I know that one of the dearest dreams of the former president of the C.N.R. was to secure a reorganization of the company's debt, which he told us many times was one of the biggest stumbling blocks to the C.N.R. ever operating in the black. Under the terms of this bill, parliament is being asked to confirm moneys already being spent by the C.N.R., and I would point out that the amount involved is larger than that provided by any similar bill placed before parliament in past years. Since the early 1950's the C.N.R. has engaged in massive capital expenditures, but despite the increase in productivity which they brought about, accompanied by a decrease in the cost of moving freight per ton mile, the position of the company has not really improved.

One may well ask, what is the effect of these capital expenditures on freight costs and why we are being asked to ratify or approve expenditures already made? According to the bill $13 million has been or will be spent before the end of the year on the building of branch lines. Yet only a year or so ago this house spent a long time studying the new transportation act which was designed to create a new environment for the transport industry. One of the purposes of that act was to allow the railroads to abandon branch lines. But under the terms of this bill parliament is now being asked to provide money for the construction of branch lines, particularly in western Canada.

Uneconomic branch lines have a tendency to increase freight rates. Under the terms of this bill the C.N.R. is being provided with money to construct in one location in western Canada a 17-mile branch line which is to run within two or three miles of an existing C.P.R. main line. This just does not add up.

What about the new environment which the transportation commission is supposed to encourage? What have been the results? This is the question which is being asked by many people, particularly those in western Canada. Last October there was a 10 per cent increase in freight rates across the board covering all rates that were not frozen by the previous government. The only result of that increase in freight rates has been that the traffic moved by the C.N.R. has diminished in volume.

The principle involved in this bill, which is to ratify expenditures already made, is putting the cart before the horse. If parliament is to have any authority at all there should be some means of ratifying a capital expenditure bill for the C.N.R. before the C.N.R. has actually undertaken expenditures. Last year parliament spent a long time debating the rationalization of the abandonment of branch lines; yet now it is asked to authorize $13 million to build branch lines. Is this good, efficient government?

The capital expenditure to be authorized by this bill is the largest ever authorized by parliament for the C.N.R. in the past 15 years, yet there is no real reduction in the cost of moving goods by the C.N.R. We realize it takes money to automate and establish an up to date transportation system, but the customer should be getting a return on that money. He should be paying less to move goods by the C.N.R., but the direct opposite has happened. There has been a huge increase in freight rates since the ceiling on them was removed. Freight rates in the maritimes have also increased and many firms are being forced out of business.

Despite all the talk about a new environment for transport, the old theory holds true that the railway freight rate is the minimum rate charged by most forms of transport. It is the rate which the trucking industry applies. In effect it is the floor price for the transportation of goods, and competition does not have any real effect. This is particularly the case in western Canada where the only means of competition is by highway. Yet methods could be found to create a greater competitive spirit in the transportation field.

• (3:30 p.m.)

We had hoped that this huge capital expenditure of $264 million on behalf of the C.N.R. would bring about a reduction in freight rates, but how can it, since there is no real competition? The C.P.R. and C.N.R. are still setting like freight rates. They are still adopting the theory that if one increases a freight rate 10 per cent then the other will too and that whatever that rate is the trucking rate will come up to it or remain barely below it. So there is no real competition in the transportation industry, particularly in respect of long haul traffic. This is the situation in western Canada and, as we have heard, it is also the situation in the maritimes.

We said that this would be the case with the passage of the transportation bill. We said that competition had not reached the stage where it alone could be the sole principle on which a new rate-making system could be based. We argued against the captive shipper situation. We were disturbed by the attitude of the minister in this regard. How can a captive shipper prove himself to be captive if he has to prove it before the minister as chairman of the board when he said several times that he did not believe there was such a person as a captive shipper? It is fine and dandy to say that all Canadians should get behind the new transportation legislation because if we adopt the principles which were mentioned the other day it will facilitate the movement of goods throughout all Canada. It may facilitate the railways in the movement of goods—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I think he is engaging now in a debate on transportation policy. May I remind him that we are on clause 4 which relates to issue of securities, application of amounts available and maximum amount of securities.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, are we dealing with clause 3 or clause 4? It seems to me that the last time we considered the bill, clause 3 had not been passed.

The Deputy Chairman: We are now on clause 4.

Mr. Grégoire: For sure?

Mr. Chrétien: Clause 3 was passed on November 28.

[English]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for reminding me to return to the clause. Because of the failure of the new transportation bill to be effective I was tempted to stray somewhat in my remarks. Since the importance of transportation is such that it is the lifeblood of Canadian industry, particularly in western Canada and the maritimes, one tends to dwell today on the approach taken by the C.N.R. They are not providing what the consumers believe should be required of the system. We are asked here to approve an ever-increasing amount of capital expenditure. Therefore we should like to see a better budgetary system. Rather than finding ourselves in the position of being asked to vote the money after it has been spent we should like to be able to take a look at the projected capital expenditures of the C.N.R. for the next five years so that we would know where they intend to go. We would like to know whether they intend to spend more money on the trucking industry or on hotels or on telecommunications.

We see that in this year they have spent nearly $5 million on the development of their hotel system. I was a member of the transportation committee for many years. We were told by the officials of the C.N.R. that very few of their hotels ever made a profit and that most of them lost money. Therefore we ask whether this huge expenditure is wise. In most cases when we are presented with these figures the money has already been spent and therefore there is not much purpose in questioning it. As parliamentarians who are interested in the field of transportation we should have an opportunity to look at future capital expenditures rather than be placed in the position of having to authorize expenditures which in many cases have already been made.

We would like to see a breakdown of the expenditures. Rather than having an item, "road property, $79,701,000", why should we not have information in respect of how much was spent on the trucking industry? What does this item really mean? Is this where the trucking industry comes in? We would like to know how much is being spent on the trucking industry and how much is to be spent on it next year. I am sure every trucking company in Canada would like to know where the C.N.R. is going in this regard.

I believe that Air Canada should be separate from the C.N.R. It is a large and growing concern. Many people across Canada would like to see greater activity by other lines. A slow, piecemeal approach has been taken with regard to granting Canadian Pacific Airlines landing rights in Canada. I should like to see Air Canada's capital expenditures projected for the next five years so that we could ascertain whether or not this will meet the flying needs of Canadians and whether in the next five years we could perhaps give some of the other air lines the right to serve Canadians. Perhaps they could serve Canadians much more cheaply than Air Canada does. Who knows?

As the representatives of the taxpayers we are not told enough about the C.N.R.'s methods of budgeting and financing. We are not told enough about the position of the C.N.R. in respect of branch line construction, the hotel situation or the future plans in respect of Air Canada. We do not know what their air policy really is and for how many years they intend to dominate air traffic without any real competition by which we could gauge whether or not they are running an efficient operation which meets the needs of the consumer.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Chairman, during the interval since Bill No. C-151 received second reading a number of things have occurred which have caused some soul searching on the part of many hon. members in respect of the limited jurisdiction parliament has over the operations and policies of Canadian National Railways. We are asked to authorize the provision of money to meet certain capital expenditures of Canadian National Railways. The sanction of parliament is required in order that the C.N.R. may continue in business. Yet we are placed in an impossible position when the time comes for us to scrutinize the manner in which the money is spent in order to determine whether it is an economic operation and whether we are receiving value for the money we authorize.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra the other night complained that the members of the committee on transportation were placed at a disadvantage in dealing with the C.N.R. owing to the fact that the officials of the C.N.R. when they appeared before the committee came armed with a profusion of statistics to prove any particular case and because of the inability of the members of the committee to acquire the expertise to assess these statistics properly. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, as recorded on page 4820 of Hansard for November 28, said:

> It is the problem of acquiring in the committee structure of parliament a little more expertise in our capability to examine crown corporations such as the C.N.R., Air Canada and others.

As a member of the transportation committee whose duty it was to examine the C.N.R. I agree in this instance with the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. I recall the scepticism of other committee members regarding the regressive costing system used by the railways and whether or not this type of costing resulted in a logical conclusion when the operations of the railway were being investigated.

• (3:40 p.m.)

When we approved Bill C-231 authorizing the establishment of a commission whose duty it is to police and co-ordinate all modes of transportation so that Canada as a whole can be provided with a comprehensive, efficient and economical transportation system, one of our main objectives was to ease many of the restrictions on the railways thus enabling them to compete more efficiently and to take some of the subsidy burden off the backs of the Canadian taxpayers. We have witnessed some of the results of giving the C.N.R. some freedom in respect of rate fixing. The elimination of l.c.l. freight rates resulted in a fantastic increase in the transportation charges for small shipments of commodities. In some cases the increase amounted to close to 100 per cent. Other hon. members have dealt with this matter as well as with the unrealistic increase in the transportation cost to cream shippers in the west. I will not pursue the matter other than to say I have received many complaints from tourist operators regarding the large increase in the cost of moving boats and tourist supplies.

We are now in the process of making money available to a publicly owned transportation system; yet we seem to have a minimum of control over its operational policies. We are completely frustrated when it comes to breaking through the wall of insulation which protects it and prevents us from assessing the logic of rate structure changes and operational practices.

Like the hon. member for Chapleau, who spoke the other night, I too have had representations from unions representing employees who are being laid off in great numbers, many of them in the maintenance of way group, who complain bitterly that there is no justification for most of these lay-offs. The section men and bridge building gangs are responsible for the safe condition of the track and—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it seems to me he is relating his remarks to lay-offs that are taking place in respect of C.N.R. personnel throughout Canada. The hon. member should relate his remarks to clause 4 dealing with the issue of securities.

Mr. Fawcett: Subclause 2 of clause 4 refers to clause 3, which covers in total the operational costs of the C.N.R. However, if it is still your opinion that I am out of order I will defer my remarks until we take up consideration of clause 1 of the bill.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to speak on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I was listening rather carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia and, while I realize that perhaps this is a remonstrance in respect of that hon. member, he certainly covered an area as broad as that covered by the hon. member for Nickel Belt. In view of the fact that you have allowed the hon. member for Nickel Belt to proceed as far as he now has, perhaps it would be in line with the general feeling of the committee that he be allowed to complete his remarks rather than having to wait until we take up clause 1.

The Deputy Chairman: When the hon. member for Acadia was speaking I intervened and asked him to relate his remarks to clause 4. I have now made the same observation in respect of the speech of the hon. member for Nickel Belt. I make this observation for the benefit of future participants in this debate, and I would appreciate it if they would relate their remarks to clause 4.

Mr. Fawcett: I will conclude my remarks at this time by stating once again that I do not think parliament is properly able to investigate the operational policies of the C.N.R., and we have observed the results of this. I will defer the balance of my remarks until we deal with clause 1.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to make any observations this afternoon on this clause of the bill. However, I should like to make a few remarks in reference to capital expenditures and the issue of securities. My observations are really an elaboration of a question I asked on orders of the day. Had the answer given by the minister at that time been a little different perhaps I would not have felt it necessary to elucidate the matter now.

It has been brought to my attention by certain individuals who fly aircraft for Air Canada that a very serious traffic hazard exists at the Toronto airport because the routing of aircraft approaching Malton airport brings them over lake Ontario within a few thousand feet of the Toronto island airport. This airport is used by a considerable number of small private aircraft flown by, to put it in the vernacular, "Saturday afternoon pilots." These pilots perhaps lack the same degree of experience possessed by those who pilot Air Canada DC-8's and DC-9's. The information I have received from some Air Canada pilots has been to the effect that it is a miracle that a large Air Canada aircraft has not up to now collided with one of these small planes.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I am having some difficulty relating traffic hazards at the airport in Toronto to the subject of the clause we are now considering.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am sorry Your Honour has difficulty in relating my remarks to this clause because they do relate to capital expenditure. It is my feeling that if we can prevent the loss of an $8 million aircraft because of a collision this might have some effect on future capital expenditure. I am sorry Your Honour has difficulty in seeing the relationship. In any event I have just about concluded my remarks.

Like many other members I was very glad to hear that the minister has new air regulations. It is in everybody's interest to avoid the destruction of large capital assets of Air Canada. My understanding is that these large aircraft cost in the neighbourhood of $8 million to $9 million. We must also consider the lives of the people aboard these aircraft. I hope that when these regulations are promulgated they will require proper precautions to be taken in routing aircraft approaching Malton airport so they will not have to fly so close to the Toronto island airport. Those are my observations, which I make in the hope of saving the corporation some money in the future.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a book which is too high between you and me, which prevents you from seeing me when I rise to speak, because I have risen three times already.

The explanatory note to clause 4 reads as follows:

> The amount of $122,000,000 appearing in this subclause is $67,000,000 for Air Canada financing for 1967 and $55,000,000 for interim financing for January 1st to June 30th, 1968.

That means a period of six months.

As for the amount of $67,000,000 for 1967, that means that Air Canada has an actual deficit of $67,000,000 at this time if it is for the year 1967, became we are nearing end of 1967 and we are almost in 1968. That means simply and clearly that Air Canada has been operating with a deficit of $67 million in 1967.

Mr. Chairman, Air Canada spends a lot of money, that is obvious. Air Canada renders very important services to the population, this we admit. However, as far as expenditures are concerned, I think that it would be possible to improve Air Canada's budget by adding economic lines to those which are not paying enough.

I take an example in my area. For three years I have been asking for an additional flight for Val d'Or and Rouyn, a night flight enabling our businessmen to go to Montreal, transact their business and return home the same day. The Viscount serving our area is nearly aways filled to capacity; therefore, it is a paying business for Air Canada, but they persist in refusing this second flight which would be profitable to them.

Why is nothing done to give that service which would serve our region, be useful to our people, and, at the same time, enable Air Canada to make a profit?

It seems to me that it is a matter that should be studied more closely by the senior officials of the company in order to enable our region to enjoy the services of Air Canada which, as I said, would be a source of profits for that company.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) but his flight of oratory on the air services in his region should be directed instead to a financial matter dealing with the issue of securities, the application of amounts available and the maximum amounts of securities. I do not think this is the proper time to speak of the services of Air Canada and their improvement.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, and you know the great respect I bear you, this is not a flight of oratory, but a request for an extra Air Canada flight to Rouyn-Noranda.

In any case, Mr. Chairman, it is stipulated here that the sum of $67 million is for the financing of Air Canada for 1967. To finance itself, Air Canada must necessarily undertake some operations.

If you want us simply to talk about the sum of $122 million and about the debentures and securities which the government requests or allows those lenders who can lend money to the company, then I have nothing more to add, Mr. Chairman. I will come back with my flight to Rouyn-Noranda on clause 1 of the bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

[English]

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with the finances of Canadian National Railways. We all know that the railroads have spent a great deal of money on new express facilities to carry products across the country. We also know that though we help the railroads to finance these facilities they are discriminating against the producers of cream. They do this although we supply them with capital.

I wonder whether the Minister of Transport would pay attention to the debate for a few minutes and practise his leadership speech at some other time, because this is a very important matter. I will be very brief, if the minister will listen to me.

Mr. Hellyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to my hon. friend. So far he has not said anything that is particularly new or instructive. I do not think he needs to give lectures. This bill is being handled by my colleague but I am available to assist in any way I can and try to be helpful. I do not think it is necessary for my hon. friend to make gratuitous remarks. I am sure he does not wish to do so.

Mr. Smallwood: It is very necessary, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport pay attention to this important matter. All our trouble in this respect started with the commission that was set up by the government. Although, on the one hand we are financing the express movemen of goods across Canada and are helping the railroad by providing capital so they may improve their transportation system, on the other hand we are placing a hardship upon the people of this country. Perhaps the Minister of Transport would come to my assistance in this respect. Our difficulties in this field have increased since the setting up of the new transport commission and since we amended section 369 of the Railway Act.

I am going to give up, Mr. Chairman, because the minister is not paying any attention. It is no use talking any more so I will sit down. They are not interested in this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, section 4 of the bill now under consideration deals with borrowings for Air Canada and for other expenses mentioned in section 3 of the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out why I object to the present borrowings of the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada. Those loans are entirely unnecessary and I do not see why the C.N.R. and Air Canada should resort to borrowings through the issuance of bonds or certificates, when we know that the C.N.R. management is responsible for the deficits and for the fact that the company is unable to finance itself out of the profits it could make.

I should like to give an example, Mr. Chairman, of the mismanagement of the C.N.R. which forces them to borrow because, precisely, they show incomprehensible deficits.

I have here a Quebec highway transport publication, the magazine of Quebec trucking firms. The September 1967 issue reports a striking case and I mention it to show to what extent the C.N.R. is forced to borrow when they should not, through mismanagement. The article reads as follows:

On November 23, 1966, an eastern townships trucking concern started to carry pulpwood between Donnacona, Quebec, and Graveton, New Hampshire. The shipper is DOMTAR Co. Limited. The shipping rate is $9.45 per 2,000 pounds, based——and note this, because it is important—

—based on a minimum load of 40,000 pounds.

What is important Mr. Chairman, is that that was then the published freight rate, $9.45 a ton for pulpwood between Donnacona and Graveton. It was the C.N.R. rate.

• (4:00 p.m.)

At first the transport company made two weekly trips, and afterwards, the shipper—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to have to restrain the enthusiasm of the hon. member for Lapointe, but I fail to see any connection between clause 4, which deals with the C.N.R. financing, and the fact that the hon. member is trying to compare certain C.N.R. rates with those of the trucking industry.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, let me explain it this way: I am against such borrowings and I will tell you why. It is due to the mismanagement of the C.N.R.

I am giving you an example and in a minute and a half at the most, you will see that it is directely related to the case now under study.

As I was saying, the trucking company charged $9.45 per ton of pulpwood, the same rate as that of the C.N.R. Now, this is where the example becomes striking, Mr. Chairman.

Where the C.N.R. had set a rate of $9.45 per ton—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the principle of the bill was passed on motion for second reading. We are now studying the bill in detail, and have reached clause 4 which deals with the financing of the C.N.R.

I do not think—

Mr. Grégoire: In other words, Mr. Chairman, you are telling us to shut up, to stop discussing this bill. That is what you have been doing from the start. If this is what you want, that is, to impose the guillotine, say it right now, and we shall resume our seats.

Just now, I was quoting a case with respect to the matter under study, but you did not allow me to pursue it, you made a ruling before I could prove my point. If you want to impose the guillotine, say it, that is what it looks like.

The hon. member for Villeneuve asked to have the floor, but you said no; another member was recognized. Two Tories, even three, wanted to have the floor, but you ruled this was not in order, and told them not to speak. If you want us to shut up, just say it, and we will take our seats.

The Deputy Chairman: If the hon. member wishes to continue his remarks, he should confine them to clause 4.

Mr. Grégoire: That is precisely what I mean to do, Mr. Chairman. In my opinion, the principle of the bill is not the financing of the company, and loans are not necessary to finance the C.N.R. The principle of the bill is the financing of the C.N.R. In fact, clause 4 stipulates that it is necessary to borrow money to finance the C.N.R., but I say that the C.N.R. should be financed according to the principle of the bill, but not by loans as stipulated in clause 4. I do not see how I could violate the rules of the house by saying this.

If I may be allowed to finish giving my example, you will see that my remarks deal with clause 4, for the principle of the bill—and I continue on the same point of order—says that the C.N.R. must be financed. We approve of the bill in principle, but clause 4 of the bill does not say that the C.N.R. should be financed by its own resources, but by loans.

That is what I object to, Mr. Chairman. I do not object to the principle of the bill, but to the method used to finance the Canadian National Railways. Do you not think then, Mr. Chairman, that I conform to the rules of the house?

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Chrétien: I would not like to interrupt the hon. member unduly, Mr. Chairman, but clause 4 provides for the financing of Air Canada through loans by the C.N.R., but there is no mention of the financing of the C.N.R.

Mr. Grégoire: Air Canada is mentioned, Mr. Chairman, at the end of subclause 2, as follows:

—towards meeting the expenditures authorized by section 3, other than those required by Air Canada.

In fact subclause (2) of clause 4 says:

—shall be applied towards meeting the expenditures authorized by section 3, other than those required by Air Canada.

Now, the expenditures other than those required by Air Canada, are the expenditures of the C.N.R. That is why I believe that section 4 equally applies to the C.N.R.

So, Mr. Chairman, I pursue my argument to explain why I am not so much against the principle of the bill which is the financing of Canadian National Railways as against the principle of financing through borrowings. I say that borrowings would not be necessary if the Canadian National Railways were managed properly and capably.

Mr. Chairman, I summarize my argument, so to speak. I was saying that the trucking concern carried pulpwood from Donnacona to Graveton, New Hampshire at—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but twice I took the liberty of indicating to him that clause 4 is now being considered by the committee, and the hon. member seems to be going into a general discussion of the policy of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Habel: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to be very lenient with the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), because he is an expert in financial matters, and he has proved it in the past. He sold pens, he went to France to raise funds for the separatist movement. He is an expert in financial matters.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it is a Liberal who has just spoken. He has not been called to order, indeed not. He is a Liberal. It seems to be customary—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Would the hon. member for Lapointe kindly refrain from making such remarks.

The hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) raised a point of order and made some remarks which are out of order, since he referred to the views of the hon. member for Lapointe in another respect. Still, I beg the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) to comply with standing orders which he knows so well and which he often interprets very well. At this point, the Chair asks him to comply with one of the orders under which whenever the house sits in committee of the whole for examination of a bill, the remarks must bear strictly on the clause under study.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I congratulate you on having reminded the hon. member for Cochrane that his remarks were out of order.

Now, I should like to make a point, Mr. Chairman. I thought I had explained to you at one point why I felt I was complying with standing orders.

At one point, I asked you if that was not correct. You did not answer me, and that is why I carried on.

Mr. Chairman, if you care to hear my argument, clause 4 deals not with financing method of the National Railways and Air Canada. Under clause 4, that method means borrowing. Now, as I said earlier—Mr. Chairman, I notice that you are in consultation with your advisers.

Clause 4—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is requested to make his remarks and to pay no attention to what happens elsewhere in the house. I have called to order some honourable members and they all complied with the ruling of the Chair. Therefore, I would ask the hon. member to come to the point and not to raise points of order and questions of privilege and to deal with clause 4 which is now under consideration.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I accept your offer. I accept your closure and I sit down. If they want to impose it, let us accept it.

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Chairman, I ask that the hon. member for Lapointe be called to order and that he withdraw what he said. There are limits to insults to the Chair, and I ask that the hon. member for Lapointe withdraw his remarks.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, my participation in this debate will be confined to one point. Earlier in the day I asked the Minister of Transport whether he would give his blessing to a proposal that the standing committee on transportation should go to the maritimes, giving the people of that area an opportunity to bring their problems before the committee and air their views. I think we would be prepared to terminate the debate at this point if the minister would give an indication that he is in accord with this proposal.

Mr. Hellyer: I have been thinking about this suggestion and it does seem to me to be a very reasonable proposition. I have taken the liberty of discussing it with other members of parliament including two of our own members from the maritime provinces, the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough and the hon. member for Westmorland, who agree that it would be desirable to have the committee visit the maritime provinces some time at its convenience in order to learn at first hand from the people of that area the problems they face and any solutions they may wish to put forward.

I think there is some advantage in this procedure in that it would enable members from all parts of Canada to familiarize themselves with the problems on the ground and to get not only the data but the "feel" of the situation and then to evaluate the position for themselves. In these circumstances I believe I can give the idea my complete blessing. I shall be glad to discuss it with the chairman of the committee when he returns and to suggest he might take it up with the committee in the hope that satisfactory arrangements can be made to go down there in the not too distant future.

Mr. Coates: Is it also the intention to refer the study which was carried out on transportation in the Atlantic provinces to the committee in order that the committee may have a basis for its considerations when it does go to the maritimes for public hearings?

Mr. Hellyer: Perhaps I could take that specific question under advisement. Certainly the subject matter is the same and it might well be that the hon. member's idea is an acceptable one. I should like to reserve judgment on it at the moment until I have had a chance to think about it. Certainly that would be the object of the visit, to study the problems of transportation. I can see no reason why they would not want to consider as much material as is available.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Bower: Would the minister undertake to use his good offices to see that this committee visits the west end of Nova Scotia during the course of their investigation of the deplorable state of transportation there and the costs arising therefrom? I mention specifically a meeting in Yarmouth which is the terminus of two railroads operating to the end of that tenuous line of transport that we have.

Mr. Stewart: Will the minister of highways for Nova Scotia be a witness?

Mr. McCleave: Would the minister be prepared to meet some maritime bodies in the meantime before the visit of the committee to Atlantic Canada? I know there are groups in Halifax who are very much disturbed about the l.c.l. situation, port traffic and the like who would like to have a meeting publicly or privately with the minister. Can he assure us he would be willing to set aside a reasonable time within the next few months to meet with these groups at their request?

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the fact my hon. friend has given me as much leeway as he has I must be gracious and say, yes, I would be glad to consider a meeting. The first meeting, of course, is planned with the premiers of the maritime provinces, and I think an announcement will be made on that very soon. We will probably be meeting within a few days.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, when I see members rising and asking the minister to visit various parts of Canada I am impelled to ask him to inspect the Kettle Valley railway line as well and discuss this problem. I did not rise primarily for that purpose but I hope he will give it consideration.

As we have reached the more tranquil waters of this debate, I rise to discuss clause 4. I should like to read the explanatory note:

> The amount of $122 million appearing in this subclause is $67 million for Air Canada financing for 1967 and $55 million for interim financing for January 1st to June 30th, 1968.

My question is this, and I seek the information because the public may be misinformed by this explanation. I have been informed that the balance sheet of Canadian Pacific Airlines does not show any such need for capital. Will the minister explain to the house if this capital expenditure is occasioned by the type of service Air Canada gives generally to remote areas that are not now served by Canadian Pacific Airlines?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question put by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), this amount of $122 million, divided into two parts, namely $67 million for 1967 and $55 million for 1968, does not represent losses but only capital expenditures on the part of the Company. If we have provided for an amount of $55 million for 1968, it is on account of certain commitments Air Canada had to take in order to buy equipment which will be delivered in 1968.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Minister may make loans to the national company.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take advantage of the opportunity while we are on clause 6 which authorizes the minister to make loans to the national company, to issue an invitation to the transport committee to visit another part of the Atlantic region known as the Gaspé peninsula, which is also covered by the Maritimes Freight Rates Act. As the minister knows, we in that area also have problems. We often ask if it is in the interest of all Canadians for the minister to make loans to the national transportation company without taking into account the welfare of all those Canadians who live outside of the thickly populated areas.

Perhaps I might be allowed one minute to prove my point. Our people are being deprived of express and l.c.l. freight privileges. Our farmers are being deprived of the right to import baby chicks from Ontario firms. All these things, of course, are to the disadvantage of great groups of Canadians. These farmers can no longer import baby chicks from Ontario because the Canadian National refuses to carry them. If there were any other modes of transport I could understand the position taken by Canadian National. However, these chicks cannot be shipped by air or by sea and they cannot be transported by any existing trucking system. The number of days they would have to go unfed would mean they would not be alive when they arrived.

When we are debating the authority of the minister to make these loans I am of the opinion we must also recall the fact that the policy of the Department of Transport is to subsidize the national transportation company whenever necessary if it is operating in areas which are uneconomic. However, I have to object that the minister is able to make these loans available to the national transportation company unless consideration is given to the fact that there are Canadians living in other parts of the country who are suffering at the hands of the transportation system which is being paid for by the taxpayers of Canada.

I feel, therefore, that serious consideration should be given to the ill effects of this policy of Canadian National Railways, especially since the company cannot come up with any answers as to how we are going to get products into our area which are necessary for the subsistence of the people. If Canadian National is losing money, if it wants guaranteed payments from the government of Canada, then possibly the company could ask for less if it would come to the people of these regions and change some of the existing regulations concerning ownership risk, applied rates and so on. The company could at least make available to these people those products which they wish to import from other parts of the country and of which they are being deprived. I am still waiting for the answer which the Minister of Transport was going to elicit from Canadian National Railways.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 7 and 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Minister may place amounts at disposal of company.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I think the point I raised about clause 4 will be suitable as regards clause 9 where it is said, and I quote:

—the Minister of Finance, upon application by the National Company approved by the Minister of Transport, may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, place at the disposal of the National Company such amounts as may be required to enable the National Company to meet all such charges.

The word "charges" here, Mr. Chairman, refers to operation expenses.

The point I wish to make to the minister is that the Canadian National Railways, if it were managed differently, would not have to seek loans from the minister to cover operating cost deficits.

To this effect, I should like to quote an example which shows why the C.N.R. incurs operating cost deficits and why the minister, before approving any such loans, should request from the executive a review of their management practices?

I should like, at this time, to give an example of poor management, a specific, very typical case which shows clearly the reasons and causes for the operating cost deficits incurred by the C.N.R.

If the minister asked C.N.R. executives to alter their present management practices, he would not have to lend them money to cover operating costs.

So, I give an example, Mr. Chairman—or rather, I shall start all over again.

On November 23, 1966, an eastern townships trucking concern started to carry pulpwood between Donnacona, Quebec, and Graveton, New Hampshire. The shipper in this case is Domtar Company Limited. The rate of the trucking concern was $9.45 per 2,000 pounds based on a minimum load of 40,000 pounds, which was the published railroad rate. This phrase should be emphasized: $9.45 per 2,000 pounds was the published railroad rate. At the beginning, two trips a week were made by the trucking concern and, later on, the shipper asked for five trips a week. At this point, it becomes serious. On January 31, 1967, the Domtar Company advised the trucking concern that the Canadian National Railways had reduced their own rates to $7.35 per ton. The new rates thus represented a reduction of $2.10 per ton, or 22.2 per cent.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have listened patiently to the example given by the hon. member, but he is now discussing rates and if he reads clause 9 attentively, he will realize that there is no question of rates at all.

Mr. Grégoire: I have finished giving my example, Mr. Chairman.

I do not wish to speak about freight rates, but I just want to say this: In 1967, with the 22.2 per cent reduction of rates by the C.N.R.—and this is what I am trying to say, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister of Transport—when everything is going up, including salaries and consequently operating costs, how could the C.N.R. not end up with a deficit in their operating costs, if they lower their rates when their operating costs are going up?

It is just because the C.N.R. are lowering their rates when their operating costs are increasing that they inevitably show a deficit in their operating costs. Then they turn around and, as they are allowed to by clause 9, they go to the Minister of Finance and say: "Our operating expenses show a deficit; lend us some money under the provisions of clause 9". Mr. Chairman, do you see how well my example is suited to clause 9? The operating expenses of the Canadian National Railways show a deficit, and the company wants to borrow money from the minister. Why do their operating expenses show a deficit? Because the Canadian National Railways have lowered their rates. Before the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) begins to lend money, as he is authorized to do under clause 9, in order to cover the deficit in the operating expenses of the Canadian National Railways, he should say to the directors of the company: "Stop lowering your rates, and your operating expenses will not show a deficit".

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I do not want the hon. member to think that I am trying to muzzle him, but this question of loans to the C.N.R. is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, not that of the Minister of Transport. There is no point in comparing rates, and this consideration should not be included in our study of clause 9, which has no relation to rates.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it is not the rates aspect that I should like to express here. I want to deal with the first two lines of clause 9 and I quote:

(1) Where, at any time before the 1st day of July, 1968, the available revenues of the National System are not sufficient to pay all the operating . . . charges—

That is the point. Of course, the available revenues of the C.N.R. are not sufficient to pay the operating charges. This is what I say, Mr. Chairman, and this is the point I want to make. The available revenues of the C.N.R. cannot be sufficient to pay all the operating expenses. Why? Operating costs are very high and the Canadian National Railways reduce the rates. No doubt that cheaper rates cannot provide enough revenues to pay all operating costs.

What I say is in order, Mr. Chairman; I ask the minister to reverse his policy and, instead of lending money to the Canadian National, tell the directors, for instance: You, of the Canadian National Railways, see to it that your operating costs are paid through your revenues and if you want enough revenue to meet your operating costs, stop reducing your rates.

Mr. Chairman, the argument I advance is all the more founded that trucking companies can do so with profit, thanks to the previous rates of the Canadian National, while the latter reduce their rates, and then, as clause 9 says, the revenues available to the National Railways are not sufficient to pay all operating charges.

I object to that clause section, which each time revenues are not available to discharge operating costs, enables the minister to grant loans to the directors of the C.N.R. in order to pay the operating costs.

If they reduce their rates from $7.50 to $5, then the minister would still be compelled to grant them loans to enable them to meet their operating costs.

If the C.N.R. would reduce their rates to $1 per ton, the deficit would be even larger and the minister would have to grant them more substantial loans to enable them to meet their operating costs. It is as simple as that.

If, instead of making loans, as provided in clause 9, the minister told the C.N.R. management: stop cutting your rates so that your revenue will cover your operating costs, then, and still under clause 9, he would no longer have to make those loans.

Mr. Chairman, that is clear, that comes directly under clause 9. That is the example I had in mind and I think it is quite relevant. If we want the Minister of Transport, or the Minister of Finance at the suggestion of the Minister of Transport, to stop asking that the government be allowed to borrow to make loans to the C.N.R., then all they have to do is tell the C.N.R. management: Operate under normal rates, and if you do not want to do it, the trucking industry is ready to do it, because it has done it already.

It is about time, Mr. Chairman, that this scandal should stop, a scandal such as the one shown in clause 9, because under the terms of this clause, it is said: that where, at any time, the available revenues are not sufficient to pay all the operating charges of the National System as and when due, the minister may place at the disposal of the National Company such amounts as may be required to enable the National Company to meet all such charges.

Under these circumstances, it is not difficult to do business, because it is the Minister of Finance that lends the money. While the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport are acting in this manner, under clause 9, the National System is forcing into bankruptcy the trucking companies, because it is assured, in case of a deficit, that the Minister of Finance will lend the required amount of money.

Mr. Chairman, clause 9 does not make any sense and I strongly object to it. I would rather like clause 9 to be replaced by something along these lines: If the revenues of the Canadian National Railways do not meet operating expenses, the C.N.R. should be forbidden to lower their rates. I am not suggesting they should raise their rates, but what I am saying is they should be forbidden to lower these rates, in order to favour a large company such as Domtar, which carries our lumber to the United States. Those who will benefit directly from the loans of the hon. Minister of Finance are the pulp and paper companies in the United States, since the loans aim to reduce the rates, thus enabling the American companies to buy our lumber at a lower price.

Mr. Chairman, we might as well pay the Americans for the lumber they buy from us. This is what is happening under that clause. We are paying the Americans for the lumber they buy from us, under that clause. In addition, it contributes to ruin our trucking companies. That is why I am against that clause.

I feel that the example I gave shows readily that clause 9 is inconsistent. I came across it, as I said ealier, in the magazine of the Quebec trucking business entitled: Transport routier du Québec, septembre 1967. If the Minister of Transport wants other examples in that connection, he only has to inquire of the leaders of the Quebec Trucking Association and of the Canadian Trucking Association to satisfy himself that the C.N.R. is not being operated in a reasonable and rational manner.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, since, from my understanding of this clause, parliament is to provide money for Canadian National Railways should they overspend their allotments, revenues or grants—call them what you will—for the year, I submit a clear case can be made to show that the railways and Air Canada ought to be refinanced. The huge debt structure which they bear ought to be removed in order that they may operate on a more realistic financial base. Bill C-231 attempted to introduce more realistic financing concepts for the railways. Under that bill the railways were not required to be refinanced. An attempt was made to allow the railways to increase revenues to the point where there would be no need for them to borrow money.

I do not think that Bill C-231 by itself will enable the railways to operate on a financially sound basis. If the railways are not to borrow from the government every year—incidentally, I notice that this year the figure involved is approximately $264 million while last year it was approximately $190 million and the year before about $155 million—it will be necessary for great changes to be made. The greatest changes must be in railway equipment. The railways must take advantage of technological progress. They need new types of cars and new types of trains similar to the new train that is to come into operation on the Toronto-Montreal run. Nevertheless, whether such steps will enable the railways to save enough money so as to make it unnecessary for them to borrow is a matter of doubt. Costs will probably be reduced, but I submit we are not making full use of new equipment in order to lower railway operating costs and thus eliminate the necessity for borrowing.

The most important task we face is to find in the near future some way in which the railways may be refinanced in order that their heavy debt burden may be removed. I am disturbed by reports, and they are more than reports, that the railways intend to operate at a profit by increasing rates to the extent that areas of the country far removed from central Canada will find it difficult to produce economically. I notice that l.c.l. rates have gone up. The railways tried to increase rates in the maritimes. Large increases have come into effect in my area of the country. In fact, I feel that these large increases are loading on the post office—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member ought to confine his remarks to the clause that is being considered. On other occasions the Chair has prevented other hon. members from talking about rates, because they are not pertinent to the clause we are talking about. I know that the hon. gentleman will wish to co-operate.

Mr. Cantelon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I hope to do that. I was saying that a way ought to be found to prevent this borrowing on the part of the railways. My point was, and I will close on this note, that this work of the railways is, I feel, loaded on the post office. Certainly that is true for my area. If the post office can carry this business at a profit, then I think the railways should be able to carry it at a profit too. If the post office is not handling it at a profit, then the losses are being deducted from the railways and loaded on to the post office.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, this time I should like to speak to clause 9 (2), because I feel it is almost useless, or at least the first part of it, since it says:

> All amounts placed at the disposal of the National Company pursuant to subsection (1) shall be reimbursed to the Minister of Finance from the annual revenues of the national system in so far as such revenues are sufficient,—

Now, Mr. Chairman, the C.N.R. always has deficits, it has never enough revenues. Why is this mentioned then? We know its revenues are not high enough and that its operations always show a deficit. I have been here in the house for ten years and the C.N.R. has always been in the red. Why then put in a clause such as this, when we know there is going to be a deficit? Is this being added to bluff us?

It says that if the C.N.R. has any surplus, they will pay us back. But they never have any surplus. Why then add this? Can the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) tell me why this is being added? Why add that if there is any surplus the C.N.R. will repay to the government? Not only will there not be any reimbursement, but as the bill says here, and I quote:

> —and any insufficiency shall be provided for by subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament.

Not only will revenues be unsufficient to repay the loan, but the government will also have to vote other moneys to cover the C.N.R. deficits.

So, Mr. Chairman, is not this subclause superfluous? It seems the Member of the Administration, the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, would like to reply to that.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the objection raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), I should like to stress that clause 9 authorizes the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to grant provisional loans to the C.N.R. if they run short of cash during their operations

I should also point out to him that, with respect to clause 9, in the 1967 budget, the Minister of Finance had to lend only $15 million to the C.N.R. on a provisional basis. At the end of the year, if the directors cannot repay this amount, special appropriations will have to be voted. However, that is a budgetary system which allows the Minister of Finance to make temporary loans. If there is a deficit at the end of the year, the act provides the method by which it must be covered.

Mr. Grégoire: This confirms what I say. This is called a temporary loan which will be repaid if there is a surplus. But there is no surplus. Stop trying to make us believe there was.

Mr. Chrétien: A surplus in the operating budget of the C.N.R. is not always impossible.

Mr. Grégoire: That is in the realm of possibility, Mr. Chairman, but everyone will laugh, especially when they examine the results of the last few years and see deficits of about $24 million. The deficit was $33 million in 1965, $38 million in 1964, $43 million in 1963, and $48 million in 1962. Mr. Chairman, one can go back further and there is always a deficit. But we are told: It is possible that there may be surpluses. We should not be taken for simple-minded people. These temporary loans are permanent loans which will be voted a second time, to be cancelled. The directors of the National Railways will not have to refund the money. It is a deficit for the year. The Minister of Finance, or rather the Member of the Administration—I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, perhaps he will one day become the Minister of Finance, just as it is possible that the Canadian National Railways will pay their debts some day—the minister says that is possible.

In any event, I think that subclause 2 of clause 9 simply means that the Canadian National Railways will refund the money if it shows a surplus. I think it is mere window-dressing, and I am ready to state that the Member of the Administration will become minister of finance rather than say the Canadian National Railways will ever refund these debts. So, let us consider them as permanent, or rather let us say to the directors of the Canadian National Railways to stop reducing their rates because they compete dishonestly with the trucking companies which pay taxes whereas the Canadian National Railways asks us loans all the time.

Mr. Chrétien: The only remark I would like to make, Mr. Chairman—

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to associate myself with those who expressed fear with regard to the threat that subsidies represent for the private trucking industry.

Repeatedly, during the last few years, many trucking associations have expressed their opposition to those increasing annual subsidies granted to the Canadian National, often at the expense of the trucking industry. The Trucking Association of Quebec especially expressed its disapproval through various briefs presented to the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) and to his predecessors. It seems that no consideration has ever been given to the serious concern shown in a purely administrative manner, by private industry. Many people contend that such government competition with private enterprise could cause their enterprise to disappear.

I think that the remarks made to that effect certainly require the minister who, by the way, comes from Quebec where the problem seems more acute than elsewhere, to assume responsibility for specifying the government's intentions in that respect.

Will the government continue to abuse its monetary power to the detriment of private industry by granting subsidies to cover the deficits incurred by a crown corporation which is getting to be too great a competitor for the private trucking industry, to enable it to operate at a profit, a thing which is, of course, absolutely basic for private enterprise?

I think I am in complete agreement with the thinking and the spirit of the Conservative party, which has always favoured the emancipation and the development of private enterprise. But how can we maintain that we are helping private enterprise if, at the same time, we are making profits impossible because the government, by its financing and its subsidies, becomes precisely a direct competitor of private enterprise and, particularly, of the trucking industry?

I think that the minister has a great responsibility in that field, because it should not be forgotten that truck owners, in short, the whole private transportation industry, are taxpayers. They pay taxes, direct and indirect on materials and equipment they use. Private enterprise pays a staff to manage their business and all that is possible only if the trucking industry can make profits.

But when the government, which bought private transportation companies, to form another government organization—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member commits the same error as some of this colleagues: He makes a comparison between the trucking industry and the railways, and clause 9 does not deal at all with the trucking industry. Therefore, such a comparison is out of order.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I think that is quite in order because it is a matter of giving the C.N.R. full power to finance itself out of the revenue of the government, and that liquidity or increase in capital comes in direct competition with the trucking industry. And that is the principle I am defending now. In fact, I am not drawing a parallel, I am not studying two different situations but rather the influence that such a borrowing facility for a crown corporation can have on the private trucking industry.

Mr. Chairman, we could discuss that matter for hours and for days, but I have the impression that we cannot do anything about it because it has become a habit, on the part of the government, to increase the funds available to the C.N.R. and to disregard those who have made serious representations to the government and to the Minister of Transport about the serious consequences that this policy can have on their enterprise.

And I think the responsibility rests upon the minister to give the trucking companies the assurance that the ease with which the Canadian National Company gets credits in order to make up for its deficits, will not be harmful to them.

I think the minister should first of all give an answer to that as I have other questions to ask him.

C.N.R. Financing and Guarantee Bill

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to give an answer to the hon. member.

I wish to point out to him first of all, that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) said earlier that the Canadian National had never had an operation surplus. Well should he examine the budget or the Canadian National's annual report for the years 1955 and 1956, he will find out that that body actually had a surplus.

As my hon. friend from Ste. Marie (Mr. Valade), who mentioned that the philosophy of the party he represents does not favour deficits as regards operations of the Canadian National, I wish to point out to him that during the years the Conservatives were in power, the deficits of the Canadian National Company were the highest of all in the history of this crown corporation. As a matter of fact, the deficits amounted to 62 and 64 million dollars whereas the one forecast for next year is of $15,000,000. Moreover, according to the new policy on the part of the federal government, we want deficits to be completely eliminated.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. minister is completely out of order.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, if we paid for deficits when we were in power, it was for deficits accumulated by the previous Liberal administration that had made so many mistakes in the—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member should not follow the example of previous speakers.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for indicating that I should not follow the example set by previous speakers, by the minister, and it is exactly what I do not want to do. I would not want the minister to be allowed to perpetuate in the field of administration a policy that has shown itself to be harmful to the trucking industry.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I know that my intervention cannot change anything, Mr. Chairman, as we are all aware of it. However, I ask the minister to be a little more serious in his approach to the problem and to realize how much the private trucking industry is concerned about the C.N.R.'s possibility of competing with it thanks to public funds.

That is my objection, Mr. Chairman, and I think the minister should explain to us why the government persists in granting subsidies to a crown corporation which never makes a profit, but which is forever experiencing deficits.

It is stated that it will probably make a surplus one day. The government, and more especially, the minister, should tell us whether we must expect surpluses at a given time. If the government gave us the assurance that this situation will stabilize itself in the near future, I think private enterprise could adapt its policies accordingly, but until then, I think the minister should tell us frankly whether his government or the department he runs will simply continue to cover deficits indefinitely at the expense of the private trucking industry. Here, I speak on behalf of those who have already submitted briefs asking the government to concern itself with their problems.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

On clause 10—Amounts at disposal of Air Canada.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Vegreville was speaking a few days ago on an earlier clause in this bill I stated that when we reached clause 10 I would have some questions to ask the Minister of Transport, and I want to ask them now. My intention some days ago to pose these questions has been heightened by the remarks made in the house last Thursday night by the Minister of Finance.

When I first saw Bill No. C-151 I knew that it had to pass. I think I know enough about business to understand the necessity for it. However, clause 10 bothers me. To have the financing of Trans-Canada Air Lines—Air Canada, before some hon. members get excited about about my calling it Trans-Canada Air Lines—incorporated in the C.N.R. bill seems a little interesting, although I know they have been handling the express business for some time.

Clause 10(2) of the bill reads as follows:

(2) All amounts placed at the disposal of Air Canada pursuant to subsection (1) shall be reimbursed to the Minister of Finance from the annual revenues of Air Canada in so far as such revenues are sufficient, and any insufficiency shall be provided for by subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament.

This evidently is anticipating a deficit position in respect of T.C.A. I have read their annual reports for many years and in my opinion it is a well administered organization. In recent years, however, T.C.A. has been faced with competition from a privately chartered company, Canadian Pacific Airlines. I have been interested in Canadian Pacific Airlines since long before its formation. I knew Punch Dickens and Grant McConachie personally when they were bush pilots flying out of Edmonton. Their record in connection with aviation is a credit to them and to the country as a whole. Grant McConachie, of course, was one of those who made Canadian Pacific Airlines what it is today.

A former government granted a charter to Canadian Pacific Airlines and it began to fly across the country with very limited stops. It seemed that with the limited stops granted to C.P.A., T.C.A. was still in a position to declare a profit. Whether that profit came from their overseas flights to Europe, from their Caribbean flights to the south seas or from their domestic flights to points between St. John's, Newfoundland and Victoria, B.C. is a moot question.

I should like to ask some questions on this score. On November 30 the Minister of Finance speaking in the house told us about the dire straits in which the country finds itself. As recorded on page 4904 of Hansard he said:

> Another demand upon our funds is Air Canada. It is having to expand rapidly its fleet of aircraft and its various ground installations in order to meet the growing traffic demands on it.

I would be interested to know what the growing demands are. Are they on the Atlantic flights, on the continental flights, on the short haul flights or on the Caribbean flights? Then the minister went on to say:

> The Minister of Transport and I recognize that it will be necessary to exercise restraint on what the government lends to Air Canada in future years, requiring that company to seek sources of capital funds other than the government.

When I heard the Minister of Finance make that statement in the house last Thursday night, I was sitting here and I wondered whether Air Canada would be forced to finance on the basis of equipment loans as some railways in the United States have been doing for many years; that is, the equipment they use is the property of various financial organizations which have advanced them funds on capital account.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I know that this bill brings to mind many problems in respect of transportation, but I have a great deal of difficulty in relating the remarks the hon. member is making now to clause 10. This is a clause to allow the Minister of Finance to place at the disposal of Air Canada such amounts as may be required, and so on. Actually it has nothing to do with the transportation problem.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to disagree with the Chair but I am trying to point out how Air Canada will get in the position where it needs to get finances from the Minister of Finance. If its traffic is being cut in the throat it is not going to have the revenue to finance itself and is therefore going to have to ask the Minister of Finance to advance the money it needs. I am talking about the effect on Air Canada traffic as the result of direct competition from the privately chartered Canadian Pacific Airlines. I thought I was very relevant. I thought I was referring to clause 10 of Bill No. C-151. In the quotations I am making from the remarks of the Minister of Finance last Thursday he referred directly to the Minister of Transport. How more relevant can I be? I am sorry, sir, but I thought I was relevant and I believe I am.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member has asked how relevant he can be. He can actually be relevant to clause 10 which deals with the permission the Minister of Finance is seeking in order to help Air Canada if it has a deficit at the end of the year.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, my comments are leading to this question: What will the deficit of Air Canada be as a result of the increasing competition offered by Canadian Pacific Airlines? Once we know what the possible deficit may be we will know exactly how much funds will need to be advanced to Air Canada which it is supposed to reimburse to the Minister of Finance from its annual revenues in so far as such revenues are sufficient and, any insufficiency shall be provided for by subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament. I am asking what effect the transcontinental flights of Canadian Pacific Airlines, when they were limited, had on the passenger traffic that was available to Trans-Canada Air Lines. Being more specific I should like to ask what effect has been apparent in respect of the across Canada revenue or passenger miles of T.C.A. as a result of the authority granted to the private corporation to land at a number of intermediate stops. It is all well and good for the Minister of Finance to say:

> Another demand upon our funds is Air Canada. It is having to expand rapidly its fleet of aircraft and its various ground installations in order to meet the growing traffic demands on it.

Is it having to expand its fleet of aircraft because its traffic is increasing within Canada or is it increasing its fleet of aircraft to fly across the Atlantic or down to the Caribbean islands served by Air Canada?

My interest in this matter is deep because if the traffic of Air Canada is affected by the operations of a privately chartered competitor within Canada it may be placed in a deficit position. I believe we are entitled to some kind of statement concerning what has been the experience of Air Canada on the lines where it has had competition from a private company. I find this situation interesting in view of the fact that the government corporation is having to meet increased private competition which did not exist until the charter was granted and increased when a number of intermediate stops were authorized.

In the field of television and radio we have the government competing with the private broadcasting business. What they believe in doing in one area they do not do in the other. I would like to know the figures which are available. I hope I will not be given the 1967 figures which have been greatly inflated because of the increased traffic as a result of Expo. Since Expo ceased we have been able to obtain seats on airplanes in Canada without waiting three or four weeks. The information I should like is the over-all passenger traffic T.C.A. handled during, say, 1966 and 1965, broken down into the three divisions: (a) within Canada (b) trans-Atlantic and (c) to the Caribbean.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member is talking about the operations of Air Canada. If I may be permitted to do so, I should like to draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that we are dealing with a clause which would give the Minister of Finance permission to make available such amounts as may be required to enable Air Canada to meet its charges and the manner in which these loans will be paid back. I should like to ask the hon. member to cooperate with the Chair. I am sure he will be glad to come back to the clause which is under study at this time.

[Mr. Cowan.]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for me to come back to the clause because I never left it. I have asked my questions and now may I have the answers?

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this clause is to advance moneys to the corporation during that period of the year when they operate at a deficit. Their business is highly seasonal and during part of the year they operate on a deficit. This is subsequently overcome by higher revenues during the summer period when trans-oceanic traffic is higher and traffic on domestic routes is higher. Consequently during the course of the year the money is repaid to the Receiver General of Canada.

No deficit is anticipated by the air line and at the present time it is operating at a very small profit. To say exactly what effect competition has had on the air line is almost impossible. Air Canada would give you its impression as to what has happened to their revenues as a result of competition, Canadian Pacific Air Lines might give you a different point of view and an independent arbiter might give you a third position. This is very difficult to outline, but I think one can say with safety that all of the available facilities were taxed to the limit of their capability and even beyond in meeting the traffic available during the last season. In so far as the future is concerned, and this might inspire confidence that there will be enough business available for both air lines in the years ahead, there will be a phenomenal increase in traffic available, something of the order of 600 per cent in ten years. With that kind of growth it should be possible for both air lines to expand considerably, and presumably profitably.

In so far as the main sources of profitable operation for Air Canada are concerned, and I am not an expert in these fields, I understand that basically they operate their North Atlantic routes at a very sizeable profit. This is used to compensate for losses on some of the shorter domestic runs. I believe this is a correct assessment of the position.

I suppose the introduction of competition has had some effect, but the over-all revenue position is not something I am in a position to outline exactly. There are a lot of people who think a little bit of opposition is very healthy, both on international and domestic routes, and that it helps to keep air lines on their toes in providing the kind of services to which the travelling public is entitled.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Minister of Transport for his remarks. I also believe that competition is a good thing, but I do not like to see it authorized by the government against a government owned authority if that authority is placed in a deficit position and has to come to the government for funds to carry on.

Mr. Hellyer: There is no indication that this is the case, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 1—Short title.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, before this bill is adopted, I should like to comment on it in general.

Under Bill No. C-151, we are asked to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system. I should say, Mr. Chairman, that I am not quite satisfied as to how investment funds are being spent or allocated throughout Canada.

Before getting into this area, however, and since reference is also made to operational funds, there is one question I would like to ask from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), to which he may reply when I am through talking.

I would like to ask him whether there is any truth about the removal in the C.N.R. Public Relations Branch, of the French Services, which included a manager, Mr. Gravelle, a secretary, Miss Tanguay, and a public relations assistant, Mr. Baillargeon, whose offices were locate on the 16th floor of the C.N.R. headquarters. If the answer is yes, I think we should ask ourselves some questions.

Now, the last time the bill was up for consideration, I asked the minister who was sponsoring the bill at that time, that is the minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) to tell me how much money was spent in each region and in each province of Canada. The minister could not then give me the data by province but he gave it to me by region and told me that the region of the St. Lawrence is considered today as the region of the province of Quebec. I note that out of a total budget of $96,956,300 in capital expenditures by the Canadian National Railways in 1967, there was earmarked for the St. Lawrence region only $12,839,000 or one-twelfth, or approximately 10 or 15 per cent of total expeditures, whereas Quebec represents 28.4 per cent of the population of the country as a whole. How is it that less is being spent in one region than in another? How is it that less is being received concerning such an important factor of economic development as communications.

I also have on hand the second report of the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1966, that is last year for which mention is made of expenditures by the Department of Transport for protection at level crossings for the years from 1909 to 1966.

For instance, one column shows the percentage of population by province. Quebec, is shown as having 28.90 per cent of the population of Canada, the total amount spent by the Railway Grade Crossing Fund as well as the Canadian National Railways is equivalent to 14.89 per cent, while Ontario, with 34.69 per cent of the Canadian population, has benefited by expenditures amounting to 52.21 per cent of the total amount.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: I see that the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) is beaming all over; he is pleased that 34.69 per cent of Canadians benefit from 52.21 per cent of the investments. I admit that he should be happy about it, because Ontario is his province. But on the other hand, with the broad-mindedness that I credit him with he will also admit that Quebec, with 28.90 per cent of the total population, cannot be satisfied with only a share of 14.89 per cent of investment expenditures. If the hon. member for York-Humber or any other hon. member from Ontario were in my place, he would say the same thing: that Quebec did not by far get its share, and that in fact it hardly got half of it.

I asked the same question in 1962, and in 1963 in the house, and the figures were exactly the same, nothing has changed. We are told: Things are shaping up, it will change.

But a quick look at the French Hansard on page 7885, of 1963, at the bottom of the right column, is enough to realize that those figures are exactly the same as those which I have just quoted, and that nothing has changed. They say: It will change. For three years now figures have been quoted and it has not changed yet. I have the reports before me to prove it.

Mr. Chairman, that information is official, for it is published by the Queen's Printer—in my opinion there is nothing more official than that—and it states that 28.90 per cent of the people have benefited by only 14.89 per cent of the capital expenditure of the Board of Transport Commissioners taken from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund and by the Canadian National Railways, for the protection of drivers.

I have given two examples, Mr. Chairman, but there are many more. I wonder why the federal government discriminates in this way against the province of Quebec? And since we are speaking of transportation, Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw something else to the attention of the Minister of Transport. We are talking here about investments for the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada.

Obviously, the Canadian National Railways are also responsible for the operation of certain ferry services.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I should like today to deal with a subject in which I am particularly interested, winter navigation on the St. Lawrence. The bill before us makes no provision for capital expenditures for this means of transport while some are provided for the Canadian National Railways and for Air Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to put the facts before the Minister of Transport. He has not been very long in his job so he may not have had the opportunity to find out of what is happening to winter navigation on the St. Lawrence, but I think that today, with a pamphlet by a professor of geography at the École des Hautes Etudes Commerciales of Montréal—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: —who holds a doctorate from the University of Paris, Michel Brochu, geographer, we have here all the data required to state that the Minister of Transport could do much more at no additional cost whatever. It is simply a matter of ordering the icebreakers to work. At the present time, they have orders not to work. However, the men are paid the same way, their meals are paid for, they are getting their wages, the icebreakers are operative—

• (5:10 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member for Lapointe that he is now dealing with the Department of Transport whereas the matter before the committee is a financial bill respecting the C.N.R. May I suggest to the hon. member that he confine his remarks to the bill before the committee and particularly to clause 1.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I think that you are right, and, I accept your ruling. In fact, I made the remarks I wanted to make on clause 1.

First, I wanted to ask the Minister of Transport—maybe it would be better to repeat the question—whether it is a fact that the Canadian National's French service of public relations has been abolished.

I would also like to ask him why there is so much difference in the capital expenditures made in other provinces as compared to those made in Quebec. How is it that Quebec never receives its share of the aggregate capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: I have no knowledge on that subject, Mr. Chairman, but I would be surprised if that were true. With respect to capital expenditures, it is impossible in our country to average out at all times the expenditures of all departments and all corporations. This would be ridiculous. My hon. friend might examine the expenditures in some other departments where he would find that Quebec's expenditures are far greater than the national average. He might compare the expenditures of that province with those of Ontario or Manitoba, for example.

Mr. McCleave: Or Halifax.

Mr. Hellyer: So there are compensating factors here which one must take into account. If the hon. member would look at the picture in perspective I think he would come to the conclusion that the province of Quebec does quite well, on average, and has in the past with the excellent leadership that has been given on its behalf throughout the years, even before my hon. friend was a member of this house, and at the present time by the government members who so ably support the demands of that province.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What about money for icebreaking, while we are on the subject?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, precisely, it is because—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, precisely, I shall tell the Minister of Transport that it is because we have considered the reports from every department and every crown agency that we say that there is only one field where Quebec receives more than its share, when it comes to federal government expenditures, and it is that of unemployment insurance, because we have more unemployed. In the other departments, we are always in a deficit position.

[English]

The Chairman: Will the hon. member sit down, please.

Mr. McCleave: Kick him out.

The Chairman: Again I must advise the hon. member that he is going beyond the confines of the bill before the committee. I would again point out to him that this is a financial bill respecting the C.N.R. and not one dealing with the actual operation of the C.N.R.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I accept your ruling. I was only trying to correct the general information the Minister of Transport gave us and which, I thought, was erroneous. In fact, I think I have corrected it and I challenge the minister to bring us, at any time, precise figures on that; he will then see that his information is incorrect.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refute the objection of the hon. member for Lapointe.

I feel it would only be fair to recall that the federal government spent huge amounts recently to help the Quebec government to improve its highway system in the Gaspe peninsula where the construction of a railroad had been planned. However, it was considered that a railroad would not be economical and, to compensate for that loss, the federal government transferred to the province of Quebec several millions of dollars to help develop that region, as a replacement for the capital expenditures the C.N.R. had planned.

Mr. Grégoire: How much?

[English]

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Chairman, when I spoke very briefly on clause 6 earlier this afternoon I tried to indicate the inability of parliamentarians to really get to the bottom of the financial situation of Canadian National Railways because of a lack of expertise in our transport committee. I also said that because of this inability there seems to be a complete lack of control over the operational policies of Canadian National Railways.

At that time I was at the point of mentioning that the hon. member for Chapleau had said he had received representations from unions representing employees of the C.N.R. who are being laid off in great numbers. Like the hon. member for Chapleau, I have received representations from these people and particularly from the maintenance of way employees, the section men and the bridge building gangs who are primarily responsible for keeping the tracks in good condition for the operation of the trains.

A reduction in these gangs means there are insufficient men available to repair the track when a portion is found to be unsafe owing to a rock fall or possibly a wash-out. With reduced gangs these people find it increasingly difficult to inspect the condition of the track properly, let alone make the repairs and adjustments necessary to maintain the track in a safe condition. Here I would refer to the problem of shimming the track or keeping the track in line. This is particularly important during the spring and fall months when the frost—

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him that he is dealing with the operations of Canadian National Railways and the bill before the committee deals with the financing of the C.N.R. I hope the hon. member for Nickel Belt will confine his remarks to the bill before the committee.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether I might point out two things, Mr. Chairman. First may I call to Your Honour's attention that on previous clauses, when I think members were straying from the precise clauses before us, there was a good deal of discussion about the operations of Canadian National Railways. The hon. member for Nickel Belt made one attempt to deal with those operations in so far as they affect the finances of the company. He accepted the ruling of the Chair to wait until an appropriate clause was before the committee. I suggest that clause 1 is the place where we can have a general debate if it is related to the bill itself.

The other point I would draw to Your Honour's attention is that this bill, the general clause of which we are now discussing, has to do with the provision of money for Canadian National Railways. Surely, when parliament is being asked to provide money for the C.N.R., we can ask questions about the way in which that money is being spent and about the results as far as employees are concerned. I appeal to Your Honour to recognize the difference between what my hon. friend is now trying to discuss, namely, what is happening to the employees of the C.N.R, and remarks we heard a while ago which did not relate to the C.N.R. at all.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The Chairman: The Chair recognizes the argument which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made. I am sure that in turn he will recognize too the difficulty which faces the Chair in keeping the committee within the bounds of the bill before us. If the hon. member for Nickel Belt is making his remarks by way of an example, they would be acceptable to the Chair. As a basis for a whole speech, however, they would be outside the confines of this bill. Maybe we could allow the hon. member for Nickel Belt to proceed.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The point I wish to make is that we in parliament have no means of assessing precisely the situation within the C.N.R. At the same time we see the company laying off employees and taking other steps which are detrimental not only to its workers but to the economy of the nation as a whole. If we are to be asked to pick up the tab whenever the company does not make sufficient profit to cover the cost of its operations, my remarks should, I contend, be considered as relevant. I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me at least an opportunity to attempt to continue.

I was dealing with representations which have been made by spokesmen for the unions affected by the lay-offs, and I should like to put on record a portion of a letter I received the other day from a representative of the maintenance of way employees union. I shall quote a few paragraphs because they express an opinion which I certainly support wholeheartedly and they express it just as well as I could.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I am sure you will agree this reduction is not caused by any lack of work, in fact the situation is becoming intolerable for our people, who must attempt to maintain the higher standards of track maintenance required by ever-increasing speed and weight of traffic, with fewer and fewer men.

Recently members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Fireman and Enginemen and Locomotive Engineers on the Ontario Northland Railway brought rail operations to a standstill by a 24 hour sick strike; the chief complaint centered around unsafe operating conditions brought on by worsening track and roadbed conditions.

Mechanical equipment in major work programs reduces manpower requirements but the basic every-day problems of track maintenance, inspection and patrol are still performed more economically by hand tools and for this reason any lengthening of sections and reduction of forces is entirely unjustified.

Further on in the letter the writer says:

As grievance chairman, I write the following to express our opposition to such lay-offs.

On September 2, 1966, we were forced back to work by an act of parliament, to be laid off less than one year after. Men with 43 years of faithful service are laid off. It now seems clear that the railroad has not kept the development of human relations on the railroad in pace with the development of productions technology.

On one hand, the workers' purpose should be to strive to carry out honestly and well all agreements freely made without violence, disorder or outrage upon employers which might imperil the economic soundness of a concern and bring about hardships for both employers and workers.

Employers, on the other hand, should treat workers as free people, as co-partners in ownership, profits and management and thus avoid extremes of both the left and right. Those not possessed of considerable wealth, in short, the workers, are more defenceless against poverty and injustice than employers, hence an employer should never tax his work people beyond their strength. His great and principal obligation is to give to everyone that which is just.

I may say I subscribe to these observations. Another factor which is causing great concern to these employees is the fear that many of those who have been laid off will not be re-engaged, that more and more of their work will be done by so-called floating gangs made up primarily of men who do not have seniority or service rights or the protection of a union contract.

Lay-offs in other departments are more understandable than in the case of maintenance of way workers, though I do not wish to play down the fact that these other lay-offs are also of a most serious nature. Carloadings are down, it is true, and traffic in general has slackened off to a great extent, though to what extent this can be attributed to the increase in tariffs is a debatable question. How can we find out when we lack the expertise to get to the bottom of the question? I submit that the case of the maintenance of way employees—

The Chairman: Order. Again I must advise the hon. member that the Chair is finding some difficulty in relating the remarks he is now making to the bill before us which deals with a financial provision for the C.N.R.

Mr. Fawcett: With all deference to you, sir, I shall have to repeat what I said earlier. When the company has to receive financial assistance from parliament in order that it can continue to operate, surely its operational policy should be capable of discussion in this chamber. I should like to draw attention to other lay-offs—

The Chairman: Order. Pursuant to an order of the house made earlier this day and in order that the house may revert to motions, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: I wonder whether the hon. member who has just been speaking could indicate how much longer he intends to take. Possibly we could pass the bill before us at this point before any statements are made.

Mr. Peters: No.

Mr. Fawcett: That would depend on how much I am in order. It would take about ten minutes.

Progress reported.

• (5:30 p.m.)

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

TABLING OF FIRST REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and in French of the first report, volume 1 as it is called, and a very important report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. The recommendations in this report, which are of far reaching significance, deal with the status of the two official languages of Canada. The report was made available to the government late last week and has already been the subject of consideration by the cabinet. The government has established machinery which will ensure that all the recommendations of the report are given serious and urgent appraisal so that the government may be in a position to make its views known without undue delay and to take whatever action is required.

I wish to state immediately, Mr. Speaker, what I have already said before more than once, that the government fully endorses the principle of French speaking and English speaking linguistic and cultural equality that forms the core of and is so clearly defined in this report. The report includes 14 recommendations, six of which deal with matters that are primarily for consideration by provincial governments; three would involve joint consideration and, if agreed, joint action by the federal and provincial governments; two are recommendations for constitutional amendment, while the remaining three lie within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

It is the intention of the government to deal as quickly as possible with those matters in this report which fall within its constitutional jurisdiction. The recommendations, of course, are also of the utmost importance and interest to provincial governments and copies of the report are being made available to each of those governments. I am suggesting also to the provinces that a discussion of matters in the report should be included in the agenda of the forthcoming federal-provincial constitutional conference which is to be held early next year. I hope that discussion with and consideration by the provinces will lead to agreement concerning all matters that involve their participation or require a constitutional amendment.

Since the royal commission was appointed in 1963 the matters which were outlined in its terms of reference have been under increasing examination within the country, and this has led to a greater understanding of the problems involved and of the necessity to work co-operatively to find solutions for them, as I am sure we can do. Since the commission was established the federal government has taken a number of important steps, some of which have a bearing on the recommendations in this particular report. For some time, for instance, policies have been in operation to promote bilingualism in the public service of Canada. The federal government has also initiated, in co-operation with the governments of Ontario and Quebec, a study of the necessary steps which should be taken co-operatively among the three governments and in consultation with the municipalities concerned to develop a truly national capital area extending on both sides of the Ottawa river. The government will be announcing in due course other steps which relate to the recommendations in this report.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the house that the report and its implications are being studied most carefully, as its importance demands. I am sure that all provincial governments will want to give this report the same careful attention. I should like to thank the members of the commission, Mr. Speaker, for this further evidence of the responsible and constructive approach they are making to the various and important matters entrusted to them for examination and report. They are exploring and clarifying problems, fundamental problems, of Canadian unity, diversity and federalism in the circumstances of today. By doing so they are giving invaluable assistance to all those who are searching in a sincere and positive way for solutions to these problems. Such solutions, based on unity in diversity, of equality and partnership, are essential to Canadian development, indeed to Canadian survival. They must, they will be found, Mr. Speaker, so that Canada can live and grow and provide a good life for all its people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table the documents referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is the first of several volumes of the report of the commission. I, of course, have not been able to consider the report in any detail nor to confer with my colleagues in connection with it. There are, nevertheless, some things I should like to say at this time. This report deals almost entirely with the subject of language. I would express the hope that while we would not delay consideration in order to wait for additional volumes, nevertheless every effort should be made to make available the remaining volumes of the work of the commission as rapidly as possible so that we will have the whole picture before us.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has indicated, a number of the recommendations contained in this volume are within the jurisdiction of the provinces, especially those relating to education and consequently could not be implemented by this parliament. I should like to make the point, sir, that whether recommendations come within the jurisdiction of this parliament or within the jurisdiction of the provinces, they clearly relate to problems which are of concern to the country as a whole. They relate to the health and future of confederation, the future of our country.

