compiled under the care of hon. gentlemen opposite themselves. I presume that the blue-books are to the politician what the Bible is to the theologian—the authority which is not to be disputed. We have to take it for granted that these things are correct. That being the case, we can come to no conclusion but that the Liberal party have not carried out their pledges and professions to the people of this country of reduced taxation, reduced public debt and reduced expenditures. The Liberal-Conservative party claim that, had they remained in power, the country would have been more prosperous than it is, and we give the reasons why. We heard and have read the speech made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in the city of Toronto last August, wherein he stated that the country had progressed more in the last three years than it had progressed in the thirty years before. I have some figures here which I will submit to hon. members of this House, from which they can judge whether the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce was correct or not. These figures were taken from the public records, and, I presume, they are correct. If they are not correct, I am not to blame. There are 22 different items by which, I think we will all consent, the progress and prosperity of this country may be judged—railway mileage, shipping tonnage, tons of railway freight, railway earnings, passengers carried, life insurance, fire insurance, deposits in the chartered banks, deposits in the savings banks, discounts by chartered banks, deposits in loan companies, exports of animals and agricultural produce, exports of cheese, exports of coal, exports of fisheries, yield of fisheries, exportation of manufactures, exports of minerals, total imports of the country, total exports of the country, and population. I think that these are all very important items; and, if I can show from the public records that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was wild in his statement, we must conclude that his speech should not have very great effect either in this House or throughout the country in which it has been so widely circulated. The percentage of increase in these twenty-two articles in the thirty years previous to the last three years was 12.336 per cent. You divide that by 30 and it will give an average of one year; you divide that by 22 and it will give the average increase for one article. Taking it in that way and treating both sides the same, we find that the average increase of each article for every year in the 30 was 18.76, and that the increase the last three years on one article for each year was 5.48 per cent, showing that the rate of progress of this country under Conservative rule for the previous 30 years was greater in those items by 13.28 per cent.

One of the promises of the Liberal party when in opposition was that they would make the cost of living cheaper. The reduction by the preferential duties, though small in the aggregate, is heavy in special lines to which it applies, and the manufacturing industries in Canada have to meet the reduction which English manufacturers are able to make in prices wherever protection is lowered. The proposition which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) now makes to reduce the duties on importations from Great Britain to 33½ per cent, practically puts many of the Canadian manufacturers out of business. They will either have to close down their manufacturing establishments or reduce expenses; and when a manufacturing establishment reduces expenses, what is the first thing they do? They reduce the wages of the poor operators. That is the way in which they reduce expenses at first, they cut down the wages of their employees, many of whom are now working at starvation prices, and liable to be discharged or turned out into the street at almost any minute. Therefore we might expect, as soon as the reduction to 33½ per cent takes place, that the operatives and artisans, if they get employment, will have to work for less wages and perhaps a less number of hours than they do at present, and their wages are certainly low enough already.

Sir, the farmers of this country are a very important class, and, I think, are worthy of the consideration of the government, worthy of the consideration of the people of this country; and any favours that can be done to this important class ought not to be above the consideration of the present government. I have some figures here that will convince any hon. gentleman in this House, and convince the people of the country that prices to the farmers have been increasing and are yet increasing. On farm wagons we find there is an increase of 10 per cent this year over last; on Concord buggies, 10 per cent; on top buggies, 20 per cent; mowing machines, 12 per cent; horse rakes, 20 per cent; binders, 10 per cent; reapers, 8 per cent; horse rakes, 15 per cent; ploughs, 20 per cent; harrows, 20 per cent; seeders, 10 per cent; reapers, 12 per cent. In regard to edge tools, I may be permitted here to make a little explanation. The Dunn Edge Tool Company have had many customers in Canada for a great many years for their scythes. In the fall they sent their agents in and took orders nearly on the basis of their old prices. Afterwards, by the assistance of the manufacturers in this country, they came to an agreement by which $20,000 was paid them by the dealers in this country, and they agreed to keep out of Canada and not interfere with their business. They withdrew all the orders they could, and the result is that scythes rose 75 per cent, which is the increase farmers have to pay this year over last, and it is owing to this combination that farmers have had to pay the enhanced prices on their scythes. I will read the table I have prepared, showing how the cost of living has increased:

I may say with regard to the reduction of duties caused by the preferential tariff, that the wholesale importers of groceries from England have not reduced their price one cent to the retail dealers in this country. If you go to Montreal or Toronto and buy imported groceries made by several firms in England, such as Crosse and Blackwell, and Martin, you find they charge the dealers in this country just the same price as they did before; consequently the wholesale importers of this country are making profits and the poor customers and consumers are gaining nothing by it whatever. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why the present government are so favourable to the reduction of duties, thinking thereby to capture the wholesale dealers, as I understand most of them are Liberals, and giving them pay for their assistance in time of election. But certainly it is a fact that the consumers in this country are not getting groceries imported from Great Britain any cheaper than they did before the preferential tariff came into force.

Then there is another little point of a financial nature. I think this government passed a Bill in 1897 or 1898 to reduce the rate of interest on deposits in the government savings banks to 2½ per cent, having previously reduced it to 3 per cent from 3½ per cent, which was the rate under the Conservative government. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said that 3 per cent was too high, and that solvent companies and men in good standing in the country could hire money at a less rate than that. If that is the case, I would ask how it was that the government, the last session of this parliament, agreed to pay the Grand Trunk Railway 4 per cent interest on the amount of liability incurred in consequence of the Drummond County Railway. If they are a solvent company, and if money could be had at less than 3 per cent, so that the government reduced the rate to 2½ per cent against the poor people who have deposits in the government savings banks, how is it that this government pays 4 per cent interest to the Grand Trunk Railway on the large amount of money involved in that transaction?

Now, I have another very important subject which I propose to bring to your attention for a short time, that is, the coal oil question. I desire now, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to the hon. members of this House an old acquaintance, one who has frequently knocked at the door of this parliament and asked for consideration at the hands of this government. This old acquaintance has, on many previous occasions, complained to the government that owing to the exorbitant and indefensible tax upon coal oil, the discrimination of railways in respect of rates, and combinations and trusts, that the consumers of this important article of household necessity are paying an unreasonable price, and out of all proportion to its original cost.

The attention of the government has on many occasions been called to, and they have been warned against, permitting this great Canadian industry falling a prey to the Standard Oil Company of the United States, anticipating in such event that the price would be enhanced and a greater burden imposed upon the consumers than what they have been bearing. Those interested in obtaining cheap light for the farmers, labourers and the poorer classes in the country, viewed with dismay that huge commercial octopus from the United States 'treking' to the north. They saw its greedy eyes turned towards the prolific, valuable oil fields of Ontario. They trembled for the preservation and the perpetuation of that important Canadian industry, and for the interests of that numerous and important class of our population dependent upon coal oil for their light, when they saw the powerful, aggressive and predatory tentacles of this huge commercial monster invading our country and embracing in its relentless grasp this great industry which has cost the consumers of coal oil in this country many millions of hard-earned cash.

And in view of the surplus over which the Minister of Finance exulted, of more than $4,000,000, and an anticipated surplus of over $7,000,000 next year, they have good reason, as he stated in his budget speech, that the people have a right to expect a reduction of taxation, and that it should be on the necessities of life. The hon. Minister of Finance said that:

The policy of the Liberal party, as laid down in the great convention in the city of Ottawa, in 1893, was that we should initiate a policy of tariff reform which would have due regard to all existing conditions without doing injustice to any interests.

He said:

We have adopted that policy and carried it out in the letter and the spirit. With a large and overflowing treasury the people have the right to expect a reduction of taxation.

The first section and second page of their Ottawa platform, 1893, to which he refers, reads:

That it (the tariff) should be so adjusted as to make free, or to bear as lightly as possible upon the necessaries of life.

The attention of the hon. ministers was called on many occasions to the extortionate and indefensible tax on coal oil, the preferential discriminating rates on railways, in favour of the Standard Oil Company of the United States, and the formation of combines and monopolies by which this household necessity has been greatly enhanced in price, and earnestly, persistently and respectfully prayed the government to carry out that pledge, and apply such remedy as would result in giving the people this important article at a reasonable price.

It is well known that the Standard Oil Company of the United States have absorbed the refineries, and own and control this great industry. They are the complete and absolute owners of all the refineries of Canada, and can dictate the price to both consumer and producer, and no man can buy one gallon of Canadian refined petroleum excepting from the Standard Oil Company of the United States, or companies affiliated with it. The result is, that the price of oil has been enhanced by more than six cents per gallon.

As it is likely this huge combine will play an important part in the commercial affairs of our country, it may be desirable to know something of the reputation and character of this enterprise, what its work has been in the United States, and what we have to anticipate it will be in Canada.

It would appear that in the land of its birth it sustains a very unenviable reputation, as the records of congressional committees, the state legislatures, interstate commerce committees, industrial commissions and the supreme courts of the United States go to show, and they all confirm the charge that it is 'a combine, in defiance of the laws of the United States, and in the restraint of trade.'

I may say one word in regard to combines and monopolies, I do not think that a combine need necessarily be an injury to the people of the country, for there has never been a time in the history of Canada when monopolies, combines and trusts had such a free hand to prey upon the consumers in Canada as under the present government, and I will, later on, specify some of those who are fattening on our people. Uniting skilled men of experience, and aggregation of capital, enabling buildings and machinery to be procured on a more extensive scale, and the most approved and best adapted to the work in view, should enable any given article to be produced and supplied to the consumer cheaper than it could be done by men of less skill and experience, without sufficient working capital. With such an end in view, industrial combinations are beneficial, their chief merits being, first, the command of sufficient capital; second, improvements in plant and machinery; third, power to give the public articles at less prices, and, fourth, constant work and good wages to employees. The danger is that the power and control combinations may acquire, that they may take advantage of their position and enhance prices to the consumers instead of lowering them. As to the remedy, John D. Rockefeller, probably the deepest in combines of any man in the world, says legislation should be directed to control combines and not to destroy them, not to hamper industries, but to prevent frauds on the public. Rockefeller is the chief offender in the Standard Oil Company, and I would propose to our government to give him a dose of his own prescription, as they say, the 'hair of the same dog will cure the bite.'

What are some of the principal charges made against the Standard Oil Company? That it is a trust in restraint of trade; that it includes bondholders, stockholders in railways and millionaires, with such capital as enables them to control the business, enables them to kill opposition, and enhance the price of oil to the consumer; that its commercial pathway has been strewn with the wrecks of men and independent companies that it has killed; that the principal men in the Standard Oil Company are also the principal men in the trunk lines of railways, and that they make differential rates in favour of the Standard Oil Company; that rebates are given to the Standard Oil Company in all the oil they ship over these railway lines, and also on all the oil shipped over their lines by their competitors, which amounts to over $7,500,000 per year; that they sell a good article of oil, and substitute in its place an inferior quality; that when buying oil, and when they show you a sample you cannot tell what the gravity of the oil is, what it will test to the gallon, and they give you oil that tests eight pounds to the gallon, while the best oils test 7.75 to 7.80 to the gallon; that they have sold from tank wagons, where they are trying to kill off competition, eight different prices of oil, varying from six to ten and a half cents per gallon, and all delivered from the same tank, and of the same quality; that the result is, the price of oil to the consumers has been greatly increased; that the excessive price they exact for their oil from the consumers has enabled them to declare a dividend of 80 per cent per annum, or $80,000,000 upon $100,000,000 of capital.

In George Rice's evidence before Industrial Commission, Washington, 1899, as to railroad magnates connected with Standard Oil Company, he says:

W. H. Vanderbilt was in both railways and Standard Oil Company; John D. Rockefeller, in both railways and Standard Oil Company; Henry H. Flagler, secretary Erie Railway Company, also in Standard Oil Company; Peter H. Watson, president Erie Railway Company, also in Standard Oil Company; E. D. Worcester, treasurer Lake Shore and New York Central Railway, and director in United States Pipe Line of S. O. Company.

Therefore, it appears that the owners of oil wells and refineries, and the leading lines of railways, are bound up in the same hide. As to the conspiracy of railways and steamship lines, Mr. Rice goes on to say:

The 'Official Railway Guide' of September, 1899, says there exists to-day forty-four separate and distinct illegal combinations, composed of joint railroad, lake and ocean steamship lines, thus precluding excuse for water competition. These several pooled traffic associations and freight committees represent all the principal railroads and water lines in the United States, and some of the Canadian railways working unitedly and in unison for the unlawful maintenance of joint freight rates, both by rail and water, which is in restraint of trade, as forbidden by the Federal Anti-Trust Act, and confirmed by the Supreme Court.—(Page 743.)

The remedy Mr. Rice proposes was the destruction of combinations and the repeal of the protective tariff wherever it helps any trust or combination. (Page 730.)

I quote from Mr. Rice's testimony before Industrial Commission, Washington, D.C., page 754:

Q. Do you know what the dividends of the Standard Oil Company have been since its organization?

A. $170,000,000 since 1892, and ten years before $100,000,000, making $270,000,000 since 1882.

Q. What is the capital stock sold at?

A. It sold in May at $500 on a $100 share.

Q. What remedy do you propose?

A. Government ownership of railways. (Page 754.)

Mr. Rice testified that the market price of crude oil for the past ten years has only averaged $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents, to pipe this to seaboard $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per gallon. It can be refined at $\frac{1}{2}$ cent a gallon, making total average $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per gallon, and it can be delivered in bulk at seaboard, or at same price to all interior towns. For the first ten years of the Standard Oil Trust, 1882 to 1892, it paid out in dividends more than double its entire capitalization in 1888. Since their pretense of dissolution, March 21, 1892, and including September dividends, 1899, they have paid a total of 167 per cent on a capitalization of \$102,233,700, amounting to the sum of \$170,730,279. The independent refiner is simply struggling for existence. Here is the testimony of Howard Page of New York City, Vice-President of Union Tank Line Company, Washington, December 13, 1899 :

I know there was an advance on freight rates from Detroit, Toledo and Buffalo and other frontier points, on oil from United States to Canada.

Mr. Geo. Rice spoke of the magnitude of the industry of the United States. He said that oil was discovered in 1859, and for forty years the production was 886,442,759 barrels of forty-two gallons each. There were produced the past five years, 1894 to 1898 inclusive, 279,129,467 barrels, or an average of 55,825,893 barrels per annum, or 152,947 per day, including Sundays. The total export the last two years, 1897 and 1898, was 990,389,183 gallons, valued at $55,804,297. The total value of exports, 1864 to 1898 inclusive, was $1,445,941,156. With reference to the Standard Oil Company's ownership of oil and control of rates, the report of the Industrial Commission points out that the Standard Oil Company of the United States owns 9-10ths of all local gathering pipe lines in the oil producing regions, consequently purchase 90 per cent of all the crude oil produced, and absolutely makes the market price for this great product, dictating to the producer the price he shall take, and to the consumer what he shall pay for his oil, and the products thereof, and take whatever quality of oil they choose to give.

The Standard Oil Trust dictates to the railway lines the compulsory tariff rates on petroleum, its competitors must pay, while its own is carried at a nominal figure, as was fully proven in my own experience when in business.

Mr. W. H. Clark of Newark, Ohio, gives the following evidence :

In employ of Standard Oil Company six years. We changed prices to suit customers.

We had Red Star, Water White, Crystal Light, the Escene, the Hyperun, the Silver Light, Ohio State Test, Prime White.

The difference in price was about $\frac{1}{2}$ c. on an average, beginning at 6c. a gallon, and run as high as 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.

Q. If you were selling a man this oil at 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ c., and he thought that price too high, did you agree to sell him a lower grade at 9 or 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ c., and furnish it out of the same tank?

A. Yes, and furnish out of the same tank under a different name.

Q. Was that generally by the orders of the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes. We sold turpentine at Marie, Ohio, to W. H. Styer and Siler Bros., druggists. We would often get a barrel of turpentine, and to increase the profit we would put three or four gallons of gasolene in the turpentine. Gasolene is worth 7c., and the turpentine 38c. or 40c. We poured the gasolene right into the hole in the barrel, and under instructions from the company's boss.—(Evidence before Industrial Commission, pages 331, 333, 336.)

From the testimony of Hon. James W. Lee, late Senator State of Pennsylvania, before the Industrial Commission held in Washington, 1899, I quote :

I am president of three independent oil companies and attorney for one, viz.: the Producers' Oil Company, the Producers' and Refiners' Oil Company, and the United States Pipe Line Company; and attorney for the Pure Oil Company.

The Standard Oil Company in 1883 controlled 5 per cent of the production, and I think they controlled 90 per cent of the transportation, and it has been their policy to control all lines which have been laid since, no matter what they cost.—(Page 264.)

They obtained rebates from railroads. They got their power by rebates, and got it not only on the oil they shipped themselves, but on the oil everybody else shipped. The rebate was so much that nobody could stay in the business. It was stated by Mr. Cassatt, on page 191, to Committee on Manufactures, to be 80 cents per barrel. I should say that the amount would be as high as eight or ten millions on rebates in one year.

They increase the price to the consumer until it becomes absolutely extortionate. These trusts are organized for the purpose of securing a complete monopoly of the business in which they are engaged, and when they get full control they will fix extortionate prices, that their profits might be high. (Page 265.) I do not hesitate to say that by the competition which we introduced with our company at least \$3,000,000 was saved by the people of greater New York in three years. And the same situation in Philadelphia. This saving would not have been made without competition. It is true wherever there is no competition the prices are high. The government should allow the power of absolutely fixing prices for the consumer on a given product to be lodged anywhere if it can be prevented. (Page 266.) The Standard Oil Company have no advantage over other companies, so far as doing the business is concerned, except through discriminations. When the price of oil was 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents that would give them a profit of 100 per cent. Railroads prevent competition on the Pacific coast. It is only at competition points where we get water communication, that they do not have control. (Page 269.) If the Standard Oil Company did not exist, consumers would pay less. (Page 272.) Pennsylvania was sued, and it was proved in open court before the Interstate Commerce Commission, that they did receive discriminating rates from railroads. Cassatt swore that it was 80 cents per barrel, and continued until it wiped out all the refineries between Titusville and Pittsburg at that time. The suit was tried in 1889 or 1890. They compromised the suit, and paid \$30,000 for these discriminations.

The rebates paid to the Standard Oil Company by railways are placed from October 17th, 1877, to March 31st, 1879, at $10,155,218—one year and five months. All companies paid the freight rate, but the railways paid back to the Standard about 80 cents per barrel not only on all the oil shipped by the Standard Oil Company, but by all other companies. (Page 287.) Remedy: Forbid destructive competition. (Page 294.) We export oil to Canada. There has been trouble there about railway freights.

Sworn to before Wm. Calom Chase, N.P., Washington, May 16, 1899.

I come now to the testimony of Mr. A. D. Gall, of the Gall, Schneider Oil Company, Montreal:

The Standard Oil Company owns all the refineries in Canada. They bought up all the refineries, and demolished them all but the Imperial. There is one at Sarnia. (Page 673.) Twenty to 25 per cent of the wells are owned by the Standard Oil Company or affiliated companies. The balance are owned by independent or small producers, pumping 50 to 500 barrels per month. Total production of crude oil amounts to from 750,000 to 800,000 barrels per year of 35 gallons each. Pennsylvania oil is best, Ohio next and Canadian poorest. (Page 672.) Standard Oil Company deal put through in July or August, 1898. Have complete control of all refineries in Canada. (Page 673.) Price of oil delivered at St. Johns, P.Q., just before the deal came into operation was 12½ cents; could not sell now for less than 18 or 19 cents. (Page 674.) Claimed by everybody that the increase in refined oil is due to the control of refining by the Standard Oil Company. (Page 674.) Some of the leading railways in Canada made the rates of freight on American oil higher than on Canadian oil, for the same distances, for the purpose of forcing the dealers and consumers in Canada to use Canadian oil. Mr. Gall testifies in regard to this point, that he sent a barrel of Canadian oil to Geo. L. Meikle Company, of Lachute, upon which I paid 77 cents freight, a rate of 17 cents per 100 pounds. On a barrel of American I paid $1.08, or 24 cents per 100 pounds. I also shipped a barrel of American oil to St. Johns, Que., and also a barrel of Canadian oil. On the American I paid $1.08 for the barrel or 24 cents per 100 pounds, and on the Canadian I paid 54 cents for the barrel or 12 cents per 100 pounds. He said a more glaring injustice never existed. (Page 675.) The Michigan Central would not consent, would not go in for increasing these freight rates, and the Standard Oil Company Trust had taken all their business away. (Page 675.) The information came from an authoritative source. (Page 676.)

The following questions were put to Mr. Gall:

Q. So the remedy lies with the Canadians in establishing a tariff that will admit American oil and bring the Standard's price down?—A. The remedy lies in that and in obliging the railways to carry petroleum products at a reasonable freight rate.

Q. Is this oil that is bought by you, the independent oil, considered better than Standard or equal?—A. From what I can learn from the consumers, the oil that we have been selling as American oil, which it was, is considered much better than what the Standard was selling them as Pennsylvania oil. As a matter of fact, I think they had been giving them for years the

Mr. MOORE.

Ohio product and putting it off as Pennsylvania oil.

Q. You think that the Canadian duties on American oil are disproportionately high; that is, higher than the duties on other products that are imported?—A. Oh, yes. Take, for instance, the oil that we bought in Ohio last year. It was worth about, say, 3 cents a wine gallon, and the duty was 3 cents a gallon on it. I know of nothing in the whole list—there may be some things—but I know of nothing that compares with oil. And Mr. Fielding in his budget speech last year before the House, said there was nothing he had any apology to offer for but coal oil. He did mention that, and said that he regretted he had not been able to remove any duty from that then. It was the only thing he apologized for, which would go to show that there was nothing else to compare with it.

Q. What was Mr. Fielding's reason for being unwilling to propose a reduction of the duty on coal oil?—A. As nearly as I can remember, he merely said that everything and everybody was prosperous or was prospering, and it was not advisable at that time to disturb any of the other industries, and hence he had not done anything with the coal oil duty, because it would have been the only one that he would have wanted to touch at that time.

Q. Are the people disposed to seek redress through legislation?—A. I think that if the present government do not alter things in some way so that the people will not be at the mercy of these trusts, or the oil trust in particular—well, I think that will be one means of defeating them at the next election. That is about the only thing that is spoken of; this freight discrimination and the duty on oil and binder twine and a few things like that.

I will now read the statement that Mr. Gall makes under oath:

I, Andrew Downie Gall, of the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec, oil merchant, do solemnly declare that I am extensively engaged in the wholesale trade of coal oil, burning oil, and other oils in the Dominion of Canada; that all the petroleum oil refineries in Canada, at the present time, are under the control of the Standard Oil Company or Standard Oil Trust through the said company having acquired some outright and a controlling interest in others; that since acquiring the said refineries in Canada the Standard Oil Company, which is operating in Canada under the style of the Imperial Oil Company, Limited, has closed up some refineries, demolished others, and is operating only such as it sees fit; that no petroleum oil from Canadian refineries can be obtained to-day unless it is procured from or through the Standard Oil Company or the Imperial Oil Company, Limited, directly or indirectly; that it is quite apparent, and investigation will establish beyond doubt, that the said Standard Oil Company or the Imperial Oil Company, Limited, has so acquired and controls said refineries for the purpose of forming, and they have thereby formed a trust or combination to unduly enhance the price of such oil and to unduly promote the advantage of the said company at the expense of the consumers; that the firm of which I am a member, and other firms engaged in the oil business, are compelled to buy in the United States and import therefrom our supplies of oil to supply our customers and the trade.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of 'The Canada Evidence Act, 1893.'

A. D. GALL.

Declared before me at the said city of Montreal this 21st day of March, A.D. 1899.

R. A. DUNTON, Notary Public.

I have here a letter from a gentleman in the coal oil business, written in answer to a question which I put to him, namely, what would be the result of abolishing the duty upon coal oil? He says:

There is one thing that I have already stated, and it is as clear as the noonday sun, that if the duty were all taken off, or say 2½ cents, people would certainly get better oil, and if the duty were all removed, they would get it just as cheap here as they would in the United States.

When in Ottawa last week I noticed three of the Standard Oil Company's men from New York and four or five of their Canadian representatives around the House, lobbying to have the duty remain on. Although I have no way of proving it, there is not a shadow of doubt in my mind but what the Standard Oil Company did put up, or agreed to pay handsomely to have this duty remain on, because they know full well if the duty is removed the trust, so far as this country is concerned, will be knocked silly.

You ask if Canadian consumers will be able to get oil from independent companies, so that the price in Canada would be about the same as in the United States. They certainly would get it from independent companies here (Montreal) quite as cheap as it can be bought in the United States if the duty were removed, but, of course, with 5c. per gallon staring us in the face, it would not be possible to do that, so long as the duty remains on. The Imperial Oil Company, which is the Standard in Canada, on Saturday morning last advanced their prices again 1c. per gallon, on the strength of Mr. Fielding's budget speech, and I have no doubt whatever but that they will charge the people in Canada, for Canadian oil, just as much as they possibly can, so long as this duty remains on.

The government, in its first session, passed an Act to amend the Canada Customs Act, which they said was going to remedy the evil and prevent combines and monopolies and institutions of that nature playing upon the people. I have here the platform of their party, adopted at their convention in Ottawa in 1893, and this is one of the planks:

That the tariff should be so adjusted as to make free, or to bear as lightly as possible upon the necessaries of life, and should be so arranged as to promote freer trade with the whole world, more particularly Great Britain and the United States.

They condemn the national policy which, they contended, encouraged combines and monopolies, and proposed to take measures to prevent anything of that kind occurring. They insisted that the country was being injured to a great extent through the encouragement given by the national policy to the trusts and combines that were drinking up the life blood of the people. Well, Mr. Speaker, I may say that there never has been a time in our history when the consumers of this country were so much at the mercy of combines in all the important articles they require as they are to-day. These hon. gentlemen opposite were very much elated over a Bill which they passed through the House in 1897, the object of which was to put an end to combines. That measure will be found in chapter 16 of the statutes of Canada, 1897. It is entitled: An Act to amend the Duties of Customs, article 18:

Chap. 16, Statutes of Canada, 1897.—Act to Amend the Duties of Customs.
Article 18.

Whenever the Governor in council has reason to believe that with regard to any article of commerce there exists any trust, combination, association or agreement of any kind among manufacturers of such article, or dealers therein, to unduly enhance the price of such article, or in any other way to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumers, the Governor in council may commission or empower any judge of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any Superior Court in any province of Canada, to inquire in a summary way into and report to the Governor in council whether such trust, combination, association or agreement exists.

Section 2. The judge may compel the attendance of witnesses, and examine them under oath, and require the production of books and papers, and shall have such necessary powers as are conferred upon him by the Governor in council for the purpose of such inquiry.

Section 3. If the judge reports that such trust, combination, association or agreement exists, and it appears to the Governor in council that such disadvantage to the consumers is facilitated by the duties of customs imposed on a like article when imported, then the Governor in council shall place such articles on the free list, or so reduce the duty on it as to give to the public the benefit of reasonable competition in such article.

I do not think it is necessary to undertake to prove to intelligent men that this measure has so far been an utter failure. I ask the government why they allow an Act of that kind to remain a dead letter in our statutes, when they are told by everybody that by taking off the duty from this necessity of life, which is indispensable in every household, they would bring the price down some 12 cents a gallon. Yet still they sit supinely in their seats and will not apply a remedy to a grievance the whole country is complaining of. It would look almost as though there was some truth in the remark made by this coal oil agent that an arrangement had been made between the Standard Oil Company and the government by which the government would leave the duty remain as it is. It was certainly a great disappointment to the people that the hon. Minister of Finance failed to say anything with regard to this important matter, and failed especially to abolish the duty. I have here a copy of the petition sent to me from all parts of this country, signed by 25,000 business men, which I propose to read to you so that the House will know exactly what the case is, which has been proved to the very letter by evidence given before the Railway Committee of this House but a few days ago :

The Petition of the undersigned Merchants, Manufacturers, Shippers, Consumers and others, throughout the Dominion of Canada.

Humbly sheweth:

That your petitioners necessarily import and use large quantities of petroleum and the products thereof;

That persons directly connected with the Standard Oil Company of New York, U.S.A., and other persons and corporations affiliating with it, did during the summer of 1898, obtain control of the oil refining industry in Canada;

That the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and other railway companies operating in Canada, did on October 1, 1898, advance the freight rates on petroleum and the products thereof from 50 to 100 per cent to your petitioners and other persons not connected with the Standard Oil Company, but did not advance freight rates in the same manner to the Standard Oil Company and persons and corporations affiliating with it;

That to illustrate the freight discriminations, your petitioners submit the following: The Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and others, are charging the Standard Oil Company and persons and corporations affiliating with it, 25c. per hundred pounds from Sarnia, Ont., to Montreal, Que., whereas the said railway companies are charging independent importers and shippers not connected with the Standard Oil Company, 35c. per hundred pounds from Suspension Bridge to Montreal, notwithstanding the fact that the distance from Sarnia to Montreal is seventy-seven miles more than from Suspension Bridge to Montreal. To many other points in the province of Ontario and elsewhere the discrimination is far greater;

That the Standard Oil Company or persons and corporations affiliating with it have formed a trust or combination, and have unduly enhanced the price of petroleum and the products thereof in Canada at the expense of your petitioners and many others, whereby your petitioners have suffered great loss and find it impossible to continue their various lines of business as before, particularly in such branches of their business where they use large quantities of petroleum and its products;

That your petitioners submit that if the very heavy duty now imposed on petroleum and the products thereof were removed, the Standard Oil Company and persons and corporations affiliating with it could no longer continue to exact such enormous and unreasonable profits from your petitioners and the people of Canada generally;

That your petitioners submit that the petroleum industry in Canada to-day is no longer what might be called a Canadian or home industry, because it is controlled and manipulated by the Standard Oil Company of New York and persons and corporations affiliating with it, and millions of dollars are to-day being unlawfully extracted from your petitioners and the people in general of this Dominion for the sole benefit of the Standard Oil Company and persons and corporations affiliating with it;

That it is the firm conviction of your petitioners that unless some measure of relief is afforded by your honourable House in parliament assembled, your petitioners and the whole Dominion will suffer;

Wherefore, your petitioners humbly pray your honourable House in parliament assembled, may be pleased to take the foregoing representations into consideration, with a view to abolishing the existing customs duties on petroleum and the products thereof, so that the combination now existing may be broken and your petitioners be enabled to purchase petroleum and its products at reasonable prices;

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

February 12, 1900.

That is the nature of the petition to this parliament which I had the honour of presenting some time ago. In connection with this, I may say that a very large dealer in coal oil in the city of Montreal has made arrangements whereby, if the government should reduce, or take off the duty on coal oil, they can bring in oil in tank vessels from the United States, and land it in this country without using the American railroads. And if the government will take means to prevent differential rates in favour of the Standard Oil Company, he says, that coal oil can be delivered to the consumers in Canada, at the same price as it is now delivered to consumers in the United States, being from 10 to 12 cents a gallon, or a saving of about 12 cents a gallon, which, on the twenty million gallons consumed in this country annually, means a saving every year of $2,400,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What is coal oil worth now?

Mr. MOORE. It sells for 25 cents a gallon in this country, and it is delivered at the doors of the consumers in the United States from 10 to 12 cents a gallon. I have some more information in regard to this matter. No doubt it is a little dry and tedious, but this is a matter of considerable importance. It has taken years of examination of witnesses in the United States before the Supreme Court, and before commissioners that have been appointed by the state legislature, and by congress, to get the information I am giving here to-day. I am sure that hon. members on both sides of this House will not think it lost time if we can get at the information with regard to this company and induce this government to see the matter in the light they ought to see it in, and to take the action that is necessary, in order to save to the consumers of this country $2,400,000 a year. I have here some extracts from the testimony of Hon. Frank S. Monnett, Attorney General of the State of Ohio :

It takes about four barrels of crude oil to make three of refined, and the shrinkage of one barrel, or one-quarter, is made into by-products, such as paraffine, axle-grease, &c., for which they get as much as the refined oil. (See Archbold, page 570.) Figuring it in round numbers, all over 3½c. to 4c. per gallon is net profit; it can be delivered at that price in Ohio. In fact, they cut it down to 4c. a gallon whenever they have competition. They get from 8c. to 11c. when there is no competition.

The value of all the farm products—wheat, wool, oats, barley, live stock, &c.—taken from the tax returns valuations, is between $52,000,000 and $53,000,000. The oil combination's profits are about equal to the combined incomes of the farms in the state. By their system of non-competition, consumers, on the one hand, pay that much more, and the producers receive that much less than they should. They drive the producer and the consumer that far apart.—(Page 311.)

Oil can be retailed in Ohio for 4c. a gallon at a profit.—(Page 316.)

Q. If the Standard Oil Company was destroyed, would the price of oil to the consumer be reduced?

A. Most assuredly.—(Page 323.)

The question may be asked: What can the government do? They seem to feel that they are powerless notwithstanding this statute which parliament, at their instance, passed in 1897. Here is what is stated by a gentleman by the name of Lee, who was examined, and who had exported oils to different countries in Europe:

Discrimination Prevented in Germany.

Every one can do business in Germany on an equal footing, and nobody has any advantage over another. They will not allow any discrimination.

The government will close up an establishment, and keep it from doing business if they enter into discrimination.

They prevent trusts and combinations from having any advantage over individuals.

They will not permit anybody to do business at a loss, for the sake of destroying a competitor. They will not allow this.

Competition is preserved in Germany, and in England, too.—(Page 274.)

In Germany the government would close up a business if it were running at a loss.—(Page 276.)

The Standard Oil Company manufacture 90 per cent of the oil in the United States, and can absolutely control the price, which I regard as a practical monopoly of that industry, and that the Standard Oil Company is a monopoly in restraint of trade, and that it exists in defiance of the laws of the United States.—(Page 285.)

I have some figures which I have put down in regard to the prices of oil, showing the price in 1898, and the increase since. Coal oil was delivered in St. Johns, Que., before the Standard Oil Company of the United States got control of the oil industry in Canada, at 12 cents per gallon in barrels. This trust owns absolutely all the refineries in Canada, and controls the price of the Canadian oil. It also controls 90 per cent of the manufactories in the United States, and have secured more favourable rates of transportation than are given to independent companies, and have increased the price so that it can not be delivered in St. Johns now for less than 19 cents a gallon in barrels. This is really a difference of 7 cents a gallon. But, to be moderate, I place it at 6 cents a gallon. The quantity of oil produced in Canada was 10,896,847 gallons in 1898, and about the same quantity in 1899. The total quantity imported in Canada in 1899, for home consumption, was 9,363,439 gallons. This gives us a total consumption in Canada of 20,000,000 gallons in round numbers. A rise of 6 cents a gallon on this consumption represents $1,200,000, all of which goes into the pockets of these capitalists, bondholders, combinesters and millionaires in the United States, taken out of the pockets of our farmers, labouring men, and the poorer classes of the people. The government has stood by and allowed, without protest, this combine to rob the consumers of Canada to the extent, in seven years, of about $13,261,000. I may say here that it looks rather anomalous and queer that when one of our people goes into the United States seeking employment, he is turned back. When girls go across the line to get employment in families, or at the hotels, as they did not very long ago, at Newport, they were taken by the shoulder and walked back across the line in conformity with the alien labour law of that country. Here we allow a foreign company to come into this country and absorb completely an industry that has cost the people of this country over $13,000,000, and that with the law upon our statute-books that the government said was sufficient to protect the people of this country against these combines. We allow that to be done and millions of the people's money taken out of this country, placed in the hands of these bondholders and monopolists of the United States. Yet they will not allow a single individual from this country to go over there to seek employment, unless he forswears allegiance to his Queen. It was when the 'old flag,' as they call it there, was in danger that 40,000 enlisted in the ranks of the Northern army to help preserve their nation and to preserve their old flag, and 20,000 of those brave men died upon the battlefields, or in their hospitals. At that time they did not take these men by the shoulder and turn them back across the line because they were foreigners and would not forswear their allegiance to their Queen. But, to-day, if a little girl goes there to get employment in a hotel they send her back across the line; and this government permits a great monopoly of that nature to come in here and take out of this country nearly $2,500,000, which should be divided among the consumers in this country. They are not carrying out the same principle that Robin Hood carried out when, clad in his Lincoln green, he took possession of Sherwood forest with his retainers, and there he robbed the rich and gave to the poor. But here this Liberal government rob the poor and give it to the rich, or to these foreign combinations, to this Standard Oil Company.

During the last 17 years 56,420,199 gallons of oil were imported into Canada; during the same time 163,602,417 gallons of oil were produced in Canada, making the total number of gallons consumed in the last 17 years, 220,022,672. The average duty on this has been 6½ cents per gallon, amounting in 17 years to $13,201,360.32. This is what the consumers of coal oil have paid for the protection of this important industry. This great industry has cost our people in the way of duty alone many million of dollars, which is now turned over to a company of foreigners who are making profits that enable them to divide $80,000,000 among their shareholders as profits in Canada and the United States last year, on every $100,000,000 of capital. This company will not sell American oil if it can induce the buyer to take Canadian, as it gets for the Canadian about the same price as it does for the American. They have no duty to pay on the Canadian oil, while they have to pay 5 cents a gallon on imported oil, therefore, they make a much greater profit on the Canadian oil. The duty is out of all proportion to the cost, equal the last three years to 200 per cent, rather a stiff duty for a free trade government to impose upon one of the necessities of life, contrary to the principles of their policy, as laid down in their platform adopted in 1893 in Ottawa.

Now, as to customs duty on refined oil. It appears from the testimony of those in the business that oil for illuminating purposes in the United States cost on average, during the last three years, in bulk, on board tank cars, per gallon, 2½ cents, upon which the importer paid 5 cents duty. Say for transportation to Canada and reducing wine to imperial measure, 2 cents, making altogether 9½ cents. This the Standard Oil Company ask at least for best quality of Pennsylvania and Ohio, 21 cents, making a profit per gallon of 11½ cents on what they import. If we reduce the 5 per cent specific to its equivalent in ad valorem, it would be for the last three years, on an average, 200 per cent.

Coal oil, of much better quality than Canadian, is delivered from tank wagons to the consumers in the United States at from 10 to 12 cents per gallon. An inferior article is delivered to the Canadian consumers for an average of 25 cents a gallon. What causes this great gap in prices is the duty of 5 cents per gallon, a rise of 6 cents per gallon, and say 1 cent extra for freight. Crude oil costs (now) about 5 cents a gallon, Rice testifies that from ¼ to ½ cents will pay for refining, say ¼ cent. By products are very saleable, and proceeds will pay for difference of cost in bulk, 5½ cents. Refined oil then would cost in bulk at refineries, say 6 cents; barrelling, say 2½ cents, making the first cost 8½ cents. Sold at 17½ cents per gallon, there would be clear profits to the Standard Oil Company on Canadian oil, of 9 cents per gallon. Gallons produced in Canada by the Standard Oil Company, 1898, refined, 9,074,311. Nine cents per gallon on 9,074,311 gallons, $816,987.99, as net profits on Canadian oil, which goes direct into the pockets of foreign capitalists, monopolists and millionaires, out of a strictly Canadian industry, presenting an anomalous condition of international matters.

I have some testimony here which ought to be very pleasing to some hon. members. It is not pleasant to disagree with any hon. gentleman on either side of the House, and it is exceedingly pleasant when we can agree with hon. gentlemen on the other side. I think on this question we can agree. I have some testimony in my hand which I think will be pleasant to hear for hon. gentlemen opposite, it shows that the views I now present on this coal oil question have been entertained by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. I propose to read extracts from speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to the duty on coal oil, pronounced when they occupied seats on this side of the House.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries said, regarding Canadian oil, which is somewhat better to-day, but greatly inferior to the Pennsylvania or Ohio :

If the duty were removed the people of the maritime provinces would gain 12c. per gallon. I attack this duty, first, on the ground that if protection is to be continued, the duty is abnormal, unnecessary and unfair.

He claimed the oil cost 3½ cents at point of shipment, and that the duty was nearly 200 per cent. Again, he said, as will be found in Hansard, page 2225, 1894 :

There is no industry in this country which can possibly justify such an enormous robbery under the shape of protection.

He also said regarding Canadian oil :

The hon. gentleman, whose olfactory organs do not have to submit to the stench from this oil, gentlemen who can afford to use electric or gas light, are astonished that anybody should hesitate to burn stinking oil. I do not think the poor people should be insulted in this way. Their olfactories are as good as the hon. gentleman's, and while they have not the privilege of using electric light, as he has, neither have they the fine salary which enables him to enjoy these luxuries. No man would buy it who can avoid it.

Continuing, he said, as will be found in Hansard, 1894 :

Coal oil was worth, in 1877, 20c. a gallon; 7½c. per gallon upon that was only 30 per cent ad valorem. Now, the same quality is sold at 3½c., which is nearly 200 per cent. An atrociously unjust and intolerable tax on every poor family. There is no industry in Canada which could possibly justify such an enormous robbery in the shape of protection.

The hon. gentleman, then, taking this as his opinion, is doing an atrociously unjust and intolerable act in permitting consumers in this country to pay the price that they are paying upon coal oil, with a 200 per cent ad valorem duty.

The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said :

The duty struck the poorer classes and the farming community particularly. There were 20,000,000 gallons consumed; that 7½c. per gallon would amount to $1,400,000; duty collected, $430,000. The balance of $989,494 went into the pockets of and was divided amongst the refiners of coal oil, or very near $1,000,000 was paid last year to refiners in Petrolea.

The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) said :

The tax was atrociously high. If we take the price of oil at 6c. per gallon, a duty of 2c. would be equal to 33½ per cent, protection which would be a fair duty on the same lines as those given to great manufacturing industries of this country.

I think, perhaps, I would be almost repeating myself if I were to give the House the remedy which has been proposed by the different coal oil men of the United States who have had experience in regard to this matter. The remedy which they recommend is to apply the same methods which are enforced in Germany; do not permit a company to destroy competition; examination of the books and the methods of the company's way of doing business, if found to be selling at cost or less for the purpose of killing competitors; abolish the duty that is now standing. We give a foreign company the benefit of a duty and take it out of our consumers. Take measures to see the company delivers to the purchaser the oil he buys, that the speculator shall not substitute Canadian for American oil when the latter is ordered, that in all cases the gravity of the oil be guaranteed, and that the oil speculator shall not give a customer oil of 8 and over, gravity, when he orders 7.75 or 7.80, as the lower the gravity the better the oil. Make such regulations as will protect the buyer, the consumer and the government, in the quality and the price. Prevent railways from giving differential rates to the Standard Oil Company, abolish the duty which now goes into the pockets of foreigners, and then the government will be carrying out their promise to make one of the necessaries of life free, and will reduce the price so that our consumers in Canada will get their oil as low as do the consumers in the United States, by which they will save $2,400,000 per year. I think, perhaps, I have said enough, although, I have a great deal more testimony of the same nature. But, I think I have proved to the most obdurate and hardest hearted man in this assembly that there is a great grievance, that the petitioners had a perfect right to complain to the government, and that the government is called upon to provide a remedy by taking off the duty on coal oil, which is giving an advantage to a foreign company at the expense and to the injury of the consumers of this country.

Mr. TAYLOR. The people will take the remedy into their own hands at the next elections.

Mr. MOORE. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor), says that the people will take the remedy into their own hands at the next elections. I think there is no commercial matter in this country which is exercising such an influence and such a feeling amongst the electors of this country as the coal oil business is, and I believe, that, with prohibition and with the coal oil business, if the government do not provide a remedy before the elections come on they are going to be defeated by an overwhelming majority of the indignant electors of this country.

I have here a few notes upon preferential trade. Preferential trade and preferential tariff are not synonymous or interchangeable terms. They are as wide apart in their signification as the poles when applied to the principles of the two parties. The preferential tariff has given to Great Britain the right of sending her commodities to this country at a less tariff rate than is exacted from any other country without asking any compensation therefor. The policy of the Conservative party is to give a reduction in the tariff rates on goods from Great Britain, but, at the same time, to ask Great Britain to give such compensation as we require in payment for the sacrifices we make. This is the difference between the two parties. What would preferential trade do if it were adopted by Great Britain and by the empire? It would make the value of every article which the farmer produces on his farm so much greater. Every pound of cheese, every pound of butter, every horse, every cow, every hog, everything that the farmer has to sell, all the surplus of the farm, would find a good and profitable market. It would cause farmers to produce in greater quantities, it would raise the value of every acre of land, and it would solve the problem of immigration into this country. Then, the government would not have to go to Russia and import heathens into this country to populate the land. They would not have to send Doukhobors into the Northwest Territories, and in this connection, I may say, that I have seen a picture taken by a photographer in that country showing sixteen women pulling a plough. They say that they can change off one woman for a bull, and that one bull and eight women can do as much work as sixteen women. The Doukhobors may become good citizens in time, but it will take longer than the right hon. Prime Minister will live, or any of us will live before they will become suitable citizens of this country. Preferential trade with Great Britain will make every acre of land in this country valuable, the tenant farmers of Great Britain will come over and buy land, raise produce, send it to the old country and furnish the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) with traffic for his railways, canals and steamboats, and will place the industries of this country in a proud position. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that we cannot go to England huckstering and bargaining for pecuniary favours for Canada. If hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are too proud and too thin skinned to do justice to Canada, to ask England to give a quid pro quo for what she receives, it is high time to change these men, and to place men in power who will ask a quid pro quo for what we give. England has a population of 40,000,000 people. Pent up in that little sea girt isle, with an area of 120,000 square miles, is a population of 40,000,000 of people. Even with the most approved methods of farming they are not able to supply more than 18,000,000 of her population with food, and consequently, have to depend upon foreign and outside nations for feeding 22,000,000 of their people. Therefore, we see, that it is a very important matter that we shall have access to her markets on more favourable terms than those accorded to our competitors. They import into their country animals, wheat, barley, oats, pease, beans, corn and flour, dressed meats, butter, cheese, margarine, eggs, fish, raw fruit, hops, lard, condensed milk, potatoes, onions, vegetables, poultry and game to the amount of $604,397,267, which shows what a grand market would be opened up to the people of this country, and with a territory of over 300,000,000 of square miles of arable land, with inducements for enterprising farmers to come here, increase our population and our material wealth, and become customers of our manufacturers in the east, and the possibilities of building up our country are enormous. This is a very important matter, and it is grievous almost to hear hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, intelligent men, denounce hon. members upon this side of the House for even asking England, or thinking of asking England, for this concession. And, Sir, these gentlemen opposite have strained every nerve and every thought that their brains could devise to find arguments to put into the mouths of the English people, to dissatisfy them, and to cause them to give an unfavourable answer to Canada when they were asked the question by us: If we give you a preference in our markets on certain goods, will you give us some return in the nature of an advantage for our goods in your markets over the goods of foreign countries, which countries put up an almost insurmountable barrier against English goods. I think I heard some gentleman on the other side of the House challenge us to produce a single instance wherein we could show that Lord Salisbury or Mr. Chamberlain or the Duke of Devonshire, or any of the leading men of England, have given us any encouragement whatever that anything of this nature could be done. I can refer these gentlemen opposite to the intercolonial convention held in this city in 1894, when these Belgian and German treaties were discussed by the Premiers of the various colonies who were present, and by the Earl of Jersey, who represented the Imperial government. It was decided then that these treaties were in the way of preferential trade with England, and a resolution was passed at that conference asking that both these treaties should be denounced. Why was that done? It was done in order to clear the way for preferential trade. England claimed that she was receiving great advantages under these treaties, and yet, she undertook to denounce them for the purpose of enabling Canada and the other colonies of the empire to have the way clear for entering into preferential trade with the motherland. Lord Salisbury was applied to, if it would be protection for England to make an arrangement for her colonies to come in under more favourable circumstances than foreign countries. He instructed his private secretary to write, under date April 5, 1887:

I am to reply that Lord Salisbury does not imagine that differential duties in favour of our colonies, whatever may be said for or against them can properly be described under the term protection. We shall be glad indeed to take every opportunity that arises for delivering ourselves from those unfortunate engagements.

That was also done with a view of opening up the road for preferential trade between Great Britain and the colonies. Lord Salisbury further said, with respect to preferential trade:

I know the ordinary view of the duty of the government is to devise for itself the measures it may bring forward, and then let them take the chance, whatever that may be. And no doubt it is in a great measure true with respect to the large mass of legislation on secondary questions that they have to propose; but it is not true with respect to an organic question which concerns and will control the very existence of our empire, and the very foundation of our trade.

On this matter public opinion must be framed or formed before any government can act. No government can impose its own opinions on the people of this country in these matters. You are invited, and it is the duty of those who feel themselves to be the pioneers of such a movement, and the apostles of such a doctrine, to go forth and fight for it, and when they have convinced the people of this country, their battle is won.

Is that a denial from Lord Salisbury? No, Mr. Speaker, it is an invitation from Lord Salisbury to open the question up for discussion by the people of this country, and the people of the empire, and he promises that as soon as they are convinced that it is a proper fiscal scheme to be carried out, it would be carried out. Gentlemen opposite tell us that it is disloyal to ask Great Britain to give us this concession, and that it is absolutely impossible that any request in this direction could be granted by the British government. Well, Sir, we are all old enough to know that reforms have been granted which at first were strenuously opposed and regarded as impossible. It is not much more than half a century ago since, that Wilberforce and Clarkson were hooted in the House of Commons when they proposed the abolition of the slave trade. But, these reformers kept at their work; they converted the people of England to their ideas, and the slave trade was abolished. When Cobden, and Bright, and Villiers, and Moore advocated the abolition of the corn laws in 1844 they met with similar opposition, but they kept at their work until the people were converted, and the corn laws were abolished in 1846. The same opposition is encountered to-day when people in the different parts of the empire advocate a mutual preference in trade between England and her colonies, but with the Belgian and German treaties removed from obstructing that scheme, I believe that the time will come, and at no distant date, when mutual preferential trade will be adopted for the prosperity and welfare of the motherland and her colonies. It is one pretty good sign of success that the Liberal party oppose this, because whatever policy they have opposed in the past has, in most cases, become the settled law of the land to-day. When it was proposed by the Conservatives to purchase the great North-west and pay $1,500,000 for it, it was opposed by the Liberal party, who described that land as a sea of mountains, but the project was carried out, and since then a comparatively few acres of that vast territory has been sold for over four million dollars. When the Conservatives proposed the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Liberals opposed it on the ground that it was an impossible task for a country like ours, but the scheme was carried to completion in spite of Liberal opposition, and with what results we all know. The great scheme of the national policy was objected to by the Liberals in the same way. They told the Conservatives that it was senseless, that it was pure claptrap, that they would never carry it out, but when the Conservatives attained power, they inaugurated the national policy, and it has conferred on this country the grand position which she now holds amongst the nations of the world. In my mind, Mr. Speaker, this policy of a preferential trade which will be mutually beneficial to the motherland and to her colonies is a scheme which is bound to be carried to success, and one omen of that success is that the Liberal party of Canada is opposing it. I believe that the Liberal-Conservative party of Canada will yet succeed in getting a preference for Canadian products in the markets of Great Britain as against the products of those foreign countries which raise up a high tariff wall against British manufacturers. I have taken much longer, Mr. Speaker, of the time of the House than I intended, and I shall, therefore, bring my remarks to a close. Sir, that England to which we belong is the centre, the nucleus, the heart of a great and mighty nation, around which cluster thirty-eight colonies, besides dependencies and protectorates, with a population of 400,000,000, and an area of 11,000,000 square miles, she stands to-day without a peer, without a parallel amongst the nations of the world. Her powerful navy, her expanding colonies, and her great commerce proclaims her master on the land, and the acknowledged mistress of the seas. Her flag has proudly waved over many a hard-fought battlefield, and is seen on every continent and on every sea, and wherever it floats is recognized as the emblem of strength, of power, and of justice. Beneath its ample folds, those who true allegiance to it bear, are protected in all their just rights, and are as secure in distant lands as though reclining under the shadow of that staff which bears aloft the British flag, that proudly waves over Windsor Castle, the residence of our noble Queen. In vindication of that principle, the clash of arms is heard, the booming of British cannon is echoing from kopje to mountain-top, and the glinting of British steel is seen in the rocky passes of South Africa, the dark continent, proclaiming to the world in thunder tones, that British interests, British rights, British territory, cannot be invaded, nor the old flag insulted with impunity. To punish the bold and lawless invader, and to maintain and defend the honour and the dignity of the Crown and empire, the loyal and brave sons of Canada are freely offering their precious lives, and shedding their precious blood in that distant region. Of the brave and gallant Canadian boys who have fallen, and found heroes' graves in that far-off land, we may say, as was once said of a noble Grecian patriot, that:

We tell their doom without a sigh,
For they are freedom's now and fame's,
And 'mong the few immortal names
Who were not born to die.

We say: 'Rest in peace, for there are no prouder graves even in our own proud clime.' England has ever been in the vanguard of civilization and amongst the first to plant the standard of Christianity and education in the most inaccessible corners of the world. She has been the pioneer plough and harrow, that has broken the tough sod and the green sward of superstition, fanaticism and intolerance, upon which has been sown the seeds of civilization, from which are being garnered a rich harvest of religious, civil and political liberty, which makes the name of British subjects honoured and respected wherever they may reside, irrespective of the altar before which they bow, or the language in which they offer up their prayers. It is the proud boast of Canada that she belongs to this vast empire, and is known and recognized as the most important of all her colonies, and the brightest, the most brilliant gem in the crown of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen of England, the Empress of India, and perhaps, soon to be the Empress of South Africa, and the best ruler that ever graced an earthly throne.

Mr. McMILLAN moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

SUPREME COURT OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved second reading of Bill (No. 90)—from the Senate—respecting the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories. He said: This Bill is simply to provide for a chief justice in the North-west Territories. It does not add to the number of the judges, but provides that there shall be a chief justice there, as everywhere else, to arrange and supervise the business of the court.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the salary?

The PRIME MINISTER. The salary is the same as before. The change is simply in rank.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee).

On section 1,

Mr. FOSTER. Has the First Minister made up his mind yet as to who shall be the fortunate individual to get the advance in rank?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not made up my mind, for I have not heard. This is a matter that comes from the Minister of Justice, and I do not think he has made up his mind.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONDITIONAL LIBERATION OF PENITENTIARY CONVICTS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved second reading of Bill (No. 89)—from the Senate—to amend an Act to provide for the conditional liberation of penitentiary convicts. He said: This is an amendment to the Act which was passed last year, whereby the ticket-of-leave system was introduced. At the present time the system applies simply to convicts confined in the penitentiary, not to those in the common jails or the reformatories. It must be obvious that if the system of ticket-of-leave is to work well—and apparently it gives satisfaction—it ought to apply, not only to the hardened class of criminals who are sent to the penitentiary, but also to the offenders who are sent to the jails or reformatories for petty offences. The object of the Bill is to amend the Act, so that it 'shall apply to all persons convicted of any offence, and being under sentence of imprisonment in any jail or other public or reformatory prison.' With regard to the working of the Act, if I remember rightly, last year twenty-eight tickets were issued, the number of persons condemned to the penitentiaries being about 2,000. The proportion is not very large; but it is premature yet to say what the effect the system is likely to be in this country. I have some statistics of the working of the system in the United States, and as they are somewhat interesting, I will read the memorandum which has been placed in my hands by the Department of Justice:

The convicts in the New York state prisons are looking anxiously to the present legislature in the hope that it will enact a parole law that will let some of them out into the wide world again; and their paper, The Star of Hope, is fairly bristling with articles, short and long, advocating the measure. To aid in the campaign of education, The Star of Hope presents a valuable summary of what the parole laws in other states have done for criminals. New York state, with no parole law, sends its criminals to prison for fixed terms, then sets them altogether free—and 70 per cent of them return to lives of crime. Ten other states, with parole laws, release convicts having good records, keeping them under surveillance until convinced of their reformation. Here are records from different states:

	Percentage of offenders redeemed.	Percentage of offenders returned to crime.
Pennsylvania	85	15
Ohio	90	10
New Jersey	95	5
Indiana	94	6
Connecticut	100	..
Utah	100	..
Michigan	94	6
Alabama	97	3
Virginia	100	..
Minnesota	92	8

This law has now been in operation in Indiana for nearly three years. Mr. Whitaker says of its operation during this period:

We have paroled 132 prisoners, of which number six have been returned for violation of their parole, and two have failed to make their reports, and at this time we do not know where they are. This showing, as compared with other institutions, is remarkably good, only being a fraction over 6 per cent of the prisoners paroled that have violated the confidence placed in them by the management. We have now eighty men on parole that are making their reports promptly, earning all the way from

Mr. MOORE.

$5 to $40 per month and their board, and in many instances are caring for their families, that would otherwise be a public charge upon the township where they live had the prisoner been kept in confinement.

This is a satisfactory condition of things, and we may hope that similar good results will follow here.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). I am sorry that these statistics were not a little fuller. You can take no lesson from them unless you have the length of time this experience has been running and the percentage of offenders who were let out on tickets-of-leave. In one state, it is said that 100 per cent were redeemed. But possibly in that state only one or two were let out on parole. Personally, I have every sympathy with the idea of allowing men a chance to redeem themselves, who have had the misfortune to fall into offences which land them in the clutches of the law. I am in favour of having as perfect a system as possible of selection, and that of surveillance, so that as many as possible may be returned to good society, but I would like the hon. gentleman to give us an idea of how the experiment works. For instance, when once a person is selected to receive a ticket-of-leave, we should know what is done by the Justice Department in the way of imposing conditions and exercising watchful care. Last year we discussed this as an experimental measure. We do not know how the conditions here correspond with those in Great Britain and in the different states of the union. Does it not seem that we have not had sufficient length of time to judge the effect of this system in the case of penitentiary offences, and that we are going a little too fast when we extend it to the whole range of offences punished by imprisonment in the common jail. Does the Minister of Justice think that the system as a whole has had a fair trial and ought to be extended to all grades of offences?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Department of Justice are of opinion that the system has worked satisfactorily. The attention of the minister has been called to the fact that juvenile offenders—young men confined for petty offences, too small to deserve penitentiary—cannot get the benefit of the Act, and his opinion is that they are the very class who ought to have the benefit of it. As regards the method of working the system, I am sorry I am not in a position to give information at present, but will take note of the request and give the information on the third reading.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). How many are out on parole?

The PRIME MINISTER. Twenty-eight.

Mr. SPROULE. Personally, I think the Minister of Justice is ending where he ought to have begun. I always thought it would have been proper to make this law apply to minor offences, and afterwards to the graver offences.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). Is not the power of pardoning in the province with regard to prisoners in the reformatory and the common jail?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not the opinion of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it not claimed by the provincial authorities?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think I have heard some pretensions to that effect, but at present the pardoning power is solely exercised by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). There has been a question raised on that point, and one of our lieutenant-governors contended that the right should be exercised by him. I wish to ask whether the figures given by the right hon. gentleman for the different states in the union apply to jails and reformatories as well as penitentiaries?

The PRIME MINISTER. I could not tell my hon. friend.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY (Bothwell). No doubt there has been a contention by the provinces that the pardoning power is vested in them. The right hon. gentleman will see that the persons to whom he is extending the Act are entirely controlled by the provinces, although no doubt the pardoning power has been exercised entirely by the Minister of Justice at Ottawa in the past. Does the list which the right hon. gentleman gave of the results in the United States include also the class of persons to whom he proposes to extend this Act?

The PRIME MINISTER. I could not tell my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

Bill reported.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to bear in mind, with the other points, this one concerning the method to be adopted in the case of those coming from provincial institutions.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will bear it in mind.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE ON SERVICE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 80) respecting the members of the North-west Mounted Police force on active service in South Africa. He said: This Bill is simply to provide that the members of the mounted police force now serving in South Africa shall lose none of the benefits which they are entitled to under the North-west Mounted Police Pension Act.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time; considered in committee; read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With the consent of the House, we will call it six o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Houses rises, it is understood, is it not, that on Tuesday when we come back after the recess, the budget debate goes on?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

GASPE SHORT LINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Lemieux for the third reading of Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Gaspé Short Line Railway Company.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I do not want to keep the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) in the House too diligently looking after this Bill; but I have not received the documents which were spoken of as being sent, that is, I have not the purport of those documents in full, though in part I have. I judge that the opposition to the Bill comes from the districts which are really the inhabited districts, from New Carlisle to Gaspé, on one ground, namely, that the Short Line Bill made no provision for the building of the road from New Carlisle to Gaspé, and that is the line of railway that the people of Gaspé and those living along the shore, in fact nearly all the inhabitants there, want, and the only thing they want. So I am persuaded, from the tenor of the communications already received, that they are entirely opposed to the Short Line Bill by itself, and as it was presented in the House, and they are entirely in favour of any good measure by a responsible company which will ensure the building of the road from New Carlisle up to Gaspé. Well, the section which has been added giving the right to this company to buy the Baie des Chaleurs road, and then giving them power to build from New Carlisle up to Gaspé, takes away, in part at least, that objection to the Short Line Bill which was the main feature, in fact the only feature, in the Bill as it was presented to the railway company. Now, what I object to in the Bill with reference to that is that you are asking for a franchise simply to keep it dawdling there. No one who is connected with that company, no one who promoted it, I think, had any idea of furnishing money to build that Short Line through, simply because the country would not support it. There are neither inhabitants or resources along that proposed line to make it at all probable that a road would be built, or would become a commercial line if it were built. The only resources that lie there, so far as I am informed, are pulp wood resources, which may be fairly large; but as to agriculture or merchantable timber, that district of country does not afford them, and there is not much prospect that it will ever develop such resources. Well, you have given that franchise to some gentlemen without any conditions at all. I call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to that fact, that you do not lay down in the Bill whether it is to be commenced within a reasonable time or whether it is to be finished within a reasonable time. In all our railway franchises we do not make them perpetual and unconditional. I think it would be only fair to put in a clause which would compel them to begin the road inside a reasonable time and to finish it inside a reasonable time, with a clause making provision for the payment of the labour which has gone into the road. If the member for Gaspé will insert a clause such as I have mentioned, providing for commencing and finishing the work within a reasonable time, I do not know that I would feel like opposing the Bill at the present stage.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I understand that the people of Gaspé and Bonaventure would be opposed to the Short Line exclusively, but they are in favour of the Bill as it stands to-day. However, I think the objection taken by the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Foster) is a good one; they should not get a charter for that Short Line without we specify a delay within which that part of the line should be constructed. As to the Short Line the delay has been specified in the Bill; that is, to begin within one year and terminate within three years. I would have no objection to add to this Bill a clause that the Short Line should be begun within two years and terminated within five years. I move that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Why refer the Bill back to that committee, when the Railway Act itself provides that they must begin within two years and spend at least 15 per cent?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I thought the Railway Act provided for that, but considered it would be just as well to have it added in committee. However, as there is no need of sending it back to the committee, I move that the Bill be now read the third time.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to call your attention and that of the House, for a few moments, to a question that seems to me to be of very great importance. Similar questions have come up on one or two occasions during the present session in regard to what seems to be a gross abuse of the franking privileges, not only in connection with this House, but outside of this House. Attention was called to a very aggravated case by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) a short time ago, having reference to the distribution of a large number of copies of the speech which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) made at Massey Hall some time during the summer. It was stated that these speeches had been sent out by thousands, and the truth of the statement was admitted by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce himself rather exultingly, when he said that he was sorry that a great many more had not been sent out. That admission was made here. There was really no defence for it. That it should have occurred here is certainly bad enough, but, when the abuse reaches other quarters, it certainly must come from the bad example which has been set here and for which there seems to be no defence. The case I refer to is in connection with the Ontario legislature. I have here an envelope that is practically an official envelope of the province of Ontario, printed upon which is 'Parliamentary Papers, free, Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario.' I think it is quite clear to every hon. gentleman in this House that these official envelopes for the purpose of inclosing such mail matter as is authorized under the Post Office Act, and that if any other matter is inclosed in these envelopes, or if the envelopes are used for any other purpose, it certainly is an abuse of the Act, and more than that, it is a means of deliberately defrauding the revenue of the country. I had a question on the paper, a short time ago, to which I received an answer, on the 5th of April last, a few days ago. The question was:

What is the extent of the franking privileges granted to the provinces of the Dominion, and to the legislatures of such provinces?

The answer that the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) gave was this:

Under the provisions of the Post Office Act, 49 Victoria, chapter 35, section 42, subsection 7: 'Petitions and addresses to the provincial legislatures of any of the provinces of Canada, or to any branch thereof, and also votes and proceedings and other papers printed by order of any such legislatures or any branch thereof, may be sent free of Canada postage under such regulations as the Postmaster General prescribes.' The post office regulations as contained in the official Postal Guide grant exemption from postage within Canada to the following classes of mail matter also.

Now, this is the class of mail matter to which such privilege applies:

Periodical bulletins, circulars, schedules and reports prepared by and issued from the provincial government departments in connection with agricultural, industrial and sanitary matters, as well as returns made to the provincial governments in relation to such matters on schedules furnished by them; forms used by clergymen, medical men and others, when making returns of marriages, births and deaths, contagious diseases reports addressed to the Provincial Board of Health, Montreal, and meteorological reports addressed to the Dominion Observatory at Toronto.

That is the class of matter that may be inclosed in envelopes of this kind.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). What kind of matter was inclosed?

Mr. CLANCY. I will explain to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the kind of matter. I am told that these envelopes are sent out in thousands throughout the province, and they contain a speech which the Hon. G. W. Ross, the former Minister of Education, made at Whitby, some few months ago. This envelope goes out with the compliments stamped on it of the Hon. E. J. Davis, Commissioner of Crown Lands, and a member of the government of the Hon. Mr. Ross. That is evidence that they are passing such envelopes through the post office.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). What page of Hansard did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) quote the hon. Postmaster General's answer from?

Mr. CLANCY. Page 3368. These envelopes go out, I say, containing the speeches of the Hon. G. W. Ross, Premier of Ontario, in thousands. I wish to point out that a more flagrant abuse of the privileges, small as they are, granted to the provincial legislature, could not be well contemplated. Official envelopes are printed for other purposes, and these envelopes are used for the purpose of sending out the campaign literature of these gentlemen at Toronto. I do not know whether the government are aware of this or not, but, I am afraid if they are not, they have deliberately closed their eyes, and they have, upon the other hand, set such examples that the Hon. Mr. Ross could very well appeal to the example of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, because, as I say, the hon. gentleman, only a few days ago, rather boasted of his achievement in getting out several hundred thousand of his speeches by an illegal means.

The PRIME MINISTER. He has been following the example of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. CLANCY. Is that the defence the hon. gentleman sets up?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, but he has been following his example.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, but I thought the right hon. gentleman would have some reasonable defence for it. I thought he would give us some better excuse than to say that some one else had committed a similar wrong. I thought the right hon. gentleman's professions were that he was not going to follow bad examples. We are not afraid of him following good ones, but, his professions have been loud and strong, that when he was elected to power, he would adopt new ones and better ones. If my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) was ever guilty, then, it seems to me, that it was an example that the right hon. gentleman should have avoided, and that he should not imitate what he condemns in his own mind.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not done it.

Mr. CLANCY. No, but the right hon. gentleman permits his own friends to do it. He permits the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to do it. He permits him even without a rebuke. There was not a single sentence uttered on that side of the House in condemnation of that transaction, probably the largest that ever occurred in the House of Commons, because it was pointed out by the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) that, according to the statement of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce himself, no less than $20,000 was lost to the revenue from that transaction. I am unable to say what the loss is in this case, but I desire to say that I am informed that thousands of these envelopes are to-day passing through the post offices free of postage, as one will see, going to the friends of these hon. gentlemen, and they are simply unloading, by that illegal means, their literature upon the country. If the government do not take some steps to bring the parties to justice, then, I would say to the Prime Minister that it will not be enough to say that the hon. member for South Leeds offended once in his life, great or small as his offence might have been.

Mr. TAYLOR. He never did.

Mr. CLANCY. It will not be enough for the right hon. gentleman to condone the offence of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, and a most gigantic offence it is, but, it is his duty to take in hand those who have been the offenders. I do not intend to detain the House with a further discussion. I felt it to be my duty to call the attention of the government to it, and to ask the right hon. gentleman himself to take some action in this matter, and to punish the offenders for so gross an abuse. After all, Mr. Speaker, when these gentlemen print envelopes, stamp them as being official, and send them out as campaign literature, it does seem to me to be the most flagrant violation of the franking privileges that has ever occurred in this country.

Mr. N. F. DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I wish to call attention to a statement made in one of the papers in the west with reference to myself and the franking privilege, and, as will be seen by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, this statement is simply a flagrant lie on the face of it:

Four years ago it was proved conclusively that Mr. Davin had abused the franking privilege, hundreds of pounds of campaign literature came into West Assiniboia free of postage, bearing Mr. Davin's stamp several weeks after parliament dissolved and when he was no longer a member of parliament.

I need hardly say that the frank of a member of parliament has no power to carry any mail matter after the House rises. No doubt what happened was this. I franked some of my own speeches, which I suppose is a very proper thing for a member to do. It is a use that is made of the franking privilege by all of us, and I presume that there cannot be a more legitimate use of the privilege than for a member to send to his constituents a report of his speech that he has made in this House. I can easily understand how it was that some speeches of mine, posted a day or so before the House rose, did not circulate in Western Assiniboia for probably three or four weeks afterwards. I suppose that the post office in the House was congested, and that when they sent the mail matter down to the city post office it remained there until it could be sent out to my constituents. That is the only way that my frank could have carried anything free of postage, because after the House rose my frank was of no value whatever. On the face of it this statement bears a falsehood. Then the writer goes on to say:

Mr. Davin is even yet abusing the privileges. Last week the electors received from Ottawa, with his frank, a circular printed in German which was a campaign circular pure and simple.

This document was an intimation to my German friends and supporters of certain views, which I could have put on a half-sheet of note paper. It was a communication between me and my German supporters and there could not be a more legitimate use of the franking privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. This writer, either himself does not know what the franking privilege means, or he thinks that the readers of his paper do not know.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) will deal with that portion of the complaint of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) wherein he refers to the alleged abuse of the franking privilege by the members of the local legislature. Each member of the local legislature has a right to frank through the mail any matter which is printed by order of the legislature during the session, whether speeches or anything else. The Postmaster General read the other day a list of other things than those ordered by the legislature which they also have the right to send. I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) to an error into which he has fallen, presumably from the fact that he was not in the House during the discussion the other day. That error is, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), when he franked his speech delivered at Massey Hall was guilty of a violation of the franking law. Nothing could be more erroneous. The law is perfectly plain. During the session or parliament members have the right to frank letters and other mailable matter, whatever it may be, from headquarters here to any other part of the Dominion. If I were foolish enough to send my hon. friend's speech to my constituents I could do so, and it is perfectly competent for him to send one of my speeches if I make any. But you cannot put a limit other than what good taste may dictate to what members may frank during the session. I heard it stated in years gone by that there was one member who did not scruple to use his privilege to send his washing to his home and back again. You may question the taste, but it was 'mailable matter' within the words of the statute. In the same words which you give that right to a member of parliament during the session, the statute gives the privilege of a cabinet minister during the recess. There is no doubt about that, for I read the Act the other day.

Mr. FOSTER. Read it again.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It reads :

All letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Governor General, or sent to or by any department of the government at the seat of government, shall be free of Canada postage under such regulations as are from time to time made in that respect by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that cover it ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That covers it. The regulations read by the hon. gentleman at the time expressly draws the distinction between what the head of the department can do and what the ordinary under-officials of that department can do. Either the departmental head or his private secretary, according to the regulations, has the right to send this matter, as the 42nd section prescribes. There is no distinction whatever between the words used in the law with reference to a minister during recess, and with reference to members during the session. If you construe 'mailable matter' to include other than the matter which the members write and the speeches which they themselves deliver, and extend it to all speeches or parliamentary documents—as is done in practice and as, I think, is a legitimate construction of the section—then you must give the same construction to the words in the 42nd section as is given to the words in the 43rd section. Under the law, there was no more impropriety in the Minister of Trade and Commerce franking his speech delivered in Massey Hall, than there would be in his franking one of his speeches delivered in this House. Under the 42nd section he gets the same authority to do so as a minister of the Crown, as under the 43rd section a member of this House gets. That is my opinion.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Last fall during the recess my constituency was flooded with a speech delivered away down in the maritime provinces by Senator Ferguson of Prince Edward Island. I do not know how they managed to come to my constituency under his frank, but there is no doubt they did come and nearly every one in my constituency received a copy of that speech. He is not a minister of the Crown, and I do not know how it was that the Post Office Department allowed that to go on.

Mr. DAVIN. What year was that ?

Mr. McMULLEN. Either last year or the year before.

Mr. DAVIN. Might not the explanation of that be the only explanation that could be given of the circulation of matter mailed by me, namely, that it was sent from here, and was delayed in the central post office ?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). If the speech delivered by Senator Ferguson in the maritime provinces was mailed from here in August last, probably it did not reach my hon. friend's constituency until September, or the fall. But, I rose particularly to resent the insinuation or imputation of the Premier, in replying to my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was following my example. The example was set by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who mailed his speech early last year, but in my opinion, in clear violation of the law, as explained by several leading gentlemen here the other night, because during the recess, he undertook to frank a political speech delivered by him at Toronto. I would like the Premier to say in what respect I violated the law. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has explained the law under which a member during the session has a right to frank any mail matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). And a minister out of session.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is his interpretation of the law ; but if I rightly understood my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), who is perhaps as good a lawyer as there is in this House, he interpreted the law differently. There is no doubt of the right of a member to frank any mail matter during the session. The Grit press have been pitching into me, and asserting that I violated the law, and I would like to know in what respect. I can frank mail matter to my own constituency or to any other constituency in the Dominion ; and as whip of the party, I have had to mail considerable outside of my own constituency, as the whips of the Liberal party did, when they were in opposition. When the late James Trow was Liberal whip, he sent, through the mails, political speeches to every elector in the province of Ontario. Who is franking campaign literature for the members of the government to-day, and who is addressing that literature ? I am informed that in some of the public offices, civil servants are doing nothing but distributing campaign literature. I understand that in the Public Works Department, there is one room where there are about twenty clerks doing nothing but addressing campaign literature to be sent throughout the country. I would like to ask the Premier to say in what respect I have violated the law ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If my hon. friend contends that the Minister of Trade and Commerce violated the law when he franked copies of his own speech, then, by the same rule of reasoning, I think the hon. gentleman has violated the law in mailing extracts from Montreal papers, containing accounts of the unfortunate incident which took place some time ago in Montreal. In my opinion, the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not violate the law. In my opinion the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), did not violate the law either, because I presume that such extracts are mailable matter ; but if he did not violate the law, I think he committed a very unfortunate act, to say the least of it, when he went out of his way to circulate an account of the unfortunate incident that took place in Montreal. This is what I charge him with. It may have been within the law, but it was not a good action.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, I want to inform the hon. minister that I sent no extracts from the Montreal papers. I sent papers, the Montreal Witness, as well as the Montreal Star. A few copies were sent here, and I addressed them on ; and that was done during the session. I do not know what they contained. I never looked inside of them.

Mr. TAYLOR.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the hon. gentleman does not know what they contained, I can show him five or six copies which I received, in my office, containing accounts of the riots.

Mr. TAYLOR. And I presume the riots are properly explained, both in the Witness and the Star.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). With respect to this franking privilege, I know that in the by-election in which I ran in the month of August, 1895, an immense amount of literature came into the constituency, franked in the name of a deceased member of this House. I made inquiries into the matter, and found that it had probably been franked before the close of the session, and that it remained over. I accepted that as being a correct explanation, and I infer that a great many of the cases that look like violations of the law, are similar to that. However, my object in rising was to direct the attention of the House for a moment or two to the statement of the law made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think he has made a mistake in not looking into the regulations made under the section of the Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We had them here the other day, and went over them carefully.

Mr. POWELL. We have not had them here this evening. The section of the Act is :

All letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Governor General—or sent to or by any department of the government at the seat of government—shall be free of Canada postage under such regulations as are, from time to time, made in that respect by the Governor in council.

The qualifier of the clause is : ‘ Under such regulations as are, from time to time, made in that respect by the Governor in council.’ If no regulations have been made controlling or authorizing the sending of this matter through the mails, that section does not apply to this case. A complete statement of the regulations is given in the Postal Manual, published by the Post Office Department ; and I shall read the regulations under the head of ‘ franking and free mail matter ’ :

All letters and other mailable matter posted from the public departments at Ottawa and franked as being of an official character, all correspondence addressed to the ministers in charge of the said departments or to their private secretaries, or to the deputy heads or secretaries of the same, or to any recognized branch or division of a department or to the officer at the head thereof in his official capacity, and under his official title.

Now, it is mere child's play to say that because those speeches were franked ostensibly as official matter, the mere perpetration of a fraud and the insertion on the document of a lie could bring it within the purview of this regulation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Just the same as a member acting in his official capacity.

Mr. POWELL. It is not the official character of the man that is referred to, but the official character of the communication or the matter posted. When it says, 'all letters and other mailable matter franked as being of an official character,' that means, by every rule of jurisprudence, truthful franking. As I understand the case of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, it was this, that during the recess, he franked a speech delivered by him. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says the members of the government are precisely in the position at all times of the year, that members of this House are in during the session of parliament. If you will read the regulations you will see that there is a very marked distinction between the two cases. In the first place, this qualification of official character is affixed to matter sent out by the departments and franked by the heads of departments in their official capacity. But, when we come to the clause that relates to members of parliament there is no qualification or limitation whatever. The matter they frank need not be of an official character, that is during the session. Let me call the attention of the House to the sixth section :

Letters and other mailable matter addressed to or by any member of the Senate or House of Commons, whether on public business or the personal affairs of such member, while at Ottawa, during any session of parliament, or to any such member at Ottawa, during the ten days next before the meeting of parliament.

Therefore, in the case of members, during the session, matter may be mailed by or to them, utterly regardless whether it be of a personal or of an official character. But in the case of heads of the departments, their franking privilege is limited to matter of an official character. Furthermore any matter that is sent to them must also be of an official character, except when sent to them during the session of parliament, when they are not denuded of their character of members of either House. The case is very clear. We, sitting here as members of the House of Commons, and those sitting in the Upper Chamber as members of the Senate, are entitled to frank anything we please, during the session. Members of the executive during recess are only entitled to frank matter of an official character, and if they do differently they are perpetrating a fraud, in the eyes of the Act, on the revenues of the country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend is of that opinion, then he must admit that, on the information furnished this House by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure), who is not now in his seat, the leader of the opposition was guilty of a palpable and gross fraud in the year 1896.

Mr. FOSTER. What did he do ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Personally, I have no information except that which will be found in Hansard. The hon. member for Colchester said that during the recess of 1896 he was aware that vast quantities of political campaign and quack medicine advertisements were circulated—perhaps the hon. member for Colchester did not include the quack medicine ; that, I believe, came from another quarter—by the tens of thousand through the mails, franked by the hon. leader of the opposition, and distributed throughout the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. PRIOR. Was it Pink Pills ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I am not aware that Pink Pills were advertised in that way, and I am not going to advertise the medicine to-night by naming it, but it was a medicine advertisement from a prominent Conservative. I have too much regard for my newspaper friends to name the medicine.

Mr. POWELL. That was clearly wrong.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am glad to have the hon. gentleman's admission. In all these matters we were governed, not entirely by the statute, but by the interpretation put on the statutes from year to year so long as that interpretation is not challenged. I do not think it could have been the law, according to a layman's view and getting away from the technical legal view—I do not think it could ever have been contemplated that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), in his capacity of member of parliament, should be free to circulate tons of incendiary literature free through the mails, under his frank.

Mr. POWELL. The statute says so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not admit that my hon. friend is right, but am not going to argue the legal point.

Mr. POWELL. It is no legal point. The regulation expressly says: 'Matter of a personal nature.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think a regulation can override an Act of parliament.

Mr. POWELL. Look at the statute and you will be satisfied.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will leave that to my legal friends. I do not think the public will see the distinction drawn by my hon. friend. I do not think they will see the sense of permitting my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), to frank tons of matter during the session—not parliamentary matter at all, but copies of newspapers—throughout the Dominion of Canada, and then holding that a member of parliament, who circulates a public speech made by him out of session, shall be considered as violating the law because he circulated it under his own frank. I do not believe that that is the law. It certainly is not common sense. What the public will say is this. They will say: It may be that the franking system is abused, but if it be known, as a matter of public notoriety, that under the late government, campaign literature, speeches not made in parliament or documents not originating in parliament, were circulated under the franks of ministers, and that similar literature has been franked by the present ministers, the franking privilege has been used somewhat too liberally, but there is not the least ground for hon. gentlemen opposite to throw stones at hon. gentlemen on this side.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) has not the regulations before him, but only a summary of the regulations, compiled by some clerk. The statute gives the right to the head of a department, without limitation, to send out from the department all mailable matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Departmental matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It does not say departmental matter at all, but all letters and mailable matter, and the whole argument turns upon that. Is the same phrase used with reference to matter the minister may send out during recess, which is applied to matter which a member may send during the session? I say it is the same phrase exactly: 'Letters and mailable matter.' There is the clause providing that that may be regulated by orders in council, but an order in council cannot take away from the statutory right which is given a minister. The order in council may provide that mailable matter from the department must be franked by the minister himself or by his private secretary, but it cannot take away from him the right to send it. If my hon. friend will look at the regulation closely, he will see that they do not take away the statutory right. They take away from all officers of the department, other than the minister, the right to send mailable matter except of an official nature, but could not take away that right from a minister.

Mr. SPROULE. It is beside the question to contend that those are not the regulations (holding up the official Postal Guide), because they are sent to every postmaster to guide him.

Mr. POWELL. I am arguing the question on the regulations before this House, and not the regulations that may exist in the mind of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine. All I can say is that here are the regulations before the House, here is the official book, called 'The Official Postal Guide,' and in that book I find the following:

Under the following regulations, correspondence, as hereinafter described, is free of Canadian postage.

I take that in connection with the statute, and the words of the statute are: 'As directed by the regulations.' The regulations do not allow what the hon. gentleman states they do.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) has not considered the regulations:

All the official correspondence of the several departments except that of the heads of departments.

And so on. It makes a clear and definite exception of the correspondence of the minister.

Mr. POWELL. I will ask your permission, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words more, and then the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) and myself will be on a par. Now, surely my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) is too good a lawyer to say for a moment that a mere matter of detail, a mere matter of ritual, you may say, as to how the franking privilege is to be exercised is to interfere with the real substantive provision of the law. I would tremble for the fate of this government if the hon. gentleman were correct in his law. I can understand them trying to patch up a political case and, as such I receive his argument; but that it is a genuine expression of his own views in the matter, I can only accept under the right of every member of parliament to have his word accepted in this House in relation to a matter personal to himself.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose we shall hear from the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) on this question.

Mr. M. K. COWAN (Essex). Before the Postmaster General speaks I desire to say a word. I must say that it strikes me as peculiar to find hon. gentlemen opposite all at once seized with this great desire to see that the franking privilege of parliament and of the ministers shall not be abused. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, in 1896, after parliament dissolved, which was in April, in the constituency I have the honour to represent, between the 15th and 23rd of June, practically every elector received not any official documents, not any speech delivered on the floor of parliament or elsewhere, but the pure and simple unadulterated campaign literature of the Conservative party, under the frank of the hon. Dr. Montague the then Minister of Agriculture. That is, after parliament had dissolved about five weeks, the literature was franked and mailed into the south riding of the county of Essex, I am thoroughly satisfied, to the extent of six or seven thousand copies. Every elector I had an opportunity of discussing it with had received a package of that literature under the frank of the hon. Dr. Montague. I reside in the city of Windsor, and I know that in the post office of that city they came in the month of June in mail bags by the dozen, to be distributed throughout the country. I have not looked into the law on the subject, and will not venture a legal opinion. But it does strike me that the hon. gentlemen opposite are very much in the position described by the old lines :

When the devil was sick the devil a monk would be,
But when the devil got well, the devil a monk was he.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I do not propose to reply to the gentleman who has made so apt a quotation—applied to himself let us say. I really had hoped that the question would have been taken up on its merits and treated by the government as being a question of some importance. But, apart from special pleadings and the 'you're another' argument they have nothing to say. I think the matter has become one of great gravity when the government takes such a position as to tell every citizen of this country that if they can beat the law, they have a perfect right to do it, if they do it for party purposes. I am willing to allow the legal question to rest upon the argument of my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). That hon. gentleman and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are lawyers, and we have heard the law expounded by each of them and the regulations read. It is as plain I think, as the English language could make it, that it never was intended that ministers, should have the right outside of the session of parliament, to frank and send throughout this country speeches which they or any member of their party may have made outside of parliament, and do it at the cost of thousands of dollars to the public revenues of the country. I believe that never was intended by the law, I believe it is absolutely cut off by the law and the regulations. Now, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said the people would look at this in a sensible way. Let us take the transaction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and look at it in a sensible way. Will any fair-minded man in this country say that because one happens to be a minister, he can go out into the country during the recess of parliament, that he can make campaign speeches and send them out by the half million in sealed envelopes in packages which would cost, if printed and circulated by another man, whether a politician or otherwise, 4 cents in postage—will any sensible, reasonable man say that that was ever contemplated by the law, that it is a thing that ought to be done, that it is a fair thing as between political parties that it should be done? Now, I do not think that anybody—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was it fair in 1896?

Mr. FOSTER. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not seem to be able to consider the question on its merits. What is this question that we have before us, and what will be the settlement of it? The question is whether this thing is right and whether the government will say it is right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Your virtue is very one sided.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a question, at the present time of my virtue; it is a question of the virtue of men at the head of the government, responsible minister of the Crown, teaching a lesson to this whole country. This is not a case which has not been proved, it is not a case which has yet to be brought to the minister. It has been acknowledged by the minister, and on that case there is a declaration on the part of the ministry, from the right hon. gentleman who leads the government down, that it is perfectly right for a minister to do what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has done.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And what all previous governments have done.

Mr. FOSTER. That all preceding governments did it is one of the little easy statements that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is able to make in this House without one particle of proof.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is the evidence, and there are the witnesses.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no evidence given by the hon. member (Mr. Cowan) who spoke last, to prove it at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Just as much as the other.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. COWAN. Why, I saw it myself.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said, standing in his place in this House: I delivered a speech in Massey Hall, and hundreds of thousands of copies of that speech I franked when the House was not in session, and I am sorry I did not frank more. Is there anything of proof needed in view of that statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. COWAN. Nor in the other either. I myself received the literature I spoke of.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. member for Essex will permit me—

Mr. COWAN. I wish to set the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) right, for I am sure he does not wish to misrepresent me. I say that I as an elector of South Essex and North Essex received packages of this literature with the frank of the hon. Dr. Montague, Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose this hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) is a lawyer—

Mr. COWAN. I have that honour.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose he takes cases in court, and pleads before a jury. I suppose he sometimes stands before a judge. But would he stand before a judge or jury and declare that such evidence as he has given would be evidence to convict a man. Has he proved when these documents were franked, when they started from the precincts of this House.

An hon. MEMBER. He mentioned when these parcels were received.

Mr. FOSTER. But is there any proof in that? Every man who is a lawyer and who has a common-sense head upon his shoulders, knows that is no proof. In the session of 1896, tons upon tons of election literature was prepared in the different printing offices and sent out by members of parliament and those interested for them, on both sides of the House. When this session of the House ended in 1896, portions of the House and post office were piled up almost to the roof with it. I know, with reference to my own literature, which I had had franked in time to have gone out, that it was months afterwards before it reached my constituency.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman: Did the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Haggart) say in the House here that it went out after the House rose, but it went out within fifteen days, he then assuming they had fifteen days to send it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He stated that they sent it out afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that he stated that, I am simply saying what I know. I say it is no proof at all, that because literature, as in the case of my hon. friend here, got to his constituency months after the House rose, it is no proof at all that it was not properly franked and sent from this office. I am not sure, also, but that if the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) will look into it, he will find there was a practice allowed by the Post Office Department, by courtesy, that for ten or fifteen days after the House rose the franking privilege was continued to the members to send out what they wanted to send. I think that was a practice which for a number of years grew up in the department, and I would not have very much to say against that practice.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would be a violation of law.

Mr. COWAN.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no doubt about that. But, if a member has, legally speaking, ten days before the session to receive and send, and if the post office did make an arrangement of that kind, that for a certain number of days afterwards he should have that privilege, it would not be unreasonable, although it would be illegal. Now, I am speaking simply of what has been proved. The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure) spoke the other night about literature going down into his riding after the House was prorogued, for a month afterwards, he said. That does not prove it was not properly franked whilst the House was in session. Neither does the statement which was made by my hon. friend, who spoke just before me, prove it. It may be an assumption, but it is not proof or evidence. But, in the case of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, it is no assumption, it is not a supposition, it is actual, positive truth, out of the mouth and by the word of the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself. Now, then, after this, what happened?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will allow him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At least, grant me the ordinary courtesy—

Mr. FOSTER. Ordinary courtesy. If you put it in that way, the privilege has been refused to me over and over again by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the hon. gentleman must not stand up in my face and plead courtesy when he wanted three or four times to break into my speech but would not allow me to do it. I must measure out to him what he measures out to me.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You have refused me the privilege three times since the session began.

Mr. FOSTER. I will do it the fourth time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You refuse to answer a question which I put to you?

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman would put reasonable questions to me, but, he puts such silly questions that I do not like to waste time with them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not profess to have a monopoly of wisdom as some hon. gentlemen do who possess a monopoly of ignorance. The question I wished to ask him was this: When Mr. Haggart stated in the House:

I gave my staff instructions that the frank was to be used during the session of parliament, and for fifteen days afterwards.

Is not that evidence to show what was done under the late government?

Mr. FOSTER. I should take that to be good evidence that the department sent out literature under a member's frank for fifteen days afterwards. Is the hon. gentleman satisfied with his answer, and would he not feel better in his own conscience if he had been just as frank when he got up and made his argument here to-night?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say anything against it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman made his argument all around the main point. Why, you talk about documents coming down. Suppose I take the same line that the hon. gentleman did. I can tell you that in the elections which took place down in my hon. friend's constituency, pamphlets and documents, signed and stamped by J. D. Edgar, came down there by bushels in that campaign, two months or more after this House had prorogued. It is possible they had been franked before the House prorogued, and that in the congestion of business in the post office they did not get down in time, or they may have been put through just as in the other case, and put through wrongly. But, we cannot afford now to leave this question where it is, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce sent out to the extent of hundreds of thousands an election pamphlet, being a speech made by him outside of the session of parliament, took advantage of what the law does not give him a single iota of ground for doing. What comes to the department is supposed to be departmental matter, it is not groceries, tea, tobacco, leather, iron, or anything of that kind. When you come to say in legislation that what comes to the department or what is sent from the department is free, everybody knows what that means—it is what goes to the department in course of departmental business, it is what goes out of the department on a mission of departmental business. It is surely no wider than that, because you legislate with reference to the doings of the department in question. The postage which is supposed to be given free by the country is for what comes into the department officially and what goes out of it officially, and cannot by any fair rendering be put in another light. But, here you have the Minister of Trade and Commerce putting out hundreds of thousands of copies of a speech delivered outside of this parliament, campaign literature for his party, and he disseminates that to the detriment of the revenues of this country, to the extent of tens of thousands of dollars. Yet, the Minister of Finance says: Let sensible people look at it in a sensible way. Will not a sensible man say that I have just as good a right, in the interim of parliament, to frank literature which goes in answer to that as a speech on behalf of the Liberal-Conservative party? What honour, or honesty, or fair-play, is there if you take $20,000 out of the funds of the country to carry your interim election pamphlets through the country for your party, and that I should not, with reference to the reply to that speech, have an equal right? Neither of us should have the right according to the law, or any fair rendering of it. The people of this country, who pay the taxes ought neither to carry your literature nor mine.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They did carry yours.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman can never get any further than that, he cannot stand by a straight question and argue it on its merits, he can only go back to the you-are-another principle in argument. But, at this time, we have got this question before parliament and before the country, and the government is taking its stand. The stand that the government takes and teaches to the people of this country to-day in its arguments here is, that you have a perfect right to do it if you can slip it in and carry it through for your party's sake.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The same right you had in 1896.

Mr. FOSTER. Now you have got the fruits of it. Here is an election contest down in Sherbrooke, Que. The Liberal-Conservative party in opposition have difficulty to find their fighting material, every one of them putting in what they can of energy and of time, making their literature and circulating it, and we are met with something. What was it? We met with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, a man of means, representing a party that has means, who goes down into Sherbrooke and uses his departmental frank to send the election literature of his party all through the county of Sherbrooke to compete against the literature and work of his opponents. Why should he not do it? The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce does it and glories in it, and so it is done. But, I have here a letter which was sent to me not long ago. What for? The advertisement of a book sent broadcast through the country. By whom? In whose interest? Departmental? Not even an election interest, marked 'W. L.,' and it has gone everywhere. It bears on the outside no postage, but, the Dominion of Canada is paying for it. Why should he not send it? If the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, in order to keep his position as a cabinet minister, can frank 500,000 copies of his election speech to keep him and his friends in power, why cannot a poor devil, who wants to sell a book, send his advertisement around at the expense of the country? One thing follows another, and there has no man risen on that side of the House who has made a single allusion to the gross fraud which has been unearthed to-night. Why should he not do it? The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce ought to have some privileges. He is a Grit. What is the use of being a Grit unless you can have privileges, and so the right hand of the government of this Dominion party that rules here feels that he has to have some privileges and to exercise them. Why not? The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce sent 500,000 copies of his speech broadcast at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. Now, what happens? Now, let the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries exercise his ingenuity. Let him get up and show that part of the law in which the Hon. G. W. Ross is authorized to send his election speeches at the cost and the charges of the taxpayers of this country all through the country, and to do it with a fraud on the face of it by printing upon the envelope 'Parliamentary papers, free, legislative assembly, province of Ontario.' This speech of the Hon. G. W. Ross, not emitted even in the provincial legislature, a speech delivered in a campaign in the town of Whitby, is sent everywhere with an hon. minister's compliments accompanying it, free—by the grace of the law of Canada? No, Sir, for the law of Canada gives him no authority at all for doing it—sent free, copying the example of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, who had no more right to do it than he had, having heard, that, in this House, ministers stood up and said it was all right if it only got party advantage for them. And so, these Ontario politicians, instead of paying the miserable two or four cents of postage which would carry their election campaign literature, put into an envelope which purports to be what it is not, and sends out at the cost and charges of the taxpayers of the country, political literature, Grit election literature, all over the province at our expense. Where else is it being done? If the good government of Ontario do it, and under a fraudulent heading, and they do it without a man on the Treasury benches saying one single word in condemnation of it, why has not the province of Quebec a right to do it, and are they not doing it and have they not done it, and have not other Grit governments in other provinces done it and are they not doing it? If they have not, they have fallen short of their privileges. What the premier province does and what the Premier of the premier province does the Premiers of other provinces may and will do. It seems to me that we have come to a point where, no matter what has been done in the past, we ought to have a declaration from the government as to some principle which ought to rule in regard to this question. Do hon. gentlemen think that it is all right so long as the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce does it? That hon. gentleman would have thundered against a thing like that until the skies fell if it had been done when he was in opposition. But, when he is in power he gets up in this House and says that he is only sorry that he had not done a little more of it, and sent a few hundred thousand copies more of his speech than he did. What is the government going to do about this? What is the Postmaster General going to do about it? He will skin the poor letter carrier, he will make him carry four times every day, during every day in the year, except Sundays, for a mere pittance, he will skin down the mail contractor who carries, for a few cents a day, his mail through the country districts, he will impose postage on the newspapers, and all that; but he has not a word of condemnation when the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce mulcts his department of its revenues to the extent of $20,000, or when the hon. Minister of Agriculture goes to work and floods the country, during his by-election campaigns, with literature at the cost of the people of Canada for his own purposes and for the purposes of his party. Not one of the hon. gentlemen has anything to say when all this takes place, when a fraud, patent on its face, is committed which no honest man in this parliament can rise up and defend. If any one can let him do it. Let any one defend an action of that kind. Is this a new thing? Well, if it is new, there is a very good reason for it. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce and the hon. gentleman who leads the House said they were perfectly willing to do it to the extent of hundreds of thousands of copies of the speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce in Massey Hall. I think we have come to a pretty pass when the government have made such a poor showing as they have in this matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Really, it is a pity that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) who has just resumed his seat, did not burst out into this virtuous indignation during the eighteen years in which he and his friends were in power when we were suffering from the disabilities which he is suffering from. The hon. gentleman had abundant opportunities before 1896 to express this virtuous indignation. He was then in a position to have stopped this abuse, which he now is so indignant about. The hon. gentleman had abundant opportunities, because we know that he and other members of the government and their friends franked literature out of session from the departments of the government in Ottawa to parts all over the country, and that they have a systematic method by which they did it, of which I will give the hon. gentleman some details before I sit down. The hon. gentleman was a member of the government, a powerful member of that government; he enjoyed the abuse and reaped the advantages of the abuse, if it was an abuse, as the hon. gentleman has now described it to be. Since the hon. gentleman has taken a seat in the opposition and has lost his privileges, he thinks it would be a good thing that a change should take place, and that the government should not have the opportunities, or the advantages, which he and his friends enjoyed for eighteen years. He wants the law amended: he wants to make a change.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I want the law carried out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Why did you not carry it out before?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If it is not carried out now, it was not carried out when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was in office. I can give the hon. gentleman some details. During 1896, in the Department of Agriculture, there was a special room set apart, and the messenger of the then hon. Minister of Agriculture was given charge of that room; he had there clerks in the pay of the department, paid by government money, and these clerks franked literature all over the country and sent broadcast, for months. Tons upon tons of that literature were sent out of the Department of Agriculture, franked with the frank of the then hon. Minister of Agriculture and the then hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and not only that, but franked by members of this House who were not members of the government and who had no right to use the frank of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, or of the Department of Agriculture. That was carried on for about three months in the Department of Agriculture during 1896, both before and after the session of parliament, and up to the very day of the election. The literature which my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Cowan) describes as having been sent to his constituency was only a small portion of what was sent out by the Department of Agriculture at that time, and it was franked by the departmental frank of the then minister. More than that, some of the persons who were engaged in that work were paid by the departmental cheques and were upon the books of the department as officials. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says his government were not guilty of this abuse, but I tell him that they were, and they were guilty to a hundred-fold to the extent that we have been. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), was very virtuous and he asked the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) for his proof, and he held up an envelope as a specimen of what is being sent by thousands from the legislature of Ontario. Where is his proof of that? He was indignant with the member for Essex (Mr. Cowan), when demanding his proof, but where is the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster's) proof, except as regards that particular envelope that thousands of the speech of the Hon. G. W. Ross were franked by Hon. Mr. Davis.

Mr. FOSTER. I happen to have two here.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) asked my hon. friend from Essex if he was a lawyer; but it is evident that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has learned his law from pettifogging lawyers—

Mr. FOSTER. I always had the idea that two witnesses established a thing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) does not know much about law, or he would know that the opposite side have a right to be heard in a case. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) referred to what he called the advertisement of a book, and I understand that that was franked during the present session by some hon. member. That hon. member exercised his privilege of sending mailable matter, and I venture to say that the book advertised there is not of such a deplorable character as the copies of the Star which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has franked in so many hundreds of thousands.

Mr. POWELL. And as you franked to Sherbrooke.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not frank the Star to Sherbrooke, not by a long way.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about the Witness?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nor the Witness either.

Mr. POWELL. What about your pamphlet stirring up strife?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I availed myself of the privileges which was exercised by all the ministers who preceded me from time immemorial in this country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Ever since the Act was passed. There was but one construction put upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you know?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I know it from the officials of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. No such thing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is again speaking of what he has no knowledge, because he was not always Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FOSTER. He was always.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. During our administration, but not before. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) says that the campaign literature which I had franked in my department to Sherbrooke was of an inflammable character. I venture to say that he does not understand what the literature was, or perhaps he does not understand the inflammatory character of the Montreal Stars which were franked all over this country by his friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. TAYLOR. There were as many Witnesses franked as there were Stars.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Witness is an honest paper, and every copy of the Witness contains the same material and the same words, and is written on the same principle. But the Star, which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) sent all over this country was a special edition prepared in the office of the Star for circulation where they did not dare to circulate their other editions. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has lent himself to help the distribution of a dishonest appeal to racial and religious prejudices in this country, and I condemn the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor), because I feel that in doing that he assumed an immense responsibility and showed himself to be a very unpatriotic member of this House and citizen of this country.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Witness had the same article as the Star.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all. The copies of the Star which the hon. gentleman sent out through the country were not the copies of the Star sent out for circulation in the province of Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was nothing wrong in it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It seems to me it is a most deplorable thing in this country when a member of parliament stoops to circulate a lying description of what occurred on such an occasion, and that is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is guilty of.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Agriculture will not say the Star lied.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister will not say the Star published what is false?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do emphatically say so. I say that the edition which the Star published, and which was circulated throughout this country, contained absolutely false statements of what occurred in Montreal when the Laval students paraded the streets, and it was done for the special purpose of inflaming the minds of the English Protestant people of this country against these students, because they were French and Roman Catholic. I rose, Mr. Speaker, because my own conduct in the matter of the Sherbrooke election was called in question. I again say that I am perfectly satisfied that in doing what I did I merely carried out the law and the practice. I did what was done by my predecessors in the government of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was a member. It is a pity that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did not then show some of his virtuous indignation against that practice when he was minister, because it might have had some influence in stopping the practice which was followed then to such an enormous extent.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). As the Postmaster General does not wish to answer the charges made from this side of the House, I wish to speak on another subject. I have been informed that the permanent sessional clerks and the messengers of the House who are paid every fortnight have been refused the payment which will be due to-morrow, and that they are told they will have to wait until the supplementary estimates are passed. I do not know whether it was you, Mr. Speaker, or the Minister of Finance who gave the order, but it is a great hardship on these officials, some of whom wanted to go home for the Easter holidays. It seems to me that last session this money was voted for at least ninety days of this session, and we are not that long here yet. I draw the attention of whoever is responsible, to this grievance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is possible to do within the law will be done to meet the case mentioned. I was informed some weeks ago that we would need supplementary estimates at an early date, but I was not aware there was a grievance. We must be careful not to violate the law.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I confess I was surprised at the language used by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). I do not think the House pays much attention to Billingsgate of that kind coming from one of the hon. members on the back benches on the other side, but it does not maintain the dignity of the House, that a gentleman occupying the high and honourable position of a cabinet minister should descend to such language as we have heard to-night. The hon. minister (Mr. Fisher) charges the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) with sending through the mails, matter which he declares to be of an inflammatory character. I want to read to you, Mr. Speaker, from a pamphlet distributed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), in the late Sherbrooke election, which to my mind is of as inflammatory a character as anything that ever appeared in the Montreal Star; and I have reason to believe that the hon. gentleman himself knew every word it contained, as I am credibly informed he wrote it himself. So that if there was a crime on the part of my hon. friend the Whip, there certainly was a double crime on the part of the Minister of Agriculture in writing what was inflammatory, and in distributing it through the mails.

Mr. COCHRANE. And not paying for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly, not paying for it. The Minister of Agriculture claims that he belongs to the party of purity, and that he is a great deal better than we miserable Tories on this side of the House; and yet when he finds an opportunity of making an excuse for a violation of the law, he thinks it is a justification for him if he can say somebody else did it. The article which the hon. gentleman wrote and distributed through the mails, free of cost, when he ought to have paid for it, reads thus:

Sir Charles is now in the decline of life. He is in his 79th year. Few more years can be reserved to his earthly lot. He has occupied in the country high rank and his career has been well filled. On many occasions has he been useful to his country. It is painful to see this public man devoting the latter years of his life to the sad task of sowing discord and hatred among Canada's youthful sons.

What baser falsehood could any man have circulated? It is absolutely false, and dishonouring to the man who penned it and mailed it.

It is painful to see him thus tarnish the brightness of the prestige which sprang from his name, from his long years of public life, and from his grey hairs.

For the purpose of satisfying his senile ambition, of securing the realization of what was perhaps the dream of his life, that is, to become the Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Charles Tupper does not at the present moment hesitate to appeal to racial and religious prejudices.

When, I ask, did Sir Charles Tupper appeal to race and religious prejudices? I say this is an infamous slander; shall I call it an infamous falsehood? The language is not too strong. Language cannot be used too strong to denounce such conduct on the part of ministers of the Crown. They have no right to take the money of the people of this country for the purpose of circulating scandalous language of this kind. Mr. Speaker, I think it unnecessary to say more on this matter; but since the hon. gentleman was good enough to accuse members on this side of the House of making statements that were not true, and disseminating them through the mails, I draw his attention to another portion of this pamphlet, in which he told the people of Sherbrooke that the Conservative tariff on agricultural implements was 35 per cent, and that the Liberal party had reduced it to 25 per cent, when surely, as Minister of Agriculture, he must have known, that long before he came to power, the Conservative party had reduced the duty on agricultural implements to 20 per cent. He must have known that the pamphlet which he was putting into the hands of the electors of Sherbrooke was absolutely untrue and misleading. Are we going to have the money of the country squandered in circulating slanders of this kind? And the man who has done it, comes before this House and attempts to justify his conduct, his contemptible conduct, I will say, by saying, 'You are another.'

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) As I see the Minister of Militia in the House to-night, I want to ask him a question, if he will give me his ear. When I am addressing him, I think, it is only proper courtesy on his part to turn around and listen to what I have to say.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I do not want any lecture from you about propriety.

Mr. PRIOR. A week or so ago, the hon. gentleman promised that he would look into a matter I brought up in regard to the correspondence that was brought down in connection with the offer of British Columbia to send a contingent to South Africa. The last letter given in that correspondence is dated the 16th of February, when Mr. Chamberlain telegraphed that the Imperial government would defray all the expenses of the transportation to South Africa. I asked if there was not some more correspondence, and the right hon. leader of the government said he did not know, as it had been referred to the Minister of Militia. The Minister of Militia, on the 2nd of April, said:

Copies of all the papers in the department have been placed in that return, as far as I know. I will make further inquiry about it.

I would like to know if there is any further correspondence in the department?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is none.

Mr. PRIOR. All I can say is, that the government have been very remiss in this matter. Here was an offer from the province to send a hundred men to South Africa—a magnificent offer, such as was never made by any other province. The provincial government were first told by this government that they would have to pay the transportation to South Africa themselves. When Mr. Chamberlain stated that the Imperial government were willing to pay the transportation, this government did not even take the trouble to inform the British Columbia government that such was the case. I say it was an outrage. I do not know whose fault it was—whether the fault of the Minister of Militia, or the head of any other department. No doubt if this government had informed the British Columbia government that the transportation would be paid, that contingent would now be on its way to South Africa. If there is no more correspondence, this shows that very little interest was exhibited in the matter by this government. There is another matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Militia, that is, in regard to the correspondence brought down in reference to General Hutton's dismissal. Surely these three short notes are not all the correspondence that has occasioned all this trouble between the Major General and the Militia Department or the government. I would ask the hon. gentleman if there is no more correspondence?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None.

Mr. PRIOR. Is this all the correspondence that the government think should be laid on the Table? Is there any that is private and confidential?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is none whatever.

Mr. PRIOR. I suppose we must take the hon. gentleman's word for it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. You can do as you like about that.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) As the Minister of Militia is in such a good mood, I would like to ask him, if it will suit his honour some time before the House prorogues, to bring down those canteen papers.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Generally, when I was a minister, when I was asked a question, I took off my hat and rose to my feet and gave a polite answer; but now manners have changed under the new liberalism, and the Minister of Militia sits in his seat with his hat on, and says, 'No more.' I want to ask the hon. Postmaster General, who is in the essence of good humour, when he can give me a return which I asked for early in the session, of the post office contracts and payments for carrying the mails into Dawson, and out to Vancouver or Victoria. I have been longing for these for many a day. I want to see the inwardness of them, and make two or three short observations on them. If the good natured Postmaster General will just stir up some of his wicked and selfish subordinates, and get those papers down, it would facilitate business and be a great pleasure to us on this side.

Mr. PRIOR.

Mr. McMULLEN. I just wish to make a remark—

Mr. FOSTER. I did not know that the Postmastership had changed. Has it really gone to my hon. friend from North Wellington?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) is addressing the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman's question is a very fair one.

Mr. FOSTER. I am always fair.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman called my attention to the matter the other day, and I at once gave instructions to have the returns prepared and laid on the Table at the earliest moment. To-day my deputy submitted some to me, which I initialled, and the return the hon. gentleman asks for may be amongst them. There is certainly no intention to delay anything, and my hon. friend will have these documents as soon as the Easter holidays are over.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope that my hon. friend will give them to me before Easter so that I may study them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend is serious about this—

Mr. FOSTER. I certainly am.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And if it be in compliance with the rules of the House to do such a thing, I will do it.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, these rules we have are of no account now.

THE DUTY ON AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.

Mr. JAS. McMULLEN (North Wellington). I am sorry the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has left the House. He said that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) had gone into a riding and declared that the government had reduced the duty on agricultural implements, and he waxed very indignant over what he called the untrue statement of the hon. minister. But, if he will turn to the tariff of 1894, he will find that picks, mattocks, grub hoes, adzes, hatchets, and eyes or poles for shelves, and tools of all description, n.e.s., were taxed 35 per cent ad valorem. And if he will look into the tariff of the present government, he will find that the duty on these implements has been reduced to 20 per cent. In the light of this fact, which cannot be gainsaid, I would like to know what becomes of this simulated indignation of the hon. gentleman from Halton.

SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to the memorial of the officers of the Moosejaw Agricultural Society, and to ask him whether he has received it. The following is the memorial:

The Memorial of the undersigned Officers of the Moosejaw Agricultural Society on behalf of said Society and Residents of the Moosejaw District.

Humbly sheweth:

1. That we memorialized the government of the Dominion last year re seed grain indebtedness and settlers' bonds connected therewith, giving reasons for wiping out the whole debt, or failing that, to cancel surety bonds and interest on the primary debt.

2. Prairie fires and the destruction connected therewith, and suggesting a remedy.

3. Water, its scarcity and impurity; its deleteriousness; the inconveniences and hardships resulting therefrom, handicapping mixed farming at every turn, lowering the prices of our dairy products and rendering the fattening of cattle in winter profitable an impossibility as well as the carrying on of winter dairying, and suggesting a remedy.

4. Tree Shelter.—Its entire absence throughout districts larger than some of the eastern provinces; recommending that tree planting grants be introduced into the Dominion lands system. Also that tree planting, successfully performed in accordance with prescribed rules and government directions, be accepted as part payment of pre-emptions. And further recommending as of the first importance, and in the best interests of the Dominion as well as of the North-west, that a considerable portion of the annual Dominion grant for immigration purposes, or from $250,000 to $300,000, be spent yearly and every year in the North-west in preventing prairie fires, procuring or solving the water question and studding the open prairie with groves of trees; that it would more quickly and effectually promote immigration and the settlement of the lands in the North-west than by expending it all in the east in assisting passages, bonusing steamboats and railways and printing and spreading immigration literature, &c., throughout Great Britain, Europe and elsewhere, or by paying a certain variable bonus to alien immigrants. The records of the land department will show that of late years settlers have gone into districts where water and tree shelter abound in fifties, hundreds and even thousands, while into the open, treeless, waterless prairie they have only gone in twos, fives and tens, although there is much less danger from frost, and a greater certainty of crops in the latter.

5. Interest on Pre-emptions.—That in consequence of an oversight or an anomaly in the first Dominion Lands Act, all settlers who promptly performed their settlement duties, and at the end of three years applied for their patent in accordance with the requirements of the Land Act, were charged interest on their pre-emptions from the said date, while others, taking advantage of the law not being compulsory, did not perform their duties or apply for their patent, some for many years, and were exempted from paying interest, thus saving $24 a year. Therefore, we pray that both be placed on the same footing by cancelling the interest on the first-named class for a term of years. We respectfully refer you to the original memorials sent you a year ago for a full statement of all points. We further respectfully represent that we regret exceedingly that thus far we have not been appraised that any action has been taken by the Dominion government re said memorials (save notice of receiving them), except on the seed grain indebtedness. That by the order in council passed thereon, no relief is given to the primary debtor, contrary to our petition and expectations. That we fully expected, when everything North-west pioneers had to contend with would be considered, at the very least that no interest would be charged on their seed grain indebtedness. That the order in council re the seed grain bondsmen means, if we read it aright, that the Governor in council may relieve the bondsmen of the debtor, who, on account of the government being in possession of their patents or otherwise, can secure payment of the said debt, but if the primary debtor is otherwise situated or beyond the reach, from any cause, of the government, that no relief will be given to the bondsmen of said parties.

It appears to your petitioners that the government, in thus acting, overlooked the fact that by their plan of acting they have given relief to those who did not require it, and withheld it from those who did. We therefore renew our request, and urge the cancelling of all seed grain bonds. That we cannot conceal from the government the keen disappointment universally felt in the North-west, that having attempted to give relief to the bondsmen, they did not cancel every one of the seed grain bonds, abate the interest and written-off the lien for seed grain on abandoned homesteads, which prevents settlers without means from taking up said lands.

We would further represent that we learned with amazement, at the close of the last session of parliament, that Dr. Douglas' Elevator Combine Bill was buried in the House, and express the hope that no such fate will overtake or defeat present measures before the House calculated to curtail the forces for evil of the odious elevator combine.

That it seems almost incomprehensible to us that the interests of a few men, perhaps forty or fifty, who built elevators, at an average cost of from three to four thousand dollars, more or less, would be accounted of more importance and value than the tens of thousands of farmers in Manitoba and the North-west, the great majority of whom have individually more capital invested and at stake than the incomparably fewer individuals who have invested in elevators.

That the privilege to ship on cars direct is utterly inadequate to check the rapacity of the elevator combine is proven by the sworn testimony of Manager White, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, before the Elevator Commission in Winnipeg; that of the season's crop only 4½ per cent was shipped direct by cars, the uncertainty as to cars, the preference given to elevators as to cars, the want as to accommodation to store grain until sufficient has accumulated to fill a car, the enlargement of many of the cars to a thousand bushels capacity, the twenty-four hours time limit to ship, which is too short except for those settled within four miles of the stations, all beyond that requiring at least forty-eight hours, and the entire absence of raised platforms from off which to load, all and sundry, militates against advantage being more largely taken of shipping by the car in sufficient volume to check or bring to terms of fair dealing the elevator combine. That the privilege of shipping from flat warehouses and reducing the capacity of standard elevators to about 10,000-bushel capacity, with raised platforms for car shipping, is an absolute, pressing necessity, although not regarded as a permanent solution of grain transportation in Manitoba and the North-west, where grain-growing and cattle-raising is destined to assume immense proportions.

That in common with all other agricultural associations throughout the Dominion, the Moosejaw Agricultural Society is composed of men of all political parties, and are therefore strictly non-political, and refrain positively as a society from expressing an opinion as to whether pre-election promises were or are not fulfilled; whether we have got a full measure of tariff reform or a reduction of the debt of the Dominion, &c., except to put on record that there is divergence of opinion on those matters. But we unhesitatingly and unanimously bring to your notice the following facts: that contrary to expectations, as compared with three or four years ago, we receive from three to five pounds of sugar less for a dollar than we then received; that binding twine is 40 or 50 per cent dearer; that barbed wire is about 70 per cent dearer; that lumber is from 25 to 30 per cent dearer, and a further increase is expected; and that we get no relief in agricultural implements, and that they are this spring dearer. That wheat, our stable product and mainstay, is as low in price as ever it was, except perhaps once, since the settlement of the North-west, and that therefore only for the extra bountiful crop which an over-ruling gracious Providence has vouchsafed to give us, hard times would prevail in the North-west.

That we therefore respectfully and earnestly represent and urge that, as agriculture is the greatest interest in the Dominion, that more attention be given to matters affecting the farmers of the east and the North-west, and that the several prayers of our memorials be favourably received and acted upon during the present session, as the duty and burden of providing for or solving the questions of fire, water, tree shelter, &c., devolves largely on the Dominion government while they retain in their hands and treasure the lands and proceeds of the North-west, especially since an over-flowing treasury will permit of its being done without increasing the debts or burdens of the community.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

DAVID COPELAND,
President.

B. FLETCHER,
Secretary.

Dated at Moosejaw, this 17th day of March, A.D. 1900.