It seems to me, therefore, that this parliament and the government, indeed all the national political parties, must be prepared to provide leadership in connection with these problems in all jurisdictions. The report, of course, deals with a subject which provides problems for a great many members of the house. I want to emphasize, however, that it certainly will not be our desire to attempt to derive partisan advantage from matters arising out of the report. We are, after all, dealing with the future of our country which I think is probably in some danger. We must have the determination and the courage to do what is required to be done and to do it without undue delay. I am optimistic, myself. While it is obvious, I think, that dissatisfaction has escalated in recent years, the degree of understanding and willingness to recognize these problems and deal with them has also escalated. We have seen the Estates General meet recently. One may question to what extent it was representative, but it gave the impression of consisting of serious people engaged in serious discussion.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, there is another side of the picture, and this was illustrated about the same time by the conference that took place in Toronto called on provincial initiative, indeed, on the initiative of the premier of Ontario. I hope I will not be accused of being partisan about the matter—I am saying this sincerely—when I point out that we have cause to be grateful that this conference did take place at that time, as it might have been rather depressing to Canadians generally to have only the picture that was being created by the Estates General. I think the premier of Ontario contributed an important public service, and I must say that I derive some pride and satisfaction as well from the role that was played by the premier of Nova Scotia.

In referring to the provincial initiative in calling this conference in Toronto I want to be understood as not criticizing the government in this connection. The fact that these provincial representatives spent three or four days together dealing with the provincial aspects of this problem was probably the right thing to do. I expressed the hope that the federal government would be represented by ministers, but only as observers, and I emphasize I am not being critical in this regard.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do suggest that we must all be prepared to participate and to offer leadership, both members of the government and the other parties in the house. I hope we approach this report in this spirit. From what I have seen so far I do not think there is too much in the recommendations that will startle the people of Canada. I say this because of the discussions that have taken place over recent years and the movement that I think has taken place in terms of opinion. Some may even wonder why it took the commission so long to produce these recommendations. But the fact that this opinion has been expressed is itself an indication of the extent to which public opinion has changed, because I think that a few years ago these recommendations would certainly have been considered rather startling.

I would like to suggest that in regard to methods of procedure it might be appropriate for the Prime Minister to consult with the working committee of premiers that has been established. I do not suggest this method should be pursued exclusively but it is one method of proceeding.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should simply like to say that while I do not think I am inclined to be melodramatic, and I hope I am not inclined to oversimplification, I believe that the future of the country is to a considerable extent in our hands. I think we are going to be put to the test and I hope we will not be found wanting. The members of the party that I have the honour to lead will certainly wish to study this report carefully. We will do so with a sense of urgency and with a full awareness of the grave importance of the matters that are being discussed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, while I have not had an opportunity of reading this report I nevertheless welcome it as an important contribution to a very fundamental problem. I think one of the things that impresses one as one glances over the summary is that the report is the unanimous opinion of all the commissioners. It is true that two of the commissioners have written personal addenda, but all of them have supported the main recommendations of this first report. I think that in itself is encouraging.

When the commission issued its preliminary report it warned us that there was a crisis in Canada. Events in this regard have certainly vindicated their views. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, events in this country are moving so quickly that we are in danger of having events overtake us. If it is still true that to govern is to foresee, then certainly the thing we have to fear most is that we fail to keep abreast of the whole problem of Canadian confederation.

In this first report, which deals only with official languages, the commission has dealt with what is probably the most fundamental problem of biculturalism and bilingualism. I believe we ought to extend our congratulations to the commission on this report. Those who upon first glancing at it may think that the recommendations are somewhat radical must at the same time realize that startling and radical recommendations and actions may be necessary if we are to hold this country together and if Canadian confederation is to survive.

I was very glad to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) say that he intends to ask the premiers of the provinces to put the subject matter of this report on the agenda for the forthcoming federal-provincial conference which is to be held early in the new year. I feel certain that the premiers of the provinces will agree, because if one may judge by the spirit which prevailed at the Confederation of Tomorrow conference the premiers of the provinces of Canada are concerned, as we in this parliament are concerned, about the preservation of confederation.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think this report has to be viewed in a wider context. The commission's terms of reference dealt only with the matter of bilingualism and biculturalism, but it seems to me that the conference to be held early in the new year must begin to tackle the wider problem of Canadian confederation. Since the commission will not be dealing with that subject there is no need to wait for further reports before proceeding with a discussion between federal and provincial governments of the matter.

It seems to me that there are two goals which we in this parliament irrespective of party are striving to seek. The first is to establish between the English speaking and French speaking communities of Canada equality of status and equality of opportunity. It is sometimes said that what the French speaking Canadians want is to feel at home in every part of Canada. I think they want even more than that. I think they want to feel that they will have a share in the economic and social progress of this country and that they will be able to participate in their own language and within the framework of their own culture. I think that is the first goal we must set. We must work out ways and means by which these two cultural and linguistic communities can go together down the road of history co-operating on an equal basis and with equal opportunities.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The second goal which I think we in this parliament must set for ourselves is at the same time to build a strong and viable sovereign nation. We want Canada to be a country which has the necessary powers to promote full employment and an ever-increasing standard of living. In the process, therefore, of any constitutional changes which take place we want to make sure that we do not diminish the powers of the federal government, that we give to the federal government the necessary authority to promote economic growth and expansion and, what is more, Mr. Speaker, that we have a federal government strong enough to eliminate regional disparities, which can do more than anything else to destroy national unity. This may mean some redistribution of constitutional powers—this matter can be discussed with the provinces—if we are to deal adequately with such problems as housing, manpower training, pollution and the marketing of farm products. It may even mean that where the French speaking community in Canada feels its rights may be infringed on, special arrangements may have to be made with the province of Quebec.

The report which the Prime Minister has tabled is part of a continuing dialogue. I am convinced that with vision and good will on the part of all concerned we need not fear for the future. We need only fear apathy and delay. I hope that in the course of the next few months, at the federal-provincial conference and in parliament, we will apply ourselves to the task of strengthening confederation and at the same time bringing about happy and friendly relations between the two great founding races that make up Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is very important, and I think that we should start by congratulating the members of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission for the objectivity with which they have done their work. They have performed their task well all across Canada.

[Mr. Douglas.]

The Prime Minister said a moment ago:

> The report includes fourteen recommendations, of which six deal with matters that are primarily for consideration by provincial governments; three would involve joint consideration and, if agreed, joint action by the federal and provincial governments, two are recommendations for constitutional amendment, while the remaining three lie within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, that commission will certainly have proved useful to the population as a whole and, regardless of any political partisanship, we must admit that the Canadian Prime Minister is the one responsible for such understanding throughout Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: —in every part of Canada, indeed, as has never been seen in the past. Even when Canada had a French-speaking Prime Minister, French Canadians were less understood than they are now with the present Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, he sure heard some abusive language from people in his own party and also from other political groups in Canada. However, I think he has remained a Canadian in every sense of the word and he still wants Canadians to understand and get along with each other.

Mr. Speaker, recently a provincial conference was held in Toronto and we should congratulate now, I think, the initiator of that conference, Premier Robarts, who invited all premiers, from all provinces of Canada, to discuss the Canadian constitution and to consider the part French Canadians should have in the good operation of our country or in the administration of Canadian affairs.

On map No. 1, which shows the distribution of population by province, I note that in several other Canadian provinces there are French-speaking minorities practically as numerous as the English-speaking minority in Quebec.

I have said over and over, Mr. Speaker, and I will say it again this afternoon: We wish that every Canadian province would treat the French-speaking minority within their boundaries as we, in Quebec, treat the English-speaking minority within our boundaries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Then we shall have taken the first step toward greater understanding.

In Quebec, Mr. Speaker, we have not been compelled more elsewhere to learn a second language; we wanted to, and we are proud today to have learned the other Canadian official language, the English language. We are happy to learn it, and I do not see why teaching French should be denied in the other provinces.

On the other hand, Premier Robarts of Ontario is now taking steps so that French might be taught in the first year.

In Manitoba, the same thing is coming; in New Brunswick, I believe Premier Robichaud is thinking of this possibility.

In the western provinces, they are possibly so far removed from the problems, we know here in Ottawa that it is somewhat more difficult to have these views recognized but I think that, objectively, at the recent Toronto conference, while the federal government was standing aside, the premiers had the opportunity to express their inner thoughts.

• (6:00 p.m.)

I believe that the present premier of the province of Quebec (Mr. Johnson), has thrown light on the problem and has convinced most of the premiers of the urgency of considering this basic question of the teaching of French in their own province, where he said that in Quebec this year, 75,000 young French Canadians will arrive on the labour market and will want to earn their living in their own language, just as English-speaking people also like to earn their livelihood in their own language. These rights should be equal throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister stated further—and that is true:

> Since the commission was established, the federal government has taken a number of important steps—

We see now these steps.

> —some of which have a bearing on the recommandations in this particular report. For some time, for instance, policies have been in operation to promote bilingualism in the public service of Canada.

In fact, English-speaking officials are now learning French and French-speaking officials are learning English.

If a law or rule passed by the government provides for a 7 per cent bonus to be given to Canadian civil servants who are bilingual, we insist that this law or this attitude concerning bilingualism in the public service be extended to the employees of the House of Commons who, I believe, are also government employees and civil servants. Those who work in the two languages should receive this 7 per cent bonus.

I will continue now to quote the right hon. Prime Minister:

> The federal government has also initiated, in co-operation with the governments of Ontario and Quebec, a study of the necessary steps which should be taken co-operatively among the three governments and in consultation with the municipalities concerned to develop a truly national capital area extending on both sides of the Ottawa river.

While the Prime Minister was being questioned on television the other night, he said that the establishment of a national capital or of a federal district would be a pilot project for the whole of Canada, showing both west and east that it is possible in an area, in a province and in the country—even though an English Canadian cannot be turned into a French Canadian or a French Canadian into an English Canadian—to make two good Canadians out of these two elements or with the two official languages.

Mr. Speaker, this is not putting aside those who speak a language other than French and English, specifically the Ukrainians, the Poles, the Italians, the Germans, who are in Canada in large numbers, these people are considered Canadians just as we are. We consider them as true and good Canadians and they have the advantage of speaking one or the other of the two official languages. They also have the advantage of keeping their own culture, whether it is German, Italian, French, Yugoslavian, it is immaterial. "Diversity in unity." That is what the Prime Minister said a while ago and that is what the Ralliement créditiste endorses unreservedly for the whole of Canada.

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with interest to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) this afternoon on the tabling of the first report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

At the time the commission was appointed many questions were asked. For instance, many Canadians wondered whether the appointment of such a commission would contribute to unity and harmony in Canada or whether it would be an additional divisive factor. Others wondered whether there would be an impartial inquiry into the questions within the commission's terms of reference or whether it had been appointed to do a selling job on a course to which the government was already committed. In addition, the question was asked whether there was any real justification for the expenditure of the vast sums of public money which, even in the very earliest stages, it was evident would be required. Another question raised at the time of the appointment of the commission was whether any consideration would be given to the one third of the population of Canada who are neither English nor French speaking.

I suggest these are the questions that will be uppermost in the minds of Canadians in general when they have the opportunity to consider the report that has just been tabled. Of course it is impossible to grasp the full significance of the report without a very careful analysis of it. Indications are that its recommendations will be very far reaching, but on other occasions we will have opportunities to deal with them in some detail.

I agree with the suggestion that it will be necessary for us to receive all the reports of the commission before we are able to understand in a really broad sense the objectives which the commission has in mind. I trust that the remaining reports will not be too long delayed.

The implementation of many of the recommendations will be dependent not so much on constitutional change but on the co-operation of the provinces concerned. The Prime Minister has indicated that there are a number of recommendations, I believe six, which come almost entirely within provincial jurisdiction and others come under shared jurisdiction. I suggest that any attempt to infringe on provincial prerogatives in this connection or to exercise undue pressure or coercion could have very serious and unfortunate results. May I also suggest that any changes in the linguistic or cultural nature of Canada which may result from the implementation of any or all of these recommendations must not be used to promote undesirable changes in our political and constitutional structure.

I am sure the report will be studied very carefully in every part of Canada. We trust that our country will be able to move forward unitedly to achieve the destiny which is desirable and possible for us.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), Immigration—inquiry on the schedule of arrivals of immigrants; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), The Prime Minister—statement of Minister of Transport reflecting government policy with respect to Viet Nam; the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden), Old Age Security—centennial bonus—senior citizens.

The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

CABRI PIPE LINES LTD.

The house in committee on Bill No. S-16, to incorporate Cabri Pipe Lines Ltd.—Mr. Jorgenson—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the number of pipe line bills that we have been getting, particularly in the wording detailing their purposes. I think it is safe to say that we are unduly cautious about passing pipe line bills for the simple reason that the companies involved are never clear as to what they want and what they are going to do. This is a bill that falls into that category.

I do not know whether it is wise for us to have a number of small international or interprovincial companies constructing pipe lines over short distances such as in the present case. The length of the pipe line is to be 20 miles, but it will cross an interprovincial boundary. From reading the questions asked during the committee proceedings on this bill I understand that incorporation of this pipe line company could have taken place in several other ways. The pipe line is to run from a particular well to a delivery point in the Lloydminster area where I assume the product it carries will be used. I also assume that initially the product will be gas which will be used in the immediate area. If this were so, there would certainly be no opposition to the incorporation of this company. It would be a supplier moving its product to a restricted market in a given area. But that is not what the bill seeks.

• (6:10 p.m.)

I have read the remarks of the sponsor. I have read the remarks made by the parliamentary agent and by the counsel for this corporation. This is not what they say the bill is for. I should like to quote some of the evidence which was given before the committee on transport and communications on November 28, 1967. This evidence is not necessarily the same as the evidence given before the committee of the other place in respect of this company. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce said:

Sir, you said that you were asking for more powers—

More powers than were outlined in the simple explanation originally given.

—because it would be an interprovincial pipe line. I notice in clause 6 that you are also asking for powers for international pipe lines.

This was the answer:

Mr. Cressey: Yes; the international feature has been included because it is very difficult to predict where the markets of the future will be and consequently it has been a standard custom in the case of pipe line companies to loop them both interprovincially and/or internationally.

If this is really what this company wants to do, it should have said so in the first place. It is quite true that it may have a number of wells and may expand, but it is my contention that if it wants to do that it should be willing to come back and obtain an amendment. The company told the committee that what is involved is a simple pipe line 20 miles in length. I suppose the situation is like that when a person is asking for an increase in salary. He asks for ten times as much as he expects to get. In this case the company is asking for an international charter to transport gas 20 miles. I should like to read further from the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee:

Mr. Allmand: Did you also ask for permission to transport gas as liquids and solids?

Mr. Cressey: Right.

Mr. Allmand: And also for processing, refining, treating, etc., which is more than just a pipe line.

Mr. Cressey: That is right.

Mr. Allmand: You want all-embracing powers for this company to transport liquids, solids and gases; to process; and to ship to the United States; and so forth.

Mr. Cressey: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Allmand: Do you know if the company has any plans to expand in this way?

Mr. Cressey: We certainly would like to, but we have no fixed plan in this regard at this time. However, to operate a pipe line system, it is necessary to have certain additional capacities; for example, if a producing well gets a high gas-oil ratio, or vice versa you automatically move from the transportation of a gas to the transportation of a liquid.

I think this raises a problem. I know there are many lawyers in this house. They may think that the other place has hit on the best format for bringing these companies into existence. They may be right, but I believe it is an imposition on hon. members when someone comes before parliament asking for this type of incorporation and then says that what is involved is a 20 mile four inch gas line.

There are not very many communities in Ontario which do not have a line with a capacity four or five times that size. This is a four inch gas pipe line and yet they are asking for authority for a facility to handle a refinery or an international transportation line. The potential they are asking for is similar to the capitalization. They are asking for $4 million. I do not think it will be necessary to raise $4 million.

They really have not told us who they are. The lawyer told us that he is a Canadian who acts for a number of gas companies. I suppose a lawyer could also say that he is connected with a dozen murderers, but this does not necessarily connect him with the crimes. This is the only person who appeared to speak for the company. A number of companies were mentioned. It was stated that the president of Cabri is Mr. Stanley Milner of Edmonton, who is president of Chieftain Development Company Limited, and that he is very active in the west and prominent in other related companies including Blue Crown Petroleums Limited and Lloydminster Gas Company Limited.

Although it was not mentioned, I presume that one of these companies is doing the drilling and has the well. They indicate that one company will be used for the purpose of supplying the gas. I presume that this will be Lloydminster Gas Company Limited. It seems to me that we are getting all cluttered up with these little companies. Here we have a person who incorporates a company to do a certain type of business such as delivering gas. He sets up at least two companies and then a third. One will do the drilling, another will handle the distribution and the third, an international and interprovincial company with federal incorporation, will handle the transportation. He asks for a capitalization of $4 million. While this company probably is a bona fide company and is probably making a bona fide request, I believe that if members will look at the evidence that was given they will find that the company is asking for things which it probably does not want. I suggest that if this is the situation it should not have this type of incorporation.

I agree that in the past we have caused many of these companies problems and they may think that if they can get the kitchen sink they will be better off, because if they failed to ask for it they would have to come back again. After reading the answers of this lawyer I would suggest that he did not tell us all he knows. It was only after members of the committee questioned him that he provided the interesting information on these matters.

• (6:20 p.m.)

It may be that the company is asking for authority to construct 20 miles of four inch pipeline to look after an expansion in business in the future, but this does not mean the company will go into the business of refining. I do not know how many refineries there are in western Canada but I understand the number is limited because of cost. Why should a small gas company with one well spend half a billion dollars to build a refinery and associated facilities in order to make this an economically feasible development? I do not think this company needs one red cent to incorporate. I imagine Mr. Milner will just dig into another company pocket to provide the money for this operation.

I do not understand why these people seeking federal incorporation do not go for the whole shooting match and then do everything under the one company name. During the committee meetings one hon. member asked several questions of Mr. Cressey. He said:

> First of all, Mr. Cressey, I am rather intrigued by the name. Why did you call it Cabri Pipe Lines? The only Cabri I know is quite a long distance away from Lloydminster, and it happens to be in my constituency.

I do not know where the hon. member's constituency is, but Mr. Cressey in answer said:

> Mr. McKimm pointed out that he was not sure about my qualifications in other fields, but I have been involved in pipe line business for some years, and I was engaged in the pipe line facilities constructed through Cabri. There is always the problem of seizing upon a name that has not been used in some other context by some other company in Canada, and I thought I was fairly safe in picking the very small community of Cabri.

I am in agreement with that statement. Every year we pass five or six pipe line bills which involve names conflicting with the names of other companies. In this case the company adopted the name of a very small community. It is interesting to note that the solicitor for the company has been connected with other pipe lines for some period of time.

[Mr. Peters.]

He was apparently connected with the construction of a line going through that area. It is probably safe to say that Mr. Cressey has not informed the committee of all his connections with pipe line companies.

Why should parliament be asked to incorporate a company such as Bell Telephone in order to enable it to put a satellite on the moon when it is interested really in putting a satellite on Mars? Cabri does not really want authority to operate an international pipe line company but it has been the practice of lawyers to draft these bills in this manner, asking for everything, because the cost is exactly the same and the company receives international export rights. They might just as well ask for authority to build all the other facilities involved such as townsites, airports, housing, stores, roads and communication lines.

I have no doubt that this is a bona fide company, particularly in view of its limited size. However, when the company asks for something it does not need or want, then I think for the sake of good housekeeping if for no other reason we should consider their requests very carefully to determine how much is necessary. These companies continue to come to parliament for incorporation. I suggest that within a year or two they will stop coming here because they will have learned by then that we do not intend to accede to their requests. Maybe they will come then with properly drafted bills. I am not sure this company will come back again for incorporation, but if it does it will have to come with a bill that has been cleaned up, containing requests for authorization to construct the things it needs. It seems foolish for these people to come before a committee and say they do not actually intend to do that for which they seek authorization. This is like someone suggesting he hopes to swim the Atlantic ocean but knows he will never try. These requests of the company should be relevant to the services they intend to provide. They should not try to fool people by asking for authorization to carry on certain services they do not intend to provide.

For these reasons I suggest to Mr. Cressey and his parliamentary agent that if they intend to serve in a responsible way they will make known their exact plans after incorporation. They should stop misleading people by cluttering the records. This practice will not be allowed to continue indefinitely and perhaps this word to the wise will be sufficient.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming regarding the proposal to incorporate Cabri Pipe Lines Limited. As I did so I recalled my experience not long after I became a member of this house. I was a member of the old railways, canals and telegraph lines committee which had a bill before it seeking authorization to permit one of our national railway systems to construct a small branch line. This line did not involve a distance of more than 20 miles. I was puzzled that the company had to come before parliament to obtain a special act in order to construct a short spur line from an existing line to another point.

The development officers of the railway company spelled out in great detail the economics involved in the construction of that spur line, the cost of construction and the nature of the freight they intended to carry. I became even more puzzled and began to look into the matter. I then realized that parliament had created a situation which forced these companies to come before parliament with bills of this kind. I discovered that this practice arose out of the history of the development of transportation facilities. It stemmed from the fact that from past experience we learned there have been unregulated and unwise expansions of railway lines to the extent that at one point in our history this development came near to bankrupting the nation.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Then I began to realize why a previous parliament had placed this kind of restriction upon the national railway companies. I mention this to emphasize why in my opinion it is absurd that in this day and age parliament should be satisfied to allow a company concerned with another mode of transportation to come before it with this vague, general, ombinus sort of bill. I refer to companies with backgrounds such as were pointed out by the hon. member for Timiskaming. When this bill is boiled down, it is simply concerned with a company applying to construct approximately 20 miles of 4-inch pipe line.

The question I ask the committee is, why do we allow this absurd situation to continue, wherein we are willing to allow companies to come before us with this sort of bill, although in the past parliament saw fit to place restrictions upon the freedom and ability of railway companies which developed national transportation systems? A previous parliament required such railway companies to come before parliament with specific proposals to construct a line from point A to point B. As the hon. member for Timiskaming said, those of us from this quarter of the house who are speaking on this bill, as we have spoken on others, are not in any way objecting to the fact that a pipe line should be constructed from point A to point B in order to carry a certain petroleum product. We object to the fact that on one hand we require a railway company to come before parliament with a specific proposal in a bill to construct a specific piece of line, and on the other we allow certain interests to come before us with a vague, generalized proposition which, as the hon. member for Timiskaming said, might allow them to build a pipe line to the moon.

I have read the evidence given to the committee and recognize the desire to construct this piece of pipe line in a location which crosses provincial boundaries, and therefore federal action is necessary. We have no quarrel with the fact that because of this particular geographic circumstance parliament should be asked to deal with it. What we are concerned about, as the hon. member for Timiskaming said, is the process of companies being incorporated ad nauseam, with blanket powers in their charters of incorporation, to build national and international pipe lines. We are concerned that this practice be not continued because in my view it is making a mockery of parliament. I think the point of the hon. member for Timiskaming was well taken, that the legal fraternity which had been advising these companies should smarten up and suggest to them it is about time they got down to brass tacks.

Some fairly searching questions were asked in the committee. This I welcome. I noticed that the hon. member for Kootenay East raised the question as to whether this pipe line would be a common carrier. The answer given by the spokesman for the applicant was that it would be. That may or may not be necessary and desirable in this particular circumstance. If it is a matter of carrying the products of more than one company to be distributed to more than one consumer, I suppose it is necessary and desirable that it should be a common carrier. But on the face of it, it seems rather strange that a picayune proposal of this kind should require that the company set itself up as a common carrier.

I find this feature of the bill rather puzzling, perhaps because in that part of the country in which I live various concerns involved in the production of some of our products build transportation facilities. It is true that these are not pipe lines, but hundreds and indeed thousands of miles of roads are built for the purpose of transporting their commodities. As long as those roads are being used exclusively for the transportation of the product of one company, they remain in effect, private roads.

If one examines this process, and were able to look into all the ramifications of the different companies in which the people applying in this instance seem to be involved, perhaps the real necessity for the proposed pipe line being constructed in this form arises from the fact that with various corporate structures it will be possible for the profit picture of the shareholders to be improved somewhat, artificially, and at the same time perhaps to be concealed. There is an old saying about dividing and ruling with which we are all familiar.

It seems that in this process which we are allowing to continue, namely the development of facilities for transporting commodities by pipe line, we are creating a corporate maze in which the Canadian people are becoming increasingly snared and which is becoming so complicated that any ordinary citizen, and citizens generally and collectively, may find a great deal of difficulty finding their way out.

I know it is always said in these committee hearings that the bill is in the ordinary form. The point I am trying to make is that as far as I am concerned this bill is in an extraordinarily unnecessary form. This is the point that perhaps should be primarily emphasized in relation to it. It may be that the form of this bill is even more extraordinary and unnecessary than has been the case with bills of a similar nature with which we have been called upon to deal.

Like the hon. member for Timiskaming, I found rather intriguing the little bit of evidence that had to do with how this name was picked. I was interested to learn from the hon. member for Kindersley, who apparently is more familiar with the community of Cabri than most members of the house, that it is a very nice community. I am not at all sure, however, that the people of this community should take it as a compliment that this pipe company should, in a sense, have pre-empted their name, just because so many of these companies are being formed that it is becoming increasingly difficult to pick suitable names.

[Mr. Barnett.]

• (6:40 p.m.)

In my view, granting these broad powers to a multiplicity of concerns can only lead ultimately to confusion and the strangulation of any attempt to produce an effective system of transportation of the commodities by pipe line across this country. I notice for example that this company is seeking the right to transport solids. Well, there is another bill somewhere in the parliamentary hopper designed to enable a company to move into the solids pipe line field, which is likely to become an increasingly important method of transportation. Even though these matters are subject to the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission or the National Energy Board, if we continue to grant such powers as these to all who apply for them we shall be loading down those public bodies with an increasingly complicated task when they endeavour, as they will have to do one day in the future, to rationalize the hodgepodge which we in parliament have created.

These are some of the considerations which should be of concern to the committee in relation to these applications. The fact that the application before us involves such a relatively minor construction project makes it all the more necessary to emphasize the ridiculousness of the situation while we are dealing with this particular bill. If the committee passes the clause now under consideration, I believe it should give careful study to some of the following clauses. Hon. members might even consider whether we ought not to eliminate some of the more ridiculous aspects of the bill as it now stands. Having done so, we might be in a better position to judge whether the bill as a whole should receive approval.

Mr. Howard: The general subject opened up by my hon. friend from Timiskaming and dealt with by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni is an intriguing one. The scope of the powers sought by this bill certainly does not correspond with the reality of the situation.

With respect, and without wishing to misinterpret in any way what the hon. member for Provencher said on second reading, this disparity was certainly not in the mind of that hon. member, either. For this reason I believe it is an extremely valid point to say that many of these unnecessary and unwanted powers should at an appropriate stage, perhaps when we get to clause 6, be removed from the bill in order that the company may obtain simply the authority to do what it desires to do immediately with respect to transporting gas from one province to another, a distance of 20 miles or so.

When I say it is my impression that the hon. member for Provencher undoubtedly has had the same sort of understanding as did the officers of the company, namely that the activities contemplated would be somewhat limited, I am bearing in mind the remarks he made on November 9 when the bill was given second reading. Those observations, I believe, substantiate my impression.

Listening to the words of the hon. member at that time led me to believe that this company was seeking incorporation in order to perform only the minor function or service described. As a consequence I pursued the matter no further; I did not even look into the bill in any detail. It was not until my hon. friend from Timiskaming dealt with the subject that I began to realize the enormity of the proposition now before us.

Perhaps I can quote from page 4102 of Hansard in connection with what the hon. member had to say on second reading. I have no desire to quote him out of context or to misrepresent him; only to quote those parts which gave me and other members the impression that the bill was a simple one, seeking authority to build a pipe line for a distance of some 20 miles. Subsequent discussions in the standing committee showed, of course, that this is really not the case. The hon. member for Provencher said:

> What the bill proposes is a storage facility in connection with a gas distribution company. It will be located across the Alberta-Saskatchewan border. The distribution company is seeking permission to build a pipe line connecting producing wells with a dry hole located some distance from the Alberta border in Saskatchewan where gas will be stored.

This is a simple, uncomplicated declaration of what the company proposes to do. There is no reference to running a television network or operating aircraft or international pipe lines or interprovincial pipe lines. It is a simple business of transporting gas from one province to another. The hon. member went on to point out that the demand for natural gas is higher in the winter than in the summer, but that natural gas can be recovered at a much greater rate in the summer when demand is low. The object, then, is to produce a balanced supply of gas for the area receiving it.

The hon. member said the sponsors of the bill were all Canadians, and then he went on to state this:

> The passage of the bill will allow this company to put its operations on a more economical and efficient basis.

The operations referred to are presumably those connected with the distribution of gas.

> A federal incorporation is necessary because the construction of this line will be interprovincial, running between the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Almost as an afterthought, or as an aside, the hon. member went on to say:

> The powers requested are necessary in the event that further lines are required. If this is the case, the company must again apply to the National Energy Board—

• (6:50 p.m.)

The point is that the hon. member's explanation of the purpose of the bill was that it had to do with the building of a pipe line to transport natural gas from one province to another, and store it so that the operation of the company would be on a more economical basis. In this way, the natural gas would be available at an even level during both summer and winter. The reference to the powers requested at that juncture was to the effect they are requested in the event further lines were required. This was thrown in as an incidental part of the commentary by the hon. member for Provencher.

As I said at the outset, I do not mean to misrepresent what he said, but this was the impression I got from listening to his remarks on second reading, and that impression is substantiated from reading those remarks into the record. The impression was that the sole purpose of the company was to obtain this authority to build a pipe line across an international boundary, and that all the other matters really were not too important. The international aspect, the possibility of the company operating aircraft, operating aerodromes and microwave systems, were rather remote.

As the hon. member for Timiskaming said to me a minute ago in relation to this microwave system, the distance is only 20 miles and if a strong wind were blowing in the right direction you could holler to one another. You would not need any microwave system installed for that purpose. However, these are some of the powers sought by this particular company.

I have no great desire to delay unnecessarily the passage of the bill. As has been explained to me privately, there is some urgency to give the bill passage so the company can carry out its activities and proceed to make application to the National Energy Board. However, I do believe there is something here that is of greater consequence and which should put us in the position of having a further look at the bill to ascertain whether or not, in the interim, the officers of the company might not be able to accept some alteration in the powers sought. I am referring to the powers which cover such things as movement across international borders, as well as the transportation of solids, which will be dealt with by one of my colleagues. Then, there is the matter of giving a blanket authority to operate a microwave system, television communication, radio communication and everything of a like nature, without any confinement of that power.

Usually when such power is sought in a bill like this it is limited to the purpose of the undertaking. These are the words normally used to make sure that there is no invasion into the radio, television or communications media. There is no such confinement of the power here, so I think this must be a matter to be considered by the company. With respect, I say I hope the hon. member for Provencher will not mind postponing the proceedings on this bill until another day. It could easily be dealt with by consent. There is seldom any disagreement in the house about giving consent to matters which are urgent, especially when there is a reasonable approach made.

I know my friend, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, intends to deal with the transportation of solids because he is intensely interested in this aspect of pipe line problems. He desires to say a few words about that, so that there will be a full disclosure on the record of our views about the vagueness and generality of the powers sought, as well as the scope of those powers. Then the next time this bill is dealt with there will be an opportunity for the company to read the views that have been expressed, and come to some conclusion as to which of those views they intend to accept.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My colleague has not left me many minutes in which to express my views. One thing which did occur to me when I read the bill, Mr. Chairman, was that it really is like insurance policies, because we are told the important part is in the fine print. That fine print carries a vey different connotation than the large print. Reading the evidence before the committee on transport, one is struck by the emphasis the witnesses from the company placed on the modesty of their intentions. They were just going to build this pipe line for 18 or 20 miles. It would cross the Alberta-Saskatchewan boundary and enable them to store gas until the peak season for the consumption of gas arrives.

When we look at the bill, we find it has an extraordinary number of other powers that it seeks from parliament. One in which I am particularly interested, and have been for some time in connection with these pipe line bills, is the proposal to add the authority to transport solids. As I have said on some other occasions on other bills, I think parliament has to take a very long look at this question of the transportation of solids by pipe line and decide whether or not as a nation we are again going to run the risk of involving ourselves in the tragic mess that emerged from the building of the railroads in this country.

We were left with a conglomeration of railroads, one final echo of which we heard earlier today in connection with the financing of the Canadian National. The Canadian National, of course, was formed by the coupling together of a number of uneconomic lines. Incidentally the taxpayers were saddled with the burden of paying the bond interest on these railroads. I feel very strongly that if we allow private companies to enter this new, emerging field of transport, one day we may well wind up again with a conglomeration of inefficient, uneconomic pipe lines. Parliament should therefore look at this matter seriously now before we move into that field at all, and establish a public policy with regard to the development of this modern means of transport.

May I call it seven o'clock, sir.

Progress reported.

Mr. Howard: Before we proceed any further, sir, could I make a request for the house to consider making an order that Bill S-16 retain its position on the order paper. I do not believe there is any desire for it to go to the bottom of the list. I make that request.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed, as requested by the hon. member, that Bill S-16 retain its place on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-151, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system for a period from the 1st day of January, 1967 to the 30th day of June, 1968 and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company—Mr. Chrétien (for the Minister of Finance)—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It being seven o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p. m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-151, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to be as brief as possible in making my concluding remarks. I should like to assure you that I appreciate your leniency in letting me stray the odd time, and for hauling me back from the brink. I should like to point out that there is relevancy between what I have been saying in connection with lay-offs and certain provisions in the bill. I refer in particular to expenditure for track maintenance and that sort of thing. It would be interesting to know whether these estimated expenditures were calculated before or after the contemplated lay-off of a considerable number of men.

I assume, Mr. Chairman, that the railways are going to say that these lay-offs are the result of economic policy, but I think there is some inconsistency in this regard. If you will permit me to do so, Mr. Chairman, I should like to stray a little once more and to point out one inconsistency in particular. This inconsistency concerns another departmental lay-off before the end of the year of about 35 members of the protective staff of the Canadian National Railways. The full complement of the staff is approximately 700, and 500 members of the staff belong to the C.N.R. police association.

In recent days the members of this association met with the company in an attempt to negotiate wages and conditions, but I understand they ran into a blind alley in these negotiations. The only explanation they could get from the company officials was that any increase in pay would mean additional lay-offs. I understand that these employees are working a 50 hour week and that no overtime pay is involved because of the fact that the company requested and was granted a deferment of the 40 hour work week provision of the Canada Labour Code. I think that this is a glaring example of outdated, reactionary labour policy.

While this has been taking place, Mr. Chairman, there has been on the other hand, certainly up to within a few days ago, a general proliferation of supervisory personnel. When I questioned this I was told that the reason for this action was that the railway wanted to put their supervisory staff on a 40 hour week.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, this is the ultimate in inconsistency. On the one hand the company is granted a deferment of the 40 hour week and lays off protective staff, expecting the remaining members of the staff to work more than a 40 hour week; on the other hand the company implements the 40 hour week provision for supervisory staff. I do not argue about the principle of putting supervisory staff on a 40 hour week, but I do think the situation to which I have referred is a gross inconsistency.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I sound quite critical of the Canadian National Railways, but I should like to make one thing clear at this point. I more or less grew up with the Canadian National Railways, having been hired at a time when the railway was run very inefficiently. It had inadequate facilities, poor track and actually was a third rate operation. I do not agree with the hon. member for Vegreville, however, when he says that today there is extremely poor management on Canadian National Railways, because I have seen its transition from a third rate railway to what I think is one of the most modern railways on the North American continent. I hope it is not now slipping back again to that third rate position.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman,—and I said I would be brief—I think that if we in the house are expected to make available the necessary finances to enable the C.N.R. to remain in business, and if we as taxpayers are expected to pick up the tab when revenue does not meet expenditure, then I think it necessarily follows that we should be in a better position to scrutinize carefully the expenditures that are made in order that we can be assured that the funds provided are used to the best advantage of all concerned, and also be assured that the lay-offs of a great number of employees, some with many years of service, are entirely justifiable.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, before the bill carries I wonder whether the minister would take the time to tell us whether there will be new legislation for Air Canada, in view of the statement the other night during the budget speech of the Minister of Finance that public financing is going to be necessary. It could be that the minister wants to leave this question to the Minister of Finance, but I am wondering whether he does have any information about new plans for Air Canada in this respect.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, it will depend on what is the ultimate decision, and the form of financing that might be required in the market. No decision has yet been taken by the government; the matter is still under study. If, of course, additional equity capital were required from government sources, it might require some alteration in the capital structure of the company, in which case legislation would be necessary.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

• (8:10 p.m.)

DIVORCE

MEASURE RESPECTING GROUNDS, JURISDICTION, JUDGES, ETC.

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-187, an act respecting divorce—The Minister of Justice.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice is on his way to the chamber. Would Your Honour mind delaying matters for a moment or two until the minister arrives.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Hon. members, we want to proceed now with Bill No. C-187, respecting divorce. I should like to point out to the house that the French version of the bill, has not yet been distributed. As a matter of fact I have just emptied my mail box and the bill was not in it. Consequently I object to consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I have just been given a French copy of the bill.

Now, I raise another objection. The bill is delivered to us at the very moment we are asked to consider it, when we have not even had time to look at it. Yet, it has 27 clauses.

I see on the order paper, bills which have been there for several weeks, several months, even because they have been distributed to the general public to feel the general response. Yesterday a resolution concerning divorce was introduced and it was practically carried by the house, without discussion. In fact, the Conservative party made no representations and, today, we are presented with the bill, when the public has not yet had the time to look at its clauses, and to form its own mind.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, what is the hurry in having this bill passed when the French version was given to us just a moment ago.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of this bill tonight.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker; there is no desire on the part of the government to rush the bill. Last evening the bill was made public in both languages. As a result of discussions this morning it was agreed that we should call this bill after passage of the C.N.R. bill. That was the agreement as a result of the meeting of house leaders. There was no disposition on the part of the government or anybody else to rush the bill through. We are calling for second reading, which is the debate on principle, and then we shall go into committee. There will be an opportunity for hon. members to consider all aspects of the bill before third reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: To a certain extent, Mr. Speaker, I am ready to accept the point made by the minister, but it will be too late to object when we will have adopted the sections of the bill, more or less as presented or even at the third reading stage.

Moreover, I think that we should at least give the public time to form an opinion concerning the provisions of the Bill.

The mail delivered tonight raises a similar point. It concerns the reports of the committee on health and welfare. I received volume No. 10 of the English version, but I just have volume No. 3 in French. It is fine to make eloquent speeches on bilingualism in Canada, but positive steps should be taken as soon as possible.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I must say that the resolution was passed only last night; it is clear that until then, no member could have had a copy of the bill.

The resolution was introduced last evening in both languages. I do not know if the hon. member took a copy, but French and English copies of the bill were ready. I—

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I got an English copy of the bill this morning—

Mr. Trudeau: I have the floor—

Mr. Laprise: —only, and a French copy has just been handed to me by a page.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Justice has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: In fact, what I was just saying, Mr. Speaker, is that we do not in any way wish to rush the study of this bill. I think it is obvious enough that if we start second reading of the bill tonight, there is very little chance of its being passed this evening.

For my part, I am the first to agree with the representative of the Ralliement Créditiste, for I saw to it personally today that a copy of the bill was sent to all the provincial attorneys general, because we intend, as I said last night, to ask public opinion, including the provincial governments, to let us know how they feel about this bill. That is why the bill stipulates a lapse of three months before its application.

So I should like to make it perfectly clear that I am not trying to rush things. I think what is involved is to get the bill under consideration and if I also understand the intentions of the house leader, tomorrow we will deal with other matters and there will inevitably be a few days delay before we can pass the bill because tomorrow we will take up the budget resolutions.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I must say that the bill was distributed in English this morning I think, and the French only tonight.

Now, I should like to point out that the last report we received today, the report of the commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, recommends first of all that English and French be declared the official languages of the Parliament of Canada. If both languages are to be official, those who speak one language must receive documents and bills at the same time as those who speak the other language; otherwise, some will enjoy advantages which are denied to the others.

Therefore, I feel that the remarks of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) are quite reasonable. We have just now received the French version of the bill. It is obvious that we have not had the time to read it and to come to a decision with respect to the principle of the bill.

I think the hon. member for Chapleau is perfectly right and that we should postpone consideration of this bill to give those who have not received the French copy earlier the time to read it. Otherwise, how can they be expected to decide on the principle of the bill; of course they may be told that as they had received an English copy all they had to do was to read the English text.

So I think it would be advisable to give the French-speaking members the time to read the bill in French; otherwise it is useless to ask us to decide on the principle of the bill and I support the statement of the hon. member for Chapleau on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I happen to be one of the house leaders who agreed at noon that we should go ahead with this legislation at this point. I confess that at that time, I did not know the French copies of the bill were not generally available. Now that French copies are in possession of hon. members, technically speaking the rules have been met.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I wonder, however, if we could not reach some accommodation in the matter. I offer this suggestion, that the Minister of Justice might make his speech on second reading, and then if there is anyone else in any of the parties who wishes to speak he could be prepared to do so, on the understanding that the government would be willing to have the debate adjourned, and not conclude second reading this evening. It is perfectly true, as the house leader says, that we did agree to this at a noon meeting yesterday, but apparently there was a factor of which we were not aware.

Mr. Starr: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say it is unfortunate that the government once again has not prepared itself in order to expedite the business of the house. However, in view of the fact that there are a great many members who wish to participate in this debate, and that tomorrow we shall go on to discuss the budget, and continue the budget discussion for the next few days, I think that will leave ample time for the hon. member for Lapointe to study the French version of the bill, permitting him to withhold his remarks until a later date. Tonight we can give to those hon. members who are prepared to speak on the bill the opportunity to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as to the point of order that has been raised, I should say that I, for one, was rather taken aback by this procedure today and the need to proceed with second reading. In fact, hon. members will see it for themselves later on, when they hear my speech; they will realize that I was somewhat taken aback by this chronological order of events.

However, I should like to tell the hon. members that the fault does not lie with this side of the house. I remember quite well that last night, the house leader told us we would proceed today with study of the act on the publication of statutes.

To my knowledge, that was on the orders of the day. I do not think it was our party which requested that consideration of this matter be passed over in favour of the divorce bill. That may explain the fact that other hon. members, as well as I, were surprised by this turn of events, but it was done in an effort at concilliation, and at the request of other house leaders.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Further to the point of order the Minister of Justice has brought out in his remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that it was we who suggested how best we could expedite the business of the house and, as a consequence of our suggestions, two items on the order paper have been disposed of. Had we not done so there would have been some doubt as to whether any matters on the order paper would have been disposed of.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the procedure is fully regular. The bills are available in both languages. This is the obligation which is placed on a minister introducing a bill or moving second reading. I repeat that the bills are available in both languages. The procedure is fully regular, and to suggest it is irregular is quite erroneous. We intend to proceed with the order of business agreed upon, namely the second reading of the divorce bill; and as to the discussion and procedure tonight, we can determine later this evening whether it is necessary to give a further opportunity to members who wish to speak on the bill before we actually carry second reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) just said that the procedure is perfectly in order, while the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) says that the government is responsible for the situation where we are.

One thing is clear; we did not attend the meeting of the house leaders at noon because we were unable to attend and we were not aware of the agreements arrived at by the various groups. However, one thing is certain, the government is responsible of the present situation.

It may be said that the English and French copies of the bill were distributed to the members. It is a fact that the English bill was put before us this morning while the French was just given to us here, tonight. We just had it a moment ago. Therefore, we did not get a chance to peruse that bill and even if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) or the Minister of National Health and Welfare says that we will have plenty of time to study the principle of the bill while others speak, that is not good enough, and that is not in accordance with regular parliamentary procedure, in my opinion.

We should have an opportunity to study the principle of the bill before it is discussed in the house in order to know exactly what it is all about. That is why the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) objects to this bill being discussed until we have had time to study its principle.

This does not mean that it will take six months. But forcing us to start discussing it immediately, even if the hon. member for Ontario is ready to make his speech, I feel that would be permitting something that is not in order. It would be irregular, for example, if all at once, we interrupted consideration of the bill on second reading and immediately went into committee to study its various clauses.

Then, without wanting to interfere with the proper workings of parliament, I sincerely believe that it is only fitting that we should have the time to consider the principle of the bill since it has just been handed to us in French.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has misunderstood the proposal I made. I suggested that we would not carry second reading of the bill this evening, but that we would proceed with debate and allow hon. members who are ready to speak to make their speeches. Then at a later stage, if it becomes apparent that hon. members wish to study the bill further, we would adjourn the debate and call another item of government business. In that way we will protect the rights of all hon. members; but in the meantime I think we ought to proceed with the agenda agreed upon for this evening.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I was quite astonished, and I must say rather disturbed by the suggestion made by the house leader a little earlier, when he said that we had lived up to the letter of the law by placing the bill in both languages in the hands of hon. members at this particular time. I do not think that is good enough, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter about which many hon. members have strong feelings, and I do not think it is good enough on such an occasion just to live up to the letter of the law.

I suggest to hon. members who speak the English language that they should stop for a moment and imagine their position where a bill is distributed in French a day or two days beforehand, and then handed to them in English just at the moment debate upon it is called. I say this is not good enough, and I am astonished that the minister would suggest it is.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that statement is not good enough for me. I have given the explanation in French, but perhaps the hon. member did not understand it. The present state of affairs does not satisfy me either. We have adopted this procedure in order to be accommodating to the parties in opposition. It was not our fault that the house leader of the Creditists was not present at the house leaders' meeting to put in their word. Hon. members have explained that he could not be present.

This step was taken to accommodate the opposition, and may I say there is no one in this house more sensitive than I am with regard to having bills presented in both languages at the same time. We have put particular care into the drafting of this bill as well as into the translation of it. I may say that I am caught short like some of the other French speaking members, because I had expected that I would be participating in another debate today. We had originally intended to proceed with the bill dealing with the publication of statutes, and it was at the request of the house leaders of other parties that we did not proceed in that way. It was only a matter of hours between the deliveries of the French and English copies of the bill; but the bills are now ready. I repeat that particular care has been given to the simultaneous presentation of these bills, and I will not stand for correction on this point by any hon. member.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the minister says that he has no lessons to take from anyone. He adds that it is not his fault if the Créditiste house leader did not attend the luncheon at the noon hour. But could he explain to me why the government house leader who is responsible for all other leaders advised us at 12.30, this afternoon, of the meeting which was to be held at 1 o'clock when all our members had gone to lunch? The Créditistes are therefore not to blame; it is the fault of the government house leader who does not organize himself properly so that people would be invited early enough to be able to attend the meetings of house leaders.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, last night we had decided to proceed with other questions. At the meeting of the council this morning, as usual, the government leader asked whether he could absent himself in order to consult the other party leaders.

Naturally, if there was a change of program between last night and this morning, and if this was done as a favour to the other parties, it is not surprising that we are proceeding with some precipitation.

Mr. Chairman, government of men is unpredictable. I think that none knows this better than the hon. member for Villeneuve.

[English]

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, although I do not wish to put forward, as a reason why we should not proceed with this bill, the suggestion that I or other English speaking members of this house are not prepared to proceed, yet I think it is proper to say, just as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) has said that he did not expect to proceed with this matter, that some others of us did not hear that we were to proceed until I think noon today. As the matter is one of transcendent importance in principle, I believe that possibly it would be far better if we did not attempt to proceed to second reading tonight. I should like to have an opportunity to compare the clauses of this bill with the recommendations made by the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons. This could not be done in a few minutes. I would like to see how the bill as drafted compares with the resolutions which were presented to the joint committee on this matter. I would also like to have a little time in which to think about the principles which are new, which are novel perhaps and which are sweeping matters of social reform, before proceeding with second reading of this bill.

I would not raise any of these matters if an arrangement to the contrary were made by the house leader, but when we hear that our French speaking colleagues did not have a copy of this bill before them until a few minutes ago, if I understood them correctly, then, although I accept what the house leader has said, to the effect that this is regular, I ask whether it is fair for the members of this house to suggest that we proceed under these circumstances.

Mr. Trudeau: Why did you not think of this during the orders of the day?

Mr. MacEachen: As we all know, it is a responsibility of the government to lay down the business for the consideration of the house. Last night I indicated the various possibilities which could constitute the business of the house today. I indicated that I would consult with the house leaders concerning an appropriate order of business. That was done.

It is unfortunate that the representative of the Ralliement Créditiste was not present. I did, however, give the house the information during the orders of the day. I should like to take into account the feelings of hon. members who wish to consider the bill in the French language. In order to do that I am quite prepared, at a later stage this evening, to adjourn the debate on second reading so that members will have an opportunity to consider further the principles which are involved in the bill. Then the bill can be considered some time later next week. I believe that to be a fair proposal. It meets the points of view which have been expressed.

The Minister of Justice is prepared to make an opening statement. Hon. members who are prepared now could then make their statements, and then we can move the adjournment of the debate and revive it later, thus not asking the house tonight to make any decision on second reading. The rights of every hon. member will be fully protected. I think this is a fair proposal. At a certain moment we will move the adjournment of the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong indefinitely this discussion on the procedure of the house. I accept the suggestion of the minister, and I hope that he will profit by this happening.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe the chair has heard sufficient evidence now to make a ruling on the point of order, or at least make a suggestion to the house. I should, of course, quote standing order 74 which reads as follows:

> All bills shall be printed before the second reading in the English and French languages.

As this bill was given first reading last night, and as there was a change in the order of business, I am sure all members of the house will understand the difficulty in which the house now finds itself. If however, there are members who are willing to speak on second reading of the bill now, they could do so and then an opportunity could be given to the other members who would like time to study the bill further. May I suggest to the house that we proceed now with the second reading, on the understanding that the procedure is always open, to any member of this house who wishes to do so, to adjourn the debate.

If the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) or the hon. member for Lapointe

(Mr. Grégoire) wishes to adjourn the debate later on in the evening, of course the procedure of the House of Commons is here for that eventuality. Would the house agree now that I put the motion for second reading?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the arrangement I will be the one who will be getting the worst of the bargain. I will have to make the opening explanation in respect of the bill. I do not believe we will proceed very far in terms of settling the adoption of the bill. However, I think there may be something to be said for this procedure. Perhaps I can explain a little of the history behind the bill, and the spirit in which it was drafted. This in itself might give hon. members something about which to speak at a later date on second reading.

At this point I might give a little of the history of the divorce laws of this country. The western provinces of Canada are now, by and large, governed by the divorce laws of England, the laws of 1857 as later modified in 1870. In so far as Ontario is concerned, that province also, broadly speaking, is governed by the divorce laws of England of 1870 which were brought into effect by the federal legislation of 1930. In so far as the maritime provinces are concerned, they are largely governed by pre-confederation statutes and a mixture of such statutes with the common law of England ante-dating confederation. So, I believe it is fair to say that the most up to date laws governing divorce in Canada go back to 1870. Even if we consider the problem of the two provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland, which have a special status concerning divorce, they too are governed by the laws of that time.

Therefore, with laws dating back to 1870, in a society which has moved so quickly and so far in the intervening 97 years, it is not astonishing that the present divorce laws and the way in which they govern our society is highly unsatisfactory and indeed produces some very evil results. We all know, even though we may not have had a very close or direct experience with divorce, that people today who are faced with situations in which their marriages can no longer continue, are placed in a curious dilemma. In a great number of cases, either they do not get a divorce and live under common law arrangements, which are generally unsatisfactory and irregular, or they go through a very hypocritical procedure of fabricating evidence and arranging proof for a divorce, which is also a hypocrisy and a sham. This is compounded by the fact that this parliament in one house, and later in the other, has over the years passed thousands of private divorce bills for at least two provinces in order to meet the situation. The people of Canada have realized that this kind of hypocrisy and sham is not satisfactory and that it is now up to this parliament to bring about a solution to this unacceptable social situation. Because of this, there has been mounting pressure from all areas for reform of divorce law. We have seen the continuing mounting pressure in many areas.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I think it would be proper at this point to underline the efforts of the many sections of the population—very laudable efforts indeed —to create the kind of public opinion in the country which permits us to tackle the problem properly.

Let me refer first to the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons under the very able joint chairmanship of two parliamentarians, and with the co-operation not only of many hon. members, but of many witnesses. This committee has prepared a remarkable report which has guided the government in drafting this measure. It has been very helpful to us in devising a solution.

I might also say that the press, members of the churches and the public at large have all been very helpful by their suggestions for reform. This proposed measure is not the sole product of one government, but rather the product of a social pressure which has been building up over the years to the point that this government had to seek a solution. We are now living in a social climate in which people are beginning to realize, perhaps for the first time in the history of this country, that we are not entitled to impose the concepts which belong to a sacred society upon a civil or profane society. The concepts of the civil society in which we live are pluralistic, and I think this parliament realizes that it would be a mistake for us to try to legislate into this society concepts which belong to a theological or sacred order. These are very important and sacred concepts no doubt, but they should not by themselves be considered as the sole guide for a government of a civil society.

Because of this it was necessary to find a remedy for these evils, and that is what this government has attempted to do by this measure. The first point we tried to solve was the idea that even before dealing with divorce we must deal with the problem of strengthening the institution of marriage. This was brought home to us with great force and wisdom by many churchmen who appeared before us. They emphasized that the marriage is the important thing and that divorce is only a remedy to an unsatisfactory situation. We realize that marriage itself is the important aspect of any law which purports to deal with marriage and divorce. It is for that reason we wrote into this law at practically every stage provisions for reconciliation. This is true in respect of our definition of condonation, in respect of the obligations put upon lawyers who have clients asking for opinions in divorce matters, and in respect of the courts which hear petitions for divorce at the inception of the case, and even after the decree nisi has been granted. At all these stages we have written reconciliation concepts or procedures into the law.

This is a very important aspect of our law. Admittedly it is a concept which did not exist in this form in previous divorce laws in this country. We realize further that this whole situation requires more than just the adoption of a law. It requires that the government study on a continuing basis the effects of this law on marriage and study ways and means whereby reconciliation can be improved and bettered. This will mean that we will not only have to carry out research in respect of the consequences of this law and the way it operates, but we will have to continue to consult with provincial authorities, private organizations and churches. This was the first point we tried to deal with in this measure.

The second thing we tried to do was weed out the legal impediments to remarriage in cases where a previous marriage had broken down. As one hon. member pointed out last night, the consequences of our archaic divorce law is that many thousands of people—I think the figure of 500,000 was mentioned last night and the Canadian Bar Association also came up with some large figure—are involved in common law relationship in this country. This is a situation contrary to the desires of even those who believe most in preserving marriage.

These are people who cannot remarry because the present divorce laws do not create a situation in which they can get a divorce, or because they are too sincere to go through the sham proceedings so often required to obtain a divorce under our present law. The remedy we envisage is first to preserve marriage and second to make better marriages possible by weeding out the legal impediments which now prevent remarriage and the formation of happy couples. This is because the bonds of former marriages have not been untied.

Although the idea of divorce is still repugnant to many people in this country—and I respect the reasons for which many people oppose the idea, as a matter of conscience, or religious or moral beliefs—when these reasons are applied to the legislative program of a country, it means imposing on a great majority the beliefs of perhaps a small minority.

• (8:50 p.m.)

As I said earlier, I think one of the fundamental tasks we must achieve in this parliament is to avoid mixing sacred and the profane. We must realize we are living in a pluralistic society, and even though some laws may be repugnant to the morals of individual members they must realize that we are all here to legislate not our own personal morals upon the country but to seek solutions to evils which arise in a civil society and which must be solved by civil or criminal laws.

I think this is what has guided us in our decision to reform these laws. This is a good opportunity for me to say that because of this I did not find it necessary to recommend that the vote on divorce laws be a free vote, in the sense that the expression is used in this house. I respect those hon. members who for moral reasons do not agree with the concept of divorce. I think those who believe that marriage is indissoluble, and it is a very worthy belief, are in the position of asking themselves nonetheless whether this law is necessary now to find a solution to a real social evil.

I think I have shown, and hon. members know from experience, that these evils arising from our unsatisfactory divorce laws are very present in this society. I should say, for the benefit of those people who have moral doubts, that this is merely a permissive law. It is a law that will permit the breaking of the marriage link but which obliges no one to remarry, if this is against his principles. This legislation is just dealing with the civil link; it is not dealing with moral beliefs. Indeed I think it is theologically acceptable, even to the most stringent of Christians, that if an annulment of marriage is obtained under church laws, canon laws, and if the only way to dissolve the remaining civil link is through divorce, then divorce in such a case is perfectly admissible.

I think this is borne out by the very large support we have had from many of the Christian churches in Canada for the reform of the divorce laws. I want to thank particularly the authors of a brief which was presented to me by representatives of the Anglican Church of Canada, the Canadian Catholic Conference, the Lutheran Council in Canada, the Mennonite Central Committee, the Presbyterian Church in Canada and the United Church in Canada. They, to single out this example, brought forth a very interesting and well thought out brief. Indeed, in some aspects they have gone perhaps further in the area of grounds for divorce than this government has gone in the law that is before hon. members.

I will explain later why we have not felt it wise on legal grounds to go quite as far as the churches have recommended; but surely the fact that they were prepared to go further than us should reassure those members who feel that on grounds of conscience they should hesitate before voting for this law.

Having gone through the analysis of these evils, and seeing that the only proper remedy was to bring in a new divorce law, this is what we proceeded to do.

I should say at this point that we are not attempting in this law to deal with the causes of divorce. One hon. member last night, when speaking at the resolution stage, pointed out that it would be important to deal with problems of poverty, slum clearance, alcoholism and other such evils. This is quite true in a sense. The breakdown of marriage is not something that happens in a vacuum; it is something that is very often brought on by social conditions or evils with which this legislation does not attempt to deal. We are dealing only with the consequences of these social evils. I hope hon. members realize that in a divorce law we cannot do much more than this.

The government through its social legislation, and indeed the provincial governments through their various forms of legislation, have attempted to weed out all these evils in society, some of which lead to marriage breakdown. But I think it would be unnecessary in this law to try to deal with all these causes of divorce. We have to legislate on this particular subject, and I hope hon. members will not think it is because the government is not aware of these other causes of divorce that it has not attempted to legislate on them.

[Translation]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, since a legislation on divorce was to be drafted, I must say that the bill now before the house reflects our concern to respect the beliefs, the traditions and the customs of the various groups which make up our composite society.

This would seem obvious to anyone who would look at the provisions concerning the jurisdictions of courts, the rules governing procedure and proof. We did not want to disturb the administration of justice in the provinces by proposing new rules likely to confuse trial lawyers used to provincial regulations.

That is why, in principle, provincial superior courts of civil jurisdiction will now have jurisdiction in divorce matters.

There will be an exception, of course, in the case of Quebec and Newfoundland, but in our view,—and I feel I made that point quite clear last evening and, at the same time, it is a wish that I express—this exception for those two provinces is of a purely temporary nature. Moreover, as long as provincial laws of procedure do not come into conflict with the provisions of the present legislation, or with the rules of practice that competent courts may adopt, they will apply to divorce proceedings.

Finally, I wish to add that the laws of evidence in the province where divorce proceedings are started will apply to those proceedings.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that in drafting this divorce legislation, we have taken into account the need to reconcile in the same act the procedures and concepts that belong to different statutes and mentalities.

For instance, when we decided that if divorce proceedings were to be taken let us say, in the province of Quebec, before the Court of the Exchequer, they would follow the provincial evidence act. We decided to include a section in the act authorizing the lawyers and parties taking proceedings in the province of Quebec to be governed by the provincial evidence acts.

Members will see that clause 20 of this bill is an innovation in this field, and I think it illustrates the real efforts we made to ensure in the drafting of the bill that we would bring a solution to a real social evil, while respecting provincial jurisdictions as much as possible, all the evidence acts, all procedures and even the various ways of setting up courts in the different provinces.

So we have here the legislation that really represents my idea of a federal act, an act that applies to citizens ruled by provinces with quite different judicial systems. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I took the liberty, a while ago, on the point of order, of noting that we had made all possible efforts so that all the citizens of this country, whatever their language affiliation, be treated equitably under this legislation.

The procedure before the courts is not the only indication of our concern over provincial differences. There is more. All provinces are not agreed on the measures to be taken to minimize the difficult consequences of a broken marriage, that is to say that in various provinces there are laws that vary from one province to another as far as alimony or the custody of children, for instance. That is why we have provided that during the divorce proceedings and in handing down the decree, the court dealing with the question of divorce—the very same court which is consequently in a position to know the circumstances and consider the parties—this court may order provisional or complementary measures appropriate to the parties and the children, taking into account all circumstances including the principles and customs recognized by the society in which they live.

• (9:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Would the minister permit a question at this point? I should like to ask him if he would tell the house why the recommendation to use county and district courts, contained in the report of the special committee was abandoned.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not mind talking a little about this. It will disturb the argument of my speech but I cannot blame the hon. member for not finding it a very coherent sequence. There is no harm in giving a short explanation at this point, though I may have to deal with it at greater length during the committee stage.

In short, the reason is that when we are dealing with divorce we are dealing with certain fundamental rights possessed by citizens of this country. We are dealing with something much more fundamental than property rights or money matters. When we are dealing with the latter, we do have courts at different levels which deal with various questions affecting property rights according to their importance.

I feel however that when we are dealing with marriage and divorce we should go to the superior courts, which in our society are traditionally called upon to decide upon the basic rights of human beings whether in civil or in criminal matters.

I realize that one of the reasons the joint committee wanted the county courts to exercise jurisdiction in this matter was because it wanted to make sure that the court would not be too removed from the people. My only comment on this is that the superior courts, or the supreme courts as they are called in some provinces, are not removed from the people. They all have district or circuit courts which go to the people, and on balance I felt it better to continue to use the higher courts, especially at the outset when we are breaking new ground and asking our judicial system to determine the operation of important laws, and to create a whole jurisprudence, a whole system of case law, which will govern these matters for many years to come.

[Translation]

To return to the subject I was speaking about earlier, I only wish to add a word or two. I ask the hon. members to realize that this measure does not abrogate the provincial laws; in other words, the laws concerning affiliation, for example, which exist in the various provincial jurisdictions, are not abrogated by our legislation on divorce. They continue to exist. We are merely trying to deal here with the question of divorce and the consequences immediately attending this breakdown of marriage. That is why, Mr. Speaker, we have provided for this three month period during which we want to consult with the provinces to make sure, in all good faith, that the present legislation can be applied without too much difficulty in all the provinces. That is why also, as I said earlier, we have sent to the attorneys general of all the provinces a copy of the present legislation, which we will be happy to discuss with them.

So much the more so that as I said last night, the matter of judicial separation is not dealt with in this bill. That creates, Mr. Speaker, a strange situation. In my opinion, according to the constitution—and this opinion is shared by many more eminent constitutionalists than myself—judicial separation comes under federal jurisdiction, so that legislation now governing the provinces in that field could not be amended by the provinces because they have no jurisdiction in that field. So when we are called upon to pass a bill on divorce, which will not deal with judicial separation, that law will give grounds for divorce which will be broader than the grounds for judicial separation existing in several provinces. It will follow that it will be practically an encouragement to people to start divorce proceedings instead of separation proceedings, and I realize that anomaly perfectly. That is the phenomenon which made us include in a first draft of the bill provisions dealing with judicial separation which would have run parallel to the provisions dealing with divorce, and once again because I believe in co-operative federalism and because I believe that in such a field it is important that the central government should have consultations with the provinces, especially with those which already have in their statutes provisions dealing with judicial separation.

In the case of Quebec, this is even more important, because this province is now in the process of reshaping or reviewing its Civil Code and I know that very capable people are precisely working on the chapters concerning marriage, filiation and other related subjects. I think this will eventually lead to consultations between the provinces and the federal government, because of this anomaly: the Civil Code of the province of Quebec, since it was adopted before confederation in 1866, contains clauses and even whole chapters which do not come under provincial jurisdiction and which the province of Quebec itself cannot amend.

For this reason, the federal government, who is aware that the Civil Code is an important monument for French-speaking society, is not only willing, but anxious, to co-operate with the province of Quebec, inasmuch as it is necessary, so that this monument may be amended essentially by the provincial government, but partly also, as I explained a moment ago, by the federal government, so that the essential, special structure of such a monument as the Civil Code is not broken. I think that that is one aspect of the responsibilities of a federal government which, I will say it again, must rule over provinces governed by various judicial systems. Incidentally, I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this is one reason why it is also important for French-speaking people to have civil servants and politicians in Ottawa who can express their point of view. That is about all I wanted to say about this matter, Mr. Chairman.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

Just before closing, I thought I would touch briefly on one other aspect, that of marriage breakdown. I said a moment ago that we had been very thankful for the co-operation we have received from many of the church groups who have guided us in our ideas about reconciliation in the divorce laws. They have, in their briefs, recommended some provisions with respect to marriage breakdown which we have decided not to follow quite in the way they suggested. I think in fairness, before closing, I should give a word of explanation on this aspect. Very careful consideration has been given to the recommendations of those who advocated the adoption of an unqualified marriage breakdown approach to divorce in this country. If such an approach were adopted it would, in my judgment, entail the creation of special courts with specialized personnel to administer the divorce laws of this country. This is so because I think it is wholly unrealistic to impose upon the existing courts of law, and the judiciary, an inquisitional approach coupled with what would be, in effect, broad administrative discretion in dealing with the subject matter of divorce.

Courts of law and judicial tribunals are concerned—> —with legal rights and liabilities, which means rights and liabilities conferred or imposed by law; and "law" means statutes or long settled principles. These legal rights and liabilities are treated by a judicial tribunal as pre-existing; such a tribunal professes merely to ascertain and give effect to them; it investigates the facts by hearing "evidence" (as tested by long settled rules), and it investigates the law by consulting precedents.

This quotation is from an article by Mr. D. M. Gordon in the Law Quarterly Review, 1934. I should just add by way of contrast that administrative tribunals, when they are defined by law, base their decisions and orders not on legal rights, not on liabilities but on policy and expediency. It is essentially because of this, Mr. Chairman, that we have not introduced the marriage breakdown principle in its most naked form. We have, as hon. members have seen, put the marriage breakdown principle in the law, but we have tried to guide the courts by indicating what the evidence of breakdown should be. If hon. members read the law very carefully, they will see that some of the sections are quite wide.

Another reason for doing this, apart from the spirit of the civil law as opposed to administrative law, is that in fairness we should say we wanted to avoid a situation in which some courts would decide that there was no breakdown no matter what evidence was put before them, and that reconciliation was always possible. Some of those who believe in the indissolubility of marriage might be inclined to judge in this way. We did not want a situation to develop where some courts would not be granting divorces in any and all cases. We wanted to put in our law a direction to the courts that they must grant a divorce when certain evidences of breakdown or of offences exist.

For all of these reasons, we have adopted this way of proceeding. There is not much more I think I should attempt to say at this stage. I thank hon. members for the way in which they received the law at the resolution stage, and for their courtesy in listening to me at this present stage. I can only add that as we get along with second reading, and eventually to the committee stage of the bill, I will be guided by every loyal effort of every member of this house to improve this law in such a way as to remedy a situation that has long needed remedying in this country.

Mr. Fairweather: Will the minister permit a question at this stage? I did not want to interrupt his rationalization. Under this bill is there a change,—and I hope there is—in the system now in effect in New Brunswick whereby one judge is designated as the judge for divorce, and all hearings must be held in the capital city of New Brunswick?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker; in clause 2(e)(i) of the bill the court of New Brunswick is defined as the trial division or branch of the supreme court of the province. There would be a change therefore from the former system, under which I believe the parties were obliged to travel some distance to go to the court. This is one of the reasons we felt it was necessary to consult the provinces to ensure that the implementation of this reform would be made without any undue hardship to those entrusted with the administration of justice.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Québec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister?

Earlier, the minister spoke about the effects of our provisional measures which could be applied, for instance, as far as Quebec is concerned, to the custody of children, the alimony and the domicile.

I merely want to know from the minister if negotiations have been started, especially with the province of Quebec, to avoid the ambiguity which will surely arise if the Court of the Exchequer should some day make a ruling on provisional measures relating to the custody of the children or to alimony, while an absolutely identical law in the civil code of the province stipulates precise jurisdiction in this regard.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I trust such negotiations will be numerous and harmonious. Of course, we could not, before the bill was ready, before it had been put before the house, give a copy of it to the province. However, we did endeavour to foresee such difficulties in drafting the bill.

I think that in dealing only with divorce at this stage and not with judicial separation, we shall avoid the kind of difficulty mentioned by the hon. member. But, of course, in the province of Quebec people will still, be free to choose a course of action under the legislation concerning separation from bed and board and of estate contained in the civil code or under the divorce legislation. They will have a choice to make and if they decide to act according to the provincial legislation other than under the civil code, they will be governed of course by the provisions of the civil code. If they decide to act under the federal legislation on divorce, they will be governed by these provisions.

If the hon. member studies those provisions, he will find that we have tried to draft them so as to avoid any conflict with provincial statutes. Of course, people will have to choose between divorce and legal separation.

Besides, jurisprudence enlightens us on another problem, and it is probably one of those the hon. member has in mind. What about the separation of estate?

Now, hon. members will realize that in this legislation, we have not implemented the recommendations of the joint committee of both houses which suggested that the federal legislation on divorce also deal with the matter of separate maintenance. It is precisely because we consider that question of separate maintenance comes essentially under provincial jurisdiction that we could not deal with it in the present legislation.

It is certain that some possessions, those which perhaps come from the marriage tie itself, could be regulated under federal jurisdiction. But in practice, since it will be very difficult to distribute these possessions which are often worth little in comparison with the personal property of the husband and wife, it would have been a mistake to try to decide how property should be divided by the present legislation.

I think that the jurisprudence of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec will continue to be applied, and that a divorce will automatically mean separate maintenance.

This is an example of the respect we have shown towards this important problem of a conflict of jursidiction.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, it has been more than a quarter of a century since the last massive attempt to reform the divorce laws of Canada was made in this country. That attempt, sir, was made by hon. Mr. Aseltine of the other place, and he was successful in persuading the other place to pass a measure that would have granted divorce not only on the ground of adultery but also, I believe, on grounds of cruelty and desertion. The bill came to this place but was allowed to die on the order paper. As I say, that was more than a quarter of a century ago.

Times have changed and public climate has changed. I think the biggest lag politicians have probably suffered from in the field of divorce is their assessment of what is the public mood and what the public wants. For example we found when we were holding hearings in the divorce committee, hearings that lasted many months, that one church organization after another came before us and presented opinions that were far in advance of the opinions we ourselves held.

I say that the time is ripe for divorce reform. I also say that there has been much human misery that can be counted in the tens of thousands of Canadians who have suffered because more than a quarter of a century ago this chamber refused to pass one simple measure which was nowhere near as comprehensive as the one with which we are dealing now, though heaven knows there are faults enough in it. However, I shall deal with those later. If this step had been taken by our forebears in this place, much human misery in this country would have been saved.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) has presented a bill modelled in part upon the recommendations of the committee whose report I hold and which held hearings that started on June 28, 1966 and ended on April 20 of this year before presenting its report. Some of the measures taken by the minister in his bill, compared with the ones drafted by the committee, are, I think, improvements on the committee report. But now that I have had a chance to study the bill and to compare it with the draft bill included in the committee report, other provisions to me constitute glaring weaknesses. As a matter of fact, sir, I intend to lay emphasis upon four only in my address this evening. There are others but I think they can be pointed out in committee; they do not strike at the heart of divorce reform as much as the weaknesses I intend to detail.

I do this, Mr. Speaker, not in a spirit of criticism but because the Minister of Justice was good enough to say before he sat down that he did want to consider any recommendations made by other members, so that in committee we could attempt to effect cures. This spirit pleases me very much because I think there is a chance to effect cures in four areas that I think are vital.

May I first commend the minister, largely for the way he has divided the grounds. He has not fallen into the trap of adopting marriage breakdown—or the permanent breakdown of marriage, to use his wording—as the over-all approach to this subject. Those who advocated it most strenuously could never believe that one party to a marriage could unfaithfully treat the other party to a marriage; that one party to a marriage could brutally abuse the other party to a marriage. Those who adopt the principle of marriage breakdown but want to be kind to both parties to a marriage that is in difficulty are living in the strange twilight world of today's morality, where there are no blacks or whites.

The minister has adopted as grounds for divorce adultery, sodomy, bestiality, rape, and has added homosexuality—all instances of human fault. He has also included bigamy. What conduct is more reprehensible than for one person knowing he is already married to marry somebody else? Or what is more reprehensible than cruelty, where one party treats the other party with brutality? I am glad to see that the minister has held on to the old time morality and kept those grounds without the leavening of the marriage breakdown theory.

Where he has adopted marriage breakdown I think it will be effective. The bill deals with marriage breakdown because of imprisonment of one's spouse, because of alcoholism or narcotic abuse, because one party to the marriage has disappeared for three years or has failed to consummate the marriage. In this regard there was an exchange in the house last night between the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston) and the minister, but this is nothing new. Much of what the minister has included in the bill is not new; it can be found at pages 160 and 161 of the draft bill of the divorce committee. We dealt with that and came up with a pretty reasonable formula.

Although I would give the minister marks for improving on that formula somewhat, he has not done so in one particular instance, the case of marriage breakdown where the parties are not living together. A period of three years was suggested if the parties have voluntarily separated, but five years if one spouse deserts the other. Many of us in the committee considered that in cases of marriage breakdown a voluntary separation for a period of three years was a pretty civilized way of ending the marriage. I think that prescribing three years as a trial period, to enable the parties to live together again to see whether the marriage could be repaired, made sense.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The minister has retained this but has taken the desertion of the petitioner and made the applicable period not less than five years. In other words a man and woman may agree, in a civilized manner, that they are not getting along and that they will separate for three years. At the end of that time they have the remedy of divorce. On the other hand, a man may decide that he cannot live with a woman, or a woman may decide that she cannot live with her husband, and march out. There is no civilized breaking of that marriage; there is no civilized separation of that couple; there is a brutal withdrawal by one of the parties. The civilized person waits three years for his divorce, but the person who is brutalized by desertion has to wait for five years. There is no justice in that, and I hope that this matter will be cured when the bill comes before the committee. I hope that hon. members agree with me that the spouse who is brutally deserted should have greater relief than is presently provided by the bill.

[Mr. McCleave.]

The committee report dealt with this matter, not from the aspect of marriage breakdown but as a ground by itself. In simple language, on page 59 of the report of the special joint committee we find this:

—has deserted the petitioner without cause for a period of at least three years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition;—

The period, if one takes the worst instance, which is desertion, should be not five years but three years. The largest class of persons needing relief in Canada are those who are deserted. Their number alone is at least 60,000, a formidable number. That number is at least equal to seven times the number of cases which are heard each year in the divorce courts of Canada.

The minister said that the ground of homosexuality has been added—

Mr. Trudeau: Before the hon. member leaves the question of desertion, I want to make sure that I understand his criticism. The three year period applies to the deserted party. The deserted party need not wait for more than three years. The deserter must wait for five years. It is the offended party, if we may use that concept, who must wait for three years.

Mr. McCleave: I thank the minister for his explanation. He mentioned this matter to me outside the house. I have read this bill carefully and I presume that clause 4(1)(e) is the one that is applicable. I think the minister ought to clarify that wording when we get in committee. As the bill is worded now we find, on reading subparagraph (e), that——the spouses have been living separate and apart

(i) for any reason other than that described in subparagraph (ii), for a period of not less than three years, or
(ii) by reason of the desertion of the petitioner, for a period of not less than five years, . . .

The wording must be made more clear in committee. It must be shown more clearly than the deserter has the right to lauch a petition after five years. From my reading of the clause I take the meaning to be that the one who is voluntarily living away from the other party is covered by (i) and the deserted petitioner is covered by (ii). I am sure that this matter may be cleared up when we come to the committee stage of the bill.

Mr. Trudeau: My intention is similar to the hon. member's. If we need to clarify the language, I shall look at the wording. I am not sure that the language is wrong, but I am sure that my intention is the same as the hon. member's.

Mr. McCleave: Fine, we have cleared up one grievance, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad to have that assurance from the minister.

The minister has added the ground of homosexuality. I believe that covers cases where a man is married to a practising lesbian. The committee was not able to deal with this matter and the minister, by one magic word, has solved the problem. Nevertheless, he has taken away two grounds from the committee report. One ground is that arising from wilful non support, and the second is that arising from marriage breakdown through illness.

I am not particularly wedded to either concept but I hope, when we discuss these matters in committee, that we shall have a free vote about some of these contentious categories so that members of the house can express themselves freely, and in large numbers, on those points I have mentioned.

The second major change that the minister made with respect to the draft bill is removing jurisdiction from the county courts. Perhaps I ought to be more precise. The minister has rejected the committee's recommendation that county courts should have jurisdiction in divorce cases. Sir, the government has made an unfortunate decision here. Some of us hoped that divorce cases could be heard in county courts instead of having petitioners wait for circuit judges to come around. County court judges, generally speaking, are readily available to hear cases; circuit court judges are not. I realize that in cities like Toronto there is no problem with respect to circuit judges, because some judges from the circuit are always sitting. However, in some smaller towns of this province the circuit judge comes around only once or twice a year.

In this bill the minister has tried to set up a reconciliation procedure. Provision is made for the parties to wait for 14 days before resuming their action. One may find that a judge has come and gone in that period and that a person would have to chase him all over northern Ontario, or where have you, to catch him and to resume the action. This obviously is a retrograde step.

Another change from the draft bill concerns reconciliation procedures. I do not think the committee got into that field. The minister ought to be thanked for getting into it, but I do not know how effectively he has entered it. I suggest, sir, that we shall need a new approach by our courts to make reconciliation procedures truly workable. In the bill a beginning has been made; the judge can refer parties to counselling agencies, or he can postpone their case until they have received counselling. The lawyer, also, has certain obligations. I think, however, most lawyers worth their salt try to hold a marriage together when people come to them with divorce problems. So, we are not really called upon to assume "Dear Abby" roles in that regard. But again it seems to me you have to have a court procedure situated in one place, not in the hands of a roving judge, and in a court where it is customary to have a more informal atmosphere than prevails in the supreme or superior courts of this land. A county court is at least half way to the kind of court I visualize. Certainly the judges in county courts are permanently based. They are not on circuit, or if they have circuits they are not long circuits.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I would like to make another point with regard to court proceedings. I think that as long as we leave divorce cases in the supreme or superior courts, divorce will be very much beyond the reach of many people in this country. I realize that legal aid is becoming more and more common across Canada, and that legal aid for people in matrimonial matters is also becoming common, even in provinces which once refused to extend it to such cases. When legal aid was introduced in the United Kingdom it was found that approximately two thirds of the matrimonial causes relied in some way on legal aid. Until we have an equal generosity in Canada there are going to be many people caught in the so-called common law situations, that is, married to somebody else and living with third parties, who through lack of money will not be able to solve their problems. I suggest that if we continue our high court approach on this matter we simply compound their problems. They simply will not be able to solve their problems and get divorces, for which the grounds readily exist, and then regularize their new liaisons. As the Canadian Welfare Council pointed out in perhaps the most remarkable statistic given to the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons there are 400,000 Canadians in the position of the so-called common law relationship.

Another point I should like to make deals with the theme of reconciliation. This is something the committee studied at length without, as I noted before, coming to a recommendation with respect to it. The only worthwhile work in this field that I personally have read about has been in the courts of Los Angeles in California. This was done by a Judge Burke, who would get the parties before him and, if they showed the slightest sign of wishing to reconcile and not go through with their divorce proceedings, he would have experts talk to them and try to find out what was on their minds, and then have the couple consent to a court order.

It might work out this way, that Mr. Jones would be upbraided by his wife because he went to a tavern twice a week after work, and on the other hand his complaint against her was that she would play bridge twice a week and neglect him for the girls at the bridge table. In the process of reconciliation developed by Judge Burke he would get the couple to agree that the husband go to the pub only one night a week, and the wife play bridge only one night a week, and then put it in the form of a court order so that if either one broke that promise he or she would be guilty of contempt of court.

I have read a fair amount on this, and so far as I know this was the only practical way of getting some of the differences between husband and wife ironed out to the point that the reconciliation procedure would work. Frankly, despite the good intentions of the minister and of those who advised him to take the step, I feel the reconciliation provision in the bill will not work. A judge will glance over the bench and ask if there is any prospect that the marriage can be saved. The person who has already spent a great deal of money by that point to get into the court, will simply say no, and there goes all that part of the minister's bill.

I suggest again, and I know the minister will be receptive to my suggestion, that this is something we cannot solve in this particular divorce bill, and I do not think we should try to mislead ourselves that we are going to solve it in this divorce bill. However, what I suggest can be done is that the minister carry on continuous consultations with the attorneys general of the provinces, to see if he can work out a consensus so that a lower court approach is used to these cases, and so that the counsellors and other professional help are available at the lower court level.

The procedure in Los Angeles that I have mentioned probably saved about 10 per cent of the marriages. That is not a very high figure, but 10 per cent in this divorce prone age is an important figure; because now we are getting into the divorce generation—the people who come from broken homes and are more susceptible to broken marriages themselves. Indeed, sir, if a young adult comes from a broken home I almost liken that person to one who marches forth into life hobbling along on a broken leg, because sooner or later the environment in which he has grown up is apt to catch up with him as well.

It is important to try for reconciliation and to head off the breakdown of marriages, but I doubt very much if the procedure suggested in this bill will affect 1 per cent of the 8,500 cases we have in Canada today. And, let us face it, with the extra grounds we are adding in this bill we can expect that our divorce rate will probably be doubled and more than doubled for at least the foreseeable future. So, sir, there is a real challenge to achieve the reconciliation process at an earlier level of court proceedings, and above all to get to the root cause of what makes marriage fall apart in today's society.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, again I hope we will be able to deal with the matter of the courts in which these cases should be heard. I suggest that the minister take a long second look at the idea of having them in the county courts initially. I have mentioned the matter of wording over desertion cases. I think he and I agree on what we want, and it is just a question of getting the proper language. I also suggest that we keep in our minds the fact that court proceedings are far too expensive in these divorce matters, and that we have a long way to go in reconciliation provisions and in taking steps to catch marriage breakdown before it becomes the disease that is divorce.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, before I deal with the subject, I wish first of all to make two observations that seem to be required to avoid any misunderstanding.

First, the following thoughts are addressed to a state or a people who claim to be Christians. Christian does not mean Catholic. Taking into account the various religious persuasions in this country, these few notes do not relate to one sect or another. Because they are inspired by natural morality, they are somehow above the religious differences of the citizens.

Secondly, before any development or discussion, it is important to define adequately what we mean by the term "divorce". In these notes, divorce means a break-up of a matrimonial bond duly contracted. So, there is no question of later recognition of the bond that has never existed but the breakdown, the dissolution of an existing bond, regardless of whether such dissolution is effected by the individual as such, by the state or by some religious authority. This concept of "divorce" must be very clear before the next step is taken. The basic principle is natural indissolubility of marriage.

Divorce as such brings into question an essential property of marriage, its indissolubility. Before dealing with the ticklish matter of divorce, it is fitting to consider this property of marriage. In my opinion, and to resume briefly what I think, marriage, considered on a strictly natural level and not in its religious or surnatural perspective, is a fundamentally indissoluble community. In other words, a duly constituted marriage involves a bond which, in itself, is absolutely permanent and infrangible, and which no authority can break, except the death of either one of the spouses. I back up my statement on three major grounds which constitute the foundation of the indissolubility of marriage.

The first reason is that the indissolubility of marriage is a divine institution.

That is the obvious meaning of the biblical text in Genesis which reads as follows:

> Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.

Indissoluble marriage is not a human institution. God alone is the author of it and that is how He wanted it, that is absolutely indissoluble. A nation which proclaims its faith in God and the message He left in the Bible would be well advised to pay some attention to that divine will which insists on the indissolubility of the marriage ties.

Here one might hear the classic objection: But in the Bible it is easy to see that God Himself allowed polygamy, divorce with a possible remarriage. Even if God allowed such a thing, there is no need to conclude that it was good in itself. It was rather a matter of legally channelling an evil.

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Simard: Certainly.

Mr. Trudeau: Does the hon. member know that the Canadian Catholic Conference recommended that we should improve, in the way I have done it, the divorce law, and that this Canadian Catholic Conference represents the bishops of this country, who are fairly good Christians?

Mr. Simard: If the hon. minister has enough patience to listen to the rest of my remarks, he will probably find an answer to his question.

"On account of the hard-heartedness of this people", says the Bible in the Deuteronomy, the State which was in fact in Israel a theocratic state had to admit this legislation of tolerance. Therefore, to answer the objection, that permission on the part of God was rather a tolerance as regards a situation that was not to last. God permitted, tolerated something evil in itself. That did not mean at all that such a thing was good. Moreover, a less superficial reading of the Bible shows us very well that already in the Old Testament, the dissolution, even legal, of a regular marriage did not seem totally admissible from a moral point of view.

We find a confirmation of this in the New Testament, (this confirmation is worth, of course, only for Canadian Christians, not only for the Catholics, who believe in Christ). All that is needed in this connection is to read St. Matthew, chapter 19, verses 1 to 10, where Christ is most explicit on the matter of divorce, on the indissolubility of marriage, and I quote:

> Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female,
>
> And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh?
>
> Wherefore, —

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it is ten o'clock.

A motion to adjourn the house has now been moved.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will begin the budget debate, which will continue the rest of the week and next week.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION—IMPROVEMENT IN SERVICES TO NEW CANADIANS ON ARRIVAL

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I put recently the following question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand):

As a result of an emergency situation created by the channelling of immigrants to certain areas of the country, has the minister received requests for assistance to new Canadians and is it his intention to take immediate steps to improve the scheduling of immigrant arrivals in various areas of Canada?

I know that the minister has received a brief from the Assistance Service to New Canadians in the county of Sherbrooke, which has proposed the five following recommendations:

The number of immigrants channelled to Sherbrooke and the area.

Selection according to profession and trade.

Certificates of qualification.

Hospital insurance.

The personnel specially dealing with immigrants.

In addition of Assistance Service to New Canadians in the Sherbrooke area——is asking that arrivals of immigrants be planned, taking into account the absorption capacity of the labour market in the area.

—the Service suggests that more attention could possibly be given to the guidance of immigrants, in order to ensure that job opportunities exist in the profession or trade of the applicants.

As an example, Mr. Lionel Bureau, president of the Assistance Service to New Canadians—

—for the Sherbrooke area—

—points out that a couple of months ago five welders were needed on the Sherbrooke market.

Ten heads of family were directed at once towards Sherbrooke. As a result, five of those persons obtained some work often at ridiculous wages in a trade which was not their own.

The Assistance Service of the Sherbrooke area——states that it has often noted the serious problems involved, for a skilled worker, in obtaining a competency card in the province of Quebec.

We believe—

—continues the brief sent to the Minister of Manpower—

—that renewed representations should be made to the professional and government organizations to facilitate the integration, in the various trades, of people already qualified in related fields.

Always as an example, Mr. Bureau notes that the competency card issued in Canada is the equivalent of a mere apprentice card when the worker involved often has 10 to 15 years of experience in his skill.

Indeed, several of these competency cards can only be obtained in Montreal.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

As far as hospital insurance is concerned, the service points out, and I am quoting the paragraphs of the brief presented to the minister—

• (10:00 p.m.)

As the Quebec hospital-insurance regulations do not provide for the payment of hospital bills for immigrants with less than 3 months residence in the country, some immigrant families struck by disease are in extremely hard circumstances if they are badly off financially when faced with several hundred dollars worth of hospital and doctors bills.

As another example, Mr. Bureau points out that an immigrant who came to Sherbrooke a little over a month ago owes a tremendous amount of money for medical care provided to two members of his family. Consequently, he will be in debt for a long time.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I draw these various grievances to the attention of the minister or his parliamentary secretary this evening. It is most important that Canada, which needs an ever greater number of immigrants in order to develop, should be able to channel its immigrants in an intelligent and rational way towards the various regions of Canada, without pushing them into human problems they cannot solve.

There is the problem of employment, of social factors, of hospital insurance, of health insurance. If we want Canada to become a great country, we must do more than have our immigration officers abroad attract immigrants by luring them with bright prospects in Canada. We must also, once they get here, guide them well and direct them to work that will allow them to fulfil themselves as Canadian human beings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. Registrar General of Canada.

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): I shall leave the floor to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Knowles: In French.

[English]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was not here to hear the remarks of the hon. member, but I have an answer for his consideration. The timing of arrival of independent immigrants destined to the labour force is largely influenced by the seasonal nature of the Canadian labour market. This is achieved by immigration counselling abroad, by the new immigration selection system and by the timing of granting of immigrant visas. Similarly the area of destination in Canada is determined by these same factors, although the immigrant once landed in Canada has of course complete freedom of movement. It is the responsibility of our Canada manpower centres to place new immigrants in employment, to move them to areas of better opportunity, to give them language or other necessary training and to grant them necessary financial assistance during the initial settlement period.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—VIET NAM—ADVICE BY MINISTER TO TORONTO STUDENTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the matter I wish to raise tonight I tried to raise almost a month ago. It arose from a Canadian Press despatch in the Vancouver Sun of November 4. Under the heading, "Arms Sales To United States Paying College Bills!" the article says:

> Transport minister Paul Hellyer told 300 University of Toronto students Friday to "be careful not to become great moralists" over the Viet Nam war.
>
> The former Liberal defence minister told one student questioner that part of his university education is being paid for by the sale of Canadian goods, including arms, to the U.S.
>
> The student had said sales of war materials to the U.S. totalling $300 million a year are "a crime against humanity."

I want to know whether the minister was speaking for the government in cautioning these students not to become great moralists over the Viet Nam war, and at the same time informing them that part of their university education was being paid for by the sale of Canadian goods, including arms, to the United States. I wish to sketch briefly the background of this question. The Toronto Telegram of November 6 published this special item from New York:

> Quietly but steadily Canada is boosting its aid to the United States in the Viet Nam war although officially the government is opposed to the conflict.
>
> Diplomatic observers believe the action could hurt Canada's posture as a determined peacemaker in the fighting—Canada is a member, with India and Poland, of the International Control Commission formed to supervise any truce in Viet Nam.
>
> In Ottawa an external affairs spokesman said arms shipments hadn't reached the point where the government would have to reconsider its policy.
>
> He added, the policy would need further study, "if U.S. defence contracts in Canada got completely out of hand.

We find a spokesman for the Department of External Affairs worrying about the way Canadian arms contracts are mounting and saying that the policy will need further study if defence contracts in Canada get completely out of hand. When we couple this with the fact that last year only one defence contract was awarded to the Candian Commercial Corporation in Ottawa, Canada's official government buying agency, which then distributes these contracts to the firms, we find the position in marked contrast to that of this year. This year the number of U.S. contracts Canada has are set out in great detail by the Telegram. If my mathematics are correct, they total this year $264,529,831.

• (10:10 p.m.)

These students, as I say, are in an invidious position. They are worried and concerned, even as the spokesman for the Department for External Affairs is worried and concerned about the mounting sale of Canadian arms to Viet Nam. Yesterday, the Montreal Star informed us that United States aircraft have to date dropped more bombs on Viet Nam than were dropped on Europe during the whole of the second world war. In such a situation as this the students are justified in feeling concerned. If the government is suggesting to them that they should not be overly moral in their approach to this question, and telling them at the same time that their education is being paid for in part by sales of arms to the United States, the position is a most peculiar one. It seems to me that students should not be placed in such a position.

I think the government should act now to cut out this bloody trade—and I use the word "bloody" advisedly—which is blasting the very life out of the people of Viet Nam. I think action should be taken now to leave our students with clean hands and clean minds. If sales of arms to the United States are indeed helping to pay for their education we should act in such a way as to leave students free to protest about this thing which concerns each one of us, as it concerns the Department of External Affairs; they should be free to protest without being told by a government spokesman, the Minister of Transport in this case, that they should not take an overly moral approach to the situation in Viet Nam. I want to know where the government stands on this question.

I hope the minister will look up the record tomorrow and read what I have said; I notice that he has only just arrived. I should like him to explain why we should inculcate in these students a desire not to be overly moral in their ideas about Viet Nam, and warn them at the same time that their education is being paid for in part by the sale of arms to the United States. Was he warning them not to bite the hand that feeds them? Was he expressing government policy on this occasion? If this is the case, how does he reconcile what he said with the fact that the Department of External Affairs is itself concerned about this situation? I wish the minister would explain the meaning of his remarks.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): If the hon. lady had been present I do not think she would have been showing the concern she has been showing tonight. The question which was put to me was a reasonable one. I gave a reasonable answer, but it did not satisfy the young man to whom it was addressed. He came back to the charge, as was perfectly fair according to the rules of engagement between a minister and a student in the circumstances.

I repeated the answer in a slightly different form, and then cautioned the young man as part of the answer that it was very difficult to know where to draw the line with respect to these complex matters when all the world is slightly inconsistent and all parties are slightly inconsistent, and people have great difficulty in sorting out in their minds the position of the demarcation line between what is right and what is wrong, and when, between black and white, there are many shades. As often happens under these circumstances, the newspaper took a single sentence out of a long and reasoned answer. This was all that appeared in the newspaper. I think it is unfair and unfortunate that, for whatever reason, this is occasionally done and reports of this kind are filed. They do not give any of the sense of depth of the reply that was given to a very serious and important question.

I can assure my hon. friend that if she had been there, while she might not have agreed with everything I said, she would have found it difficult to disagree substantially with the substance of my answer. I think she will appreciate, from her own experience, how difficult it is sometimes to have reports represent not only what was said but the sense of what was said. In this particular case, there was no real relationship whatever between what appeared in the newspaper and the gist of my reply. I think my hon. friend would be the first to admit this if she had been present.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

OLD AGE SECURITY—CENTENNIAL BONUS TO SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, the question I raise tonight has to do with old age security and the advisability of providing a centennial bonus to our senior citizens during this one hundredth birthday of Canada. I little thought when I placed this question before the house that I would have the privilege of sharing this quiet evening with the hon. member for Westmorland (Mrs. Rideout). Indeed, I really thought it might be a means whereby we might get the hon. member for Westmorland and the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) together, so that they could present a united front from the maritime provinces.

When I take a look at the many celebrations that have been embarked upon in this country during our centennial year, I cannot help but realize that our senior citizens have been almost left out of these celebrations. They did receive a plaque if they had reached their one hundredth anniversary. I think, too, of the budget that was brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) the other day and the general economic conditions in this country. The cost of living has been rising month by month for more than three years.

I think of the terrible plight of those on fixed incomes who have to meet the rising cost of living. We should realize that there are 1,200,000 people included in the category of senior citizens. These were the people who pioneered our country. These were the men and women who made possible everything we have in Canada today. They made possible the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of this nation. They pioneered in the building of railroads from one end of this country to the other, so that the country could be joined together and there could be a greater degree of unity, so that there could be settlements in the western regions of our country and in that great province of British Columbia as well. These people also helped to build the transportation links to the north country, so that those who inhabited the rich expanse of our nation might also know something of the benefits that come from the unity of this nation.

I think of my own part of the country in the prairie provinces. Men and women came to pioneer in the breaking of the sod, the planting of grain and the harvesting of the crops of golden grain that made Canada the grain bin of an empire, the greatest empire of all times. Then I think, too, of those who went into the mines and forests of this country, and they were pioners as well. We are almost at the very end of our centennial celebrations, yet this government begrudges to these people this centennial bonus of $100 which could be the frosting on the cake as far as the celebrations are concerned.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mrs. Rideout: Ah.

Mr. Nasserden: The hon. lady says "ah". I know this astounds her because she cannot help but feel for these people, as does everybody in the house. Considering there is a surplus in the old age security fund, and that it would only require a few more million dollars to make this payment possible, and, in view of the fact that hundreds of millions have been spent during past years on the centennial celebrations, surely this is a legitimate grievance to raise. This is particularly so in light of the ideals and hopes of those who laid the foundations of the Canada we have today. I hope the parliamentary secretary to the minister will use her influence with both the minister and the government to make this payment possible.

The minister said that he would take this suggestion to the Minister of Finance. Nothing has happened and I can only draw one conclusion. What has happened to the influence of the minister of national health when he cannot budge the Minister of Finance on this important question? This is one matter about which the people in the maritimes in particular will have to ask themselves. People all across the country will wonder why in none of the three budgets which have been presented in little more than a year there is any provision for a centennial bonus. All that has been provided is something like $2.10 per month for the old age security recipients in order to meet the rise in the cost of living.

Without saying anything further I would be very interested to hear the parliamentary secretary tell us when the government is going to bring this centennial bonus into being.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member's suggestion with much interest, and indeed the government has examined his proposal with a great deal of concern. The hon. member's suggestion of a $100 centennial bonus to the recipients of old age security and the guaranteed annual income supplement is a very noble one, but one item he neglected to mention is that the cost to the federal treasury would be something in excess of $125 million. It was therefore thought inadvisable, particularly in this period of heavy inflationary pressure, to ask the government to spend this amount of money at this time.

As a personal observation to the hon. member, who I know is very sincere and dedicated in his responsibilities as a member of parliament, may I say that his proposal is not really entirely in accordance with the economic principles expounded by the members of his own party.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 6, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

[Translation]

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Tenth report of standing committee on transport and communications—Mr. H. Pit Lessard.

[Editor's note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. McCLEAVE—FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF HALIFAX EXPLOSION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago this morning occurred the Halifax explosion, one of the most awesome events in our Canadian history. About 1,600 were killed and another 6,000 injured, 10,000 were left homeless and property damage was estimated at more than $35 million.

The most sizeable donation to the stricken city, $18 million, came from the parliament of Canada, and to this day we have the Halifax relief commission, which reports to the Minister of Finance, as a reminder of the help all Canada gave at that critical time. It may interest hon. members to learn that approximately 80 pensioners still receive eye disability pensions and another dozen to two dozen receive general disability pensions from the funds, partly provided by that earlier parliament, still administered by the commission.

On this fiftieth anniversary my colleague and I should like to thank Canada on behalf of the area we serve.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

WINTER WORKS CONSTRUCTION, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 426—Mr. Southam:

1. How many post offices will be constructed in Saskatchewan in the 1967-68 winter season under the federal winter works program?

2. Where will these post offices be built?

3. Are any other public buildings such as R.C.M.P. barracks planned for construction in Saskatchewan this winter under the winter works program and, if any, where will they be constructed?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Four localities have been selected; however, whether or not post office buildings will be constructed will depend on the availability of suitable sites at reasonable prices, the nature of the response to the invitation for tenders, and other similar considerations.

2. The four locations referred to above are Dubuc, Insinger, Mistatim, and Quinton.

3. None under the winter works program.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA

Question No. 427—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many days did the members of the statute revision commission sit?

2. Is it intended to replace the term "Statuts revisés du Canada" by the term "Lois revisées du Canada"?

3. Is it intended to remove the references to the laws of Great Britain from Canadian legislation?

4. Is it intended to replace the terms "Puissance" and "Dominion" by the term "Canada"?

5. Is a particular importance attached to the French version of the revised statutes of Canada?

6. In the legislation section of the Department of Justice, how many English speaking and how many French speaking jurists are there?

[Translation]

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): 1. Formal sittings of the commission were held on four occasions. No records are kept of working sessions of members or groups of members.

2. No. The legislative policy with respect to this nomenclature is set out in 1964-65, c. 48, s. 14.

3. No, unless the reference is spent, or has been repealed or replaced by later legislation.

4. The expression "Dominion" would not be changed to "Canada" if it involved a change in the title given by parliament to an act, a body corporate or other body or to a profession. The expression "Dominion" in other contexts to describe the parliament or government of Canada would normally be altered in accordance with 1964-65, c. 48, s. 5, which empowers the statute revision commission to make such alterations as are necessary to preserve a uniform mode of expression, and to make such minor amendments as are necessary to bring out more clearly what it deems to be the intention of parliament.

5. Yes.

6. At the present time there are 7 English speaking and 4 French speaking lawyers in the legislation section of the Department of Justice.

[English]

*FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Question No. 704—Mr. Rynard:

1. How much money did the federal government pay to each of the provinces for the fiscal year 1965-1966 under (a) conditional grants (b) unconditional grants (c) unemployment insurance benefits (d) old age security (e) family allowances (f) other payments?

2. What was the total amount of all these payments for the said fiscal year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, as the answer to the first part of the question is very long, may I ask for leave to have the answer printed as read?

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: Here is the answer in question.]

Payments to Provincial Governments and to Individuals in the Provinces (1965-66)

(millions of dollars)

Province	(a) Conditional Grants to Provincial Governments[1]	(b) Unconditional Grants to Provincial Governments[2]	(c) Unemployment Insurance Benefits	(d) Old Age Security Pensions	(e) Family Allowances	(f) Others[3]
NFLD	53.0	43.8	17.4	17.6	16.9	6.7
P.E.I.	7.6	10.4	3.0	7.4	3.2	3.6
N.S.	40.3	50.5	16.1	42.0	21.6	21.4
N.B.	44.6	44.9	15.9	31.0	19.0	14.7
Que.	379.0	142.7	97.8	201.0	165.0	51.1
Ont.	313.1	22.8	81.9	337.2	182.4	125.2
Man.	53.4	30.5	12.8	55.5	25.9	20.5
Sask.	45.1	31.2	8.8	56.8	27.0	15.2
Alta.	78.0	11.5	13.6	62.8	42.4	24.1
B.C.	102.0	3.0	30.6	115.3	47.0	51.7

[1]Payments under the programmes covered by the Established Programmes (Interim Arrangements) Act have been adjusted to indicate the total federal contribution (i.e. tax abatements, equalization and operating cost adjustment).

[2]Includes statutory subsidies, equalization grants, Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, Newfoundland additional grant, share of federal estate tax and share of income tax paid by certain public utility corporations.

[3]Includes Youth Allowances and War Veterans pensions and allowances. (The amount indicated for Quebec includes the value of the special abatement in lieu of Youth Allowances as per the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act, 1964.)

With regard to the second part of the question, the total amount was $3,616.5 million.

BLUEWATER BRIDGE COMMISSION

Question No. 708—Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert):

Has the federal government jurisdiction over the commission that administers the Bluewater bridge between Sarnia and Port Huron, U.S.A. and, if so (a) who are the officers of said commission, with their duties and terms of appointment and remuneration (b) how many regular employees are there (c) are there any other appointees, either part or full-time, and what are their names and salaries (d) how many meetings of the said commission were held in 1966 and what was the total revenue and expenses?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, under the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act: (a) there are four Canadian members of the authority. The present incumbents are Messrs. Gregory A. Hogan; John S. Blunt; Thomas Milway; and John D. George, each appointed by the governor in council. Mr. George was appointed on September 9, 1966 for a term of three years. Messrs. Hogan, Blunt and Milway were appointed on September 18, 1967 for terms of three, four and five years respectively. The members hold office during the pleasure of the appointing authority and serve without remuneration but are entitled to be reimbursed out of the revenues of the authority for travel, living and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties of the bridge authority under the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act; (b) as of November 30, 1967, the authority employed 38 persons on a regular basis; (c) there are no other appointees; (d) in the 1966-67 fiscal year (September 1, 1966 to August 31, 1967) the gross revenue of the authority was $588,430.62 and the gross expenses were $509,279.28. There were four formal meetings of the authority during the 1966 calendar year. The members also meet informally from time to time as the business of the authority requires.

GRANTS IN AID TO WEST INDIES

Question No. 710—Mr. MacRae:

1. What were the total grants in aid made to the West Indies for each of the last five fiscal years?

2. Is any increase contemplated in the scope of aid to be given to the West Indies?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. During the past five years Canadian bilateral aid made available to the Commonwealth Caribbean has totalled $51.9 million. This aid has been made available in the form of grants and long term loans in each year in the following amounts.

	(in $ millions)
	Grants	Loans	Total
1963-64	2.1	0	2.1
1964-65	4.0	5.5	9.5
1965-66	4.5	5.5	10.0
1966-67	6.1	7.0	13.1
1967-68	9.2	8.7	17.2

2. During the Commonwealth Caribbean-Canada conference in Ottawa in July, 1966, I announced to the representatives of the Caribbean countries that it is "the intention of the Canadian government to expand the level of its aid to developing countries in the light of economic and other relevant circumstances. Commonwealth Caribbean countries have been among the major recipients of Canadian aid in the past and I am in a position to assure you today that you will continue to receive on appropriate terms in future years, a very significant portion of Canada's expanding resources... To give you a more precise idea of Canadian intentions I would like to say here that we would expect our total annual aid effort in the Caribbean over each of the next five years to reach at least the level of our aid in the current fiscal year or a total for the period of more than $65 million... If, as we are confident can be done, good and practicable projects can be worked up for a still larger amount, the Canadian government will be prepared to increase its aid substantially above that figure during these five years". This statement continues to embody the government's intentions with respect to the Caribbean aid program.

APPROVAL OF NON-PAYLIST ALLOTMENTS

Question No. 720—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Were the treasury board decisions listed in the first column of sessional paper No. 41A dealing with non-paylist allotments from finance vote 15 during 1966-67 approved by the governor in council?

2. If so (a) on what dates (b) what are the numbers of the orders in council so approving the decisions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. No.

2. N/A.

Questions

SALE OF GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

Question No. 725—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has the government ceased the sale of annuities issued pursuant to the Government Annuities Act?

2. If so (a) as of what date (b) for what reasons?

3. (a) When was this annuity service first instituted (b) what was its original purpose or objective (c) does the government consider that this original purpose or objective has now been otherwise achieved and, if so, why?

4. As of March 31, 1967 (a) what was the number of (i) individual contracts (ii) group contracts, issued and (b) in each instance of (i) and (ii) above, what was the total cumulative value of such contracts in force as of the said date?

5. Has there been at any time any net cost to the consolidated revenue fund in the operation of this annuity service and, if so, in what years and in what amounts, if any?

6. During each of the last five fiscal years, has there been any transfer (a) of surplus (b) of unclaimed annuities, to the consolidated revenue fund and, if so, in what amounts for each such year?

7. What are the intentions of the government with respect to contracts now in force?

8. How many persons are now employed in the administration of this service?

9. What are the intentions of the government with respect to the future of such persons so employed?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. No, but salesmen will no longer be employed to solicit business.

2. Not applicable.

3. (a) September, 1908. (b) To encourage thrift and saving for old age. (c) Yes. Facilities for personal saving for old age are more numerous now than they were in 1908. There are also now in existence the old age security program and the Canada Pension Plan.

4. (a) (i) 155,150 (ii) 1,416 (b) Total value at March 31, 1967 was $1,324,518,806 of which approximately $644,000,000 arises from group contracts. Separate accounts for individual and group annuities are not kept.

5. Yes. Total net cost to March 31, 1967 is $26.3 million.

6. (a) and (b):

Fiscal year ended March 31	Surplus transferred to consolidated revenue fund	Unclaimed annuities transferred
1963	$ 417,000	$ 43,000
1964	878,000	33,000
1965	695,000	52,000
1966	1,501,000	98,000
1967	129,000	63,000

[Mr. Benson.]

7. All existing contracts continue unchanged.

8. Head office establishment, 145. Sales offices, 52.

9. The decision to discontinue promotion of the sale of annuities will have little effect on the head office staff. The occupants of any head office positions which may become redundant can be absorbed elsewhere in the department.

Personnel in the sales offices are not public servants. Some will become public servants to staff seven regional service offices; some will be pensioned; and a few will have to seek other employment. Severance pay will be given to persons whose employment is terminated.

PENSIONS OF TEACHERS IN EXTERNAL AID PROGRAM

Question No. 733—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

Will the government adopt a policy of making a contribution to the pensions of teachers working in the government's external aid program?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Teachers serving overseas under the auspices of the external aid office are normally employed under direct contract with the government of Canada. In addition to regular salaries, teachers are paid an overseas allowance which is intended to be sufficiently generous to enable them to continue contributions to their regular superannuation plans in Canada.

Almost invariably teachers are on leaves of absence from their school boards while serving on assignments overseas and their pension rights are maintained.

*MEETINGS TO CONSIDER McIVOR COMMISSION REPORT

Question No. 739—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Has the Minister of Fisheries arranged a meeting with representatives from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario and the Northwest Territories to discuss the other aspects of the recommendations made by the McIvor commission to determine which should be implemented besides the recommendation of establishing a fresh water fish marketing board?

2. If so, has such a meeting taken place, who was in attendance and what recommendations of the McIvor report will be implemented?

Mr. Richard Cashin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of this question is no. With regard to the second part of the question, it is expected that the federal-provincial prairie fisheries committee will meet early in 1968, and that these questions will be considered at that time.

SPACE RESERVED IN PLACE DE VILLE

Question No. 742—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. (a) How much space has the government leased in the newly constructed Place de Ville (b) for what total annual rent (c) at what rate per square foot (d) for what purpose will the space be used (e) when was the lease negotiated?

2. If no lease was signed, what undertaking has the Department of Public Works given to the owner?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) In Tower "A", 215,163 square feet of office space. In Tower "B", 291,330 square feet of office accommodation and 4,858 square feet of storage space. (b) In Tower "A", the annual rental is $1,037,085.66, for office space. In Tower "B", the annual rental is $1,404,000 for office accommodation and $9,716 for storage space. (c) The rate per square foot is $4.82 per annum for office accommodation and $2.00 per square foot per annum for storage space. (d) The space will be used to house the following departments and agencies: In Tower "A": Office accommodation, The Public Service Commission. In Tower "B": Office accommodation, The National Energy Board; The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority; The Department of Trade and Commerce; The Department of Industry; Canadian Government Committee on Corrections. Storage space: Sergeant-At-Arms of House of Commons; Department of Industry; National Energy Board; Department of Trade and Commerce. (e) The lease for Tower "A" was negotiated in July, 1967, and for Tower "B", in January, 1967.

2. In neither case has a lease been executed but, in both cases, the Department of Public Works has advised the owner of the approval of Treasury Board to enter into a lease.

LOBSTER FISHERY, DISTRICT 8, P.E.I.

Question No. 760—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

1. What was the total weight of lobsters landed in District 8 and the amount of revenue to fishermen in the years 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967?

2. How many persons were employed in lobster fishing and processing in District 8 in 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967?

3. What was the total amount expended in research having to do with the expansion of the lobster fishery in District 8 in 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967?

4. How many persons were employed on a full-time basis in research into the expansion of the lobster fishery in District 8 in 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967?

5. How much will be expended in research having to do with the expansion of the lobster fishery in District 8 in 1968?

6. How many persons will be employed on a full time basis in research into the expansion of the lobster fishery in District 8 in 1968?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries):

1.

	Quantity landed	Value to fishermen
	'000 lb.	$'000
1962	7,761	3,214
1963	6,511	3,112
1964	5,976	3,600
1965	4,401	2,490
1966	3,921	2,046
1967	3,338*	2,137*

*Preliminary

2. No. of persons employed in lobster fishery: 1962, 2,964; 1963, 3,003; 1964, 2,923; 1965, 3,114; 1966, 2,858; 1967, not available. No information is available on the number of persons employed in lobster processing in District 8.

3. 1962, $58,000; 1963, $60,000; 1964, $64,000; 1965, $69,000; 1966, $90,000; 1967, $150,000.

4. 1962, 6; 1963, 7; 1964, 7; 1965, 7; 1966, 9; 1967, 9.

5. $175,000.

6. Nine.

TENDERS FOR STORAGE BUILDING, OTTAWA STATION

Question No. 762—Mr. Code:

1. Did the National Capital Commission call tenders for the construction of a salt and sand storage building at the Ottawa station complex?

2. (a) On what date and at what hour were tenders opened (b) in whose presence were such tenders opened?

3. (a) What were the names of all tenderers (b) what was the amount of each tender?

4. Which tender was accepted?

5. Did the specifications and general conditions of contract make any requirement that before a tender might be considered it must be accompanied by a bid bond from an approved company or a certified cheque for a percentage of the tender price or Canada bonds having a value of a percentage of the tender price?

6. If so, what precisely was the nature of such requirement in the specifications and general conditions of contract?

7. Did the successful tenderer comply with such requirement?

8. If so, what was (a) the nature, and (b) the amount of the security which accompanied its tender?

9. If not, what were the reasons for exempting the successful tenderer from this requirement?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. Tenders were opened in public on November 16, 1967, at 3:15 p.m., E.S.T., by the secretary of the commission in the presence of both the project officer of the commission and the representatives of the following companies: Fuller Construction Company (1958) Limited; Cooper-Ellis Limited; and Pillar Construction Limited.

3. The tenders were as follows: Canadian National Railways, $10,700; D. W. Boldock, $11,747; J. R. Statham, $15,346; Fuller Construction (1958) Limited, $15,900; Cooper-Ellis Limited, $16,723; Pillar Construction Limited, $17,700.

4. The tender of Canadian National Railways.

5. No.

6. In accordance with paragraph 28, section d, of government contract regulations no bid bond or other security was needed.

7. Not applicable.

8. Not applicable.

9. Not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES IN CAPE BRETON

Question No. 575—Mr. Saltsman:

What has the federal government spent in Cape Breton, in aggregate, in the seven fiscal years ending March 31, 1967, in the following expenditure categories (a) coal mining subsidies and subventions of all kinds (b) reconstruction of Louisburg (c) Cape Breton national park (d) roads to resources, including Cabot trail (e) unemployment insurance to fishermen (f) fishing industry subsidies generally (g) construction or reconstruction of docks, harbours, breakwaters and dredging (h) assistance to industries in designated areas?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notices of motion Nos. 32, 34, 35 and 36 are acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers and authorization by the governmental authorities concerned, as the case may be.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that notices of motions Nos. 34, 32, 35, and 36 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SALE OR LEASE OF GRAIN ELEVATORS, QUEBEC

Motion No. 32—Mr. Ricard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents, correspondence or communications exchanged between the Montreal Corn Exchange Association, the Coopérative Fédérée de Québec (Federated Cooperative of Quebec), the Catholic Farmers Union, the government of Quebec and the government of Canada or any department, commission or agency thereof relating to the leasing or sale of grain elevators in the city of Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

URBAN RENEWAL, THETFORD MINES, QUE.

Motion No. 34—Mr. Langlois (Mégantic):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents, correspondence, communications or reports exchanged by the council of Thetford Mines, the Asbestos Corporation at Thetford Mines, the government of Quebec or its representatives, the Thetford Mines chamber of commerce, Mr. Gaetan Théberge, chartered accountant for Thetford Mines and the federal departments or agencies which were consulted regarding the project of urban renewal for the city of Thetford Mines.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH CLEAR LAKE COTTAGERS

Motion No. 35—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Clear Lake Cottage Owners' Association and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development during the current year.

Motion agreed to.

DEATH OF PIEGAN INDIAN CHILD

Motion No. 36—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the recommendations by the jury established to investigate the death of 14 month old Ramona Mae Crow Shoe on the Piegan Indian reserve, and all communications with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising therefrom.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PROPOSED CHANGE IN DESIGNATION OF FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask whether, in view of the apparent broadening of the proposed federal-provincial conference originally called to discuss a bill of rights, he would in fact characterize it as a full scale conference on the constitution rather than a conference on a bill of rights?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not mind considering the changing of the name of the conference. It is true that certain very important questions have been added to the agenda. However, this would require consultation with the premiers of the provinces. I will be glad to initiate that consultation.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Because of the marked success of the confederation of tomorrow conference and the fact it was held in public, would the Prime Minister consider holding the coming federal-provincial conference "on camera", as prime minister Johnson put it, and not in camera?

Mr. Pearson: I think I said, Mr. Speaker, that the maximum amount of publicity should be given to a conference of this kind but, as the chairman of the conference pointed out, it was a conference which was not negotiating or discussing any proposals but at which an exchange of views took place. It therefore particularly lent itself to maximum publicity. I think that kind of conference should be held in public.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NOVA SCOTIA

FEDERAL FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR CONTINUED OPERATION OF STEEL MILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that legislation is now before the Nova Scotia legislature to validate an agreement between the government of that province and Dosco for the acquisition of the Sydney steel mill, and in view of the awesome financial obligations which will be involved, have there been any discussions between the government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia in which the federal government was asked to assume some of the financial responsibility for keeping the steel plant open beyond April 1968?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no discussion as yet on that particular point. I expect to hear from the premier of Nova Scotia as soon as the legislature has completed its discussion of this matter, and I have indicated to him I will be glad to see him at that time.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Has the government of Nova Scotia asked for any financial assistance prior to introducing this legislation?

Mr. Pearson: The government has asked to meet me and representatives of the federal government to discuss the whole situation as soon as the legislature has completed its work in Halifax.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED TRIPS TO CUBA BY QUEBEC SEPARATISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Last Monday I put a question to the minister on certain separatists who travel from Quebec to Cuba and the minister answered at that time that he would find out and advise me in a day or two on these comings and goings. Is the minister in a position to say something on this today?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member the assurance that the government is watching this thing closely.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Could the minister make shot-guns available for those who would go witch-hunting?

[English]

NATO—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CANADIAN COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence. Does Canada propose at the NATO ministerial meeting to be held next week to request any changes in its commitments under or contributions to NATO?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not in its commitments, Mr. Speaker. We will be discussing force levels with other countries.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister able to give any indication to the house of what change Canada may be asking so far as our force goals are concerned?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As my hon. friend knows, and as I think he said on one occasion when he was asked a similar question, until this matter has been discussed with members of the alliance it is not possible at this stage to give an indication.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSED REDUCTIONS IN ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. When he takes part in the budget debate tomorrow, as he has stated it is his intention to do, does he intend to outline in detail the proposed reductions in the 1967-68 estimates?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): My hon. friend will have to wait until I speak tomorrow night.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister not aware of the reply given to me by the Minister of Finance to a question I put to him in the house on November 15?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now starting an argument.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the fact that the Minister of Finance did assure the house that the Minister of National Revenue would give these details, is he not perhaps more disposed now to give us the assurance asked for by the hon. member for Northumberland?

Mr. Benson: I will be pleased to give details tomorrow night.

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR CANADIAN RECIPIENTS OF U.K. PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. I am asking this question at the request of two charming widows who represent a number of Canadian citizens who are in receipt of pensions from the British government and who find themselves suffering from the most recent devaluation of the pound. My question is, is there any legislation or are there any regulations that permit the government to compensate Canadian citizens who are in receipt of old age or disability pensions from the British government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I should like to reply to the charming member for Kootenay West by saying that I will take the question as notice and discuss it with my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as the minister reporting for the national capital area. Can the minister indicate today the approximate date it is intended to set up a parliamentary committee on the national capital area?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker; early next year.

TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR ALTERNATIVE FERRY SERVICE ON NORTHWEST COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the premier of British Columbia has disregarded the legitimate interests of the people on the northwest coast of British Columbia by refusing for the time being to put back into service the ferry Queen of Prince Rupert, can the minister undertake to look into this question to ascertain whether his department can provide any means of transportation between the two areas formerly served by the Queen of Prince Rupert?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to take this question under advisement.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF BOXING DAY HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the President of the Treasury Board if the Treasury Board and cabinet would not reconsider the decision to deny the public service the customary Boxing day holiday.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the public service have as holidays New Year's day, Good Friday, Easter Monday, Victoria day, Dominion day, Labour day, Thanksgiving, Remembrance day, Christmas day and one other day chosen by the deputy head. This day may be Boxing day for some people in the public service. I should like to indicate that the extra day's holiday would cost between $4 million and $5 million, which I think is too much.

[Later:]

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Since the minister has stated that the Boxing day holiday for civil servants will not be allowed because of the cost, I wish to ask him whether he has estimated the cost of the lush party that is to be held on parliament hill on Friday night, which will only affect a small segment of the Canadian people.

Mr. Benson: I have not the details, but of course the matter falls within the purview of the Secretary of State. The amount of money that is involved is very, very small when compared with the amount of money involved with respect to the first part of my hon. friend's question.

[Later:]

Mr. Benson: I should like to complete my answer to the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac. I have been informed that the party being held Friday night is to encourage children in Canada to make gifts in kind and in money to assist international children's agencies, in the hope that similar meetings will be held across the country. I am sure the hon. member would be in favour of this objective.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO MEET UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the number of Canadians unemployed increased by 20 per cent during the last 12 months and increased by 14 per cent during the four weeks between October 15 and November 11—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would put his question.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was just getting to that. Does the government intend to introduce, before the Christmas recess, measures which will stimulate employment and the economy of this country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My hon. friend, as sometimes happens, has his percentages wrong. The increase in question was referred to by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics as relatively small. The increase is, of course, to be regretted, but my hon. friend, will I know, take some satisfaction from the fact that the figures are much lower than they were when he was minister of trade and commerce.

Mr. Hees: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister read the release from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, "Labour force, employment and unemployment"—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. gentleman is now entering into an argument.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: I am putting a supplementary question.

Mr. Pearson: I have read it; I have it with me.

Mr. Hees: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister intimated that I used incorrect figures. I wish to indicate to him that I have used the correct figures. In a government release which was available to all members of parliament—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now entering into an argument.

Mr. Hees: This is a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I intend to show the Prime Minister that I used the correct figures. On page 2 of the release which was made available to members of parliament today the number of unemployed is listed as follows: on November 11, 1967, 289,000; on October 14, 1967, 254,000—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member is well aware that a dispute over facts does not comprise a question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: Finally, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: —on November 12, 1966 the figure was 238,000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member for Northumberland to put his question.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, my question is this. Does the right hon. Prime Minister not realize that, using the figures produced by the government today, the percentage increases in unemployment are exactly as I specified to him? I therefore ask what the government is going to do about meeting these conditions.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—I gather that is what my hon. friend is speaking to—I should like to quote from the joint report of the manpower department and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics issued today. The report indicates that the increase in unemployment is relatively small, and that the November figure of unemployed represented 3.8 per cent of the labour force as compared with 3.3 per cent in October and 3.1 per cent a year ago. The report added that the non-farm employment rose by 40,000 between October and November, which it called an above average increase.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister to continue reading the report, for if he does so he will see the figures I mentioned a few moments ago. These figures show the increases in unemployment as I have outlined them. I want to know what the government is going to do about the seriously growing unemployment situation in this country, and I should like an answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—POLICY CHANGES IN PROPOSED RENEWAL OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask the minister whether it is correct that the cabinet has decided to sign a further five year treaty in regard to Canada's participation in NORAD. If so, is the minister prepared to advise the house whether there are any policy changes in the contemplated new agreement in view of the decision of the United States to establish anti-missile stations along the Canadian border within 150 miles of major Canadian cities?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been a preliminary meeting with the United States over this matter, but it would be inaccurate to say negotiations are really under way. Until such time as we have a clearer picture there is nothing I can say to my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister tell this house whether information is correct to the effect that the government of Canada has reached a decision to step out of NATO and NORAD and is contemplating signing an agreement to that effect?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot add to what I have already said. There has been a preliminary meeting and discussion with the United States about NORAD. A great deal would depend on our discussions and negotiations before I could give any final response to my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Winch: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister answer that part of my question which had to do with NATO? Has there been any agreement by the cabinet that Canada will step out of NATO? Is that matter on the agenda next week and will it be discussed? Is Canada to step out of NATO? That is what I am asking.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no terminal arrangement for membership in NATO. In 1969 countries may give notice of their intention not to participate. Canada is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and there is no change in policy in that regard.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. May I ask the minister whether the Bomarc missiles that are presently in Canada are in the process of being removed, or whether they have been removed and will be replaced by something else.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): There is no change in the situation with respect to Bomarc missiles at the present time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MISSION FROM DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to call your attention to the fact that in the Speaker's gallery today are the members of a good-will mission from developing countries who are here preparatory to the UNCTAD meeting to be held in Delhi some time in the next few months. There are distinguished representatives from Brazil, Ghana, Pakistan, Venezuela, Chile and Thailand. I am sure we are very glad to have them in our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

NATIONAL SECURITY

THEFT OF ARMS AT CAP DE LA MADELEINE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General of Canada. I want to ask him if the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has been called in to investigate the theft of shotguns which took place during the last week-end at Cap de la Madeleine?

[English]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice.

AIRPORTS

PROTEST RESPECTING ALLEGED MONOPOLY TAXI SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday, when we were discussing competition between Canadian Pacific Airlines and Air Canada the minister said, as reported on page 5060 of Hansard:

> There are a lot of people who think a little bit of opposition is very healthy, both on international and domestic routes, and that it helps to keep air lines on their toes in providing the kind of services to which the travelling public is entitled.

I wish to ask the minister when competition will be offered to the monopoly taxi firms which operate out of Malton airport, Dorval airport and in Vancouver at the present time.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am having these statements carefully analysed in order to determine the degree of consistency or otherwise in respect of the principle involved.

[Later:]

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I have a question for the Minister of Transport having to do with the taxi service from airports and related to the question posed by the hon. member for York-Humber. Is the minister aware that passengers now have to wait in the limousines leaving Ottawa airport for as long as it takes to fly from Toronto to Ottawa? Does he think this is an attempt to drive people from the limousine service to the taxi service, in which the firm concerned also has a monopoly?

Mr. Hellyer: I will be pleased to receive details from the hon. member with regard to specific instances when he felt there was inadequate service, and consider them with a view to determining where the service could be improved.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Would the minister check at the same time whether it would be possible to organize a second flight from Montreal to Ottawa, Val-d'Or and Rouyn-Noranda?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, I shall be glad to check on the level of traffic generated between those two points and determine whether it would justify an additional flight.

TRADE

SHOES—ALLEGED DUMPING BY COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement by members of the shoe industry of Canada that they are unable to surmount the import situation because of lack of federal co-operation and action with respect to dumping by communist countries, what action does the government propose to take in order to relieve this most important industry, which employs many Canadians?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Perhaps I might answer this question, Mr. Speaker. I have some correspondence about this matter on my desk, and I ask the hon. member's permission to take his question as notice. I shall try to answer tomorrow.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POSSIBLE DISCONTINUANCE OF MAIL TRAIN BETWEEN MONTREAL AND TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Rock (Jacques-Cartier-Lasalle): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the Canadian National thinking of discontinuing the mail train between Montreal and Toronto early next year. If so, why?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member's question might be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REPLY TO PROTEST RESPECTING LAY-OFFS OF SHOP WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the telegrams that are continuing to come from trade unions that represent Canadian Pacific Railway shop workers, can the minister say whether he has yet had a reply from the Canadian Pacific Railway to his representations concerning the lay-offs between Christmas and New Year's?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The reply in part reads as follows:

National and local union leaders were informed three to five days prior to the closure notices being posted in the three shops, in an effort to give as much advance notice as possible and to explain the reason for the closure.

The employees concerned have been assured that the temporary closure does not involve either the Christmas day holiday or the New Year's day holiday, and, as a result, holiday pay will be granted to all those who qualify.

To qualify for holiday pay under the Canada Labour Standards Code and the collective agreement which applies, an employee must have been in the service of the company for at least 30 calendar days and must have been entitled to wages for at least 15 days in the 30-day period preceding the holiday.

As a result, we believe that nearly all of the employees affected by the temporary shop closures should qualify to receive holiday pay for Christmas day and New Year's day.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was there any reply to the representation that I assume the minister made with respect to the loss of the four days themselves?

Mr. Hellyer: So far as I know there has been no reaction to that. Something might have come to my office in the last few hours, but so far as I know I have received nothing directly.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister follow up the matter?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, I shall continue to monitor the situation. I might also add that 22 days' notice was given instead of the four days that are required by the contract. This amount of notice, too, was appreciated and helped to ameliorate the shock of having four days less pay at such a critical time of year.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister look into the complaints which are being made by many railway workers and determine whether it is a coincidence that the four day lay-off has come at the same time the workers are to receive their retroactive pay? In other words, is the company saying to the workers that they have to toe the line?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, some questions do arise in my mind. Of course I shall be pleased to further investigate these allegations, but since this is a private company, which does not come within my administrative responsibility, I think there is some limit to the extent to which I can attempt to answer questions on its behalf. I shall of course be glad to pass on to the company any representations I receive, and I shall relay the answers to my hon. friend.

Mr. Orlikow: May I direct a further supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Will the Minister of Labour see whether this lay-off constitutes an unfair labour practice? I know that suggestion has been made to him.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I shall be glad to look into this matter. My first reaction would be that since 22 days' notice was given, there has been no unfair practice.

EXPO '67

STATEMENT ON GRANTING OF SEVERANCE PAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer two questions on behalf of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters). The first question, by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, had to do with severance pay at Expo '67.

I am advised by the corporation that provision was made in initial planning, in 1963, for continuity payments to employees who remained with the corporation throughout the time required, in excess of one year, to complete their respective tasks. The purpose of such provision was to avoid disruptions which might have occurred from lack of continuity of employment within the staff of the corporation.

The federal government's share will be 50 per cent of the total amount of payment, which has not as yet been determined.

TRADE

STATEMENT ON SIGNING OF INTERNATIONAL GRAIN AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The second question was from the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and had to do with the number of countries which have signed the international grain agreement. As of now the number is 31. This number includes all the major wheat exporting countries and a significant number of major importing countries such as Britain, Japan and the European Economic Community.

It is not unusual for governments to accede to international agreements of this type after the deadline for signing and even after the agreement has come into effect. We have already received indications that some of the governments which did not sign for administrative or other reasons are giving consideration to acceding, and we are hopeful that the membership of the 1967 arrangement will reach or exceed the membership of the current international wheat agreement, which was 49 countries in November of this year.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBLE REMOVAL FROM TRAFFIC DUTY AT AIRPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Solicitor General. Is it correct that the minister intends to remove R.C.M.P. officers from traffic duties at Malton and other airports in order to save highly trained personnel for other purposes?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): We conduct studies from time to time to determine how the mounted police can be put to the best use. As the present moment there are no plans to move any of the constables from Malton airport. However, this is part of an over-all study.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR JOINT MEETING OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND DEFENCE COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Winch (Vancouver East): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is my understanding that the minister and his colleague the Minister of National Defence will be returning from the NATO meeting on December 15. May I ask whether it is the intention of both ministers to call a joint meeting of the external affairs committee and the defence committee to make a report immediately on their return, or will such a meeting be postponed until after the Christmas recess? I ask this question because it is my understanding that both ministers feel there should be a joint meeting. Will a meeting be called prior to the recess, or will it be postponed possibly for a month or two months?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am sure the chairman of the committees concerned will take notice of the question put by the hon. member. I think the suggestion implicit in the question is a good one.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF COMMISSION RESEARCH MATERIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government would consider publishing and making available to hon. members and to the public who pay for it the research material which led the B and B commission to make its recommendations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I understand the commission intends to make all its research material available when it is completed. I doubt whether research material is specially allocated to the particular volume which has just been made public, but I will be glad to look into that.

BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, November 30, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Last Thursday evening I commented briefly on the budget and on what, in my opinion, had been the cause of it all. I said at that time that it all came down to one basic fact, that the government has been grossly overspending.

This whole sorry mess started with the profligate spending which got under way the moment this government took office in 1963. It was obvious to those of us who at that time had recently been on the treasury benches that there was a complete change of attitude. The taxpayers' money was no longer considered to be of any consequence. It was a bureaucratic approach. Many of the ministers in that new cabinet had spent long years in bureaucracy and were accustomed to planning our lives as they saw fit, telling us what we should have and then taxing the Canadian citizens to pay for it. How many of those who sit on the government's front bench had ever stood behind a counter or run a farm or operated a small business or met a payroll?

Mr. McIlraith: Many have.

Mr. Monteith: I have. They were convinced they knew best, and that all the taxpayer had to do was pay for the government's plans, experiments and dreams.

Mr. Dinsdale: Nightmares.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to review briefly the spending of this government since it took office. May I point out that the figures I am using are taken from the budget papers for the years indicated, except for 1968-69 which are the minister's own estimates. The 1967 figures are from supplementary estimates G for that year.

In the first full year in office, 1964, government expenditure amounted to $6,872.4 million. This was an increase of 4.6 per cent over the 1963 figure of $6,570.3 million. In 1965 we saw a very definite trend develop. Expenditure increased to $7,218.3 million, an increase of 5 per cent over the $6,872.4 million figure. In 1966 we find a further increase of 7.1 per cent to $7,734.8 million.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there had apparently been so little complaint concerning the increased taxes required to pay for these increased expenditures that the government really went all out. This is where the march toward disaster really began. In 1967, expenditures jumped to $8,795.6 million. This represented an increase of 13.7 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: The minister's estimate for 1968, given to the provincial ministers of finance at the recent meeting amounted to $9,850 million. Here is an increase of 12 per cent. I would point out that a finance department release of November 24, 1967 shows that the expenditures to date in the 1968 financial year are running 15 per cent over last year. Here we have a true indication of just how this government has disregarded the galloping growth in expenditure.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member wanted to spend more.

Mr. Monteith: Now the minister estimates that the expenditure for 1969 will be $10,300 million. There are no cuts, as we have been led to believe. Actually there is an increase of 4.5 per cent over the 1968 figure. Here is an illustration of the incomprehensible attitude of the government toward spending, and its ruthless disregard of the fact that the spending is now out of hand.

I should like to deal briefly with the manner in which the minister and the government are attempting to hoodwink the public with regard to spending cuts. First let it be made very clear that there are no cuts in next year's expenditures. The minister has stated that they will be 4.5 per cent over those of the present year; that is, the expenditures in 1968-69 will be 4.5 per cent over the expenditures for 1967-68. This is a point which the public should keep in mind when the government talks glibly about cutting back. There are no cut-backs; there are only increases.

The minister says that the details of the cuts will be given by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson). What cuts? Does he mean the cuts in the 1968-69 estimates? The 1968-69 estimates have never been tabled in this house, and until they have been tabled they cannot be discussed. If they are discussed, they must be tabled so that parliament will have them before it. We cannot embark upon a responsible financial discussion on the basis of figures which exist only in the realm of fantasy.

We have dealt with the estimates for 1967-68. The estimates for 1968-69 are not before the house; they have not been tabled. There has been no motion to go into supply; yet, the minister proposes to put before parliament a lengthy discussion dealing with various estimates still to come, and presumably cuts to be made. How does it advance parliament to have the government say here: We have saved a lot of money because we have decided not to go ahead with a number of things which we could have gone ahead with if we had wanted to go ahead with them.

Mr. Sharp: Has the hon. gentleman changed his mind about old age pensions?

Mr. Monteith: That is simply ridiculing parliament. Everyone knows how estimates are drawn up. They are drawn up in the departments. The officials lay down their requirements and meetings are held with Treasury Board officials. Invariably the requirements are reduced in whatever proposition the government of the day thinks best. Up to that point, however, the estimates have no official existence. It is simply a travesty for the minister to come here and place before this house the results of the discussions at the official level.

The estimates have no official existence until passed by Treasury Board and printed in the blue book. If they have been printed in the blue book they should be tabled, and we should go into supply in order to discuss them in the way provided under our rules. If they have not been printed and approved, then they do not exist and we cannot waste the time of this house discussing matters which, as I said, are in the realm of pure fantasy, because the government wants to appear as though it is saving when it really is spending recklessly. The government is not making any cuts; it is still increasing expenditures. This kind of procedure is out of order and is a hoax on all Canadians.

Mr. Sharp: Do you not agree with your leader?

Mr. Monteith: If the government wants to show that it is cutting back on expenditures, let it come before this house with the 1967-68 estimates in printed form. Let it show how much it has reduced the items in those estimates, which are now running 15 per cent above last year. Let this government point out in detailed form what it has cut out or by how much it has reduced the estimates which currently are operative. They said they had reduced the estimates for 1967-68. Those presumed reductions have never been made known. We asked for them when these particular estimates were before parliament for discussion. The fact is that not one single cent has been cut either in 1967-68 or in 1968-69 from the estimates passed by Treasury Board. The minister knows it. He should stop trying to hoodwink the people of this country.

The government has followed a policy that is unrealistic and lacking in honesty. In order to meet the figure of expenditure, namely the $10,300 million which has been proposed, the minister is having to increase personal taxes on the small taxpayer.