As some of these paragraphs referred to the Department of Agriculture and to the Department of the Interior, I preferred not to bring the matter up, while both the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and the acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) were absent. Of course, it would be out of order if I were to dwell on the matter at this time, and I do not intend to break the rules of the House. But I thought it was very important that I should take advantage of the Minister of Agriculture to read this memorial, so fraught with wise suggestions for legislation this session.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has appealed to me. Perhaps I may be allowed to be as much out of order as himself, so I rise to reply. I will try not to protract this condition of things as long as the hon. gentleman did. The hon. gentleman must be quite aware that the matters contained in this memorial relate to the Department of the Interior, not to the Department of Agriculture, and that probably the memorial itself has been sent to the Minister of the Interior. It certainly has not reached my department yet, this being the first I ever heard of it. I have no doubt that the Minister of the Interior has taken notice of it if he has received it, and will attend to the suggestion contained in it.

Mr. DAVIN. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) inform me when the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) will return.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is beyond my power to give the hon. gentleman that information.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Lighthouse and coast service—salaries and allowances of light-keepers..... $220,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I promised the House to give an explanation of the increase of $3,000, as compared with last year, in this item. As I explained on that occasion, there are a number of new lights. Forty-two were established during the two years. Most of them were provided in the previous year, but the $3,000 increase arises in the necessity for providing for the light-houses at Midland, lighted buoys at Sault Blind River, Ont., Platon (new range lights), Quebec, Point du Chêne lightship, N.B., including hire of schooner for two months in fall, Sambro Harbour, N.S., Wood Harbour, N.S., Indian Harbour, N.S., Dryad Island, B.C., Pointer Island, B.C., and Lawyer Island, B.C.

Lighthouse and coast service—agencies, rents and contingencies..... $16,310

Mr. FOSTER. What is the increase here for?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. An increase has been granted to Mr. Tremaine, assistant agent in Halifax, also $200 for the salary of a clerk in a British Columbia office. The clerk in the British Columbia office has heretofore been paid intermittently, that is, he has been called in when he was wanted from time to time. But the agent says the work of the department has so increased that he must be employed permanently. Consequently, he has been employed at $600 a year as against $400 which was formerly appropriated.

Mr. PRIOR. I am glad to see that the hon. minister (Sir Louis Davies) has done what is right by the young man. He is a good clerk and his services were necessary.

Lighthouses and coast service—maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, including the maintenance and pay of crew of lighthouse steamer 'Brant'..... $235,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this steamer Brant?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She is a supply steamer.

Mr. FOSTER. When was that originated?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The year before last. She was in operation all last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Is she a new ship?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, built the previous year.

Mr. FOSTER. Where was she built?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At Charlottetown.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the cost of this vessel?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I gave that before, at the time we took the vote.

Mr. POWELL. She is a wooden vessel, of course?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. I find she cost $18,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is her tonnage?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She is a large tug-boat, about 125 feet long. The accountant tells me that they have not got her tonnage.

Mr. FOSTER. Is she used for any other purpose than to supply the Prince Edward Island lighthouses?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She is almost entirely used for lighthouses and is confined, mainly, to Prince Edward Island, but she serves also the north shore of New Brunswick when she is required. We used to have to employ tugs at a large daily pay, and the boat which Mr. Lloyd had, cost a great deal because he lost a great part of his supplies in going around.

Mr. FOSTER. What is about the yearly maintenance?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can only give an estimate, because we have not had a year yet, he only went out in the autumn. There is a small crew, the captain, mate, first officer, engineer, assistant engineer, and two men, besides, of course, the stoker.

Mr. POWELL. Has the expense very much increased since taking on the Brant?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The expense necessarily must be a little more. But the agent of the department, Mr. Lord, has been complaining for years that it was quite impossible for him to supply the lighthouses unless he had a sufficient vote. It goes without saying that he could not do it with a sail-boat, and we have had to employ tugs for which we pay $10 or $20 a day. We have not had a year's work of the Brant yet, but the estimated cost of her maintenance will be $5,000. This boat will also be used for the protection of the lobster fishery, which heretofore has cost us a good deal of money in tugs.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have the same fishery fleet as before?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The fishery fleet has not been employed in protecting lobsters there. We have to hire tugs for that purpose, because the lobster traps are set so near in shore that the larger ships cannot get in. Last year we spent a good deal of money extra in these tugs: One in New Brunswick, two in Nova Scotia, and one in Prince Edward Island, before the Brant went out.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the Brant built by tender?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, by a man named White.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). If the minister will look at the Auditor General's Report, page K-64, he will find that he purchased 213 gallons of linseed oil at 39-16 cents, and 126 gallons of boiled linseed oil at 41 cents, from the Imperial Oil Company.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is oil supplied by the Imperial Oil Company under contract made some years ago, by tender. There has been a change in the price of oil.

Mr. TAYLOR. On K-71, you go to Charlottetown and purchase boiled oil, not by tender but from a political friend, for which you paid 65 cents, and 60 cents for raw.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From whom?

Mr. TAYLOR. A. Kennedy & Co.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One of the finest men in the place, he would not charge a cent beyond what was right. He belongs to the salt of the earth.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why does not the hon. gentleman buy by tender? The late government called for tenders for supplies, but here all through it is jobbed out at 50 per cent to 100 per cent profit to the seller.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is not an article of supply that has to be certified by Mr. Lord which has not been got at the market price. You will not find many men keener to cut down prices than Mr. Lord.

Mr. TAYLOR. On K-63 you paid John Tobin & Co., Halifax, $4.75 for three barrels of Ogilvie's patent flour, and thirty-seven barrels at $4.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What time of the year was that?

Mr. TAYLOR. Between 1898 and 1899, large quantities were bought at $7 and $7.90 during that same year. On K-122, H. & S. Veit sold three barrels of flour at $5.75; one barrel at $6; four barrels at $6.50; and five barrels at $7.50. On K-124 also, there were purchased three barrels at $6; two barrels at $6.50; one barrel at $6.75; and one barrel at $7.50. Flour was not worth within 50 per cent of that price between July, 1898 and July, 1899.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The accountant of the department showed the hon. gentleman that that was the price. He went and got the prices at the stores.

Mr. TAYLOR. On K-118, two barrels were supplied at $7.90. Now, why should the people's money be wasted in paying such prices? The government should call for tenders as the late government did; but this government is bent on paying their political friends extra high prices for the goods they purchase.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can say to the hon. gentleman, as to the price of oil and of flour, as of everything else, that peremptory instructions were given to the agents in the several provinces not to pass any article until they had ascertained the price on the market, and under no circumstances were they to pass it if it were above the fair market price. I think I am correct in saying, without having consultation with the officers in my department, that no such items have been passed at all until they had been thoroughly sifted. In regard to flour, the accountant of the department made the most thorough examination and satisfied himself that just after the season commenced wheat and flour went up, and the average of a particular class of flour was $7 to $7.50. He went down to the stores here in Ottawa and made them turn up their prices at those dates, and found that those prices obtained. Scarcely more than a dozen barrels of flour were purchased at $7. That is the explanation sent out by the agents, Mr. Lord, Mr. Harding and Mr. Parsons. They do not purchase indiscriminately or recklessly. I wish the hon. gentleman knew the amount of severe criticism to which I am subjected, and how I am abused the whole year round by the parties who supply these things, because they allege that the agents have cut them down so much that there is no profit left in it for them.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page K-106 of the Auditor General's Report he will find that eight barrels of flour were purchased from Davison & Co., Charlottetown.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no such firm as Davis & Co., Charlottetown. It is Davison & Co.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said Davison & Co.—8 barrels of flour at $7 per barrel. The accountant of the department, or the minister, may summon any grocer he wishes before the Public Accounts Committee, and he will not find any grocer in Ottawa who sold a barrel of flour at $7 a barrel from the 1st of July, 1898 to the 1st of July, 1899. I am in the grain business, and I know what the price of wheat is, the price of wheat regulates the price of flour, and wheat was never over $1 and $1.05 a bushel. The accountant has the opportunity, and I challenge the accountant or the minister to produce a merchant before the Public Accounts Committee who will say that flour was ever higher than $5.50 a barrel. To-day I called Mr. Earle at the Public Accounts Committee, and he said that condensed milk sells for $4 a case in British Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has no right to refer to anything that has been done before a committee of the House from which there is no report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will take up the question of condensed milk. I do not know what flour was sold for; I cannot tell. But I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor), that, when he first called the subject to my attention, I asked the accountant not only to write to the agents, but to go down among the flour stores and ascertain what the prices were. This flour had not been purchased in the month of July, but in May and June, 1898, and he was told that the average price of the best flour, the brand that is charged for here, was $7 per barrel. If the hon. gentleman wants his informants brought before the Public Accounts Committee I shall bring them there, and if he can show me that any officer of my department has been paying higher than a fair market price I can assure him that that officer shall have the severest censure from me and such punishment as I can give him.

Mr. TAYLOR. After what was said here last year I thought the hon. minister would quit this system of dividing the patronage among his political friends and allowing them to charge exorbitant prices. But, the same state of affairs is shown in the Auditor General's Report as was disclosed last year. There is an increase of $5,000 in this vote, and I move that that increase of $5,000 be struck out of the item for the maintenance and repairs of lighthouses which includes these items that I am complaining of.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; the proper time to move that is when we come to the fishery protection service about which the hon. gentleman is speaking. You cannot shut up the lighthouses.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is the items we are dealing with now that I am complaining of.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, no. The hon. gentleman had better leave this question to be fought out when we take the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. I am willing to meet him, to call witnesses there and to examine them. We will have some of the agents up from the other provinces.

Mr. TAYLOR. At page K-68 of the Auditor General's Report I find that John Tobin & Co., of Halifax, received $381.40 for groceries, and that flour was bought at $4 and at $4.75 per barrel. I find that Ogilvie's patent is purchased at $4.75, and on the next page I see that the department is paying $7.90 for flour.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That depends on the time you bought it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not care at what time of the year it was. If the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) is in the House—he is a miller, and he will verify my statement. There is not a man, who is conversant with the prices of grain or flour, who will say that flour had reached any such prices during that year. I am buying flour for my family all the time and I know what the prices are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no use of my hon. friend and I bandying words across the floor of the House because I cannot give any evidence on the subject. My accountant told me that he found that flour, during the time of the Leiter deal, in May or June, was selling $7 per barrel. If he will come and give evidence under oath before the Public Accounts Committee I will bring the sellers of flour before the committee who know what the price was.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask the hon. gentleman to verify his statements.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will bring any witnesses the hon. gentleman likes, because I am just as keen that there shall be no overcharging as he is. I will now deal with the question of condensed milk.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will deal with that again. The hon. Chairman ruled that out, and said that the discussion could not go on.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not going to refer to the committee. The hon. gentleman has stated that we paid too high a price for condensed milk. We had from Mr. Harding and Mr. Parsons, the agents in Nova Scotia, the statement that they cannot purchase condensed milk in Halifax or St. John for less than they paid for it. My hon. friend says they can buy it in British Columbia for $4.50 a case. We wrote to the Truro factory, and the Truro factory wrote back to say that condensed milk cannot be sold in the maritime provinces under $6.50 per case wholesale. The retailers have to charge a profit on that. That is the Reindeer brand. In British Columbia the writer says, there is fiftyfold more milk sold there, that they have to compete with the Swiss milk made in England that comes to British Columbia via Cape Horn, and that the manufacturers, who have an immense capital, have been trying to squeeze the Truro Reindeer brand out of the market, and for that reason the Truro Reindeer brand is sold at $2 less in British Columbia than in the maritime provinces.

Mr. PRIOR. That is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) had better buy it in British Columbia.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And bring it all the way across the continent.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think that for the eight cases we require it would pay.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries why he requires the 59 cases purchased last year. I would like to know why the government cannot buy their supplies as cheaply as any wholesale man. Why job it out amongst political retail merchants?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It would cost me more to send it from one place to another to the different ships than we would save.

Mr. TAYLOR. At page K-10 of the Auditor General's Report we have three cases bought from Louis Mercier, Quebec, at $10. Mr. Earle can buy it, delivered at Victoria, B.C., freight paid, at $4 per case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $4.50.

Mr. TAYLOR. Four dollars, he told me to-day, he gets it for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have explained that here.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have a letter from the Truro factory myself saying that the price there is $3.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where?

Mr. TAYLOR. At Truro.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will you read it?

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot lay my hands on it just now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish you could find it and read it

Mr. TAYLOR. I will try to.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would like to put the two letters on record together if that is the kind of people they are.

Mr. TAYLOR. They have a brand being made in Prince Edward Island, and the opposition has forced the price down to $3.25. It was $4. I will read the letter, but I have not it at hand for the moment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then I hope the hon. gentleman will postpone his argument until he has the letter. Either I have been grossly deceived by the Truro company, or he has misunderstood their letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is $3.25, and it used to be $4.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am talking about the present time.

Mr. TAYLOR—On K-54 of the Auditor General's Report, I find boiled oil charged at 40 cents a gallon.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then we have left milk and gone to oil.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, until I find the letter.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). Before we leave this subject of condensed milk, I would like to make a remark or two on this question, because I have inquired into it. I thought the remark made in the Committee of Public Accounts—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FLINT. I was surprised at the statement made in another place with regard to the price of condensed milk in British Columbia, and the price in Nova Scotia, and I thought possibly some of our officers in Nova Scotia might have been overreached by some of our merchants with whom they dealt. I turned to the Auditor General's Report for 1895-6, when the Conservatives were in power, and if I found there that a different state of things prevailed then to what prevails now, I would conclude that possibly the Minister of Marine and his officers were wrong. But I find from the Auditor General's Report, during the years of the Conservative administration, that Hogg, Craig & Co., of Pictou, good Conservatives, sold condensed milk to the Aberdeen, at $7 a case. Moffatt & Co. sold at $8 per case. John O'Donnell of Quebec, sold at $9 per case.

Mr. TAYLOR. What has that got to do with this?

Mr. FLINT. It has a great deal to do with it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is condemning the present administration and its officers, for purchasing at high prices and the inference is that the merchants have grossly overreached the officer of the department, and that the officers have connived in an improper way to have the price put up on the government. If we find that the prices under the Conservative administration are the same, then his argument falls to the ground. These goods under the Conservative regime were purchased from good Conservatives and men of good standing in their community. The Lansdowne paid $9.40 per case from B. Gillespie & Sons, Parrsboro, and Geo. Robertson & Co. of St. John, sold the same article at $9. Samuel Tufts & Co., of St. John, sold at $8 a case, Tuttle & Barrington at $8 a case, W. H. Simpson, of Halifax, got $7.20 a case, E. J. Sanders in Victoria, in the same year, sold 36 dozen, at about $6.20 a case, which proves that the same state of things existed in that year, as in the present year.

Mr. PRIOR. It shows how honest they are in Victoria.

Mr. FLINT. It shows that in Victoria, owing to some circumstances, probably keen competition from the American companies, they can sell this milk at less than they can sell it in Nova Scotia. Daniel Stewart of Charlottetown, in this year, sold at $12 a case. These are good Conservatives. John Bryson, of Quebec, sold at $9.60 a case. E. W. Cross, Beaver Harbour, sold at $7 a case. Lunt & Billings, St. Andrews, sold at $8.64 a case. Mackie & Eldridge sold at $8 a case, Joseph McGill, of Shelburne, sold at $8 a case, Moore & Roberts, of North Sydney, sold at $9 a case, John O'Donnell, of Quebec, sold at $9.60 a case, and John Price & Co., of Pictou, sold at $10 per case.

Mr. TAYLOR. What year is that?

Mr. FLINT. 1895. The point I wish to make is not that there is any impropriety, but that the prices charged then by reputable Conservative firms in the maritime provinces, appear to be on an average about the same as is charged now. If there is any difference, it is that the prices were higher in 1895, than they are now.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the late government did wrong, is that any reason why this government should do the same thing? This government was pledged to the people that they would do business on business principles, but here we find them buying hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth from retail stores, at from 50 to 100 per cent over what they could buy from wholesale stores. I have here the letter I referred to about condensed milk. It says:

Price of Reindeer condensed milk from jobbing house is $3.25 per case. Manufacturers price to jobbers probably $3. It was formerly higher, $4. Competition has lowered it. 'Shamrock' made in Prince Edward Island is very highly spoken of, price same as Truro make—Reindeer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who signs that?

Mr. TAYLOR. A. C. Bell, M.P.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But you said you had a letter from the Truro factory.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Bell wrote for the information, and this is what he got. Do you doubt Mr. Bell's statement?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not doubt Mr. Bell at all, but there is nothing to show that he wrote to the factory.

Mr. TAYLOR. He wrote for the prices.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Who did he write to? I thought it scarcely possible that the factory could have written such a different letter to the one they sent my department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. TAYLOR. I received that letter recently.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But the letter says the prices were higher formerly.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And the competition from the Prince Edward Island factory is only of recent date.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $5,000 asked for this year for doing the same work as was done last year, and it is due altogether to the purchasing of these supplies at these high prices. I, therefore, move that the item be reduced by $5,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if the officers in charge of these steamers, the men who buy these supplies, are the same men who were in charge in 1894, 1895 and 1896?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, all the same. I cannot recall any change in the fishery protection service.

Mr. TALBOT. Unfortunately.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Fortunately or unfortunately, I cannot recall any. We have left the service just as it was.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is clear to my mind that changes should be made. If these men did wrong before, they should have been changed by this government. This is nothing new, for I heard of a government that was more surrounded with barnacles and blood-suckers than the government of hon. gentlemen opposite; and this government, instead of removing these men when it got into power, retained them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have gone into this matter personally, and I have satisfied myself that the men—I do not care whether they were appointed by my predecessors or not—take the greatest care in purchasing the supplies at the lowest market prices; and the proof that they do so is the fact that the fishery protection service is carried on at an expense per man of 40 cents per day.

Mr. PRIOR. Does that include salaries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. It includes the maintenance of the crew and the officers.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) agrees that this government is continuing in the path of its predecessors, only that it is a great deal worse.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will not allow the hon. gentleman to put words in my mouth. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman tries to lay the blame on the Tory officials who have not been dismissed. On page K-53, I find that the government paid to Parent, of Quebec, $2,659 for various supplies without tender. There is no Tory official here. Among the items I find these: four barrels of lime at $1.50; sand, 90 cents a barrel, that is, 30 cents a bushel. Are these prices right, and where does the Tory officials come in?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will challenge my hon. friend to bring the agent of the Marine Department up and examine him before the Public Accounts Committee on that account. He has been there twenty-five years, he is a very intelligent man, and he knows the prices. I will bring him if the hon. gentleman challenges the correctness of the charges.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do challenge them.

Mr. TALBOT. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I bought lime at the kiln, fifty barrels, and paid 50 cents a bushel for it.

Mr. TAYLOR. You can get it in Ontario at 15 cents a bushel.

Mr. TALBOT. You cannot buy lime in Quebec at any time for less than 50 cents a bushel.

Mr. TAYLOR. Here are other items: Three shovels at $1.25, and two handsaws at $3.25. What does my hon. friend say about sand at 30 cents a bushel?

Mr. TALBOT. Is it sifted sand? If it is, it will cost considerable.

Mr. TAYLOR. What does it cost to sift it? Here is a charge of $3.25 for a cross-cut saw. Who ever heard of such prices?

Mr. McMULLEN. It all depends on what kind of a cross-cut saw it was. You can get them from $1.25 to $5.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend will not find a cross-cut saw as high as $5. I object to paying Mr. Parent $2,600 for these goods.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will prove that every item was a fair charge.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, prove it now. I say that they are outrageous overcharges.

Mr. TALBOT. I know Mr. Parent. He is a man who owns large quarries, he is a thoroughly honourable man, and from being on the spot I know that these prices are correct. I think it ill-becomes the hon. gentleman, who lives in Gananoque, to tell us what the prices should be in Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. The prices in Gananoque and those in Quebec do not vary very much. Here are nails purchased between the 1st of July, 1898, and the 1st of July, 1899, and Mr. Parent charges $3.70 for three kegs, $3.65 for two, $3.50 for three, and $3.25 for three. Everybody knows that at that time you could go into a hardware store and get nails for $2 or $2.50 at the outside. I appeal to my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Prior) if they could not be got for that at Vancouver.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not hear your friend from British Columbia stating the price of nails.

Mr. TAYLOR. You will not find a man in Ottawa who will say that they were not outrageous prices at that time.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not seem to me that the minister has quite met the point. Here, for instance, Mr. Parent was dealt with to the extent of pretty near $5,000. All these are staple articles and might easily have been bought by tender.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Charles Parent is not C. Parent, they are different people.

Mr. TALBOT.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, here are two parties who have furnished goods to the amount of $4,000 or $5,000—all staple articles such as axes, axe handles, fire bricks, cement, paints of various kinds, leads. Does not my hon. friend think it would be better, in the case of large amounts like those, to call for tenders. He is paying tremendous prices. In 1898 he paid for axes the large prices of 90 cents and $1.50. In all sorts of iron goods the price seems very high.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can only tell my hon. friend that we went into the matter most exhaustively after the criticisms of last session. I sent for Mr. Gregory and went over the accounts with him, item by item. A question last year was raised about the price of shovels, but it turned out that these were very large scoops used for shovelling coal aboard ships.

Mr. TAYLOR. What were they worth?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Just what they were charged at. I satisfied myself there was no charge made in the accounts last year that was not justifiable. I sent for Mr. Gregory this year, and I asked him if he had obeyed my instructions with regard to price. He said he had in every case, and could prove that the prices paid were the lowest.

Mr. PRIOR. At retail.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes; a great many of the articles we could not have purchased by tender.

Mr. FOSTER. You bought a lot of axes every year?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The chances are ten to one that if bought by tender, we would not get a good article.

Mr. FOSTER. You could get just as good an article as if you bought them one by one. Then you are using a lot of cement, up to 100 barrels. Then you have all kinds of iron work. All of these are staple articles. You have paid for three cases of nails $3.65, which is a very high price. You are buying a standard article and paying job prices for it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, it is the lowest market price, I am informed.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman could easily have called for tenders.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I am told that I could not for a lot of little items, wanted day by day for these ships.

Mr. FOSTER. The supplies for that vessel are almost entirely in Quebec, and tens of thousands of dollars worth are bought in Quebec, from the merchants there. They could be stored there wholesale and then distributed. You send them on your supply vessels, which go round to the lights and furnish goods to the different lighthouses. But the hon. gentleman does not want to buy these goods wholesale, but to put his orders with political friends and give them jobbing prices.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, the lowest market price.

Mr. FOSTER. Why, you are paying $10 a case in Quebec for condensed milk.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was the lowest price obtainable.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that $10 was the lowest price when it was selling at $4 to $6.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, suppose it is $8, how can the hon. gentleman justify the payment of $10?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is $8 in the maritime provinces, but $10 at Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, as a business man, will pay $2 more in Quebec than in the maritime provinces. That shows you pretty well the business arrangement upon which it is run.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Would it not be fair that I should call the agent here and let him answer, with the accounts in his hands, whether he could have purchased any lower. I asked the different agents if I could purchase supplies by tender, and they said you will not be able to get as good an article.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let the hon. gentleman call on hardware merchants here in Ottawa and ascertain what they sold nails for at that time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I would call a man from the province of Quebec to say whether they could be got cheaper.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the hon. gentleman is not doing business on business principles. Why has not the government a storehouse here, for all its supplies?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How much would it cost to build a storehouse and drag the stuff up to it?

Mr. TAYLOR. Less than what you are paying to political friends now. Store the supplies here and distribute them out to the public departments. Nails, for instance, are required in all the departments, especially the Departments of Agriculture and Militia. The government should purchase all they require by tender, but they would then be deprived of political patronage.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Why did you not do it?

Mr. TAYLOR. That makes no difference. When the hon. member for North Wellington and the hon. Minister of Marine sat on this side, they abused the late government for this very practice, and said they would change it all. But now that they are in office, they are going one better, and paying prices which the late government never thought of paying. The late government, in all their supplies for the Intercolonial Railway, purchased every article by tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not correct.

Mr. TAYLOR. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), made the statement here, and not a member of the government contradicted it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did at the time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Everybody in the maritime provinces knows better than that.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was substantially correct.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The supplies were got from political friends almost without exception. Much of the supplies were got by inviting a number of political friends to tender. Much was not got that way, but the Liberals supplied none, in nine cases out of ten.

Mr. McMULLEN. The only way we can form an idea of our expenditure is by comparing it with our expenditure in the past. Take the Auditor General's Report, 1894-5, and you will find that 378 pounds of nails bought by the Fishery Department cost 6 cents a pound. And I find there were 39 kegs bought at the same time, at $2.60 a keg.

Mr. PRIOR. May be a different size.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, these are just ordinary nails.

Mr. PRIOR. How does the hon. gentleman know that?

Mr. McMULLEN. In one case they were 6 cents a pound; in the other $2.60 a keg.

Mr. POWELL. Respecting the practice on the Intercolonial Railway, I cannot allow the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to pass unchallenged. He states affirmatively and I state negatively the same position, the difference being that I know whereof I am speaking and the hon. gentleman, I think, does not. At the time the hon. gentleman refers to, he was very busy in Nova Scotia politics and had the weight of provincial matters on his back, so he could not hardly be acquainted with these matters. Under Liberal-Conservative rule, the principle that was invariably followed with respect for supplies for the Intercolonial Railway was by inviting a large number of people to tender—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Public tenders ?

Mr. POWELL. Public tenders.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Notifying Liberals as well ?

Mr. POWELL. In many cases notifying Liberals as well. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the two largest hardware firms in St. John are T. McAvity & Sons and W. H. Thorne & Company. If the hon. gentleman will look over the accounts, he will see the enormous amount of patronage given to the firm of T. McAvity & Company, and he will acknowledge that the statement he makes is without basis. But under the present regime, there is an entire change. In some cases, I have known favours to be disposed of on political principles to this extent—a druggist in my own town was called upon to make a tender for dry goods.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I leave the Minister of Railways to deal with what takes place at the present time, but I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) to say, as certainly the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) gave us to understand, that public tenders were invited for supplies for the Intercolonial Railway. I said that that was not correct, and I could name Liberal firms who have never been allowed an opportunity to make a tender, while one or two whose names were put on the list and who tendered for a while came to the conclusion that it was a waste of time because their tenders were not accepted. I am not disputing that tenders were called for from a limited circle. That is the system to-day. The question between us was whether the system of public tender was carried out under the late administration. If the hon. gentleman says that he believes it was I can only say that I am satisfied he is mistaken. No such system of public tender was adopted in connection with the supplies for the Intercolonial Railway. Tenders were invited from a limited circle, and the contracts were almost invariably given to friends of the Conservative party.

Mr. POWELL. And the lowest tender was accepted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not disputing that just now.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know a hardware merchant in Montreal who deals also in railway supplies. In conversation with him some time ago he complained that up to a short time ago he had not been able to get an order for a dollar's worth of goods for the Intercolonial Railway. But even now, though circulars were sent to him inviting tenders, the orders find their way into the hands of Conservatives. He said that the officials on the road were generally Conservatives, and to this fact he attributed his failure to secure an order. Under the present administration he had tendered, and though the quality of his manufacture was as good as any in Canada, he did not receive an order in any single instance.

Mr. FOSTER. His prices were too high.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, his prices were not higher than others. He said he believed that the officials of the railways favoured their own political friends, and by some means they advised the Minister to place orders where they would reach the hands of those that the railway was accustomed to deal with before.

Mr. POWELL. I presume the same method prevails to-day as prevailed during the Conservative regime. Tenders were called for—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. By circular.

Mr. POWELL. At any rate, they were called for and these tenders were sent to Ottawa unopened and accepted at Ottawa. Now, to show how utterly baseless is the charge of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I may say that the man who now has to deal with these tenders for supplies, the head of the store department, is a Liberal of the Liberals, and the same man has been in office for years. The Conservative, Mr. Cook, who occupied that office was turned out and the present officer, Mr. Palmer, was put in. I know both these gentlemen. It is Mr. Palmer and the Minister of Railways and Canals upon whom devolves the duty of accepting tenders and making the contract. So, if the friend of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) receives exactly the same treatment as he had under the Conservative regime, and if he does not get orders, it must be for some other reason than that he suggests—probably his tender was not so low as those of other people.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) to say that tenders are sent to Ottawa to be acted upon. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him if these tenders are not first sent to Moncton to be examined by the officials there and forwarded with the recommendation of the officials for the minister's approval ?

Mr. POWELL. For a time under Conservative rule that was the fact. But it was changed within the last five or six years. The hon. gentleman will find that an order in council was passed some two or three years before the Conservative party went out of power declaring in substance that the whole management of the Intercolonial Railway was to be in the hands of the chief superintendent, that is Mr. Pottinger, under the direction of the deputy minister here, Mr. Schreiber. That took this matter out of the hands of the chief of the store department, and tenders were sent unopened to Ottawa, word was received from Mr. Schreiber as to whose tender was the lowest and to whom the contract was to be awarded.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there is a mistake on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell). For some time I acted as Minister of Railways and Canals—

Mr. POWELL. I was speaking of a former state of affairs.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Under the present practice, tenders are examined at Moncton, and attention is called by the officials, and very properly, to the prices which seem to be, on the whole, the most favourable.

Mr. POWELL. That is as it should be.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so; of course, the minister cannot go over every item. It is the duty of the officials to call the attention of the minister to the tender which was most favourable. And I must say that, from my observation while I was acting minister, the officials do their work most faithfully and the lowest tenderer gets the contract. I cannot speak of the system of former years, but the system now followed is that which I have described.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. minister stated that a large quantity of supplies were bought in Quebec—thousands of dollars worth. Why could not the hon. gentleman inaugurate a system like that adopted by the navy department in British Columbia, and also in the city council of the city I come from? At the beginning of the year, tenders are sent out to everybody in the different trades, asking them for the prices at which they will supply the goods required, supplying half a dozen or half a case, or twenty cases—whatever may be required.

Mr. POWELL. That system was inaugurated in the case of the penitentiary in the province of Nova Scotia and was carried out.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Not always.

Mr. POWELL. Yes, always; I know it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I know differently.

Mr. PRIOR. When these hon. gentlemen have finished their conversation, I shall be glad to go on. Under the system I speak of the small quantities are got at as low prices as large quantities. Every firm knows that when tendering that it must supply the goods in large or small quantities, and they can afford to put in the small quantities at the same price as the large quantities. In regard to nails I would not like to say much. In the bills for nails, nobody can say whether it is a fair price or not. In none of these bills, either those that the hon. member for Wellington read, purchased by the Conservatives, or those purchased by the present government, nobody can tell the price of the nails unless he knows the kind and size.

Amendment (Mr. Taylor) negatived.

To pay wages of crew and maintenance of Lurcher Shoal lightship..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For some years back the shipping interests in St. John, N.B., and the shipping interests generally in Nova Scotia, on the Bay of Fundy, have been pressing for the construction of a lightship on the Lurcher Shoal, a dangerous shoal at the entrance of the Bay of Fundy, half way across the bay. This is one of the dangerous obstructions which navigators fear in the bay. The matter was brought to my attention about two years ago, principally by one of the members for St. John, Mr. Ellis, who wrote me letters on it. I referred the matter to Col. Anderson, who made a report. I then wrote to the St. John Board of Trade, and asked them to obtain for me the opinions of leading captains of the different vessels as to the necessity of this lightship, because I was informed it would be a very expensive work. There was a buoy there before, and there is one there now, but it does not often stay. I have in my hand the report sent by the St. John Board of Trade, signed by Mr. Alison, in which they strongly urge the necessity for the construction, more especially in view of the fact that of late, for some indefensible reasons, the British Lloyds have been discriminating against us in the matter of insurance rates, and it is absolutely essential that we should convince the British Lloyds that we are doing everything that ought to be done to improve the aids to our navigators. So, I have made up my mind, after receiving these reports from all the captains, those of the Allan Line, of Thompson & Co., of Schofield & Co., Limited, of Troop & Son, and others in St. John, that I would recommend this to my colleagues. Last year, when I was in London, I had an opportunity of having a long conversation with gentlemen connected with the board of trade. They brought the necessity of improving the aids to navigation in the St. Lawrence and in the Bay of Fundy, to my attention, and we discussed it at great length. Among other things, I informed them that it was my intention, after having the report of the chief engineer, to urge the establishment of this lightship. I then sent Col. Anderson down to New York, and he ascertained that the cost of establishing a lightship would be about $80,000, a modern lightship, with all the modern appliances and improvements, cannot be had for less. Col. Anderson made a close examination into that. The intention of the government is to call for the construction of this lightship in Canada. We think the time has come when our steel works can commence very well by building government ships of this kind, such as a steel ship, and another ship, which I hope to get a vote for building, on Lake Superior, which will be a steel ship, planked outside with oak or other timber. Such a ship can be built in Canada and the intention is to call for tenders from our Canadian firms as well as from others, and to give our own preference, if they can build it at anything like the same price as it can be built elsewhere. I think everybody will agree that this would be a very fair beginning, and even if you were to pay a few thousand dollars more for the construction of such a lightship in Canada, than possibly she can be built for in Great Britain, it would be a step in the right direction. So, with respect to the steel steamship which I hope to be able to get for the hydrographic service in Lake Superior. I intend to have her built at the steel works either in Toronto or New Glasgow. This vote is for the maintenance of this Lurcher Shoal lightship. As I have mentioned, Col. Anderson went down to New York and went into the details of the construction of such a ship. He was furnished by the government with every assistance for ascertaining what the cost of the American lightships were, and he reported that the cost was $80,000, and the cost of maintaining one of them was $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the complement of men for this lightship?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am told that it is a captain and five men.

Construction of lighthouses (salaries of temporary officers, engineers and draughtsmen at Ottawa, may be paid out of this vote at rates exceeding $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act)..... $50,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It sometimes becomes necessary to employ one or two draughtsmen in the department, and since the third-class clerks have been abolished, the Auditor General will not allow a draughtsman to be employed at a higher salary than $400. A draughtsman cannot be had for $400 a year.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

As a matter of fact, we voted $600 last year to fill the place, but we could not get any young man from the Royal Military College to take the position at $600. At last we picked up Mr. Roberts, an Englishman, and put him in at $50 per month. But, I cannot pay him, and he is borrowing money from day to day, because the Auditor General will not allow us to pay him unless a special vote is given for it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend sees that he cannot take a vote in that indefinite way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, that is right; it is taken in that way by the Public Works Department. I copied the words from them.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, when taking a vote for the construction of light-houses, takes inside of it a vote for paying an indefinite number of engineers and draughtsmen.

Mr. PRIOR. There is $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman can employ twenty or thirty clerks.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Just the same as in the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. But in the Department of Public Works you have a schedule of the items.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I am quite sure that any statement I make in the House on my responsibility, will be accepted. My present intention is only to employ one. I may employ another, or two, or three.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend had better say: Salaries of temporary officers, engineers and draughtsmen, not exceeding three.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am perfectly willing to insert: Not exceeding five.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not seem possible that the hon. gentleman will employ five engineers and draughtsmen.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think not. The hon. gentleman will see that there is an immense number of plans to be prepared, and that these men are working day and night.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved to add after the word 'draughtsmen,' the words, 'not exceeding five.'

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister has stated that he has followed the principle laid down by the Department of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I say I copied the words.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find at Q-45 of the Auditor General's Report, that the hon.

Minister of Public Works has done something which this House, when they voted him the money, did not expect he would do, or that he would expend this money in this way. Therefore, if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is copying the Department of Public Works, he is making a huge mistake.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am only copying the Minister of Public Works's vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find an expenditure of $2,236.82, which is unauthorized by this House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will discuss that when we come to it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to reply to the hon. minister, who says that he has copied the Public Works Department. To cover that large expenditure, the hon. Minister of Public Works makes the following charges :

Harbours and rivers, Prince Edward Island, repairs to piers.....	$ 200 00
Harbours and rivers, maritime provinces generally.....	1,618 50
Harbours and rivers, Quebec generally.	366 82
“ generally....	51 50
	$2,236 82

Mr. FOSTER. The form of the vote is not a desirable form in the way that the hon. minister is putting it. The vote ought not to be a mixed one. If he is taking a vote for the construction of lighthouses, it should be for the construction of lighthouses, and if he wants a vote for temporary men, let him take it. Turn to page 54 of the estimates, and you will find that the Public Works Department does not mix up these votes. There, they will ask for $50,000 or $100,000 for the construction of public works, but they do not propose to employ such draughtsmen as they like out of it. They have an item for temporary clerical and other assistance, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act—so much money. The money can be applied only to the payment of these officers, and then the minister gives a statement as to what officers he is employing or proposes to employ. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see that it would be the worst possible system that could be adopted to take a lump sum vote, and that he should then be at liberty to employ as many officers as he wished. I would much rather that he would just take his vote for the construction of lighthouses, whatever he needs, and then take a vote for temporary engineers and draughtsmen.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is really not worth while doing that. I said that these words which I have here were taken from the Department of Public Works. I believe they are taken either from the Department of Public Works or the Department of the Interior, in the Dominion lands vote. The hon. gentleman will see that it is the same vote as is proposed nearly every year for lighthouses.

Mr. FOSTER. We never had a double vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, and we would not have it now ; but here is a man who has to borrow money, day after day, because the Auditor General will not let me pay him.

Mr. FOSTER. Put it in the vote just the same as the Public Works Department does it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to call the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that he is making a beginning of what is a very bad example. We have had votes for the construction of lighthouses, all the way from $20,000 to $30,000 or $40,000. This is for the construction of lighthouses, and not for the purpose of paying temporary clerks. What the hon. minister is going to do is to employ a number of temporary clerks, and he wants to pay them out of the vote, but the Auditor General very properly will not allow him under the rule.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot pay them.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, then, let the hon. gentleman say what he wants, and put in a vote for them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Very well, then, we will put in 'not exceeding $3,000.'

Mr. FOSTER. Put in $3,000 if you wish, but put in a vote for these clerks.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The salaries of temporary engineers can be paid out of this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. No, do not mix the votes. Make it two votes, one for the construction of lighthouses, if you want $47,000, and then salaries of temporary officers, engineers and draughtsmen at Ottawa, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman thinks that is better, I will put it that way.

The CHAIRMAN. It is proposed to amend the item in this way : Construction of lighthouses, $47,000 ; salaries of temporary officers, engineers and draughtsmen at Ottawa, at rates not exceeding $400 per annum notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $3,000. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the item shall be amended in this way ?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. In reference to the construction of lighthouses, will the hon. minister lay before the committee a statement of the new lighthouses proposed to be erected ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The new lighthouses which we propose to erect on the Pacific coast, in consequence of the increased traffic there, will be at Lawyer's Island and Ballinac Island. We do not know the cost yet.

Mr. PRIOR. Is that on Chatham Sound ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. In consequence of the increased tonnage and the larger size of the vessels plying on the St. Lawrence, it is proposed to provide range lights at Pointe aux Basile, a fog alarm at Father Point, and a fog alarm on the Gaspé shore. The items of cost are not given. These are new lights and the increases are very small.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the Brotchie Ledge light. Captain Gaudin, agent of the department, who is an excellent civil servant and a man of experience, has written to the minister, I suppose, as he has to the press, about this matter. I wish to read the following letter which I have received :

E. G. Prior, M.P.

Dear Sir,—Inclosed please find clipping from Victoria 'Daily Colonist' of 15th instant re Brotchie Ledge Light from Capt. Jas. Gaudin, agent of Marine and Fisheries. I beg to state that the report from him, herein contained, is erroneous.

No captains or pilots to our knowledge have made any favourable remarks about this light, and in fact when approaching it from the direction of Trial Island, it is not discernible to within one-half mile of its location. This, as Capt. Gaudin himself says, is owing to the presence of an iron bar in front of the light.

We pass eight lights on the route from Vancouver to Victoria and the Brotchie Ledge light is the poorest of the lot. It is fairly good in clear weather, but as good as a failure when the weather is in any way overcast. Brotchie's Ledge is a most dangerous reef and nothing short of a first-class light and even a fog signal as well, will be of much benefit to navigation.

We remain yours very truly,

(Sgd.) GEORGE RUDLIN,
Master SS. 'Charmer.'

G. DRUMMOND GRIFFIN, Pilot.

JOHN McLEOD,
Mate SS. 'Charmer.'

There are no better authorities on the coast than the three gentlemen named in this letter. This is a ledge outside of Victoria harbour, on which a large collier was wrecked on a moonlight night some years ago, and she lay on that ledge two or three years before she was broken up. A beacon was built, but owing to the fact that the engineer says he cannot get a cable from England, the ordinary light there is not satisfactory. I impress upon the minister the necessity for having a better light there and also a fog signal in dark weather.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am aware of the importance of having a good light on that ledge. The intention was to have it lit by electricity, but the cable which we got from the Public Works Department, and which was supplied on the recommendation of Mr. Gisborne, the late Superintendent of Telegraphs, turned out to be of no use. Col. Anderson placed an order for a new cable with an English firm, and he has written dozens of letters to hurry them up, but they state that they are so over-rushed with work that they cannot supply it for some time. We put the best light we could obtain there in lieu of electricity, and we cannot do anything else until we get the electric cable.

Mr. PRIOR. You are still trying to get the cable ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, yes ; we are doing everything we can to get it as soon as possible. Now, I gave the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) a list of two or three lighthouses which we propose to build. That is all we have information about at present, and, as the hon. gentleman knows, we cannot discover what lighthouses will be exactly necessary until the season comes on. We know from experience in the department how much it will take for this vote, and so we have asked that amount. From the experience of the past twenty years we know that the balance of the vote will be used.

Mr. FOSTER. When I was Minister of Marine, before I took this vote I laid on the Table of the House, always, a complete list of the lighthouses we proposed to build and their cost. The minister must know the needs of the service for which he asked this $50,000, and he should not take a single dollar for the construction of lighthouses for the current year which he does not now know must be built, and that he has not an estimate for. These are not matters which crop up at any moment, but they are before the department for years, and the difficulty is rather to overtake what are the well known needs of the service. I am surprised that the minister should come to this House for a vote without the list of the lighthouses he proposes to build and their estimated cost.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are always three or four expensive lighthouses built each year for which special votes are taken, but since I have been in this House, there has always been a general vote, based upon the expenditure of the previous four or five years. Now, take the Lake of the Woods, where we are developing a large amount of navigation, and within the week I was waited upon by an influential deputation of ship-owners, requesting that four or five lighthouses should be erected there. They are small lighthouses, supposed to cost from $200 to $500 each, and we have agreed to build them out of this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, you should have a list of them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The engineer cannot tell how much they will cost until Mr. Noble or some one else is sent on the spot to make an estimate. We find that from year to year, forty or fifty thousand dollars is required, and I have given to the House all the information which any human being is capable of getting with regard to the vote. You must put a large sum of money into the hands of the minister, somewhere approximate to the expenditure of the previous year, and let him expend it under the advice of his officers to meet the growing wants of the service.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all. If my hon. friend will ask Col. Anderson, who was in the department when I was there, who is there yet, and who is a very efficient officer, I venture to say that he will find the practice which I state to have been the practice that prevailed. I never was allowed to pass this estimate without having a list of the lighthouses to be built and the cost of building them; and I venture to say that Col. Anderson can tell the minister where most of the lighthouses are to be constructed during the coming season.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I went over that with Col. Anderson, and asked him if he could give me a list of the lighthouses to be built for the present season. He mentioned some, but he said the others no one could tell. I asked for that, and if I had it, I would give it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has not given us the cost of one lighthouse, and I do not propose to allow this vote to go through unless he tells us where these lighthouses are to be built and what they are to cost. The hon. gentleman had better let this stand and go on with the next item.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Will the hon. gentleman say he followed that list?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is he sure?

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to insult me by asking if I am sure?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not absolutely sure, and I wanted to assure myself whether the minister had built the lighthouses according to the list he laid on the Table or at the cost stated.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman satisfied with that kind of little criticism? He will go and look at these statements and find that one of the lighthouses cost two or three hundred dollars more, or two or three hundred dollars less than the estimate.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And may not be built at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman thinks that does for criticism, and that that is a fair reason for assuming that the minister need not come down with any lists at all, but that all he need do is to come and say: 'I want about $50,000.' The system which I found in practice when I went to the department, and which I followed, was that the minister came to this House with a type-written or a printed list, which was laid on the Table so that everybody could see it, and which formed the basis of the vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope my hon. friend will let this item go through, because I want to state to him, if he is prepared to take my statement—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He does not seem to care to take your statement. He seems to think he is superior to any comment on what he did when he was a minister. I asked a question as to the list of lighthouses which the hon. gentleman proposed to have constructed. I may be wholly wrong, but my impression was that having made inquiries in days gone by, I had been told that such a work was not to be gone on with this year. The mere placing of the list on the Table, if it is not to be the guide of what is to be done, furnishes no more definite information than the minister gives. I did not rise with any intention of insulting the hon. gentleman, but simply to point out that if the list was not followed, it would be of no more value than what the minister says.

Mr. FOSTER. I accept the hon. gentleman's apology in the spirit in which it is made. His argument if pushed to its extremity would be that we should take lump votes in this House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is done in some instances.

Mr. FOSTER. It is quite true, you do not incorporate all the lighthouses to be built in your schedule, but the House is reasonable in asking generally what the minister proposes to do. While it might vote $50,000 for lighthouses, it might not be prepared to vote any portion of that money for a particular lighthouse which the hon. gentleman might propose to build. That is why we should get some idea of what the hon. gentleman proposes to do. He has only mentioned some lighthouses in British Columbia and on the St. Lawrence; but there must be needs in other parts of this Dominion, and the officer is only doing what is right when he translates the general plan he proposes to proceed upon. I am quite sure that the minister and his officers could give us a plan of what they propose to do and where and when they propose to do it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would be glad to do so if I could, but I went over the matter with Col. Anderson and found it impossible to give any more information. The practice long before I became minister was for the minister, when he asked for a vote, to state how he had expended the money the previous year, but it is impossible to give details for the coming year. Take Lawyer's Island, what information could I give about that? It is a thousand miles away from Victoria, and nobody can tell, until the man who has gone up there to build the lighthouse comes back, what it will cost. Whenever we took a vote for a special lighthouse, costing anything like a large sum, $2,000 or $3,000, we always took a special vote.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, I can show it in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. gentleman give an instance of any special lighthouse being named, except, of course, a $75,000 lighthouse, for which he asks a special vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In our supplementary estimates every year, you will find special votes taken and the lighthouses named.

Mr. FOSTER. No, let the hon. gentleman point them out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know that I am right, for I have a clear recollection of it. I have given all the information my engineer is capable of furnishing. I have named all the lighthouses, so far as we know, that we contemplate building. Lawyer's Island, Ballineck Island, Pointe au Bazil, Gaspé Shore, Father Point, and the two lighthouses at Lake of the Woods.

Mr. FOSTER. We should have the officer's estimates of those except the two in Lake of the Woods, which are small affairs.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot tell what the lighthouses at Ballinack Island and the other points are going to cost.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has no business to ask the House to pay for the building of three or four lighthouses when he has not the least idea of what they will cost.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have the information about what they will cost, but some of them we do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman cannot tell us what one will cost.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said $200 or $300 at Lake of the Woods.

Mr. FOSTER. That is nothing out of $50,000. He cannot say whether he is going to spend the whole $50,000 or what portion of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Sometimes there is as much as $10,000 left out of the construction vote not spent, sometimes $15,000, and sometimes only $5,000. It depends on the pressure brought to bear on the minister and the needs of navigation from time to time. Where a vote of that kind is taken, and so much surplus unexpended from year to year, it is impossible to estimate. I have given all the information I can get from my officers, and I hope the hon. gentleman will accept it. I will bring down any more information I can possibly get.

To provide for the construction and equipment of a steel lightship for Lurcher Shoal, supplied with electric light plant, compressed air siren and auxiliary screw power $80,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have a report here by Col. Anderson, who visited New York last spring in order to make special inquiry with reference to the building of lightships on the Atlantic coast. He was shown every courtesy by the Light House Board, who sent their superintendent, Mr. Johnson, with him, to inspect their system. Their lightships cost each $70,000 to $80,000, fully equipped, and the cost of maintenance is $10,000. It is upon that estimate of Mr. Anderson that I ask the House to vote this amount.

Mr. FOSTER. How is that lightship made stationary?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Anchored fore and aft, both sides.

The committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies), moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 17, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 136)—from the Senate—respecting the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

TRINIDAD TREATY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. the First Minister if he has anything to say with reference to the rumour, which seems to be well founded, that the Trinidad Council has ratified an arrangement or voted in favour of ratifying an arrangement with the United States, and thereby put aside the Canadian offer.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have reason to believe that my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is prepared to make a statement to-morrow on this subject.

YUKON REPRESENTATION BILL.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask my right hon. friend to bring down all correspondence with reference to the Yukon Representation Bill—that portion of it which was to have been put in force by proclamation and has not been proclaimed. Will the right hon. gentleman do that without the formality of a motion and as the session is pretty well on ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Will my hon. friend send me a note of what he wants ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty, and the motion of Sir Charles Tupper in amendment thereto.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). When the House adjourned last Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, we had a long speech from the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore). In that speech the hon. gentleman went over a great deal of ground and made statements, as did almost every hon. gentleman who has spoken in this debate on the opposite side, that would lead the casual reader or observer to the opinion that our farmers are not as well off to-day as they were previous to 1896. I was much astonished to find the hon. the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) giving a long list of articles in the endeavour to show that the farmers' receipts have been diminishing since the advent of this government to office. That hon. gentleman took the item of cattle, and told the House that in 1895 cattle, under one year, only realized $2.84 per head. But, we can all remember that the following year the quarantine regulations were removed between the United States and this country, and in 1898 these animals realized $8.84 per head, proving the statement that I have frequently made, that the removal of the quarantine regulations by the United States had increased the value of all the animals exported to that country by over $5 per head. The hon. gentleman then went on to 1899, and said that the same class of animal which only realized $2.84 per head in 1895 realized $10 in 1899. Then, he took cattle over one year old, and made the ingenious argument that whereas these cattle brought $76.36 per head in 1895, they realized only $42.95 per head in 1898, and $44 in 1899. But he forgot to tell us that there were 68,000 animals sent to the United States over one year old, which realized $16.80 per head. It was a very ingenious system he adopted of taking all these animals and mixing them up in order to show that the animals the farmers sent to the old country had been very much reduced in value between 1895 and 1899. Well, if I know anything at all about farming, it is the cattle branch of it, and let me say that in 1899 we never had a more favourable year for our cattle, since 1891. The animals went up to a very large extent, as the public records show, despite the ingenious argument of the hon. gentleman.

In connection with this cattle question, we can all remember that the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) said that this government had never asked the American government to relax the quarantine regulations. On that subject, I will have something to say later. But, there is a shorter and easier way of getting at the root of the whole matter and showing how really the farmers income to-day compares with what it was in former years.

I was astonished at the charge made by the hon. member for Stanstead, that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) had neglected to tell the House that the debt of the country had been increased during the past three years. But, the hon. gentleman had to take that statement back when called to task by the Minister of Finance. He made another statement which he also had to take back, and that was that there had been a secret arrangement between the leader of this government and the people of the province of Quebec with regard to prohibition, and that that secret arrangement existed with the knowledge and connivance of the Minister of Agriculture. It appears to me that there are few hon. members opposite who will not take up any question and make any statement, no matter what, which can possibly tell against the country. All these statements, if believed in, would injure Canada to a serious extent, and it seems to me that the duty of every Canadian should be to see that every statement he makes is true, and if there are two sides to the shield, to show both, and let the people judge for themselves.

We were told that in 1898 we only exported some 98,000 head of cattle to the old country. But, we exported 115,000 to Great Britain and 92 to the United States in 1899, a very large increase indeed, showing the benefit of the arrangements made for the removal of the quarantine between this country and the United States. Ninety-three thousand head went to the United States, and we were benefited also in the province of Ontario, because 555,000 head of cattle were slaughtered or sold in that province, and the farmers benefited $5 per head, as shown by the statement of the ex-Finance Minister. That hon. gentleman has had to go back on his statement or admit the correctness of mine.

I was astonished to find the hon. member for Stanstead going back a number of years and by mixing up figures endeavouring to show that we had not increased our export of butter. In the years 1894, 1895 and 1896, the value of our butter exported amounted to $2,845,162, but when we come to the years 1897, 1898 and 1899, we find that the value had increased to $3,700,000, showing an increase of $900,000 in our exports to the British markets. The three years realized $7,836,732, showing conclusively that the export of butter to the old country is very large indeed. Butter is a very important industry in Canada at the present time. I shall also touch upon that when I come to the question of corn being allowed to come in free.

But, lest I should forget it, I desire to refer to a statement made by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster). He said that the government gave free corn to the government of the United States, and gave it for what? For nothing. He said they gave the United States free binder twine, and for what? For nothing. He said they gave free wire to the United States, and for what? For nothing. All these things were given, according to the hon. gentleman, to the United States, they were not given to the farmers of Canada. But, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), gave that argument a deadly stab. He showed that there were 180 articles put on the free list by the late government in 1894, every one for the benefit of the manufacturers. I would like to ask these hon. gentlemen, if Canada got nothing in return for free corn, free wire and free binder twine, what Canada got in return for these 180 articles which they made free. All these 180 articles were put on the free list in the interests of the manufacturer, they tell us; and they say that if they get back into power, they will put the duty upon corn, binder twine and wire, as high as they were before. How is it that these gentlemen so carefully insist that when an article is made free in the interests of the farmer, there must be something in return, but if an article is made free in the interests of the manufacturers, no return is necessary? Has not the farmer as good a right as the manufacturer to free raw material which he uses and which he cannot raise himself? The farmer is in reality as much a manufacturer as the manufacturer himself.

A great deal has been said with regard to the condition of the farmers to-day. I find by the returns, that the exports of animals and their produce and agricultural products in 1896, amounted to $48,471,000, while in 1898, these exports amounted to $77,473,000, or an increase of $29,000,000 in the returns to the farmer in 1898 over those in 1896. In 1899, I find that these exports amounted to $21,000,000 more than in 1896. So that in the years 1898 and 1899, the farmers received $50,227,000 over what they would have received in two years such as 1896. Nor is this all, because there is a very large increase in the quantity of these products consumed in Canada. We can easily infer this from the fact that wages have gone up and trade is good in all directions. We cannot but accept the statement of the ex-Minister of Finance, that the leading industries of the country have orders six months ahead. The hon. gentleman could not show the same during any time when he was on the Treasury benches and holding the important position of Minister of Finance. With increases of 10 and 15 per cent of wages of great and important industries there is necessarily a larger consumption of agricultural products.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMILLAN), if that is the case, how it comes that Beadmore & Co.'s men are out on strike for higher wages, and the answer of the head of the concern is: Rather than increase your wages, we will shut down the whole business, because there is no profit in it?

Mr. McMILLAN. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule), was on the government side of the House, the manufacturers were always keeping down wages, though the friends of the government of that day were constantly declaring that times were good. But, we find that the railway companies have increased the wages of their men, and some of the best and largest industries have done the same thing. I know that, so far as farm wages are concerned, the wages of a man, with board, have increased from $150 to $190 or $200 right in my own locality. I remember seeing the statement not very long ago that the rolling mills had increased the wages of their men 10 per cent. It may be that there are still certain industries which think they have a right to use the men as they did when they had the country to themselves, and when hon. gentlemen opposite did all they could to assist them. But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) must know that he cannot hire a man on his own farm for the same money as he could three or four years ago. Wages having gone up, is it possible to doubt that the increase of consumption of agricultural produce has been increased?

The hon. member for Stanstead very ingeniously tried to show how great a quantity of eggs had been exported from the country during the time the Conservative party were in power. They were 18 years in power, and we have only been 3 years in power. But, the export of eggs which, at one time, was 14,028,893 dozen, valued at $2,159,510, went down in 1896 to 6,502,678 dozen, valued at only $807,086. It is only fair, when hon. gentlemen will make a statement of that description, to show the condition of an industry when they left power. And, if they consider the condition of other industries, they will find the history of them very much the same. In 1898 there were 10,369,996 dozen eggs exported, for which the farmers received $1,254,304. And, to show that the price of eggs is going up like everything else that the farmer has to sell, I may say that while there was a reduction in the number of eggs exported in 1899, by 717,984 dozen, yet the amount received was $11,739 more. That is about all I have to say concerning the remarks of the hon. member for Stanstead. It is true, he talked a long time about the Standard Oil Company, and how they should be put out of the country, and all that sort of thing. But, I am not aware that the Standard Oil Company, or any other oil company, or any other company of any kind, may not come into Canada and buy any property that the Canadian owners may see fit to sell them, without the government being called upon to do anything to prevent it. It is true that the Standard Oil Company has full control of the oil refineries in Canada. But, the government did not give them that control, they purchased the property from private individuals. It was also true that the Standard Oil Company have been blamed for putting up the price of oil in Canada through the railway companies increasing the rates on oil. But, the government can do nothing in that matter until a case has been brought before the government, clearly stated and proved; and then it is for the government to take action. A case has been before the government and they have reserved decision, they are carefully considering the matter. That is all they can do. The only thing they could do would be to reduce the duty on oil to a certain extent, and hon. gentlemen opposite have not got much to say in that direction, because it has been reduced below what it was when they were in power and that it does not become them now to turn around and say that the government ought to reduce the duty altogether. My own opinion is that it would be a wise stroke on the part of the government to do something in regard to oil at the present time.

Now, we had the hon. member for Haldimand who gave us a long speech. He is an excellent speaker, he has a fine voice, a fine appearance, and he can use fine language; and I only regret that his arguments were not as fine as his language and his appearance upon the platform. He tried to show that during the whole time that the Conservative party were in power they were protecting the farmers against the enormous grain crops raised in the United States, and against the cattle of the United States. Since he delivered that speech I have put myself to a good deal of trouble, and have succeeded in finding the prices of grain in Canada and the United States from 1877 down to 1897. That hon. gentleman stated that in 1877 there were over 2,000,000 bushels of oats coming into Canada and displacing a large quantity of the oats of our own farmers. I am in a position to state that in 1877, 1878 and 1879, the average price of oats in the United States was 34.6 cents, and in Canada during those three years the average price was 33.3 cents, showing that oats was 1.4 cents higher in the United States, notwithstanding that a bushel of their oats is two pounds lighter than ours. Now, how could the Canadian farmer be protected against grain coming from a country where it sells at a higher price than it does in Canada? Such talk is mere clap-trap to catch the farmers' vote. But the farmers begin to know now where they stand with respect to that question. Let me say that from 1877 down to 1897 the price of wheat was 5.4 cents per bushel higher in the United States than it was in Canada, and oats was 3.4 cents higher during that whole time, and yet they tell us they were protecting the farmers against the markets of the United States. Can they tell us what an enormous injury is being done to this country by bringing corn in free?—and I shall deal with that question as a separate item. If the corn brought into Canada is not consumed in this country, where does it go for consumption? It goes into the British market, the very market where the Canadian farmer has got to send his surplus grain for consumption; so that if it does not meet him on this continent it meets him in the British market. The whole corn crop of the United States has to meet the oat crop and the wheat crop of the United States during all these years that I have mentioned. If the corn crop would have the effect of reducing the price of the farmers' coarse grains in Canada, why does it not do so in the United States? I have shown, for instance, that the price of oats there, although two pounds per bushel lighter than ours, has been 3 cents a bushel higher than ours, on the average, from 1877 down to 1897. The thing is an utter impossibility.

Then take cattle. If you consult the papers for a number of years past you will find that the very best beef cattle in the United States have been selling for from \$5 up to \$5.90 per 100 pounds, and you will find that in Canada they are only selling for from \$4 up to \$4.50. It is stated that one small lot was sold this last week at \$5, which is a price the purchaser could not afford to pay. Yet we are told that we were protected against the enormous numbers of cattle raised in the United States. Before I sit down I shall show what a benefit it would be to Canada if we could get the United States market. During a period of 23 years wheat has averaged $5\frac{1}{2}$ cents higher in the United States than in Canada. In the United States, the price of oats, as I have mentioned, averaged, during that period, 34.6, and in Canada 33.3. The prices of wheat and flour are regulated one by the other, so that as far as flour is concerned, it has always been higher in the United States than in Canada.

But the hon. member for Haldimand went on to quote from the speech of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) the other night. The hon. member for Haldimand said:

I admit you reduced taxation $5,900,000. The hon. gentlemen, instead of reducing taxation since they came into power, have, as I have shown, increased the taxation, and, as I want to show just a little further, in 1891, the customs taxation was $23,399,301. Then the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) began to reduce taxation.

Now, I would ask any intelligent gentleman of this House if he can point to any one article on which the late Minister of Finance ever reduced taxation in the interests of the people of this country, upon which he had not previously placed an enormous taxation? He was only removing the taxation that he and his predecessors had imposed upon the people of this country; and I shall attempt to show even by their own statements, that it was an enormous taxation. But he went on to show how they had reduced the taxation. Why, Sir, he forgot to tell us that in 1894 and 1895 there was a deficit of $1,577,648. While they were reducing the taxation they had a deficit, they were not raising taxes enough to carry on the affairs of the country. Then when we come to 1895 there was a deficit of $4,153,000. Now, is it a fact that the present government have been increasing the debt? They blame the present government for increasing the debt, but we all know that during the last three years they were in power they increased the debt over $16,000,000 a year; while the present government have only increased the debt something like $6,000,000 altogether since they came into power. But, on the other hand, they have had surpluses, a surplus last year of nearly $4,500,000, with a prospective surplus this year of $7,500,000.

I hold, Mr. Speaker, that this government made a very wise move when they increased the preference given to English goods from 25 per cent to $33\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. I have made a little calculation of the benefits that preference has conferred upon the people of this country. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) stated that the reduction in the tariff as it existed in 1896 has been 2.02 per cent, by which they have reduced the taxation of the country \$3,080,000. But that does not tell the whole story; that does not tell half the benefits the people of this country have derived from the change in our tariff. Every gentleman who had a seat in this House in 1893, can remember that the late lamented Dalton McCarthy made at that time a speech in this House showing that there were \$265,000,000 worth of goods manufactured and consumed in Canada, upon which a very much higher price was paid, amounting, as he stated, to 30 per cent more on account of the national policy. Therefore, \$79,000,000 had to be paid by the taxpayers of Canada to the manufacturers who constituted the real government of this country at that time, because, as I have stated before, and as I am prepared to state again, the Finance Minister of that day never made his own tariff. He got his brief directly from the tariff committee of the Manufacturers' Association, and he accepted it word for word almost, and it appeared in the tariff when it was brought down. But, that is not all. If there was \$79,000,000 paid at that time, the reduction of duty on goods coming into the country amounts to over \$3,000,000, and there are, over \$9,000,000 of goods manufactured in Canada and consumed in Canada, and the reduction applies to them on the very same basis as upon the reduction on goods that have paid duty and upon which \$3,000,000 has been saved. But there is more than that. In addition, there are goods that come from the United States, and from every other foreign country, which must pay duty. These goods are reduced in value to the consumers because they must reduce the prices of these goods down to the standard of the goods which come into Canada under the preferential tariff. The farmers of this country understand that to-day; they know that the prices of goods have been reduced. I was astonished upon meeting some farmers in my county who, upon coming to shake hands with me, told me that we were having a pretty tough time of it down in Ottawa, but that it was no use for the Tories to tell them that times were not better than they had been up to the time of the inauguration of the preferential tariff.

There is not a workshop but is busy, there is not a man in the country who wants work who is out of employment; you cannot hire men. Prosperity reigns from one end of the country to the other in a manner that never was known during the time that hon. gentlemen opposite held the reins of power.

I am going to say a word or two in regard to free corn. We have heard a great deal about that. I did not know what the benefits of free corn to the farmers of the province of Ontario really were until I investigated the question very closely. I found that we consumed 7,333,037 bushels of corn in Canada, that 23,000,000 bushels were imported into this country and that part of the corn that comes into the country has been a benefit to us not only in regard to sending it to Great Britain, but in regard to sending it to other countries. For instance, Germany took 2,013,000 bushels of corn, Belgium 540,856, and Holland 274,222 bushels. Will any hon. gentleman, or any other man who understands anything about business, tell me that it is not a benefit to this country to handle the goods of another country, to receive them into this country and to send them off to trade for the goods of other countries, exchanging these commodities for an equal value of goods from another country, and thus gaining in our trade with that country. Then, we exported to Great Britain 13,180,000 bushels of corn. Take corn at 41 cents per bushel, take pease at 60 cents per bushel, and taking the quantity of corn that we consumed in Canada, 7,333,037 bushels, which is equal to 210,378 tons of corn, if we sell an equal amount of pease, 210,378 tons, and purchase that quantity of corn, what will be the result to the farmers of Ontario? They will gain $1,198,199. This is a very large amount of money, and let me say, and I say it advisedly, that corn is one of the best foods that we have in Canada today. I would not sell all my grain and buy corn, but I would sell a large quantity of it, and buy corn. If the farmers of Ontario were to sell barley and buy corn, they would save $974,979; if they were to sell oats and buy corn, they would save $575,000 in the transaction. It does not end there. If we take the extra amount of food they get from corn, how many animals would it enable the farmers to keep in Canada? Of steers 102,735 can be kept in the stable for 200 days, which is the length of time that the farmers put up their cattle, and they can be given eight pounds of meal per day on the average for that period. It would allow the farmers of Canada to raise 132,984 hogs, and to feed them five pounds of meal per day until they were put on the market. These are very large benefits which the farmers of Canada derive from free corn. It would effect a saving to them of $549,967 in duty. I hold that no greater benefit could have been conferred upon the farmers of Canada than by giving them free corn and by removing the quarantine upon Canadian cattle. I was glad when I heard some hon. gentlemen admitting the benefit that free corn had been to the farmers of Ontario during the last two years. We know that two years ago there was a drought in the northern part of Ontario, and if it had not been for free corn, I do not know what the farmers in that section would have done. When I visited some of those portions of the country, I found that every one of them seemed to rejoice that they had free corn. In 1899, the same thing took place in some of the southern counties of the province of Ontario, and it was a fortunate thing that the farmers were enabled to get free corn, because every one could get free corn and was glad to get it. Some farmers were at one time very bitterly disposed against me on account of my advocacy of free corn, but since they came to see the benefits which it has conferred upon them, they have changed their opinions. Is there any one who will say that it is no benefit whatever to the farmers of Canada to get free corn, to get free binder twine, to get free barbed wire, or to get their agricultural implements at reduced duty? The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) stated, that when his party get into power, agricultural implements will be 41 per cent. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) stated, that the imports of agricultural implements have increased by $1,600,000 since 1896, and he stated that these articles should be made in Canada, and that they will be when his party get into power.

Mr. TAYLOR. Hear, hear.

Mr. McMILLAN. What benefit will be derived by the farmers of Canada? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) forgot to tell the House that there was an increased export of agricultural implements, that it went from $444,000 to $1,800,000. All that would be lost to Canada if the policy of these hon. gentlemen were carried out. I think that I have shown that we have enormously benefited by free corn, in fact, that we have benefited more than any one can really tell. In regard to the markets, comparing 1896 with the present time, the hon. member for West York told us that wheat, in 1896, was worth 71 cents a bushel. In 1900, wheat is worth 72 cents a bushel, a gain of 1 cent. Oats, in 1896, were worth 20 cents a bushel, in 1900, they were worth 33 cents a bushel, which is certainly a nice increase in price. Rye, in 1896, was worth 36 cents per bushel, but it is worth 55½ cents a bushel in 1900. This is certainly a nice increase in price. Pease were 44 cents in 1896; in 1900, they were 61 cents a bushel, a nice increase that the farmers are getting. Barley was worth 31½ cents in 1896, and 44 cents a bushel in 1900. Yet, the hon. gentleman tells us that almost everything the farmer has to sell has been reduced in value, and that all he has to purchase is increased in value. The people understand the hon. gentleman now. They know the statements that he is accustomed to make, and they have no confidence in any of these statements. Buckwheat was 30.5 cents a bushel in 1896, and 55½ cents a bushel in 1900; beans, 68 cents a bushel in 1896, and $1.70 a bushel in 1900; butter, 18.25 cents a pound in 1896, and 22 cents a pound in 1900. Cheese was 8.28 cents a pound in 1896. Cheese to-day in any market in Canada, where there is any, is selling for over 12 cents per pound. It was selling at 11 cents a pound last fall in Ontario. The hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) told us about bacon, and he went on to show the price that we were receiving for that. In 1896, we exported 47,057,692 pounds of bacon, for which we received $3,802,000, and in that year there was consumed only 2,763,999 bushels of corn. Now, contrast that with the year 1898, when we exported 76,844,948 pounds of bacon, valued at $7,291,000, showing that the increase in our exports was proportionate to the steadily increasing consumption of corn, when corn was made free of duty in Canada. In 1899 we exported 111,820,000 pounds of bacon, for which we were paid $9,953,582, and we consumed 7,333,037 bushels of corn, showing conclusively that free corn has a good deal to do with the increase in our exports of butter and bacon from Canada. There is no better food than corn to mix with other foods for milch cows and for hog feed. I was at the fat stock show in London some time ago, when Mr. Wilson, of Ingersoll, delivered a lecture on the bacon trade, and he opposed feeding hogs with corn. I happened to have with me notes of experiments that had been made, and I told him, that late experiments in the matter did not bear out his contention with respect to feeding corn to hogs, and he had to admit that corn when mixed with other stuffs was one of the best foods that could be given to hogs. Now, look at our butter exports. In 1896 we exported 5,890,241 pounds of butter, for which we were paid $1,052,089, and as I have said, there was consumed in that year 2,763,999 bushels of corn. In the year 1898 we sent to the English market 11,253,000 pounds of butter valued at $2,046,686, and in 1899 we exported 20,139,000 pounds of butter valued at $9,953,582, and there was consumed in Canada 7,333,037 bushels of corn that year. There is no doubt in my mind that the two industries run parallel with each other, and that free corn increases our dairy and hog products, and when, Sir, the trade in these products is increased no greater benefit can be conferred upon the farmers of this country. But that is not all the benefit that free corn confers upon the farmers. One of the great wants in Canada is manure, and if we can get this free corn into the country to feed our animals, the manure goes back to the land to increase its fertility, and that fact alone places our Canadian farmers in a better position to compete with our friends across the line.

There is another matter which I have a note of here, and to which I will refer for a moment. There was a great talk for many years about reducing the salaries of the civil servants, and the present government promised that when they came into power they would make a reduction in the number of civil servants and in the salaries paid them. Now, Sir, I have examined very carefully the public accounts of this Dominion and I find that the government have carried out their promises in that respect. In the public accounts of 1896, I find that there were 4,109 civil servants receiving salaries amounting to $3,537,059. We have not a statement with accounts for 1899 yet, but in 1898, two years after this government came into power, there were only 3,741 civil servants, a reduction of 208, with a corresponding reduction of $259,996 in the salaries paid them, showing conclusively that the Liberal government have kept their promises as far as that one particular is concerned. I hold also that in reducing the tariff as they have done, particularly in the late budget speech, the government have fulfilled their promises to the letter in reducing the duties on imports so far as the interests of the country will warrant. It has always been my opinion that the government should not cut too deep at any one time, to an extent that would injure our manufacturers who had a large amount of raw material on hand, our wholesale men who had a large amount of stock, or our retail men who had a great deal of goods on their shelves. I always believed that it was best to carry out this policy step by step whenever the opportunity offered, and as the government are doing that, they are in my opinion acting in the best interests of the country as a whole. I see the hon. member from the Pacific coast (Mr. Prior) laughing. Does he not know that his province is enjoying the benefit of the preferential tariff as well as all the other provinces of the Dominion. I have a letter from his section of the country telling me that it is flourishing, and this letter gives the credit for that prosperity to the preferential tariff to a large extent. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) does not see that, he is blind to the interests of his own province.

I shall now, Mr. Speaker, deal with the binder twine question, which is rather a troublesome one. The government have been blamed for the prices they have received for the binder twine output of the Kingston Penitentiary. The Minister of Justice was blamed for selling that binder twine in 1898, but I have before me a pamphlet which shows that he sold the output to Bate & Sons of Ottawa at $4.95 per 100 pounds, and that Bate & Sons sold a large quantity of that binder twine to Massey-Harris & Co., and to Wood, Valance & Co., at from $4.90 to $5.40 per 100 pounds, which shows that Bate & Sons did not make a great deal by the transaction. It was stated by gentlemen opposite that Bate & Sons gave no security, but the fact is that that firm sent a large sum of money along with the order for the twine as a pledge of their good faith, and that they paid for all the twine as it was put on board the cars. Last year, the manila made at the Kingston Penitentiary was sold at $7.25 per 100 pounds, although gentlemen opposite have stated during this debate that it was sold for $5 or $5.50 only. The mixed twine was sold last year for $6.15, and the sisal for $6.15. I am perfectly convinced that twine did not reach the high price it afterwards went up to, at the time it was sold, and I have other documents in my possession which will prove that the Kingston binder twine realized just as good a price as that sold by other manufacturers. I have here a letter from the Farmers' Binder Twine Company of Brantford, which I wish to read to the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. When was that letter written?

Mr. McMILLAN. It was written on April 11, of this year. The letter is as follows:

My dear Sir,—I observe in the unrevised edition, 5th session, April 10, 1900, House of Commons Debates, the discussion that has recently taken place regarding binder twine.

True, this company declared a dividend of 100 per cent last year to its stockholders and 60 per cent the year before. This, however, was not out of last year's earnings, but from large reserve that had been accumulating for years under what might be termed, I suppose, judicious or good management, and as the satisfactory results of a large volume of business.

Our paid-up capital stock stands at $65,000. We, however, do an annual business of between $200,000 and $300,000, and have made money for our stockholders right along by careful investment of the company's fund, and the truest principles of co-operation applied to the business through our thousand of stockholders, all farmers, at the same time being instrumental in holding down or regulating the price annually on the entire Canadian consumption of binder twine, in many cases far below its actual marketable value, much to the annoyance and disgust of our opponents, principally the great American twine manufacturers, all of which you will see from our annual circulars for 1899 and 1900 that I am sending you concurrent with this letter. For instance, in the season of 1898, we sold the entire output of the mill at 7½c. per pound, allowed commission for selling, and prepaid freight, while other manufacturers had to sell, from necessity and otherwise, as high as 14c. and 15c. per pound.

This we accomplished on the face of free binder twine and against the American manufacturer, the greatest in the world. We were never a party to a combine in any shape or form, directly or indirectly, and what is more no such has ever existed in this country since the formation of the Farmers' Binder Twine Company. During recent years raw material has advanced by leaps and bounds. Manufacturers who were fortunate and bought early could produce at a minimum cost, while others who bought what might be termed distant hemp or from spot, were compelled to sell at high figures to save themselves. This company happened to be among the former and with its great distributing medium and consumption of twine through its own stockholders, has so far proved wholly impregnable as against opposition of every character, while our average profit during the whole term of seven years has not exceeded one-half cent per pound.

I have also a couple of circulars here sent out by the Brantford Binder Twine Company, which show conclusively upon what terms they do business. The first is dated at Brantford, July 1, 1898, and is as follows:

We are simply being flooded with letters and telegrams demanding twine beyond our capacity to supply. Firstly, let us say to you that we have orders for some 5,000 tons of twine forced in upon us, while our output and stock represents only some 1,400 tons. At a glance it can be seen that it was impossible for us to meet the demands made upon us for binder twine. We have not increased our prices one fraction—have no twine to advance them on. The volume of orders came in to us between the 15th and 20th June, almost in a mass. On our A.B.C. forms the right is clearly reserved to approve and accept every order sent us, for two principal reasons; one, that we will not obligate the company beyond its capacity to supply; another, that we must know that the agent's financial position is satisfactory before we will entertain or book any orders. We have endeavoured honestly to divide the entire output of this factory under our control in about equal proportions on the orders received. Not one single pound of our Samson, Red Star or Blue Star twines are being held back or have been shipped to the United States; for lower grades we have no inquiries. This statement, therefore, is an unqualified, malicious falsehood. Not a single bale of above twine has been billed out or sold at an advance on our advertised prices. A small lot of some forty tons of Pure Manila and Extra Manila, which we carried over in stock, was sold at 9 and 8½c., some of which was not our own make.

This company early in the season could have disposed of its tremendous stock of raw material at a profit to our stockholders of some $200,000, and so paralyzed the binder twine interests of Canada, and left the market absolutely in the hands of speculators. This company could have started the price on its best twine at 10c. a pound and maintained it throughout the season to the very terminus of the harvest. Do you realize that in setting and continuing the price at 7½c. on our splendid Red Star we precluded the possibility of speculators and adventurers buying up and controlling the volume of twine that was in the hands of storekeepers and others, outside of ourselves, and being re-sold back to the farmers at an exorbitant advance? During the season, and at the moment, we are refusing orders for large blocks of twine at fancy prices, preferring to remain loyal to the people and make our twine tell in their interests to the exhaustion of the last ball we have in stock. It is very natural that those who have sent us in excess orders are disappointed at not receiving all twine they claim engaged. Neither this company nor our agents are in any way obligated if the latter have complied with instructions, contract and forms. Agents, on the other hand, are sending us quantities of A.B.C. forms filled in by themselves, instead of the individual farmer, while other lots bear no date at all, and volumes of them are dated even after June 20. It is more than absurd to imagine that we could furnish beyond the mill's capacity. It is no use writing or telegraphing us for more twine. We simply have not got it, nor can we produce it. We did our utmost to secure running privileges from a silent mill in the west, offering to supply them with raw material, coal and oil. In this we were not successful. And still a prouder record—we have delivered in Manitoba every single pound of twine our agents contracted for at no advance in price, and at the same average figure as supplied our customers in Ontario, although it was loudly proclaimed by the enemies of this company that we would never get the twine there, while we have since positively refused from the prairie province to accept another order at any figure, and so leave the Ontario farmers to pay any price that might be demanded from them. The people want to realize that there is a partial twine famine in the country, and that thousands of acres of stuff will have to be cut with binders and tied with straw. The scarcity of twine is not wholly confined to Canada. The United States is supposed to be 20,000 tons short, and twine is ranging from 14c. to 18c. throughout that country. We have lots of raw material, while the mill is being operated every hour that the law allows us to run; more it is impossible for us to do, and still we are not advancing prices, notwithstanding twine is being retailed throughout this country and the United States to-day at 15c. a pound and upwards. No more twine can be got from us at any price. We have obligated every bale we can produce on orders that are in at original prices, and we are helpless to even tell you where to buy a single pound. The talk of future disloyalty and compelling us to deliver on all submitted orders, and holding us for damages and agents' commissions at this stage of the proceedings is too disgusting and treacherous to refer to, after the tremendous fight we have put in for the people. We can only say, for the convenience of those that have such bitter feelings to vent against us, that the address of our solicitors is Messrs. Hardy & Wilkes, Brantford, who are prepared to accept service in any such cases on this company's account.

So that just at the time the binder twine was high, they kept the price down to a low ebb. Here is another circular:

This company's binder twine for the harvest of 1900 will be principally Red Star of a quality possibly the best ever turned out by us at the factory. It will come to you freight prepaid, put up in balls averaging five pounds, in long first-class sacks. We feel confident you will be very pleased with its get-up. The quantity we will have to dispose of, however, will be limited, and we are only placing it this season with our very best agents, and in districts where the people have been truly loyal to us in the past. We want you on the inclosed coupon to advise us by return mail about the amount you expect to be able to market easily in your locality. Don't call on a man the second time, and don't sell a pound of our twine to any one who is skeptical or indifferent to the encouraging of this great co-operative movement. Leave them to deal with the opposition. Remember that this company's position is always fortified by the fact we can export our twine, or on the other hand, our opponents would be only too pleased to pay us any price to control this mill's twine output. Remind your customers of all the fake promises that were made to them early last year through the then opposition agents that they would follow or reduce their prices to ours on early purchases. There was clearly a difference of 3c. a pound, and we ask you in all fairness if in a single instance such was carried out. We don't intend to be made a stool-pigeon of any longer, and if the farmers want to continue to do business in this manner, and so drive nails into their own coffins, we want to know it quickly, that we may absolutely withdraw from such districts.

The price you will charge for our Red Star this year is 12½c. per pound, Blue Star 11½c. per pound, Standard 10½c., off which we will allow you the commission agreed; all twine payable on November 1, or a cash discount of 3 per cent on moneys paid us previous to September 1 by agents. It is not, however, intended that this cash discount shall be allowed to the farmer unless he pays the cash at the time of delivery of twine. It is no use writing us for any better terms, as what we name are particularly liberal to both the agent and the farmers, and we don't want you in any case on our account to deviate from or make a single promise outside of them. We will send you a sample fifty-pound bale of our splendid Red Star when ordered on form 109, you remitting us a post office order for $6.25, less commission. At the same time, we don't think it necessary for you to bother about doing so, as we are sick and tired of the men who lack confidence enough in this great corporation to order 50 or 100 pounds of twine without seeing samples, which are generally specially prepared. It is allowed on all hands that we have one of the finest and best operated binder twine mills in the world to-day, while the material we are working up this season is of a quality very superior and entirely free from any tow bunch. Move quickly now if you want to serve the people, yourself and the company. You have a chance we never gave you before, there is no opposition who will dare to follow our prices. Be very careful to distribute in your own interests every sheet of printed matter we send you. The salvation of the company depends upon it. It is the only medium we have of refuting the myriads of false statements, such as this factory is closed down, that we are attached to a combine, or that we are exporting our twine out of the country. Never during the existence of this factory have we held back a bale of twine or sold a pound of raw material. This latter statement is an unqualified libel, and every paper in the country that made it we have forced to rescind. The best evidence of all these lies is the fact that we have again set the price on binder twine for the harvest of 1900 at figures that we defy the world to compete against. We assure you had it not been for the existence of this co-operative company, not a single ball of twine could have been bought this coming season at a less price than 18c. or 20c. per pound, unless for some unknown brand or worthless grade.

You want to explain to your customers that this company has been a success from start to finish, that we made large amounts of money by judicious investing of the company's surplus funds, while at the same time, we held the price down on the entire Canadian output of binder twine, and in 1898 furnished every pound the mill could turn out at 7½c., notwithstanding that the opposition were charging 14c. and 15c. a pound. We warn you that the moment our stock exhausts this year, there will be an increase in the price of twine by our opponents.

JOSEPH STRATFORD,
General Manager.

Brantford, March 24, 1900.

I think I have a statement here, sent out by the government of the Dominion of Canada, showing the prices. It is as follows:

	Manila.	Mixed.	New Zealand.
Fifty tons and upwards.	12½	9½	8½
Car lots less than 50 tons.	13	10	9
One ton to car-load.....	13½	10½	9½
Less than one ton.....	14	11	10

When we consider the prices of pure manila, we must admit that the government are not making any profit. The ex-Minister of Finance told us that the price of manila was 14 cents a pound during the present year. When the government is giving binder twine to the farmers at the same price as the raw material stands at in the market to-day, there cannot be much room to complain. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite will blame the government and say they have entered into a combine to keep up the prices.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where did the ex-Minister of Finance make that statement?

Mr. McMILLAN. From his place in the House, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor), had looked closely at Hansard he would have seen it. The hon. gentleman is very sharp indeed. Anything that is said on this side, he remembers well, but anything said on that side, that would favour the government, he cannot remember at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. Read the statement.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will read the statement; don't you be afraid.

Mr. WALLACE. What page is it?

	1895.	1899.	1900.
Manila	$0 04½	$0 06½	$0 14½
Sisal	0 02½	0 05½	0 09½

That is the statement of the ex-Minister of Finance. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor), believe it now? He is so in the habit of making reckless statements that he will not believe another, however careful he may be.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know where the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) got his figures; they are not correct.

Mr. McMILLAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), is responsible for them; I am not. I hold that the government of the day have done everything they could to give the farmers as cheap binder twine as possible. I have here two letters which I intend to read—independent letters. The first is from the Weekly Sun, of the 15th November, 1899—and we all know that the Sun is a paper that takes the farmers' position every time, and does everything it can for the farmers, not hesitating to condemn the government at times:

Mr. McMILLAN.

The Binder Twine Situation.

Several weeks ago we pointed out the marked increase in the price of manila and sisal for the first eight months of the present year, as compared with the prices for corresponding periods in the years 1897 and 1898. While the figures for the first half of 1898 showed comparatively little increase over the prices for the preceding year, a decided increase in price developed rather more than a year ago, and for the past twelve months both manila and sisal have steadily grown dearer. The last monthly statement of commerce and finance issued by the United States Bureau of Statistics shows that on October 30 the wholesale price of manila in the United States was 15c. per pound, and sisal 9c.

That is where the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), got his statement—he said he got it from a report from New York.

In August the wholesale price of manila was 10c. per pound, so that in the last three months there has been an increase of 50 per cent. On November 1, 1897, the wholesale price of manila in the United States was 3½c. per pound, so that in the last two years the price has increased just 400 per cent. The recent increase in price seems to foreshadow considerably higher prices for twine next year.

With higher prices in prospect, many farmers will naturally ask whether something cannot be done to relieve the situation. The United States government is already moving, and is experimenting on substitutes for both manila and sisal. But if a suitable substitute be found, much time must necessarily elapse before it can be brought into general use. Is it possible to take such action as will in the meantime reduce prices?

Some years ago the Dominion and Ontario government began the manufacture of binder twine in the Kingston Penitentiary and in the Central Prison at Toronto. But government manufacture has not, in recent years, at least, had the slightest effect upon the market. The quantity of twine made in the government institutions has been comparatively small, and has been sold to private dealers, who have disposed of it at the highest prices they could secure. If government manufacture is continued on the same scale next year, and the product is disposed of in the same way that it has been disposed of in the past, relief is not likely to be afforded thereby.

Some may think that with the raw material at 15c. per pound, government manufacture, on any scale, will not mend matters. To reduce the price of manila seems certainly beyond the power of the government, but cannot something be done to bring out the facts? It is charged in some quarters that there is a combination among the manufacturers of twine. As the government are manufacturers themselves, and started manufacturing for the avowed purpose of providing twine for the farmer at reasonable rates, would it not be well for them to investigate the matter and ascertain whether or not a combination exists; and if it be found that the increased price of twine is caused by combinations of manufacturers, as well as by the increased price of the raw material, it might be well for the government to consider if they could not, by manufacturing on a larger scale and selling direct to the farmers, help to ease the situation.

I am glad to say the government are selling direct to the farmers this year. They were urged by the farmers to do so, and they acceded to their request, and there is no doubt that we are getting binder twine considerably cheaper. When I was up home I saw a number of farmers, and asked them if they availed themselves of the offer of the government, and one of them told me that he was in another town and saw binder twine selling as high as 18 cents a pound. Here is another letter to the editor of the Banner, dated March 19, 1900 :

Dear Sir,—We noticed in Saturday's issue of the 'Planet' an editorial headed 'The Binder Twine Robbery.' The 'Planet' has been misinformed in regard to the price of binder twine in Chatham, and while Mr. Williams may have bought twine at 13 cents per pound, this is not the price in Chatham or any other town or city in Canada for pure manila twine.

Last year was a disappointing one among twine dealers on account of the short wheat crop, and the result was that many carried over more or less of that article. Some of this twine was sold before the dealers knew its real market value, but if they had to purchase from the makers this season all this year's output, they would have to pay more than they are now selling for. The government are selling their output of binder twine direct to the farmers, in any quantity they choose to buy it, from one ball up to a ton at from one to two cents per pound less than any manufacturer in Canada or the United States will sell it to the dealers, and any dealer—whether he is in Chatham or elsewhere—cannot buy from the makers this season his twine as cheap as the government is offering it direct to the consumer. We do a large twine business and keep in close touch with the market, and always buy in the cheapest market consistent with good goods, and the following are the lowest prices that we have heard of from the maker to the dealer, excepting, of course, those of the government :

The Deering Harvester Company, which is considered one of the largest twine concerns in the United States, give as their lowest prices to the dealer as follows : Sisal twine, 11½c. per pound ; Standard, 11½c. per pound ; Standard Manila, 13c. per pound ; Manila, 14c. per pound ; and pure Manila, 16c. a pound. If in car-load lots the freight is allowed. If in less than car-load lots the purchaser must pay the freight. If ordered in 10,000 pound lots or more, a rebate of ¼ of a cent per pound is allowed, and if in car-load lots (24,000 pounds) a rebate of ½ of a cent per pound, and these prices are not guaranteed.

Now the Consumers' Cordage Company, who are the largest makers in the Dominion, quote as follows :

Blue Ribbon, 15c. a pound ; Special Manila, 12½c. per pound ; Pure Sisal, 11c. per pound ; and Golden Crown, 11c. net cash, f.o.b., Montreal, payable October 1st. These prices are subject to change without notice. So you will see that the government are from 1 to 2 cents per pound cheaper to the farmer in a small lot of 100 pounds or so than the other makers are in larger quantities to the dealers. We carried over a large quantity of binder twine from last year, and we argued thus : That with what we carried over bought at a much less price last season, combined with what we must pay this season, would enable us to sell direct to the farmers at less than the present market value, and still give us a fair profit.

So when we arranged our prices, they were made as follows :

Golden Crown, 11c. a pound ; Sisal or Standard, (they are both the same grade of twine), 12c. a pound ; Standard Manila, 13c. a pound.

Our Superior or Blue Ribbon, 14c. a pound. Pure Manila, guaranteed, 650 feet in every pound, 15c. ; all payable October 1st, and if cash is paid any time before August 1st, 25c. per 100 pounds will be allowed.

These prices are guaranteed to the farmer both against a decline or an advance.

The price of available manila hemp is, and has been for some months, higher for the raw article than the government is asking for the finished twine, and no foresight of the government or any of its employees could have provided for such an emergency, as it was supposed last year and the year before that twine was as high as it could go, and we think the farmers are making a mistake if they are in any way persuaded this year to put off buying until lower prices come. The fact of twine selling below the market value in Chatham does not prove that the government are encouraging any binder twine combine. In fact we think there is no such combine in Canada, for if there were, the manufacturers would insist on the dealers keeping their prices in accordance with those of the different makers.

There is no doubt that all available hemp in Canada and the United States is controlled by those who will make the most out of it that they can. These men know to a certainty how long it will take new hemp to reach here from the Philippines, and the government are just as much at the mercy of those men for their raw material as any other manufacturer in the same line of business.

Yours truly,

GEO. STEPHENS & CO.

Chatham, March 19, 1900.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have given sufficient evidence to show that the government has not entered into any combine ; I do not believe myself that the government ever entered into any combine. In my opinion there has never been but one monopoly in Canada in binder twine, and that monopoly existed at the time hon. gentlemen opposite held the reins of power, when the Standard Cordage Company paid out over $250,000 in three years in order to buy up a number of small factories and keep them standing still. They did hold the monopoly down to the time that the Brantford Cordage Company started, and since then there has been no combine in cordage, so far as I am aware, and I do not believe there has been any. I think that should settle once and for all the wisdom of the action of the government during this present year. I say, as a farmer, that I am well satisfied with the action of the government this year, first, in giving us one month, and then in extending it ; and they have made a promise to keep, if possible, a quantity of twine on hand in order that the farmers may not be fleeced by sharpers.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it that at hardware concerns in the country to-day you can buy twine in 5-pound lots at less than the government are selling it for at the Kingston Penitentiary?

Mr. McMILLAN. There is a large quantity of old twine on hand, as I have already stated, and shown by these written documents. These gentlemen hold that twine, and every farmer who knows anything about binder twine knows that in old twine a good deal of the oil is dried up, and it does not give the same satisfaction, and is not worth within a good few cents as much as new twine.

Mr. SPROULE. I priced new twine just coming in, from two hardware merchants in the village where I live, and in both cases I found they were selling it lower than the government are selling at the Kingston Penitentiary, and selling it in 5-pound lots.

Mr. TAYLOR. And that is what the Brantford circular says, that he has just read.

Mr. McMILLAN. No, the Brantford circular quotes it half a cent higher than the lower standard. It is true it is 12½ cents for the higher standard, and 14 cents for pure manila, and pure manila is the cheapest twine. When I was at home one of my own sons had sent for all the twine he required, and he told me he had purchased manila time and again; he had examined closely manila from the Kingston Penitentiary, and it was some of the best twine he had ever had.

Now, I am going to take up another question. The saving that has been effected in duties to the farmer on account of the present tariff has been $549,997 on Indian corn; and on binder twine, $120,300. If the duty had not been taken off binder twine the farmer would have had to pay that much more for his binder twine during the present year. On barbed wire fencing there was a saving of $126,885; on galvanized iron and steel wire, numbers 9, 12 and 13, there was a saving of $42,980. Then there is the article of cream separators. The member for Haldimand found great fault with the government for placing cream separators on the free list. If there is one industry more than another that deserves to be carefully encouraged it is the dairy industry. I hold that the late government ought to have taken the duty off all the machinery used in creameries and cheese factories, which they did not do. I am happy to say that the government has reduced that very much, and I hope they will place it on the free list, because this is an industry which really deserves to be encouraged. While I am in favour of the machinery used in the manufacture of beet-root sugar coming in free, I am also in favour of the dairymen, who are manufacturing products received from the farmers, having free machinery with which to manufacture these products. We have also the following articles on which the duty has been reduced:

Mr. TAYLOR. How is that saved?

Mr. McMILLAN. There was that much reduction in the duty on these goods coming into the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. The duty is exactly the same—20 per cent.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is the saving according to the Trade and Navigation Returns. The hon. gentleman's very existence seems to be wrapped up in the national policy, but, I can tell him that if he goes to his grave as quickly as the national policy does, the grass will soon be growing over him. Earnest, honest men make a great many statements, but they make a great many false ones:

Some hon. gentlemen say that farmers do not use files and rasps. I beg to say that every farmer who is using and taking care of his proper machinery has files and rasps just the same as any mechanic in the country, and it is only those who know nothing about agriculture who make such statements. The statement continues:

Total saving$1,046,243

On these goods which I have enumerated, there is a saving of $1,046,243, a great deal of it saved to the farmers of Canada. I have examined into this question a little further. Under the old tariff we used to complain bitterly of the enormous percentages that we were obliged to pay. I looked up the total amount of cotton goods imported and found that there was an importation of $5,975,916 in 1899, on which we had to pay a duty of $1,570,292, or 26 per cent, instead of 28 per cent or 29 per cent under the old tariff. Of woollen goods there was an importation of $9,803,197, on which we paid a duty of 27½ per cent. Shall I give the duty that was paid on the same woollen goods under the old regime? In 1891 I find that blankets paid a duty of 49½ per cent, that in 1895 the duty amounted to 41·8 per cent, and that in 1899 the duty was 28·98 per cent. So that, there is a reduction of 20 per cent in the duty on blankets and coarse woollen goods. Take socks and stockings. In 1891 there was a duty of 38·87 per cent, in 1899 it was 27·25 per cent, or a reduction of 11½ per cent. But, that does not tell the whole story. We know that there was a large amount of goods that came into the country that paid very high duties, and I am just going to call up the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) as a witness to some of the enormous duties that we paid. He says that on school slates there was a reduction from 1 cent and 20 per cent down to 30 per cent, or a reduction of 53 per cent. This shows that hon. gentlemen opposite themselves placed a duty on school slates, on education of 83 per cent. He says that hay knives were $2 per dozen and 30 per cent, that they were reduced to 35 per cent, and that there was, therefore, a reduction of 30 per cent. Thus, the hon. gentleman shows that there was 65 per cent of a duty which the farmers paid. This is not my statement; I am only putting the hon. gentleman's figures together and showing how the farmers were fleeced under the old tariff. Such statements as these show the enormous duties that the farmers paid under hon. gentlemen opposite. Hon. gentlemen cannot show me any single article on which they reduced the duty to any great extent in the interest of the farmers upon which they themselves did not place that duty. There are various other articles mentioned by the hon. gentleman. There were pronged forks, on which the reduction of duty was 27½ per cent, having been reduced to 35 per cent. Thirty-five and 27½ are 62½ of a duty that the farmers were obliged to pay under the old tariff. Then, we come to farm wagons. They brought them down to 25 per cent, and there was a reduction of 50 per cent, so that there was a duty of 75 per cent under the old tariff. I would like the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to hear this: I say there was a duty of 75 per cent upon farm wagons when the Conservative government was in power, and I take my authority from the speech made by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace.)

Mr. McMILLAN.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did not the farmers get their wagons as cheap then and cheaper than they get them now?

Mr. McMILLAN. They did not.

Mr. TAYLOR. They did.

Mr. McMILLAN. I purchased a brand new wagon last summer (without a box) for $35, and we could not get it for that price when the Conservative party were in power. Cotton seamless bags were reduced 25 per cent and there is still a duty of 20 per cent on them, which proves that the duty was 45 per cent under the Conservative government, and that is another sample of how the Conservative government taxed the farmers of Canada.

Now I shall deal a little with some remarks once made by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster). We all remember that in 1889 he told the farmers, in his budget speech, that they paid no duty. He said:

The farmers of this country whom we all love, and for whom we desire to do the best we can; nearly all his foods is raised upon his own farm and pays no duty. The house itself, the outhouses, the barns, and all that is necessary in the way of housing for the work of the farm, is built out of the woods which grow in this country. The clothing for himself and his family, in many cases, made from wool raised by the farmer himself; he clothes himself and his family with the products of our mills, the raw material of which is admitted free. The lumber of all kinds, his furniture of all staple and solid kinds, his farming machinery, is made and made to the best advantage out of the woods of his own country.

We had no iron or steel reapers or binders then; no iron harrows or iron ploughs or anything of that kind.

His fuel grows in the forests which are about him, or is found in the mines in inexhaustible quantities, so that taking it in the rough, the staple articles of consumption and of housing, and of fuel for the farmer, are these of which this country produces a surplus, which are free within the borders of this country, and upon which not one cent of a tax is paid.

Ah, the farmers know you; they know the ex-Minister of Finance, and you will never get an opportunity of trying to deceive them again. That is a sample of an earnest honest man departing from the path of rectitude and he knows it himself, but he did not succeed in deluding the farmers. I have another little case to bring up in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is interested. We have been told by many gentlemen on the other side of the House that the great prosperity we are enjoying to-day, and the extended markets which we possess now are all due to what the Conservatives did when they were in power. I will give you a little sample of how they established markets for us. In the Hansard of February 12, 1896, I find the following :

Fifty-seven thousand seven hundred and forty-eight pounds of creamery butter were shipped to Great Britain; the government advanced 20 cents a pound, and it sold for 14.38 cents per pound.

In the Mail and Empire of December 10, 1895, I find the following in the report of a speech of Mr. Foster at Sunderland, North Ontario :

It was thought desirable to turn the energy of the farmers in other directions—

That was a very laudable ambition for the Conservative government, but we will see later on how they succeeded in it :

It was thought desirable to turn the energy of the farmers in other directions, and the production and export of a good, uniform quality of butter was considered one of the most profitable. With that object in view, butter was purchased at 20 cents per pound and advertised and marketed by the government. What was the result? The Canadian article ranks with Danish butter, which formerly led the van in the English market, and every dollar of the $20,000 expended has gone back into the treasury, and the reputation of our butter has been raised away up to the top notch in the market. (Applause.)

That was the statement of Mr. Foster then, but, Mr. Speaker, I ask if it was an honest statement, and echo answers no. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself will admit that he was a little wrong when he said that. He went on to say that it was intended to pursue the same policy in regard to other articles. The report of the Mail and Empire, December 11, 1895, of a meeting held at Beaverton, says :

The Minister of Finance and Dr. Montague were present. Towards the close of the Doctor's address, when he was enlarging upon the blessings which had been conferred upon the farmers, What about butter? shouted a man in the audience. In response, Dr. Montague told how the government had established the Canadian butter trade upon a firm basis, by means of a bonus and cold storage, and without the loss to the country of a single dollar.

Let us see, Mr. Speaker, how they raised the reputation of Canadian butter on the English market. I have a report here sent from one of the butter agents of the old country with respect to one parcel of butter which the Conservative government sent over, and it would be a blessing for Canada, if the boat had sunk with that butter and never reached Great Britain. Instead of the action of the Conservative government raising the reputation of Canadian butter in the English market, it put the character of Canadian butter down so low that it could not be sold as Canadian butter at all. Here is a letter from Andrew Clement & Son, of Manchester, which proves that completely :

Manchester, May 22, 1895.

Dear Sirs,—We beg to hand you particulars of different shipments of Canadian butter, with notes made at time of arrival.

The highest price we paid this season was for 'Lennoxville,' which was sold at 92s.; 'Chester-ville,' 86s. In the last shipment 74s. and 76s. was top price for finest quality. A few lots had to be sold at 70s. and 68s.

271 packages received ex-'Pavonia.'

- 45 cases Wellman. Good texture, high coloured, turnipy, too old.
- 21 " Lennoxville. Old, well made, fresh.
- 6 " Chesterville. Variable.
- 18 " Colloden. Old, high coloured.
- 18 " Spencerville. High coloured, very salt, rank.
- 18 " Brantford. Old, turnipy.
- 6 " Goldfield. High coloured, clean flavoured.
- 11 tubs Gladstone. Clean flavoured, fair.
- 34 " Warkworth. High coloured, bad.
- 62 " Ballantyne. Good, some old, high coloured, too salt.
- 18 " Ballantyne. Good, some old, high coloured, too salt.
- 14 " Avonbank. Fair, high coloured, too old.

Colour must be pale; not too salt, say 3 per cent parchment-lined, and clean in flavour, of course. While we say the 56-pound box is the best package to use, we would give the preference to the 112-pound, if they could be got exactly as used by the Danes, but not if they could be recognized as Canadian. Our reason for this is that if the quality was very good, wholesale men would buy them from us, and sell simply as a kiel of butter without saying where it came from, and we should certainly get a better price. Any Canadian casks that we have seen have been like lard tubs. The prejudice against boxes is dying out, and the bigger men take them readily.

Yours truly,

ANDREW CLEMENT & SONS,

(Sd.) R. Graham.

What was the quality of the butter sent by the Conservative government to England? Why, they sent over butter that could not be sold under the name of Canadian butter at all, and yet they tell us they established the reputation of our butter in England. To show how they mismanaged the thing, I may state that it was in the month of January when they sent a man out to purchase that butter, and I am in a position to know that the Ballantyne butter was made for Canadian consumption in June, and was bought out of the storehouse in Montreal and sent to England as first-class Canadian fresh butter.

Mr. GIBSON. It was sold to the government.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, it was sold to the government and the government were silly enough to buy it for export as fresh butter. That is not all. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), said that the government had never asked that cattle should be admitted into Canada after the United States had got free of pruerio numo, and he said further that they were called upon loudly for not enforcing the quarantine regulations, and there was a solemn compact entered into with the government of Great Britain that the quarantine regulations should be strictly enforced on cattle coming from the United States. Well, in 1893, our settlers' cattle were admitted without quarantine from the United States, and I put the following question to the government, on the 20th February, 1893 :

Whether settlers' cattle were admitted into the Canadian North-west from the United States without quarantine, on inspection only? If so, is it the intention of the government to enforce quarantine regulations against all cattle entering Canada? Have representations been made to the government at any time, either written or verbal, of the danger of the British government scheduling Canadian cattle if settlers' cattle were admitted into Manitoba and the North-west Territories from the United States without quarantine?

To this, the ex-Minister of Finance replied, on behalf of the late government :

Settlers' cattle are not admitted into the Canadian North-west from the United States without quarantine, and they are admitted on inspection only.

That question was put on the Notice paper on Thursday, and it was answered on Monday. Our worthy chief knew the gentlemen a little better than I did. He rose on Monday, and stated in answer to my question, that quarantine was strictly enforced between Canada and the United States. Then the right hon. leader of the government, then leader of the opposition, asked him how long was it since those regulations had been strictly enforced ; and it appeared that they had been strictly enforced since the Saturday previous, and this was a Monday.

It was also shown that the British government knew that American cattle were passing into Canada without undergoing quarantine, notwithstanding the regulations, and that it was in consequence of this neglect to enforce the quarantine we lost the hold we had on the English market. The British government had an agent who knew that American cattle were allowed into the territories without quarantine, and he advised the British government, and the consequence was that Canadian cattle was scheduled. This shows how lax the late government was and what mischief and injury were caused by its neglect.

Then, with regard to the butter and cheese and dairy interest, a Bill was brought in while the late government were in power, to compel the inspection of all butter and cheese at Montreal ; and in my opposition to that Bill, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) fought against me as hard as he could. At Lansdown, at a Farmer's Institute meeting, the hon. gentleman urged the farmers to get the government to appoint an inspector, and to have all butter and cheese subject to inspection in Montreal.

Mr. TAYLOR. Inspection and branding.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am coming to that. You know, Mr. Speaker, that cheese and butter are all inspected at the creameries and factories, before being taken away, and if the weights required to be tested, they have to be tested on the cars. I was asked if I would assist the hon. member for Leeds in getting an inspector appointed, and I declined. A Bill was passed, not making it compulsory, but a permissive measure, permitting butter and cheese to be sold subject to inspection in Montreal. I gave a number of statements in the House, showing the iniquities perpetrated on the butter and cheese factories, when the butter and cheese were inspected in Montreal. I showed that the factory could not tell what the price actually was, until the inspection had taken place in Montreal, and that the effect would be to kill the dairying industries throughout the country. Perhaps the hon. member for Leeds was not aware of the damage he was doing, but it would have been a sad day for us if our butter and cheese were to be taken from the creameries, and inspected at Montreal.

I have another list here showing how much we would benefit if we could get ingress into the United States. This list gives the quantity sold to the United States, the value, and the duty paid during the past year :

Yet the hon. gentleman told us that the national policy protects us against the United States market. Why, when the United States could take that large quantity of produce, on which the duty had to be paid, it is evident we do not require to be protected against their produce.

A good deal has been said from time to time about reciprocity with the United States. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who, at one time, would have liked to have had reciprocity with the United States, but the leader of the opposition and some of its members are very fond of quoting the letter the Hon. Edward Blake had written at the close of the election in 1891. I am just going to read a few paragraphs of that letter :

THE NATIONAL POLICY.

Its real tendency has been as foretold twelve years ago, towards disintegration and annexation, instead of consolidation and the maintenance of that British connection of which they claim to be the special guardians. It has left us with a small population, a scanty immigration and a North-west empty still, with enormous additions to our public debt and yearly charge, an extravagant system of expenditure, and an unjust and expensive tariff ; with restricted markets for our needs, whether to buy or to sell, and all the host of evils (greatly intensified by our special conditions) thence arising ; with trade diverted from its natural into forced and therefore less profitable channels, and with unfriendly relations and frowning tariff walls, even more and more estranging us from the mighty English-speaking nation to the south, our neighbours and relations, with whom we ought to be, as it was promised we should be, living in generous amity and liberal intercourse. Worse, far worse. It has left us with lowered standards of public virtue and death-like apathy in public opinion ; with racial, religious and provincial animosities rather inflamed than soothed ; with a subservient parliament, an autocratic executive, debauched constituencies and corrupted and corrupting classes ; with lessened self-reliance and increased dependence on the public chest and on legislative aids, and possessed withal by a boastful jingo spirit far enough removed from true manliness, loudly proclaiming unreal conditions and exaggerated sentiments, while actual facts and genuine opinions are suppressed. It has left us with our hands tied, our future compromised, and in such a plight that, whether we stand or move, we must run some risks which else we might have either declined or encountered with greater promise of success.

Was ever truer statement made with respect to the action of the national policy upon the government and people of this country ? Why, Sir, it has just occurred to me that when the fathers of the national policy, the late government, laid down the reins of power, the treasury was so depleted that the members of the civil service could not get their salaries, and the very charwomen and pages about the House were unpaid. When these gentlemen finally left office, there were balances of $2,000,000 left that they had not paid, including $1,000,000 for the militia supplies. They depleted the treasury and demoralized themselves. The standard of public morality was never lower than when certain members came into this House and announced that seven members of the government had given up their positions. It could not be that the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) was one of them, for that earnest, honest gentleman would not be guilty of such conduct. Think of it, in a British country—the speech from the Throne delivered, and certain members of the government, after that, throw up their portfolios in order to turn out one Premier and put in another. I cannot speak positively, but I am under the impression that a certain gentleman who came here from London was a disturbing element in the ranks of the Conservative party ; and I am under the impression that he and they had some little deliberation, and they had promised that they would rebel in order that he might lead the government. These men left the Treasury benches, and then came back. Honest, earnest men, had they left, would never have come back. But, the demoralization which had been brought about in our public life by their policy was shown even in their own actions.

The trade of Canada with Great Britain in 1878 was $172,405,454. In eighteen years it had increased to $239,135,360, an increase of $67,619,906. But, in the three years between 1896 and 1899, it went up to $321,661,213, an increase of no less than $82,635,853. I can remember well that when the preferential tariff was laid before the House, the ex-Minister of Finance stood up in his place and denounced it. He told us that we had a remunerative trade with Germany, and that trade would be wiped out. He picked out industries which he said would be ruined by that trade. Among others, he mentioned the manufacture of shirts, cuffs and collars. This, he said, would be taken away from Canada altogether, and the work done by Canadians was to be done in Europe. I have here a statement showing the increases and decreases in our trade with various countries, from 1896 to 1899. I will not read the amounts, but will simply give the percentages :

	Increase per cent.	Decrease per cent.
Great Britain.. .. .	36.60
United States.....	34
France.. .. .	36
Germany.....	43.71
Spain.....	33
Portugal.....	51
Italy.....	81
Holland.....	86
Belgium.....	210
Newfoundland... ..	Slight.
West Indies.....		7½
South America.....	22.70
Switzerland.....	72
Other countries.....	38

The total increase amounts to $82,635,000. The prediction made by hon. gentlemen opposite was that our trade with Belgium and with Germany would be utterly wiped out by the abrogation of the British treaties with those countries. But, we find that, as a matter of fact, our trade with those two countries has increased to an enormous extent.

Now, the import of breadstuff into Great Britain in 1898 was 65,227,930 cwt., while the imports from Canada were 5,012,030 cwt., or 7.7 per cent of the total breadstuffs required by Great Britain. The total imports of Great Britain in 1898 amounted to £470,373,583 sterling, exports £294,013,988 sterling, or a total British trade of £764,387,571. The total imports from the colonies amounted to £99,433,955, and the exports, £90,110,736, a total trade on the part of Great Britain with the colonies of £189,544,691, or not quite 25 per cent of the total trade of Great Britain. The total trade of Canada with Great Britain amounts to only 4½ per cent. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the British government ought to give us a preference in their market. I say, as a farmer, that while this would be a great benefit to us, I, for one, could not have the face to stand up and advocate Great Britain imposing a duty upon her hundreds of thousands of workmen and risking 76 per cent of her trade, which is with foreign countries, in order to show a preference to her colonies, whose trade amounts to only 24.70 of the whole. But, we have a preference given us by Great Britain. The trust funds that the British government is allowing Canada to borrow from will certainly be a benefit to us. Our trade with Britain under the present preferential tariff is worth more than the few dollars that would have been put in the farmers' pockets. Go where you will, you cannot take up a paper but you will find the name of Canada mentioned and mentioned favourably. The name of Canada is ringing throughout the length and breadth, not only of the continent of Europe, but of America as well. What has brought it to that position? The preferential tariff and the influence of our worthy Prime Minister at home during the Queen's Jubilee. His action there, along with the preferential tariff, have done more for Canada than could have been done with all the money we would have saved without the preferential tariff, and Canada has attained to a higher position than she ever attained before. All our industries are run to their full extent. Hon. gentlemen opposite are much chagrined at these things, they tell us that our present prosperity is only filling up the vacuum that had been caused by the uncertainty of what the present government would do when they got into power; and it is their strong desire that the vacuum may soon be filled up and that our industries may become less prosperous.

I have here another document bearing upon our industries that I would like to read. It is a letter from the secretary of the Manufacturers' Association:

Toronto, March 31, 1900.

Dear Sir,—The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, realizing the very great importance of all tariff changes to the manufacturers in Canada, desires to obtain as full and accurate information as possible, respecting the probable effects of the proposed extension of the preference on British goods coming into Canada from 25 per cent to 33½ per cent.

To you as a manufacturer, this letter is addressed, to ascertain what are your views as to the probable effect on your particular business, of the proposed changes.

In order to give this information some uniformity, certain leading questions have been drawn up, and if you feel interested in this question, kindly answer these questions as concisely and accurately as possible, and return your reply at least not later than April 5, as no time should now be lost.

1st. Q. What line of goods do you manufacture?—A. Paper, paper bags, flour sacks, &c.

2nd. Q. How many men do you employ?—A. Fifty.

3rd. Q. How has the 25 per cent preference tariff affected your business?—A. It has in some instances induced us to purchase goods in England which were formerly purchased exclusively in the United States; in other instances, it has, through keener competition, lessened the cost of goods purchased from other countries.

4th. Q. How do you think the proposed increase to 33½ per cent will affect your business?—A. Still more favourably.

5th. Q. Do you find that in your line of business foreign goods come into Canada, getting the benefit of the preference intended for British goods only?—A. No, we have not found it so.

6th. Q. Do you consider that the requirement that 25 per cent of the labour expended in the manufacture of an article, should be British in order to entitle it to the preferential tariff, is satisfactory? If not, what proportion do you think should be required?—A. Yes, we think that should be sufficient.

7th. Q. How would you view any proposition to extend the benefit of such a preferential tariff to the United States?—A. In the same light that we would view a proposition to extend free trade to every other country in the world, without reciprocal advantages.

8th. Q. Would you be in favour of urging upon the government the advisability of not dealing with the tariff every year, but of only revising it at certain stated intervals?—A. Since the government has shown no disposition to rearrange the tariff every year, it does not seem necessary to urge upon it the advisability of not doing so. Changes often become necessary, and at such times we think the government shows wisdom in making them, instead of allowing an error to become an evil by allowing it to exist.

9th. Q. Have you any other point of interest? —A. Not on this subject.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association is approaching these questions upon strictly non-political lines, looking solely to safeguard the manufacturing industries of Canada, and your opinions and criticisms are most cordially invited.

This is the view of a Canadian manufacturer, and that is no doubt a view shared by the people generally in this country.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who writes the letter?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is signed by the secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, L. A. Russell, very likely the same gentleman who used to get up the tariff for the Conservative party when they were in power.

I now come to the duties on pig iron. When the duties on pig iron were imposed in 1887 and 1888, we heard a great deal of what that industry was going to do for the country. We were going to have 20,000 workmen brought in, who would increase our population by 100,000; we were going to have smelting furnaces in Kingston, Weller's Bay, Toronto, and several other places. Now, what benefit have we derived from those duties? I was astonished to hear an hon. member opposite, since this debate began, say to the Minister of Customs that he had adopted bounties. Why, Sir, the present government has not adopted bounties, it has passed a law to abolish bounties as rapidly as the interests of the country will allow. Now, let me show what benefits the farmers of this country have derived from the iron bounties and the great protection afforded to pig iron. In 1887, when the bounty was $2 per ton, there were $92,273 paid out; and from that time up to 1898, after the bounty had been increased to $4 per ton, there had been $2,356,476 paid in duties upon pig iron, and $786,928 paid in bounties, or the enormous sum altogether of $3,329,397. With what results? In 1887, the year the duties were first imposed, there were 37,717 tons of pig iron manufactured in Canada, but in 1897, the last year the $4 duty was in existence, there were only 33,254 tons of pig iron manufactured in Canada, showing a falling off of several thousand tons during that period, although we had paid in duty and bounty $3,329,397. Of agricultural implements, we exported in 1896, $593,000 worth, and in 1899 the exports had gone up to $1,863,468. The member for West York (Mr. Wallace) showed that in 1896 the imports amounted to $446,000. Well, in 1899 our imports amounted to $1,625,000, showing an increase of $1,179, 000. There was also an increase in exports of $1,270,000.

Now, we have heard a great deal from time to time about free trade as they have it in England. That is a very interesting question, upon which I would like to say a few words. I have occupied the time of the House longer than I expected to do, but I am going to dedicate a short time to the question of free trade as they have it in England. There has been a great deal said from time to time, in respect to that, and it has been said that the former leader of the opposition, the present leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) promised free trade as they have it in England. I have two statements of his here which show conclusively what he meant by that. Before I commence to read them I should say that I am sorry to say that the circumstances of our country cannot admit, at present, of the policy of free trade such as they have in England.