Mr. Sharp: That is not so.

Mr. Monteith: Certainly it is. He does not say why he stops this surcharge at the $50,000 income mark, but it is obvious that he intends to take his required money from the average taxpayer.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question of the hon. gentleman? It is just for correction, because I do not think he meant to say what he said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: If the minister has a question of privilege, then let him rise and put it, rather than put it in the form of a question. I did not interrupt him the other night when he was speaking.

I have mentioned that this government has simply taxed in order to pay for what it believes the people of Canada should have, and not what the people of Canada want. We have the minister saying that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Why did he not think of this when he first became minister, or show a semblance of responsibility at the time he was minister of trade and commerce by objecting then to the steps which were being proposed by his colleagues.

He is now lecturing the people of Canada on how they should behave in the circumstances in which we find our economy. The people of Canada must skimp and save. In fact, the minister has been lecturing us ever since he took office. What of the people who, on the assertions of the minister over the past two years, have taken him at his word and have been led to believe they never had it so good? What of those who have on his assurances decided they could afford to buy a house, a car or some other necessities, and now find they are obligated for debts in this respect, with ever and ever increasing interest rates? The minister has not considered these people when he has been continuously increasing taxes. They must meet their obligations with less and less money, because of this government's incessant desire to take away their tax dollars.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Let us look at the plight of a typical Canadian family. Inflation has cost the average Canadian family hundreds of dollars since 1965. The consumer price index stood at 150.5 in October of 1967, based on the 1949 figure of 100. It hovered just over 150 for four months. In December of 1965 the index was 140.8. This indicates the fabulous jump of 10 points in less than two years. This means that every wage earner has lost plenty because of the depreciation of the dollar.

Someone earning $5,000 as of December, 1965, is now receiving only $4,666. What does this mean to the average person? Let me give an illustration from the taxation statistics for the year 1965, which are the latest available, by referring to my home city of Stratford. The average income of those in Stratford who paid income tax was $4,527. They paid an average of $485 in income tax, leaving $4,042 to live on, to pay interest, municipal taxes, rent, food, clothing and all other miscellaneous expenses. Granted, they probably have had some increases in income since then.

Supposing someone was receiving the same number of dollars today as he received in 1965, as is probably the case in respect of many on fixed income. Do you realize how much has been lost to that individual, even without taking into account the change in the level of taxation? That $4,042 figure in 1965 is worth only $3,772 today. Rising costs have gobbled up $270 of that average taxpayer's income. Let us not forget that this is based on the 1965 figure and the tax being collected at that time. Since then this government increased personal income tax in March and in December of 1966. Without taking into account the increases in taxation of March and December 1966, or the increase which is to be put on now, that taxpayer with an average income of $4,527 has $3,772 left today because of inflation. On the basis of today's taxation this would be much less.

The government proposes to increase taxes again. Is it any wonder the average Canadian citizen cannot make ends meet? It is my claim that this government is responsible for the situation. The minister says he is going to eliminate budget deficits as nearly as possible for next year. There must be a clear understanding about cutting back of government expenditures.

Mr. Sharp: Now you are opposing this?

Mr. Monteith: The minister has been talking for weeks about cutting back.

Mr. Sharp: Without any encouragement from the other side.

Mr. Monteith: The other night he was forced to admit that he could not cut back, but could control the amount of increase. I do not believe he can even do that.

Mr. Sharp: Not with the support of the opposition.

Mr. Monteith: The minister has placed a surtax of 5 per cent on Canadian taxpayers to meet his cash situation. I want it clearly understood, and this is in reply to the interjection by the minister a moment ago, that this party is not against government spending for productive, positive projects. There is nothing new about that stand which was made clear by the leader of this party in his recent speech on a supply motion. What we are against is waste, uncontrolled and undisciplined spending for the sake of spending of the kind indulged in at least up to now by this government.

The minister gave corporations a refundable tax. I am sure that the individual Canadian taxpayer would appreciate a refundable tax, but as usual this Liberal government has come down heavily on the individual. Actually, corporations have come out best in this whole deal. They do not face any increase in taxes like Mr. Average Canadian faces. Even though corporations are going to pay their income tax some two months earlier than formerly, they are definitely going to receive the refundable tax which was levied on them after the 1966 budget. If this government remains in office much longer these corporations will probably be paying current taxes in advance of the year in which they are applicable. Could not the minister have considered the plight of the average taxpayer and made this 5 per cent surcharge refundable? This could then have given a lift to the economy when the government, if ever, dropped the 5 per cent surcharge, and again when it was refunded.

Let us review briefly the history of this government's taxing policy since it assumed office in 1963.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, we can't stand that.

Mr. Monteith: This started with the ill-fated effort of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) in June, 1963, and I will not outline all the backing and filling in which the minister of that day subsequently had to participate. Let me remind the house that this policy was full of wild experiments and partisan jibes. Let me further point out exactly how that budget was the first step taken by this government toward the calamitous state in which we find the economic affairs of Canada today. I am not going to enumerate all the various and somewhat minor changes,—and most of the major changes suggested by the minister of that day were abandoned,—but I should like to bring to your attention and recall that in the budget of 1963 the minister proposed an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and machinery. Under pressure this was subsequently amended to 4 per cent to March 31, 1964, 8 per cent to December 31, 1964 and 11 per cent thereafter.

Mr. Sharp: Because of the big budgetary deficit of the previous Conservative government.

Mr. Monteith: This government was warned then that it was contributing toward the inflationary trend and would substantially increase the cost of housing and construction as a whole. I remember the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) getting up in his place, down the aisle a little bit, attempting to defend that budget and the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and machinery. He is just as responsible as any member of the treasury benches, including the then minister of finance. This house knows that as a result of that 11 per cent sales tax the cost of housing has skyrocketed at the expense of the average taxpayer in Canada.

So far I have only been discussing budgettary matters, but I think at this time I should mention that on September 30, 1963 the old age security tax on personal income was increased by 1 per cent, with a ceiling of $120. This was to cover the increase in old age security of $10 per month which came into effect on the same date.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I think it is fair to point out, however, that it was only as a result of the efforts of the then right hon. leader of the opposition that the government was forced to capitulate and grant this increase to our hard-pressed elder citizens.

The net budget was brought down on March 16, 1964. There were no changes in income or sales tax rates. But let us recall that on April 1, 1964, the sales tax on building materials and machinery was increased from 4 per cent to 8 per cent and that as of January 1, 1965, it was to be further increased to 11 per cent.

On April 26, 1965, we had the last budget of the then minister of finance. He gave us a 10 per cent income tax reduction. Despite the denials of the government at that time, it was a pre-election budget; and such, of course, it turned out to be. We all recall the fact that when the house adjourned for the summer recess we were to come back in the early fall, but instead of that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), at the suggestion of the then minister of finance, decided to go to the country. The government was returned, again in a minority position, and according to the figures I mentioned earlier with regard to increased expenditures, this was about the time those expenditures began to skyrocket. So did taxation.

Following the election the present Minister of Finance brought down a budget on March 29, 1966, the main achievement of which was to restore practically all the tax cuts which had been made prior to the election. He also imposed a refundable profits tax on business. At the same time the minister injected one of his famous exhortations about spending restraints while announcing the government's plans to increase spending which, as I have pointed out, was done to the tune of 13.7 per cent. He has maintained that level of consistency ever since.

Then came the mini-budget which doubled the old age security tax; it went from $120 to $240 per year. That budget also added 1 per cent to the sales tax, which increased from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. This tax increase, covering almost everything, hurt everybody but most of all those in the low income bracket and those on fixed incomes, particularly the recipients of old age security. This was the Christmas present for Canadian taxpayers on December 19, 1966.

Mr. Grafftey: Scrooge.

Mr. Monteith: Then on June 1, 1967, came the next Sharp budget.

An hon. Member: It was sharp, all right.

Mr. Monteith: It was described by the press as a "do nothing" budget. It did nothing concrete about inflation; it did nothing to reduce taxes; it did nothing for the farmer, the businessman or the consumer. The white paper said that prices rose 4.6 per cent during the year. The budget did nothing about that. All it did was exhort Canadians, not the government, to tighten their belts.

Now we find the minister in a familiar position where he must bring in another face saving budget to correct the omissions of his last budget. Last Thursday night, when he was delivering his so-called budget message to the House of Commons, one gained the impression that he was doing his level best to explain away the predicament we are in, so that Canadian citizens would believe there are circumstances afoot over which he really does not have any control.

[Mr. Monteith.]

I admitted last Thursday evening that there is turbulence in the financial and economic community at large. But upon re-reading his message I cannot help but believe that the government has obviously been working on a razor's edge in its fiscal policies. The minister admitted that his cash reserves were at rock bottom until new cash was obtained and he had great difficulty borrowing on the financial markets. He now says that in the next 16 months he will be going frequently to the money market.

Once again we will have the government siphoning off for non-productive purposes capital which might far better be made available for the development of this nation. Everybody knows the increases in taxation which the minister imposed in the budget he delivered the other evening, so I will not enumerate them again. I simply say that they are to the detriment of the average Canadian and are as a result of gross mismanagement by this minister and his government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: Resign.

Mr. Monteith: There are so many criticisms to offer on the mismanagement by this government that really I cannot cover them all, or come close to doing so. I suggest that my colleagues who follow me in this debate will be dealing with them in some detail and will in specific instances lay before the government evidence of how they have been completely incompetent in handling the affairs of this country.

I should like to quote briefly some statistics to indicate that the trend this government has taken is at the expense of our economic situation as a whole, and the individual Canadian. These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the figures. Federal government spending was 15 per cent higher for the first seven months of this year. In regard to the number of unemployed, there has been a large increase over the situation of a year ago. Consumer prices in October were 3.6 per cent higher than those of October, 1966. Imports in October were up 5.5 per cent over the same month in 1966. Exports for October, 1967, were down 6.3 per cent compared with October of 1966. Gross national product is increasing at a rate of about 7 per cent, of which about half represents price increases.

Mr. Stanfield: Much more than half.

Mr. Monteith: Wheat shipments in August and September, 1967, were 52 million bushels. Shipments of wheat in August and September of 1966 were 116.7 million bushels.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Monteith: One of the important growth indicators, the index of industrial production, rose 2.7 per cent in the first nine months of this year compared with an average of 5.7 per cent over the 20 year period 1946 to 1966. This represents a very definite sag in the index of industrial production.

Mr. Sharp: From the highest levels in our history.

Mr. Starr: This points up that we need a new government.

Mr. Monteith: In the 14 years and a few months that I have been in this House of Commons I do not remember such a unanimous condemnation of a government's handling of our financial and fiscal affairs, nor such unanimous alarm at what the government has been doing.

Mr. Sharp: And I have never heard such a speech, except from the hon. member.

Mr. Monteith: There is also unanimous concern about this budget, which is supposed to rectify the situation. I would like to put on the record, Mr. Speaker, just a few excerpts of editorial opinion across this country to show I am not the only one who feels this way, but that it is the unanimous opinion in the country. I would like to read this paragraph from the Globe and Mail of December 1, 1967:

• (3:50 p.m.)

At a time when he is urging restraints on everyone else, he will increase Canadians' taxes to pay for the government's own lack of restrain and to reduce his need for going to a money market where he has already worn out his welcome. There is not an atom of deflation in this budget.

The following statement is from the Toronto daily Star of December 1, 1967:

Mr. Sharp bears the responsibility for the fiscal mistakes that were made. He will have to explain to the nation why he removed the ceiling on the rate at which banks lend money and thus contributed to the rise in interest rates.

He will have to explain why he waited so long before trying to cut his deficit.

Now, when he has finally recognized the government cannot go on living beyond its means, he will have to defend a budget that tries to deal with present inflation with future promises.

The Toronto Telegram of December 1 wrote the following:

The minister has now revealed what Canadians have suspected all along. The cut in expenditures promised by Ottawa wasn't actually reductions, but rather deletions in departmental estimates that had been before cabinet for approval.

Again in the same editorial we find the following statement:

The time has come when the government should provide direction. The latest taxes announced by Mr. Sharp will have to be boosted still more in next spring's budget to meet the costs of medicare.

The 4.5 per cent hike in spending, to be followed by another increase next year, isn't going to sit well with the Canadian people who are being told to tighten their belts.

As Conservative leader Robert Stanfield said last night: "The whole thing is a costly misjudgment on the government's part that won't help restore confidence in it."

The following is a brief comment from the Hamilton Spectator of December 1:

Let's get things back into perspective and see where the government fits in.

It is introducing these additional taxes to bail itself out of a hole, not the people. They are getting no new services for this added sacrifice.

The Windsor Star of December 1 wrote the following:

It will be an unpopular budget. It applies to five out of every six income taxpayers and all who smoke or drink. Those of modest means, already living from hand to mouth, will be hit the hardest. They are on the fringe where every dollar counts and already had no money to spare.

The following is an excerpt from the Montreal Gazette of December 2:

If Mr. Sharp were to take away the new tax dollars, and set them carefully aside, so that the people could not spend them and so that the government would not spend them itself, then this would make clear sense as an anti-inflationary measure. But every dollar that will be taken in the higher taxes will be spent. Why is government spending supposed to be less inflationary than private spending?

The government explains that the new tax money will enable it to reduce its deficit. It will need to go to the bond market for less borrowing. This will reduce the pressure on the bond market, and may result in lower rates of interest.

That is all to the good. But why not accomplish the same end by cutting the government's overspending to the point where the need to borrow would be proportionately reduced?

The following comment is from the Toronto Globe and Mail of December 2:

Government policy has unleashed a tiger that is snarling instead of purring and it does not quite know how to handle it.

Then I wish to quote a humorous comment made by George Bain in his column in the Globe and Mail of December 2. It reads as follows:

It's hard even now to keep a straight face about those economies in government which the Minister of Finance has been promising to bring out of his hat any day—that is, any day for the past two months.

The following is an excerpt from the Toronto daily Star of December 2:

The main weight of his mini-budget falls on the back of the ordinary wage-earning family which is already hard-pressed to meet the inflationary rise in living costs.

Further on it continues:

The ordinary wage earner is already having a difficult time coping with the rising cost of housing, food and clothing, caused in part by Mr. Sharp's mishandling of the economy in the past year.

Now he is blithely asked to lay out an average increase of $40 in personal income tax to help pay for the finance minister's miscalculations.

He is also asked to accept the increased risk of unemployment as a direct result of the Sharp budget.

The following is a quotation from the Financial Times of Canada of December 4:

The mini-budget is not, as it appears, a futile charge "into the jaws of death, into the mouth of hell". It is an over dramatized package of rather desperate devices to keep the federal government solvent by reducing the gap between expenditures and revenues to an amount which it can reasonably expect to be able to borrow.

Further on it continues:

Until then—

This refers to some needed clarifications by the minister.

—Mr. Sharp can hardly expect his little tax devices to be accepted as a serious attack on inflation rather than an attempt to atone for the sins of yesteryear.

I think it is obvious what has happened. As I said earlier, my colleagues who will be following me in this debate will deal with the Carter report, the Kennedy round tariff negotiations, and many other matters. I have tried to demonstrate the cost to Mr. Average Canadian of what this government has been doing, particularly over the last two years, by way of increasing taxes and by its lack of action to combat inflation.

The cost of living has risen sky high. I gave the illustration of a typical Stratford family. I have never seen such a mass of opinion and such a mass of evidence clearly indicating that the government has erred beyond redemption.

[Mr. Monteith.]

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Régimbal):

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefore:

This house regrets that the government by its vacillation and its failure to manage the economic and financial affairs of the country in a responsible manner has created a situation of instability and uncertainty, and has now proposed an increase in taxes to meet governmental extravagance, thus contributing to the inflationary pressures of the economy.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not have the amendment in written form in my hand at the moment, but it is quite clear to me from listening to the hon. member, when he read it, that the substance of the amendment has been dealt with at least twice during the current session. I wonder if Your Honour would therefore be good enough to wait until I have a copy of the amendment before I advance the argument which I am sure will convince Your Honour that it is completely out of order.

Now that I have the amendment before me I wish to speak on the point of order. I draw Your Honour's attention first to the amendment which was moved in the house on June 6 and on which a vote was taken on October 10. Without agreeing with any of the words contained in the amendment, this was the question put before the house when the vote was taken and negatived on October 10. At that time the same hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) moved:

• (4:00 p.m.)

This government has failed miserably to set an example of responsibility by its refusal to reduce taxation—

Then, a number of other matters were mentioned. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the meaning of the amendment is exactly the same as the complaint made now in so far as the levels of taxation are concerned. The reference now is to the proposed increase in taxation.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the other prong of the amendment we have before us relates to the vaccilation and the government's failure to manage the economic and financial affairs of the country in a responsible manner. I suggest to Your Honour this part of the amendment means essentially the same thing. The substance of it is essentially the same as the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on November 20, as recorded on page 4468 of Hansard:

> This house regrets that the mismanagement of this government has endangered the rate of economic growth—

I suggest to you that the charge of mismanagement by the government is essentially the same in substance as the present amendment, which refers to the failure of the government to manage the economic system properly.

An hon. Member: You are wasting the time of the house.

Mr. Olson: The substance of these amendments is exactly the same. If you look at citation 194, Mr. Speaker, on page 164 of Beauchesne, you will find this:

> A motion or amendment cannot be brought forward which is the same in substance as a question which has already been decided,—

It does not say the same wording; it says the same in substance.

> —because a proposition being once submitted and carried in the affirmative or negative cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house.

The substance of this amendment has been before this house at least twice. For the record, just so hon. members opposite can be brought up to date, the substance of the amendment before the house on October 10 was negatived by a vote of 113 to 68. This house therefore clearly indicated that it did not agree, for example, that the government has failed miserably to set an example of responsibility. The house voted against that proposition.

Mr. Nowlan: How did you vote at that time?

Mr. Olson: I forget the exact date when we were considering this amendment by the then leader of the opposition, which complained about mismanagement and failure to adjust taxes, which is the same in substance; but that amendment was negatived by the house. I could go on and quote chapters from Beauchesne and from May, but I do not believe Your Honour needs to be convinced that the substance of any motion that has already been dealt with by the house cannot be brought forward again during the same session. This amendment is clearly out of order.

In addition to citation 194, there is citation 200 in Beauchesne which reads:

> An old rule of parliament reads: "That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house."

Then the author goes on to explain this proposition.

> Unless such a rule were in existence, the time of the house might be used in the discussion of motions of the same nature and contradictory decisions would be sometimes arrived at in the course of the same session.

I suggest therefore, Mr. Speaker, that you rule accordingly. It is almost incredible to me that the opposition would not look up and at least read the amendments they have moved in this house to make sure that this amendment would be in order. When I was listening to the hon. member who moved the amendment, it seemed clear to me the kind of amendment he was going to try to move. I had quite a bit of time while he was rambling through a bunch of statistics to look up these other amendments and the citations supporting the argument I have made.

Mr. Ricard: You should have been listening instead.

Mr. Olson: I listened very carefully. I hope Your Honour will take into consideration particularly citations 194 and 200. I am sure you will be convinced then that the substance of this amendment the opposition is attempting to move is essentially the same as the last two amendments that have been before the house in this session.

Mr. Baldwin: I submit, to start with, that it is quite obvious the learned authors who wrote the present edition of Beauchesne could not have had in mind such an incredibly inept government as the one we have now. I want to congratulate the government on receiving such a brilliant addition to their ranks. Having in mind his days in opposition, and knowing what kind of government he would have to deal with, the hon. member obviously contemplated the kind of motion an intelligent, well informed opposition would make as an amendment. Obviously it would be a motion criticizing this government for its vacillation, and its failure to manage the economic and financial affairs of the country. He obviously was prepared for the kind of motion which it was the duty of an opposition party to move. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be in order to say that every day of every year which this government stays in power it would be competent for us to move a motion, if the machinery were provided, to the effect that the government, by its vacillation and failure to manage the economic and financial affairs of the country, no longer commanded the confidence of the people.

However, I do want to point out that the operative part of the amendment is that which states that the government has now proposed increases in taxes to meet governmental extravagance. I point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is the second budget during this session. Surely in a situation where the government has seen fit, for reasons to which the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) has alluded, to bring in a budget proposing increases in taxes, to which we take legitimate objection, we are entitled to say we object because the government, in its actions leading up to the proposal to add to the tax burdens of the Canadian people, has vacillated in its policy and mismanaged the financial and economic affairs of the country.

How else would it be possible for us to take exception to the government's most unwise and unjust proposal to increase taxation, without referring to the reasons why, in our opinion, it was necessary to do so? This is the second budget in one session. Surely if the rules make any sense at all they permit us to make a motion of this kind, a motion of non-confidence in the government, and to give our reasons for doing so without any reference to an amendment that may have been moved before.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I believe the only reason the question is being debated at the present time as to the acceptability or otherwise of this motion is that the question was raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson). In substance he was trying to point out something that is well known in this house. Certainly the hon. member is not so incredibly naïve as to believe that the members of the opposition are not well aware of motions made in this house on any and all subjects.

• (4:10 p.m.)

May I point out that the chief complaint of the hon. member was against the motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on November 20. That motion dealt with the rate of economic growth: There is no mention in this motion of the rate of economic growth. The earlier motion mentions the prospects of satisfactory levels of employment: The present motion says nothing about the levels of employment. Then the motion of November 20 refers to the ability of individual Canadians to meet their own commitments: That is not mentioned in the motion now before us.

As my colleague from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) indicated, Mr. Speaker, this motion protests against the government increasing taxes after the delivery of a budget speech by the minister. This is an entirely new matter and is now before the house. The government proposes a tax increase. The motion objects to this tax increase and to the fact that the economic tool proposed by the government will not achieve the end for which it is designed. That is the substance of the motion.

Merely because use is made a second time of the same words in a descriptive or ancillary way, such as "inflationary", "economic" and "the government" does not vitiate the validity of the amendment, so the argument put forward by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) is reduced to absurdity. I put it to Your Honour that the operative part of the motion, as indicated by my colleague from Peace River, protests against an increase in taxes and also suggests that the increase in taxes will not achieve the end desired by the government. It has nothing to do with any previous motions before the house during this session.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the argument put forward by the hon. members for Edmonton West and Peace River (Messrs. Lambert and Baldwin).

It is obvious that the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) could have quoted every section in Beauchesne to no avail; he erred in his original premise, when he said that this amendment was identical in concept and substance to the two previous amendments. It is not the same thing at all. As a matter of fact, his argument is entirely wrong, since the premises are false.

Here, the objection is against those tax increases. In the other two amendments, there was no mention of them at all. It may be that like causes produce unlike effects, but the difference lies in that today's amendment is concerned with tax increases, while the others dealt with the increase in the cost of living. Similar causes can bring about different results and I wonder how the hon. member for Medicine Hat can reach the conclusion that it is in principle exactly the same amendment. It is astonishing to see how he can make a mistake at the outset, by suggesting it.

That is why I feel the premises of the hon. member for Medicine Hat are clearly unsound and the amendment should be accepted, because I fail to see how it could be similar to others.

We are faced today with another unusual situation: an increase in taxes which was not mentioned in the other two amendments. That is why I think the amendment is quite in order.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that Your Honour is in the position of having to pioneer a bit. The rules under which we operate, and which are the basis for the citations that Beauchesne gives us contemplated only one budget a year.

Mr. Pascoe: Not three.

Mr. Knowles: No more than one at any rate. As a matter of fact, we have had to agree in the house that, though standing order 58, which sets out the rules relating to the budget speaks of "the budget presentation", when we have a second budget in the same session we have to deal with it under the same rule. I suggest therefore that the citations and pronouncements relating to the old situation, where there was only one budget a year, do not help Your Honour very much today.

The fact is that today we have a new budget, and the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) has proposed an amendment dealing with a new situation. Despite the fact that the amendment is several lines in length, it really hinges on this concept—and I quote from the amendment—"and has now proposed an increase in taxes". Thus the amendment relates itself, and I say in its entirety to an increase in taxes that has now been proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). Because this is a new situation, Mr. Speaker, I suggest you cannot rely on the citations which envisage a session in which only one budget is brought down.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that you are going to have to give some pretty serious thought to the citations that say in general that the same subject cannot be dealt with a second time. But I do not think you will have trouble with that, because what is being commented on now is something that was not before us when the previous amendments were moved, namely an increase in taxes proposed by the Minister of Finance last Thursday night. It is in this new situation that the amendment has been made, and I believe, all things considered, Your Honour will have to find that this amendment is in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who indicates quite clearly that what we have here is a new budget with new resolutions and that, in these circumstances, the amendment of the Conservative party is quite in order.

Furthermore, the member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) should know from experience that when he sat with the Créditistes, here, amendments were moved against the government and substantially, Social Credit proposals were always included in such amendments. At that time, the member for Medicine Hat did not object to the Chair accepting these amendments. Today, he is objecting because he has become a Liberal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this exceptional situation should be taken into account when a member prefers to set his electors aside and join a political party which is not supported by his own voters.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has already spoken once to the point of order.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I feel you are in a rather difficult position in reaching a decision at this stage.

Mr. Régimbal: Not at all. You are.

Mr. Sharp: The reason I say that I understand you may have some difficulty is not only for the technical reason spoken to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but also for the reason of substance.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, in the first budget debate the position members condemned the government at a time when we reduced taxes for exactly the same reasons that they are now condemning us for increasing taxes. It must be very difficult for you, Mr. Speaker, to distinguish between the cases, and I think it does indicate that even though there appears to have been a change in leadership, it is just the same old group arguing the same old platitudes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crouse: Is that the best contribution you can make?

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Let me say at the outset that I will accept the amendment, and I do so for the following reasons. I recognize the difficult position that the Chair is in at the moment, having particular regard to the citations which have been given by hon. members. I am quite familiar with citations 194 and 200; there is no need for me to repeat them. I must also pay attention to the fact that these citations, if they are to apply to a budget debate, were written when there was only one budget. That I think is an important point.

May I proceed further and say that I agree with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin); the operative part of the amendment which we have before us is an increase in taxes, which could not have been discussed on any earlier occasion.

I shall also say this to the house. If citation 194 is to stand and we apply that citation with its full force, as if there were only one budget, then I would have some doubt about the presentation of the budget we are now considering being in order.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the house therefore has allowed the budget, then I think that the house must allow the amendment.

Mr. Crouse: Any comment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ought to point out, too, that if the amendment is out of order, since the amendment deals mainly with a tax increase I would have some difficulty in ruling any subsequent speeches in this budgetary debate to be in order. These are the two matters that bothered me particularly.

I recognize the force of citation 194 and I am familiar with citation 200. In the time that I have been in the house I know that we have never permitted discussion of the same topic more than once during the same session. I recognize that; but this, I believe is a special occasion. I think I must look at citations 194 and 200 with some leniency. For these reasons as I have said, I shall allow this amendment.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in our opinion the budget which is now before the house is unnecessary and contradictory. It is thoroughly inequitable. It treats the corporations with loving kindness, while placing unjust income and other taxes on the working people of this country.

The budget, Mr. Speaker, is designed, and designed deliberately, to increase unemployment in the next year and to slow down the rate of growth. There have been four budgets in about 18 months and five budget speeches by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). Indeed, I am tempted to say that the minister will go down in Canadian political history as "Two Budget Mitch" who was shooting from the lip most of the time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: Coming in the wake of three similar budgets in the short space of about one year and a half, the present budget underlines the government's utter failure to manage the economy. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the minister's main concern is the financial market. The main aim of the budget is to soothe the tender nerves of the financial institutions.

When on many occasions over the years, spokesmen of our party have said that Canadian governments too often have been influenced and guided by the views and objectives of the large financial and industrial corporations, we have been scoffed at. I say to you that this budget is proof conclusive that we have been right and are right in that condemnation.

Mr. Greene: A nineteenth century speech.

Mr. Lewis: In short—

Mr. Byrne: How about Wilson?

Mr. Lewis: This is not a budget which is just or forward looking. This is a budget which favours, ultimately, the rich and powerful corporations at the expense of the average people of this country.

Mr. Greene: The hon. member is making a nineteenth century speech.

Mr. Lewis: In my considered opinion—and I say this despite the interjections of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) who may not have had time to read the budget—no language is strong enough to condemn the social callousness and economic folly of this budget.

Mr. Byrne: How about the folly of socialism?

Mr. Lewis: To cap this callousness and folly, the minister blandly jettisons the Carter report, giving reasons for doing so which make clear that the government accepts, holus-bolus, the objections of the vested interests which are threatened by the search in the report for equity and justice.

Given the choice between the present unjust and inequitable tax system and a radically new tax system which would lift the unfair burden from the backs of ordinary Canadians and place it where it belongs, on the backs of the rich and powerful, the government deliberately has chosen to stay with the unjust and inequitable tax system. That is the characteristic of this budget.

The minister says that he is trying to fight inflation. I suggest to him that his budget may well do the opposite in the short run; and in the longer run it will cost hundreds of millions of dollars in lost production through increased unemployment, and millions of dollars in lost revenues to the treasury. It is obvious surely that the present inflationary pressures are not due to excess demand, except perhaps in the field of housing. As the economists put it, the present inflation is a cost-push inflation and not a demand-pull type. To reduce aggregate demand through personal income taxes cannot affect the situation—certainly, it cannot affect it in the short run—except adversely.

I have little doubt that the added taxes, which fall mainly on the working people of this country, will spur some of them to make higher wage demands; at least the tax will make it much harder to restrain them. This will add to the cost-push situation and will not improve it. I cannot imagine that the minister and the government are unaware of these elementary facts. Why did they, then, impose these unfair, unnecessary and dangerous income taxes? I appreciate that the increase is not very large; but it is significant and important.

I can find only three possible explanations for the government's action in this respect. First, I have had the distinct impression, in four budgets, that the minister uses the income tax as a severe teacher uses the cane, to teach the people a lesson. Whether an income tax rise is economically or socially sound, it is good for the soul, says the minister. It will teach the people not to want too much—too much, that is to say, according to the gospel of the powerful in the land, which he accepts.

Second, the government and the minister hope, apparently, to persuade the professional money lenders that the minister can be relied on to be cautious, conservative and, above all, tough on the right people—not, God forbid, on the financial institutions or other large corporations. They may confidently expect only sympathetic consideration. So, hopes the minister, they will surely be persuaded to take up large government issues and reissues which must be floated in 1968.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The third reason for this added income tax is that in the long run the budget looks forward to an increase in unemployment to cure inflationary pressures. The minister admitted as much when he said that his policies might "limit somewhat the increase in our production next year." This is a careful way of admitting that he fully expects more unemployment next year. At all events, he later told us that he does not expect the present rate of employment to be increased except to an extent about in proportion to the growth of our labour force. This is certainly an admission that the minister does not expect the present unemployment rate to fall. I say that the present level of unemployment is already too high to be complacent about; it is 4.7 per cent of the labour force nationally, and substantially more than that in the Atlantic provinces and certain other parts of Canada.

Furthermore, if the rate of growth of the economy slows down as the minister expects, admits and desires, unemployment is bound to increase. Indeed all the major indicators now show a levelling off or a slowing down of the economy. This, therefore is the explicit and implicit objective of the budget—a deliberate and calculated increase in unemployment. What an objective. And what a budget.

I know that this kind of policy has been tried before and it has been tried elsewhere. It has never worked, and we of the New Democratic party reject as ineffective and cruel a policy of deliberately creating unemployment. It is ineffective because of its cost in terms of loss of production and in the cost of welfare. It is cruel because of its social and human cost right across the country.

The minister says he needs additional revenues. In one sense it is doubtful whether at the turn-down of the cycle, when economic activity is levelling off or slowing down, it is wise to increase taxes at all and seek to reduce the deficit. That our economy is slowing down, the minister himself admitted when he said:

> The result of these recent changes in the sustaining forces in the economy has been a slowing down in the rate of growth of production, a slight downturn in total employment and a rise last month in unemployment. The economy has ceased to be under the serious strain it experienced last year and has developed a small amount of spare capacity.

In these circumstances one does not seek to reduce aggregate demand. There is more than a small amount of spare capacity available and the minister's intention of making it a large amount is nothing less than reprehensible.

But even if it is granted that the minister should raise additional revenue at this time, was the placing of an unfair and inequitable additional burden of income tax on working people the only way in which he could have obtained that revenue? I say emphatically that it was not—that it was the last source he should have considered. I can put the point no more strongly than did the Toronto Star in an editorial of December 2, part of which reads as follows:

Finance Minister Mitchell Sharp merits severe criticism for the unfair manner in which he has chosen to apply the new tax burden.

The main weight of his mini-budget falls on the back of the ordinary wage-earning family which is already hard pressed to meet the inflationary rise in living costs.

Later, the editorial goes on:

It lets off scot free those powerful, fat cat industries—

Those are not my words; they are the words used in this editorial from the Toronto Star, —insurance, oil and mining—which for years have received almost a free tax ride at the expense of the Canadian public.

Indeed, Mr. Sharp has virtually assured these industries that they will be permitted to continue enjoying the special tax privileges they now get.

I agree with the statement in this editorial. I say that even if the government was not prepared to implement the general principles of the Carter report—and I shall have something to say about that later—there was no reason in the world why in the search for additional revenue the minister should not have imposed at least some of the fair and equitable taxes which that report recommended. Removing the special concessions given to mining and oil corporations, and to insurance companies, would have yielded him almost all the revenue he will raise by soaking the working people of this country by way of additional income tax and added taxes on liquor and tobacco. From these two sources the minister expects to raise $280 million in the next fiscal year. Even on the basis of the 1964 calculations in the Carter report, removal of the special concessions to the mining, oil and insurance companies would yield over $200 million. If, to this, the minister had added even a relatively modest capital gains tax, as he should have done, he would have been able to raise a further $100 million or $200 million—or, according to the Carter commission, as much as $300 million in additional revenue.

Instead of imposing extra burdens on the ordinary people of this country the minister could have resorted to these sources which were available to him, and thus have gone a little way toward offsetting the imbalance and inequity of our tax system. But this is obviously not the objective of the government. I say there is no possible excuse for imposing additional taxes on the people when there are available to the minister sources in the rich corporations capable of providing additional revenue, even if it is admitted that additional revenue is needed.

This striking difference between the treatment accorded working people and the loving care accorded to wealthy and powerful corporations runs right through the budget. Even the income tax is imposed in a totally unfair way. I have tried to find some reason—perhaps the minister will enlighten me on this at some point—for the cut-off of the surcharge at the level of $600. I can find no justification whatsoever for this, other than the government's determination to be considerate to those who need consideration least, and to be ruthless to those who need consideration most.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. gentleman like to know, now? He could not have read my budget speech, because I said we reversed the process of 1965; when we reduced taxes by 10 per cent we reduced them only to a limit of $600. In putting them back, we simply reversed the process.

Mr. Lewis: We have now heard the minister's explanation, and it is just as invalid as was the original decision. It simply underlines what I have said, that the only reason for the insupportable and indefensible cut-off at $600 is the inclination of the minister to be kind to those who do not need his kindness and to be unkind to those who do need his kindness. Thus, a person earning an income of $50,000 will pay a surcharge of only $600, when on the basis of the 5 per cent he would have had to pay somewhat above an additional $1,000. I suppose it was thought that the $100 exemption, which means an additional $5 to those at the lower level, could be traded off against an exemption of $400 at the upper level.

Mr. Sharp: Not so.

Mr. Lewis: This is an example of the cynical morality of this government.

Mr. Sharp: That shows how cynical the hon. gentleman is.

Mr. Lewis: Look at the tender treatment given to the corporations. First, there is to be no increase in corporation taxes; those cannot be touched. The only so-called burden placed on corporations will be that instead of beginning to pay their taxes in the fifth month of the taxation year they will now be required to begin paying them in the third month. That is really rough, as one of my hon. friends says. I am not impressed by this step, though I do not object to it. After all, a worker, whether he receives wages or a salary, whether he works in a plant or an office, whether he is an office boy or an executive, begins his instalment payments with his very first pay cheque in the taxation year. I imagine therefore that the corporations will not be terribly upset by the slight adjustment the minister has introduced.

In short, the burden of this budget falls entirely on the ordinary Canadian. The mining, oil and insurance companies continue to enjoy undeserved concessions. The corporations generally get off scot free. Capital gains remain untouched. No wonder the Toronto Star says that this is a budget which favours rich industries at the expense of the average Canadian. This is exactly what it does.

There is a great deal of talk in this house and outside the house about cutting government expenditures. I expect we will hear today or tomorrow from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) where the government intends to reduce the expenditures. In a moment I wish to repeat a suggestion we have made many times and which my leader made in this house as recently as November 20 concerning where massive cuts in expenditures can and should be made. However, at this point I should like to say very frankly that while the New Democratic party shares the universal desire that all unnecessary expenditures be trimmed, that all wastage be got rid of and that the public service be made as efficient as possible, we do not agree that the public sector is expendable; we do not agree that any of the basic services which are needed to give some security and comfort to the Canadian people should be cut; we do not agree that such an indispensable part of our social security system as medicare is should be delayed or eroded.

We do not agree that the first inadequate steps taken to encourage industrial research and development leading to improvement in productivity should be slowed down. We do not agree that any of the expenditures related to industrial development in disadvantaged regions of Canada should be curtailed; indeed, we believe they should be increased and accelerated. We do not agree that the totally inadequate federal program on housing should be tampered with at a time of a serious housing crisis.

It is our firm conviction—and I put it very frankly to members of the house, Mr. Speaker—that our modern technological age requires more and not less government involvement, more and not less government participation in the economy and a larger, not smaller public sector not only in the fields of social security and welfare but also in the fields of economic planning and development. This is where we differ fundamentally from both the government party and the Conservative party.

The spokesman for the official opposition who preceded me repeated that party's criticism of government expenditures and that party's demands for cuts in those expenditures. He did not indicate in his present speech any more than any other spokesman for the Conservative party has indicated exactly where they want the cuts in expenditures to be made. I believe they have a duty to tell parliament and the people of Canada exactly what government programs they want cut off or reduced.

Mr. Sharp: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Indeed throughout this and earlier sessions of parliament—certainly throughout the two sessions of parliament since the 1965 election—I have heard Conservative spokesmen demand—and we have supported the demands—that old age pensions be increased, that assistance to the provinces be increased, that other social security measures be increased and that assistance to housing be increased.

Mr. Speaker, if one is honest he must realize that these things cannot be done without an increase in the expenditures of the government. Furthermore, if one is honest he must recognize that when we increase the programs of the government we must increase the size of the public service of the government, because programs cannot be carried out without the people to do the work that needs to be done. I suggest that one is being utterly irresponsible when he demands cuts in expenditures and at the same time demands these increases in services and costs. I am certain, however, that the spokesmen for the official opposition will not make clear what programs they want to have cut, because they know perfectly well that the people of Canada will not stand for the erosion of their security and welfare which the curtailment of any of the major programs would involve.

• (4:40 p.m.)

As I have said, it may be popular to cry that the government should cut down its expenditures, but in our view it is irresponsible to do so without naming the fields in which the cuts should be made. Of course, we should also improve our housekeeping and staff organization in order to achieve whatever savings are possible. I was struck forcibly by the very profound and meaningful statement of Professor Galbraith, which I should like to quote. I commend this to all hon. members of the house, if I may, with humility:

> nearly all of the investment in individuals is in the public domain and almost all of it is outside the market system.

It is my profound belief that whether public expenditures are in the field of cash payments to the old, the young and the ill, the unemployable and the unemployed, whether they are in the field of expanding educational opportunities or cleansing our waters and our air, whether they deal with the provision of decent homes, the clearing of slums and the planning of our urban communities and whether they are spent in the promotion of industrial expansion and increased productivity, all these expenditures are an investment in the future of the people of Canada and, to the extent that we assist peoples elsewhere, they are an investment in the future peace of the world. Without these expenditures life would be intolerable for the poor and dismal for the well-to-do.

I therefore say frankly that the time has come to abandon the out of date attitude toward government spending which was shown by the spokesman for the official opposition. We should cease to regard it as an evil to be contained. Full employment, expanding economic growth and social advance cannot be built by individuals themselves and cannot be left to the irrational and arbitrary functioning of the marketplace. They are the responsibility of the nation or the community. They can only be achieved collectively through our parliament, our legislatures and our municipal governments.

However we believe there is one field in which our present expenditures are massive and extremely questionable from the point of view not only of Canada but also from the point of view of our trying to build a more peaceful world. I refer to our defence expenditures. I suggest to the government that if they want to cut expenditures they should reassess our military commitments to NATO, which were made 20 years ago when they had some relevance to the situation in Europe but which now are no longer relevant. This alone could bring about a saving of hundreds of millions of dollars. I suggest there is no reason now that we should not cut out our contribution to NORAD, since it has proven to be completely obsolete with the development of nuclear weaponry.

I suggest, as my leader suggested on November 20 in this house, that we should postpone the construction of the two support ships and drop the purchase of the CF-5 aircraft. If all these things were cut out we would avoid unnecessary expenditures in the large amount of $500 to $600 million. I do not wish to go into the details of this now, because there will be other opportunities to do that. However, if the minister had achieved these savings he could have avoided his sadistic attitute toward the taxpayers and would have been able to avoid the additional income taxes.

There is in the budget another sop to the wealthy. Not only is there no increase in corporation taxes, but the minister will start repaying the puny refundable tax in the next fiscal year. I suppose he will say this is because of an undertaking he gave when he imposed the tax. In any event he will repay in the next fiscal year $105 million, and $139 million in the following fiscal year.

An hon. Member: He owes it.

Mr. Lewis: Someone suggests the minister owes this, but the minister changed the income tax a couple of years ago after a former minister of finance had reduced the tax. This minister imposed the tax again. This is the law of the land and the minister could change this arrangement in the same way he has changed the arrangement with regard to the ordinary taxpayer.

Mr. Sharp: I want to encourage business investment.

Mr. Lewis: Of course you do.

Mr. Sharp: And I care about unemployment.

Mr. Lewis: You do not care about unemployment, because when you take tax from the ordinary purchasing individual you ensure unemployment. I will come in a moment to the encouragement of the minister to business investment, if he will keep his red hair smoothly combed. What this means in simple English is that the minister is going to collect $185 million in income tax from the ordinary Canadian in the fiscal year 1968-69 and promptly give $105 million of it to the corporations of this country.

Mr. Sharp: To pay debts.

Mr. Lewis: That is exactly what he will do. Almost two thirds of the additional income tax to be paid by the ordinary Canadian will go into the coffers of corporations.

Mr. Sharp: Do you not believe in paying your debts?

Mr. Lewis: I believe in paying my debts, but the greatest debt of the minister and this government is to the people of Canada who have suffered under a policy of mismanagement of the economy resulting in higher costs of living each year. We are now experiencing the deliberate encouragement of unemployment and the slowing down of the economy. This is where the minister's first obligation lies, and this should take precedence over everything else.

The minister says he wants to encourage investment. In searching for a method to implement an obsolete policy the minister has decided he will cut federal lending. I must make my remarks brief, but other colleagues in my party, including the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) and our financial critic, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) and others will elaborate on some of these points. In an effort to make sure that the economy will decrease and unemployment will increase the minister has decided to cut lending to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Farm Credit Corporation, the Veterans Land Board and Air Canada, and he will not renew federal lending to the Municipal Development and Loan Board. These steps are utterly incomprehensible to me.

Mr. Sharp: You just do not understand them.

Mr. Lewis: I think I do understand a little bit about them, and let me inform the minister why I say that. There are only two alternatives which will follow this cutting back of lending programs. Either the developers and the people who need houses will borrow the same amount of money from the market, and Air Canada will borrow the same amount of money from the market, or they will not. If they do, what difference does that make to the economy.

What difference does it make to the economy whether the borrowing from the money market is made by "A" or "B"? The only difference is that the government may find it a little easier to sell its bonds and may even get a slight reduction in the interest rate. The house builder will have to pay a higher rate for the mortgage he seeks to obtain. When C.M.H.C. makes a loan to a house builder we at least know that the house will be built, even at a higher rate. When the developer borrows the money on the market we do not know where that investment will go. It will likely be used for the construction of an unnecessary bank building, rather than new homes. What sense does this make? And what happens if they do not borrow? If these builders and people who need houses do not borrow on the market, which I suspect may be the objective of the minister, then of course a decrease in the economy will be encouraged and unemployment will be increased.

Let me draw the attention of the house to an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail yesterday. It refers to a survey by the Economic Council of Canada which suggests that business will not make enough investment in the next five years to keep production at full capacity, and that the largest drop in planned investment of business is in the construction field. Every student in first year university knows that the multiplier effect of construction is always high, and important to the entire economy.

What the minister is doing by curtailing these lending programs is merely adding, as he deliberately intends to do, to the forces in this country which bring the economy downward and unemployment upward. He thinks that this is the way to solve inflationary pressures, as he calls them. Under present circumstances the action of the minister in cutting down on construction loans is entirely ridiculous and reprehensible.

I know that in a moment or two the house will go to another item of business. Therefore, I want to place before the house an amendment to the amendment. I will make a few concluding remarks in my presentation tomorrow when the budget debate resumes. For the reasons I have already indicated I want to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and that the government has placed the burden of these tax increases on the ordinary citizen of Canada, with favoured treatment for those in the top income brackets, instead of introducing a just and equitable system of taxation and obtaining further revenues by the cancellation of the special concessions to mining, oil and insurance companies.

I want to apologize to members of the house who would like to have this amendment in the French language. There simply was not time to have the French version prepared but we will make sure that it is available as soon as possible for the resumption of the debate tomorrow.

May I call it five o'clock.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege let me say that we do not have a copy of the subamendment in French. Yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said that this was out of order and that we should not accept this practice in the House of Commons. The subamendment amounts to only a few lines, yet they could not get it translated.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, since the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Chrétien) was so unkind as to refer to this matter, may I remind him that it was impossible for us to draft a subamendment until we had the amendment of the official opposition in our hands. It takes time to draft a subamendment and it can be drafted in one or other language with the consequence that it is not available in one language.

An hon. Member: You are supposed to be bilingual; you speak French.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. While it does take time to draft a subamendment, and this can only be done after the amendment is available it also takes time for the Speaker to read the amendment and decide what should be done. Perhaps the hon. member for York South will permit me to hold this amendment until tomorrow, for a ruling In the meantime perhaps he can obtain a French version.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Lewis: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I still have some time at my disposal and I will be pleased to introduce the subamendment again tomorrow.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not saying to the hon. member that he should reintroduce it. Perhaps he could refer to it again when he completes his speech tomorrow. In the meantime the French version can be prepared and the Speaker will have an opportunity to look at it.

It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

VOTING AGE—REFERENCE OF MOTIONS AND BILLS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, may I have the unanimous consent of the house to move a motion in respect of two notices of motions and five bills standing on the order paper to be referred to committee?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have the leave of the house to present his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, could I ask whether it will be done in both languages?

An hon. Member: Ask from your seat.

Mr. McNulty: By unanimous consent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon):

That the notice of motion reading as follows:

"That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to amending the Canada Elections Act to provide for the age of voters under the Canada Elections Act to be 18 years in lieu of 21 as at present", standing in the name of the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) as notice of motion numbered 15 on today's order paper, (b) and notice of motion reading as follows:

"That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to reducing the age of voters under the Canada Elections Act from the present age of 21 years to 18 years", standing in the name of the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) as notice of motion numbered 24 on today's order paper, be deemed to have been withdrawn and that the standing committee on privileges and elections be empowered to consider and report upon the provisions thereof.

(2) That the orders of the house relating to the following bills, namely,

(a) Second reading of Bill C-26, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters), being order No. 12 standing in the name of the hon. member for Springfield on today's order paper;

(b) Second reading of Bill C-101, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act (18-year old voters and candidates), being order No. 85 standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) on today's order paper;

(c) Second reading of Bill C-172, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act (qualifications of voters and candidates), being order No. 138 standing in the name of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) on today's order paper;

(d) Resuming debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-12, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters), being order No. 148 standing in the name of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) on today's order paper;

(e) Resuming debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-14, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters), being order No. 155 standing in the name of the hon. member for Prince on today's order paper, be deemed to have been discharged and that the subject matter of the said bills be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? Is it clear, these references having been made, that the committee will meet and deal with them?

Mr. McNulty: That is the understanding.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

STANDARDIZATION OF SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL TERMS AND PHRASES

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking an initiative in the United Nations with a view to the establishment of a committee which would, by consent of participating nations, standardize and internationalize all new scientific and technical words, terms and phrases, and review older terms, scientific and otherwise, that could readily be made into one word for all languages, in order to promote international understanding and facilitate communications between nations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as there are so many large words in this motion, I should like to repeat it slowly to get a little more of the impact across. I think this would be proper under the circumstances. My motion is:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking an initiative in the United Nations with a view to the establishment of a committee which would, by consent of participating nations, standardize and internationalize all new scientific and technical words, terms and phrases, and review older terms, scientific and otherwise, that could readily be made into one word for all languages, in order to promote international understanding and facilitate communications between nations.

I propose this initiative as being a proper initiative for Canada which is, in actual fact, a country of many languages and cultures. To realize this one has only to circulate through my riding of Spadina in metropolitan Toronto. I propose this initiative as a step forward simplifying international understanding, not only between nations but between individuals of different nationalities.

I suggest that all new scientific terms be made the same in spelling and pronunciation for all the languages in the world, or at least the world of the United Nations. It has been stated that over 90 per cent of all scientists ever born are living and are working in the world at the present time. It is obvious therefore with this concentration of intellectual ability in the field of discovery that the rate of discovery and change will be steadily and rapidly increasing, with the concurrent and resultant great expansion in our technical vocabularies.

If for each language different new terms are devised and used, the Tower of Babel condition of the world will be intensified, to the discomfiture of all, unless something can be done to prevent this. I propose that something should be done about this problem, and should be done now. This is a problem that could most properly and efficaciously be dealt with under the aegis of the United Nations, and I submit that a permanent committee should be set up at the United Nations to deal with this question. It would check for each new term the word that is most readily written and pronounced in the most languages, and set it up as the standard to be used by all countries. In this way scientific terms would readily become universal in usage.

The co-operation of the scientific societies should be sought, as their support would be necessary and very helpful in this regard. Each society could have a committee of multilingual individuals to review all new terms and to select the one which seems to have the most universal utility, and then recommend it to the committee dealing with this problem at the United Nations.

• (5:10 p.m.)

If procedures such as this are carried out, instead of the language difficulties increasing steadily over the years they would be gradually lessened. Having set up the mechanism to deal with new terms the committee would then review older terms both scientific and otherwise, terms which could readily be made into one word for all languages. The members of the committee could then promote the chosen words until they became commonly accepted round the world.

I hope that through these methods the various languages of the world would be gradually brought together. Increased communication should bring about increased understanding and co-operation, which is for the good of all. Therefore I commend this initiative to the house and to the government.

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): I should like to say at once that this suggestion has my unqualified support, and therefore I do not intend to take too much time in speaking about it, as I would not want to be accused of talking it out. However I wonder just how efficient the method suggested by the hon. member will be. I hope it will work but I think some difficulties might be encountered. However, if it can be carried out and taken to the United Nations, and if a committee can be established to work on these scientific terms and come up with a series of them—and there are a great many that can be adopted internationally—then I hope Canada would take the first step in adopting them.

I should point out here that, so far, Canada has not been very forward looking in taking initiative in the scientific field. Some three years ago I suggested to the house that initial steps should be taken to introduce the metric system. So far as I can see nothing along this line has been done as yet. The United States is making some attempts to convert to the metric system; Senator Pell having introduced a bill in the U.S. senate which seeks to do so. He pointed out that 90 per cent of the world's population now uses the metric system, and some 27 countries in Europe do so also.

So if we could do our part in this respect, it would be a good indication that not only Canada but the whole world should use a system of scientific terms as suggested by the hon. member who introduced the motion before us. I wish to conclude by repeating that this motion has my unqualified support, and I can only hope it will be carried to a completion.

[Mr. Ryan.]

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who introduced this motion is certainly to be commended for drawing the attention of the house to the necessity of standardizing and internationalizing scientific and technical words. As the previous speaker has pointed out, this is in line with the general movement among nations to standardize linear and weight measures through the adoption of the metric system, and to establish a more general usage of decimal coinage. I think we must realize, however, that this takes a long time. Certainly the hon. member must be prepared, as must all of us, for a considerable length of time to elapse between the initiation of his proposal and its actual fruition.

I have had some experience in the military field with the standardization of equipment. This necessitates the standardization of small items which, in the normal course of events, none of us would even think of. I refer to the standardization of the screw threads of machine parts, the standardization of the purity of metals which go into equipment, and even the standardization of very fine measurements used in the electronics field.

This is a problem which is taking on new dimensions as scientific research and industrial development continue to carry us rapidly forward into new and unexplored fields. It is a problem which is becoming more complex as more and more people of different languages expand their programs of research and development. As has been pointed out, the standardization of technical and scientific terms has become very urgent in view of the fact that we have entered the computer age. Computers have opened up new and virtually infinite opportunities for scientific research and industrial development. In fact we could almost say that now there is a requirement for research into research on research programs, to carry it to a logical conclusion.

For all these reasons it is a matter which has attracted the serious attention of scientists, technicians and engineers both in their respective fields and in common programs to which the United Nations agencies and various international scientific organizations are devoting manpower and money.

We have heard some of these programs outlined by the speakers who have preceded me. Quite obviously, in this increasingly interdependant world in which we live, our scientific and technical personnel need to have the greatest possible degree of understanding of these terms, so that they can communicate with one another and speed up the general process of scientific and technical development everywhere.

I think all of us are aware of the fact that some scientific terms are already international in character. For example, it has been traditional in the botanical sciences to use Latin terminology, and I understand that this is accepted in all the major countries of the world as the standard way of describing plant life. These Latin terms therefore are evidently used by English speaking, French speaking, Russian speaking, Japanese speaking and other scientists working in the same fields to enable them to communicate with one another. This is a degree of standardization which was apparently achieved long ago. It is already very widely accepted. Perhaps it is not so easy in some of the newer sciences to make use of Latin or Greek or some other common language to define the scientific terms we are speaking of now. We evidently have a particular problem with new discoveries and new, exciting developments which call for an entirely new terminology.

• (5:20 p.m.)

What seems to happen at the present time is that a discoverer of some new phenomenon or process coins his own name for it. If it is a good name it is generally accepted. I am told for example that the word "laser" is a word that is understood in all scientifically developed countries by people who deal with that recently developed phenomenon of light and energy. Perhaps this is a good example of how scientists themselves—and I repeat this, scientists themselves—are already dealing with this problem of communication with one another, when it comes to new scientific developments.

I think it is true also to say that an extensive common technical vocabulary has inevitably developed as industrial countries have expanded their trade in machinery, in industrial and scientific equipment not only amongst themselves but amongst the developing countries. We saw how this development of specialized terminology for special equipment became accelerated and was accentuated during the world war II, when many names which are household words today were coined or invented. They were picked up by the allied nations and distributed by that means throughout the world, and have now become part of our every day lexicon.

So, hand in hand with this expansion in industry and science there has naturally been a very extensive exchange of information between industrial and scientific communities throughout the world. This, in turn, has unavoidably involved the natural development of a very substantial measure of standardization of vocabulary. There is no reason to doubt, in my opinion, that these developments will continue at an increasingly rapid rate. In fact there is a long standing system of international scientific unions, each of which operates in one specialized field of science.

These unions, individually, deal among other things with terminology. If we take for example the field of chemistry, we find there is an International Union of Chemistry. The scientists who are prominent in this field have set up a committee on nomenclature, which is what we are speaking of today. Through this committee on nomenclature they are steadily developing agreement on chemical terms. I believe this extends, not just through the chemical terms or nomenclature but to standards of purity and so forth. These in turn must have names for themselves. It is necessary for scientists working in a given field to get together and iron out the differences of substance in the materials about which they are talking. It is a matter of agreeing on the structure of the material or on the combination of elements before one can decide what to call it and come to an agreement on a widely understandable name for the substance. It is particularly desirable, if possible, that this name should in some way describe the appearance or use to which that substance would be put. This is something which obviously only scientists, who have a highly specialized knowledge in a particular field, can deal with adequately. It is no job for amateurs.

It is also my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that there is close co-operation amongst the various scientific unions through an organization called the International Council of Scientific Unions. I understand this body is doing a great deal of work in co-ordinating the efforts of the various scientific disciplines so that they will be understandable to one another. In recent years the problem of the development of common technical knowledge has become much more acute, as the industrial and scientifically advanced countries of the world have come to rely so heavily on computers. The need to exchange computer stored information has, in fact, magnified the problem and the technical people in every field of scientific and technical research have been devoting more and more attention to the need for the development of compatible computer systems using a common language.

As we all know, there is not just one system of computers. There are many different systems. These systems are used in the various industries and in different countries. It is essential that the information, if it is to be of value and capable of being exchanged from one country to another, must be stored in such form that it is compatible to the computers in other nations. I think all members of the house understand this. What I am trying to outline, Mr. Speaker, is what has already been done in the general field of standardization of technical words, terms and phrases. These steps to which I have referred have been initiated in international organizations and associations such as the international committee for pure and applied chemistry and by United Nations organizations such as the International Atomic Energy Agency or the United Nations Education, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Since 1962, in fact, UNESCO, in co-operation with other member countries, has been engaged in the development of a long term, long range program for improving and co-ordinating scientific and technical documentation. The International Council of Scientific Unions, which I mentioned previously, in conjunction with UNESCO is meeting next month, in fact, in order to consider whether, taking into account the great diversity of scientific disciplines and the many differences in approach by member countries, it would be feasible to establish a world wide scientific information system. These and similar steps are I understand being taken in other scientific disciplines by other international scientific organizations.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Quite obviously, Mr. Speaker, there are inevitably going to be national jealousies in this field. For example I think that if today a United States scientist and a French scientist were working simultaneously on some new development each would, in the main, tend to use his own terms and it would be very difficult indeed for any international body to persuade them to use some other terminology. I say this because that is the way mankind deals with matters, when men and women are in the process of developing something to which they have devoted their lives and their talents. They are somewhat naturally averse to allowing the knowledge they have achieved through their own efforts to escape beyond their own realm of work, and to be captured, if I may use that expression, by a scientist in some other country who is working in the same field.

I think we have to accept the fact that there is such a thing as national pride, pride in one's own language, which goes very deep, even among men wholeheartedly devoted to the cause of science. For example, Mr. Speaker, one cannot imagine the Russians ever giving up the word "sputnik" because it represents to them, and quite rightly so in my humble opinion, a very great scientific achievement by their people.

Mr. Ryan: We should adopt that word.

Mr. Knowles: We already have.

Mr. Groos: That is what I am getting at.

The hon. member proposes that the Canadian government take the initiative at the United Nations to form a committee to work for the standardization and internationalization of scientific and technical words, terms and phrases. UNESCO, which would be the United Nations agency in which any such initiative should be taken, has already taken steps to encourage the development of standardized bibliographies and terminology. Scientists in UNESCO are already working on these problems through the various international scientific unions, and I am wondering whether we really need to set up one more large body to co-ordinate this work.

It would seem to me to be much more desirable to leave this problem at this stage in the hands of a scientific organization that is already working upon the problem, a view which I believe is strongly held by most scientists. Encouragement should be given, and assistance provided when requested of the governments concerned, to carry forward programs of standardizing scientific and technical terms in the various disciplines I have mentioned and in joint scientific bodies. If at any time the job is found too heavy for their resources, or the program of work too expensive, or if roadblocks appear which governments might help in removing, then through UNESCO let us press for a more active and extensive program. I would have no hesitation whatever in supporting such a proposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a very few comments on the matter now before the house. I must admit I find myself both intrigued and somewhat puzzled by what has motivated the hon. member to move this resolution. It is a rather peculiar one because it calls upon the government of Canada to take the initiative through the United Nations to bring about the standardization and internationalization of scientific and technical words, terms and phrases which could readily be reduced to one word for all languages.

If my understanding is correct, those who deal with scientific terminology have had a scholastic education in acquiring their scientific knowledge, which basically was taught in either Latin, German or English. These are the basic three scientific languages that scientists understand.

Quite honestly, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the urgency of the government of Canada initiating through the United Nations the establishment of a committee to try to standardize and internationalize scientific and technical terms. However, I was most interested in the last part of the motion. Although the introduction refers to the standardization and internationalization of scientific and technical terms, the motion concludes:

> —in order to promote international understanding and facilitate communications between nations.

Within these words, Mr. Speaker, lies a wonderful idea and a beautiful motivation. But surely such a concept should not be concerned with scientific and technical terms and their standardization and internationalization. I would accept the last part of the motion because what we need is an international language between peoples, not just between scientists.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I would say from memory that it is more than 50 years since Esperanto was introduced as an international language. I think that any step which would bring into being an international language—not a language that deals only with scientific and technical terms—is a forward step. We need to facilitate international understanding and communication between the peoples of the world and not just between scientists. If the hon. member's motion helps to do that, I am sure that he will have 100 per cent support for his bill.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on the motion of the hon. member for Spadina. He wishes to bring to the attention of the federal government the advisability of taking the initiative in the United Nations to establish a committee which would, with the consent of other member nations, standardize and make international all new scientific and technical words, terms and phrases. The hon. member's motion involves the broad problem of communication. We must begin somewhere to make standard our technical terms. His motion is also commendable because it touches on the field of scientific terminology.

During my life as a physician and medical student I have had considerable experience with the nomenclature used by the medical profession. To obtain admission to a faculty of medicine a student had to know Latin. Those of us in medicine use many scientific terms, the roots of which are in Latin or Greek. If one peruses the subjects of a medical course, expecially the subjects of anatomy, physiology, pathology, bacteriology and pharmacology, he realizes that the terminology used in those courses will be understood by those in the medical profession in all parts of the world, and must be understood by them as of necessity.

Verbal communication also is a problem for teachers who must travel through different countries and give lectures. It is also a problem for members of international conferences, when they address delegates from different nations. Communication is also a problem for the interpreters of translation services of the various professional bodies which sponsor such international conferences. For these reasons, as well as for others which have been outlined previously by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Groos), I think the hon. member for Spadina is to be commended highly for bringing his motion before the house.

In the past, on two or three occasions, I discussed with him his intention of introducing a motion similar to this one. I am happy to say that I am in favour of it, and I hope that it will meet with the approval of the members of this chamber. From my experience at the United Nations, I know that communicating with those who speak different languages from ours is a problem. Already many international agencies are trying to standardize, update and make available to all nations the fund of knowledge and the resources that certain favoured countries have at their disposal. We also know how slow the United Nations is to start any action such as that contemplated in this motion. We must begin at some time. In this era, when we are progressing rapidly in fields of science, and especially in the field of medicine and its basic sciences of physics and chemistry, I believe it is desirable that some international body should co-ordinate this work. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the motion of the hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is it correct that all those entering the medical profession throughout the world must know Latin? Is it also correct that prescriptions that are written anywhere in the world will be understood by a doctor in any other part of the world?

Mr. Haidasz: That was the practice in the past; I am referring to that part of the question which related to Latin. Recently, especially in English speaking countries, the trend has been to get away from Latin terminology. This sometimes brings about difficulties, when medical people from various countries get together. Traditionally, in the past, Latin terms were used. After all, medicine and most other sciences were taught in Latin. Originally they were taught in Latin, when teaching first began to be organized in universities. We have inherited that tradition but, as I say, the tendency is to get away from Latin.

I believe the hon. member for Spadina wants to make scientific and technical terms international and standard. In the light of new findings some terms in the English language must be updated. For instance I was reading a technical book about fluorosis. There are many such technical books, and they show the need to standardize technical terms. In view of the rapid progress of medical science and the interdependence of medicine on other sciences, such as pure physics and chemistry, that need exists, even in medicine.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask the hon. member a question. Does he think it possible that we could improve the legibility of the average medical man's handwriting?

[Mr. Haidasz.]

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not rising to respond to the question of the hon. member for Rosthern though, as a matter of professional courtesy, I might be said to be responding to my colleague who is in the medical profession. I am happy to do so, in that regard.

The remarks which I should like to address to the house on the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Spadina, may be divided into three parts. The first is with respect to the difficulty posed by the unfortunate problem of language to any prospect of arriving at a satisfactory conclusion in this field. Second, I should like to give some indication of the work which is being done in this sphere, both by the government and by non-government organizations operating at the international level. I should then like to express my own feelings, from experience as an observer at the international level, why I do not feel that the United Nations, as opposed to private organizations, that is, organizations formed by representatives of the professions or disciplines, should be used for this purpose.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The motion deals in part with a subject which is close to the heart of human relationships, that of language. No more obvious support for this proposition could be indicated than the report which has been presented to this parliament within the past 24 hours. We have had this recent example of the tenacity of language and how dearly it is held by the groups which use it. The first comment I would make, therefore, must express a certain scepticism about our ability to arrive at a comprehensive standardization of terms given the great differences which exist between the languages of the human race.

The hon. member for Spadina said he would hope to achieve, through endeavours in the United Nations, a similarity between scientific words in various languages—that they should have the same spelling or pronunciation. I believe my hon. friend would agree there are obvious problems attached to this. It is true that although spelled in the same way, we all recognize, through an examination of the same words as used in German, English, French and Italian, how very different the pronunciation is. A more serious difficulty arises when alphabets such as the Cyrillic are used, or the forms employed when writing Arabic or Chinese.

The second of my observations is this: However imposing this difficulty may seem, I do not think there is any general dispute that a great advantage would be obtained by having a greater degree of standardization of scientific and technical terms throughout the world. There are obvious advantages attached to moving in this direction. The question is, not whether we should move in this direction but how we should encourage the development of this desirable state of affairs.

It seems to me—and this has already been shown by my hon. friends from Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) and Victoria (Mr. Groos)—that the persons best fitted to carry on this particular task are those working in the various scientific and technical fields. Take for example the discipline of physics. It would appear obvious that the only persons who would know how to go about standardizing the scientific terms used in physics are physicists themselves. It is my understanding that physicists do in fact use a great many common terms and that they are making considerable progress through the International Union of Physics in developing common nomenclature. This international union, like other similar bodies in other sciences, has meetings and sets up committees to discuss terminology, amongst other matters.

This is an example of the kind of thing that is being done by non-governmental organizations composed of scientists or technicians working in a particular field, to develop standardization and internationalization of the language they use. If this is going on, and I understand it is quite widespread, then it does not appear to be necessary for governments to step in and attempt to have some very broad comprehensive committee tackle the problem, under the sponsorship of the United Nations.

I go on, now, to a further point which relates to the functioning of the United Nations itself. I personally am not convinced that the proposition put forward by my hon. friend from Spadina is one which the house should adopt. I would be fearful, lest by assenting to this resolution, and presuming the ultimate success of a comparable resolution within the general assembly we would be introducing governmental participation in a field which has hitherto been non-governmental. I should like to elaborate on this point.

Even during the worst period of the cold war it was possible for scientists on both sides of the divide between the nations to participate in exchanges of information about their particular specialties. What would happen, however, if governmental propositions were put forward to deal with this field? Inevitably—and this has been well demonstrated by what is happening within specialized agencies of the UN—political issues would be introduced into the field of pure science. For an example we need only look to the experience of UNESCO in recent years. The annual meetings of this organization have been bedevilled—I do not apologize for saying this—by the introduction of general international issues such as the problems of South Africa, the Middle East, and cold war politics.

A further example, of course, is the way in which political issues—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Rapp: Is there any change in the program for tomorrow or Friday?

Mr. McIlraith: No change.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 7, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REPORTED ARMS SHIPMENTS BY FRANCE TO ARAB COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence at the moment perhaps I may direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the announcement by the French government this morning that that government intended to remove its ban on arms shipments to the Arab countries, and the further announcement that it will be shipping aircraft and other arms to the Arab states while still maintaining the ban on arms shipments to Israel, is the government of Canada planning any protest to the government of France?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I should like to consult the Secretary of State for External Affairs to see whether they have considered this matter in his department. He will be here later this afternoon.

NIGERIA—POSSIBLE MEDIATION BY CANADA IN CIVIL DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the impending visit to Canada of the Nigerian foreign minister, and the continued reports of appalling casualties in that country's internal struggle, will he be offering his good services toward mediating that dispute in a commonwealth country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am not sure that mediation of this particular matter is required at this time by Canada. Naturally we want to do anything we can to help bring this civil strife to an end. I will be seeing the Nigerian foreign minister tomorrow. No doubt he will bring this matter up if he wishes to have this kind of mediation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—POSSIBLE REASSESSMENT OF CANADA'S MILITARY ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding the NATO council conference which will be taking place in a few days. I ask whether the Canadian government is proposing to reassess Canada's military role in NATO. If so, does Canada intend to suggest the phasing out of the CF-104 squadrons; does it propose any replacement of these by another type of aircraft; and finally, does Canada intend to suggest the transfer of the infantry brigade or any part of it to a reserve position?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at each annual meeting of the NATO council it is customary to review not only the force plans of the member governments but the policies of NATO countries themselves and the direction in which the alliance should be moving.

That will happen in Brussels next week. I believe there will be a report before the council, called the Harmel report after the foreign minister of Belgium who has been working on it with others, on the goals of the alliance. That will be considered as well as the force plans of member governments. So far as I know there is no proposal before the council which will change radically the force goals or the objectives of NATO. I do not think there is any reason to expect radical changes in Canada's contribution to NATO at this time.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be making a statement to the house on his return from the ministerial NATO conference, in view of the importance which this conference has for financial considerations as well as to keep the house fully informed on the government's policy vis-à-vis NATO.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I expect he will be back in time to make a statement to the house before we recess for Christmas. It might even be possible to have a joint meeting of the external affairs and national defence committees, to which reference has been made, and to which he could make a more extensive report.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Is it the position of the government of Canada, and will it be reflected in the discussions with regard to the composition of the NATO forces in Europe, that decisions with regard to the continuation or the withdrawal of any components of the force will be taken unilaterally?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. The decisions we take as a member of the coalition should be discussed and if possible agreed to by the other members of the coalition, as we would expect other members of the alliance to do.

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CHRISTMAS RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Has he set the date of the Christmas recess and that of the resumption of the session after the holiday season? Could he inform the house of those dates?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know hon. members would like to know as soon as possible what the plans are so they can make their travel arrangements. Perhaps my hon. friend will permit me to delay my answer until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

POLLUTION

TAX INCENTIVES TO PLANTS INSTALLING CORRECTIVE DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Is it the intention of the government to extend beyond the present effective expiry date of January 1, 1968 the income tax regulation permitting industry an accelerated depreciation rate on equipment installed to prevent, reduce or eliminate water pollution? If so, will the government consider similar encouragement to industry to take action regarding air and soil pollution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked previously by the hon. member for Essex South and by other hon. members, I believe. The government is giving consideration to the extension of the regulations affecting water pollution after January 1, 1968. I hope I will be able to make a definite announcement before the consideration of the budget is concluded.

With regard to the second part of the question, I have received many representations with regard to similar treatment in connection with air and soil pollution. The matter is under consideration, but I should say that it is of a different character. The regulations permitting an accelerated depreciation on water pollution devices and systems are in the law now and we have to make a decision about their extension. With regard to expenditures on air and soil pollution control, this is a new matter which requires very careful consideration before new action is taken.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that, as the minister said, the government has to make a decision now on whether to extend this concession to industry, will he not say whether the government intends to make it on a permanent basis rather than on the ad hoc basis which is the case at present?

Mr. Sharp: One of the reasons I hesitate to make more than just an announcement is that the point raised by the hon. member is being given consideration. I will make a definite announcement on it before the budget debate is over. The purpose of putting in a date was to induce industry to take action as quickly as possible. If you make this a permanent feature it changes the nature of the incentive. Therefore I agree with the hon. member that we have to decide one way or the other, whether it is for an interim period or indefinitely.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the Minister of Finance saying that during the course of the budget debate there will be new budgetary arrangements made and announced to the house which have not yet been indicated?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of regulation.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): May I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if there is any hope that in 1968 not only industry but private citizens will be able to benefit from tax incentives to encourage them to instal government approved anti-pollution devices and the use of cleaner fuels?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, this matter is under consideration in connection with air pollution write-offs.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Has he had consultations with the provincial governments on the question of incentives, and was there a federal representative at the recent meeting in Toronto?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I might answer this question. This is a subject that was talked about with the provinces, and they are generally grateful for what exists in terms of tax deductions for anti-water pollution equipment.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the question concerning pollution was addressed to him by one of the members on his side of the house, may we now ask whether he has become the minister of pollution instead of the Prime Minister, and whether we may now address our questions on pollution to him?

Mr. Sharp: I don't think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would welcome questions being put to him about the income tax.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I realize I did not fully answer the question of the member for Simcoe East. He also asked whether the government was represented at the conference on pollution which was held recently in Toronto. Yes, my department sent Mr. Davidson who is head of the hydraulics section.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF BOXING DAY HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house whether he intends to uphold the decision requiring civil servants to work on Boxing day and the day after New Year's?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think the Minister of National Revenue dealt with this matter yesterday.

Mr. J.-T. Richard (Ottawa East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister offer immediately for the consideration of this house an amendment to the Public Service Act to include among the legal holidays the days following Christmas and New Year's when such happen to fall on a Monday; or will he enter into immediate negotiations to reach agreement on this matter?

An hon. Member: A planted question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The question was answered yesterday.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of introducing any proposed changes in the legislation in this regard. Of course the question of statutory holidays, along with other fringe benefits, will be a subject for collective bargaining in the public service which this government has introduced.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. When the minister is considering all these holidays will he also consider giving the people of Canada a holiday on April 30?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, from time to time when April 30 has fallen on a Sunday we have allowed people to file their tax returns on the Monday following.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO RESULTS OF RECENT BOND ISSUE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister could now answer the question I asked first on November 10 and which he said he would answer in his budget speech, and which when that was not done I repeated last Friday, in connection with how successful the Canadian savings bond campaign had been in comparison with former years, and particularly how much new money the minister estimated would come in from this source.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had this reply on my desk for two or three days, and I was hoping the hon. member would ask his question again. In my budget speech last Thursday I mentioned that the Canada savings bond campaign had succeeded in raising a substantial amount of new cash during November despite the very adverse circumstances under which it had to be carried on. The latest weekly and monthly published statistics of the Bank of Canada indicate that the net increase in Canada savings bonds from November 1 to November 29 totalled $635 million. This compares to an average of $698 million for November in the past ten years.

As hon. members know, the government cannot count on all this as a permanent net addition to our cash, as redemptions traditionally exceed sales from late November on. In general the sale of Canada savings bonds lived up to our sober expectations. We could not, under the circumstances that prevail, have expected that this would be a resounding success; in fact it has been a comparative success.

Mr. Knowles: How sober were you?

PARLIAMENT HILL

INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE OF CENTENNIAL FLAME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister at the request of a number of persons who have discussed this matter with me.

In view of the sustained interest in the centennial flame on parliament hill, would the government give consideration to continuing this flame on a perpetual basis as a symbol of national unity, if interested persons or companies donated the capital required to provide sufficient interest to pay for its maintenance in perpetuity?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member for Kootenay West that this would be a very good question for the adjournment debate.

[Mr. Harkness.]

MANPOWER

PAYMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE DURING HOLIDAY PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but in his absence and because of the urgency of the question may I address it to the acting minister. In his reply to a question I asked yesterday the minister indicated that those who will be cut off for two weeks at Christmas and New Year's from the living allowance paid to those attending adult occupational training courses at technical institutes might be eligible for unemployment insurance during this period. My question is, will the two week waiting period for unemployment insurance benefits be waived in regard to these trainees?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice, and I hope to be able to answer it tomorrow or Monday.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY OF MARITIME PROVINCES WATER SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of health and welfare arising out of the previous questions on water pollution. Water geologists have been expressing grave concern about water supplies in all three maritime provinces. Is the Atlantic Development Board giving any consideration to carrying out studies on desalinization, as well as water demands in such fields as the preservation and development of wildlife, recreation and electric power?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into the details of the question and provide an answer later.

TRADE

SHOES—ALLEGED DUMPING BY COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question raised yesterday by the hon. member for Wellington South regarding alleged importations of certain footwear at dump prices, I would like to report that the Department of National Revenue has carried out investigations abroad, and on the basis of their report I have authorized the officers of the department to determine a fair market value of such imports.

The officials are now in the process of determining these values and it should be possible to advise the exporters of these determinations in the near future.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether his answer is to apply to the textile industry and other industries that are in trouble?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of being in trouble; it is a matter of determining whether goods are being dumped in Canada. I can assure my hon. friend that once we determine that dumping is taking place, we take every action we are permitted to take under the law.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED INTEGRATION OF OVERSEAS SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I wanted to direct my question to the Secretary of State, but I shall direct it, instead, to the Prime Minister. If the international service of the C.B.C. is to be spared the axe, will that service be fully integrated with the C.B.C., as the government white paper on broadcasting suggested it ought to be?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is one way of dealing with this matter. Perhaps my hon. friend would await the statement of the Minister of National Revenue tonight when, I suspect, this matter will be dealt with.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister consider looking into the possibility of having the C.B.C. absorb the cost of the international service and carry on that service?

Mr. Pearson: Yes. That is one way of dealing with the matter, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue and ask him whether any consideration has been given to retaining the international overseas broadcasting program.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): This is the same question that was addressed to the Prime Minister a few minutes ago. I shall be saying something in this regard this evening.

[Translation]

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

ALLEGED LIMITED DISTRIBUTION OF COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Might the austerity program of the present government explain the very limited distribution of the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton royal commission of inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. There is no desire on the part of the government to hold up that distribution in any way, shape or form.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Would the right hon. Prime Minister tell us why each member cannot have an English copy and a French copy of this document?

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, further to the question put by the member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) to the Prime Minister on the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission, I realize that English copies are now being distributed to English speaking members and copies in French to French speaking members. Now, as some members would like to have two copies, one English and one French, how is it that they are being refused these two copies?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think this question should be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does he consider the price charged by the Laurendeau-Dunton commission for its report on biculturalism, namely $7 million, as normal?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Maybe that question should be placed on the order paper.

NATIONAL SECURITY

THEFT OF ARMS AT CAP DE LA MADELEINE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I took notice of a question which was posed by the hon. member for Chapleau and which related to the theft of guns at Cap de la Madeleine. This is an offence against the provisions of the Criminal Code and the investigation is being conducted by the appropriate municipal and provincial police authorities. The R.C.M.P. is cooperating in the matter of identification by means of the national police service facilities.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBLE REMOVAL FROM TRAFFIC DUTY AT AIRPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question is for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker, and is distantly related to the subject matter of the question the hon. member for Oxford asked yesterday. Would the minister give consideration to removing members of the R.C.M.P., of which I am sure we are all very proud, from traffic and ornamental duties at airports? Is the minister not aware that the force has lost some excellent men because they have had prolonged postings to these boring and frustrating duties?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, members of the R.C.M.P. at international airports are carrying out important criminal investigation duties. Certain newly recruited members are temporarily posted for traffic duty, as part of their training, before being posted to other municipalities across the country.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am fully aware that the R.C.M.P. deals with regulations concerning dope and that sort of thing, but is the minister not aware that members of the R.C.M.P. who have been posted for prolonged periods at airports have asked for and obtained their release?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this question might be placed on the order paper.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REPORT ON ELECTION EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the committee on privileges and elections has had referred to it the subject matter of a number of bills and resolutions which deal with the lowering of the voting age, and since the assurance has been given that the committee will meet, will the government now refer to that committee the report of the committee on election expenses, as it promised to do in the speech from the throne on May 8?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That seems to me to be a very good idea, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask when this good idea will be implemented?

Mr. Pearson: Shortly, I hope, Mr. Speaker, when the committee is in a position to look into this report. Perhaps that should come later, after the committee deals with the matter to which the hon. member has just referred.

[Later:]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the house leader. It is prompted by yesterday's house decision to refer private members' bills and resolutions dealing with the voting age to the standing committee on privileges and elections. Is the government planning to take the appropriate steps to have the Canada Elections Act also referred, so that matters other than the voting age could be studied by the committee?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister dealt with this particular matter earlier.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I believe the house leader did not correctly hear my question. I referred not to the commission on election expenditures but to the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member correctly.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF REPORT ON ATLANTIC PROBLEMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister yet had an opportunity to consider the advisability of referring the special study on maritime transportation to the standing committee on transport prior to its trip east?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. I had hoped to have the opportunity of doing so this morning but due to circumstances beyond my control that was not possible. Perhaps early next week I shall have an opportunity to discuss this matter.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING ARDA AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Can the minister advise us whether he intends to meet with the provinces within a short period of time to hold talks on the changing of the ARDA agreements, placing a different emphasis on the present agreements with the provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the present ARDA agreements will terminate on March 31, 1970 and consultations between federal and provincial governments will start next year.

[English]

Mr. MacEwan: May I ask the minister whether there will be any cut-backs in the funds available under the ARDA agreements during the next fiscal year?

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: There will be no reductions in the ARDA budget next year, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF RUSSIAN UNDERWATER EXPLOSIONS IN NORTH PACIFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he is now in a position to give the house any information in connection with underwater explosions in the north Pacific set off by the Soviet union. This refers to the question I asked the hon. gentleman on Monday.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I have inquired of the international Pacific fisheries commission, and the commission is not aware of such explosions taking place affecting the fisheries of the north Pacific.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROVISION OF EMPLOYMENT FOR HERRING FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Perhaps the Minister of Fisheries would like to take this opportunity to deal with the reply he got from his colleague the Minister of Labour in connection with the problems of the unemployed herring fishermen.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My colleague, the Minister of Labour, brought to my attention representations which were made to him on the occasion of his recent visit to the west coast, and I was pleased to advise him that we have decided to extend for another year the program of assistance for dogfish production and processing.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BURMA—DETENTION OF CANADIANS IN JAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, but since he is absent I will direct it to the Prime Minister and ask him to take it as notice.

Some time ago my friend, the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) and I asked the government to intervene with authorities in Burma about two young Canadians who have been imprisoned in Rangoon for almost seven months.

I am told that the parents here fear for the lives of their children who suffer from dysentery. The authorities do not permit them to correspond with their parents.

Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been unable to obtain any results since that time, I wonder if the Prime Minister would not want to contact U Thant, secretary general of the United Nations, or the authorities in Burma, to secure the release and repatriation of those two Canadians?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure the representation made by the hon. member has been noted.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. In view of the urgency of the matter and the fact that those two people are right now in a quite desperate situation and their lives may be endangered, I think the Prime Minister should give some reassurance to the parents and to other Canadians that are in identical circumstances.

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROTEST ON DESIGNATION OF EMPLOYEES AS SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that the minister made disparaging use of the word "servants" with reference to public service employees—which is the proper designation—and in view of the fact that I have received telephone calls from the president of the postal workers union objecting to the use of this word over a local radio station, will the minister withdraw this word and refrain from using it in the future?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): I suppose one could even object to calling members of parliament servants of the people, but I believe that people who are employed and paid by the public of Canada are servants of that public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Valade.]

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADIAN INITIATIVE TOWARD REVISION OF TRANSATLANTIC FARES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Earlier this week I asked the minister whether the Canadian delegation to the meeting of the International Air Transport Association in Manila was undertaking any initiative toward obtaining a revision of trans-Atlantic air passenger rates, and the hon. gentleman told me he would take the question as notice. Can he tell us now whether the Canadian delegation has undertaken any such initiative at the Manila meeting?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I do not have a report on that as yet, Mr. Speaker.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO MISSING PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister please inform the house whether any trace has been found of the missing "Widgeon" plane owned by Air Transit Limited, which left St. John's, Newfoundland, on Wednesday, November 29, en route to St. Anthony, Newfoundland, with two engineers from the federal Department of Public Works St. John's office as passengers?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Regrettably, Mr. Speaker, there is no trace of the missing aircraft at the present time. The aircraft left St. John's on Wednesday, November 29 and there was no further radio communication with the aircraft. Three hours after its departure the R.C.A.F. search and rescue organization was alerted that the aircraft had not reported and was presumed missing. Search and Rescue have conducted a search of 43,000 square miles, logging 215 hours of flying, but have so far been unable to find a trace of the aircraft. Both defence and civil aircraft have participated in this search.

Mr. Tucker: Is the search still being carried on, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Hellyer: I think it has been terminated, but I would have to check on that in order to be sure.

[Later:]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, if I may I wish to say I have now received advice that the search for the missing plane is continuing. I thought this should be put on the record.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF ARMED FORCES EXCHANGE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. As part of the armed forces unification plan is the Department of National Defence setting up a Canadian armed forces exchange service and, if so, will this Canex organization compete directly with private business?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the state of this matter is that we have made a study of the problems of the operation of non-public funds. There was a recommendation to defence council that we organize a board which would be called Canex, but that recommendation has not yet been implemented. A study group is going around the country to investigate the practicability of the plan.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister answered the second part of the question. Is it contemplated that this organization would compete directly with private businesses in the vicinity of armed forces establishments?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): If it does compete, Mr. Speaker, it will not compete unfairly.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—PAYMENT TO B.C. OF AMOUNT RECEIVED FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. When can we expect the next report of the Canada-U.S. joint engineering board on the Columbia?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I do not know, Mr. Speaker; I will inquire. However, since my hon. friend is always interested in the Columbia I have some figures here which might be of interest to him. The sum of $11,100,000 for Duncan dam flood control was paid by the United States on November 22, 1967. The exchange rate applicable on the day on which this was deposited in the Bank of Canada's account in New York was $7\frac{15}{32}$ per cent premium on United States funds, and the amount of money transferred to the British Columbia government on November 23, 1967, was $11,929,031.25.

BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, December 6, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith (p. 5118), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Lewis (p. 5128).

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Maybe there could be a little less conversation in the house so we can hear the remarks of the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have only a few minutes left. I argued yesterday that the budget before the house was inequitable in the taxes which it imposed as well as in the taxes which it failed to impose if the minister was convinced that he required added revenue at this time and that he could not wait until the regular budget next spring. Second, Mr. Speaker, I argued that the budget will not accomplish even the purposes which the minister said he wanted to accomplish. Third, and I suggested that this was the most iniquitous part of the budget, I argued that it is likely to slow down the economy and to create additional unemployment. Indeed, I suggested that this was one of the explicit and implicit objectives of the budget.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that another significant key to the thinking of the government is the cavalier way in which the Carter recommendations have been thrown into the ash can. The Carter report, I remind you, sir, makes a ringing indictment of our present tax system. To use its own words, it finds that system "inequitable in many important respects." It goes on to say that the combined effect of the various taxes, and again I use its words, is "such that low income individuals and families pay higher taxes than is equitable when compared to middle and upper income individuals and families." Members of our party have been saying this for many years, and now it has been confirmed by an unassailable authority.

The point I want to make is that the government has before it a report made after years of study and analysis of many aspects of our economic life. Its conclusion is that our present tax system is unjust and inequitable. It makes very specific proposals for new fields of taxations and for the shifting of the burden from the low income to the higher income groups in the community. The Carter commission, in our view, is right when it said that the objective of equity in taxation should have a higher priority than most or all other objectives.

I think that the chairman of that commission and his colleagues must be admired and congratulated for making an equitable tax system their major consideration and guide. I appreciate that the recommendations of the report are radical and that some of them are complex, but I say that when we have a system which men of intelligence and integrity have found to be unjust and inequitable then it is surely time to change the system instead of trying to patch it up here and there.

I saw Mr. Carter on television on budget night. I was impressed by his thoughtful manner. If I remember correctly, in very measured tones he bluntly accused the government of having yielded to the lobbies and pressures of the special interests, and he named them: oil, mining, insurance, and similar interests.

So far as I have knowledge of the matter, and of course I do not have all knowledge, it is significant that the organizations representing the ordinary people of Canada, such as labour unions and the like, have all supported the basic philosophy of the Carter report, even though they may have expressed reservations on one or two details. They asked the government to implement the report but apparently their voice was not heard. The voice of the powerful prevailed, as usual, with this government. This, I suggest, is a great pity and a great injustice.

I want to conclude by making one final point as forcefully as I can. During the current year we have had a resurgence of pride in our country, justifiable pride. Unfortunately we have also had disturbing signs of continuing division. All of us in Canada, of all political parties and faiths, are determined to make every effort to overcome divisive influences in our country and to strengthen the unity and the purposefulness of our nation and our people in every part and in every province.

I venture to warn the government that economic policies such as are represented in this budget may do harm not only to the economy but to the great effort toward national unity and understanding, for I suggest it is clear that any reduction in economic activity, any increase in unemployment, any curtailment of government economic participation will have a larger and deeper adverse effect in those parts of the country which are already at a disadvantage compared with other parts. Such policies, in my submission, cannot but aggravate the regional inequalities in economic and social opportunities. This can do more to harm progress toward an integrated and meaningful Canadian unity than most other factors. It is for all these reasons that I moved the amendment which is in your hands, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the amendment and subamendment now before the house constitute, in my opinion, a non-confidence motion towards the government.

The amendment blames the government for its extravagant expenditures, and the subamendment suggests that the government should have cancelled the special concessions granted to mining, oil and insurance companies.

I feel that the subamendment would bring about a further increase in prices in the field of mining or oil production and, probably, of insurance policies now being sold to Canadian buyers. This would still not provide a solution to problems.

Moreover, we have been saying it long enough: the Progressive Conservative party, just like the New Democratic party, are not suggesting anything new to what we have under the present system concerning the fiscal, financial or monetary system.

If we consider closely the mini-budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), we soon realize that it is simply maintaining the escalation to strip the Canadian people further or, in other words, to rob him more. Such a mini-budget will, by no means, restore the economic situation of Canada, no more than the preceding budgets have settled the problem.

Instead of making war on poverty, as the Liberal party claimed in 1963 at election time—an election promise repeated in 1965—the government is taking measures to increase the number of poor in Canada. That is the effect we will feel after voting the new taxes suggested by the Minister of Finance. I claim this budget represents an escalation not only to rob the people, but also to mislead them. At this stage, I will remind the Minister of Finance that last winter, during consideration in committee of the renewal of the bank charters under the Bank Act, he said that by reducing the chartered banks reserves from 8 to 6 per cent and by increasing the statutory interest rate allowed from 6 to 7¼ per cent, the little man would be helped in Canada, and would be able to borrow more and the banks would be more open to trade, to industry and to the development of the wealth of our country.

That is the first point. At that time, simply by reducing the chartered banks reserves by 2 per cent—by reducing them from 8 per cent as they were then to 6 per cent—the chartered banks were able to create $4 billion in new credits without depositing one additional cent in the reserve at the Bank of Canada. The minister claimed: This will make the Canadian economy healthier.

The second point is that the increase of the interest rate was likely to cost money to the Canadian people, to the worker, to the small businessman, to those who needed to borrow. Furthermore, this increase in the bank interest rate resulted in a later increase of the interest rate of finance companies. It is not always called an increase of the interest rate, but it is reflected in an increase of services, or service charges.

The third point is that somewhat later, the minister introduced a bill to increase the interest rate on housing loans.

• (3:30 p.m.)

In fact, for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, insurance companies and banks willing to make loans for the building of houses, the rate of interest was raised to 8¼ per cent. There again, the minister told us: That is to give an impetus to the economy, to help the poor.

Now, when this bill to raise the rate of interest to 8¼ per cent on the building of houses was introduced in parliament, I immediately telephoned a senior official at the C.M.H.C. and asked him how much a small $15,000 house would cost at 8¼ per cent interest for a period of 35 years. Ten minutes later, the official called me back and said: Such a $15,000 house, at an interest rate of 8¼ per cent, after 35 years would cost the tidy sum of $46,059.30. This means three houses: two in interest only, and one for the citizen who needs it. And the minister told us then that it was to help the little man.

Take for instance, Mr. Speaker, the case of a 35-year-old Canadian who buys a new $15,000 house and who will pay for it over 35 years because he is looking for the longest repayment period and reasonable payments. At the end of 35 years, he will have paid back $46,059.30 but he will be 70 by then. Who will keep his little house after 35 years? The minister knows this and yet, he told us then: This increase in the interest rate, which dispossesses once for all the Canadian workers, is liable to help the average citizen.

Mr. Grégoire: That is without taking into account the municipal taxes.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, yes. We are talking about federal taxes right now; municipal, provincial and school taxes have to be added.

I will give you an example, based on my personal experience. I have a house in Hull, financed by the Mutual Life Company of Canada, and at the end of the year, I was given a balance sheet or statement of account, indicating I had remitted $1,536. Out of this amount, over $800 went for interests, and over $600 for taxes, so that, at the end of the year, I had repaid only $206, I think, of the capital on my house.

Mr. Matte: Why did you not buy it cash?

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Champlain is asking me why I did not buy it cash? For the same reason as all other Canadians, because cash purchase of a house is beyond our means. That is why we take financing plans, why all Canadians are more or less in the same boat.

Mr. Speaker, I said a while ago that the government was bringing in some projects designed to impoverish Canadians rather than help them. One of the highlights of the mini-budget, according to the press release of the Department of Finance, is the following and I quote:

> Anti-inflationary measures will be taken under the form of a drastic reduction of expenses and an increase of tax revenues, in order to make up almost entirely any budget deficit in 1968-69.

The minister states that they are anti-inflationary measures. In my opinion, a reduction of expenses and an increase of tax revenues can only mean a tax increase.

Now, when Canadians are deprived of their purchasing power and prices remain unchanged or tend to go up, are we fighting against inflation, or are we not rather promoting inflation? In the same press release, we also read:

> The government will reduce expenses concerning many items of the budget and it will reduce its loans within the program aimed at controlling inflation, lessening pressures on the capital market and minimizing tax increases.

Mr. Speaker, while it is stated that tax increases will be minimized, for the second consecutive time, a tax increase has been announced. And does the government believe that by doing so it is fighting inflation? If the works in progress are stopped, if projects are left in abeyance, it is obvious that the number of unemployed will increase in Canada. If the number of unemployed increases, those people will be unable to pay taxes as they are doing at the present time.

The tax system will have to be adjusted once again by increasing taxes for those who are still earning something. This means that we are living under an absurd system that does not take realities into consideration.

The Minister of Finance knows—as we have been saying time and again in the house—that instead of adjusting the monetary system to the physical potential of Canada, an attempt is being made to adjust the economic system to the financial possibilities, that is, the opposite of common sense. In private industry, in trade, in business, it is normal to adjust one's budget to one's financial resources. But, for a sovereign government, responsible for the monetary policy of a country like ours, to bow to the demand of such a system is a paradox, and quite inconceivable.

The minister is willing to reduce all sorts of things to fight inflation, but does he reduce the interest we are paying this year on the national debt, namely $1,300 million? He does not say anything about the interest we pay financiers, not one word. But the little man pays a surtax of 5 per cent on his income tax, and that is logical. Increasing federal tax on alchohol and tobacco again is normal. Reducing or slowing down the public works of the federal government is also logical, but we still continue to pay our tribute to the financial system.

According to the news release, the minister also said:

> A special surtax is proposed: 5 per cent on the basic income tax as from January 1, 1968; this will not apply to the low income taxpayer, because an exemption is provided for on the first $100 of basic income tax.

The average Canadian must pay about $300 or $350 in income tax a year, which means that there will be an increase of about $20 a year. Some might say that it is not so much, but $20 for someone who already does not have enough, who actually is short, it is already a lot, and the minister does not take that into consideration.

Federal taxes on spirits and tobacco are raised by 10 per cent. In this case, we get this answer: Well, those who do not want to pay such a tax simply do not have to buy liquor and they can stop smoking. It is an answer as good as any, but personally it is not a tax which worries me a lot.

Now, when the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said that it was again an attack against the small wage-earner, I feel that it is not so much the little man as the companies which will be the most affected, because they are the ones which make a lot of money and which, as a rule, buy most often from the liquor boards of the various provinces of Canada. They will help pay a share of that tax.

But I think that the tax restraints which are apparently essential to avoid a possibly serious recession represent the main point in the budget. However, when the minister said:

• (3:40 p.m.)

After parliament has taken the necessary fiscal measures, the government intends to implement a program aimed at mobilizing public opinion—

It is to be expected that thousands of dollars will be spent on radio, television and newspaper advertising.

—in favour of voluntary, concerted restraints in respect to prices, costs and wage increases.

All Canadians will be invited to limit their activities, not to build right away; instead of "Do it now", it will be: "Do it later", wait till our financial situation is stabilized, wait till people slow down their way of life, then, we will be able to launch again the feverish rush of prices toward wages, of wages toward prices, as is the case since this government has been in power and, furthermore, as it was under the previous administration.

Another point is that fiscal reform will consist mostly in altering the present system instead of adopting completely different methods. What does this mean?

Instead of taxing on the one hand, they will be taxing on the other. But what about compression, restriction in the area of government expenses? The expenditures of the Department of National Defence may possibly be restrained to transfer or lend the amount saved to another department, but another department is asked to reduce its expenditures to the utmost in order to help another department or ministry. These are alterations and not new methods. One point remains nevertheless: we are still fooling around with a vitiated and vicious system and the Minister of Finance will not take a single step to get us out of such a system. Efforts are still being made to adjust the economic potential to the financial assets instead of adjusting the finances to the economic needs of the people, and that is where the fault lies in the whole system.

A former president of the United States used to say and I quote:

If the American people ever allow the private banks to control the issue of money, first through inflation then through deflation, the banks and the companies growing around them will despoil the citizens of their properties until their children wake up without a home on the continent their forefathers conquered.

Mr. Speaker, what Thomas Jefferson said in the United States 160 years ago we can repeat today in Canada, because we are truly being completely robbed of what our Canadian ancestors have helped to build and have left us as a common heritage, as a cultural heritage, as a material heritage, in short as a heritage from all points of view.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance mentioned three urgent and closely related objectives: first, to restrain the inflationary increases in prices, costs and cost of living that are undermining our prosperity; to ease the disturbing strains in the capital market that threaten our continued economic growth; and to meet in a non-inflationary way the costs of continuing public programs essential to social security and long-run national development.

The first objective suggests restraining the inflationary increases that are undermining our prosperity. At this point, we must pay the piper, a situation the minister himself had foreseen in his June 1967 budget. But the measures he proposed then have proved to be most inadequate.

The second objective is aimed at easing the disturbing strains in the capital market that threaten our continued economic growth. Here again, the same problem as in June 1967 is being faced. The solutions then applied by the minister have proved ineffective and ill-advised.

The third objective asks us to meet the costs of social security measures. But, in his present budget, the minister tells us that the implementation of medicare will require further tax increases or the imposition of a new tax to enable the Canadian people to afford medicare, and it is on that point that I found the speech made yesterday by the hon. member for York South completely inconsistent. He blamed the government for imposing taxes, but he felt it should change its fiscal methods, while retaining the present financial system.

He added that we needed a medicare system, better pensions for veterans, efficient economic planning and a system of priorities, all that thanks to increased taxes. But the hon. member for York South did not say who or where to tax, except, of course, large companies which, in turn, would increase prices and, finally, the taxes would again be paid by the Canadian people, the Canadian worker.

The third objective is to foot the bill for welfare measures, like the Canada Pension Plan, but through non-inflationary measures. That is unacceptable, in my opinion.

First, Canada's economic situation does not allow us, as legislators, to promote a full and adequate program of social security. It allows us only to give with one hand and take back with the other, and in the end, that is taxation. According to the Minister of Finance, taxation is one thing only: the right to levy taxes, to empty the pockets of the Canadian taxpayers. That is taxation.

And when the provincial premiers meet in Toronto or Ottawa, as they did in Toronto recently, the first question that arises is that of taxation. As far as a new Canadian constitution is concerned, it is not so much a matter of deciding if French or English is to be spoken, but rather of deciding if the provincial governments or the federal government will continue to dig deeper in the pockets of the Canadian citizens. Here is what the new confederation, the new constitution is all about: taxation.

In fact, as soon as the representatives of the provinces parted in Toronto, the Minister of Finance introduced his budget in which he told us that he needed more money and that he was going to take it out of the pockets of the Canadian taxpayers.

The day before yesterday, the Quebec premier stated about the same thing. Word for word he said that we could not spend any more and that the people of Quebec must be resigned to accept tax increases soon.

The municipalities and school boards are in the same situation. Instead of going to the monetary source, where money is made, the minister goes where there is none and he says: everyone must reduce his expenses. In fact, he tells the school boards: stop building schools; to the municipalities: stop expanding; to the provinces: try to cut down your expenses to the strict minimum, and to us in Ottawa, we shall do the same thing.

But, when everyone is tightening his belt, the financial system continues to rob everyone, as it has done since confederation. That is the ailment of this confederation.

[Mr. Caouette.]

What will they do with the unemployed? They do not know. There is not a single program put forward by this government to take care of those who, this winter, will become unemployed as a direct result of the budget. The unemployed will simply have time to make more unemployed.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, we all remember, besides, December 16, 1966—almost a year ago—when the Minister of Finance said he had a wonderful Christmas present for the elderly of Canada. He forgot to add, however, that all Canadians would have to contribute to that gift. As a matter of fact, the increase in the old age pension was adopted and implemented, but it is not the government that paid for it; the Canadian taxpayers did, and the Bank of Canada did not intervene at all.

Let us briefly examine the situation prevailing at present for a Canadian taxpayer. He is faced with increased prices in every field: clothing, food, transportation, automobile, maintenance costs, insurance, municipal taxes, school taxes, provincial taxes and levies, and to top it all, a 10 per cent federal tax on tobacco and spirits, as well as a 5 per cent increase in the basic personal income tax.

Each one of those increases leads to a decrease in the purchasing power of the small wage-earner. Everyone must admit it, because that is due to the system. And so, the higher the cost of living, the lower the purchasing power of the individual, and while the Minister of Finance does his best to reduce the purchasing power, the more stocks accumulate in Canada. Industries, stores, warehouses are brimming over with goods. One needs only go down Rideau Street in Ottawa, for instance, or down Bank Street, or in any city in Canada, Montreal, Sherbrooke, Lac Mégantic, Rouyn-Noranda, to see how stores are splitting at the seams with goods. Special Christmas sales are being advertised even before Christmas. They no longer wait till after New Year's day. Before Christmas? Why? Because they have astounding quantities of goods. And, in the face of this production, this real state of affairs, the Minister of Finance does his utmost to reduce the purchasing power of Canadian citizens.

What logic, from the economic viewpoint. To reduce purchasing power, when the production is there, unsold, before the eyes of people who need it. Each increase brings a reduction of purchasing power. So, the more the cost of living increases, the less a person can buy.

Let us never forget that what counts is not what the taxpayer earns, but what he can buy. That is what gives the dollar, the monetary unit of a country, its value. I should think that the Minister of Finance is smart enough to understand that the buyer, if his dollar is taken away from him, can no longer buy.

Today, with all that organization, all this tax system, with federal, provincial, municipal and school taxes, what about the Canadian worker, the Canadian farmer, the white collar worker, the professional, the businessman. The businessman now has to contend with the system, and the government gives the example.

The Economic Council of Canada, in its latest annual report, anticipates a rise of 7 per cent in unemployment this winter. In the face of these facts, which nobody in this house can deny, let us put the following question to ourselves: Do we seriously think that the Canadian taxpayer is now in a position to face such measures?

Anyhow, the ostensible purpose of those measures is to take the purchasing power out of the Canadian taxpayers' pockets, in order to meet the excessive government expenditures. Such is the result of election promises; the people, the humble folk always end up by footing the bill. It is easy to make promises to the people; the difficulty is to administer according to their expectations and aspirations.

The present economic system does not reach its objective because it allows this criminal anomaly: misery in the midst of affluence. As I said earlier, instead of waging war on poverty, budgets which will increase even more the number of poor people in Canada are brought down.

Our financial system, one of the tools available to distribute our products and services, is based on a false theory. That system is responsible for the economic crises which regularly and periodically shake the Canadian people.

Social Credit, under its three basic proposals, wants first of all a national currency and not a currency borrowed in the United States which forces us to beg for permission in New York to develop our country, Canada. In my opinion, a national currency is a currency suited to our economic needs and our physical possibilities to ensure the development of our country.

In the second place, Social Credit asks for a two-price policy instead of a tax so to facilitate the normal marketing of production for Canadians who need that production.

In the third place, the Créditistes advocate the payment of a national dividend. This makes a lot of people laugh, because it is so much the opposite to taxes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house give its unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to complete his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for having given me the opportunity to continue, during two or three minutes, so that I may state my feelings about the budget of the Minister of Finance.

I was talking about the national dividend, that is just the opposite of taxes and the taxation system. Some argue that the national dividend would promote inflation, but we maintain that it is the opposite, the antithesis of inflation and deflation, as it is the only means of maintaining a perpetual balance between purchasing power and national production, between production and services provided to the Canadian people. Taxes are the opposite of good judgment, when the dividend, which would not come from anybody's pocket, which would not increase prices and which would be paid directly by the Bank of Canada, according to Canada's economic status and the Canadian economic situation, would restore economic order, while we are now living in economic chaos.

We are going now through a period of inflation. However, we do not accept a national dividend and even less Social Credit. But we sure have inflation. Why? Because inflation results precisely from taxes and from the debt-money with which the government is administering Canada, somewhat like the example I gave a moment ago of the construction of a small $15,000 house which will cost $46,000 after 35 years. In fact, the government is at that point or, rather, beyond that point since we will be paying this $1,300 million in interest only on the national debt or the same as the national defence budget. However, such a national debt or the interest we pay on it cannot put bread on the tables of the Canadian people.

Social Credit favours a dividend which would not be included in the prices and which would be paid directly by the Bank of Canada, according to the economic data on Canada. This dividend would restore economic order and increase the purchasing power without increasing the prices. Instead of hitting everybody with taxes while everybody has to live on credit today, the dividend would restore order, not overnight but gradually, until people would have the money required to buy the things they need.

This is, I think, the logic of an economic system which would guarantee the security and freedom of every citizen. It is for this security and freedom that the Créditistes offer their solution.

I know that some economists do not accept these solutions; they do not accept the dividend. In fact, some of them suggest that economic planning would solve the problem, where others advocate socialism as a panacea for all the economic problems of Canada.

Just yesterday, I heard the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) say: If the government would nationalize the industries, it would solve the problem. In my opinion, this would not solve anything.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read the statement made by an economist from Czechoslovakia, a socialist country, as you know. I quote:

> On June 7 last, during a conference delivered in Montreal, the most prominent economist of Czechoslovakia stated that, from now on, the public enterprises of his country should be economical or close their doors. Dr. Vladimir Kadlec, dean of the economics faculty at the University of Prague, added that his country was forced to introduce capitalist incentives to increase national productivity. Like Russia, Yugoslavia and other Communist countries, Czechoslovakia now recognizes that publicity, competition, personal initiative, individual ambition are tokens of prosperity. In the last five years, the national revenue has not increased a fraction of a point in Czechoslovakia and productivity has declined constantly. Moreover, the standard of living has never been so low and the cost of living so high.
>
> Moreover, fed up with a harassing bureaucracy, disappointed by an illusory social and economic planning, the Czech workers have lost the desire to work. Those are the reasons which drove the Communist government of Czechoslovakia to borrow certain methods and economic principles from the capitalist system. In spite of repeated and disastrous failures in the Communist countries, we find in our federal and provincial governments politicians who persist in leading our economy toward socialism. Under the guise of social progress, they never tire of putting to us the socialist alternative.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that private enterprise is the system which gives the best results in planning a nation's economy, because is there another one which can produce more and give a better output at the production level? So, it is up to a responsible Minister of Finance and government to organize a distribution system through a healthy Canadian money, so that all Canadian citizens will have their share of the national production, of the wealth of our country, Canada.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take part in this budget debate. It has been called a mini budget, though I believe the Canadian people understand better than at any time in recent years that mini-budget though it may be, it affects not only them personally but the whole of the Canadian economy.

I do not want to add to the statements which have already been made in one form or another about the seriousness of the situation in which we find ourselves at the present time, but I think it is imperative that it be emphasized to the government, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and, yes, to the Canadian people as well who may have some questions to ask concerning the financial situation at the present time, that we do in fact face very serious economic trouble. As I see the handwriting on the wall and listen to the remarks of the Minister of Finance as he rationalizes the situation in which we find ourselves and at the same time attempts to suggest the reason things are what they are and how they may be corrected. I find a great deal of similarity between the situation today toward the end of 1967 and that which existed in the closing days of 1962. The situation that developed in the early weeks of 1963 could well be a forerunner of what is going to happen in the early weeks of 1968. Certainly we do have reason for concern.

I share the concern expressed by the Minister of Finance, even though we cannot agree with the policies he is adopting or the justification for the tax increases that he has brought in. It was only last fall, if I recall correctly during the early days of September, that the economic council spoke very firmly in no uncertain terms about what it regarded as the developing crisis. The bombshell report issued by the Economic Council stated very clearly that there was growing fear, which every day was becoming more noticeable, about what is happening in the Canadian economy. I am sure the government was not pleased at the time with what the Economic Council said, but what they said has come true and is becoming more evident day by day. Therefore the debate on this mini budget involving these tax increases and government policy, and also the statement that we expect to hear the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) make tonight, are very important and are tragic evidence that all is not well.

I was interested to see a couple of articles in the London Free Press on December 2 which evidently are what we can expect when the screws are tightened as they are being tightened now. For example, one company in the London area has closed down its production of heavy road equipment in Canada altogether. The company is a subsidiary of a United States company and all production has been shifted to the parent factory in that country. Another major company in the London area hints that there will be a shutdown at some future date. Some 68 persons have been idled by cut-backs as of December 2 and perhaps more people will be laid off in a few days at a second company. This too is evidence that all is not well.

Let me bring again to the attention of the house, Mr. Speaker, those things about which I believe Canadians are most concerned. First of all, interest rates have never been so high. Just today I received a letter from my own banker indicating that interest rates have been raised on ordinary bank loans by half of 1 per cent. Only a few weeks ago we were told that the interest rate on national housing loans had reached an all-time high level of 8¼ per cent. The cost of money for the normal carrying on of industry and commerce and for vital and necessary construction, such as home construction, is such that it has placed an additional, very severe burden on Canadians who are facing a cost of living that is spiralling upward as never before.

Second, Mr. Speaker, this year's budgetary deficit will be the biggest in the nation's history. The Minister of Finance has talked about the increase in government income as a result of the increase in taxes, but the amount the minister can expect to gain from these taxes between now and the end of the fiscal year will not have very much effect in reducing the over-all amount of the deficit which in a year of prosperity, as our centennial year has been, is higher than at any other time in the nation's history, either in war or in peace.

This situation, Mr. Speaker, just cannot continue, and obviously something is radically wrong with our approach to the financial problems facing the country. For example, look at the housing crisis. Housing starts this year so far as unit construction is concerned are far behind. There is no hope of catching up on the lag last year. As already mentioned in this debate, the cost of housing for the people who need housing and want to own a house has increased many times as a result of the increased cost of interest. How long can we continue in this way, Mr. Speaker? We all know very well that housing is important to the well-being of our nation, not only just to the economy but to many other aspects.

I am particularly concerned about the increasing prices facing our farmers. This is creating an extremely difficult situation. Prices for farm products are not even holding their own but are tending to go down. Yet the cost of production goes up. In western Canada in particular there is a crisis because the cash crop, which the farmers normally expect to dispose of in the early months following the harvest, has no market this year. The wheat quotas are just not there. Moreover, the price of wheat has gone down and the prices for hogs and cattle are hardly holding their own. As I say, the farmers are not able to sell their cash crop to pay for their harvesting operations or even their seeding last spring. This affects the entire economy, but the western agricultural economy perhaps more than the eastern economy is finding itself in extreme difficulty.

What is the prospect, Mr. Speaker, of even maintaining our grain exports? The devaluation of the British pound has certainly cast a shadow across the prospect of maintaining wheat prices at an economic level. The devaluation of the pound will not only affect Britain and the other countries which likewise devalued because they found themselves in difficult economic circumstances but will cause these countries to lower their demand for Canadian wheat. As a result of the devaluation of the British pound Japan is finding herself facing a very critical situation, though as yet she has not devalued her own currency.

Mr. Crouse: Wait a moment. The lights have gone out.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Ricard: Don't talk. The Hansard reporter cannot see to work.

An hon. Member: Black Thursday.

Mr. Thompson: We are grateful to the Minister without Portfolio for restoring light.

Mr. Chrétien: I represent a riding which has one of the oldest power generating stations in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Thompson: Before darkness descended on the house I was saying something about the difficulty that western agriculture finds itself in. Not only do we face the prospect that lower prices will be obtained for the products of western farms, and I am referring particularly to lower wheat prices, but since western grain is most important to the Canadian economy and since our western farmers face the prospect of losing markets, the entire country will suffer. Also, what is happening in China does not lead us to hope that we shall be able to continue to enjoy our grain markets in that country.

Another area which is of great concern to the economy of this country is that area of activity which relates to wages. Certain of our workers have demanded wage parity with workers in the United States. I am sure that no one in the house will begrudge any of our workers a living wage, especially in these times of rising prices. But it must be remembered that the Canadian worker is competing, so far as productivity is concerned, with the worker who lives in a nation that is more than ten times economically greater than our nation. This demand for parity will drive our cost of living ever higher and will increase the upward momentum of the inflationary spiral.

One of the greatest causes for this so-called inflation has been the unprecedented amount of government spending during recent years. The greatest factor in the inflationary problem is one which the Minister of Finance himself is responsible for creating. That factor is the enormous increase in government spending that we have witnessed during the last several years. Whether the Minister of Finance accepts the blame or not, statistics reveal that the rate of government spending at the federal level exceeds by far the rate of economic growth as well as the rate of increase in wages and the rate at which living costs are rising.

Some interesting statistics were released last week by the Canadian Economic Foundation. They show that the 3.5 million taxpayers who earn less than $5,000 per year pay nearly 50 per cent of their income in aggregate taxes yearly to governments at one level or another.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he directing his criticisms also at provincial and municipal governments?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I am, but now I am specifically directing it to the Minister of Finance. My criticism applies to governments at all levels. In his last two budget speeches at least the Minister of Finance has asked governments at provincial and municipal levels to exercise restraint. Yet he has permitted federal spending to run wild. The rate of increase in costs of government at all levels has been greater than the rate of productivity increase in this country. I venture to say that federal spending has grown at a greater rate than provincial and municipal spending.

The statistic released by the Canadian Economic Foundation reveal that the 1.6 million taxpayers who earn between $5,000 and $10,000 a year pay more than 50 per cent of their income in taxes. The average tax payment for that group amounts to $5,300. That amount is paid in aggregate taxes to governments at all levels.

The taxpayers' union reports that today the average taxpayer pays about half his income in taxes which include personal income tax, sales tax, property tax, automobile licences and all forms of hidden tax which pay for the cost of government. I have some statistics for 1965 which support the contentions of the Canadian Economic Foundation and the taxpayers' union. I could not get detailed statistics for 1966 but unfortunately government spending for that year reached an even higher level than in previous years. The figures for 1965 relate to net national income.

As at December 31, 1965, the gross national product of Canada was $52,056 million. As at December 31, 1965, our net national income was $38,940 million. This figure includes wages, salaries, commissions, income from the sale of products and from all other sources. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, the interest that we paid on our debt amounted to $1,051.3 million. Also, in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, our direct national debt was $27,617 million, an increase over 1964-65 of $1,044 million. Bringing these figures down to a daily basis, I point out that the daily interest cost of our national debt amounted to $2,881,121.30. The hourly cost was more than $120,000, and the cost per minute was approximately $2,000.

The truly alarming statistic is that which shows that federal, provincial and municipal expenditures in 1965 reached the astronomical total of $22,500 million. Of this amount the federal government spent $7,633 million or 34 per cent, the provincial governments spent $5,220 million or 23.3 per cent, and the municipal governments spent $9,596 million or 42.7 per cent.

Taking these costs and applying them to the net national income of the Canadian people we find that 57 cents out of every dollar that is earned by Canadians is taken back by governments at one level or another. If we include the net cost of government, that cost which is financed through taxes and not through other sources of income, we find that nearly 50 per cent of every dollar that is earned by Canadians is taken back by government in the form of taxes to pay for the cost of government. The taxes which I speak are taxes which are levied on net income; they are not paid out of the gross national product. They are paid out of the net earnings of the Canadian people.

It is easy to see that we face a crisis in government spending at this time. How any government can justify an increase in spending to the extent that has taken place during the last several years is something that escapes me. The unprecedented costs of government are driving our taxes and the cost of living ever higher. By increasing taxes the Minister of Finance is attempting in some small way to control the situation.

Another factor that must be considered when talking about increased government costs is the increase in welfare costs in Canada. I am thinking particularly of the prospect that medicare will be implemented in the near future. In so many words, the Minister of Finance—and his meaning is not hard to follow—says that it is not possible, considering the economy of Canada, for this country to bear the extra weight of medicare. At the same time he says that, politically, it is not possible to drop the program. I do not understand his logic. Only three of the ten provinces had shown any willingness to go ahead with medicare. Seven provinces say they do not have enough money to pay for their share of the medicare program. They imply that they would willingly see this program postponed for a long time.

Just in case the Minister of Finance thinks that I am away out in right field somewhere, may I refer to an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on November 30. It sums up the matter effectively in these words:

> All this has been dramatically illustrated in the case of the government's medicare proposals. The government has persisted with this plan, and is persisting with it still. But there is no evidence such a plan has any overwhelming public support. The evidence, on the contrary, is that this plan, in its present form, is beyond what the country wants, as it is beyond what it can afford.

• (4:20 p.m.)

> The fact is that the federal Liberals, though making medicare one of their chief promises in the last general election, came dismally to office without an over-all majority in the house. A medicare plan did not save the C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan from being voted out of office, nor did it bring it back to power in the recent election. In Quebec the provincial Liberals emphatically supported medicare, but they lost their election to a party that did not conceal its reservations about it.
>
> All this might have given cause for the government to reconsider whether it was really being precipitated into medicare by popular propulsion. But the evidence has continued to run against the plan. When the premiers of the provinces held their own annual conference at Fredericton this summer, they exchanged many doubts and criticisms of the plan. And the federal-provincial meeting last week showed most of the provinces (including Ontario and Quebec) quite unwilling and even unable to assume at this time the burden of paying half the cost of so expensive a scheme.
>
> How the government got started on this billion dollar spending proposition is something not yet fully explained. At last week's conference, Mr. Sharp said that the plan's cost would be equal to an increase in the personal income tax of about 12 per cent.

And we have had a 5 per cent increase in income tax in the meantime. The article continues:

> This would come about at the time when Mr. Sharp is talking of raising taxes to diminish spending deficits. How many taxes can people pay? How many are they willing to pay?
>
> Nor can it be said that the government entered into this proposition at a time when it seemed financially feasible. The warning signals were already flying when the plan was first advanced. All governments in the country were in financial trouble, and sinking deep into deficits. The need, even then, was to come to an understanding on priorities and capacities—to see what was needed most and what there was to pay for it.

The editorial states in conclusion:

> It is not possible for Mr. Sharp to go before the public with two propositions: one to clamp on more taxes to cover more of its overspending, and another to launch one of the most gigantic spending schemes, involving money-finding by the provinces, as well as by Ottawa.

This is the situation in which we find ourselves at the present time, a situation which affects not only the poor people who pay taxes they cannot afford to pay but even bank presidents. I am sure that the reactions of the public to a speech made in Montreal by the president of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce just three days before that editorial appeared on November 30 must have caused concern to the Minister of Finance. Referring to the taxation and financial policies of the government, Mr. Neil J. McKinnon told a conference of financial executives that a swindle had been perpetrated on the great majority of the populace who were least able to protect themselves against the consequences. Let me give an illustration of this. A man who bought a $1,000 government bond paying 4.5 per cent interest nine years ago could sell it now for no more than $790. Why? Because the price of money has been inflated, along with the price of everything else. And the $790 would not buy as much today as $600 would have done when the bond was issued to mature in 25 years. So the man who trusted his government with his life's savings has taken about a 40 per cent loss.

This is an illustration of the "massive swindle", to use Mr. McKinnon's words, which involves those least able to protect themselves.

The New Democratic party in its amendment has condemned the government for its financial policies. However, their spokesman, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), went on to expound the policies which he and his hon. friends believe the government should implement. What seems strange to me is that these policies are basically the same as those which have been implemented by a labour government in Britain as a result of which Britain has been brought to her knees financially, even to the point where she has been obliged to devalue the pound. And despite this drastic action her financial future for the next two or three years is far from being assured. Can hon. members not see that these financial policies being advanced as alternatives to what the government is doing are no better than those which the Minister of Finance is advocating? Surely the time has come when something different must be tried so far as economic policies are concerned.

We have wealth untold in this country, enough to meet the needs of every Canadian and more, without difficulty. It is not a problem of production; it is a problem of distribution. Money was designed and intended to be a means of distribution between producers and consumers. After all, there is no reason to produce anything except that somebody, somewhere, wishes to consume or use it. Yet the financial policies being applied by the present government and by the government which preceded it have, along with those suggested by the New Democratic party, proved incapable of coping with the problems which face us.

The time has come when Canadians themselves have lost confidence in their economy. Some people in this country complain in anti-American tones about the effect of United States investment in Canada. I will say again, as I have on other occasions, that Americans have more confidence in Canada than have Canadians themselves when it comes to investing capital. I say this because on a per capita basis Canadians are investing $3 in the United States for every $1 which Americans are investing here.

I came across an article the other day describing the way in which business had increased on the Chicago stock exchange. The writer stated that the sharp rise in this year's trading volume was attributed largely to increased trading by Canadians. It was Canadians who had pushed up the volume of business. Our own brokerage houses confirm that Canadians are move confident in the United States economy than in their own and more willing to invest their money in United States stocks and bonds than in Canadian development. I believe this is because the policies of our governments in Canada destroy the confidence of the Canadians people in their own economy.

It is true we are comparatively few, just 20 million people. Nevertheless, if we could only use our own credit, if we could only use our own know-how in the development of our resources, if we could only evolve our own financial policies to meet our needs, I do not think the financial situation we now face would turn out to be difficult in any way.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I should like to refer briefly to an editorial which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of March 15 because it supports the argument I am making. It quotes Mr. George Rogers, chairman of the Canadian Economic Foundation, as saying:

> Right now we are on a roller coaster, and we cannot get off. To keep prices from increasing we would have immediately to clamp a ceiling on government spending; and to reduce prices we would have to reduce total government spending by 5 per cent a year for several years.

The article continues:

> No realistic person expects a reduction in government spending, but who was prepared for the almost incredible budgetary estimates tabled in the Commons Monday? They forecast a staggering increase in federal spending.

So we have a staggering deficit now facing us which has resulted in the increase in taxes that is before us at this time.

> Payments to the provinces will increase by $340,000,000. Will provincial levies on the same taxpayers' pockets from which Ottawa extracts its money be reduced accordingly?

Farther on the article states:

> —Mr. Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, directs attention to the fact that the expenditures of provincial and municipal governments last year rose more rapidly than their revenues.

This is the pattern at all government levels, but it is the example of the federal government through its policies which is leading the provincial governments to increase their expenditures. That is why there is so much fear at the present time about the implementation of medicare. It is going to involve the expenditure of half a billion dollars on the part of the federal government and an almost similar amount on the part of the provinces. Thus we go on and on increasing the costs of government.

This article also refers to the increase in the cost of old age universal pensions and the increase in the budget of the C.B.C. It refers to other expenditures and then closes with these words:

> The bill will be paid in higher taxes or higher prices through inflation—or both. Where will it all end? How many taxpayers would like the increases in total government expenditures to be not more than half the year to year increases in the gross national product?

I think most Canadians would say yes to that. This is the challenge that faces the government. Yet in the face of this challenge we find it advancing policies that do not lead to the solution of the problem. In fact they just increase the problem. This is the situation we face.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, it would be wrong not to say something about the alternatives which I think could be implemented. For a long time Social Credit has been talking about policies, some of which have been adopted but all of which I believe one day will have to be implemented by governments in Canada.

If we are going to face up to the crisis caused by increasing government expenditures and increasing government deficits—I have said nothing about the increase in personal credit buying by Canadians, which has risen faster this year than in recent years—it will become imperative that money reform be implemented in a way that it is not being implemented at the present time. When governments believe that by increasing taxes they can correct inflationary trends in an economy that they describe as too hot, something is wrong with the logic of this stand because if increased taxes were the answer to the inflationary trends, in the economy today we would not have inflation inasmuch as there has been a rising pattern of increases in taxes over the years. There must be another alternative.

I believe that one of the alternatives that can be implemented is to bring in fiscal policies which will encourage Canadians to invest in their own economy. We have heard a great deal about the recommendations of the Carter report and about the necessity to introduce a capital gains tax. If succession duties were eliminated—these are forms of double taxation in themselves—it might be well to talk about the implementation of a limited capital gains tax, but we cannot have it both ways and expect to attain the objective that is our goal. Therefore rather than discouraging investment in Canadian resources, such investment must be encouraged. It is in this regard that tax reform is most necessary.

Beyond this it is necessary that we begin to use our own credit, particularly in those areas that relate to expansion of the capital development programs that are required for the services that governments must give to the Canadian economy. This again is a matter of encouragement. There is no more important need in this regard than housing. There is no reason why we cannot build houses today with money having a special category or classification which would not command the high rates of interest that commercial loans involve.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Thompson: I shall be very brief in finishing, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is there unanimous consent to enable the hon. member to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned housing as one of those areas where I believe capital must be provided at lower rates of interest than the rate on commercial loans. If we can provide capital in the form of soft loans to underdeveloped countries at an interest cost of three quarters of one per cent, then we should be able to provide money at 2 per cent or 3 per cent as an incentive to home production which would help expand our economy and develop our productivity.

• (4:40 p.m.)

We must not only hold steady on government spending but we must also give an example to our economy, to our workers, to hold steady as well. It seems to me that increases in wages and prices must follow closely in line with increases in national productivity. Moreover, in an automated society wage increases must be spread beyond the narrow corridor of workers represented by trade unions in special sectors where strikes can cause a national crisis. A country cannot stand a 30 per cent increase in wages in one year without massive effects on productivity and exports. The federal government must take the lead and keep its rate of spending down to something below the rate of increase in the productivity of the nation. Wage increases must likewise be kept down to that level. Beyond that we may have some hope of maintaining a cost of living increase which will bear some relationship to the increase in the productivity of the country. If we do not do that and support it with a different financial and monetary policy in areas of public development, then we are going to go from one crisis to another.

What concerns me and those in this party at this time is simply that we are on the verge of a crisis which is going to envelop us in such a way that we will not be able to control it in the way that the minister suggests we can control it now by these limited policies. Surely we must give something better than we are giving to the people of Canada in respect of the economy of this country.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, listening to the official spokesman for the official opposition one would think that running a budget deficit was a crime, that increased government spending should be outlawed, that inflation was an indictable offence and that devaluation of a nation's currency should be punishable by death. If this was true the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) would not be in the house today, nor would many of the former cabinet ministers of the Conservative party. The former leader of the official opposition, once the prime minister of this country, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), would not be here. They would all have been hanged, drawn and quartered long ago. They would have been imprisoned in the late 1950's put into solitary confinement in the early 1960's, and would all have passed on to their last reward when the devaluation of the Canadian dollar took place in those good old, bad old days of 1962.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

The present leader of the Conservative party does not escape this indictment. The hon. member for Perth talked about the present Liberal government as though it was the last of the big spenders. We on this side of the house are pikers by comparison with the record of the Stanfield government of Nova Scotia. If one is talking of expenditures his record is an impressive one, indeed. Over the past decade the spending of the Conservative government of Nova Scotia, led by the present member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Stanfield), has gone up threefold. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics the net government expenditures of that province rose from $58 million in 1956 to an estimated $183 million in 1967.

Mr. Crouse: You might also say that Nova Scotia has had a balanced budget. Their budget has been balanced, and you should put that on the record.

Mr. Davis: We here in Ottawa have been dragging our feet by comparison. The federal government admittedly spends a good deal more money today than it did in 1956.

Mr. Sharp: Nova Scotia taxes and spends.

Mr. Crouse: You keep quiet and listen to this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order, please. I would appreciate it if hon. members on both sides would allow the hon. member to make his speech.

Mr. Davis: The federal increase in 1967 over 1956 is 70 per cent. But compare this with the 200 per cent plus record of Nova Scotia and one can see how government spending can really get out of hand. The quiet member from Nova Scotia may not have had much to say yet in the House of Commons, but he is like a man with a time bomb in his suitcase. The Halifax explosion will have been nothing compared with the explosion which would take place in Ottawa if this country were ever unfortunate enough to have him as prime minister.

An hon. Member: It won't be long.

Mr. Davis: Former premier Stanfield was not alone in his big spending habits. Conservative premiers everywhere in Canada have been heaping one government expenditure on top of another. In Ontario, for instance, provincial expenditures since the mid-1950's up to the present time have gone up four times. In premier Roblin's Manitoba they have gone up four and a half times. This only goes to show that Conservative premiers are lavish spenders. Not only that, it also shows that these provincial governments have been mainly responsible for the increase in taxes which has taken place in this country in recent years.

What do the over-all statistics show? They show, as I said before, that federal government expenditure on federal account has gone up by roughly two thirds, or 70 per cent, over the past decade. Outlays by all of the provinces taken together, meanwhile, have gone up nearly fourfold.

The provinces, it is true, have had to deal with such top priority items as education, health and municipal services, but they have dealt with them in a lavish manner. And they have frequently turned to Ottawa for help in this regard. Witness the fact that Ottawa has been turning over increasing amounts of money directly to the provinces. In the mid-1950's it was turning money over to the provinces at an annual rate of $500 million. Now five times as much money is being turned over to the provincial premiers. Some $2.5 billion will be turned over to the provincial governments in the coming year. It is more than 20 per cent of our current federal budget and it shows why it has been increasingly difficult for the federal government to budget for a surplus, in the light of these payments to the provinces, at a time when the really big spenders are the provincial premiers who have been spending money as though it were really going out of style.

Perhaps for clarification I should deal in percentages. Ten years ago Ottawa spent about 16 per cent of our gross national product on federal projects and programs of one kind of another. The corresponding figure today is down from 16 per cent. It is more like 13 per cent. The federal government, in other words, has been taking less money proportionately out of the pockets of the Canadian taxpayers. The provinces, meanwhile have been much more ambitious. Together with the local municipalities, creatures of the provinces, they have accounted for the fact that governments collectively now spend about one third or roughly 33 per cent of our gross national product on government activities of one kind or another. Think of it. Federal expenditures on federal projects now add up to 13 per cent of our gross national product. But these are far outpaced by the spending programs of provinces, 16 per cent, and municipalities, 4 per cent. Together they make up the remaining 20 per cent. In other words, 13 per cent is spent by the federal government and 20 per cent by the provinces and their creatures, the municipalities.

Hon. members talk about deficits. Ottawa has been running a big surplus for years if we leave out the transfers to the provinces. It has been running a surplus in the order of 20 per cent. We would have a $2 billion surplus this year were it not for these payments to the provinces. It would be roughly 20 per cent of the federal government account alone.

Let me refer briefly to a comparison of the performance of the government of this country and the economy in the last ten years. Most of us know that the great depression occurred in the early 1930's when prime minister R. B. Bennett was in office. He was a Conservative so it should come as no surprise to learn that our late depression, the depression of 1957 to 1962, also occurred when a Conservative government was in power. This was the regime headed by the present hon. member for Prince Albert. It distinguished itself by running budget deficits which in absolute current dollars as well as in relative terms were the largest that this country has ever known.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Get up to date.

Mr. Davis: A comparison between this fateful five year period and the last five years of the current Liberal administration might well be left to an independent authority, the Economic Council of Canada. Its latest annual report on current expansion since 1962 had this to say:

> —this represents probably the longest, uninterrupted expansion—and certainly the longest peacetime expansion—in Canadian history.

It also had this to say:

> It also constitutes the largest expansion in terms of the absolute rise in the volume of total output and total employment. Even in terms of percentage change, the rise in industrial output was exceeded only by that occurring as the economy climbed out of the pit of the great depression.

Since the early 1960's "Canada has in fact experienced what could appropriately be described as a great expansion". Those are the words of the Economic Council of Canada. This certainly underlines the old saying that Liberal times are good times.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I should also like to draw attention to other figures and comparisons which appear on page 12 of the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada. The report shows that our national output has grown three times as fast in the last five years as it did in the years when the hon. member for Prince Albert was in power. It shows that productivity, that is, output per man hour in industry or industrial efficiency, if you like, has grown five times as fast. It shows that unemployment has been cut in half, from 7 per cent on the average in 1962 to around 3½ per cent today.

To those who are crying havoc I would also point out that our record of the last five years compares favourably even with that of the United States. The Economic Council of Canada said on page 13 of their report:

Although this great expansion was common to both Canada and the United States, its vigour was considerably more pronounced in Canada.

The opposite, unfortunately, was true in the late 1950's and early 1960's when the Conservative party was in power. So far I have been talking about big figures and round aggregates. I would like to be more specific. Annual investment in new plant and equipment fell between 1956 and 1961. Since then it has grown by more than 50 per cent. Exports have grown considerably. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) likes to take credit for his great export drive in those fateful years leading up to 1962, but the fact is that since he left office the rate of increase in our export sales has been stepped up fourfold. The amount of foreign exchange, in other words, that we are earning from selling our goods and services to other countries has increased immensely since the Liberals came to power.

So much for the past, Mr. Speaker. Things have improved a great deal, but we have current problems. Our biggest single problem is inflation, with which we have to deal now. Granted, it is not confined to Canada alone; it is a world wide phenomenon. But we have to learn, and learn quickly, to keep prices and wages under control. If we do not we will undermine the willingness of Canadians to save, we will hurt those people who have to live on fixed incomes and we will make the management process all the more difficult in industry and government alike.

Perhaps I should describe the situation in this way, that our economy is delicately balanced. It is balanced on a sort of knife edge, a knife edge with the abyss of unemployment on one side and the hazards of inflation on the other. Increased government spending may put more people to work but it will also add to the fires of inflation. Money wisely spent can make our economy more productive. Tax dollars spent merely to perpetuate the life of dying industries or of inefficiently operated crown corporations will cause inflation, and you can be sure of that.

The Minister of Finance, trying to operate in a free enterprise system, has several big levers which he can pull. He can expand our money supply and he can cut government expenditure. He cannot really tell business and labour what to do. From what I said earlier, the fact that federal income and expenditures now amount to only about 13 per cent of our national income illustrates that the leverage of the Minister of Finance in respect of the government's spending is less than at any time in our post-war history.

He can draw certain guide lines. If I have any criticism to make of the present government I would say it has not drawn and certainly has not published these guide lines to the extent I would like to have seen. I would like the government to indicate quite clearly what the order of magnitude of increase in prices and wages can be, what is the maximum that is tolerable in this country and what is the maximum that is consistent with a modest degree of inflation in Canada.

I would like to think that a guide line would be drawn tolerating an increase, if you like, a maximum increase, in prices and wages of the order of 5 per cent per year. We have had in recent years an increase in productivity of the order of 3 per cent. It has been slipping toward 2 per cent. If we have increases in wages and prices in excess of 2 or 3 per cent a year we have some degree of inflation. If we have wage and price increases of the order of 7 per cent or 8 per cent a year, as recent wage agreements, particularly in the larger industries and negotiated by the more powerful unions would indicate, then we are in for a substantial measure of inflation. This trend must somehow be brought to an end.

I want to say a word too about the limited ability of the Minister of Finance to control expenditures in another sense. A very large part of his budget is fixed. It is fixed in the sense of interest payments. It is fixed in the sense of commitments in respect of pensions to our elderly citizens and in respect of transfers to the provincial governments, those very large transfers of funds which I mentioned earlier. So he has not too much latitude.

His latitude extends to perhaps one quarter of his budget. That latitude is such that he has to bear down heavily, whenever there is a call for economy on construction, on the types of projects which I am sure the fathers of confederation meant the government of Canada to build. One hundred years ago responsibility for building the railways and digging the canals of Canada was vested in the parliament of Canada; these things were the responsibility of the government of Canada. What is the equivalent today? Perhaps it is Air Canada. Perhaps it is in sending communications satellites into the heavens.

We should do this sort of thing and more. We should be building a second trans-Canada highway. We should even be assisting the provinces, directly and indirectly, in a much more effective way to develop a national power grid. National projects of this type should be cut, and certainly will be cut, under present circumstances when there is a call for economy, because the Minister of Finance has no real elbow room to deal with these problems.