I submit to you, therefore, that the system of protection which is maintained by the government, that is to say, of levying tribute upon the people, not for the legitimate expenses of the government, but for a private and privileged class, should be condemned without qualification.

It is always easy to increase the tariff, because by so doing you increase the private fortunes of certain individuals; but whenever you decrease the tariff it has always to be done with careful consideration; and I am sure that when the Liberals are in power they will not be indifferent to this primary truth.

I believe that the Liberals have carried out that policy as far as they possibly could. On January 10, 1839, the Anti-Corn Association held a meeting and appointed a Mr. Villiers to ascertain the condition of the country, and asked that evidence be heard in favour of petitions against the corn laws. A Mr. Wood, as president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, had just sent in a petition depicting the state of trade in gloomy colours, but, being asked to second the address, gave a glowing and exaggerated account of the prosperous condition of the country. Sir Robert Peel took advantage of this admission, and said:

Why press for a change in the corn laws when, under their operation, the country is so prosperous?

This was the time at which Roland Hill brought in his penny postage scheme. Lord John Russell, in his budget, brought down on the 7th of May, 1841, introduced a novel clause, at that time, of reducing those taxes that tend to lessen consumption, thus enriching the treasury and adding to the comforts of the people. This is the policy that has been followed by the present government in Canada, reducing the tariff for the benefit of the people, and at the same time bringing an increased amount of money into the treasury. In 1842, the import duties on 750 articles entering Great Britain were reduced. In 1846 the duties were reduced, or altogether repealed, on 150 articles and oats and barley and wheat were to be free in 1849. In 1846, Mr. W. Mills accused Sir Robert Peel of throwing overboard all the industrial energies of the country and leaving us to compete under our heavy taxation with the untaxed energies of Germany and the United States. This is exactly the statement of the hon. ex-Finance Minister about the loss of trade and about the manufacturers' goods being placed in competition with the goods of Germany and the United States. It astonished me to see how closely the tactics pursued by those who opposed free trade in Great Britain are followed by those who are opposed to the preferential tariff in Canada to-day. Sir Robert Peel, in reply, said:

Shall it be advance or recede?

So it is in Canada to-day. The policy has been to advance, and it has advanced by adding 8½ per cent to the preferential tariff, the same as it advanced in reducing the duties on importations into Great Britain. In 1846, Sir Robert Peel made a speech which is really worth quoting. He said:

In proposing those measures of commercial policy which disintitiled us to the confidence of many of our former supporters, we were influenced by no other desire than that of promoting the interests of the country. . . . The love of power was not the motive for the proposal of those measures; for I had not a doubt that, whether these measures were attended with failure or with success, one event must certainly occur, and that was the termination of the existence of this government. . . . I am far from complaining of it; anything is preferable to attempting to maintain ourselves in office without a full measure of the confidence of this House.

That is the position of the government of to-day. I am convinced that the moment they feel they have not the confidence of the people they will throw down the reins of power. The late government never did have the confidence of the people of the country. The Queen's speech on the opening of parliament on the 2nd of February, 1849, contained the following paragraph:

I again commend to your attention the restrictions imposed on commerce by the navigation laws. If you shall find that these laws are in whole or in part unnecessary for the maintenance of our maritime power, while they fetter trade and industry, you will no doubt deem it right to repeal or modify their provisions.

The work from which I am quoting proceeds:

Their prophecies of ruin to the British navy, national as well as mercantile, their indignant wrath at the free traders, thus fostering foreign at the expense of British industry, their wallings over the departing glories of the British Empire, were depressingly mournful. How agreeably disappointed they must have been in after years when they found themselves so egregiously wrong.

Mr. McMILLAN.

Such is the condition of the opposition to-day. Their wallings are loud and long, not only as they say, in the interest of the country, but because they have been taken away from the Treasury benches and placed on the other side of the House. In 1853, Mr. Gladstone, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, remitted the taxation on 133 articles of import. In 1860 butter and cheese were admitted free of duty. In 1869 the small amount of duty remaining on corn was abolished, and in 1874 sugar was relieved from the remnant of duty left. I watched the effect of the preferential tariff on the ex-Finance Minister and the countenance displayed by himself and his colleagues when the hon. Minister of Finance announced a further increase in the preferential clause from 25 to 33¼ per cent. I was astonished to see the long face that the hon. ex-Minister of Finance showed us, when, after voting against the preferential tariff, he and his friends were compelled to see another addition made to it. This work continues:

There are three prevailing errors which we think that the perusal of these pages will effectually dispel.

1. The notion that we adopted free trade under the pressure of necessity, and not from deliberate conviction.
2. The notion that ours is not a thorough free trade tariff.
3. The notion that the prosperity of England has suffered a decline under the influence of the free trade system.

In regard to the latter, even those who, not denying our prosperity, deny its connection with free trade, must admit that if our change of policy did not cause, it certainly did not prevent our rapid advance in the path of improvement. They may question whether our onward progress has been the result, but they must at least allow that it has been the concomitant of free trade.

That is the way that free trade was brought about in England; that is the way that the preferential tariff has been introduced in Canada. It goes on to state that Sir Robert Peel, after bringing in his measure for giving the corn laws and protection their death blow, was watched as he left the House. He had alienated a very large number of his farmer friends, but he felt that he had done his duty. Why, Sir, I watched our present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and I saw that he had the same buoyant spirit and the same happy feeling, and that he felt he was doing a benefit to the country in increasing the preferential rate to 33¼ per cent, and giving the country the benefit of that reduction on English goods. Let me say, Sir, that Canada to-day is more prosperous than it has ever been since I first entered it. No government that ever held the reins of power has ever reduced any duties they did not impose themselves, except the present government. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that they reduced the duty on sugar, but they should remember that it was the Conservative party that imposed that duty, and not the Liberal party. These gentlemen tell us that they reduced the duty on farm implements to a certain amount. Sir, they simply reduced in every case the enormously high tariff which they themselves had placed on the statute-book, and they never reduced any duty in the interest of the farmers, until they found that the farmers could not stand the burden any longer, and they were afraid of getting turned out of power.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who has resumed his seat, pretends, and with some reason, to represent the farmers of this country. He is a large farmer himself, and he pretends to speak on their behalf on every occasion. I would point out to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), however, that the farmers of Canada are an honest and truthful body in the community, and that they do not want any one to represent them in this House, who will make a statement that cannot be verified by the facts. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), read a long list of articles in reference to which he said, that a saving had been effected to the farmers by reduced taxation, and among the list he quoted farm wagons. I interjected the remark, how much cheaper do the farmers get their wagons now, than they did in former years, and the hon. gentleman replied that they got them cheaper and better. Now, Sir, I shall read from the tariff of 1894, the item bearing on farm wagons, and I shall ask my hon. friend to read it after I send it over to him. Item 318 of the tariff of 1894, reads as follows :

Farm and freight wagons, carts, drays, and similar vehicles 25 per cent ad valorem.

I shall send this book over to my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan), so that he may see that I am correct in giving the duty on farm wagons in 1894. I want the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), to remain in the House for a little while, because I have something to say to him.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will be back in a minute. You are not so obedient yourself, when any one wants you to remain in the Chamber.

Mr. TAYLOR. He that fights and runs away, will live to fight another day.

Mr. McMILLAN. Do not be alarmed, I will be back soon.

Mr. TAYLOR. I shall now read from the tariff of the Liberals, framed in 1897. Item 315, which includes a large number of items in the old tariff, because that is how the tariff was revised by the Liberals—they just took out an article from one item and put it into another. Item 315 of the Liberal tariff of 1897, reads :

Engines, steam engines, boilers, ore crushers and rock crushers, stamp mills, cornish and belted rolls, rock drills, air compressors, cranes, derricks, percussion coal cutters, pumps, n.e.s., wind-mills, horse-powers, portable engines, threshers, separators, fodder or feed cutters, potato diggers, grain crushers, fanning mills, hay tedders, 'farm wagons,' slot machines and typewriters, and all machinery composed wholly or in part of iron or steel, n.o.p., 25 per cent ad valorem.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the tariff on farm wagons to-day is 25 per cent, and the tariff in 1894, was 25 per cent, and how can there be any saving to the farmers of this country on account of the duty being lowered, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), stated. When the hon. gentleman makes a statement like that, which is contrary to the fact, his whole argument falls to the ground. The people of the country can analyse his statement to that effect, and if they find that every statement made during his two and a half hours speech, is on a par with that, they can easily see what kind of an argument he has presented to this House. It is absolutely unjustifiable that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), should misstate the facts in this House. The truth is, that there cannot be a cent saved to the farmer in the purchase of a wagon by whatever change the Liberals made, because the duty is exactly the same to-day as it was in 1894, when the Conservatives were in power.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), made one further reference to myself. He stated that at a Farmers' Institute meeting, I argued that the government should appoint an inspector at Montreal, to inspect butter and cheese. Well, Sir, I did advocate that, and I advocated it for the purpose of having an officer to whom any dispute could be referred. It was found that the farmers sold their butter and cheese after it was inspected at home, but when it arrived at Montreal there were often disputes as to the weight and quality, and I insisted that the government should have an inspector there to act as a referee, so that in case of a dispute he should be called in to settle it, I also insisted that we ought to have all the farm products of Canada branded for export, as articles of Canadian manufacture. I advocated that then, and I advocate it to-day. I regret that the farmers of this country have in the hon. member for South Huron, a gentleman who will get up in this House and state what are not the facts, and I regret also that the farmers have in the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), a representative who is ready to justify every act of this government, whether it is in the interests of the farmers or not. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), has told us that the country was never so prosperous under any previous government as it is to-day. I challenge him, I challenge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), or any member of the government to point to one legislative act of theirs since they came into power, which has brought any prosperity to the farmers or the mechanics, or any other class of this community.

Let them point to any legislative act of theirs that has been calculated to help the products of the manufactory, the farm, or the forest. Sir, the prosperity we are now enjoying is due to a kind Providence, who has bountifully supplied the farmers with an abundant yield which has put new life into every industry in Canada. Now, Sir, La Patrie ought to be an authority with this government, because certainly the Minister of Public Works, who controls that paper, runs the machine for the government, and I shall quote from that paper as to what the prosperity is due :

'La Patrie' says that in the government workshops at Sorel where from 15 to 75 workmen used to be employed at different seasons of the year there are now from 200 to 475. 'The workmen,' it says, 'have enjoyed a rich manna, such as was never offered them by a Conservative government.'

It would, no doubt, bring prosperity, when to-day there are from 200 to 470 men doing the same work that was done under the Conservative government by from 15 to 75 men, but if it increases the prosperity in that particular locality, and in other localities in the Dominion, I might point out that it does so at the cost of the increased taxation of $10,000,000 a year, which this government takes from the people of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the Paris interview you are referring to ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, no, we will hear about Mr. Tarte's Paris interview later. My hon. friend from South Huron, refers to the great boon conferred upon farmers, by having corn admitted free into this country. I will leave it to him and the farmers to settle that question between them, when the farmers have an opportunity to vote at the polls. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), is practically a manufacturer, rather than a farmer, because he manufactures beef for export, and so he wants his raw material free, and, because he wants free corn, he insists that all the farmers of the country should have free corn whether they want it or not. He does not want to buy the products from his neighbouring farmer which would feed his cattle and hogs, just as well as the corn, and better. I may tell the hon. gentleman that a few days ago, I met the manager of the pork packing establishment at Ingersoll, and I asked him what effect the importation of free corn had upon the pork packing industry. He said : 'I will just tell you this. We purchased the day before yesterday, 235 hogs. Out of these, there were 162 soft ones, fed on corn, and we have sent word not to buy another hog in that locality.' That is the effect which free corn is having on the Canadian industry.

Mr. GRAHAM. How is it that pork is so dear—8 cents a pound, live weight ?

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. TAYLOR. Because the late Conservative government put 4 cents a pound on pork coming into the country, and we kept American pork out until we built up the industry in this country, and this government did not dare take that duty off. We had built up the reputation of sending to England the best pork hams and bacon that went into that country. But how is it going to be now ? We are going to impair the reputation of Canadian pork and bring it down to the level of corn fed American pork, and it is this corn fed pork which these Ingersoll people say is going to ruin the business. The gentleman I spoke of telegraphed back to his agent not to buy another hog in that section of country because the farmers were using American corn for fattening.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Is there anything in the Act which obliges them to feed their hogs with American corn ?

Mr. TAYLOR. There are many farmers who, when they get a cheaper product by importing it from the United States, will not use the Canadian product for which they would have to pay a cent or two a bushel more.

Mr. BURNETT. Does not the Canadian farmer profit by buying American corn ?

Mr. HENDERSON. No.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes, nine men out of every ten will say they do, if they are farmers.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend asked me a question—

An hon. MEMBER. And you cannot answer it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, I can. I am not a farmer like the hon. gentleman, but I represent as large a farming constituency as he does, and I know the views of the farmers in my constituency. I know that they do not want free importation of corn because they know that it depreciates the price of other coarse grain.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me ?

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend can make a speech when I get through, and I will thank him not to interrupt me further. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan) referred to binder twine and read by the yard an advertisement of the Brantford binder twine industry. Well, I wish to notify the hon. Minister of Finance that when we go into supply I intend to deal with that binder twine question pretty fully by making a motion, and will then supply the House with some interesting facts. But I just wish now to reply to one statement. The Brantford Binder Twine Company has been in operation for five years and has sold its output for five years, and therefore has enjoyed the profits of five years business. What are those profits? The capital of the company is $65,000, and I am informed that they added some surplus capital to that amount. They paid a 10 per cent dividend per year during three years. The next year after the association was formed—which they said was not a combine—they paid 60 per cent. And last year they paid 100 per cent dividend. Is there any industry in this country, which is not protected by a combine, that could pay 100 per cent dividend? These dividends have all come out of the pockets of the farmers, and if this company has been able to realize those dividends it is due to the connivance of this government. The Globe came out last year and said that a 60 per cent dividend earned by a company, after the duty had been taken off, was a pretty good showing. I say that there is not a manufacturing industry in this country which can show any such profits unless there is a combine, and more than a combine. It must be a double combine that can pay 100 per cent one year and 60 per cent another year and 10 per cent the other years, making an average of 40 per cent per year during the five years of its existence. That proves conclusively that there is a combine to bleed the farmers of this country who are obliged to purchase large quantities of this indispensable article. This little institution at Brantford paid its stockholders last year 100 per cent, while some of the other manufacturing industries were paying no dividends and others were only paying 5 per cent. You cannot find any other industry that pays 10 per cent on its capital investment, and yet this concern paid 60 per cent the year before last and 100 per cent last year to its stockholders.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock, I had occupied a few moments in replying to the hon. member for South Huron, who promised me that he would return in a few moments. He has not yet returned, which I very much regret, as I have a few words to say to him, and I would like him to be present. I stated that the farmers of this country, both Conservative and Reform, were honest, truthful, and in every way reliable, and that they wanted their representative men, particularly men who claim, as the hon. member for South Huron does, to represent them in this House, to make statements that are reliable. The hon. gentleman made statements here to-night which are not in accordance with the facts. He quoted a long list of articles which had been imported into this country last year, on which he stated that the farmers of this country had saved large amounts of duty as compared with what they would have paid on the same articles under the Conservative tariff. Since six o'clock I have found, on comparing the tariffs of the two governments, that the Conservative tariff, which the hon. gentleman used for purposes of comparison, was that enacted in 1879, at the inauguration of the national policy; but that tariff has been revised time and again. The hon. gentleman said that this government had largely reduced the duty on wagons, whereas, the fact is that the duty on wagons to-day, under the Fielding tariff, is exactly the same as it was under the tariff passed by the Conservative government in 1894. I have both tariffs in my hand, and I wished to send them across to the hon. member for South Huron, so that he might read them, and then get up and correct—not his mistake, because it was not a mistake. The hon. gentleman wilfully and maliciously put that statement before the farmers of this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, I say wilfully and maliciously, because he quoted from a tariff—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. If Mr. Speaker says that I have said anything out of order—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Wilfully and maliciously—these words surely are out of order?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think we have been accustomed to regard those words as out of order, and I know that my hon. friend, on second thought, would admit them to be so.

Mr. TAYLOR. As Mr. Speaker says maliciously is out of order, I will withdraw that, but I will say he wilfully misrepresented the facts.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think that is in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, I will withdraw the word wilfully. Whether he did it wilfully and maliciously or not, the hon. member for South Huron did misrepresent the facts as they stand, for he compared the tariff in force last year with the tariff of 1879, which was revised by the Conservative government time and again, and lastly in 1894. If he wanted to be honest with the farmers, he would have compared the tariff of this government with the tariff of the Conservative government when they went out of office; and if he had done that, he would have seen that the duty on wagons had not been changed in any particular. I also referred to the fact that the hon. gentleman claimed that the prosperity of the country was due to this government. I challenge that statement. I said it was due to a kind Providence.

Mr. DAVIN. And the action of the previous government.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, yes ; and the national policy, of course. But, I challenge the Minister of Finance, or any other member of this government, to point to any act which they have done to bring about this prosperity. I read from La Patrie to show to what the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) thought the prosperity was due—that it was due to the fact that this government had employed 475 men to do work at Sorel that fifteen men had done under the late government. I disputed the claim that any act of legislation can change the price of farm produce in this country. Except for home consumption the markets of the world regulate the prices of our farm products. I also referred to the admission of free corn. Although the hon. member for South Huron, as a manufacturer of beef, prefers to have corn brought in from the United States, the great bulk of the farmers of this country, in my opinion, prefer using the coarse grains produced in this country by our own farmers, and keeping out American corn. I then proceeded to discuss the subject of binder twine. I presume that the hon. gentleman must be a stockholder in the Brantford Binder Twine Company, and I challenge him, or any other gentleman in this House or out of it, to point to an industry which paid one hundred per cent dividend last year save the Brantford Binder Twine Company. If the hon. gentleman is not a stockholder in that company I want him to deny it. I know that some hon. gentlemen on that side of the House are stockholders in it, that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Beith) is one of its directors, and I am informed that the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Ontario is a stockholder. I want to know if the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Burnett) is not a stockholder in this company, which, I am informed, declared a dividend of 100 per cent last year, and 60 per cent the year before. He does not say he is not. The hon. member for South Huron quoted the Brantford Company's price for binder twine, and the prices at the Kingston Penitentiary. He tries to make the farmers believe what a great boon this government is conferring upon them by allowing them to purchase twine in small quantities at the Kingston Penitentiary at 14 cents, 11 cents and 10 cents. What are the prices charged by the Brantford company? 12½ cents for the best, 11½ cents for the next, and 10½ cents for the third quality, with 3 per cent off for cash, or credit to the 1st of September. So that the prices the hon. gentleman quoted on the start are lower on the whole than the Kingston Penitentiary prices. The hon. gentleman says the government are conferring a great boon upon the farmers by allowing them to purchase in small quantities at 14 cents, 11 cents and 10 cents for the three qualities. As I will show in a few days, when I speak on the binder twine question, that twine was produced in Kingston last year for 6 cents a pound. They are charging the farmers 14 cents for what costs them 6 cents to produce, and doing this in order to help our friends of the other side who are stockholders in the Brantford concern to pay a dividend of 100 per cent. I want to point out to my hon. friend who pretends to have a great interest in the workmen of England—not of Canada—how this binder twine question affects the workmen, the farmers and mechanics of this country. In 1895, which was the last full year of the Conservative government, we imported $121,605 worth of binder twine, while in 1899 we imported $818,412 worth—nearly $700,000 worth more of binder twine last year than in 1895. This was imported from the United States. What labour produced that? American labour produced it. And those who directed that labour made the Canadian farmers pay double prices, but the feeding of those labourers was left to the American farmers. This government took the duty off binder twine. And what was the effect? The American combination—because there is a combination in this article—interviewed the directors of those Canadian twine factories that did not shut up on the prospect of the repeal of this duty and told them to put up their prices. Hobbes & Co., of London, are the agents of the American combine, and they go to the Canadian manufacturers and say: If you do not put up your prices, we will give twine to the farmers practically at cost price and close up your industries. These people put the prices up and take from the farmers 100 per cent profit. And another effect of this was that we imported $700,000 worth of binder twine which was formerly made by Canadian workmen and the wages for which went to sustain American labour.

Mr. TAYLOR.

I want to show my hon. friend and the farmers of this country what this government did last year as compared with the government in power in 1895. I have here a statement showing the comparison of imports in fifteen articles that are used exclusively by the farmers of this country, many of them made by my hon. friend from Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost). And I must say that I am alarmed at the prospect for the workmen of this country and alarmed at the prospects of the manufacturers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. Hon. gentlemen opposite will laugh in a different way when these men have the ballots in their hands as they soon will. This statement is taken from the official table laid before this House:

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is the growing time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, it is the growing time for American workmen.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The factories here were too busy to supply these goods last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), that we have factories enough and men enough to make every article that was made and every article that was imported into this country.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. The factories are working night and day.

Mr. TAYLOR. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Featherston) know about it, working on a farm?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor), allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand the hon. gentleman is referring to a considerable increase in the importation of certain agricultural implements. As he complains of that, is it the Conservative policy to increase the duty on these implements? If his speech does not mean that, I do not understand what it can mean.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) ask his question, but not make a speech. I will tell him what the Conservative policy is so far as I am concerned. And in this connection I might as well reply to my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who represented me as saying in West Huron, that I would put up the duty on agricultural implements to 41 per cent. The hon. gentleman knew when he made that statement that it was not correct. But I did make the statement and have made it elsewhere, and make it here again, that I am in favour of a protective duty on every article we can produce or grow or manufacture in this country. On every such article I am prepared to give sufficient protection to have the article manufactured, produced or grown in this country by the people of this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But does the hon. gentleman wish the duty on agricultural implements increased? That is the question. Give us a fair answer.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) a fair answer. If agricultural implements—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Never mind the 'if;' give us an answer.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am trying to make this speech, and if the hon. gentleman—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, I have no right to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor)—

Mr. TAYLOR. I am trying to give the hon. gentleman an answer that is fair and straight. I say 'every article,' and if agricultural implements are not included in that term 'every article that can be grown, manufactured or produced in this country,' what I say does not apply to them. But if the present tariff is not sufficient protection to keep the industry of producing these goods in Canada employing Canadian labour and consuming the produce of Canadian farms, I am willing to give sufficient protection to bring about that result.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then, you are in favour of increasing these duties.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am a protectionist out and out.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Is the present protection on agricultural implements sufficient?

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman has a long speech to make; we have heard it three or four times over in this House, and I presume he will repeat it again, when we will have ample opportunity to discuss this question. He is representing an agricultural constituency, the same as the member for South Huron, who made his speech and ran away. Let me read the rest of the table:

over to the Customs Department the other day and asked the appraiser this question: Suppose I am a manufacturer of watches in Germany, Belgium, China or Japan; I manufacture the running gear of watches and send these watches over to England. Suppose I there increase the value by 25 per cent by putting on a case, under what tariff will that come in here? He answered: It will come in under the preferential Taking all these articles that I have mentioned, fifteen in number, we imported last year $1,616,688, as compared with 1895, when we imported $227,868, or an increase in these fifteen articles of $1,388,820. Now, I ask my hon. friend opposite: Should not the manufacturers of this country, should not the labouring men, the mechanics of this country, become alarmed when in one year we paid to the United States $1,616,000 for articles that could be manufactured just as good or better, and sold to the farmers of this country just as cheap as these were sold, at the same time employing our own workmen, our own Canadian boys and girls, in the manufacture of these articles? The farmers of this country would also be benefited in producing the lumber and other things required for the production of these articles, and the money we pay for them would go to support our own mechanics who would be busily employed in producing these goods cheaper and better than can be bought from the United States.

The member for South Huron spoke for some time on the preferential tariff, and he made this extraordinary statement, that he would not be in favour of asking England to put a preferential tariff on the products of Canada because that would be injurious to the workingmen of England. Now, Sir, I am as loyal to Canada and as loyal to England as the member for South Huron, or any other gentleman on that side of the House, but I am not that loyal to England that I am going to give a preferential tariff and allow English labour to compete with our Canadian labour on unfair terms, any more than I would allow labour in the United States or any other country to do so. The hon. gentleman has a great interest in the workingmen of England; I, and every Canadian, ought to have an interest in the workingmen of Canada, we should see that they are first protected, and after that take an interest in the workingmen of England. But, how does this preferential tariff work? Does the hon. gentleman understand the preferential tariff? I went tariff. Therefore, we are giving by this preferential tariff a privilege to the foreigner in every country in the world who wants to take advantage of it by establishing a large factory in England. Look at our cutlery to-day. Where is it brought from? All from England. But, it is made in Germany and Belgium, a great part of it, and sent to England in the raw state, there to be finished up and exported here under the preferential tariff. And are we going to allow Germany, China, Japan and Russia, and every other country, to come in here under that preferential tariff and compete with our Canadian boys and girls? I am prepared to admit the products of England in here if England will admit our products; if they will give us a preference for the goods we sell them, we will give them a preference. If not, then we will put their labour on a par with the labour of any other country, and protect our own Canadian labour.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Will you allow me to ask you a question—if the hon. gentleman has no objection?

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, I have an objection, I want to make a speech, and you will have an opportunity of making yours. If I am not making my statement clear enough for the hon. gentleman's comprehension, I am willing to make it clearer, but otherwise I do not wish to be interrupted. Now, these hon. gentlemen put barbed wire on the free list. In 1895, we imported $17,682 worth of barbed wire; last year we imported $316,286 worth. But, have the farmers of this country got barbed wire cheaper? The Canadian industries are all closed, men who worked in the barbed wire factories of this country are driven over to the American side to work, to make barbed wire in the factories there that is sent over here; and our people paid $300,000 more to the United States last year for barbed wire than was paid in 1895.

I think the farmers of this country will ask my hon. friend from South Huron, and will ask this government, a few plain, practical questions. The hon. member for South Huron says this government have fulfilled all their promises, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) says the same thing; all who spoke on that side say: We have redeemed all our pledges except the abolition of the Senate, and Providence will take care of the Senate. Sir, the farmers of this country, as I stated at the outset, are an honest and truthful people, and they will demand of this government the fulfilment of certain pledges they made to the people when seeking their suffrages. They will ask the government questions like this: Did you not promise when you were appealing for our suffrages that you would reduce taxation? That is one of the questions the farmers will ask, that they have a right to ask; and what is the answer that must be made? Taxation has been increased by $7,000,000. They promised to reduce it. The farmers will ask: Have you done so?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman says, yes. Well, he is not representing the farmers of this country. He says taxation is lower than it was, whereas the blue-book issued by the Minister of Customs shows that it has been increased by $7,000,000. They promised to reduce the debt. Have you done so? They have increased it by $7,700,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You increased the debt by $6,500,000 a year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Two blacks do not make a white. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the Minister of Justice, and several other ministers, are on record as promising to reduce the expenditure. I will not read their statements, because every farmer in the country is already acquainted with them. They promised to reduce the expenditure by from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 a year. Have they done so? No, the answer must be, we have increased it by $10,000,000.

Mr. DAVIN. $12,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, I am keeping within the mark, I am making a statement that no hon. gentleman opposite can truthfully contradict. They promised to cheapen the necessary articles of life to the farmers and the workingmen. They promised to abolish the tax on coal oil. They did not do it, and the farmers have a right to ask them why they have not done so. They say: We pay, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 10 cents a gallon more than we did under the Tory administration. You promised to reduce the price; have you done it? The former hon. member for Lambton, now Judge Lister, standing in his place in parliament, predicted that if the government did a certain thing a certain result would follow. What would the result be? I have stated before that there was a consideration from the Standard Oil Company, that the government accepted that consideration and gave them the legislation which Judge Lister said, if they did give, it would produce the effect it has produced to-day. The Standard Oil Company came and got control of the Canadian market. They are leeching the farmers as the binder twine monopoly are leeching the farmers. These hon. gentlemen, I repeat, made a pledge to the people that they would reduce the price of coal oil. Have they done it? No, they have to stand by the combine. They furnished the money to carry the elections, and they are pledged to them. They promised to reduce the price of barbed wire. Every farmer who has a fence to build knows that they have not reduced the price of barbed wire, but that he has to pay double price. They promised to reduce the price of binder twine. Every farmer knows whether he has been called upon to pay more or less. They promised to give the people cheap tobacco. Have they done so? No, they have shortened the plug an inch for the same price, and made it thinner besides. Sugar is a necessary of life as well as an article of luxury to every poor man, to every farmer and to every workingman. Have they reduced the price of sugar? No, they have increased the price. How are these farmers going to mark their ballots when they get a chance? Are they going to say that they are going to keep in office a set of men who make pledges and fail to carry them out when they get in power. The hon. member for South Huron said something about the civil service. However, he did not refer to superannuation. I hope that, before this debate is over some hon. member will refer to the number who have been superannuated by the present government to make positions for party hacks. A man cannot walk down the street without almost stumbling over young men in the prime of life who have been superannuated to make room for some party heelers who wanted their places.

Mr. DAVIN. It now amounts to nearly $100,000 a year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Of an increase.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Another plank in the platform of hon. gentlemen opposite was not to give any office to a poor unfortunate who had been a member of parliament until he was two years out. What have they done?

Mr. DAVIN. Fifteen of them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Some fifteen members have been taken out of this House, some sent to the Senate, and some to government offices, and the country has been put to an expense of between $4,000 and $5,000 in each case to hold a new election. I had not intended five or ten minutes before I spoke to take any part in the debate, but the hon. member for South Huron made some personal references to myself, and I felt it my duty to my constituents, to the great honest body of farmers in my county, whom I have the honour to represent, that their views should be fairly and honestly put before the House. I ask the government, now, the next day after Black Rod strikes the door, to dissolve the House, and to give the farmers of the country an opportunity to mark their ballots, and they will see how many honest men there are amongst the farmers of the country. They will find that those who are now on this side of the House will take their seats on the other side and on this side also because there will not be enough room on the other side to hold them all, and they will occupy three parts of this Chamber because the workingmen, the manufacturers and the farmers of this country are all honest, truthful and law-abiding citizens and they do not want to put into power a body of men who will pledge themselves to do certain things, and who, the moment they get in power, will turn around and do the very contrary. I have a letter I received this morning stating that a lot of farmers in a certain section of the country, almost all of whom had voted to put this government in power, are anxious for an opportunity to turn this government out. Therefore, I say that when next Black Rod strikes the door and ushers the members of this House into the Senate Chamber for prorogation, if it is followed the next day by a dissolution of the House, the people will have an opportunity of putting this government where they belong—in the cold shades of opposition.

Mr. WILLIAM S. CALVERT (West Middlesex). Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I feel somewhat backward in following the Whip of the Conservative party, who is an old parliamentarian of great experience. Consequently, I know my hon. friend will not feel that I am doing him any injustice if I may be unable to follow him through the speech he has made. I am sorry that I did not have the opportunity of listening to the forepart of his speech. I am somewhat amused at the great change that has taken place in my Conservative friend and in the Conservative party. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has given Providence as well as the Conservative party great credit for the prosperity of the present time. I remember very well when the hon. gentleman and our Conservative friends gave Providence no credit whatever for the prosperity of this country. Now, that times have changed and that Canada has become prosperous, of course, the Liberal party should not receive any credit for it, but it should be ascribed to Providence and to the Conservative party. Our Conservative friends have stated in the press and elsewhere, time and time again, that in the event of the Liberal party securing control of the Treasury benches the onward march of civilization and progress would come to an end, especially that the manufacturing industries would be completely annihilated and that grass would be growing in the streets because of the depression and the stagnation in trade in consequence of the return of the Liberals to power. I do not pretend to say that the great prosperity of the present time, the immense expansion of trade, the very large decrease in the number of failures and the amount of capital involved are entirely due to the Liberal party, but, I do say that, in 1878, when a depression existed, not only in Canada, but throughout the world, and when, in due time, trade revived, crops were good and prices fair, our Conservative friends claimed they did it. I do not see any reason why, if the Conservative party claimed credit for the improvement in the times after the defeat of the Mackenzie government the Liberal party should not receive a certain amount of credit for the improvement and prosperity at the present time. Our Conservative friends claimed in 1878 that if they were returned to power the exodus of the great number of people going from Canada would be stopped, but for eighteen long years the Conservative party ruled the destinies of this young country, and up to within two or three years ago we had, I regret to say, a departure from our shores of thousands of our best Canadians. We had not only, a depression and hard times, but sectarian strife caused by the mismanagement of the party in power which threatened to shake confederation to its foundation. But, within six months of the advent to power of the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his government the sunny ways of conciliation, advocated while in opposition, and carried out while in control of the Treasury benches, have had the effect that all classes and creeds in Canada feel that a new era has dawned upon this young country. Not only have the Liberal party carried out their pledges to the country on this very important question, but they have carried out their pledges to the country in reference to nearly all questions which were before the country. We promised to stop the deficit and we have done so; we promised to wipe out the franchise law, which cost the people of the country every time we had a revision of the lists, about half a million dollars, and we have done so. We promised to return to a revenue tariff with due regard to the interests of the country and we have done so. We promised to give freer trade between Great Britain and Canada, and we have done so. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if the Liberal party did nothing more than to inaugurate this preferential tariff, they are worthy the confidence of the Canadian people for many years to come. By that act, the government of Canada have turned the eyes of not only Great Britain, but the eyes of the whole world in the direction of this young country, by that act of his government, Sir Wilfrid Laurier was enabled to obtain the consent of the Imperial government to the abolition of a treaty made some thirty years ago; a treaty that, no doubt, was in the interest of Canada at the time, but a treaty that had outgrown its usefulness. This was something which our Conservative friends tried to do for years, but without success. Then, Sir, we are placed in the proud position to-day that we can regulate our own tariff in the interests of the Canadian people.

We must admit, Mr. Speaker, that it is impossible to reduce the expenditure as much as some of us might wish. However, we must remember that we have a young country, vast in extent, great in mines, with immense forests, magnificent waterways, and millions of acres of virgin soil undeveloped. It is the imperative duty of the government of such a country to open up the waterways and the highways of transportation so that the products of the farm, and the products of the forest, and the products of the mines, may reach the markets of the world as cheaply and as rapidly as possible. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), spoke of the increased expenditure. Well, I was born in the county of Lambton, where that good old statesman, the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, was our representative, and although very young at the time, I remember that I had the honour of going from meeting to meeting with him, and I remember that the Conservatives then stated that the expenditure in connection with our public affairs was too great, and that if they were returned to power, they would reduce it from $23,000,000 to $21,000,000. But, Sir, what followed when they did obtain power? From the very day that the Conservatives began to control the Treasury benches up to the time they were defeated in 1896, they have continued to increase the expenditure of the Dominion. The Liberals do not say that all the increase of expenditure under Conservative rule was wrong, but we do say that if the expenditure made by the present government is in the interests of the Canadian people as a whole, then no one has a right to cavil at it. That this expenditure is in the interests of the people, has been proved to a demonstration, and I might point out that last year when we were voting the estimates, the Conservative party in this House never challenged a vote on an item, or, if they did challenge a vote, it was on a very rare occasion. Ever since confederation, we have had an expenditure that exceeded the receipts with the exception of two years. In 1871 there was a surplus of receipts over expenditure of $81,558.56, and in 1882, eleven years later, we had a surplus of $507,923.82. Now, Mr. Speaker, since confederation, these are the only two years that there has been a surplus of receipts over expenditure. In 1868 the expenditure over receipts was $28,493.37. In 1873, under the Conservative government, the expenditure over the receipts was $17,661,389.60. In 1884, under a Conservative government, we had an expenditure of $23,695,135.80 more than the receipts. In 1885, we had an expenditure of $14,245,841.88 over receipts. In 1886, we had an expenditure of $26,751,414.95 over receipts. In 1894, we had an expenditure of $4,501,989.87 over receipts. In 1895, we had an expenditure of $6,891,897.61 over receipts, and in 1896, we had an expenditure of $5,422,505.68 over receipts. How is it under the Liberal government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier? In 1897, we find that we had an expenditure over receipts of only $3,041,163.69. In 1898, we had expenditure over receipts of only $2,417,802.45, and in 1899, we had an expenditure over receipts of only $2,317,047.69. Under the Conservative government, the average for the 18 years, from 1879 to 1896, was $6,665,000 of expenditure over receipts, while in the three years under the Liberal government, the expenditure over receipts was only $2,592,000. It will, therefore, be seen that the expenditure by the Conservative government, over the receipts, was about three times as much as that of the Liberal government, and during the last three years of the Conservative government, namely, 1894, 1895, 1896, the average expenditure over receipts was $5,605,464. My hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague), found fault with the expenditure made by the Liberal government. He told us that in 1896 we had an expenditure of $36,969,000, while in 1899, we had an expenditure of $41,900,000, or an increase of somewhat over $4,000,000. But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) did not attempt to say, and did not say, where that additional expenditure by the Liberal government came in. He forgot to tell us, that out of that additional expenditure of $4,000,000, they had $1,674,000 expended in connection with the Yukon territory, every dollar of which came back into the treasury of this country. Then, we had a large expenditure in connection with the extension of the Intercolonial Railway, and I am sure that every one will say that that expenditure was a wise one. Then again, the Liberal government had a large expenditure in connection with the militia, as compared with the expenditure on that branch of the service by the Conservatives. Under the Conservative government the militia had gone into almost decay, and so when this government came into power, it had to make a larger expenditure, and we claim that every dollar of it has been expended wisely. I am quite sure that when we return to the people of Canada, and these statements are placed before them, the people will say that the Liberal government have done well. Now, Sir, what has been the policy of the Liberal government in connection with the Yukon? The policy of the Liberal government has been to make the Yukon pay its own way. Why should the Canadian people send policemen and militia into that country to enforce law and order, so that life and property are as safe in the city of Dawson as they are in the city of Ottawa, and why should the Canadian people pay for that service, and then give away their heritage? The revenue received from the Yukon for three years has been as follows:

Revenue.
Interior—
1896-7	$ 8,593 00
1897-8	735,485 09
1898-9	1,261,816 30
	$2,005,894 39
Post Office—
1897	$ 50 00
1898	2,083 50
1899	9,461 28
	11,594 78
Customs—
1897	$ 9,873 24
1898	63,185 39
1899	482,098 55
	555,157 18
Total revenue, three years.. $2,572,646 35

For the three years the revenue from the Yukon from all sources amounted to $2,572,646.35. Let me point out how that money was expended.

Expenditure.
1897-8-9—
Interior	$ 276,551 36
Post office	22,033 72
Customs	36,109 75
Public works.....	82,619 32
Railways and canals.....	60,948 92
Justice	13,580 95
Mounted police	1,392,757 56
Militia	487,739 16
	$2,372,340 74

The total expenditure in connection with the Yukon for three years has been $2,372,340.74, and out of that sum $1,894,077 has been in connection with the Department of Justice, the police and the militia. Now, Sir, after paying all that expenditure for the three years, we have had a surplus from the receipts of the Yukon, amounting to $200,305.61.

Mr. DAVIN. About one-tenth of what you ought to have had.

Mr. CALVERT. Had we carried out the policy pursued by the Conservative government and advocated by my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) we would not have that $200,000, but we would have been taking it out of the treasury of this country, and making the people pay the cost of keeping up the militia and the mounted police force. The policy of the Conservative party has been to give away that great territory to aliens, who form 90 per cent of its population to-day, and then to take money out of the pockets of the Canadian people in order to protect those aliens. But, under the wise policy pursued by the present government, we have a surplus instead of a deficit, as we would certainly have had if the Conservative policy had been continued.

Now, I wish to say a few words in regard to the speech of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague). I am sorry he is not in his seat to-night. I have a very high regard for Dr. Montague. He is an old Middlesex boy, born in the county I have the honour to represent, and the people of that county have a very high regard for him. But I think he was very much in error in his speech the other day. In replying to the statement of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) in reference to the exportation of animals and their products and agricultural products, the hon. member for Haldimand stated:

He gave another table in regard to the exportation of animals and their products. In 1895-6 the exports from Canada to Great Britain of animals and their products amounted to $42,074,384 and in 1898-9 to $62,000,000. The hon. gentleman, in making, his subtraction was in error, or the reporter, in taking down his figures, may have made an error. The difference appears in 'Hansard' as $17,000,000, but there is $21,000,000 of an increase, or about 40 per cent from 1895-6 to 1898-9.

The hon. member for Haldimand made a very important oversight or mistake in this quotation. He gave the exports of animals and their products, whereas the Minister of Customs gave the exports of animals and their produce and agricultural products. The difference is very great, for we find that the figures quoted by the hon. member for Haldimand were $24,068,008 in 1892 and $32,523,071 in 1896; but when you add to these figures the exports of agricultural products you find that the exports of animals and their products and agricultural products was $39,187,861 in 1892 and $42,074,387 in 1896, as stated by the Minister of Customs, a difference of only $2,886,526, or only 7 per cent instead of 33½ per cent, as stated by the hon. member for Haldimand.

Then, the hon. member for Haldimand spoke of the quarantine regulations. I am sorry I had not the pleasure of listening to the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who, in all probability, dealt with this very question. But representing a great agricultural constituency and knowing the farmers as I do, I feel that this is one of the most important questions which the farmers of this country have had before them for a long time. The hon. member for Haldimand, in his speech the other day, said:

I would like the hon. Minister of Agriculture to look at the export of Canadian cattle to Great Britain, and I would like him to look at it for the year 1878, when we shipped a total of live cattle to Great Britain of 7,433 head, of a value of $686,700. The present hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) took up the question of getting Canadian cattle exceptional treatment in the markets of Great Britain. He secured the advantage that we had for a long time of our cattle going into the British market without embargo, and in 1891, the export of Canadian cattle was not 7,433 head, but it was 107,689 head, of a value of $8,425,396. The embargo was then put on, and it was from no fault of ours that that embargo was not removed.

The hon. member says that it was from no fault of his or the Conservative party that that embargo was not removed; but he does not say that it was from no fault of theirs that that embargo was put on. The hon. member for Haldimand, in replying to what was said by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) also states:

He says: You now have a market of $3,000,000 in the United States of America, whereas Dr. Montague tried for three years to remove these quarantine regulations and failed. I was only in the Department of Agriculture for six months. I must have been interfering with some one else's duties, but, the hon. gentleman is quite wide of the mark, because nobody ever tried to secure the removal of these quarantine regulations against us in the United States of America. Why were these quarantine regulations placed against us in the United States? They were placed against us because we had a ninety days quarantine against them. We were the aggressors, and why? Because, to hold our free entry into the markets of Great Britain, to secure that market without an embargo being placed against us, we made a solemn compact with Great Britain that we would keep a ninety days quarantine against American cattle. We could have got the quarantine removed at any single moment we liked, but we did not attempt to get it removed, and we did not attempt to get it removed, because we were anxious to keep the compact that secured us a still greater market, the market of Great Britain, which we had the right to enter upon terms which we had obtained some years before.

Now, the hon. gentleman states that they never attempted to get the quarantine removed. We find that in 1890 a heavy duty was placed against us by the McKinley Bill, so that cattle from Canada could not enter the United States market. Then, the Conservative government, in order to retain the right to send our cattle into Great Britain, arranged with the British government that they would protect the borders of Canada from diseased American cattle coming in, and the British government permitted Canadian cattle to go into the British market on that condition. What was the result? The Canadian government had agreed that cattle coming to Canada by Windsor should be inspected by a competent veterinary surgeon, and also agreed to send a government official with each train load of cattle passing through Canada from Windsor to Buffalo so that American cattle should not come in contact with Canadian cattle. But instead of sending a government official, blank forms were handed to the conductor of the railway to fill out so the railway official was a government official to watch himself, and, as a matter of fact, the regulations were relaxed and cattle were allowed to come through at night and to be inspected by a lantern, which was not a proper inspection. Train-load after train-load of cattle from the United States passed through Canada against the agreement entered into with the British government. The British government called the attention of the Canadian government to the abuse of the agreement, and to the fact that instead of enforcing the quarantine of ninety days, they had allowed no less than 49,000 cattle to come into Manitoba from the diseased district of the United States, and to be shipped to the British market. This was what caused the British government to place the embargo on Canadian cattle. What was the result? The then Deputy Minister of Agriculture, in his report, says that the consequence of our cattle not being permitted to be sent alive to the British market as formerly, but having to be slaughtered instead, was a loss of a penny a pound to the farmers of this country. It meant from $25 to $30 per head of loss to our people. That happened in 1892, and then in 1893 the United States placed their quarantine regulations on our cattle, so that our farmers had no market except the small cities of the Dominion, which were not numerous or populous enough to provide an outlet for the supply. Consequently the cattle market became glutted, and yet for four years from 1892, this Conservative government, as stated by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), never put a hand to the pen in order to assist our farmers. If we have cattle to export, we can send them to the British market with advantage, but there is a large proportion which we cannot send to that market, and which must find a market either in this country or in the United States. With both the English and the American market closed to them for a very considerable proportion of the stock, our farmers were in a sad way, but when this government took office, instead of laying on their oars and letting things drift, instead of waiting for the British government to remove the embargo, our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and the Ontario Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Dryden), went to Uncle Sam, and in a day or two came back with an agreement between the two countries for the removal of the quarantine. Just see what followed. The quarantine was removed in February, 1897. In 1894 we shipped to the United States only 255 animals; in 1897, nine months after the removal of the quarantine, we shipped 78,856; and in twenty-one months after its removal, we shipped 146,462 animals to that country. Two years after the abolition of the quarantine, we sent 180,849 animals to the United States, and I understand that last year we sent considerably over 200,000, realizing over $3,000,000. Every farmer understands what that means. I happen to be dealing in that line myself, and know something about it. It raised the price of our young cattle $5 to $7 per head, and not only every farmer, but every citizen in this country felt the benefit. There is another thing which makes it very important that we should have an entry into the United States market. We know that the increase in population in the United States has been very great, but what has been the result as regards animals? According to the returns from 1892 to 1897, which are the only ones I have, while the population increased during that time ten million souls, the number of horses had decreased from 15,496,140 in 1892, to 14,161,667 in 1897, or a decrease of 1,333,473. In cattle, the number in 1892 was 54,067,590, and in 1897 that had fallen to 46,450,135, a decrease in five years of 7,617,455. The number of sheep decreased by 8,000,000, and of swine by nearly 12,000,000, so that while the population increased in the United States very largely, there was a considerable falling off in the number of horses, cattle, sheep and swine. That shows certainly that the United States market is a very valuable one for the farmers of this country, and I think that our Minister of Agriculture and the Ontario minister are deserving of great credit for having removed the quarantine between the two countries.

I have just a few words more to say before closing. The expenditure in connection with the Intercolonial Railway has in my opinion been very judicious. Just fancy a company owning a railway that cost a very large amount of money, starting away down by the sea and ending at the little village of Lévis opposite the city of Quebec, with the River St. Lawrence running between. It seems to me that no reasonable man or corporation would fail to use every endeavour to extend that line to a terminus which could furnish its greatest business. The Canadian people had spent some $70,000,000 on that road, and how under the sun the Conservative party could have allowed it to remain so many years ending where it did, I fail to understand. With its terminus at Lévis, it was not a competing line with the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway; but the moment it came into the great metropolis of Montreal, it became a competing line to the other great international highways, and the result was that instead of having a deficit of half a million or three-quarters of a million dollars annually, we have a surplus, according to the last returns, of some $62,000.

In connection with the Post Office administration, I have heard it stated time and again that the farmers of this country do not thank the Postmaster General for the reduction in postage from three to two cents. Those who say so, misrepresent the farmers. Our farmers are only too pleased, when we can so run the affairs of the country as to give the people actually better service than they enjoyed before, and do it at two-thirds of the price. We have not reduced the number of post offices or of registry offices or of mails, but on the contrary have increased them. In 1896 we had 9,011 post offices in the Dominion; in 1900 we have 9,570, or an increase of 559. In 1896 we had a mileage of 30,551,883, and in 1900 that has been increased to 33,132,601, or an increase of 2,580,918 miles. Then instead of having the large deficit of $680,000 which existed under our predecessors, and which our Postmaster General found confronting him when he took hold of the department in 1896, that deficit has been reduced to some $46,000 at the same time that the rate was reduced from three to two cents, and we are led to understand by the Postmaster General that the deficit will not be more than one-half this year what it was in 1896, and in another year it will be wiped out entirely. Surely that is very satisfactory. Surely it must be satisfactory to everybody to know that by careful management our Postmaster General has been able to reduce the deficit and at the same time reduce the rate of postage. I remember something being said in connection with the motto on the postage stamp. Let me repeat a few lines from the poem written by Sir Edward Morris, entitled the 'Song of Empire,' from which is taken the emblem on our postage stamp, and which I think very appropriate on the present occasion:

We love not war but only peace,
Yet never shall our England's power decrease.
Whoever guides the helm of State,
Let all men know it, England shall be great;
We hold a vaster empire than has been.

Mr. Speaker, if I were able to write a poem like that, I think I would make a slight change, and make it read:

We love not war but only peace,
Yet never shall our Britain's power decrease.
Whoever guides the helm of State,
Let all men know it, Britain shall be great;
We hold a vaster empire than has been.

My hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) found fault the other night with the government for not having sent the contingent a little sooner. It strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman was sadly at a loss for something to criticise when he resorted to this criticism. Surely the question was a very important one. It was the first time that Canada had ever considered the advisability of taking part in a British war. Never before had Canada taken similar action, and I think that the right hon. the First Minister and his government would have been very unwise indeed to have rushed into this matter without due consideration. The Prime Minister had not been instructed by parliament, as he informed us, to send that contingent. I think he would have been a very unwise man indeed if he had undertaken to send such a contingent without calling parliament, or at least knowing that parliament would back him up in doing it, without knowing that the Canadian people were in favour of such a course. But, the moment the Prime Minister and his government discovered that this was the wish of the Canadian people—and we, the people, are the guide, we, the people, are the government after all—the moment they discovered the Canadian people were in favour of sending our brave boys to assist in the battlefield, that moment the government acted. How much sooner could we have expected them to act than they did? On the 12th of October last President Kruger declared war, and within eighteen days after war was proclaimed, on the 30th of October, the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), with splendid ability, and ably assisted by his efficient staff, had over a thousand Canadian boys on the briny deep on the way to South Africa. Surely that was prompt enough. And since our boys reached South Africa, they have done honour to Canada. That greatest of generals, Lord Roberts, has placed them in very important positions, gave them, in fact, the place of honour when the British force stood face to face with that of Cronje. And they proved themselves worthy of the distinction that was conferred upon them. Let me add a word or two on this subject, seeing that I did not take part in the debate when the subject of the contingent was under discussion.

Sir, in my humble opinion, there are no better or braver soldiers in the world than the Canadian soldiers. We are descendants of that old British and French stock, our boys possess all the courage and daring of our forefathers, with this difference, that our soldiers are largely educated men and can use their best judgment to advantage, while Tommy Atkins has bravery but not, as a rule, the intelligence of the Canadian soldier, which counts for much in a war of this century. Our Canadian soldiers showed their pluck when they left their firesides to drive the invaders of 1865 from our shores. They showed their courage and self-reliance when from hundreds of happy homes they went forth, not to wage war on their fellow-citizens, not to stain the grass of the prairies with the blood of our Indian fellow-subjects, but to maintain the integrity of the Canadian government. Have they not shown courage and bravery on the field of battle in South Africa, not merely in defence of their homes—for Canada's shores are not invaded by a foreign foe—but we find English, Irish, Scotch, and French Canadian compatriots standing side by side shedding their life's blood in defence of the British flag and British supremacy.

Sir, in passing the city of Quebec, the other day, my mind reverted to the time when General Wolfe and his brave soldiers with muffled oars glided gently down the river St. Lawrence, scaled the banks of the majestic river and formed themselves in battle array on the Plains of Abraham to meet equally brave soldiers in command of General Montcalm, and although Wolfe and his British soldiers were successful and Canada passed from under the French flag to that of the British, yet we must remember that the French soldiers had defended their homes with bravery and most successfully for many years; and from my observations although the French Canadian entertains a warm feeling for his mother country—and to which I do not think any reasonable man will object, for while I love the British Empire, I have a much warmer feeling for that part of the empire from whence came my father and mother—yet, from the great freedom enjoyed under British rule and British institutions, I am firmly of the opinion that the French Canadians are as true and as loyal as any other portion of Her Majesty's subjects, and if ever occasion required it, even should it be against France herself, I believe the French Canadian will be found to fight as valiantly in defence of his home and the British flag as he fought 140 years ago in defence of his home and the flag of his mother country.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that no person could find a great deal of fault with the moderate way in which the last speaker has addressed the House. It is true that he has made a good many statements with which I do not agree. But, that is to be expected. One thing that I have noticed in this debate particularly, and that was that the speakers on the government side of the House, as a rule, have neither attempted to give instances to show that the government have fulfilled their pledges nor have they tried to justify their extravagance. It is true that my hon. friend (Mr. Calvert) who has just sat down made some remarks about the surpluses and said they were much greater than the surpluses of their predecessors. But, he did not make reference to the general expenditure or speak of how much money they had spent. He made allusion to the predictions made by members of the Conservative party that the present government would destroy the manufactures if they got into power. All I can say on that subject is what has already been said on the floor of the House—that the Conservative party believed that these gentlemen were honest and would do as they said, that they would give us free trade as they have it in England, that they would destroy protection—as the Prime Minister said, would cut off its head and trample on its body. These were the statements made by the Liberal party all over the country previous to the elections of 1896. But, if they had told the people that they would increase the expenditure and that they would increase the public debt, is there any hon. gentleman on the floor of this House who believes that they would have been returned to power? I do not believe that there is one. The hon. gentleman says that the Liberal party have carried out their pledges fairly well. I will deal with that as I go along and show many occasions where they have failed to carry out their pledges. He says they have produced a revenue tariff, that is, I suppose, they have destroyed the protection that was in the tariff as left to them by the Conservative party. But, how have they destroyed protection? In some instances, cottons that were 22½ per cent they increased to 25 per cent, some that were 25 per cent they increased to 30 per cent, and some that were 30 per cent they increased to 35 per cent. That is the way they have given us a revenue tariff, that is the way they have destroyed protection, that is the way they would say they have given us free trade as it is in England. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat if the leader of his party did not promise to reduce the annual expenditure should he be returned to power? I should like to ask him if the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) did not tell the electors in his own riding that if within three years they did not reduce the expenditure to $35,000,000, and did not get reciprocity with the United States, the electors ought to put them out. And I believe that the people will take his advice, that the very first chance they get they will put these gentlemen out, and, I think, justly. If they do not do so, I must say I shall lose a good deal of the confidence I have now in the honesty of the people—and I have great faith in their honesty when they are fairly appealed to. It was because the great body of the people felt that the Conservative party had been too extravagant, together with the school question, I think, that caused that party to be defeated in 1896. Hon. gentlemen opposite at that time said they could govern the country for three or four millions less, and some even went so far as to say they could govern it for six millions less. And the people believed them and gave them their votes. My hon. friend (Mr. Calvert) says that the Conservative policy was to give away the lands in the Yukon. I simply deny that. I simply say that the Conservative party refused to vote for the building of the Teslin Lake Railway for which Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann had the contract given to them a few days before parliament met, without any justification. That Act would have been carried, had not the Senate thrown out the Bill, by which hon. gentlemen would have given Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann 3,750,000 acres of the best gold bearing land in that territory. This present government has passed an order in council since that contract was thrown out, refusing to sell more than 40 acres of that land to any one person in one place, and the minimum price was to be $10 an acre.

Mr. WILSON.

Well, if that contract had become law, according to their own valuation of the land, it would have meant no less a sum than $37,500,000 to this country. I think that the Senate, for throwing that Bill out, deserves the thanks of the people of Canada for all time.

This hon. gentleman who spoke, seems to think that trade with the United States is what we need and must have. In that regard he differs entirely from his leader, for his leader says that in his judgment, the people of this country do not desire reciprocity with the United States at the present time. Then he made a great boast about the Intercolonial Railway; he thought the management of the present minister was something grand, and the results had been great. I think if the hon. gentleman had referred to the debate of last session, and the preceding session, he would easily have seen how this surplus was obtained. In the first place, they have changed their mode of bookkeeping, and they are charging today, lots of things to capital account, that the late government used to charge to consolidated account, and the result is that they can easily have a surplus. The construction of bridges and the renewal of rolling stock are now charged to capital account, instead of current expenses; as a matter of course that accounts for all they have in the way of surpluses.

Then he thinks the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), has done marvels out in the Yukon, by the way he is conducting affairs. It has been shown in this House, that the Postmaster General has utilized the mounted police in that country, and has allowed the expense to be charged to other departments, while taking credit to himself for the reduced expenditure. I say that is not fair. If that service was performed for the Post Office Department, it ought to have been charged to the Post Office Department. An hon. friend near me suggests that it was not necessary to send so many men up there, unless the Postmaster General wished to utilize them for postal purposes.

Then, the hon. gentleman refers to the sending of the contingents, and he thinks this government deserves a great deal of credit for the way they have acted in that matter. Such language does seem astonishing in the mouths of hon. gentlemen who have read what the Prime Minister said to the Globe reporter on the 5th of October, when he said that having carefully examined the Militia Act, he was of the opinion that the government could not send any troops unless parliament was called to sanction it. Strange to say, public opinion was so strong that he had to yield, and he practically admitted, in the patriotic speech that he made here a few nights ago, that that was the reason; he either had to yield and send a contingent, or he had to leave office; and there is nothing a Liberal hates to do more than to leave office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to come more particularly to the remarks I intended to make. We have been in session now for about two and a half months, and I suppose some hon. members will be surprised to know that there are over twenty departmental reports yet to be laid on the Table. I would ask the government how they expect the business of this country to be intelligently done if we are not furnished with the information contained in these reports? How can we discuss the business done by the different departments, unless we have the information before us? I think it is the first duty of the government to have the business of parliament ready before they call the House together. In a few remarks that I made the other night, I stated my opinion, that if business was ready when parliament was called, we ought to be able to get through with the session in three months. I believe that still. But during this session we have seen the Postmaster General introducing a gerrymander Bill that had been defeated last year, knowing that it would be defeated again this year, because there was a stronger reason for the Senate to throw it out this year than last. Then we find him moving a buncombe resolution about labour, not to be backed up by an Act of parliament, showing it was pure buncombe. Then they have, it would appear, serious doubts as to whether they were right with reference to their preferential policy with England, and they put up one of their own followers to move a vote of confidence, as it were, in themselves, to ascertain the feeling of the House as to whether they had done right in giving a 25 per cent preference to Great Britain. I look on all these things as a pure waste of time. I think they ought not to have been introduced, and would not have been introduced if the government had been ready to go on with the business, as they should have been. Now, what has been done this session? How many government Bills have been passed through, and how many private Bills? Very few, just enough to show that they have done a little business. We had such a scene in the Public Accounts Committee the other day, as I have never witnessed since I have been in this House. It is the first time that I ever saw the opposition take charge of a committee, appoint its own chairman and do the business. We had only one minister at that meeting, and he a gentleman without portfolio in the government, and who knew very little about the business. The same laxity appears to govern in that committee as governs here. The people that had been notified, or were to have been notified, either had not been notified to attend the meeting, or else paid no attention to the notice. I think that sort of thing is simply disgraceful, and ought not to be tolerated by this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). We are quite willing that you should run the whole show.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, but you take very good care to make it ineffective, either by not sending out the notices, or not compelling people who are notified to appear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman knows the government has nothing to do with that. The government cannot interfere with a department. If we do not attend the Public Accounts Committee, it is because we have nothing to conceal.

Mr. WILSON. I notice as a rule, they are very anxious to conceal things, and that when there is anything of importance coming up, there are three or four ministers present, and they are very particular about letting things go through. Last year they were very anxious to investigate election frauds, they wanted nothing covered up in any way, they had nothing to hide. This year they have absolutely refused an investigation. And why? Is it because of some affidavits that have been made in the west, connecting certain gentlemen who have been in West Elgin with the Brockville and Huron elections? Are they afraid the Conservative party know too much this year? It looks like it, I am afraid there is something in it. But, I am sorry to see any government refuse the fullest investigation into any charges of corruption. I have referred before in this House, and I will refer again to the promise that was made by the right hon. leader of the government in the city of Montreal before the general elections of 1896 to give us free coal and free iron. An incident happened in reference to this, the like of which I do not think ever happened in this House before. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was not prepared to bring down his budget speech, or to announce the policy of the government, but the right hon. First Minister had announced that we were to have free coal and free iron. There was a provincial election going on in the province of Nova Scotia and it was a very vital point with the people of that province as to whether they were to have free coal or not. The Finance Minister stood up in his place and said: We are not going to take the duty off coal. This was to help his friends in Nova Scotia to carry the provincial elections.

Then, we were to have superannuations abolished, if these hon. gentlemen came to power. How have they abolished it? Let me read the income on superannuation account for the three years since they have been in power, as well as the amount that they have expended. In 1897 the income was $59,218; in 1898, it was $45,643; in 1899, it was $39,647, making a total of $144,508. They abolished superannuations in this way: In 1897, they paid out $307,792; in 1898, $340,185; in 1899, $325,560, making a total expenditure of $973,537, or they paid out of the moneys of this country over and above the amounts that had been paid into this fund, $829,029. I would like to know what the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has to say about that. When he occupied a seat just in front of me here, he used to spend hours upon hours discussing this question, and he shed a great many tears over the poor farmer who had to earn the money by the sweat of his brow to pay these enormous amounts to people for superannuation. Then, we hold a letter that the right hon. leader of the government wrote to Mr. Francois Langelier, promising him that if he was not appointed a judge before the vacancy in the lieutenant-governorship of Quebec occurred he would be appointed lieutenant-governor. I presume the reason that letter was written to Mr. Langelier was that he had been a strong supporter of the right hon. gentleman. He went so far as to mortgage his own house to raise election funds, and that house had to be sold to pay the notes that he was on. He had good reason to expect, that, when his party came into power, a man of his standing at the bar, of his standing in the party, and his standing in the province of Quebec, would be a minister of the Crown, but he was not taken into the government. This promise was made to him on the 8th of July, 1896, and the government was sworn into office, I believe, on the 13th of July. Mr. Langelier was in this House for two sessions recording the will of his masters, and the promise was not fulfilled to him until he made such an exposure as brought the province down upon the head of the First Minister. Then, I have another broken promise here. I have an extract from a speech made by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes) which I will read. He made a speech at a labour meeting at Nanaimo:

Speaking at a Labour Day celebration at Nanaimo the hon. gentleman severely criticised the Laurier government for the violation of its pledges to the people of the west. Pledges which had been made personally to him, by the premier were disregarded. He had done his best to have them carried out, he had, with others, warned the government, but to no avail.

There is a member of the Liberal party, and a member of this House, accusing the First Minister of violating his personal pledge to him as well as his pledges to the people generally. I think that almost every hon. member of this House will remember a certain telegram which was sent by a certain gentleman, who is now a senator, I believe, asking what the government would do, if Sir Wilfrid Laurier came into power, on the Chinese question. The answer, I think, was that as it was a burning question in the west, he would be guided by what his friends in the west wanted. I think that is what the right hon. gentleman said. I am sorry to see that members of the same party so widely disagree, and that the rank and file of this party are accusing the First Minister of openly violating his pledges.

There is another matter to which I would like to call the attention of the government. I have only had it on hearsay, and I do not wish to state it as a fact, but I think it is worth the notice of the government, and if what I have heard is true, the Act to which I propose to refer should be disallowed. It is reported that the province of Quebec has placed stumpage dues of $1.90 a cord on pulpwood, if exported from that province, whereas, if it is manufactured into pulp in the province the manufacturers get a rebate of $1.50. I have been informed that this applied to other provinces in the Dominion, as well as to the exportation of pulp wood out of the country. I do not know whether it is true or not, but if it is, I think it is the duty of the government to interfere and to disallow any Act of that kind. I am informed that it is a fact. It is an extraordinary thing that any government should allow an Act like that to stand on the statute-books of one province which enables one province to discriminate against a man living in another province. If a man lives in the province of Quebec he will be able to get his pulp wood by paying 40 cents a cord stumpage dues, while a man living in any other province will have to pay $1.90. I say that this is most unfair legislation, and that it is not going to do anything to build this country up as a nation. What we want to do is to see that we have a strong central government that will attend to matters appertaining to the duties devolving upon it and not interfere with provincial matters. I am opposed to interfering with provincial rights; I am strongly in favour of each government doing its own part, but in this case, I think it is high time for the government to interfere. Hon. gentlemen say that they have carried out their pledges to the people. I think if they had told the people they would carry them out the way they have carried them out, they would never have reached the Treasury benches. In 1896 the expenditure for all purposes under the Conservative government was $41,702,383. Hon. gentlemen will see that I deduct the $2,394,000 for the North Shore Railway which became a liability in 1892, and should have been charged up to that year and not to the year 1896. That was the expenditure under the Conservative rule. In 1899 the present government spent $51,542,635, or an increase of $9,840,000. That is the way they carried out their promise that they would reduce the expenditure by three or four millions; on the contrary, they have increased it by nearly $10,000,000. The revenue from all sources in 1896 was $36,618,590 and in 1899 it was $46,743,102, or an increase of $10,124,512. In 1896 the Conservative party taxed the people to the extent of $27,759,285, and in 1899, the Liberal party taxed the people to the extent of $34,958,069, or an increased taxation by the Liberals of $7,198,783. The increased tax per head of the population for 1899 over 1895 was $1.32, and for 1899 over 1896 was 90 cents per head. Notwithstanding the great increase in the income from all sources amounting to over $10,000,000, what did the Liberal party do with reference to the public debt? It was a vital plank in the platform of the Liberal party that they would reduce the debt when they came into power, but let us see what they did. In 1896 they found that the debt was $258,497,432, and in three years they increased that debt to $266,273,446, or an increase of $7,776,000. They made that enormous increase in the debt during the most prosperous times the country has ever had, as they say. I think I heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) say that during the three years the Liberals had been in power the country had advanced more than it had in the previous thirty years. Well, I do know my own section of the country pretty well, and especially my own town, and when I look around me, I cannot see, I regret to say, that great increase of prosperity. I think the statement of the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) was most extravagant in reference to this, as it is in regard to most other matters. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) said some strange things in his celebrated Toronto speech—celebrated because it went back on everything almost, which he ever said before. He tried to justify his statements in 1894, 1895 and 1896, about the extravagance of the Conservative party, and he tried to justify the Liberal increased expenditure of $10,000,000 and to give reasons for it. He told the people that the Conservatives left the Liberals pledged to an expenditure of $12,000,000 on canals, and $4,000,000 for railway bonuses for which no provision was made, and so he held that the Liberals were not responsible for that. But, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce made his speech in the House the other night he told us that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) had done as much in three years as the Conservative party would have done in six or seven years if they had been in office. I took the trouble to cut out a table which the Minister of Finance was good enough to insert in his budget speech and I thought I would examine to see how fast the Liberals had progressed with the canals. In the first place there was no necessity for the Liberal government making this expenditure if it was not necessary, because they had cancelled some of the contracts upon the canals, and I presume they might have cancelled the rest if they wished. However, they did not cancel them, but they went on with the expenditure. According to this table during the last three years of Conservative rule there was spent on capital account on the canals $7,732,216.81, and during the three years that the Liberals had been in office there has been spent on the same account for canals $9,455,764, or an increase of $1,717,548, being an average yearly increase of expenditure by the Liberal government on canals of $572,516. On canals, public works, Intercolonial railway and railway subsidies, the Conservative party spent during their last three years in office, $14,851,483, while the Liberals spent during their three years in power, $16,667,540, or an increase in the three years of $1,816,000. They claim that we left them this legacy. So far as the bonuses to railways are concerned, I think we can clear that up fairly well. In 1897, Sir Richard Cartwright moved the third reading of Bill No. 151, to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned, and he said:

The hon. gentleman wished to have certain information which I hold in my hand. The amount of subsidies which are re-votes wholly or in part, under the first resolution, $2,148,128, and under the second resolution, $16,000, making a total of $2,164,128. The amount of subsidies which are new votes under the first resolution, is $1,895,560, and under the second resolution $277,000, making a total of $2,172,561, or in all the sum of $4,336,000.

This shows that the Liberal government in 1897, renewed $2,176,128 of these subsidies, and in 1899, they renewed $1,617,200 of these subsidies, making in all $3,793,328 out of the $4,000,000 that Sir Richard Cartwright said we left them as a legacy, showing that there is very little over $200,000 of the total amount that can be charged to the late government. Not only that, but I have a clipping here from a letter that Sir Richard Cartwright wrote to the Patrons in 1894, in which he said:

The policy of the Liberal party is to grant no bonuses to railways.

I have seen the hon. gentleman in his seat in this House, when the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) asked him to explain that promise in connection with his performances, and the way he (Sir Richard Cartwright) explained it was to get up and walk out of the House. These hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches have kept their promises so badly that that is about the only way they can explain them.

Now, suppose we should look at the legacies that this Liberal government will leave their successors in office if they should go out of power at the next election, which every one hopes they will. Here are their legacies to their successors.

Railway bonuses, 1897.....	$4,053,000
Railway subsidies, 1899	6,540,000
Crow's Nest Pass Railway.....	3,630,000
Drummond County Railway....	1,600,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is all paid, there is no legacy there.

Mr. WILSON. Well, later on we will deduct from this anything that you say is paid. We do not want to charge you with anything more than you are guilty of, because we think your real sins are sufficient for you to bear. Let me continue to give the rest of this legacy which the Liberals will leave after them when they go out of power.

Grand Trunk rental for 99 years.....	$13,860,000
Pacific cable, Canada share.....	2,361,000

Total..... $32,644,941

I think I heard the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) say 'hear, hear' when I spoke about the Grand Trunk Railway lease. Does he mean to say that we are not bound by the Act of this parliament to pay that $13,000,000? It does seem to me that that is just as legitimate a claim on the people of this country as these bonuses to railways if the conditions are complied with. I will deduct, if the Minister of Finance likes, what he says is paid from these sums. I do not wish to charge him with anything that he is not guilty of. Out of this $32,644,944 there is at least $25,000,000 which is not paid, but which they leave as a legacy to their successors. Then, Sir, if the Senate had not stepped in and interfered with the Yukon railway contract, 3,750,000 acres of the best gold lands of the Yukon which the government themselves, by an order in council, valued at $10 an acre, would have been given to those men for a worthless railway. They do not deny it or attempt to deny it; if they do, I will undertake to prove it. These hon. gentlemen have been profuse with promises. Sir Richard Cartwright, in his speech in Toronto found fault with the extravagance of his predecessors, and said that times had been so hard and the people so poor that they had not been able to pay the amounts levied upon them. I think I can prove by quotations from his own statements that that is not true, and that it was not his own view at the time. I think men ought to be honest and straightforward, and should not advocate any measures when in opposition which they are not prepared to carry out when they get into power. That is the view I take of the matter, and I tell my leaders now that if they want my support, that is the view they must adopt. I do not want them to move buncombe resolutions to catch votes, without intending to carry them out when they get into office. That is the fault I find with hon. gentlemen now on the Treasury benches. They made loads of promises, but they have not attempted to carry them out. Speaking in the House of Commons in 1894, Sir Richard is reported on page 314 of the Hansard of that year, as saying :

Mr. WILSON.

Sir, Canada has no business, and never had, to spend thirty-six or thirty-seven millions a year.

It is a monstrous thing, properly understood, and wholly apart from the amount of real taxation paid by us, that an expenditure of thirty-six or thirty-seven millions should be saddled upon five millions of people in the position of the people of Canada.

The hon. gentleman would do well to look at the annals of the United States—

They have always been pretty fond of the Yankees——and he will find that when they were a people of twenty millions, a people obliged to maintain an army and navy, a people obliged to maintain a foreign consular service, a people, in one word, obliged to maintain all the things which are requisite to the existence of an important nation, they were able to get along with twenty-two millions annually, as against the thirty-seven millions required by the people of Canada, though but five millions strong.

I would like to know what answer the hon. gentleman would make to that to-day. We are only a little over five millions yet—not five millions and a half, according to estimates made by the government themselves; and instead of our expenditure being $38,000,000, as it was in 1896, it is over $51,000,000, and I think the Finance Minister told us the other day that on the 30th of June of this year it would be $53,000,000 and more. Has there been any great reason why this government could not get along with as low an expenditure as the late government? If they had carried out their promise to reduce the expenditure in certain directions, all the extra expenses which they claim they have had in connection with the Yukon and otherwise, would have been met without any increase in the total. But the trouble with hon. gentlemen opposite is that they were not straight. I do not think they were honest. I am afraid they did not intend to carry out the promises when they made them. The Huntingdon Gleaner is a paper that is well known in this country. If any hon. gentleman does not know it, and asks the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), I think that hon. gentleman will tell him that the editor of that paper is an old-time Liberal of the straightest kind. The great trouble with him was that he believed that the Liberal party when in opposition were honest and meant what they said, and that if they got into office and had an opportunity, they would actually carry out the pledges they had made to the people. He was too innocent, and I confess we were all too innocent. This is the criticism made by the Huntingdon Gleaner on Sir Richard's speech in Toronto, just after it was delivered :

The first proofs offered for his allegations as to the development of the country, Sir Richard found in the increase of population. According to him, the exodus to the United States has ended, and our population is increasing at the rate of at least one hundred thousand a year. In this province we have a good test as to the fluctuations of population in the triennial enumeration of the people by the valuers. These returns show no such change as claimed by Sir Richard. Huntingdon is fairly representative of the agricultural centres of the province, and the returns from the municipalities which have been coming in during the past week or so, tell of no increase over 1896. We cannot say how it may be in the other provinces, but for Quebec the exodus is still a reality.

That is from an authority which I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite will attempt to dispute. Perhaps one of the most amusing claims put forward on behalf of the present government is the claim of economy. At the Liberal convention a resolution was moved, and I presume carried unanimously, to this effect :

We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt, and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the government that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand the strictest economy in the administration of the government of the country.

That resolution was seconded by no less a person than the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who in seconding it, said :

As Liberals, we have the right to say that we are the exponents of economy. Our opponents do not even pretend to be economical, their principle is to get all the money they can from the people and distribute it among their friends.

Well, some people have been wicked enough to say that between the Liberals and the Conservatives there is very little difference in that respect—that the great difference is that the Liberals get it from the people and keep it. I think they have no right to say that they have in any measure carried out the pledge they made to the people on the subject of economy. The Huntingdon Gleaner criticises as follows :

Despite the extreme rise in the volume of revenue, the expenditure exceeds it by $4,000,000. The gross debt now stands at $345,000,000. Deducting assets, most of them of doubtful value, the net debt is $266,000,000. That the debt should have been added to during the year when the Dominion collected the largest revenue on record is no credit to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his fellow-ministers.

That is a sentiment which will be endorsed by everybody in this country. If we are ever going to make any progress towards lessening the burdens on the people and decreasing our public debt, it will not be in hard times when we have very little income, but in good times. Every prudent man of business will take the opportunity, when he is making plenty of money, to pay off his debts, and governments should act in like manner. But, these people now in office, although they pledged themselves in their convention resolutions, to practise economy, seem to have no idea of economy whatever. There is nothing which seems to give them greater pleasure than the large surplus they have. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said that if the Conservative party had had a surplus of $7,500,000, they would have heralded it continually from one end of the country to the other. Well, I do not know that they could possibly have done much more in that line than these hon. gentlemen have done. But, these hon. gentlemen labour under this disadvantage, that they have entirely changed their opinion with regard to surpluses. When in opposition, they were continually declaring that surpluses were sources of weakness, because they furnished opportunities for plunder and corruption and raids on the treasury. I have a lot of extracts here on speeches made by these hon. gentlemen when in opposition, in which they strongly denounced surpluses. They were then of the opinion that a competent Finance Minister, who understood his business, instead of having surpluses, would tax the people just exactly what was right and no more.

The Huntingdon Gleaner goes on to say with reference to the speech of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. After pointing out that there had been four prosperous years, it says :

Sir Richard Cartwright is its spokesman, and if his speech means anything, it is that because Canada has been blessed with fruitful years, it is right that the government should spend more money. Instead of that, would not the prudent and wise way have been to apply the increased revenue to lessening the duties on the necessaries of life and to the reduction of the public debt.

I think that is a very reasonable statement, and one that the government would have done well to have taken heed of.

Let me draw attention to an interesting incident, which is a pretty good illustration of the general administration of this government. The Montreal Star, on the 28th of September last, publishes the following :

We have been favoured with a copy of an advertising poster signed 'William Ogilvie, commissioner,' calling for tenders for the construction of a wagon road 'from a point common to the valley of the Klondike River and Bonanza Creek, up the valley of Klondike to the stream known as Thomas Creek,' &c., &c., to a point 'in the vicinity of Dominion Creek.' 'Tenders for said work will be received up to the hour of four p.m., the 26th inst. (August), but the commissioner in council may accept the tenders for any portion of it prior to that date.

What was the use of putting a time limit for tendering, if tenders might be accepted before that limit. Was that anything else than a bid for government support? Was it anything else than an invitation to the supporters of the government: Here is work to be done; if you want a job come and take it ; and if there is anything left, when the time expires for receiving tenders, we will give that out to any tenderers that are left. That was simply an outrage, and shows clearly that the business up in that country is not done at all in a businesslike way.

Let me make a brief allusion to the question of reciprocity. The necessity of reciprocity was advocated very strongly by certain gentlemen opposite when they occupied seats on this side. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) told the people, before the last general election, that it would only be a matter of a few months delay if the Liberal party got in, before they would get reciprocity with the United States. They were not going to hunt all over creation to get treaties of commerce passed. They were not going to Jamaica or Trinidad or Timbuctoo, but would go at once to the United States and obtain a treaty with that country without fail. Then, we had a speech from the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), made at the great Liberal convention in 1893, in which he staked his reputation as a public man, that if the Liberals had only the opportunity they would soon make a treaty with the United States. He charged the Conservative party with dishonesty. He said that they went to Washington foreordained to fail, because they went with impossible conditions. Well, Mr. Speaker, the present government went to Washington and spent $34,600 of the people's money there, and what did they get? They got a good time, and that was all. They spent the people's money freely ; and, after all their diplomacy and expenditure, we had the right hon. gentleman who leads the government telling this House last session that he did not think that the people of this country wanted reciprocity. Why did he not find that out sooner, and have spared himself the trouble of going to Washington, and the ignominy of failure. But, we find that the hon. gentleman who spoke to-night on behalf of the government, thinks we do not want reciprocity with the United States. There seems to be a very great difference of opinion on that point among the leaders of the party opposite. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) thinks it would be the act of a first-class statesman to get a treaty with the United States, but said he would not renew the effort to get it under the circumstances. He had the same experience that the late George Brown had when he was sent to Washington by Mr. Mackenzie. After going to great lengths to obtain a treaty, these hon. gentlemen found that the Americans, when asked to ratify the treaty, simply laughed at it.

We have had some curious experiences of the glaring contrast between words and deeds of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. Postmaster General, for instance, was a great stickler for economy when on this side. In 1895, he introduced a Bill to reduce the Governor General's salary to $35,000, and went on to give the reasons why. Just think of it, he explained, in the twenty-five years from 1867 to 1892, we have spent $1,216,666 in salaries to the Governor General. Well, this hon. gentleman has been on the Treasury benches now about four years, and it appears he has lost that Bill. At any rate, he has never reintroduced it. If he had lost the gerrymander Bill instead of this one, he would have done much better. Then, he took up the travelling expenses of the Governor General, which was another terrible item, amounting to $145,903. Then, he added up the salaries of His Excellency's secretaries and found that they amounted to $270,350, and the contingencies of the Governor General's Secretary's office he calculated at $217,426. We afterwards had some remarks from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce on this subject in 1894. Talking about these matters, he said :

What on earth do we want with fifteen or sixteen cabinet ministers. Sir, it would be high treason to say it, or I would ask what do we want with a couple of Speakers? There is no doubt whatever that the general cost of our departments is far too extravagant.

I wonder if the hon. gentleman is still of the same opinion. He went on to say :

In the twenty-five years they spent for furniture on Rideau Hall, $108,853.

I wonder if these hon. gentlemen are spending on that same item at that rate now. Fuel and light $151,371.10. We have spent for wages $94,349.86. In all, we have spent $2,851,917.76, an average yearly expenditure of $114,076.70, being an average annual expenditure over the Governor General's salary of $65,410.04. Still it goes on. Then he goes on to say :

We have distributed during twenty-five years, for Governor Generals' travelling expenses, a yearly average of $5,836—

I will tell when that was started by-and-by—

—we have disbursed annually during that twenty-five years an average of no less than $21,785 a year for additional repairs and maintenance to Rideau Hall. During that same period we have paid out annually an average sum of $4,754 for furniture for Rideau Hall. Paid to gardeners, $3,773 for wages, on an average, and for fuel and light an average per annum of $6,148. . . . These sums are quite beyond the resources of the people of Canada.

That was the feeling of the present Postmaster General in 1895. I suppose that feeling was shared by those who are members of the present government. But there were a great many worse things that he talked about. For instance, he said :

For example, in the United States government there are but eight heads of departments, each of whom is paid a salary of $8,000 a year, or a total of $64,000. In Canada we have ministers and heads of the departments galore, eleven ministers drawing $8,000 a year each, one drawing $9,000, and three controllers drawing together $18,000; in other words, the executive heads of our government costs us $115,000 a year, as against $64,000 a year payable to the corresponding heads of the departments in the United States. In other words, we are paying about 80 per cent more in the way of salaries to the members of our government than are paid to the members of the United States government.

I believe it is $119,000 that is paid now as against this $64,000 paid in the United States for corresponding with the heads of the department. Again he said :

Who can justify the expenditure of our country to-day. It cannot be justified by the wealth of the country. There is nothing to warrant this enormous expenditure of nearly $38,000,000, except the fact that we are burdened down with debt and with office-holders, great and small.

Does not that sound strange coming from a member of the present government. These gentlemen found fault with an expenditure of $35,000,000, and themselves spent about $51,500,000, and they say that this year they will spend $53,000,000. It does seem to me that this is inconsistency of the most glaring kind. I do not see how any member of the present government can justify the existing expenditure. Well, Sir, there is another gentleman who often took an interest in the expenditure of the country when he was on this side. It is said he used to sleep with an Auditor General's Report under his pillow, and it is also said that he has not seen one for three years. I refer to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) :

The general feeling throughout this country is that the expenses of government are altogether too high.

And again :

The whole cost of the government in this country is altogether too much. We have thirteen ministers, each drawing a salary of $7,000 and a sessional allowance of $1,000, and I must say that if $7,000 was considered an ample allowance twenty years ago, $4,000 should be considered ample allowance now. Four thousand dollars would procure to-day more of the necessaries of life or the ordinary supplies required by a member of the cabinet than $7,000 would twenty years ago.

I wonder if the hon. gentleman will put a notice upon the paper with regard to the present expenditure. I think the hon. gentleman kicked when a clerk was raised $50 a year. But they arranged in caucus for raising the controllers' salaries, as I understand, and I have not heard that the hon. gentleman objected. He said :

We pay thirteen cabinet ministers $92,000 in salaries and $13,000 in sessional allowances. We provide them with private secretaries, costing $9,000; we pay a Deputy Speaker $2,000—

I wonder if they will abolish him.

—we pay two controllers $13,200. That makes $129,200 for our cabinet ministers and our two controllers; and we have also a Solicitor General, who costs us $6,000 a year.

And would you believe it they are paying $4,000 a year more than was paid them, and this hon. gentleman is supporting them. And not only that, but they dated back the salaries of the controllers two years, making a present to the controllers of $4,000 each. The hon. member for North Wellington goes on to say :

I believe we could reduce the expenditure of this country by five or six million if the government were only ready and willing to consent to it.

I wonder if the hon. gentleman thinks they could reduce it five or six millions now. There surely is a better chance, considering that the expenditure is so much more.

I believe we could reduce the expenses of the civil service by from $500,000 to $750,000 if the government would put fewer of their friends in office.

I suppose that holds good still. I suppose they are not putting any fewer of their friends in office than they were. I want to give a few of the details of the expenditure under the Mackenzie regime, which expenditures hon. gentlemen opposite liked to dwell upon when they were on this side of the House. Let me refer first to the Governor General's travelling expenses. And, would you believe it, Mr. Speaker? For the first seven years after confederation the country did not pay the travelling expenses of the Governor General. This was done in the first instance by the Liberal government. In the very first year of the Mackenzie administration they started to pay the Governor's travelling expenses. If any hon. gentleman has any doubt of that I have the return in my desk which I can let him see. These expenses were as follows :

1874.....	$ 5,000
1875.....	13,187
1876.....	6,000
1877.....	22,554
1878.....	5,000

Total for five years..... $51,741

Average yearly expenditure on this account under the Mackenzie administration, $10,348.50; an annual average expenditure over the average for twenty-five years of $4,512.

I believe an arrangement was entered into after that time whereby the Governor General was allowed $5,000 for travelling expenses. But the present government are rather more generous. They were not satisfied with $5,000, but I see by the Auditor General's Report that for the last three years they have allowed $18,422, or a little more than $1,100 more per annum than the previous arrangement called for. Still these are the gentlemen that are practising rigid economy in handling the people's money. Now, I want to show you what it cost in five years of the Mackenzie administration for the maintenance of Rideau Hall. In 1874, $35,435; 1875, $30,567; 1876, $26,290; 1877, $27,530; 1878, $29,164; in all for the five years, $148,986, or an average of $29,790. The regular average for the 25 years is about $20,000, and they go about $9,000 a year more than the others. That is the way they practise economy. Now, let us see what these people have done. For the maintenance of Rideau Hall they paid in 1897, $22,537; 1898, $17,736; 1899, $17,162; they appropriated for 1900, $31,000, making a total of $88,435 for the four years, or an average of $22,109, about $1,000 over the average for the 25 years. That is the way these hon. gentlemen practise economy. Then there is another large item that, for the first five or six years between 1867 and 1874, was not a charge upon the public revenues of this country, that is, light and fuel for Rideau Hall. That was inaugurated by the Mackenzie administration the first year they were in power. In 1874 it cost $5,000; 1875, $6,622; 1876, 7,199; 1877, $7,888; 1878, $10,211; or a total of $36,920. It cost on an average during the Mackenzie regime, $7,384, while the average for the 25 years was $6,143, or an increase under Liberal rule of $1,241 a year. Since that time there has been an arrangement made by the government with the Governor General that we pay annually $8,000 a year for fuel and light at Government House.

Now, I will give you a summary of Rideau Hall for additions, alterations, repairs and maintenance, furniture, garden, grounds, fuel and light, for the five years during which the Mackenzie government were in power. In 1874, it was $56,017.43; 1875, $45,027.73; 1876, $42,031.92; 1877, $41,466.28; 1878, $44,611.46. In the five years it was $229,154.82, or an average per year of $45,830.96; an average over the yearly average for the 25 years, of $9,047.96. I think that is quite a record of hon. gentlemen opposite, as showing how they managed the public institutions of this country. And what has the Postmaster General and his colleagues done to reduce this expenditure? Why, they have increased the expenditure so far as the government itself is concerned, by $4,000 a year. Still the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) thinks it is all right.

I want to give another short extract from a speech of the hon. member for North Wellington, made in 1889. It will be found in the Hansard at page 914. The heading is Rideau Hall:

If the Governor General wants a gardener he should engage his own gardener. The whole system ought to be changed, and we ought to arrange that the whole expenditure the government should be called to meet would be the repairs to the building itself. We should employ no gardeners, or other men, except those necessary to keep the building in repair. The hon. Minister of Public Works is not treating the House fairly, by calling on us this year again to re-vote this expenditure and continue the rotten and extravagant system which has been carried on for a number of years I cannot understand what six carpenters are doing there all the time.

Well, I looked up the Auditor General's Report this year, and I find they have six carpenters there still. Notwithstanding that we have got such an economical government there are six carpenters at Rideau Hall still, and they are there all the year round.

Mr. SPROULE. He does not say a word against it.

Mr. WILSON. Well, he has got light, or he has got something in view.

I understand there are 6 carpenters, 14 to 20 labourers, and one inspector at Rideau Hall. What are these labourers doing? We are paying about $80 per week for carpenters alone. I consider it to be my duty to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this extravagance. It is a positive disgrace to think that the public money is squandered in this manner.

I wonder if that hon. gentleman holds these views yet.

Now I will say something about the Bill the Postmaster General introduced to prevent members of parliament being appointed to office. For myself I do not want any office of any kind. I am too old to take one, and I can make a living easier in some other way. I do not object to a man who has served his country in parliament taking an office from his party if he is fitted for it, but I do object to hon. gentlemen making a strong protest against that sort of thing, going so far as to introduce a Bill into this House to make it illegal to appoint a member of parliament to an office, and then going to work and appointing a number of members to office. I find that even the Postmaster General has been a sinner in this regard, because he has appointed Mr. Beausoleil, the late member for Berthier, to be postmaster at Montreal at $4,000 a year, and that is only one out of thirteen or fourteen cases. I would not object to that myself—

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). You want an office.

Mr. WILSON. No, I do not want an office. I do not mean that I would take the office, I do not want an office neither from this government nor from my own party. What I mean is that if a member of parliament is fit for an office I do not see why he should be precluded from taking it because he is or has been a member of parliament. But hon. gentlemen opposite went all over this country denouncing the Conservative party for appointing their friends to office, and appointing members of parliament to office, and when they get in they do the same thing, they imitate the very worst features of the Conservative party. The very worst things the Conservatives did are the things they imitate, and they think they are all right if they can only point to a precedent by the Conservative party. Now, Sir, the present Postmaster General, then Mr. Mullock, introduced a Bill to prevent the appointment of members of parliament to office. He made a little speech on that occasion, on the 26th of February, 1896, which may be found in the Hansard on page 2374 :

Sir, it is to me a painful thing to have witnessed ever since I have been a member of parliament, that which strikes at the very root of our system of representation.

I wonder how he felt when he saw Mr. Langelier sitting in this House two sessions after he had the First Minister's promise in his pocket that he should be made Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Quebec, if he was not appointed to a judgeship before. This must have pained him wonderfully.

I have seen members—I do not know that any of these are at present in the House—but I have seen gentleman occupying seats in this House who, everybody knew, had the promises of positions of emolument made to them, who continued to sit long after those promises were made, long after they had ceased to be independent, and who were compelled to vote as mere echoes of the government, or else forfeit those positions of emolument which they had supposed they had secured.

That is a pretty strong statement. Then he went on :

They became mere parasites upon the administration, and cease to voice the opinions of their constituents. Not only do they do that, Sir, but moving about among their colleagues, they become as it were, corrupting agencies among their own ranks. And so a small percentage of persons in that position are likely to impair the independence of the whole body.

And in that view, I have suggested in my Bill that no member of parliament shall be eligible for any office of emolument in the gift of the Crown, other than those positions that are made exceptions to under the Revised Statutes ; in the Act respecting the independence of parliament, until a certain period shall elapse, when it cannot be said he has received his appointment as a reward for any betrayal of trust. My Bill—provides that except in the cases provided in the statute, no member of parliament shall be eligible for appointment to any position of emolument in the gift of the Crown during the lifetime of the parliament of which he shall be member, nor until twelve months after the dissolution of that House. If this rule were adopted, members would be safeguarded from the influence of the administration.

I think if ever there was a time that these principles should be applied, it is now. Hon. gentlemen have used their power pretty extensively.

I do not purpose to do more than give an outline of the preferential trade question. I could give extracts from a number of speeches made by the right hon. leader of the government himself, but I do not think I will. However, I promised to give one extract so that he, or his friends, would have an opportunity, if it is not true, of contradicting it. I was discussing the question in the train one day with a friend of his, and he said he had seen it contradicted in the newspapers. I said that I would make the statement on the floor of parliament and if the right hon. leader of the government is wrongly accused, I will give him an opportunity of contradicting the statement and if he does so, I shall not again repeat it. Speaking at Westmount, the right hon. gentleman put the case thus :

My hope, nay, my conviction, is that on the 23rd of June the Liberal party will be at the head of the poll, and then it will be the Liberal party that will send commissioners to London to arrange for a basis of preferential trade.

That is the statement I said he made, and that I had seen repeatedly in the newspapers. I believe he made it, and I shall continue to make it, unless it is contradicted by himself, or by some person who knows the contrary to be the fact. He made a speech at Toronto, in which he said that if he was elected, he would be just as much in favour of preferential trade as Sir Charles Tupper was, and he would go in for having reciprocal trade between England and Canada. He pointed out the great advantage it would be to get a preference for cheese, wheat and other things that we produce, in the English market. While he was pointing this out, La Patrie in the province of Quebec was taking another course. They seemed to have a policy for every province.

Mr. CLARKE. For every county.

Mr. WILSON. For every county? I thought they were broader than counties. I thought they would go as far as provinces. La Patrie said :

All our thought, all our heart, all our sacrifices, shall be for Canada, and never for the empire.

Our great interests are not in Imperial trade, but in free trade, in treaties dictated by reason and not by a foolish sentiment. We will not sacrifice our national future to an Imperial utopia, but we shall commence with the United States, with France, and all the countries where we can find profit.

While the right hon. First Minister was speaking to the people of Ontario, and pointing out the great advantage it would be for us to have reciprocity with the mother country, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), was rather throwing cold water on that, and saying that he was not going to be guided by sentiment in reference to Imperial federation, or to Imperialism of any kind. He was simply catering to the sentiment of the province of Quebec. The Liberal leaders and the Liberal party were a good deal like St. Paul, but with a different object in view. They were all things to all men, that they might get their votes and attain office, while St. Paul was all things to all men that he might win them to him and save them from ruin. Notwithstanding that the Prime Minister had declared at London and Toronto, that he would stand by preferential trade, what was his language when he went to Liverpool? He said :

This we have done, not looking for compensation. . . . There is a class of our fellow-citizens who ask that any such concession should be made for a quid pro quo. . . . But the Canadian government has ignored any such sentiment. . . . It is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade that has done so much for England.

If this is not a straight backdown from his promise, I do not understand the English language. My own impression is that when he made this promise he intended to fulfil it, but, at that particular time, he was a democrat to the hilt, he had not been knighted, he had not been surrounded by great big people, he had not associated with the aristocracy, he had not forgotten himself, but, when he got over there, he seems to have forgotten that he was a democrat to the hilt, and to have forgotten, not only that he was a democrat to the hilt, but to have forgotten his country, and to have forgotten his pledges, and he did what, I think, is a very dishonourable thing—he went back on the public pledges made to the people of this country. I am going to skip some of the material I have here. I am just going to give a few of the things that we import, that the farmers are particularly interested in, because, I think, after all, that when we look at this question of preferential trade, we must look at it from the standpoint of the people that ought to be benefited by it. If I understood the hon. Finance Minister correctly, he was particular to say in his speech, that this would be a great boon to the country, and more particularly to the farmers. I am one of the kind of fellows that, when I give anything, I want something in return for it. I do business on business principles, and if I am doing business for the people, I purpose to do that business on business principles, just the same as if I did it myself. I do not believe that I should do business here on a different principle from that upon which I would do it for myself. Still, I am willing to do as the Hon. G. W. Ross, who is now the Prime Minister of Ontario, is willing to do, to send the last man and the last dollar, if necessary, to defend the empire, because Great Britain is willing to send her last dollar to defend us if necessary. That is a quid pro quo. That is getting something for something given, but when it comes down to a matter of business, then if we give their goods a preference in this country, I want them to give our goods a preference in their country. That is a proper thing, and I believe it is a thing the people will stand by. I have no doubt about it so far as I am concerned. I heard some gentlemen opposite talk about free corn, but I can tell them there is one concern in this country using a thousand bushels of corn a day to make starch and the Liberal government has given these people $75 a day advantage by making corn free, and still they talk about being free traders. The Liberals give that concern an increased protection of 7½ cents a bushel and yet they talk about being free traders.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What firm is that?

Mr. WILSON. I have a little matter to say about you, but I skipped it for the present. The Trade and Navigation Returns show, that the following was imported last year:

	From United States.		From Great Britain.
	Number.	Value.
Cultivators.....	2,500	$ 17,945	None.
Binding attachments.....	103,312	32,756	"
Drills, grain seed.....	2,912	64,683	"
Farm wagons.....	1,827	78,455	"
Forks, pronged.....	46,997	11,005	8, value $37.
Farm wagons, drays, &c.....	607	26,202	None.
Harrows.....	187	2,400	"
Harvesters, self-binders and without binders.....	6,931	664,610	"
Sleighs.....	379	5,664	"
Hay tedders.....	170	4,652	"

Reapers.....	504	25,066	"
Weeders.....	7,953	56,856	"
All other agricultural implements.....		21,785	$491.

Mr. WILSON.

The total amount of these agricultural implements imported by farmers from the United States is $1,658,676, and from Great Britain $4,283 worth. That shows you, Mr. Speaker, how the farmers of Canada are getting the benefit of preferential trade.

In conclusion, Sir, I wish again to call the attention of the government to the fact that we have been two and a half months in session, and that twenty of their departmental reports have not yet been placed before the House. I hope they will be tabled at once, because I think members should have an opportunity to know what is going on in the departments as well as in the House. I repeat that the expenditure under this Liberal government is entirely unjustifiable, is contrary to their promises, contrary to what they led the people to believe they would do, and I believe the conduct of the government in this respect will meet with just condemnation when they go to the people. I intended to speak on the prohibition question, but my remarks will be more opportune on Monday next when a day is set apart for the debate, and perhaps some of the ministers will then tell us why they have not carried out their pledges on the prohibition question. I know that the Prime Minister told us that no one expected the government to pass a prohibitory law unless half the votes that were on the list were polled. That is a great reflection on the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who represents the temperance party in the cabinet. During the campaign he took pride in saying that he not only represented the farmers in the cabinet but that he represented the temperance people as well, and I tell you if he does represent us we are not very proud of the representation. We consider that he ought to have told the First Minister that we never asked for the plebiscite, but when he consented to give it to us, he ought to be prepared to abide by the votes of the people and give us prohibition. The Minister of Agriculture, in my opinion, ought to have strong enough convictions to have told the Prime Minister that unless he carried out his pledges to him and to the people of Canada, he was prepared to resign his portfolio.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). The government, of course have the direction of this matter in their own hands, but I would like to put a query, as to when they expect we will get through with this budget debate and with the business of the House if we are going to adjourn at eleven at night?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It is impossible for the government to say when the debate will finish, because that is in the hands of the House. The government are most anxious to get along with it, but my hon. friend

(Mr. Foster) sees that there has hardly been any one in the House for the last hour, and while I would wish that the debate should go on for another hour, still this being the first day of the sitting after the Easter adjournment, much fewer members are present than will be present hereafter. I hope that hereafter we shall sit till at least twelve o'clock, and get through the debate this week, if at all possible.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope we shall not have to sit here all summer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope not.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 18, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 139) to amend the Lands Titles Act, 1894.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

DEFICITS AND RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. DECHENE asked :

1. What was the amount of the deficits of the late Dominion government for the years 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1896?
2. What was the amount of railway subsidies promised in 1896, and if greater than in the preceding years, by how much?
3. What is the amount of subsidy voted by the late government for the Quebec bridge from 1892 to 1897?
4. What is the amount of the deficits of the present government for 1896, 1897, 1898 and 1899?
5. What is the amount of the surplus, year by year, for 1897, 1898 and 1899?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The answers to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Dechene's) questions are as follows:—

	Surplus.	Deficit.
1891-2	$ 155,977 42
1892-3	1,354,555 95
1893-4	$1,210,332 45
1894-5	4,153,875 58
1895-6	330,551 31

2 and 3. These do not relate to the Finance Department. No doubt my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) will reply. 4 and 5 :

	Surplus.	Deficit.
1895-6*
1896-7	$519,981 44
1897-8	$1,722,712 33
1898-9	4,837,749 00

*Not a year of the present government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Replying to questions 2 and 3, I would say as to question 2: It is difficult to answer this question. If by the inquiry the hon. member desires to know what was the amount of railway subsidies voted by parliament in the first session of 1896. I would answer him, none, but if he means promised on behalf of the late government by members of the cabinet of that day, I would be justified, from the evidence in possession of the government, in saying that the amount was over $8,000,000. Some railway resolutions were introduced in the session of 1896, covering grants to the amount of $2,772,294, but these do not appear by any means to cover all the sums that had been passed upon by the government of that day, if the evidence which is at hand is to be accepted. On the files of council of April, 1896, there is a list of subsidies amounting to over $8,000,000, but there is no record or order in council approving this list, nor, in fact, of those actually introduced; attached to this list of subsidies is a letter bearing the signature of the Hon. Mr. Dickey, ex-Minister of Justice, dated April 25, 1896, addressed to the Hon. Mr. Prior, a member of the government of that day. The letter of Mr. Dickey is in the following words:

Office of the Minister of Justice,
Ottawa, April 25, 1896.

Dear Col. Prior,—I think something like the inclosed will meet the case. It will be necessary to fill in the name of the railway and possibly the mileage. You might consult Mr. Haggart about this.

I am, &c.,
(Sgd.) A. R. DICKEY.

The Hon. E. G. Prior,
Controller of Inland Revenue.

The circular referred to in the above letter is as follows:

Dear Sir,—Owing to the persistent obstruction of the opposition, the government felt that it would be quite useless to bring down, as they had intended, a resolution with regard to subsidies for new railway projects, amongst which would have appeared a subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the.....about which you wrote me.

I have every confidence that the next elections will leave the Conservative party in charge of the affairs of the country, and in that event the policy which was thwarted this session by obstruction will be carried to a conclusion and parliament will be invited to grant the subsidy which I have mentioned.

I am, yours faithfully,

An inference may be drawn that other subsidies than those introduced were promised by the government in addition to those which were included in the resolution laid upon the Table of the House during the session of 1896, from the fact that letters appear to have been written by members of the government giving assurance that the government intended subsidizing railways not included in the resolution before parliament, for example, a letter dated the 28th of April, 1896, was written by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) to Mr. E. E. Spencer, M.P.P., at Frelighsburg, Que., to the following effect:

Dear Sir,—Owing to the persistent obstruction of the opposition, the government felt that it would be quite useless to bring down, as they had intended, a resolution with regard to subsidies for new railway projects, amongst which would have appeared a subsidy to the Montreal and Province Line Railway Company, for twenty miles of their railway from the town of Farnham through Frelighsburg and Stanbridge East to the international boundary, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $84,000.

I have every confidence, however, that the next elections will leave the Conservative party in charge of the affairs of the country, and in that event the policy which was thwarted last session by obstruction will be carried to a conclusion, and parliament will be invited to grant the subsidy which I have mentioned.

I am, yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) JOHN HAGGART.

The Montreal and Province Line Railway, which the ex-Minister of Railways stated the government intended to subsidize, is not mentioned in the list of railways in the railway resolutions introduced by the government during the first session of 1896, but is included in the list of railways on file in the Privy Council office, and aggregating the total of $8,000,000 and upwards, as already stated. A return will have to be moved for if the hon. member desires a copy of the last mentioned list of railways. There was no subsidy voted by the late government for the Quebec bridge from 1892 to 1897.

As to the second part of question No. 2, whether the amount of railway subsidies promised in 1896 was greater than in preceding years, and if so, by how much, if he desires to know the amount of subsidies that were, year by year, voted by the late government, including the land subsidies, from 1882 to 1894, he can only get this information fully by asking for a return. I may say, however, that subsidies were granted in 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893 and 1894. In 1884, the subsidies granted amounted to $6,926,000, but in the other years the amount would not be so great as that. The amount of cash subsidies voted in 1894 was $4,679,360. There were, in the years 1884, 1885 and 1892, special subsidies granted. That granted in 1884 was $250,000 a year for twenty years, and one in 1890 of $80,000 a year for twenty years. Besides these, there were various land grants. The statement would be too lengthy to read, but if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dechene) will move for a return, I will furnish the particulars of subsidies, both in cash and in land.

POSTMASTER AT MOOSEJAW.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

Has Charles A. Gass been dismissed from the office of postmaster at Moosejaw ? If so, why ? On whose advice was it done ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Yes. Because of political partisanship ascertained as the result of an investigation by the inspector.

YUKON—THE JOHN C. BARR.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER asked :

Referring to the return (Reference No. 26) to an order of the House, dated February 12, 1900, relating to the 'John C. Barr' and the registry of shipping at Dawson, are there reports or papers connected with this subject not brought down ?

(a) If yes, what is the nature of such reports or papers, and why are they not brought down ?

(b) Did an officer of the Customs Department make a special examination into this case, and if so, why was his report not brought down ?

(c) Was an inquiry made into the case of the 'John C. Barr' and the alleged fraudulent undervaluation for customs purposes ?

(a) If so, by what officer and when ?

(b) Has any report on such inquiry been received ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). There are reports and papers connected with this subject not brought down, which are now being copied, and which will be brought down without delay. The delay has been owing to an oversight in treating the order as having reference only to reports and papers in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The papers to be brought down will give the further information asked for in this inquiry.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PAYMENT OF COLONIAL TROOPS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has the attention of the government been called to a recent announcement in the British House of Commons that the Australian cavalry now on their way to the Cape are to be allowed, in addition to the Imperial rates of pay, certain local allowances which will give them equivalent to five shillings a day for privates ?

2. Has the government inquired as to the conditions upon which these local allowances are to be made in South Africa, and if paid by the Imperial authorities, is it the intention to apply them to the Canadian Mounted Infantry in South Africa ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The attention of the government has not been called to this matter.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—CONTRIBUTIONS OF CLOTHING.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Is the government aware that the War Office has recently issued a communication to the British public, pointing out that the winter season is setting in in South Africa, and inviting contributions of warm clothing for British forces, including Cardigan jackets, flannel shirts, wool-len drawers and vests, Tam-o'-Shanters, neck mufflers, &c. ?

2. Is the government also aware that Lord Roberts has written to local committees in England, asking for supplies of Cardigan waistcoats, socks, flannel shirts, towels, tobacco, jam, chocolate, &c. ?

3. Is the government also aware that it is stated a forward movement on the part of British troops is delayed by Lord Roberts until supplies of warm clothing can be procured for his troops ?

4. Has the government taken any steps, and if so, what, to supply the different Canadian contingents with clothing suitable for the winter season in South Africa ? If so, when were such steps taken, and what are they ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. The government is not aware that such a communication has been issued as referred to in the first question. 2. The government is not aware that Lord Roberts has written to local committees asking for supplies, &c. ; but I presume what the hon. gentleman means, is that certain societies, such as the Red Cross Society and others, have asked the War Office, as they have this government, what supplies would be suggested or recommended as suitable to be sent as presents to the soldiers in South Africa. If the hon. gentleman's question alludes to that, the government is aware of that fact, and the Department of Militia has answered many questions of that kind in the sense mentioned in the question, recommending the articles referred to, or some of them. 3. The government has no knowledge why a forward movement on the part of the British troops under Lord Roberts has not been made. The government has reason to believe that there are supplies of warm clothing now at Cape Town being forwarded to the troops at Bloemfontein and other points. 4. The government has taken steps to forward jerseys and underclothing to the Canadian troops in South Africa.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—NUMBERS IN CANADIAN CONTINGENTS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Is the government aware that, according to an official statement made by the Imperial authorities, the number of men furnished by each of the colonies to the forces in South Africa, is given as follows :

Cape Colony, 15,000 ; Natal, 7,000 ; Australasia, 3,790 ; Canada, 2,820 ; Ceylon, 820 ; India, 250 ?

2. Does the number of men credited to Canada properly represent the contribution by the Dominion to the forces of the British army in South Africa ?

3. Or, is not the number included in the first and second contingents, Strathcona's Horse, and the men sent to replace those of the first contingent who were killed or wounded or incapacitated in any way, largely in excess of the number announced by the Imperial authorities ?

4. Has the government taken any steps to correct the erroneous official statement recently given out ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. No official statement of any kind has been received by the government with reference to this matter. That answer applies to all the four questions.

PAYMENTS TO W. T. O'DONAHUE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Whether W. T. O'Donahue, of Roberval, in the county of Chicoutimi, or some other person, has been employed since the 1st March, 1899, as caretaker of the dredge boat at Roberval ?

2. If so, how much does the government pay per day or per month ?

3. What is the total amount paid for this service to the said O'Donahue or to any other person, since the date aforesaid ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Mr. O'Donahue acted as caretaker for four months at $20 per month, receiving in all $80. From last December to date, the caretaker was Mr. A. Poitras, at $20 per month, and has received $60.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Whether W. T. O'Donahue, of Roberval, in the County of Chicoutimi, is employed by government as agent of the Indians at Pointe Bleue, and since what date ?

2. What is his salary ?

3. What was his predecessor's salary ?

4. How much has been paid him in connection with this position, by way of salary, travelling expenses, or otherwise since his appointment, and up to date ?

5. Is it true that he is not compelled to reside within the Indian reserve, like his predecessors, and why ?

6. If not, why does he not do so ?

7. On whose recommendation was he appointed ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. Mr. W. T. A. Donahue is Indian agent at Pointe Bleue, his appointment dating from the 19th August, 1899. 2. $400 per annum. 3. $400 per annum. 4. Has been paid $247.08 salary. He does not receive travelling expenses or other allowance. 5. Yes. Mr. Donahue resides at Roberval, 3½ miles from his office on the reserve, which he attends daily. By driving through the reserve twice a day the agent has the Indians quite as much, if not more, under view, than if he resided in the office building on the reserve. As the Indians frequently visit Roberval, the agent has had his office and dwelling connected by telephone, so that he loses no time when called to either place, to attend to matters relating to the Indians. 6. Answered by No. 5. 7. By the representative of the district.

PAYMENTS TO DR. CONSTANTINE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

What moneys have been paid to Dr. Constantine, of Roberval, as physician to the Indians of La Pointe Bleue, in the county of Chicoutimi, since January 1, 1899, or in any capacity whatsoever ?

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The following amounts have been paid to Dr. Constantine, of Roberval, physician to the Indians of Pointe Bleue, since the 1st January, 1899 :

March quarter, 1899.....	$200 00
June quarter, 1899.....	206 50
September quarter, 1899.....	291 50
December quarter, 1899.....	150 50

Total..... $848 50

PAYMENTS TO C. O. LABRECQUE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. What sums have been paid to Cyr. O. Labrecque, Esq., advocate, of Roberval, in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, since January 1, 1899 ?

2. Why were the said sums so paid to him ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No payments have been made by the Indian Department to Mr. C. O. Labrecque, advocate, of Roberval, since 1st January, 1899.

DREDGE AT ROBERVAL.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. What prices were paid to W. T. O'Donahue, of Roberval, or any other person, for lumber to be used in building of scows to be used in connection with the dredge on Lake St. John, county of Chicoutimi, during the winter of 1898-9 ?

2. Were tenders asked for as regards the said lumber ?

3. If so, of whom ?

4. If not, why not, and on whose recommendation was the making of the said lumber awarded, and to whom ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. The following quantities of lumber were purchased : 46,003 feet of lumber at $20 per 1,000 ; 1,404 feet of lumber at $30 per 1,000 ; 350 feet timber, 9 x 9, at 10 cents per lineal foot. To the balance of the question the answer is as follows : The making of the lumber in question was awarded to Mr. Donahue, upon the recommendation of the Assistant Superintendent of Dredging, who, when being on the spot, made inquiries as regards the lumber in question, and reported that the price offered by Mr. Donahue was lower than that for which it could be obtained in Quebec, while in the vicinity of Roberval no other one could be found to supply that lumber in the quantity required at a cheaper rate.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. What is the total cost of the dredge at Roberval, in the county of Chicoutimi ?

2. Were tenders asked for, for the building of the said dredge, and of whom ?

3. If so, what was the amount of each tender ?

4. Is it true that the work done upon the said dredge is defective, and that part of the material used is to be replaced by other material ?

5. If so, why was the requisite machinery not put in forthwith ?

6. What is to be the cost of the new machinery ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. $7,600. 2 and 3. The only tender asked for was from Messrs. Beatty & Sons, of Welland, who make a specialty of the construction of clam-shell dredges, the then chief engineer having reported their tender price to be fair and reasonable. 4, 5 and 6. No. The dredge was constructed as designed and specified, and the work was well done, but after experience, it has been thought that a bucket with arm would be more useful to do work in such material as composed the bottom of Lake St. John, than the clam which was first designed and put on the vessel. This change has, however, not yet been made.

DREDGE ON LAKE ST. JOHN.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Did the dredge on Lake St. John, in the county of Chicoutimi, work during the past season ?
2. If so, how many yards of earth or other material did it remove ?
3. How many persons were employed on the said vessel during the work ?
4. What is the amount of wages paid during the summer of 1899, and of all whatsoever payments in connection with the said dredge, before, during and after its working season ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes. 2. 3,480 yards. 3. Five men on the dredge—one cook—two men on the tug and one scow-man—in all 9 men. 4. The amount paid in wages was $687.29, and the total amount of the other payments $741.44.

NORTH SHORE TELEGRAPH LINE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Did the government give instructions to any persons at Chicoutimi, or at Lake St. John, to get out telegraph posts and other small cedar timber, eight feet long and upwards, in connection with the North Shore telegraph line ?
2. If so, what are the prices paid for the said timber ?
3. Who were the persons appointed to get out the said timber ?
4. Were tenders asked for, and from whom ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1, 2, 3 and 4. The government gave no instructions to any persons at Chicoutimi or Lake St. John, to get out telegraph posts or other small cedar timber for the North Shore telegraph line. The contract for the poles and braces was made with Mr. L. P. de Courval, the poles being paid for at the rate of 80 cents per pole, and the braces 10 cents each.

WHARF AT PERIBONKA.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Is the government aware that, during the month of September, 1899, there was no water at the wharf built at Peribonka, in the county of Chicoutimi, and that the boat doing the service of the locality was unable to reach it during one-half the time ?
2. Why was the wharf located at an inaccessible point ?

3. Who was entrusted with the locating of the said wharf ?

4. Is it true that Hon. Mr. Marchand, Prime Minister of the province of Quebec, when visiting Peribonka in September last, represented to the Dominion government that the money spent on the said wharf was completely lost and that he recommended the building of a new wharf, one mile towards the south, the only point which vessels can reach at all times ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). No. There was always water at the wharf at Peribonka, but some little distance from it, owing to the shifting nature of the bottom of Lake St. John, a sand bar has formed, which impedes the access to the wharf by the boats. When it has been possible to utilize at that place, the services of the dredge now on Lake St. John, it will, as well as at other points, be perfectly easy to reach the wharf. The resident engineer reports that the wharfs have been located in the best available position ; that there is 6 feet of water at low water, when the lake is very low, and that the location is most satisfactory, he having heard, up to the present time, of no complaints. The information given in reply to this question may also be taken to serve for an answer to question No. 19.

INSPECTION OF TUBERCULOUS CATTLE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Has the government paid to one Hall, a veterinary surgeon of Quebec, any sums of money for inspecting tuberculous cattle, in the county of Chicoutimi, since 1896 ?
2. If so, what amount ?
3. Has any money been paid to one D. Ouellet in connection with such inspection ?
4. If so, what amount ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The government has employed one Hall to inspect tuberculous cattle in the county of Chicoutimi. 2. He has been paid since 1896, sums amounting to $3,218.54. 3. A sum has been paid to Mr. Ouellet, in connection with such inspection, out of the above named sum. 4. The sum paid to Mr. Ouellet was $226.50.

PAYMENTS TO MR. L. P. BILODEAU.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Has L. P. Bilodeau, of Roberval, in the county of Chicoutimi, received any sum of money from the government since June, 1896, and up to date ?
2. If so, for what, and what amount ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A cheque for $175 was issued to Mr. L. P. Bilodeau by the Indian Department on the 29th March, 1898, under a power of attorney held by him from Mr. C. O. Labrecque, to whom this amount was due for legal services in connection with liquor prosecutions.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). In reference to question No. 20, the Deputy Minister of Public Works has given me an answer as well, which is as follows: 1. Yes. 2. $851.55, being for two freight sheds at Mistassini and St. Méthode, for timber for the Lake St. John piers and supply of tallow and oil for the dredge.

RATES CHARGED BY HOTELS CLAREAU AND TREMBLAY.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked:

1. Why does an employee of the Public Works Department charge, at page Q—239 of the Auditor General's Report, 1897-8, $2 per day for board at the house of J. A. Clareaux, when the highest price at that house is $1 per day, and when another employee of the same department charges, at page Q—241 of the said report, $1 per day for board at Martin's Hotel, in the same place?