In my view the provinces should look after such important matters as health and welfare, community services and much of the expenditure in respect of education. Ottawa should increasingly make sure that these programs are not only administered by the provinces but are substantially paid for by the provinces, that the provinces raise the taxes necessary to carry them out as well as administering them and taking the credit for them. I think this would leave greater initiative in the hands of the federal government and would put Ottawa back in the position of being the great developer, the builder of big projects, the instrument for building the Canadian nation and binding our people together.

I should like to deal with a few items that were mentioned in the minister's statement, items with respect to which we have had some figures, particularly in the spring budget, for example, I should like to deal with the size of the civil service. In recent years the federal government has been employing more people in its departments. The figure I have for 1956 is 172,000. For 1967—these are all from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics—the figure is 222,000. There has been a net growth of 50,000 federal government employees in the departments and in related agencies over the last ten years, an increase of 5,000 a year, on the average, or roughly 400 a month.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I looked at the figures in respect of the growth between 1956 and 1962. There was an increase of 25,000 in these Conservative years. From 1962 to 1967 the number of employees increased by another 25,000. So I do not think those who sit on the other side of the house can pretend to be any more virtuous than the present government when it comes to the hiring and retiring of civil servants.

I have looked at the number of civil service employees in relation to Canada's total population. For many years now it has been 1.1 per cent of the total population of Canada. If you add the crown corporations, the C.N.R., Air Canada and the C.B.C. you find that the trend, I am glad to say, is downward. So far as I am concerned it is not coming down fast enough, but it has been coming down.

In 1956 5 per cent of the nation's total labour force was employed directly or indirectly by the government, either working in departments or in federal crown corporations. The figure in 1962 was still 5 per cent. Today it is 4.5 per cent. It has gone down from 5 per cent to 4.5 per cent of our labour force in the last five years.

There has been a cut in the armed forces of the order of 25,000 in the last few years. On balance it just about offsets the increase in the federal civil service employed in departments. If you add all these figures together you get a substantial decline in percentage terms relative both to Canada's total population and to the labour force. This is an improvement but I would like to see an even greater improvement take place, for example, with regard to some of our crown corporations. Air Canada is a case in point. Here let me make a comparison between Air Canada and Northwest Orient Airlines in the United States. My reason for doing so is that the number of miles flown, the number of passengers carried and the amount of freight carried were almost identical in the case of both companies in 1966. It is interesting to note that Air Canada, which is more of a monopoly than is Northwest Orient Airlines, had a higher load factor. It has a load factor of 65 per cent while Northwest Orient Airlines had only 55 per cent. Each aircraft had more seats filled in Air Canada's case.

I think we will all admit that Air Canada is excellent in the air. It has first class equipment and its safety record is second to none. This is borne out by the financial statistics. Both of these corporations spend about 20 per cent of their total revenue on what might loosely be called their flying operations. But there the similarity ends. Air Canada's traffic servicing, most of the Canadian travelling public will agree, leaves something to be desired. Still, Air Canada spent 14.3 per cent of its income on air traffic servicing while Northwest Orient Airlines spent only 9.4 per cent. Air Canada is a virtual monopoly. Northwest Orient Airlines, on the other hand, has to compete flat out with a number of other carriers in the United States. Nevertheless Air Canada spent 15.4 per cent of its revenue into sales promotion, exactly double Northwest Orient's 7.7 per cent in 1966. When it comes to general administration we see much the same thing. The figure for Air Canada last year was 3.9 per cent while that for Northwest Orient Airlines was 2.4 per cent.

There is another item in respect of Air Canada which bears careful examination. I note that the maintenance figure for Air Canada was 19.5 per cent, more than double Northwest Orient Airlines figure of 9.5 per cent. Why is this? I am told this is due to the servicing of a number of older Viscount aircraft, many of which will be taken out of service by 1970 or 1971. But the real answer is that Air Canada insists on carrying on a number of regional operations in this country. It is ont only in the big jet business but also in the smaller, regional carrier business as well. If Air Canada were to back out of this latter field and leave it to private enterprise I am sure that the subsidies required from the federal government would be much smaller than the losses incurred by Air Canada in carrying on this particular type of activity.

The real clincher, I think, is employment. Air Canada employs far more people than does Northwest Orient Airlines. In 1966 it had 13,718 employees. Northwest Orient Airlines, flying roughly the same number of people over roughly the same number of miles and carrying a similar volume of air traffic, employed 8,875 people. Our crown owned corporation, in other words, employed roughly 50 per cent more people to do a similar job in the air for Canadians.

Now I will refer to taxation. Air Canada paid to the federal government taxes of the order of $3 million in 1956. Northwest Orient Airlines, on the other hand, shouldered a tax burden of more than $46 million. In other words, last year the private company was yielding a tax payment to the United States economy of $46 million.

Last Thursday night when the Minister of Finance submitted his budget, I was glad to hear that Air Canada would be forced to go out into the money market in order to raise funds of its own. It will at least have to show how it expects to be able to pay interest on its bonds and have something to spare. In this way it will be brought into much closer contact with the business community. It will have to compete with other well managed industries for its funds. This is all to the good.

I should like to turn very briefly to another corporation, namely, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This year the C.B.C. will be receiving $140 million from the federal treasury. In addition it will be earning, over and above that figure, at least $25 million in the form of revenue for advertisements shown on its television system or broadcast by radio. Let us compare this with the $14 million budget of the privately owned C.T.V. One is more than ten times the other. I understand that C.T.V. now reaches approximately 70 per cent of the Canadian viewing public. If I were to double its $14 million expenditure to allow for the fact that it does not reach into many homes in Quebec and other French speaking areas, and double it again to allow for it to reach into a number of outlying areas in the rest of the country which are not commercially attractive to private enterprise, the figure would still only be $56 million. Even this does not bear a favourable comparison with the very large figure for the C.B.C.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, in speaking in support of the amendment my remarks will centre around two words which appear in it, namely, the "vacillation" and "extravagance" of the government. Within the committee framework of parliament we have had for many years a public accounts committee which has been charged with the responsibility of dealing with the Auditor General's report and with other financial matters which come to the attention of the house and are referred to this committee. I do not think that any committee of the house has been more diligent in bringing to the attention of the ministers and the house the waste and the extravagance which they have uncovered in the course of their work.

Last year the committee met very regularly. Unfortunately this has not been the case this year. Let me point out the government's vacillation in this regard. Last January 9 the report of the Auditor General for 1966 was tabled in the house and, mark you, Mr. Speaker, on April 5, three months later, this committee received its terms of reference from the house. Three months were wasted there. Immediately after the committee received its terms of reference it met, on April 13, and continued to meet until the house closed on April 26.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The house opened again on May 8. On May 19, under standing order 65, the committees of the house were set up. However, an organization meeting of the public accounts committee has not been called by the government. I believe there is no justification for this delay, no justification for the lack of interest in grappling with the nation's economic situation and dealing with matters that this servant of parliament, the Auditor General, has brought before it by means of his report. The government has ignored this committee and has not set it up.

Over the years this committee has dealt with various forms of waste and extravagance in government operations. The other day I read an editorial and it led me to think how wonderful it would be if we could have the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) as a member of the public accounts committee. The minister was attending an FAO meeting in Rome at which the representatives were discussing the operating costs of FAO. Of the total of $60 million contributed to this organization Canada contributes 4.1 per cent. There was a discussion of staff increases which since 1957 have amounted to 300 per cent. The minister had this to say:

If they lose faith—

He was referring to the countries contributing to this organization.

—these Canadian taxpayers, in the efficiency of our endeavours, if they come to believe that their taxes are but adding to the bureaucracy or to the pile of papers in some mirky vault, they will lose the will to participate.

This is what our minister said in Rome, and if he would just bring those words back to Canada they would make an excellent prescription for Ottawa. During his remarks in Rome he also said:

New funds are hard to come by and a dollar saved is a dollar earned.

Wouldn't he make a wonderful member of the public accounts committee? I hope he will instil some of these principles of thrift and saving into the cabinet of which he is a member. There was an editorial by Fraser Robertson in the Globe and Mail for December 1 headed "M.P.'s Also Responsible For Final Decision". He was referring to this terrible budget. I resent that statement because I feel that members of parliament have been sincere in bringing to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) the great perils and troubles of our economic situation. The public accounts committee, which represents parliament as a whole on public spending, when called into session, has been very diligent in its work.

Let us look for a few minutes at some of the recommendations made by the public accounts committee and what has been done about them. In the fourth report for 1963 the committee pointed out that the Unemployment Assistance Act was inadequate and that there were certain deficiencies in the shareable costs. However, there has been no action taken and there has been vacillation in this regard. The government introduced the Canada Assistance Plan, but it was not incorporated into the unemployment assistance scheme.

In the fourth report of the committee for 1964 there is a reference to the findings of the Glassco commission. At that time, out of the original 276 recommendations the committee found that there were 151 recommendations which had not been acted upon. If all these recommendations had been put into operation they certainly would have yielded substantial savings. I will give the government its due by saying they have implemented some recommendations since that committee report, but there are still many Glassco commission recommendations left outstanding.

The Auditor General had this to say concerning the Glassco commission, and I quote from page 3 of his report for 1966:

> Meanwhile, administrative overhead in departments and agencies continues to rise substantially in terms of staff needs and office costs. I advised the house last year that when this royal commission concluded its work in 1962-63, administrative overhead in terms of staff needs and office costs was to the order of $1,000 million. The comparable figure presently estimated for 1966-67 is $1,325 million, an increase of over 30 per cent during the past four years.

The Auditor General's report was presented to the government but we have seen no action and, if anything, there has been an increase in the above figures.

In so far as crown corporations are concerned, the public accounts committee made some recommendations. The crown corporations spend billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, but no member of their boards of directors reports directly to parliament on their operations. We do not even have the Auditor General as the auditor for seven of these large corporations. I think we should at least have a representative when we realize how much money these corporations spend.

The crown corporations whose books the Auditor General does not audit are Air Canada, the Bank of Canada, Canadian National Railways, C.N. Security Trust, Canadian Wheat Board, the C.B.C. and the Industrial Development Bank. If the government does not feel the Auditor General should be the auditor, as the committee suggested, perhaps he could be co-auditor. Perhaps, on the other hand, the government would adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) who had a private bill that was of great interest which would provide for one member of parliament being on the board of each crown corporation.

I should like to turn to some other recommendations the committee made which it was believed would at least prevent government extravagance and waste. There was a suggestion concerning the form of the estimates. The committee asked for a brief note to be included setting out the increases in the size of staffs of departments and crown corporations. In this way members would know which departments had increased in size. The Glassco commission made a very thorough study of the C.B.C. but the officials of that organization have ignored that report. It has been brought to the attention of this house but nothing has been done. Reference was made also to Governor General's warrants which are used when money is required and parliament is not in session. It is hardly necessary to list examples; they are all in the Auditor General's report.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Another recommendation that was made in 1964 was the institution of an accounts receivable system. Imagine a business as large as the government operating without an accounts receivable system, Mr. Speaker. What happens under such a system is that departments of government have a control figure to which is added the amount they have charged. The moneys then paid on account are deducted and the balance should correspond to the control figure. But during the course of our studies we discovered many departments had no accounts receivable control. Though some improvements have been made in this direction there are still many departments without any accounts receivable control system.

In its seventh report in 1964 the committee expressed great concern over the way inventories were being kept in the Department of National Defence. This department kept only a physical inventory, not one that itemized cost as well. The department knew how many items it had but not their cost. Imagine running a business in this way, Mr. Speaker, where the inventory consists of a physical count with no disclosure of cost or what it costs to carry the inventory. When equipment is turned over to Crown Assets for disposal a cost figure is required so as to set a resale figure. The recommendation of the committee would have prevented waste and extravagance but to my knowledge no action has yet been taken.

In our eighth report in 1964 we dealt with the subject of general election expenses. We asked the government to amend the Canada Elections Act so that any advance poll which had had 15 or less voters could be crossed off the list and would not have to be set up at the next election. But they did not do so. The result was that during the last election the chief electoral officer had to continue to operate these advance polls. It is startling to note that in the 1965 election there were 371 such polls with less than 15 votes, 16 polls with no votes, 20 with less than one vote and 20 polls with less than 2 votes. In all there were 427 polls which could have been struck off the list and taken out of operation. I inquired from the chief electoral officer what was the average cost of a poll and was informed that it was $136. This means that Canada wasted $58,072 simply because the government failed to pass an order in council to correct a situation that was brought to their attention by the public accounts committee. This is the sort of thing that indicates a lack of interest or sincerity and in addition costs the taxpayers a lot of money.

Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. member permit a question at this point?

Mr. Hales: Surely.

Mr. Stewart: I should like to be a little more clear about whether this was a provision that was not included in the statute or a regulation which had previously been in effect but had been repealed. If it was a defect in the statute, when was the statute enacted? The hon. gentleman referred to "they", and I do not know against which group he is directing his criticism.

Mr. Hales: I think what the hon. member wants to know is when the act was last considered. When the Conservative party was in office it brought in the new act, but this is no excuse for the present government not passing an order in council to change the regulations. I understand it is possible under the act to pass an order in council to change the regulations, but this has never been done. Therefore, during the last election all of these advance polls to which I have referred were put into operation even though they were useless, unnecessary and costly. I hope that such an order in council will be put into effect before the next election.

Another waste of the taxpayers money occurred in the Department of Trade and Commerce. The Department of Trade and Commerce administers the Gas Inspection Act, the Electricity Inspection Act and the Weights and Measures Act, and these statutes provide for the imposition of fees to meet the cost of operation. In 1965 the committee reported that the department was losing money and for the year ended March, 1966 the cost of administration exceeded revenue by $735,000. This loss included salaries and expenses of district offices, but, Mr. Speaker, if we add to that the cost of labs, branch administration and services from other departments the loss jumps to $1,710,000. Nothing has been done to correct this situation. It is a question of raising rates for these services that are rendered by the Department of Trade and Commerce. There is much talk of the shortage of houses. The government contends that it has insufficient money to lend so that the houses that are needed in Canada may be built. This sum of $1,710,000 could build 120 homes each costing $15,000. I suggest this is an area where savings should be made.

The committee also made some recommendations in connection with revenues of the St. Lawrence seaway meeting expenses, but no action has been taken on them.

In the fourth report of the committee in 1966 the savings bank division of the Post Office Department was dealt with. There are about 300,000 accounts in this division, 200,000 of which are classified as dormant or unclaimed. The interest on these accounts amounted to $67,000 for the year ended March 31, 1966. The committee recommended that these unclaimed balances should be dealt with in the same way as the chartered banks handle them, but nothing has been done. This $67,000 lies dormant. These amounts should revert to the crown. Another five homes could have been built with the interest alone.

I could give all sorts of examples, Mr. Speaker, of the money that is wasted by the Department of Transport, particularly in the matter of ship repair. There was one case where the tender amounted to $43,346 but by the time the ship was finished the cost had risen to $130,851. The committee recommended that when extras were involved they should be handled on a cost plus basis, the profit to be limited to the percentage of profit realized on the original contract price. The entire contract should be subject to cost audit by government auditors.

Take the case of the Bonaventure, Mr. Speaker. We all know how much it cost to put that vessel in order, some $12 million. The committee also reported on the cost of abandoned design plans for a ferry vessel. Some $120,000 was paid to the architects although the Department of Transport and the C.N.R. never got together to discuss the plans. Before calling on the architects to draw plans they could not make up their minds whether the vessel was to be a full icebreaker or an ice-strengthened ship. As the result a loss of $120,000 was incurred. With that amount of money the government could have built eight homes at $15,000 each.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Another $55,000 went down the drain because the architects were told, after plans had been drawn for a ferry, that the Canadian National wanted provisions for extra rail car weights. Apparently this had not been included in the original plans. We recommended that basic data be completely verified before placing any request in the hands of an architect. This is another example of how the government has brought about waste through its extravagances and failures. I could cite many other instances but I shall not take the time of the house to do so.

I spoke about crown corporations. The report of the Auditor General to parliament speaks of the many wastes and extravagances through which the taxpayers' money dwindles away.

I wish to say something briefly about the travelling expenses which this government has incurred. I have compared the travelling expenses of all departments of government for the year 1966-67 with those for 1967-68. In one year—mark this, Mr. Speaker—there has been an increase of over $18 million in travelling expenses for all departments of government. Yes, in one year. If we look at the various departments we see that travelling expenses for the Department of External Affairs increased by $833,000, the Department of National Health and Welfare showed an increase in travelling expenses of $830,000, the Department of Transport showed an increase of $965,000, and the Department of National Defence showed an increase of $9,439,000 in one year. If we average the total figure out among all the civil servants in all departments—one should include here every person, from the man who sweeps the floor to the deputy minister at the top—we find that approximately $400 per person was spent for travelling expenses in 1967-68.

What control have we over such travelling expenses? Is this government to go on permitting this sort of thing? Are we to have civil servants flitting all over the country, with one here, one there and two turning up in the same place where only one is needed to do a job? Is there to be no control over travelling expenses? Apparently all that civil servants must do is to put in a requisition and it will be paid. It is high time that the government looked into the travelling expenses that are being incurred especially when in one year they increased by approximately $18 million. I wanted to speak about increases incurred by other departments, but I see that I do not have enough time to do so.

I wish to spend some time talking about government surplus materials which are sold by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. The worst offender in this regard is the Department of National Defence which divides the materials that are to be sold by Crown Assets into two categories. One category is "surplus but serviceable". In other words, this is another way of saying that the government bought too much of such material. The loss in 1966, in round figures, for such materials was $52 million. That figure is the difference between what the government paid for such materials and what it sold them for. The second category is "obsolete but serviceable". In that category the government incurred a $48 million loss. In round figures, for both categories the government incurred a loss of about $100 million. That amount of money could have built about 6,700 homes at $15,000 each, which are so badly needed.

I wanted to deal with some other government departments, such as the Department of Justice, the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the Department of Labour and the Department of Industry. I shall have time to deal only with the Department of Industry.

We all recall the debate on the bill which set up the Department of Industry. We in the opposition argued that the Department of Trade and Commerce could do anything that the Department of Industry was set up to do. But, oh no. We were told that by taking staff from the Departments of Trade and Commerce and Defence Production and putting them into the Department of Industry there would be hardly any increase in staff requirements. Consequently, when the Department of Industry was set up in 1963-64 it employed 274 people. The estimates for 1967-68 show that 783 people will be required for that department, an increase of 509 people or roughly 200 per cent. The Department of Defence Production in 1963-64 employed 1,699 people. The estimate for 1967-68 is that 3,684 people are to be employed. That is an increase of 1,985 people, or more than 100 per cent. The same picture holds true for the Department of Trade and Commerce. That department has added 298 persons to its staff, which is a 60 per cent increase. I could run through most of the departments this way and show that this government has been wasteful and extravagant all along the line.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the illustrations such as I have given have been given by others over a considerable period of time. What I have said is not new; it has been said by every reputable financial writer and newspaperman in Canada for the past six months. People have lost confidence in this government. We have an outflow of millions of dollars from this country on the part of Canadians who are selling Canadian securities and purchasing United States securities. This is shocking but it has been going on for some time. People have done this because they say that at least they lose their money through inflation in the United States only half as fast as they are currently losing it in Canada, and there are some other advantages.

I wish to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by quoting again the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture. He said:

> If they lose faith, these Canadian taxpayers, in the efficiency of our endeavors, if they come to believe that their taxes are but adding to the bureaucracy, or to the pile of papers in some murky vault, they will lose the will to participate.

I have not lost my confidence in Canada, Mr. Speaker, but I have lost confidence completely in this government and I propose to vote for the amendment.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) in the hope that I may be able to assist in convincing hon. members that it is their patriotic duty to defeat this government and rid the country of an administration which has been notably inept in its handling of Canadian affairs.

Listening to the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) I came to the conclusion that one of the most revealing statements contained in it, the statement which has the most far reaching effect, was the admission that it is almost impossible for the government to make any sizeable reduction in its budget. The minister explained how difficult it is to cut back federal spending. He had this to say as reported on page 4903 of Hansard:

> We make a large number of substantial transfer payments to the provinces and municipalities such as equalization payments, hospital insurance, aid for education and the Canada assistance social welfare plan, most of which increase automatically under statute or agreement with the province.
>
> We have in addition . . . major programs consisting of transfer payments to persons, including family and youth allowances, veterans' pensions and adult training allowances. All of these are also fixed mainly by population factors and by statute.

In other words, this government is not the captain of its own ship. It is bound by statutes and arrangements which have been made in the past to continue to budget at a very high level.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he saying he is opposed to these arrangements or arguing that they should be fixed arbitrarily rather than by statute or on the basis of population?

Mr. Ballard: I think the Minister of Finance had ample opportunity to put forward his point of view and I would appreciate being able to put forward my point of view without getting into a lighthearted debate with the minister. I know he is very glib when it comes to putting forward questions but I would appreciate being able to continue my own remarks at this time.

Is it any wonder people think that the government's ship is floundering on the sea of ministerial irresponsibility? The minister went on to say that more than half of the anticipated increase in the budget was attributable to the type of uncontrollable expenditure he had described.

The point I am trying to make is that the government has lost control over a very large proportion of its budget, the portion which involves items which are fixed by statute or which represent programs of a continuing nature. This and future governments are committed to continue making expenditures on at least the present scale simply because hon. gentlemen opposite have bound themselves and all future governments to continue existing expenditures permanently.

Mr. Sharp: So did the Diefenbaker government.

Mr. Ballard: The government must bear responsibility for the unwarranted increase in the budget during its term of office. The argument put forward by the minister that federal expenditures accounted for only 16.8 per cent of the gross national product compared with 19.2 per cent in the fiscal year 1961-62 is entirely unacceptable. Similarly, there is no justification for rationalizing the federal budget by indications that provincial governments and municipalities spend more than Ottawa does. This is a facetious argument and it should not have been put forward.

I read an interesting article in the Financial Post of December 2, written by J. Harvey Perry, the executive director of the Canadian Bankers' Association who, incidentally, was a member of the Carter commission on taxation. He wrote:

> One of the recommendations which the Carter Commission nearly made, but didn't, is that one of the very earliest exercises in reviewing existing programs should be in the area of social welfare. I believe that in one of our drafts we had included such a recommendation but later we decided it was none of our business. However, if any part of our present governmental financial structure comes even close to competing with the tax system for being unplanned, ramshackle and jerry-built, it is social welfare. Welfare is the No. 1 subject, following taxation, requiring an immediate and complete overhaul.

I must say in all honesty that I believe the Minister of Finance has exerted pressure in an effort to have the government take a new look at social welfare. This is long overdue, and Canadians outside the party which forms the government are placing a great deal of reliance on the minister in this connection.

The hon. gentleman brags, as reported at page 4902 of Hansard, that since this government came to office it has been "putting into place the major reforms required to complete Canada's social security system." I am pleased the minister acknowledges that the government has accepted responsibility for increasing Canada's budget from some $7 billion in 1963 to $11 billion in 1967. It will surely go down in history as being Canada's most spendthrift government.

Mr. Sharp: Oh, no. Nova Scotia is better.

Mr. Ballard: In addition to the huge expenditures already reported, and even in the face of the dire financial and economic situation with which this country is confronted, the government is committed to add yet another welfare scheme to the list, medicare, which it is estimated will add a minimum of $600 million a year to the federal budget and a similar amount to the budgets of the provinces. This is a glaring example of irresponsibility. Faced with a future fraught with economic uncertainty, hon. members opposite are adding another welfare scheme costing well over a billion dollars a year to what Mr. Perry calls an unplanned, ramshackle and jerry-built social welfare system.

The prospect of piling more taxes on the shoulders of already overburdened taxpayers in order to finance the proposed medicare scheme has brought protests from a large number of people and on their behalf I beseech the minister to use his influence on the government to postpone the implementation of medicare. I might say I have received letters on this subject from a number of people and organizations, including the Calgary chamber of commerce, protesting vehemently against the implementation of this scheme. In a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, dated November 17, the following paragraph appears:

The delegates at the Canadian Chamber's recent annual meeting voted in favour of a policy statement supporting the provision of finacnial assistance for medical care for those who need it, and, at the same time, unanimously opposed the introduction of the universal compulsory medical care program.

The Calgary chamber of commerce also wrote a letter to the Prime Minister under date of December 4, 1967, part of which reads as follows:

The executive council of the Calgary Chamber of Commerce has unanimously endorsed the stand taken by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in urging the federal government to arrange for an indefinite moratorium on the introduction of a universal compulsory medical care program.

• (5:50 p.m.)

I could quote from numerous letters and editorials in support of this plea for postponement of medicare, but surely the minister is aware of the disillusionment among the public over the prospect of yet another increase in taxes. I think it must be evident to the minister and to the other members of the government that there is great concern, not only in the ranks of provincial leaders but among the general public as well, over the implementation of medicare at this time. A postponement, I suggest, would be the most prudent step for the government, considering the present economic situation in the country.

Glancing through the Montreal Gazette of November 30 I noticed that the column written by Mr. John Meyer had this headline, "Never a Federal Budget Less Fortuitous In Timing." I planned to read that column but before doing so my attention was drawn to the headline over the column next to it, "New Plan Would Cut United States Deficit $11 Bln." It revealed an unusual situation. The most prosperous country in the world is planning to cut its budget by $11 billion through two different methods. One is to increase taxes and the other, surprisingly enough, and this should commend itself to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), is to cut $4 billion from its spending in the current fiscal year.

This could be the theme for a comic opera, with the richest country in the world intending to cut its spending estimates while its next door neighbour, faced with inflation, gives no thought to cutting expenses in the current year but can only suggest an increase in taxes as a solution to its problems.

I think it is worth while to quote a portion of Mr. Meyer's column because it is indicative of the feeling across Canada in connection with this budget. It reads in part as follows:

> It's difficult to imagine the timing for the budget being less fortuitous than it is. The economy has lost way and is wallowing in the cross-currents of indecision.

I do not know whether he meant the economy or the government when he wrote about indecision.

> The public mood is one of weary resentment of government fumbling. The budget itself can offer nothing to inspire. It is, after all, hardly more than the belated correction of a gross miscalculation, or rather a series of gross miscalculations, over the past two years.

Farther on he wrote:

> If Mr. Sharp is to be criticized, it should be for failing to have persuaded his colleagues in cabinet before now to the dangers of excessive spending.

This is why we on this side of the house are critical of the actions taken by the Minister of Finance. He is not fulfilling his responsibilities as the minister charged with jurisdiction over the Department of Finance.

Now I want to say just a word in connection with the planning of future expenditures by this or, in fact, by any government. I believe that in government circles it is just as necessary to plan future expenditures as it is in private industry. The government should set up a committee of the house to study the different problems and the necessity of spending for the future, for 10, 25 or 50 years ahead. This committee should assign an order of priorities to the different areas of spending. It should also be charged with the determination of the source of funds to finance future spending. It is not good enough for the government to work out a theory of spending on something it considers necessary, such as medicare, without giving any thought to how much it is going to cost and where the money is to come from.

Medicare is a good example. The minister in charge has said it will cost $600 million in the first year, but I contend members of the government do not know whether it is going to cost $600 million or a much higher figure. At the time the legislation was introduced they had no idea whence the money would come to pay the bill. That is one of the reasons we are in a mess today. It is one of the reasons we are going to be faced with increased income taxes six months from now to cover this unplanned increase in government expenditure.

The committee of which I speak should also be charged with the responsibility of allocating tax revenues between the various levels of government in order to undertake the priorities that are determined by the proper level of government. Priorities are necessary to cover such items as housing, public housing, assistance to the home owner through N.H.A. mortgages, government participation in urban transportation, social welfare plans, and government assistance from the various levels toward the control of pollution—air pollution, water and soil pollution. The committee should also assign a priority to water supplies and to the problem of waste disposal, both domestic and industrial.

One of the things I have mentioned in this list of priorities is urban transportation. It is entirely unacceptable for the government to sit idly by, realizing that 80 per cent of the people of Canada will live in urban areas by 1980. At the present time over 70 per cent live in urban areas.

The Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has made representations to the federal government in this connection. In their report in January this year on urban transportation they said:

> The requirements of the multiplying numbers of the urban population for educational services, welfare services, hospitals, roads, water and sanitary facilities, etc., have placed a severe financial strain upon the principal source of municipal revenues—the tax on real property.

I might say that the government appeared to give some credence to the plea of the municipalities for help from senior levels of government, because when the Prime Minister was speaking in Calgary on March 29 of this year he said that "there is also a growing body of opinion that federal aid can no longer most effectively play its role in community development" without providing "transportation corridors in future environmental development."

The chairman of the Winnipeg committee on streets and transit has said:

> There has to be a review and a realignment of the priorities by all levels of government,...that money should be spent on problems where people are, and certainly one of the basic necessities in urban growth and development is a healthy, efficient, public transportation system.

• (6:00 p.m.)

I am not only suggesting that the government needs to set up some body to study the future necessities of this country and of the people of this country, and to assign priorities to them. It must also plan for raising money so that we do not again get into the terrible financial and fiscal mess we are in today under this irresponsible government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in commencing my speech I should like to request from the house a little extra time in order to complete the speech. I do not think it will be unduly long, but since hon. members have asked for details, and there are a great many details in my speech, I would request permission from hon. members to continue slightly beyond the normal limit of time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we in Canada are living in a dynamic society, a prosperous society and a society in which the lot of the underprivileged, the oppressed, the sick and disabled within our country and the lot of the less fortunate throughout the world bears on the conscience of each and every one of us. All members of this house regardless of their political affiliation share a deep concern for the welfare of the Canadian people and our fellow men throughout the world. During the past five years, Mr. Speaker, while I have had the good fortune to be a member of this house what has impressed me most has been the enthusiasm of all of us to do our best to better the lot and provide security for the necessities of life and hope to the underprivileged. I think back on legislation such as the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada assistance plan, supplementary old age pensions, youth allowances, student loans, increased aid to universities, area development, manupower mobility, manpower retraining, industrial incentives, incentives for control of water pollution, and a myriad of other beneficial legislation that has been passed.

Mr. Knowles: Did you forget medicare?

[Mr. Ballard.]

Mr. Benson: I think also of the emergence of a national purpose out of these parliaments—a national flag, centennial celebrations, the greatest international exposition in the history of the world—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: —the recognition of the old and yet new problems of two founding peoples who have lived and must continue to live in peace and harmony to develop and exploit for the sake of their children, this the richest country in the world. We in parliament are often maligned as overpaid, underworked imbeciles who try to govern this vast country.

Mr. Knowles: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Monteith: What a line.

Mr. Benson: I would challenge our detractors to indicate how more could have been done in a democracy for the good of all the people of our country than has been done through the efforts of members on all sides of this house in the past five years.

I must not be completely non-political and before moving on to the more mundane matters of finance I would point out that all that has been accomplished in these years has been accomplished at least through the leadership of a Liberal government under a prime minister who will, I am sure, be judged as one of the greatest of all those eminent Canadians who have contributed so much to our great country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Don't spoil your speech.

Mr. Korchinski: You will have to explain that.

Mr. Benson: Now, Mr. Speaker, I must move on to the difficult but necessary task which it is my lot to have to perform tonight. Over the past five years we have enjoyed unprecedented prosperity in Canada. That is why you and I as members of parliament have been able to do so many of the, I believe, farsighted things which have been done for the average Canadian whom we try so hard to represent.

When I first entered politics I looked on government as a great morass of inefficiency. I have since found that this is not the case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: Government in Canada is a vast organization but it is much more efficient than I as a layman or most people think it is. We have, contrary to some public opinion, in our civil service a great many men and women, and I could name hundreds of them that I have come to know, whose main purpose—

Mr. Grégoire: Name them.

Mr. Benson: —in life is to assure that the wishes of this parliament, and we represent the views of the people of Canada—other than the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire)—are carried out as efficiently and economically as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: In this connection, I would cite the great changes in the administration of our affairs which were not only facilitated but actually pressed on the government by the public service and in this regard I refer you to my speech to the house on October 10 last. No greater revolution in administration anywhere in the world has taken place than in our public service in the past five years.

We in Canada are the most fortunate people in the world. Let us realize this and look upon my remarks which follow in a vein similar to that of a large business which must from time to time reflect and review its prospects. As anyone in business knows, we must from time to time review our priorities and readjust our spending plans to live within our revenue. We must make hard decisions in order that in the long run our business may prosper. We must not give up the great opportunities we have in the future but rather invest more in these by cutting and trimming things which appear less important to us at the present time.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) introduced his supplementary budget proposals last week, he indicated that I would follow up on his remarks relating to expenditures and provide the house with further details as to the efforts the government has been making to restrain its planned expenditures for 1968-69 within a prescribed ceiling.

I am happy to honour that commitment tonight and to provide the house at the same time with information as to the steps which the government is taking to effect a substantial reduction in the rate of growth of the public service of Canada.

The Minister of Finance has already stated the specific goal which the government has set for itself in the fiscal year 1968-69 which is to contain over-all budgetary expenditures in 1968-69 within a ceiling of $10.3 billion, exclusive of expenditures for medicare, and for the writing-off of the Expo deficit.

With reference to this objective, the Minister of Finance has forecast an expenditure level, on budgetary account, of $9.9 billion in the current year. This means that the year to year increase in budgetary expenditures from 1967-68 to 1968-69 will have to be held to an amount of $400 million, which, in percentage terms, is barely 4 per cent above the expenditure level of the current year and 3.3 per cent on variable expenditures.

• (8:10 p.m.)

With reference to the civil service restraints, the growth rate for the federal public service will be drastically cut, under the plans which the government intends to implement. The reduction here, despite the increase in the number and size of tasks which the public service will be asked to undertake, is of the order of 50 per cent or more. In recent years, as a result of the great expansion of existing governmental programs, and the addition of important new ones established by this parliament, some of which I mentioned earlier, the public service has been growing at the rate of 10,000 to 15,000 annually, depending on whether or not the employees of a number of crown corporations are included in the public service for purposes of the calculation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the minister but I wish to rise on a point of order. One cannot help but notice that members on the other side of the house appear to have copies of the minister's speech. I do not begrudge it to them but I think it should have been made available to all members of the house.

Mr. Monteith: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has a copy of my speech before him, and all hon. members may have copies if they so wish. I believe copies are available in the lobbies. If not, hon. members can go to our lobby to get them.

For the public service, exclusive of crown corporations, the growth in the size of the approved establishment for 1968-69, that is to say the number of positions authorized which is larger than the number actually filled at any one time, will not be allowed to rise by more than 5,000 above the numbers now authorized for the current fiscal year. This amounts to a growth rate for the public service proper of approximately 2 per cent in fiscal year 1968-69, compared to a rate of 4 per cent or more in recent years.

I might mention, in passing, that the annual increase in the post office alone, in order to keep pace with population growth and work load, is inevitably 2,000 or more annually as shown by the actual experience of recent years. I mention this fact so that hon. members may see more clearly the significance of the limitations on growth that are now proposed for 1968-69. The 5,000 limit to which I have made reference will have to include the increased numbers required for the maintenance of adequate postal services, as well as the requirements of all other departments and agencies. This means that, if the added staff requirements of the Post Office Department alone in 1968-69 are 2,000 or more, and this is a fact, then 2,000 of the additional 5,000 positions to be made available will have to be reserved for the Post Office Department leaving 3,000 positions to provide for the growth requirements of the other 25 departments and the 40 or more agencies, boards, bureaus, commissions and offices which together make up what we call the public service of Canada charged with administering the activities that parliament has assigned to them.

I should also mention that, in addition to limiting the growth of the public service in 1968-69 to 5,000 additional positions, it is also the government's intention to set a limit of 95 per cent on the number of positions within the approved establishment which can be occupied at any one time. This limitation will provide an additional salutary restraint on growth, and will, in particular, highlight those individual departments and agencies in which the pressures against the 95 per cent limitation suggest the need for a re-examination of the staff requirement and work load, well in advance of the point in time when the approved establishment is completely filled and the agency or department clamouring for additional positions.

A third element in the government's plan for limitations on staff growth is, I think, also worthy of mention. Examination of a representative number of departmental establishments has revealed that, in a significant number of instances, departments have had additions approved to their establishment and have subsequently experienced inordinate delays in filling these approved positions. Whenever positions which have been authorized as necessary at a given point in time remain unfilled for six months after they have been authorized, the question is bound to arise as to how the departments have managed to get along in the interval, and whether the authorized positions continue to be necessary or even whether they were necessary in the first place. Without endeavouring to pre-judge the issue, I believe that there is justification for saying that in many instances where positions remain unfilled continuously for six months or more after they have been created they should be cancelled.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the three steps which I have outlined for controlling the future growth of the public service will serve to demonstrate that the government seriously intends to contain within reasonable and prudent limits this important element of expenditure within its total budget for 1968-69. The civil payroll, exclusive of the uniformed forces and the R.C.M.P. amounts to about $1.5 billion in a total budget of $10 billion, approximately 15 per cent of the total expenditure budget. It goes without saying, therefore, that success in controlling total budgetary expenditure, depends in a very important degree on success in controlling civil payroll costs, and this in turn depends in large part on success in controlling the size of, and the growth rate in the civil establishment. I can assure the house that the government has every intention of achieving in this regard the objectives which it has set for itself. If, in the course of the year, a department or agency finds it necessary for any reason to request an increase in its establishment, it will be required to undertake a full review of its present position and to satisfy the Treasury Board that it has exhausted all possibilities of meeting the added requirement from the resources already available to it. Only when that condition has been satisfied will the Treasury Board consider a request for any additional positions. I do not think, however, that we should go so far as to impose an arbitrary absolute "freeze" on present establishments. We have examined this suggestion which has been put forward from a number of quarters. Governments in the past, both federal and provincial, have attempted to "freeze" establishments. Such efforts have never been successful. They have produced inequities, distortions, frustrations, and even waste, as senior officials have been obliged to get along without the supporting staff which they require in order to function effectively. The adverse consequences of an absolute freeze persist long after the freeze itself has been abolished or has been eroded away. At the very best, a freeze succeeds only in buying time until a proper policy for restraining staff growth can be devised. A freeze is not in itself a policy: instead it is evidence that no policy exists and that the authority imposing the freeze has proven to be incapable of devising a policy. We have a policy and we are going to apply it.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Before leaving the subject of staff growth and the size of the public service, let me emphasize again a point to which the Minister of Finance referred in his speech last week, when he opened this debate. Contrary to the beliefs of many who think that the federal public service has grown abnormally over the years, statistics show that the growth of the service has remained remarkably constant in relation to population growth over the period of the last 15 years. Federal departmental employment as a percentage of the total population of Canada—the public it serves—has varied only between the extremes of 1.06 per cent and 1.17 per cent over the years 1952 and 1966 inclusive. When viewed in relation to population growth, to growth in the total labour force, and to growth in the employed labour force, the federal public service has either remained constant or has actually declined slightly, percentage wise, over the 15 year period.

I do not wish to dwell on this point in too great detail this evening, Mr. Speaker, but in view of the desirability of ensuring that there is a proper understanding of this important aspect of the problem, I should like to have permission to insert at this point in my remarks, a table and three charts, the purpose of which is to demonstrate, in some detail, the relationship between the growth in the size of the federal public service 1952-1966, and the growth during the same period in the size of our Canadian labour force, our paid—employed—labour force and our total population. These tables and charts will serve, I believe, to explode the myth that over recent years the federal service has been growing at an incordinately fast rate in relation to the growth of the nation as a whole.

May I have permission, Mr. Speaker, to have these tables and charts inserted at this point?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that the minister may table these charts?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benson: I am asking that these be printed in Hansard at this particular point in my address.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I forgot to ask for permission to have them printed in Hansard. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The tables and charts referred to above are as follows:]

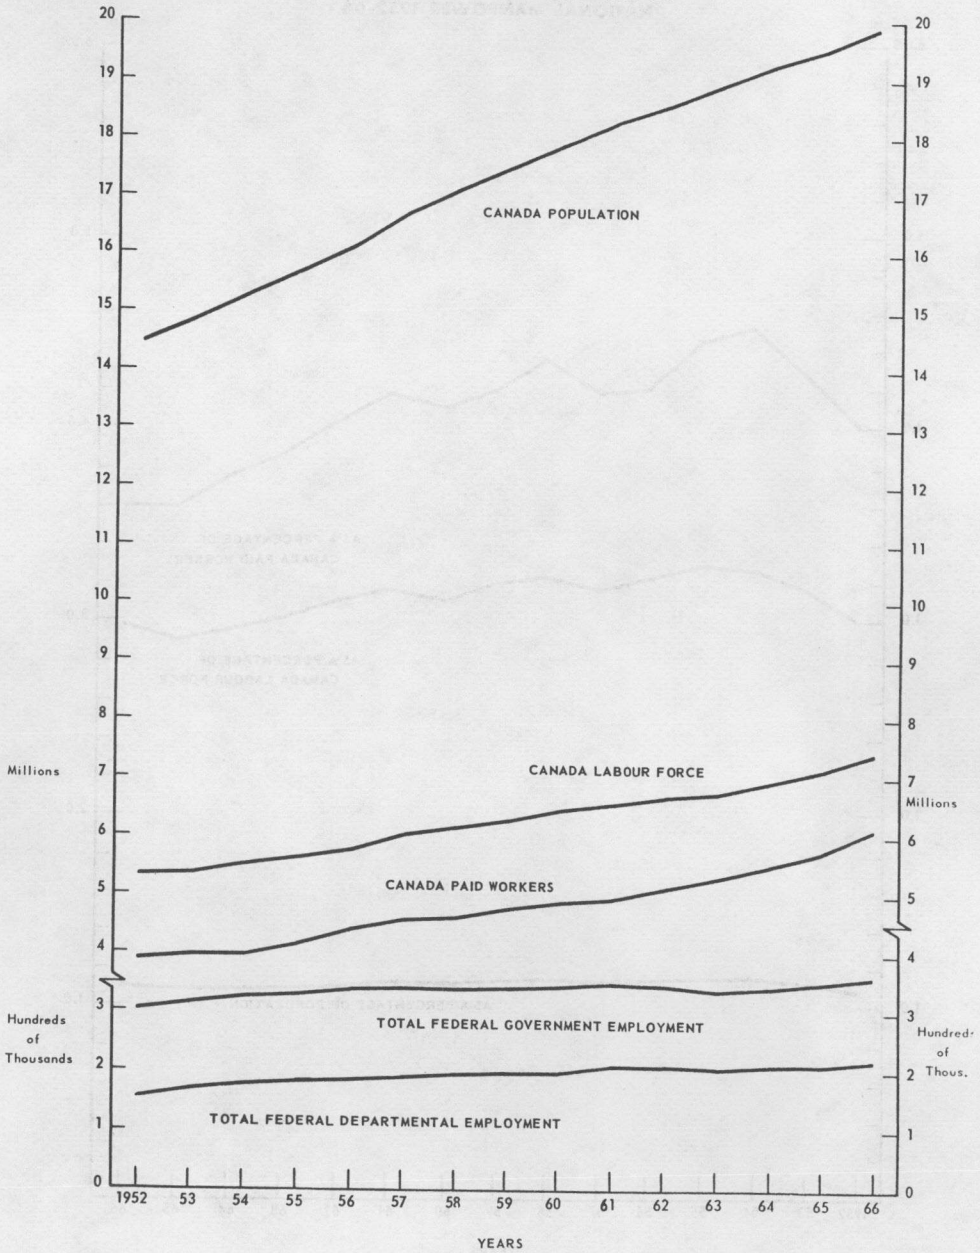
Chart 1 (a)

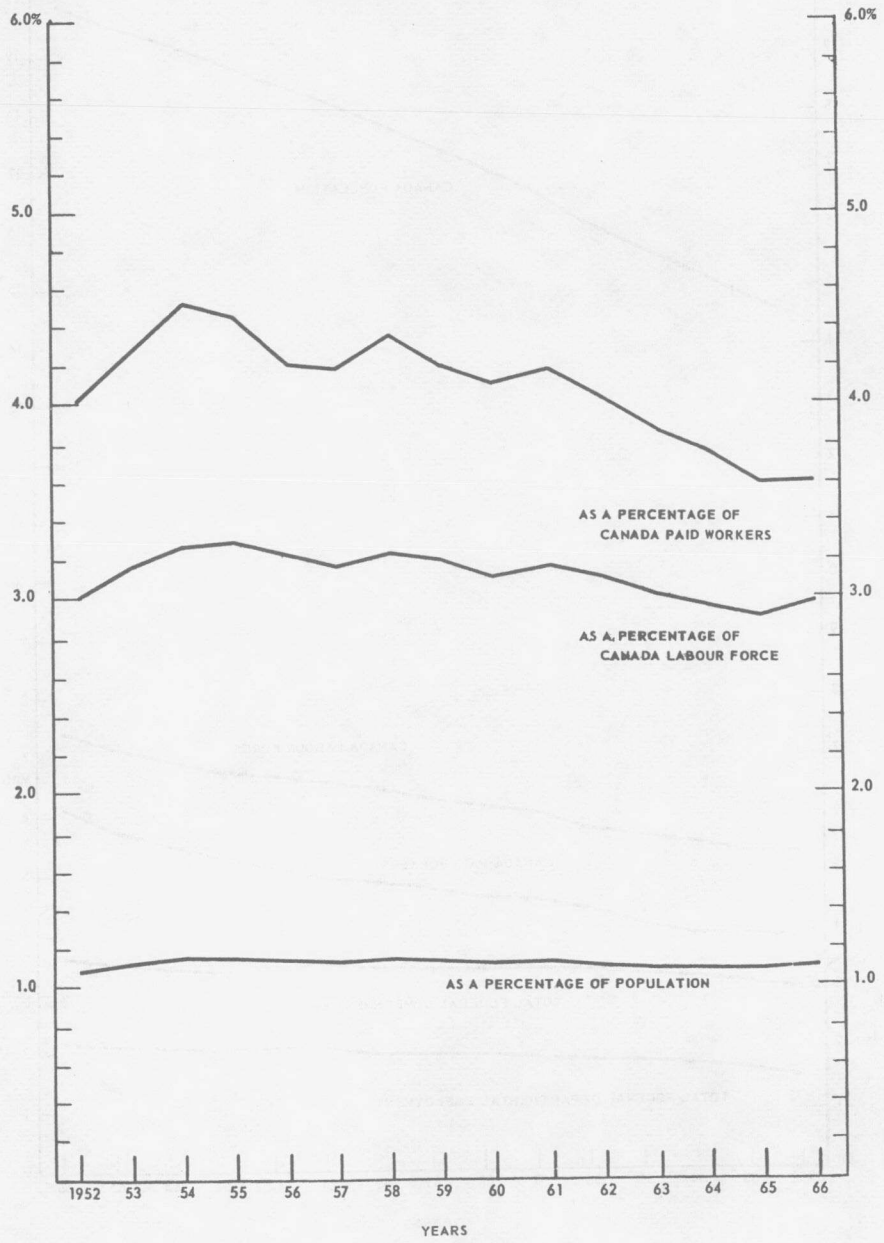
GROWTH OF FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT AND NATIONAL MANPOWER



1952-66 'logarithmic scale'

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

Chart 1 (b)



GROWTH OF FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT AND NATIONAL MANPOWER 1952-66

27053—327

Chart 2

FEDERAL CIVIL SERVICE DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYMENT AS A PERCENTAGE OF NATIONAL MANPOWER 1952-66

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

27053—327½

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND PUBLIC SERVICE MANPOWER IN RELATION TO NATIONAL TOTALS OF PAID WORKERS, LABOUR FORCE AND POPULATION

Calendar Years	Total Federal Government Employment	Departmental Employment Public Service)	Canada Paid Workers	(1) as a % of (3)	(2) as a % of (3)	Canada Labour Force	(1) as a % of (6)	(2) as a % of (6)	Canada Population at June 1 each year	(1) as a % of (9)	(2) as a % of (9)
	(1)	(2)	(3) (Thousands)	(4)	(5)	(6) (Thousands)	(7)	(8)	(9) (Thousands)	(10)	(11)
1966.....	361,645	219,453	6,096	5.93	3.60	7,420	4.87	2.96	19,919	1.82	1.10
1965.....	345,688	207,437	5,759	6.00	3.60	7,141	4.84	2.90	19,571	1.77	1.06
1964.....	340,934	204,782	5,466	6.24	3.75	6,933	4.92	2.95	19,235	1.77	1.06
1963.....	337,689	202,495	5,241	6.44	3.86	6,748	5.00	3.00	18,896	1.79	1.07
1962.....	342,158	204,582	5,089	6.72	4.02	6,615	5.17	3.09	18,570	1.84	1.10
1961.....	343,352	204,613	4,911	6.99	4.17	6,521	5.27	3.14	18,238	1.88	1.12
1960.....	340,452	198,047	4,843	7.03	4.09	6,411	5.31	3.09	17,870	1.90	1.11
1959.....	338,618	198,496	4,735	7.15	4.19	6,242	5.42	3.18	17,483	1.94	1.14
1958.....	336,910	196,852	4,560	7.39	4.32	6,137	5.49	3.21	17,080	1.97	1.15
1957.....	339,475	189,706	4,540	7.48	4.18	6,008	5.65	3.16	16,610	2.04	1.14
1956.....	336,436	184,983	4,389	7.66	4.21	5,782	5.82	3.20	16,081	2.09	1.15
1955.....	326,289	183,497	4,133	7.89	4.44	5,610	5.82	3.27	15,698	2.08	1.17
1954.....	323,026	178,664	3,961	8.16	4.51	5,493	5.88	3.25	15,287	2.11	1.17
1953.....	318,304	169,274	3,955	8.05	4.28	5,397	5.90	3.14	14,845	2.14	1.14
1952.....	302,078	157,078	3,866	7.82	4.06	5,324	5.67	2.95	14,459	2.09	1.09

SOURCES: DBS publications—The Labour Force (Cat. 71-001), Federal Government Employment (Cat. 72-004), Estimated Population of Canada (Cat. 91-201).

Mr. Benson: I turn now, Mr. Speaker, to the undertaking given by the Minister of Finance —that we will contain the budgetary expenditures for 1968-69, apart from medicare and Expo deficit, within the ceiling of $10.3 billion. There have been many demands from the opposition side of the house and from other quarters during recent weeks and months that the government reveal full details as to what cuts it is making and how it intends to achieve the containment of its over-all budgetary expenditures within this $10.3 billion ceiling.

It would not, of course, be appropriate for me at this juncture, in advance of the tabling of the main estimates for 1968-69 early in the next session of parliament, to launch a debate on the government's expenditure plans for the next fiscal year. This debate cannot be properly joined until the estimates for 1968-69 have been tabled and the details are available for all to examine.

Despite the foregoing, I think I can give to the house sufficient details as to the over-all dimensions of the problem that we have faced in recent weeks, and as to the expenditure cuts already decided in departmental proposals and plans for 1968-69 to satisfy hon. members that we have tackled this difficult undertaking resolutely and successfully.

As hon. members know, the estimates procedure for 1968-69 really got under way in April of this year when departments and agencies were asked to submit, by the end of May, their program reviews and forecasts of probable financial requirements, not only for the balance of the current fiscal year, but also, for 1968-69, and for the three years following. When these forecasts were received and analyzed in June of this year, they showed a prospective requirement for 1968-69, if all forecast departmental requirements were to be met, of $11,500 million. This was some $1,800 million higher than the total expenditure forecast in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance of June 1, 1967, for the current fiscal year.

In August, a decision was made to establish an over-all expenditure target of $10.3 billion apart from medicare and the Expo deficit which, it was felt, should both be dealt with outside the normal budgetary target, based on year to year comparisons of normally continuing programs.

The decision as to the over-all target of $10.3 billion led in turn to the establishment of individual departmental targets of expenditure. Each department and agency was asked in September to accept a stated target, and to submit its detailed estimates for 1968-69 by the end of October, within the limits of the suggested target. Not all of the departments or agencies have, in fact, found it possible to do so.

Mr. Monteith: That has always been done.

Mr. Benson: In some instances new commitments, entered into by or imposed on departments since the target was established made it impossible—or at least extemely difficult, in the view of the department—to achieve the target set for it. In other instances, the department or agency affected found that it could not contain the programs that it considered essential within the target suggested in September by the Treasury Board. In all such cases—and even in those cases where departmental estimates have been submitted within the targets originally suggested—examination of the estimates details has taken place. Establishment proposals are being combed for possible reductions in the extra numbers of staff requested. Approximately 9,000 additional positions were "combed out" in the first-round review of program forecasts conducted during July and August. A further 2,000 or more are being deleted in the course of the final estimates examination now being undertaken—the objective being to contain the growth of staff, during 1968-69 fiscal year to the 5,000 limit mentioned earlier.

We are now approaching the final stages of the 1968-69 Estimates exercise. We expect to have the final decisions for each departmental agency, and for the over-all totals, made later this month, or at the latest, early in January.

Mr. Monteith: That is done every year.

Mr. Benson: It never has been done before.

Mr. Monteith: That has always been done.

Mr. Benson: Perhaps my hon. friend would like to tell me the targets that were set by his government.

Following that, the printing of the blue book, the main estimates, will proceed and be ready for tabling—I hope some time in February, 1968—well in advance of the commencement of the new fiscal year. The present indications are that main estimates as printed and presented will run somewhat in excess of $10 billion but less than the $10.3 billion mentioned by the Minister of Finance. Later, there will of course, be unavoidable supplementary estimates to reckon with, throughout the course of fiscal year 1968-69. These may well run the gross total of estimates, together with statutory appropriations, as high as $10.5 billion; but, as past experience shows, not less than 2 per cent of this authority will be destined to lapse unspent because of circumstances beyond the control of the departments concerned. The deduction of this lapse of 2 per cent or $200 million will bring the actual budgetary expenditure, we expect, for 1968-69 within the projected target figure, announced by the Minister of Finance, of $10.3 billion.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Reductions in expenditure plans of the magnitude that I have mentioned cannot, of course, be accomplished without causing severe pain and anguish to the departments and agencies affected. I can assure you that my problem with the ministers has been even greater than the terrible problem that I have in convincing my wife not to buy a new hat.

I refer again to the fact that before the estimates review has been completed, approximately 11,000 positions will have been cut from the 16,000 additional positions requested at program review time or subsequently by the various departments and agencies. A rough valuation can be placed on each of these positions of $10,000—one half for salary, and an equal amount for office accommodation, equipment, supplies and all accompanying costs of pension provisions, fringe benefits of various kinds, and so on. On this basis, the staff reductions effected through program and estimates review represent not less than a $100 million reduction from the original requirements for 1968-69 as presented in July by departments and agencies.

Construction projects will also be affected by the efforts the government is making to contain its expenditure plans within the $10.3 billion ceiling. In my own constituency in Kingston, the plans for construction of an engineering building at Royal Military College will have to be deferred, at least for 1968-69. Public buildings in Ottawa, such as the new National Defence Headquarters—

Mr. Fairweather: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I only hope that hon. members opposite will applaud all the reductions I will mention as I proceed—the new headquarters buildings for external affairs and transport, will have to be further delayed. It has already been announced that the parking garage planned for under parliament hill will not be proceeded with in 1968-69. A great deal was accomplished in 1967 in the way of construction and completion of National Capital Commission driveways in the national capital area and this added greatly to the charm and attractiveness of the nation's capital in centennial year. The year 1968-69 by contrast will be a year of pause for driveway construction plans in the national capital area. We all want to make Ottawa a great national capital for a united Canada and we intend to do so. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we must do so at a somewhat slower rate.

I could, if time permitted, Mr. Speaker, cite a great many other specific examples of projects that will have to be set aside, deferred or phased at a slower pace as a result of the reduction in expenditure levels we have undertaken to achieve for 1968-69. Perhaps it will be best if at this point, I give some indication of the nature and variety of these various reductions—and of their widespread and even distribution, generally speaking, across departments—by listing a number of the programs that will be cut, of the staff increases that will not be granted, and of the construction or other projects that will be cut out or cut back.

Here is a list that will give a partial indication of the programs and the projects that will be affected. I may, Mr. Speaker, repeat some of the matters, I mentioned earlier, but I do so in the belief that members will want a consolidated list of all the items I am speaking about this evening.

1. With the establishment of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the functions formerly carried by the Dominion Coal Board can now, with certain exceptions, be transferred to this new agency. The board's remaining functions will be taken over by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Dominion Coal Board will then be abolished.

2. The active promotion of the sale of Canadian government annuities by the Department of Labour will be discontinued and the sales staff disbanded. Staff will of course be retained in sufficient numbers to service existing contracts and to honour all existing commitments.

3. The special planning secretariat within the Privy Council office will be disbanded: henceforth its essential functions in the field of co-ordination of social development programs will be carried as part of the normal operations of the cabinet secretariat.

4. Financial provision for the Company of Young Canadians will be reduced by 20 per cent from the $2.4 million budgeted for the current year.

5. Funds provided in a number of departmental and agency budgets for energency measures planning and organization will be scaled down substantially below current year's levels. This decision will affect not only the Energency Measures Organization itself but also emergency health, welfare, supply and communications planning activities in such departments as National Health and Welfare, Defence Production, National Defence and C.B.C. Reductions in EMO's budget will also make necessary reductions in the level of grants to provinces and municipalities for emergency measures purposes.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): How much will that save?

Mr. Benson: Before members start asking how much will this save and how much will that save, may I tell my hon. friends that the estimates which were brought in amounted to $11.5 billion and we are going to keep them to $10.3 billion.

Mr. Monteith: How do we know that?

Mr. Benson:

6. The government has decided to discontinue the arrangement hitherto in effect whereby the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation international service was budgeted separately from the C.B.C.'s regular budget. Henceforth, beginning in 1968-69, the budget for the C.B.C. international service will be merged with the C.B.C. regular budget. C.B.C. will then be responsible for budgeting for an overseas service as well as the shortwave and other services to the Canadian north and armed forces overseas, out of its regular operating budget.

7. The operating budget for the C.B.C. in the 1968-69 fiscal year, reflecting the new arrangement just mentioned, will be set at a level of $11 million less than requested.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the minister indicate exactly how much less that will be in relation to this year's actual vote for the C.B.C.?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I intend to get an answer. I should like to ask the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Benson.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member for Carleton will now ask a question.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The minister has given me the floor to ask a question, and I would ask him how much less there will be for next year's operating budget for the C.B.C. compared with the present year.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have another statement to make with regard to the C.B.C. and if my hon. friend will take his pencil and do a little calculating he can probably figure out what will be the C.B.C. budget. In any case, the C.B.C. budget will be listed in the blue book of estimates presented to the house, and the normal time to consider them is when we debate those estimates.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That shows how phony the whole operation is.

Mr. Benson: All it is really showing is how phony the hon. member is.

8. The capital budget of the C.B.C. will be cut back from the $57 million requested for 1968-69 to $25 million, $5 million below the level for the current year.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Monteith: How about operating expenses?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, 9. Further expansion of colour T.V. facilities of the C.B.C. will be deferred.

10. The size of the Canadian Armed Forces will be reduced from the level of 107,000 reached earlier this year to an average level of 100,000 man-years in 1968-69. This will be accomplished through normal attrition and a scaling down, but not elimination, of the recruiting program.

11. To repeat something that I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the growth rate in the public service generally, through 1968-9, will be limited to approximately 2 per cent or 5,000 additional positions. This is about half the growth rate allowed in the past three or four years. In addition, staff on strength in each department and agency at any time will be held to 95 per cent of approved establishments, and continuous review will be maintained of all approved positions remaining unfilled for periods longer than six months.

12. Provision for staff travel throughout the public service is being cut by a full 10 per cent from department requirements as submitted in estimates for the year 1968-9.

Mr. Monteith: What was the submission?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I know how phony my hon. friend is.

The next item is not at all phony, and I deeply regret having to make the announcement which I am about to make, because everyone in this house knows my personal feelings about this matter.

13. Since we have made a commitment to the Canadian people that we will retain expenditures within the limit of $10.3 billion, the government has decided that it will not be possible in 1968-9 to proceed with plans for increasing supplementary pension benefits for retired civil servants.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Benson: I should like to say how difficult it has been for me to make that statement.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. The minister wishes to continue his speech. At the end of the speech the hon. member will be able to ask his question.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the minister for his courtesy in indicating that he will permit me to ask him a question. Will he tell me how the government squares the decision he has just announced with the assurances that he and the Prime Minister have been giving us week after week that this matter was still under consideration by the government?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been and is being considered by the government. We must weigh these cuts against all the cuts which have been necessary. I shall only list some 50 or 52 cuts here, but there are many hundreds more. I would ask my hon. friend to weigh this matter against the next item, which will take income away from the farmers of this country.

14. Under this next item, Mr. Speaker, quality cheese premium payments, introduced during world war II, will be discontinued, effective April 1, 1968.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Benson:

15. Effective immediately, no further applications will be received for subsidies in aid of cheese factory amalgamation and improvement. Applications already in the hands of the Department of Agriculture will be processed in the usual way.

16. Hog and lamb premium payments will be reduced by $1 per carcass, effective April 1, 1968.

An hon. Member: There goes Joe.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: May we have some order in the house, Mr. Speaker.

17. This next item is most important to many of my hon. friends from the maritime provinces. The government has decided to defer the placing of any further new contracts for the Northumberland causeway, pending a thorough review of the situation by Col. Edward Churchill, whose services have been retained as a co-ordinator of the project. This review, made necessary by the drastic escalation in the estimated cost of the project as originally conceived, will include the examination of alternative ways of meeting, on a more economically justifiable basis the commitment of the federal government to the government and the people of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Ricard: Narrow minded.

Mr. Benson: That commitment this government will keep.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Benson:

18. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited will be asked to delete from its budget for 1968-9 provision for the acquisition of a new computer facility and building at Chalk River, as well as a number of other extensions and additions to existing plant at Whiteshell, Manitoba and at Chalk River.

19. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is being asked to defer starts on a number of projects originally scheduled for 1968-9 including the West Coast Hydrographic Institute; a floating laboratory and two smaller research laboratories in the Ottawa area; and two new vessels replacing older ones in the department's fleet of research vessels. In addition work on the Queen Elizabeth telescope in British Columbia is to be slowed down, pending a further review of this and related activities.

20. External Affairs had planned to open two new diplomatic missions abroad in 1968-69: Trade and Commerce had planned to open three new posts. These departments are being asked to defer their plans to open these five posts.

21. The Department of Forestry and Rural Development has been asked to defer its plans for starting construction on a number of forestry research laboratories in Winnipeg, Victoria, Fredericton, Quebec and Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Benson:

22. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has been asked to cut back its expenditure plans on pilot projects for manpower retraining in 1968-9.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Benson:

23. The Department of National Health and Welfare has been asked to set a limit of $40 million on the pay-out from the health resources fund in fiscal year 1968-9.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Benson:

24. The national health grants program, in effect since 1948, provides considerable sums of money for the support of medical care and treatment projects of various kinds in the provinces. It is intended to phase out expenditures on these medical care and treatment projects as medicare takes over in the provinces.

25. The program developed jointly by the Post Office and the Public Works Department for the construction of small winter works post offices will be cut in half for the year 1968-9.

An hon. Member: Mounting unemployment.

Mr. Benson:

26. There will be a slow-down in plans for the headquarters buildings of three departments in Ottawa—External Affairs, Transport and National Defence. It was hoped that actual construction on the first two of these three buildings could have been started in 1968-9, but this will not now be possible.

27. I mentioned earlier that the National Capital Commission will be asked to defer its plans for further driveway construction in the national capital area during 1968-69. Existing contracts will, of course, be carried forward to completion.

[Mr. Benson.]

28. The Department of Manpower and Immigration will be asked to establish a limit of $80 million on the pay-out to the provinces for new construction of vocational training schools in 1968-69.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Benson:

This coupled with the current year's provision of $120 million makes available $200 million for such construction in the two year period.

29. The 50 per cent subsidy now provided for the construction of steel hull fishing trawlers will be reduced to 35 per cent, effective tonight. The reduction will not apply, however, to applications now in the hands of the officers in the Department of Industry which administers this program.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Benson:

30. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been asked to phase over a longer period its five-year program for construction of roads and schools in the Northwest Territories as well as its companion program for the physical development of Indian communities through programs of housing, road construction, electrification, water supply, sewerage facilities, and industrial development.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): That is a disgrace.

Mr. Benson: This latter program, approved in a total amount of $112 million to be spent over a five year period will now be rephased over a seven year period. But the money will still be spent.

• (8:50 p.m.)

31. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will likewise be asked to phase out over a longer period of years the expansion of staff and services, land acquisition costs, etc., connected with its wildlife, parks and conservation programs.

32. The Department of Public Works has already been asked to defer its plans for the construction of a parking garage under parliament hill.

33. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have been asked to defer their capital construction plans at Montreal, Toronto and Regina and to eliminate for 1968-69 proposed starts on the Fort Smith subdivision headquarters and three additional detachment headquarters and warehouses in other locations.

34. The corrections branch of the Solicitor General's Department will limit its capital expansion program in 1968-69 to six new starts on units not yet under construction, in addition to completing projects now under way. This means the deferral of construction starts on a substantial number of other units included in the original program of the branch.

35. The Department of Agriculture has agreed to postpone the intended start of construction on a new headquarters building for the Board of Grain Commissioners in Winnipeg.

36. Work will not proceed in 1968-69 on emergency measures training college at Arnprior, or on the emergency government relocation centres planned for Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

37. No further contracts for large search and rescue cutters will be placed in 1968-69 by the Department of Transport marine services branch.

38. The Transport Department has also been asked to defer all reconstruction and improvement work on the Rideau and Trent canal systems other than that which is absolutely necessary to maintain the systems in proper operating condition.

39. The Transport Department will not proceed with its plans for the construction of a new stores and administration building to serve as headquarters for the Rideau canal system at Smith's Falls, Ontario.

40. Plans of the air services branch of the Department of Transport for commencing work on the construction of a third runway at the Montreal international airport will be deferred.

41. The Fisheries Department will limit its further assistance in the construction of community fishing stages to commitments already made and will delay construction on a new Newfoundland pilot vessel, a marine haul-out scheduled for Newcastle, N.B., and starts on laboratories or laboratory extensions at Halifax, Bonavista, Newfoundland, and Grindstone, Quebec.

42. The Fisheries Research Board will defer the replacement of its motor vessel Parr as well as new laboratories, buildings and other facilities scheduled for Winnipeg, Newfoundland and West Vancouver.

43. The National Research Council has been asked to delay its plans for a start on construction of the National Science Library, a new structures and materials laboratory, and an extension to its administration building to house additional computer facilities.

44. The government intends to introduce legislation to provide for transfer of the preaudit responsibility from the office of the comptroller of the treasury to individual departments and agencies. Substantial staff savings are anticipated when this process is completed.

45. The Department of Veterans Affairs has been asked to defer its plans for the construction of additional facilities at the Victoria Veterans hospital, Victoria and at Camp Hill hospital, Halifax.

46. The Department of National Defence has deleted from its construction program planned for 1968-69 the sum required for land clearance at Gagetown, N.B., as well as funds for a start on the Canadian Forces hospital planned for Halifax, the science and engineering building planned for Royal Military College, Kingston, and added medical facilities at Petawawa.

47. The Department of National Revenue (Taxation) and the Unemployment Insurance Commission are now engaged in a study of the feasibility of instituting a combined audit of employer payrolls, replacing the two separate audits now carried out. Such a combined audit, together with other changes now being implemented by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, as procedures for the centralization of payment of unemployment benefits are completed, will result in significant reduction of the U.I.C.'s approved establishment below the 1967-68 approved level.

48. The Department of Transport has decided to defer for one year the replacement of one of the Viscount aircraft in the fleet of aircraft required by the department to carry out its operational responsibilities.

49. The Department of External Affairs has been asked to defer its plans for the acquisition of a number of diplomatic properties abroad.

50. The National Harbours Board has been asked to reduce its capital construction program for 1968-69 by several million dollars, including the deferral of plans for the construction of a wharf at the grain elevator at Prescott, Ontario.

51. A study of officer training facilities in the Department of National Defence, including the National Defence College, and other institutions, has been undertaken with a view to consolidating reducing overlapping facilities wherever possible.

Mr. Grafftey: You sound like a computer.

Mr. Benson: The hon. member, like other hon. members opposite, has been asking for details for weeks and months. I provide him with detail and now he and his friends opposite are so upset by details that they can do nothing except interrupt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: I am already running over the time available to me. I will admit to all hon. members that this is a long list. However, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that when the main estimates are tabled other economies will be revealed. It would have been impossible for me to go through every government account and indicate the reductions or postponements we have made. However, I think it is sufficient for me to say that we can and will live within our expenditure targets for 1968-69 as outlined by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) last week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: Let me close with a few salient points:

We as a parliament should be proud of what has been accomplished in the past five years.