2. Why, at page Q—239 of the report, do we find at the Tremblay Hotel, at Roberval, in the county of Chicoutimi, by an employee of the said department, $2.50 per day?

3. Is the government or the department aware that the usual price charged to travellers at the said hotel is $1.50 per day?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1, 2 and 3. The department is not aware of the rates charged by the Hotels Clareaux and Tremblay. It is in possession, however, of a receipt for the amount paid for board at the above rates by the officer in question.

MR. PIERRE A. POTVIN.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked:

1. Who is the person designated at page Q—146 of the Auditor General's Report, 1897-8, under the name P. A. Potvin, to whom a sum of $232.75 was paid for lumber?

2. Is the government aware that no person of that name has ever been heard of at Rivière à la Pipe or in the vicinity?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The department is informed that Mr. Pierre A. Potvin is a resident of Roberval who had purchased the timber, which he sold to the department, at Rivière à la Pipe, and therefore dated his account from that place.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT—PAYMASTER IN CHICOUTIMI.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked:

1. Have the explanations asked for by the Auditor General, at page Q—269 of his report for 1897-8, as to certain receipts furnished by the paymaster, Dr. Ed. Savard, of Chicoutimi, in the county of Chicoutimi, been given by the Department of Public Works?

2. If so, what is the nature of the said explanations?

3. If not, why have explanations been refused?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. In the letter referred to it will be noticed that the Auditor General asks for a copy of the instructions issued to the paymasters. Those instructions were then in the course of being prepared and printed.

Mr. MULOCK.

ed, and as soon as they were completed a copy thereof, as requested, was sent to the Auditor General. The only fault with the pay-sheet in question was that the names written by the paymaster were not accompanied by a cross and the words 'sa marque,' as usual when a party does not sign his name. Since the issue of the instructions above referred to this rule of putting a cross has been faithfully observed by Paymaster Savard. It may be added that upon the face of the pay-sheets referred to is found the following certificate: 'Je certifie que es personnes susmentionnées ont été payées en ma présence. Signé: Alphonse Pedneault, conducteur.'

PAYMENTS TO MESSRS. BEAUCHEMIN, BICKERDIKE AND OTHERS.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked:

1. On what grounds were the amounts paid I. H. Beauchemin, Bickerdike and others, under the heading 'Rec. without details,' at page 236 of the Auditor's Report, 1898-9, so paid?

2. Were all these sums charged to the de Courval contract, or were they extra expenditure?

3. What are the charges incumbent on the said de Courval under his contract for the construction of the telegraph line?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Messrs. Beauchemin and Bickerdike, and others, were on the staff of Mr. Perron, the surveyor and engineer who made the survey of the Labrador coast from Pointe aux Esquimaux eastward before the award of the contract for the completion of the telegraph line to Belle Isle. 2. The payment of these sums had nothing to do with the contract awarded to Mr. de Courval. 3. The charge incumbent on Mr. de Courval was the supply of the poles, the clearing of right of way, the planting of the poles, the placing of the brackets and insulators, and the stringing of the wire.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. P. A. PERRON.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked:

Who are the persons having the confidence of the hon. Minister of Public Works, referred to by the hon. Postmaster General, in his reply, at page 1799 of 'Hansard,' March 12 last, in relation to the appointment of P. A. Perron?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The persons referred to are gentlemen in whom the Minister of Public Works had perfect confidence.

PURCHASE OF PROVISIONS FROM DROUIN FRERES ET CIE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked:

1. From whom were the provisions purchased from Drouin Frères et Cie to the amount of $974.71, as shown at page Q—226, Auditor's Report, 1898-9, intended?

2. Is that amount outside of the de Courval contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. For the surveying party which was despatched in the fall of 1898 to examine and report for the location of the telegraph line eastwards of Pointe aux Esquimaux to Belle Isle. 2. The amount in question has nothing to do with Mr. de Courval's contract.

CONSTRUCTION OF TELEGRAPH ON NORTH SHORE OF ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. How many miles of telegraph line were constructed on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, east of Pointe aux Esquimaux, during the summer of 1899?

2. How much money has been paid out in connection with this work, under any and every head, and to whom?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. 31 miles. As No. 2 of this question will represent quite an extended statement. It would probably be advisable that a motion be made for the necessary return.

REBATE ON BICYCLES EXPORTED.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

What is the amount of the rebate paid on bicycles exported from Canada in the fiscal years ending June 30, 1898 and 1899, and the amount paid to each firm in each of the above years?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Drawbacks paid in fiscal years 1898 and 1899 on bicycles exported :

Name of Firm.	Fiscal year, 1898.	Fiscal year, 1899.
Welland Vale Mfg. Co., St. Catharines, Ont.....	$1,253 94
New Barnes Cycle Co. (Ltd.), Woodstock Ont..	82 26
Canadian Typograph Co., Windsor, Ont.	174 88
Massey-Harris Co. (Ltd.) Toronto, Ont.	4,059 18	$2,101 45
Goold Bicycle Co., Brantford, Ont.	2,132 19	2,089 71
Total	$7,693 45	$4,191 16

PURCHASE OF HORSES FOR SERVICE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has the attention of the government been called to a special despatch from New York, dated April 9, and which appeared in the Toronto 'Star' of yesterday, as follows:

(Special to the Toronto 'Star.')

'New York, April 9.—It is reported that an agent of the British government will sign a contract this week for the delivery of 50,000 horses in South Africa by July 1. It is said a firm of well-known horse dealers will provide the animals, and they are already preparing to collect the great number required. According to the rumours, the horses will be shipped directly from this port to Cape Town. The average price of the horses is $100.'

2. Have the government taken any, and if so, what, steps to direct the attention of the Imperial authorities to the fact that large numbers of suitable horses may be procured in Canada for the use of the army?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I may say that the government has no information in regard to the newspaper paragraph which is contained in this question. The government, through both the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Agriculture, has repeatedly brought to the attention of the Imperial War Office through the High Commissioner, Lord Strathcona, the suitability of Canadian horses for military purposes in South Africa, and the large number of such horses which are available for purchase in this country.

AVERAGE RATE OF DUTY ON SUGARS.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

What was the actual average rate of duty per hundred pounds collected in the year ended June 30, 1899, on all sugars, n.e.s., not above No. 16 D.S., in colour ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The actual average rate of duty per hundred pounds collected during the fiscal year as per Trade and Navigation Returns, 1899, on 'Sugar, N.E.S., not above No. 16 D.S., in colour, sugar drainings, or pumpings drained in transit, melado or concentrated melado, tank bottoms and sugar concrete,' was nearly 66½ cents.

MR. W. E. PHIN.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

1. Has W. E. Phin had any work from the government, by contract or otherwise, than the dredging at Toronto?

2. If so, were tenders asked for such work ?

3. What amount has been paid the said Phin to date, and for what services?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Mr. Phin, as a partner of Mr. Magann, has been awarded the contract for the extension of the western pier of the eastern entrance to the harbour of Toronto. 2. Yes. Tenders were asked for this work. 3. No payment has yet been made to the contractors.

MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN LILLOOET AND LYTTON, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the Postmaster General decided yet whether he will establish a mail service between Lillooet and Lytton, in British Columbia?

2. If so, has he decided whose tender he will accept for that service from those received in January last?

3. If so, whose tender has been accepted and what is the amount of said tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The question of establishing this service still engages the attention of the department ; a tender, therefore, has not yet been accepted.

L.C.R.—CHARGES AGAINST BY C.P.R. AND G.T.R.

Mr. POWELL (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. What was the total amount of charges on 'General Account' which the Canadian Pacific Railway had against the Intercolonial Railway for the year ending June 30, 1897, and for which the Intercolonial Railway accounted to the Canadian Pacific Railway? What was the total amount of said charges for the year ending June 30, 1899?

2. What was the total amount of charges on 'General Account' which the Grand Trunk Railway had against the Intercolonial Railway for the year ending June 30, 1897, and for which the Intercolonial Railway accounted to the Grand Trunk Railway; and what was the total amount of said charges for the year ending June 30, A.D. 1899?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The amount of charges on 'General Account,' which the Canadian Pacific Railway had against the Intercolonial Railway for the year ended June 30, 1897, and for which the Intercolonial Railway accounted to the Canadian Pacific Railway, was $16,824.36. The total amount of said charges for the year ended June 30, 1899, was $1,812.31. 2. The total amount of charges on 'General Account,' which the Grand Trunk Railway had against the Intercolonial Railway for the year ended June 30, 1897, and for which the Intercolonial Railway accounted to the Grand Trunk Railway, was $31,475.15. The total amount of said charges including rentals for the year ended June 30, 1899, was $259,961.17.

PARIS EXPOSITION—CANADIAN BUILDINGS.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. What is the total cost to date, so far as ascertained, of the Canadian buildings at the Paris Exposition?

2. What was the estimated cost of these buildings?

3. What was the cost of the Canadian buildings at the Columbian Exposition, 1893?

4. Do the Canadian buildings at Paris give less space for exhibits than was afforded by the Canadian buildings at Chicago?

5. How much will be required to complete and thoroughly equip all the Canadian buildings at Paris?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). In the sense which apparently is here intended there are no Canadian buildings at the Paris Exposition. There is a building there erected for the accommodation of the British colonies, a portion of which Canada occupies. That building is to be paid for by the British colonies, in proportion to the amount of space in it which each colony occupies. The Canadian proportion of this colonial building, on the statement of the Imperial commissioners who have been charged with its direction, is $82,753. There is also a building at Vincennes for the accommodation of agricultural implements, for which the Canadian commission will have to pay $5,000. There is a special addition to the colonial building first mentioned for which we will have to pay $1,500, to provide cold storage plant, and an additional $1,250 for further office accommodation, making a total of $90,483 for that portion of the buildings which Canada is to occupy. In addition to this, I must explain that Canada is occupying certain space amongst the Imperial exhibits for which also we have to pay at the same rate that the exhibitors coming from other parts of the British Empire pay. In answer to the third part of the question—

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before the hon. gentleman leaves that part, did I understand him to say that for the space which we occupy we pay $90,000?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. More than that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The figures have not been supplied to me as to the space occupied by us amongst the Imperial exhibits. That was not included in the question and I have not the detail of that charge here. It will amount, I believe, to something like $15,000 or $16,000 more, but I am speaking from memory in regard to that. It is at a fixed rate per square foot, just the same as the exhibitors from other parts of the British Empire pay for that space amongst the general exhibits.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was it built by the Imperial government?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman does not understand that the buildings at Paris are put up by the Parisian commissioners for the exhibition, and that they charge so much space to every country who exhibits in them. But the British colonies have had the permission to erect, through the agency of the Imperial commission, a special building for the colonies, for which I have already given the House the figures. The third question is, as to the cost of the Canadian buildings at the Columbian exhibition, and the answer is: $26,354.82. That building was not a building for the purpose of containing exhibits. It was a building for the Canadian officials and offices and reception rooms, and did not contain any of the Canadian exhibits which competed at the Chicago exhibition. The total space which Canada had allotted to her for exhibits at Chicago was 125,000 square feet. The fifth question, as to how much will be required to build and thoroughly equip all the Canadian buildings at Paris, I cannot answer at the present date.

Mr. WILSON. Would the minister answer the second question, as to what the estimate was?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have answered that; the estimated cost to Canada is $90,483.

Mr. WILSON. What was the original estimate?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a contract.

MILITIA REPORT FOR 1899.

Mr. CLARKE asked:

1. What period of time does the Militia report for 1899 cover, and to what date does it come down?
2. On what date was the completed manuscript of the report sent to the Queen's Printer, and at what date was the final revise returned from the Queen's Printer?
3. Has the whole or any part of the report been printed? If so, on what date was the printing completed?
4. When will the report be distributed?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The annual report of the Militia Department is made up of several reports. All of these reports cover the time down to the 31st of December, 1899, except that for the cartridge factory, and that of the accounts branch which goes to the 30th of June, 1899. I am not able to give the dates asked for, in the second question. As to the third question, the whole of the report is in the hands of the printer now, but the revision has not been made. I hope, however, that the report can be distributed some time next week.

WENCESLAS LABEL.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked:

1. Whether there is a person named Wenceslas Label in the employment of the government in the Inland Revenue Department or any other department?
2. If so, what is the amount of his salary?
3. Is the government aware that the said Wenceslas Label spent the greater part of his time, this spring, supervising the revision of the voters' lists in the interest of the Liberal party?
4. Did he perform the said work with the consent of his Minister?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). There is no person by the name of Wenceslas Label in the Inland Revenue Department, nor in any other department so far as I have been able to ascertain by referring to the Civil Service List for 1899.

NEW CARLISLE WHARF.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked:

1. Has the sum of $2,000 voted last year (1899) for the wharf at New Carlisle been expended?
2. If so, to whom was it paid?
3. If not, why has not the said sum been expended?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. The sum in question is now being expended. 2. No payment yet made. 3. The present time, when there is no traffic on the wharf has been thought to be the best to perform the work.

OAK POINT LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

When were tenders for Oak Point lighthouse, King's County, N.B., asked for, and at what time were they to be submitted to the department?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The 16th of September, 1899. Tenders were to be submitted to department up to 29th of September, 1899. They were laid before the minister on his return from England in November with a report that in consequence of the advanced season the work should be postponed.

STRATHCONA CONTINGENT—LOSS OF HORSES.

Mr. OLIVER asked:

1. Has the government knowledge that one hundred and sixty-three horses of the Strathcona contingent died on the way to South Africa?
2. Is the government aware whether or not the cause of death was the alleged unfitness of a large number of the horses for the service?
3. Does the Government propose to make any inquiry into the matter, to decide as to the cause of such a heavy loss amongst the horses?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). This is a matter with which the government had nothing whatever to do. The selection of horses was made by Dr. McEachran under instructions from Lord Strathcona, and all arrangements for bringing the horses down here from the west, for embarking them at Halifax and with reference to their transport to South Africa were made under the direction of Dr. McEachran, who was appointed for the purpose by Lord Strathcona.

HORSES FOR THE BRITISH ARMY.

Mr. OLIVER asked:

1. Is the government aware that the British army authorities are purchasing a very large number of horses in the United States, South America and Australia, for service in South Africa?
2. Is the government aware if these authorities are purchasing horses for this service in the Canadian west?
3. What means, if any, have been taken to inform the British army authorities that there are large numbers of suitable horses to be had in the Canadian west?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The government has no means of information other than that within the public reach as to where the British army are purchasing their horses. We are not aware that the British authorities are purchasing horses in the Canadian west. The government, however, through the Minister of Militia and through the Minister of Agriculture, have repeatedly urged upon the Imperial War Office through the High Commissioner in London, Lord Strathcona, that we have an abundance of suitable horses for military purposes in South Africa and that we would like to see the Imperial authorities purchasing these horses in Canada as much as possible.

THE PAY OF THE STRATHCONA CONTINGENT.

Mr. OLIVER asked :

1. What rate of pay are the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Strathcona contingent receiving while on service in South Africa ?

2. From what sources, and in what proportions, will their pay be derived ?

3. What separation allowances are being paid to dependents of the members of the Strathcona contingent, and from what sources does the payment come ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The answer to the first question is : The rate of pay is the Imperial rate. The answer to the second question is : The Imperial government. As to the third question, there are no separation allowances for the reason that Lord Strathcona's Horse is made up exclusively of unmarried men.

S. CHILDS WILSON—REGINA.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Was Mr. S. Childs Wilson, now of Regina, employed at any time as a member of the 'Hansard' staff ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government have no information at all upon this subject. I presume that the Debates Committee would be the department from which my hon. friend should inquire.

THE HALIFAX GARRISON.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

Are the supplies and provisions required for the maintenance of the regiment now garrisoning Halifax procured from the contractors who furnished supplies to the Imperial authorities ? Or, if not, are the supplies procured by public tender ? If so, when were the supplies advertised for, in what paper did the advertisements appear, and to whom were the contracts for supplies awarded ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The greater part of the supplies of provisions are being obtained from the contractors furnished by the Imperial authorities. No public tenders have been asked for yet, and of course there were no advertisements.

OPENING OF THE CANALS.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to a very important letter which I have just received :

Mr. FISHER.

Kingston, Ont., April 16, 1900.

Geo. Taylor, Esq.,

Gananoque.

Dear Sir,—We have been trying to find out when the Welland and St. Lawrence canals will open. So many dates have been given that we are entirely in the dark concerning it.

We have 48,000 bushels of wheat due in Montreal about the 26th April. The steamer will be there on the 24th or 25th ; she is advertised to sail in April. We understand that the Lachine Canal will not open until the first of May. This would probably oblige us to cancel our freight and sale, which would cause us a very serious loss. We consider that the St. Lawrence canals should be open as soon as the steamers can arrive in Montreal, and the whole trade figure upon this being the case yearly. Cannot you see the department and get them to open the canal so that we can do our business ?

We are going to have a very heavy forwarding business in May. There are a couple of steamers to load in Toledo with corn. These steamers are now on Lake Ontario, and expected they would be able to go through Welland Canal as usual on the 20th April. This would bring the goods here so as to be in Montreal the first of May. Space is taken on the ocean steamer of that date. There are a number of steamers on this lake that will be held back until the Welland Canal is open.

With the small amount of Canadian tonnage we think the government should give our lake steamers all the opportunities to trade that are possible. At the best the season is short ; why should it be curtailed from five to eleven days ? There must be nearly a million bushels of tonnage on this lake, to go up through the Welland, which cannot of course do so until the Welland Canal is open. Use what influence you can with the department to get the canal open on the 20th or 22nd April at the latest.

Yours truly,

JAMES RICHARDSON & SONS.

I may say that I applied to the department to-day, and the information I received was that the Welland Canal will not open till the 25th of April and the Lachine Canal not till the 1st of May. If so, these parties who write to me, and who are large grain men, say they will certainly lose the sale of 48,000 bushels of wheat which they are under contract to deliver at Montreal late in April.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, this is the same class of question that arises with great regularity every spring. There is always a very urgent pressure brought to bear upon the department to open the canals at the earliest possible date, without regard to any other consideration—whether or not proper repairs have been made, whether or not the ice is out, or other considerations which must control. The present year is no exception to the general rule in that regard ; yet the department is making arrangements to have the canals opened at the very earliest possible moment. We have no interest and no object to serve in delaying one hour beyond the time when they can be made available. The dates which have been stated by the hon. gentleman are those that have been settled upon, and we have taken adequate means to notify the public so that there may be no doubts on the subject. The Welland Canal is to be opened on the 25th of April, the intermediate St. Lawrence between the Welland and the Lachine on the 27th of April, and the Lachine Canal on the 1st of May. The hon. gentleman says that arrangements have been made by this shipper which will have to be cancelled unless the Welland Canal is opened at once. Our information is that at the present moment there is not less than thirteen feet of solid ice at the entrance to the canal and at the mouth of what we may call the harbour at Port Colborne.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think you had better go to Port Maitland yet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is probably just as much ice at Port Maitland, where the ice-making forces are in operation as well as at Port Colborne. The officers of the department have doubts whether it will be possible to get the Welland Canal opened on the 25th of April, owing to the ice and other conditions. It is imperatively necessary that a few days should intervene between the unwatering of the canal and the opening of it for purposes of navigation. The unwatering of it cannot take place until very near the open season, and then we require to make certain repairs without which the canal might fail us at a critical time during the season. If we failed to make the necessary repairs, we would lay ourselves open to severe criticism if anything occurred by reason of those repairs not having been made. So that taking everything into consideration, it must be clear, I think, to every one who is not blinded to every other interest than just the one interest moving him at the moment, that it is the interest, the desire and the determination of the department to have the canals opened just as soon as they possible can be opened.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the right hon. leader of the government to an item that appears to-day in the Montreal Gazette and in other papers:

Victoria, B.C., April 17.—Japanese are still pouring in here. The steamer 'Riojun Maru' brought 800, and the big liner 'Goodwin' 1,100. The steamer 'Milos' brought eighty more, and the 'Braemer' at the end of this week will bring more than 700.

The labour leaders are agitating against this great influx of Orientals, but it is said that the provincial and Dominion parliaments are powerless to enact legislation to keep out the Japanese.

Mr. Martin, the British Columbia Premier in a speech Sunday night, said that if re-elected he would see that legislation was passed restricting this immigration.

Yokohama advices brought by the steamer 'Riojun Maru,' indicate that charitable societies, and possibly the municipal governments of Japanese cities, are taking a hand in the shipping of a large number of Japanese pauper labourers to this country.

I would like the right hon. gentleman's promise that he will have inquiries made with a view to finding out where these Japanese are destined for—whether they are going to stop in Canada or whether they are going across the frontier in to the United States. If this item is correct there seems to be a fearful plague of these Orientals coming into British Columbia, and they are undoubtedly a serious menace to the labour of that country and also to all the inhabitants of Canada. I see that the Premier of British Columbia has stated his intention to bring in legislation to stop it. The right hon. leader of the government told us last year that owing to imperial interests he could not bring in legislation. I only trust that he will do what he can to stop this influx, and I would suggest to him that he should bring in an Act like the Natal Act which Mr. Chamberlain recommended in his letters contained in the blue-book brought down about disallowance.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman is aware, because he referred to it a moment ago, that last session this question of Japanese immigration was brought to the attention of this House, and that the government stated then that they made a great difference between Chinese immigration and Japanese immigration; that so far as Chinese immigration was concerned, we approved of the restriction placed upon it, and indeed as soon as the Minister of Trade and Commerce returns to his seat, we intend to have a measure on this subject. So far as Japanese immigration is concerned, we stated then that for Imperial reasons, which at that time were approved even in British Columbia, I believe, we had no intention to put such restrictions on Japanese immigration as we had put on other Asiatic immigration. With regard to the other question of my hon. friend, asking me to look into the destination of those Japanese, I am quite sure that the department of the Interior would be only too glad to give the matter its attention.

Mr. PRIOR. In my opinion, they are without doubt paupers, and as such I believe we have the power to deal with them, no matter what country they come from.

The PRIME MINISTER. If they come within the restrictions imposed by our immigration laws, I have no doubt that our officers will attend to them.

CANADIAN HORSES FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. JAS. McMULLEN (North Wellington). I would call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to the following paragraph in this morning's Citizen:

Toronto, Ont., April 17.—Major Dent, of the British War Office remount department, announced to-day that he has sent out agents to buy in Canada 1,000 cavalry horses, from 15 hands $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches to 15 hands $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches high, and 500 ponies from 14.1 to 15.1. The animals will be shipped direct from Montreal to Cape Town as soon as they are gathered together. Major Dent was sent to Canada by the Imperial government at the request of Mr. T. C. Patteson, postmaster of Toronto, who is a lover of horse-flesh, and a good judge of it, and who expressed confidence that many suitable animals could be had in Ontario.

I would like to know what authority there is for this announcement, and whether it is true that Major Dent has come to Canada at the request of Mr. Patteson, of Toronto, to buy horses. We will be very glad if he has come for that purpose, but I would like to know whether Major Dent has reported to the government with regard to his coming here.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I noticed the despatch in this morning's Citizen, which my hon. friend has cited. Major Dent has not reported to me, or to any other member of the government, that I am aware of, since his arrival. I am not aware that he has come out through the instrumentality of Mr. T. C. Patteson, but, of course, I cannot say anything further on that point.

SPEECHES OF THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw the attention of the government to a matter of considerable interest, to which, I think, its attention cannot be directed too soon, in view of the opening of the Paris Exposition, and the presence there of one of our cabinet ministers as our chief commissioner. As I am desirous to give some explanation, I will conclude with the usual motion, although in reality I have but a simple question to ask the government.

Members of this House will remember that shortly after the opening of this session, at a time when we had very great need of the presence of the hon. Minister of Public Works—a need which increases every day as we advance with the business of the session—the announcement was made that on account of the weak state of health of that gentleman, it was necessary for him to take a trip to Europe. I have noticed with pleasure, since I have been a member of this House, that there are some grounds upon which we can meet, and that when it is a question of the health of any hon. member, the sympathy of all parties is aroused. The announcement, therefore, although the hon. minister's departure had the effect of depriving us, at certainly a critical moment, of the services of the Minister of Public Works, although it deprived the opposition of a great quantity of explanations, which it is our duty to ask and the country's right to obtain, was received without a word of murmur that I am aware of. But, since the hon. gentleman's departure, he has been active to a degree which would certainly lead any one, even extremely well disposed in his favour, to entertain a serious doubt as to the necessity of this protracted absence at a time when it was his duty to be here. In the organ of that hon. gentleman, not later than yesterday, I find it stated that he is by far the most active and useful man that we possibly could have sent to represent this country at that great exhibition. Opinions will differ on that subject, and I desire to call the attention of the government and this House to the attitude taken by that hon. gentleman almost as soon as this great exhibition opened, and I do it with the object of endeavouring to obtain from this government the exercise of some effective control upon the acts and utterances of the hon. Minister of Public Works whilst he represents this country in France, and when the eyes of the whole world are fixed upon him as the representative, at that great exhibition, of England's greatest colony. I find, on referring to the Canadian Gazette of the 5th of April, that the hon. Minister of Public Works left Paris and attended in London a meeting of the Society of Arts, at which, after several prominent men had spoken, he gave utterance to the following language:

Mr. Tarte, who was next called upon, said he had no idea that he was to have the honour of addressing such a distinguished gathering, but he owed Sir Charles Dilke such a debt of gratitude that he did not hesitate to speak unpreparedly. In his last book, 'Greater Britain,' Sir Charles had summed up in a few words the position of the French Canadians. He wished to thank Sir Charles for what he had written there about Canada, especially in reference to Her Majesty's most loyal subjects, the French Canadians. (Hear, hear.) No English statesman had understood the French Canadians so well as Sir Charles Dilke. They were French; their mothers and fathers were French, but they were British to the core. (Loud cheers.) They were just as much British as they were French; and it was to the glory of British institutions to have captured their loyalty as they had done. (Hear, hear.) The lecturer had referred to the rebel Papineau. His old father, he did not mind telling them, had been a rebel. (Laughter.) The French Canadians had now, however, learned to love British institutions. They were building on the other side of the ocean a new British Empire; the English and the French subjects of the Queen in Canada were working harmoniously together, under the same institutions and the same British flag. (Cheers.) The French Canadians had done everything they could to help the empire. He was present at a reception by the Minister for Foreign Affairs in Paris last Saturday, when he was introduced to the representative of the Transvaal, and he said to him: 'You will be beaten, and then I hope that the Dutch element will do what the French Canadians have done. When British rule is well established in the Transvaal the best thing you can do is to take advantage of it.' (Loud cheers.) When peace was established in South Africa he was confident that the greatest freedom would be given to all, the same freedom and the same privileges as they enjoyed in Canada. The French Canadians had occasionally been accused of being disloyal. In fact, quite lately much had been heard of racial troubles, but he warned his hearers not to pay too much attention to the reports, which were mostly the product of the newspapers. He had been a journalist himself, and he knew all about it. (Laughter.) But he took that, the first opportunity he had ever had of speaking to an English audience, to assure the British public that they might rely on the French Canadians just as they might rely on the best citizens of England. (Loud cheers.) They were good British subjects of the Queen, but they would like to be more than that, and to become full-fledged citizens of this great empire. If, however, Canadians were to share the burdens of the British Empire, they should have a voice in Imperial councils. In conclusion, Mr. Tarte drew attention to the fact that he was the first French Canadian who had been admitted to the Imperial Federation League, which he entered in 1888.

Now, Sir, having made this deliverance before an English audience, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) within a delay, I think, of but a few hours, returned to the French capital; and there he had an interview with the representative of a leading French paper, and gave to that representative his views in regard to the people of his own nationality. I find the interview reproduced in the hon. Minister of Public Works' own organ. I will translate it for the House. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), I feel convinced, does not approve of the course of action followed by the Minister of Public Works, a course which no reasonable man, no honourable man, no man having at heart the interests of the country, can approve. But I will call the right hon. gentleman's attention to the language, to the veiled and guarded language, of that interview; and let him and other members of this House who belong to the province of Quebec and are familiar with the French language and able to appreciate and fully understand the ideas that are conveyed by that interview, knowing them to be, those of them, at least on both sides that I have become acquainted with, truthful and sincere men—I leave it to them to appreciate the contradiction between the expression of opinion we find on one side of the channel and the ideas conveyed by this interview on the other side of the channel. This is taken, as I say, from a leading French paper, Le Journal de Paris, which, I am sure, many of the members of this House from the province of Quebec are to a certain extent familiar with. The article is entitled 'At Mr. Tarte's home' and it says:

Mr. Tarte, the Minister of Public Works of the Canadian confederation, has just arrived in Paris. His mission is to give a definite character to the organization of the Canadian exhibition. Mr. Tarte is one of the most distinguished personalities, one of the most representative men of that French Canadian agglomeration in British North America, which, under the British flag, and notwithstanding thousands of complications, has succeeded in preserving our language and the best of our ideas. Mr. Tarte was formerly considered, by unanimous opinion of the Canadian people, the first French Canadian journalist in his own country. Today he occupies an official position, but a most important paper, 'La Patrie,' at Montreal, is published by his sons, under his inspiration. The last important act of Mr. Tarte has been to define, in his speech in parliament, the official position of the French Canadians. The government, at the request of Mr. Chamberlain, having sent troops to South Africa without having consulted the sovereign assembly of the people, Mr. Tarte, fortified by constitutional authority, has protested vigorously. Thanks to the kindness of M. Fabre, Commissioner General for Canada, I have been able to obtain, yesterday, with this eminent Canadian public man a favourable interview.

Then follows a paragraph in which a very flattering description of my hon. friend Mr. Tarte's physical appearance is given to the French public. I think it is not necessary for me to read this, as we are all so familiar with the hon. gentleman's appearance. It goes on:

Mr. Tarte is not desirous of giving his opinion upon the South African war. He came to Paris to attend the Canadian exhibition. The situation of political men in Canada is extremely delicate. Frank declarations might perhaps stir up the susceptibilities of the English without satisfying fully the French.

Then the interviewer continues:

'However,' I insisted, 'I express the painful astonishment which we all experienced when we learned that Canada had consented to send troops destined to combat the Boers.'

'But, my dear sir,' said Mr. Tarte, 'you must understand the situation as it is. Get it into your head that the population of French origin is very far, as yet, from forming a majority of the Canadian federation. Now, in a parliament of 216 members 55 only are French Canadians. The others are Englishmen.'

I do not know what my hon. friend from St. Ann's Division, Montreal (Mr. Quinn) will say to that.

But it must be admitted that, considering our number, we are well represented in the present cabinet, since the president of the council, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and myself are French Canadians. It is very possible that in their own minds 99 per cent of the French Canadians disapprove of the South African war, and are of opinion that the money spent by Canada on this occasion might have been expended with much more practical results elsewhere. Yes, that is very possible; but as good citizens we submit without restriction to the opinion of the majority. What the majority decides we respect. What is Canada? In reality it is a republic. Well, in republics minorities must bow to the will of the majority, otherwise nothing could be done. Now let us understand each other. Remember that we are loyal to the British Empire. We are obliged to be so by all sorts of economic and social reasons. Any Frenchman who has lived in Canada understands this easily. But after all we must admit that the British Empire does not worry us very much. It allows us the liberty of keeping our language and our social groups. Besides, establishing a distinction which may appear a little subtle. Canada has not sent any troops against the Transvaal. It has merely authorized the enrolment of volunteers destined for that expedition. Canada has dressed those volunteers and transported them. This is a very different matter.

Here the interviewer asks:

What was the meaning of your protestation on the subject of the sending of these contingents?

To which Mr. Tarte replies:

The French Canadians do not desire that the sending of a contingent to South Africa without the previous assent of parliament, should in any case be considered a precedent. The exceptional circumstances, which have given rise, moreover, to great controversy, and the desire to lend England a moral rather than a material support, may have justified the action taken by the Canadian government. But we must not consider ourselves as bound for the future. England is as much interested as Canada in elucidating this question, because if she can at will compel the colonies to take part in her quarrels, she will have to accept reciprocity; the colonies might themselves drag England into their own quarrels and carry her beyond the limits which England would feel justified in setting for herself.

Then he goes on. After having been asked whether the French language is disappearing in America, he replies:

It is an absolute error, says Mr. Tarte, becoming animated. There is in Canada a large group of about 2,000,000 French Canadians; and we calculate that there is about a million more in the United States. French Canadian families are gifted with great fecundity. To the perpetual immigration of English colonists they oppose the immense birth rate that is noticeable among them. Already French Canadians have invaded Ontario, a province which has passed as being exclusively English. If English immigration were to diminish, or suppose that English immigrants were attracted to some other newer or richer territory, the French Canadians might after a certain time regain the majority in number.

He goes on to describe in a very interesting manner the habits of the French Canadian people, and observes:

At this moment Canada is more French than it was thirty years ago.

Mr. Tarte is subsequently interviewed by the same gentleman, Mr. Nadeau, upon a strange point. Mr. Nadeau says to him:

Certain French Canadian journals humiliate themselves before the English in a manner that is painful to observe. The 'Patrie' is not in that case, says Mr. Tarte, and he gave me the following article to read.

I think this House is already familiar with that article. In it the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) says:

The tri-colour flag is the flag of the French Canadians as the green flag is the flag of the

Mr. MONK.

Irish. In future the tri-colour flag will continue to be used in Canada in company with the Irish harp, the Stars and Stripes, and the Union Jack, on all occasions.

The Minister of Public Works concludes:

You see very well that memories of the mother country are still keen in Canada, only we are under the necessity of conducting ourselves politically with wisdom. One must understand our situation.

Now, Sir, I do not wish to give undue importance to these utterances, although they are very important coming from a man in that position. But I wish especially to call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the immense difference between what was uttered on one side of the channel and what was said on the other, and to call his attention, and the attention of the members of this House, to the consequences which may result from this discrepancy. I will not stultify myself nor impose upon the patience of the members of this House by interpreting these two articles; but I think it must be evident to anybody who reads both these statements that in the first one the Minister of Public Works, the Commissioner to the Exposition, is made to say that his compatriots and my compatriots in this country are entirely satisfied, that they are loyal, that they have nothing to complain of in respect to their position in this country. You will notice, Sir, that he goes further; he emphasizes the expression of this opinion by stating that he is British to the core. If you look at the report of the Canadian Gazette you will see that he says what has been stated more than once in this House and out of it, by the right hon. gentleman and other members of his party, stating what I believe to be the case, that we are here people of both races, of both nationalities and of various creeds, working in harmony to build up a great commonwealth; and that the utmost liberty is to be found here. He goes the length of stating in England, as I have quoted, at a time when the eyes and attention of public men are fixed upon these great colonial dependencies, that at any moment England can rely upon the French Canadian people as she can rely upon Englishmen themselves. Now, then, Sir, I call the attention of the House and of my hon. friends who come from the province of Quebec, and who understand the French language to the complete change of front a few hours after this man lands in France, and has occasion to make a deliverance, which members of this House will admit, at the present moment, is of serious importance upon the continent. He immediately creates the impression that it is impossible for him to be frank. If he could be frank and he cannot be, he feels that the sentiments which he has in his heart would, if expressed, annoy the British people and yet would not entirely satisfy France. In a treacherous way he assumes to hold authority from the right hon. Prime Minister of this Dominion, and having explained the power and strength which as French Canadians entirely, he and the Prime Minister have in the councils of their own country, without explaining that it was by the wish of every section and of all nationalities existing in this country, as expressed by the majority—that the right hon. gentleman was brought to the position he fills to-day—having, I say, armed himself with that authority I leave it to the right hon. Prime Minister, who is such a master of the French language, to say whether he does not declare, in so many words, that he disapproves entirely of the action of the government in the matter of the contingents. It is impossible to arrive at any other conclusion upon examining the language held by the hon. Minister of Public Works with the interviewer. In a kind of half-hearted way he admits that the British Empire does not worry his compatriots. With careful explanations he goes on to diminish, in the eyes of this interviewer, the importance of the action of this government in sending these contingents to Africa. My right hon. friend knows, perhaps, more about the press of the province of Quebec than I do, although I would not be prepared to admit that, but, where is the foundation for this statement made by the hon. Minister of Public Works that a large section, in fact, the whole of the French press in the province of Quebec is obliged to humiliate itself before England? You cannot arrive at any other conclusion. There is not a French paper published in the province of Quebec that I do not read, and I will say this for the French press of the province of Quebec, that, since I have been in a position to read and appreciate the French press of my own province, I have never seen one single example of such a degrading attitude on the part of one of the great French newspapers published in this country. But, this gentleman admits it by qualifying his admission and making an exception in favour of his own organ, and I would call the attention of the House to the point that the interview closes with the veiled statement that the compatriots of the hon. gentleman in the province of Quebec, if they are loyal, are obliged to be so through policy, and that were the circumstances of this country, as regards the question of population and other circumstances different, that feeling of loyalty of which, Mr. Speaker, we have had so many proofs in our own province from men having authority to speak upon this question in this House, is loyalty to be professed through wisdom or policy and not at all from any sincere conviction. I have explained what the action of this commissioner has been, and the exhibition is opened but a few days. I have no political motive whatever.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. I will say this to this House that I would be enormously disappointed if the impression were to gain ground that, in calling the attention of the government to this matter, I was moved by a desire to obtain some political advantage.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MONK. And I will tell you why. I do not believe that this man reflects, in any way, the opinions of either party in this House when he speaks in this manner. I have had proof of it in my own province. Was he not lectured by the Liberal organ in the city of Quebec upon this subject, and how many members of this House from that province have, time and again, found fault with the hon. gentleman for having expressed views similar to those with which I have just, a moment ago, made this House familiar. I would regret to think, that, in the ranks of the great Liberal party, because we must have two parties in this country under our present constitutional regime, this form of duplicity, because I cannot call it anything else, could exist to any greater extent than it exists in the ranks of my own party. If this man had been traversing one of the European countries and had given expression to these views, I would not have thought it worth while, although I think his official position deserves some notice, to bring the matter to the attention of the House. But, let hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House remember that we are only at the beginning of this exhibition, and that the hon. Minister of Public Works occupies there a dual position. He is not merely the commissioner for Canada, although, in that capacity we might hold him to account for this variety of views expressed within the space of a very few hours, but he is there as a minister of the Crown, as an adviser of Her Majesty in this Dominion, and I appeal to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House as well as to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to say whether this manner of proceeding is one which is going to meet with our approval during the coming months during which, time and again, this hon. gentleman will have occasion to speak and to speak on behalf of his own country, and where great authority will be given to the impressions he may convey. My right hon. friend is well aware, and many members of this House too, no doubt, of what weight is attached in Europe to words falling from the mouth of a minister representing a country under the same circumstances that exist in regard to our representation at the Paris Exhibition. Take alone the question of France—and when I speak of France I speak of a country which I am bound to by many ties, in spite of that separation which has come upon us over 150 years ago—I say I would be sorry to think that a false impression should be created among the thinking men of that great country by the unreflecting utterances of this man. I do not think it is fair that without any contradiction, he should be allowed to give expression to these views in a country with which Canada has such relations as she has with France. Does the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly) and do hon. gentlemen who sit on the other side who are familiar with French customs and manners, who know what are the qualities which distinguish the French gentleman; do they think that the conduct of a man who would use this language in England and a few hours afterwards use totally different language in France,—do they think that that conduct would be approved of in France if it were known? There is not a gentleman in France who would hear the words pronounced by the Minister of Public Works at that meeting in England, and who would afterwards read his interview with this French paper, who would not taboo the man capable of expressing such different views in such a short interval. There is not a gentleman in France who would not say that a man of that kind was a blatant humbug and a mountebank. Is it in the interests of this country that such a condition of things should be allowed to exist? Looking only at our attitude in regard to the people of the great country to which this man is accredited, is it fair, Sir, even to the French Canadian people whose interests after all are to be principally consulted in this matter? Where are we to land if we do not build up this great country of ours upon a solid foundation, and with the corner stone of truthfulness. Why should this man go into England, and in the hearing, or at any rate to the knowledge of that nation with which we have such close political relations; within the hearing of the great public men with whom we have dealings every hour, why should he go and represent his compatriots in a certain light, and then cross the channel and immediately represent them as an unsatisfied people, as a people who cannot give vent to their aspirations, as a people who are not free because living side by side with them there is a majority of a different race to whom they are obliged to bow, and before whom they are not even free to express their own opinions. Is it right; is it just to the people of his own nationality; is it true? Is there not more truth in what the right hon. the Prime Minister has told us time and again in both provinces, and has told us so eloquently in this House that he was applauded by both sides: That we live in Canada a united people, that for his own part, he has resolved to devote the remainder of his life to the union of the people of the different races in this country, and, that he will die satisfied if that union is effected. Is there anything of that spirit in this interview with Mr. Tarte? Does it not breathe rivalry between the races; does it not announce that there is one race in this country arrayed against the other. I leave it to hon. gentlemen to judge.

I say therefore, Mr. Speaker, that this language used by the Minister of Public Works is unfair to the people of the province of Quebec. I venture to say that in giving utterance to these views,—views expressed on one side of the channel totally different from the views expressed on the other—that the Minister of Public Works will not meet with the approval of his fellow countrymen of French origin who have preserved many of the traits of their French progenitors, foremost amongst which is frankness and truthfulness. But, Sir, there is something more. In my opinion the language is neither just nor fair to the English-speaking people of Canada. According to the tenor of this interview they are the majority and are capable of defending themselves, but as a matter of justice, is it right or is it true that they have assumed the position set out in this interview towards their French Canadian fellow countrymen? I find none of that in my own province. Both races get on very well together. There is no disposition to oppress, and although I may not speak with authority for the people of the other provinces, I venture to say that if that sentiment which Mr. Tarte speaks of as existing among 99 per cent of the people of his province; if that sentiment had been made manifest I believe it would have been respected by the English speaking people of Canada. I believe there is no desire on their part to terrorize; no desire to impose at whatever cost the will of the majority upon the minority.

I say furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that the language used by the Minister of Public Works is unfair to the people of England. It leads them to a false impression. We know how things are in these great European countries. A writer in England will take up the speech of the Minister of Public Works as it appears in the Canadian Gazette; he will make it the subject of an article in an English review and show how Great Britain has managed her colonies with such beneficial results to people of different race, different language and different creed. The same tendency to write on public issues exists in France, and we know what the rich literature of that great country is, and what reviews are produced. A man will take up this interview in France, and he will show conclusively from the uncontradicted words of the Minister of Public Works; that in a colony where Great Britain has a majority of English people she will avail of it to terrorize, to be unjust, and to oppress the minority. That is not fair to the people of England. It is not fair, as I have said, to the people of France with whom we are dealing at the present moment. It is not fair to the people of the province of Quebec. It is not fair to the English-speaking people of Canada, and it is not fair to the metropolis, and to the people who are busy there with the administration of affairs in this country. Sir, I will not go any further. I believe that if this mode of action on the part of the Minister of Public Works is allowed to go on, we will have a repetition of it frequently. The government has it in its power to put an end to this state of things. I think we are entitled, under these circumstances, to ask the government to interfere and to contradict the false impression which must be created by statements of this kind emanating from a man in such a high position as the Minister of Public Works. I believe the government can easily put an end to this before it proceeds any further. I think it would be extremely unjust to tax the right hon. gentleman who leads the government, to tax a man like the Minister of Inland Revenue, to tax the Postmaster General, or to tax the party itself with the consequences of such conduct as this, but, I believe, that unless the government ceases to remain silent and ceases to condone by its silence the action of our representative in Paris; then, Sir, far from this exhibition being beneficial as it should be to our country, it will be extremely detrimental, and results which we never anticipated will flow from the inaction of the government. I trust that the government will see fit to use authority to put an end to this state of affairs. I beg, Mr. Speaker, to move the adjournment of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just placed this motion in your hands has told us, with a degree of seriousness, which, however, he was unable to maintain to the end, that in bringing these gossipy newspaper reports to the attention of the House he was not animated by any political motive. If the hon. gentleman was not animated by any political motive, he should not have forgotten to tell us what were the true motives which animated him. I followed him very closely, and if I had not his word for it, I would certainly say that he had, in my humble judgment, no other motive than a political one. But, let the motives of the hon. gentleman be whatever they may have been in his own mind, however hostile they may be to the hon. gentleman who is now absent from this House, he will, on reflection, I believe, admit himself that it would have been in better taste, at all events more courageous, I will not say chivalrous, not to have cast any slurs and doubts upon the causes which have forced the Minister of Public Works to leave his duties on the floor of this House and go to another country. The hon. gentleman has not told us in so many words, but he has left no one in doubt as to his own conviction, that the Minister of Public Works was shamming disease—that he was not ill. Well, Sir, I have only to place myself in the judgment of the House as to that allegation. Is there a man here, whether friend or foe, who has seen the Minister of Public Works for the last six months who will have any doubts as to what were the conditions of the hon. gentleman's health when he left Canada? And, Sir, I will say more. The hon. gentleman is no friend of the Minister of Public Works; but the man does not live, whether friend or foe, who, until this day and until the hon. gentleman spoke, has ever dared to charge the Minister of Public Works with a want of courage. The hon. gentleman knows that of all the charges which can be brought against the Minister of Public Works—and he is not impeccable, whatever my hon. friend who has just addressed the House may be—that is not a sin which can be laid at his door. True it is my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has been very active since he has been in Europe; but the hon. gentleman knows very well that so long as the Minister of Public Works has a breath in his body, he shall never spare himself; he shall always be active, as he has been. Now, Sir, I come to the newspaper gossip which the hon. gentleman has thought not beneath the dignity of this House to bring to its attention. I must admire the prudence with which my hon. friend has dealt with this subject. He has spoken of the language attributed to the Minister of Public Works as having been delivered in London; but if my memory does not fail me, my hon. friend did not qualify in any degree that language. He referred to it, but did not express any approval or disapproval of it. He passed it over, and passed on to the language attributed to the Minister of Public Works as having been spoken in France; and although he made some qualifications of that, they were very tender and gingerly. The only point on which the hon. gentleman insisted was that there was a contradiction in the language attributed to the Minister of Public Works as spoken in London and as spoken in France. The hon. gentleman said, not in so many words, but by implication, that in England the Minister of Public Works had pandered to English sentiment, whereas in France he had pandered to French sentiment. I have only to ask the hon. gentleman—and I put the question not only to him, but to every other member of this House—is it fair to judge a public man upon newspaper reports of his sayings when he has not had the opportunity of saying whether the report is correct or incorrect? There is not a man in this House who would hold himself responsible for words attributed to him in the public press unless he had an opportunity of saying whether or not he had been correctly reported.

Mr. MONK. The right hon. gentleman must bear in mind that this was published in his own paper.

The PRIME MINISTER. The fact that it was published in La Patrie does not alter the case.

Mr. MACLEAN. He inspired it.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is the reporter who says that, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman would hold the Minister of Public Works blamable for it, though no man in this House would hold himself answerable for words attributed to him by a reporter without his having an opportunity of saying whether or not he had been correctly reported. It was stated in the papers some time ago that the Minister of Public Works had had an interview with Dr. Leyds, although, so far as I know, Mr. Tarte never saw Dr. Leyds. Now, I ask hon. members of this House whether it is right and just towards the Minister of Public Works to hold him accountable for words attributed to him, either as delivered in a speech or as spoken to a reporter, under such circumstances? I am sure I can appeal on this point to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, because it is only within a few days that he himself had occasion to correct a report of a speech of his in one of his own organs, the Quebec Chronicle. It was only last Saturday week that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition made a speech in the city of Quebec, which I will not qualify or discuss today, because it is not relevant to the question at issue. I will abstain from all comments on that speech which I might otherwise be tempted to make, and will confine myself strictly to the point at issue. In that speech the hon. gentleman, discussing the very intimate relations that might exist between Canada and Great Britain, was reported to have said that if those relations had been in existence this year the contribution of Canada to the defence of the empire would have been $46,000,000. He did not say $46,000,000 this year; but the Quebec Chronicle, his own organ, omitted the qualification limiting the amount to this year, and made him say that as a general rule the contribution of Canada to the defence of the empire would be that amount. The French papers corrected the report. Le Journal and Le Courrier du Canada said that what the hon. gentleman meant was that this year, and not as a general thing, the contribution would be $46,000,000. I ask my hon. friend if it would have been fair to the hon. the leader of the opposition to take him to task for this report before he had the opportunity of correcting it. But this is the very thing which my hon. friend is doing to the Minister of Public Works, without giving him an opportunity to make any defence, without calling upon him to say whether or not he has been correctly reported, the hon. gentleman asks this House to censure him. I appeal to the sense of fairness which must be in the breast of every man, whether on the one side or the other, whether it would not be most unjust and unwarranted for this House to pass any judgment, before my hon. colleague has had the opportunity of saying whether or not he has been correctly reported. The Minister of Public Works will come back and will stand face to face with his opponents, and I have no doubt will be prepared to take up the cudgels with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier and defend his position. I have only to ask that we should deal out to the Minister of Public Works that measure of justice which would not be denied to any man on the floor of this House or any where else.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN (Montmorency). I have a very few words to add to what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has said in moving the adjournment. My right hon. friend spoke of gossipy newspaper reports and tried to treat very lightly this interview which has appeared in a most important French newspaper in Paris. He appeared to think it not deserving the serious attention of this House. But I would ask my right hon. friend, who knows the Parisian press very well, if it is not a fact that Le Journal de Paris is one of the most important newspapers published in the French capital, and I would call his attention moreover to the fact that this interview has appeared over the signature of a man well known in the French journalistic profession. If this interview were not correct, if it did not give the sentiments expressed by the Minister of Public Works, this man, under whose signature it appears, would not be able to occupy any longer the eminent position he holds in French journalism. As my right hon. friend knows, Parisian journalism is not at all like the journalism we have on this side. He knows that these articles which are signed, not only represent the ideas of those who write them, but must be most accurate. In fact that is the very reason why it has become the custom in France for journalists to sign their articles.

There is another proof why we can take it for granted that this interview was really given by the Minister of Public Works and that the report accurately gives what he said, and that proof is this. We know very well that these opinions were expressed in this country by the Minister of Public Works before he left our shores; and among other speeches in which the hon. minister gave utterance to them, I could cite the speech he delivered at St. Vincent de Paul. We know further, that the newspaper which, if not edited exclusively by himself, is inspired by him—in which not an important article appears without his supervision—this very paper expresses the same opinions as those to which the hon. gentleman gave utterance in that Parisian in-interview. That other organ of the party, Le Soleil, published in the city of Quebec, reproduced the interview. My right hon. friend will not say that his friend, Mr. Ernest Pacaud would take it upon himself to publish in the Liberal organ of the city of Quebec an interview with one of the leading members of the administration, a trusted lieutenant of the right hon. gentleman, without knowing that the views expressed in that interview were those really held by that hon. gentleman. La Patrie of last evening does not deny one iota of the sentiments expressed in that interview, but, on the contrary, tries to justify them. It does not deny that the hon. Minister of Public Works expressed the views attributed to him in that interview, but, on the contrary, says that if he did give utterance to them, he did what was right. We can take it for granted, therefore, that this interview was really given and correctly reported, and my right hon. friend must admit that the views expressed are those of his colleague, and I say it is most unfortunate that the Minister of Public Works should have been given the opportunity of thus unburdening himself in one of the most influential and widely read papers in the French capital. As my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has said: Here is a gentleman, who is not only the chief commissioner of Canada, representing this great country at the Paris exhibition, where the whole world is represented, but is also a minister of the Crown and a trusted lieutenant of the leader of the government, making public these views in one of the most influential French newspapers. And what does this hon. gentleman say? He says that it is possible under the British constitution for a minister of the cabinet to differ from his colleagues on one of the most important subjects that ever came to their attention and still remain a member of the administration. We have him declaring that it was possible for him, as Minister of Public Works, to differ absolutely from his colleagues on the question of sending troops to the Transvaal, and yet still remain in the administration which despatched these contingents to help the mother country. We have him declaring that it is possible for a cabinet minister to hold the view that the money expended on the contingents could have been used to much better advantage in other ways, and yet still remain a member of the administration. I scarcely think that the right hon. First Minister could endorse any such declaration.

My right hon. friend spoke a moment ago about the motive of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. Why, these motives are quite evident. My hon. friend was not at all impelled by political motives because there is nothing politically to be gained in this matter, but he was impelled by the desire to have these unseemly exhibitions put a stop to. He was moved by the desire to have a minister of the Crown prevented from expressing views which are utterly at variance with a true understanding of the constitution of the country.

But, however great a mistake the Minister of Public Works committed in talking about the constitution of this country and the sending of the contingents as he did, he made a greater mistake when he said openly in Paris of all places—in the capital of that country which we know is hostile in feeling and sentiment to the British Empire—that 99 per cent of the French Canadians of Lower Canada disapproved of our sending the contingents to Africa. How is it that the first lieutenant, the intimate friend, the most important member of the administration of the right hon. gentleman could go over to Paris, after the speech of my right hon. friend in reply to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), and say that my right hon. friend, in the sentiments he then expressed, only represented 1 per cent of the population of the province of Quebec. Is it true that my right hon. friend's influence has so diminished in that province that it lies in the mouth of one of his own ministers to say that he represents only 1 per cent of those he is more specially called upon to represent in this House? Why, referring to the speech from the Throne, delivered at the beginning of the session, what do we find:

Hostilities having unfortunately broken out during recess between Great Britain and the South African Republic, it appeared to my ministers expedient to anticipate the action of parliament by equipping and forwarding two contingents of volunteers to the seat of war as a practical evidence of the profound devotion and loyalty of the entire people of Canada to the sovereign and institutions of the British Empire.

Is it a fact, Sir, that since that speech was placed in the mouth of His Excellency, the articles written in La Patrie, have had such a baneful influence on the minds of the people of the province of Quebec that that sentence is not true? Is it the fact that the act of the government did not indicate the devotion of the entire people of this country towards the Sovereign and the British Empire, but only represents 1 per cent of the people of the province of Quebec? As a French Canadian, I protest against this aspersion cast upon us by the hon. gentleman. I say it is not true that 99 per cent of the French Canadians of the province of Quebec are opposed to the war; it is not true that they say it is an unjust war; it is not true that the sending of the contingents is disapproved of by 99 per cent of the inhabitants of the province of Quebec. And, Sir, I would go further, and say that when the hon. gentleman, speaking as he did to this reporter in Paris, says that the loyalty of the French Canadians is a loyalty forced upon them, that it is not a voluntary loyalty, he is simply calumniating his fellow-countrymen.

Not to enlarge further upon this subject, I simply say that the motive of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), in bringing this question before the House, and the motive that I have in speaking to it, is that the Minister of Public Works should, as I have said, have some intimation that when he speaks in this way, he does not reflect the views of the administration and the views of Canada. And, if it is impossible to repress him, if he is so irrepressible that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), has lost influence over him, the duty of the administration is to call him back as soon as possible, so that he may not any longer compromise the good name and reputation of Canada and especially of the French Canadians.

Motion (Mr. Monk) to adjourn, negatived.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH TRINIDAD.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I had anticipated to-day presenting to the House some statement respecting the negotiations with the colony of Trinidad and laying on the Table the papers in relation to that subject. I regret, however, that I am unable to carry out my intention in that respect, the reason being that the correspondence is to some extent of a confidential nature, and I have not been able to obtain the consent of the government of Trinidad to bring down that portion of it. I have made application, and, as soon as their consent is obtained, the papers will be laid before the House.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call attention to an item that appears in the Montreal Gazette of this morning, as follows :

London, April 17.—Suspected cases of foot and mouth disease have been found among United States cattle at Deptford. It is expected the market will be closed to them after April 30.

There was no market for cattle or sheep to-day.

I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) if his attention has been called to this matter, and, if so, what steps have been taken to prevent the importation of this disease into Canada, as I understand that the regulations respecting the importation of cattle from the United States are such that it would be a very easy matter for the disease to be imported into this country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). My attention has not been called to the article in question, nor have I heard of cattle exported to England being infected with the foot and mouth disease. But I have given instructions by which ships leaving Canada with cattle, shall be so protected as to insure the safety from such attacks of cattle aboard them.

Mr. SPROULE. But how about cattle coming into Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will attend to that.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty, and the motion of Sir Charles Tupper in amendment thereto.

Mr. ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL (Kent, Ont.) Mr. Speaker, it is with a little hesitation that I rise to continue the discussion on the budget, for the reason that it has been so thoroughly discussed that I fear that no new points or anything of particular interest to the House can be brought out. Still, the budget debate is one that always arouses a great deal of discussion, the subject being one in which the House and the country are always deeply interested. It is what I may call a great stock-taking time. On the discussion of the budget, it is the duty of the members of the opposition as well as of supporters of the government, to review the government's entire proceedings of the past year, and to discuss the plans that have been promulgated for the advancement of the country. It is the time, above all others, when the opposition can define their policy. If they are dissatisfied with the course of the government, it is their duty to lay their cause for dissatisfaction before the House in the form of a resolution for which they seek the approval of the House. If they think the government have been too extravagant in their expenditure, it is their duty to point that out. If the course pursued by the government in reference to the tariff or other great questions of policy do not meet their approval, it is their duty to lay that fact before the House, in the form of a motion. I congratulate the Minister of Finance, and the government generally, on the fact that, notwithstanding this, and notwithstanding the wide range of subjects that have engaged the attention of the House, the opposition have not found it consistent with their duty or have not deemed it necessary to place their views before the House in the form of a resolution, except with regard to one point. The only objection thus embodied is to the preference that has been given to the mother country. The opposition have found no fault, they have not censured the government for their expenditure or for their management of the finances of the country, but the one point on which they declare that their opinion is that of repealing this preference. If they come into power, it will be their duty, if they carry out their promises and their resolution, immediately to repeal the clause granting a preference to the motherland. I congratulate the leader of the opposition and his party, on the stand they have taken on this question. I am satisfied that though it may meet with their approval, it will not meet with the approval of the great mass of the electors of this country, and I believe that if they pursue that line of policy, they will remain in the cold shades of opposition for many years to come.

I wish now to refer to a statement made by the member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) in his address last night. He found a good deal of fault with the government for what he called their delay in proceeding with business. He said we had been in session for over two months and had made no progress at all, and that a great many reports were not brought down. As to delay in bringing down the reports, I do not know whether that is the fault of the government or of the printers. I think, however, it is to be regretted that these reports have not been brought down sooner; and I have no doubt that the government will at the earliest possible date find out who is to blame for the delay, and will see that this evil does not occur again. It is necessary for the proper discussion of the affairs of the country that all these reports should be in the hands of the members as soon as possible. But I do not think the hon. member for Lennox can justly bring a charge against the government for delaying the work of the House. I have been here, as well as the member for Lennox, for a good many sessions, and we remember that under the old government, for the first month of the session, we were scarcely ever sitting more than half an hour a day. This session began on the 1st of February, and I believe there has scarcely been a day that we did not continue in session until 11, or 12, or 1 o'clock in the morning. The work was on the paper, and there has not been a single day that the government were not prepared to ask the House to consider their measures. I say if the work has been delayed it is not the fault of the government but of the opposition.

Now, I have been looking over the Votes and Proceedings, and I find that since parliament met on the 1st of February last we have had no less than twenty motions that this House do now adjourn, similar to the one that we had to-day, for the sole purpose of obstructing and delaying the proceedings of the House. The leader of the opposition on the 8th of February, moved the adjournment of the House to bring up a matter that he, I suppose, considered important, but which kept back the business of the House for a whole day. On the 9th of February the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) made a similar motion, and destroyed nearly a whole day in discussing it. On the 13th of February the member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) moved the adjournment of the House; on the 26th of February the leader of the opposition again moved that the House do now adjourn; on the 5th of March the member for North Bruce again moved the adjournment of the House; on the 6th of March the member for Victoria, B.C., again moved the adjournment of the House; on the 7th of March the member for West Elgin (Mr. Ingram) moved the adjournment of the House; on the 14th of March the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), moved the adjournment of the House; on the 15th, the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), moved the adjournment of the House; on the 16th the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), again moved the adjournment of the House; on the 20th the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), moved the adjournment of the House; on the 21st the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) moved the adjournment of the House; on the 26th the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), moved the adjournment of the House; on April 3rd the member for Victoria, B.C., again moved the adjournment of the House; on April 5th the junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), moved the adjournment of the House; on the 10th the leader of the opposition again moved the adjournment of the House. All these motions were followed by discussions which delayed the business of the House, the same as has been done this afternoon. This whole afternoon has been literally wasted with a frivolous question, of no importance at all to the public, about which the public don't care a rap. The discussion was not only in bad taste, but exceedingly unfair and ungenerous to a member of this House who is in a distant land. I think it was in exceedingly bad taste for the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), on a mere newspaper report, without having verified it, without the Minister of Public Works having had an opportunity to correct it, to bring forward a motion which was practically a motion of censure, based upon an alleged interview with him published in a newspaper. So I say that the reason of the delay, which I regret as much as anybody, is not found in the action of the government, but it has been caused by the frivolous motions to adjourn that have been made by the opposition. Now, in England it requires, I am told, about forty members to rise in their place and demand that such a motion shall pass before it can be put by the Speaker. I think we have had more of that kind of motions this session than in any session that I ever knew before. Therefore, I think the charge made against the government by the member for Lennox is not at all justified.

Mr. WILSON. What has that to do with not bringing down the reports?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I said the lack of the reports has not delayed the business of the House, because every day the government had plenty of work for the House to go on with, but they could not go on with it because of these frivolous motions. If the government had been allowed to proceed with their work and had failed to do so, then the hon. gentleman's charge might be justified.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before taking up some other matters referred to by the member for Lennox, I wish to compliment the Minister of Finance and the government on the splendid budget speech which he has been able to present to the House. I am sure that there never has been a Minister of Finance in this country who has been able to lay before the House such a gratifying statement of the progress and advancement of Canada as that made by the present Minister of Finance. I am sure we are all pleased that the country is going ahead at such a rapid rate as is shown by these diagrams published in the budget speech. While I do not pretend that all the prosperity we are enjoying is due to this government, I do say that a large measure of it is owing to the businesslike way in which the affairs of the country have been managed, to the ability that has been shown by the gentlemen who have charge of the various departments in the government. I say that it is with a government as with business men. If two men start in business one may succeed and the other will lag behind. It is owing to management, not to luck. You may say it is all good luck, but it is not. The progress of Canada is owing to the fact that its affairs have been managed by business men, that the government have invested our resources in the right place and at the right time, and that the different departments of the government have all been managed in such a way as to redound to the benefit of the country and the credit of the government. It is shown, Sir, by the fact, and I almost feel like apologizing to the House for even referring to it, because I know that every member of the House has heard it over and over again, but it is necessary to repeat it once in a while, of the extraordinary progress we have made in the last few years, compared with what has taken place before. Such a comparison shows the enormous progress we have made in every department, in our exports and in our imports. The foreign trade of Canada, during the whole of the eighteen years that our Conservative friends were in power, only increased by $67,000,000, while, in the three short years that this government have been in power the foreign trade of Canada has increased by no less than $82,000,000, as against $67,000,000 for the eighteen years of Conservative rule. This is exceedingly gratifying, this is very satisfactory to the country, and I am sure it is a showing that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the government may be complimented upon. Our Conservative friends are trying to make political capital out of the charge that we have increased the expenditure of the country and increased the debt of the country contrary to our promises and pledges. They say that the government have increased the expenditure by an enormous sum.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What are the facts? These hon. gentlemen talk about $45,000,000 of a total expenditure for all purposes, or $51,000,000, as if there never had been such an expenditure made before in this country. When we go to the public accounts we find that the total expenditure of these hon. gentlemen, in 1884, was $57,800,000, that, in 1885, their expenditure was over $49,000,000, that, in 1886, they spent $61,800,000, that, in 1888, they spent $45,000,000, and that, in 1896, they spent a little over $44,000,000. Their average expenditure for all purposes during the eighteen years they were in power was $42,800,000 per year, in round numbers. Yet they talk about the enormous increase in the expenditure. I do not think it is fair to place the whole expenditure to the charge of the government; I do not think that should be taken into account at all, and I am only doing it for the purpose of showing the inconsistency and unfairness of our friends on the other side of the House, when they compare the amount charged to consolidated fund under their regime with the total amount paid for all purposes by this government. This government have carried on enormous public works; they have spent over $9,000,000 upon the early completion of the canals, a work that, I am sure, must commend itself to the great mass of the people of the country, a work that, it is true, the government fell heir to, a work that was started by our friends of the Conservative party before they left office, but they proceeded at a snail's pace, and if the work had proceeded at this rate we would not have had fourteen feet of water for five or six years from now, whereas, we have the gratifying announcement that these canals will be completed by the opening of navigation, to a depth of fourteen feet from tide-water to the upper lakes. This work has entailed a large expenditure. In addition to that, we have aided the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and we have extended the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. These works will not be required again, and, consequently, we may expect, for the next two or three years, in all probability, unless some big undertaking comes up that will demand and receive the support of this House, that the amount paid on account of these large expenditures will be very much reduced, and if so, our expenditure will accordingly be reduced. It is hardly fair to take into account capital expenditure that the government make unless you can show that the capital expenditure has not been a wise expenditure; an expenditure that should not be made at all, that it is not making a sufficient return to the country. Unless you can do that it is not wise and it is not fair to bring the amount of the capital expenditure into the question at all. If you do take the total expenditure into account, as I pointed out before, it compares very favourably, it compares exceedingly well with the expenditure made by the old government. They talk about $45,000,000 and $51,000,000 of an expenditure. I am amazed to think that gentlemen will talk about such expenditures when they know that their own government spent some $61,000,000 in one year, and $57,000,000, nearly $58,000,000, in another year, and that their total expenditure for the whole eighteen years averaged nearly $43,000,000 a year. The expenditure that this government have made has been a wise expenditure, and I am sure that it will meet with the approval of the people of the country. The extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal surely was a splendid thing. Whatever opinions may have been held as to the wisdom of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal when it was first proposed, surely, there can be no difference of opinion now that it is a splendid thing for this country. When we take the Intercolonial Railway, that has cost the people, in round numbers, $55,000,000 in hard cash, that has never paid one single farthing of interest on this vast expenditure, that has not paid its running expenses, when we were obliged to put our hands into the public chest and take out, on an average, $250,000 every year more than the road earned to keep it running, which was the state of things existing under the old regime, and contrast it with the present state of affairs, we must all admit the wisdom of the extension of this line to Montreal. Every year that these hon. gentlemen were in power the Intercolonial Railway was referred to as a sink-hole for the public money of this country. But, this government came into power, they recognized the necessity of doing something to remedy that state of affairs, they saw the great city of Montreal, with its 300,000 people, within a stone's throw of that road, they knew that by extending that road to the great metropolis of Canada it would be able to receive freight and to dictate the rates of freight that would bring to the Intercolonial Railway earning powers that it did not have then, they wisely ventured on that expenditure and brought the Intercolonial to Montreal, with the result that this deficit of $250,000 a year has been wiped out, and last year $62,000 of a surplus was earned and turned into the treasury of this Dominion by the Intercolonial Railway. I believe that, when the returns come down on the 30th of June this year, we will have still more gratifying results from the operation of that road. Whatever doubts we may have had when the scheme was first promulgated, there surely cannot be any doubt now as to the wisdom of extending that road to Montreal. It has been of vast benefit to the people of Canada. It has not only, as I said, wiped out the deficit of $250,000 a year, but it has turned in a handsome revenue to the people of the country. I believe, as years go by, as the road gets its feeders out, as it gets its lines of communication established, and as the great stream of commerce is diverted towards it, the results will be still more gratifying, and this extension will redound to the everlasting credit of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) who brought it about. I know, as a matter of fact, that immediately the Intercolonial Railway was extended to Montreal, it had its agents in Toronto, in Detroit, in Chicago, in Duluth, in Buffalo, and in all the great cities of the west, soliciting freight; and, as the great west develops, and as the millions and millions of bushels of wheat produced there, will find an outlet to the seaboard, we may look forward to the time in the near future, when the Intercolonial Railway will receive its due share of that business, and will be able to return to the people of Canada a handsome surplus over the expenditure made on it. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country expect, nor do I think they should expect any very large surplus from the Intercolonial Railway. I look upon that line of railway as being in a somewhat similar position to our canal system. It is the great highway for inter-trade and inter-commerce between the maritime provinces and western Canada, and it is my opinion that the freights on that road should be cut down to the lowest possible extent, consistent with its meeting its obligations to the public.

Mr. POWELL. Especially on flour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Especially on flour and everything else. I believe that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway should be kept as low as possible, in order that the people in the maritime provinces can get their supplies from the upper provinces at the lowest possible rates, and in order also that the people of the upper provinces may secure the products of the lower provinces as cheaply as possible. Therefore, we should not expect, nor does this parliament, I believe, desire that we should expect a very large surplus from the Intercolonial Railway. However, Sir, it is exceedingly gratifying to know that this railway which has cost the people of Canada such an enormous sum of money, has, on account of the extension to Montreal, so wisely carried out by this government; it is gratifying I say to know that it has not only wiped out the large deficit which existed formerly on it, but that it has yielded a surplus to the revenues of this country.

Mr. POWELL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him, if he is not aware that there have been surpluses on the Intercolonial Railway in years before?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am speaking now of the whole management of the Intercolonial Railway. I am speaking subject to correction, but I believe it to be a fact that while there might have been a surplus in an odd year, the annual deficit during the eighteen years of Conservative administration was nearly a quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. POWELL. What was it, taking the five years previous to the purchase of the Drummond County road?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I cannot enter into that matter now.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman will be surprised to know that there was no deficit for these five years, taking them all together.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I might point out further, Mr. Speaker, that in the management of the Intercolonial Railway, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), has increased the salaries and wages of the employees of that road, and as the country prospers, and when we have 'a vaster surplus than has been,' the minister (Mr. Blair) has very wisely, in my opinion, enabled the employees, who toil along the line of that railway, to share in our prosperity. I am glad to know that the minister (Mr. Blair) during the short time he has been in power, has generously increased the wages of the employees who are working on that road, and who help to promote its prosperity. Let me for a moment refer to the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. I say, Sir, that the plan selected by the government for that extension, and the terms obtained, were the very wisest that could be obtained, and were the best possible in the interests of the country. When it was decided to extend it to Montreal, a better route could not possibly have been selected, or better terms made. I look upon the terms obtained from the Grand Trunk Railway for the use of the line between Ste. Rosalie and Bonaventure station, as exceptionally good. I do not believe that it was in the power of any individual or any railway company, to obtain such excellent terms as we obtained from the Grand Trunk Railway. We have got the use of their station at Montreal, access to their sidings and switches, and all the conveniences that they have been acquiring for fifty years, and which are of almost inestimable value. The purchase of the Drummond County road, was, in my opinion, a wise policy also. I had the pleasure of going over that road a short time ago, and I was agreeably surprised to find that for a large part of the route it ran through a beautiful and rich agricultural country, and for a portion of the way, through a forest, that will yield revenues to the road for many years to come. I am told that when the lumber is removed from the forest land, the soil is rich and fertile, and can easily be developed into a first-class agricultural country. We may, therefore, reasonably expect that for many years to come, we will have a large amount of freight from the district through which the Drummond County Railway runs. The terms made in the purchase of the Drummond County road, were certainly reasonable, and the conditions under which the facilities from the Grand Trunk Railway were obtained, could not, I believe, have been more advantageous to the country.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

Bill (No. 136) respecting the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I was referring, when you left the Chair, to certain charges that were brought against the government that they had not fulfilled the promises they had made to the electors previous to the election. One of those promises was that they would reduce the expenditure, and inasmuch as the expenditure has slightly increased, it is charged that they have not carried out that promise. I think a little investigation will show you that this charge is altogether unfounded. It is quite true, the expenditure on consolidated fund is slightly higher than it was during the regime of the Conservatives; but I think that every single dollar of that extra expenditure can be fairly accounted for, and furthermore, when you compare the services performed by the Conservative government with the services performed by this government, you will find that the expenditure for doing the same work has been largely reduced instead of being increased. For instance, I may point to the Post Office Department, in which under the management of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mullock), the services have enormously increased within the last few years. Since 1896 no less than 560 new post offices have been opened, and the mail mileage has increased by two and a half million miles. These increases in the service would naturally entail a considerable increased expenditure on that department; yet so well has the department been managed that its total expenditure last year was $62,000 less than it was in 1896. If time permitted, I might go through nearly all the departments and show that service for service the expenditure is much less to-day than it was in 1896. In the Department of Railways and Canals, the expenditure for salaries and so forth, in 1896, was $141,000, while in 1899 it was only $124,000. In the Department of Agriculture the expenditure in 1896 was $54,000; it is now $52,000. The expenditure of the Marine and Fisheries Department then was $135,000; it is now $124,950. In the Customs Department there has been a considerable saving; and in the Auditor General's office the same. In the management and control of our penitentiaries there has been an enormous saving, although the work has increased. For instance, in the Kingston Penitentiary, the expenditure for salaries of officials and so forth, in 1896, was $5,600, and in 1899, $3,800. In St. Vincent de Paul the same kind of expenditure in 1896 amounted to $6,800, and in 1899 to $1,300. I venture to say that if you went through all the departments you would find that the management and control of these departments has been carried on with less money than in 1896. But all the same the total expenditure has increased—why? Because of the enormous increase in the work. For instance, take the Yukon where the Conservative government spent only $10,000 or $15,000 in 1896, whereas this government since it came into power has spent $2,300,000 there. The appropriation last year, if I remember rightly, was nearly $2,000,000, and it swelled the estimates that much. That was for a new service with which the late government had comparatively nothing to do. But the expenditure in connection with the Yukon has been managed, I am glad to say, prudently, economically and in the interests of the people. No government could afford to develop the Yukon. As soon as the news came down of the discoveries of gold in that distant country, it was necessary to provide the means of maintaining law and order, of opening custom-houses, and of appointing officers to administer the affairs of the district, situated as it was at a great distance from the seat of government, and without any means of reaching it except by a long and tedious route. For these reasons the expenses connected with the opening up and development of that country were very heavy indeed. But the wise regulations of the government and the proper administration of that country have brought back to the people of Canada more than it has cost them. In other words, although we have spent $2,300,000 in the Yukon, we have actually received in receipts from all the departments there over $2,500,000. Therefore, so far as the development of the Yukon is concerned it has been no charge to the people of older Canada at all. In fact, older Canada has derived a revenue from the administration of that country, and as the years go on, I expect we will get a very large revenue from the Yukon.

At first, of course, everything was in a state of chaos, there was no means of communication, in fact, we did not know the country, it was not surveyed, everything was in a state of confusion. The eyes of the civilized world were turned towards the Yukon, and men from all countries under the sun were rushing in there regardless of expense, regardless of the situation. It was necessary for this government to take prompt and decisive measures to maintain law and order, at no matter what expense. Although they have been censured severely by the leader of the opposition, I think they deserve a great deal of credit for immediately despatching to that distant country a detachment of the North-west mounted police. Those men going in there were able to restore order and to maintain it, so that in the city of Dawson law and order, life and property, were as safe as in the city of Ottawa, or any other place. This, of course, entailed an enormous expense. For my part, I believe that now when the country is better known, when we have improved facilities for getting in there, when the charges for transportation of freight and passengers have been largely reduced, I believe the country will receive, in the next few years, a large amount of revenue from the Yukon. This is the hope that we all entertain.

In this connection, let me say that the contract that was given by this government to Mackenzie & Mann, in my opinion, was one of the best contracts for the country that ever was made; and when the Senate refused to sanction that contract, I think they did one of the greatest injuries to the Dominion of Canada that have ever been inflicted on it. As the member for Lennox objected to that contract very much, let us consider what it was. According to that contract Mackenzie & Mann were to build a wagon road first, and then a railroad from Teslin Lake to Glenora, a distance of 150 miles, with stations every ten miles for the shelter of passengers who might be going in there. They were obliged to build that road by the first day of October, I think it was, in the shortest possible time. In payment for that work they were to get 3,750,000 acres of land. That is a big tract of country, 3,750,000 acres of land around the city of Ottawa would be worth an enormous sum of money. But, we must remember that in that distant country we have 100,000,000 acres of land that we do not know the value of to-day, we cannot estimate whether it is worth anything, or what it is worth. We said to Mackenzie & Mann: We will give you one twenty-fifth part of that 100,000,000 acres of land, exclusive of the placer mining, if you will open up this country. There were besides certain restrictions which the government placed in that contract to guard the interests of the people. For instance, along the navigable streams, fifty feet from high water on each side was reserved, all the claims that were taken up by miners who had gone in there were reserved; and Mackenzie & Mann had to take their land in alternate sections three miles wide and six miles long. Every other claim was held by the government. Now, if Mackenzie & Mann, as I hoped they would, had discovered some valuable gold mines on their land, the adjoining sections belonging to the people of Canada would be enormously enhanced in value, and thus we would get back in the increased price of our land a full return for all the expenditure that we were making. But, nobody has discovered any gold mines on that land yet. Those lands are in the same state to-day that they have been in for the last million years, and they will be of no value until some one goes in there and develops them. Now, when Mackenzie & Mann got this 3,750,000 acres of land, what were they going to do with it? They could not eat it, they could not take it away with them, it would have been necessary for them to go in there with machinery to develop their land, and find out whether there was any gold there or not. We want people in there. These men going in there would have to be fed and clothed, they would have to be supplied with all the necessaries of life, and this would give employment to the farmers of the Northwest, and would give employment to our manufacturers all over Canada. If they did not discover any gold in that country, still this railway did not cost us anything; but, if they did discover gold there, if they struck some rich mines, as I hoped they would, then, as I said before, the adjoining sections would be enormously increased in value. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it was a fatal day for Canada, it was a disastrous day for Canada, when the Senate threw that Bill out. I believe if it had been carried we would have had access to that country by this time, the railway would have been built, and the enormous trade and commerce that would have been developed in that country would have been going from our own country, through our own territory, to the Yukon, whereas, now we have to go round through American territory. I believe that a good bargain was made for Canada, and I regret exceedingly that the Senate threw out that Bill. We have a good deal of trouble to get in there now, but if this railway had been constructed there would have been no difficulty at all, we would have the country opened up and developed, and the freight and supplies would have gone in through our own territory, and at the same time the freight rates and cost of supplies would have been enormously lowered. It would have afforded the people of the country an opportunity of getting in there for one-fourth of what it costs them now. Unfortunately, the Bill was defeated at the instigation of some gentlemen from the United States, who were anxious to have control of that freight through their own territory. I think that arrangement was in the interest of the people, I take it that the people of Canada do not care a fig how much money the government of Canada spends so long as they spend it honestly and in the interest of the people. If they were spending money which was not bringing back any return, then the people would object. We objected to the expenditure of the late government because it was wasteful and not in the interests of the country, because in fact they were stealing the money of the people. We pointed to instance after instance, in which millions of dollars of the people's money had been stolen. Within a stone's throw of the city of Montreal, a public work, which should not have cost over $400,000, cost $800,000, so that $400,000 of the people's money were stolen through the carelessness and negligence and incapacity of the Railway Department of the late government. Right across the way, in the Langevin block, $450,000 of the people's money was also stolen, and there we find that $1,000,000 of the people's money had been stolen in connection with public works built in that city. That was proven beyond doubt in the committee in this House. Why, the St. Charles Branch Railway from Lévis to St. Charles, 14 miles long, cost $185,000 a mile. What do you think of that? Go up to the county represented by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), and in the town of Perth you will find a great public work, the Tay Canal, that cost the people $500,000, and the total receipts from which are only $126 a year. The total receipts do not begin to pay for the lockmasters and the men attending the gates. The expense of running the canal is $3,000 a year, and the receipts are only $126 a year. That is the kind of work that the late government was doing and that the people objected to, and that is the kind of work that the people would condemn now if any such were being done. But with all the criticisms of hon. gentlemen opposite, with all their investigations in the Public Accounts Committee, with all the witnesses they have called from every corner of the earth, with all the returns and reports that they have had brought down, they have not been able to show that one solitary dollar of the people's money has been wasted by this administration. I tell you, Sir, that stands to the credit of this government. I do not care whether we are expending $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 for that matter, provided it is an expenditure that commends itself to the people. If it is a good investment, the people will not object to it. Suppose a man gave his farm or his store in charge of a manager, and the first year his manager showed a deficit of $500 and the next year $1,000. The proprietor would naturally say to his manager: This will not do, you will ruin me, and unless you do better I must discharge you. Well, the next year the manager showed a deficit of $1,500, and he was dismissed and a new man appointed. Under the new management, there was but a very small deficit the first year, the next year there was a handsome surplus, and the third year that surplus was trebled. What would you think if the first manager came back to the proprietor and said to him: You should dismiss your new man and put me back in the place because he is spending more money than I did. Would not the proprietor reply: I do not care how much he spends so long as he shows me good profit. You were running me into debt, but this man is giving me a handsome return. So would the people reply to hon. gentlemen opposite.

The late government had a deficit in 1894, 1895 and 1896 of nearly $6,000,000 and left a lot of debts behind them unpaid. They left a deficit in the Post Office Department of $800,000; they left a lot of railway bonuses which they had voted and had not paid; they left a lot of other debts behind them; and besides all these, their actual deficit in the three years was over $6,000,000. This government then came into power, and all at once the scene changed. Instead of deficits, we have surpluses, and this year we have a vaster surplus than has been. We have a surplus of nearly $5,000,000 this last year, and on the 1st of July next we will have a surplus of $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 more. Why, it is to the credit of this government that notwithstanding all the expenditure in connection with sending the contingents to South Africa and all the running expenses of the country, they are going to close the public accounts on the 1st of July next without adding a dollar to the public debt. In my opinion that is a record that has never been equalled in this country, and one that any government might be proud of. I believe that with the management of the affairs of this country in the hands of the men who have been guiding the ship of state so well for the last four years, we may look to still vaster surpluses than we have had. And all this, bear in mind, is accompanied by a reduced taxation. The taxes of the people have been largely reduced. If the old tariff were in force to-day, the amount taken out of the pockets of the people on the importations of last year would be something like $3,000,000 more than was paid, so that the amount of taxes has been largely reduced and our importations increased. The purchasing power of the people has been increased, the people are more prosperous and are buying more goods, but on these goods they are paying a less customs tax per dollar than they did under the late government. On every dollar they purchase, they pay a lower rate of taxation than they did in 1896. Prosperity is increasing all over the country. Under the national policy, our manufacturers were almost at a stand still. They were not making any money, but when the change of tariff took place, when the tariff was revised on business lines, when the raw material of many manufacturers was reduced, our manufacturers were enabled to extend their business as they never did before, and at the same time reduce the prices of their goods. All over the country you will find that enormous increases are taking place in our manufacturing establishments. Take the Toronto Massey-Harris Company; they spent no less than $258,000 last year in enlarging and increasing their plant. The Drummond Radiator Company have also increased their plant to a very great extent. In fact every establishment, not only in the city of Toronto but in Chatham and all over the west has largely increased its output and is employing more men and paying more wages to-day than ever before.

The condition of the mechanic and artisan also is improved. In 1896, in Toronto and in all the other cities of Canada work was hard to get, wages were low, and thousands of men were looking for work and could not find it. But under the national policy regime there was one great cause for this, and that is that the agricultural interest of this country was not in a prosperous condition. And, whenever that is the case you find many from the country, farmer's sons and men on rented farms, no longer remain on their farms, but come into the city and towns and interfere with and crowd out the mechanics and artisans of those towns, bringing greater competition to bear upon them. The remedy is to restore prosperity to the agricultural interest. This the government have done to a large extent by the policy which they have pursued. One of the principal things in this respect which stands to the credit of the government is the cold storage system, by which they enable the farmers of this country to place their goods on the English market in the very best possible condition. The returns show that nothing that any government has ever done has brought to the farmers such an enormous return of prosperity as the establishment and maintenance of the cold storage system. Last year, something like $25,000,000 in hard cash came back to the farmers of this country for their butter and cheese, while the thousand and one articles for which we formerly could not find a market we are now able to send to all parts of the world and get a fair price for. Farms now have a value and those who have them are staying on their farms; the farmers are not moving in to the cities and towns, crowding out the mechanics and workingmen. Another way in which the government have increased the expenditure, and increased it, in my opinion wisely and in the interest of the country, is in their energetic, systematic, businesslike management of the immigration department.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know that my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), knows and appreciates the fact that thousands and thousands of hardy settlers have gone into the North-west, in the last year, no less than 45,000 have gone into the North-west to settle on these lands, and in the last two years we have got from the United States alone some 22,000 settlers and placed them on the lands in the North-west. This enables the country to prosper, for it affords a market for the manufacturers of the whole of Canada and enables the great west to develop and improve, for every settler going in there makes the task light for those who are there already, and makes the burden easier to bear. And so this government has wisely increased the expenditure for the promotion of immigration. I look forward a few years to see the stream of immigration turned toward the North-west, the great tide flowing in that direction, bringing with it development and prosperity for the North-west and for the whole country.

But I am not going to take up much more of the time of the House, for I know that this subject is very threadbare. I have only one or two things to say in conclusion. Not only have the government managed the affairs of the country so as to secure for us astonishing progress in all lines, not only have they shown ability in the management and control of our lands, our national highways and other branches of the public service, but which they have signalized their regime by progressive legislation for the direct benefit of the workingmen. One of the most commendable things that the government have done in this way is the system they have recently inaugurated to prevent the subletting of contract and protect the labouring man. There is no class in the country that more demands or should more certainly receive the careful consideration of the members of this House and the members of the government. The labouring man has but his own hands with which to earn his living. Men in high position, capitalists, can take care of themselves, but it should be the aim, it is the bounden duty of the government to protect the working people of the country. That is why I rejoice to know that this government have taken a long step in that direction, the first step ever taken in that direction by a government in this country. Our Conservative friends for eighteen years sat on the Treasury benches and guided the destinies of this country, but they did nothing for the poor man and poor woman working in the sweat shops. But no sooner did this government come into power than they put a stop to this system that has proven a discredit and a curse to the Dominion, and they have placed upon the records of this House a resolution to put a stop to it. And not only have they placed the resolution there, but they have appointed a man to see that that resolution is carried out. In appointing Mr. O'Donoghue of the Trades and Labour Council of Toronto, they have called to this work a practical man, a man who understands the needs and wants of the labouring classes, a man who is competent in every way to look after the interest of the labour classes. It will be Mr. O'Donoghue's special duty to see that in all the contracts that are made, whether they are sub-let to other parties or not, every man who does an honest day's work shall receive an honest day's pay, that there shall no longer be any humbug about it, that Tom Jones cannot sub-let to Peter Smith, and he to somebody else, and that somebody else employ a lot of men and then close up and clear out and deprive the poor people of their wages. That has been stopped. Whether the contractor sub-lets to a sub-contractor or not, he is responsible; he is the agent of the government and must pay every single dollar that the men earn. More than that, the government have provided that in every place where these contracts are going on, the current rate of wages shall be paid, there shall be no beating men down, taking advantage of their helplessness, taking advantage of their necessities, to cause them to work at reduced prices; but in every case the current rate of wages shall be paid, and the men shall receive their pay. Mr. O'Donoghue. I know will faithfully discharge the duties belonging to his position. I am sure that in all the contracts that are made hereafter the current rate of wages in the town or city where the contract is let shall be paid, and men who labour on these contracts shall receive a fair day's pay. This I commend to the House, and I congratulate the government upon this progressive step, this step in the right direction. It is being followed by the Ontario legislature, as it will be followed by other colonies of the empire—and, more than that, it will be followed by the county councils and city councils all over this land. It is a long step in the right way and will be followed by the most beneficial results to the people whom it is desired to help.

There are many other points in the government's conduct, for which, in my opinion, they deserve commendation. The manner in which they have carried out the ones I have indicated shows clearly that they are the right men in the right place, and, I believe, that when the time comes, be it sooner or later, that they shall appeal to the people of this Dominion, the people of this Dominion will say unto them, Well done, good and faithful servants.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, the speech to which we have just listened, is in consonance with a quality in the government, and a quality in the Liberal party, so far as that party exists in this House, that marks the government and the Liberal party, as in this House, out, for condign condemnation at the hands of the people of Canada, because, Sir, amongst the many iniquities that this government has committed there is no wrong they have done to the people of the Dominion like the note of falsehood which they have introduced into public life, and the speech we have just listened to from beginning to end had such a false ring that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell), himself, could scarcely keep from smiling at the tone and temper and standpoint he took up and maintained. I shall ask the attention of the House for a moment, to one or two of the statements he made. As he began, so he ended, by singing the praises of the government, and he did it with such a rhythm that really, I thought he would occasionally burst into a hymn, intone a psalm, and conclude with secula seculorum. All the hon. gentlemen who rise on that side of the House, and they have done this the last two years, instead of discussing the question, praise the government. There are two inspirations of that praise. First, we have hon. gentlemen with their mouths open, like little hungry birds in the nest, when they hear a leaf stir, and think it is the mother bird that has come with a crumb, and their mouths are open with eager capacity and ready for something to drop in. They are all deeply interested in the existence of the government, they know that its existence is imperilled, and they think that they can float up the heavy carcass by laudatory wind. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down, says that the increase of trade, and the prosperity that we have, are due to the government. He began in this strain, and he repeated it before he came to his conclusion. He said that before the present government came in, all was gloom, all was darkness, and all was depression, but, the moment they came into power, everything was changed and everything was prosperous.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. An hon. gentleman says hear, hear. I will point out what the fallacy is. These same gentlemen were in power from 1874 to 1878. Did trade increase? Was prosperity the order of the day? Where not depression and retrogression the words that you would apply to the government from 1874 to 1878? Since 1896 they have introduced no new element, with the exception of the preferential tariff. There was nothing at all done in 1896, but in 1897 they introduced the element of the preference, but that, as we know, and in fact, as the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), has acknowledged, had no effect whatever, because he has had to make it 33 instead of 25 per cent, in order to make it affect the English market. A comparison of the trade between Great Britain and Canada, and the trade between Great Britain and the United States for the last four years, shows that any idea that the preference did anything for Great Britain is a delusive one. Now, here is an instance of the insincerity of which I speak. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) took the years 1883, 1884, 1885 and 1886, and said that during those years, under Conservative rule, there had been a large expenditure on capital account. He asked us to compare that expenditure with our expenditure for the last four years. But, he did not tell the House that in 1882-3, the late government spent $10,000,000 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, in 1883-4, $11,000,000, in 1884-5, $9,900,000 and in 1885-6, $3,000,000. In 1885 we had the rebellion. Here were these wholly exceptional expenditures, but the hon. gentleman is so wanting in frankness, that, when he made a comparison, he did not state one of the main reasons why that expenditure had taken place. The hon. gentleman took three or four items of expenditure on which there has been a decrease. If you will take the public accounts, and turn to item after item of expenditure, you will find that, the expenditure of this government exceeds the expenditure under the old government. Take the very first thing, interest on debt; the interest on the debt in 1895 was $10,502,000, and in 1898-9, $10,855,000; administration of justice, 1896, $758,270; 1898-9, $815,454; arts and agriculture, 1896, $210,877; 1898-9, $258,752; geological survey, 1896, $134,368; 1898-9, $149,000; immigration, 1896, $120,000; 1898-9, $255,878, and so on. There is hardly an item in which there has not been an increase. Yet, the hon. gentleman is so wanting in frankness as to take only the one or two items in which there has been a decrease. He took upon himself to justify the Teslin Lake Railway job, and to complain that a great injury was done to the people when the Senate threw that out. At this time of the day, when we have Mr. Bulyea, a leading Grit in the North-west Territories, coming back from a visit of months to that country, and stating that, for a hundred miles there was not a foot of water in the Hootalinqua, we are told the building of that railway would have been a good thing. The hon. gentleman, although supporting a government which had as one of the planks of its platform, that it would not give way the public domain, justified the giving away of 3,750,000 acres of land to these men, Mann & Mackenzie. That land is valued by the Department of the Interior, at $10 an acre, making $37,500,000.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask you to keep that gentleman in order for I do not want to turn my attention to him.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. If I have to do it myself, I will do it effectively, as I have often done. And what was this $37,500,000 for? It was for a little one-horse railway running from Nowhere to Nowhere.

An hon. MEMBER. Narrow gauge.

Mr. DAVIN. And narrow gauge at that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) says: What would Mackenzie & Mann do with it? What an innocent question! They would do what they are doing now with another railway in London; they would have gone over to float it, and they would have got $50,000,000 for it, and then they would have come back here content for life. That is what would have happened, and the credit of Canada would have been injured and we should have had a Teslin Lake Railway scandal instead of a Teslin Lake Railway. What are Mackenzie & Mann doing over in London just now? I have heard that the Minister of the Interior—I would like to know from the ministers present if it is a fact—I have heard that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), whom we supposed on the Danube; whom we supposed in Vienna consulting a great specialist; was seen in London, and seen in the financial quarters of London. The whisper of that, of course, is a slander. If we were to say a word about it and the Prime Minister were here, with fine indignation such as we saw to-day when an interview between one of the first journalists in Paris and the Minister of Public Works was brought before the House; we would hear the Prime Minister say: Oh, mere newspaper rumour—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has no right to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I will refer to what is going on on the banks of the Thames. If the Prime Minister were here, with fine indignation he would brush aside the rumour. That the Minister of the Interior, having got an eminent aurist to attend to his infirmity, has been seen on the banks of the Thames and in the financial quarters of London, helping Mackenzie & Mann to float their bonds. One of the most audacious things which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) said was that this government has come forward to protect the labourer; and the way it has protected the labourer is by a resolution. That resolution is not worth the paper it is written on, unless embodied in an Act of parliament. I moved an amendment to have it embodied in an Act of parliament. If the government were sincere, why should they object to putting that resolution into an

Mr. DAVIN.

Act of parliament? If it was not all bogus, if it was not all intended to throw dust in the eyes of the workingmen, why should they not put it in an Act of parliament? They would not do it, and yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) says the resolution will help the workingmen, and that helping the working man is something no Tory government ever did. Does he not know that when a leader of the Liberal party was oppressing the workingmen in the city of Toronto, Sir John Macdonald came to their rescue, and snatched them from the clutches of George Brown. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) tells us that the person who was to administer this resolution is a guarantee that everything is all right. And who is he? Dan O'Donoghue! Oh, breathe not his name. Well, Mr. Speaker, this gentleman will, no doubt, look carefully after the government's views and after No. 1, and if ten O'Donoghues were employed, the fact remains there will be only a resolution without authority or penalty. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) went further, and said that the people were so prosperous that they did not care what the government spent. Well, wherever I have gone, and I have gone to some places in Ontario, I have found the people very sensitive respecting the extravagance of this government. Yet, the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) says the people do not care how much this government spend. When he said that, I heard one of my friends say: 'Let her rip,' or 'Let her go, Gallagher,' and that would not be a bad motto for this government. He told us to look at the immigration! Yes, the immigration policy of this government is one of the causes why the young Napoleon has fled from justice. He is one of the ministerial fugitives from justice. I do not think he is the only criminal; he is one of the criminals. He is gone because he does not want us to examine or to arraign him here as we have arraigned him before. He has fled from the condemnation of which he had already heard something in Manitoba. Another statement which reflects on the sincerity of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell). He announced that for the first time in the history of the Intercolonial Railway we had a surplus. This was so evidently wrong that my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) asked him was he aware that his statement was not correct. I turn to the Public Accounts—page 52, 1894—and I find that for the year 1893, the revenue on the Intercolonial Railway was $3,065,499, and the expenditure $3,047,677, a surplus of $17,821. In the year 1894, the revenue was $2,987,510 on the Intercolonial Railway, and the expenditure $2,981,671, a surplus of $5,839. So much for the accuracy of this gentleman who has come to instruct us. But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) said one thing which will go as a gem to the North-west Territories. As a sign of how this government had fulfilled all its pledges to stand by the farmer, he told us that last year, Massey-Harris & Co. had spent $258,000 on increasing their plant. I should think they have ; we will have more to say about that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) has told us that all this expenditure is justifiable, that the people are glad of it, and that they like this $12,000,000 increase. Let me tell you what the same hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) said about smaller expenditure by the Conservative government, and it will read well in parallel columns with what he has told us to-night. In 1895—page 1540 of Hansard—the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) said :

But, at all events, the estimates which have now been submitted to the House will amount, in round numbers, to $39,000,000, which are required to carry on the affairs of this country until the 30th June, 1896. Now, Sir, in my opinion, this is altogether too much. I think that for a country with scarcely five millions of people, $39,000,000 are altogether too much to ask for to grease the wheels of state. You must bear in mind that not a solitary dollar of this $39,000,000 is proposed to be expended on public buildings, in digging canals, of bonusing railways, but it is all required to carry on the affairs of this country for one short year.

And yet, Sir, $50,000,000 to-day amounts to nothing in the eyes of the hon. gentleman ! Such is his consistency ! Could there be a more striking proof of insincerity than the hon. gentleman's words in 1895 in regard to an expenditure of $39,000,000 and what he said a few moments ago in regard to an expenditure of $50,000,000 ?

What can be said of the course of the government with regard to the tariff ? This is their fifth session and the only change made in the tariff this year is the increase of the preference from 25 per cent to 33½ per cent, and the arrangement with Trinidad about which the Minister of Finance was to have made some statement this afternoon ; that seems to have fallen through. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), at the Hardy banquet prepared us for what we saw last year, no change in the tariff ; and at Perth the Minister of the Interior told us that the tariff was settled. I see my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) here, and I would like to go with him to the convention of 1893, which promised us in the first place free trade, and, as a kind of parallel line, if it could be such, a revenue tariff. The Prime Minister in 1891 in this House, and again in 1893, pledged himself that if he got into power he would give a revenue tariff, and he defined what a revenue tariff was. When men assert as was asserted the other day by one who is not a member of this House, that we have a revenue tariff, you have only to say, in the polite language of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) in the Tribune, that if this is a revenue tariff, we shall have to get a new dictionary to find the meaning of the word. One might use a monosyllabic Anglo-Saxon term that would hit it off to a T. The Prime Minister defined a revenue tariff as a tariff for the needs of revenue ; that was his language. Arrived at Winnipeg in 1894 he told the people there that he had come to break their chains, to deliver them from the slavery of the tariff. Not content with words, they added pictorial bonds to their assertions. They had pictures in the Globe. One represented the Prime Minister as the good Samaritan come to the North-west farmer who had fallen among thieves—the manufacturers, the implement makers, the robbers great and robbers small ; and while the Tory high priest and Levite walked by on the other side, the benevolent good Samaritan, the present Prime Minister, the noble Laurier, bends over the poor fellow and is pouring the oil of consolation into his wounds and wine down his throat. There is another picture representing a man with manacles on his wrists and gyves on his ankles, on the links of which were written 22½ per cent on cotton, 20 per cent on implements, and so on ; and the deliverer, the present Prime Minister, is filling his manacles off. You have the pledge of the Prime Minister that if he got into power he would release the farmers of the North-west in the matter of the duty on implements. He went to Moosomin, where the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) in his presence promised that if they got into power they would take the duty off implements. In 1895 they set out again. At Morrisburg the Prime Minister declared himself for a revenue tariff. He was waited on there by the Liberal committee, who told him what they expected of him—that he was to relieve them of the burdens of that tariff. At the Windsor Hotel and at Sohmer Park in Montreal he declared for a revenue tariff, saying that coal and iron should be free ; and again he defined a revenue tariff as a tariff founded on the needs of revenue ; and protection to be eliminated—why ? Because the theory of free traders is that protection increases the price. But we come to a time when we are on the eve of the election of 1896. At that time the present Judge Lister visited Ottawa, and when asked what was the feeling of the country, he gave his interviewer this statement : ' Tariff reform is no myth ; we must have tariff reform ; the farmer is determined to have ample tariff reform.' They got into power. The first session passed away and nothing was done. But before the next session an alarm began to spread in the minds of certain Liberals. The editor of the Montreal Witness came out with an article headed ' No Surrender.' There was to be no surrender to the manufacturers or the protectionists ; and the writer said, ' There is a very nasty rumour going abroad, that the government is not going to carry out its pledges.' At the same time the hon. member for Lisgar came out in the Tribune and said: 'From conversations and from speeches which we have had from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and others, it looks as if there was a danger that the government did not intend to carry out its pledges.' The Minister of Marine and Fisheries went over to Hull, when the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Champagne) was looking for election, and there hinted that there would be no important change in the tariff. Well, Sir, we had the tariff of 1897, and what was the first note of the Liberal papers? You had the Farmers' Sun crying out that the farmers had been betrayed. You had the Simcoe Reformer pointing out that with the extravagance of the government, with its deals, with its yielding to the principle of business is business, it had entirely forgotten all its Liberal principles. And from that time forth everything was done by the leaders of the party and by the newspapers in their confidence, to prepare the public for the complete turn over they were prepared to take in determining to stand on the lines of protection in existence when they came into power. There were two forms of excuse. First, they said, it takes an immense time to reform the tariff; and next they said, we have fulfilled our pledges. They determined at one time, it seems—and that was the tone of the speech of the Prime Minister in 1897—to hold out to the country the prospect that if given time they would carry out their pledge to give free trade; and then they determined boldly to take the position, of doing nothing, they resolved to go to those poor fools throughout the country and say, 'we have fulfilled our pledge—we have given you a revenue tariff.' The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is the apostle of the excuse that it takes an immense time to carry out tariff reform. Let me quote what he said at Hamilton, in March, 1899:

What was the history of free trade in England? In 1842 the duty was removed on 700 articles; in 1844 it was abolished on wool and raw material for manufactures; in 1845 it was abolished on 400 more articles; in 1846 the corn laws were abolished.

Have we seen anything like that in this country? Was the duty removed by our Finance Minister from 700 articles in 1896 or 1897? Was it abolished in 1898 on raw material for manufacturers? Was it abolished on 400 more articles in 1899? In 1900 are we face to face with anything tantamount to the abolition of the corn laws? If not, what becomes of the hon. gentleman's excuse? Why, we could not have a stronger condemnation of the present government than the excuse made by one of their own supporters, because nothing was done to take away protection in 1897, and nothing has been done since. The English began boldly in 1842 by absolutely removing the duty from 700 articles; but our Finance Minister began timidly in 1897, and we look in vain in his administration for a parallel to the abolition by the English government of the duties on wool and raw material, and the abolition of the corn laws. You will remember, Sir, that in 1897 our Finance Minister told the manufacturers of this country that eternal vigilance was requisite on their part. They must have manifested this vigilance, which no doubt is a name for something we do not like to think of, and I suppose their vigilance was so strong and effective that it prevented any pari passu step being taken by this government to keep time with the example held up before us by the hon. member for Wellington. Did the manufacturers square themselves?

The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Pater-son), the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), came west. From the platform, in the city of Winnipeg, the stentorian tones of the Minister of Customs were re-echoed over the Red River as he roared out the statement that all the pledges of this administration had been carried out. Then it was that he made his great point that a party or a government cannot be bound by what its individual leaders say. If the Prime Minister spoke or the Minister of the Interior or any member of the administration the government were not bound by that, but only by the convention of 1893. To what a peculiar political morality did the hon. gentleman then give voice! He said that the duties had been removed from the necessaries of life, but the people who were listening to him knew well that they had not been removed. One of the things these hon. gentlemen had characterized as a necessary of life, was, coal oil. Then he said that in 1896 the average rate was 18.28 per cent, and now it was 16.71 per cent, or a reduction of 1.71. This is not correct, but accepting it as correct, I would ask is a difference of 1.71 in a tariff such a difference as would convert it from a protection to a revenue tariff? He declared that the greatest thing which the administration had done was to give the rebate of 25 per cent on goods imported from the mother country, which, as it does not affect most of the staples coming into the North-west, is of no use to us. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), laid it down that it would take until the millennium to bring about the reductions which the Liberal party had promised. The hon. Minister of Customs subsequently came to Moosejaw, and there he said that the government had gone as far in the reduction of the tariff as they could be reasonably expected to go. We have been actually accused, he exclaimed, by Sir Charles Tupper of violating our promises, and he went on to say—and this is the only thing in which I agree with him—that that was a most serious charge, and if true the government should be driven from office. But, it is true, and I am afraid hon. gentlemen opposite are going to be driven from office, and driven from it ignominiously. He was not able to show how the North-west had got any help from the government. On the platform was Mr. James H. Ross, M.L.A., our Minister of Public Works, and he came out with the fake that the tariff is a revenue tariff. The other day, he repeated that statement, but as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) has said, if the present tariff is a revenue tariff, we must buy new dictionaries and have new meanings for words. I will quote Mr. Ross's words :

Mr. Ross was not satisfied with the tariff. There are many things of prime necessity on which he thought the duty could be lowered. What shall we do, was the next question, when we find these people have not gone a sufficient distance in lowering the tariff. I say we must stay with them in each move towards reducing the duty on articles of prime necessity. Take their policy as a whole, if the Liberal party have reduced the tariff, be it ever so little and have given us a tariff for revenue only, that is, a tariff which will raise revenue for running the country, protection being incidental to that, then I say so long as they go the right way in these matters, I will keep step and hope and trust in the near future they will take one more step in the way of lowering the duty on articles so necessary to the people of the country.

Is not this a fine specimen of what a well-known character in fiction calls: 'Polly wobbly, riggly run, riggly run polly wobbly.' Mr. Ross is not satisfied with the tariff because on many articles of prime necessity the duty has not been lowered as it should have been. Nevertheless he says it is a revenue tariff; and if it is not satisfactory, what is to be done? He says we shall have to be satisfied if the Liberal party reduce it ever so little, but he forgets that the Conservatives reduced it a great deal in 1894, and that the Minister of Customs, standing on the same platform with him, said that if the government did not keep their promises they should be driven from office. Well, they promised to reduce the duties on articles of prime necessity, and Mr. Ross says they have not done so, although they have been four years in power. But Mr. Ross will not act on the advice of the Minister of Customs. On the contrary he is willing to wait, as the government proceeds in its snail-like course towards free trade as they have it in England, which we may expect it to reach in a thousand years at its present rate of progress. But why should the North-west support the government if the government has not carried out its pledges?

Well, Sir, the Minister of the Interior came west, and before he came west, he had sent ahead of him the famous Chapelle, who had been brought down from an extreme point in the west by Mr. Turiff, to consult with him, and whom he primed and sent forward to prepare the course—a sort of John the Baptist for him, to make his paths straight. The minister spoke at Morden, and when asked what they had done to fulfil their pledges in the way of tariff reform for the west, he said: Look at what we have done for you on stoves 25 per cent off stoves; and we have put separators on the free list. Stoves! We imported, last year, $126,294 worth of stoves, of which $125,806 came from the United States, and, therefore, came in under the general tariff. Only $664 worth came in from Great Britain. This is the man who ran his own election on the cry of free implements. But at this meeting at Morden, he saw that the Liberals looked askance at him, he noticed the cold reception they offered him. His friend, the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), was there, and, he too was aware that the Liberals were regarding the great Avatar, the young Napoleon, this extraordinary administrator, this wonderful genius, with no very friendly eye. And, what did the hon. member for Guysborough say? There have been rich utterances on the part of that hon. gentleman. There have been immortal expressions which will be remembered throughout all time, and will be searched carefully for by the hunter after style, in future generations—but nothing to equal what I am about to give you.

To such a Liberal who said that the government did not keep its pledges, he would say—
I hope hon. gentlemen will all admire the logic of this:

—look at home. Have you kept the pledges made to your wife before you married her? But what would you think if your wife left you and went off with another man and that man an unsanctified tramp. That woman would be just as vile as the Liberal who turned Tory.

The teaching is in private morals, one rule for the man, and one for the woman, that the man can do as he pleases, that in politics so-called Liberal leaders can do as they please, just like the husband of an aberrant turn of heart. I hope there are no gentlemen of that kind either in the bosom of the government, or in the Liberal party. But, I may hasten to remark that we generally take our illustrations from those subjects that are nearest our bosoms. This is an admission that the Liberal leaders are false to their vows, that the Liberal party in the position of the wife of a husband, who abandons herself to infidelity, while he considers that she must still be true to him, must not seek a divorce, for instance. The morals are such as we might expect from a government like this, which has abandoned its pledges, and of which, as I have said, insincerity is the keynote; the note that will kill it, and ought to kill it, and not only that, but brand it in history—the note of falsehood that runs through all it thinks and does and aims at. Mr. Speaker, you will agree with me, that rarely has an eminent public man uttered anything more edifying than the charming piece of reasoning, so full of logic and so laden with good taste, which on that occasion fell from the lips of the hon. member for Guysborough.

On Tuesday last the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), whom I am glad to see in his place, made a speech, conceived in the same spirit of error as the speech to which I am replying. Before he had fled from the House two minutes, the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), had pointed out his misstatements. The hon. member for South Huron declared that the present tariff was a revenue tariff—

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. McMILLAN. I rise to a point of order, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) says that before I was well out of the House, I was called to order for this misstatement. What I stated was—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I was going to say—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan), that that is not a point of order.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) misunderstood me. What I said was that he made a comparison between the duty on wagons in 1894 and now, and he gave figures which were not correct. He rose from his seat—with an agility which I had rarely seen him manifest before—and fled from the House, and before he was far from the door, my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) had entirely exposed the misstatements he had made. But the whole speech was full of errors—

Mr. McMILLAN. My statements were correct; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) dare not give me an opportunity to prove them.

Mr. DAVIN. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I may say—I do not know whether this will please the hon. member for South Huron—the whole speech bristled with such statements as proved him to be a true poet. You know, the poet is essentially a creator. Byron says of poets, especially of great poets—and if my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan) were a poet, he would be a great one—that

They are such liars,

And take all colours, like the hands of dyers.

I have shown you what the attitude of the government is. I am now going to ask what was and what is the attitude of the people? What did the people expect of the Liberal party? In October, 1895, the Prime Minister, as I have already said, visited Morrisburg. I have already mentioned the fact that he received an address from the Liberals of Dundas, saying that the Liberal party looked to him 'for relief from the present burdensome tariff system which has retarded progress, burdened great industries, such as farming, lumbering and commerce, and all for the sake of a few.' We know what answer the Prime Minister gave. He was going to give them relief, he was going to carry out what they would like to have carried out. And my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Pater-son) was out west, with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), a tariff commission, when they sat at Winnipeg, as they will remember, Mr. Fleming went before them. He smelt a rat, and was afraid that they were not going to carry out their pledges. He quoted a speech of the Prime Minister, who said—he was speaking to an Anglo-Saxon audience—that he would always keep his eye on grand old England. Mr. Fleming said:

Well, Sir, I am glad of that, because I am an Englishman I hope he will keep his eye on grand old England. But, Sir, I am afraid he will squint towards the grand old manufacturer, and in regard to coal oil, he will squint towards grand old Petrolea.

But, worse still has happened, because, instead of squinting towards grand old Petrolea, he has squinted to Rockefeller, and to the monster octopus that now, in the matter of coal oil, has this country by the throat.

A meeting was held in Regina in March, 1899. It was a Liberal meeting, addressed by the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), and Mr. J. J. Grant, who was a candidate in 1896, by Mr. D. A. Macdonald, a gentleman in business in Regina, and Mr. A. Alexander, a prominent farmer. Mr. Macdonald, who is well known to my hon. friend near me, the member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), moved:

Be it further resolved, that the people of the west, and especially the farmers, are looking anxiously, expectantly and confidently for such a revision of the tariff as will conform with the pledges of the Liberal party as contained in the Ottawa platform—

The Minister of Customs could not object to that.

—and as recently foreshadowed in the budget speech of Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance—

The Minister of Finance could not object to that.

—when he warned the manufacturers to set their houses in order, and prepare for reductions all along the line.

That was passed unanimously, and it is quite clear they still had some lingering faith in the sincerity of these gentlemen. I need not recall the outcries of sincere Reformers, the Tribune, the Dundas Banner, the Huntingdon Gleaner. But look at the way the two ministers of the Crown I have referred to were received in Manitoba and the North-west during the winter. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) stumped in Manitoba, in his own constituency, and he went to Moosomin and Regina. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) knows they were very badly received. I know well the way they were treated at Moosomin. I am glad to know that some Conservatives came to the rescue and extended hospitality to these gentlemen, and to the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), which, I am told, he greatly enjoyed. Well, Sir, what a contrast. Go back to 1897, when the Minister of the Interior was acclaimed. A banquet was given at the Manitoba Hotel. On the right of the chairman were the Minister of the Interior, and Mr. Richardson touching his right elbow. On the left, Mr. Greenway and the Hon. Robert Watson, now a senator. But, this time, Sir, there were no banquets; this time there was no blowing of trumpets, this time there were more prayers of a truly mundane character than adulation for the government or for the Minister of the Interior. Look at the contrast. The magnificent hotel, the magnificent dining room, the great banqueting hall, are now things of the past. That hotel is in ruins, like the reputation of the minister who was feted on that occasion. The member for Lisgar would not stand on a platform now with that hon. gentleman whose elbow he touched on that occasion. Mr. Greenway is a discredited and a ruined politician. He used to be the bosom friend of the Minister of the Interior, who ate his salt, who supped with him, who lay in his bosom, but who has turned on him in his misfortune. You know what Captain McHeath says:

That Jimmy Twitcher should peach me,
I own surprised me.

And you can understand Mr. Greenway, when the Minister of the Interior turned on him, saying with the detected captain:

That Jimmy Twitcher should peach me,
I own surprised me.

Well, the Minister of the Interior, after he came here, went back again to Brandon, and there they drummed up a meeting of 102 gentlemen, dragged from all parts of the province, and some from the North-west. I counted them, all the names were given, and his faithful henchman in the North-west, Mr. James H. Ross, was there. The Minister of the Interior had already three years of such ministerial iniquity on his shoulders as few ministers have ever had to shrink under. He was indeed heavily laden with wealth as well. He was about to visit the Danube and the Thames for purposes such as I have already hinted at.

As a North-west man, I think I may complain that one of our territorial ministers should be there to vote for a resolution testifying the entire confidence in one of the most discredited ministers of that discredited government, which has three or four ministers so discredited that they would pull down the otherwise strongest government imperial or colonial. I say there are three ministers in the bosom of that ministry, the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), and the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair).

An hon. MEMBER. The Minister of Public Works.

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, he is altogether gone; he is out of the question. Those three are greatly damaged, but none of them stand worse than the Minister of the Interior. Yet, here is our territorial minister going down to Brandon to vote confidence in that gentleman! Addressing these 102 partisans, it is still on the conscience of the minister that he has not carried out his pledges. I read from a report in the Free Press, his own organ, this extract from what he said:

He knew there were difficulties, Manitobans were not satisfied with what had been done on the tariff. They had not, however, looked at the question from a Dominion standpoint. A delegation had come to Ottawa representing millions of dollars and thousands of people, and more power to affect constituencies than was to be found in the whole of Manitoba. They said to Sir Wilfrid, if in twelve months your government do not do us justice and protect us by putting a duty on lumber, we will support Sir Charles Tupper.

And so they put 25 per cent on lumber that was free under the old tariff.

He had been called in, and was obliged to state to his leader that when such legislation was passed he might as well get his resignation ready.

But he did not resign, the only member of the cabinet who cared a straw to keep lumber free.

He was the only member of the cabinet who cared a straw to keep lumber free. He was the only member who would not be benefited if the lumber duties were replaced.

You see the language he uses; benefited means keeping him in office, helping him in elections, and the only thing that seems to concern him is how the government would be affected. Manitobans are not satisfied; that is nothing. Look at his reasons for not keeping faith with Manitoba and with the North-west Territories—expediency, or what they would have called commodity in the days of the great Elizabeth. Expediency, the unclean thing quietly put into their hands; to save their skin. That is the chief thing. He talks of the lumber duties, and seems to imply that they reduced them. How do the Liberals feel? They feel abandoned. How do the people generally feel? You can gather that from the frigid and almost insulting reception that these gentlemen were accorded. Following in the wake of these gentlemen, ministers of the Crown, two men holding portfolios, one holding the most important portfolio for the west, that of the Interior, and the other that of Customs, following in their wake came the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). They could not get an audience which would fill the halls; to hear Sir Charles Tupper, the vast rinks at Indian Head and at Moosomin were crowded and the halls in other places were not big enough to hold the people, hundreds going away unable to get in. I was present and saw it. Here was a man thus received who had nothing to give; no position other than the honourable position of being the head of one of the great parties in this country, but no official position, no power, and here were two men representing a great government, as they would call it, with an immense majority at their back, going from place to place and none so poor as to do them reverence. Why, there had to be much diplomacy exercised before they could, in one place, get the president of the Liberal Association to take the chair for them. There was running from the private car to the hotel, from the private car to somewhere else, and all sorts of negotiations, until, at last, the generous man took pity on them and took the chair. Afterwards we had another Liberal. The right hon. Prime Minister said that he was a great man. Standing on the same platform, and referring to the speech of the hon. gentleman, he said:

If the government persists in their mad course of machine manipulation it will soon be time for the independent Liberals to again assert themselves. (Cheers.) What do they care for the empty names of Laurier and Sifton as compared with the great principles which these men have deserted. (Applause.) They used to speak of yellow dog Tories, meaning men who would vote for their party at any cost to keep the 'miserable Grits out.' I tell you that to-day there is a strong feeling in the Liberal ranks against the very element of 'yellow dog' in the government. (Applause.) In these ranks stand all true Liberals, and I am not afraid to appeal to them as representing the Liberal party and Liberal principles, and they will with a united voice demand that the leaders of the government return to the principles they have abandoned. They must put principles above party, and unless that is done, there is a bad outlook for the politics of this country.

The effect of that speech by the Hon. Mr. Martin was startling. It was a crushing blow which resounded through the entire province of Manitoba and through the Territories.

Let me ask the attention of the House for a short time while I refer to what the government have done in regard to those things in which the North-west Territories are more especially interested. I mean agricultural implements, cottons and coal oil. What was the expectation created in regard to agricultural implements? I have already quoted what was said at Moosomin; I have already alluded to the famous picture in the Globe newspaper in September, 1894, and I have referred to the election cry of the hon. Minister of the Interior—free implements. This is what he said on the 2nd of March when he went to talk to this partisan audience. Here is the excuse he gave, because, they told him before he went on the platform what the feeling of the people was in regard to the recreancy of the government.

In the matter of agricultural implements, a strictly revenue tariff would be more than the 20 per cent now in force, and the implement dealers of eastern Canada, employing 9,000 men, had protested because they claimed that they have been selected to bear the brunt of a tariff lower than a strictly revenue tariff. They say they don't want a tariff for protection, but a relief from having to pay the United States 35 per cent for the raw material, when American firms pay only 20 per cent on the finished product. Manitobans naturally say: 'Well, the duty ought to be cut down, anyway,' but could they say that from a Finance Minister's standpoint? The Liberal policy had been framed to meet, as far as possible, the wishes of all parts of the Dominion. Certainly, all could not be fully satisfied. Ontario was displeased because lumber was on the free list. Manitoba wanted free implements. There must be a spirit of compromise among the members of the party if there was to be a Liberal government in Canada.

First, let me say that there was none of this special pleading when he promised free implements. He promised free implements to the people who elected him, he promised free implements to Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and there was none of this special pleading then nor was there any of this special pleading when this promise was made by the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Agriculture. But that is in entire accordance with what he said at the Hardy banquet. His language was this:

We have, therefore, made a revision of the tariff, which has been a great relief to the manufacturers of the country.

Not to the farmers, not to the tradesmen and not the artisans, but to the manufacturers. A dozen of these manufacturers in whom he is so much interested, in one business alone, in the Massey-Harris business, have within the last ten years, become millionaires; not one, but a dozen, as we can show, if necessary. Let me here say a word about these implements. I asked an expert his opinion what a binder which sells for $100 should cost, and he told me, that, if it was sold at a fair profit, such as the profit is in any other business, it would sell for about $50. True Liberals will ask: What is the good of keeping a Liberal government in power which brings in no Liberal measures? The special pleading of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), at Moosejaw, is nearly as rich as that of the hon. Minister of the Interior. Here it is reported in the Moosejaw Times :

Regarding the tariff question. The Conservatives claimed the Liberal party had violated their promises in this connection. The Liberals did not care very much what they said.

That is what I say. The government do not care much what the opposition say, but the government will care much when one of their own party criticises them as they deserve to be criticised. That is the reason I got so much done for the country when my own party was in power. If these gentlemen from the North-west had stood by me in 1896 and 1897 and 1898 when I moved in these matters, we would have forced the hands of the government.

The Conservatives, in 1894, had gone in for reducing the tariff on agricultural implements, reducing it from 35 per cent to 20 per cent. The Liberals had not undertaken a reduction on these articles, as the experience in the past had shown that it had the effect of burdening the manufacturer with heavy duties on the raw material. In order to square matters so he could exist, the manufacturer, who on some things paid 50 per cent duty, had to add this much to the price of the implement. The officers of the government got at the manufacturer first, and the manufacturer then had to turn around and get even off the farmer. We soon found the manufacturer was burdened by duties such as $4 per ton on pig iron, 10 per cent on steel, 30 per cent on machinery, 35 per cent on binders, &c. We reduced pig iron to $2, steel and bar iron from 16 to 7 per cent, and by these reductions we enabled the manufacturer to so reduce his prices as to lower the price of binders $5. A corresponding reduction was made in ploughs, and in all these reductions the purchaser was the man most directly benefited. The present government had reduced the duty nearly one-third, as they realized the fact that the great agricultural industry was and must always be the backbone of Canada.

Here at the close is an empty compliment but the whole utterance is full of tenderness for the manufacturer, and not one thing for the farmer. You see it is the same excuse always; the Conservatives, naughty fellows, had reduced the duty 15 per cent, but the Liberals would be guilty of nothing like that. Does the manufacturer sell the machine cheaper? The hon. gentleman says 'he does, I tell him he does nothing of the kind, for binders are $10 dearer to-day than they were then. He says that 15 per cent was taken off ploughs, but he does not say that was done by the Conservative government. Well, Sir, in 1893 I moved in the matter of coal oil, and the Postmaster General moved in it, and he declared coal oil to be a necessary of life. We succeeded in getting the government to reduce the duty on coal oil by 1½ cents per gallon, or 20 per cent, but that did not satisfy me, nor did it satisfy the present Prime Minister.

who was then leader of the opposition, and here is what he said on the subject :

Last year we imported $430,000 worth, and we paid just as much in duty as the value of the goods, that is to say, we paid a duty of 100 per cent. Well, as a revenue tariff, this would be outrageous; in fact, if the duty were decreased by one-half or two-thirds, we would have more revenue than we have now on coal oil. This is not, therefore, a revenue tariff; it has been imposed altogether for protection, and for nothing else. Even yet, though there is a duty of 100 per cent on that article, that is not all. Other obstacles have been put in the way of the importation of coal oil, amounting to as much, perhaps, as the present tariff. It is calculated, upon good authority, that the protection afforded to coal oil is 200 per cent at least.

The Liberals came into power, and what have they done? They took off a cent a gallon, but they made arrangements by which the Standard Oil Trust got the country at its mercy. Even the Globe, two months ago had an elaborate leading article in which it was shown that this octopus (to use the word of one of my hon. friends), with a nominal capital of $100,000,000, representing an investment of probably one-fifth of this, it is admitted, paid dividends of $170,000,000 in the six years before 1899. The profits last year were $70,000,000, being two or three hundred per cent on actual investments. That is proved to have been made on the United States price, but on the Canadian price they would have from four hundred to six hundred per cent. My hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Moore), calculates that the Standard Oil Trust will receive $2,400,000 more for the oil this year in Canada than they would get at United States prices, and this tallies with the calculation of the Globe that they will have a profit of $4,000,000. Well, Sir, last year the total imports from the United States were 8,010,305 gallons, with a duty of $692,059. Now, with a cent off, and the price of oil up, how does it look? It is selling at 50 and 60 cents a gallon, I am told, in Medicine Hat, and the cent off the duty means $80,000 loss to the treasury. We have lost nearly $100,000 in revenue on coal oil, and the only way we have gained is that the price has appreciated instead of going lower. Here is what the Prime Minister said on the occasion I have referred to :

What I say about coal oil, I say about iron.

Yet we have the iron duties and the bonus. And having dwelt on the enormity of protecting iron, the Prime Minister says :

I say that a system is false which can produce such results as these. But that is not all. There is something worse than all that in a protective tariff. We charge upon the protective tariff—and no one knows it better than the hon. the Minister of Finance—that it is base and degrading.

Yet he keeps up the tariff. One thing is certain, that any tenet, whether it be political or religious, held without faith and professed without sincerity, is degrading; and the fact that these gentlemen opposite for eighteen years professed free trade doctrines and have come into power and adopted doctrines diametrically opposite; that may account for the quick and deep demoralization of the government.

I have in my hand the utterance in 1894 of Sir Richard Cartwright (the Minister of Trade and Commerce at the present time), on the subject of cotton. The duty on cotton was then only 22½ per cent, and he said that this duty was monstrous:

If I am not mistaken, so far from requiring protection on these goods, I understood that the trade was supplying these goods to the Chinese; and a great deal of very proper exultation was displayed by some members of the House over the fact that our cotton manufacturers were able to compete in the Chinese market with the products of the English and United States mills. If that be the case, what do you want with this protection at all? If they are able to undersell English and American goods in the Chinese markets, our own people ought to get the benefit.

Yet what did the Liberals do? They came into power and they raised the duty on cotton. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), said:

This is an important item, affecting a large class of people, and there ought to be a larger reduction. When our mills are able to send goods to China to compete against English and American goods, I do not think that it is necessary to subject our people to this duty in order to give the cotton manufacturer protection. They have raw material free, wages are just as low in Canada as in the United States, rents as low, and living as cheap, and I do not see why they cannot produce as cheaply as the manufacturers on the other side. I would like to know why it is necessary to keep up this protection.

That is exactly, Sir, what the farmers would like to know. They would like to know, why above all did the Liberal government raise the duty from 22½ per cent to 25 per cent. In that connection I will ask this: Does the preference do any good? Does the preference do any good on agricultural implements? Let us see. Last year we imported agricultural implements, binder attachments, to the number of 103,313, valued at $32,936, paying a duty of $6,551, and none of these were imported under the preference. The duty on these was reduced by the Conservative government to 20 per cent, and the duty is 20 per cent to-day, and none came in under the preference. Last year we imported 2,502 cultivators, valued at $17,594, paying a duty of $3,590.80, and none came in under the preference. The duty on these was reduced by the Conservatives to 20 per cent, and it is 20 per cent to-day. Last year we imported 2,912 drills, worth $64,583, paying a duty of $12,936, and none came in under the preference. Forks—46,912 came in, worth $10,968, paying a duty of $2,746.95. Harrows—

4,091 came in, worth $53,739, paying a duty of $10,549; none came in under the preference. Harvesters, self-binding and without binding attachments, reduced to 20 per cent by the Conservative government—6,931 came in, worth $664,610, paying a duty of $132,920. Of this Manitoba and the North-west pays $60,530.20, or nearly half the duty—no advantage whatever under the preference. Horse rakes—4,330 came in, value $69,043, paying a duty of $13,808, of which Manitoba and the Territories paid $6,929, or more than half; reduced to 20 per cent by the Conservative government, and 20 per cent now. Mowing machines, reduced to 20 per cent by the Conservative government—10,332 came in, valued at $348,735, paying a duty of $69,747, of which Manitoba and the Territories paid $25,798, or over $3,000 more than Ontario. Ploughs, reduced to 20 per cent by the Conservative government, and 20 per cent to-day—9,617 came in, worth $192,158, paying a duty of $38,431, of which Manitoba and the North-west paid $31,964, or more than 83 per cent. Manufactures of cotton—duck, gray or white; the general tariff, 22½ per cent under the Conservative government, 22½ per cent now; 184,498 yards came in, valued at $31,719, paying a duty of $7,137. Under the preferential, 14,438 yards came in, valued at $1,414, paying a duty of $245. Over 97 per cent came in under the full tariff. Embroideries, on which the tariff has been reduced to 25 per cent; $148,754 worth came in under the general tariff, paying a duty of $37,189, and $29,735 came in under the preferential, paying a duty of $5,576. Switzerland, the great mart, the great emporium, the great store whence we get embroideries, sends $113,866 worth, which of course, comes in under the general tariff. On gray, unbleached cotton fabrics, which are mostly used by the poor, the general tariff is 25 per cent; under the Conservative government it was only 22½ per cent. For the year ended the 30th of June, 1899, we brought from Great Britain 229,561 yards, valued at $15,817, on which the duty was $2,965; from the United States 1,224,022 yards, value $44,718, duty $11,184. 1,336,476 yards came in under the general tariff, worth $49,730, and paying duty to the tune of 25 per cent, instead of 22½ per cent of the slavery tariff of the Liberal-Conservative government, to the amount of $12,437. Under the preferential 229,821 yards came in at 18½ per cent, worth $15,829, and paying in duty $2,967.94; from Germany 46,877 yards, paying the full duty; and from Switzerland 12,987 yards, paying the full duty. The aggregate duty paid was $15,405. What would have been paid under the old tariff? $14,750.77. $654.25 more was paid than would have been paid under Conservative rule, and this by the poor. The preference of 25 per cent does not enable Britain to send us these cheap fabrics, and the increased duty has to be paid on the goods coming from Germany, Switzerland and the American republic. How does it stand with white or bleached cotton fabrics? Under the general tariff of 25 per cent we imported 3,736,727 yards of the value of $225,166, paying $56,291 in duty; under the preference 3,287,993 yards, value $263,651; duty, $49,444. Thus the preference has not enabled England to capture the market. It has not lowered the price of bleached cotton fabrics to the consumer. All it has accomplished is this: It has placed $16,468 in the pockets of a few cotton lords in Manchester, which might just as well have been in the treasury of Canada. Is there a better showing as regards cotton fabrics, printed, dyed or coloured? The old tariff was 30 per cent; the new is 35, with 25 per cent off goods manufactured in Great Britain. Under the general tariff we imported 11,618,356 yards, value $894,888, duty $313,210; under the preferential we imported 24,277,762 yards, value $2,239,298, duty $587,825. Under the old tariff we should have received in duty $940,255; thus without lowering the price to the consumer we lost $39,220, the difference between the aggregate received last year, and what would have been received under the old tariff; and this sum was placed in the pockets of the wealthy cotton men. Because it must be remembered that the 25 per cent is off, not 30, but 35 per cent, and therefore for a little over two-thirds of the printed, dyed or coloured fabrics we imported, the reduction on the old tariff was only 3½ per cent, while on about a third the increase on the old tariff was 5 per cent. Seamless bags pay the same duty under the general tariff as before—20 per cent. Has the preference done any good there? Not at all. Over 99 per cent came in under the general tariff; only 110 pounds or $55 worth coming in under the preference. Knitted goods are the same—no relief. Cotton clothing, which under the old tariff was 32½ per cent, under that of free trade is 35 per cent. Cotton clothing—under the general tariff, value $202,592, duty $70,909.56; under the preference, value $133,687, duty $35,086.78, or over 64 per cent came in under the general tariff, paying the increased duty of 35 per cent. Under the old tariff the customs would have received on the whole imports $11,603 more than $105,996, which was actually received. Nearly two-thirds of the goods would have come in at a lower rate of duty and with a consequent decrease in price.

Blouses, 30 per cent under the old tariff and now 35 per cent. Under the general tariff $22,884 worth of blouses and waists came in, which paid a duty of $8,010. Under the preference rate $1,539 worth came in, which paid a duty of $404. Thus over 1,500 per cent more came in under the general tariff. The duty collected amounted to $8,414.26, and the duty which would have been collected under the old tariff would have amounted to $7,326.90, or $1,087.36 more duty was paid under the present tariff.

Cotton towels were charged in the old tariff 25 per cent and in the new tariff 30 per cent. Under the general tariff, the value imported was $4,055, on which a duty of $1,216.50 was paid. Under the preferential rate, $29,145 worth was brought in, and the duty paid was $6,561.08. The aggregate duty under the two amounted to $7,777.58. Had the old tariff been in operation, the amount would have been $8,300, so that only $522 less was collected, though the bulk of the towels came from Great Britain, thus showing how delusive is the preference preceded by raising the duty. Not a towel was made cheaper.

Of undershirts and drawers, the value imported under the general tariff was $11,380, on which a duty of $3,982.90 was paid. Under the preferential rate, the value imported amounted to $2,493, on which $654.42 duty was collected. The aggregate amount of duty paid was $4,637.32. Had there been no preference, the duty collected would have been $4,835.55, or $198.23 more, showing that the preference was delusive both as regards England and the consumers.

On articles made by the seamstress from cotton fabrics, a duty was charged in the old tariff of 32½ per cent, and in the new tariff of 35 per cent. How does the preference affect them? Under the general tariff the value imported was $49,762, on which a duty was collected of $17,411.98. Under the preferential tariff we imported $10,469 worth, on which the duty paid amounted to $2,746.68, so that under the present tariff, we paid an increased duty of 35 per cent on $49,762 and 26½ on $10,409 worth.

Curtains, when made up, trimmed and untrimmed, were charged in the old tariff 30 per cent, and in the new tariff are 35 per cent. Under the general tariff the value imported was $155,111, on which the duty collected amounted to $54,286. Under the preferential rate, the value of imports was $235,268, and the duty collected $61,755, making a total duty collected under the two of $116,041. Under the old tariff we would have collected $117,083, or $1,042 more, which would have been a gain, because the price to the consumer not being affected, the only person who has profited is either the English manufacturer or the middleman in Canada. Fur skins, wholly or partially dressed, 15 per cent, under old tariff, 15 under the new. Fur hats, caps, muffs, tip-pets, capes, coats, jackets, cloaks and other manufactures of fur, 30 per cent under the Liberal tariff; 25 per cent under the Conservative. For these goods our two great emporiums are England and the United States; next comes Germany. We get a great deal of fur skins, wholly or partially dressed, from Germany, but our imports of manufactures of fur from that country are small. Of the former we imported during the year from Germany $242,199 worth; from France, $36,064; Belgium, $1,987; Russia, $4,841; Australasia, $757; in a word, under the general tariff, value $406,987; duty, $61,048; preferential value, $179,611; duty, $20,206.

$406,987 worth paying 15 per cent amounting to $61,048; $179,611 paid $20,206, or 15 per cent less 25 off the 15. Into whose pocket did the $6,735 thus foregone by the customs-house go? Not into the consumers, for furs during the past year have been dearer than ever. Who is the ultimate buyer of fur skins, wholly or partially dressed? The furrier, the manufacturer, and this is a case which illustrates what the Minister of the Interior said at the Hardy banquet, that the tariff had given much needed relief to the manufacturers of this country. There is sentiment in love and war, there is no sentiment in commerce. On what ground of principle or common sense can you charge 15 per cent on the $242,199 from Germany, and on the $36,064 worth coming from France, or on the $66,646 from the United States? That $6,735.20 is a nice little sum in the pockets of the English exporters or the Canadian furrier, but it has to be made up; some one pays what it would have paid; who is this some one? The general taxpayer, the farmer, the storekeeper, the artisan.

Now, let us come to the manufactured article. How does the free trade tariff show there? Caps, fur coats, cloaks, muffs and the like, came in under the general tariff, value, $60,160; duty, $18,047.85; under the preferential, value, $39,013; duty, $8,776.10. Here are the goods which the people buy. How are they affected by the tariff? Under the old tariff $99,173 worth of manufactured furs would have paid only $24,793.25, or $2,030.70 less than $26,823.95, which was what was actually collected. This $2,030.70 was taken directly out of the pocket of the wearer of the goods, the same man out of whose pocket you had just taken $6,735.20 in the interest of the large exporter or manufacturer. The United States sent us $36,684 on which 30 per cent was paid; Germany, $8,946 direct and some $30,000 indirect on which 30 per cent was paid. Is there any sense in this? England is benefited little or nothing in this case and the tariff of emancipation has freed the country by increasing protection from 25 to 30 per cent. No wonder Mr. Sifton said we have given relief to the manufacturer; no wonder the Manufacturers' Association should pass resolutions saying they could go out of business.

I have in my hand a report of what took place at the annual meeting of the Manufacturers' Association about two months ago in the city of Toronto:

'This association,' said President Ellis, 'has been in existence fifty-five years. The object of its formation was to educate the country on the advantage of protection to native industries, and gradually through its efforts was the present tariff enacted.'

You see, he says the present tariff. Showing that what Mr. Bertram said was correct, that the Manufacturers' Association was in council with this government, in the fixing of the present tariff.

The object of its formation was to educate the country on the advantage of protection to native industries, and greatly through its efforts was the present tariff enacted; and, while it is still necessary to carefully watch that this great principle is not interfered with, it is now felt that it is not a political issue, both parties admitting that protection is now here to stay. The Manufacturers' Association do not think this tariff a revenue tariff. They call a spade a spade. The only men who call this tariff a revenue tariff, are the men who are interested in cloaking their tergiversation before the country.

This object being, therefore, an accomplished fact, the association should further extend its usefulness by giving attention to other matters.

Was ever a preponderant interest like that of the farmers so shamefully betrayed and mocked as it has been by this government? Now, Sir, the whole duty collected last year was $25,734,228, the largest amount ever taken out of the pockets of the people of Canada for customs. And this is statesmanship! Again and again has the Prime Minister put himself on record as to his determination to have a revenue tariff, and as to what a revenue tariff is. One thing that a revenue tariff must not do is to tax raw materials, and in Montreal in 1895, the Prime Minister denounced the taxes on iron and coal, as I have related; and at Sohmer Park, a few days later, he said that 'if we were to have a revenue tariff, raw material would be free.' And in the next sentence, as if replying by implications to the impudent statement that abandoned men all over the country were trying to stuff down the throats of the people, he said: 'raw materials are not free to-day under the protective system.' He has been in power for almost four years. Are raw materials free? Have we a revenue tariff?

And now, Sir, referring to a remark that fell from the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell). I have a report of the government that he supports before me. According to that report, the population in 1896 was 5,125,436, and in 1899 it was 5,312,500, an increase in 3 years of 187,064. I do not know exactly what the proper birth rate is, but I fancy that allowing any fair birth rate, very little would be left to be credited to immigration. According to sessional paper No. 6, page 7, we paid in customs $4.84 per head of the population in 1899, as compared with $3.94 per head in 1896, and $3.52 per head in 1895. And yet, Sir, this government and the hon. member for Kent declare that they are not taxing the people, that they have not raised the taxation either collectively or per head. At this moment in the Territories we are paying to the Dominion government over $12 per head. Under the general tariff last year, we imported $62,835,730 worth of goods, paying a duty of $19,810,551. Under the preference, we imported $26,397,442 worth of goods, paying $5,885,292 of duty, or an aggregate amount of $89,433,172 of goods paying a duty of $25,695,844. Thus over 70 per cent came in under the general tariff, the goods affected being, in most cases, those used by the poor, and in all cases under the general tariff, the goods that have come in, are goods that we are interested in in the North-west.

Now, it has been said to me sometimes: Why is it that you are perpetually harping on the necessity of protecting the farmers. I say we should do all in our power to protect the farmers. And I say one reason why the resolution of the leader of the opposition commends itself to my mind, is that at the close it pledges the Conservative party, if they are returned to power, to do all they can to protect that farmer who, I have shown, has been shamefully abandoned by hon. gentlemen opposite. How can this be done? He has to sell his produce in the freest and cheapest markets in the world. Should not he be privileged to buy in the cheapest market consistent only with the imposition of such duties as are necessary for raising a revenue for the country?

Mr. ELLIS. That is good free trade doctrine. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) believe it?

Mr. DAVIN. Of course I do. I was quoting the words of the Prime Minister. Why does he not carry them out?

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has been reading for the last twenty minutes. I think that is against the rules of the House.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I can attend to my own speech without the guidance—

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I beg to draw your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman who is now addressing the House, has been reading for the last twenty minutes and I ask you to say whether that is, or is not against the rules of the House?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member (Mr. Talbot), does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. TALBOT. Perhaps if I had been wheelbarrowed around the country as much as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has, I might.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot), is not in order to interrupt me—

Mr. TALBOT. I am in order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has been reading for the last twenty minutes. I am in the judgment of the House when I say that.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) knows the rules of the House.

Mr. DAVIN. I was not reading.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I was not.

Mr. SPEAKER. I know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is perfectly competent to get along without reading, if he chooses.

Mr. DAVIN. I was using my notes, just as the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) used his notes.

Mr. TALBOT. You have been reading for twenty minutes.

Mr. DAVIN. However, Mr. Speaker, I think we can get along without the interruptions of that class of men.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is an old parliamentarian, and ought to know better than to do as he is doing.

Mr. DAVIN. I am told that the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), read his speech. But I do not want to read. But, Mr. Speaker, the unpleasant thing is to have from the purlieus of that party, croakings that come from persons like that. I hope we shall have no more of it. Now, I am going to—

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has no right to address an hon. member of this House as he has done. I know it is an old habit of his, and, I think, it is time that it should be put down by the authority of the Chair, otherwise it will have to be put down in some shape or form.

Mr. DAVIN. Since I have been in this House, that hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot), by his demeanour here on many occasions—I could refer to in other sessions, and say that his demeanour here in sessions gone by, has been such that we have been obliged to call attention to his disgraceful conduct.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), pointing to an hon. member on this side, said he should not be interrupted by croakers like that.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not say that.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman used those words.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman pointed across the floor and said, 'croakers like that'—

Mr. DAVIN. What I said—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not say that. I will tell what I said. I said this, that what I objected to was to croaking from the purlieus of the party opposite, coming to us in that way. I did not refer to any hon. gentleman as a croaker.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, you pointed your finger across the House to the member for Bellechasse.

Mr. DAVIN. I said, 'croaking coming from the purlieus of that party.' But, there is no breach of order in that. The breach of order was when the hon. gentleman interrupted me, and I will now go on.

Mr. McMULLEN. We want your ruling upon the point whether such conduct is proper on the part of a member of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. My impression was that the hon. member used the general term. I did not understand that he applied the term 'purlieus of the House' to the gentleman who interrupted him. But, I think we can get along much better if these interruptions are not interjected, the debate will run smoother and easier. I know my hon. friend will recognize the danger of getting into an unparliamentary situation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He charged the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) with disgraceful conduct in this House. I ask your ruling on the character of that language.

Mr. DAVIN. Is it not true?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the term 'disgraceful conduct' can be called unparliamentary, although I think a sparing use of such terms is very desirable in the House, as we all know. But, I would not like to rule that on no occasion should an hon. gentleman be allowed to use that language.

Mr. DAVIN. It is now palpable that there was no point of order to be raised. I was not out of order, but the hon. gentleman who interrupted me was out of order. I have observed for the last four sessions that whenever any hon. gentleman on this side is squeezing the government hard, when we are bringing out crushing evidence from their own words in the past, then some hon. gentleman opposite rises up and tries to call a point of order for the purpose of creating a diversion. I tell you, Sir, that it is the squealing of a thing in the grasp of fate that we hear when these cries come to us from the other side. The government is beaten, the party, as it exists in this House, is beaten, and these are the cries of a beaten life that finds the grasp of fate upon its existence. Now, I will read what the Prime Minister said:

The produce of the farmer has been driven to the lowest point, but what he has to buy is sold to him at an increased price as compared with the price in England. What is the lesson to be deduced from this state of things? It is this (and this is the proposition we rely upon on this side of the House): As the price of agricultural products has been reduced to the lowest point, it should be the aim of the tariff to reduce the price of manufactured goods also to the lowest point. The farmer is bound by his circumstances to sell in the freest and cheapest market, so also ought he to be privileged to buy in the cheapest market, consistent only with the imposition of such duties as are necessary for raising the revenue of the country. That is the proposition on which we stand, and it is a proposition perfectly fair, perfectly just, and perfectly equitable—so fair, so just, so reasonable and so equitable, that the government dare not attack it openly. And yet they cannot adopt it. Why? Because they are chained and yoked to a system which is the reverse of just and fair and equitable.

And yet he clings to it! Now hear what he said when he was looking after votes in the North-west Territories, referring to a Conservative:

He wants to develop the industries of the country, but in what way? By increasing the cost of commodities, by compelling people to purchase at a higher price at home than they could obtain the same goods elsewhere. Well, I admit that with such a system he might develop special industries, but I assert that he will stifle the growth of the country. What has been the experience of our North-west country? Surely no one will pretend that Manitoba and the North-west Territories have realized that amount of prosperity which was expected for them at one time. It was expected that in the year 1894, Manitoba and the North-west Territories would have a population of 600,000 souls at least, and you know what a beggarly number were found there at the last census. More than that, you have developed the east at the expense of the west. Why is it that the growth of that country has been stunted? It is simply because, in order to favour certain industries in the east, you have prevented the people in that country from acquiring their goods at as cheap a rate as they got them under a freer system of trade.

Now, taking him at his own words, believing that the truth was in him, we gave him from the North-west Territories three out of four members, and a majority in Manitoba. But, how has he behaved towards us? Has he redeemed his pledges? Has he carried out his promises? Why, Sir, you know better than anybody else he has not, because I know well that you are a Liberal of the old school and a true man, and I know well what opinion you must have of what has taken place. Here is what he says again:

I am clear upon one thing, and that is that such protection, such taxation as this, is unjust.

And he continued and continues the injustice, and expects to be supported by Liberals!

Now, I have been dealing with the way the public regards the government, and the way the public have been dealt with by this government. We have in this House an hon. gentleman—I do not see him now, he is very seldom here—we have the member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). When that hon. gentleman first came down here, I went to him and pointed out that if the North-west members would stand together in fighting the battles of the North-west, they might be able to do great things. I asked him to support me in my efforts to get relief for the farmer in regard to agricultural implements, in regard to cottons, to lumber and coal oil, but he looked askance, he would have nothing to do with me. I did not get any support from the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), and at first I did not get much support from the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), although subsequently I got a little. Now, this hon. gentleman was elected on the profession that he would support no government that would not give relief in regard to implements; and when he came back, after the Minister of Finance had made his speech in 1897, he had a meeting at Wapella, and there said:

The tariff had, in a word, been a disappointment. The change made was on the basis of a 10 per cent reduction. We did not get the changes he wanted. He (Mr. Douglas) had done most of his talking on the subject, not on the floor of the House, but in committee. The government must have a revenue, and he did not want any administration to do that for the farmers which we condemned them for doing for the manufacturers. He claimed that he made no promises of free implements, &c. What he wanted was justice.

Here he admits that he did not get from the government what the farmers wanted. But, he says he did his talking in the committee. Not in the committee of the House, because if so, we would know something of it. Not in caucus, because I am told he never raised his voice on that subject in caucus. He denies that he ever attended caucus, and hon. gentlemen opposite will be in a position to know whether that is so or not. Here is the language that I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to, and, in fact, the attention of every hon. member of the government who is present. Here is what their distinguished supporter said at Wapella:

He claimed that the government were not satisfied any more than the people were with the tariff.

Here is an admission—the government not satisfied with the tariff! Why did they not make a tariff that would be satisfactory to them and that would be satisfactory to the people?

He claimed that the government were not satisfied any more than the people were with the tariff.

To whom were the government pledged that they could not make a tariff satisfactory either to themselves or to the people? What dark shadow was behind the hon. Minister of Finance and behind the hon. Minister of Customs that, between them, they could not give us a tariff which would be satisfactory, at least, to themselves?

It had been stated that he attended a Liberal caucus. It was not so; what he had attended was an open conference.

I am afraid there is some beating around the bush there. Was he speaking the truth, in fact? That is the candid thing to ask.

He had made the strongest speech he had made in the House on the excessive rates of interest on implements, &c. He had told the government he would rather kick them in their own shanty than outside. When Messrs. Fielding and Paterson met with these manufacturers they (the manufacturers) said, 'You are making a general reduction to 25 per cent?' If that is so, we ask you for an advance on the implement duty to put us on a fair basis, and to compromise the matter they had allowed them free raw material, and the machine men had promised to make a $5 reduction in the prices of machines.

He was sorry he could not make a better report along this line.

As soon as he saw the new tariff, he wrote to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and asked for an interview. It was granted, and he told the Premier he had come to talk on agricultural implements and coal oil. He had said to Sir Wilfrid—

Now, I ask the attention of the House to this. This is what he said to the Prime Minister:

Sir, I want to tell you this: You have not given the members from the North-west a leg to stand on, because this is a large question to our people, and we have not now an argument to meet them with.

Why had they no argument to meet the farmers of the North-west with? Because the Prime Minister, because the hon. Minister of Agriculture, because the government had held out to the people of the North-west Territories the pledge and the promise that they would give them free implements, and because he himself had spoken in that line, as people in Eastern Assiniboia have told me. He said that he told the Prime Minister:

You have not given the members from the North-west a leg to stand on, because this is a large question to our people, and we have not now an argument to meet them with.

What an extraordinary state of things it is! One is ready to cry, what humbug! what shrinking! what sneaking! what special pleading! what meanness! what disloyalty! what betrayal! He goes on in this speech:

Referring again to coal oil, Mr. Douglas said the government would not agree to more than 1 per cent reduction. He had drafted a requisition which was signed by all the independent members asking for a greater reduction, but the government did not feel justified in doing this, as it would, they said, close up the wells at Petrolea. He had procured the rates on coal oil on the Canadian Pacific Railway for every station, even to Macleod and Prince Albert, and it was over the signature of an official. They called his attention to the fact that at that time coal oil could not be shipped in bulk further than Winnipeg, and proposed a change to allow them to carry it from the United States right through in tanks, and said we should save 5½ cents a gallon alone in the handling. He had met Mr. Fielding and asked him for a meeting. He went and drummed up their friends to go and see him. As soon as Lister heard of this he sent to Petrolea and brought down thirty sound Grits to interview the minister. However, he had carried his point, and now tank cars can pass along and coal oil should be 10 cents less than it was last session. The merchants should take hold of the idea.

Was coal oil any cheaper in 1897, was it any cheaper in 1898, was it any cheaper in 1899? Is it cheaper now? Yet, did our friends move here? Did they move in 1898? did they move in 1899? Have they moved now, when we have been sold, when all Canada has been sold to this commercial beast of prey? Taking the figures supplied by the Globe newspaper, the Standard Oil monopoly, by the advance in the price of petroleum, are wringing $4,000,000 extra profit each year from the people of Canada. Lamp oil has advanced during this last year 20 per cent, but no action has been taken by the government, and I have not heard that anything has been done in the way of relief since certain parties went before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The Toronto Globe, which I have already quoted, and which is so friendly to this government, was forced by public opinion to speak out on the 20th ultimo.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What would you recommend?

Mr. DAVIN. I am not a member of the government. I will use the language that was used by the hon. gentleman's leader, when I am called in I will prescribe. On the 20th ultimo the Globe said:

The average advance in the price of gas oil during the past year was 100 per cent.

Now, they are forced, as I have already pointed out, to a position of make believe. I read a short time ago a memorial from a non-political body in Moosejaw. It is in evidence in Hansard, and that non-political body points out that prices have gone up, that the promises in regard to the tariff have not been kept, and that, certainly so far as the western farmer has to think of the west, or of himself, there has been no relief. But let us do this government justice. If there has been no relief for the farmers, artificial flowers and ostrich feathers have been brought down 20 per cent, while wagons, which have been so often alluded to, as the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has pointed out, both farm and freight, remain what they were. Ploughs were 20 per cent before; they are 20 per cent still. In 1894 the Conservative party cut the duty on ploughs and implements 15 per cent, and in 1891 and 1892 they wiped out the sugar duty. This present government reduced the duties on spades and shovels, while keeping the duty on ploughs and the duty on wagons at what it was. They reduced the duty on shovels as though, as my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), in one of the most eloquent speeches that I ever heard on a platform, which he made at Pembroke, said, they believed that the people of the west did their summer ploughing with shovels. Seed drills, 20 per cent, as before, cultivators 20 per cent, as before. Mowing machines, 20 per cent as before. They reduced the duty on hoes, garden rakes, scythes and snaths, but, as if regretting that they reduced the duty on scythes, they doubled the duty on grinding-stones. They put up the duty on cotton and furs, but have taken 5 per cent off jewellery and perfumery, and from 2 per cent to 5 per cent off cotton velvets, precious stones, olive oil, chewing gum and vaseline! Is it no good? Is it not great? Self-binders with a duty of 20 per cent, the same as before. We have the bounty on iron, but we have the consolation that the duty is off reaping-hooks, which of course are used very largely in the North-west Territories. Lawn mowers are still 35 per cent, but sickles are down from 35 to 25 per cent. The railways have a reduction of 25 per cent on fish-plates, 33¼ on railway spikes, ties are on the free list, but a Liberal government could do nothing for the farmers. I have taken here from an authoritative source the evidence of the way prices have gone up all over. This is written by a manufacturer and he says that Pennsylvania crude oil advanced last year from $1.13 to the present price of $1.66 per barrel and its products in proportion. Canadian lamp oil has advanced during the year 50 per cent, while other lines have advanced still more. Lumber has advanced from 50 to 100 per cent according to quality, woollens about which the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) orates, have advanced from 50 to 75 per cent, and manufactures of iron and steel have advanced from 75 to 100 per cent. That is not a very satisfactory state of things for the farmer.

Mr. DAVIN.

But one of the greatest iniquities that this government has perpetrated has been pointed out by my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), and that is their conduct in regard to binder twine. That hon. gentleman found out, in response to a question he asked in this House, that the government sold the twine on hand in the Kingston Penitentiary in August, 1896: Manila, for $5 per 100 pounds; Mixed Beaver, $4.50 per 100 pounds; to the Hobbs Hardware Company, in 1897, they sold it at $5.25 per 100 pounds for Maple Leaf; $4.75 for mixed Beaver; $4.40 per 100 pounds for Sisal. In 1898, the government sold to Bate & Sons at the following prices: Manila Maple Leaf, $4.95 per 100 pounds; Mixed Beaver, $4.45 per 100 pounds; Sisal, $4.15 per 100 pounds. To the Hobbs Hardware Co. they sold, in 1899, at the following prices:

Manila, $7.25 per 100 pounds; Mixed Beaver, $6.15 per 100 pounds; Sisal, $6 per 100 pounds. Why was it that the Conservative government established that manufactory in the Kingston penitentiary? It was to help the farmer; it was to cut down prices; it was to guard the farmer against combines; and yet this government sells out to these men, who are proven to be in the combine as close as eels in a mud hole; this Liberal government sells out to these men, these conger eels of commerce, in order that they should get over 100 per cent on what they paid for the twine manufactured in that institution established by the Conservative government to help the farmer and to foreguard him against the combine!

What is the railway policy of this government? I see the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) in his seat, and I will therefore refer to a circumstance I would otherwise not refer to, namely, that in his first visit to the North-west Territories he called at Regina, and in a speech he made there he stated that in the building of railways the interests of the people alone should be considered, and he promised that he would in council propound a railway policy which he had been outlining and which was altogether in the interests of the people. Where is that policy? What has become of it? It is like the rest of the pledges of the Liberal government, gone into the limbo of forgotten things? It is one of the many pledges not redeemed, and these unredeemed pledges are so numerous that this government is like a congested pawnshop. Congested pawnshop—I will make a present of that to Rostap of the Telegram, who can picture this government as a pawnshop with a lot of unredeemed pledges, and he will of course give the place of honour as pawnbroker to the Prime Minister. I am anxious, Sir, about the railway policy of the government because I want to get freight rates reduced. Let me point out to you the way the situation was put by a farmer. He said: Wheat is the staple product of the North-west. Previous to 1898, prices were frequently 35 and 45 cents per bushel, and these low rates may prevail again. Suppose the farmer sells a thousand bushels of wheat in the British market at 80 cents a bushel; freights, insurance, &c., would eat up 35 cents per bushel, leaving the producer only $450 for his crop. He buys $250 worth of British goods and pays a duty of 30 per cent, or $75. The other expenses are, 20 per cent to wholesalers, 20 per cent to retailers, and 10 per cent for freight, in all $125. This would leave him without a dollar in cash, having secured only $250 worth of goods for $800 worth of wheat. That is the illustration of a farmer in the North-west. Is it an unfair one? Now the Canadian Pacific Railway without any pressure, has made a cut in passenger rates in the west which has brought them nearer to a level with those of Ontario. That has been done spontaneously and Mr. Shaughnessy deserves credit for it; but I hope he will not confine his pruning to passenger rates and that he will cut down freight rates as well. When the Minister of the Interior was in the west he spoke with a great deal of gall on the railway policy of the government, and when he was accused of being too friendly with the railway companies, his reply was peculiar. He quoted the Crow's Nest Pass deal in which millions of dollars were given for nothing, and he asked if the government that exacted such conditions were acting in the interests of railway corporations? Well, Mr. Speaker, when I tell you that the minister (Mr. Sifton) received nothing worse than coldness when he was in the west, I think you will agree with me that the people of the North-west are a people full of self-restraint. On a previous occasion I showed what was the average reductions that we ourselves procured from time to time while the Conservative government was in power. I will now show what reductions we brought about from certain western points to Fort William: In 1886, we got the rates reduced from 41½ cents per 100 pounds from Moosejaw to Fort William, 40 cents from Regina and 39 cents from Indian Head; we got them reduced to 33 cents at each point. The moment I came to parliament, in 1887, I called the western members together and we asked Mr. (now Sir William) Van Horne to meet us here. We had a conference with him; we went before the council, and on September 1, 1887, the rates were reduced from 33 cents to 30 cents at Moosejaw and Regina, and 29 cents at Indian Head. These rates remained until 1891, when we got a 29-cent rate at each point. In 1892, I, having been returned in 1891 as an independent member, brought before the government and before Sir William Van Horne the question of rates; and the letter of Sir William Van Horne to me on that occasion is on the pages of Hansard. The result was that on September 5, notwithstanding the strong position taken by Sir William Van Horne in that letter, we got 23 cents at Moosejaw and Regina and 22 cents at Indian Head. In 1896 we were pressing the government to use its influence for further reductions, when a change took place. In 1896 we got a reduction of 7½ cents at Moosejaw and 7 cents at Regina, in 1891 of 1 cent, and in 1893 of 6 cents at these points and 7 cents at Indian Head, and the government paid nothing for the reductions. And yet this placid minister comes forward and boasts of getting a graduated reduction of 3 cents in three years; and how did he get it? By the payment of over $2,000,000; is it not marvellous that he met with no more offensive missile when he was west than the studied coldness and neglect of the Liberals? In March, 1899, at the meeting to which I have already referred, at which Mr. Richardson, Mr. Oliver and Mr. J. Grant spoke, the sentiment that the Liberal who would vote for his party once when it was right and twice when it was wrong was 'a yellow dog Liberal,' was cheered to the echo. Mr. D. A. Macdonald moved, seconded by Mr. A. Alexander, the following resolution:

Whereas, a study of the transportation question in Canada reveals the fact that the people of the Dominion have paid in cash and subsidies of one kind and another for the construction of railways as much as would under reasonable management construct all existing lines.

And whereas, the railways of the Dominion, although constructed at the expense of the people, do not afford the boon of genuine competition, but tax the people grievously in excessive freight and passenger rates, thus seriously retarding the progress of the country.

Be it resolved, that the time is ripe for the inauguration of a new policy, designed to preserve to the people the benefits that should accrue from the expenditure of public money on railways and looking in the direction of the ultimate ownership and control by the government of the transportation interests of the country.

This was carried unanimously. Now, we have no hint from these benches of any policy like that. I have myself declared in this House that the true solution of the railway question is government ownership and government control, measured by any help that may be given by the government to the railway. The hon. gentleman who spoke here to-night dwelt upon the advantageous agreement that was made with the Grand Trunk and the advantageous purchase of the Drummond County Railway. What is the fact in regard to that Drummond deal? The first bargain must have been a bad one, because after the Senate had thrown it out, we got it for three-quarters of a million less, and even then the price paid was too high. With regard to the payment to the Grand Trunk, here is what the organ of the farmers said, under the heading 'Mr. Blair's Willingness':

During the debate in the House on Mr. Richardson's motion to limit the bonding of railroads, Mr. Blair, Minister of Railways, stated he was 'always willing to assist in restraining the corporations.' It was not long ago an opportunity to restrain corporations came to Mr. Blair. A bonus of $300,000 to the Grand Trunk for enlarging the Victoria Bridge and an annual payment of $40,000 formed part of his arrangement for extending the government railway system to Montreal. The money was handed over and not a word said about charges. Result: Supplies for Montreal market can now be wagoned from the south shore of St. Lawrence River on paying as follows:

Horses in droves, per head.....	15c.
Cattle in droves, per head.....	10c.
Sheep in droves, per head.....	3c.
Calves in droves, per head.....	5c.
Swine in droves, per head.....	5c.
Vehicles drawn by one animal.....	20c.

Mr. DAVIN.

Vehicles drawn by two animals.....	40c.
Extra vehicle	15c.
Milkman's vehicle, driver free, extra passenger, each	5c.
Drawn by one animal	25c.
Drawn by two animals.....	50c.

No charge for baby carriages.

The south shore farmers pay the highest tolls for the use of the most highly-subsidized bridge in America. They are not in a position to appreciate Mr. Blair's willingness to restrict the power of corporations.

The last speaker referred to the Teslin Lake Railway. I have here what Mr. Martin in his famous speech said about that:

Sifton coolly entered into a bargain with Mackenzie & Mann and pledged the faith of his colleagues two weeks before parliament was to assemble. When it did come up the members had no option. They were bound helpless. As many of them said to me, 'We are disgusted with it, but what are we to do? Is it not better to pass it than to turn the party out before it has fairly got into the saddle?' Now, I say right here, that if it had been the best of bargains in the world, I would have opposed it. The result was that there was lack of time. That was exploded. Mackenzie & Mann did not stir a step for weeks. But it was a desperately bad bargain. Sir Charles Tupper said that £10,000,000 could have been obtained in London for Mackenzie & Mann's bargain.

Having described the whole transaction, he concluded by saying:

Now, gentlemen, that is a chapter in the history of the Liberal administration of which I am not proud. It showed that, in so far as Sifton could control the government, he was prepared to resort to any means to attain his end. He was ready to do all those arbitrary acts simply because Mackenzie & Mann were up there representing the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gravest admission of all by this government is that since they came into power they have quietly shelved the Hudson Bay Railway. When the Minister of Marine and Fisheries fitted out a boat which was utterly inadequate for the purpose of finding out whether Hudson Bay was navigable for a given number of months or not, and refused an offer from ship-owners in London, who could have sent a proper boat, the Winnipeg Free Press, which was then an honest and independent Liberal organ, came out and said that these men were trying to burk the Hudson Bay Railway. What has been the result? Ever since we had the report of the little sloop which was sent there, and which made the most perfunctory and imperfect test, nothing has been done; and this government is clearly opposed to the construction of a Hudson Bay Railway, which would be the great solution of the problem of shortening the distance between the North-west and England. The constituency of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) is probably more interested in the Hudson Bay Railway than any other part of the Territories. Any part of the Territories would be benefited by that railway. There is not a part of Manitoba or the North-west that would not have its farms enhanced in value and every bushel of grain it grows enhanced in price if we had a Hudson Bay Railway. But this government, which starves the executive, which does not give a sufficient subsidy, which will not give the people of the Territories sufficient money to carry on their business, which will give no relief on implements, or cotton, or coal, or coal oil, or lumber, has burked and shelved the project of a railway to Hudson Bay.

The gentleman who spoke last (Mr. Campbell) told us that the people do not care how much money is spent so long as the heaven-born statesmen who are in office remain there. Still, let us look at what the expenditure has been, and bear in mind the pledge of these hon. gentlemen to reduce it $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, according as it was the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), or Senator Mills, or the Prime Minister, who spoke. Here are the figures :

1896-7—
Ordinary outlay	$38,349,759
Capital	3,523,160
	$41,872,919
1897-8—
Ordinary outlay	$38,832,525
Capital	4,143,503
	$42,976,028
1898-9—
Ordinary outlay	$41,903,500 54
Capital	5,936,342 94
	$47,839,843 48
Railway subsidies	3,201,220 05
Other charges.....	501,571 76
	$51,542,635 29

What did the farmers complain of in 1895-6 in the way of expenditure ? Here it is :

Ordinary outlay	$36,949,142
Capital	3,716,184
Total	$40,665,326

This was awful ! This was to be reduced at least 7 per cent. Now, this is the way they reduced it :

1899-1900--
Ordinary outlay	$43,175,000
Capital	9,875,000
	$53,050,000
1895-6	40,665,000
	$12,385,000

Thus, instead of three or four millions reduction, we have twelve and a half millions of an increase, with a surplus largely bogus, because items are charged to capital not properly placed under that head.

There are items charged to capital account in the Intercolonial Railway which were never charged to capital before, and in this way these hon. gentlemen have been enabled to claim a surplus. If the accounts had been properly kept, they would have shown a deficit of a couple of millions. Then, in the last three years, the public debt has increased by seven and a half millions, and the annual interest by $352,682. This increased interest is alarming, because it shows that the government is borrowing money to spend in subsidies and contracts. What is a subsidy ? What is a bonus ? Fancy men borrowing money to give it away !

Take some of the items of expense : $815,454, administration of justice, as compared with $758,270 in 1896 :

$815,454
758,270

Additional $ 57,784

Why ? For one thing, those political judgships. Mr. Prendergast in Manitoba, his reward, not for legal attainments, or because it was needed, but to reward him for his diplomatic action in regard to the settlement of the school question. On this item alone the Prime Minister promised us a reduction in law costs of $100,000. Take again the immigration vote :

1899.....	$255,878
1896.....	120,199

	$135,679

How is this accounted for ? Lord Aberdeen's butler, who became the poet laureate of the Premier, and had to be rewarded : such men as Jury, Busby, Devlin, Greene, Benjamin Davies, Sir Louis' brother, and, last but not least, Preston, with his $3,000 a year and expenses, Preston of the 'hugging machine.'

But, these gentlemen boast of a surplus. Why, there is not a man on those benches, if he is fit for his position, who does not know—the Finance Minister knows well because he has been a journalist and is an instructed man—that no Finance Minister who knows his business should have an exorbitant surplus. He knows very well that, on sound principles of political economy, you ought to take as little money out of the pockets of the people as possible. It is a reproach to the government to have a surplus, it is a warning to them that they have failed as good financiers, and failed, above all, to be true to the principles of the Liberals of England. Mr. Gladstone would have been ashamed to stand before parliament and announce such a surplus, because his principle was that you should not take a cent out of the pockets of the people that was not absolutely needed for the purposes of government. Am I not fortified by authority in that opinion ? Let those gentlemen who boast of this surplus ponder these words uttered in 1894 by the First Minister with regard to the surplus which the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) announced to the House :

Why, Sir, you heard the hon. gentleman driven to the expedient of giving it as an evidence of prosperity, that during the last fifteen years which the country has been under a protective regime, the finances of the country balanced year after year by surpluses which now aggregate the enormous sum of $20,000,000.

Yet, the hon. gentleman who last spoke said the Conservative government had nothing to show but deficits.

This fact, which I do not hesitate to say to the hon. gentleman, is nothing short of a disgrace and a shame for the administration, was treated by him as a boast. I assert that such a condition of things is a shame and a disgrace to any government. In England the aim and the purpose of the Chancellor of the Exchequer is so to calculate the expense and the expenditure as to make them balance evenly, and the reputation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer would be lost for ever, year after year, his calculations were found to be wrong. If, instead of having just the revenue which is wanted to meet the expenditure, it was found that there was such a discrepancy in his calculations as exists in Canada, the reputation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer would, I repeat, be lost for ever, unless he were able to show that the discrepancy arose from a sudden disturbance in the condition of business. What is the truth about these surpluses? Twenty millions of dollars, says the Finance Minister. The truth is, that these surpluses represent $20,000,000 of unjust taxation, which has been wrung by the government from the consumers of the country; twenty millions of dollars which would have been left in the pockets of the people for the purpose of their own business, for instance, to be applied to the redemption of the mortgages with which the country has been plastered during that term of years. What is the truth about these surpluses? If it is an evidence of prosperity that we should have surpluses, why, in the name of common sense is the hon. gentleman to-day proposing a reduction of duty, which places him, as he says himself, in the face of a deficit?

At that time the ex-Minister of Finance was giving relief, because he did not want to have what these gentlemen boast of and what this critic declares it was a disgrace to the Minister of Finance to have—a bloated surplus. This critic declares that the Finance Minister is disgraced to-day by having the surplus he has. Now, Sir, who is the critic, who condemns the Finance Minister for his surplus? The critic is the present Prime Minister. That is the way when leader of the opposition, he spoke in 1894. You will find it in Hansard, page 1225. And, Sir, the farmers' organ, the Sun, speaking of this surplus, says :

Facts, Not Faction, Wanted.

A Montreal contemporary complains that our revenue is too great, as it results in surpluses which are followed by government extravagance. It ignores the fact that our surpluses are not real, but fictitious ones, and are the result of a system of book-keeping which is followed in Canada, and in Canada alone. As a matter of fact, we have had surpluses in only two years since confederation, and together they amounted to less than $600,000; in every other year we have run behind.

There is no doubt that our system of book-keeping has encouraged extravagance. Surpluses announced by our various Finance Ministers have been put forward in justification of larger expenditures, and as reasons for entering upon new undertakings. If it had been generally understood that these 'surpluses' were shams there would not have been so much readiness to live beyond our income.

In figuring out surpluses, when in reality there are deficits, Mr. Fielding is following the example set by Mr. Foster and by Mr. Foster's predecessors. He doubtless thinks that if he were to put his financial statement on a true basis and state things as they really are he would still be judged by the standard of Mr. Foster's time, and an erroneous idea of the present national finances would thus be created. Of this there is not much fear. The public has been 'getting on' to the real state of facts, and would respect a Finance Minister who had the courage to state our financial position in a common-sense way.

If you take up the Finance Minister's own book, the public accounts, and compare the receipts and the amounts spent on capital, as well as on ordinary revenue, you will see that, instead of having a surplus, we have a deficit of about $2,000,000. Now, that Montreal critic that the Sun refers to was quite right in saying that this government has launched out in a course of reckless extravagance. And, taking the cue from some of the Prime Minister's utterances, I am afraid it has launched out also upon a career of corruption. It has become systematic to give contracts without tenders, to make positions for favourites like Preston; bribe members of parliament by positions and promises of positions to support them whether they are right or wrong—to play the 'yellow dog' Liberal; such extravagance, such corruption as was seen in the Edmonton bridge; such conduct as giving $20,000 to men of the pen like Gauthier to do dredging; silencing McGillicuddy, and silencing Miller and others with a job; and wharfs—we had ninety-one last year, of which fourteen were in the constituency of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. One of the wharfs should be specially referred to, it is the wharf at Maria, in Bonaventure. No less than $70,000 was asked for this wharf, and I am told by my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), who knows the place, that there is not enough water there to float a match-box. Then there was $15,000 in the estimates last year for a wharf at Bruce Mines, in Algoma, to please the hon. member (Mr. Dymont), for that constituency. And this is what the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), writing in the Tribune, says about it :

There has also been voted $15,000 for a wharf at Bruce Mines, Algoma, which is already supplied with one. Bruce Mines is a small village in which an infinitesimal amount of trade is done. No one asked for the new wharf, no one wanted it—except Mr. Dymont, the Liberal representative for Algoma. These instances could be multiplied by the score—

Indeed they might.

—but 'cui bono'? And yet this Liberal apologist—

He is referring to the Free Press.

—declares that there is no hint that the money is to be uselessly and dishonestly spent!

Mr. Sifton's press syndicate has a rare sense of the ridiculous. Its explanations don't explain.

Indeed they do not. In the North-west papers you will find the same letter in the Moosejaw Times and other Liberal papers in the North-west, all sent from the Sifton literary forge here. They have been afraid to keep up the eulogizing of the Minister of the Interior. It would not do. It got too hot for them, and they sing another song now. I have all the wharfs, here, but at this late hour, I will not read them, though they furnish interesting reading. Besides, I wish to call attention to one item of extravagance that will appeal to the economizing soul of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen).

In other days how eloquent that voice was wont to speak from these benches of expenditures on table covers and table knives and spoons at Rideau Hall. That voice is silent now. The carefully thumbed Auditor General's Report is thumbed no longer. What the hon. gentleman reads now, I really do not know, but I hope that he is not at a loss for light literature, having abandoned the amusing volume which the Auditor General turns out year after year. The item I am about to bring before the hon. gentleman is one after his own heart. I wish I could summon to aid the eloquence with which he could deal with a matter like this; but I will do it in my own imperfect way—at a long distance from the eloquence with which, I know, my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) would do it. But I am sure I will interest him. I have here an account of the expenses of the joint high commission. The total is $33,961. I rather think that the farmers of the North-west will open their eyes when they read this:

Expenses—

Sir Wilfrid Laurier.....	$3,821
Sir Richard Cartwright	2,900
Sir Louis Davies	2,600
Mr. Charlton	1,776
Mr. Bourassa, M.P., sec'y of the com....	2,200
Mr. Pope, Under Secretary of State.....	1,851
Mr. Parmalee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce	923
Mr. O'Hara, Sir Richard Cartwright's secretary	1,336
Mr. King, chief astronomer	1,315
Mr. Venning, Fisheries Department	1,130
Mr. Gordon, Sir Louis Davies' secretary..	1,050
Mr. Boudreau, the Premier's secretary..	866

There were other expenses besides :

Printing and stationery	$1,991
Office rent	1,814
Entertainments	1,639
Tips to servants	407
Cabs, including baggage	270
Luncheons at Quebec	178
Cards and paintings	96
Photographs	46
Towels	45
Soap and matches	12
Crockery	12

I want especially to call attention to that $470 for tips. There were 13 gentleman. Divide that sum by 13, and we find $31 that each man spent in tips. How grand they were when they were flaunting about in Washington. Out of that 13, we had 5 secretaries, anyway 4 secretaries. For secretaries alone, during those few months, we paid some $6,000.

Mr. GIBSON. How much did you get for being secretary of the Chinese commission?

Mr. DAVIN. I was very badly paid, if he wants to know.

Mr. McMULLEN. You rendered very poor service, too.

Mr. DAVIN. It was the universal opinion, not merely of the English speaking world, as you can learn from the brother of the late Sir Adolphe Chapleau himself, that the Chinese report, which is in the library, is one of the most valuable reports that has ever been produced, and the most thorough. As this matter has been referred to, I may be allowed to say, that it was with great loss to myself that I accepted the position. I never asked for it. I was telegraphed to that I was appointed, and I had to go down to Winnipeg, and at a cost and loss, to engage somebody to take charge. The salary usually paid to the secretary of a commission was $5 a day and expenses, and nobody supposed that that pay would at any time in my life, be good for me. I could earn the whole and double and treble a week's pay in a couple of hours at my own trade, and I have often done so. I was secretary of two commissions, and in neither case did I ask for the position. I was secretary of the Canadian Pacific Railway commission, and when asked by Sir John Macdonald to act, I made a condition that it should not last longer than the vacation, and he said it would not. I also said I would not accept it or go outside of Toronto unless the pay was adequate. When I learned what the pay was—I suppose the letter will be found in the department of the Secretary of State—I wrote down refusing the position. The present leader of the opposition wrote up to me, asking me to come down to Ottawa, and down I came, and he told me that Sir John A. Macdonald had left that I should act as secretary. He advised me not to refuse to act, and it was on his advice that I acted. Why is it, that at the close of the long vacation I did not go and do counsel business for Beatty, Hamilton & Cassils? I will tell you why. One of the papers of Toronto came out with a criticism of that commission, and declared that Judge Clarke, Mr. Miall and Mr. Keefer, were all men under the control of the government of the day. But that critic said—you will find it in the Telegram—that as long as I was secretary it was a guarantee to the public that the commission would deal impartially and act above board.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). He said it in irony.

Mr. DAVIN. No, he did not. When the Globe began to criticise adversely that commission, my hands were tied, and Mr. James Beatty, the head of the firm, wrote begging me to come back, but I could not under the circumstances.

Mr. McMULLEN. You lost a suit, I guess.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Mr. Beatty was afterwards examined in another case, and he said that I would be very likely anyway to win suits, because he stated in the strongest terms, that no counsel ever did the work better than I did. You will find it in his sworn evidence. Well, Sir, I may say here, that truer men, juster men, more impartial men, than Judge Clarke, Mr. Miall and Mr. Keefer, could not be found. But my hands were tied by a criticism like that, and I had to remain away from Toronto, to my great loss. The first intimation I had about the Chinese commission was a telegram, and I telegraphed the late Secretary of State—I believe he is living still—wanting to know what it meant, and he telegraphed me. I knew that Sir John A. Macdonald had some reason for it, and I afterwards discovered there was good reason for it. But in regard to the report, I know something about books. Of course I am not pronouncing merely on my own work, there are other gentlemen connected with that; but I say here that it will challenge comparison with any report that has ever been turned out by any commission in thoroughness, in exhaustiveness, and, as it proved, in usefulness. So much for the interruption. I may say to the hon. gentleman, it was a great loss to me, and I was very badly paid.

Mr. GIBSON. $3,000?

Mr. DAVIN. The expenses of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in his junketting were $3,831. There is another way where they might have economized, but where they have run into extravagance, into superfluity. How have they carried out their promise to reduce the number of ministers? By adding to the number. They have had two opportunities to reduce the number. Even after they formed the government, they have had two opportunities. They had an opportunity when Sir Oliver Mowat went out; they had an opportunity when they took it into their heads to raise the two controllers to the rank of ministers, and give them back pay. Now, we have a government with a Minister of Trade and Commerce, and a Minister of Customs in the same cabinet, and I need hardly tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the criticisms of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) when it was proposed to have two controllers that a minister of Trade and Commerce was a fifth wheel to the coach, is much more just and cogent when you have two controllers, who are full ministers, than when you had two controllers who were not within the cabinet, and when the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce was the only one there, and represented both.

What have this government done? I will tell you what they have done. They have introduced Walpoleism into the country for the first time. When they came into power they introduced the spoils system; they had a hanging committee wherever there was a Liberal organization. They introduced nepotism and the degradation of parliament.

An hon. MEMBER. Read it.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. Minister of the Interior has been guilty of the grossest nepotism. Probably, in the history of politics, there has never been such a first-class asset as relationship to the young Napoleon of the west. But, in this he is only treading in the steps of the great Napoleon, who, as we know, in his own interest, danced, swore, fought, murdered and plundered through Europe, made his relatives and cousins kings and princes, and enjoyed with them that boundless wealth that Napoleon le Petit enjoys in his place. Walpole's methods have been introduced. At the outset, when he formed his government, the right hon. Prime Minister bought over Conservatives. I think the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) was a Conservative.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Never, never.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I am glad to hear that. Never a Conservative?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Never.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I have had very good reason for believing that the hon. gentleman was negotiated with to enter a Conservative government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Never, Sir; the hon. gentleman has no reason for believing it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. DAVIN. I, of course, take the hon. gentleman's denial. Prior to that denial I had good reason for believing it. Of course I accept the hon. gentleman's denial, but if I had not that denial, I would be under the impression that negotiations were going on, and that he was to enter a Conservative government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Never with me, never a syllable of negotiations.

Mr. DAVIN. I accepted the hon. gentleman's statement, but, I say that if I had not the advantage of that statement, I should have been under the impression that I had good reason for believing that negotiations were going on to have him enter the government of Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Of course, I accept the hon. gentleman's denial.

Mr. GIBSON. Was that when the other members were on strike?

Mr. DAVIN. The ponderousness and the facetiousness of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) are always highly amusing, and I do not object to his facetiousness. It is evidence to me that there is a mind working; otherwise, I should not always be sure of that.

Mr. GIBSON. It is something you have not got yourself.

Mr. DAVIN. If the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was not then enticed one of the most important members of this government, the member without portfolio, was certainly. I believe he was elected as a Conservative, he ran as a Conservative, and the moment—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. DAVIN. I am not speaking of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals—the moment he saw the way the cat jumped he turned around, and I find that he is down as a straight Liberal, and not as an independent Liberal, in the Parliamentary Companion. I speak of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), and I must say that I never knew until the other night what his function was in this government. I thought that his function was to deal with bottle-necked whales, or bottle-necked ships, but the other night, I happened to be passing through the corridor, and as I neared room 16, I found an hon. gentleman going into that room. I said to him: Why is it that you are not in the House? And I think he said to me—oh, well, I will not use the familiar language in which he spoke of a great man like the hon. Minister of Customs—but he said: 'Oh, Customs is at it.' And he went into room 16 to enjoy his pipe. When I came in here I looked over the empty benches and I saw that the hon. member for Quebec West was looking up with wonder, love and praise into the face of the hon. Minister of Customs, who was thundering away. I could not help thinking of Dean Swift, when parish minister of Lorriquer. Sometimes he had to address his sexton, who composed his congregation. He said: My dearly beloved Roger. If there had not been the Speaker in the Chair, the hon. Minister of Customs would have to address the hon. member for Quebec West as: My dearly beloved Dobell. I found that there was a certain reason for the political existence of the hon. member for Quebec West, and I would congratulate him on the fact that there is a purpose in his political life. If I had not learned this one might have wondered why he was politically created, or what his political creator really intended him for.

This government has done something I never heard of a government doing, and a large number of the party opposite have fallen in with it; they have done this House great harm, and it has reacted on the ministers of the Crown. When they came into office in 1896, when a member on this side of the House rose, the present acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland), who was then Whip, thought it was a great policy to go around amongst the young members of the House and persuade them to go out. The hon. Postmaster General did the same thing, and these young men, who were new to parliamentary practice, thought they were doing something clever in marching out, going into No. 16, and taking out their tobacco pipes. It was a great way of learning their business as parliamentarians. But, the engineer is hoist with his own petard. Now, ministers of the Crown have to depend on the opposition for an audience. They cannot get members of their own party to remain in the House while they are speaking, and when one of their first ministers was speaking here the other night the Liberal party was represented by the hon. member for Quebec West. The speech of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has always been a great drawing card in this House. But in the height of the eloquence of the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance in 1899 and in 1898, I turned around to my hon. friends here and counted the number of Liberals present, and I never could count more than thirty-two Liberals out of the large Liberal party. How does that affect the young men themselves?

Of the men who acted on these instructions to leave the House in that way during the five sessions, not a single man of them has made a mark nor could he expect to. I remember a friend of mine going to the late Chief Justice of England and saying to him: How can my son become a great lawyer, must he read books? The Lord Chief Justice replied: Let him go to the courts and remain there, and take notes of the cases and then he will know law. The way to become a parliamentarian is to stick in the House and I may say that I have never listened to the humblest member in this House without learning something from him. These young members have been done a great injury by the present acting Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sutherland) and by the present Postmaster General and of the number who have left the House to gossip in Room 16, not a man of them has any more influence in the House nor any more standing in the country than he had five years ago. These gentlemen have done a great harm to parliament, to themselves, to the Liberal party and to the government. Yesterday when in the galleries, I looked down on a Liberal member speaking on the floor with hardly a man on the Liberal side to hear him. I say to these gentlemen who are responsible for this: You have degraded parliament and it has come full circle to yourselves.

I was speaking of the Walpolian methods. One of the papers that used to denounce the government for its tergiversation was the Simcoe Reformer. That paper is the organ of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). The writing may have been Donley, but the voice was Jacobs, and what has happened to Jacob Charlton? I remember that at the early part of the parliament he kicked. Can it be possible that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has been solaced by being made a member of the International commission with a prospect held out to him that he would be knighted by and by? What is the reason that the hon. gentleman's paper no longer comes out as it used to? Why is it we do not hear its voice as we still hear the Huntingdon Gleaner? Has Donley been silenced by the gentleman who used ventriloquise through his paper? As I say this government has introduced Walpolian methods. We have already had fifteen members removed from the House to office and out of the House there is the same system of providing offices for those whom the government either fears or loves.

I want to say one word with regard to the preferential tariff question, and although I shall not enter into it at any length now, I wish to make one or two points which I do not think have been made yet. For instance I saw in the Witness, yesterday, an article headed 'Take our blood but leave us our money' and that article makes the statement that Sir Charles Tupper has spoken differently in Quebec from what he has spoken elsewhere. I have read Sir Charles Tupper's speeches in Quebec, and they are precisely the same in opinion as he made at Lethbridge with almost the same language used. Not only that, but if you look back to his letter written in reply to Joe Howe, when Joe Howe proposed in 1862 that we should have Imperial confederation with representation in the Imperial parliament, and paying our share of taxation, and going into confederation for trade and defence precisely the same as if we were part of the British isles. Sir Charles Tupper wrote a long letter condemning that policy on precisely the same grounds as he condemns representation in the Imperial parliament to-day. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that before any one else did in Ontario,—not before any one else did in other parts of Canada—but before any one else did in Ontario, I raised the same Imperial view I hold to-day. I would be utterly opposed to representation in the Imperial parliament, because you cannot conceive of anything that would be more injurious to Canada, that would take away advantages from Canada, like having representation in the Imperial parliament. If we had representation in the Imperial parliament we should have only a few members compared with the English members, we should be perfectly powerless, but being represented we should be liable to be taxed by a parliament three thousand miles away utterly unaware (except from the explanation of five or six or ten members), of our social conditions, of our municipal system, of our territorial or our agrarian conditions, and quite unfit to tax us or to legislate for us in an intimate manner. I do not think I will yield to any one in loyalty to the empire or imperial enthusiasm, but I would be sorry as a Canadian if such representation should come to pass. I should be sorry even for England, because in the end such a union as that would break the true union which exists at present, the union which causes the motherland to look to Canada and Australia growing more and more into nationhood, sprung from the august mother of free nations, bound together by loyal ties of sympathy and ready to stand by each other as we are ready to-day.

There is frequently the statement made both in the press and in this House, that the right hon. the Prime Minister when he went to Liverpool was not offered anything by the Duke of Devonshire. I proved in this House by quoting the letter of the Duke of Devonshire sent to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock)—and which he only quoted part of—and by quoting the speeches to which this letter referred, that that letter actually meant that the Duke of Devonshire had been in favour of preferential trade, and that we on this side had put the proper interpretation upon his attitude and action as regards the Prime Minister of Canada. Here is what the Winnipeg Free Press, a Liberal paper, said when it was found that the present Prime Minister had taken that course. Referring to preferential trade:

The prospect is favourable, no doubt, but we cannot but realize that we lost our best opportunity when the practical offer of preferential trade was made in the height of the jubilee sentiment.

There may be eminent and influential leaders to support it now, but the advantage thrown away then will be hard to regain.

In another part of the same article it says:

There is Lord Rosebery among the British Liberals to help it on, and Lord Rosebery can carry many men of his party with him.

I may say that the very next day after this was written Lord Rosebery, influenced by what was done by the present Prime Minister, threw over the idea of a customs union altogether. But, Sir, I have something stronger than that. I have a letter written in the Globe by Mr. Willison, who was in London during the Jubilee, and who published a series of letters, which were very adulatory of Sir Wilfrid Laurier; and this is what he says:

It is not too much to say that after the Queen, Sir Wilfrid Laurier was the most conspicuous figure of the Jubilee celebrations.

I am sure that could not be correct, for we had the London Spectator, published on the spot, declaring that the most prominent figures after the Queen were the generals of the army. But after giving any amount of praise to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Willison says:

But while ornate and eloquent, it was soon found that his head was in thorough command of his tongue, and that he could not be stamped by any organized demonstration of cheering or led into by-paths by the seductive luring of even the Duke of Devonshire or Mr. Chamberlain.

What is the meaning of that? The meaning is that Mr. Willison thought the Duke of Devonshire and Mr. Chamberlain wanted to lure him into negotiations that would have led to preferential trade. Again, it is constantly stated that throughout England there is no feeling in favour of mutual preferential trade. On a previous occasion I quoted resolutions passed at chambers of commerce in great centres in England in favour of it. I shall now quote from the Wiltshire Chronicle, which is one of the leading country papers of England; and you know the country press of England is very influential. Some of the country papers turned out are as imposing as the Times newspaper. Mr. John W. Hall, a prominent man who takes an interest in this question, writes to that paper as follows:

Sir,—I would submit that the junior partners in the firm of John Bull and Sons, soon to be registered as the style of the firm as an offensive and defensive alliance for political purposes, will have no permanent future before it unless based on a differentiating tariff between the respective partners and outsiders for commercial purposes.

The junior partners will justly hold the connection to be valueless—perhaps pernicious—that withholds from them their just share of the firm's profits other than that claimed by, and allowed to, aliens. The colonies will argue and ask why the disabilities should be incurred that do not secure extra advantages. They are sharing the cost of the war ungrudgingly both in men and money; good luck to them, to obtain a compensation in extra trade they may do with the United Kingdom. Money is said to be the sinews of war, and gained only by trade productions. The old country's tendency to commit commercial suicide, under the incapable free trade advisers of the Courtney stamp, has hitherto prevented the colonies from receiving their just share of their parent's patrimony.

They will indignantly ask what benefit such a connection is if compensation should be denied them over and above the alien.

They will soon be telling Great Britain—at least, we hope so—'We have spent our blood and sinew for you without any extra equivalent over those who have done nothing of the kind, and now new conditions must be made, or you must get those to do your fighting you most encourage by your trade.'

Australia is already speaking out as to the settlement of the South African war—see the round-robin signed by all the Premiers, addressed to our government. No stop the war lunacy before the fight is finished gains adherents there.

We say 'Advance Australia' in the matter of asserting yourself. You have bought the right to speak on the declaration of peace. Exercise the right as to future trade relations, and insist on having some preferential claim to the British market for your goods over and above the envious foreigners, who do all that they dare to obstruct.

For the Fair Trade and Home Labour Defence League.

JOHN W. HALL.

I may say the writer misunderstands our motive in contributing assistance for the defence of the empire in South Africa. We would have sent help to the empire whether there was any trade to be got or not; but this shows how an Englishman looks at the question, and as such it is most important. Mr. James Hunt, of Bristol, writes in a similar strain. I will not quote all of his letter, but I will cite quotations, which he makes from Lord Roberts, Lord Salisbury, and Mr. Chamberlain:

Gen. Lord Roberts in 1893 publicly declared in London: 'Politicians were recognizing that the federation of the empire was the great problem of the future:

Lord Salisbury backs this up by stating:

We know that every bit of the world's surface that is not under the British flag is a country which may be and probably will be, closed to us by a hostile tariff, and therefore it is that we are anxious above all things to conserve, to unify, to strengthen, the empire of the Queen, because it is to the trade that is carried on within the empire of the Queen that we look for the vital force of the commerce of this country.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P., is fully alive to the importance of the subject and has asserted:

There is a universal desire amongst all the members of the empire for a closer union between the several branches, and in their opinion it is desirable—nay, it is essential—for the existence of the empire as such. Experience has taught us that this closer union can be most hopefully approached in the first instance from the commercial side.

Yet we are told that John Bull would never have it. Mr. Hunt concludes:

On the principle of blood being thicker than water, our empire will yet be welded into one.

powerful Federation for the promotion of its trade and the defence of its territory.

I have here a very curious opinion as to what the preferential trade which we call for by the resolution I am supporting would do for this country. I take it from a paper, not always very friendly, the New York Sun. The Sun says:

What the Dominion of Canada and the Australian colonies really want is to retain their actual autonomy, which is almost entire, including the right of option to participation in England's wars. So long as such autonomy and such right of option are retained they will possess a leverage exactly proportioned to the value of their military assistance, by means of which they may hope to exact a decided preference for their food products in the English markets.

Now, mark this:

Such a preference would give a tremendous stimulus to the production of grain and flour and meat products in the Canadian Dominion and throughout Australasia. The colonies want a preference so marked that it would bar out all similar commodities from the United States and Argentina until all the colonial food products available for exportation should have been exhausted.

The Sun sees the advantage of this preference. Nothing could be done that would send the North-west forward with such giant strides as to give us a preference in the English markets. What a stimulus that would be to the best class of immigration. It would bring in, not pauper immigrants, but immigrants with money from the United States and the United Kingdom, and we should have the North-west going ahead at a mathematical ratio and no longer its future imperilled by the policy of the Minister of the Interior.

There is a view respecting preferential trade which is left too much out of the question. Great Britain should adopt preferential trade, not alone as a good commercial policy, but also as a warlike policy. At present she is dependent for 60,000,000 quarters of wheat annually on foreign sources and gets only 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 quarters from her colonies. Let her give us a preference, and you will have immigrants crowding into our colonies, and you would have our colonies supplying the 60,000,000 quarters to Great Britain instead of only 4,000,000. I do not intend to further dwell on this question. I desired to bring out points that I do not think others have brought out. I have shown that those who look on us with an eye away from our interests, see what a great commercial advantage such preferential trade as we call for by this resolution would be. I have shown that in the heart of England, in Wiltshire, prominent men, typical representatives of John Bull, men who are not politicians, cannot understand why anybody in Canada or England should think that something ought to be given in trade for nothing. They think that there should be reciprocity in benefits.

Mr. DAVIN.

What is the real reason of the immense influx of goods into this country and our large revenue? The chief reason is this: Up to three or four years ago, we did not have a succession of good seasons in the North-west Territories. The Territories in many places were still experimenting, but we have had since then a succession of good seasons in the North-west Territories and in Manitoba. And what has been the product in Manitoba and the North-west for the last year? About 60,000,000 bushels of grain—wheat, oats and barley. I forget how many bushels of oats, but anyway we produced an immense quantity of grain for export and an immense quantity of cattle for export. Train-load after train-load of our cattle has gone out for export. What does that mean? It means the equivalent of another colony tacked on to Canada and the wealth of that other colony thrown into the pot. One of the reasons why we have all this prosperity is because the North-west Territories and Manitoba are now beginning to send large quantities of produce and cattle to the markets of Europe. The present government are boasting of that prosperity, but to what party is due the credit of building up the North-west? Why, that country was opened up in the face of the strenuous opposition by the leading men of the Liberal party. Their doubting utterances are on record. They never lifted a hand to help the development of our North-west. I have been here for eighteen sessions, and during fourteen sessions I never proposed anything for the advantage of the North-west Territories in which I did not encounter the opposition of the Liberal leaders. I do not say that of the rank and file but of the leaders of the party. Manitoba and the North-west are the creation of the Conservative party, and if Canada is as prosperous a country as she is to-day, it is due to the strong arms and the business brain and the first class quality of our people directed by the far seeing policy of the Conservative party and government.

What shall we say, Sir, as to the claims of the present administration on the confidence of the people? I say that with their record which I have placed before the House to-night, no country has ever furnished such a flagrant example of political tergiversation. Why, when we look at these gentlemen across the floor, for the last two sessions, for this session especially, we can see the ministers shrink in their seats.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, the ministers shrink in their seats and shrink with conscious guilt and with the consciousness of impending doom. We have had good harvest and a revival of trade, and in the relationship between the mother country and Canada these hon. gentlemen have reaped the fruits of the endeavours of better men than they.

We have had the Jubilee—we have had everything to make government easy. And yet, these men, from the moment they came into power have hurried into culpability and misconduct. They had no external temptations to warp them; everything was haleyon, everything was fair. And yet, Sir, we know there has never been—I say it advisedly—such a piling up of political guilt as in these four years. Is there guilt in falsehood? Is there guilt in complicity? Is there guilt in receiving what is not one's own? Is there guilt in conspiracy? Is there guilt in fiduciary faithlessness? Then guilt is at the door of the present government. It is not merely individual guilt; it is not merely the jobbing of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton); it is not merely the jobs of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte); it is not merely the deals and sales and arrangements of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair); it is not merely the demure intricacies of misrepresentation that we get from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher); it is not merely the truckling to contractors as seen in the management of his own department that we have from the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier); it is not merely the resounding meretriciousness of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson)—collectively, this government has gone at a gallop in forbidden ways. Collectively, the government is guilty, and there is no member of that government more guilty than its head, because he sanctions and winks at it all. Four or five years ago, before he became Prime Minister, there was a halo round his head; but, Sir, it was delusive nimbus, and vanished the light of the actual. Sitting in the gallery five years ago, and talking to a great admirer of the present Prime Minister—and the hon. gentleman was speaking at the time—and his admirer said, 'Doesn't he speak well? He is coming into power.' I replied, 'He speaks well, and may come into power; but if he comes into power, you will see weaknesses which have not revealed themselves in him as leader of the opposition.' For it is a much harder thing to lead a government than to lead an opposition. And, besides, I suspected what I did not say—I was too polite—that there was a strain of insincerity in the hon. gentleman, that strain of insincerity that is to-day patent to the world. For, what could be more insincere than the conduct of a leader who went to Halifax, to Montreal, to Toronto, to Winnipeg, to Moosomin, to Regina, to Moosejaw, to Medicine Hat, to Calgary, to Vancouver, to Victoria, saying: Put me in power and I will give you free implements! I will give you free trade as it is in England! I will give you a revenue tariff! I will give you clean government! we will have temperance legislation; and after promising all that, plays the repudiator. What guilt is equal to that? And when I think of the hon. gentleman and think of his guilt in this matter, think how he is foresworn, my mind is carried to a prominent figure in a famous conclave, a figure full of grace, full of charm, whose words dropped manna, but who to noble deeds was timorous, and who was skilful in making the worst appear the better. Sir, that fatal facility of charming expression is now known all over Canada. But the solid qualities of statesmanship is no longer held second to words. And the day is at hand when this government, hollow, false, unsubstantial, which now sits like a nightmare upon the bosom of the people of Canada, will meet its doom; the people of Canada will awake and the horrible mockery will disappear.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Speaker, I believe that a celebrated German scientist says that public speakers are dangerous on account of the number of microbes they emit from their system while speaking. If that be so, it is strange to me that all the members of this House have not been killed. The hon. member (Mr. Davin), who has just taken his seat, certainly must have thrown a great many microbes from his system during the lengthy speech he has delivered to-night. I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman throughout the long, rambling speech that he has made, or rather that he has read from newspaper clippings and so on. But I desire to take up just a few of the leading questions that he dealt with. Referring to the speech of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) said that the hon. member for Quebec West had driven the members out of the House during his speech—

Mr. DAVIN. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis), will allow me, he is mistaken as to what I said. What I said was that the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) had very few listening to him, that, in fact, the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) was his auditor.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) says that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) talked the House empty. But surely the hon. gentleman can hardly have forgotten that not only once but hundreds of times he has talked the House empty, and not only that, but he has talked the galleries empty as well. I noticed to-night, for instance, that when he got properly started in his speech every one of the gentlemen who occupied the press gallery seemed to have something to occupy his attention outside. There was no one there, to use an expression of his own, 'But a beggarly array of empty benches.' Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has told us how sincere he is on several occasions. He has undertaken not only to lecture individual members of the government, but the Prime Minister on his insincerity. Well, Mr. Speaker, any person that knows the hon. gentleman as well as I do, and as well as other people in the North-west Territories know him, must come to the conclusion that he is merely joking. The idea of his talking about sincerity! I would like to read a few articles in the hon. member's personal organ that is published now in the North-west Territories. It is called the West.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman says that I publish a paper in the Territories. I publish no paper, I own no paper.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). That is not a point of order. I object to the hon. gentleman speaking except on a point of order.

Mr. DAVIN. Is it a point of order if a statement is made utterly untrue?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is not a point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a point of order as to whether the Speaker controls this House or the minister.

Mr. DAVIN. There is absolutely not a word of truth in it. I have no control of any paper.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand that the minister wishes to have a misstatement given to the House?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman stated that he rose to a point of order, he has submitted no point of order, therefore, his interruption was not justified.

Mr. TAYLOR. I submit that if we have a Speaker in this House, he must decide a point of order, and not the cabinet minister.

Mr. SPEAKER. I can see no point of order, except that the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) claims that he is not responsible for the statements of any journal in the west.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman says that he has nothing to do with a paper published in Regina called the West, and, of course, I accept his statement. But, there is a paper published in Regina called the Regina Leader, and I think he had a great deal to do with that paper. As a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman formed a joint stock company at a time when he was looking for government patronage, and we find that that joint stock company consisted of himself and three other gentlemen, one of whom put in $5 stock and the other $2.50 each. When he was telling about the government being driven from power, I thought I observed a hungry look in his eyes, and he was wishing doubtless in his own mind to get another $47,000 from the Conservatives if the present government were driven out of power. He made a statement some time ago in this House about that $47,000. He told the House that there was another paper published, an anti-Davin paper, he called it.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. He has no right to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not remember a previous debate involving the Regina Leader.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, he has referred to what I said on a previous occasion in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I recollect a question being asked, but I cannot recall it to-day. If the matter was the subject of debate at any time of this session, he is out of order.

Mr. DAVIS. Without alluding to a previous debate in this House, I may say that there was a paper started in Regina called the Standard, and that paper did get a certain amount of government patronage. But, there is a history connected with that. The member for Assiniboia, as I have shown already, had a newspaper called the Leader, which he had formed into a joint stock company, with $10 stock in it, outside of what he owned himself. After this other paper was established, the Prime Minister of the Territories, Mr. Haultain, thought that tenders should be called for the public printing, and they were called. The parties controlling the other paper published in Regina at that time tendered much lower than the paper of which the hon. gentleman was managing director, and for that reason got the work. Next year there was quite a rumpus raised about it, because he did not get the patronage for his paper. The consequence was that next year, when Mr. Haultain wanted to advertise for tenders, the lieutenant-governor of the North-west refused to allow his advisory board to ask for tenders for printing, and they had to go back to the paper of the hon. gentleman. Now, that caused a deadlock in the Territories. As members of the House are aware, the advisory committee resigned, and they appointed another committee that the House again voted a want of confidence in, and it was all because the hon. gentleman was trying to get the printing for his paper and did get it.

Now, I was going to say that I think the leader of the opposition had better look out for his big I. We know that the leader of the opposition is always saying 'I, I, I,' and I think the member for West Assiniboia is following him pretty close. The hon. gentleman takes credit for everything that has been done in the North-west Territories and out of the North-west Territories. He alluded a while ago to the fact that he had obtained a reduction of freight rates in the North-west Territories. 'I went to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I called the Canadian Pacific Railway together, and I did it.' 'We had a consultation, and there was forthwith a reduction of freight rates.'

Now, in another place he alluded to the fact that the Minister of the Interior had been driven out of the country on account of his immigration policy. But, the hon. gentleman dropped it at that, he did not say in what way the immigration policy of the Minister of the Interior was weak. Now, Sir, the hon. member took part in an election campaign in the province of Manitoba, and, I believe, took credit for assisting in winning six seats for his party. He was travelling around supporting the present Prime Minister of Manitoba, Hugh John Macdonald, and supporting his platform. But, after the hon. gentleman got back to Regina he found his constituents were dissatisfied at what he had been doing. We find in this paper, the West, that he says he had nothing to do with an article published in German. I have taken the trouble to get this article translated, and as it is very interesting, I would like to read it to the House. I may say that the hon. gentleman has been sending it out from this House, abusing the franking privilege, sending it all over West Assiniboia. I have a couple of them here that I managed to secure. It is headed 'Warning,' and it is as follows:

Mr. N. F. Davin, M.P. for West Assiniboia, the acknowledged leader of the Liberal-Conservative party in the North-west Territories, is on the point of leaving for Ottawa to take his seat in the House of parliament. During his absence his opponents will do all possible to betray the voters, especially his German friends. Mr. Davin is the true friend of the farmers. Stand by him in his absence, while at work for you.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIS (reading):

The local Grits—wrongly self-named Liberals—will do their best to belie him and betray you. Amongst other things they will say to you that the Liberal-Conservatives of the North-west have the same belief as the leader of the Manitoba government (Hon. H. J. Macdonald). In our constitution, the Dominion parliament has no oversight over questions concerning the provinces, neither has the one province over the other; and for this reason, we have nothing to do with Manitoba politics, nor their freedom with ours.

I think that any person will agree with me in saying that the hon. member for West Assiniboia had repudiated everything he had said in Manitoba. He went back on Hugh

John Macdonald, when he found that it was likely to lose him votes. This is from this sincere man, who goes to work and publishes this in the paper. He declares that he does not believe in the policy of Hugh John Macdonald which he himself had been advocating in Manitoba:

Mr. Davin was the means of carrying the law which governs our freedom. It was he who wrote it and carried it through parliament, and by this act every one that has been living here for three years and become naturalized has the right to vote.

I said a while ago, that the hon. gentleman took credit for everything. He takes credit for the Naturalization Act passed in 1868, long before the hon. gentleman ever came to this country. He said to the Germans: I am the person who got you the right to vote. I wrote it myself. I am the man who secured you the right to cast your ballots in the North-west Territories. Now, he goes on further:

We must remember that it was Mr. Davin who reduced the duty on agricultural implements—

He takes all the credit to himself. I would like the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to pay a little attention to this, because, I know, he is interested in agricultural implements:

We must remember that it was Mr. Davin who reduced the duty on agricultural implements in the year 1894, from 35 to 20 per cent.

It was not the Conservative party, but the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIS (reading):

Further, he reduced the duty on cottons, coal oil, fencing, binder twine, lumber, &c., and if his party had remained in power he would have done more in this line. But the self-styled Liberals came in and promised free implements, cheap oil; and what have they done? Implements are higher than formerly, cottons risen from 22½ to 25 per cent; furs, which we all need, risen from 25 to 40 per cent; coal oil dearer than ever.

By giving preferential tariff to Great Britain, wherefrom we have no profit, the government has angered Germany, and has reduced our trade with the German Empire.

Here is the gentleman who has been talking about his loyalty; he says we have angered Germany. He proceeds:

The Liberals have betrayed you and have not kept their promises to you. They spend every year $14,000,000 more than in 1896. Our debt is getting larger, and you have to pay it. In the Departments of Interior and Public Works are too many signs of corruption and stealings, and in the long run you have to pay the same. Mr. Davin is your only true friend, serving your interest—

He is the panacea for all ills:

—and if his party is returned to power next time he promises to stop this extravagance—

One-man government :

—and relieve you of such burdens and fulfil the promises of the Liberals to you which they never kept.

The House meeting so early, Mr. Davin must postpone his visit to the German settlements until his return, but will be Friday evening at Balgonie, and Saturday at 2 p.m. at Edenwald.

There is another clipping here that I selected from a speech that was made by the the German settlements. It is reported in his own paper. After speaking of Mr. Davin's measures which it says he had been pressing on the government, it proceeds :

The only public Bill passed in the first session of this parliament, the Bill that secured to them all, if in the one case, twelve months in the Territories, in the other three years, whether a man could read or write, the franchise was drafted by him and passed through parliament by him. Mr. Fitzpatrick, the Solicitor General, a gentlemanly and courteous man, saying to him when he suggested at the committee stage that the government should steer the Bill lest at the hands of the majority it should suffer shipwreck in charge of a private member, said, 'No. We'll assent. The Bill is yours and you should have the honour of putting it through parliament.

He is telling the poor, simple Germans of that settlement, that, in 1896, he came down to parliament and passed the Naturalization Act, and that he got the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to assist him to secure for these people the right to vote. This is the hon. gentleman who talks about the insincerity of the right hon. Prime Minister and of hon. members on this side of the House. Now, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, not only the hon. member for West Assiniboia, but all the rest of them, claim that this party have broken the promises they made to the people. I would like to know what promise the hon. member for West Assiniboia has not broken. He says that we have stolen their clothes. If that be the case, I think the hon. gentleman must have stolen somebody's clothes ; I think he must have stolen the clothes of the Patron party. The present opposition appears to be a strange mixture. In the first place we have the hon. member for West Assiniboia doing the free trade part of the combination, then we have the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), doing the protectionist part of the show, then we have the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), doing the loyalty part of the business, and the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), going down into the province of Quebec and doing the other end. So that, we have all sorts and conditions of men on the other side of the House. They could suit every person or anybody. In reference to the statement that the

Mr. DAVIS.

Liberal party have stolen the clothes of the opposition, I would like to say, that, if it be true that this party are carrying out the old policy of the Conservative party, the national policy, and if the Conservative party believe that the national policy is a policy to build up this country, then, according to their own argument, this government must be doing what is right. The trade returns, the number of factories which have been established in the country, the increasing wages and everything else, indicating prosperity, show that the Liberal government must be carrying out that policy of hon. gentlemen opposite with infinitely better results to the country. If it be true, I would like to know what grievance hon. gentlemen have on the other side of the House. They do not want to get back to make any change in the policy of the present government, because they say it is all right now. If that be true, I think the only reason why hon. gentlemen opposite want to get back to power, must be that they desire to enjoy the sweets of office. According to their own argument they want to get back to power for the sweets of office. The hon. member for South Leeds probably wishes to increase the duties on certain commodities in which he may be interested. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia sees another $47,000 in his mind's eye. The hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), sees his $7,000 salary, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), sees something in the same way, and every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, has something in sight. That is the only argument they can advance.

An hon. MEMBER. It is not in sight.

Mr. DAVIS. It is not in sight, but this is the only argument they can advance, because they claim that this government are carrying out their policy, which is the right and proper policy, and if that be true, I say that hon. gentlemen opposite want to get back to the Treasury benches for the purpose of getting what they can make out of it. The preferential tariff has been pretty well threshed out, and I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), will enlighten any one with the array of figures he has read to the House. As the hour is late, I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. N. F. DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I want to say a few words on this motion to adjourn the debate. It is literally true that the Act passed in 1896 was my Act, and it is literally true that it was the only Act passed that session. The courtesy that is spoken of there as exercised by the Solicitor General to me, was shown. It was my Bill and the Solicitor General came to me, and although the German writer there does not exactly express what I would like to have expressed, it is literally true that the Act secures that any one who has been three years in the country and twelve months in the constituency can vote. Therefore, that Act passed by me is a complete assurance that no legislation against Germans voting can take place in the Northwest Territories. It is not true that when I was in Manitoba, I advocated that portion of the Hon. Hugh Macdonald's policy which relates to what is called the foreign vote. I could support my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) and wish to see him in power without agreeing to that one plank in his platform, and as a fact I did not agree with it. The fact that Mr. Hugh Macdonald is in power, and the manner in which Mr. Greenway went out, shows to those of us who went to fight the battle of helping him to achieve the great victory he has achieved, that we were working in a good cause, his victory was mainly due to his own great power and his own personality. There was never an act in my life that I look back on with greater pleasure than my support of Mr. Macdonald. I made no concealment that I entirely dissented from that plank in his platform about the foreign franchise. As to the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Davis) that I stole the clothes of the Patrons, it is on the pages of Hansard that I moved in this House in 1893, and advocated the reduction on the very things which the Patrons advocated the reduction on later on, and I advocated that reduction months before the Patrons were established. In fact in 1893 when I proposed that, I had never heard of Patrons.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) referred to the $47,000 the company of the Regina Leader received for work extending over ten or eleven years, and he seems to think it a very amusing thing that one man should hold a preponderating interest in a company. Even if it were true that there were only three or four besides myself, the others having a small number of shares, what could there be wrong about it? The law was complied with. As a fact, after the company was formed, another person holding a considerable number of shares came in, and others also purchased shares, but at no time, to my great regret, did the vast disproportion between my own large holding and the holdings of others disappear. The company could not be formed if it was illegal, and it was to my regret that others did not join the company. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, and this is a matter purely private. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) taking a course that is conducive to fit and fruitful debate in this House? A course that may be conducive to his own peace of mind, or that may be conducive to the peace of mind of gentlemen on the Treasury benches? Shall we go into your private business? Shall I for instance inquire into the private business of the Minister of the Interior? Shall I for instance go into the statement that has been made to me, that a man has gone into a bank in this town and placed to the credit of the Minister of the Interior $40,000, and marched out? Am I going to go into the private conduct of the Minister of Militia and Defence? Am I going to drag his conduct before the public? which I would be justified in doing, on the principle that justifies that man's (Mr. Davis) conduct? Am I going to drag the conduct of this same gentleman (Mr. Davis) before the public, as to the way which he got whatever means he has? I may say that the sum of $47,000 over a long stretch of years was earned well and hard; there was little profit; wages 25 per cent higher than at Winnipeg; at that time the Leader Company was the only office which had the plant; it did the whole work of the Territories for about $5,000; to-day it costs nearly double that sum; and the Leader to-day gets $10,000 or $11,000; and let me say neither I, nor any person connected with that company ever achieved any wealth by fratricidal felony.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about the Montreal Herald getting $15,000 last year.

Mr. DAVIN. I am not talking about that now. I say that in the interests of this parliament the course of the hon. member (Mr. Davis) is not advisable. I say that hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of this House are not very wise in acting on a principle that will enable me to go into private conduct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do not make any threats.

Mr. DAVIN. I will make threats now. So far as I am concerned my whole private life is in evidence. I defy the most prying eye, and if my hon. friend from Kent, Ont. (Mr. Campbell) thinks I cannot make threats, probably I may take the opportunity of showing I can, and I, in the interest of government and the commonwealth, will drag from the lurking places where they now hide men who dare not for one moment stand before parliament once the light of day is let in upon their conduct.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say a word in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin). I did not pry into his private life. He is a public man, and I was alluding to him as a public man.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) moved the adjournment of the debate and took his seat. Has he a right now to make a speech?

Mr. SPEAKER. He certainly has not. Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.10 a.m. (Thursday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 19, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RELATIONS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. KAULBACH asked :

Has the government of Canada made any approaches, quite recently, to Newfoundland, offering her any inducements for her joining the confederacy of Canada?

Also, has the government of Canada made any proposals, quite recently, for reciprocal trade relations with our sister colony, Newfoundland? If not, why not?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would say to my hon. friend that the government is always ready to receive any overtures from our sister colony of Newfoundland on the subject of joining the confederacy of Canada. With regard to the second question, no proposals have been made recently for reciprocal trade relations, the reason being that we thought, in the present political condition of the island, the time was not propitious for such proposals.

IMPORTATION OF MEAT INTO CANADA.

Mr. KAULBACH asked :

Is the government aware that large quantities of meat are being imported into Canada for consumption in Canada, to the injury of Canadian farmers? If so, is it the intention of this government to so amend the tariff as to prevent or avert it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The government are not aware of anything of the kind having occurred to the injury of Canadian farmers.

BUOY SERVICE, COUNTY OF LUNENBURG.

Mr. KAULBACH asked :

1. When were tenders for Gold River and Chester Basin buoy service, in the county of Lunenburg, N.S., for the present service, invited?

2. When was the limit time for them to be received?

3. The names of the parties so tendering?

4. The amount of each tender to whom the contract was awarded?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Post-bills inviting tenders were sent out on the 2nd of March, 1900. 2. Up to the 15th of March, 1900. 3. Frank J. Fredea, Chester, N.S.; Albert Shupe, Martin's Point; Paul Rafuse, Martin's Point; James W. Langille, Martin's River; Ray Corkum, Chester; Laurence A. Barry, Chester. 4. Contract awarded lowest tenderer, Frank J.

Mr. FIELDING.

Fredea. It is not usual to give the amounts of these tenders severally unless specially desired, but, if moved for, they will be brought down.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

Mr. PUTTEE asked :

Does the government intend to extend any aid, monetary or otherwise, to the famine-stricken districts of the empire in India?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This is a question as to which the government has come to no conclusion. They think it advisable to communicate with the home authorities on the subject.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

Mr. JAMES GILMOUR (East Middlesex). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the government to a matter which is attracting considerable interest in my constituency. I refer to the famine in India. In my riding of East Middlesex, a general movement is on foot to raise subscriptions to relieve the suffering there, and at a meeting held the other day, a series of resolutions were passed on that subject, including one requesting me to ask the favourable consideration of the government to this movement. They desire that the government should recognize the movement, and receive the money that may be subscribed and transmit the same; also, to advise them as to whether it would be desirable to make contributions of grain, and if that were done, whether the government would see to its transportation. I will read the resolutions referred to :

Resolution and statements made at Hyde Park, Ont., by residents of Hyde Park and community at a meeting on behalf of the Indian famine sufferers.

1. We deplore the fact that the empire's war in South Africa has so engrossed public attention in this country that the most terrible famine that has ever visited Britain's domains has not received that interest, sympathy and help which the awfulness of the situation would naturally produce.

2. It is our firm opinion that Canada, as a nation, a colony and arm of the British Empire would, in response to appeal, give generous aid to fellow-subjects suffering for want of food in another part of the empire.

3. We believe that a national canvass, whether for grain or money or both, is both desirable and practicable. By meetings being called by ministers or other public men in every little section or community, and working committees being appointed to canvass the immediate territory the work of gathering grain or funds could be carried on without great trouble or expense to the authorities.

4. We would invite attention to the facts, that the Indian government has provided a capacious vessel to be loaded with gifts of American corn; that the State of Kansas alone is endeavouring to raise 1,000,000 bushels for the famine sufferers, and that a New York paper is not only soliciting contributions of corn and money, but is offering every facility, as for instance, paying the freight charges for car-loads of corn shipped from different points where the contributors are unable or unprepared to pay them.

5. We believe that, in order to insure national attention, national confidence and completeness of plan and execution, the whole matter of appeal and transport and control of grain and money, or of money alone, if Canadian grain be not acceptable, would necessarily be undertaken by the government of the Dominion.

6. Such an effort might be described as a national organized endeavour, under the authority and support of the government of Canada, to procure a large voluntary offering from the Canadian people to assist the government of India in coping with the present unprecedented and disastrous famine.

(Sgd.) PETER ELSON, Chairman.

Resolved, that the above statements of our convictions be placed in the hands of James Gilmour, Esq., M.P. for East Middlesex, with a request that it be brought before the attention of the House of Commons, and with the prayer that the subject of which it treats may receive that immediate attention which the urgent nature of India's necessities would seem to demand.

Moved by Mr. Thomas Routledge, seconded by Mr. Thomas Ramsay.

Carried unanimously, Wednesday evening, April 4, A.D. 1900.

I think the House will agree with me that the object is a laudable one, and that if the government could see their way clear to receive these remittances and transmit the same, it would help to stimulate similar efforts elsewhere and redound to the credit of the Dominion.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia). Perhaps I may be allowed to offer a few suggestions on the same point. Having had the honour of living for several years in the locality that is afflicted with this famine, perhaps I can give a few facts that may be of service to the House. The district at present afflicted with famine is largely the Decan, and the native states of Central India. The distress is wholly due to the lack of rain during the last monsoon; the country did not receive the usual amount of rain, and the consequence is that nothing was produced. The result has been a very severe famine among the people, and the cutting off of cattle. In fact, there has been no growth of any kind, the earth is dry and barren, and great distress exists in those districts for the want of water. It is certainly very kind of the people of the riding represented by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gilmour) to pass a resolution of this kind. The idea of relieving the subjects of our empire by contributions of grain is utterly useless. No grain can possibly reach them from this country, or from the United States to be of any use to them. The only way that they can be relieved at present is by a cablegram for cash. I am assured that the grain is in the country, if the people had the means to purchase it, so that the only way we can share in sending relief to these people, is by giving a cash order. This is the most speedy way we could adopt of reaching them under the circumstances. This is what I would propose if the government takes any action at all. There is a movement in the United States to send corn. All of these movements result from a kind of feeling which is quite proper, but, from an utter want of knowledge of the state of the country, so that, personally, I would strongly urge the government that if anything is to be done, it should be done at once, and done by a cablegram, forwarding a cash order to Bombay, or some other point that could be easily reached. The monsoon generally commences about the 20th day of June, when there is an abundant growth, and the people will again sow their fields and have provisions for another year sufficient for their own relief. I had the privilege of conversing with a relative of my own who has been twenty years in the Maharatta country, as the head and representative of a very interesting educational institution, only a few days ago, and he assured me that it is useless to talk of sending grain either from Canada or the United States, and that cash is an immediate necessity. I hope this House will kindly consider it, and if possible, do something to relieve these, our fellow-subjects.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding.) The hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) was good enough to intimate to us his intention to bring this matter up. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has already intimated, in answer to a question, this afternoon, that, so far as a government grant or governmental action is concerned, it is now under consideration, and will be the subject of communication with the Imperial government. Of course, what we have learned this afternoon, in addition to the general information which we have obtained from the press, is calculated to impress us as to the great need of doing something to aid our fellow-countrymen in India. I understand, that, apart from the difficulties that have been expressed by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), there are other objections to sending provisions to India. They are a peculiar people in that country, and they might possibly have objections to provisions from abroad on grounds which it is not easy to understand on this side of the water, but it is a reason why such a step ought to be well considered. But, pending the consideration of what action, if any, may be taken by the government, it is desirable that those citizens of Canada whose hearts are moved to contribute at once should know the channel through which that can be done. There was an organization several years ago for the relief of the Indian famine sufferers, of which Mr. Courtney, the Deputy Minister of Finance, one of our principal officers, was the treasurer. There is, at this moment, no regular organization for that purpose, but, if any person in Canada, who wishes to contribute immediately, will communicate with Mr. Courtney, the Deputy Minister of Finance, I will undertake, on his behalf, to say, that contributions will be received and despatched to the proper quarter. As respects governmental action, the hon. leader of the government will, perhaps, have a further statement to make.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I only rise because the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), have intimated, that this matter is now under the serious consideration of the government. I cannot help thinking it is quite worthy of the attention of the government. The very great efforts that have been made throughout the Dominion of Canada among different classes of the people to send aid to South Africa in connection with the patriotic fund, have, it is quite obvious, very largely drawn upon the usual sources of personal contributions in reference to matters of this kind. There is no question that the government of Canada did great credit to themselves, and that Canada did great credit to itself, by the very handsome contribution that was made on a former occasion to the Indian famine fund, which a few years ago, was brought to the notice of the people of Canada. I venture to express the hope, that, under the circumstances, the government will feel it their duty, more especially owing to the large draft that has been made on the private resources of the people all over Canada, who would be disposed to contribute liberally in reference to this famine in India, to take that into consideration in looking at the question of how far the government might be disposed to ask parliament to come to the aid of the sufferers in India. I only rose for the purpose of saying that I am quite sure the government will consult the feelings of parliament and the feelings of the people of the country, if they look at the question as one which is very worthy of very careful consideration, and at the object as one deserving of very liberal support.

Mr. GILMOUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to thank the government for the action they propose to take. I think it will fully satisfy my petitioners, and I shall be pleased to place in the hands of the government, the communication of the Rev. Mr. Rhodes, who, apparently, was secretary of the meeting, and who has taken an active interest in the movement. Such action as is proposed will stimulate private effort in the direction of helping these parties to raise money, by giving the movement a Dominion importance.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. THOMAS S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, since this subject is engaging the attention of the government, I might take the opportunity of asking the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), another question in connection with it. He will doubtless remember, that, some time ago, I applied to him for the purpose of getting information to answer a letter sent to me by one of my constituents, who proposed to provide a carload of grain, if it would be suitable to send to India. The nature of the inquiry from him, was as to whether the government would handle such contributions for India, through what channel they might be sent forward, and whether the proposal to send such provisions as he could gather in the locality, would be suitable. The information which the hon. Minister of Finance gave me, was, that he was not aware of any association handling contributions for the Indian famine sufferers, or whether the government could handle anything for India, and, therefore, I could give no information to my correspondent on that subject. I understand the hon. Finance Minister to say now, that the government will be prepared to handle and will send forward any contributions that may be made for that purpose. Am I correct in understanding that this only applies to money, or does it apply to lines of provisions such as grain, because the proposal of my constituent was to send a carload of grain?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I really did not use the words that the government would handle these contributions, but, inasmuch as I named an officer of the government, perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule), was justified in taking that inference. I mentioned the name of Mr. Courtney, the Deputy Minister of Finance, as a gentleman who would be pleased to act in the matter, not merely because he happens to be one of our officials, but because he was treasurer of the Indian famine fund that existed several years ago, and, therefore, he is well informed on matters in relation thereto. But, I say that Mr. Courtney will undertake it, and I am sure that I can have no hesitation in saying that whatever he undertakes to do in the matter, will be done under a sense of his responsibility, so far as the handling of money and seeing that it is referred to the proper channels, are concerned. As respects the handling of provisions, the hon. gentleman is correct in stating that he asked me a question some time ago on that point, and I was not then able to give him any assurance that provisions would be handled. My information is that when the Indian famine fund was organized several years ago, the committee made inquiry on that subject, and were advised that apart from all other reasons, the sending of provisions from this quarter to India, might be open to objection, and that it would be far more satisfactory to send money, as stated by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). I would therefore not advise that any provisions be sent Mr. Courtney, but if the citizens of Canada wish to make any other contributions, Mr. Courtney will receive them and see that they are forwarded to the proper quarter.

Mr. SPROULE. Contributions in cash?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In cash.

Mr. J. GUNION RUTHERFORD (Macdonald). It would be well, Mr. Speaker, to have this information disseminated as widely as possible through the Dominion. I know that in my own constituency there are a large number of persons who are anxious to contribute to this charitable object, and the question has been brought up as to whether or not grain would be accepted by the government for transport to India. That question has been put to me by several of my constituents and we have hitherto had no definite information upon the subject. It would be well, as I have said, to have this information circulated speedily and rapidly throughout the country, because, judging from the remarks of my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), time is the essence of any movement for the relief of these people.

COMMISSIONS IN THE IMPERIAL ARMY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I wish to remind my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, that when the question of the commissions granted to Canadians in the Imperial army was under consideration a few days ago, I understood the Prime Minister to say that at an early date, he would—and after communication with His Excellency—lay on the Table of the House at an early date, the correspondence which had taken place between Her Majesty's government and the government of Canada, and any other persons in connection with that matter. I should be glad if the Prime Minister would take the House as fully as he can into the confidence of the government in regard to this matter which is of such great and general interest.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Had my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) given notice of his intention to bring this question up I would have been prepared to deal with it. I will be ready, however, at an early date. To-morrow being Friday would perhaps not be a convenient day, but let us say next Tuesday.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty; and the motion of Sir Charles Tupper in amendment thereto.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). When the House adjourned at an early hour this morning, I was replying to the speech of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). In the course of his three or four hours speech that gentleman saw fit to make strong attacks upon members of the government and upon members of the House, charging both with insincerity. When I pointed out that the hon. member (Mr. Davin) himself was not sincere, he asserted that I was dragging in his private business. Well, Sir, I was doing nothing of the kind. I stated that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) received $47,000 from the public treasury, when he was owner or manager of a newspaper in Regina, and that is a public affair, and not his private business, because it appears in the Auditor General's Report. I might also have said that $175 was paid to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) for publishing law reports in his paper, which reports were never published at all. I might also have said that a sum of about $400 was paid the hon. member (Mr. Davin) for publishing in his paper matter in connection with the territorial exhibition, which matter was published in every other paper in the North-west Territories without any charge whatever. All these are public matters because they appear in the blue-books published by the government, and they are matters which can be fairly discussed without my being charged with dragging his private affairs before this House.

Now that the leader of the opposition is in his place, I might inform him that while it is generally supposed by the Conservatives in the country that he made this country—a thing for which, at all events, he claims credit—yet the hon. gentleman from West Assiniboia claims in the west, that it is he and not the leader of the opposition who has done everything, not only for the North-west but for the whole Dominion. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) takes a certain amount of credit for having done considerable towards the building up of Canada, and for his information as well, I shall read a report which appeared in the personal organ of the hon. member (Mr. Davin) called The West, published in Regina. After the hon. member (Mr. Davin) returned to the Territories from the Manitoba campaign he found there was a strike among his German constituents, and he went up to see them and afterwards published this article in German in The West. He subsequently had it printed as a circular and franked several hundred copies of it to his German constituents. The original was in the German language, but I have had a translation of it made and here it is:

Mr. N. F. Davin, M.P. for West Assinibolia, the acknowledged leader of the Liberal-Conservative party in the North-west Territories, is on the point of leaving for Ottawa to take his seat in the House of Parliament. During his absence his opponents will do all possible to betray the voters, especially his German friends. Mr. Davin is the true friend of the farmers. Stand by him in his absence, while at work for you.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that the hon. member (Mr. Davis) is not speaking to the motion before the House and the circular which he is reading now he also read last night.

Mr. DAVIS. I was under the impression that in the budget debate what I am now doing is perfectly in order. The hon. member for West Assinibolia (Mr. Davin) read extracts from all the tory papers from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. SPEAKER. I should have stopped the hon. member for West Assinibolia (Mr. Davin) last night for doing the very thing that is charged against the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) to-day. After listening to the hon. member for West Assinibolia, I do not feel justified now in stopping the hon. member (Mr. Davis). I may say to the House that it would be an immense economy of time if hon. members would confine themselves more strictly to the subject under discussion. I ask hon. gentlemen to refrain from going into outside matters as much as possible, or else perhaps later on I may have to enforce the rules more strictly.

Mr. DAVIS. I would not read this but for the benefit of the leader of the opposition who takes credit for having made this country and everything in it, and I wish to point out that the hon. member for West Assinibolia takes issue with his leader on that and claims the whole thing for himself.

The local Grits—wrongly self-named Liberals—will do their best to belie him and betray you. Amongst other things they will say to you that the Liberal-Conservatives of the North-west have the same belief as the leader of the Manitoba government (Hon. H. J. Macdonald). In our constitution the Dominion parliament has no oversight over questions concerning the provinces, neither has the one province over the other; and for this reason, we have nothing to do with Manitoba politics, nor their freedom with ours.

The hon. gentleman tells the Germans up there practically that he does not believe in the policy of Hugh John Macdonald, the Premier of Manitoba, although the hon. gentleman ran all through the province during the elections, and after he got back to Regina he took credit for carrying four seats. He afterwards repudiated the policy of Hugh John Macdonald, saying he did not believe in it. He further says:

Mr. Davin was the means of carrying the law which governs our freedom.

Mr. DAVIS.

There is an infringement on the patent of the leader of the opposition. He says:

It was he who wrote it and carried it through parliament, and by this act every one that has been living here for three years and becomes naturalized has the right to vote.

We must remember that it was Mr. Davin who reduced the duty on agricultural implements in the year 1894 from 35 to 20 per cent.

I was under the impression that the hon. ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) had something to do with reducing the duty on agricultural implements. He went through this country talking about the lopping off the mouldering branches of the national policy, but the hon. gentleman ignores the ex-Finance Minister, and says he was the man who reduced this duty. He goes on:

Further, he reduced the duty on cottons, coal oil, fencing, binder twine, lumber, &c., and if his party had remained in power he would have done more in this line. But the self-styled Liberals came in and promised free implements, cheap oil; and what have they done? Implements are higher than formerly, cottons risen from 22½ to 25 per cent; furs, which we all need, risen from 25 to 40 per cent; coal oil dearer than ever.

I wish the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) would attend to the next paragraph, because it shows the loyalty of the hon. member for Western Assinibolia (Mr. Davin). He goes on:

By giving preferential tariff to Great Britain, wherefrom we have no profit, the government has angered Germany, and has reduced our trade with the German Empire.

That is a nice statement coming from the leader of the Liberal-Conservatives of the North-west Territories. These are the hon. gentleman's words in black and white, and he cannot deny them. He goes on to say:

The Liberals have betrayed you and have not kept their promises to you. They spend every year $14,000,000 more than in 1896. Our debt is getting larger, and you have to pay it. In the Departments of Interior and Public Works are too many signs of corruption and stealings, and in the long run you have to pay the same.

If there were so many signs of corruption in the Department of the Interior and the Department of Public Works, why did not the hon. member for Western Assinibolia do something to unearth all this corruption? He travelled around the North-west Territories telling the people that he had put gyves on the wrists of the Minister of Public Works; but when he came to this House, and had the opportunity, on his responsibility as a member of this House, to get up and demand a committee and undertake to prove his charges, as the Minister of Public Works did when he was in opposition, we never heard from him on the subject. There is no use of the hon. member for Western Assinibolia or any other hon. gentlemen travelling along the side lines and talking in the back schoolhouses about the corruption of this government if they are not prepared to prove their statements. We want proof, and the people are not to be hoodwinked by talk of that kind; they do not take any stock in it. He goes on:

Mr. Davin is your only true friend, serving your interest, and if his party is returned to power next time he promises to stop this extravagance—

Just listen to that: he promises to stop it. The ex-Finance Minister should take a note of that. The hon. gentleman goes on:

—and relieve you of such burdens and fulfil the promises of the Liberals to you, which they never kept.

The House meeting so early, Mr. Davin must postpone his visit to the German settlements until his return, but will be Friday evening at Balgonie, and Saturday at 2 p.m. at Edenwald.

Here is a clipping from the report of the hon. gentleman's speech at Balgonie, published in his own paper, The West, and it is interesting reading too. I quote it to show the leader of the opposition that the hon. member for Western Assiniboia is trying to claim credit for everything that has been done for the North-west Territories. This is what he says, speaking to the Germans there:

The only public Bill passed in the first session of this parliament, the Bill that secured to them all, if in the one case, twelve months in the Territories, in the other three years, whether a man could read or write, the franchise, was drafted by him and passed through parliament by him. Mr. Fitzpatrick, the Solicitor General, a gentlemanly and courteous man, saying to him when he suggested at the committee stage that the government should steer the Bill lest at the hands of the majority it should suffer shipwreck in charge of a private member, said, 'No. We'll assent. The Bill is yours and you should have the honour of putting it through parliament.'