The future of Canada is bright and prosperous and all of us should be proud to be Canadians.

We have had to establish priorities and in my opinion those we have established are well justified in our interest, as parliamentarians, and for all the people of Canada.

We are not cutting back, indeed we are increasing expenditures, in such important areas as research, where we have increased expenditure by 33⅓ per cent per annum since we took office. We intend to continue doing this—and it is the largest annual percentage increase made by any government in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: What base did you start from?

Mr. Benson: We started from a Tory base.

We intend to proceed with our aid to education. We intend to proceed with our program for manpower retraining, which is essential in an automated society.

[Mr. Benson.]

We intend to spend more money on pollution control. We intend to continue our aid to the disabled, to the ill and to the less fortunate in our country. We intend to continue area development, including industrial incentives and rural development. We intend to continue our social services to the people of Canada. We are not imposing, and will not impose, unbearable taxes on anyone in Canada.

I wish I had time to point out the lie in the statement made by the leader of the New Democratic party on television last night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: We will continue to be a party, and I am sure a parliament primarily concerned with our people, their well-being and that of their children.

We as Canadians have a great future, great opportunities and a good democratic system of government. Let us use them for the benefit of all our people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, we were all glad to give the minister extended time to complete his remarks, and I am sure he will return the courtesy by answering a question. Before he yields the floor, could he answer one simple but important question? Will the minister say one single word—one word—about real savings, which he has not yet mentioned—the only place where real savings could be made: that is, reductions in the spending programs for this current fiscal year, a statement which was promised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp)? Are there any reductions in reality, instead of this exercise in futility dealing only with future fantasies?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the best reply I can make to this question, and it is a question that is very important to all of us Canadians, is a quotation from a very eminent Canadian who said:

> Mr. Speaker, I think anybody who suggests that you can cut down on government spending or offer a substantial reduction in taxes is not being very realistic; but any government can control the rate in the increase in expenditures.

That eminent Canadian is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), and we are going to control the rate of increase in government expenditures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) has made his speech a few months too late. Had he made that speech a short while ago he might now be leader of the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Saltsman: Tonight the minister has done that great thing—he has thrown out the baby with the bath water. This was one of the most shameful, hair shirt performances this house has ever seen. No one will argue that there are not some things he mentioned that we could have deferred, but when he takes out of the government program those things which are essential to our national unity, those things which are distinctly Canadian, those things which we need more than ever today, then he has a lot of answering to do to the country.

He mentioned the national capital area. We are trying to build up this area, to make every Canadian proud of Ottawa, and there has even been talk of enlarging the scope of the work. Now one of the first things done is to jettison this kind of program.

The C.B.C., with all its faults, is still an agency that binds this nation together. Now the international service, by some sleight of hand, is to come into the C.B.C. This is one service of which Canadians have been enormously proud. There is not anyone in this country who will argue that the money spent on this service has not been well spent. Now it is going to be thrown in with the C.B.C., with the effect that its programs will suffer, or the C.B.C.'s national programs will suffer.

He mentioned the Company of Young Canadians. How picayune can the government get with respect to the small sums of money it is spending on this group? This group has come under much criticism. It has done things that many people do not approve of, but it is trying to do something about poverty. Whatever its failures may be, the few millions of dollars invested in its program indicated new approaches to the problems of poverty. Those problems have certainly not been solved with the old, orthodox approach.

The Company of Young Canadians was the great pet project of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). He felt we should experiment with it, that we should give young people their heads, to show them there is freedom for some kind of experimentation in Canada. But now that goes out, although it involved an insignificant amount in the total budget of the nation. It is thrown to the dogs because the government is going to economize. I say it has picked the wrong things on which to economize.

The minister mentioned a computer for the atomic energy corporation. That corporation has been an outstanding success. Now it needs to be modernized; it needs a computer. Industry cannot do without computers. Some of the smallest firms in this country have computers, but the great Atomic Energy of Canada cannot afford to computerize its operations.

Mr. Pepin: They have one. This is a new one.

An hon. Member: What would you do?

Mr. Saltsman: Give them the computer they need. Give them a new one, the best one you can get. Give them the best facilities, because they have made a real contribution to the development of this nation and they need these things to increase their contribution to that development.

The research program of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is also going to be cut back; yet in committee hearings testimony was given that that department does not have enough people to map all the areas of Canada, to check on our water resources, and to make an inventory of the resources which are so vital to our future. Now this program is sacrificed. Forestry research falls into the same category. Much of the prosperity of the nation depends on how well we handle our forest resources; yet this program is being cut.

After all the great talk about manpower retraining and about the great job the government was going to do in that field, now it is one of the first casualties. Everyone knows that the manpower retraining program is an investment in the future. However the government apparently does not believe in investing in the future, and parts of that program are being sacrificed.

The minister mentioned health resources. There are not enough doctors in this country now, and not enough medical colleges and hospitals. The meagre program the government introduced to develop health resources was clearly inadequate at the time of its introduction, but now even it is going to be cut back. Where are we going to get the doctors we require when the health resources program is cut?

The minister mentioned our Indian population. Have we not done little enough for the Indians? Should not this nation be ashamed of itself tonight, when we are told that in the interests of economy the ancillary program for Indians is being cut? If only as a moral gesture, no part of this program should have been cut.

The minister mentioned a national services library. Does not the government understand the importance of things of this type to a country that is trying to find itself, that is trying to resolve the differences between its peoples? Does it not understand the importance of national institutions? Apparently it does not.

The promise made to retired civil servants, that their pensions would be looked into, has gone by the board, and veterans are going to have to make sacrifices. It is always the weak and the poor who make these sacrifices on behalf of the strong.

• (9:10 p.m.)

When we hear the minister say that we as a parliament should be proud of what has been accomplished in the past five years, I can only say that the minister has had his eyes closed throughout those last five years. The economy of this country has been bad, in spite of the distorted figures that have been given to us. Let me point out a number of significant factors. From 1955 to 1965 Canada has had the lowest rate of productivity increase among 15 nations, including Great Britain, which has experienced serious difficulty. Our productivity has grown at the rate of only 2 per cent per capita per annum. The inflated figures the government uses are related to the birth rate, and surely the minister of revenue (Mr. Benson) is not by himself going to take credit for that, as well.

Let me quote from the first report of the economic council which in part states:

> For the last two decades, the level of real income per capita has been consistently in the range of 25 to 30 per cent lower in Canada than in the United States. It would appear that the difference between the two countries was significantly less, about 15 to 20 per cent... at the start of the present century, but the gap widened between the start of the century and the 1920's.

We have not been going forward in respect of productivity; we have been going backwards. Tonight the minister has chosen from two alternatives, namely increasing the productivity of this nation so we can afford to do those things that are right, just and necessary, or going along with a slothful attitude, such as his government has been displaying in cutting its expenses to suit productivity. I suggest that the choice of increasing the productivity is the one that should have been made. I am sure an increase of at least 25 per cent in the productivity of this country is possible. Such an increase would mean a gross national product increase of $10 billion to $15 billion per year, from which the government could easily derive another $3 billion in taxes. How much more desirable would it be for this approach to be taken than the picayune approach the government has taken tonight?

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Our society requires that we have priorities. We do not argue that a nation can have everything it wants, all at once. It should also be obvious that priorities should not only be set in respect of the public sector, but should be set also in respect of the private sector. No one can do everyting he wishes, but why should it always be the public sector which pays for the foolishness of the private sector —and there is foolishness.

Let us look at some of the so-called priorities the market system has imposed upon the Canadian public. Let me use the latest figures at my disposal on capital expenditure from the Canada Year Book of 1964. In that year the economy spent $328 million in capital expenditures for banks and financial institutions in this country, a country which has more banks per capita than anywhere else in the world. It is significant that we spent half that amount, or $164 million, on universities. In that year we spent $351 million to build stores, shopping centres and service stations. We spent almost half of that, $188 millions, on hospitals. This is a fine sense of priorities, when we find that the construction of stores, supermarkets, bank buildings and service stations is more important than the construction of hospitals and universities. How does the government expect this nation to progress and advance with this kind of a policy?

Mr. Crouse: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Is he not aware that it is the profit from the private sector of industry which provides the means whereby the hospitals in the public sector are developed?

Mr. Saltsman: I appreciate the hon. member's concern with the development of this country, but let me point out that if we did not build roads, schools and provide fire and police protection there would be no industry.

Mr. Crouse: Whom do you mean by "we"?

Mr. Saltsman: Industry depends upon those who are being educated in our schools, and industry does not provide cures for sickness.

Mr. Crouse: Whom does the hon. gentleman mean by "we"?

Mr. Saltsman: I mean Canadians; you and I and everyone in this room and this country. We collectively are providing the means and the instruments by which private industry prospers?

Mr. Crouse: That brings us right back to the question I put to you. Are you not aware that it is the profits from the private sector of the economy which provides the means for doing all these things?

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, all I know is one thing—

An hon. Member: And that's the truth.

Mr. Saltsman: That the source of profits is hard to pinpoint; but without the labour of people in this country, like the fishermen who live in the riding of the hon. member who has just spoken, and the lumbermen, this country would not be going anywhere. This country has been built by the work and energy of its citizens. I do not know how you relate that to profits, but I relate it to the skills and the drive of Canadians.

Let us look at the relationship between industry and other things. It is very important to build factories, and no one realizes that more than I, because I live in a riding which is heavily industrialized. In the year 1963 we spent $399 million on industrial construction. In that same year we spent $616 million on commercial construction. Let me ask the hon. member who has just spoken which is more important, and how these priorities stack up in his view as to what is needed in this country?

Let me quote some statistics in respect of reducing government spending. These statistics are from the Economic Council of Canada. From 1961 to 1966 the total volume of final demand increased by 33 per cent; new machinery and equipment increased by four fifths and new residential construction increased by almost one half. In that same period the number of houses constructed increased by only one fifth, yet the volume of government expenditures on goods and services increased by one quarter. No one can say that housing, or services the government has provided, have increased at a faster rate than other expenditures in our economy. The contrary is true. We have spent much less for public services and housing than the wealth of our society would indicate was possible.

The central issue facing us today does not involve a question of priorities alone, but rather who it is that sets these priorities. Does the government of Canada set the priorities, or does it bow to the few financiers of this nation who demand sacrifices from the government in the way of cutting expenditures, whether they are necessary or not? Is the government helpless in the face of this type of demand? Perhaps the government's response to the old phrase "Put your house in order" means, when translated, "We do not want public expenditure"

Much of the present inflationary pressure is psychological. The financiers in this country are doing all they can to persuade Canadians that the only way to restore confidence is by cutting public expenditures. There is no consideration of the curtailment of our own demands. This is a delightful arrangement from their standpoint, and the tune has not varied over the years. During depressions these people argue in favour of government cuts, to enable the private sector to save more, and therefore to spend more. In the 1930's we saved ourselves right into ten years of misery. Government reductions in expenditures are supposed to stimulate the economy, but these people argue today that government cuts are a means of restraining the economy.

• (9:20 p.m.)

It looks as though the ordinary people of this country never win. The impression is clearly that those who hold money want the government to abdicate the management of the nation to them, and leave the setting of priorities only to those who hold the money. George Bain put it very well in a recent article in the Globe and Mail when he said this about the Minister of Finance:

> And, yet, when the finance minister speaks of its being necessary to restrain our collective demands on the capital market, the emphasis clearly is on the public sector. There is no corresponding pressure to restrain the demands of the builders of shopping centres, office buildings, hotels and motels, and the like. Private spending is good spending; public spending is, if not bad spending, at least suspect spending.

Most budgets that come before this house are pretty murky documents. The one introduced by the Minister of Finance last week is painfully clear, however, because it indicates that the government is clearly in a state of crisis. If only the Liberal party were in this position perhaps we would not be terribly concerned, because there seem to be others on that side of the house and on this who are only too anxious to take over. The members of the official opposition have had a hand in bringing us to the brink of national suicide. This may be harsh criticism, even in a house where punches are not pulled, but we have only to read the budget to get a feeling of despair for the future.

Of all the problems facing the Minister of Finance, the most urgent is obviously money. He needs money, and he needs it badly. It is not difficult to see why. If we look at the refunding program for next year we find it is about twice as great as it has been in recent years. We have a strange situation. In 1950 the Liberals issued bonds due in 1968 in the amount of $308 million. The Conservatives when in office were aware that this amount of money would have to be paid out in 1968, but added $1.2 billion.

When I hear members of the official opposition call for fiscal responsibility, I wonder how responsible that kind of action was. It meant that at that time $1.3 billion would have to be refunded in one year. Then the Liberals came back into office. In 1964 and 1966 they added another $696 million to be refunded in the year 1968. So we have a situation facing the Minister of Finance next year in which he must find over $2 billion in the marketplace to refund the issues that will then become due.

I have no way of knowing for certain how much money the Minister of Finance has to find in the way of three month, six month and ten month treasury bills, but the indication is that it might be an equivalent amount. We must recognize that the government has its problems. It has problems in terms of controlling its own expenditures. We see what happens when it starts making massive cuts; the good goes out with the bad, because it seems that when the government tries to satisfy everyone they have to satisfy them that all the sacred cows or all the priorities will not be touched.

The government has limited control over the actions of the provinces. It refuses to set up, or cannot for one reason or another set up private spending priorities. It does not seem able or willing to do anything about productivity in this country. Much more than that, the greatest liability of the government is its own dogma that does not permit it to move from the nineteenth century into the twentieth century. Can we manage this nation with outworn ideas? Can we continue to count on over-all fiscal and monetary policy alone to cure the difficulties facing us today? I do not think we can. I suggest that the government will have to move into new types of programs, into more selective programs in order to cure these problems. If we look at the euphemisms in the speech of the Minister of Finance we get a clear indication of why his ideas will not solve the difficulties facing us today. Let me quote from the minister's speech, where he said:

> We expect to see a better performance in overall productivity, partly as a consequence of better training and deployment of our labour force and partly because there is usually an increase in productivity at this stage of the business cycle.

If you translate that into ordinary words, it means that the minister is going to create unemployment in order to try and hold prices down. When the minister says there has been a rapid economic expansion in recent years, he is not giving the full information that is necessary, because Canada has fared very badly compared with other nations in the world. When he says, "This would require the exercise of restraint on increases in prices, wages, other money incomes such as rent and dividends, and government expenditures", he seems to have control, and is willing to exercise that control, only over government expenditures.

How does he propose to exercise restraint on prices? The minister has no mechanism for restraint on prices. I suggest to him that he needs such mechanism. We have been urging the government to establish a prices review board for this purpose. How does the minister intend to exercise restraint over rents and dividends? What mechanism does he have to do this? He has tried to force interest rates down. Up until now he has not been very successful, and most people who have been predicting the future in this respect do not think he will be successful in the future.

The minister may pray. He figures that if nothing else works, he can pray. Prayer is a very powerful weapon, but I do not think it is powerful enough to cure the problems which face the minister. He will have to do more than just pray. It seems to me that in this respect there is the saying that help comes to those who help themselves.

Mr. Knowles: Most of the Liberals only pray.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Saltsman: The minister made a statement a while ago which I think most Canadians would applaud. He said we will have to find a Canadian solution. This is the very thing he has not put into practice, namely finding a Canadian solution to these problems. His budget does not indicate this; it indicates that he has meshed our economy, or permitted our economy to be meshed with that of the United States. We obtain very few benefits from this meshing, and many disadvantages.

• (9:30 p.m.)

His budget speech was interspersed throughout with references to the problem he is facing and to the fact that he really does not control the economy of this nation, but that the decisions regarding our economy are made outside our borders. Let me quote some of the minister's words. He said:

> The current international situation is one in which there are potential dangers for Canada, in view of our considerable dependence both on world trade and on international capital markets.

He went on to say that it is vital, therefore, that our capital markets continue to work effectively and in proper relationship with the central capital market of the world, which is the United States. He said:

> We cannot isolate ourselves from international price pressures, particularly from the United States, but we must do what we can to contain the inflationary pressures operating in Canada. In the current international circumstances, our policies must reflect the need for strong action to protect our underlying position and for flexibility in adapting to changing circumstances.

What really hurt, however, is when he commented on the Carter commission report. His reasons for rejecting the Carter commission report were very clear when he said:

> —the commissioners have suggested for Canada a tax system quite different from that of other countries, and in particular quite different from that of the United States with whom we have an integrated capital market. This could give rise to economic difficulties, as well as to technical problems in drafting an effective law.... It is that Canada will need to generate and invest a large volume of savings over the next decade in order to carry out the economic growth and development we want, and we shall need to attract substantial amounts of foreign capital to supplement our own savings.

I think it is time the minister explored the possibility that perhaps we do not require this vast amount of foreign capital from the United States and that a great deal of the necessary capital is generated here in Canada. The economic council has pointed out that we have one of the highest levels of savings in the world. If that level of savings is used wisely and if priorities are established in the private sector for the adequate and best use of that capital, then I think we would find ourselves in a far more independent position and a better position to manage our economy in the future.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that only ten minutes are left to me in which to make my points, I hope the house will forgive me for a lack of continuity in my remarks. However, there are three areas which have impressed me particularly, and I wish to refer to the following points in the speech made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

I would refer, first, to his comments with regard to the Carter commission report; second, his accusation that we have planned increased unemployment; and third, that we have treated the corporations of this country with kid gloves. Having analysed his speech very carefully, the only part with which I agree totally was contained in his concluding remarks this afternoon. I say this in all sincerity because the hon. member has frequently placed on the record his own personal views about the problems which tend to divide this country.

His words are worth repeating because I know they were spoken with a great deal of sincerity when he said the following:

> All of us in Canada, of all political parties and faiths, are determined to make every effort to overcome divisive influences in our country, and to strengthen the unity and the purposefulness of our nation and our people in every part and in every province.

I suggest to the hon. member that he should use this eloquence, tact and command of the English language to convert the leader of the New Democratic party in British Columbia who rejected the B and B report and who further rejected the principle that French should be taught in the schools in British Columbia.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member's party does the same to the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have only ten minutes in which to make my remarks. If the hon. member missed the speech of Mr. Strachan he can refer to the remarks of Mr. Lloyd who led the New Democratic party in Saskatchewan and who seems intent on following the "do nothing" attitude toward the minorities in Saskatchewan, an attitude which exemplifies the 17 years of socialist rule in that province.

In his subamendment the hon. member pointed out that we have failed to implement the recommendations in the Carter report. We have thus strengthered his efforts to divide the country into big business and little business. This is the type of speech which is indicative of ninteenth century thinking when countries and populations were divided into areas, sections and classes. He asked why we did not impose taxes on insurance companies in accordance with the recommendations of the Carter report. The hon. gentleman knows that the basic philosophy behind the report of the Carter commission, as outlined by the chairman, is that we should either bring in the full report or nothing at all.

I wish to ask the hon. gentleman, who allegedly listens to the voice of the little man, why, if he accepts the recommendations in the Carter report as he and the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) just pointed out, he did not urge the implementation of the Carter recommendation that we tax the unemployment insurance benefits in this country. Is this not what the New Democratic party endorses in its blanket acceptance of the Carter report? When the hon. member's party was castigating the oil companies, why did they not accept at the same time the other recommendation of the Carter commission that credit unions and co-operatives in this country be taxed? This is another valid recommendation of the Carter report to which he did not refer. Why did he not mention the recommendation of the Carter report that the investments of non-profit organizations including trade unions be taxed? We did not hear anything about that. What about the recommendation which suggests that benefits such as university tuition paid by an employer for an employee be considered as income to the employee and be taxed?

It is obvious that the only parts of the Carter commission report which appeal to the New Democratic party are those which they feel will appeal to the emotions and prejudices of people who have little or no understanding of what corporations are all about. He said we are soft on corporations. Today I looked up figures relating to the rate at which corporations are taxed in this country and I found that the rate of taxation of corporations in this country is the highest in the western world. It amounts to 52 per cent as opposed to 48 per cent in the United States, 40 per cent in Great Britain and 42 per cent in Australia.

The hon. member accused the Minister of Finance of planning intentional unemployment. There is only one leader in the western world who has done that deliberately, namely Harold Wilson who, when he introduced the austerity program two years ago bluntly said to the trade unions: "We will keep the increased level of unemployment to under 500,000 people". This is the labour government which the hon. member's party holds up as an example to us. The leader of the New Democratic party, who went to Great Britain tonight, will probably come back with some of these lame-brained ideas. No doubt Mr. Wilson and the leader of the New Democratic party will discuss late into the evening why the socialist concept practised in Great Britain has failed, and has no part or place in a country which believes in democracy and in the freedom of the individual.

The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse), in a quiet and honest way suggested to the hon. member for Waterloo South that the very crux of the matter is that socialism is outdated. Socialism may have its application in developing countries, and in communist countries, but it has no place in the Canadian economy. It is significant that when the hon. member for Waterloo South and the hon. member for York South spouted socialist propaganda tonight they did not refer to a freeze in salaries. They know it is impossible and they know it is not palatable to labour. They know that it is against the spirit of the British North America Act, and yet time after time they get up in this House of Commons with sanctimonious arguments that are against the interests of the people of this country. Canadians know, Mr. Speaker, that the economy of Canada has never been in greater shape.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I wish I had more time because I really want to talk about my Tory friends, who dissipated the greatest majority in Canadian history in 1958 and bankrupted the unemployment insurance fund in 1962.

Mr. Monteith: Take us on tomorrow.

Mr. Mackasey: I have a weak spot for the opposition, because they are the same old gang we have seen in the House of Commons for too long. Now, Mr. Speaker, the kindest thing I can say about my hon. friend, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), is that he accused the government of adding to the inflationary pressures by increasing taxes. The corollary of that would be that if we reduced taxation we would decrease inflationary pressures. I have been trying to figure this out all day and I say that the hon. member's ghost writer should do his homework, or get fired.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not refer to the hon. Leader—he will never be right hon.—of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) because he is not in his seat. I should like to make a few comments about his remarks but I will do so when he is present. However, the hon. member has been saying one thing which has surprised me. On two occasions he has given his endorsation to the Estates General of the province of Quebec as being a body of serious men discussing serious subjects. This is the same Estates General which refused to fly the Canadian flag at their week end conference. The only conclusion to which I can come—

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend cannot get away with that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will both hon. gentlemen sit down, please? It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty pursuant to standing order 58(4) to forthwith put the amendment to the amendment.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Lewis) which was negatived on the following division:

• (10:00 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Barnett
Brewin
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Dionne
Fawcett
Gauthier
Gilbert
Godin
Grégoire
Herridge
Howard
Howe (Hamilton South)
Knowles
Laprise
Lewis
MacInnis (Mrs.)
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
Orlikow
Peters
Prittie
Saltsman
Simard
Winch—24.

Division

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Allmand
Andras
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Baldwin
Ballard
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Bell (Carleton)
Bell (Saint John-Albert)
Benson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Bower
Brand
Brown
Byrne
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cantelon
Cantin
Caron Cashin
Caston
Chatterton
Chatwood
Churchill
Clancy
Clermont
Coates
Code
Comtois
Coté (Dorchester)
Coté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Crouse
Danforth
Davis
Deachman
Dinsdale
Dubé
Duquet
Emard
Ethier
Fairweather
Fane
Forest
Forrestall
Fulton
Gendron
Goyer
Granger
Grafftey
Gray
Greene
Guay
Gundlock
Habel Haidasz
Hales
Harkness
Harley
Hees
Hellyer
Hopkins
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Hymmen
Irvine
Isabelle
Jamieson
Johnston
Jorgenson
Keays
Kindt
Korchinski
Laflamme
Laing
LaMarsh (Miss)
Lambert
Langlois (Chicoutimi)
Laniel
Laverdière
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard
Lind
Loiselle
Loney
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacEwan
MacInnis (Cape Breton South)
Mackasey
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIlraith
McIntosh
McKinley
McLean (Charlotte)
McLelland
McNulty
McQuaid
McWilliam
Madill
Marchand
Martin (Essex East)
Matheson
Matte
Mongrain
Monteith
Moore
Morison
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Munro
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Neveu
Noble
Noël
Nowlan
Nugent
Olson
Otto

Division

Pascoe
Patterson
Pearson
Pennell
Pepin
Pilon
Prud'homme
Pugh
Racine
Rapp
Reid
Ricard
Richard Rideout (Mrs.)
Rinfret
Rochon
Rock
Roxburgh
Ryan
Rynard
Sauvé
Scott (Victoria (Ont.))
Sharp
Sherman
Simpson
Smallwood
Smith
Southam
Stafford
Stanfield
Starr
Stefanson
Stewart
Tardif
Teillet
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Thomas (Middlesex West)
Thompson
Tremblay (Matapédia-Matane)
Tremblay (Richelieu-Verchères)
Trudeau
Tucker
Turner
Valade
Wadds (Mrs.)
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Assiniboia)
Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Webb
Whelan
Yanakis—186.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

Mr. Groos: I was paired with the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Skoreyko). Had I voted I would have voted against the subamendment.

Mr. Nasserden: May I adjourn the debate?

It being twelve minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 8, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMISSIONER GENERAL FOR STATE VISITS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table in English and in French the report of the commissioner general for state visits during the centennial year 1967.

THE LATE HON. A. J. BROOKS

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY ON DEATH OF FORMER MINISTER

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it would be the wish of all hon. members to record in Hansard the sincere regret of this house on the news of the sudden passing last night of the late Colonel the Hon. Alfred Brooks. Colonel Brooks, a minister of veterans affairs from 1957 to 1960 and a distinguished veteran of both world wars, was regarded by veterans, by his colleagues on all sides of the house and by the staff of the department as one of the staunchest advocates of veterans rights ever to hold the office of minister of that department.

He was also a veteran in another sense, a veteran of public service outside the armed forces. Colonel Brooks was a teacher and a lawyer, skilled in both professions. He served with distinction as an elected representative in the New Brunswick legislature, in this house and in the other place continuously from 1925 until his death.

I am certain all hon. members will wish to join me and the government in extending our most sincere sympathy to Mrs. Brooks and her two sons in their time of sorrow.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the house for a few minutes to say a few words about the late Senator Brooks. His career was almost unique in the range and variety of service rendered to Canada. As the minister has already indicated, Senator Brooks had a long career of service as a lawyer, teacher and soldier and was responsible for the interests of his fellow veterans as a member of the federal government. He had a distinguished career in the legislature of New Brunswick and in both houses of the federal parliament. His political career started in the New Brunswick legislature back in 1925. He was elected seven times in succession to the House of Commons and for three years was minister of veterans affairs.

Colonel Brooks held his political views strongly and advanced them forcefully. He was a partisan in the best sense of the term, and over 40 years of political service served only to enhance his reputation as a gentleman, a true patriot who was inspired always by the highest aspects of public duty. It may sound easy to speak in terms of 40 years of public service, but a man who gives it makes great sacrifices in his personal and family life. In the federal parliament, from the time of his election to the day of his retirement, he was a loyal and devoted spokesman for the interests of the Atlantic provinces, and he was always a patriot. There have been few men in public life from that region who deserve to receive unanimous respect and affection. Like many of you I have lost an old friend. On behalf of my colleagues and myself I wish to extend sympathy to Mrs. Brooks and the two sons.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, all of us in this group were shocked indeed when we heard of the passing of Colonel the Hon. Alfred Brooks. Regardless of our differences in political opinion we had a high regard for him as a man who had served his country faithfully in peace and in war. I had a very close association with him personally since our appointment to the committee on veterans affairs in 1945. I knew his great interest in veterans affairs, his great interest in the welfare of veterans and their dependants across this country. We extend to his widow and to the family our most sincere sympathy on their loss.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet), with the Leader of the Expression of Sympathy for Former Minister

Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and with the member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) to express to the family of Colonel Brooks our most sincere condolences on this sudden passing.

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group would like to join in the expression of sympathy on the death of Senator Brooks. Many members of this house remember him mainly because of his gentlemanly attitude, both in and out of this house, and his obvious sincerity in fulfilling his responsibilities as minister of veterans affairs. We should like to join in expressing sympathy to Mrs. Brooks and to the members of the family at this time.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like very briefly to pay my personal tribute to Colonel Alf Brooks, and to express my very deep sorrow at his passing. During the more than 22 years I have been here Alf. Brooks was one of my very closest friends, and the contribution he made to the public life of this country during that period and previously is almost without parallel. I should like to express my very deep sympathy to Mrs. Brooks and the two boys.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): As the successor to Senator Brooks in representing the constituency of Royal in this parliament I should like to thank the Minister of Veterans Affairs, my own leader and others who have spoken so touchingly about the late Senator A. J. Brooks. He served his province and his country in war and peace, both in the legislature of New Brunswick and in both houses of parliament as well as the armed forces. Mr. Brooks, of course, loved Canada, but he had a special place in his heart for the very lovely Saint John river valley where he was born and whose people he served for so long.

HOUSING

TABLING OF WORKING PAPERS PREPARED FOR CONFERENCE

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two copies in English and in French of two working papers that have been distributed for use at the housing conference opening on Monday. One has to do with building materials and new building techniques; the other has to do with the studies that have been made in connection with pollution control.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): I should like to ask that copies be made available for members of the house.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS— REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF INCREASE REFUSAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question about the position of superannuated civil servants. In view of the statement made last night by the President of the Treasury Board that deferments in proposed spending programs would be made in such a manner as not to hurt the needy or the disabled, will the Prime Minister reconsider the decision to refuse any increase in pensions to this group which includes many needy Canadians?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the time will soon arrive when it will be possible to reconsider this matter.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister realize that this refusal makes a mockery of the committee system—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): —and is a betrayal of the needy men and women who have devoted the best years of their lives to the service of Canada?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. When the President of the Treasury Board answered a question of mine on this matter last night he said this matter has been and is being considered by the government. Does this mean that the matter is closed or that it is still under consideration?

Mr. Pearson: Certainly not closed, Mr. Speaker. I have just said that I hope the time will come when the decision can be reconsidered.

Mr. Knowles: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was this decision really taken as an economy measure or was there some other reason for it?

Mr. Pearson: This decision was taken purely on the ground of the economic situation in the country, and on no other ground.

[Translation]

DOMINION OBSERVATORY

REQUEST THAT TIME BE ANNOUNCED IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I do not know which department is responsible for the Dominion Observatory, so I shall put my question to the Prime Minister.

When we call 994-5852 to have the official Canadian time, we always get an answer in English. I tried personally just half an hour ago with the same results. Why can we not be answered in French as well as in English by the Dominion Observatory?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with this question by saying I will be glad to look into it.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the resignation of Mr. Ouimet, which is to take effect next Friday, is it the Prime Minister's intention to announce the name of the new president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation immediately?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would hope the broadcasting bill would receive the approval of parliament very shortly and that at that time the announcement can be made.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact there is no president or vice president at the moment I wonder who will be running the corporation pending the passage of the new broadcasting act?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken there are six vice presidents, and the senior will be the acting president.

UNITED NATIONS

PROPOSED VISIT OF REPRESENTATIVES OF VIET NAM LIBERATION FRONT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Did the Canadian government or its representative at the United Nations receive any communication from the Secretary General regarding the proposed visit of two representatives of the National Liberation Front of Viet Nam to the United Nations? If so, was the Canadian government informed of the intended purpose of that visit?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the Secretary General has communicated with anyone on that subject, but the United States ambassador made a statement this morning. Several days ago there was some discussion about this matter among various delegations, in which Canada was a participant.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make representations to United States authorities to allow the entry of these two representatives in the hope that this might open doors to talks about peace negotiations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is primarily, of course, a United Nations matter. The United States ambassador indicated this morning the willingness of the government which he represents to give visas to permit attendance at the United Nations to those who would have responsibility for this particular group that has been mentioned.

FINANCE

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES DURING REMAINDER OF FISCAL YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the failure of the Minister of National Revenue during his remarks last evening to detail any savings for the next four months of this fiscal year, will the Minister of Finance tell this house if he expects government spending to March 31, 1968 to continue at the present level, which is 15 per cent above last year's level?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the very excellent and far ranging statement which was made by my colleague the President of the Treasury Board, there was detailed the general policy of the government to control expenditures. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, in the operation of a modern government one can only control expenditures, and many of the measures that were announced by the President of the Treasury Board have an effect on this year's expenditures. I can confirm the figures I have put forward about the deficit we shall have this year and the general controls that we are placing on expenditures during the present year.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In the national interest I wish to ask him whether expenditures for the fiscal year 1968-69 will be greater than those for the fiscal year 1967-68?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the estimated increase is of the order of $400 million.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: This was set out clearly and is in line with our responsible attitude to government spending. I believe it is necessary in order to fulfil the commitments that have been undertaken by this parliament. As the minister who is responsible for the Treasury Board has said, we are continuing to spend in accordance with our statutory obligation and to meet what we consider to be the priorities of the Canadian people.

Mr. Starr: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the spending in the fiscal year 1968-69 be greater than the spending in the preceding fiscal year. May I have a yes or no answer?

Mr. Sharp: I gave my answer, Mr. Speaker. I do not think I could be any clearer.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. Possibly the Prime Minister will take note of it, as it might interest him. Can the minister indicate if the rather startling procedure of the Minister of National Revenue last evening in revealing Treasury Board dealings with respect to next year's estimates, before the blue book has been filed, will be an annual practice from now on? In particular, will it be possible for the minister to come back and give us the same gory and harrowing details to show that departmental requests for this fiscal year have been pared down in the customary manner?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this seems to have been the procedure that was insisted on by the hon. gentlemen of the opposition.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Starr: Nonsense. That is government propaganda.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a question to direct to the Minister of National Revenue. It is a bit urgent, Mr. Speaker. My question is prompted by a certain linguistic ambiguity contained in a statement made by the minister in the course of his address last evening, when he said "We are not cutting back but, indeed, expanding expenditures in such important areas for our future as aid for the disabled, the ill, or the less fortunate in our country." Is it possible for the minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member should now put his question. Before he does so may I say to the house that we appear to be entering upon a budget debate. Will the hon. member put his question now?

Mr. Herridge: Do you wish me to repeat the question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member could put his question in the briefest manner, without details.

Mr. Herridge: I will just give the last sentence. Is it possible for the minister to make the implicit explicit at this time?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): When I made the statement that we are continuing our aid to the disabled, the ill and the less fortunate in this country I was talking about such wonderful legislation as we have brought in with regard to the Canada Assistance Plan, supplementary old age pensions and so on; and when I mentioned the disabled I had in mind a statement which will be made very soon by my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): In the light of that reply can the minister elucidate why he is cutting down school and education grants for Indian children?

Mr. Benson: Not so.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Will the restrictions he announced yesterday delay the construction of a federal building in Hull to house the forestry department?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Again I must advise the house that we are getting into a budget debate. It will only be a few minutes until the house will be able to discuss these matters, and I suggest we move to another topic.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think my question is quite in order and that it is not controversial. Since Hull has been promised a public building for two or three years, I should like to know whether the restrictions will prevent or delay its construction. That is all I am asking the minister.

[English]

Mr. Benson: The answer is no; it has not been delayed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CANADIAN COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did the minister state at his press conference this morning that the government intends to reduce the number of CF-104 squadrons and the strength of the army brigade group now serving with NATO forces in Europe.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, I did not, Mr. Speaker. What I said, after consulting my colleague the minister of defence, was that no decision has been taken to phase out the CF-104's in the next four years.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

TORONTO—CONVICTION OF MEMBER ON CRIMINAL CHARGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I wish to direct this question to the Prime Minister. Does the right hon. gentleman intend to condone the offence of the member of the Company of Young Canadians who in Toronto on December 6 was fined $100 with the alternative of 14 days in jail; or will the person concerned be expelled from the organization?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPRESENTATIONS AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR SCIENTIFIC PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board and ask him what consideration the government is giving to the representations of the Professional Institute that failure to grant promised pay increases to scientific personnel employed by the government will mean large scale resignations of these highly trained and irreplaceable staff members.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): With the hon. member's permission I should like to take this question as notice, as I presently have it under investigation and I am expecting a report.

SHIPPING

REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION OF SMALL BOAT HARBOURS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): My question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to announce his plans with respect to proposed changes in the administrative arrangements for small vessel harbours arising out of a report from Mr. Tom How concerning conditions on the west coast? The minister told us he had received this report some time ago.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the situation has not changed since the last time this question was asked, except to this extent; that the report has been under consideration and study by the department during the intervening period. I would hope the department would have their comments and recommendations available to me for decision some time early in the new year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN STRENGTH OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the reduction of the armed forces to 100,000 personnel to be accomplished by reducing the strength of or eliminating fighting units, for example by taking further naval ships out of commission—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Harkness: —and further reducing the strength of infantry battalions and other army units?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his question briefly?

Mr. Harkness: That is my question, Mr. Speaker. Further, if the reduction is not to be accomplished in that way how is it to be achieved?

[Translation]

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to mention that those cuts were planned after serious and extensive consideration by headquarters, and that we trust we can see them through as indicated without affecting in any way our operational efficiency or modifying at all our present commitments.

Mr. Speaker, it must also be said that this is possible also as a result of the savings made through the unification of the forces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Harkness: As a supplementary question, could the minister now answer the direct question as to whether there is to be a reduction in or elimination of actual fighting units?

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

It was announced that 7,000 soldiers on active duty will be discharged, since the establishment will be reduced from 107,000 to 100,000. That is the announcement which was made last night and, if such is the case, is the Minister of Manpower and Immigration going to look after the retraining of the soldiers who will be discharged or retired?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of National Defence indicated that it was not true the Canadian armed forces would be reduced by 7,000 men.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is important to indicate to the hon. member for Villeneuve that the reduction, as was clearly explained by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) would be accomplished through normal attrition. That does not mean, therefore, that 7,000 men will be discharged. We are going to scale down the recruiting and, since a good number of Canadian forces personnel are now nearing retirement age, this reduction will be accomplished in that way.

Therefore, the problem of referring 7,000 people to the department of manpower in order to obtain employment does not arise.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. He has referred to the reduction resulting from attrition of recruiting. Is the drop off in the level of recruitment due to the declining morale of the armed forces arising from unification?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for me to say that our problem is that if we let recruiting continue as at present we would have too many people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): We have to restrict recruiting and this, coupled with the natural attrition of the forces, will achieve the 100,000 level of personnel.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if he can assure the house that this cut back in total strength will not be accompanied by a similar cut back in the number of operating defence bases.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): The question of bases is another problem, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, for a number of months we have been studying a project called base consolidation. Conclusions on it have not yet been reached, and I cannot give any assurance that all the bases operated in Canada will be maintained.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): As a further supplementary to the minister, Mr. Speaker, is it not true that total armed services personnel has not reached the figure of 107,000?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): The actual operating figure has been a little over 107,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the minister tell us when this figure was reached?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): September last.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask whether the cut-back referred to this morning in personnel and bases is the first step, or the first thin edge of the wedge, in a new policy of the government doing away with defence and assuming a new position of neutrality.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the reduction of personnel in the armed forces from 107,000 to 100,000 be followed by a reduction in Canada's armed units in NATO, or is it to be effected strictly in Canada's establishment of nationally based forces?

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, these cut-backs will apply to all Canadian forces but the operational units overseas will not be reduced.

[English]

TRANSPORT

REPRESENTATIONS BY TRUCKERS RESPECTING MARITIME FREIGHT RATES ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Did the minister receive a delegation from the Maritime Motor Transport Association yesterday? If so can he report to the house what action he intends to take on their representation relating to the Maritime Freight Rates Act?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did receive the delegation yesterday afternoon, and I must admit that I am very sympathetic to their problem, which is basically that they do not receive the same treatment as other forms of transportation under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I could not at this time commit the government in respect of what action it may take, but I did say I would give the matter prompt attention in the hope that some time early in the new year there would be a possibility of working out a system which would provide equality for all forms of transportation in the maritime provinces.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT AS TO CHRISTMAS RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Villeneuve put a question respecting the date of the Christmas recess. I wish to inform the house that, assuming normal progress with legislation and no unforeseen circumstances, adjournment will take place on Thursday, December 21, and the house will reassemble after mid-January. The date on which the house will reassemble will be announced later by the government house leader.

MANPOWER

PAYMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE DURING HOLIDAY PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre addressed a question to me as acting minister of manpower and immigration. I think with respect, that the question should have come to me as Minister of Labour since it relates to eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits.

The hon. member inquired whether trainees who may be cut off for the two week period at Christmas and New Year's from their living allowances would be eligible for unemployment insurance. I might say that there is no requirement for a two week waiting period; it is only one week. Some of these trainees have already served this waiting period; therefore they would be entitled to their earned benefits. As regards others who have not served the one week waiting period they will be obliged to wait one week before becoming entitled to any unemployment benefits.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF P.F.R.A.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister allay the fears of the staff of P.F.R.A. who, contrary to some reports, have been doing a tremendous job for farmers, that they will be disbanded or placed under some other ministry, later to be released and their worthwhile services terminated?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I heard all the hon. member's question, but if he was asking as to the disbandment of P.F.R.A. there is certainly no thought of that. At the opening of the South Saskatchewan dam the Prime Minister announced that no thought was being given to stopping the work of P.F.R.A. In fact he very clearly stated that this was a very important government agency, in whose work the government of Canada took great pride, and that it would continue in its important duties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Korchinski: As a supplementary question, is the staff being transferred at present to another department?

Mr. Greene: No, Mr. Speaker.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask the Minister of Transport. Having in mind the continual increase in car accidents and the fatalities therefrom, would the minister consider making a report on the status of his department's motor vehicle safety program?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are proceeding with the organization within the department of this new responsibility. We have now defined those areas that we intend to tackle first. Perhaps some time in the new year or in the next session of parliament on an appropriate occasion we could give the house an indication concerning what we hope to accomplish next year.

INDUSTRY

COPPER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is in a position to report to the house any results of his negotiations with the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting company and the Noranda Copper company regarding their increase in copper prices.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been awaiting the return of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has a responsibility and interest just as great as mine. I feel I should consult with him before reaching any final decision.

FINANCE

REDUCTIONS IN PROPOSED DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board for information which I think we should have before we resume the budget debate. With regard to the reductions made by Treasury Board in departmental spending proposals for the next fiscal year, what proportion represents cuts in existing programs and what proportion represents deferment of projects not yet started?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question was answered earlier by the Minister of Finance. We are going to live within the figure he stated. If my hon. friend was looking for some drastic action such as was taken by the Tory government in the thirties when they cut civil servants' salaries across the board, we have no intention of doing this.

Mr. Fulton: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I was asking a plain and important question. I should have known better than to expect a plain answer.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should know that he cannot ask a plain and important question.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. Does his reference to the thirties indicate that the crisis now facing Canada is of the same proportion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This is not the type of question which should be asked at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Pourquoi pas?

[Translation]

INQUIRY AS TO RESERVES SUPPORTING CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that the president of the First National City Bank in the United States has just stated that the American dollar is hard pressed, can the Minister of Finance tell us whether the gold reserves guaranteeing the Canadian dollar are adequate at this time and whether there is a risk of this international crisis affecting the Canadian dollar?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think this question should be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If this question is put on the order paper it will mean a delay of several days. The president of the American bank has just made a statement saying that the American dollar is in a bad way, and I am asking the Minister of Finance and Receiver General for information concerning this situation. I wonder, therefore, whether the question is not urgent enough to warrant an answer from the minister, since he seems ready to give it.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have very great confidence in the stability of the Canadian dollar, and hope the house will support the measures the government is taking to ensure the continued stability of the Canadian dollar.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the hon. minister. Could he tell us what gold reserves are backing the Canadian dollar at this time?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, these are all a matter of record. They are published every month or so. May I direct my hon. friend's attention to that. A certain proportion of these are in gold and a certain proportion are in United States dollars. I believe they are quite adequate to support the Canadian dollar at the present time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Minister of Finance just said that the figures are published in a report. Now, if we refer to the weekly report of the Bank of Canada, more precisely under the heading "gold reserve" we find there is nothing entered, not even a zero, a one or a two. That is why I am putting the question to the minister.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now arguing the question. Again I suggest that he put it on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REPORTED ARMS SHIPMENTS BY FRANCE TO ARAB COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday in his temporary absence I asked a question of the Prime Minister. At that time the Prime Minister indicated that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would answer the question either later yesterday or today, concerning French shipments of arms to the Arab countries.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was engaged this morning and did not have an opportunity to deal with this question. I will deal with it on Monday.

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he advise the house what if any progress has been made in the last several days with regard to settlement of the situation in Cyprus?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there will be, I think some time next week, a meeting of the security council when the results of current consultations will be made known. Consideration will then be given to the renewal of the mandate of UNFICYP under certain conditions which are still a matter of discussion among the parties involved.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROPOSED DEFERMENT OF ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Last night we were informed that additional facilities at the veterans hospital in Victoria and Camp Hill hospital in Halifax were to be deferred. What facilities will not be proceeded with, thus placing a further burden on the veterans of this country?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, so far as Victoria is concerned we are still talking to the Jubilee hospital people. The actual deferment of capital works will not affect the service to the veterans during the course of the year. Any capital expenditures which are required to maintain services are being carried out.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the minister say quite frankly whether what he has referred to is the plan for a joint hospital to serve the armed forces and the veterans affairs department in Victoria?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, there is no conclusion as yet on the question of the joint national defence and veterans affairs hospital in Victoria. This is a problem which has not yet been solved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR UNEMPLOYED SHIPBUILDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Since the 15 per cent reduction in the steel fishing trawler subsidy effective immediately plus the 17½ per cent reduction in the British pound will mean that steel trawler construction in Canada will terminate almost immediately, as we will not be competitive with United Kingdom yards, is the government giving any thought to providing alternative employment to Canada's shipbuilders?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The assumption that the 15 per cent reduction will almost immediately terminate all work for those who are engaged in the production of steel trawlers in Canada I do not think can be accepted.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of the matter and in view of the statement that there would not be any cut-back so far as the Atlantic area is concerned, will the minister use his influence with the personable President of the Treasury Board to see whether this cut can be restored?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure the minister heard the representation which has been made by the hon. member.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA FOR PROPOSED CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Labour, who is in charge of housing. Could he give members of the house a general outline of the agenda for the forthcoming conference on housing and urban development?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer the hon. member to Hansard. I think the proposed agenda was tabled a week or so ago.

FISHERIES

INTRODUCTION OF COHOE SALMON IN LAKE HURON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Does the minister support the great lakes fisheries commission in respect of the introduction of cohoe salmon to lake Huron?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I believe the recommendations of the commission have been received by the Department of Fisheries. We are prepared to do what we can to implement any recommendation we receive, provided it is feasible and within the financial position of the department.

HARBOURS

HALIFAX, N.S.—REQUEST THAT CAPITAL PROGRAM BE CONTINUED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Because the modernization of Halifax port facilities is important to reverse the trend toward loss of business, would he assure us that there will be no hold-up in the National Harbours Board capital program for that area?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This is a very general question, Mr. Speaker. I would either have to have it more specifically or take it as notice and obtain any details that my hon. friend may require. Many improvements are going ahead in the maritime ports. I cannot say offhand whether all of them are proceeding, but I know that many of them are.

Mr. McCleave: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My specific reference is to the containerization program in that area.

Mr. Hellyer: I strongly believe this is going forward, but I will take the question as notice and confirm this to my hon. friend.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADIAN INITIATIVE TOWARD REVISION OF TRANSATLANTIC FARES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg South asked a question with respect to Canadian initiative toward revision of transatlantic air fares. I have now received advice from my officials as follows. No initiative was taken by Air Canada at the Manila meeting of the International Air Transport Association because of an earlier agreement this year to extend existing rates for another year. For this reason the question of rates was not up for discussion at this recent conference.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO REJECTION OF APPLICATIONS FOR CATV LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In the annual report of the Board of Broadcast Governors for the year ending March 31, 1967 it is reported that the Minister of Transport okayed 84 applications for CATV licences as they were not inimical to the interests of broadcasting stations. There were 91 applications made. Would the minister tell us which seven applications were considered inimical to the financial operations of what television stations?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to inquire of the Board of Broadcast Governors, determine the names of the seven applicants and send them to my hon. friend.

FINANCE

AVAILABILITY OF COPIES OF BLUE BOOK OF ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board by way of clarification. In the process of preparing to participate in the budget debate I have been looking for a copy of the blue book of estimates upon which the so-called savings announced last night are based. I wonder whether the minister could tell me where I may obtain a copy of this blue book.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I announced last night that the blue book of estimates will not be completed until January, and it will be tabled at that time. But it will be within the $10.3 billion target set by the government, an increase, incidentally, of only 3.3 per cent in variable expenses next year.

BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith (p. 5118).

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize first of all if my voice is not too clear today. I hope hon. members will be able to hear and understand me. I am, of course, very flattered by the interest the Liberal caucus is taking in me and in my welfare. Twice within the last two weeks I have received the attention of the official hatchetman of the caucus in this direction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I want to assure my hon. friends that generally speaking I find this very flattering. Long ago old Disraeli said there is nothing more flattering than an insult. Of course I recognize that it is up to me to defend myself if I think I need to be defended. I just want to say that from anything I have seen so far I do not think there should be too much difficulty in this connection.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Last night, as I see from Hansard because I was not in the house, the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) undertook to misrepresent the position I have taken with regard to national unity in connection with the Estates General. I do not worry much about my hon. friend from Verdun except in so far as he is obviously the official agent of the Liberal machine and caucus in this regard.

I raise this matter now to suggest quite seriously to my hon. friends opposite that they have a responsibility to exercise in this regard. I spoke the other day in the house in response to what the Prime Minister said in connection with the B and B report. I said we were not going to try to derive any partisan advantage from the difficult questions raised in this regard. I had considered saying that of course I expected this to work in reverse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: But I did not consider it necessary to say this, because I know a number of my hon. friends opposite are very seriously concerned about national unity and other problems in the country, and perhaps naïvely I have assumed this to be the general feeling throughout the benches opposite. I suggest very earnestly to my hon. friends that they should have another caucus and deal with these politically irresponsible people in their ranks—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: —and explain to them the seriousness of the matters being discussed which are of concern to us all. I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I doubt whether anything so poisonous has been said in this house for quite a long time. The statement was not justified, and I do not think one can get very much lower than to try to distort statements on this subject for political advantage, in view of the circumstances in which our country now finds itself.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I want to say also that while this kind of statement is very provocative, I am asking my associates in my party not to retaliate because I think this is far too serious a subject for that. But I do suggest to my hon. friends opposite—

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

An hon. Member: You have said enough already.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising to ask a question?

Mr. Mackasey: No, Mr. Speaker; I am rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: He hasn't the intelligence to ask a question.

Mr. Mackasey: I will say at the very outset that I did not hear the opening remarks of the Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Ricard: State your question of privilege.

• (12 noon)

Mr. Mackasey: I have no intention of sitting down until I have stated my point of privilege or until Your Honour tells me to sit down. I did not hear the opening remarks of the Leader of the Opposition who did not hear my speech last evening. However, I did hear the Leader of the Opposition refer to my remarks as being poisonous. I agree fully with the hon. gentleman that the unity of Canada should not be a subject of partisan debate but. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Grégoire: This is not a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Verdun will have to state his point of privilege.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has distorted my remarks of last evening. In no way did I imply that the Leader of the Opposition endorses the separatist tendency of the Estates General. My point of privilege is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must advise the hon. member for Verdun that he has no point of privilege.

Mr. Churchill: Go back and sharpen your hatchet.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I repeat again that I am not concerned about my hon. friend from Verdun. I am urging my hon. friends opposite quite earnestly to take the situation in hand and ensure we do not have any more of this. I do not think I need say anything more about it.

I wish to say, however, that as I indicated I welcome criticism. Generally speaking it is unfair, but unless it is made with regard to an issue such as this one I do not mind it very much. Some people contend there is nothing worse than unfair criticism. I have long believed that fair criticism is a great deal worse, and I intend to extend it now to my hon. friends opposite in connection with the budget.

What is the purpose of this budget message? Last spring the Minister of Finance presented a budget to the house in which he forecast a deficit of some $750 million. This was described by him as intending to provide a moderate and sustaining influence upon the economy. Why is he presenting an additional message now? Surely the need to sustain the economy in this way has not changed. Indeed, it is more apparent than ever that the economy requires support now. Apparently the deficit is a little larger now than the minister forecast, but so far as inflation is concerned it was as rampant then as it is now.

The stated purpose of the Minister of Finance was to meet growing expenditures and reduce the capital requirements of the market. I was a little surprised to hear that a budget message is required to meet growing expenditures because I thought the minister was working hard to curb expenditures. Of course there has been a failure to control expenditures in the current year, which have been significantly higher than the minister forecast. However, the point I want to make is that on the revenue side the minister's proposals make very little difference in the current fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Of course for the next year commencing on April 1, 1968 a budget will be presented in the spring.

The minister's proposals, as I understand them, are intended to increase the revenues of the government in the current fiscal year by some $45 million in relation to a total expenditure of nearly $10 billion. These new taxes are very heavy for those who are affected, but obviously they do not change the budgetary picture for this year very much in relation to the total picture.

Why has the minister delivered his budget message now? So far as the expenditure side is concerned, my hon. friends opposite have been dropping hints for a long time about cuts which would be made in the current fiscal year's expenditures. It is very clear from the statement made by the Minister of Finance that the expenditures in this fiscal year, far from being cut, will be higher than he had forecast. So why is this budget message being delivered now? Nothing significant is being done either on the revenue or the expenditure sides in this fiscal year. So despite all the talk opposite, this message has virtually nothing to do with the present year. Also, it imposes significant additional burdens on the Canadian taxpayers. Obviously the government is concerned about the deterioration in the confidence of Canadians in the government. It is so seriously concerned that it is determined to make at least a show that it will do better in the future.

This is the only reason for the budget message now. There is such an alarming drop in confidence in this government that it considered a budget message necessary to assist it in its borrowing operations. It tried to reestablish some confidence in the government among investors and tried to do something about the deteriorating psychological attitude in the country. So what do we get? We get an expurgated version of the budget for next year. This year has been such a mess that the government recognizes it must try to show the people it is determined to do better in the future.

The Minister of Finance reminds me of one of the fans of the old Brooklyn Dodgers. Usually they wound up in the cellar. At the end of each season they said: "Don't worry, wait until next year".

Mr. Sharp: The Dodgers won the pennant many times.

Mr. Stanfield: They did so once in a while, but usually these fellows said, "Wait until next year", but next year they were in the cellar again.

The purpose of this budget message is not to give the Canadian people, Canadian business, Canadian home owners or anyone else an advance picture of what they may expect next year to facilitate them in their planning. There is no assurance that new taxes will not be imposed and that there will not be substantial expenditures over and above what the minister in charge of the Treasury Board disclosed last night. Indeed, the Minister of Finance and others have indicated that in all probability there will be additional taxation and substantial additional expenditures. So the budget message does not give Canadian business or anyone else a picture of what will happen next year, and it cannot be justified on that ground. It is nothing but an exercise in public relations at the expense of the people of Canada.

• (12:10 p.m.)

There is such a widespread impression of irresponsibility on the part of the government that the government considered it necessary to try to convince bond purchasers, for example, that it is no longer always going to be wrong, that there is no longer always going to be vacillation. This effort to re-establish confidence in the government, if it had been done properly, would have served some purpose because it is important to the country that there be general confidence in the government. The program cannot succeed because the government is not talking frankly. It is not talking about what next year's expenditures are going to be or what revenues are going to be. It does not know what they are going to be. The Minister of Finance has said there is going to be a 4.5 per cent increase in expenditures, excluding certain items such as Expo and medicare. If the Minister of Finance had been prepared to exclude the expenditures on national defence I am sure he could have shown that expenditures would be lower next year than this year. How absurd this is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Starr: It is a new method of financing—leave things out.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not know whether the Minister of Finance realizes how absurd this kind of statement seems to other people. He was purporting to give the house and the country a picture of something that the government itself does not know. Obviously this was a waste of our time and a waste of everybody else's time. You cannot restore confidence, Mr. Speaker, by talking about next year's budget if you are neither prepared nor able to talk about what next year's budget is going to be. This is just about as pointless an exercise as one could imagine.

I should like to refer now to the speech last night by the minister in charge of the Treasury Board. He said, of course, that it was not proper to talk about next year's estimates until we have them in front of us and then he spent the rest of the night talking about them. I know I am a newcomer here, Mr. Speaker, but I have never seen anything to parallel this. I have never heard anything to equal it. I am happy to have been able to enter this house in order to see this great new development in parliamentary practice. I doubt that there has ever been anything like it in the 700-year history of parliament.

We all know the procedures followed in connection with estimates. Departments submit their estimates and generally add something to them because they know they are going to be cut. This has been my experience and I think it is the general experience. The estimates come in, somebody totals them and the Minister of Finance almost has a heart attack. At least, that is true of provincial treasurers. Then they set to work to reduce the estimates to some sort of order and they are always cut. Every government in Canada goes through this experience every year. The departments expect this. Sometimes departmental estimates are cut a little more than is expected but they are always cut substantially.

I venture to state that this is the first time in history a democratic government has ever felt itself so desperate that it had to boast about cuts it was making in the requests for expenditures being made by departments. I have known governments to make silly claims, Mr. Speaker, but I have never seen or heard anything to equal this. The relevant figure, of course, in connection with expenditures is the amount of increase compared with other years, not the amount of cuts made in requests for expenditures.

My hon. friends opposite either will not or cannot give us figures as to what the increases are going to be. They are in the position of coming before this house and purporting to give a frank explanation of the financial picture next year, but they give us an expurgated edition. The $11.5 billion to which the minister referred was the total of departmental requests, and then he spent the evening telling us that the government had cut these requests by 10 per cent. Just as an aside, I was intrigued to hear him talk about the limitation being placed upon the number of government employees. Does this figure exclude the number of employees associated with the implementation of medicare? Is this a rabbit in a hat? I do not know, but it is very relevant. These figures with regard to the number of employees are not significant unless the government is prepared to disclose to the house what their total program is. They should not talk to us about part of their program or the number of employees concerned with part of their program. How can they expect anybody to take them seriously when they stand here and pretend to be hard, ruthless, determined men in dealing with these estimates?

The government has given us a picture that excludes a very substantial program. I wonder what opinion these gentlemen have, Mr. Speaker, of the intelligence of their fellow Canadians? In fact, we have a 4.5 per cent increase plus an amount that the government is not disclosing. If the Minister of Finance and his associates had come before this house and said that in the public interest we should not hold the increase below the 4.5 per cent figure that it is not in the public interest to do so, we might have said you are wrong, but at least we could have respected their honesty. However, when the government comes here with all this fanfare about cutting down requests made by departments it is a hoax and any small respect we had for these gentlemen disappeared last night.

Of course there are difficulties in reducing expenditures. I said, and I do not withdraw that the amount you can save in total expenditures as a result of a reduction in existing programs is not likely to make possible any significant tax reductions. This is what I said, and this is what my hon. friends have been throwing back at me. The difference between what I said and what the government is doing next year is all the difference in the world.

When the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) asked the minister last night a perfectly sensible question for enlightenment, whether the government proposed to make any reduction in this year's expenditures, the minister gave a smart answer. I hope he will not be offended if I say he gave a smart-alec answer.

An hon. Member: He quoted your words.

Mr. Stanfield: He knows what my words were. Certainly it is possible to reduce expenditures in particular programs. I thought my hon. friends were being serious when they were talking about this. Certainly it is possible, but I say again I do not think you can talk about reducing taxes substantially by reducing existing programs. I never said anything to the effect that you cannot reduce to some extent particular existing programs.

Mr. Sharp: That is not what you said. Quote your words.

Mr. Stanfield: I said, Mr. Speaker, that you cannot—

Mr. Sharp: I will send those words over to my hon. friend.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: I know the interview quite well. I say again that it is not realistic to expect to cut existing programs sufficiently to bring about a tax decrease. I said you can only hope to accomplish this through control of new programs. Of course it is possible to reduce particular programs.

Mr. Sharp: You must have been misquoted then.

Mr. Stanfield: No, I was not misquoted. What I said was that it is practical enough in total to effect a reduction in taxes, but that this could only be accomplished through control of new commitments.

There are two sides to this question. My hon. friend suggested making cuts in the current year. Hon. members opposite are the ones who are talking about making cuts. If they had made up their minds to do this and if they gave up their efforts out of deference to me and any opinions they thought I had, or any authority my opinions may have in the world of economics, and consequently decided to quit, then I can assure them that they have not understood what I said. And I hasten to add: Do not let anything I may say deter you from any effort you may be making in this regard.

The minister referred last night to what I said about the control of new commitments and then stated that this was what the government was doing. That was a far from frank statement in a far from frank speech. Last night he discussed only the programs that he was cutting back. He was not prepared to discuss the substantial new commitments that his government was entering into.

The minister rather reminded me, Mr. Speaker, of a debtor, confronted by his creditors, trying to persuade them of the great effort he was making to get his affairs in order. He was telling his creditors how his wife had asked him for a fur coat and he had refused it, and how his son had asked him for a new car and he had refused it also. Then on the way out the creditors happened to hear something about a totally new commitment that the debtor had made and the debtor said: "It is not fair for you to pay any attention to that. Look how hard I have worked to control my expenditures. This other matter does not count; you are not supposed to notice it. Look how much I have saved by not doing these other things".

I do not mind, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and the minister in charge of Treasury Board making themselves look ridiculous, but I do mind when in their official positions they make this country look ridiculous. What is anybody likely to think of a country whose ministers charged with these responsibilities discuss financial matters in terms of rabbits in a hat? For example, there is medicare: now you see it, now you don't. Let us have some frankness, Mr. Speaker. When ministers discuss budgeting in terms not of comparisons with previous years but of requests that they have turned down, what respect are the people of the country likely to have for the government? I said the other day that believeability is important for a government, that confidence is important. This government has become just incredible in the literal meaning of that word. It is unbelievable.

The government brings in a total budget of $10.5 billion by cutting several existing programs, some of which, of course, are very questionable. I do not propose to go into them now; I expect a good deal will be said about them. What I should like to know—and this of course is the difficulty when you are discussing this question with only an expurgated edition of next year's estimates in front of you—is how much public works have been cut next year compared with the current year. I suspect, judging from the list of the minister's projects, that in order to stay within the $10.5 billion there has been a very drastic cutting in public works projects.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that if these cuts are made they will have a very profound effect upon the construction industry. There will be this business of start again, stop again that the government has been indulging in all along, though it may not be as acute as it seems to be at the moment.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Second, Mr. Speaker, the effect of these cuts on unemployment is likely to be very pronounced. As one of my hon. friends to my left reminded us the other day, there is, of course, a very pronounced multiplier effect in connection with construction expenditure which in turn has a very pronounced effect, both directly and indirectly, on unemployment. Although I am prepared to reserve judgment on this, in view of what the minister said last night it does not look to me as if the government is living up to its assurances that the particular needs in areas of slow growth will be given consideration.

So we are faced with this misfortune, Mr. Speaker, that the government apparently regards itself in such a box financially that it considers it necessary to increase unemployment because of its own mismanagement. If the economy looked soft before the budget speech and the speech made last night by the President of the Treasury Board, it certainly looks a lot softer now for the reasons I have mentioned. It is unfortunate that the government is in a position, or seems to think it is in a position, where it cannot respond to apparently worsening economic conditions but seems to feel that it has to take measures to increase the difficulties. One wonders what the government will do or how it will respond should the economy for one reason or another get into serious difficulty.

However, Mr. Speaker, clearly these are measures which will substantially increase the rate of unemployment, which is already rising. As an anti-inflationary measure this budget is obviously of very little effect. Indeed, it is probably inflationary and will tend to increase the upward pressure on wages as well as add to the psychology of inflation about which the Minister of Finance talked. It is not a budget which relates very much to this year. It is a very incomplete budgetary statement regarding next year. It is not anti-inflationary. It is not related to the needs of the economy. It is an admission of bad judgment and fiscal irresponsibility, and apart from the burden it places upon our people it does not amount to very much more than that.

The government certainly has been and still is very complacent about inflation. I think the Minister of Finance is now prepared to agree that he and his associates have been complacent about inflation in the past. I do not want to be unfair to them in this regard, but this is the impression I get from this sentence in his budget speech, which is to be found on page 4900 of Hansard:

> Canada is now finding it harder to achieve price stability and full employment at the same time than earlier thinking had led us to suppose.

I do not know why the government should have any difficulty in recognizing the problem. Inflation has been rampant in this country for at least three years. Instead of examining their own responsibilities they have been preening themselves enthusiastically about what they have done. It is clear, I think, that our long period of growth came about from the competitive advantage which devaluation of our dollar gave us, as well as from other external factors such as those which brought about the great expansion in the economy of the United States. But my hon. friends in the government allowed this country, within a period of three years, to lose the competitive advantage that devaluation brought. We have had excessive inflation for three years and my hon. friends in the government have done nothing but talk about it. That is not fair; actually, they have encouraged it.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: The government should begin to recognize the disservice it has done to the economy of the country. It talks about an inflationary psychology. Why should there not be an inflationary psychology in a country that has suffered the rate of inflation that we have suffered for the past several years. Now the government introduces a program to restrain spending. If it can do that sort of thing now, why did it not do it long ago?

Mr. Grafftey: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: This government has no budgetary policy. This is made clear when one looks at budget speeches and at what has happened recently. This government's budgets have little relation to the requirements of the economy. The government has a good deal to answer for and it will be called on to answer for what it has done.

Mr. Dinsdale: Back to the truth squad.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am not against expenditures, that is, I am not against expenditures per se.

Miss LaMarsh: The hon. member was not against expenditures in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Stanfield: About a week ago I said that I was not opposed to government expenditures which were of basic importance to the people and to the development of the country. I said that many government services are desirable at any given time. Obviously that is so but obviously, also, the government must have some test, beyond mere desirability, before it introduces a program. The government cannot do everything that is desirable—and here I differ from my hon. friends to my left in the chamber—any more than an individual can do everything that is desirable. Clearly, the amount of money that the government undertakes to spend must in some way be related to the circumstances of the country and the effect that such expenditure will have on the economy and on individual taxpayers. Admittedly, this involves a matter of judgment at any given time.

Personally, I rate the importance of government expenditures more highly than others in this chamber might rate them and I may be inclined to draw the line at a higher level of expenditure than others would. But, Mr. Speaker, there must be a line. We must pay attention to the physical factors that affect productive capacity in the country and to the psychology of the country. It must be agreed that government expenditures during recent years have been rising more rapidly than revenues and the gross national product have been rising. In due course such rising expenditures must have their effect on enterprises in the country and on individuals. If the load which the country has to bear becomes too heavy it will undermine economic growth. For the future welfare of our people there must be expansion in the future of certain government services. I realize that. But it is not enough to say that a program is desirable; we must also decide what expenditures we may take on at any one time. I am sure the Minister of Finance will agree that today this is the relevant question.

It is proper for an opposition to concentrate its attention at any time on the level of government expenditures. The Minister of Finance must admit, after all his talk about restraint, that the level of government expenditure has become the relevant and crucial question today. The opposition is not obligated to prepare the government's estimates but the government is obligated to allocate its resources to its various programs and purposes. So, Mr. Speaker, it is nonsense to ask the opposition, in today's circumstances, where restraint ought to be imposed. That is the responsibility of the government. If the government is not prepared to exercise that responsibility, our people will make certain that somebody else does exercise it.

Miss LaMarsh: They may want a credible alternative.

Mr. Stanfield: It is not difficult to provide a credible alternative to a most incredible government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: We are confronted with a serious situation and I do not for a moment minimize it.

An hon. Member: I thought that was what you were doing.

Mr. Stanfield: My hon. friend should listen with an open mind. Hon. members on the government side have commented about some of my suggestions. If they will listen to what I have to say perhaps they will comment about other suggestions.

I wanted to say something about the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but since he is not here perhaps I can defer my remarks to another occasion.