Here was the hon. member for Western Assiniboia going to a German settlement, going on the platform, and making a speech to the German settlers, in which he told them that in the short session of 1896 he put through the Naturalization Act giving them the right to vote. The Naturalization Act was passed in 1868, long before the hon. gentleman honoured this country with his beautiful presence. When he makes statements of that kind, an hon. member on this side of the House has a perfect right to accuse him of insincerity, and that is all I have done.

With reference to the speech to which he treated this House last night for four hours, it was a regular hotch-potch. I have taken a few notes of it, and have tried to arrange them in such a way that they can be understood. With regard to the tariff, I do not propose to follow him in the hour and a half in which he treated the House, not to a speech, but to a lot of old stuff clipped from newspapers and from the reports of other speeches. After wading through eight or nine pages of it, I come to this statement, to which I take exception:

The Liberal convention, in 1893, promised the people of this country free trade.

I think I know as much about the Liberal convention as the hon. member for Western Assiniboia; I have read the proceedings from one end to the other, and I fail to find where the Liberal party ever promised free trade. It promised freer trade. You can easily drop off the 'r' and make that free trade, just as in the Bible, where it says, 'The fool hath said in his heart there is no God,' if you drop off 'The fool hath said,' you can make it read, 'There is no God.' I have in my hand the 'Official Report of the Liberal Convention.' I find nothing in it about free trade, but quite the contrary. I would like to read a short selection from the speech of the Prime Minister, then the leader of the opposition at that convention. He said:

My loyalty does not ooze from the pores of my body, but I do want to go for an example to the mother country, and not to the United States, much as I respect and love the people on the other side of the line. I say the policy should be a policy of free trade, such as they have in England, but I am sorry to say that the circumstances of the country cannot admit, at present, of that policy in its entirety. But I propose to you that from this day henceforward it should be the goal to which we aspire. I propose to you, from this day, although we cannot adopt the policy itself, to adopt the principle which regulates it; that is to say, that though it should be your misfortune for many years to come to have to raise a revenue by customs duties, these duties should be levied only so far as is necessary to carry on the business of the government.

I submit to you that not a cent should be extracted from the pockets of the people except every cent goes into the treasury of the people, and not into the pockets of anybody else. I submit to you that no duty should be levied for protection's sake, but levied altogether and only for the purpose of filling the treasury to the limits required. I submit to you that every cent that is levied should be levied first and foremost upon the luxuries of the people. I submit to you, therefore, that the system of protection which is maintained by the government that is to-day, of levying tribute upon the people not for the legitimate expenses of the government, but for a private and privileged class, should be condemned without qualification. Let it be well understood that from this moment we have a distinct issue with the party in power. Their ideal is protection, our ideal is free trade. Their immediate object is protection; ours a tariff for revenue only. Upon this issue we engage the battle from this moment forward.

I submit that there is nothing in that about free trade. The right hon. the Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, told the convention that it was impossible for us, under the existing conditions, to have free trade; yet we have those hon. gentlemen opposite travelling around declaring that the Liberal party promised free trade. There may have been individual cases of members of the Liberal party who travelled around and made statements in school-houses about free trade, but we cannot bind the whole party by the statements made by individuals, any more than we can bind the Conservative party by bombastic statements made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. David).

The Liberal party promised us a tariff for revenue, and I submit we have that. Judging from the fact that the revenue of the country has gone up within the last three and a half years from $36,000,000 to $50,000,000, I submit that we have a very good revenue tariff. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) who is the apostle of percentages, told the people that this government is taxing them more than the late government did. He said: We took $36,000,000 out of the pockets of the people, but the present government are taking $50,000,000 out of their pockets, although the population has not increased more than 200,000. But, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the revenue has increased because the people to-day are paying their taxes into the treasury where formerly they paid them into the pockets of the manufacturers. If a taxpayer uses more imported goods he naturally pays more duty into the treasury. No government of Canada ever went to any man's door to collect taxes. The people tax themselves. If a farmer can afford to buy this year two ploughs, when last year he could only buy one, if he can afford to indulge this year in two suits of clothes when formerly he had to content himself with one, if he can now buy three shirts when, under the late government, he could not buy any at all; of course he pays more taxes. That follows as a natural consequence, and I take it as the greatest evidence of prosperity that the revenue of the country has gone up, in the short space of three and a half years, from $36,000,000 to $50,000,000. That shows that the people are prosperous, it shows that they are buying more goods, it shows that they are using luxuries which they could not think of purchasing when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office.

I do not propose to go into a lot of figures on the tariff because that question has been pretty well threshed out already. But take the tariff of 1894 and compare it with the tariff of 1897, and you will find material reductions made in the general tariff without counting the preferential tariff at all. I propose to give just two illustrations—one an illustration of the effect of the wiping out of the specific duties, and the other an illustration of the benefits accruing to the people from the preferential rate. When the Fielding tariff was brought down, the hon. leader of the opposition said that we were going to ruin every industry in the country. He read articles from the Mail and Empire and the Montreal Gazette describing the mournful wail of the manufacturers; he trotted out all the old stock arguments about smokeless chimneys and penniless artisans, which did such good service in the old days. But afterwards, when he found that his predictions were not realized, when he found that nobody was being ruined and that the country was more prosperous than ever, he changed his tune and charged the Liberal party with having stolen the Tory clothes. But, as the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) has said, it would not be any advantage to any party to steal the clothes of hon. gentlemen opposite. The clothes themselves are not desirable, and if we had to take the reputation along with the clothes, I am afraid we would be in a very sorry plight indeed.

But to give you an instance of tariff reduction, let me take up the item of shirts. In the Foster tariff of 1894, on shirts costing over $3 a dozen there were imposed a specific duty of $1 a dozen and an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent; so that shirts costing $3.05 a dozen were subject to this double duty. It does not take much of a scholar to figure out what the total duty would be on shirts costing $3.05 a dozen. The $1 specific duty would amount to 32.8 per cent and then adding the ad valorem duty of 25 per cent, you will find that shirts costing $3 a dozen bore a duty of 57.8 per cent. And remember that shirts at that price are the kind worn by the labouring man and the farmer, over whose hard fate these hon. gentlemen opposite are wont to wax so eloquent. We have to-day the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) sweating from every pore over the miseries of the poor labouring man, but when the late government was in office he had not a word to say against this exorbitant tax on one of his necessaries of life. Shirts that cost $3.05 a dozen were charged a duty of 57.8 per cent. But now let us come to the other end of the list and find out what the shirts of the kind worn by the hon. leader of the opposition and the ex-Minister of Finance, and the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) were charged. These shirts, which cost $36 per dozen, would pay—calculating the specific duty of $1 per dozen, which would amount to 3 per cent on the value, and the 25 per cent ad valorem,—just 28 per cent. That is what the hon. leader of the opposition and his colleagues paid on the shirts they used, but the poor farmer and labouring man had to pay 57.8 per cent. I could go through any number of articles and show you that the Foster tariff was just as hostile to the working man from one end to the other.

These hon. gentlemen say that the preferential tariff has done no good. Well, let me give you an illustration to the contrary. Take blankets, the ordinary gray blankets weighing from seven to eight pounds, selling by the manufacturer at about $1.50 a pair. In speaking of these goods, I know whereof I am speaking, because I am in business and have sold thousands of pairs of them. These blankets, under the Foster tariff, bore a duty of 5 cents a pound, and 35 per cent ad valorem. What did that mean? A pair of blankets weighing eight pounds at 5 cents a pound would pay a specific duty of 40 cents. Add the 35 per cent ad valorem, and you find that the duty on a pair of blankets would amount to 72½ cents. This is the kind of blanket that lumbermen, fishermen, farmers and others who cannot afford a better class of goods buy; and there are hundreds of thousands of them sold in this country.

Mr. TAYLOR. And we made them in this country and they paid no duty at all.

Mr. DAVIS. It does not make any difference whether we made them here or not. The fact of the duty of 72½ cents a pair being imposed enabled the friends of hon. gentlemen, the manufacturers, to exact at least 70 cents a pair from the people of this country more than the blankets could have been imported for duty free. Under the preferential tariff, the duty on that class of goods has been reduced from 72½ cents to 39½ cents. On a pair of such blankets, almost half the duty has been taken off. Yet hon. gentlemen say that the government have done nothing at all for the people. I have just given these two illustrations, and I could go on giving many more, for the old tariff was pock-marked with duties of the kind I have mentioned.

The hon. member for West Assiniboia talked at length about the farmers, and asked what had been done for them. I claim that the government by enacting the preferential tariff, did a great deal for the farmers. The hon. member for West Assiniboia quoted the Trade and Navigation Returns to show that England was not sending us a dollar's worth of goods more than before, and therefore, he says, the preference is no good to Great Britain at all. But, on the other hand, we find the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) moving a resolution declaring that we have no business to give something to Great Britain without getting something in return. How are these hon. gentlemen going to reconcile these two statements, I want to know? The very fact that we are making so much greater sales of produce to Great Britain shows that the preference has done a great deal for the people of this country. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) showed on one occasion that hardly had this preference been enacted before he received a cablegram to change the brand upon his goods. Formerly the English would buy flour and other goods because it was marked as American. But this preference moved the British heart and caused the British people to ask for Canadian goods.

And it does not matter to the people of Canada whether more goods are coming in from Great Britain or not. The fact that there is on the statute-books this preference in favour of Great Britain compels the reduction of prices by American and other manufacturers. To give an illustration: Suppose that an American traveller comes to a business man here and wants to sell him a line of prints. After the samples have been displayed, the business man says: I like your samples, what are your prices? The American traveller quotes the old prices; but the business man answers: Now that we have the preferential tariff, I can lay these goods down here for so much less than you are asking. I like your goods, I like your patterns, and I would like to deal with you; but if you do not sell the goods at the same price at which I can lay them down from Great Britain, I will buy from the British manufacturer. Suppose this is a case of doing business with a Canadian wholesale man with whom the American firm has had a trade of half a million a year, making 10 per cent profit. The demand of the Canadian business man is for such reduction as will represent a lowering of that profit by 5 per cent. Why, it is a case of half a loaf or no bread, and the American manufacturer will accept the lower price. The Canadian merchant can then sell to the consumer from one end of the country to the other at a lower price; and so the people get the benefit of a reduction through the preference, even if there be no increase in the goods coming from Great Britain. And not only are the American manufacturer and the German manufacturer compelled to reduce prices, but the manufacturers in Canada must follow suit. If the Canadian manufacturer wants to sell a bale of blankets or a bale of cottons or other commodities to one of our merchants, the merchant will say: Though I would like to patronize Canadian home industries, I am not going to pay you the sixteenth part of a cent more for your goods than I can get them laid down for from Great Britain. And there is very good reason why he should take this position, because he knows that his competitor on the same street, dealing in the same line of goods, will take advantage of the preferential tariff and lay down his goods at the cheapest possible rate, and he must do the same or he will not be in as good a position to compete. Every business man knows that is what is done every day; and it is a guarantee to the people that the consumers get everything at the lowest price.

The hon. member for West Assiniboia wanted to know what had been done for the farmer. I have here a list giving the amount of produce we sold in the year 1896 and also in the year 1899; and it shows an increase in quantity and in price:

Total increased revenue over 1896. $ 19,695,330

The returns for the last six months of 1899, which is not included in this statement, show that the exports of farmers' produce continues to increase at even a greater rate. In that period the value of the butter exported was $4,675,807, of cheese $14,407,951, of eggs $1,169,710, and of bacon $6,217,787. Adding the increase in this item alone to the statement just given, you have a total increase during the regime of the Liberal government of $31,862,427.

In every important respect the exports of farm produce have increased as well as the price that the farmers receive. Surely this goes to show that something has been done for the farmers of this country. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has gone over to the old country and he has advertised Canada's products, and as a result we are getting a sale for our produce that we were not getting there before. That is what it is to have a practical farmer at the head of the department. Hon. gentlemen on the other side had a medical man in that department. Medical men are all right in their place, but a gentleman who deals in drugs is not supposed to know very much about butter, cheese, eggs, cold storage and things of that kind. Now, the Minister of Agriculture is a practical man, he took this matter up in a practical way, and the consequence is that he has opened a great market in England for our farm products.

But, hon. gentlemen opposite, in criticising the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), talked, some of them, for an hour and a half about the Liberal party having formerly desired to obtain reciprocity with the United States. They say: Look at the policy of that party six or seven years ago (I am not sure of the date for I was not in public life at the time), when they wanted reciprocity with the United States. Very true, we did. I met a man one day in my town who wanted to swap horses. I went to him the next day and was willing to swap horses with him, but he said: No, he did not want to swap. But, I said, you wanted to swap horses with me yesterday. He said: That is very true, but I have changed my mind. I have use for my horses now, and I can do better with them. The idea of blaming this government because a few years ago they wanted reciprocity and do not want it at the present time! The thing is ridiculous. The very fact shows that the members of this government are progressive, they are keeping abreast with the times. What was good for this country ten years ago may not be good for it to-day. The leader of the opposition might have taken some medicine a week ago that was good for him, but that would not be good for him to-day; the doctor has changed his prescription and given him something else. It is a ridiculous argument on which to waste two or three hours, to tell the House about what this party had done in regard to reciprocity some years ago. I think the leader of the opposition and his party were just as anxious for reciprocity at that time as the Liberal party was. So far as I can understand, the leader of the opposition went down to Washington on a junketting trip, and when the matter was brought up in the House, he said: Oh, it was not an offer of unrestricted reciprocity, it was an unrestricted offer of reciprocity that I made.

I wish to allude to the matter of expenditure. The member for West Assiniboia dealt at some length with that question, and he used the old stock arguments. Why, if you believed the Conservative party you would think this country was going to ruin. Last year I read myself statements in some Conservative papers that the expenditure by this government last year was $60,000,000, one paper put it at $53,000,000, and another at $58,000,000, until some Conservative paper or independent paper in Toronto advised the Conservative press all over the country to get up one story and to stick to it, because, it said, if they did not nobody would believe them. They said that last year this government spent $60,000,000. Well, supposing this government did spend $60,000,000, taking capital account and consolidated fund account together, they have not spent $60,000,000, but supposing they had, look at the revenue they received. There was a year in the history of the Conservative party when they spent $62,000,000, but I never heard a Conservative say a word about it, there was no howl going up in this country about the extravagance of the Conservative government, although at that time they only had a revenue of some $34,000,000, making a difference between expenditure and revenue of $28,000,000. But if this government, on capital account and consolidated fund account together, had spent $60,000,000, they would have done it with a revenue of $50,000,000; a great difference, you see. I am not going into the question of how much they have spent, but I say that so long as the money is properly spent in the interests of the people, there can be no kick coming from the people. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot show wherein this alleged extravagance lies. The member for West Assiniboia tried to show that there had been extravagance in the Justice Department, and I think he discovered some place where there had been an increase of $2,000. But, he never said anything about the Department of the Interior. Let me show what has taken place in that department. In 1894-5, the revenue of the Department of the Interior was $167,869.58; in 1895-6, the last year hon. gentlemen were in power, the revenue was $166,256.49. In 1898-9, the revenue was $1,532,590.52, while the expenditure of the department was only increased a trifle, an extraordinary showing under the present management of the Interior Department, with all the added work in the Yukon. I venture to say that if hon. gentlemen opposite had been in power when the Yukon was opened up, they would have crammed the Interior Department from one end to the other with their political friends. There would not have been a Conservative member in this House who would not have been trying to get some of his political friends and supporters into that department.

The member for West Assiniboia says that our interest account is going up. Why, certainly. When hon. gentlemen opposite went out of power they left about $15,000,000 of liabilities behind them that this government had to take charge of. The old government had entered into contracts involving large amounts of money which the present government had to carry out, and still he says we have increased the interest account. But he forgot to tell the House that when this government did go to the old country to borrow money they borrowed it at a less rate of interest, and thereby made a great saving. We know that the interest account has gone up, but the reasons are all set forth in the public accounts. We claim that this government has done a lot of work, and done it quickly. They have deepened the canals to fourteen feet, and they have done it at once. If you are going to spend $10,000,000 in deepening the canals in the interest of the people, is it not just as well to do that work in one year and let the people to get the benefit at once, instead of dragging it along for political purposes over ten years, while the people get no benefit? Under the Conservative regime, nothing was done until about election time, when there was a great hustle in the Public Works Department. Now, I say that as long as this money is spent in the interest of the people, I do not see that there can be any just ground for condemning the government. We have the expenditure on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, amounting to a little over $3,000,000. Was that money not well spent? I think it was well spent. The hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and all the members on the other side of the House, voted for that expenditure, excepting the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), who took to the woods. I was in the House at the time and I noticed that all the hon. members on the other side of the House were favourable to granting this money to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Was it not a good bargain? The amount of interest placed as a charge on the people on account of this grant is less than $100,000 a year, and in moving the grain crop of Manitoba and the North-west Territories last year, the people saved over $800,000 by the reduction of three cents that was given by the Canadian Pacific Railway, owing to the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway were tied down under that contract not to put the rate above fourteen cents. Last year, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) made a statement at places in the North-west Territories that this grant was only money given away. He said that while they talked about securing this reduction in rates from the Canadian Pacific Railway of three cents a hundred, the fact was that the Canadian Pacific Railway themselves were going to reduce the rate anyway. I would like the hon. gentleman to tell me why the Canadian Pacific Railway would reduce the rate. Is there any competition there to make them reduce the rate? Has he ever heard of the Canadian Pacific Railway being so philanthropic that they would reduce their rates without being paid for it? I know that if there was competition in that country they would do so. But, as it is, there is no competition, and the only way that we can get them to reduce their rates is by paying them to do so. This three cents a hundred, as I have already said, equalled about $800,000, put into the pockets of the people of the North-west Territories. Therefore, I claim that that $3,000,000 has been well spent. I also claim that the money that has been spent on canals has been well spent. These hon. gentlemen, if they object to these expenditures, should criticise them when they are proposed, but, when it is proposed to spend money to build bridges and wharfs in various constituencies, the money is always voted. Out of the total expenditure proposed last year in the estimates, only $38,000 or $39,000 was challenged by hon. gentlemen opposite. Yet they go up and down the country saying that this government is ruining us. If they do not challenge the items when the estimates are under consideration, they are not justified in travelling up and down the country and telling the people that this government is extravagant. When hon. gentlemen opposite allow money to be voted for any purpose without moving that the same be not voted, they become as responsible for the expenditure as the government itself.

Hon. gentlemen opposite charge this government with having increased the public debt. I will call the attention of the House to the increases that took place in the public debt during the three years 1894, 1895 and 1896 under hon. gentlemen opposite. They increased the public debt in 1894 by $4,501,989.87, in 1895, by $6,891,897.61, or nearly $7,000,000, and in 1896 by $5,422,505.68, making, in all, in three years, an increase of $16,816,393.16, or an average per year of $5,605,464.38, as against something over $2,000,000 a year, as shown by the records of this government since it came into power. I have the record here of the increases in the public debt from 1880 to 1896. In 1881, the increase was $9,461,401.25; in 1882, $2,944,191.79; in 1883, $4,805,063.68. Now, here is a year, 1884, when the increase amounted to $23,695,135.80. I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will tell you that that was paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not care whether it was paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway or to any other railway. The fact of paying it to the Canadian Pacific Railway is no justification, because these hon. gentlemen made such a bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway that they might as well have taken the money and thrown it in the Ottawa River. They go out through the country and talk about the magnificent band of steel they have laid from ocean to ocean. I wish to submit to the hon. leader of the opposition and his colleagues the fact that you can buy even gold too dearly, and that is what the people of the North-west Territories have found out. The estimated cost of the whole road was $92,000,000. Yet, hon. gentlemen opposite gave away, taking into consideration lands, money and completed road, some $110,000,000. And then they say: Look at the magnificent bargain we have made. Is that not a grand bargain? If I were to go down town and give a man enough money to build a house and make him a present of a lot more, I would be making such a grand bargain as this one was. They gave the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate enough to build the road and $18,000,000 over. Then, these gentlemen who composed the syndicate went to work and bonded the road. They got power to issue bonds to the extent of $50,000,000: they were sold at 25 cents on the dollar; the gentlemen in the syndicate bought them in at 25 cents on the dollar, and they used the money they paid for these bonds to pay themselves back interest at the rate of 6 cents on the face value of the bonds. This is something like 24 per cent they were making on the transaction.

The hon. leader of the opposition went to Manitoba himself this year during the elections and took the platform. The people were interested in the attitude of the hon. gentleman in reference to railway legislation. He had always opposed the government ownership of railways in the strongest possible way. I have clippings from his speeches in which he has condemned that principle. When the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock) brought that question before the House, the hon. leader of the opposition said that all young members, when they came here first, had fads, and that this was one of the fads. When he went to Manitoba he was asked if he favoured the government ownership of railways. Instead of taking the same stand as he had taken in this House, he said that he had no objection to it. This is something like the Jekyel-Hyde speeches that the hon. gentleman makes in Toronto and in Quebec. In regard to the stealing of clothes, we now find that Mr. Hugh John Macdonald has stolen the clothes of the late Mr. Mackenzie. He has stolen his railway policy, which was to build the Canadian Pacific Railway as a government work. He proposes to build all the railways in Manitoba and to control them as government railways.

The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) last night, in speaking of the expenditure, said that, in 1886, we had a rebellion, and that the government had to pay the cost of that rebellion. I would like to ask that hon. gentleman who was accountable for that rebellion. There was no necessity for having a rebellion. The people were not longing for such a luxury, but they had to pay the piper. They had to meet the bills although the expenditure of blood and treasure was caused by the blundering in the departments here. If the government had treated the half-breeds decently there never would have been a rebellion. The rebellion was hardly over, and the soldiers had scarcely left the country, when the commissioners appointed by the hon. gentlemen opposite came junketting up there to give the half-breeds the very thing they had asked for before the rebellion took place. If these commissioners had come up four or five months before, or had even wired they were coming there never would have been a rebellion, and this country would have been saved the blood that lies at the doors of gentlemen opposite.

The hon. member (Mr. Davin) spoke of the railway policy of the late government, but the less he and his friends say about that the better. Are they aware that the Conservatives gave upwards of 65,000,000 acres of the best lands in Manitoba and the North-west to these jobbing railway corporations? It amused me to hear the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) raising his hands in holy horror last year about the railway subsidies voted by this government. There, is an hon. gentleman that pocketed I might say millions of dollars or very near it in the way of railway subsidies in the Territories. Look at the jobbery there was in the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway. Why that railway was built for the simple purpose of giving the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) and his friends a means of making a certain amount of money. That road was built through a wilderness. They could have built for 175 miles through a good country, but they evidently had in mind the example of the Yankee, who built at so much a mile a road for the Sultan of Turkey between two points ninety miles apart; he built in zig-zag fashion, and when the bill came to the Sultan, he had to pay for some hundreds of miles of road. The hon. gentleman from West Toronto and his friends built their railway like a hoop, and ran it through an alkali plain where nobody lived or will ever live. They took their 6,400 acres of land per mile, and they did not select it from a muskeg or from the alkali plain, but they selected the best lands in the Saskatchewan valley. On top of that they had some $80,000 a year for carrying the mails, a service which is worth about $2,000 a year. They are selling their lands every day and have sold a great deal of them at $3, $4 and $5 an acre, but if you put it at $3 an acre, and take the amount of cash they are getting, you will find they got $19,000 a mile by way of subsidy, and their own figures in the blue-book show that the road cost them less than $10,000 a mile. Where did the other $9,000 a mile go? I suppose these gentlemen opposite will say that that was a fine bargain. They did not keep control of the bonding powers or anything else on that road, but they gave these gentlemen a free hand to plunder the settlers in the Territories as much as they like. We have over 65,000,000 of the best lands of the North-west given away to railway companies, and not subject to taxation. If a few poor settlers want to start a school and try to find out what taxes they will have to pay, they will find that half the lands belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when they ask the land agent how long it is exempt, he answers: As I understand it is exempt for twenty years from the time they got the charter, but the Canadian Pacific Railway claim it is exempt until they sell it. That is a sample of the railway legislation of the Conservative government. Here is a list of the lands given away to the railway companies:

If you figure up that, you will find that 65,792,294 acres of the finest lands in Manitoba and the North-west have been given away to railway companies by the Conservative government, and what have the people got for that? When a road had to be built in the North-west Territories to develop a new territory, the friends of the Conservative government came down and they gave them a charter, the same as the charter for the Hudson Bay road, which ex-Governor Mackintosh and his political friends got hold of along with the land grant. The Conservatives gave their friends all the lands they wanted, gave them a free hand, but when it came to building a road in eastern Canada, the Tories voted a money subsidy. By this system the people of the North-west paid out of their own lands for building railroads, and as taxpayers they had to contribute to the cash subsidy of every road built in eastern Canada during the eighteen years the Conservatives were in power. That is the way the Conservatives treated the people of Manitoba and the North-west. Now, Sir, this Liberal government now in power, according to the platform of 1893, have adopted the policy that the land must belong to the settler, and they have not given a single acre of it away since they came into power. It is true that subsidies have been granted, because in order to build railways in Manitoba and the North-west, subsidies must be granted. But this government has adopted a system by which the money to build these roads has been practically lent, because they get a return of 3 per cent on all the money they give in the carrying of the mails and government supplies. I believe that this country pays over $2,000,000 to railway companies for carrying the mails in different parts of the Dominion. If the policy now adopted by the Liberal government in granting subsidies had been adopted by the Conservative government, this $2,000,000 a year would be saved to the people of Canada. Still these gentlemen opposite are foolish enough to compare the policy of the Conservative government with the policy of the Liberal government in this regard. I can tell hon. gentlemen opposite that when they come before the people of the west as well as before the people of the east, they will have a different song to sing. The hon. member for West Assinibolia says that the Liberals will be wiped out of existence, but I can tell him that in the Territories, the only man who will get such a wiping out will be the hon. member (Mr. Davin) himself. I would advise his friends to rub their spectacles and take a good look at him because they will never see him back here again. He is the man who takes credit for doing everything for the farmers in the Territories, but the farmers do not seem to appreciate it, because with all the influence of the government, with the whole mounted police force of Regina at his back (and they were marched to the polls for him like lambs to the slaughter) with all the Indian Department and the election officials to support him, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) was only elected by the vote of the returning officer, Mr. Dixie Watson. It is a well known fact that any policemen who intended to vote Liberal in Regina were sent off to do duty in another constituency, so that they could not vote. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) should talk all he possibly can in the House during this parliament, because when the people get a chance to deal with him he will never come back again.

The hon. member for Western Assinibolia last night criticised the government's action in expending more money for immigration purposes. Well, Sir, if we can show, and

Mr. DAVIS.

I think this government can show, that that money has been well spent in the interests of the people, the hon. gentleman will find it hard to justify a criticism of that kind in Manitoba and the Territories, where, notwithstanding all that has been said, the people are very well satisfied indeed. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about the Galicians and the Doukhobors. I read the speech of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), in which he said that the people of this country did not want to import filthy dirt into this country—alluding to the Doukhobors and the Galicians. Let me give you a little portion of a speech delivered by the hon. leader of the opposition in Winnipeg :

Doukhobors or Galicians, in the condition in which these people were, and are, might go to the port of New York, but the ship which took them there would have to take them back at the cost of the owner, for not one would be permitted to land.

Now, I take up the report of Mr. T. V. Powderly, the United States Commissioner of Immigration, and what does he say about the same year? He says :

Galicians landed and examined in the United States during the year 1898 and accepted as desirable immigrants, 12,420; and a total from Austria and Russia, 67,013.

Yet, the hon. leader of the opposition said we were taking the refuse which the United States would not take. I notice that agents from the United States are at present up among the Doukhobors, trying to get them to emigrate to California, and yet these gentlemen say that they are not a desirable class of immigrants. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that they compare very favourably with the Jew pedlars who were brought into the North-west by Mr. Daly. Those Jew pedlars were brought out as farmers, but as soon as they got into the country, they began stealing right and left, and had to be arrested and put in jail. When a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite wanted a position, they made him an immigration agent; and he would send out gentlemen farmers to travel through the North-west at the government's expense. You would see these people travelling around, wearing collars that their ears rested on, and when they got through, they went home, and you never heard anything more about them. That was the spirited immigration policy adopted by the previous government. Any money which this government has spent on immigration has been well spent, for people are coming into the country in large numbers. I have here a statement of the settlers brought into the country since 1895. In 1896 the numbers brought in at ocean ports were : English, 9,656 ; Irish, 886 ; Scotch, 1,342 ; Germans, 644 ; Scandinavians, 788 ; French and Belgians, 762 ; all others, 2,757. The Jew pedlars are not mentioned, but I suppose they are included among the Scandinavians or the Germans.

From the United States, at Winnipeg, Lake St. John, &c., 700 came in; making a grand total of 17,535. In 1898, 31,900 immigrants came in. Last year, for which I have not the returns, 40,000 good settlers came into this country, and the Doukhobors and Galicians form a very small part of this number. The majority are people from the United States, especially the state of Minnesota. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia alluded to the brother of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as an immigration agent; but I can tell the hon. gentleman, that Mr. Ben. Davies has brought more settlers into my district in three years than some of their friends brought into the whole North-west Territories in five years, and those immigrants were not Jew pedlars, but good, solid, substantial farmers, who sold their farms in Minnesota for $30, $40 or $50 an acre, and moved into our North-west, bringing plenty of money with them.

Hon. gentlemen opposite say that this country is not going ahead. The ex-Finance Minister travelled around for three years prior to 1896, trying to convince the people by percentages, that they were rich, when they were hard up, and practically in a state of starvation. He came to Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and when the people told him that something had to be done, he got up on a platform at Winnipeg, and said: 'Go into mixed farming—that is the solution of the problem.' He junketed along on the railway during the night until he struck a mining town. He had not time to see the town in daylight, and he supposed he had struck another farming community. He held a meeting at night, and addressing it, said: 'Gentlemen, go into mixed farming.' One man got up and said he did not believe that. The ex-Finance Minister answered him: 'If you don't like that, you can leave the country.' The gentleman said: 'I do not intend to leave the country; I intend to stay and help to turn you out of office.' And he did stay and helped to turn the hon. gentleman and his colleagues out of office, where they will remain for many years to come.

The hon. member for West Assinibola said the present government were discredited; and yet he stands, side by side, with seven traitors to their leader. The hon. gentleman started with the Minister of the Interior, and then went on to the Minister of Public Works and others, and said they were so utterly discredited, that they could not get a meeting in the North-west Territories. I was at a meeting where the Minister of Customs, the Minister of the Interior, and the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), spoke, at Regina, where the hon. gentleman lives. The meeting was held in a large hall, which was so packed with people that you could not get up the stairs. The hon. gentleman himself cannot get a hearing in his own town, and west of Regina he cannot get a corporal's guard to listen to him. Last year, when he returned to Regina, after the session, he got up a love feast. Some of his friends said: 'We must present Mr. Davin with an address on his return from parliament.' They summoned a meeting, to hear the address, and when it was assembled, only six men and a small boy turned up. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia was mad; he felt that the people were not treating him rightly. He got up and made a speech in which he said: 'Look at what I am sacrificing for the people of the North-west. If I had not come west eighteen years ago, I would have been to-day the leader of the great Conservative party and Prime Minister of this country.'

The hon. member for West Assiniboia and his Tory associates tell the people that this government is discredited and is running the country to perdition. But the facts so emphatically contradict such statements that the people smile at their audacity while enjoying the prosperity that accompanies the administration of the Liberal government. Just glance at some of the facts.

In 1894 the sales of the Hudson Bay Company amounted to 7,526 acres of land. In 1895 they were 4,431 acres; in 1896, 9,299; in 1897, when the Liberal party were hardly in the saddle, they increased to 10,784 acres; and in 1898, after the Liberal policy was brought into force, they reached 37,923 acres.

The Alberta Railway and Coal Company's sales in 1893 amounted to 10,108 acres; in 1894, nil; in 1895, 28,661 acres; and in 1898, 49,244 acres. The Canadian Pacific Railway sold in 1896, 66,624 acres; in 1897, 135,681 acres; and in 1898, 242,134 acres. That shows that the country is going ahead. It shows that people are buying land, and they are not buying it for the purpose of merely looking at it, but for the purpose of settling on it and growing grain.

Take the sales of the Manitoba and South-western Colonization Railway Company, which were as follows:

	Acres.
In 1896	21,254
In 1898	106,473

Take the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamboat Company, with which the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is connected. They sold in 1896, 286 acres and in 1898 they sold 22,534 acres, and most of these lands are in the district of Saskatchewan. That certainly is an evidence of prosperity. In every case the sales of land have trebled since hon. gentlemen opposite were dismissed from office. In the days of the late administration, nobody would buy land, and the value, instead of going up, was going down even in the old eastern centres.

Another evidence of prosperity is the number of homestead entries. Here are the figures as taken from the public records. From the 30th of June, 1895, to the 31st of December, 1896, two and a half years, the number of homestead entries in Manitoba and the North-west Territories was 5,838. From the 30th of January, 1897, to the 30th of June, 1899, two and a half years, the number was 10,545, or almost double.

Then look at the revenue from the land office. From the 30th of June, 1893, to the 30th of June, 1896, the total cash taken in amounted to $474,073; from the 30th of June, 1896, to the 30th of June, 1899, it amounted to $678,965.

All that is an evidence of prosperity and increased settlement, and I may say that the immigrants who have gone into the Territories are first-class people. Hon. gentlemen opposite object to the Galicians, but it is only lately that they have found them objectionable. Why, it was they who first brought them into the country. They were first brought in by Mr. Daly, who was Minister of the Interior in the late government. It is well known that he discussed with Prof. Oleskow, who came to this country with credentials from Sir Charles, the desirability of incurring large expenditure for the purpose of directing to Canada a great stream of Galician immigration. We find these hon. gentlemen trying to impress upon the people that this government have not only brought these people into the country but have paid their passages and other expenses, and contrasting that with their treatment of Canadians. Well, Mr. Speaker, would these hon. gentlemen advise our spending money to bring people from the province of Ontario or the other eastern provinces and transferring them to the North-west? That would be like trying to get rich by taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another. Transferring people from one province to the other would not increase our population; if we want to increase our population, we must bring in people from the outside just as our neighbours to the south have done. I have never heard of any political party in the United States decrying the immigrants that the American government are bringing into the country. Surely politics have come to a low ebb when hon. gentlemen opposite are obliged to have recourse to abuse of the poor foreign immigrants who have settled on our vacant lands.

I wish to say a few words with reference to our post office administration, and will be very brief. When the late government went out of office, the administration of the department showed a deficit of three-quarters of a million in round figures for that year. Well, our present Postmaster General gave the country cheap postage and succeeded besides in wiping out that deficit. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the cheapening of postage is of no advantage to the farmers, because a farmer only writes a letter in six months. Well, if a farmer's only saves a cent, it is just as well in his pocket as in that of some booting contractor. But as a matter of fact, the whole people are getting the benefit of the reduction. Any one who knows anything about business knows that the merchant in fixing his prices has to take into consideration every item of expense, and if his postage bill is reduced $100 he can afford to give his customers the benefit of that reduction on the prices of his goods. I have here a supplementary report published by the Postmaster General, which I notice hon. gentlemen opposite do not like. I had occasion a short time ago to put two or three of the transactions mentioned in this report on the journals of this House and hon. gentlemen opposite took great exception to my doing so. They went so far as to say that I had been inspired by the Postmaster General. Nothing could be further from the truth. I struck from my own bat, and my object was to justify my action at Dauphin, where, in a speech, I quoted from this very supplementary report and was met by the charge that no such letters as I read existed. I therefore took the first opportunity of placing the correspondence before the country in such a shape that the statement I made could no longer be challenged.

One of the transactions I refer to was in connection with the Brockville mail. A gentleman by the name of Cavanagh was getting $400 per year for transferring the mail from the Canadian Pacific Railway cars to the Grand Trunk, about fifty yards distant. About $50 per year would have been a very fair remuneration for the work, but the Postmaster General of the late government was not satisfied that the expenditure was sufficiently heavy, and he came to the conclusion that Mr. Cavanagh required somebody to watch him and decided, after considerable negotiations and communications, to appoint a transfer agent at $400 a year. Mr. Cavanagh transferred his contract for carrying the mails to a brother of his, a locomotive engineer living about fifty miles from Brockville, who never saw a mail-bag, so that Mr. Cavanagh was really getting $800 per year—$400 for doing the work and $400 for watching himself to see that it was properly done. The present Postmaster General cancelled that arrangement and had the work done for some $200 per year. That is one case.

Take another case in my own constituency of Saskatchewan. It was the greatest steal ever known in that part of the country. It is a wonder that hon. gentlemen opposite are able to hold up their heads. In one small mail route from Saskatoon to Battleford, ninety miles, the contractor had the contract—or a job, for it could not be called a contract, no tenders were asked for—for carrying the mail, for which he received $7,200 a year. A poor half-breed carrying the mail an equal distance and serving thirteen post offices, while this contractor served but one, received only $500. It is true that the half-breed had only a weekly service, while the other had a semi-weekly. But suppose that you double the money for double the service, you have $1,000 as against $7,200 for the same amount of work.

There was another gentleman who wanted to feed at the public crib, Mr. Stovil. He was a good Conservative and wanted to get a little of the plunder that was going. He wrote to the member for the district and offered to take the job for $5,000, and pointed out, very fairly, that there would be a saving of $2,000 a year. In his letter to the member he said he was a good Conservative. That is on record. Now, the then member for the district—I will give him credit for that—wrote to the Postmaster General that day and recommended that the contract be cancelled and tenders asked for, or that it be given to Mr. Stovil at $5,000. The post office inspector reported that Mr. Stovil was in every way competent to carry on the work in first-class shape. Here we have the post office inspector and the member for the district urging a change which would effect a saving of $2,000 a year. Was that done? Not at all. Mr. Daly wrote—his letter also appears in the book—that Mr. Leeson, the contractor, was a good friend and ought to have the contract at the old price, and the contract was not disturbed. But when this government came in, the contractor heard that I was going to get it cancelled. He wrote me a letter—a plain, straightforward business letter. He had been doing business at the old stand, and evidently thought he could continue. His letter was to the effect that this contract on the branch between Regina and Battleford had only eighteen months to run, and that if I would allow it to run the eighteen months he would give me $1,000 in cash. I have that letter in my possession and will give hon. gentlemen opposite a copy of it, if they like. Of course, I suppose he had been doing business on these lines. If he could afford to give $1,000 for eighteen months continuance of one little contract, what could he do for all those that he had? He got enough money out of it, more than he should have got, to build a bridge across the Saskatchewan River. But I wrote at once to the Postmaster General and sent a copy of this man's letter, and the contract was cancelled immediately. Since then, the contract has been let for $1,800 and a better service is given. These are only two samples.

I have heard of a case also down in Nova Scotia. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), delivered a speech here once in which he told us that down in Amherst, I think it was, there was a party who had the job of carrying the mails from the station to the post office, for which he got, if I remember well—I can send for Hansard and verify the figures if necessary—$600. He was a relative of the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and he kept the job until he died, and then he handed it over to another relative of the leader of the opposition, and he kept it until he was ready to leave for a better sphere. Then it was handed over to a Mr. Hilson, who had some office on the Intercolonial Railway. He never touched the mail-bags, but farmed out the job for $200, and put $400 in cold cash down in his pocket. This blue blood comes high; it cost a great deal to keep relatives of the leader of the opposition in jobs of that kind.

Now, with reference to the Minister of the Interior, I want to say that never in the history of this country has there been a period of three years in which so much has been done for the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west as has been done in the last three years by the Minister of the Interior. I have here a list of changes made in the administration of the land laws since the Hon. Clifford Sifton became Minister of the Interior, which I may summarize.

By the transfer of the office of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands from Winnipeg to Ottawa, an annual saving in expenditure of over eight thousand dollars has been effected.

A settler who has acquired the right to a second homestead may be permitted to perform the residence duties connected therewith by living on the first homestead.

There is a proper piece of legislation that commands the approval of everybody in the North-west. Under the old law a person was obliged to put up a shanty on his claim to sleep in before he could get the patent. It was a foolish idea, of no benefit to anybody. A young man living with his parents, after working all day was compelled to go out to the shanty on his claim to sleep instead of being allowed to sleep at home where his parents live. This change in the law is a wise one.

A settler may perform the residence duties in connection with his homestead by living with his father or mother, if they occupy farm lands in the vicinity.

Where a homestead entry is obtained for 80 acres or less, the entry fee is reduced to $5 instead of $10 as in ordinary cases.

There is a reduction of 50 per cent in the entry fee, and yet the hon. member for Western Assinibola does not see that anything has been done for the farmers of the west.

Where a settler takes his pre-emption as a second homestead the provision requiring 40 acres of cultivation has been abolished, and the ordinary cultivation duties are now accepted.

Cancelled time-sales have been made available for settlement and are held exclusively for homestead entry, or if the applicant is not entitled to a homestead he may purchase the land at $1 per acre, subject to homestead conditions.

The regulations as to residence in the performance of homestead duties have been relaxed in favour of the settler, and instead of counting his time from the date when he began to live on the land the practice has been adopted of ante-dating it so that the first six months of residence shall fall within the second half of the first year, thus enabling him to obtain a certificate of recommendation for patent in less time than previously.

Another change is that provided three years have elapsed from the date of homestead entry a settler may be held to have satisfied the requirements of the Act in respect of residence provided he has lived on his land for six months in each of three calendar years, the certificate of recommendation being issued at once on the completion of such residence.

The right of second entry is allowed to any one who can be shown under our present practice to have completed his duties before the 2nd of June, 1889, instead of under the regulations in force at that date as heretofore.

The performance of duties on military homesteads is now recognized under the amendments to the Act, instead of requiring a compliance with the regulations in force at the time of the issue of military bounty warrants as heretofore.

The amendments to the Act of the present session are calculated to facilitate the issue of patent in certain cases, and also improve the conditions under which homestead duties may be performed.

It will not be necessary now for the personal representative of a settler who completed his homestead duties, but died before becoming a British subject, to obtain a certificate of naturalization before receiving a patent for the land.

Under the lien provisions of the Act a patent may now be issued to a lien-holder in a case where the homesteader completed his duties, but did not apply for patent, and was not a British subject, the omission of the act of naturalization being no longer a bar to such issue.

The privilege whereby a settler was permitted to reside upon his first homestead whilst performing the duties upon his second homestead, is now extended to cases where a settler has his permanent residence upon farming land owned by him in the vicinity of his homestead.

Provision is made for allowing homesteaders serving in South Africa or elsewhere, under the authority of the Minister of Militia, as a member of a military force, to count the time so engaged, as well as a period of not exceeding three months after discharge therefrom, as residence in connection with the performance of homestead duties.

Mr. DAVIS.

And should any such homesteader whilst on military service be incapacitated by wounds or sickness from resuming residence upon his land and completing the duties, the minister has power to authorize the issue of patent to him forthwith.

Homestead patents are no longer withheld until the seed grain liability is paid, but are issued with an endorsement as to the indebtedness, thus permitting the settler, if he so desires, to get his certificate of ownership subject to the seed grain liability.

The sureties of parties who owe for seed grain are relieved of their responsibility in cases where the persons who received the advances are the holders of unpatented lands which can be retained as security for the debt.

Local agents of Dominion lands may now issue the necessary authority to the person appointed by an intending settler to make homestead entry on his behalf, instead of having to apply to the head office for such authority.

To meet the convenience of settlers living at a distance from the land office, a number of sub-agents have been appointed in the various districts, who are empowered to receive applications for homestead entry, homestead patents, hay permits, timber permits, &c., thus saving the settler the time and expense involved in a trip to the office.

The following is a list of sub-agents appointed:

R. M. Douglas, Tantallon post office, Yorkton district.

P. A. Miquelon, Wetaskiwin post office, Edmonton district.

C. O. Clemens, Melfort post office, Prince Albert district.

F. A. Gemmel, Selkirk post office, Winnipeg district.

R. W. Hill, Carman post office, Winnipeg district.

T. Copeland, Saskatoon post office, Prince Albert district.

J. Nixon, Macleod post office, Lethbridge.

H. H. Campkin, Indian Head post office, Qu'Appelle.

A. E. Cox, Pincher Creek post office, Lethbridge.

D. J. McDonald, Kamloops post office, Kamloops.

C. O. Card, Cardston post office, Lethbridge.

John McClung, Riding Mountain post office, Minnedosa.

L. B. Cochrane, Medicine Hat post office, Lethbridge.

Hugh Harley, Swan River post office, Dauphin.

Lawrence Adamson, Fort Saskatchewan post office, Edmonton.

Frank Vickerson, Lacombe post office, Red Deer.

H. de Deftal, Duck Lake post office, Prince Albert.

Now, this was a step in the right direction. Here we had people in some instances, 60 or 70 miles away, new settlers living away from the centre where the land office was situated, and when they wanted to enter their homesteads, they had to travel 60 or 70 miles and pay their expenses. In some cases when they wanted to make proof, they had to bring two or three parties with them, and you can understand the expenses they were put to for themselves, and their witnesses, and their horses, and so forth. It must have amounted to $40 or $50. Under the old system, a man could not prove up and get his title to his lands without an expenditure of that amount at least. To-day the government have established subland agents at salaries of $15 per month, and all the settler has to do, is to walk up to the office of one of these sub-agents with his witnesses and prove up his title, and he gets his deed.

But this is not all. The timber regulations have been amended in the interest of the settler.

Settlers who have not a supply of timber of their own have been granted the right to obtain a permit to cut upon a Dominion lands as much dry timber, of any diameter, as they may require for their own use on their farms for fuel or fencing.

Provision has been made for the issue of permits to cut, free of dues, timber for the construction of public works, public institutions and the buildings in connection therewith, and the quantity of building timber which a homesteader is allowed to cut, free of dues, has been increased from 1,800 to 3,000 lineal feet.

Permanent timber reservations have been re-established, and new ones created, in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, upon which permits are issued to settlers to cut only for their own use, thus ensuring them a supply of timber equal to their needs for the future. Permission is not granted to cut timber on these reservations for commercial purposes.

Homesteaders on Dominion lands in the railway belt in the province of British Columbia have been granted all the timber on their homesteads, excepting in cases where such timber has already been disposed of under license or permit.

As to hay, provision has been made that no permits shall be granted except to actual farmers. Heretofore every speculator in the country who happened to be living in the town where the land office was, got a chance to get a permit. A certain day was fixed when permits were to be granted, and the speculators gathered round the office, like a lot of leeches, and when the farmer came round in order to get a permit for hay, he found it had already been gobbled up. Under this new amendment, speculators are not allowed to get permits, but only actual farmers.

These are some of the things that have been done by the Minister of the Interior for the settlers during the last few years, and I can assure you that they are appreciated by the people of the west, notwithstanding what has been said about the Minister of the Interior by the member for West Assiniboia. It is easy for that hon. gentleman to get up and make a statement that no person in the west will listen to the Minister of the Interior. Why, he might make a statement that the president of the United States was a Chinaman, but it would not necessarily follow that that was the case.

Now, I will touch upon another matter that was mentioned some days ago by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), in his speech. It was a short speech, but it was pretty nearly all in connection with the Manitoba elections. He tried to make the House and the country believe that the Manitoba elections were run on Dominion lines. I did not know that such was the case, with the exception of the riding that the hon. member himself represents. I know that he did travel through his own riding and made Dominion affairs an issue. He spoke in the town of Dauphin, and he spoke on Dominion issues. I went to a meeting in Dauphin, having been invited by the Conservative party, and when I got on the platform, the hon. gentleman was making a speech, and I was told by the manager of the Conservative party that I could not be allowed to speak. I, however, took the opportunity later of calling a meeting and speaking at it. But if it be true that the overturn in Manitoba was caused by bringing in Dominion issues, then I pity the hon. member for Marquette when he goes back for re-election, because he fought out the election in his own constituency on Dominion lines, and he was snowed out of sight. He made a speech in the town of Dauphin, and spoke about prohibition and a number of other Dominion issues, and what was the consequence? The consequence was that the Liberal candidate was elected in the by-election by 2 to 1. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), tried to account for it by saying that the lists were stuffed, but surely he will not say the lists were stuffed in Dauphin, he will not say that that was not an intelligent vote. There is no more intelligent vote in the North-west Territories than the vote in the town of Dauphin, and they went 2 to 1 against the Conservatives. I would like the hon. gentleman to say, if he made Dominion affairs the issue in this election, how he accounts for the flop-over that took place in Dauphin. It is a well-known fact that the hon. gentleman got his majority there the last time, but I fancy he now sees the sword of Damocles hanging over his head, as it does over the head of the member for West Assiniboia. He says that Dominion issues fought out in his own district, but as his own district went against him, it must follow that he is going to get ousted at the next general election. However, I would not rejoice at it, because the member for Marquette is not a very bad fellow after all.

I looked through his speech and found he made some allusions to binder twine. I think the least these hon. gentlemen say about binder twine the better. The member for West Assiniboia said last night that the Conservative party started a factory in Kingston for the purpose of protecting the farmer. How was he protected? Why, I read a statement from the Hansard last year showing that he was protected in this way: A certain gentleman by the name of Rogers, who was known to be a political heeler of hon. gentlemen opposite, got his binder twine on credit, and I presume he has not paid for it yet, or if he has it has been lately. The record shows a statement brought down by themselves to the effect that some 200,000 pounds of binder twine was given away as samples, given out to their political friends. Still they talk about binder twine, and they tell you that binder twine has gone up. Here is the argument they make: Well, you put it on the free list, but it has gone up in price. Certainly, but hon. gentlemen know that the raw material has gone up in price, and they know at the same time that if this government had not placed it on the free list, the farmers of this country who use binder twine, would have to pay 12½ cents a pound more for it than they do at the present time, because wiping out the duty reduced it by that amount. The hon. gentleman knows that taking off the duty would not raise the price of twine.

Mr. BENNETT. Carried.

Mr. DAVIS. I am sorry to see that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) appears to be tired. I think he was born tired, and I think he will be still more tired before the next elections are over.

This is an old matter about binder twine; it was threshed out last year here very fully. It was shown that these parties who purchased the government twine got it in a proper way. Tenders were asked for, and the parties who tendered the highest, who gave the most money for the binder twine, got the twine. I think it was shown also, that when they disposed of it, they disposed of it at an advance of about one-eighth of a cent per pound. I do not think it will be contended that that was too much. It passed through two or three hands, until it went into the hands of the retailers all over the country; the war came on, and increased the price of the raw material and the parties who held the twine very naturally took advantage of the increase in the price just the same as the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), or the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), would do. If these hon. gentlemen had purchased 25 tons of binder twine at $5 a hundred and it went up to $10 a hundred, they would not be such philanthropists as to sell their binder twine at $5 a hundred. We may illustrate this point by taking a deal in wheat. Some years a dealer in wheat will pay $1 per bushel and perhaps he will have to sell it for 75 cents a bushel. Under these circumstances, he will incur a loss of 25 cents a bushel. Probably, next year, he will pay

Mr. DAVIS.

75 cents a bushel for his wheat, sell it for $1 a bushel and make a profit of 25 cents a bushel. Business is done that way all over the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and every business man has a right to take advantage of the rise in the price of goods just as he must suffer the loss in the event of a reduction in the price taking place. To try to make the public believe that, because this government placed binder twine on the free list the price of that article was increased, is nonsense.

The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) calls our attention to binders and says that they are selling for $10 apiece more now than in 1897. I do not know whether that is so or not, but if it is so, I think it would be only fair on the part of the hon. gentleman to tell the House and the country how much of an increase there has been in the price of pig-iron and steel. But, the hon. gentleman did not do anything of the kind. He simply said that binders have gone up $10 apiece. Then, hon. gentlemen opposite present the same argument in regard to barbed wire. They say, that, because the government put barbed wire on the free list, the price has been increased to the consumer. This is also the veriest nonsense. I have met no person who took that view of the matter outside of hon. gentlemen opposite. Let me say that if hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House think that the people of the west are going to take any stock in them they are greatly mistaken, for they have no policy. They go around the country and tell the people that the Liberals have stolen their policy. If it be true that the Liberals have stolen the policy of the Conservative party, if their argument is good that this policy has made this country great and built it up, then, the Liberals must be doing what is right in carrying out that policy. That is the only logical conclusion, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite are abusing the Liberals for doing what is right according to their own argument. Here we have the poet of the plains talking about free trade, while sitting right alongside of him and giving him pointers is the hon. member for South Leeds, the great protectionist, the gentleman who wants agricultural implements to be placed under a duty of 35 per cent. He was sitting beside him giving him pieces of paper and coaching him. Here we have the free trade part, there we have the protectionist part, in another place the loyalty part, and then we have the part for the province of Quebec. It takes a lot of people to make a world, and it takes a great many kinds of people to make up a Conservative party at the present time. I say that if it be true that the Liberal party are carrying out the policy of the Conservative party, then, according to their own arguments, the Liberals are doing what is right. If this be true, what grievance have they? It simply comes down to this, that the Conservative party want to get back to enjoy the sweets of office. It cannot mean anything else. The hon. member for West Assiniboia spent four hours last night lecturing the House and giving the people a lot of twaddle, and for what reason? That he might get back and get another $47,000 out of the public treasury. There is not a single hon. gentleman on the other side of the House but who has some interest in wishing to get back. The hon. member for South Leeds must have some interest. We have the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), the gentleman who went out on strike, and who, like the cat, came back; he wants to get back into office to draw his $7,000 a year. The hon. leader of the opposition is dreaming about Chignecto schemes, or something of that sort. Then, we have the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who has aspirations. He aspires to be at the head of the great Conservative party some of these days, and I have no doubt that if the hon. gentleman keeps it up long enough he will get there. He will be able to oust the present leader of the opposition from power, because, whenever any hon. gentleman on that side of the House develops a little strength the hon. member for West York applies the knife and the other hon. gentleman from East York applies the axe, and they turn him down. There is not an hon. gentleman on that side of the House but is interested in getting back into power; it is a question of their pockets and nothing else in the world; for if this government are doing what is right and carrying out the national policy, they must admit themselves that the government are doing it better than hon. gentlemen opposite ever did, because there are better results from it. The fact that the trade of the country has in three years increased to double the amount that it increased under Conservative rule in the whole time that they were in power, goes to show that this government are better able to run the machine than hon. gentlemen opposite. The fact that the revenue of the country has gone up by leaps and bounds shows that this government are more competent to carry on the affairs of the country than hon. gentlemen opposite. Still, they are not pleased—no, because they want to get back into office. They say that the Grits are doing what is right, that they have adopted their policy, but still, turn them out, 'we are hungry for office, and let us in again.'

I just wish to say a word in particular reference to the west. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House need not think to console themselves with the idea that there is going to be any great overturn in the west. They will have to come down with some policy. The hon. leader of the opposition has travelled around through the country telling the people in the west what he did some forty years ago. He related to them a lot of ancient history. The people up there take no stock in him at all. He gets up and says that the trade of the country was so much in 1868, that it is so much in 1900, and then he takes credit for the whole thing. He says: We did that. It puts me in mind of the story of a gentleman who had a large tract of land that he had been farming. He had a man employed to farm this land, and this man was getting antiquated in his methods. The land had run out, the buildings were tumbling down, the fences were falling over, and the man who owned the land, at last, came to the conclusion that he would have to employ a younger man who would introduce modern methods in the running of the farm because the thing was going to wrack and ruin. He dismissed the old man that had been running the farm for so many years and put in a young man. This young man, in three years, reclaimed the farm, applied more suitable methods of cultivation, reconstructed the fences and buildings, and then the old farmer came along and leaning over the fence, said: I did that. This is just the same as the hon. leader of the opposition, who takes credit for the progress that has been made in this country. After this government came in and applied modern methods for the reclaiming of the farm, and after it has spent three and a half years in improving the property, the hon. leader of the opposition leans over the fence and says: I did that. I can tell the hon. leader of the opposition that he will have to do something more than that before he may hope to make any impression on the people of the west. The hon. gentleman was billed to make his appearance in my town, but he did not make his appearance there, and I am sorry for it. The Prince Albert Advocate, published in my constituency, and not a very strong partisan paper either, prepared a list of questions to ask the leader of the opposition, and these questions would be hard nuts for Sir Charles Tupper to crack. His lieutenant (Mr. Davin) tried his hand at it, but he got all twisted up and he had to leave it alone. Here is what the Advocate wrote:

For Sir Charles.

We are to have a visit from Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the opposition, who is to hold a political meeting to-morrow afternoon. We are glad to have a visit from Sir Charles, as we feel that the more public men who visit the district the better. It is pleasing, too, to know that the leaders of the Conservative party are taking more interest in this district than they did in days gone by.

Now that Sir Charles is here, we would be much pleased if he would throw some light on the following questions:

Why the party of which he is supposed to be the leader gave $110,000,000 in lands, cash and completed road to the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate—more than enough to build the road —without in any way protecting the interests of the settlers of the west?

Why their lands were exempted from taxation for twenty years, while the poor settler was increasing their value by his labour?

Why they subsidized the Regina, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway in cash and land grants to the extent of $19,000 a mile without keeping control of the tolls, or in any way protecting the interests of the settlers of Saskatchewan?

Why he opposed, on every occasion, government ownership and control of railways?

Why he opposed, last session, the appointment of a railway commission that the western members were trying to get appointed to protect the settlers from the railway sharks that he and his political friends have made rich?

Why he opposed, last session, the amendment to the Railway Act proposed by Mr. Blair to give the government power to force railroad corporations to build their stations within existing towns along their line, and not at a short distance therefrom in order to start a new town on their own land?

Last year the leader of the opposition said in the Railway Committee that the snow would fly before he would allow that amendment to be inserted in the Act. When the Bill came back to the House, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) moved to have that amendment reinstated, and I had pleasure in supporting him, for I advocated that policy all along. But, what did the hon. member for West Assiniboia do? He rose from his seat and made for the door. On ordinary occasions he takes to the woods or crawls under the barn, but in that case the only available place of shelter for him was a little room out here in the rear.

Here are some more of the questions which the Advocate put to Sir Charles Tupper:

Why he tried to coerce the province of Manitoba?

Why he persists in saying that the Duke of Devonshire offered Sir Wilfrid Laurier, while in England, to give Canada a preference in the English markets when the Duke has denied same over his own signature?

Why, after taking the trouble to be interviewed by the Montreal 'Gazette' and 'Mail and Empire,' and declaring himself in favour of the Teslin Lake Railway project, he let Maclean, M.P., and Clarke Wallace, M.P., dragoon him into going back on his statements?

Why he proposed last session to the government a scheme to build a railroad over the same Teslin Lake route that he had opposed before?

Why Hetherington is trying to incite the Protestants of New Brunswick against the Roman Catholics in the interests of the Conservative party?

Why Mr. Thebault, a Conservative orator, at Sherbrooke, is denouncing the Laurier government for sending the Canadian contingent to South Africa?

Why the Conservative press in the province of Quebec is denouncing the government for the same reason?

He might also tell us why G. E. Foster, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, Dr. Montague, John Haggart, Mr. Dickey, Minister of Justice, and others, are known to history as 'the nest of traitors,' so called by their own leader, Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

Mr. DAVIS.

Also, if Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper and Mr. Dickey, Minister of Justice, above mentioned, are any relations of his?

Also, if his colleagues who allowed the McGreevy and Curran Bridge steals are honester now than they were then?

Well, the same gentlemen are at the head of the Conservative party now that were at its head during the Curran Bridge scandal, and I do not think that they have been converted in two or three years. The process of conversion is slow with any Conservatives that I ever knew.

The Advocate went on:

He might also explain what he or his party have ever done for the Saskatchewan district besides side-tracking us, and forcing a lot of peaceable people into rebellion.

Will he or his party, if ever returned to power, lower the duties?

Will they give us relief from railroad monopoly?

Will they secure us a reduction in freight rates?

Will he see that the lands held by railroad monopolists in the North-west Territories are no longer exempted from taxation?

Will he repeal the preferential clause in the tariff?

Will he see that a fair settlement of rebellion losses claims is made in Saskatchewan district?

Will he assist Mackenzie and Mann to build another transcontinental line, through the Saskatchewan valley?

Does he agree with George E. Foster that the duty should be replaced on binder twine and barbed wire?

Will he pass over what he did—or thinks he did—forty years ago, and tell us what he will actually do if returned to power?

Has he always kept his promises, and have all his previous prophecies come true?

Is he working for Tupper or for Canada?

In whose hands does he intend to leave the welfare of Canada when he decides to retire from public life?

I would ask the leader of the opposition to tell the people what he proposes to do in the future and not what he did forty years ago in Nova Scotia. Does he think that his clap-trap about our obtaining a preference in the British market will hoodwink the people of the Territories? We know as well as he does that the British people are not going back on their free trade traditions of forty years for the purpose of pleasing Sir Charles Tupper. He knows that he might as well sit up like a dog barking at the moon, as to think of getting such a preference as that in the English markets. Sir, the people of the west are an intelligent people.

Mr. COCHRANE. They have a poor way of showing it in your case.

Mr. DAVIS. Did the hon. gentleman say something about skim milk? He is an expert on that.

Mr. COCHRANE. Oh, go on.

Mr. DAVIS. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the people of the west do not make skim milk masquerade as cream?

Mr. COCHRANE. Go on.

Mr. DAVIS. I say that the people of the west are intelligent, and when the Conservatives come before them, they will tell them that they remember their record when in power. They will remind these gentlemen opposite of the McGreevy scandal, the Curran Bridge scandal, the Langevin Block scandal, the hoodling in mail contracts, and other things. The people of the west are not a partisan people; the fact that my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) got 1,200 majority, where there was 1,400 of a Conservative majority at a previous election, proved that. The people of the west want some solid policy and not stuff like the member for West Assiniboia talks. They know about the prophecy of the leader of the opposition, that there would soon be 400,000,000 bushels of wheat grown in the Territories, and that enough land would be sold there to pay all the public debt of this country. They know that Sir Charles Tupper, when in that country in 1896, made such promises of what he would do when he would get into power that it would take $60,000,000 to carry them out. They know that the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made charges about the Yukon which he was not able to prove, although he did everything in his power to do so, and went so far as to write to an officer in the United States army, who sent him a reply that he will not forget for a long while. On the other hand, the people of the west know the record of the Liberal government since they got into power. They know that the Liberal government have reduced the duties. They know that they are filling up the North-west Territories with settlers at the rate of 40,000 a year; they know that they have increased the price of the farmers' produce by advertising it in the British market; they know that the farmers are getting better prices for their cattle, because the Minister of Agriculture has done away with those foolish quarantine regulations. They know all that; and when hon. gentlemen opposite go before the people and ask them for their votes, the people will say to them: 'We know all these things. What do you propose to do? We know the policy of the Liberal party. They have done something for this country. If you come forward and show us that you are prepared to go one better, we will consider your policy; but it is no use to come to us with ancient history about what John A. Macdonald did, and all that sort of thing. John A. Macdonald was a good man; Alexander Mackenzie was a very fine man, although the Conservatives never discovered it till he was dead; George Brown was a good man, but they never discovered it till he was dead. These people are all dead, and we do not care what the leader of the opposition did twenty-five or thirty years ago; we want to know what he is going to do for the people to-day.' If hon. gentlemen opposite expect to get the support of the people of the North-west, they will be mistaken. They have tried to raise the race and religious howl in the country. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia came to my town and made a speech in which he said: 'How do you like the French tail wagging the English dog.' Was that trying to excite race strife? Talk about this government breaking their pledges. The hon. leader of the opposition said he was prepared to stay in this House day and night and die for the constitution; but when he found that the people were not prepared to accept his policy on the school question, he turned round and said: 'Very well, if you do not want it, I will not give it to you.' Is that not breaking his promise to the people of Quebec? Certainly it is. The hon. gentleman says the school question is a dead issue. When the Canadian contingent was to be sent to South Africa, the hon. leader of the opposition was prepared to ride through the constitution with a coach and four. He promised the Prime Minister to give him his support; but how did the Prime Minister know that he could place any reliance on his promise, seeing that he broke his promise with regard to the Teslin Lake Railway? How did he know but that the members for East York (Mr. Maclean), and West York (Mr. Wallace), would swoop down on the hon. gentleman and dragoon him into going back on his promises as they did before? How can the leader of the opposition expect that the leader of the House will take any stock in any telegram he may send, when he knows that, as a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman is not the leader of his party. The paper, from which I have read, asks, in whose hands does the hon. gentleman intend to leave the welfare of Canada when he decides to retire from public life? I suppose that question is not easily answered, because there is one gentleman sitting on his right, and one on his left, who, in the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, have the bow-strings in their hands. Besides, there is the hon. gentleman's son, whom I have not seen very much in this House this session. As it is six o'clock, and I do not wish to further occupy the time of the House by continuing during the evening sitting, I will close by thanking the House for the kind attention it has given me.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN (Montmorency). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman who spoke before me, this afternoon, over the extensive ground which he has traversed. Not satisfied with wandering through the length and breadth of this Dominion, in the course of his long speech, he has even travelled from London to Paris, from Winnipeg to Constantinople. And every where he has found a ghost in his way; the ghost of the hon. member for West-Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). I do not know what is the matter with the hon. gentleman, but it looks as if he had met the hon. member for Assiniboia somewhere under very peculiar circumstances and had received at his hands a sound drubbing.

While listening to the long speech of the hon. gentleman, the words uttered not very long ago in this House by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) occurred to my mind. The hon. gentleman, when speaking to the motion which he had brought down in connection with the interminable length of some of the speeches delivered here and the loss of time involved, stated that within the last 20 years, the tone of our debates had undergone a change for the worse and that it was calculated to lower the House in the estimation of the whole electorate as well.

I do not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton), when he spoke in that strain, foresaw that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) would make such a long speech; but, at all events, it is such harangues as this one that tend to lower the dignity of our proceedings here. Let me give an illustration of the way in which the hon. gentleman has treated his colleagues. If there is a man who commands the respect not only of his colleagues in this House but of the whole country as well, by reason of the great services rendered by him to Canada, and by reason of the extraordinary mental vigour and the power of endurance displayed by him day after day, that man is the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). Now, the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) could find no choicer expression to apply to our leader than comparing him to a dog that barks at the moon. You may judge from that comparison, Sir, of the general tone of the speech of the hon. gentleman.

While listening to his speech this afternoon, I could not help recalling to mind the remark fallen from a stranger who had heard the speeches of some members of this House, and among others, I believe, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) who comes from the west. After hearing him, he said: 'I am still of the opinion that the wise men came from the east. I do not mean to say, Sir, that there are not to be found among the members from the North-west wise men, men deserving the confidence of the country, and who are worthy representatives of the interests of their constituents in this House; but all those who have heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis), this afternoon, friend and foe alike, can bear out my statement. If we are to go on discussing public business as we have done this afternoon, it will only result in lowering the tone of our proceedings, and as remarked by the hon. member for North Norfolk, we will forfeit not only the respect of those who listen to our speeches, but the respect of the electorate as well.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the promises which were made by the Liberal party, before their advent to power in 1896. If we are to believe the hon. gentleman, some of those pledges were never given to the people, whilst those promises which were held out to the electorate, have all been redeemed. I read with surprise in La Patrie, of Montreal, the report of a speech which was delivered by an influential member of the Liberal party, a man who has all my esteem, the Hon. Senator Dandurand. That hon. gentleman undertook to prove that the Liberal party had been true to all their promises, and had lived up to all the pledges given to the electorate in 1896. One can hardly find fault with a political man making such statements before a club where such utterances carry with them more or less responsibility. But it is one thing to speak before a political club and quite another thing for a minister of the Crown—a minister without portfolio, if you like—to stand up and declare before this House and before the country that the Liberal party have never gone back on their pledges, but have fulfilled them to the last. I refer here to an hon. gentleman who is not now in his seat, the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell); and when he comes back here about ten o'clock, wearing, as usual, his best smile, he may hear from some hon. gentlemen what I said. At all events, I do not wish to say anything disagreeable to the hon. gentleman, but I want only to refer to his statement of the other night.

I was quite surprised to hear the hon. gentleman stating that the Liberal party had redeemed all their pre-election pledges; and that he, an old Conservative had at last had his eyes opened and that after eighteen long years of darkness the light had dawned upon the Canadian people, and the scales had fallen from their eyes. There are promises which were made by the Liberal party and which may be classed under the appellation of implied pledges, as they were never explicitly given to the electorate. And while referring to those implied promises, I am led to deal with the statements made by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell).

The hon. gentleman not only represents here his own constituency, but as a member of the cabinet, he further represents the Quebec district. Now, if there is one scheme which more than any other deeply concerns the city and the district of Quebec, it is the establishment of a fast line of steamers, to ply between Canada and England. Let me ask the hon. gentleman whether the pledges which he has given in connection with this scheme have been redeemed? Why, the hon. gentleman stated on the floor of this House that we could depend upon it that this scheme would be carried out. Now, how do we stand to-day, as regards that projected scheme? But, first, let me ask what was the implied promise which the Liberal party had made to the Canadian people in this connection? Did not the right hon. Prime Minister protest before this House—if I recollect aright the substance of his statement—against the extravagance of the Conservative government who were then asking the House to vote a subsidy of $750,000 for the undertaking of the fast line.

The right hon. gentleman found nothing better to say in furtherance of the new enterprise than pointing out the dangers which the river St. Lawrence offers to shipping. Did the Conservative party ever dread those dangers? On the contrary, I find that they did not hesitate to ask the House to vote that subsidy of $750,000, to secure the establishment of the fast daily service, and nobody, at the time, ever dreamt of finding fault with the action of the government. That policy was endorsed not only by a majority of the electors who were the most directly concerned in that undertaking, but also by the mass of the Canadian people. At the request of the government this House without a dissentient voice, voted in favour of that subsidy of $750,000, despite the opposition raised by the hon. gentlemen opposite. A Bill was passed, as I said, without a dissentient voice, and the Conservative government entered into negotiations with a company composed of very influential and responsible men, and a contract was signed; and the only thing required was to obtain the approbation of the Governor General in Council. Then it was that the hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, and wishing to redeem the implied promise which they had made, they advised the Governor General not to sanction the contract. They alleged reason of economy; but, in face of their later performances, one is vastly amused to hear them pluming themselves on their savings and their retrenchment of expenditure.

Another reason alleged by the hon. gentlemen was that those steamers did not afford adequate freight accommodation. At all events, whatever may be the reason, the hon. gentlemen refused to carry out the contract which had been prepared. They further pretended that they could secure the establishment of a line of fast Atlantic steamers, by means of a subsidy of $500,000. What happened, Sir? The hon. member for Quebec West entered into negotiations with gentlemen in London, who, from a financial standpoint, were not in a position to carry out that scheme. Every one knew perfectly well that Petersen, Tait & Co. had not the necessary financial backing for the carrying-out of that great undertaking which would be such a boon to Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) in his zeal—and I am willing to admit that he was honest in all his endeavours—made several trips across the Ocean; but what was the result of all those trips? They were a total failure; and now, when asked, as the hon. minister of Trade and Commerce was asked the other day, whether any hope could be entertained as to the establishment of a fast line, they no longer alleged any reason of economy, as they did in 1897, but I was told by the hon. gentleman that the complexion of affairs had changed altogether, and that the troubles caused by the war in South Africa were such that the carrying out of that scheme was altogether out of the question.

As I said, a little while ago, Sir, if there were people in the Dominion who were concerned in the undertaking of that fast Atlantic service it was surely the electors of Quebec West who anticipated the performance of that scheme as a consummation greatly to be desired and as one from which would result the greatest advantages not only to the city of Quebec, but to the whole district of Quebec. What a splendid opportunity the hon. gentlemen have lost? If in 1898, the Conservatives had been in power, the fast line would have been undertaken and it would now be in full operation. They would have seized the opportunity by the forelock, to establish between Canada and the motherland a line of fast steamers which would undoubtedly have carried the bulk of the freight which is shipped between the two countries.

If Quebec has lost all the advantages which would have resulted to her from this scheme, the responsibility for it falls back on the present administration.

This is an implied promise which the hon. gentlemen have carried out, but, I will be able to show, I hope, that they have not fulfilled a single one of their ante-election promises. This is, no doubt, a hackneyed subject; it has so often been threshed out on the floor of the House that it is devoid of all interest, in the eyes of some members; but for us, it is always an inspiring topic. Some of the hon. gentlemen opposite even go to the length of stating that they never gave any pledges; but, at all events, it will be no hard task for me to show that they have not redeemed their pledges.

I hold in my hand a very interesting pamphlet, and every time we read it, we always derive a new pleasure from it. It is the programme framed by the Liberal party, and adopted by the Ottawa Convention of 1893.

Article 4 of that programme bears the following heading :

Strict Economy—Reduction of Expenditure.

Every time I read that article, I can hardly bring myself to believe that the hon. gentlemen who now sit on the other side of the House are the very same gentlemen who met together in convention in 1893, and passed such a resolution. One would rather be led to think that it was passed fifty years or a hundred years ago, by men who have long been slumbering in their graves.

We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt and of the controllable expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand the strictest economy in the administration of the government of the country.

It will be seen by that plank of their platform that the Liberals then pledged themselves to reduce the public debt; they promised, that, when they came into power, they would cut down the controllable expenditure, and, above all, the load of taxation under which, as they said, our people were groaning.

Let us see now how they have redeemed their promises in that respect. I shall pass over in silence the pledges given by the hon. gentlemen to the electorate upon every hustling in the country; I shall not refer to the promises made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who declared that it was a crying shame for the old government to ask the House to vote $36,000,000 for carrying out the government of the country; I shall abstain from recalling the statements made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when, endorsing the platform framed by the hon. Minister of Justice, he said that it would be quite impossible to reduce the controllable expenditure by two, three and even four million dollars a year.

Such were the pledges given to the people by the hon. gentlemen, before their accession to office, and by means of which they climbed into power. Now, how did they fulfil their promises? Supposing that the facts I have just referred to were but newspaper gossip and not founded in fact, there still remains for our guidance the platform of 1893; and although it does not contain any exact figures, it is none the less true that it raises a cry of alarm over the increase of our debt and calls for a halt in the upward movement of our controllable expenditure.

I know that figures, as a rule, are devoid of interest; still they are often eloquent in their own way, especially when they are taken, as I am going to do, from the blue-books under the control of the ministers, and when they supply us with unanswerable arguments. If you refer to page xviii of the public accounts for 1899, you will find that the public debt, in 1896, was $250,497,432; as against $266,273,446, for 1898-9 or an increase of $7,776,014, for the four years during which the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. And this, notwithstanding the fact that, when they were on this side of the House, the hon. gentlemen loudly denounced the Conservative government for increasing the debt, pledging themselves, if they came into office, to cut it down. They have hardly been four years in office and yet they have succeeded in increasing the public debt by $8,000,000 in round numbers.

But let us take a step further. I come now to the controllable expenditure, the ordinary consolidated fund expenditure, and what do we find? I see by the reply given to a question which I had put to the government, and which will be found on page 2828 of Hansard, that on the 30th June, 1896, the expenditure was $36,949,142 and that on the 30th June, 1899, it had piled up to $41,903,500, or an increase of $4,954,358 in the controllable expenditures, incurred and voted at the request of the present government, between the last year for which the Conservative government is responsible, and the last year of the Liberal administration.

Such is the record of the hon. gentlemen who had pledged themselves before the country that if they got into power they would reduce the controllable expenditures by two, three and even four million dollars a year. Instead of fulfilling their promise, they have increased those expenditures by five million dollars in round numbers, or a difference of nine millions between their promises and their performances. But, the hon. gentlemen may perhaps say: 'It is unfair to institute a comparison between the expenditure incurred in 1896, and that incurred by the present government in 1899. In 1896 the Conservatives knew that the general elections were about to take place, and if the then government did not ask the House to vote a larger sum, it was because they were afraid of facing the electorate. I cannot let this plea pass unanswered; and I shall not confine myself to comparing the expenditure of 1896 with that of 1899. I will take the year in which the Conservative government asked the House to vote the largest amount of controllable expenditures, that is to say the fiscal year of 1885-86. As the hon. gentlemen know, in that year, the government had to provide for the expenditure incurred in quelling the North-west rebellion, and that expense, instead of being added to the national debt, was paid out of the buoyant revenue of the country, out of the consolidated revenue fund; and yet, what do we find? If you refer to the public accounts for 1899, page xiii, you will find that for the year 1885-86, during which the North-west rebellion broke out, the ordinary consolidated revenue fund expenditure was $39,011,612. Let us now compare that year—and there is nothing unfair in instituting such comparison—with the year 1899; and we will find that the increased expenditure in 1899 compared to 1886 was $2,891,888. That is a fair comparison, because, as I said, in 1885-86, we had to provide for the expenditure incurred by the quelling of the North-west rebellion, an extraordinary and unforeseen expenditure which had never occurred up to that time. Therefore, you will find that the hon. gentlemen have increased the controllable expenditure of the country by about four million dollars.

Some time ago, my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), whose absence from this House, I regret, said: 'The Conservatives charge us with being extravagant; it is true, but wait till next year, and you will see on what a scale we are going to spend money.' Now, if you refer to the Official Gazette, of the 17th March, 1900, you will find that the public expenditure down to the 1st of March of the current year, was $25,018,290, against an expenditure of $23,597,134, up to the same date, on the 1st March, 1899; or, an increase of $1,421,056. I may add that in this respect the Minister of Public Works has proved true to his word.

Of course, people may, on good ground, feel alarmed at this extraordinary increase in the public expenditure, and are likely to inquire into the cause of the same. We all remember, when the hon. gentlemen were sitting on this side of the House, how loud they were in their denunciations of the extravagance of the Conservative ministers, because they travelled in private cars. But, the day of the private cars is gone by, and private yachts are now the rage. The hon. gentlemen are no longer satisfied with travelling in private cars; they charter private yachts to convey them from one end of the country to the other. Thus, for instance, by referring to page 2145 of the Auditor General's Report, you will find a list of the expenditures made by the hon. Minister of Public Works during his famous trip on board the yacht Eureka, down the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Why, Sir, if you take the trouble to look up those items of expenditure, you will no longer wonder that the minister said: 'Wait till next year, and you will see on what scale we are going to spend money.' I am truly astonished at a gentleman holding the position which the Minister of Public Works occupies in this country, having the brass—that is the only proper word—to put in the public accounts items of expenditure such as those which I find on the Auditor's Report. And, mind you, this is only a sample of the way in which the people's money is being squandered.

For that trip which lasted about four or five weeks, here is what I find in the Auditor's Report:

Provisions.....	$ 543 46
Provisions.....	86 45
Laundry.....	35 80
Eatables..	9 11

$2,236 82

This bill exemplifies the way in which the people's money is being thrown away. If those gentlemen were taking that money out of their own pockets, they would, no doubt, practise greater economy than shown by the Minister of Public Works.

If you take the aggregate expenditure chargeable to the Consolidated Revenue fund as well as that chargeable to Capital Account, you will find by referring to the Public Accounts for the year 1899, page xva, as well as to the answer to a question put by me to the government, and which appears on page 2828 of Hansard, that the following sums have been expended: for the year 1896, the last year under the Conservative rule, the aggregate expenditure was $44,096,383, against $51,542,635, for the year 1899; but if you add to that sum the subventions voted in favour of the railways, you will find that the hon. gentlemen who formerly were so loud in their denunciation of our extravagance, and in their professions of economy, have asked the House to vote a sum that foots up to sixty million dollars.

Let us turn now to the estimated expenditure in the budget which the hon. Finance Minister has brought down. It is likely enough that some hon. gentlemen opposite may have warned their leaders that they were laying themselves open to censure in not practising economy in the expenditure of public moneys; but as the leaders apparently turned a deaf ear to the warnings from the opposition and from their own friends, it is likely enough that some hon. gentlemen told the ministers: 'If you do not fulfil your pledges of economy, and if, in spite of all our warnings, you persevere in the course upon which you have entered, it will be impossible for us to face the electorate.' And yet, in spite of all these warnings, the hon. gentlemen did not hesitate to ask the House to vote an expenditure of $42,872,989 chargeable against revenue, and $9,195,402 chargeable against capital, or an expenditure of $49,068,391 in the aggregate.

There is something more. If you add to that expenditure the supplementary estimates which will be brought down at a later stage, you will find that the total expenditure, chargeable against income and against capital, is more considerable than that of last year. Comparing the total expenditure for the fiscal year of 1896 with the expenditure of 1899, we find that within the short period of four years, the hon. gentlemen have increased the public expenditure by $7,446,252, or, in round numbers, seven million and a half. Such is the record of those men who had promised to cut down the public expenditure, and who were so loud in their denunciations of the Conservatives; freely charging them with being extravagant, corrupt and reckless in their expenditure, and aiming only at purchasing the electorate and the counties by wholesale. They say: 'Yes, it is true, we have increased the expenditure' for, mark, Sir, there are in the Liberal party men who honestly admit the fact, while others deny it. In the latter class is found Le Soleil, the Liberal organ of Quebec, and stump speakers who, in the face of the public accounts and of the statements made by the ministers themselves on the floor of this House, do not hesitate to deny the increased expenditure. But I refer here to fair-minded and honest Liberals who agree that since the advent of the present government to power the public expenditure has increased. What do they say, to palliate those expenditures? 'Why, they exclaim, look at the prosperity of the country. Look at our surpluses which are piling up year after year!' Formerly, under the Conservative rule, they were heard to say that a surplus was an immoral thing, a thing inviting to extravagance, to political corruption, a thing tending to lower the standard of public morality. Let me refer in this connection to a speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson),—and a most interesting speech in the face of what transpires to-day; and a thorough condemnation of the government at the hands of one of their most influential members.

In 1893, the hon. Minister of Customs said:

When the government knows beyond a doubt that there is a surplus, they are bound to reduce the taxation.

A finance minister has no right to take from the pockets of the people more money than is necessary to carry out the government of the country. Just fancy a chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain, who could not provide for the needs of the public service! He would be held up to scorn as a man unable to grasp the financial position of the country.

If the Minister of Finance created a surplus out of his own money or out of the private fortune of his colleagues, then he could be looked upon as a benefactor of his fellow-countrymen.

But when he puts his hand in your pocket or in the pockets of the ratepayers to create surpluses, he can hardly boast of his achievement.

These utterances of the Minister of Customs constitute the most terrible indictment ever preferred against the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches; and it is so much the more crushing as it comes neither from me or from this side of the House, but from their own mouth. From the very mouth of his colleague, the Minister of Finance, stands convicted of having made mis-statements and miscalculations in his financial exposé. If he had addressed the House of Commons of Great Britain, instead of speaking to Canadians, on the floor of the House of Commons of Canada, he would have been held up to ridicule and would have forfeited his reputation.

There is another subject to which I desire to make a brief allusion, and in connection with which we have been most strongly denounced by the Liberals before the electorate. I refer to taxation. Those hon. gentlemen had pledged themselves that if they ever crossed to the Treasury benches, they would reduce taxation. I still remember how eloquent they waxed when they charged the Conservative party with grinding down the poor ratepayers under the load of taxation. I now see before me some of the hon. gentlemen who were so loud, when in opposition, in their denunciations of the policy of the Conservative government, and who never tired bandying across the floor of this House their charges and their criticisms. But, now that the hon. gentlemen are brought face to face with their own performances, let them sincerely ask themselves how their policy compares with ours, in the light of their past utterances. I know that some of them most bitterly resent the conduct of their leaders in that respect; I know that they are in open rebellion against the cabinet, because the ministers have not been true to the pledges given to the electorate. But, after all, the party, as a whole, is responsible for those statements of policy and for the present state of things.

Let us review the situation, prior to 1896. What was the average total of the volume of taxation taken from the country, from 1892 to 1896? It was $27,710,000. Let us compare those figures with those furnished by the public accounts of this year, page xxiv. The revenue collected from the customs is $25,316,841, while the excise revenue collected is $9,641,227, or a total of $34,958,068. Therefore, the difference between the years 1896 and 1899, as to taxation, is $7,248,068, and that is the excess of taxation which the Liberals are wringing from those 'poor ratepayers,' whose burdens they were so anxious to relieve when they sat on this side of the House.

Let us now institute a comparison between the volume of taxation taken from the country under the Conservative rule— if customs and excise duties properly come under the head of taxation—and the volume of taxation taken from the people under the Liberal régime. We will also compare the taxation per head:

1889....	21.65	per 100
1890....	21.21	"
1891....	20.06	"
1892....	17.56	"
1894....	17.13	"
1895....	16.99	"

These figures are compiled from the Trade and Navigation returns. Let me now compare them with the figures I find in La Patrie, in its issue of to-day. From the statement of the most influential organ of the Liberal party, the taxation in 1899 was $16.70 per 100, or an almost imperceptible fraction below that of 1895.

But here is a still more interesting comparison. I now come to the per capita taxation. In 1896, it was $8.14, as against $8.28, in 1897; $8.63 in 1898, and $9.72 in 1899.

It will thus be seen that the per capita taxation was $8.14 in 1896, under the Conservative régime, when the people were groaning under the load of taxation, as the hon. gentlemen were wont to say, whilst in 1899 it went up to $9.72, or an increase of a dollar and a half per head.

When the Conservative party set up their national policy, they were able, through the customs and excise revenue, and by a wise expenditure of money, to dot the country with public works and improvements which have largely contributed towards its development on such a huge scale and towards its present prosperity. Not only were they enabled, through those customs and excise duties, to reduce the taxation and thus lighten the burdens of the people, by remitting the taxation on tea, coffee and sugar, but they succeeded further in effecting what was considered at that time as a considerable improvement, by making free the transmission of newspapers throughout the country. But what did we see, under the Liberal rule? The Postmaster General, while reducing the rate on letters, which is more in favour of the urban population than in favour of the farming community, did not hesitate to re-impose postage on newspapers, and everybody knows how useful those publications are as educators of the people.

Let me now say a word or two concerning another pledge given by the hon. gentlemen opposite, one of their broken promises with regard to the independence of members of parliament. The hon. Postmaster General was so anxious to raise the standard of political morality, when he was in the ranks of the opposition, that he brought down a Bill to prevent members from accepting public offices. Now, from the statement made by the Prime Minister himself, in reply to a question I had put to the government, which will be found on page 2225 of Hansard for this year, I see that, since the present government came into office, they have appointed nine members of parliament to public offices, such as governorships, judgeships, or places of collectors of inland revenue, and other positions of emolument. Three members have been appointed to the Senate. Formerly, the hon. gentlemen were fond of talking of the government cribs, and reference was again made to it, this afternoon, by the hon.

member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). He told us that the Conservative party wanted to get back into power, to enjoy the sweets of office, because we all had some interest in wishing to be returned to power; he said that it was only a question of our pockets, and of being appointed to places of emolument, to judgeships, governorships and the like. Did I wish to retort, I would only have to tell the hon. gentleman that if they made all those promises, and if they took all those pledges before the House and before the country, it was because they were hungry for office and wanted to enjoy the sweets of office. Nothing would be easier for me than to throw back the charge levelled at us, in view of all that has transpired since their advent to power.

These gentlemen had also promised to reduce the number of ministers, and they contended that seven or eight ministers could perfectly well administer the affairs of the country. Now, what do we see? In reply to a question which I put to the government, which will be found on page 2828 of Hansard for 1899, I was informed that in 1896 there were fourteen ministers in the cabinet, with an aggregate salary of $95,000, and that in 1900 the number of ministers was the same, but with this difference, that in 1896 the aggregate salary of the members of the government was $95,000, while in 1900 it is $99,000.

Now I turn, for a moment, from the consideration of broken pledges, and I desire to ask the attention of the House to another portion of my subject. I say that the hon. gentlemen not only did not implement the promises given to the electorate, but, moreover, I contend that, in the administration of public affairs, they have made such egregious mistakes, such unpardonable blunders, that they cannot fail to be called to a strict account by the electorate, at the next elections. I take, as an illustration of misgovernment on the part of the ministers, the Drummond Railway deal. Here is a railway which in 1894 was offered for sale for half a million dollars, and I find that in 1897 the government proposed to Parliament to pay for that very same road $2,094,192, that is to say, a capitalized sum represented by a yearly rental of $64,000, to be paid during 99 years, on the basis of an interest of 2½ per cent.

The Senate, in their wisdom, did not want the country to pay for that road the amount which the government had asked the House to vote. But when later on they came down and proposed to the House to pay $1,600,000 for the same road, they pleaded guilty and confessed that they were wrong. The Senate thus saved the country $600,000. There is another very important question about which the hon. gentlemen are very reticent, and that is the piebiscite. In 1893, the Liberals put a prohibition plank in their platform, promising to submit a plebiscite on prohibition to the Canadian electorate. I cannot bring myself to believe that in the minds of the men who proposed that resolution in 1893 it was but a huge farce, a comedy, an empty promise wantonly given, with a view to deluding and fooling the public; no, I would much sooner think that they were sincere when they held out that promise to the electorate. What happened, Sir? The government introduced in this House a measure for taking the plebiscite. The electorate was called upon to vote on the prohibition question, and then what did we see? Why, Sir, ministers of the Crown, the colleagues of the hon. gentlemen who had brought down that measure, were heard saying: 'Vote against prohibition.' The hon. Minister of the Interior (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière); the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), and my regretted friend, the Hon. Mr. Geof-frion, were seen going from husting to husting, making electioneering speeches, and they were heard to say: 'Mind you do not vote in favour of prohibition, not to embarrass our leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier.'

I say, therefore, that the conduct of those hon. gentlemen, in that respect, was an egregious blunder, an inexcusable political mistake, on the part of men who are supposed to entertain some respect for the electorate. And, mind you, it was a costly comedy. By referring to page 2246 of Hansard, you will find, from the answer given by the Minister of Finance, that for the taking of the plebiscite the government have expended $189,827.72; and a perfectly useless expenditure it was. I hold that it was a useless expenditure, because, as I just have said, the majority of the vote polled was in favour of prohibition, and, in my opinion, the government were in duty bound to follow the views of the majority and to bring down a prohibitory liquor law. If the government were honest when appealing to the people on that important issue they were, as I said, in duty bound to give effect to the voice of the majority as expressed at the polls. If we look at it from the standpoint of the province of Quebec, where there is an organization which efficaciously controls the liquor trade, that measure was a mistake; but, at all events, since the right hon. gentlemen had undertaken to appeal to the electorate, now that the electorate have given an emphatic expression of opinion at the polls, it is altogether unwarrantable on his part not to have given effect to the verdict of the majority. The only advantage resulting from the plebiscite, if it can be called an advantage, is that it has cost the country $190,000.

But, the hon. gentlemen may say: 'We pledged ourselves to bring down a franchise law, and we did implement our pledge.' The hon. gentlemen had promised to give the country a good electoral reform legislation, but what do we find? If you refer to Hansard you will see that, with the law now in force, we no longer know where we stand; one no longer knows whether he has a vote or not. On the 20th March last, I put to the right hon. gentleman the following question, as it appears, page 2828, of Hansard:

Mr. CASGRAIN.

1. Have all the electoral lists for the electoral districts of the province of Quebec been received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in pursuance of the Act 61st Vic., c. 14, sec. 10?
2. If not, what are the lists for such electoral districts which have not been received?
3. In the case of some of the said electoral districts, is it true that the lists for all the municipalities included therein have not been received?
4. If so, which are the municipalities?
5. What are the names of the districts or parts of districts for which the lists have not been printed and distributed?

In answer to that question, the Prime Minister stated that all the voters' lists had been received by the Clerk of the Crown in chancery; but that on the 28th March, there remained twenty-five counties in the province of Quebec, the lists of which had not yet been printed. Now, all those who are conversant with the municipal organization of that province know that the voters' lists are ready for distribution in the month of June of each year. At latest, and in most cases as early as the month of May. But, as I have just shown from the answer of the Prime Minister, on the 28th March last there still remained twenty-five constituencies the lists of which had not yet been printed. That is the reason why I just remarked, on good ground too, that we no longer know where we stand, as regards the franchise law.

Amazed at the answer given by the Prime Minister on the 28th March, I ventured on the 2nd April to ask a further question, and here it is:

1. What is the reason why the electoral lists for the districts mentioned in the answer to question No. 36 on the Order paper No. 38, of March 28th instant, have not yet been printed?
2. If printed, why have they not been distributed?
3. At what date or dates were they received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery under the Franchise Act, 1898, section 10?

The Prime Minister replied that all the lists for the province of Quebec, with the exception of ten, had been printed and distributed. On the 28th March, I was informed by the Prime Minister that there were still twenty-five counties the lists of which had not yet been printed; and three days later, on the 2nd April, I was told that all the lists had been printed, with the exception of ten. How can those different statements be reconciled? The least that can be said is this: That the present law works no better than the old Act did, which had been passed by the Conservative party, and which the hon. gentlemen opposite had so bitterly denounced.

Moreover, it appears that the names of a number of voters have been left off the lists, as was the case in the Sherbrooke election, where the names of prominent voters had been left off; and, under the law as it stands, such errors cannot be rectified. Elections can at any moment, be sprung on us, either in the province of Quebec or in any other part of the Dominion, and as matters stand, we have no legal voter's lists as we ought to, and as, under the Act passed by the hon. gentlemen, we were to have. The lists which we have, should they happen to be incorrect or vicious, cannot be corrected, as the Act in force does not contain any provision to that effect.

I fail to understand why the government, who have so far done nothing, during this session, did not at least introduce and pass into law a Bill to remedy and supplement the defects of the Franchise Act in force. As I just remarked, since the beginning of the session, we have made no progress at all. With the exception of the Redistribution Bill which was carried, what have we done? We have wasted time in discussing academical resolutions.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation.) Hear, Hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) After all, these are idle discussions, which can serve no useful purpose and only tend to delay the progress of our business. Hon. gentlemen on this side are not open to the charge of having taken up too much of the time of the House; because, for every member on this side who took the floor, at least two members on the other side got up to reply.

And yet, when charges of the most serious character, affecting the seats of two hon. gentlemen, were brought before the House; when the opposition was ready to bring most damaging proofs of corruption and bribery against those members, what did the government do? The government, who, last year, had given way to a demand for investigation before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, refused, this year, to allow us to submit the case to the same committee. Last year, the government agreed that these cases should be sent at once to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where it properly belonged; but, I ask, why is it, this year, that they refuse to send them to the same committee? Is it that the complexion of those cases is altered and that they no longer come under the jurisdiction of the committee? No, Sir; if the treatment of these cases is so different this year, the reason is that the hon. gentlemen know that, since last session, evidence, fresh and new, in addition to what was before the committee last year, was brought out, and that the information is of such a character as to jeopardize the seats of those two gentlemen and force them to resign. I wonder they have not yet resigned, the more so as they have been given the hint by one of the chief organs of the Liberal party, the Toronto Globe.

But there is something more. Last year, the government refused to allow an investigation to be made into the administration of the Yukon. An hon. member on this side of the House had brought down charges of maladministration in the affairs of the Yukon, and he had brought them in such a way as to stake his seat. The government refused that investigation, or rather, they appointed as investigator a man over whom they had full control; a man who, had he presumed to make a report somewhat unfavourable to the ministry, would soon have been dismissed.

To come back to the resolutions passed by the convention of 1893, let me read to the House a very interesting paragraph, which runs as follows:

That it is the ancient and undoubted right of the House of Commons to inquire into all matters of public expenditure and into all charges of misconduct in office against ministers of the Crown, and the reference of such matters to Royal Commissions created upon the advice of the accused is at variance with the responsibility of ministers to the House of Commons, and tends to weaken the authority of the House over the executive government, and this convention affirms that the powers of the people's representatives in this regard should on all fitting occasions be upheld.

Here we have a solemn profession of faith, made at the convention of 1893, a profession which has been violated upon two different occasions: first, during last session, in the case of the public administration in the Yukon, and once more, this year, in the case of the investigation into the electoral frauds perpetrated at the elections in Brockville and West Huron. In the case of these two elections, the investigation demanded by the opposition was in reference to the most serious charges that can be brought against hon. gentlemen occupying seats in this House; but the government threw their whole weight to prevent that investigation being reopened this session.

Let us turn now to a subject which will, no doubt, prove more interesting to the House, as it is the event of the day, and as such, is engrossing public attention. I refer to the fiscal policy of the government. The matter which I am going to deal with concerns more particularly the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition.

The hon. gentleman who spoke this afternoon (Mr. Davis) told us that the Conservative party had no policy. The hon. gentleman is merely revamping an old charge which we had, in former years, good reason to cast in the teeth of the Liberal party, because the fact was that they had no policy of their own. They went repeating from husting to husting throughout the country that the Conservative party have no settled policy, no fixed principles, no absolutely definite platform, and that they dared not nail their colours to the mast.

Our political platform, so far as the tariff is concerned, is embodied in the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition.

What is the line of demarcation that divides the two political parties in this country? In 1878, the Conservative party made certain promises to the country; they told the electorate that, should they come into power, they would provide for such protection as was required for the development of the industrial life of the country, and that they would inaugurate a truly national policy. Now, no sooner had they come into office in 1878, than they redeemed the pledge given to the electorate, by enforcing and carrying into effect the national policy. But, as regards the hon. gentlemen opposite, I may say that they have ever been looking around after a policy. But, unfortunately for them, in their vain endeavours to find and formulate a platform, they have jumped out of the frying-pan into the fire. Now they would be heard to say, should they succeed in climbing into powers, they would destroy every vestige of protection; now they would preach commercial union with the United States and free trade as it is in England. And if they are now following the policy laid down by the Conservative party, it is because they have come to the conclusion that there was no better way of building up this great nation and promoting the prosperity and development which the country has ever enjoyed since 1878. The Conservative party had built up on sound and broad lines of policy; and the adoption of that policy by the Liberals was tantamount to an admission of the soundness of that policy.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) told us that the Liberal party had never pledged themselves to free trade. When I heard him making that statement, it struck me that perhaps he was in a blissful ignorance of the position taken by the Liberal party previous to their advent to power. Quite possibly it was not positively stated in so many words in the platform adopted by the Liberal convention of 1893, that the party pledged itself to free trade; but it is a well-known fact that the Prime Minister and his followers went repeating everywhere that, upon their coming into power, they would emancipate the country from the thralldom of protection. The national policy, they said, would be torn up root and branch. Death to protection and war to the knife to the national policy was their motto; and as their favourite phrase goes, the country would no longer be bled white. They were going to deal the death-blow to that system, the bane and curse of the country, to use one of their own expressions. The true national policy for Canada, they said, was free trade, and not protection. They went repeating everywhere that they would throw down the fiscal barriers between Canada and the United States; that the United States was our great home market, and they did not hesitate to say that they preferred the American dollar to the English shilling. In the opinion of the hon. gentlemen, the American market was worth more than twice over to Canada than that of all the rest of the world put together; and when we told them that we could ship our goods with profit to Great Britain, they would laugh us to scorn and cry out: Wherefore should we look for a market beyond the seas, when, right at our very door, we have our best home market? The Liberal leaders, to-day, deny that they ever pledged themselves or their party to free trade. But what did they do, when they came in? They maintained in its entirety the protective tariff; they did not dare to interfere with the trade principle upon which that tariff is based; so that the national policy, as inaugurated by the Conservative party, is still in full force. It is the same old national policy, so often denounced by them, which obtains under the present régime, and the hon. gentlemen know very well that if they had carried out their promises and threats of destroying every vestige of protection, their pathway would have been strewn with the wrecks of our industries.

The only change worth mentioning here, when they brought down their fiscal policy in 1897, was to give a preference in our markets, not to Great Britain alone, as they said, but to all the countries which would be willing to give a similar preference in their own markets. That offer did not prove acceptable to the English statesmen, who told our ministers that if they gave that preference, they would have to extend the same favour, under the treaties as they stood, to twenty-five different nations. Then what did the government do, under the circumstances? They had to amend the statute and to reduce the duties by 25 per cent in favour of Great Britain. In other words, it amounts to this, that the goods coming into the country from foreign countries pay, let us say, $1 duty, as against 75 cents, which similar goods from Great Britain have to pay. Now, the question is: What good has resulted to Canada from such a policy? But, prior to dealing with this question, let me say here that the decrease resulting from the tariff brought down in 1897 is less than 1 per cent over the old tariff. Therefore, the protective principle, far from being wiped out, is merely being continued under a modified form. Has that policy resulted favourably to the interests of the Canadian people? Is it not a fact that the prices of articles commonly used by the people have been much enhanced since 1896? Everything under the shape of cotton, nails, binder twine, coal oil, &c., has gone up. There is an emphasized increase in coal oil, an article in great use among the poorer classes, and about which the Liberals, prior to 1896, used to raise such a cry, claiming that the enhanced price of that commodity was due to the fact that the Conservative government had given the control of the business to a combine. Now, these gentlemen have probably created the most gigantic monopoly that has ever sprung up in this country; and when, by the light of their lamp, they now glance over the Liberal programme, their followers must no doubt realize how sadly they have been gulled and befooled, seeing that they have now to pay 24 cents a gallon for their coal oil, while in 1896 they had to pay but 16 cents.

The hon. gentlemen opposite have made another promise to the country. They said: 'If we come into power, we will send a commission to Washington, and it would not be a rash prediction to say that within six months of that day, by a scratch of the pen, a treaty of reciprocity would be put in force between the United States and Canada.'

What happened? The hon. gentlemen, went to Washington, and after spending six months in idle talk and quibbling, notwithstanding the fact that they had at their command all the knowledge of that legal luminary, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) after spending $34,000 of public funds in visits to Quebec and Washington, the commission proved abortive, because the right hon. gentleman had given away before hand everything to the United States. Why, Sir, is it not a fact that he had taken the duty off many articles which we import from the United States, and which might have been used as a set-off, to obtain concessions from that country? Among other articles, the government have placed corn on the free-list. To certain portions of the country, the removal of the duty from that article does not matter much, but it is quite different with other sections of Canada. I was talking, the other day, in the county of Essex, with a well-to-do-farmer who told me: I voted for the Liberal party in 1896: but now, I have made up my mind never to vote in their favour? The removal of the duty from corn, he said, meant to him a loss of $300 a year. And I may say that this gentleman farmer, in so speaking, was but the echo of many other farmers.

I said, a little while ago, that the preferential tariff was a one-sided, a jug-handled preference giving everything to Great Britain, and that it was in no way beneficial to Canadian manufacturers and labour. This year, the government have gone to the extent of adding a further preference and have made it 33½ per cent. Let us see what we could export from this country to Great Britain, if we were given in England a preference for our goods over the products of other nations. Of flour, in 1896, England imported to the extent of 12,000,000 barrels of which 90,000 only came from Canada. Of pease she imported 5,500,000 bushels, of which 1,400,000 only were imported from Canada. Of oats, she imported 58,000,000 bushels, 500,000 only having been bought from the Dominion. Her importations of barley were 52,000,000 bushels; 47,000 bushels only having been imported from Canada. Of bacon, 510,000,000 pounds were imported into England, of which 47,000,000 pounds came from Canada. Of ham, she imported 163,500,000 pounds, 6,500,000 pounds having been imported from Canada. She imported 324,000,000 pounds of mutton, of which 4,000 pounds came from Canada; 6,600,000 bushels of apples, of which 1,500,000 were imported from Canada; 251,000,000 pounds of cheese, 164,000,000 only having been bought from Canada; 340,000,000 pounds of butter, 5,000,000 pounds only having been imported from Canada.

It will readily be seen from these figures what a great boon it would be for Canada, if our products were given a preference in the English markets over foreign products, no matter how small that preference was. One can see at a glance that such a policy would be fraught with enormous results to the people of Canada. The right hon. gentleman himself was so well aware of it that, in a speech delivered at London, Ontario, in 1896, he declared that we ought to spare no efforts to obtain such a preference. Referring to that policy of reciprocal trade preference between Canada and the motherland, he said:

That practical statesman, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, has come to the conclusion that the time has come when it is possible to have within the bounds of the empire a new step taken, which will give to the colonies in England a preference for their products over the products of other nations. What would be the possibilities of such step if it was taken? We sell our goods in England. We send our wheat, our butter, our cheese, all our natural products, but there we have to compete with similar products from the United States, from Russia, and from other nations. Just see what a great advantage it would be to Canada, if the wheat, cheese and butter, which we would send to England, should be met in England with a preference over similar products of other nations. The possibilities are immense.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the new and progressive Secretary of the Colonies, has declared that the time has come when it is possible to discuss that question. But, Sir, if England is going to give us that preference, England would expect something from us in return. What is it she would expect? England would expect that we would come as closely to her own system of free trade as it is possible for us to come. England does not expect that we should take her own system of free trade, such as she has it; but I lay it before you, that the thing the English people would expect in return is that, in stead of a principle of protection, we should adopt the revenue form of tariff, pure and simple. These are the conditions on which we can have that boon.

It is easy to understand what an impetus would be given our trade, if our products were accorded the advantage of a preference in the English markets, over similar products of other nations. Such a policy, is fraught with enormous results; and in the words of the Prime Minister, the possibilities are immense. But here again, as in the case of the United States, the right hon. gentleman has thrown away the greatest incentive and the most effective means by which better terms could be secured for our products in the English markets, in return for the preference given to English goods. That is exactly what he did, before going to Washington, to negotiate a reciprocity treaty. As he had begun by giving away everything, no wonder that he could obtain nothing from the Americans.

In 1897, the government gave a preference of 25 per cent to Great Britain and this year they are going to raise it to 33½.

Now, Sir, here is a consideration to which I want to direct the attention of the House. Let us take those goods which are brought into the country from Europe or from the United States, or from countries where labour is very cheap, as China or Japan. Those goods are sent to England where they get an increased value of 25 per cent through the skilled labour of British workmen and then those goods are brought into the country as British made goods, and owing to the fact that they have an increased value of 25 per cent, they enter the country as British manufactures, under cover of the preferential tariff, thus competing with our Canadian manufacturers and labour.

What is the position taken by the hon. leader of the opposition on this question? What does he ask from England? He advocates a system of mutual trade preference between Great Britain and Canada, under which we receive something in return for what we give. In other words, it is the contract of the 'Dout des' giving and taking; it is on the basis of a favour for a favour. He says to our English kinsmen: 'If you want for your products a preference in our markets over foreign products, give us a similar preference in your own markets. Hon. gentlemen have read here statements from the Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, Lord Roseberry and several other English statesmen to show that Great Britain will never consent to accord us a preference in her markets, because she sticks to free trade. But if they took such a position, it is due to the fact that the hon. Prime Minister, in 1897, told them that he did not wish to disturb the system of free trade in vogue in Great Britain, and those statesmen followed the course mapped up for them by our Premier. And when they heard that Canada had already given a preference of 25 per cent to British made goods over the products of foreign nations, it would have been the height of folly on their part to tax the bread of the British labourer, by imposing a duty upon foreign imports. Why should they have done so? Had not the hon. Prime Minister given away everything beforehand to Great Britain? British statesmen are shrewd business men, and when they are offered anything as a free gift, it would be the height of folly on their part not to accept such an offer.

Upon two memorable circumstances, the Prime Minister, and I say so without any hesitation, could have obtained something from Great Britain in return for what we gave her. In 1897, at the time of the Jubilee celebration, in which the premier played an important part, he could have availed himself of the opportunity for securing some real, substantial favour for Canada, besides decorations used merely to adorn the breast of patriots. In 1897, Great Britain felt the want of a demonstration of sympathy from all her colonies and dependencies, to display before the whole world the power and the unity of the empire. If the Prime Minister, upon that occasion, instead of saying to Great Britain: 'We give you, out of gratitude, and as a free gift, a preference of 25 per cent in our markets,' had heeded the invitation of the British statesmen, I doubt not—and my opinion is borne out by the facts—that, in accord with the Prime Ministers of the other colonies, he could have secured for us a quid pro quo in return for the preference given to England. But, a still greater opportunity offered this year, at a time when Great Britain felt again the want of a grand demonstration of sympathy on the part of her colonies in order to display before the whole world, in a still more striking way than on the occasion of the Jubilee celebration, the cohesion and the power of the British Empire. It may be many years before such a favourable opportunity occurs again; but the hon. Prime Minister failed to avail himself of his chance, and instead of asking the motherland to give us a preference for our products in her markets, he gave her a preference of 33½ per cent without trying to secure what he said would prove so beneficial to Canada. He wants to stick to free trade; and he seems to be afraid of proving unworthy of the Cobden medal which he wears on his breast. That is the reason why he turns round and tells the British manufacturers: 'We are going to give you, to the detriment of our own manufacturers, a preference in the markets of Canada.'

Quite possibly, our manufacturers may not feel for several years to come the damaging results of the preferential tariff on some of our industries; but when the time comes when the British manufacturers will no longer be busy, as they are to-day, filling the enormous orders which keep their manufactures running now, under the peculiar circumstances which everybody knows, they will flood our home market with the overplus of their output and then will our manufactures be injuriously affected by the policy inaugurated by the Prime Minister and his party. The preferential tariff gives everything to Great Britain without any compensation whatsoever. Such a fallacious policy is bound to prove most injurious to Canadian manufacturers and labour.

I fail to understand the reason why the hon. Prime Minister has raised, this year, to 33½ per cent the preference given to Great Britain. Whether he wished to show the intensity of his patriotism, or whether he tried to atone for his vacillating policy, for his delay in sending a military contingent to South Africa, I am not prepared to say. I need not refer to the interview published in the Globe newspaper, in which the right hon. gentleman stated that he could not send a contingent to South Africa. In that communication, in which he made known the policy of his government, he stated that he had carefully examined the Militia Act and that under the law and the constitution of the country he was actually precluded without the direct authority of parliament from sending a contingent to South Africa.

A few days later, however, he did send a contingent, and now, by way of atoning for his vacillating policy, he grants a further preference to Great Britain, in order to show the intensity of his love and loyalty to the motherland.

Perhaps also there is another explanation of his action. In 1897, when the preferential tariff was brought down, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) after having heard the speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was seen leaving the House with a beaming countenance and having met a friend in the lobby of the House, told him: 'We have just driven the thin end of the wedge of free trade into the fiscal policy of Canada.' He said so himself, and he gave it to understand to his friends, that he had at last gained his point and had succeeded in imposing the free trade system upon the country. Beyond the shadow of a doubt, this preferential policy is inimical to the best interests of Canadian manufacturers and labour. It is upon that issue that the next electoral campaign will turn. The people will have to choose between the Conservative policy, as propounded before the House by the hon. leader of the opposition and the policy of the Prime Minister as embodied in the tariff which is now before us.

It is that policy of the Prime Minister which constitutes true imperialism. We often hear of imperialism and Imperial federation and it is a subject which is engrossing at the present time the attention of the public. As to us, Conservatives, the only kind of imperialism we want, the only scheme of Imperial federation we advocate—if it may be so-called—is a reciprocal preferential tariff between Canada and England. We take no stock in that scheme of Imperial federation which has been advocated by the Prime Minister, not only in England but in this House.

The policy of the Liberal party is Imperial federation, and by federation I understand an agglomeration of states which are represented in the same parliament. Under that definition comes the scheme of Imperial federation. It is that scheme which is being now advocated by the Liberal party. In 1897, at the time of the Jubilee celebration, the right hon. Prime Minister, according to despatches which have never been contradicted, spoke as follows:

London, July 6, 1897.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Dominion Premier, yesterday addressed a meeting of members of the House of Commons, known as the Colonial party. Mr. W. Laurier, who was most cordially received, urged the direct representation of the colonies in the Imperial parliament, which ought to be, he contended, a grand national council of Imperial Federal parliament. In the course of his address he said that if Australia and South Africa were confederated like Canada, it would greatly simplify the question.

A few days later, at a banquet given by the cordwainers, he spoke as follows:

In Canada, we have an unlimited confidence in our country, and when we have reached the full development of manhood, nothing will satisfy us short of representation in the Imperial parliament. I know that the matter is beset with difficulties, but it behooves strong men to overcome difficulties. The record of the British parliament is an illustrious one, but the record of Greater Britain will not be less illustrious.

Upon another occasion, he said:

I believe the parliament of 'Greater Britain' and it will be the proudest day of my life—and if I do not live long enough to see that day many other French Canadians will live to see it—when a French Canadian will stand up and uphold the principles of freedom in the parliament of 'Greater Britain.'

At a banquet given at the Hotel Cecil, Mr. Chamberlain, proposing a toast to the British Empire, said:

Everything tends to draw closer the ties that bind the colonies to Great Britain, to which they belong, and before long, we hope to be able to hail an Australian federation, which will, necessarily be followed by a federation of the South African colonies, both as a prelude to Imperial federation.

The hon. Prime Minister replied as follows:

Mr. Chamberlain has opened up a subject which, more than any other, is engaging the attention of the empire. It is of a character that must demand the attention of the thinking man. One thing is certain, the colonies, should either draw more closely together in the empire or should separate. The decision, the choice, does not altogether lie in the mouths of the colonies, but rather in the mouths of the people of the motherland.

When Canada has increased her strength, nothing else will satisfy her but imperial representation. If this is thought to be a dream, then it is a dream that should appeal to all men, and especially to all women.

Such is the imperialism, such is the scheme of Imperial federation which has won the approval of the right hon. gentleman and his party and to which they have committed themselves. We have a solemn profession from the lips of the right hon. gentleman himself, made on the floor of this House, and the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), during the same session, advocated the same policy. That such an impression got abroad is shown from the fact that the commentaries in the newspapers tallied with that opinion.

A few days ago, I saw in The Sketch, a London illustrated paper, a very good vignette of the Prime Minister. The heading of the editorial which was taken from a speech delivered, a few days ago, by the Prime Minister, was as follows: 'Call us to your councils.' 'Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Canadian and Imperialist.'

But, I may be told: You did not object to the sending of the contingents to South Africa! I have already defined my attitude on this question. I was then of the opinion—and it may be a debatable opinion—that Canada should take part in that movement. It has been stated that it was at Mr. Chamberlain's demand that troops were sent and that we were being dictated to and coerced by Downing Street. No, Sir, the sending of the military contingents was the result of a spontaneous expression of public opinion. There was such an outburst of enthusiasm throughout the country that no sooner had the ship transporting the first contingent sailed away, than a second contingent was organized and sent out to South Africa. And even to-day, should it be deemed advisable to despatch a third and a fourth regiment, I dare say that the same display of enthusiasm would take place.

No, Sir, it was not Downing Street, but it was the voice of the people, that spoke in unmistakable terms. What happened in this House? Out of 213 members, only 10 did vote against the sending of the contingents and against the policy of the government in that respect. Is not that the best proof that we have not been dictated to by Downing Street nor coerced by the strong hand of the men sitting at Westminster? What took place was done in response to the emphatic expression of public opinion, which demanded this action. But from the fact that those contingents were sent out to South Africa, and from the fact that this House endorsed the action taken by the government, in response to that hearty and spontaneous expression of public opinion, it does not follow that we advocate and approve of the scheme of Imperial federation. As to the province of Quebec, I do not think it would have been advisable for her to decline co-operating with the other provinces; and as to the other provinces, I believe that there was an almost unanimous consensus of opinion and sentiment in favour of Canada coming forward and taking an active part in the battles of England.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

As a matter of fact, it is true that the hon. gentlemen voted against the sending of the contingents, but I can hardly believe that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was justified in using such language as he is credited with, when addressing a public meeting at Saint-Rémi, on March 20 last. Referring to the small number of members of this House who voted with him, he clearly intimated that if every member had voted according to the dictates of his conscience, a much larger number of members would have supported him. He said:

There are many other members of the House who endorsed our position and who said so aloud, but they were afraid to vote according to the dictates of their conscience, as they must be upon good terms with the executive of the day. They need patronage, not only for their constituents, but for themselves as well; for some of them aspire after senatorships, others are after judgeships, and they must behave, if they wish to compass their desires.

I can scarcely believe that the hon. gentleman has given utterance to those feelings; I cannot persuade myself that he has presumed to impute such motives to the hon. gentlemen who voted down his motion, so much the more so as among those who opposed his proposition are to be found friends of his with whom he comes into daily contact.

Just one word and I am done, for I am afraid less I have trespassed upon the forbearance of the House.

There is another important matter to which I shall ask the attention of the House. A few days ago, a very interesting question was put by my hon. friend from Montcalm to the Prime Minister. Let me, in bringing my remarks to a conclusion, deal with that matter and show to the House how the government have gone back on another of their ante-election pledges.

On March 28 last, my hon. friend (Mr. Dugas) put to the Prime Minister the following question:

Do the following words, taken from the issue of the newspaper 'La Patrie' of the 28th September, 1899, report in a sufficiently exact manner a portion of the speech delivered by the hon. the First Minister at Drummondville on the 26th September last:—

Here is the portion of the speech such as reported:

As you are aware, in 1896, a vexed question was creating trouble throughout the Dominion. It was an issue in which religion and politics were involved. The solution of such a problem called for the exercise of that statesmanship of the highest order. The old government pretended that they had settled the question by introducing the so-called Remedial Bill, which, in fact, remedied nothing at all. On the other hand, such a Bill was apt to create bad blood among the people of a sister province. The government failed to carry their measure and we came into office. We had pledged our word to the electorate that within six months after our advent to power the question would have been settled. I am sure you will bear me out when I say that we have implemented our pledge, and settled the question. The school question is dead, although our good friends, the Bleus are doing their best to resuscitate it.

Now, let me give the reply of the right hon. Prime Minister, such as reported in Hansard :

I am sorry to say, although I always thought I had a good memory, that it is not good enough to remember a speech six months and two days afterwards, when the question is put.

It is a most extraordinary thing that on a question of such vital importance, and perhaps the most momentous issue from the standpoint of his own personal interest which my right hon. friend has ever had to grapple with, a question involving his political future and the place which he will occupy in our historical records, it is assuredly, a most extraordinary thing that the Prime Minister had such a short memory that he could not remember, I do not say the exact words but the purport of his statement. The right hon. gentleman, I presume, did not speak on that occasion, without weighing his words; and I do not suppose he wished to impose upon the electors; I presume that he spoke his honest mind when he stated that the question was settled, as he had promised to settle it.

But, as my hon. friend from Montcalm (Mr. Dugas) was not satisfied with the reply made by the right hon. gentleman, he returned to the charge and put to the Prime Minister the following question :

Whether the Prime Minister declared at Drummondville, or elsewhere, in the course of last year, or at any other time since he became Prime Minister, that he or his administration had finally settled the Manitoba school question?

The Prime Minister replied as follows :—

The Prime Minister has declared on the floor of this House and elsewhere that the school question had been settled in the only efficient way it could be settled, by removing it from the arena of federal politics and referring it to the legislature of Manitoba, which, in a spirit of conciliation and good-will to the minority, passed important legislation in amendment to the School Act of 1890; and such legislation, like all other legislation, is always subject to amendment and improvement.

I have translated off hand from the English edition, as the official translation is not yet at hand.

Now, from the position which he is actually obliged to take, the right hon. gentlemen may see how different from the actual performance were his ante-election statements and the pledges he gave to the province of Quebec in 1896. In 1893, when addressing his constituents at Saint-Roch—and I think it right to repeat once more that statement, as it cannot too often be brought back to the attention of this House—he said : 'Should I come into power, I shall appoint a commission, at the head of which Sir Oliver Mowat and Sir Henri Joly de Lotbi-nière, and if, within six months, the question is not settled by conciliatory means, I shall resort to the means provided by the constitution to settle it.

So, my right hon. friend pledged his word that, should conciliation fail, he would resort to the means provided by the constitution, as pointed out by the judgment of the Privy Council, which I believe was the only way of adjusting the matter.

My right hon. friend said that he had settled the question by again referring it to the Manitoba legislature. But it was in that very legislature that the Manitoba minority were deprived of their rights. To leave the question to be dealt with by the Manitoba legislature was by no means the way of solving the same.

I say, therefore, that from the statements made and the pledges given to the electorate, we may safely reach the conclusion that the question is not settled at all. The right hon. gentleman has gone back on the most solemn pledges given to the electorate of the province of Quebec, and he will be called to a very severe account at their hands. The question is not settled; it was only compromised.

Merely from the standpoint of the solemn promises which he had made to the electorate of the province of Quebec, the hon. Prime Minister should have redeemed the pledge given to that province; and I have no doubt that on that point as on all the rest, he will be called to a severe account by the electorate. No, Sir, the hon. gentleman did not settle the school question; and he has perhaps irretrievably compromised the settlement of it. From the point of view of the minority who have been despoiled of their most sacred rights, guaranteed by the constitution of this country, can it be said that the question is settled? No, it is not settled and if to-day there is no longer any means of bringing out a satisfactory settlement of that crucial question, the whole responsibility will fall on the shoulders of the Prime Minister.

I must crave the indulgence of the House for keeping it so long. One word more and I am done. The eyes of the people are now open, and the electorate are ready to call to a strict account the government for the violation of their pledges. Every day we have fresh evidence of the fact. During the electoral contest in Sherbrooke, the Liberal party left no stone unturned to carry the country. We were treated to the extraordinary spectacle of five ministers of the Crown—and at their head was my right hon. friend the leader of the House—canvassing in favour of the Liberal candidate. As I said, they spared no efforts to secure the return of their candidate, who was a very strong man. Money flowed freely all through the contest. We speak of it knowingly, having watched pretty closely those gentlemen in their committees and while they were canvassing throughout the constituency; and we know that they spent an enormous sum of money, and, in spite of that, their candidate was defeated. The county in which the electoral contest took place is a circonscription composed of French Canadians and of English-speaking voters, and that is the reason why the defeat of the government, under the circumstances, is so pregnant with meaning. Public opinion, in the province of Quebec, as elsewhere, is ready and, should the general elections come off to-morrow, the great majority of the constituencies throughout the country would undoubtedly take the example from Sherbrooke.

I happened to meet, the other day, a gentleman who is at the head of an important newspaper—and I abstain from mentioning the name of the town in which that paper is published, lest its identity should be revealed—and this gentleman, in the course of our conversation, propounded to me the following parable: One day, a merchant, who wanted to secure the services of a clerk, having advertised in the usual way, a young man, full of fine promises tendered his services. 'I can do this, I can do that,' says he. 'I am good in such a line,' &c. The merchant, trusting to his promises, took him into his employ. 'But,' said my interlocutor, at the end of four or five months, the clerk had not fulfilled all his fine promises, and the merchant is only waiting till his contract has expired, to dismiss him.' 'But,' said I, 'I do not know the drift of your speech.' 'It is simply this,' said he, 'I have made up my mind to take example from that merchant. I am a Liberal, but I have made up my mind to vote against that party, and to turn them out of power at the next elections.' Now, Sir, this is not by any means a solitary case among the Liberals, and I should not wonder if a large number of them were to take example from him. The electorate are only waiting till the present parliament has expired to turn out of power the men whom they hired in 1896, and then they will tell the right hon. Prime Minister: You no longer deserve to be our leader.

Mr. GEORGES TURCOT (Megantic). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I must first congratulate the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat upon the eloquent speech he has just delivered, although, to tell the plain truth, I cannot endorse what he has said on the general policy of the government. I must also congratulate him for having spoken in French, the more so as hon. gentlemen who speak both languages as fluently as the hon. gentleman does, are but seldom heard addressing the House in French.

I quite realize, Sir, how difficult is the task that devolves upon me, called upon, as I am, to reply to one of the distinguished Conservative leaders of the district of Quebec. Still, if you consider how small is the number of French-speaking members from the province of Quebec belonging to the Conservative party, you will agree with me that it would not be fair to let pass unchallenged the statements of a leader, the more so as, once they have selected a leader for each electoral division, there are no soldiers left.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) Hear, hear.

Mr. TURCOT. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, has but one single soldier behind him, the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin).

The first question which the hon. gentleman has dealt with, and upon which he spoke at greatest length, is the violation of the government pledges. He first told us that the government had pledged themselves to practice economy in the administration of public affairs. Well, Sir, allow me to say that in 1896 I took part with other friends of mine in the electoral campaign, and, having had the opportunity of attending several important public meetings, I recollect perfectly well the statements made by the leaders of the Liberal party, and their pledges as well. We did commit ourselves to a policy of retrenchment and economy; we promised that we would restore the equilibrium between the revenue and the expenditure; and we have redeemed our pledge in that respect, as I am going to show. Let me refer here to the figures given by the hon. gentleman himself (Mr. Casgrain). He told us that in 1895, under the Conservative régime, the expenditure was $38,132,005.05, as against an expenditure of $41,903,500.57 in 1899, under the Liberal rule. But, Sir, he forgot to mention—and perhaps he did it purposely—that in 1895 the revenue was but $33,978,129.47, thus leaving a deficit of $4,153,875.58.

The government business is now pretty much on the lines of a private concern; now, when a government makes an outlay of $41,903,500.54, as we did in 1899, and at the same time has a revenue of $46,741,249.54. It has to its credit a surplus of $4,837,749. In my opinion, it is more warrantable on the part of a government to make such an expenditure than it was on the part of the Conservative government, in 1895, to make an outlay of $38,132,105, when they had a revenue of $33,978,129.47.

The government had to meet uncontrollable expenditures, and if we are to believe the hon. gentleman, the government should have reduced the public expenditure to the vanishing point, and this in the face of the extraordinary expansion of the country, and notwithstanding the additional charges incurred for the Yukon administration and the building of the railways. Realizing that owing to the great development of the country, they were precluded from cutting down the public expenditure, the government took the only reasonable course opened to them, that of increasing the revenue in order to meet the necessary expenditure for the carrying out of the government of the country.

At the time when we sat on the other side of the House, we always did advocate a strict economy in the public expenditure; and we are still of the opinion that in the expenditure of the public money the guiding star of governments should be a strict adherence to the provisions of the law.

It is no doubt within the recollection of many hon. gentlemen that when we sat on the other side of the House, we denounced the Conservative government for their extravagance in nearly all the public works which they carried out. We pledged ourselves to a policy of economy. We promised that, upon our coming into power, we would put a brake upon the reckless manner in which the Conservative party were running up the public expenditure, and we did call a halt, when we came into power. The hon. gentleman cannot deny the charge of extravagance brought against his friends since it is borne out by the facts.

The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), against whom hon. gentlemen opposite are relentless in their attacks and slanders, because no doubt he was instrumental in bringing to book their leaders, succeeded in having an investigation made and causing one of the ministers and a member of this House to be expelled from parliament.

The government have undoubtedly redeemed the pledges given to the electorate, and the best proof of it is that, in spite of all the charges made by hon. gentlemen opposite and by their salaried press, they have not yet been able to substantiate their charges and to show that the government had made any unwarrantable expenditure.

The hon. gentleman dwelt at great length upon the increase in the public debt. He told us how the debt had been allowed to go on piling up under the present regime, and how it had been allowed to swell up by seven or eight million dollars. When the Conservatives came into office in 1878, our national debt was $140,000,000 in round numbers. In 1896, it was $258,000,000, an increase of $118,000,000 in eighteen years, showing that it had piled up at the rate of $6,000,000 a year. Now, if it can be imputed as a crime to the Liberal administration to have increased the public debt by two millions a year, the Conservatives are much more open to the charge of extravagance for having increased the same by six millions a year, during the eighteen years they have been in power.

I said, a little while ago, that when the hon. gentlemen opposite were turned out of power, they were squandering money on a large scale, notwithstanding the fact that they had a deficit. For instance, in 1894-95, the deficit was $4,153,875.58; whilst according to the public accounts for 1898-99, the surplus, under the Liberal government was $4,837,749. As to the surplus anticipated for 1900, according to the estimation of the Finance Minister, it will be about seven million dollars. Therefore to sum up the financial situation: on the one hand, under the Liberal regime, there is a surplus of five millions, and on the other hand, under Conservative rule, there was a deficit of four million dollars.

As I stated at the outset, the public business of the country should be managed on the same principle as a private concern is run: when a government has a larger revenue, they may spend more liberally. Now, as the public revenue is more buoyant now than it was under the old government, the present government are justifiable in spending a few millions over what was expended in former years, for the carrying out of the government of the country. Apart from that consideration, as the House knows, the government have other duties to perform besides practising economy. A government should also look after the development of the industrial life and activity of the country; they ought to make the public improvements necessary to the development and building up of the country.

The hon. gentleman also came to the conclusion that, instead of lightening the burden of taxation, we have only added to the same. Let us see how matters stand in this respect. I have before me the trade and navigation reports, which show that in 1896, with $121,013,852 worth of imports, the people had to pay customs duties to the extent of $24,000,000. Now, in 1899, when the imports amounted to $162,764,308, the rate-payers had to pay about twenty-five millions and three-fourths in customs duties, that is to say, that with a difference of about forty-two millions worth of imports, we have paid scarcely one million dollars more in customs duties. As remarked by the hon. gentleman, figures can be made to serve any purpose.

Let us now come to the per capita taxation, which the hon. gentleman also dwelt upon extensively. He says that the taxation per head has gone up. I presume that he is under the impression that the population of the country is stationary, and even that it goes on decreasing as it did when the Conservatives were ruling the country. As every hon. gentleman knows, the number of representatives of the people in this House is based upon the increased or decreased population of the province of Quebec, compared to the population of the other provinces. I hope that the census of 1901 will prove more satisfactory than the census of 1891 did, and that it will be easier then for us to make a fair estimation of the rate of the per head taxation. For the reasons already stated here, the government have increased the expenditure of the country, and had not the population increased in proportion, it might be said that the taxation per head had been increased. But, as I firmly believe that our population has increased, I also think that the per capita taxation has gone down.

The hon. member for Montmorency has also referred to the independence of members of parliament. He charged the government with having appointed some of their friends to judgeships, governorships and other places of emolument, since their advent to power. I quite understand the aggrieved feelings of the hon. gentlemen opposite, when they find themselves in the cold shades of the opposition, accustomed as they were to monopolize all the patronage, and I quite sympathize with them, when they sigh after the flesh-pots of Egypt and the sweets of power, in their dreary exile from office. But are they going to deny us the privilege of appointing to office friends of ours who have well deserved of the party in days gone by? Are we then to let the opposition run the government? No, Sir, I think it would be a most unfair and unwarrantable thing for us to do, so much the more so as, when they were in office, they never failed to appoint friends of theirs to vacant public offices. Of course, when we sat on the other side of the House, we may have now and then brought up the question of parliamentary independence, but never did we deny our opponents the right of appointing their friends to public offices and running the country as they liked.

Another serious charge levelled at the government by the hon. gentleman is what he called their bad administration of public affairs, and the electorate, he said, is ready to call them to a very strict account at the next elections. Hon. gentlemen opposite have kept repeating that warning for a long time. But how is it that they always allow the by-elections to go by acclamation, if they are so sure, as they say, that the people stand by them? They have carried the county of Sherbrooke by a close majority, it is true; but previously the Conservatives had always carried that constituency by majorities of five or six hundred votes, while at the last by-election they only carried the county by a small majority of 85 votes.

From session to session, they have kept telling us that the electorate was anxious to hurl us from power. How, then, can they account for the fact that no candidate of theirs has hardly ever dared to enter the field to do battle for their cause, despite the fact that there have been many electoral contests throughout the province of Quebec. With the exception of Champlain, Sherbrooke, Temiscouata, Rimouski, Berthier, &c., the elections always went by acclamation. If our opponents were really convinced that the people are with them, I doubt not but that they would offer opposition whenever the opportunity offered. In the county of Megantic, which I have the honour of representing here, we never failed to put a candidate in the field whenever we thought that public opinion veered round and was favourable to our cause, and we often succeeded in carrying the constituency.

Mr. TURCOT.

They talk of a change in public opinion. It is quite true that in 1895 there was a tremendous turn-over in public opinion, and that there was a remarkable Liberal sweep all through the Dominion; but prior to 1896, whenever an election came off, we never failed to put candidates in the field, thus giving the electors a chance to speak out. As a rule, the popular verdict was unfavourable to the government. But, if we are to judge from the number of by-elections that have been held since 1896, and from the fact that the Conservatives have succeeded in carrying only two counties, I think I am borne out by the facts, when I say that there is actually no change in the state of public opinion, and that the wave which swept the country in 1896 will again sweep the Dominion, when the elections come off.

The hon. member for Montmorency has referred to what he called the maladministration of the government and he told us that the government would be called to a very severe account for it at the hands of the electorate. He referred to the Drummond Railway deal. By dint of repeating and crying out that it was a scandal, a shameful bargain, they have succeeded in believing that it was one. But I think, the best answer to the charge of the hon. gentleman, would be to give him the financial results of the management of the road since the government took it over. The yearly rental paid for the Drummond Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, since its extension to Montreal, was $210,000. If you add to that rental the running expenses it gives a total of $3,675,681.21. The earnings of the road being $3,738,331.44, it leaves a surplus of $62,645.23; an unprecedented thing in the history of the road, as far as I am able to judge, from my experience in political life. Previously to the purchase of the road, we had the Intercolonial Railway terminating nowhere, or rather having its terminus in a prairie, at La Chaudière, although it had cost the country $55,000,000: instead of the road yielding a revenue it had a yearly deficit from half a million to one million dollars, and we had to pay interest on those $55,000,000. By giving the road a terminus in Montreal, the great commercial emporium where so many lines of railway centre, and where a vast amount of business can be obtained, we have succeeded in paying the rental of $210,000, and there is a surplus left of $62,645.23, an unprecedented fact, as I said, in the history of the road. I do not think that the government will have to capitalize that rental of $210,000, as after having paid it, there is a surplus left.

The hon. gentleman has also expatiated upon the Franchise Act. The voters' lists which were prepared last year, he said, have not yet been published. Has the hon. gentlemen already forgotten that in 1896 we had to vote on the lists of 1894? I am quite aware that the Franchise Act in force is far from being perfect, but as it was framed recently, it will be an easy task to amend it. At the election of 1896, a large number of people who had been in the country for two or three years, were deprived of their franchise, because the lists were not ready. I fail to see that the government is open to blame, seeing that the Act in force was framed no later than in 1898, and I trust that the government will see to it that it is enforced and carried out. I may add that, from the explanations which have been given here, the municipal officers are not bound to send us the lists, and if the hon. gentlemen wish to have copies of them, they will have to apply to those officers, to get them.

The hon. gentleman further told us that we had made no progress since the beginning of the session. No wonder, Sir, that we make no satisfactory progress with our business, when we know that, every day, before getting down to work, and proceeding with our business, hon. gentlemen, opposite few as they are on their side, rise one after the other to put questions to the government, and say: 'Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, etc.' and that takes up half the time of each sitting of the House. That is not by any means the way to make progress and to advance the business of the House. This session threatens to be a record-breaking session, owing to the obstruction of members of the opposition, if we may judge from what has transpired during the last session, which lasted five months. I think that the opposition has delayed the progress of the House during two months, in the hopes of getting an additional indemnity. This year, I trust, they won't resort to the same tactics as last session.

They charge the government with having carried the election through corruption and bribery. It becomes the hon. gentlemen ill to make such a charge. I was here in 1887, and I never saw such a glaring case of political bribery as the one which was brought to light at that time. The case I refer to was that of Mr. Baird, who then occupied in this House a seat as representative of the County of Queen's, N.B., after having been defeated at the polls by his opponent, Mr. King. We then witnessed the sad spectacle of Conservatives voting in favour of a motion to maintain in his seat that same Mr. Baird, and he continued to represent that constituency in parliament, despite the fact that he was in a minority of 67 votes. In the face of such a precedent, I fail to see how the hon. gentlemen opposite can charge the government with political corruption and bribery at elections, the more so as we are sparing no effort, on this side of the House, to raise the standard of political morality and to see that the law is carried out. Last year, an investigation was held into the circumstances attending the election of two members of this House. In the course of that investigation, certain facts were brought to light, which proved objectionable to the hon. gentlemen opposite. It was perhaps fortunate for them that this investigation was not resumed, this session, because they might have heard still more objectionable facts.

The hon. gentleman has also referred to the price paid for cotton, nails and coal oil. That is not very high politics, but I am quite willing to follow him on his own ground. I represent here an exclusively agricultural constituency, and, as I am a business man, I had the opportunity of meeting many people and asking them their opinion about the government policy. They agree that the price of cotton and nails has slightly gone up but, as a set-off, our products sell much better.

Prior to their advent to power, the Liberals had pledged their word that they would adopt a revenue tariff, without in the least disturbing or injuring our national industries, while at the same time protecting and fostering the farming interests, and we have redeemed their word in this respect as in all other respects. If the price of nails has slightly increased, as all business men know, it is due to the fact that the raw material is dearer than formerly. The hon. gentleman, who is a lawyer, is excusable for not knowing these facts, which are rather within the province of business men.

The price of coal oil has not gone down, in spite of the cut in the duty on that article. It is certainly to be regretted that the 'Imperial Oil Company' should have a monopoly in that respect and control the sale of that article. It would only be fair for the government to interfere here and to take the means of doing away with such monopoly.

The hon. gentleman has also stated that the price of such articles as cotton, nails and coal oil had been enhanced; but he should not forget that, last summer, we obtained for our butter and our cheese double the price obtained for the same, when the Conservatives ruled the country. The price of beef which then sold at $3 per hundred pounds has come down to eight or ten dollars. Several other articles sell to-day double the price they used to sell formerly, and the farmers are quite willing to pay a few cents more for the goods they buy, in return for the privilege of getting a better price for the articles they have to sell; they are satisfied with finding buyers at the prices they ask, instead of having to seek buyers without being able to find any, as was the case under the Conservative regime. It is still within our recollection that, formerly, farmers who had cattle and butter to sell, had to wait for months and years, without ever finding any buyers. Nowadays, farmers who have products of their own to sell, are always sure to be able to dispose of their articles at a paying price. Let my hon. friend breathe easier, now that he knows that the farmers are satisfied with their position.

The hon. gentleman told us how he had met a Liberal who had made up his mind to vote against the government at the next general elections, and to turn them out of power. No wonder, there are so many Conservatives who are going to support the government in the future. That Liberal, it would seem, objects to the duty having been taken off corn. I may tell the hon. gentleman that I have in my possession many letters from Conservatives in my own constituency informing me that they are going to support the Laurier government, because their policy is favourable to the agricultural interests and I have not the least doubt but that at the next general elections, there will be a great turn over. It is readily understood that for farmers the main point is to have cheap feed; when feed sells too high, farmers do not raise cattle. Under Conservative rule, oats used to fetch fifty cents a bushel; and even if it had been free, farmers would not have bought it, because it was too dear. Farmers have to use cheap feed, because when it does not pay to raise cattle, they had better give it up. The placing of corn on the free list has enabled the farmers to buy cheap feed and to make cattle-raising a paying business, and they owe, in this respect, a debt of gratitude to the government.

Whenever an election comes off, our opponents are always bewildered, and they cannot yet realize why they have been turned out in 1896. The grief is still so poignant that they are ever racking their brains in analysing the cause of their defeat. But they ought to know by this time that if they were driven from power, it was because they had gone on clamouring and shouting, on every husting throughout the country, that the country was prosperous and that business was booming, while the poor people were in the greatest distress, and the country was going to the dogs. By referring to statistics, it will be readily seen that the government have done a great deal for the people of this country. As I said a little while ago, governments are run on the same lines as a private concern; and the government is justifiable in spending more liberally in these growing times, when the public revenue is more buoyant and when the industrial activity and life of the country are developing. In other words, the balance of trade is in favour of the government. Let us see how matters stood under the Conservative régime. In 1883, our imports amounted to $132,254,022, and our exports to $98,085,804. We had, therefore, an excess of imports of $34,168,218 over exports.

In 1889, our imports were $115,224,931, and our exports $89,189,167, or an excess of imports of $26,035,764 over exports.

In 1898, the tables were turned. Our imports were valued at $140,323,053, and our exports at $164,152,683, leaving an excess in our favour of $23,829,633. In 1899, our imports for home consumption were $154,000,000, while our exports amounted to $158,000,000. From the above figures it appears that this is the first year that our exports exceeded our imports. It comes to what I said a little while ago, that when the country goes on selling more than it buys, no wonder, then, that it is so prosperous.

But let us come now to the difference in our trade. In 1896, the volume of our trade was $239,025,360 in round numbers, while in 1899 it was $321,661,213, which shows that since 1896 the increase in the volume of our trade has reached about $100,000,000. And still our opponents are still seen weeping over the sad condition of the people; they are still heard crying out that the country is in distress, and trying to make us believe that the people are anxious to give their verdict and to drive the government from power. These gentlemen are merely humbugging the people.

The farmers are quite satisfied with the present condition of the country, as they can get a better price for their products, and are thus enabled to buy more than they did formerly. Cheese, which sold in 1896 from 6½ to 7½ cents a pound at the highest—and I speak knowingly, as I own several cheese factories and sell cheese on the market—cheese fetches now 12 cents a pound. Creamery butter, which, under the Conservatives, could not find any buyers, sold last winter from 20 to 22 cents a pound. So, in spite of the eloquence and the great effort of the hon. member for Montmorency, I firmly believe that the electors of the province of Quebec, at the next general elections, will give their support to the Liberal party and maintain at the head of affairs the present administration, which has been instrumental in bringing about this happy state of things, and in order that they continue the work so well begun.

Of course, the hon. gentleman, who is a legal man, cannot be expected to be well versed in those matters which concern the farming community; he is not competent to form a proper estimate of their earnings and of the kind of farming which gives them the best returns. But let me assure him that the farmers are prosperous, as I have just shown by means of the figures which bear out my statement. In 1896, the people were in distress and had no money in their pockets: but to-day, it is quite different: a great change has come over the country, and the people have only to put their hands in their pockets to feel that they are prosperous. They do not require blue-books to understand and realize that they have lots of money at their disposal.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain), in his eloquent speech, has endeavoured to recruit soldiers for the Conservative ranks; but the electors, if I know how to read the signs of the times, will turn a deaf ear to his appeals for votes, and, instead of turning against the government, all those who take an interest in public affairs will rally to its support, satisfied, as they are and as I am, that it has done its duty ever since its accession to power.

Mr. A. F. MACLAREN (North Perth). Mr. Speaker, I do not think any one in this House or in this country will accuse me of having taken up much of the time of this House by making long speeches, for which the people are obliged to pay so dearly, and I ask the indulgence of the House for a short time, as I wish to say a few words before the debate on the budget closes, and tell the members and the country something about the cow and what part she has taken in making Canada what she is today, and I think when I get through many of you will agree with me that the grand old cow, which (if I may be allowed to say so) has been the foster mother to so many of us, has done a great deal for this country and more than many members of parliament give her credit for.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, I must confess it is somewhat amusing for one who has been through the mill pretty well in the dairy business for over thirty years, to sit here and listen to members of parliament and party men trying to take credit for themselves or the party to which they belong for the manner in which the cheese business, the butter business, the bacon business, the cold storage business and many other businesses have been going forward with such great leaps and bounds.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, in as few words as possible, to state to the House a few facts, and then leave it to this House and to the people of this country as to where the credit belongs. While I am a strong party man myself, I believe in being fair, and I believe in advancing the interests of our country before anything else. And any individual or party who does this is the one to whom the credit belongs.

The first cheese factory in Canada was built in Norwich township, Oxford county, Ontario, by the late Harvey Farrington in 1862. Year by year cheese factories grew up and died, others were organized and some of them would probably fail to exist after a year or two, and so on, and so on—but all the same those who were best educated in the business and stuck to it finally made a success of it, and factories kept increasing year by year all over Ontario, and now there are a great many cheese factories all over Canada, also a great number of combination factories making cheese in summer and butter in the winter.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, it was those men who had the pluck and perseverance and energy to stick to it, who engaged in this cheese business in the sixties and seventies who deserve the greatest praise, and then as we go on and grow older in the business we find the dairymen coming together and talking of conventions and dairymen's associations away back about 1867 or 1868. I think the first association was formed in the town of Ingersoll by a few of the leading factorymen west of Toronto. These men deserve great credit for the energy, pluck, perseverance and skill they put into the work at that time. And so the business went on increasing from year to year, and really Ontario deserves great credit for having given the object lesson at the expense of the people who themselves built up the business, and of which all the other provinces in the Dominion reaped the benefit. But we should all feel proud of our cheese business, as it heads the list, and we ship England from 60 to 70 per cent of all the cheese she imports.

I will now go back to where the farmers began to realize what a grand business they had found. In western Ontario the farmers—and they are clever business farmers—began to put their heads together and build large co-operative or joint stock factories, each patron becoming a stockholder, or in other words, each farmer becoming a manufacturer, and necessarily, a business man, giving proper attention to keeping the best class of cows, giving them the best possible care, so as to get the best possible results, then giving his attention to the selling of the cheese, the handling of the milk, the taking care of the factory in which he was a stockholder, and so on. These were the class of dairymen who put their whole heart and soul into the business in the early days and are deserving of heaps of credit for having placed Canadian cheese in the enviable place which it holds in the markets of the world to-day. I may still further say that after our dairymen's associations got properly under way our grants from governments began to increase, the associations appointed instructors and inspectors to go around the cheese factories and give them all the instructions they could along the line of improving the cheese, handling the milk, cooling and airing the milk, also straining it well and keeping it in a cool and pure atmosphere over night, having it hauled to the factory in proper shape on clean, tidy wagons, in nice, clean milk cans and properly cared for on its arrival at the factory, in the first place seeing that the cheesemaker himself, and all his assistants, were perfectly neat, clean and tidy, the factory, the weighing can, vats, curd sinks, strainers, knives for cutting the curd, presses hoops, floors, press room, curing room, shelves, boilers and engines, and everything in connection with the factory clean, tidy and in the best possible shape for making first-class cheese. These instructors gave every assistance to cheesemakers along the line of instructing them how to improve the quality of the cheese in every way. This is the kind of work that went on step by step, day by day, and year by year, until to-day, the money we receive for butter and cheese alone amounts to the magnificent sum of $20,477,638, as compared with $1,318,590 in 1868, an increase in thirty-one years of $19,159,044. These figures would increase to $24,000,000 if all the reports for 1899 were in. Now, I do not wish to weary the House with figures, but I think it would not be out of place to give the figures right here showing the increase in butter and cheese from 1868 up to the present time.

In 1868, we made 10,649,733 pounds of butter, valued at $1,698,042. Only $534,707 worth was shipped to Great Britain. $1,015,702 worth were shipped to the United States, and the balance to other parts of the world :

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, we are through the tiresome task of going over so many figures, and it is worth while and a great study to look into the way in which butter increased and decreased in quantity during those thirty years. In 1868, we made 10,649,733 pounds, four years later we manufactured in Canada 19,668,448 pounds of butter, valued at $3,612,679. We shipped to Great Britain $2,719,118 worth, or an increase in four years of 8,318,715 pounds, or $1,914,637 increase in value of butter made, and an increase in value of butter shipped to England, in four years, of $2,174,441. This was in the great big year of 1872, and the greatest year for the quantity of butter manufactured between 1868 and 1898. In the year 1881, we made 17,649,491 pounds of butter, valued at $3,573,034, and the bulk of this was shipped to England, namely, $3,333,419 worth, or $1,417,861 worth of butter more shipped to Britain in 1881 than was shipped to Britain seventeen years later, in 1898.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you look through these figures carefully you will find great food for thought, and wonder why such fluctuations took place in the butter markets, and it will cause the farmers to think and wonder what was the cause of all these variations. It can be sized up in two words, namely, 'bad butter,' and the lesson is simply this : Make your butter in creameries and give the same attention to butter that we have given to cheese, and in ten years from now we will all see what a proud position our Canadian butter will hold in the markets of the world.

Again, I find the peculiar fact, that in 1868 we shipped to the United States, $1,015,702 worth of butter ; in 1898, we only shipped $3,738 worth of butter to the United States, a decrease of $1,011,964 in our shipments of butter to the United States. I might go on for hours giving you figures of this kind, but will not weary the House in so doing, but will give you a change and supply you with some more cheese figures. I am sorry that my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs, who is not in the House, has not yet seen the light and decided to come over to our side of the House, as we could then supply the members with biscuit and cheese. But, I think, Mr. Speaker, we cannot be more profitably engaged, than in preaching and spreading the gospel of good milk, good bread, good butter, and good cheese, and occasionally a good piece of Canadian breakfast bacon, which has earned such a high reputation in the British markets. If the farmers of this country pay close attention to the above-named lines of products, and take good care of that grand old cow, which has done so much for us all, there is no reason in the world why the agriculturists of Canada may not go on and prosper. No necessity for them going to the Klondike or to the Yukon, as they have a Klondike of their own at home.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, with regard to cheese. The shipments from 1868, one might say, have increased almost every year, showing that the cheese business has never had any serious setback during all these years, while the butter industry has been up and down, up and down, all along the line, from 1868 up to the present time. You may think it strange, but if you will look at the figures which I have given you, you will observe that we only made 604,047 pounds more butter in 1898 than we made in 1868, or 30 years ago. Now we will ask what government was to blame for this very slow progress? I venture to say that, if the same attention had been given to butter that was given to cheese during all those years, and if the butter had been made in factories as it is being made now, the same increase would have taken place that has taken place in cheese. Instead of wasting time by making butter on every farm, make it in creameries, where the milk from one hundred or more farmers would be made into butter by two or three hands, instead of having it made at the homes, by hundreds of hands, in hundreds or more different ways. Let the farmers of this country make the butter in factories, make choice, uniform goods, and I predict that inside of ten years, we will be realizing $20,000,000 from Britain for our butter, as well as $20,000,000 or more for our cheese. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will go still further, and say that the dairy interests of Canada will bring, inside of ten years, annually, to this country, over 50,000,000 of British gold dollars. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I include in this estimate, condensed milk, a product which is just in its infancy in Canada, Britain having imported from other countries in 1888, $3,575,406 worth, and in 1898, 91,534,016 pounds, valued at $5,988,110, or almost double in ten years. This condensed milk was shipped from France and Holland principally, very little going forward from Canada.

But, I am not through with the cheese business yet, as I want you to look at the manner in which cheese went forward, with leaps and bounds in Canada, as compared to how it went back by leaps and bounds in the United States, and how butter went forward in the United States, and back in Canada, or almost stood still, until Professor Robertson, under the Conservative government, took hold and started the butter business going. In 1868, the United States exported 51,097,203 pounds of cheese, valued at $7,010,424. The exports went on increasing till 1881, when they reached the highest point, 147,995,614 pounds, valued at $16,380,248 of English money, which they, the United States, received for cheese. Then the shipments began to drop, and Canada put in her longest strokes and came flying to the front, and the cheese exports from the United States went down from 147,995,614 in 1881, to 53,167,280 pounds in 1898, or a decrease in the English money the United States received for cheese in 1881, as compared with 1898, of $11,830,924. This is an enormous amount of money, and shows what the Canadian dairymen have done in cheese. But this is not all. Let us see what the United States people have done in butter, and let us Canadian farmers and dairymen ask ourselves the question: Why did we let Uncle Sam get such a lead on butter? Why did we allow him to make the pace, as you will see by the following figures?

The United States shipped in 1868, 2,071,573 pounds of butter to England, valued at $582,745; in 1880, her exports amounted to 39,236,658 pounds, valued at $6,690,687, this being the largest amount shipped in the years from 1868 to 1898. In the year 1898, you observe they are much less than in 1880, showing that there is a good chance for us in Canada to develop and increase our shipments of butter to England if we but try to do so. You observe, in 1880, the amount of butter shipped from the United States to England, was 39,236,658 pounds, valued at $6,690,680, and in 1898, 25,690,025 pounds, valued at $3,864,765, a decrease of 13,546,633 pounds of butter, and a decrease of $2,825,915 in value during that time. So you see, Mr. Speaker, there is a better chance for Canadian farmers to go in and secure the British markets for butter, than there was eighteen years ago, and if we go to work and make the best butter, as we do the best quality of cheese, the Englishmen will soon find it out, and give us the preference, because it is the best quality and for that reason only. Make your butter and cheese the best on earth, and then you will get the highest price and the preference in the British market, as England should patronize her sons and daughters as no colony sings more proudly, 'God Save the Queen,' than does this Canada of ours.

We will now look at the last two years' trade in cheese for a moment. In 1898 we made 196,703,323 pounds, valued at $17,- 572,763; shipped to Britain, $17,522,681 worth. In 1899, 189,827,839 pounds, valued at $16,776,765; shipped to Britain, $16,718,418 worth, showing a decrease in 1899 of 6,875,584 pounds of cheese, a decrease in money of $795,998, a decrease in cheese shipped to Great Britain of $804,263. This, you observe, is a large decrease in the shipments of cheese in 1899, as compared with 1898, but the great increase in the shipments of butter, as I will now show you, more than makes up for the decrease in the shipments of cheese.

In 1898, we made 11,253,787 pounds of butter, valued at $2,046,687. We shipped to Britain $1,915,550 worth. In 1899, we made 20,139,195 pounds of butter, valued at $3,700,873, and we shipped to Britain $3,526,007 worth. This, Mr. Speaker, you will see, is a magnificent increase in the make and shipments of butter during the year 1899, as compared with the year before, an increase of 8,925,408 pounds, valued at $1,654,186, shipped to Britain, $1,610,457 worth more than the previous year. This will show you, Mr. Speaker, that we have the butter going, and if we stick to it we will soon place it where it belongs, which is right up alongside of the cheese, holding the highest place on the front seats in the markets of the world.

I may here say, Mr. Speaker, before going any further, that I am proud to have the honour of representing the county of Perth, which, I think, has carried off more prizes in cheese than any other county in the Dominion of Canada. Of course, I do not wish to make little of any of our other counties in western Canada, as there is a lot of magnificent cheese made in the Oxfords, the Middlesexes, the Hurons, the Bruces, the Wellingtons, and many other counties. But, when we name such factories as the famous Black Creek factory, the Fullerton Corner factory, Avonbank factory, the Sebringville factory, the Southwick factory, the Dempsey factory, the Honey Grove factory, the Donegal factory, the Carthage factory, the Newry factory, the Elma and Mornington factory, the Cleland factory, the Elma factory, the Trowbridge factory, the Maitland factory, the Moncton factory, the Silver Corners, the Willow Grove, the Kinkora factory, the Tavistock factory, the Molesworth factory, and last, but not least, the Milverton factory, which is right in the centre of my riding, and which is efficiently managed by Mr. George E. Goodhand, and which is being fitted up at the present time by the Cheese and Butter Association of western Ontario so that it can be used for the school of instruction, and will be in charge of Mr. Smith, formerly cheese and butter instructor in the dairy school in Strathroy. Any cheese or butter-makers who have got off the track and want instructions or assistance, are at liberty to go to this school during the coming summer. This, I consider, is a very good work undertaken by our dairy association. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that all, or nearly all of the above-named factories have figured very prominently in the taking of prizes at all the large exhibitions held during the last twenty-five years, the most prominent being: Black Creek, Honey Grove, Newry, Cleland, Fullerton Corners and Elma, as they were among the first factories built in that part of the country, and I might here say that it is a pleasure to talk to the dairy farmers of that section, as they are thoroughly up in the business of cheese and butter-making, and also of hog-raising. They know all about the best kind of cows to keep, and are thoroughly informed on the best methods of handling the dairy business. These farmers are not only farmers, but they are business men, every one of them. They are all manufacturers, having an interest in joint stock or co-operative factories. We have more of this kind of factory in the part of the country that I represent than in any other part of Canada. The factories in eastern Canada are largely private factories, under the management of one man, the milk is sent in by the patrons, and the owner of the factory charges so much for making it into butter and cheese. There are some exceptions to this statement in some of the provinces; in Prince Edward Island they have very fine co-operative factories. In my section of the country many of our best farmers have no difficulty in standing up on public platforms at Farmer's Institute meetings and dairy meetings and intelligently conveying their ideas to others who are seeking for the gospel of good cheese, good butter or good hog, as the case may be. I may here say that I have made cheese in several of these factories myself, and in dozens and dozens of cases have bought and shipped the product of every one of them to England. I, therefore, should know, at least, something about the dairy business, and cannot tell you how proud I feel to know that cheese and butter occupy, such a prominent place in furthering the interests and welfare of every one in this country. I began working at the cheese business in 1870, and have been connected with it ever since, and I might say that in those early days it was quite a common thing to hear the boys calling out, as a cheese man came in sight, 'cheese it.'

I might say that the first object of the farmer is to get a good cow, feed her and take care of her well, feed almost everything that is grown on the farm to the cow, make butter and cheese of the milk, then feed the hog with the skim-milk, butter-milk, or whey, mixed with meal made from coarse grain grown on his own farm, and not with American corn. This is the farmer who is making the greatest success of dairying, and who is not only supplying the best cheese and butter, but the best hogs for the packing companies who are supplying bacon, second to none, in the English market. As far as I can learn, it does not hurt to feed a little corn, but it makes a very great difference if the hog is fed altogether on corn and whey. Some people argue that corn does not do any harm, but the great danger is that if the farmer feeds altogether on corn and whey, he will have soft pork. If this is not the case, why is it that Chicago bacon sells at so much less on the English market than Canadian bacon? There is no doubt that it is due to the feeding of corn.

Winter dairying, which was first introduced by Professor Robertson, under Tory rule, in 1887, was a splendid thing for the farmers of this country, and was, to a great extent, the means of improving the quality of butter and increasing the shipments of butter to Britain. The time it was publicly begun was at a meeting of the Western Dairymen's Association, held in Ingersoll, in 1887. Some bitter opponents of the bad Tory government, I remember very well, strongly opposed Professor Robertson, and pooh-pooed the idea and said it would not succeed in our country, that roads were bad in winter and cream and milk could not be delivered at the factories in a satisfactory condition. Others said cows would not give milk ten months in the year. Others said cream would freeze and the butter would have a bad flavour, and so on and so on. All the same, Professor Robertson had faith, and the government had faith and went right along, and two winter dairy schools were established; one in Woodstock and another in Mount Elgin; both in Oxford county, and not far from where the first cheese factory in Ontario was built, and after three years the professor had overcome every obstacle. The average prices realized for butter for the years 1893 and 1894 was, from Mount Elgin, 24.23, Woodstock, 24.42, and at Wellman's Corners another factory which was started north of Belleville, 24.24. So the good work went on and increased and to-day, winter butter is being made all over the Dominion of Canada. If the farmers would look after that grand old cow and give her proper care, proper food, lots of good, fresh water and salt, lots of good, pure air and sunshine, a bright, clean, well-lighted and well-aired stable to live in, she will do her share—let the farmer push the button and the cow will do the rest. Notwithstanding all this good work which Professor Robertson and the Tory government did and deserve great credit for, much fault was found by the Liberal party which was then in opposition. They told us that our policy in aiding the cheese factories and creameries in Prince Edward Island was wrong, that our aid to the creameries in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba and the Northwest was wrong, and the system of cold storage was found fault with. Professor Robertson's management of the dairy exhibition at the World's Fair, according to the then Liberal opposition, was all wrong. The making of the big cheese or what was then called the 'Canadian Mite,' which weighed 22,700 pounds, which was manufactured at the Dominion Experimental Station at Perth, Lanark county, under the supervision of Professor Robertson, Dominion Dairy Commissioner—and which formed part of the pyramid of Canadian dairy products at the World's Columbian Exposition of Chicago, and which required 207,200 lbs. of milk to make it, or which was said to be equal to the milk of 10,000 cows for one day in the month of September—was also condemned by the Liberal party. Mr. J. A. Ruddick, I might here say, was the cheesemaker, a gentleman of whom you all have heard. Mr. Ruddick was a first-class man and is now dairy commissioner in New Zealand. He was also in charge of the dairy exhibit at the World's Fair and later on was in charge of dairy work at the dairy school in Kingston. I was very sorry to see Mr. Ruddick leave Canada to go to New Zealand, for I think it is a great mistake to allow such men as Ruddick or Dillon, who was the superintendent of the great work which went on so successfully in Prince Edward Island, to leave the country. Mr. J. B. McEwan is also a county of Perth boy, and he was for many years connected with the dairy work under the supervision of the then, Conservative, government. He, too, was taken away from us by the New Zealand government, and he acted for them as dairy commissioner for several years. Mr. McEwan is now representing large British firms and shipping cheese and butter from New Zealand in large quantities to the British market, which are competing very hard with our own Canadian cheese and butter. This means, Sir, that we must stick right to business and hold every inch we have gained and keep on improving at every point where it is possible. There is another young man, to whom I would like to refer, namely, Mr. Robert Drummond, formerly a cheesemaker in Brownsville, near Ingersoll. He was one of the best cheesemakers we had in Canada and his factory was very often spoken of as being a model factory, his cheese being always spoken of as being uniform in size, and particularly stylish and tidy. He was engaged to go to Scotland to act as dairy instructor, where he still is drawing a good big salary. Now, why should we allow such men as Ruddick, McEwan, Dillon, Drummond and others that I cannot think of at the present moment, why should we allow such men to leave our country and go to distant lands. I at the moment, cannot tell you what salaries they are receiving, but I know these men intimately, having grown up with them all in the dairy business, and I would hold up both hands to have them all brought back here and placed under the charge of Professor Robertson and sent to represent Canada in Great Britain for the balance of their natural lives. They would be well worth good salaries to talk up Canada and the excellence of everything she produces from the soil, the seas, and the forests. This, I think, would be well spent money. I care not what government is in power, I would uphold a business transaction of this kind and would never be a party to allowing such men to leave us if money would retain them in the service of this grand old Canada of ours. Again, speaking of the big cheese, there was no one thing at the World's Fair which gave greater prominence to the cheese trade of Canada, notwithstanding that the Liberal party, or many of them, said it would do more harm to the cheese trade of Canada than it would do good. All the same, Mr. Speaker, the Tory government kept right on doing the good work for the dairymen of this country, and I am glad to say that Professor Robertson keeps right on in the very successful course which he has marked out for himself. His winter dairying goes on, his cold storage on the railways and the steamboats, and I was going to say, everywhere, but I must withdraw that 'everywhere' until we see what has happened to the cold storage in Paris.

Mr. WALLACE. Tell us about that.

Mr. MACLAREN. I would like to know more about that myself, because Professor Robertson has been sent so hurriedly there that there appears to be something wrong. Can it be possible that the present government have mixed and muddled things by sending to Paris inferior men, men, who I suppose have served their party well, and who claim recognition, but who, apparently, knew no more about cold storage than the man in the moon. Otherwise why should Professor Robertson be called away post haste to look after them? This may or may not be true, as I am only talking from newspaper reports, but of course the facts will come out in a very short time.

Look for one moment at the work done in Prince Edward Island. In 1892 they only had one factory, in 1893 they had eleven factories, and turned out $48,000 worth of cheese. In 1894, they had sixteen factories, turning out $90,000 worth of cheese, and now the good people of Prince Edward Island have cheese factories and creameries all over their island of which they should feel proud, and for which they should give credit to the grand old Liberal-Conservative party, that has done so much for this country. I had the pleasure of driving all over the island, accompanied by Professor Robertson and Mr. Dillon, and I was delighted to find such a lot of uniform cheese and butter factories, and such a splendid lot of cheese, notwithstanding the abuse of the then Opposition and by some of the people who were strong supporters of the Liberal party. Similar good work went on all over the Dominion of Canada, and I must say I was somewhat surprised to see the fine reports in the Edmonton Bulletin, edited by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), of the good work that is going on in the North-west Territories, and the rapid increase in manufacture of creamery butter in that country. I was surprised because I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) once opposed the policy of the Conservative government in this respect.

Just a word, Mr. Speaker, about a few articles of produce which are shipped from foreign countries to Great Britain. I do not wish to attempt to advise this great and good Liberal government as to what articles of food we should try to export more of, instead of allowing Holland, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Russia, France, the United States, and many other countries to secure the trade. I think we take the lead in one article of food shipped to Britain: that is, cheese, as we shipped in 1897 170,986,368 pounds, or $16,500,905 worth of cheese to Britain as against 120,569,568 pounds, or $12,341,964 worth shipped from all other parts of the world. So, why cannot we do better in some other lines of food products, and ship a larger quantity of our goods to England? Take, for instance, condensed milk. In 1897, Britain imported 85,819,888 pounds of condensed milk, $6,853,294 worth. Of this amount France supplied her with 36,937,204 pounds, or $3,117,840 worth. Holland came next with 31,864,448 pounds, or $2,229,673 worth. Why cannot our Canadian government do something to educate and encourage the farmers of this country to secure some of this trade, which I predict will in the very near future be something immense. If we can get British money for our cheese and butter, why not for our milk?

Then again, what about the egg trade of Canada? I find that England pays an immense amount of money for the eggs that she imports. I have the figures for 1897, and I find that in that year Britain imported 140,317,540 dozen of eggs, valued at $21,203,128, and Canada only takes sixth place. I think this is a very serious matter, and that if we put our shoulders to the wheel and in some way try to encourage and educate the farmers to increase this business, we should at least take second place in the egg and hen race. Canada only shipped in 1897, 5,687,690 dozen of eggs, valued at $944,123, or not quite $1,000,000.

We will now look for a moment at Russia, and see what she is receiving for hen fruit from England. I find that in 1897 she shipped 31,323,330 dozen of eggs, valued at $3,953,178, or just about $3,000,000 more than was received by Canada during the same year. What a nice thing it would be for the Canadian farmers if they could only do as well in supplying eggs to England as the farmers do in Russia. Germany comes next with 29,718,460 dozen, and they must be better eggs, or I suppose the producers get better rates of freight, as they receive for a less number of eggs more money than Russia, namely, $3,956,707. France comes next, having shipped over 26,000,000 dozen, Belgium following close behind with 24,000,000 dozen, and Denmark with 17,000,000 dozen. Now, I would like to see this great Liberal government try to do something along the line of increasing this hen fruit business, as there is no reason under the heavens why we should allow Russia, Germany, France, Belgium, Denmark and other countries to supply them with such large quantities of eggs when we are sending forward so few from Canada, and of course, if the present government cannot do something for this great egg industry and many other industries, after having been four years in power, we will just have to quietly and gently hand them down and out, or pass them over to these cold opposition benches, just as we did after their four years' trial in 1878.

For a few moments we will look again at butter. Britain imported in 1897, 360,393,824 pounds of butter, valued at $77,462,329. Let the farmers think seriously for one moment what an immense amount of money this means, $77,000,000 Britain pays for butter annually, and in that year only $2,164,995 was received by Canada, while the United States got over $3,000,000, Russia more than $5,000,000. Sweden over $7,000,000, and Denmark the immense sum of $32,841,060. This is something enormous, and Canada certainly should be receiving more English money than she is for butter. We go on still further and find Holland receiving over $6,000,000 of English money for her butter, and France receiving the snug little sum of $11,342,137. This certainly speaks well for France and for the French people as good butter-makers. And what about Canada? What can we do to get our share of this money? I think that no matter what government is in power, this is a very serious matter and should receive very serious consideration; and everything possible should be done in assisting the farmers who are engaged in this great butter business to place their products in the best possible shape on the markets of the world and at the very highest price. My idea is that the government should employ more good, independent, clever business men; not party hacks or hangers-on, who are looking for situations just because they happen to be friends of the government. Get good business men who can talk Canada and Canadian products. It is all very well to send one or two men, but they cannot do all the work and cannot begin to advertise Canada as she should be advertised. We all know that Professor Robertson has done a great work. He has done wonders in advertising our Canadian cheese, butter, eggs, beef, bacon, poultry, fruits, etc., in Britain, but he cannot do it all. I would hold up both hands in asking the government to place more good men at good square salaries in such large centres as London, Manchester, Liverpool, Edinburgh, Glasgow and Bristol, for the purpose of talking Canada and her products. They would not require to stop at her food products, but could also talk mining business, lumber business, fish business, flour business, oatmeal business, furniture business, and a thousand and one different lines. In fact, London could do with four or five or even ten men such as I speak of, who could live there talking up Canada and her different industries. What would fifty thousand dollars or a hundred thousand dollars amount to, if we could for butter alone secure a few more millions out of the $77,000,000 which England pays for butter. I am sure all the manufacturers, farmers and business men of Canada, would hold up both hands to see money well spent in this direction. I do think one thing, and that is this, that the terrible war now going on in South Africa, where so many of our brave Canadian soldiers are so nobly doing their good work in serving the empire, will do more than ever has been done before to advertise Canada.

I must here say, and I say so honestly and fearlessly, that when I was in England two years ago, I on several occasions was obliged to speak with a good deal of warmth to some of my English customers when they everlastingly kept on saying: 'American this,' and 'American that.' I say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no more loyal colony in the British Empire and no more loyal people than the Canadians; and in the name of common sense and common justice, why cannot we be called by the English people by our right name? Canada, or Canadian. is a name of which every Canadian should feel proud, and of which every man in the British Empire should feel proud; and especially now, that this Canadian colony is known better since this cruel war began, than she was ever known before, for all her good qualities and particularly for her fighting qualities for this grand old empire and for the British flag; the Englishmen should be glad to call us by our right name, Canadians and not Americans. And, I trust they will not stop at that, Mr. Speaker, but that they will call all our products 'Canadian' and not American, Danish, Swedish, or anything else, as no man in Canada or no man in Britain need feel ashamed of the name 'Canada.' Neither need they be ashamed of her beef, her bacon, her cheese, butter, bread, flour, fruit, or anything else we ship to Britain, as we are proud of all, and we wish none of our goods shipped under any other name, or sold under any other name, than that of 'Canada' or 'Canadian.' This is not all, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that now Canada will awaken to the fact that now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation. She never had such an advertisement in the markets of the world as she has to-day. Neither the present government, nor any government which ever preceded it, ever had such opportunities to assist the Canadian people as they have to-day. This war has been the greatest advertisement to Canada in the British Empire that she ever has had, and no government was ever in power, which had such grand, such immense, such enormous opportunities to assist in vastly increasing the placing of Canadian goods on the British markets as we have to-day. In addition to this the Paris Exposition is now going on, and if properly taken advantage of by the present government, a lot of good advertising for Canada should be done, and will be done, if properly handled by the government. With all these opportunities in store for 1900, I will be very much disappointed, if at the end of the year, we do not find that the exports of Canadian products of all kinds have been greater than they ever were before.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to weary the House much longer, but would like to say a word about the corn coming in free from the United States. I fear that it may affect the good reputation of the bacon of Canada in the English markets. While we do not ship such large quantities of bacon as Denmark and the United States, yet we have a grand name for our bacon. I have been, for many years, connected more or less with the Ingersoll Packing Company, and at the present time am a director in connection with the White Packing Company of Stratford, as I hold a small interest in that company, and consequently happen to know something about Canadian bacon and the grand reputation which it has in the British markets. But I am sorry to say that many of the packers to-day are still receiving more soft hogs than they received before free corn was admitted into this country. I happened to meet Mr. Wilson, manager of the Ingersoll Packing Company, a few days ago, and while inquiring about the hog trade, he told me that they had a great difficulty to contend with, and that was, that, as far as he could judge, soft hogs were on the increase. Now, Mr. Speaker, some of the members of this House seem to think that Yankee corn has nothing to do with soft pork. These gentlemen may have their opinions, but all the same I fear it is a dangerous thing for this government to allow corn to come in free. If we do not wish to ruin the good name of Canadian bacon in the markets of the world, and bring it down to a level with the United States bacon, then let us stop bringing in Yankee corn free. I think we should hold what we have, and should not allow the Yankees to get the better of us, and should not go back one step, and, Mr. Speaker, would it not be better for the farmers of this country to feed the coarse grains which they grow themselves, to their cows and hogs, rather than feed them American corn. In the first place, they will get from half a cent to a cent per pound more for the bacon than the packers of Chicago receive for the bacon which they ship to England, and even if they sold their coarse grains on their home market, they will get a higher price for their pease, corn, oats and barley. But, by feeding their coarse grain to the cow, and then by feeding it to the hogs in the shape of whey, buttermilk and skim-milk, mixed with meal made from our own coarse grains, I think the farmers of Canada would make more money, and the reputation of Canadian pork and bacon would not be in the unenviable and dangerous position of being injured.

I wish here to make a few comparisons and show you that Canada shipped, in 1897, 32,511,696 pounds of bacon, valued at $2,546,216. The United States shipped to Britain, in 1897, the enormous amount of 402,375,120 pounds of bacon, valued at the immense amount of $23,054,303. Denmark shipped the same year, 114,973,824 pounds of bacon, valued at the immense sum of $13,356,220. The United States, you will observe, Mr. Speaker, received $23,500,000 more for her bacon in the year 1897, than we did, and altogether Britain imported the immense amount of 560,550,480 pounds of bacon valued at $43,156,851. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is food for thought and very, very serious thought, for the farmers of this Canada of ours, and for the government which now rule over this country, and the question is: How can we best keep up our quality, how can we get the best price, how can we place the most bacon on the English market, and is our bacon in danger of losing its good name on account of free corn coming from the United States to Canada? This is a question for the present government to settle, and for the farmers of Canada to consider very seriously. Take 32,511,696 pounds of bacon which we shipped in 1897, and suppose that it goes forward and sells at 1 cent per pound less on account of it being corn fed, what does that mean to the farmers of Canada? If you figure it up, you will find that it means $325,116 of a loss. This means a great loss to Canada, and will mean a great deal more, if Canada gets the reputation of making soft bacon, as she will then lose, instead of retaining, a great deal of the trade which she already has, because our bacon will have the reputation of being no better than the Chicago bacon. It has been said of Danish bacon and Canadian bacon, that it is very superior to Chicago bacon, or corn-fed bacon. Some members of this House will argue that corn can be fed to hogs without injuring the quality of the bacon. I may say I think it can be fed in small quantities, mixed with other grain, and perhaps with skim-milk, buttermilk or whey, without having the effect of making soft bacon. But the great danger is this, that some careless one may feed corn altogether, particularly if they have been compelled to sell their coarse grain and buy corn. My idea is that it is a very dangerous thing to allow corn to come in here free, and there is no doubt, in my mind, that corn is the cause of all Chicago bacon being known as soft bacon, and selling in the British market at a very much smaller price than Canadian bacon, Irish bacon, or Danish bacon. In speaking to a pork packer, a few days ago, he told me they had just received 285 hogs, and out of that number, after killing them, they found 163 soft. Now, the great trouble is this, that the good farmer suffers on account of the bad farmer feeding his hogs so as to have them make soft pork. He is in the same fix as a good, clean, tidy farmer, who has the misfortune to have as a neighbour, an untidy, lazy, good-for-nothing man, who allows his fences and outbuildings to tumble down, and who leaves his reapers and mowers and ploughs and harrows and wagons and buggies kicking around the farm and lying outdoors summer and winter, and worse than all that, who allows his farm to become covered with thistles, wild mustard, ox-eye daisies, and other obnoxious weeds going to seed and covering the farm of the honest farmer next to him. The same thing applies in the case of the hog, as the price of pork is lowered on account of some farmers feeding Yankee corn to their pigs, and thus making soft hogs and soft pork.

Another thing I want to speak of, is a new enterprise in connection with the hen fruit business. We have a new industry which was opened up about a year ago in Stratford for the manufacture of what they call 'ovo,' or condensed egg, and I have here an article which I would like to read to the House, explaining what this is :

The McCeredy Manufacturing Syndicate, of London, Eng., have established factories at Stratford, Ont., and Winnipeg, Man., for the purpose of manufacturing concentrated eggs called 'Ovo.' Perhaps some have not heard of this article before, therefore, by way of explanation, I will say that it is a pure desiccated preparation from fresh eggs—in flake form, and being mixed with water, possesses all the properties of fresh eggs. This promises to be one of our largest industries. They are endeavouring to have a duty placed on the enumerated article condensed egg (and made specific). Their competitors are an American firm known as Lamont Crystallized Egg Company. They have many advantages over the syndicate in the manufacturing of condensed eggs in the United States. They can secure eggs at a lower price and for a longer period. Last year they imported into Canada seventy-five tons of their production, which meant the expenditure and manufacturing and the buying of the raw material of in the neighbourhood of $75,000, which money was spent entirely in the United States. On the west coast of Canada and throughout the mining districts, this strictly Canadian industry would undoubtedly do well if adequately protected, and should they obtain a market for their production in the western part of the country, in which they expend large sums of money the advantage accruing to the Canadian farmers for their production for this market alone would be the increased market for the sale of eggs, besides an expenditure of $40,000 yearly to the farmers for eggs, and similar advantage to the Canadian factories and to Canadian labour. In the English and foreign markets they have excellent prospects, having already succeeded in placing large orders with the War Office and English bakers, as well as firms doing business in South Africa. Their intention is to manufacture in Canada 'Ovo' for the world-wide markets, thereby expending in Canada large sums of foreign money, and their shareholders feel that in the country where they have spent large sums of money and are prepared to spend unlimited sums of money, that they should have a market for their production in that country (western Canada).

This is a new industry, and all industries of this kind require nursing. To supply all the various outlets of this trade it will at no distant date prove necessary to enlarge their operations in Canada by the establishing of additional factories, but they must encourage their shareholders by showing that this expectation of the coast trade has been realized, and as they are endeavouring to found a new Canadian industry they should be able to count upon the material assistance which a duty of 30 per cent on egg food will give them. If this industry is not nursed, they will undoubtedly leave this country and go to Russia, which country is very near their market, and eggs purchased very cheap. A short time ago their American competitors secured an order for 500 cases of condensed eggs, the buyers were favourably disposed towards the syndicate, but their competitors quoted prices equal to practically what it cost them to manufacture their production, 'Ovo.' If this new Canadian industry had obtained this small order, it alone would have meant the expenditure of at least $7,500 for eggs and $3,000 for labour, &c.; also the Canadian railroads would have handled the raw and manufactured eggs. It seems very unfair that a manufactured article such as this should pay the duty of only 20 per cent, whereas the raw material must pay a duty of from 33½ per cent to 40 per cent. The American competitors of this new Canadian industry are at present quoting prices equal to practically what it cost the Canadian manufacturers to manufacture their production—they are practically flooding the Canadian market with their surplus stock, thereby killing this strictly Canadian industry before it is fairly started. Canada as a dumping ground for the surplus stock of the American production is of the greatest value to them. It enables them to run their factories full time, thus enabling them to make advantageous contracts for the purchasing of their raw material, 'eggs.' And we all know that by purchasing large quantities we obtain low prices. Last year was the infant year of the Stratford factory; they expended in the neighbourhood of $30,000 for eggs, machinery, labour, &c. In the Stratford factory they employ twenty-five to fifty hands, which number will be increased as the different markets open up. The production of 'Ovo' from this factory was disposed of in England, the larger portion being purchased by the War Office. The Winnipeg factory expend about the same amount of money as the Stratford factory. They built the Winnipeg factory for the purpose of manufacturing 'Ovo' for the western Canadian market. The expectations of this market have not been realized. Before the syndicate placed their production on the Canadian market the Americans were selling their production for 80 cents a tin (equal to 3½ dozen eggs). The Canadian manufacturers quoted 65 cents a tin, and the American firms are now selling it for 60 cents. By assisting this industry you protect the Canadian consumer.

I may say that a Mr. McGill, of England, is the manager of this factory. He interviewed the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) in regard to this matter, and the hon. minister told him that he would consider the question very seriously. I do not know how seriously he has considered it. But, this is a young industry and ought to be protected. The establishment of such an industry would be a great thing for the farmers of this country. I would urge the government to take the matter up and try to do something to assist the Canadian manufacturers to keep the trade of Canada for the home factory.

Mr. LEONARD BURNETT (South Ontario). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to make a long speech. The ground has been so well covered on this side of the House that it would be almost impossible to introduce any new matter, and I am sure the House would not care to be troubled with a repetition of old facts and figures. I was a little amused by the course pursued by my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. MacLaren), who manufactures Imperial cheese. I have not the slightest doubt that he is a genuine Imperialist. But, I am sorry that the method he has adopted should be brought into parliament, because those who happen to have any special fad will want to get into parliament to advertise it, as my hon. friend has done.

During the course of this debate, and throughout this session of parliament, I have endeavoured, in my humble way, to find out, if I possibly could, where the Conservative party stood on the trade and financial questions. But I have found the task an exceedingly difficult one. The members of that party, from the leader down, have jumped from pillar to post, so that it is a difficult task to tell just where they do stand. The chief criticisms that they have offered on the points they have discussed have been amusing to members on this side of the House. They started by saying that we had stolen their clothes, that we had retained the national policy; and in the next breath they said we had reduced the taxation and introduced legislation that was detrimental to the interests of the manufacturers. They said that our preferential tariff was a sham and a humbug; but, in the next breath, they declared that we have given something substantial to Great Britain and had got nothing in return. With such contradictions, it is difficult to know just where they do stand. In fact, a common farmer like myself, coming here not at all too strong in his political leanings, willing to do what is right for the country, would almost come to the conclusion that they have no definite principle except to get into office at any cost. I was a little amused at the remarks made by various speakers on that side with reference to the corn question. As a practical farmer, I think that the last speaker (Mr. MacLaren) has told the truth. He says that corn when fed to the hogs of this country in moderate quantities, is a very suitable food. Now, there is no reasonable man who knows anything about feeding hogs but will say that there is no cheaper food, there is no food that can be used in Canada—mixed with other rations—that can be used as satisfactorily and as beneficially as corn. The farmers of this country know that when they come into competition with American cattle and American bacon they have got to have corn that is grown in a country adapted to the raising of corn. In Canada we can grow a crop that will sell for more money in the British market, and my contention is that allowing American corn to come in here without duty has been a benefit to the Canadian farmer. Let me mention this fact as an illustration. When the corn question came up I spoke to the Minister of Agriculture in this House and asked him to give me the reason why they were proposing to take the duty off, and he gave me the reason. I talked the matter over with him, and when I went back to my constituency I met several millers and leading Conservatives and they said they thought it was a mistake. Well, Sir, these same men are to-day buying corn by the carload. Only two weeks ago last Saturday when I was home I drove down to the town near where I live, and I met a Conservative who said to me: Mr. Burnett, why don't you sell your pease and buy corn? You can buy corn for 44 cents and sell your pease for 63 cents and make money by the transaction. And I bought his corn. And so the Tory farmers are buying corn by the carload. Yet members in this House are trying to make the farmers believe that free corn is detrimental to them. I say that the farmer is a manufacturer. He gathers his crops together in his barn. The next thing he does is to get the best material to turn the results of his labour into a finished article. He can get American corn, and he can grow clover seed and pease and all the other cereals for which this country is adapted, and for which the American western prairie is not adapted. He can sell his own crop where there is an unlimited market in Europe, and he can buy corn and make money by the transaction. I do not think it is necessary for me or any other farmer in this House to discuss that question, because you cannot make the hard-headed farmers of this country believe that it is not to their interest to have American corn.

I think I can see the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), and even the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), trotting from house to house trying to persuade the farmers that it is not in their interests to use corn. But Conservative farmers will use corn, they have got a taste for it, and you cannot prevent them from using it. Two sessions ago the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), said that the elevator at Gananoque was crowded with corn. Yet the night before last he got up and said it was not used, that the farmers could not use it because it was destroying the British market for our pork. But our pork was never higher than it is to-day. We have seen the member for West York and some of those hon. gentlemen opposite cheering when the government was willing to let beet-root sugar machinery come in free for the benefit of the farmers; and in the next breath they turn round and condemn the government because they allow binder twine to come in free. They think they can go on the platform before the people and make fanciful calculations, as the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) did with his percentages, trying to deceive the people, juggling with figures. They know that admitting binder twine free has not enhanced the price of that article. The thing is impossible, common sense should teach any man that. Why, the ex-Minister of Finance says that the material costs 14 cents a pound. You can buy twine to-day at the Central Prison for the same money that the ex-Minister of Finance says the material alone costs.

Now, I wish to call attention to the loyalty cry we hear so much about. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about their superabundance of loyalty; while on the other hand they are glorifying themselves because they think now they have an opportunity to take advantage of Great Britain's trouble with the Transvaal to get better terms from her. In other words, they think that by reason of the war in which she is engaged we can get out of Great Britain what we could not get otherwise, that we can make her come to terms. Now, I ask if that is loyalty or is it the opposite?

Mr. TAYLOR. Who said that?

Mr. BURNETT. Virtually they all say it who speak on those lines. The ex-Minister of Finance took great credit to himself for reducing the customs taxation, but he never apologized for keeping it on so long. It is really trying to the patience to have to listen to some of the hon. members in this House in some of the arguments they use. If the people of this country knew how much time was wasted in this House they would come down with shot guns and drive the whole of them out. We have seen their frantic efforts to belittle the speeches made by the Minister of Finance, by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), and that splendid speech made by my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd). They speak slightly of those speeches, but they are not able to answer one of the arguments which those speeches contain. Even the leader of the Conservatives from Quebec, when he undertook to answer the member for South Brant, utterly failed to touch any one of his points.

The record made by this government is one of which every Canadian ought to feel proud, I do not care what nationality or creed, or stripe of politics he belongs to. He ought to feel proud of what this government has done when he compares the state of this country to-day with what it was a few years ago. The opposition pretend that they are anxious to go to the country, they say we are going to the country right away. Well, I do not know anything about that, but if we do, we have a record behind the Liberal party that we may be proud of. No man denies that this country is enjoying abundant prosperity. And yet the last speaker, and every speaker on the other side who gets up, deny it. We have a marvellous increase of trade. Why, Sir, yesterday I went up into the committee room and heard cattle men, breeders of short-horned cattle, members of boards of trade, members of various associations in the province, all testifying that Canada was bursting with prosperity. They are all in accord with the government. We have an increase both of domestic and foreign trade. Look at the development of our mineral resources. The people are all standing ready to go in and develop our mines. Gold and silver are cropping out, and all they are asking for is to give them charters to build railways and to develop this country. There was nothing of that kind under the old government. The development of our natural resources has been stimulated and this has created a demand for increased transportation and shipping facilities. What do we see and hear? We hear from North Simcoe, from Welland and from other parts of the country and we are told that trade should go down these channels. We did not hear anything of that kind before. Many different routes are proposed. There is the Georgian Bay route, the Trent Valley Canal route, the Toronto, Midland and Collingwood routes and there is the Welland Canal route, all of which claim special advantages for the transportation of our products and development is going ahead all along the line. I want to give hon. gentlemen an idea of the progress which has taken place in this country. We cannot indicate this better than by taking the trade of the country and by comparing its volume to-day with what it was under Conservative rule. The imports into this country during the last three years of Conservative rule totalled $328,-

000,000, or $109,000,000 a year. Under Liberal rule, during three years they amounted to $396,000,000 or $132,000,000 a year, an increase of $23,000,000. We will take another comparison. We exported, during the last three years of Conservative rule $317,000,000 worth, or $105,000,000 a year, and during the three years of Liberal rule we exported $405,000,000 worth, or $135,000,000 a year, an increase of $88,000,000 in three years. That is a very fair comparison of the results of the rule of the two parties as far as trade is concerned. What do we find in reference to the way that the Conservative party appealed to the country in 1896? Did they appeal to the country as a united party, as a business government, as a government like that which we have to-day which is a live and active business government that is ready to grasp the situation let come what will. If another Yukon were to be discovered to-morrow we have a government ready and competent to deal with the situation that would thus arise. It makes no difference what question comes up, our government is alive and wide awake to the interests of the country. In 1896, when the Conservative party appealed to the country, trade was stagnated and everything was dull. The late government had weakened the confidence of the business public in the country, and people were fleeing from the country in thousands. They were going to the other side. Conservative members of the Queen's Privy Council were engaged in fighting and rib-stabbing amongst themselves. They were quarrelling amongst themselves, yet they appealed to the people and professed to be a united party, while they were nothing of the kind. Contrast the conditions as they existed then with what we find when we go to the country to-day. Why, the whole country is blossoming as the rose. A Prime Minister was removed from office on the alleged charge of unfitness by the members of the late government and the racial cry was raised. I was told by a gentleman that if it had not been for that cry he would not have been here. An hon. gentleman who was not in touch with Canadian politics, came over here from England, attempted to bulldoze the people and drive them into rebellion after which he politely came back here, washed his hands of the whole transaction and said that he had overestimated the importance of the question. We see the same man to-day fleeing from Ontario to Quebec saying one thing in one place and another thing in another place, and when my deskmate said to-night that they understand him in Quebec, I said that we understand him in Ontario, too. More than that, the government of that day was scandalously corrupt. It was proven on the hustings all over the country by their own friends. Scandal after scandal had been unearthed and the people were overburdened with taxation. They were talking about the national policy all the time. I need not go into details but they would bring upon every platform what the national policy had done for the country. I can give the House an illustration and if the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) were here he would verify what I say. When I was a candidate he came into the riding which I represent, and I want to tell this House that it is the finest, the richest and the best agricultural county in the province of Ontario. Not only that, but it has the largest manufacturing town in Ontario, as a town, understand, not a city. More mechanics are engaged in the county of Ontario in factories than in the towns in any other county, and I may say that in one establishment alone there are 800 men.

Mr. SPROULE. There must be a good deal of corruption in it.

Mr. BURNETT. Coming, as I do, from a county like that, I came on these grounds: I said, I am prepared to go to Ottawa and support the government that will work in the interest of the country. That is the plea upon which I came here. Sometimes they say that I vote against the government. I vote for what I consider in the interest of the country, and I think that I ought to get justice for doing that because I have done it every time. We have heard the remark made by a great many hon. members on the other side of the House that the Liberal party have done nothing for the country. We hear that every day. When you ask me what the Liberal party have done for the country I will tell you one thing they have done for the country; the Liberal party have turned the Tories out of office. That was something that has conferred a greater boon on the country than anything else that, I think, could have been done. There was no set of men who could hope to have done anything for the country until these men were turned out. They put them out, and after they put them out they put in business men who were alive to the interests of the country, and the jobbing business that had hitherto prevailed was brought to an end. The Liberals put a stop to such questionable practices as were carried on in the days when hon. gentlemen opposite were in control of affairs. It is now impossible for such things to happen. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), had a book before him showing dozens of deals that, if the facts presented on the platforms all over the country, would set the country on fire almost by the exposure of the rascality and jobbery that prevailed in the time of the late government. In reference to the tariff I was going to say that the whole country recognizes that they reformed it in a manner which has given very general satisfaction. The burdens of taxation were reduced, particularly those bearing upon the farmers, the prime producers of the country. The manufacturers recognize that the revision of the tariff has been in the interest of the country and they are satisfied because the cost of their raw materials has been lowered. The price of manufactured articles has been reduced, and under the preferential tariff the Canadian farmer and consumer is getting these articles cheaper. There is no question about that. Articles were admitted free last year principally for the use of the farmer on which duties to the extent of no less than $1,000,000 would have been paid under Tory rule. It is not necessary for me to enumerate them all, but I may mention binder twine, Indian corn, barbed wire, fencing wire and other articles used almost entirely by the farmers.

Mr. WALLACE. Coal oil.

Mr. BURNETT. The difference between the tariff as constituted under this government and under the old government is that ours is a revenue tariff, while theirs was a protective tariff. Some people, such as the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), try to create the feeling in the country that the Liberals are doing everything they can to hurt the manufacturers. It is not so. The Reformers are perfectly willing to do anything possible for the manufacturer, but they want him to be on an equal footing with the consumers of this country and with the farmers. Do you think I would be representing here to-night the constituency I do, if my constituents thought I was coming down here to do everything I possibly could to hurt the manufacturers. Not at all. My people believe that this government is acting in the interest of the manufacturers, so far as it is in the welfare of the country to do so, and that is what the wise policy of a good government should be.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. BURNETT. I am only a new member here, and I do not want to be interrupted.

Mr. SPROULE. I just wish to ask—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will take his seat.

Mr. BURNETT. The visit of our Prime Minister to England has been referred to many times, and it is well known throughout the Dominion that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's presence there gave Canada an advertisement that she never received before. The hon. member for North Perth talked about the advertisement we got through our cheese and our butter, and he talks about the Conservatives doing a good deal for Canada; but, comparatively speaking, nothing was done for Canada until we got men with brains and prestige and ability at the head of the government, who won the hearts of the English people. The Conservative party told the people that they were going to get better trade relations with the Americans, and yet they were quarrelling with the Americans all the time. Sir, if you want to do any business with a man, or if you want to do any business with a nation, you want to do it on as amicable and agreeable terms as you possibly can. Now, Sir, another benefit of great importance which this government has conferred on Canada is to deepen our canal system to fourteen feet, so that vessels can sail from the great lakes and come right through to Montreal. That is a sound transportation policy for Canada. It was a stroke of genius on the part of the government. A great many of their friends thought at the time that they were, perhaps, going too fast when they undertook to deepen the canals, to build the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and to open up the Yukon; but we have lived long enough to know to-day that this policy of the government was a wise one, and was well conceived in the interests of Canada. They did not do as the late government did with the Trent Valley Canal, tinkering along with it and using it as a leverage to win votes for their candidates. This government of business men said to themselves: We have a certain work to do, and we will do it, and we will look for the beneficial results afterwards.

Let me point to the great benefit conferred upon Canada when this government reduced the postage rate. I presume that the Conservatives would have been many years in power before they would have had nerve enough to adopt such a policy; but the present Postmaster General has managed his department creditably, and has obtained a standing in the community which entitles him to rank as one of the best business men in Canada. We were told to-day how the Conservative government apportioned the North-west lands out to speculators, and we know that the policy of the Liberal government is that the land belongs to the actual settlers, and they have carried out that policy. Our immigration policy has been a boon to Canada, and I shall give you the following figures to show the extent of it:

Immigrant Arrivals

Total Number of Declared Settlers who Arrived in Canada during the Year 1899.

There is no question about it, but that Canada is known to-day in the old country as she never was known before. Why, the Deputy Minister of the Interior told us yesterday that immigration to Canada was only just starting, and that they expected thousands upon thousands of people to come to our shores during the next few months. I have a lot of figures here which I do not know as it is necessary for me to enter into.

Mr. HENDERSON. Go on.

Mr. BURNETT. For the benefit of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), I will give him a few of these figures. Until the Liberal government came into power, there was no record kept of Canadians returning from the United States; but this government keeps a record of every Canadian who is repatriated. Here are the figures for the last few years :

Immigrant Arrivals in Canada.

	Ocean Ports.	United States.	Total.
1896	16,835	16,835
1897	19,304	712	20,016
1898	22,781	9,119	31,900
1899	32,598	11,945	44,543

Prior to 1897, the records are incomplete of arrivals from the United States; in fact, it would appear that the tide from that country to this had not set in up to that time. The hon. member (Mr. Davis) told us to-day that immigrants were flocking in from Minnesota, and bringing with them money to invest in Canada.

Declared Settlers at Atlantic Ocean Ports.

The nationalities of declared settlers cannot be defined before 1893; 'Returned Canadians' are not noted before 1894, and the section 'Tourists' was established in 1898.

Returned Canadians. Tourists.

1896	16,835	317	...
1897	19,304	484	...
1898	21,623	1,427	213
1899	32,561	1,913	196

The Conservatives tell us that they are opposed to preferential trade, but if they were in power to-morrow, they would not attempt to change the preferential tariff. They have never said they would do so, and they do not intend to do it. These gentlemen opposite tell us that we are giving a lot away to England, and some of them say that we are giving something substantial to England and getting no return.

Mr. BEATTIE. Hear, hear.

Mr. BURNETT. There is not a man on the other side of the House who will live to see the day that England will change her free trade policy. What would you think of England if she taxed the bread-supply of her artisans so that the article they manufactured would be made dearer? It is impossible to think of such a thing.

Mr. BEATTIE. She will do it before long. The artisan cannot buy bread if he has not the money to do it.

Mr. BURNETT. If the opposition remain in opposition until the English people tax foreign breadstuffs for the benefit of Canada, they will be in opposition a long time; that is my candid opinion.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to refer to the many good measures which this government has introduced; but I am going to name a few of them, for the sake of those who are so obtuse as not to know them. The first thing we did when we got into power was to settle the Manitoba school question. We had not been in power long before we removed the live stock embargo. That has been a boon to Canada which the Conservatives never attempted to obtain, or never felt it possible to obtain. We extended the Intercolonial Railway, which has been a good thing for Canada, resulting in a surplus in the management of that road in place of the deficits which existed year after year under Conservative control. We deepened the canals, another good thing for Canada. We built the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. We secured a reduction in the transportation rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway. We got a reduction of Imperial and domestic postage rates. We repealed the Franchise Act, and gave manhood suffrage, one man one vote, and residential voting. We introduced a cold storage system—not a one-horse system, but an up-to-date system—such a system that, as we heard in the committee the other day, in Denmark and Sweden, which have been competing with us in butter, they have had to call a meeting to find out how it is that Canada can compete with them in matters of that kind. We governed the Yukon in such a way that it has become a paying institution. We wiped out the deficit in the Post Office Department. We readjusted the tariff. We reduced the tariff on 953 articles, only nine articles having as high a duty as before. We enlarged the free list. We gave Great Britain a preference of 25 per cent, and this session we have given an additional preference to make it equal to 33½ per cent. We secured by our reciprocal tariff the denunciation of the Belgian and German treaties. We increased our trade from $232,000,000 in 1896 to $304,000,000 in 1898. We tried to repeal the gerrymander Act, but we were burked in that attempt. The Liberal government have a few things to do which they have not yet done. It is just a question whether they will have time enough during this parliament to accomplish everything they intended; but they are making a brave effort to do it. When they come in after the general election, they will commence where they have stopped, and they will complete the programme. The country did not expect that they would do any more than they have done. They have done as much as any reasonable business man could expect of them, and they have done it as fast as they possibly could. But when they come back again, they will complete the programme, and the country will boom and prosper as it never did before.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the hon. gentleman who is leading the House will consent to an adjournment at this hour, as it is quite impossible for me to get through within a reasonable time. We have sat later now than we have done almost any night before.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I am sorry my hon. friend does not feel in the humour to go on for an hour or so. The acting leader of the opposition the other night complained of our adjourning so early, and we have only had five speeches to-day.

Mr. WALLACE. That is doing pretty well.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If we are to have only five speeches a day, we shall be here till next summer. However, I do not wish to do anything unreasonable.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall esteem it a favour if the hon. gentleman will consent to adjourn, and I will attempt to make up for it by shortening my speech to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 20, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (Three Rivers). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire again to call the attention of the government to the fact that the report of the Postmaster General has not yet been brought down. I met the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock)—I am sorry he is not in his seat—and I expressed the anxiety which we felt to have this report, because it is quite impossible to discuss any matters connected with the department until the report is down. The session is far advanced, and I think that we have been waiting so long, and I have been pressing the government so often to bring it down that I should like to ask if the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would tell me whether it is likely to be brought down and when?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) had the privilege of seeing the Postmaster General since I saw him.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I saw him yesterday.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, I did not see him at all to-day. I will call the attention of the Postmaster General to the matter.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I wish to ask, when will the report of the Minister of Justice be brought down? It contains useful information which we should have, at least at this time of the session. I am aware that on former occasions, they have been rather tardy about presenting this report to the House, and I do not see any good reason why that should be the case.

The PRIME MINISTER. I shall make inquiry and give an answer on Monday.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). We have found great inconvenience in the Agricultural Committee because the report of the Department of the Interior has not yet been presented. We had the deputy minister under examination the other day with reference to immigration, and we were not able to discuss the matter in the absence of the report. According to law, the report should be laid on the Table of the House within fifteen days after the meeting of parliament.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) brought the matter to my attention some time ago, and I found on inquiry, that the business is considerably blocked in the Printing Bureau. There was also some delay as the report had not been received from the Commissioner of the Yukon territory. I thought it better that the departmental report should be printed at once, and to publish the Yukon report afterwards in a supplement. I have given instructions to have the work carried out as quickly as possible, and I hope we shall receive it from the printer in a few days.

SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. JAMES M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the government to the working of the seed grain indebtedness legislation, passed last session. Since the discussion on the question in the House during the present session, I have received several communications setting forth that the legislation is not at all satisfactory as far as the settlers in the west are concerned. It was proposed to relieve the settlers from their obligations as bondsmen and to hold the individual debtors responsible; but difficulties stood in the way—

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas), but I want to draw his attention to the difficulty he will have in dealing with that question, which has been already so thoroughly discussed by the House.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I merely wish to call the attention of the government to the fact that difficulties are at present existing.

Mr. SPEAKER. I wish to point out the difficulty the hon. gentleman will have in discussing the question at this stage.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall not discuss it further than to point out the difficulties that arise under the present Act. A Mr. Adam Crabb, of Balgonie, has been asked to produce an affidavit as to the financial status of his neighbour for whom he had become bondsman for seed grain. The House will easily see the difficulty of asking one settler to make affidavit as to the financial condition of another. Such would necessarily entail a great deal of ill-feeling amongst the settlers. Then there is another method that is proposed by the Department of the Interior in reference to the case of Mr. John Dies, of Qu'Appelle, who is held responsible for a Mr. Huck, and two others by the name of Zerr. In this case he is asked to pay the indebtedness of these three gentlemen and to recover the amount in the civil courts. It must appear to the House as being somewhat unreasonable that one settler should be called upon to appeal to the civil courts to recover a loss entailed by the enforcement of this Act. I shall not dwell upon it further than to hope that the government will reconsider the operation of the Act at an early date, and if possible bring to a close these unseemly results of the operation of the law amongst the settlers of the North-west.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I believe it was the intention of the Minister of the Interior, and of parliament, when the Act was passed last session, that it would relieve the bondsmen for seed grain indebtedness in the North-west. In the practical working out of the Act, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas) is perhaps correct in saying that difficulties have unexpectedly arisen. I brought the matter to the attention of the government, and I am pleased to say that they are prepared to introduce a Bill at an early date, and meet the views of my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas).

CANADIAN CATTLE IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. LEONARD BURNETT (South Ontario). I desire to ask the Prime Minister, if the attention of the government has been called to the fact that the British government have prohibited the importation of Argentine cattle? It is a matter of vital importance to the people of this country, and, I may say also, that the time is about due for the government of Canada to ask to have the embargo removed from Canadian cattle.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), I may say, that on seeing the report in the newspapers, he at once cabled to the Canadian High Commissioner in London, and received an answer to the effect, that on inquiry, it was found that the American cattle that were shipped to England did not have this disease before they left American soil. They are supposed to have contracted it by coming in contact with some foreign cattle, perhaps Argentine cattle. It is not the intention of the Imperial authorities to apply the restrictions to the American cattle, but restrictions have been applied to Argentine cattle.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the minister (Mr. Sutherland), explain the mixing up of cattle sent from the United States with Argentine cattle on their way across the ocean?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not say it was on the way across the ocean. I said this was the reply received from the High Commissioner in England, as I was informed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). It may have been on their arrival in England or perhaps from the American cattle being sent in a vessel previously used for the transport of Argentine cattle, but I have no information in my possession to give as to that. However, I am pleased to say that on investigation, the British authorities did not find that any disease exists in the United States, and for that reason there will be no restriction placed on American cattle now, so that we have no reason to fear. The matter will receive the closest attention on the part of the Minister of Agriculture and of the government, as well as the authorities at home, and if any disease should be discovered immediate action will be taken to see that no injury comes to our cattle.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALACE (West York). What is the meaning of 'immediate action'?

Is it that the quarantine regulations will be made more stringent, so that United States cattle will be kept out of Canada, and Canadian cattle kept out of the United States? Is that the course the government proposes to take? The government took a very serious course when they left us open in Canada to have the strictest regulations enforced against Canadian cattle, such as are now enforced against Argentine cattle, and may at any time be enforced against the cattle of the United States.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I do not think my hon. friend has answered the question put by the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Burnett). If I understood the hon. gentleman correctly, he asked if it was true that the British authorities have lately ordered a slaughter of our cattle within about five days of their arrival, as announced in the newspapers. The hon. gentleman has not answered that at all. He has simply given a despatch from the High Commissioner, but has not touched on that subject.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought I made myself clear. I understood the hon. gentleman's question to be, whether the government were aware that an embargo had been placed on Argentine cattle.

Mr. BURNETT. That is the question I asked.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And also with regard to the report of disease having broken out at Deptford among cattle from the United States. In reply to the first question, I said that an embargo had been placed on Argentine cattle but not on American cattle, as upon investigation the Imperial authorities found that apparently no disease existed in the United States, but that the disease among the American cattle had been contracted by their coming in contact with other cattle.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the minister another question? What length of time under the regulations, have American cattle to be kept at a British port before being slaughtered?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not able to answer that question, but I will inquire.

Mr. BURNETT. I think my question ought to embrace the question, whether the government have taken any steps to have the embargo removed, in consequence of the Argentine cattle not being allowed to go in?

INQUIRIES FOR REPORTS AND RETURNS.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I would like to ask when the report of the Department of Militia and Defence will be laid on the Table of the House. We have now reached the seventy-ninth day of the session, and we hear to-day that a great many of the important departments of the government have not yet laid their reports on the Table of the House. The business of the House and the country cannot be discussed intelligently and properly until we have these reports. It is very important in this war session that we should have the report of the Minister of Militia and Defence at the earliest possible moment; yet at this advanced stage of the session that report is not yet in our possession.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). If the hon. gentleman had been in his place when the same question was put two or three days ago, he would have heard my statement with reference to it; first, that the report of the Minister of Militia and Defence comes down to the 31st of December, 1899, and therefore there is perhaps some excuse for its being somewhat delayed; secondly, that it was now and had been for some time in the printer's hands, and that I hoped to be able to lay it on the Table of the House some time next week.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the minister whether any important changes have been made in that report since it went into the printer's hands?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like the Prime Minister to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals to see that his report is brought down at an early day. It will be impossible to discuss his estimates without that report.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). I would like to make inquiry as to the whereabouts of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). I have been looking for him for several days now, and I have not been able to find him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was not here last night when the Postmaster General was present.

Mr. FOSTER. He comes in at odd hours when one cannot ask him these questions. For instance, I asked him for a return, and he was so kind the other night that I suspected there was something in the wind. I got my return. I asked for 'a tabular statement of all contracts and agreements for mail service between Victoria and Vancouver and the Yukon district for the year 1898-9, the names of parties thereto, the routes covered, amounts paid or to be paid for such service, and a similar return for the year 1899 and 1900, so far as they are current.' What did I get? I got the important information that for 1899 $300 a trip was paid on one route, $50 a trip on another and $50 a trip on a third; but as to the number of trips that were made, there is not a word. Consequently, the return gives none of the information that I wanted. If it had given the number of trips and the amount paid, that would have been something. In reference to the other portion of the question, I got the important information that the sum paid is 10 cents a pound for letters, a half-cent a pound for newspapers and 5 cents a pound for other matter. That does not give me any information as to what it cost the country that year. This is simply no return at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the Minister of Agriculture?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) has to be away sometimes.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not paid a salary.

Mr. FOSTER. I also asked for a return of the statutory increases for 1898-9 and for the first half of the year 1899-1900, and the amount of the increase paid. The return gives the information I want for all the departments except the Departments of Agriculture and the Interior, which have lumped the two years, and I cannot tell which is one and which is the other. If the return were sent to the ministers, they would have these figured up.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty; and the motion of Sir Charles Tupper in amendment thereto.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Burnett) who last addressed this House, congratulated the country on the large degree of prosperity which existed in Canada. I am sure that we on this side of the House are ever ready to join hon. gentlemen opposite in expressing our gratitude for the large measure of prosperity that is enjoyed not only in this country, but in the United States, in Great Britain, in Germany, in France and in all other European countries. But to say that the prosperity which prevails to-day in Canada and in every other country throughout the world is due to the government of Canada is something with which we cannot agree. To my mind, the present prosperity of Canada rather obtains in spite of the government. The hon. gentleman told us that raw material was cheaper, and claimed that as one of the reasons for the increased prosperity of the country. Well, Sir, if raw material is cheaper by reason of it being admitted into this country free of duty, it is certainly not the present government that can claim any credit for that. I am aware of scarcely an article of raw material that has been placed on the free list by the present government. Beyond a few items of steel for the manufacture of augers, hammers, saws and sickles, scythes and reaping-hooks that the people do not want to use—beyond these and the admission of mushroom spawn, I challenge the government to name any article of importance which they have put upon the free list. The free list of to-day is almost wholly the free list that the present government found on the statutes when they came into power in 1896.

Then, the hon. gentleman claimed credit for the deepening of the canals to fourteen feet. Surely he does not want us to believe that he is so lacking in intelligence as to think the people are not aware that the deepening of the canals was undertaken by the late Sir John Macdonald many years ago, and was prosecuted almost to completion by the Liberal-Conservative party when in office, leaving only a few contracts to be finished in order to provide a continuous course of navigation from the upper lakes to the sea.

The hon. gentleman then proceeded to claim credit for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. To my mind, that was not a business transaction, particularly when we consider that it was only completed at the sacrifice of a million dollars more than it should have cost.

The Crow's Nest Pass Railway he mentioned as one of the achievements of this government, but I cannot conceive how any of these hon. gentlemen can boast of a contract in which this government gave away $2,000,000 of the people's money for nothing.

Cold storage was pointed to by the hon. gentleman as another achievement of this government. But, surely he must be aware, as a farmer, that cold storage had its inception with the Minister of Agriculture in the late government, and all that the present government has done has been to continue the wise policy then inaugurated.

The hon. gentleman claimed a great deal of credit for the repeal of the Franchise Act. We now have, he said, one man one vote. But he evidently forgot that while in one province we may have one man one vote, in another we have one man a dozen votes. He also failed to tell us that the miserable substitute which was put in place of the repealed Franchise Act is such an utter failure that one of the chief cities of the Dominion remained unrepresented for twelve months, because the new law would not work.

Then the hon. gentleman made a statement, which was the one accurate statement in his whole speech. He said there were a few things the present government has not done. Had he said many things he would have been still more accurate, but I am glad to find that there are some hon.

gentlemen on that side who still have the honesty to admit that the present government has not carried out its pledges. I am certain that the hon. gentleman was perfectly sincere in making the statement he did, and that he made it conscious of the fact that the opportunities left the government for implementing its pledges are now very brief. Delays are dangerous, and if the hon. gentleman wants his friends to fulfil their pledges, I would advise him to urge immediate action on their part.

Let me refer to some matters in regard to which these hon. gentlemen have not implemented their pledges. Take, for instance, the independence of parliament, and what do we find? During the three years that have elapsed since the present government took office, thirteen members of parliament, after sitting behind the Treasury benches and supporting the government in the most servile manner, have retired from public life with their commissions in their pocket.

Then, take the question of the abolition of railway bonuses, on which these hon. gentlemen were so very emphatic when in opposition. What have they done since coming into office? Why, instead of abolishing the bonuses, they have doubled them. Three thousand two hundred dollars per mile they found altogether too much before they got control of the public purse. But since then, they have found $3,200 not sufficient, and now they are handing over $6,400 per mile to the railway contractors.

Then, we were promised clean elections. But, what about Brockville and West Huron? Has the hon. gentleman forgotten that the present government dare not permit an investigation into the election frauds in those constituencies.

Then, these hon. gentlemen promised us a business government. But, what kind of a business government have we got? One of its first acts was to give to the farmers of the western prairies of the United States a free market in our country for their surplus corn without asking anything in return. Would you call that business, Mr. Speaker?

Another act of theirs is the granting of a preferential tariff, which gives the artisans of Great Britain and the low-priced labour of France and Germany a market in this country for their manufactures at a reduced duty, without our obtaining anything in return for the artisans and manufacturers of our own country. By reason of the government's preferential policy, the German market has practically been closed against the farm products of this country. Take the fast Atlantic service, which should have been completed by this time, had we a government composed of business men. But, after years of delay and numerous crossings and recrossings of the Atlantic, we are told that its completion is as far off as ever.

The Crow's Nest Pass deal was certainly no evidence of the business capacity of the government.

We were promised a reduction in taxation, a reduction in expenditures, a reduction in the national debt—have we been given any of these things? I presume that the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Burnett) must have been smarting under the disappointment caused by his leaders having failed to implement every promise they made, since he drew attention to the fact that the promises they made in 1896 have not been implemented. In 1896, the Liberal leaders were full of promises. In Montreal they promised that coal and iron would be free. In Nova Scotia they promised free cotton and coal oil. In Manitoba they promised free agricultural implements and binder twine. In Ontario they promised to wipe out the last vestige of protection. They had a policy for every province. But, what are the facts? The iron bounties have been increased, thus increasing the taxation of the people. Coloured cottons have not been reduced in duty, as promised the people of Nova Scotia, but have been raised in duty from 30 per cent to 35 per cent, and gray cottons have been raised from 22½ per cent to 25 per cent. Coal oil has not been made free, but the regulations which protected the coal oil industry in this country were so altered that those who had money invested in that industry were compelled to sell out their refineries and take what they could get from the great octopus that has laid its grasp upon this country, the Standard Oil Company. These people feared that if they waited two or three years longer their property would not be worth a dollar, and so they took what they could get. The consequence is that to-day we have but one oil refinery in Canada, and that is the Standard Oil Company—a foreign institution, and a gigantic trust, which can make the price what it pleases. It is supreme, without competition or opposition, owing to this change of the regulations in 1897 by this government. The price of coal oil has since been increased from three cents to five cents, according to quantity, entailing a loss to the people of this country of from $600,000 to $1,000,000 on the 20,000,000 gallons that we consume.

Then, what about the free binder twine which we were promised? No doubt the government removed the import duty from binder twine, but have they given us free twine? Is the manufacture not surrounded by circumstances that prevent binder twine being free? Are the farmers free to buy twine at the Kingston Penitentiary at a reasonable price? Under the removal of the duty, the largest factory in the country, the one at Halifax, was compelled to give up business as a twine factory. The management found that if half the twine required for this country was to come in from the United States, which would be a reasonable thing under free trade, the market of this country was not sufficient to support all the factories in Canada making twine. So they changed their property to a cordage factory and discontinued the making of twine, leaving the manufacture of this article of absolute need to every farmer in the hands of the smaller institutions and of the two governments, who combined with an American trust and placed the prices at whatever figure that that trust dictated. Let us look for a moment at the present prices and see how the farmers of the country are suffering to-day.

We find from the Auditor General's Report that last year prior to 30th June, 1899, the government purchased for the making of twine in the Kingston Penitentiary—and this purchase would largely go into the product that is being sold to the farmers this year—62½ tons of manila of 2,240 pounds each, or a total of 140,000 pounds, for $6,995 laid down in Kingston, or 5 cents per pound. Now, we all know that there is not a pound of manila in a pound of twine. A portion of the weight in a pound of twine consists merely of cordage oil—80 per cent of manila is the limit and 20 per cent of cordage oil. Now, 80 per cent of 5 cents, the price paid for a pound of manila, would be 4 cents. The price of the oil in one pound of twine is one-fifth of a cent, making a total cost of raw material for the twine in Kingston Penitentiary 4·20 cents a pound. The manufacture, according to the report of the Minister of Justice, costs 75 cents per hundred pounds, or ¾ of a cent per pound. This makes the total cost of the twine in the Kingston Penitentiary 4·95 cents a pound. And, Mr. Speaker, would you believe it, the farmers of this country are permitted by this Liberal government to buy that at ton lots or under at 14 cents a pound, fully 9 cents more than the actual cost of the article to the government. I say it now, and I have said it before, the manufacture of twine in the Kingston Penitentiary was never established for the purpose of making a profit; it was established for maintaining a level of prices, of preventing outside manufacturers raising the price on the farmers, and of enabling the farmers always to buy the twine at a reasonable price. The government of the day, however, apparently with the idea of permitting outside industries to realize the highest possible price they could, adds fully 9 cents to the price of twine over and above the actual cost and tells the farmers they can take it or leave it.

But, let us take some other statistics. I find on the 1st March, 1899, manila in New York cost 7½ cents, and sisal, according to the Cordage Journal, an excellent authority, cost 6½ cents. Now, let us see what the cost on the basis of these figures would be of a pound of twine made from material bought, apparently, at a later date than that bought by the government for the Kingston Penitentiary. At Brantford the best quality of twine that is made consists of 40 per cent sisal and 60 per cent manila. On this basis, there would be 48 per cent of manilla in every pound of twine and also 32 per cent of sisal, leaving 20 per cent for the cordage oil. Now, 48 per cent of 7½ cents, the price of a pound of manila, would be 3·60 cents; 32 per cent of 6½ cents, the cost of a pound of sisal, would be 2·6 cents.

Allowing 20 cents for the cordage oil and 75 cents for manufacture, we have a total of 6·71 cents as the cost of a pound of twine made in the Brantford factory—a fraction less than 6½ cents. To-day the government is holding the price up to 14 cents to the farmers to enable the Brantford factory to obtain from the farmers of this country 7½ cents a pound more than it actually costs them to make it.

Ah, we are told, it is the advance in raw manila that has caused the increase in the price of the twine. But I ask this House, if the raw material had advanced to the extent it is alleged to have done, how would it be possible for the Brantford company to make 100 per cent profit on its transactions? The fact that they had that profit is the best evidence that they were buying manila cheaper than it is alleged they did. We were told that protection was to be wiped out. It is true the government conducted what we may call the departmental store policy; they ran the duty up in order that they might run it down. They increased coloured cotton goods from 30 per cent to 35 per cent, and then cut off enough to make the duty 26½ per cent on what comes from England. They adopted a new principle in regard to the tariff—had a sort of bargain day. Some duties they increased, and some they reduced; some industries were helped, and some were hurt. Apparently, the government were going it blind. The iron industry, no doubt, was helped. Those in the iron industry were the friends of the government. The cotton industry was helped, being given an additional protection of 2½ or 5 per cent. But what about the woollen industry which is as important a one to the people as the cotton industry? What about the leather industry, an industry of very great importance indeed? While the iron and cotton industries were helped, the woollen and leather industries were injured. Permit me to read, Sir, a resolution that was passed in Toronto the other day, a resolution passed at a joint meeting of the executive, parliamentary and tariff committees of the Manufacturers' Association. I read this resolution because it fully explains the matter, and in a way very much better than I can do. The resolution reads as follows:

That while this association is heartily in favour of the principle of allowing a reasonable preference on goods manufactured in Great Britain, it desires to put itself on record as being strongly in favour of a reciprocal preferential trade between Canada and every part of the British Empire. While holding these views, however, they are strongly of the opinion that the minimum tariff on goods produced in the mother country or any part of the British Empire should nevertheless be high enough to afford adequate protection to existing Canadian manufacturing industries;

That the Canadian Manufacturers' Association draws the attention of the government to the fact that the proposed increase of the preference from 25 per cent to 33½ per cent, while beneficially affecting certain manufacturers by reducing the cost of their raw material, will, nevertheless, cause serious loss in other lines of manufacture, which loss will be accentuated by dullness of general trade, either at home or abroad.

As I said before, some are helped and some are hurt. One industry is benefited while another injured. The woollen industry must suffer, while the cotton industry is given a preference. The iron industry is given a benefit, but the leather industry is compelled to suffer.

Among the most prominent of these may be mentioned the woollen trade—a growing industry which will be seriously checked by increased British competition, and this association strongly recommends the adequate protection of this and the other industries affected to the consideration of the government.

That the Canadian Manufacturers' Association further desires to draw the attention of the government to the fact that in some lines goods are coming into Canada from Great Britain and getting the full benefit of the preferential tariff, although in some cases all, and in other cases almost all, the labour expended on them is not British, but foreign. In such a case the preference acts, not against the foreign manufacturer, but against the Canadian, and to remedy this the government is strongly urged to raise the percentage of British labour in manufactured goods entitled to the preferential duty from 25 per cent to 50 per cent before this preference can be obtained; and also to use most stringent measures to guard against false returns being made leading to the importation of foreign goods under the name of British manufactures.

That the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, while appreciating the need of adjustment of duties to suit special circumstances, recommend to the government that it adopt the principle of making no general revision in tariff oftener than once in five years, in order that greater stability and confidence may be given to business investments, and that in any case sufficient notice be given to the manufacturers to enable them to present their views for the consideration of the government before any changes are put into operation.

To my mind that report is an admirable one, and it speaks for itself. It is not necessary for me to add any comment. Now, the report draws attention to the fact that the woollen industry will certainly be injured. I do not intend to say more about that; but I do say that there are other industries that are going to be materially injured which are not so specifically referred to, and I will refer to one, the leather industry. The county of Halton, which I have the honour to represent, is one of the homes of the leather industry. We have the largest tanneries, I may say, in the Dominion of Canada, we have in that county the largest manufactory of gloves to be found in the Dominion of Canada; and I feel sure that these industries will not be benefited by the preferential tariff which it is proposed to put upon the statute-book this session. Last year there were imported, in gloves and mitts alone, into this country, $723,740 worth, 37 per cent of these coming in under the preferential tariff. But, mark; glove leather, for the use of glove manufacturers, was imported to the extent of $118,986; and instead of 37 per cent of the raw material coming in under the preferential tariff, there was only a miserable 3 per cent; so that, the glove manufacturer who had formerly a protection of 35 per cent is now placed in this position, the 33½ per cent preference in favour of Great Britain is also in favour of Germany, and in favour of France, because in Germany they make leather for gloves, they cannot sew them together and send them to England, where they are finished, where the buttons and fasteners are put on, the value enhanced by 25 per cent, and the whole thing comes into this country as an English production, and claims the benefit of the preference. Thus, the glove manufacturer is compelled to compete against the pauper labour of Europe, and the low-priced labour of England. How, I ask, are men going to pay white men's wages under the preferential tariff in favour of the British manufacturer? Deduct 33½ per cent off the 35 per cent, and we have 23 per cent of protection. But, against that the glove manufacturer pays 10 per cent on glove leather, with scarcely a cent of reduction on account of the preferential duty, leaving only a miserable 13 per cent to compensate him between the labour of this country and the cheap labour of Great Britain. I ask, how is the manufacturer of this country going to maintain his industry? How is he going to pay wages three times as much as are paid in Great Britain for the same service and carry on his industry, employ labour and provide work for his workmen? I ask how it is to be done. I remember a few years ago a gentleman who was largely engaged in this industry, telling me that he had been over in England. There he called upon a brother of one of his workmen at the request of the man he employed. In the course of their conversation he inquired the prices he obtained for doing certain work. Why, says this gentleman, I have to pay three times that price. How do you manage to live? Oh, well, he says, we manage to live. But, how are you able to lay by anything for old age when you are unable to work? Oh, well, he says, we can lay past nothing, but then, you know, Mister, we have a very good poorhouse in our country. And that, Sir, is the level to which hon. gentlemen opposite would bring Canadian workingmen, to a poorhouse, such as they have in the old country, by compelling our workingmen to work for wages not sufficient to live on, much less to enable them to lay by anything for the future. I regret, Sir, that in my county, at the present time, there are 150 or 175 men walking the streets of the village in which I live because their employer, a large manufacturer of sole and harness leather and belting leather, says he cannot pay them wages that will enable them to live. From 1892 to 1896, during the years of depression in Canada, during the years of depression in Great Britain, in the United States and the world over, these men were paid on the basis of $1.25 a day. But, Sir, the Liberal leaders of this country went through it and told the people that when they came into power free trade, as they have it in England, would be the policy of this country; and these firms employing these 150 or 175 men in their tanneries anticipating that the government would be faithful to their pledges, did not wait for the tariff to come down, but called their men together and said: We must reduce your wages; and from $1.25 a day their wages were reduced to $1.10. But, notwithstanding the betterment of the times, these men have, in that drudgery of work, been compelled to accept a reduction of $50 a year, simply because the government had propounded a policy that was going to ruin the industries of this country. I sympathize deeply with these men, I realize that their employers ought to have advanced their wages when they found the government had not implemented their pledges to destroy the sole leather industry; they did not injure it so badly after all, because not much sole leather comes from the old country here, although belting leather does to a considerable extent. But yet, the moral effect of the teachings of hon. gentlemen was such that the employers took advantage of the situation, and cut the wages of the men to the extent of $50 year after year, and putting this money into their own pockets, money that was honestly earned by these workingmen. A government that will aid and abet any man or institution in robbing men of a portion of the reward to which they are entitled and putting the money into their own pockets, I say are not entitled to the confidence of the workingmen of this country, nor do I believe, when the time comes, that these men will record their votes in favour of the party who has been the means of reducing their wages, taking away from them what they are entitled to, and compelling them to live on a miserable pittance when otherwise they would be comfortable from year to year.

Then, Sir, the agricultural industry, I say, has been discriminated against. Our market has been handed over to the United States for their surplus corn, and we get nothing in return. True, the farmers of this country, many of them, expected, the moment the Liberals got into power, that all they would have to do was to ship their barley to the United States, and they would get a high price for it. Well, the only satisfaction they have received is that the very means by which we might have obtained free barley has been handed over to the people of the United States without a dollar of compensation to Canada. Then, the duty on wheat was reduced, the duty on flour was reduced. We know that in seasons of scarcity the national policy had something to do with maintaining the price of wheat in this country. In 1895 we had a short crop in the province of Ontario, yes, and in 1899, we had a short crop in Ontario, but, in the one season, we had a higher protective tariff, and in the other season we had a lower protective tariff. In 1895 wheat sold in the city of Toronto at 20 cents over the Liverpool price, and the Liverpool price is regarded as the standard. To-day, where is the Canadian price? To-day, what can people get in the city of Toronto for wheat?—not 20 cents over the Liverpool price, but 22 cents under the Liverpool price. That is the difference between the two policies. Have the government done anything to benefit the farmers of this country along that line? If they have power to do it, in all conscience, let them get to work, as the hon. member for South Ontario said, implement their promises and do something if they can. The farmer was discriminated against by reason of the preference inasmuch as the German government, in retaliation, put a duty of nearly 5 cents a bushel on oats, of over 3 cents a bushel on peas, and of 9 7-10 cents a bushel on wheat, almost absolutely excluding us from that market; at any rate, if we do go there we are compelled to pay to the extent of these duties before we can reach it, and that means so much less in the pockets of the farmers of this country. Then, they were, still further, to reduce taxation. The burdens of the people were to be rolled off. So, in order to roll them off, they placed a duty on tobacco amounting to $1,151,345, and a more unjustifiable tax never was imposed upon a free people. What right had the government to impose a tax of 10 cents or 14 cents a pound on an article, when it was not required for revenue purposes? Do you mean to tell me that a man has no right to use tobacco? I say that this is a free country, and that one man has just as much right to smoke his cigar, or his pipe, as another man has to drink his tea, or his coffee. I see no reason why one-fifth of the people of this country, because it is only one-fifth of the population that are users of tobacco, should be taxed to the extent of over $1,000,000, while the other four-fifths go free. It is largely amongst the toilers of this country, amongst the farmers and amongst the workmen that we find the men who use tobacco. In their long winter evenings, when they are free from their hard day's toil, they want a solace, something to give them a little comfort, and they find it in the use of tobacco. Who will deny these men the right to which they are entitled or the privilege which they enjoy?

Now, we spoke about tariff reform, and hon. gentlemen opposite would lead us to understand that they have reformed the tariff. We have given some idea of how it was reformed—reformed without rhyme or reason, no consideration given to material interests, one industry hurt and another one helped, but no particular system to govern in the matter. In 1894, the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), gave us a true tariff reform; he selected between 175 and 200 articles, took them off the dutiable list and placed them on the free list. How many articles have been placed on the free list by this government? I think the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) claimed, the other day, that they had placed 21 articles on the free list, and some of these, I may say, are of very small importance indeed. What advantage is it to the farmers of this country, that he placed mushroom spawn on the free list? How much money is that going to put into the pockets of the farmers? The farmers laugh at it, and they laugh at the silliness of the contention, that this is one of the things that is going to benefit the farmers. These articles that were placed on the free list by the hon. ex-Minister of Finance, in 1894, were articles that ranged from 5 per cent to 35 per cent, and many of them were of very material importance. There were many others on which the duty was very largely reduced, and largely those that were reduced were the chief and most costly implements used by the agriculturists of this country. The harrow, the plough, the cultivator, the seed-drill, the mower, the binder, all those implements that every farmer must have and that cost a considerable sum of money, were reduced from 35 per cent to 20 per cent, were placed on the minimum tariff list in order to give to the farmers the greatest advantage possible. That reduction was made by the Conservative party in 1894, a measure of reform, which, I say, was a true advantage to the farmers of this country. Now, the hon. member for South Ontario complains that all the promises of the Liberal party have not been implemented; he complains that there are various things still to be carried out. They promised that we should have a reduction in the expenditure. In the convention held in Ottawa in 1893, the leading lights of the Liberal party met in solemn conclave to declare their policy, and they commenced by saying that:

We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion.

They do not seem to view with so much alarm now, the increase in the national debt. I regret that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), is not in his place. I desire to thank him for the courtesy extended to me about a quarter to one o'clock this morning, when he agreed that I should move the adjournment of the debate, instead of going on to speak at that unseemly hour in the morning. I felt very grateful to him for doing so. The hon. Mr. Davies, in 1893, said:

The Liberal party says that several millions may be lopped off the present expenditure.

The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), also made a statement. He said:

The Liberal party, if in power, could at once reduce the public expenditure by $5,000,000.

I simply enumerate these to show how far hon. gentlemen did go on that occasion in making promises and pledges to the people. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), perhaps the most promising member of the whole party, although, perhaps, the poorest performer—Mr. Laurier at that time—this was before he became Sir Wilfrid Laurier; this was at a time when he was a democrat to the hilt, no tin-pot titles would be recognized by him, and when he appeared before the people as plain Wilfrid Laurier—said:

We will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie.

I suppose he meant, that, at the end of five years, he would give up power and go back to private life.

Mr. COCHRANE. That promise should be carried out.

Mr. HENDERSON. He said:

The amount of the expenditure can be reduced by some $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 a year.

Then, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), declared that:

A yearly expenditure of $38,000,000 is altogether too large. Sir, the thing is utterly unjustifiable.

Yet, he can stand up in his place, to-day, and defend an expenditure of millions and millions more.

There is nothing—

Says the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mullock):

—to warrant this enormous expenditure of nearly $38,000,000.

The hon. Minister of Customs, in 1890, declared that:

An era of economy in expenditure should at once be entered upon.

When the Liberals are going to enter upon an era of economy, I am not aware, but certainly they have not yet reached that stage. As evidences that the Liberals have not made any attempt to carry out their policy as declared to the people when they were seeking their support in 1896 and previous years, I will trouble the House with a few figures.

The expenditure in 1896 on consolidated revenue fund was $36,949,142, and the expenditure in 1899 on the same account had increased to $41,903,500, an increase of $4,954,358, or nearly $5,000,000. So much for the ordinary expenditure of the country. On capital account the Liberals increased the expenditure from $3,781,311 in 1896, to $5,936,342 in 1899, or an increase of $2,155,031.

The total expenditure of the country in 1896, according to the blue-books, was $44,096,383, but in 1899, notwithstanding all the promises and pledges of reduction, the Liberals increased it to $51,542,635, or an increase in the annual total expenditure of $7,446,252. Now, Sir, let me take a period a little longer than three years and I will give the Liberals the benefit of a comparison. In 1893 the expenditure on consolidated fund account was $36,814,052, and in 1899, (six years afterwards) it had reached $41,903,500, or an increase of $5,089,448. The total expenditure being $40,853,772 in 1893; in 1899 it had increased to $51,542,635. In that short period of six years, three of which were under Conservative rule and three under Liberal rule the annual expenditure was increased by $10,689,108, but I need not tell you that the major part of this increase was under the Liberal regime.

The net debt of the country between 1896 and 1899 increased from $258,497,432 to $266,273,446, or an increase in the public debt of this country in the short space of three years amounting to $7,776,014. Perhaps one of the best ways to gauge the expenditure is to ascertain how much of the expenditure is borne by every individual in the country. It is better understood in that way than to speak of it as millions of money, and therefore, when we divide the population into the actual expenditure on consolidated revenue account in 1896, we find that the per capita rate was $7.21 while the per capita rate in the year 1899 with an increased population was $7.88. The average total expenditure per head in 1896, per head of the population was $8.63, but under the guidance of the Liberal government, pledged to economy and reduced expenditure the rate per head of the total expenditure in 1899 had risen to $9.70. Hon. gentlemen on the other side answer this by telling us that the Conservatives also increased the expenditure of the country and increased the national debt. I have no hesitation in admitting that under Conservative rule the national debt of Canada was increased, but the Conservative party never went to the people and told them they would not increase the national debt if the interests of the country required it. Let me point out that from 1878 to 1896, the Conservative government constructed the Canadian Pacific Railway at a cost of $65,000,000; that they expended on the canal system of this country $36,000,000; that they aided the provinces by way of reduction of their debt to the extent of $10,000,000; that they contributed to the completion of the Intercolonial Railway $20,000,000; and that under other small items they added $11,000,000, making a total expenditure on capital account of $142,000,000 between 1878 and 1896 (I have given these figures in round numbers). But, Mr. Speaker, during that period the national debt of this country was only increased by $118,000,000, or $24,000,000 less than the actual expenditure on capital account. Now, Sir, I ask any gentleman on the opposite side of the House what item in this increased national debt is he prepared to declare was not in the interests of Canada. Are these gentlemen opposite going to tell us that the Intercolonial Railway should never have been built. Will they tell us that the provinces throughout the Dominion, who are hard run for finances and to whose rescue the Dominion government came in the hour of need should not have been aided; will they tell us that this $10,000,000 should be taken back from the provinces and placed in the coffers of the Dominion treasury? Will they tell us that the $36,000,000 expended on our canals, was an improper expenditure? Will they say that the Sault Canal should never have been built, and that the Welland Canal and the St. Lawrence Canals should never have been deepened. I trow not. Is there any gentleman on your right, Mr. Speaker, who will have the hardihood to stand up in this House and say that the Canadian Pacific Railway should never have been constructed. No matter what they said in years gone by about the Canadian Pacific Railway, the leaders of the Liberal party regard it as one of the most gigantic and profitable undertakings ever undertaken in Canada. Just to show you how this matter is regarded by the Prime Minister of Ontario, allow me to read to you from the inaugural speech delivered at Whitby by the Hon. G. W. Ross, when he became Premier.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is that the one that was franked around?

Mr. HENDERSON. This is the one which was franked around, but I am not going to find fault with it, more especially as it contains the few words which I am about to read and which makes it worth all that it cost the country. Says the Hon. Mr. Ross:

I remember when the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed that we thought Sir John A. Macdonald was undertaking a herculean enterprise; one that would crush the country, one that was too extensive for the resources of the country. I think perhaps he was right and we were wrong. I think perhaps he builded more wisely than he knew. No one to-day will say that the building of that railway was a mistake.

No, Mr. Speaker, no man in his sober senses will say that the $65,000,000 expended on the Canadian Pacific Railway was a mistake.

No one to-day would say that the building of that railway was a mistake. Canada to-day would be weaker in the councils of the empire; would scarcely be a federated Dominion as it is were it not for the Pacific Railway.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we have heard the last of this continuous cry about the increase of the national debt during the Conservative regime, so far at least as it relates to the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway as well as on the canals and on the completion of the Intercolonial Railway. Putting these items together, you make up value received for every dollar that was added by the Conservatives to the national debt of Canada.

Again, Sir, we were told during the by-gone days, when the Liberal leaders were wooing the votes of the electors of this country, that when they got into power the superannuation system would be abolished. Methinks I hear the voice of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) day after day resounding through this Chamber denouncing the superannuation system, and declaring how the Liberals, when they come to power, will abolish it. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am going to show you how they have abolished it. They have done so on the departmental store plan, putting the price up only to bring it down. We paid for superannuation:

In 1896.....	$311,231
" 1897.....	307,792
" 1898.....	340,185
" 1899.....	325,560

By 1899 the Liberal government had fairly got into swing. What it will amount to next year, I am not prepared to say. For the three years prior to the advent to power of the Liberal government—I mean for 1894, 1895 and 1896—the average annual expenditure on superannuation was $279,639, whereas for the three years of Liberal rule it ran up to $324,512, or an average increase of $44,873. Is it any wonder that we do not hear the voice of the hon. member for North Wellington about superannuation?

Then, Sir, credit is claimed for the government for having given us reduced postage. I find no fault personally with the reduction of the rate from three cents to two cents. I am perfectly satisfied that it means money in my pocket; and if the government can adopt a policy which will put money into the pockets of the people, they will receive the thanks of the people for it; but I am not in favour of a policy that will put money into one man's pocket and not into another's proportionately. There is no doubt that the reduction of postage is a boon to the business men of this country—to the men who write thirty, forty, fifty, or one hundred letters per day; they save just so many cents per day in consequence of it. But what about the farmer whose business does not require him to write more than half a dozen letters a week, perhaps not more than one or two? Where is he to get his share of the saving? Although the benefit of the decreased postage accrues mainly to the business men of the country, the farmer is taxed on his tobacco to make up the deficit. I submit that the Postmaster General is in duty bound to compensate those people for this unfair discrimination against them in the matter of the reduction of postage. There are many farmers throughout the country who have to travel three, four, five or six miles to get their mail matter. When the Postmaster General has money to burn, why does he not establish more post offices throughout the country, and provide increased postal facilities for our agricultural classes, to compensate them for the loss they have sustained by reason of paying the business men's postage? In the county I have the honour to represent, the Postmaster General has reduced rather than increased the number of post offices, and I fancy he will find the same thing to be the case in many other parts of the country. During the three years 1894, 1895 and 1896, the increase in the number of post offices established by the late government was 401, whereas in the three years of Liberal rule the increase in the number established was only 116. Hon. gentlemen tell us that the Postmaster General has saved money—that he saved last year $50,000 or $60,000. If he has, he has saved it at the cost of the service. The postal system was never intended as a money-making institution; it was intended for the benefit of the people; and what signifies the saving of a miserable $50,000 or $60,000 if the service has been impaired?

So much for the expenditure of the country. Now let us see how this government have treated us with regard to taxation. The average annual customs duties collected for the five years from 1892 to 1896 amounted to $19,839,685. We were told that the people were to be relieved from this horrible burden of taxation. But in 1899 we find that the customs taxation has gone up to $25,734,228, an increase of nearly $6,000,000 in the short period of years during which hon. gentlemen opposite have been in office. The average rate of customs duties from 1892 to 1896 was 17.47 per cent, whereas the average rate for the three years 1897-98-99, was 17.17 per cent, a decrease of only .30 per cent, or less than one-third of one per cent. But when we make the comparison on the basis of the taxation per head of the population, which I contend is a fairer and better way to give the people an intelligent understanding of how they are taxed, we find that the average taxation for the five years from 1892 to 1896 was $3.77 per head, whereas in the three years 1897-98-99, it increased to $4.30, an increase of 53 cents per head. The policy of the Liberal party seems to be a policy to increase the importation of foreign goods and gradually reduce the manufacture of goods in Canada—to furnish more labour for the foreign workmen and less for the Canadian artisan. As I said, in 1899, the Liberal government collected $6,000,000 more from customs duties than the average of the last five years of Conservative rule. How long are Canadian workmen going to support a policy of this kind? Can they afford out of their small earnings to support the artisans of Great Britain, France and Germany? I believe the time is coming when these men will declare themselves, and will tell the government of the day that their policy is not what they promised or what it ought to be. The Finance Minister has told us that he anticipates this year a surplus of $7,500,000—a vaster surplus than has been. He boasts that he is going to extract from the pockets of the people of this country this year seven millions and a half more than he needs. He boasts himself as a financier capable of grasping the financial situation because he is able to make every man, woman and child in this country pay $1.50 more than is required for the purposes of the country; he is going to compel every family in this country to contribute $7.50 more of taxation than he actually knows what to do with. He wants money to burn. The Witness published in Montreal, made this statement the day after the delivery of the budget speech—and let me say here that the Witness is at all times a thick and thin supporter of the government of the day:

Mr. Fielding shows that we had last year a surplus of $4,837,749, and that this year there promises to be one of $7,500,000, and probably a greater one still will follow next year. Now, all this money is taken out of the pockets of the people by taxation, and a surplus of revenue over expenditure for government purposes surely means so much money taken unnecessarily from the people of the country.

So that, the government's own friends are bitterly complaining of this extorting of more money from the people than is required to meet expenses.

In 1883, as I observe from Hansard, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) laid down this doctrine:

When the government find that they have beyond a doubt a surplus, when they can calculate with certainty on having one, it is their bounden duty to reduce taxation.

I say that the Minister of Customs was right. He added:

It is no part of the duty of a Finance Minister to extract more money out of the pockets of the people than is absolutely wanted to carry on public affairs.

I think that the hon. Minister of Customs

Mr. HENDERSON.

was right, but what is he supporting now? Compare the course of this government with the course of the late government in similar circumstances. In 1891, when Mr. Foster found himself with a surplus over revenue, what did he do? Did he continue to exact the money from the people in order that he might bank it at 3 or 4 per cent? No, he immediately adopted the wise policy of reducing taxation; and in 1891, by a stroke of his pen, he struck off the sugar duty and relieved the people, during the years 1892 to 1895, of not less than $20,000,000 taxation. These were the days when people got from twenty to thirty pounds of sugar for a dollar, instead of the ten and twelve pounds that they had been receiving before. I say that that was a wise policy, and one which should be followed by this government, instead of the one they are carrying out of keeping up the taxation. To enumerate the late government, in the years 1892 to 1895, remitted duties as follows:—

In a portion of 1891..	$ 227,477
1892.....	5,200,000
1893.....	4,000,000
1894.....	4,821,000
1895.....	5,603,523

Then, when the revenue failed to meet the requirements of the country, what did the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) do? He restored a portion of the duty on raw sugar, and this did not interfere with any of the industries of the country. It was a duty on raw material, which restored the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure without disturbing the trade of the country.

Let me quote again the hon. Minister of Customs in 1883, and I desire to draw particular attention to this:

What would be said of a Chancellor of the Exchequer in England if he could not estimate the requirements of the public service nearer than $82,000,000? He would be ridiculed as being unable to grasp the financial conditions of the country.

And yet, a surplus of $82,000,000, as compared with the immense revenue of Great Britain, is less than $7,500,000 as compared with our total revenue. What a pity, according to the hon. Minister of Customs, that we have not a Finance Minister who can grasp the financial condition of the country. What is the government going to do with the surplus money? Last year, when the estimates were being discussed, we found out that away down in the province of Quebec the government was building a wharf where there was no water. Is it the intention of the government to go on with public contracts of that kind, and in that way get rid of its surplus? But, why not reduce the taxation? Why not adopt the wise policy of its predecessors in this instance, as it has done in so many others?

What is to hinder it striking off a million and a half dollars from the sugar duties without interfering with the industries of the country? Why not give back to the people who use tobacco the $1,000,000 of taxation now extorted from them? Why not put unhulled rice on the free list, and give the people free rice? Why not put dried fruits on the free list, and ground spices? There is a variety of things that can be put on the free list without disturbing the industries of the country, and in the way I have mentioned we could reduce the taxation by nearly $3,000,000. We could reduce taxation on sugar by $1,550,000; on tobacco, by $1,000,000; on rice, by $68,000; on dried fruits, by $224,000; on spices, by $15,000; making a total of $2,857,000, or nearly $3,000,000 reduction, without interfering with the industries of the country. Putting these things on the free list would hurt no one and help every one.

But, the hon. Minister of Finance tells us that he has reduced taxation by the increased preferential rate of 1900. Well, that reduction, according to the imports of last year, would amount to about $582,442, still leaving $7,000,000 more money than the hon. gentleman knows what to do with. If he would take the duty off goods not produced in Canada, no one would be hurt; but the moment you begin to reduce the duties on goods that can be manufactured as cheaply in this country as elsewhere, you hurt, not only the manufacturers, but the workman, to a serious extent. A general reduction on British goods, a reduction without rhyme or reason, a reduction made by rote, is sure to do irreparable harm. Cotton goods may be hurt or helped, just as the case may be. In good times, I believe the cotton industry is very materially helped. At present I believe it is largely helped by the preferential tariff, but what about the consumer? He is paying more for his cotton goods than he should, and no doubt that will be the case so long as good times continue. But, as the hon. Minister of Finance has said, the pendulum, which swings one way to-day, will some day swing the other. When it swings back the consumer may get the benefit, but what about the poor artisan who is depending on that industry for his livelihood?

How much of the preference we are giving comes back to the farmers? There are about 420,000 farmers in this country, and taking the average of five to a family, you have something over 2,000,000 engaged in agricultural pursuits. They constitute a factor which cannot be ignored in any arrangement of the tariff. What share are they going to get out of this reduction of taxation by means of the preferential rate? Take agricultural implements, how many of these come from Great Britain and get the benefit of the preference. Let me enumerate:

	From Great Britain.	Duty Collected on all Imported.
		1899.
Ploughs	None.	$38,431
Harrows	"	10,459
Cultivators	"	3,590
Seed drills	"	12,936
Mowing machines	"	69,747
Reapers	"	5,013
Binders	"	132,920
Binding attachments ..	"	6,551
Horse rakes	"	13,808
Rakes, n.e.s.	"	1,226
Weeders	"	11,372
Post-hole-diggers	"	48
Farm rollers	"	40
Hay tedders	"	1,163
Hay or straw knives..	"	26
Hay rakes	"	222
Total.....		$307,692

Of all these articles not one dollar's worth comes in under the preference.

Mr. CLARKE. And the farmer pays all these duties.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, and they get no preference, they get no reduction; they are not regarded as a factor in the make-up of this country by the administration. Now, let us look at the machinery that is used by farmers and consider how much of it comes in under the preference. Here is the table made up in the same way:

	Imported under preference.	Duty paid, 1899.
Fanning mills	None.	$ 129
Grain crushers	"	240
Wind-mills	"	3,926
Feed cutters	"	8
Horse powers	"	553
Portable engines	"	18,015
Threshers and separators..	"	17,934
Parts of machines.....	"	4,805
Total		$45,610

In this case also not one dollar's worth came in under the preferential tariff. Now, let us take other farm requisites. It will be seen that the old farm wagon still stands at the head of the list.

	Imported under preference.	Duty paid, 1899.
Farm wagons.....	None.	$19,615
Cutters	"	268
Pleasure carts, &c.....	"	2,301
Sleighs	"	1,487
Total		$23,671

A list of nearly 30 of the chief implements, machinery, and other requisites on which duty was paid last year of $376,973, but not reduced 1 cent by preferential tariff.

As to cutters, I might say that this paternal government in the interest of the farmers, no doubt, increased the duty in 1897 from 30 per cent to 35 per cent. The farmer can have a more nobby drive to town. He now has a cutter on which he pays 35 per cent—no common 30 per cent machine. Of these articles that I have quoted, like the others, not one dollar's worth came in under the preference. I have given a list of nearly 30, implements, machines and other requisites of the farm on which duty was paid last year of $376,973, but not reduced 1 cent by the preferential tariff. Where does the farmer come in? How is he considered? Now, let us turn to farm implements, machinery and requisites imported under the preferential tariff:

	Duty paid.	Under preference.	Gain under preference, 1900.
Pronged forks.....	$ 2,753	$ 37	$ 77
Hoes	772	141	2 94
Edging knives	5	6	13
Lawn mowers	2,271	207	6 04
Potatoe diggers .. .	73	58	1 21
Scythes and snaths, sickles and reaping hooks..	8,258	4,943	103 03

The last named are indispensable articles in the eyes of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) on every farm. These useful things were laid aside thirty or forty years ago, and now find a place away up in the old log barn to be but seldom called into requisition:

Spades and shovels.....	$ 8,865	9,398	274 00
All other agricultural implements	5,409	491	10 24
Carriages, buggies	13,305	2,493	73 00
Wheelbarrows, trucks and hand-carts	7,618	18	0 45
Pails, tubs, churns, washboards, pounders and rolling pins	5,439	29	0 51
	$54,768	$17,821	$472 32

In a total of fifty articles which I have enumerated, nearly all articles of primary necessity and regularly used by the farmers of this country, on which duty was paid in 1899 to the extent of $431,741, the entire gain under the preference granted in 1900 will amount to $472, or about one-ninth of a cent to each farmer in the country.

The farmers and mechanics of this country can not possibly gain on the purchase of their tools other than those required by the ordinary farmer on his farm. On tools of all kinds such as axes, saws, files, rasps, adzes, hammers, picks, hand and machine tools of all kinds, the farmers and mechanics of Canada profit little by the preferential tariff. Of these articles only 10 per cent came in under the preferential tariff, whereas 90 per cent paid full duty. Practically, I say, the farmer gains nothing under the present preferential tariff on all his implements, machinery and tools; therefore, I say it is a preference that is not fair, it is a preference of a kind that we must call class legislation, given, not to the toilers of this country, but to men who I consider are not as well entitled to receive it. The duty on cotton goods worn by the farmers and workmen of Canada, heavy cotton goods, has been increased by 5 per cent, and whilst the duties on sugar, on tobacco, have been largely increased, the market of the farmer has been invaded by cheap wheat, by free corn, and no counter advantage has been obtained for him in the markets of the United States for his barley. I ask why this discrimination against the farmers of this country, against the toilers of this country, who, I consider, have the first claim upon the government.

Now, Sir, we have discovered that the old farm wagon still pays 25 per cent, the same as in by-gone days, this old friend, this almost revered implement, that aided the farmer in the pioneer days of this country. It was used by him to convey his crops from the field to the barn; it was used by him, before the time of railways or better means of transportation, to convey his crops to the market. On Sunday, before the introduction of buggies, the farmer took his family to the house of worship in his farm wagon; and when he died the farm wagon carried his body to the grave. Yet the old farm wagon is made to bear the burden of the day, it still pays 25 per cent under the preferential tariff. Not even an allowance is given for the axle grease that is used to grease the wheels, that still remains at 25 per cent. But if there is no preference to the wagon, there are other preferences. Where are the preferences to be given? We have learned that the farmer has obtained little or nothing. Who are going to get the advantage of the preference? I have examined the list; what does it consist of? Simply of the flounces and flummeries of the giddy and gay. The ostrich feather that graces the hat of the belted knights at Ottawa, is 20 per cent, while the old farm wagon remains 25 per cent. Jewellery comes in under the preferential tariff at 20 per cent, precious stones about 7 per cent, toys and ornaments, laces, braids and fringes, away down at a low rate of duty. Badges and belts, cigar cases, tobacco pouches, labels for cigar boxes and labels for confectionery boxes, used by confectioners in putting up candies and biscuits and all that, are brought into this country at a duty away down below the farm wagon. Perfumery, 20 per cent. Well, I do not object to perfumery. To my mind this whole tariff is a mass of rottenness that entitles the government to ask for something to make it less offensive to the nostrils of the people of this country. Vaseline and chewing gum I am satisfied with. The ladies may have chewing gum, even although it comes in at a lower rate of duty than the farm wagon. Then gold and silver lace. Oh, yes, hon. ministers who sport about in Windsor uniforms covered over with gold lace as if they had been battered with 500 rotten eggs—if it is any comfort to them to have their gold lace at a lower rate of duty than the old farm wagon, let them have it.

But, Sir, they made a pretense in 1897 of doing something, in order to reconcile the farmers. They failed to reduce the duty on agricultural implements which they had promised to do. They failed to reduce the duty on the plough, the harrow, the seed drill, the cultivator, the mowing machine, the reaper, the binder, the binder attachments. These remain at 20 per cent, just where the Conservative party left them. The present government made no attempt to give a reduction even on the old farm wagon, which still maintains its place of honour: it still stands at the head of the list and bears its burden of taxation as in days of yore. But they have made some reduction, and I give them credit for it. Small favours are thankfully received, and let us see what they did. Here are a number of articles of little value, concerning which it was of very little consequence to the farmer whether they were reduced at all:

	Per cent.
Spades	38 to 35
Shovels	38 to 35
Garden rakes.....	35 to 25
Hoes	35 to 25
Hammers	35 to 30
Adzes	35 to 30
Picks	35 to 30
Table cutlery.....	32½ to 30
Saws	32½ to 30
Forks	32½ to 30
Curry combs	32½ to 30
Bolts and hinges.....	32½ to 30

Just fancy a farmer going into a shop to buy a curry comb. He expects to get it a great deal cheaper than he did before. He says to the merchant: Why, Sir, the Liberal party are in power, and they have reduced the duty on everything, they have reduced the duty on curry combs. How much less can you give it to me? Well, says the dealer, the wholesale price will be about 20 cents, consequently the reduction in duty would amount to half a cent. I ask, Who is going to have the half cent, the merchant or the farmer? I undertake to say the farmer never gets it. The same with a saw, 2½ per cent on a cost of 40 cents, the reduction of duty amounts to about 1 cent. Is a man going to buy that saw for 49 cents that formerly sold for 50 cents? Not at all. The miserable reduction of duty is not going to benefit the farmer, it is simply a sop thrown to him to reconcile him to the injustices of the tariff, and to invite him to continue his support to the government. There were other articles, but articles that are rarely used. You see how skilfully they made their selection. The things that are of little value are reduced; the things that are absolutely of no value, used hardly at all, are reduced a little; the things that are rarely used are reduced a little. We have an instance here: Scythes and snaths, 35 per cent, reduced to 25 per cent; hand rakes, 35 per cent, to 25 per cent; reaping hooks, 35 to 25; sickles, 35 to 25. How many scythes and snaths, or reaping hooks, or sickles, are used by the farmers in the province of Ontario? I do not know whether they are used in Nova Scotia, but I can assure the minister that in the province of Ontario they are very rarely used. Then there is another list of articles that are bought by few farmers. Manure spreaders, 25 to 20. I never saw one in my life, and I have lived in an agricultural country for the last sixty years. Wind-mills, 30 to 25; threshers and separators, 30 to 25; horse-powers, 30 to 25; potato diggers, 35 to 25; post-hole diggers, 35 to 25; grain crushers, 35 to 25; hay tedders, 35 to 25. Now let us see. Last year we imported sixteen grain crushers into Canada, one for every 25,000 farmers, on which there was the enormous reduction in duty of $96. We imported seventeen potato diggers, or one for every 25,000 farmers, at an enormous reduction in duty of $30. We imported twenty-six manure spreaders, one for every 15,000 farmers, at a reduction in duty of $35. We imported thirty-four horse-powers, or one to every 11,000 farmers, at a reduction in duty of $110; 170 hay tedders, reduction in duty, $465; 178 threshers and separators, reduction in duty, $3,586, chiefly in Manitoba; 350 wind-mills, reduction, $785; 485 post-hole diggers, one post-hole digger for every 900 farmers in Canada, a reduction, on the whole, of $20—twenty dollars for the entire reduction on 900 farmers! Divide $20 among 900 farmers, and you will ascertain how much each farmer gained by the reduced duty on post-hole diggers. Then, they tell us that they reduced the duty on wheelbarrows. Some 15 cents of a preference will be given under the tariff in the duty on wheelbarrows. I desire to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to the fact that in the part of the country in which I live, many of the implements on which he has reduced the duty, even to a small extent, are not implements that are generally used by farmers. Is he going to lead us to believe that the farmers of Ontario or of the North-west Territories, in order to get the advantage of this reduced duty, are going to dig their summer fallow with a spade, that they are going to cultivate their land with a hoe, that they are going to rake in their grain with a garden rake, that they are going to cut their wheat with a reaping hook, that they are going to thresh it with a wind-mill, or that they are going to shove it to market with a wheelbarrow? If the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the hon. Minister of Finance expect the farmers of Ontario and Manitoba to carry on operations in that way, I fear that the exports of this country will be very materially decreased. Not only shoving it to market in a wheelbarrow, but where do these hon. gentlemen want the farmers to shove it? To a market that is invaded by free corn, where the duty on wheat is reduced, and where the duty on flour is reduced? Or, shall they send it to Great Britain with no preference, where they will meet the competition of the slave labour of Russia, or the cheap labour of Argentina, or send it to the German market, where wheat has been discriminated against to the extent of 97-10 cents a bushel? It appears to the government that there ought to be a uniform tariff reform. Anything below 25 per cent or 30 per cent is unknown on what the farmer buys, and they have raised the duty on grindstones from 12½ to 25 per cent. Raw or boiled linseed oil, that every farmer uses for the purpose of painting and beautifying his premises, under the Conservative tariff was 20 per cent, but, in order to have uniformity in the tariff, the Liberal government put the duty up to 25 per cent. They are big on uniformity. Then, take the article of putty, an article that is used by every farmer around his place. They found it at 15 per cent, and they put it up to 20 per cent. Under the preferential tariff, we imported last year 9,724 pounds, and under the general tariff 325,836 pounds, and the actual increase of duty on that little article of putty was $226 more than it would have been under the Conservative tariff, or just ten times the amount that we saved on post-hole diggers. If there is one thing above another that the farmer prides himself upon having, it is a gun, or rifle, around his place. He likes a little pleasure, he likes his gun or rifle, and on an off-day he may want to go around and shoot a hare or rabbit, or something, for amusement, or, perhaps, he may want to kill an unruly fox, that may be destroying his hen-roost. Neary every farmer wants to have a gun or a rifle. Under the old tariff, I observe, that guns were 20 per cent, but hon. gentlemen opposite put them up to 30 per cent in order to make them uniform with scythes and sickles, and other things. In 1899, under the preferential tariff, we imported $35,593 worth of guns and rifles, and under the general tariff, $87,885 worth, so that, as a matter of fact, the duty on guns and rifles, that are used largely by country people, were increased $9,688 more than it would have been, if the tariff of the Conservative party had been in force. Where is the preference to the farmers?

Then, you take cotton goods. Take coloured cottons. They were 30 per cent before, and they are 35 per cent now. A careful calculation shows me, that, after two years of the preferential tariff, on all the coloured cotton goods coming into this country, we have actually paid $17,025 more duty than we would have paid if the Conservative tariff had remained in force. I say that this is robbery of the people, because, we know, as a matter of fact, that, very largely, coarse, coloured cotton goods are worn more by the workingmen and by the farmers of the country, than by any other class of the community. It seems that this tariff is directed directly against the toilers of the country, against the men who use cotton tweeds, cottonades, ducks, denims and coloured shirtings. These are the articles on which the duty has been increased 5 per cent, and on which the people paid $17,000 more than they would have paid if the old tariff had remained in force. Cotton blouses and shirt waists were formerly 32½ per cent, now 35 per cent. We imported, under the general tariff, $22,884 worth, while under the preferential tariff, we only imported $1,539 worth, the increased duty paid in 1899 over what would have been paid on all these goods, under the Conservative tariff, was $477. Take cotton batts, an article which is indispensable in every family, more particularly in the households of the poor, where warmth is required; they were 22½ per cent before, and they are 25 per cent now. We imported, under the general tariff, $6,408 worth last year, and we paid on these goods in increased duty, $160 more than we would have paid under the tariff of the Conservative party. So much for the preferential tariff. If hon. gentlemen increase that duty to 33½ per cent more, we will pay more. You may increase it to 50 per cent, and we will pay more. If you choose, you can increase it to 100 per cent and you cannot force these goods into this country from Great Britain. We will get them from Canada, or the United States, and 100 per cent preference would not give us these goods any cheaper under a preferential tariff. Gray cottons were 22½ per cent before, now 25 per cent. We imported last year under the general tariff, $49,730 worth of gray cottons, and unbleached cottons, and under the preferential tariff $15,829 worth, an increased duty of $654. Under the tariff now in existence, with a 25 per cent preferential, on gray cottons, the cottons of the poor people of the country, we paid $654 more duty than we would have paid under the 22½ per cent tariff of the Conservative party. Where is the honesty of that? Thirty-three and one-third per cent now; will it make it any better? Under the 33½ per cent preferential it would be $324 more than under the old Conservative tariff. You may make it a 40 per cent preferential if you desire, but it will still be more than it would have been under the old Conservative tariff. You cannot make water run up-hill, you cannot force these goods into the country by any preference of that kind.

Now comes one very interesting question, and it is, perhaps, as interesting a feature as there is in this whole matter. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd), have all endeavoured to show by reason of a preference being given to goods coming from Great Britain, then, similar goods from the United States will, of necessity, have to come down in price, and so, we will be able to buy American goods at a lower price simply because goods of a similar character can come in from Great Britain at a reduced rate of duty. The Montreal Witness is a paper usually well informed in matters of this kind, a paper supporting the government, and what does it say on this phase of the case? The day after the budget speech was delivered, the Montreal Witness wrote:

The preference did little more than place British manufacturers on a par in Canada with American manufacturers, because of the greater cost of transportation from Great Britain than from the United States.

Where is the comfort in that? If goods cannot be laid down from Great Britain even under the preferential tariff—by reason of the extra cost of transportation—cheaper than they can be laid down in Canada from the United States, where is the evidence that the price is going to be reduced? The Dry Goods Review, a journal well informed on all matters pertaining to cotton and woollen goods, said in November last:

The Canadian mills, it is urged, can practically raise all prices up to what the advances are in New York and Manchester, plus the duty of 35 per cent on foreign goods, or in other words, they can put on the full advance quoted and still keep within the mark, and undersell all others.

If that is the case, it is a dangerous thing. What does it mean? It means that on all coloured cotton goods coming from the United States, instead of 30 per cent, we would be compelled to pay 35 per cent. It means more than that. If the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite be true—an argument repeated over and over again—that by reason of the removal of the duty on binder twine the farmers will save the total duty imposed, amounting to $120,000; if that be true, if the amount of the duty increases the price of the article, then the increased duty on cotton goods would simply be added to the price, so far as the consumer is concerned, and not only would we have to pay an additional $150,000—the amount of the extra duty—on all the coloured cotton goods coming into this country, but we would have to pay an additional 5 per cent on every dollar's worth of domestic cottons made in Canada. That is what would result if the argument of gentlemen opposite has any truth. On the $100,000,000 worth of domestic coloured cottons we would pay an increased price of $500,000. Is it any wonder that the cotton mills are satisfied? Is it any wonder that the cotton industries in this country was not hurt in the meantime? So long as business is brisk, so long as the factories in England are busy, and so long as there is no competition between the old country and Canada, or between Great Britain and the United States, so long will we be compelled to pay an additional price, because the importations from Great Britain will have no force whatever in compelling a reduction in United States prices. To show that the factories in England are very busy at the present time, permit me to read the following from the Dry Goods Review of December last:

The calico printers and manufacturers of Lancashire, Eng., have combined into a huge concern, with $30,000,000 capital. The combined firms employ nearly 1,000,000 persons.

The same authority says:

The moment the great cotton combination, now forming in England, is completed, cottons then of every description will advance 10 to 15 per cent over present prices, and further advances will follow. This is the view of shrewd buyers.

So sure are they in England that they are going to maintain these high prices, which will prevent competition between Great Britain and the United States, which will prevent us from getting any advantage from the preferential duty, and which will compel us to pay the additional 5 per cent imposed on goods coming from countries other than Great Britain, so sure are they that these prices will be maintained that the Dry Goods Review says that one large cotton company has humorously placed at the door an arm chair, with these words on the placard:

This is for the use of those who wish to wait until prices are reduced.

Now, Sir, I have regarded this as a very interesting question, and I have been watching the public press with reference to it, and now and again we find in the Toronto Globe some interesting trade reviews. One of these, published on March 24, says:

There has been a scarcity of goods for prompt delivery in the British and foreign markets, and in some cases the demand for the imported goods has been checked by the extreme prices asked.

The mills (referring to the Canadian mills) have advanced their prices repeatedly, but that has no effect on the demand. Prices of domestic goods have been advanced as many as four times, and still the high quotations have failed to check the demand.

I say that just so long as the British factories are filled with orders; so long as the condition of things exists as to-day, when men are returning from the old country unable to get their orders filled and are placing their orders in Canada and the United States; so long as that condition exists, how under heaven can British competition affect Canadian trade with the United States? How are we going to get the benefit of the preferential duty when we cannot get the British goods? How is the reduced price of British goods going to affect the price of American goods laid down in Canada when we cannot get the British goods? Sir, if the argument of gentlemen opposite be true, then the United States manufacturer to-day, and the Canadian manufacturer as well, are able to extort from the consumers of this country an addition of 5 per cent over and above their legitimate price and profit on account of the additional duty that was imposed upon coloured goods by this government in 1897. This is the treatment which is meted out by the Liberal government to the toilers of this country. Coloured cotton goods of the coarser sort are more especially worn by the toilers, by the farmers, by the mechanics, and by the workingmen. They are the men who are to suffer from this. They are the men who have to pay these prevailing high prices out of their hard-won earnings. But, when times change, when the pendulum swings back the other way, when the English factories become short of orders, then, Sir, Canada will become a slaughter market. The workingmen may get a little advantage then, but not so much after all, because, let me tell you, these goods which come from England are not used very largely by the working people. You do not import ducks, denims and cottonades and checked shirtings from Great Britain. Fifty per cent preference would not force them into this country. The cloth is inferior, the texture is inferior, and the people of this country will not buy English goods of that class even at a very much reduced price. But, Sir, when the time comes that the English factories are idle, and when they are in a position to fill orders for this country, then this country will be flooded with goods from Great Britain. And what then will become of our workingmen and of the artisans in our factories? The result will be smaller wages, less work, &c. These are strong reasons why a tariff adopted without rhyme or reason, without the fullest and most complete consideration, is sure in the long run to be full of injury to the country. There is no doubt that cotton goods have increased in price, that they are 20 or 25 per cent higher to-day than they were a few years ago. Hon. gentlemen opposite will tell me that this is in consequence of the advance in the cost of raw cotton; but when did the advance in raw cottons take place? Not two years ago, but largely within the last six months. But the advance in the price of cotton goods is not all owing to the advance in the cost of raw materials. In 1897 we increased the duty on gray cottons and coloured cottons, but not on white cottons; and it is a fact known to every man in the trade that white cottons have not advanced in price as much as gray and coloured cottons. What is the reason of this? It is not because the raw material has increased, though that has something to do with it, but it is owing to the fact that the government of the day increased the duty on the latter classes of cotton goods, which are imported largely from the United States and in a small degree from Great Britain, but did not increase duty on white goods. But there are other articles the cost of which has been increased in the same way—for instance, hats, caps and fur goods, such as muffis, tippetts, coats and cloaks which are indispensable to this country. Every farmer needs his fur coat and his wife her fur cloak. They are entitled to have them; but why should these articles be taxed an additional 5 per cent? I could excuse the government if these were articles of luxury; but in this country they are a matter of necessity, like the farm wagon. Every farmer must have a wagon and a cutter; and every farmer wants a fur coat to protect himself against the severity of the Canadian winter, and his wife wants a fur cloak; yet on these as well as on fur mitts and on the robe with which the farmer protects himself when he drives to market, the duty has been increased from 25 per cent to 30 per cent. The imports of furs under the general tariff in 1899 amounted to $60,160, and under the preferential, $39,013. The increased duty paid by the people of this country on furs in 1899 over what they would have paid had the Conservative tariff remained in force was $2,029, or an increase of 2 per cent. With the 33½ per cent preference after the 1st of July, we shall still be compelled to pay an additional duty of 1 per cent on the furs imported into this country. Why multiply instances? I have given sufficient to illustrate to this House the iniquity of the system of tariff reform that has been inaugurated by the present government. The duty has been increased on many articles of prime necessity, such as sugar. Why should the government impose an additional duty on raw sugar? They have increased the duty from 50 cents to 66½ cents per hundred pounds, adding to the taxes of the people of this country $100,000, when not a dollar of it was required. On unhulled rice, an article required by every family, although they did not need the money, they increased the duty, and imposed an additional tax on every family, rich or poor, in the country.

Now, Sir, I want to say a few words before I sit down with reference to the preferential tariff. The hon. Minister of Finance in his budget speech says:

We say we are getting a preference to-day by the voluntary act of the British people. We say that the preference which England would not grant on a demand of the colonies in a huckstering and bargaining way, she has given of her own free will and accord the moment we approached her in the proper spirit, and there is the proof in the exports of the products of Canada to Great Britain.

Now, I propose to look at that for a few moments, to see whether the statement there made is borne out by the facts—whether we have actually received a preference in the British market. The following is a statement of the exports of the principal farm products of Canada to Great Britain in the last two years :

	1898.	1899.	Decrease.
	$	$	$
Horses	1,232,717	602,027	630,690
Cattle	7,404,308	7,165,370	238,938
Sheep	396,422	333,736	62,686
Barley	151,500	120,143	31,357
Wheat	20,996,924	13,627,665	7,369,259
Oatmeal	525,657	384,012	141,645
Flour	3,955,564	2,102,261	1,853,303
Canned salmon ..	3,238,166	2,296,292	941,874
Hay	299,462	258,604	30,858
Cheese	18,432,311	17,320,790	1,111,521
Meats—
Canned	217,500	97,032	120,468
Beef	34,003	7,997	26,006
Other meats....	505,572	164,421	341,151

In eggs there was an increase of about $10,000, and there was also an increase in butter and hog products. These are the only items of farm produce that show an increase. In view of that statement, I asked where is the preference that Great Britain is giving us? Instead of a preference, we have a decrease all along the line except in two or three items.

With reference to the export of cattle, a very important item indeed, I wish to point out that even in that item no preference is given us by Great Britain. Let me draw the attention of the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. McMillan), to what I am now about to say, because my hon. friend claims to be one of the best informed men on the subject of cattle in this House, and I have no doubt he is. Before the preferential tariff was enacted, in 1894, 1895 and 1896, the average price of cattle shipped to Great Britain was $75.94 per head. Let us see how that compares with the average price after we enacted the preferential rate. In 1897, 1898 and 1899, the average price was only $58.72, showing a decrease of $17.22 on every animal shipped to Great Britain since the preferential tariff has been in force.

Let me now draw the attention of the hon. member for West Huron to another question. A few days ago he made a statement in this House which no doubt, on re-examination, he will revise. He said that the removal of the quarantine regulations by the United States had increased the value of all the animals we exported to that country by over $5 per head. Let us look at the facts—not surmise or speculation—but the cold facts, and these facts I take from a reply given by the Minister of Customs, the other day, to a question asked him by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). The average price we obtained for the cattle we shipped to the United States in 1894, 1895 and 1896, was $29.78. Then the new government came in, and then the quarantine was removed, and since then the cattle we exported to the United States have realized, during the years 1897, 1898 and 1899, only $15.20 per head. This shows that since the present government took office, and since the quarantine was removed, the price of our cattle has not increased $5 per head, as claimed by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan), but has actually decreased $14.58 per head. And in case the hon. gentleman should challenge my figures, I desire to make this emphatic statement, that I have taken them from a reply given by the Minister of Customs to a question put to him by the ex-Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), has endeavoured to persuade us that we are getting a preference from Great Britain already. That, however, is not shown in our Trade and Navigation Returns. The total value of all British imports in the year ending 30th June, 1899, amounted to £487,763,325, and in the year ending 30th June, 1898, £465,865,460. This shows an increase in 1899 of £21,897,865, or $106,423,623. The exports from Canada to Great Britain were as follows in the two years :

1898	$104,998,857
1899	99,091,855
Decrease	$ 5,907,000

So that, although Great Britain imported more in 1899 than in 1898, to the extent of $106,000,000, her importations from Canada decreased to the extent of nearly $6,000,000. That shows most conclusively that we are not getting the preference promised by the Finance Minister.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 86) respecting the Thousand Islands Railway Company.—(Mr. Taylor.)

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I now propose, for a short time, to deal with that part of the question under discussion which refers to a mutual preference. On the 30th of March, the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) moved the following resolution :

That this House is of opinion that a system of mutual trade preference between Great Britain and Ireland and the colonies would greatly stimulate increased production in and commerce between these countries, and would thus promote and maintain the unity of the empire; and that no measure of preference which falls short of the complete realization of such a policy should be considered as final or satisfactory.

I need not say that the policy embodied in these words is the policy of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. We believe that if the preference to be granted to Great Britain is worth anything at all, it is worth getting something in return for. We see no force whatever, in opening up the markets of Canada—which, by the way, are limited enough—and giving free access to the goods of other countries, goods made by cheaper labour than that which is paid in this country, unless something in return is given to the people of Canada. Great Britain of necessity, imports every year from the colonies or from other countries, large quantities of breadstuffs and meats, articles which it is impossible for the United Kingdom to produce in such quantities as are required for its large consuming population. If, in any way, Great Britain could give a preference in her markets to such articles as we produce in this country, and require a market for in Great Britain or elsewhere, so as to place our people in her markets in a position to sell our products to greater advantage, that would be a benefit to the people of Canada, and would be something in return for the preference we have given to the mother country. I find that the following are our chief exports from the farms to Great Britain :

Chief products of the farm from Canada to Great Britain—articles, the produce of Canada :

Horses	$ 591,200
Sheep	333,736
Cattle	7,129,430
Barley	50,664
Oats	2,811,112
Pease	1,624,733
Wheat	7,458,538
Wheat flour	2,097,773
Hay	258,604
Butter	3,526,007
Cheese	16,718,418
Eggs	1,254,392
Bacon and ham	10,407,592
Apples, green and ripe ..	2,412,728

I leave out minor products ; but in the above we find that Canada has exported of her own produce, in 1899, the large sum of $56,674,967. Now, I propose to deduct from this the export of cattle from this country to Great Britain, $115,476. In 1899, valued at $7,129,430, leaving us a balance of $49,545,537, or nearly $50,000,000 worth of the produce of Canada sent to Great Britain last year.

Now, with reference to the one item of cattle, I see no reason why a preference could not be given in the British market to the Canadian producers and shippers of cattle. In years gone by we had a preference. In former days Canadian shippers were enabled to send their cattle to Britain, these were sold and taken inland, and fattened upon the pastures of England and Scotland, being thus restored in flavour and flesh so as to make them to a large extent near in quality to the best English beef. I say then that if that privilege were restored to us it would be a preference that would be appreciated by this country, and it would be a preference in the markets of England that I fail to see would injure any great industry in Great Britain. I fail to see why the British government should not take steps at once to restore it, in fact I fail to see why the Canadian government should not at once urge upon the British government the propriety of granting us this preference which we enjoyed before, a preference which would place in the hands of every man who raises cattle in this country a valuable addition to his revenues from the sale of fat cattle, a preference to my mind which would enhance the value of every animal exported from this country to Great Britain to the extent, possibly, of $15 to $25. Surely that would be a preference worth asking for, surely that would be a preference worth getting. And why should Britain refuse to give it? If Britain appreciates the preference that we have given, why not give us something in return? Here is an instance where a preference can be given us without destroying any industry in Great Britain, or without materially interfering with any industry. It may be said that the English and Scotch farmer would be opposed to such a privilege; but if we are to sacrifice so much for Britain, why should not the great men of Britain sacrifice something for Canada? I hold that in this matter there is a preference which Canada is entitled to, a preference which our government has a perfect right to demand, a preference which our government ought to demand if we are going to continue the preference which we have accorded to Great Britain in the markets of Canada. Then with reference to the balance of these products, 4 per cent of $50,000,000 would be about $2,000,000. Is there no possible way by which Great Britain could turn over to us $2,000,000 in preference in return for what we have given? Is it not possible that the great statesmen of England and the statesmen of Canada can get together and devise some plan by which fair-play can be dealt out to the people of this country? The Liberals claim that by reason of the 25 per cent preference given to Great Britain $2,000,000 have been accorded to her. I can not see for a moment that $1 of that sum is a Canadian preference, I contend that it is through and through a British preference as the government call it, a preference to Great Britain and not a preference to Canada.

Under the preferential tariff of 1900 an additional $667,000 will be granted to Great Britain, giving in all a total preference to Great Britain worth, as is alleged, $2,667,000. To offset that we contend that if we received a preference in the British market only with regard to our cattle that would enhance their value a simple $5 per head, we would get $577,000 in return. This, with the $2,000,000, the 4 per cent on the $50,000,000 of other exports to Britain, would be $2,577,000. Now we want this matter balanced up, we want to have fair trade, we want to get something from Great Britain that will compensate us for the preference that we have given to her. What a boon to Canada it would be if every dollar's worth of our products at once became worth in the British market 4 cents more than the products of the United States, or like products from Russia, from Germany, or any other country. What a tremendous impetus it would give to immigration into this country. What a boon, I say, it would be to the country from one end to the other. Not only would it help to fill up our country with a healthy immigration, but it would increase the products of this country, help to create a larger home market, and a larger consuming population to use up the manufactured products of Canada. We cannot enlarge too much on the advantage that would be gained to the people of this country if we could obtain a preference of this kind.

And this would be a mutual preference. In the language of the resolution which I have read to you, I do not believe that any preference 'which falls short of the complete realization of such a policy should be considered by this parliament as either final or satisfactory.' The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) is reported to have said, and I believe he admits having said at a former time, that we owe nothing to England but Christian forgiveness for wrongs imposed upon us. To my mind that is very strong language indeed; however, it is not my language but the language of an hon. gentleman to your right. We are told that we cannot get a preference because England can only grant a preference if we come down to the basis of free trade. We cannot afford to trade with England on the basis of free trade, because we cannot afford to sacrifice our revenue; and if England will not tax her artisans for the benefit of Canada, why should we deprive our workmen, our artisans, of the work which English artisans are now doing? I say, why should we deprive our workmen of their work and their wages simply to give work and wages to men who refuse to be taxed to help us? If there is a preference at all, I say it ought to be mutual, and nothing will be satisfactory that falls short of that. The government, right or wrong, has granted the preference, and we must deal with the facts as we find them. I think they are wrong, I have no hesitation in saying that they are wrong, and I believe that the people of this country, when appealed to, will say that that one-sided preference was a mistake.

The present Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when courting the electorate of this country in 1896, when asking the people for their votes and their suffrages, stated in the city of London, I believe, that if he got into power he would obtain for the farmers of this country a preference in the markets of Great Britain. Well, Sir, if he could obtain a preference in 1896, why cannot he obtain a preference in 1900? Has the Prime Minister asked for it? Has he made an effort to secure it? Has he failed in endeavouring to implement this promise as he has failed to carry out so many others? The hon. member for South Ontario, last night, told us that there were things that yet remain to be done, which the government have not accomplished, and, to my mind, this is one of the more important items that the hon. gentleman had in his mind. They have failed to secure the preference which was promised to the electorate of this country at that time. I hope that the acceptance of the Cobden Club medal is not a bar to his asking the people of England to give us this preference which we are entitled to in return for what we have done. I think that England should make some sacrifice. I do not think that all the sacrifice should be made by the people of Canada; I do not think that we should be called upon to sacrifice anything, in fact. Great Britain is always willing to make sacrifices to open up new markets. As has been stated in this House before, Great Britain spends millions of money to push her wares into the uncivilized parts of the world, and if she is willing to spend millions of money to push her wares into the uncivilized parts of the world, why not spend some of her millions to push her wares in this country, to give us a preference for the privilege of allowing her wares to come into this country for consumption. Germany is willing to bonus her sugar manufacturers at all times in order to enable that industry to send its products throughout the world and to compete with the whole world in the manufacture of sugar. Canada is willing to bonus the iron industry to enable the manufacturers of agricultural implements to send their goods to Great Britain, to Germany, to Australia and to other parts of the world. Why should not Great Britain do something in some way in order to secure for Canada the preference which we desire to enable us to send the products of Canada to Great Britain? Is there any possible means by which this difficulty can be got over? If Great Britain is willing to spend her millions to hew out new markets, if Germany is willing to spend money to find new markets, if we, in Canada, are willing to spend our money to find new markets, why should not Great Britain take a step in the same direction as far as we are concerned? Is it not possible by a system of bonusing, or aiding the transportation of products from Canada to Great Britain, to give us a preference, and if it is not possible to do it in that way, to the fullest extent, why should England refuse, for the benefit that she has received from us, to bonus the products of this country by a money grant instead of taxing the artisans there by putting a duty on the breadstuffs and meats going into Great Britain from other countries. Why not favour the products of Canada, either by a direct bonus or by aiding transportation, by largely assisting steamboat communication, a fast line service and everything in that way so as to give a substantial preference in the British market and enable us to lay our products down there at least 4 per cent cheaper than they could from any other country? That would be something of the nature of a substantial preference, and if Great Britain is not willing to give Canada a preference of that kind, I say the time has come for us to reconsider the step we have taken. A preference for a preference, to my mind, is the only policy that Canada can approve of; it is the only policy that Canada can afford to accept. In the language of Kipling:

Daughter am I in my mother's house,
But mistress in my own;
The gates are mine to open,
And the gates are mine to close.

Last year we opened the gates. We invited Great Britain, by our preferential tariff, to deal with us on preferential terms. We opened the gates; if there is no response we can close them again, and I think that would be the proper policy for Canada to pursue, because, no preference can be satisfactory in this country which is not mutually in the interest of Canada and the mother country. We may be told that we are not loyal because we talk in this manner.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. We may be told that, but, to my mind, loyalty to Great Britain does not call for the sacrifice of everything we have. If we are loyal Canadians we are loyal to Great Britain because Canada is part of the empire.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. In reading over some of the English newspapers, published the day following the delivery of the budget speech, and on which the additional preference was granted by Canada to Great Britain, we find extracts like these:

London, March 27.—The 'Times' yesterday devoted a congratulatory letter to Mr. Fielding's Budget speech, but does not encourage the hope of preferential traders.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. 'Hear, hear,' the hon. gentleman says, and that is just what I expected.

The London 'Standard' is equally firm in dismissing preferential trade.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON (reading)

The 'Westminster Gazette' does not encourage hopes of reciprocity from this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON. 'Hear, hear,' the hon. gentleman says. The Westminster Gazette says further:

Canada will do well to base her calculations on the supposition that we shall stick to the free trade system.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Outlook, another influential journal, says:

One pillar of the empire's strength is its free trade.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. If these are the sentiments of the leading newspapers of England, and if these are the sentiments of the people of Great Britain, I ask, is it not asinine stupidity for us to go on time after time and give away all we have when the people of Great Britain are telling us that we will get nothing from them? I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ANDREW SEMPLE (Centre Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the very long and varied remarks of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). He has traversed a great deal of ground, and he has presented his case in a very ingenious manner. While listening to the first part of his speech I did not know whether he was going to be the friend of manufacturers or of the farmers. It seemed to me doubtful, but, as I listened a little while longer there came into my mind the story of a man who departed this life and who, during his lifetime had had two wives. He had loved them both dearly, and in his last will and testament he left the injunction that he was to be buried between them with a little cant towards Biddy. I rather think that the hon. gentleman showed a little cant towards the farmers, and I was more convinced of this when I heard him speaking so often about the old farm wagon. He remembered the days that are gone by. This idea was also impressed upon me when he spoke of certain articles being imported in this country from Great Britain and said that this would be of no benefit to the farmers. I was much amused at the manner in which he delivered these statements. I consider that that portion of his speech was very amusing because, in a general way, the more ridiculous and absurd the statement that is made the more amusing it will be, and I can understand that the farmers, when considering that portion of the speech of the hon. gentleman, will be able, especially in the county of Halton, to take it at its true worth. The hon. gentleman began by making reference to binder twine, and he spoke of the largely increased price that the farmers have to pay for this commodity at the present time. The hon. gentleman was very ingenious in the manner in which he quoted the price of the raw material a long time ago, and then quoted the price of binder twine at the present time. This was designed to leave a false impression upon the minds of the people. I am very thankful that I happen to have before me the speech that was made by a great man in the Conservative party, the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster). I thank him very much for the speech he made. He quoted the figures in regard to prices in New York in different years. He said :

With reference to the prices of articles that the farmer has to buy, I have a very long list, but I have culled from it some few things which I will read. These are the New York prices as given for the first week in January for each year. 1895, 1899 and 1900:

	1895.	1899.	1900.
Manila	\$0 04 $\frac{3}{4}$	\$0 06 $\frac{1}{2}$	\$0 14 $\frac{1}{2}$
Sisal	0 02 $\frac{1}{4}$	0 05 $\frac{1}{8}$	0 09 $\frac{1}{4}$

This shows conclusively that the price of binding twine has increased threefold, or the purchasing power of one dollar in 1895 was greater than three dollars in 1900. Any one who wishes to know the true facts must know, that owing to the war in the Philippines, the raw material has not been produced to the same extent as formerly, and that, therefore, it had to be bought at a higher rate. The statement was made by some speakers, that because the Brantford factory was able to make 100 per cent last year, they made an illegitimate profit. I say that they deserve credit if they had the foresight to buy the raw material in large quantities and then to sell it at an advance. I think this is justifiable. I hold that if they are liable to loss they should also receive such gain as they are justly entitled to when a large increase in price took place in the raw material. Before I proceed further on that point I shall give another quotation from the speech of the hon. member for York, N.B., showing the increases that have taken place in the prices of other articles :

	1895.	1899.	1900.
Pig iron	$10 00	$10 85	$25 00
Bar iron (per 100 lbs.)....	1 10	1 05	2 50
Billets	15 00	16 50	35 00
Crude petroleum (brl.)....	0 94 $\frac{1}{2}$	1 19	1 66
Refined petroleum (per gal)	0 06.9	0 08 $\frac{1}{2}$	0 11
Sugar (muscovado)	2 63	3 81	3 88
Sugar (standard granulated)	3 74	4 72	4 85

That gives an explanation why barbed wire, sugar, coal oil and other articles are much higher in price than they were in the past. The attempt has been made to show that on account of the duty being taken off some articles the cost has increased. That is a most absurd statement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) has mentioned that it would be a good thing if we could have the embargo removed from cattle going to Great Britain. I think every hon. member in this House would hold up both hands if that could be done. The British government were very reluctant at first to put an embargo upon our cattle, but, the fear of pleuro-pneumonia was the cause that Canadian cattle were required to be slaughtered at the port when they were landed, and although nothing of that kind exists among the Canadian herds it will be hard to secure a change. We will all welcome the removal of the embargo, and, if the British government should see fit at any time, to remove it, it would be a great advantage to the farmers of Canada and those who raise cattle for export. In regard to quoting figures and to the making of statements the Liberal party has everything to gain by a fair statement of the facts. They have nothing to lose. They do not require to garble the figures in order to make a favourable showing. I intend before I resume my seat, to quote quite a large array of figures and I can assure the House that these figures will be placed before it in a fair way. It is always gratifying to be able to speak of success when it has been achieved by honourable and upright means, as it has been achieved by the government which was returned to power by the people of Canada in 1896. Success has followed them ever since they accepted office. They have done their business in an upright manner and the country has prospered since they came into power as it never prospered before. The false prophets who foretold the destruction of the industrial works in the cities have been disappointed in their calculations. It is not long since that we read in the newspapers of the great improvement that has taken place in the conditions prevailing in the city of Toronto. Vacant houses have been filled up, rents have been raised, real estate is selling at a higher figure, and everything is prosperous. This is the case notwithstanding the fact that at one time, it was alleged, that the Liberal party were going to destroy the national policy and drive the workingmen out upon the street. We have often heard the deplorable statement made that if the Liberal party succeeded in getting into power the workingmen would be walking the streets idle, their children would be crying for bread, the tall chimneys would cease to emit smoke and everything would denote decay, but, instead of that, never in the history of the country has it been more prosperous. A constituent of mine went to the old country last year and he visited his brother in Yorkshire. He informed me that the Massey-Harris binders were largely used in that part of England. The hon. member for Halton stated that he could not find that any agricultural implements were sent from Great Britain to Canada. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the Massey-Harris Company have been able to lay down machines in Great Britain, and they are appreciated more by the farmers there than similar articles manufactured in Great Britain. It is an honour to them because as has been stated repeatedly that Canadians can compete with any other country in the world on equal terms, and we find now that there is a large amount of manufactured articles exported from the city of Toronto, and that money is coming back to the manufacturers from Russia, from Great Britain and from the continent of Europe to pay the men that are employed in the Massey-Harris and other works. This shows what Canadians are doing, and that they can compete on equal terms with any nation on the globe.

With regard to the tariff, it is said by some that it is just a continuation of the national policy. I do not care whether you call it national policy or not. We all remember that the short session of 1896 was called for the purpose of passing the estimates for the current year. After that session the hon. Finance Minister went over the country, and asked manufacturers, millers, farmers, and business men to meet him and lay their views before him; and after hearing their statements he crystallized them in the present tariff. Some Reformers say that he did not go far enough; but the idea was to make as little disturbance in the country as possible; and I observe that the Manufacturers' Association, in the statement they have published, do not offer any serious objection to the preference which the tariff gives to British goods in the Canadian market. They want stability in the tariff, however, and say that there should not be many changes made in it during the parliamentary term.

Prominent members of the Conservative party who were members of the late government, and who believe that they only have the true genius for government, feel keenly the loss of office, and of course, are dissatisfied. It is very disagreeable to those who have tasted the sweets of office to be deprived of them. But the Conservative party went before the people in 1896 for approval or condemnation of their past actions, and they were condemned; they were weighed in the balance and found wanting. Ever since that time their chief delight has been fault-finding, and endeavouring to embarrass the government and to make political capital out of every event that transpires.

Now, Sir, at the risk of being tedious, I will read a few figures, and then draw my conclusion from them, and I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will do likewise. I believe with the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), that the people are more concerned about the results than about figures; yet it is only by studying the figures carefully, that we can arrive at true results. An examination of the Trade and Navigation Returns shows in an unmistakable manner, the advancement the country has made since the present government came to power. The trade of the Dominion of Canada in 1894, was $240,999,889; in 1895, $224,420,485; in 1896, $239,025,360, three years under Conservative rule; in 1897, $257,168,862; in 1898, $304,475,736; in 1899, $321,661,213, three years under Liberal rule. The trade of 1897 was $16,168,973 greater than that of 1894. The trade of 1898 was $80,055,251 greater than that of 1895. The trade of 1899 was $82,635,853 greater than that of 1896. The trade in the last two years exceeded that of 1895 and 1896, by more than one-third of the total trade.

From the public accounts, I find that the total revenue from all sources, was: in 1893-4, $33,374,693; in 1894-5, $33,978,129; in 1895-6, $36,618,590, three years under Conservative rule; in 1896-7, $37,829,778; in 1897-8, $40,555,238; in 1898-9, $46,741,249, three years under Liberal rule. The revenue for 1896-7 was $1,455,085 greater than that for 1893-4. The revenue for 1897-8 was $6,577,109 greater than that for 1894-5. The revenue for 1898-9 was $10,122,659 greater than that for 1895-6.

We have heard that the annual expenditure has increased; but when the fact is considered that the trade of the country has increased one-third, and that the revenue has increased one-fourth, is this not a good and sufficient justification for the larger expenditure? It takes more to govern the country under such flourishing conditions. I think no one will deny that, unless he is a member of the opposition, who denies everything. We know also that there has been a very large increase in the revenue in Manitoba, British Columbia and the North-west Territories. Why, Sir, since the present government has been in office, the revenue there has increased $1,800,000 in round numbers; so that it is only reasonable to expect the government to build customs-houses proportionate to the amount of money they receive. We know that the banks in Manitoba and in British Columbia are putting up fine buildings, confident that the country is sure to grow; and, I think, the government would be justified in spending an extra million dollars in Manitoba, British Columbia and the North-west Territories, on account of the large increase they have received in the revenue. There was exported to Great Britain from the Dominion of Canada in 1898, produce to the value of $104,998,818, and in 1899, $99,091,855, twice as much each year, with one exception, as in any year previous to 1892. This has no doubt to a certain extent, been brought about by the preferential tariff. We know very well that Canada has become widely known through that preferential tariff. It gave Canada a fresh start, and it is in vain to say, that if we give British goods a preference in our own market, Great Britain will not give Canadian goods a preference in her markets. There is an unwritten law, not found on the statute-book, but governing communities, that if an individual assists his neighbour across the way, that neighbour is not always going to take that assistance as a compliment, and return nothing. Our High Commissioner in England is constantly trying to ascertain what is needed in the British market, and the press is bringing Canada from day to day before the attention of the British people.

The press is bringing Canada, day by day, more prominently before the world, and that is one of the causes why our trade is so largely increasing with Great Britain; and it is satisfactory for the consumers to know that the difference in their favour, according to the statement carefully prepared by the Finance Minister, is 2.02 per cent reduction in duties or indirect taxation, and the aggregate saving, $3,017,000. Yet, despite this large reduction in taxation, there is to the credit of the country, a surplus of $4,837,749. Thus although the taxation is less we have more money in the treasury. If the late government had been in power, their tariff would have taken over $3,000,000 more from the consumers, and it is very doubtful whether there would have been a surplus at all, because the object of the national policy was to put money into the pockets of the manufacturers, rather than into the treasury. If the manufacturers were well, everything else was well. Under our present policy, however, it is the treasury that gets the benefit of the duties, and if the aggregate of duties collected has increased, it is due to the fact that our people have imported more goods, it is due to the fact that we are in a more prosperous condition, and better able to buy goods than formerly.

I want to quote a few figures to show what immense strides in advance our farming industry has made under the present administration; and of course, as every one will admit, there are more capital and labour expended in that industry, than in any other, and when the farmer is prosperous, everybody shares in his prosperity. I have compiled a table from the Trade and Navigation Returns, showing the exports of the products of Canada in 1896 and in 1899. I have not taken any account of the articles of farm products which are imported from the United States into Canada, and thence exported to the old country, and which are simply an indication of the growth of commerce. What I wish to show is the increase in the exports of the produce of Canada only, which is the true test of the prosperity of our farmers. The following table gives the results:

I was very much pleased indeed to hear the practical remarks made by the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. MacLaren), who has given to the question of cheese and butter close attention for a number of years. He predicted that there would be a rapid increase, and I believe he is correct in that. Certainly, this is a sort of farming that will help the farmers, by keeping up the fertility of the land; and, with the cold storage system that has been put in operation by the Minister of Agriculture, and the attention given to instructing the people in the cheese and butter industry, there is no doubt that there is every reason why we should look forward to the immense possibilities of increase in this line of production. It is to be hoped that the good advice the hon. member for North Perth gave the farmers will be acted upon, for his speech was a fine speech for information. With great modesty, he took very little praise to himself for what he had done; but he made a candid statement of facts. His speech is well worthy of being studied, and if widely studied, will be of great benefit to the farmers. But, I wish to give a few figures. The list relating to the farm is not exhausted, and I think it would be more profitable to read such figures than a great many extracts from newspapers as have been placed in Hansard, written by obscure individuals whose opinions are not valued. Certainly, this information will be of value to those who use it:

Total		$10,416,478

Increase in value of exports of bacon and hams exported in 1899 over 1896 $ 6,034,510

And this, Sir, can be largely increased. This increase in the last three years can be doubled, for this is a country that is adapted to the production of bacon and ham. Fear has been expressed that the feeding of corn would cause a deterioration in the quality of pork. But, the hon. member for North Perth himself stated that it could be fed in small quantities without being injurious, and I think the people are learning that they can with advantage use corn for fattening cattle, to feed their dairy cows, and also, mixed with other grain, to feed their pigs. I suppose there are some individuals, perhaps members of the opposition, who, when they go to a dealer ask if corn is not injurious, and so on. The reason corn was put on the free list was that when the Finance Minister took the advice of the people of this country on the question, he found that the majority of the best farmers in the country were in favour of it.

Mr. CLARKE. Did not they want to get the American duties taken off their barley in exchange?

Mr. SEMPLE. There was no demand for that. The McKinley tariff wall was high, and the Dingley tariff wall was higher still, and Canada put up a little wall of her own. It was supposed, when the barley market was lost, that the result would be ruinous to the farmers of this country, because, during the Cleveland administration, we received $6,000,000 yearly for our barley. They considered it a grievous loss when that market was taken away. But, our farmers are progressive. They understand the times and how to adapt themselves to circumstances. And so, they find that there is not so much loss after all. In regard to corn, it is not long since I heard the statement made by a practical agriculturist, Mr. Grisdale, of the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, when asked the question why he fed 75 per cent corn in his experiments, said that the reason was that it was the cheapest food. He said: In Ottawa oats are worth 35 cents a bushel; and we can buy corn at three-quarter cents a pound, so there is a saving of one-quarter cent per pound direct, and besides, the corn is of very much better fattening quality. It would be a great advantage to the farmers if they could exchange oats at one cent per pound and buy corn at three-quarter cents per pound. In fact, it would pay them to exchange even. In Wellington county, one riding of which I have the honour to represent, pease have been a failure for a number of years, and so, many have become converts to free corn, for it is the cheapest and best raw material in the manufacture of beef. Some were formerly of the opinion that it would lower the value of coarse grains have changed their mind and would not wish to go back to the days of dutiable corn. A great many of the small cattle that are shipped from Canada to the United States might be much more profitably handled. If their owners would take the trouble to buy corn and oats and feed them and increase their value, they would make far more money than by selling their stock and selling their oats.

I have here a statement showing the exports of live stock for 1896 and 1899:

Now, in speaking of cattle exported, an hon. gentleman has said that cattle bring a less price per head now than they did in former years. Well, I speak on the authority of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Featherston), who is an exporter and has studied the subject, and he informs me that a great many more small cattle are exported now than formerly. It is no uncommon thing to export animals of 1,100 pounds, whereas formerly few were exported of less weight than 1,400 or 1,500 pounds. This does not show any diminution in the price, but it shows that a different class of cattle is being exported to the old country. I will now present a table showing decrease in values in 1899, as compared with 1896 :

	Decrease.
Barley	$ 205,938
Hay	1,565,800
Sheep	610,428
Horses	1,215,032

Subtract decrease	3,597,246
Net increase	$20,027,784

This sum represents the additional amount of money received by the farmers of Canada in 1899, as compared with 1896.

Now, Sir, much attention has been given to the interest of the farmers by this government since 1896. Cattle exported to the United States had to pay 20 per cent. besides undergoing a quarantine for ninety days. Soon after the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) assumed his duties he went to Washington and had the quarantine removed. The duty, however, still remains, but the removal of the quarantine has been of great advantage to the farmers in many parts of the country, enabling them to ship small and lean cattle to the United States and get an increased price. Although it is not good policy for a farmer to ship small and lean animals, still some of them are not in a position to do anything else. We know also that the great increase in the shipment of butter has been to a large measure due to the cold storage system that has been put in operation and carried on successfully under the supervision of the Minister of Agriculture. The shipment of apples and placing them on the English market in a good condition has also been a feature of cold storage. Also, in respect to cheese and other commodities, we get good value for the money that has been expended in cold storage.

Now, Sir, there is another question which I wish to deal with, the preferential tariff with Great Britain. I will read a few extracts from English papers, showing what they thought of the preferential tariff when it was first put into operation. Although the preference at first was a small one, it was a beginning. It was received and quoted approvingly by the newspapers throughout the length of Great Britain as something that would have a far-reaching effect on both Canada and the mother country :

The Birmingham 'Post' acknowledges the outspoken and warm-hearted allusion of Mr. Fielding to the mother country.

The Brantford 'Observer' regards the new Canadian tariff as likely to increase British commerce with Canada. The step proposed is a sensible and trustworthy measure, because it is an advance towards freedom of trade. The test of the most-favoured nation argument will be interesting to watch.

The Darlington 'Echo' states that the new Canadian tariff is the initial step towards freedom of commerce within the empire. The reform will prove a distinct benefit to the textile industries of Yorkshire and other parts of England. The advantages will be most valuable even if shared by commercial rivals.

The Leeds 'Mercury' says: Manufacturers will regard with satisfaction Canada's determination to deal more favourably with the mother country than with the United States. It doubts whether the explanation of the most-favoured nation clause meets the difficulty.

The Liverpool 'Courier' says that the proposal of Canada to make a preferential tariff will be a good thing for Canada and for the United Kingdom. It adds: If we are to have free trade let it be between England and the colonies, and let other nations which would ruin us look out for themselves.

The Newcastle 'Chronicle' states that Canada's tariff is an answer to McKinley. It adds that free traders are naturally disappointed that circumstances prevented the Canadian government going further, but they have taken an important step towards the desired goal.

The 'Daily News' regards the new tariff as an outcome of American legislation, and adds: 'Mr. Fielding spoke out manfully and accurately upon the relations of this country and the colonies. Too many colonists have hitherto failed to appreciate the fact that while receiving colonial goods free we have allowed the colonies to tax our goods.' It regards the policy announced by Mr. Fielding as advantageous and likely to lead to developments in the direction of free trade. The new Canadian tariff is not avowedly and in terms a measure for the benefit of Great Britain, but England will profit more than any other nation. As free traders they rejoice in the consequences of the Dingley tariff. As patriots they welcome this significant display of attachment from the greatest of the British colonies, and as Liberals they congratulate the leader of the Liberal party of the Dominion.

London 'Globe': It is difficult to overestimate the importance of the news. The Canadian tariff will not improbably prove a prelude to the realization of the hitherto unattainable ideal of free trade within the empire with protection against the world. For many years the Conservative party in Canada advocated the adoption of this policy, but the Liberal cabinet has had the courage to make it the basis of tariff reform. It is possible that the Canadian Minister of Finance is oversanguine in supposing that the difficulties of the new tariff will be readily overcome. Canada has led the way in preferential trade, and her thank offering for the blessings of liberty and security under British rule is not in vain. Wherever the English tongue is heard Mr. Fielding's eloquence will cause a thrill of patriotic enthusiasm and the singing of the National Anthem will find an echo in millions of loyal hearts.'

The 'Pall Mall Gazette' says: The Conservatives talked about preferential duties and did nothing. Now Mr. Fielding plays a trump card with decision. At the same time his speech proves that the government are animated by a real desire to tighten the bonds of the empire. The tariff is bound to have far-reaching results, and the Jubilee year may mark the new era.

The 'Morning': The tariff is the first step towards the closer union of the colonies with the mother country. To the British government and to Mr. Chamberlain the policy of the Canadian government must be a welcome surprise, and no less gratifying to Her Majesty. The enthusiasm of the House of Commons on the adjournment of the debate was a fitting endorsement of an act that does honour to the patriotism of the most distinguished offspring of the mother of parliaments.

The 'St. James' Gazette' praises Mr. Fielding's references to the treatment of Canada by Great Britain. Mr. Fielding has, it says, answered the appeal which Mr. Chamberlain made to the colonies last year in an affirmative and hearty speech. He does not confine himself, as the advocates of preferential trade have commonly done, to vague expressions of loyalty, followed by requests that the mother country shall tax her imports for the benefit of her colonies. The course of the Canadian ministry is not quite clear, especially with regard to the Belgium and Germany treaties, but new financial and commercial good is never easy. The ministry has taken up the policy of its defeated opponents, carrying it to lengths they never ventured. All the indications seem to promise success and justify Mr. Fielding in expecting whatever help the mother country can supply.

Well, Sir, Mr. Fielding looked to the mother country and he did not look in vain. The denunciation of the Belgian and German treaties was desired by the Conservative government, but they could accomplish nothing. However, when the present government came into power the British nation was so struck with Canada turning over a new leaf and giving Britain the preference, that they denounced those treaties and so the Canadian Liberals obtained in a very short time, what the Conservatives had talked about and could accomplish nothing. The first preference of 12½ per cent was very small, and you can easily understand that it did not increase our trade with Great Britain to any great extent, because the trade was running in well-worn channels, and the manufacturers who were making, say 20 per cent profit did not wish to relinquish their grasp. However, they had to cut down their prices then, and they had to cut them down again when the preference was made 25 per cent, and now that the preferential rate is 33½ per cent, the consuming masses of this country will get their goods all the cheaper. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), in his speech made in this debate, in referring to the increased preference, used this language:

What is one of the first effects of this cut of 33½ per cent, made hastily, without discrimination as to articles. It is that it places articles of luxury about the lowest on the list of dutiable goods coming into this country. If the 33½ per cent cut is effective, it lets jewellery in at 20 per cent. It lets manufactures of gold and silver used by rich people in at 20 per cent; it lets in silks, which are used by the wealthy, at 23½ per cent; it lets in laces at 23½ per cent; it lets in pianos at 20 per cent; it lets in porcelain goods at 20 per cent; it lets ribbons in at 23½ per cent; it lets shawls and rugs in at 20 per cent; it lets in watches at 16½ per cent; it admits high class worsted goods at 23½ per cent; velvets at 20 per cent; Brussels carpets at 33½ per cent; cottons, gray and white, at 16½ per cent, and coloured cottons at 23½ per cent.

Here he describes gray and white cotton as luxuries, but we all know that these articles are used by the poor as well as by the rich, and they will come into the country now under the preferential rate as 16½ per cent duty. Does not that look like a reduction in the tariff? In all those articles (Mr. Foster) enumerated, the highest he specified was 23½ per cent duty, and will not this be an advantage to the people of Canada who buy these things when they get them at a very much lower price? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) seems to infer that none but the rich or wealthy enjoy what he calls luxuries. I am very glad to say that most of the things which he has mentioned here can be found in the farm houses of the county of Wellington. The farmers have a right to use them, and they do use them, and under the Liberal preferential tariff they will get them much cheaper than under the Tory tariff. Is it not reasonable to suppose that the goods which we import from Great Britain will increase more and more because if there is a few more years of good government our people will become well off, and they will be able to double their imports from Great Britain. Some of these gentlemen opposite say to us : Oh, you have given an advantage to the mother country, and you are getting nothing in return for it. Why, Sir, we are getting our goods cheaper, and in that way we are getting a return already. The farmers will be able to purchase the best British tweeds and worsteds, and if they want a silk hat to wear they can buy one cheaper than ever before. I was told by a merchant that he has already noticed a good deal of difference in the price of these goods on account of the preferential tariff. A paper read at the intercolonial conference in 1894, showed conclusively that the trade between Canada and Great Britain was only 2.2 per cent. It has increased now to nearly 4 per cent, but even at that it would take twenty-five countries as large as Canada to make up the foreign trade of Great Britain. Does any one suppose for a moment that the free trade system which has been in existence for so many years in Great Britain, and has been so acceptable that few oppose it, will be relinquished by the British people? For my own part I often wonder why there are not more protectionists in Great Britain, for if there is any class that needs protection, it is the British farmer and the British landowner, and those two combined make a large vote in many constituencies. It is not to be wondered at that many members of the British parliament representing agricultural constituencies would want to tax the produce of foreign countries imported to Great Britain, because they know that then they would receive more for what they have to sell. But so far, the agricultural representatives of England have done nothing in that line, for the reason that they know that the trend of public opinion is against them. What a ridiculous thing it would be for our respected Prime Minister to say to the British statesmen, when he was in England at the Jubilee : Canada has made a little sacrifice for you, and we want you to tax the breadstuffs coming from foreign countries in order to make up for what Canada has done. How absurd it would be for our Prime Minister to ask Great Britain to upset her whole fiscal policy to please Canada. Who wants to make a request when he knows it will not be granted? I say that the Premier, the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier is to be congratulated on the manly speech he made in England when he told them that Canada gave the preference, and was not looking for a return. I would consider it a benefit to the farmers of this country if Canadian products were admitted to Great Britain free and a tax put upon other foreign imports, but I do not expect to see it; for I know that it is natural to suppose that the wants of the British farmer will be considered by the British parliament before they come to consider the wants of the Canadian farmer. A great deal has been said by different speakers opposite to the effect that the Reform party when in opposition promised that the expenditure would be much less than what it is. We all know that the condition of things is quite different. We know that people in opposition are free to say anything and advocate anything, and are not very particular, so that now when they come to administer the affairs of the country, having greater light on the subject, they see it is not so easy to make a reduction as was contemplated. People are always liable to change. It is my opinion that if a person has made a certain calculation, and he found out he was wrong, it is a good thing that he has the moral courage to own to it and to say : That with more light and experience on the subject he considered he went too far, and that the circumstances did not justify the remarks that he made. Some people who do not speak often have the advantage that they do not require to have such long memories as those who make lengthy speeches, and who forget what they said on different occasions. The increase in the capital expenditure has been denounced by gentlemen opposite. As I mentioned in a former part of my remarks, our trade has increased one-third, and our revenue has increased one-fourth, and there is nothing to complain of if the expenditure should increase one-tenth. That is not out of the way. Complaints were made under the late government when the revenue was $34,000,000, and there was a deficit of $4,000,000, that the expenditure was certainly too much, and there is no doubt about that. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), acknowledged that during the three years this government was in power the capital account has increased $1,800,000, but, Sir, there is something to show for that. There is the deepening of the canals from nine to fourteen feet, the full benefit of which we have not derived yet, but it is expected with great reason that the trade that formerly went through the United States by Buffalo, will find its way down the St. Lawrence through Canada. As to the expenditure of the government on public works, I myself thought when the proposal was made to give $11,000 per mile to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, that it was a bad investment. But, Sir, it has proved to be a good investment. The government has an asset there of 50,000 acres of the finest coal lands. They secured an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway that the railway company would reduce the freight on wheat from Winnipeg to Fort William 3 cents per 100 pounds, and on the large amount of wheat raised in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, that reduction will put between four and five hundred thousand dollars into the pockets of the farmers of Manitoba. There was also a reduction made by the Canadian Pacific Railway on freight going into the country, amounting to from 10 to 33 per cent. When the Conservatives were in power it was considered that the people of Manitoba and the North-west were working for the Canadian Pacific Railway, but now they are working on shares, and while the Canadian Pacific Railway gets a part, the people get the other part. Another result of the expenditure on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway is that it has built up towns and villages along the road, and we see the town of Fernie, not three years in existence, has a population of one thousand and contributed $400 to the patriotic fund. The hardy miners in that and other towns will require large supplies of goods, and will increase our trade, while they are increasing the outputs of the mines in British Columbia. It is a gratifying fact to know the increase of mining in the Dominion of Canada. In 1894 the value of the output of the mines was $19,993,857; in 1895, it was $20,758,450; in 1896, it was $22,584,513; in 1897, it was $28,661,430; in 1898, it was $30,661,010; in 1899, it was $46,245,878. This mining industry seems to be increasing by leaps and bounds, and the country will profit by it. Now, Sir, it was with satisfaction that we saw the increase of revenue in British Columbia, Manitoba and the North-west Territories, during the last three years. In 1895, the revenue of British Columbia was $1,035,698; the revenue from Manitoba was $484,883, the revenue from the North-west Territories was $16,330; total, $1,555,911. In 1896, the revenue from British Columbia was $1,308,579; the revenue from Manitoba was $615,851. The revenue from the North-west Territories was $40,847, making a total of $1,965,277. In 1899 the revenue from British Columbia was $2,113,927; from Manitoba, $1,140,628; and from the North-west Territories and the Yukon district, $593,628, or a total of $3,848,183 of customs duties collected for the year ending 30th June, 1899, showing an increase over 1896 of $1,883,906.

The government did well in extending the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal. I remember meeting a friend of mine of a literary turn of mind in the village where I reside, who had been loaded up by arguments from the Mail and Empire, and who seemed to think that this transaction would result in a great loss to the country. I said to him: My friend, time will decide the matter, and if time shows that we can pay the rental and reduce the expenditure, we will have done good work. Well, what has been the result? Take the history of the Intercolonial Railway, and there has been a deficit each year from the beginning, during thirty-one years, of $8,468,199, being an average yearly loss of $273,167. In 1898, the deficit was $263,402, not quite up to the average, but in the year 1899, there was a grand showing. One hundred and sixty-nine miles more of that railway was operated, giving employment to a largely increased number of brakesmen, engineers and other operatives, and the net result showed an increase of business to the extent of $620,661, and a profit of $62,645 over expenditure. That is a good showing, and a very clear demonstration of the ability with which the present government is administering that great railway. Contrast that with the supineness of the late government. Here was this great railway, that cost $55,000,000, having one of its termini at Halifax, another at St. John, and its western terminus in the little obscure village of Lévis. But the present administration has changed all that. The terminus of that railway is now in the great city of Montreal, where it can compete for the trade flowing into and through that metropolis, and to this reform is due the change of a deficit on the working of this railway into a surplus.

Let me now make a statement which, I am sure, will gladden the heart of hon. members opposite, and that is a statement of the result of our postal administration. There is not a service in the Dominion that has shown greater evidence of care and attention, and which reflects greater credit on the administration. Take the results of the administration of that service in the three last years of the late government, as compared with the results in the three years of the present government:

In 1894 the deficit was.....	$	707,921
“ 1895 “ “		800,857
“ 1896 “ “		699,391
		<hr/>
		$2,208,169
		<hr/>
“ 1897 “ “	$	586,540
“ 1898 “ “		47,602
“ 1899 “ “		398,071
		$1,032,213

The deficit in the last three years of the late government was $2,208,169, whereas in the three years of the present government, notwithstanding the fact that the Postmaster General has reduced postage from three to two cents, it was but $1,032,213, or $1,175,956 less than under Conservative rule. It has been stated by a previous speaker that the reduction in postage might benefit the merchants who wrote fifty or a hundred letters a day, but was of no benefit to the farmers. But, Mr. Speaker, the farmers are paying less taxation for the service than they did before, and getting cheaper postage.

The Conservative party are to-day in the position of Micawber looking for something to turn up. They thought their opportunity had come when the first contingent was sent to South Africa. They filled their newspapers with their clamours against the government, they denounced the Minister of Public Works hip and thigh as a high priest of treason, in the hope that his downfall would cause the collapse of the whole government. Well, what was the stand that the Minister of Public Works did take? All he said was this, that any expenditure incurred should receive the sanction of parliament before being incurred, and that the action of the government in the sending of the contingent, without previous parliamentary sanction, should not be taken as a precedent; and he further said that if Canada was to contribute to the wars of Great Britain, it should have a representative in the British parliament. What was wrong in that contention? Under ordinary circumstances, every expenditure should first be submitted to parliament, but in the case of the first contingent the circumstances rendered that procedure inadvisable. A cablegram passed between the right hon. the First Minister and the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, in which it is stated that a contingent of 1,000 men would be gladly received and thoroughly appreciated by the home government. Our government, as soon as they ascertained the feeling of the country, perfected the arrangement for sending the contingent, they assumed the responsibility of incurring a large expenditure without first having the consent of parliament, as the case was exceptional and every member of the government was unanimous in what was done, and it left on the 30th of October, and I must say the hon. leader of the opposition showed his patriotism when he telegraphed the First Minister that he would lend him all the assistance possible to secure the endorsement of parliament to the sending of the contingent in advance. Thus, it is satisfactory to note that while parties may differ on minor questions of policy, when the honour of the country is at stake they are both agreed, and we all feel proud of the noble conduct of those loyal Canadians who left their homes and went to Africa to fight the battles of the empire. In that country they are enduring privations and risking their lives for the sake of the empire, and the sacrifices they are making will have a powerful effect in joining Canada and the motherland closer together than ever before. Our preferential tariff was the first announcement by this government of its policy to bring closer together Canada and the motherland. Then came the jubilee year, when the Premier went to that aristocratic country—Great Britain—he was the guest of the greatest nobility in the land, and his speeches and demeanour were the admiration of all with whom he came in contact. He was considered at all times, and places, as a worthy representative of the Dominion of Canada.

There is only one thing in which I consider the government have been a little remiss, that is in not bringing in a measure looking to the reformation of the Senate, and endeavouring to have a change effected in the British North America Act giving effect to such a measure. The appointment of senators is a blot on the Act of Confederation. The Dominion of Canada has no need of any irresponsible body. The senators are not occupied more than one-sixth of the time that members of the House of Commons are, although they receive the same indemnity, and their equipment is more costly. The Senate cost the country in 1899, $147,636. Its cost for thirty years has been $4,429,080. There is an account given in the Auditor General's Report of 81 senators being supplied with 84 pocket pencils, costing $214.62, or $2.55 each; 84 Anchor fountain pens, costing the same amount; and 84 travelling cases, costing $873.80, besides a chaplain who costs $400 annually. If that chaplain could only instil into the senators a proper idea of right and wrong, the money would be well spent; but it does not appear that he has made much impression upon them. They have not the respect of the country. In many instances they have had an opportunity of doing good, but they have not done it. They have proved that the majority are narrow, bigoted and partisan, and that a body appointed has more power than one elected. When the Conservative party was in power, the Senate was of no use, except to register the will of that party, whatever it might be; but since the Liberal party have been in power, the Senate have continually plotted to embarrass the government as much as possible. It is a sad thing that such a country as Canada, with her educational institutions, should be handicapped and the voice of the people ignored, and that an irresponsible body should be able to trample under foot the will of the people. In this connection, I will read a well written article which recently appeared in a newspaper:

The second defeat of the Redistribution Bill has aroused the indignation of all lovers of responsible government in Canada. It has shocked and disgusted the thinking Conservatives of the country, and reminds all classes of people that a crisis in the government affairs of the Dominion has arrived that demands serious attention. What is to be done? Must the legislation of a responsible House of Commons, elected by the people, a House directly responsible to the country for their every action, be trampled down, thrown aside and destroyed by an irresponsible body of senators, partisan to the core? Is that government for the people, by the people? We may point with pride to our government institutions and boast of responsible government in Canada, but responsible government ceases when the voice of the people is disregarded. Some means of remedy must be found. If reformation of the Senate will not secure for the people of Canada that of which they boast, and abolition is the only remedy, abolition it must be. The indignant Canadian is much like the indignant Briton—his rights must be respected at whatever cost.

There is every reason to believe that the great hope of the opposition lies in misrepresentation of the government. As I said before, they are trying to make political capital out of the smallest event that occurs. Why,

Sir, the trifling little affair that occurred in Montreal, between the students of two colleges, was taken up by them, and their press published accounts of it under large headlines, as if something very awful was going to happen. I will read an extract on the subject from a truthful and reliable newspaper. It is in these words :

Slander and misrepresentation could scarcely go further than it does in the Toronto 'Mail and Empire,' which has an editorial article beginning with these words: 'While Mr. Tarte is hobnobbing with Dr. Leyds, the Boer intriguer in Europe, his party is doing heavy work here.' Mr. Tarte has been advising the Boers to come under the British flag and enjoy the religious and civil liberty that it guarantees, and instead of thanks for this loyal and patriotic work, Mr. Tarte is falsely and foully misrepresented, and his whole people exasperated for no other purpose than to poison the Ontario people against Sir Wilfrid Laurier's government. The editorial columns of the 'Mail and Empire' are a standing disgrace to Canadian journalism, so persistently malicious and false are their contents. Does or does not the 'Mail and Empire' place too low an estimate on the intelligence of its readers?

An hon. MEMBER. Who wrote that ?

Mr. SEMPLE. That is from the Montreal Witness. I have an article from another paper, which can view matters fairly from a disinterested standpoint—I refer to the great organ of public opinion, the London Times. This article is an answer to all the vile insinuations that are made in regard to the actions of this government. It says :

The results of the British system of Imperial rule, as applied to territory inhabited by white races of different origin, was never more strikingly illustrated than by the speech made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on Tuesday in the Dominion House of Commons. The speech would rank high in any assembly in the world as a model of noble eloquence, but it is not the language or act of the Canadian Premier's address which will make it live in the annals of the empire. The spirit which glows through it and the thoughts which underlie it are pregnant with great issues for England and mankind. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the French Roman Catholic Premier of a self-governing federation, in which British Protestants are in the majority, has expressed more faithfully and more truly than any statesman who has spoken yet the temper of the new Imperial patriotism fostered into self-consciousness by the war.

Such utterances from newspapers at a distance cause to sink into insignificance the aspersions which are sought to be cast upon the right hon. the Premier, by a number of journalists in this country. From certain articles that appear in some of these papers, the writers would seem to be imbued with the spirit of the late Annanias, whose name is synonymous with falsehood, bearing false witness and deceit. Mr. Speaker, having trespassed so long on your time, I will now conclude, by thanking you and hon. members for the patient hearing that I have received.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate, and I would appeal to the hon. Finance Minister, who is leading the government, to allow this motion to pass. The argument which I intend to make is based principally on a report of the French Chamber of Commerce of Montreal, and I desire to make that argument in French. There is only one single member for the province of Quebec in the House, except my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), is asleep—

Mr. SEMPLE.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not at all.

Mr. MONK. Or was until a moment ago. I woke him up myself. And the Minister of Inland Revenue was very nearly asleep also. Under these circumstances, I would urge on my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) that it is imposing an unfair task upon a member of this House, to ask him on a serious question such as that we are now debating, to address the House when he asks the privilege of using the French language, basing his argument on a report of the French Chamber of Commerce of the city of Montreal, when there is not a single man, except the reporter of Hansard and these gentlemen I have mentioned who can understand that language. It seems really reducing parliament to a farce. We have worked well this week already. Of course, I am ready to go on; I am ready to deliver my speech to the Minister of Inland Revenue—I feel sure I shall convince him—but I do not think we should proceed in that way. I leave it to my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) himself. This is an important matter. It has not been treated at any length in the French language, and I have a particular reason for wishing to speak in French on this subject. It is already half-past ten, and surely the Minister of Finance will not impose on me the task of delivering a speech in French when I fear I shall be something like the elector who began his address, 'Ladies and gentlemen,' when he noticed that there was only one man in the House, and changed it to 'Respected individual.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is doing very well, and I think he had better keep on.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) knows that the members of Quebec, knowing this debate would not close this week have gone away. It is to them I wish to address myself in their own language, and I think I am not asking anything unreasonable, under the circumstances, in asking that the debate be adjourned. I would not make such a request if I thought it was unreasonable. But, let the Minister of Finance look at the House, I have a few faithful friends who have been kind enough to remain here, but on the other side there is not a quorum, and the leader of the House himself must realize how very difficult it is to speak in French under such circumstances.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hardly think that the question of the particular language a gentleman may wish to address the House in has any relation to the hour to which we should sit. It is only two nights ago that we were rebuked, and I think, perhaps, not unjustly, for consenting to an adjournment at 11 o'clock. It is now only half-past ten. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) ought to speak. I know that Friday night is not a very convenient night for any member to address the House. But we must all submit to inconvenience. Owing to circumstances I had to make my budget speech this year on Friday, which was by no means a convenient afternoon. I think we ought to ask the House to continue.

Mr. MONK. I am going to be very short.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is another reason why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) should go on this evening. I do not think we should adjourn at such an hour as this.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). After the statement made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that only one French Canadian member remained on the opposite side of the House, I think his request should be granted. Of course many of us on this side are familiar with the French language and will follow the speaker, but on the other side that is not the case. I think it would be only a fair compliment to those who wish to address the House in French that hon. members should not be required to speak to what would be upon that side of the House practically empty benches.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is rather unfortunate, of course, that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has no French members on his own side to stand by him. But we are able to assure him of a very intelligent French audience on this side that is here attending to its parliamentary duties. I am sorry he has no French Canadian associates on his side, but we on this side are more just to him and will give him an audience.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), for the reasons which I have given when moving the adjournment of the debate, did not see his way clear to yield to my demand. It stands to reason that when a member of this House undertakes the already arduous task to develop in the French language his views upon such an important issue as the one now under consideration, it is only adding to his hardships to force him to speak before empty benches and when there are only a few French-speaking members in the House.

But, Sir, I am a lawyer, and as such, used to speaking in public; and since I find myself under the painful necessity of addressing the Hansard reporters, owing to the absence of my colleagues from the province of Quebec, I shall acquit myself of my task to the best of my ability.

Sir, a member who rises to address the House at this stage of the debate, finds himself in an awkward position, not only for the reasons I have just referred to, but also because the field of debate has been so thoroughly explored by previous speakers. We all remember those lines from Borleau's Art poétique:

Vingt fois sur le métier, remettez votre ouvrage.
Polissez-le sans cesse, et le repolissez.
Hâtez-vous lentement, et sans perdre courage,
Ajoutez quelquesfois et souvent effacez.

Sir, I think that if it had been given to Boileau to attend this sitting of the House and to hear this debate, fastidious though he was, he could not have found fault with our scrupulous adherence to his oft-quoted precept. At all events, I must say that although I have noted down several points, during the debate which has now been going on for some time, as I saw that the points I wished to deal with were being developed by other speakers, I had to strike out nearly everything I had written.

Still, I think, the question now under consideration is of such importance that previous to voting upon it, the members from the province of Quebec should be given a chance to state their views and define their position on the question.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks fallen from the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) this afternoon. I admired his practical turn of mind and the good sense he has displayed in his speech when he was giving the House those data and all the information which we listened to with such pleasure. For my part, I do not wish to follow him on the ground he has traversed, as the subject has been so thoroughly threshed out; but what I want to dwell upon more particularly, is the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), as that motion embodies the very reason which induces me to give the vote I am going to give on this amendment; and that reason is founded upon the consideration of the preferential tariff.

I think I am within the mark, Sir, when I say that, among all the questions which have been debated on the floor of this House since confederation, and from the very origin of this Dominion, there is none to be compared with this preferential trade question, in point of its supreme importance. As to the province of Quebec, I may say, that the question is of paramount importance.

In my quality of representative of a county situated in the immediate vicinity of Montreal, the commercial metropolis of Canada, I say, Sir, that the advantages resulting to us from a favourable solution of that problem would simply be incalculable. We are in the vicinity of a great city, the population of which is increasing very rapidly, and the waves of that overflowing population, like the rising tide, spread all over the surrounding country, reaching the hills situated between the limits of my county and those of the city. On those fertile hills, watered on one side by the river Ottawa and on the other side by the St. Lawrence, farmers engage in scientific farming.

Farming, in my county, is highly developed, and I do not think there can be found throughout the length and breadth of the province of Quebec, a wealthier and more prosperous community than is found in my county. Therefore, everything that tends to foster and encourage farming and increase our agricultural products is of the greatest interest to us.

This preferential tariff question acquires a fresh interest and a greater importance, from the fact that we are actually confronted by a negative solution, as regards our access to the American market, the doors of which our opponents were going to open to our trade, as they had promised to do, during the electoral campaign of 1896. We know beyond a doubt, to-day, that the doors of the American market are closed to us and the hopes that were held out to us in that respect have been dashed to pieces.

The object we are aiming at, in debating the important question now under consideration, tends to open still wider the doors of the great British market, across the Atlantic. The question is whether the proposed plan for compassing that object ought to be adopted or whether we ought to support the proposition which the government submits to our approval. Our choice lies between those two propositions, both tending to secure for our products the English market, the only market, beyond a doubt, which is left us.

As to the preferential tariff issue, to which I want to confine my remarks, there seems to be a general consensus of opinion as to the advantages to be obtained by that fiscal policy, were it to be adopted and enforced throughout the whole empire. That inter-imperial scheme would open to our agricultural products, and to our trade, a market of 300,000,000 people. The possibilities in this respect are simply immense.

The prospects which this system opens to us, with regard to the disposal of our agricultural products, have always been, as a rule, considered as most inviting. That question has been thoroughly threshed out in this House, and outside of it, by all our political men. During the electoral contest which took place in the county of Jacques Cartier, in 1896, when I ran for parliament, that same question was over and over again explained to the people, and all were agreed that the establishment of the preferential trade system would procure to all classes of the community exceptional advantages; and that such a regime, by opening to us the British markets, could not fail to give our industries a powerful impetus, and that it would develop throughout the country an unprecedented prosperity.

As I said, all those who addressed the electors in my constituency, in 1896, were agreed on that point, and the only difference of opinion was as to the means of reaching the desired end. Some were of the opinion that, with our protective tariff, there was nothing to be expected from Great Britain; while we, Conservatives, maintained that even, without abandoning our protective tariff, Great Britain would, later on, feel constrained to give us certain advantages. But, as I said, so far as the benefits resulting from the carrying out of that grand scheme, the commercial federation of the empire, are concerned, never, in the course of the hard-fought contest of 1896, did I hear any one give expression to the least doubt on that point. Even in England, Sir, they are agreed on it, and, before resuming my seat, I hope that I shall prove to the satisfaction of the House that there is a perfect consensus of opinion among politicians and business men in the motherland about the enormous impetus which would be given to the trade of Canada and of the other colonies, were colonial products accorded a preferential treatment in the British market and in the markets of sister colonies. That is granted even by those who are unwilling to make any concession to the colonies. I may be allowed to repeat—for, in the course of a debate which has already reached such proportions, repetitions can scarcely be avoided—that the attitude which we are taking to-day, when asking the mother country to give us a quid pro quo, is by no means a novel attitude, or something unheard of; for, as pointed out during this debate, there is no country which does not accord some preference to its colonies. So does Germany, while France, which has a very high tariff, gives nevertheless to her great colonies a special tariff. So again when Canada, which is no longer a mere colony, but, thanks to her wonderful development, forms an integral portion of what British statesmen now call Greater Britain; when, I say, we Canadians, addressing the mother country, offer her, out of generosity and in a broad spirit, certain advantages, we are entitled to expect some return from her. And the attitude we take is by no means a singular or an unprecedented one; for, we are only walking in the footsteps of all the other countries or dependencies of great European powers.

We must not lose sight of the fact that England herself carried out the policy referred to. Until recently, the prevailing impression in Canada was that Great Britain is the mother country of free trade ; but there is nothing remoter from the truth than such a view. As recently as 1860, Great Britain had always given a preferential treatment to her colonies ; and should the self-governing colonies succeed in converting the mother country to their views and prevail upon her to give them a preferential treatment in her markets, the motherland would then only come back to the system that obtained in England until a comparatively recent date. Prior to 1842, the chief articles of colonial production, such as wheat, wood, tobacco, wine and many others, enjoyed preferential tariff treatment in Great Britain. Wheat, which is so often referred to, in connection with such preferential tariff treatment in the British market, was made dutiable in favour of the colonies. That duty, it is true, was chargeable and was regulated by a sliding scale. It was higher when wheat was cheap, and lower when the price of wheat was enhanced ; but, at all events, there was a practical discrimination made in favour of wheat imported from the colonies, as against wheat imported from foreign countries. After the fiscal revolution which took place about that time in Great Britain—in 1846, I think—the discrimination in favour of wheat imported from the colonies was maintained as late as 1849 ; so that, towards 1850, that article, which is of such large production in the colonies, was still the object of a preferential treatment. Nay, more, as recently as 1860 there were differential duties or a discrimination in favour of many colonial products in the markets of Great Britain. For instance, differential duties were imposed upon barley, butter and cheese—which are of such large production in Canada, chiefly since the dairying has taken so great a development, and also on rice, binder twine and other articles.

But in 1860, began the industrial supremacy and the world-wide dominion of England. Knowing that she could hold her own against the whole world, she came to the conclusion of giving free access to her markets to the imports of foreign nations.

Let me here call attention to a fact contemporary with the fiscal revolution of Great Britain, for, in the treatment of so complex a question as this, it is desirable to notice the trend of public opinion. In 1860, when England decided to establish free trade and to open the doors of her markets to the whole world, there was already a noticeable movement, in the colonies in the direction of preferential trade.

As early as 1859, prior to the negotiations which resulted in the confederation of the provinces, the various British North American colonies were anxious to obtain from Great Britain the privilege of establishing preferential tariff treatment among themselves. But, England objected to any such arrangement and then began the great movement which resulted in the confederation of the provinces and the throwing down of the customs barriers which existed between the provinces. But, let us see what was going on at the antipodes, in the same connection : a similar movement was started in the Australian colonies which are actually trying to confederate, as the Canadian provinces did at that time. These Australian colonies were anxious to obtain from the imperial government the right of establishing a preferential tariff among themselves, and similar objections were raised by the British authorities ; but, such was the force of the movement, that in the end, the Imperial parliament had to pass an Act to authorize those colonies to establish a mutual preferential tariff among themselves.

It will readily be understood, Sir, from the history of these first endeavours, that we have been the pioneers in that great movement towards the establishment of inter-imperial preferential trade. We were the first to appoint a representative or high-commissioner for Canada, in 1880 ; and in creating this office, the Conservative government, had in view the desirability of keeping the country well informed as to the transactions and the progress of affairs in the old country, as also the necessity of watching more closely our own commercial interests.

The Imperial Federation League was also created under similar circumstances, its object being to secure our commercial supremacy in the English market and in the colonies.

I do not think that too much weight should be given to the utterances of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in this respect. I was surprised to hear his remarks about the state of public opinion in England on this question. I do not think either that too much stock should be taken in the utterances of the hon. member for Brant who has shed crocodile's tears over the position of the English workers. He told us that the people of Great Britain would turn a deaf ear to our request, should we presume to ask them what is embodied in the amendment before the House.

In hearing the hon. gentleman make such statements, I wonder at their sublime ignorance of the progress of public opinion in Great Britain. If they have closely watched the progress of that opinion, how is it that they are not aware of the fact that in that Imperial Federation League are to be found men of considerable eminence, prominent members of the House of Commons, like Mr. Howard Vincent and others who, one and all, advocate the idea that, sooner or later, Great Britain will consent to give us preferential treatment for our products in the British market, and that the Imperial Federation League was founded for the very object of promoting and encouraging that scheme? Those eminent British politicians, have not hesitated to advocate that policy, which has been most enthusiastically endorsed in the old country.

What did Lord Salisbury, the Prime Minister of England, tell Mr. Howard Vincent and others upon a solemn occasion when they had waited on him in order to bring to his notice the proposal I am advocating here to-night? Lord Salisbury acknowledged that the subject I am dealing with is nothing more nor less than a problem in which the future of the British Empire is concerned. He said further:

On this matter public opinion must be framed or formed before any government can act. No government can impose its own opinions on the people of this country in these matters. You are invited, and it is the duty of those who feel themselves to be the pioneers of such a movement and the apostles of such a doctrine, to go forth and fight for it, and, when they have convinced the people of this country, their battle will be won.

Such were the utterances of the Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Many statesmen and economists have written on this question in the leading magazines in the old country; and the hon. leader of the opposition himself, upon two different occasions,—the first time, if my memory serves me right, in 1891, in the Fortnightly Review, and later on, in 1892 in the Nineteenth Century—has written articles in which he advocated the very proposal which is laid down in the amendment under consideration. These articles were favourably received and commented on by the press in England. I do not know whether the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) and the hon. gentlemen who contend that Great Britain will never grant us such a preference in her markets, have read a volume which has created quite a sensation in England among those who are interested in this question: I refer to 'Made in Germany,' a book published by Ernest Edwin William, which has been very favourably received in England. The author points out the decline that has taken place in the volume of exports of industrial products, and he shows, by means of statistics, that Germany, Belgium and the United States have entered into a deadly rivalry with Great Britain and are threatening her commercial supremacy. He then suggests remedies, and before all others he mentions the mutual preferential trade system, by which England might discriminate in her tariff in favour of colonial products, as against foreign produce entering Great Britain. He gives his country this truly wise piece of advice: let England, if she wishes to maintain her commercial supremacy, approach in the proper tone and spirit the solution of that problem, namely, the creation of an inter-imperial preferential trade system. By adopting that system, he says, England will recover her commercial supremacy which is apparently about to be wrested from her through the acute and deadly competition of European and American industry.

Mr. MONK.

Now, Sir, whoever has attentively read that book, and noticed how favourably it has been received by the English readers, cannot surely rush to the conclusion that this preferential trade system is a mere utopia, and that the solution of that problem must be relegated to the Greek Kalends. This is a question of capital importance. In my opinion, it is the paramount question, and one which will come under the consideration of the Canadian electorate, during the approaching contest. That problem was approached in the proper spirit by this parliament in 1892, and by means of a resolution, the Conservative party did very clearly define their position, and since they have never receded from it. Sir, if you read the speeches delivered by the most eminent men in the Conservative party, and if you closely examine the attitude and action of that party, you will find that they have never varied from their position. Today, their attitude is clearly expressed in the amendment submitted to the House, and in the exact terms embodied in the resolution adopted by parliament in 1892.

That resolution was proposed by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) who had given the subject his closest attention. It was opposed by the gentlemen who now sit on the opposite side; and most of all, by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) who tried to amend it. The resolution reads as follows:

If and when the parliament of Great Britain and Ireland admits Canadian products to the markets of the United Kingdom on more favourable terms than it accords to the products of foreign countries, the parliament of Canada will be prepared to grant corresponding advantages by a substantial reduction in the duties it imposes upon British manufactured goods.

That, Sir, was our position in 1892, and as I just said, we have never varied from it.

Let me now show to the House that this proposal, which is so fair, so just, so reasonable, far from having been treated with contempt, has ever been most favourably received by the most eminent British statesmen and by the British public, in general; and further that the action of the Canadian government has resulted in adjourning indefinitely or at least for many years to come, the grant of that great boon which we would have every chance of conquering now, should we join hands to reach the desired end.

The British press has expressed its entire approbation of the generous concessions made to Great Britain by the Finance Minister. These concessions which first amounted to a cut of twelve per cent in the tariff, were, later on, raised to twenty-five per cent, and they now reach the figure of thirty-three and one-third per cent, under the resolution submitted to the House. These munificent concessions on the part of the government have won for them the highest encomiums.

When we were in power, and we had taken for our motto 'give and take' as stated yesterday by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain); when we told the mother country that we wanted something in return for the concessions which we were ready to make, the British press did not scout the idea, and the London Times, which cannot be charged with propounding economical heresies, made itself the echo of public opinion in Great Britain. Now, how did this journal treat the proposal made by the Conservatives, to the effect that we, colonials, should also get something in return for the advantages we were willing to grant Great Britain? Allow me to give an extract from the editorial published by that paper on the question which now engages our attention.

When, however we come to deal with a commercial union, we tread upon ground that has to be traversed with caution. Sir Gordon Spriggs tells us that free trade is not a fetish in the colonies, and that the theories of the text-books are not allowed to stand in the way of any fiscal measure that seems advantageous. As to the text-books, they are getting somewhat outworn even here. Our modern economists have so many qualifications to make in the fine, square-cut doctrines of the older school, that the science is rapidly becoming unrecognizable. There is still a considerable amount of fetish worship, but the idea upon which any commercial union must rest will not in future incur the furious and unreasoning hostility that would have greeted them twenty years ago. It is getting to be understood that free trade is made for man, not man for free trade, and any changes that may be proposed will have a better chance of being discussed upon their own merits, rather than in the tight and dry theory backed by outcries about the thin end of the wedge. The British Empire is so large and so completely self-supporting that it could very well afford, for the sake of a serious political gain, to surround itself with a moderate fence.

That is how the Times spoke, when parliament passed the resolution in question, making known to Great Britain the conditions under which we were ready to accord her a large measure of preference in our home market.

But parliament was not the only voice that made itself distinctly heard in 1892, on that question and intimated to Great Britain that, notwithstanding the ties which bind us to her, and in spite of our desire to promote the interests of the empire, it behooved us, first and last, to safeguard our own interests. The eminent statesman who, for so many years, had framed the fiscal policy of this country, Sir John A. Macdonald, had repeatedly made to Great Britain the very suggestion referred to. In 1891, on April 8, he wrote to the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, a minister in the British cabinet, as follows:—

Manufacturers and their working people must, or, rather should, be taught that they can find friendly and expanding markets in the colonies if they are treated in the same spirit * * *

Now, Canada has undertaken the development of her resources on so large a scale that she must have revenue, and from various causes, can only look to customs and excise for it. While therefore, she cannot promise a reduction of her customs duties, she will be quite ready to give British goods a preference of 5 or even 10 per cent in our markets, if our products receive a corresponding preference in England.

So, said Sir John Macdonald, Canada has undertaken to develop its own resources; we are ready to give British goods a preference of 5 or even 10 per cent in our markets, on the condition that England shall give us a similar preference.

We now come to the year 1894, and here again we find that the will of the people, as given expression to by our public men, by the Canadian parliament, was also in the direction referred to, namely, that we ought to receive something in return for the preference given to British goods in our markets.

I may say that in 1894, we took a decisive step towards the successful solution of this preferential trade problem, by the resolution which was adopted by the Ottawa conference, at which all the self-governing colonies of the empire, as well as the mother country herself, were represented. After a debate, in which participated nearly all the delegates to that conference, the following resolution was carried:

That this reference records its belief in the advisability of a customs arrangement between Great Britain and her colonies by which trade within the empire may be placed on a more favourable footing than that which is carried on with foreign countries.

Such was the resolution adopted by the Ottawa conference of 1894.

Now, the better to emphasize the fact that the colonies have ever claimed a preference in the markets of the mother country, I would beg of all the hon. gentlemen who take an interest in the matter—and I daresay it is one in which every one of us ought to feel interested—to look over the report of the great congress of all the Chambers of Commerce of the empire, which was held in 1886. By the way, let me say that at that congress met together not only the representatives of colonial trade, but also the chairmen of the British Chambers of Commerce. Two sittings at least of that congress were devoted to the consideration of the very question now under consideration. Now, Sir, in view of what has transpired at that important congress, is the hon. gentleman warranted in saying that Great Britain will never accede to our just demands in connection with the preferential treatment of our products in her markets?

I have before me the report of the proceedings of that congress, and I find that the 43 first pages are exclusively devoted to the consideration of the preferential trade question. The honorary president was the able statesman who is now at the head of the Colonial Office, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. He presided over the meeting, and I wish to call your attention to the utterances fallen from his lips upon that occasion. After first referring to the claims of the out and out free traders, who are hostile to any kind of duties levied upon British imports, and after having, on the other hand, clearly defined the position of colonial protectionists, who do not want to make any cut or discrimination in their tariff, he says :

Well, gentlemen, you will see that so far we have arrived at a deadlock. We have a proposal by British free traders which is rejected by the colonies. We have a proposal by colonial protectionists which is rejected by Great Britain. We have, therefore, if we are to make any progress at all, to seek a third course, a course in which there shall be give and take on both sides, in which neither side will pedantically adhere to preconceived conclusions, in which the good of the whole shall subordinate the separate interests of parts. And I admit that, if I understand it correctly, I find the germs of such a proposal in a resolution which is to be submitted to you on behalf of the Toronto Board of Trade. What is that resolution? I hope I correctly explain it. That resolution I understand to be one for the creation of a British Zollverein, or customs union, which would establish at once practically free trade throughout the British Empire, but would leave the contracting parties free to make their own arrangements with regard to duties upon foreign goods; except that this is an essential condition of the proposal that Great Britain shall consent to replace moderate duties upon certain articles which are of large production in the colonies. Now, if I have rightly understood it, these articles would comprise corn, meat, wool and sugar, and, perhaps, other articles of enormous consumption in this country, which are at present largely produced in the colonies, and which might be under such an arrangement wholly produced in the colonies, and wholly produced by British labour. On the other hand, as I have said, the colonies, while maintaining their duties upon foreign imports, would agree to a interchange of commodities with the rest of the empire and would cease to place protective duties upon any product of British labour. That is the principle of the German Zollverein; that is the principle which underlies the federation of the United States of America; and I do not doubt for a moment that if it were adopted it would be the strongest bond of union between the British race throughout the world. (Cheers.) I say that such a proposal as that might commend itself even to the orthodox free trader. It would be the greatest advance that free trade has ever made since it was first advocated by Mr. Cobden, to extend its doctrines permanently to more than 300 millions of the human race, and to communities, many of which are amongst the most thriving, the most prosperous, and the most rapidly increasing in the world. On the other hand, it would open up to the colonies an almost unlimited market for their agricultural and other productions. Of course, the details of such a scheme would require the most careful examination. There may have to be exceptions made to the principle, although I believe the principle itself must be adopted, if any progress is to be made at all. But I am not going to discuss fully these exceptions on the present occasion. I only want to impress upon you my personal conviction that if a proposal of this kind came to us from the colonies, backed by any considerable support on their part, it would not be met with a blank refusal by the people of this country. I say, gentlemen, if it were proposed to us by the colonies, because I do not consider that it would be either wise or practicable that a proposal of this kind should come in the first instance from the United Kingdom.

Such was the clear and explicit statement made by that eminent British statesman before the assembled congress.

Let us now come to the proposed proposition which was laid before the congress, a little later, by the representative of the Toronto Chamber of Commerce, the hon. member for Toronto Centre (Mr. Osler) :

Resolved, that in the opinion of this conference, the advantage to be obtained by a closer union between the various portions of the British Empire are so great as to justify an arrangement as nearly as possible of the nature of a Zollverein, based upon the principles of the freest exchange of commodities within the empire, consistent with the tariff requirements incident to the maintenance of the local government of each kingdom, dominion, province or colony, now forming part of the British family of nations.

As will be seen, it is clearly stated here that it is desirable to draw closer the commercial relations of the empire, without, however, disturbing the fiscal policy of any colony.

Was that resolution opposed and voted down by the congress? Far from it, it did receive the warmest support from many responsible British business men and from the representatives of the Chamber of Commerce of Great Britain. I need only refer to the encomiastic language used by Mr. Chamberlain and by Mr. Baxton, the Under-Secretary of State under the former government, a very able man, who is thoroughly conversant with the colonial question, to remove all doubts from the minds of hon. gentlemen as to the favourable reception accorded to that proposal.

I quite agree that the representative of the Chamber of Commerce of Liverpool, and the representative of the Chamber of Commerce of Manchester, who are out and out free traders, opposed that resolution, although they evinced the keenest interest in the debate, stating at the same time that there was much to be said in favour of the colonial claim; but, at all events they declared that they could not see their way clear for the moment, to endorse the resolution then pending, as it stood. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, by reading extracts from the report of the congress; let me only add that a simple glance at the contents of that report will satisfy you that British statesmen were ready to accede to the demand of the colonies. The British business men, the presidents of the chambers of commerce of the empire, who attended that congress, being very little conversent with the wants and conditions of the colonies, were reluctant to endorse such a proposal. They asked for further information; but they were far from stating that the proposition by which we stand to-day, and by which we shall stand before the electorate of this country, did not command itself to the attention of the English people.

But on the second day matters took a different turn. Mr. Colmer, a Canadian, a man who has mastered all the details of the question, rose and stated his views before the congress. The assembly, wavering the day before and unwilling to adopt Mr. Osler's resolution, reconsidered the matter. As the congress was anxious that no dissentient voice should be registered, they agreed to alter the terms of the resolution laid down by the representative of Canada and to pass a less formal resolution, and one which, all the same, stated that the question was worthy of consideration, and that the representations made by the colonial envoys commended themselves to public attention, and finally that Great Britain was very far from opposing a blank refusal to their claims in the matter. Here is the resolution which was finally agreed to:

That this Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the empire is of opinion that the establishment of closer commercial relations between the United Kingdom and the colonies and dependencies is an object which deserves, and demands, prompt and careful consideration. The congress, therefore, respectfully represents to Her Majesty's government that, if the suggestion should be made on behalf of the colonies or of some of them, it would be right and expedient to promote such consideration, and the formulation of some practicable plan, by summoning an Imperial conference, thoroughly representative of the interests involved, or by such other means as Her Majesty may be advised to adopt.

It was resolved that a copy of that resolution should be sent to all the important bodies in the colonies, whether parliamentary or municipal.

That suggestion, Sir, which was made time and again by the colonies, and which was so strongly emphasized at the congress of 1896, was very favourably received in the mother country. Now, in the face of those facts, what becomes of the statements so often reiterated by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd)? Were they justifiable in making such utterances? Are we to believe that Englishmen, who are practical business men could have given the least attention to a proposition which as stated by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd), is sheer nonsense, and one tending to completely revolutionize the fiscal system of Great Britain? I do not think that gentleman and some of his friends would ever have committed himself to such a statement, had they taken the trouble to study the fiscal question as formulated with such accuracy by Mr. Colmer.

A few years ago, a prize of one thousand guineas was offered for the best essay on the important subject we are now dealing with. Mr. Colmer was one of the competitors, and he shared with another Englishman the honour of having written the best essay on a subject in which, after all, Great Britain is as much interested as we are. Five hundred guineas were awarded to him by those who acted as judges in the award of the prize.

Mr. Colmer's essay, which is, of course, limited, as he had to conform to the conditions of the competition, contains the germ of the proposition which is being actually advocated by the Conservative party in Canada. In our opinion, this movement does not involve any disturbance of Great Britain's economical system; on the contrary, it is very simple and would not revolutionize the general fiscal system adopted by Great Britain. This proposition, I believe, if it were given a trial, would tend to give an enormous impetus to the cause of intercolonial preferential trade.

Mr. Colmer first remarks that the list of 'principal and other articles imported' in the annual statement of the Trade of the United Kingdom contains only two hundred and nineteen articles; but, that for the purpose of inaugurating commercial federation, the placing of small duties on about eighteen articles is all that would be required. It is, therefore, idle to suppose, as contended by hon. gentlemen opposite, that such a scheme is going to disorganize the whole fiscal system of Great Britain.

Among the eighteen articles on which duties would be imposed, he has selected articles which are produced in the various British colonies, so as to interest in his scheme all the great dependencies of the empire.

Let me briefly point out the articles in the export of which Canada would be more particularly interested. Should Great Britain adopt Mr. Colmer's proposition, the trade in those articles would receive an enormous impetus. The author of the essay mentions those products, and gives under each item the proposed rate of duty which he suggests to England to place on such articles coming from foreign countries, in favour of her colonies, and the results which the imposition of that duty would bring about. Those calculations are based on the data embodied in the Trade Reports for the year 1894.

The first article he deals with is that of cattle and sheep. What duty does Mr. Colmer suggest to levy on those two staple products of the colonies? The duty proposed is but 10 shillings per head on oxen and cows and 1 shilling per head on sheep. He says that in 1894, the imports of oxen and cows from foreign countries into Great Britain were £6,910,550, and from the colonies £1,373,815. The imports of live sheep, according to Mr. Colmer, were valued at £567,078, from foreign countries, and £237,- 745, from British possessions, or about one-half the imports.

Then, he goes on showing what would be for Great Britain the result of the proposed duty of 10 shillings per head on live cattle, and of one shilling on sheep.