As I said previously, government services are desirable if they are to bring about improvements and developments in the country. But at the present time government services are rapidly rising in cost. These costs are growing more rapidly than provincial and federal revenues are growing, and this fact was clearly demonstrated in the study which the tax structure committee undertook. That body was established by this government in conjunction with the provinces and it forecast projected expenditures for existing programs. It also forecast the growth of revenue from existing sources. The conclusion of the federal and provincial officials who were involved in the study was that on the basis of existing programs and existing sources of revenue the provinces would move into a position of increasing deficit and, on the basis of federal programs which were in effect when the study was made, that the federal government would move into a position of surplus. The committee's remarks related to programs such as education. They indicate clearly that with existing sources of revenue an increasing deficit position lies ahead of us. When I say that I am talking about federal and provincial governments together.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Clearly, this country ought to have some new programs from time to time. Governments should be in a position to respond to new developments which are of advantage to the country and which help the country to respond to new developments.

An hon. Member: Medicare.

Mr. Stanfield: Considering our circumstances as they relate to existing programs, we cannot think of introducing any new programs, Mr. Speaker. I agree in all earnestness with those who say that we are confronted with serious problems. The provinces and this government are bound to come under growing pressure because of programs that exist at the present time. There will be growing financial pressure on government income derived from existing sources. Obviously many of the expenditure programs which are now in effect in the country have built into them provisions that will escalate expenditures. As a result expenditures are growing faster than revenues. This is true even though during recent years there has been an increase in the growth of revenue from existing sources.

• (12:40 p.m.)

So it seems to me that in a confederated country such as Canada, where there is a division of responsibility, it is essential to improve the forms of consultation. I refer to the financial pressures. Obviously consultation is desirable. It is desirable if we are to tackle the problems of inflation in so far as government expenditures contribute to inflation. Obviously we have to encourage consultation if we are to pay any attention to priorities in the country as a whole. This, of course, is not an original suggestion of mine. I have heard it stressed by Mr. Roblin, Mr. Manning and others. Somehow or other we have to avoid excessive taxation, we have to avoid unnecessary inflationary pressures and we have to see that services of basic importance in the country as a whole have sufficient funds allocated to them.

The difficulties involved in effective consultation are great. I suggest, however, that they need not be impossible. I believe we may be entering upon a phase in which the chances of effective consultation are increasing. I say this because obviously the crunch is on this government; the financial crunch is on the provinces. In recent years revenues have been increasing fairly rapidly and perhaps the provinces have not felt the same pressure, but I think there is a chance now to establish an effective form of consultation between the federal government and the provinces with a view to achieving an appropriate fiscal policy for the country as a whole in connection with inflation and in connection with priorities of expenditure.

I suggest, however, that the consultation has to be genuine. The consultation has to be sincere, not the kind in which the Minister of Finance engaged a week or two ago when he invited the provinces in to urge them to restrain expenditures while the government as a whole was inviting them to embark on a substantial expansion in their expenditures. If there is to be effective consultation between the government of Canada and the provinces there has to be confidence, there has to be sincerity on both sides.

I suggest that we need continuing consultation. The minister may tell me that there is more consultation now than there was a few years ago. I think this is true. But I believe there should be still more. I should like to see an effort made to establish a secretariat of some sort associated with continuing consultation. This government has respect for provincial jurisdiction, certainly, and all those engaged in consultation must preserve some degree of flexibility. But I think the need is so urgent that this issue must be tackled sincerely. It must be tackled with determination and it must be tackled properly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I say to the government: the country requires some leadership in the fight against inflation, leadership involving real encouragement of restraint and some method of providing effective consultation with the provinces. I say that the deliberate creation of unemployment about which we heard last night is totally unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I say that the complacency which, by its actions, this government continues to show with regard to inflation is unacceptable. I say that the pretence of making cuts in expenditure by denying some request for additional expenditure is unacceptable. I say in all sincerity that confidence in the government, confidence in the country, is of basic importance. Confidence is very delicate. It is taken for granted when it exists but when it is destroyed it is difficult to restore. It is clear that the confidence of the Canadian people, of financial institutions, of anybody you like, including, I think, the backbenchers opposite, in this government is completely gone, and I simply say: Beware lest antics of the sort we saw last night destroy confidence in Canada.

This government is imposing further hardships on the Canadian people through additional taxation and the deliberate creation of unemployment. It has impaired and is continuing to impair the economic future of our country through inflation. I simply say: Please, by trying to be clever politically, do not destroy confidence in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to begin my reply to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) by repeating words with which he himself concluded his speech. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will not indulge in political cleverness to the detriment of the people of this country.

Before I talk about the substance of what the hon. gentleman said, may I refer to the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey). I do not intend to enter into the discussion which has taken place between him and the Leader of the Opposition, but I do want to say this about the hon. member for Verdun. I know no one in this house who has worked harder or been more effective in the cause of national unity than the hon. member for Verdun.

The Leader of the Opposition has not been in this house very long and if he had been here as long as I have, which is not very long either he would have heard the speeches made by the hon. member for Verdun seeking to conciliate the views of French speaking and English speaking Canadians. And he would have applauded, just as hon. members on this side and hon. members opposite applauded. I will not stand here and hear the hon. member being castigated and accused of trying to disturb the relationships between French and English speaking Canadians. It is an unfounded charge and I am sure, whatever the hon. member said, that was the last thing he would have desired to do.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nowlan: Did you applaud last night?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has given a very interesting and in some respects quite constructive speech. I was particularly interested in his concluding remarks when he began to talk about the real problems facing the country and abandoned the rather political approach he took at the beginning when he tried to be on both sides of the question. We do face in this country some serious problems. We face serious problems in our political relationships and we face some serious economic and financial problems. We also face some problems in the field of federal-provincial relations that he recognizes, since at one time he had the position of premier of a province. I hope that as a result of the initiatives that have been taken in recent years we can bring about better understanding and establish the kind of priorities this country needs.

But, Mr. Speaker, when I am criticized in this house for having brought down two budgets this year I am reminded of the time when a Conservative administration brought down no budget. I have no apologies for bringing down two budgets. I brought down two budgets because in the interval circumstances changed, and if we are not ready in this government and in this country to reconsider our policies in the light of changing conditions we should not be in office and the members opposite should not be in parliament.

But may I just say that in so far as the hon. member talked about the question of consultation between provincial and federal governments, I am reminded of the position taken by one of his opponents for the leadership of the Conservative party. I can recall how Mr. Roblin, when he was premier of Manitoba, urged the federal government to give up 20 points, I think it was, of the income tax in favour of the provinces. At the time I thought as Minister of Finance this was a rather strange position to take.

Mr. Starr: You are starting to think that way.

Mr. Sharp: But when Mr. Roblin became a candidate for the leadership of the Conservative party he was asked whether he would still advocate those policies. "No," he said, "I changed my mind." I hope the Leader of the Opposition will recognize that he is now a leader of one of our great political parties, and I hope he is beginning to understand his responsibilities as the leader of that party—

Mr. Monteith: He does not need any lessons from you.

Mr. Sharp: —inasmuch as the circumstances are somewhat different when he is a member of this parliament concerned about the welfare of the whole of Canada.

The hon. gentleman talked about the role of the opposition. The only inference I could draw from those remarks was that the Leader of the Opposition was defending the irresponsibility of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: He said it was not for the opposition to show restraint—

Mr. Stanfield: No, no, I did not.

Mr. Sharp: —it was not for the opposition to support the government in its policies of restraint. He said in effect, "That isn't our function. Our function is to be as irresponsible as possible, to embarrass the government as much as possible." This is the only inference I can draw from the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ricard: Be honest and quote him properly.

Mr. Sharp: The Leader of the Opposition has said that he should be regarded as a credible alternative. I find this a very strange attitude on the part of the Leader of the Opposition. Surely if he is going to have the confidence of the people at some time, he should be responsible in his views. He should be a credible alternative. But in the remarks he made today, he did not show himself as being a credible alternative. All he showed was that he was going to continue the same sort of policies, the same sort of attitudes in this house as were followed by his distinguished predecessor. I am sorry about this.

I had expected that when the Leader of the Opposition assumed his present role we would see the opposition measuring up to its responsibilities, measuring up to the expectations of the people of Canada. Perhaps, we have misread that great convention in Toronto when the present Leader of the Opposition was elected. We had thought there was going to be a change. But, I have seen no evidence of change, either in the speech the Leader of the Opposition has made this morning or in the speech he made when he charged this government with mismanagement.

It was the same speech that could have been made by anyone on his side of the house at any time in the past. It was a thoroughly traditional speech of the kind that was made by the leader of the opposition who preceded my hon. friend. The only difference was not in the content but in the manner and the manner, I must say, was very different indeed. My hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, has a very persuasive manner—

Mr. Stanfield: Thank you.

Mr. Sharp: —and therefore I listened to him with greater care than I would have listened to the former leader of the opposition, but I am afraid I was just as disappointed in the content.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: My hon. friend was the leader and the premier of a province so that we are not talking here about a man who has not had the responsibility of power. From time to time, as I listened to his speech, I began to see how he would have defended his government if it had been met by the sort of attacks he made on us today. But just occasionally did I see that. For the rest of the time he was trying to fit himself into the new role of irresponsible critic, and may I say to him it does not fit him well. I suggest to him, if he wants to have an effect upon this house and upon the country, that he should live up to the expectations that we have anticipated. This is what this country is looking for. It is looking for an opposition which is in the great tradition of the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue these remarks after one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, during the course of the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition he commented on a statement that he had made as reported in the magazine, Executive, for November, 1967. For the record I should like to repeat what it was the Leader of the Opposition said, because in the main I agree with it and I think he does, notwithstanding his denial this morning. In response to a question he is quoted as having said:

> I think that anybody who suggests that you can cut down on government spending or offer a substantial reduction in taxes isn't being very realistic. But any government can control the rate of the increase in expenditure.

That seemed to me to be the Leader of the Opposition speaking as a responsible politician and as one with long experience in the government of a province concerned about what are really the facts and reflecting his very great experience. Today we heard him, unfortunately it seemed to me, abandon the role of the reasonable man which becomes him very well and resort to a kind of political gamesmanship in which he is singularly unconvincing. He began by attacking the government, particularly my colleague the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson), for revealing at this time some of the cut-backs that had been made in proposed spending. He said that this was unprecedented. As I recall his remarks he said something to the effect that this was the first time in 700 years of British parliamentary history that there had ever been a performance like this.

Why did the government resort to this unusual procedure? The Leader of the Opposition knows very well why, and so do the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) and the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). We were urged by the opposition not to talk in general terms but to give the substance of the government's cut-backs which they said they did not believe. That, fundamentally, is the reason the government put forward at this time evidence of its intention to keep within the ceiling of $10,300 million that I had announced both on motions one day and later in my budget speech. But the most flagrant inconsistency, it seemed to me, in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition lay in his attitude toward government spending. At one time he was for it; the next time he was against it. It was really quite a remarkable display of agility.

Usually we hear from an individual member of the opposition that he is in favour of some expenditure and then hear from another member that he is opposed. But there we have the Leader of the Opposition in the same speech appearing to be both for reduced government spending and in favour of more government spending. This a tribute to the skill he displayed, but I really do not believe it is a very great tribute to the intelligence of members of this house who listened most carefully to his very careful statement of the position of the Leader of the Opposition. There was a United States senator who once found himself in a similar spot. He told me what happened. He said that in his state there was a law about killing squirrels and that this was a very contentious matter. He was in a terrible spot because some of his friends were in favour of the law and some were opposed to it. He got up on the speaker's platform and said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to speak to you about the squirrel law. Some of my friends are in favour of it and some are opposed to it. I have no hesitation whatever in stating my position. I am in favour of my friends."

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition in his speech was trying to appease his friends behind him whether they were in favour of greater government spending or opposed to greater government spending.

Mr. Stanfield: What was the name of your senatorial friend?

Mr. Sharp: I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that the government has a responsibility for decision making. That is what governments are for. In this connection, then, I find great difficulty in understanding why the Leader of the Opposition should have complained because the government made and announces some decisions. This is another kind of inconsistency that I detected in the hon. gentleman's speech.

• (2:40 p.m.)

But the opposition has a responsibility, too. That responsibility is to provide constructive opposition. That is what the opposition, in our parliamentary system, is supposed to do. There is a particular responsibility, of course, laid upon the Leader of the Opposition because he occupies a position of even greater responsibility than other members of the opposition. If he genuinely believes that the government is overspending, his party should at least not advocate large, additional expenditures and should applaud the government when it does that for which the opposition presses.

I listened last night when my colleague the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) was speaking and announcing some economy measures. He announced the cut-backs the government was proposing. What did I hear from the opposition benches? Was it applause? No. I heard cries of "Shame" after almost each item. Let me ask the Leader of the Opposition some questions.

Mr. Rapp: You will not get answers to them.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: That is right; I know I will not get any answers—

Mr. Rapp: Well, you will.

Mr. Sharp: —but I would like to pose the questions nevertheless. Let me ask the Leader of the Opposition whether his party is now advocating an old age pension, across the board, of $100 a month.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Let me ask him whether the opposition have been advocating increased pensions for retired civil servants.

An hon. Member: With proper management in government we could do it.

Mr. Sharp: Let me ask him whether they are in favour of an increase in the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. This is one area about which my hon. friend must be very sensitive because he was premier of Nova Scotia and he, quite properly, made representations to the government that they should spend more money in the maritime provinces.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The opposition is advocating selectivity.

Mr. Sharp: The Leader of the Opposition made representations to the government when he was premier of that province that it should spend more money, in large quantities, in the maritime provinces. Is the Leader of the Opposition in favour of reinstating the shipping subsidies? Is he in favour of the government spending large amounts of money on public works and new railways? Is he in favour of more aid to education? Is he in favour of enlarging the designated areas? Is he in favour of the federal government spending more money to solve the problems of water and air pollution? Have members of his party been advocating that there should be no abandonment of railway lines in the west? Have they been advocating that the federal government should provide no aid to western farmers, no subsidies in respect of wheat, and so on?

I ask these questions really to illustrate the point that these are projects which I think would receive wide support in the house, but the opposition cannot at one and the same time advocate that we make large cuts in our spending and advocate expenditures running into hundreds of millions of dollars.

An hon. Member: They can.

Mr. Sharp: I know they can advocate it, but it is an example of the inconsistency illustrated by the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. Let me deal with some of the other things that have been advocated by the opposition parties in connection with revenue. They have advocated—I do not blame them but this shows the inconsistency of the opposition—that the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials be withdrawn to a very large extent, at the cost of the treasury. They have advocated cutting taxes in general. Indeed, I recall the position taken by the opposition parties in the debate on the main budget. It was directed against the fact that we had not reduced taxes, although we did to a minor extent. I would be more convinced by the arguments put forward by the Leader of the Opposition if they were not so inherently inconsistent. We have in this party and in this government tried to be reasonably consistent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: I think the Leader of the Opposition ought to try to reconcile some of his priorities before he lectures the house and the government.

Mr. Nowlan: He is not in government yet, but he soon will be.

Mr. Sharp: I understand the hon. gentleman's dilemma. He is in a difficult spot. He is criticizing a government that in large part is doing what the Leader of the Opposition would do if he were in office. This is the position in which he finds himself. At one and the same time he is criticizing the actions of the government, which he really agrees are necessary, and is suggesting that they are inappropriate to economic circumstances. This is a very difficult position for the Leader of the Opposition.

The Leader of the Opposition revealed his dilemma when he moved an amendment to the last supply motion. It was exactly the same dilemma as he faces today in making his criticism of the budget. He cannot be expected to solve this dilemma by the sort of double-talk in which he indulged today. He knows the problem because of his experience as premier of Nova Scotia. I am not criticizing what he did in that position. I recognize he was more familiar with the problems in Nova Scotia than I am. But he has stood in his place today and lectured this government on its spending. Therefore I should like to draw to the attention of the house the record of the government of Nova Scotia in some of the fields where there has been particular criticism from the Leader of the Opposition and the opposition parties.

The Leader of the Opposition pretends to be a model of fiscal and financial responsibility, interested in keeping down government expenditures and trying to keep civil servants under control. Therefore I think some comparisons with Nova Scotia are relevant. Let me give the figures. I have a great many here but I shall give only one. These figures relate to the public service in Nova Scotia. Between the years 1956 and 1966, a period when my hon. friend occupied the position of premier of that province, the public service of Nova Scotia, those in government employment, rose from approximately 10,300 to 14,419. This is an increase of just under 40 per cent. In the same period the number of civil servants in Canada rose from 336,000 to 361,000 approximately. This is an increase of just about 7 per cent. These are comparisons that I think should be brought to the attention of the house, because I believe that in discharging our responsibilities we are doing at least as well as did the government of Nova Scotia when the Leader of the Opposition was premier of that province.

The hon. gentleman in his speech made these broad, sweeping statements, namely, that the government of Canada had been irresponsible in its spending, that our spending has been too great, that we had employed too many civil servants. I suggest that his criticism of us is certainly not justified by the record of his administration in this field. I recognize that he has special responsibilities, but I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that so has the government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): It is time you lived up to them.

Mr. Sharp: There was one notable gap in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition. He talked about our Canadian problems as if somehow we were alone in the world. He made virtually no reference—I certainly did not hear it—to the sort of problems that are besetting the whole of the western world of which we form a part. I do not say this because I wish to blame external factors for all our problems. We have a responsibility and we intend to discharge it. I have been frank to say, perhaps more frank than most ministers of finance have been in the past, that we have some special problems which demand action from Canada and from Canadians. But the common problem that faces all of us, that faces the United States, Great Britain and many of our friends in Europe just as it faces us here in Canada, is a different kind of inflationary problem from any that we have ever seen before. In the main it is not brought about by an excess of demand.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The Leader of the Opposition spoke as though the kind of problem that I had been talking about in my budget speech was a traditional form of inflation brought about by excessive demand. But he knows, I am sure, that there are other factors at work, notably a kind of inflation psychology which finds its reflection in prices, wages and interest rates. This is what prompted the government to bring in another budget at this time. This inflation psychology, this tendency for wages and prices to go on rising, is jeopardizing the future growth and expansion not only of this country but of the western world in general.

Mr. Nowlan: And of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, exactly, and of Nova Scotia. This is the problem with which we are dealing at this time, and it is difficult to cope with this new kind of inflation both here and abroad. Read the speeches of the secretary of the treasury in the United States, of the chancellor of the exchequer in Great Britain and of any other minister of finance in the world today, and you might be reading the speeches of the Minister of Finance of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: And of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, exactly, and of Nova Scotia. This problem is common throughout the world and we are trying to face it and deal with it in the proposals which I have put forward in my budget speech supplemented by the speech of the President of the Treasury Board.

When the Leader of the Opposition ran out of substantive arguments, when he found it difficult to square the circle any more, he resorted to the usual gambit of a leader of the opposition. He said that the government has lost the confidence of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: This is not the first time that he has said this because once before he moved a motion of a similar kind. At the time, however, he felt he was saying something new and different.

Mr. Nowlan: Canadians have been saying it for months.

Mr. Sharp: But I can assure him that on every occasion I have heard any leader of the opposition speak in the house he has always made the same sort of speech. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that he failed to make a case. All he made was as an assertion that the government has lost the confidence of the people and therefore the people should put his party in office to do the same thing better. I suggest that this is a lame argument and that we expect more from the opposition.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to have the opportunity to follow the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). When he first came into the House of Commons and in the years that have followed he has tried to sneer his way through successive budgets and debates rather than deal with the substance of the matters which he has brought forward from time to time. Today we heard him say that the reason for bringing in another budget was the fact that conditions had changed in Canada since he brought down the budget less than a year ago. Well, he can certainly say that again, because the forecast he made at that time was certainly not borne out by the circumstances that developed in the months that followed, and his budget at that time was a failure as was the one before it.

Today he spoke about the irresponsibility of the opposition and said he knew they would try to embarrass the government. I say to you, sir, that we do not have to try to embarrass the government because they are far better at embarrassing themselves. He spoke about the Conservative convention in Toronto and about the expectations of the Canadian people. I suggest that the government is afraid to assess the expectations of the people of Canada at this particular time. That has been very evident from what the Prime Minister has said on more thas one occasion. I suggest that when the time comes for the government to assess the expectations of the Canadian people they will find another disappointment on their doorstep.

However, the most interesting thing he said, in my view, was that certain factors in events which have taken place outside Canada have defeated the aims and objectives of the government. I say to you, sir, that what has happened externally has helped this country in many respects. I refer to the Rhodesian problem and its effect on Canada's trade, and to the Middle East problem and its effect on Canada's oil sales and the boom that is taking place in the province of Alberta at the present time in oil exploration and the sales of oil. These events have helped to sustain the revenues of this country above those that the minister forecast in his last budget speech. Were it not for these events the situation in this country would be much grimmer than it is at the present time.

I am sorry to see that the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) is not in the house at present. If he is behind the curtains I wish he would come into the house because I should like to refer to his speech last night. He said then that Saskatchewan had a particular attitude with regard to minorities. I throw that charge back at him and I say that the province of Saskatchewan treats all its people on an equal basis. There was no justification for the charge he levelled against the New Democratic party which at one time formed the government of that province but which in all likelihood will not have the chance to do so again. In speaking about the stand taken by one of the New Democratic party members in the house he said:

> The hon. gentleman knows that the basic philosophy behind the report of the Carter commission, as outlined by the chairman, is that we should either bring in the full report or nothing at all.

I take it this means that the government will, as usual, do nothing with regard to the taxation problems of this country. Then he went on to say:

> I have a weak spot for the opposition, because they are the same old gang we have seen in the House of Commons for too long.

The hon. member has not been too long himself. There are many members on this side of the house who have been here much longer than he, and after the speech he made last night they will be here a whole lot longer.

Never before in the history of Canada has a government sought to attempt a deception so arrogant and so transparent as the one now encompassed by the mini-budget and the announcements made by the Minister of National Revenue last night. Last night we witnessed a refinement of arrogance and carelessness unequalled in parliamentary history. Parliament and the Canadian people were subjected to another of these diversionary facades which have become the trade mark of the government, portraying the utter carelessness and unconcern of the Prime Minister and his government for the real problems which have developed in this nation. These problems were outlined in the first paragraph of the minister's address on November 30. As found on page 4899 of Hansard he said:

> • (3:00 p.m.)
>
> The purpose of this statement is to present to the house the fiscal measures which the government considers necessary at this time to achieve three urgent and closely related objectives: first, to restrain the inflationary increases in prices, costs and the cost of living that are undermining our prosperity;—

This is an admission by the minister that his policies during the last two years have been wrong.

> —second, to ease the disturbing strains in the capital market that threaten our continued growth; and third, to meet in a non-inflationary way the costs of continuing public programs essential to social security and long run national development.

When we take a look at the budget we do not see those things contained in it, even in light of the remainder of the minister's statement. We see here corroboration of what we knew well before. This government is bankrupt for the second time within a year and for the third time within two years. This is a record that cannot be laid at the door of any other administration in Canadian history. The desperation of the government and the extent to which the financial position of this country has declined can be measured by the fact that once again, so soon after the last tax increases, the unsatisfied appetite of the government for cash could be no longer delayed.

Yesterday, in answer to a question from this side of the house, the Minister of Finance stated that the sale of Canada savings bonds had lived up to the government's sober expectation. This statement by the minister responsible for the fiscal integrity of this nation can best be described as the kind of action one would expect from a drunken sailor on a spending spree. This is why we have this hang-over budget. This is why we have this bankrupt government reaching a greedy hand into the pockets of those who carry a dinner pail. This is why this budget cannot be described as anything but anti-labour.

This is why the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) came before us last night wringing his hands and trying with agility and futility to maintain the façade presented by the Minister of Finance earlier. Last night in his opening remarks he said that the less fortunate throughout the world, and Canada, bear on the consciences of each and every one of us. I think they should bear on the consciences of hon. gentlemen opposite in view of the regard they have shown in this respect. There is nothing in the budget to deal with the housing crisis in Canada. I have here a few clippings that I have been able to get together from time to time. I should like to refer to them this afternoon. The first one is from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix and it refers to the National Housing Act interest rate. The article reads in part as follows:

If raising the ceiling on National Housing Act interest rates to 8¼ per cent is the only way to save Canada's housing problems, there may be little room for argument against it. But this new rate is so high as to be frightening to most buyers.

Hitherto, under various lower N.H.A. interest rates, people have complained that, by the time they have finished an ordinary 20 year mortgage, their interest payments have been as big as the cost of the house itself. At 8¼ per cent they will now pay more than twice the price of their property in 20 years.

I have another clipping from the Star-Phoenix of September 20, 1967. The headline reads, "Councillors Irked By Interest Rate". The reference is to the municipal council of the city of Saskatoon. The article reads:

A gloomy picture of the bond market was described at city council Monday night as aldermen debated whether to accept a purchase offer for $1,593,000 of civic debentures when the city is forced to offer 7.65 per cent interest.

Mayor S. L. Buckwold said the interest rate is the highest the city has ever been forced to pay in its history and council must be careful with expenditures or it will overburden the taxpayers.

It is interesting to note that Mayor Buckwold is an outstanding Liberal in Saskatchewan. Farther along the article reads:

He recommended acceptance of the Toronto company's offer which he termed "well in line" with the trend of the Canadian market.

Council decided to accept the offer.

Alderman C. A. Wheaton said he was very surprised that the city had received a firm offer to buy the debentures as many cities were experiencing great trouble.

"This speaks well for the city's credit rating", he said, "but we must watch our spending until the interest rate situation gets in hand."

I believe it was this government that brought into being these higher interest rates when they removed the ceiling on interest rates that banks could charge. I recall that in the dying days of the debate on that measure I described the interest rate as a fluctuating one. This is exactly what it has been.

Here is another clipping from the Ottawa Citizen which refers to the housing crisis. The Globe and Mail for December 7 has a headline dealing with housing which reads, "Saskatchewan Builders Blame Mortgage Lack, High Interest For Housing Crisis". The article reads:

Saskatchewan builders are pointing to 1967 building figures to back up their claim that the shortage of mortgage money and rising interest rates are pricing families in the middle and lower income brackets out of the housing market...

The Saskatoon and Regina House Builders Associations claim 1967 starts are slightly lower than half of Saskatchewan's minimum new housing requirements of about 6,000 units annually...

They predict an acute housing shortage is likely to develop in early 1968.

The article refers to increases in the National Housing Act interest rate, which also affected the situation in Calgary and in Alberta generally. I will not take the time to read from this article the various points I was going to outline. The government was warned time after time by members of the opposition about the effect of the 11 per cent sales tax. Reference was made to this by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). In addition, there has been a discussion of the interest rate and the effect it would have on the construction industry in this country. There has been talk about parliament and about the effectiveness of parliamentary committees. This government never listens to what members of the House of Commons or the members of committees recommend. In any event, the government has ended up bankrupt three times in less than two years, even though they contended they knew it all and they were part of the establishment.

The government talks about containing the growth in the civil service. Even the minister had to admit that they have added 10,000 to 15,000 additional civil servants per year since this government came to office. It is estimated that in four years 50,000 additional civil servants have been hired by the government. This is the number of people the government needed to help govern because of the inadequacy of the representation they have here in the House of Commons. Then they talk about containing this growth at the present time and they try to call that efficiency. This is getting things done. The Minister of Finance admitted it costs more than twice as much today to govern as it did four years ago when the Conservatives were in office.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Last night the President of the Treasury Board outlined 51 items which constituted a mirage that the government had seen and had decided to eliminate. He said that many more items fell into this category. I think he compared the situation to his wife asking for a new hat and his denying her the privilege of buying it. What the minister put before the house last night was an empty sieve with the marbles rolling on to the floor beyond the reach of anybody. Talk about Alice in Wonderland.

The government speaks about being realistic and coming to grips with the real problems facing the nation. Never before in parliamentary history were so many straw horses put up to be knocked down as the Minister of National Revenue put up last night. We should remember this when we discuss the mini-budget that is now before us for consideration.

What has this government done to reduce inflationary pressure at the present time? Not a single item in the budget speech or in the statement last night will end the inflationary spiral that has been occurring since this government took office. In announcing his tax increases the minister used a trick that he used a year or two ago when he stole corporation taxes from the future. Compared with the record of the former administration, the present administration has always been reaching into the future, taking money from the next year to use in the current year.

With regard to the agricultural situation since this government came into office, when the minister was minister of trade and commerce he disclaimed any responsibility for grain sales which, he said, were a matter for the Canadian Wheat Board. The minister not only convinced his colleagues but he also convinced his counterpart in Washington that the United States would not have to deal with Canadian ministers over the matter of wheat sales. As a consequence, competition has resulted of a kind which has put grain sales by this country in jeopardy in recent months. The farmers of western Canada are concerned about this and they know that the Minister of Finance has had a great deal to do with this situation.

Other problems which have been brought up during the course of this debate concerned turkeys, oil and pollution. The minister has indicated that there is a pollution problem. We on this side of the house thought there was a pollution problem across the way. I say that kindly because not too many years ago hon. gentlemen opposite sat on this side of the house. When today I hear the call for constructive opposition I recall the type of opposition that came from this side of the house a few years ago. In this connection I also recall that the suggestions made by members of all political parties in respect of the successive budgets that were presented to the House of Commons fell on the deaf ears of the government.

One can draw only one conclusion from the economic situation in Canada today, namely, that it is the result of deliberate action taken by the government, first of all in proposing the 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery which will have repercussions on the economy long after the tax has been removed and, second, in removing the ceiling on interest rates charged by the banks.

When the Minister of Finance brought forward the legislation to remove the ceiling on interest rates charged by the banks, I remember he stated that this would provide the supply of money that was essential for the housing industry of this country. That statement was made just a few months ago. The government has now had to admit that once again it was wrong in this forecast. Indeed, the record of this government has been that of one budget forecast after another, each of which has failed to deal with the economic situation in this country.

Mr. Nowlan: Just like the weather forecasts.

Mr. Foy: What about the Alamo of 1962?

Mr. Nowlan: I am worrying about the future, not the past.

Mr. Nasserden: The hon. member opposite wants to recall 1962. In 1961 and 1962 the foundations were laid for the greatest period of prosperity that this country has ever enjoyed. In the intervening four years this government has dissipated the effect of the devaluation at that time of the Canadian dollar, which today is not worth as much as it was then. This is one reason for the budget today. The only time we hear from the Minister of Finance is when the government has once again gone bankrupt. This is not the way to budget for the development of this nation. Without making any further remarks—

Mr. Byrne: Without reading any further, you mean.

Mr. Nowlan: You cannot even read.

Mr. Nasserden: Some people cannot even write, and they have a problem as well. I contend that the government has lost the confidence of the people of Canada. The government has lost confidence in itself. This can be seen in the house every day. It is illustrated by the empty benches when ministers of the crown are speaking.

Mr. Byrne: What about the empty benches on your side now?

Mr. Churchill: There is only one minister in the house.

Mr. Nasserden: What astounds me is the lack of support for the ministers of the government.

Mr. Byrne: What about the vote last night?

Mr. Nasserden: What astounds me is the referred to by the Minister of Finance in his remarks in connection with the leadership of our party. The minister has been forecasting what is going to happen to the leadership of the Liberal party for some time, but he has been no more accurate in this direction than he has been in his budget forecasts. That is an interesting fact to remember.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I conclude by saying that this budget does nothing for the ordinary people of this country. It does not attack the problems of inflation and high prices. It does not provide for new homes to be built in Canada and does not assure us of continuing employment. It does nothing to promote trade or activities that are essential for the welfare of the nation. For these reasons I shall vote for the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I listened a moment ago to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) replying to the Conservative leader and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I found his arguments—hardly worth the name, to my mind—so unconvincing that I have reached the point where I am wondering if it is not a precise indication of the financial and economic situation of the country at the present time. In fact I wonder if the lack of argument of the minister is not an indication that the situation is even worse than he gave us to understand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister could have cut various government expenditures without any Canadian citizen being hurt by it. To my mind, he would have been justified in cutting House of Commons expenditures by lowering the number of hon. members. Right at this moment, for instance, in the row where I am seated, there are but two members out of a possible number of 28. In the first row, there is just the minister and someone who is going to speak to him, which is again a total of 2 members out of a possible 28. In the third row, still on the Liberal side, I can see only 2 members out of 28 who should be in the house. In the fourth row, I do not see any, out a possible number of 28, and finally, in the fifth row, I see two members behind the curtain, and a third coming in.

Mr. Speaker, when it is realized there are not even ten Liberal members present to consider the budget speech, I wonder if a sizeable cut-back of expenditures—

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, the members of the house went out when the member for Lapointe rose.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if a good way to reduce expenditures would not be precisely to cut-back on the emoluments given the members who are not present, in the house now.

I see in the galleries people who can judge by themselves that all those absent Liberal members are far from doing their duty.

As a matter of fact, why have unnecessary expenditures not been reduced, why have the expenses of those absent not been cut, those who usually occupy those empty seats? Why have some of those expenses not been cut?

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, the members left when the hon. member for Lapointe rose to speak.

Mr. Grégoire: If those expenses were cut, Mr. Speaker, it would help a great deal to reduce the estimates.

When one examines the budget, one finds that it clearly reflects the situation in Canada at present. The federal government is now increasing the tax on tobacco and spirits, apart from imposing a special surtax on the basic personal income tax.

Hardly a year ago, the Quebec government did exactly the same thing. Within a year, as a matter of fact, ten of eleven months later, the federal government increases the tax on spirits and cigarettes. In addition, it increases the personal income tax, which means that we, Canadian citizens, are the only ones in the world to have two governments entitled to levy taxes from us.

In the last two years, the Quebec government has increased the sales tax by 2 per cent; the federal government has increased it by 1 per cent. The Quebec government increased the personal income tax; the government in Ottawa did the same. The Quebec government increased the tax on certain goods, and so did Ottawa. We are the only people in the world who accept and tolerate that two different governments should have the right to tax us, very often, for the same purposes.

Our money is being grabbed from both sides. When two governments levy taxes, this entails expenditures that could be avoided if one government only managed our affairs. Let me give you a few examples, Mr. Speaker.

The federal government pays family allowances to children under 16 years of age; so does the Quebec government. Has anyone considered for a moment that this means that civil servants in Ottawa make a survey of all the children under 16, others keep the records up to date, prepare the family allowance cheques, stamp and mail them?

All this is happening in Ottawa, while other civil servants in Quebec do exactly the same thing in respect to family allowance cheques for children in Quebec. This duplicates the expenditures, since both Ottawa and Quebec have to set up a classification system, with a list of names of all children with respect to family allowances. Both governments have to have their own personnel—which makes it twice as large—to send out family allowance cheques. In addition, two series of cheques and envelopes have to be used; Ottawa pays the postage once, and Quebec a second time. For postage costs only, the federal government expenditure for family allowances amounts to $2.2 million per year. Then, postage has to be paid again in Quebec to mail other family allowance cheques concerning the same children.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, how stupid it is to have a system under which citizens are governed by two separate administrations both doing the same thing at twice the cost, when one expense would be sufficient, just to send out family allowance cheques? Would it not be better to have only one administrative service, using only one envelope for both cheques?

The same thing goes for the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Latulippe: How much does it cost to collect taxes?

Mr. Grégoire: Is the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac asking me how much it costs to collect taxes? We are the only people in the world with the luxury of two income tax collecting agencies, one in Ottawa and one in Quebec city.

• (3:30 p.m.)

In both places, there are inspectors, auditors, office workers, secretaries and the citizen himself is obliged to fill out two different tax returns: one in Ottawa, and one in Quebec, using exactly the same forms. He sends one return with one amount to Ottawa, and another amount to Quebec with another return. In Ottawa, auditors check to see if the tax return—Mr. Speaker, I hear some muffled noises coming from outside—

Mr. Churchill: Is it a coup d'état?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I see that objections against the situation I put forward, are raised, and rightly so—

An hon. Member: Grégoire has come.

Mr. Grégoire: Then, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chrétien: It is the voice of God—

Mr. Grégoire: I should perhaps move the adjournment, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore, I said that in Ottawa—

An hon. Member: We are going to adjourn—

Mr. Grégoire: Should I move the adjournment of the house, Mr. Speaker, or carry on? In fact, with such a small number of members in the house—

Some hon. Members: It is the children, perhaps the balloons—

Mr. Lewis: It is the only thing that can keep him quiet.

Mr. Grégoire: The snow perhaps! Ah, the hon. Minister of Finance is paying for the fireworks on parliament hill in an attempt to make the people forget about his disastrous budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grégoire: It is somewhat the same method which was used by the Roman emperor Nero who, in an attempt to make his people forget about the great fire of Rome, gave them bread and circuses.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that in Ottawa and in Quebec there are two income tax collection systems—

Mr. Lewis: Louder.

Mr. Grégoire: And that—do you want me to move the adjournment—we are the only ones in the world to accept such a situation.

Mr. Chrétien: It is the voice of God, you had better keep quiet.

Mr. Grégoire: Administrative duplication, duplication of funds to do exactly the same thing can be found also in other fields. For instance, the administration of the winter work program. The Quebec government has set up that department to check and see if the works have been carried out, if the men have been paid at least those who are supposed to work—and when Quebec has finished its inspection, the file for each municipality is sent to Ottawa where exactly the same inspection starts all over again for the same purposes. Therefore, we always pay twice. We pay twice more taxes because we have to pay for two administrative services which overlap.

Mr. Speaker, our country is the only one in the world with two ministers of health, one in Quebec and one in Ottawa; two ministers of justice, one in Quebec and one in Ottawa, who get in each other's way. In fact when Quebec citizens make representations to the federal Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) requesting an investigation into fraudulent bankruptcies for instance, the minister replies: That does not come under my jurisdiction only, it is partly the responsibility of the Quebec minister of justice. On the other hand, when Quebec citizens make representations to the provincial minister of justice, he also replies that he cannot do anything because that comes also under the jurisdiction of the federal Minister of Justice. Because there are two of them, they get in each other's way, and we are paying twice.

We are also the only ones to have two ministers of finance, two ministers of national revenue and to always have to pay in two places for exactly the same thing. We are the only country in the world to have two different civil services to do exactly the same thing. Hospital insurance is shared fifty-fifty by Ottawa and Quebec. On account of that, the government in Ottawa must provide a whole staff to operate this service and Quebec has to hire a different one to do exactly the same work on behalf of the Quebec government. We are always paying twice.

The Minister of Finance finds that the civil service is increasing. How is he going to solve the problem? Well, the best way to do it, and without disturbing in any way the services, is to put an immediate stop to the dual administration and to give back to Quebec what comes under provincial jurisdiction, under the British North America Act. We have two administration levels which cost us twice the amount required, two levels of government which cause delays precisely because they do not agree all the time and are working at odds with one another.

That is why many here have come to the conclusion that we are two nations.

Since decisions are taken in two different places, responsibilities overlap and that doubles the administration costs.

Some people say that we are two nations. So we adopt two flags, the maple leaf flag and the Union Jack. We also adopt two national anthems: O Canada and God Save the Queen, because it is said we are two nations and, in that case, two national anthems are called for.

Last Saturday at the beginning of the Grey cup game, I heard on the C.B.C. French network the announcer say: And now here is our national anthem. And what did I hear? God Save the Queen, our national anthem? That was one nation's anthem. This was happening in Ottawa, in an English-speaking province. It was said that our national anthem was God Save the Queen, right on television in the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson). That was said to be the national anthem of one of the two founding peoples. They talk about two peoples and they talk of national unity. How can they speak of national unity while claiming, in one and the same breath, that there are two founding nations? When there are two nations it is not a question of national unity but of international unity. If it is international unity, there are perforce two states. It is high time to recognize these facts Mr. Speaker.

Since we are on the budget, I should like to raise a point because I think that there are unnecessary expenditures in that area which the government could cut back slightly to achieve better results.

I should like to speak of the economic aspect of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river which the government could make possible. A pamphlet has just been published in Montreal. the author teaches at the École des Hautes Études Commerciales in Montreal; he is Mr. Michel Brochu, a geographer holding doctorates in literature and natural sciences from the University of Paris. Professor Michel Brochu has studied this problem and, I believe, it is time for the Canadian government, which is supposed to have jurisdiction over the St. Lawrence to accept its responsibilities and do something on that score.

In his pamphlet on winter navigation on the St. Lawrence Professor Brochu mentions that the methods now being used by the icebreakers on the St. Lawrence, on the orders of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) are preposterous and unrealistic.

Professor Brochu says this in his booklet:

In fact, the captains of the ships can reach Montreal against their better judgment and at their own risk without the guaranteed assistance of the icebreakers. The port of Montreal remains open with guaranteed services to the ships who succeed in crossing the blockade.

As far as the government of Canada is concerned, its attitude is the following: let the St. Lawrence freeze completely between Montreal and Lake St. Peter and wait for those strange winter floods to happen and effect the southern suburbs of Montreal and which are precisely brought on by the ice cover which is allowed to form and deepen and under which millions of crystals of ice under pressure following the Lachine rapids accumulate and block the flow of water.

That is when the icebreakers, which are supposed to help prevent and control floods in the Montreal area, are dispatched from far away, from their winter quarters in Sorel or Trois-Rivières, to fight this disaster. However, before they can get near Montreal, they have to make their way through thick ice, tens of miles long; more often than not, when they arrive in Montreal, the floods have already ebbed and the damage has been done.

• (3:40 p.m.)

However, what Department of Transport officials are very careful not to divulge—and those experts cannot fail to know it—is that a radical solution to the flood problem in the communities south of Montreal would be, in fact, to tackle the problem, right from the start and all winter long, that is to handle the cause of the floods, the ice which covers the St. Lawrence right across, between Montreal and Trois-Rivières. The means to do it is self-evident, given a single moment's thought: Ice must simply be prevented from forming in the navigable channel by having an ice-breaker go upstream and downstream every day as soon as the ice starts to form.

The cause being eliminated, there would no longer be any flood, but the implacable and ineluctable consequence of such a logical step would be that ocean-going vessels could go through the seaway all through the winter.

The most astonishing thing is that the people and the main newspapers of Montreal could have believed such a tale (the flood story). None of them saw through that subterfuge which costs Montreal millions of dollars every year.

The situation, Mr. Speaker, is well described. Ice is allowed to accumulate and when the floods begin. the icebreakers docked in Trois-Rivières or Sorel are told: Go and do your job. More icebreakers must then be sent out because the ice is thicker; it takes them more time to reach the flooded areas and, by the time they get there, millions of dollars of damage have been caused. If the icebreakers were allowed to circulate before the ice thickens or before a layer of ice forms, the channel would always be open and there would never be any danger of flood.

Moreover, the government would spend less money because, even if the icebreakers are moored at Sorel or at Trois-Rivières, even if they remain in their home port, the engines must be kept running to keep the ships warm. The personnel and the sailors who work on them are paid just the same; they must still be provided with room and board. Therefore the expenses are the same as if the icebreakers were making regular trips between Montreal and Trois-Rivières.

Just a month ago, that is on November 7 last, the newspaper La Presse published an editorial in which Mr. Guy Cormier had the following to say and I quote:

Even if the government refuses to recognize officially that icebreakers have another mission apart from flood control, a realistic attitude would still require a logical organization of that control, that is by ordering ice-breakers to prevent the piling up of a heavy sheet of ice, the remote cause of destructive floods. It would be sufficient for an ice-breaker to sail downstream as soon as the ice is set.

As Mr. Brochu wrote: "The implacable and inescapable consequence of that action would be that the way would be clear to ocean liners throughout winter".

How long will the government persist in keeping up appearances that fool no one, after all?

Mr. Speaker, that is taken from an editorial in La Presse. There was also an item on the editorial page of Le Devoir of November 6, 1967, practically along the same lines.

Winter navigation on the St. Lawrence would cost less than the present method of preventing flooding, because 5 or 7 ice-breakers would not be needed then to break the ice in case of flooding. In fact, three or four in constant use would be enough to prevent the ice from setting. It would cost less to the government and would allow all-year navigation up to the port of Montreal. It would also mean tremendous economic development all year long to the Montreal, Sorel, Trois-Rivières and Quebec city areas.

I wonder why people do not react to the facts Professor Brochu of the École des hautes études commerciales explains. In his book, he seems to find an explanation for all this, and I quote a paragraph to prove it:

To say the least, it is surprising that none of the members of the Montreal area has taken up the cudgels for the cause of winter navigation up to the Montreal harbour.

None of the members for the Montreal region have done so; that is astonishing. For instance, the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) who comes from that area could become one of the champions of that cause. He could study the problem and ask the government to go into it deeply. Then, the—

The government would realize that the opening of the St. Lawrence to winter shipping is no problem, that the whole thing is settled, and that all that is needed is good will from the Department of Transport authorities.

Another member from the Montreal area who should take this matter at heart is the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Noël). The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Comtois), whose riding is quite close to Montreal should take interest in this also. The members from the Montreal area should raise the matter in caucus, as this is where they are supposed to do their work, and submit the question to the Minister of Transport and the proper authorities. But there is no reaction on this subject, and this is what bewilders me. Why do they not do something? Why is there not more insistence from the Montreal area members in favour of opening the seaway to winter traffic as far as Montreal?

This would allow the icebreakers to be used instead of being left at the dock. One of these at least could be freed. It could then be used to open navigation on the Saguenay.

This is what professor Brochu has to say on the subject:

The problem is as simple as the solution. We need only remember that ice forms on the Saguenay fjord from the island of St. Louis, 10 miles from the mouth of the river, to the first rapids upstream.

In other words, up to about Arvida.

Three vital ports for the economy of the province of Quebec are thus paralysed by ice: Port Alfred (which imports bauxite and exports aluminum), Grande-Baie (export point for pulp and paper) and Chicoutimi (coastal shipping point). Therefore, in order to open the Saguenay to winter navigation, it would be enough, as for the section between Trois-Rivières and Montreal, to break the new ice that is forming and coming from the Saguenay at the beginning of winter, and repeat the operation about once a week; this fjord would then be easily navigable all winter.

The ice would be carried away very easily by the strong tides which occur twice daily, with the help of the west and northwest winds which blow most of the winter. Another asset is the almost complete absence of ice at the mouth of the Saguenay and off-shore during most of the winter.

Opening the mouth of the Saguenay to 1967 winter shipping is not a reckless nor a daring project.

It is purely a question of wanting to and of using very simple techniques, and it is surprising that the very active élite in the Lac St. Jean area has not yet tackled this question which could be solved immediately, and without doubt successfully, and which will bring in tens of millions of dollars in annual income.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the people of the Saguenay-Lac Saint Jean area have taken an interest in this problem and are asking for winter shipping on the Saguenay all the more because, according to Professor Brochu, it is not a reckless nor a daring project. It is simply a question of wanting to and of using very simple techniques.

The government could do two things: it could save by reducing our present needless spending and then, make rational use of the icebreakers which are idle between Trois-Rivières and Montreal, so that one of them could be free to go up the Saguenay. It would not cost more and the whole economy of the area would develop.

• (3:50 p.m.)

But why is it not done? Why refuse Quebec something that would not cost a cent more, since the men are there, paid and fed? The icebreakers are there, their motors running, in short everything is ready. The only thing we lack is the decision on the part of the Department of Transport to really allow for that winter navigation in the St. Lawrence.

I admit there may well be other areas in this country that would be unhappy, but then, let us make other plans in order to assist them in case they should suffer from winter navigation in the St. Lawrence. But the disadvantages would be quite trivial compared with the advantages for the economy of the entire central area of the country.

Once the winter navigation is made possible up to Montreal, Mr. Speaker, progress would not stop there. There would always be some technicians and scientists who would continue to try to find a method in order to extend winter navigation on the St. Lawrence and that is progress.

Therefore, I submit that point to the Minister of Finance and I hope that the Minister of Transport will take it under serious consideration. Unfortunately, there is not so many members from the Montreal area on whom I can rely for support in connection with that cause. I see the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) and the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Noël) and I ask them to exert pressure to make possible winter navigation on the St. Lawrence. Unfortunately, the others are not here; I also see the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), who could do his share in this respect.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope I have outlined the problem clearly and that everybody will understand now that as regards technology, finance, feasibility, nothing stands in the way of such an endeavour. All that remains now is the decision on the part of the Department of Transport, which will entail no extra expenditures.

[English]

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by paying my personal tribute to my colleague the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) who spoke last night in this house and who, in my experience has been the strongest proponent of national unity both inside and outside the house, ever since I have had the honour to know him. I admire him for it and I believe every Canadian who has at heart one Canada can, in sincerity, honour him and those like him for their work in this direction.

As I believe hon. members know, I am not very politically oriented in this house, but I cannot let go unchallenged the remarks of the last speaker from the opposition who made reference to the support given by the members of my party to our leaders in this house. I should merely like to draw his attention to the fact that when his own leader spoke, upon introducing his motion of non-confidence in the government the other day, the first time he had made a major speech in this house, I took a personal count. I will not trust my figures, but will merely point out that the newspapers drew attention to the fact that there were never more than 45 of his own members sitting in the house at the time he made this speech. I think these figures speak for themselves, and I will not dwell on this any longer.

Mr. Alkenbrack: How many are there over on your side now?

Mr. Groos: There are not very many over here while I am speaking, but it is pretty hard to compete with Santa Claus, who is arriving outside for the children's party.

I should like to refer to the speech made last night by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) when he outlined in general terms the cut-backs and delays the government is proposing for the next financial year. I believe we all know that these will have to be made for the good of the country, because of the difficult financial conditions which exist in the country and in the world today, not all of which are of our own Canadian making. I accept that, although my riding will be affected as much as any other. I feel sure our people in Victoria will generally accept the cut-backs in the national interest and I will support the government in the measures they are taking.

There is one cut-back, however, which I simply deplore. It positively sickens me personally, at heart, to think that no money can be found for any federal superannuants, no matter how dire their circumstances may be. I must say here and now that I implore the minister and the government to take another look at their decision not to make any increase in the payments to superannuants next year. Surely there must be some way to help, if not all, at least those in most dire need. Let us at least do something for this group.

Last night I went to the parliamentary library to look up the steps which had been taken during the days when another government was having difficulty making its financial ends meet. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, the mixture of books I have before me. In reading through the parliamentary debates of 1932 I noticed what steps had been taken.

So far as I can make out the civil servants of those days—and they comprise most of the superannuants of today—were not given a salary cut in those terms but, by the Salary Reduction Act, were required to make what was called at that time "a contribution to the welfare of Canada" of 10 per cent of their salaries across the board. It was reduced to 5 per cent for those who earned less than $1,200 a year. At the same time satutory increases were frozen. When this legislation was brought forward in 1932 the government of the day called that a year of self denial. This was the way they handled the situation. I found that the so-called year of self denial was extended from 1932 to 1933 and then to 1934. It was not until the Liberal government returned to office that the full pay cuts were restored.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a civil servant in those days whose pay was, for example, $1,200 a year and who had a $60 statutory increase coming to him in the normal course of events took a cut of $180 a year during these years. In other words the cut was 15 per cent and he accepted it. This little gimmick produced just over $8 million for the federal treasury, at the expense of the members of the civil service. I should like to remind hon. members that at that time, 1932, the income tax for a person earning $10,000 a year in Canada was $232.

In 1931, which is the closest year for which I can obtain this sort of statistic, the figures show there were 11,000 people in this country earning between $5,000 and $10,000, for a total of $76.75 million earnings, and a further 3,000 earning more than $10,000 for an additional total of $38 million earnings.

I should have thought that a more equitable method of raising an additional $8 million would have been to put a 10 per cent surcharge on those salaries. This would have hurt far less and would have produced almost $11.25 million, over $3 million more than was raised from the poor civil servants. I should like to go further and point out that the federal superannuants of today, after having suffered three years of cut-backs which most assuredly left them with no opportunity to save for their old age, were then faced during world war II with the freezing of their salaries. It is those persons who retired shortly after world war II for whom I plead today, with all the energy I possess. They should not have to beg and I am begging for them now.

I should like to make some positive contribution to this debate so, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me I shall continue to speak about the federal superannuants of today.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. member has not done so up to this point, Mr. Speaker. He has been fighting the 1935 election. I think he should get up to date and be contemporary.

Mr. Groos: As I continue, I believe the hon. member for Carleton will be able to understand that what I am trying to point out is that these people who have suffered, as they did, are entitled to our sympathy today in this house. I am very conscious of and sympathetic to the income problems of persons retired from the federal civil service and from the armed forces of Canada. I believe most members of this house know that I and others have been seeking by every means within our power to alleviate their distress. I am attempting again to explain my position and perhaps help the government come to grips with the problem by providing one possible solution.

In general, to run over the background, of course the pensioners' problem arises from the undoubted fact that over the years inflation has gnawed away at the real value of pension dollars earned and paid for while in the government service, and the pensioner in every case now faces the fact that his pension purchases less than it did when he first retired. In addition to this, he has the aggravating knowledge that his former position in the government service now pays a very considerably higher wage than it did while he held the position. Then, too, because of his age, there is a diminishing probability of his being able to obtain another position in today's labour market. Then there is the added possibility that all three conditions I have mentioned will continue.

• (4:00 p.m.)

On the other side of the ledger, the government pensioner does have the prospect of receiving, along with all other Canadians, the old age security pension, now slowly dropping in age limit to 65 and payable at the rate of $75 a month. He knows however that he has paid his share of the cost of his pension. At the personal level, generally the government pensioner firmly believes that the government superannuation fund is growing at a rate faster than it is being used up, and therefore it would cost the country nothing if his pension were to be increased, since it could be paid for out of the growing amount in the superannuation fund.

He knows, too, that the British government has recognized its obligation to its retired civil servants and pensioners and has instituted a method of granting them increases at regular intervals as the purchasing power of the pound falls and as the cost of living goes up. Similar arrangements are in effect in the United States, and in addition I understand that retired members of their armed forces have pensions based on the up to date pay of the rank they held when they retired. In Canada, in 1958, the government granted increases to certain federal superannuates who retired before December, 1952.

As I have said before, I have every sympathy with Canadian government pensioners and I support their cause wholeheartedly. My investigations, however, have shown me that things are not quite as they seem. First of all, while it is true that the federal superannuation fund is in fact growing, since its annual income is greater than its annual expenditures this can be quickly explained. The pension fund must grow, with the ever-increasing number of contributors, if it is to be self-supporting and be able to pay out pensions when they eventually become due. To deal with this right away, I should like to point out that I have introduced a measure in the house suggesting that the government set up a special commission to inquire into the status of the federal superannuation fund, and that on the commission there should be at least two full-time representatives of the federal superannuates national association.

I have suggested this commission because I think we should get at the truth of the matter. It should be proved or disproved once and for all, impartially, whether or not the government is making money out of the federal superannuation fund, and all persons concerned should be informed and convinced of the true state of affairs. This includes the government. Furthermore—and this is equally important to my mind—I have asked that this commission be empowered to make recommendations as to possible improvements in the organization and administration of the federal superannuation fund.

I have asked this because it is my firm belief that the federal superannuation fund as it is presently set up is not capable of coping with the problems of the twentieth century and, in particular, with the problems of inflation which are world wide these days. I think the fund could be set up in such a way that it could better deal with this state of affairs, and latter I will explain one alternative that occurs to me.

Looking at the situation from the government's point of view, I appreciate the fact that they have been earnestly seeking a solution. I discover first of all, on investigation, that some departments of the government are responsible for their own pensioners and the cost of any increases in pensions must come from that department's annual vote. This is a complication. Second, having pursued this matter in some detail I have the unshakeable feeling that the government is somewhat reluctant to tie itself down to what I think is one fair solution—and the one recommended most frequently by the pensioners—namely a regular schedule of periodically reviewing pensions. The reluctance, if I can call it that, is perhaps because the government feels it would be stepping into an area the cost dimensions of which would be almost impossible to delineate and there would be, furthermore, built-in inflationary overtones. In simple terms the government may be of the opinion that it would be faced with future costs of unknown and possibly unmanageable proportions. In fairness to the government, I think it should be pointed out here that they have recently instituted the Canada Pension Plan, which will at least grant pensions to almost all wage earners. This plan does have built-in cost of living factor, but this does not help the present federal superannuate.

I have a plan which I believe the government should study. I believe it has merit, and it could be adopted very quickly both by the government and other employers if they feel so inclined. Over a fairly short number of years it would delineate the problem and employers, whether they be the government or others, would then be faced with costs both easy to calculate and, I think, perfectly manageable.

My plan, very roughly, calls first of all for the establishment of what I will call a government mutual investment fund, operated perhaps by a consortium of investment companies. Under my plan, the employee still in the government service would have far more control over his pension fund than he does at the moment. He now has none at all. He would then be entitled to decide for himself, at regular intervals, in what proportion his pension fund contributions are to be divided between the pension fund as it now operates—where his contributions and the matching government contributions grow at a fixed percentage rate—and the government mutual investment fund. In this computer age it should be a comparatively simple matter, say at the end of every month, to give the government employee a statement as to the value of his pension account. Then, as I have said before, he should be able to adjust the proportions almost at will to suit his needs or even his whims.

The purpose of the government mutual investment fund would be to permit the government employee to share in the growth of the country through our industries and the development of our natural resources. The possibilities of growth in such a government mutual investment fund should go a long way toward keeping in step with inflation and the rise in the cost of living. It might even surpass it. In fact, the history of the growth of well-managed investment funds shows this to be likely. The cautious federal employee will keep all or most of his pension fund invested as at present. If he does this, he should know it will be at the risk of finding himself in exactly the same position as the federal superannuate does at the moment. The more venturesome federal employee will invest his funds more in the government mutual investment fund, and he should reap any benefits. As a result, he may well find his pension capital considerably greater than it would otherwise have been when he comes to retirement.

To pause for a moment in developing my proposition, I would point out that what happens today is that the government employee going to pension has, in effect, a government annuity purchased for him on the day of his retirement. It is a fixed amount, based in the main on his contributions and his age, and there are certain provisions for survivor benefits. Then, too, from time to time the government has to inject extra money into the fund to take care of salary increases beyond those due to normal promotion. I know this is an oversimplification and I apologize to the house for it, but I think it best describes the true situation. It is inflexible, and that is another fault I find with the present system.

Having said this, I will now proceed to my next suggestion. I believe that when a person retires from the federal civil service, the way these pension moneys are paid out should be more flexible than is now the case. I suggest that not everyone needs or wants to draw his full pension right away. If not, I do not think he should be forced to do so. Furthermore, I believe some persons may require a certain amount of capital when they retire. If so, I think they should be entitled to get it out of their pension fund. Why not? It's their money.

I believe the federal superannuate should, if he so desires, be permitted to leave all or a part of his money invested in the superannuation funds, fixed or mutual, just as long as he wants to, and if he dies while it is still so invested it should then form a part of his estate.

I can see the plan I have outlined will not be an easy one for the government to accept, for a number of reasons. To begin with, it is still in the idea form, but in addition I can see that the Minister of Finance will be reluctant to allow the federal superannuation fund, which now contributes fairly large amounts to the government coffers, to slip from his grasp, since if this happened he would have to borrow equivalent moneys elsewhere to replace those amounts put into the government mutual investment fund. Furthermore the administration of the superannuation and the government mutual investment funds in the way I have suggested would be complicated and would require special equipment and personnel.

I feel sure, however, that none of these difficulties is insurmountable. The idea could be developed by persons with more expertise in these matters than I posses. The funds lost to the Minister of Finance can be raised for the government by other means over a suitable period of time, and the increased cost of administration can be calculated and perhaps allowed for as an operating cost chargeable to the fund.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I think the benefits from such a scheme as I have outlined would be several. First of all, most of these federal employees now "in the stream" would be able very quickly to establish control over their own pension funds. Once this is done, they would have little cause for complaint in the future if they found themselves in the income cost squeeze. Their pension income, quite largely, would have been determined by themselves. Of equal importance, however, is the fact that the government will equally quickly face a problem of known and manageable proportions in that, having removed from their direct responsibility most of the federal employees now in the government employment and those in the future, they would be left, in the main, only with those already retired. I think this is the point at which we want to arrive. The government can calculate exactly the cost of improving the financial position of this group. I feel most strongly that the government has a moral obligation to do this, at least to the point of re-establishing the pensioners' real purchasing power to the level where it was when they retired.

The government should give the lead to other employers in this respect. In fact some companies have already surpassed the government in accepting a continuing responsibility for their retired employees.

There are unquestionably other methods by which the federal superannuation fund could be improved. If the special committee which I have suggested is set up, it should be able to consider them all and choose the best one.

My plan is not entirely new, but I have been espousing it in various ways for some time and this is the first time that I have spoken fully on it in the house. However, I see signs of similar schemes in the United States of America. I notice that in the Wall Street Journal of November 28, at page 32, there is an article written by W. M. Carley which I should like to quote in part. It reads as follows:

> Major insurance companies are getting set to invade the multi-billion dollar mutual fund business.
>
> The big insurers already have dipped into common stock investments by offering variable annuity plans in which the payments to pensioners rise and fall with the market value of the common stocks in the plan's portfolio. Most of these plans, however, are available only on a group basis.
>
> Now, the insurers are preparing to plunge full tilt into selling mutual funds outright.

Further on, the article continues:

> Conventional life insurance premums are currently invested mainly in bonds and mortgages, giving the insurance company only a fixed dollar return, the value of which can be eaten away over the years by inflation. Investments in common stocks, in contrast, provide a hedge against inflation by giving the insurance companies a chance to benefit from rising market values.

Then it goes on to say:

> "Practically every major insurance company will be in the mutual fund business soon", a senior vice president for one company says. "When one goes in, the others are forced by competitive pressures to follow."
>
> Many insurance companies already have started to sell variable annuity policies, a middle road between conventional life policies and mutual funds. Like the funds, payouts from variable annuities may fluctuate because part of their value is based on investment in common stocks. But, as with insurance policies, the payout can be guaranteed to the holder's death.

I see my time is nearly up. I put forward my suggestion in all sincerity and earnestness. I know there are many others on both sides of the house who share the same concern for the plight of the federal superannuation pensioners. I ask the minister to look into my suggestion. I do not claim it has any particular merit, nor is it particularly original, but I put it forward as one means whereby the government may be able to resolve the present unhappy situation, and I urge the minister most sincerely to consider it.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have almost begun to regret that I have altered my usual procedure in the budget debate, and have asked two of my colleagues to lead off, after which I would follow them. I knew of course that Friday afternoon would not be a very good time in which to speak, but I thought I was only going to deal with Mr. Scrooge. Now I find I will also have to compete with Santa Claus outside, so it is all rather difficult.

I listened with great interest both to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and to the reply of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), and I realized that these two gentlemen were in a very difficult position because traditionally they are supposed to be on opposite sides but it became very obvious they are on the same side.

The only positive statement of the Leader of the Opposition which struck my ear forcibly was when, toward the end of his speech, he very skilfully cut the ground from under his own feet and that of his whole party when he, quite rightly, accused the government of deliberately creating unemployment by following the policies which he and his colleagues have been insisting on almost ever since word of the budget came out.

There was another thing that I noticed in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition, and this was an omission. There was no mention whatever in his speech of his attitude toward the now famous report of the Carter commission on taxation. I can only assume from this that he has the same attitude as the government in this regard, as he seems to have in all other policies, and that he is prepared to attend the funeral of the Carter report which has been organized by the government at this time.

Speaking in a more serious vein, however, I think this is an appropriate time for me to pay a tribute to Mr. Kenneth Carter, a man who over the years has worked with his commission to produce what is acknowledged by taxation experts all over the world as the most comprehensive survey and the most equitable proposals for taxation that have yet appeared. I think it is regrettable that the only area from which Mr. Carter seems to get any commendation is the vast mass of the Canadian people who would benefit by the adoption of his proposals. The loud chorus of opposition which has been voiced by special business interests in the country, whose toes would be trodden upon, is in itself a commendation of that report. It was Professor Musgrave of Harvard who concluded his analysis of the report in the following words, which I paraphrase. He said that this is the most forward looking and equitable taxation program that has yet been produced in the world. He said that, as one who has been desperately trying for years to inch his own government in the same direction, he wishes Mr. Carter luck. Unfortunately his wish will not be fulfilled.

When I listened to the two ministers who presented the budget—

Mr. Sharp: Before the hon. member moves on to another subject, may I ask him whether he advocates all sections of the Carter commission report, or whether he does so in a qualified way?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am an advocate of all sections of the Carter commission report. There may be some that will tread on the toes of those who we think are especially associated with me, but by and large I think it is an excellent program which would be of benefit to the country.

Mr. Sharp: I have one more question. Is the hon. member in favour of taxing veterans disability pensions as income?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, certainly, if the recipient is within the taxation level at which he would be taxed. Of course he is not likely to reach it. I think the minister could count on one hand all the ones who would be in that position, because the government has not been as generous as all that.

When I listened to the two ministers presenting the budget—and I think that is a fair way of expressing it because it was presented in two parts, first the Minister of Finance presenting his side of the budget and then his alter ego, the Minister of National Revenue, presenting his side—the thought occurred to me that these two gentlemen presenting their plans for the economic direction of Canada were rather like two badly trained plumbers who have only been taught to turn on the main valve on one side and turn it off on the other side. So we have the Minister of Finance fiddling with the inflow valve while his alter ego gave a tremendous wrench to the outflow valve.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

It struck me that these two gentlemen should have had a more sophisticated method of approaching our economic problem. It made me wonder just what were the economic textbooks by which they guide their actions.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I found considerable entertainment in the performance of these two ministers. However, I think we have to face the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is in a very serious jam today; there is no question about it. For the moment, I am not going to deal with the question of whether he is there as a result of his own sins of omission or commission. In this situation in which he finds himself, he has two problems before him; one is the immediate problem of finding the money with which to finance the operations of the government and the other is, of course, the developments in the economy which have caused the immediate problem.

The first problem, Mr. Speaker, gave him two choices, theoretically at least; one of increasing revenues or the other of curtailing expenditures. It is interesting to see that, in fact, the minister opted for the second. No serious attempt was made by him to increase government revenues. We found out last night what was the inevitable result of having opted in this direction.

The minister has succeeded in raising, I think, just about $280 million more with the 5 per cent surtax, and $95 million in hoped for revenue as a result of the increase in the liquor and tobacco taxes. This is not going to solve the problem—will not come anywhere near solving the problem. On the other hand, he let us know quite plainly that he was not interested in examining or implementing any of the features of the report of Mr. Kenneth Carter. The Carter report goes into some detail as to the possibilities for revenue as a result of the adoption of even certain of its recommendations. It was estimated for instance that the imposition of a capital gains tax at the rate the commission advocated would have given some 10 per cent of the present revenue. That would have been the revenue for 1964. I presume that, pro-rata, it would have the same ratio in 1967. As I say, the yield would have been 10 per cent of the revenue from personal income taxes. If my arithmetic is right, that amounts to the sum of $214 milllion.

Mr. Sharp: For what year?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That was in 1964, and I presume it would be much more for 1967. Then, the estimate for the loss in revenue caused by the elimination of depletion allowances for oil companies and tax concessions for mining companies were estimed at $150 million in 1964. I think the minister will agree that the commission has the services of some expert research economists. If these depletion allowances and special tax concessions were done away with and the Carter commission's write-off provisions were included there would probably be about $124 million more income in 1967 from that source.

Mr. Sharp: For what year?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I beg your pardon?

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member usually will answer questions and I put this question to him knowing that he wants to be serious. I say, for what year, because we have examined these figures and there would be no early revenue from any of these sources.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I stand corrected by the minister, but I find it difficult to accept that there would not be any revenue this year.

Mr. Sharp: Or next year.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I find that difficult to believe. The minister would have to produce a more convincing argument before he could convince me of that.

Mr. Sharp: I shall do so.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Carter commission has also suggested that insurance companies should be taxed at the same level as other companies in the country. I think in 1964 this would have yielded some $75 million. Here we have a total of rather more than $400 million based on figures for 1964. The minister thinks that in 1968 he will have to go into the market for $750 million. I suggest his task would be made so much easier if that were reduced to the sum of $350 million.

I should like now to turn to the question of the minister's long range troubles, because they really are far more important to us than the troubles he is having at the present time. One of his troubles is compounded by the circumstances drawn to the attention of the house last night by my colleague the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman), that is the unbelievably large volume of debt that has to be redeemed in 1968. I am astounded that two successive governments should have committed themselves to the economic imbicility of having such vast amounts come due in the same year. This is the situation the minister has to face, so he has been receiving some opposition, or perhaps I should say experiencing some difficulties in selling his bonds. The result has been that the chartered banks this year, up to November 29, 1967, took an unprecedented volume of these bonds, some $800 million. I hope I am not too cynical when I suggest there might perhaps be some connection between that action on the part of the chartered banks and their action in raising their prime rate.

I drew this action to the minister's attention, and he promised me he was going to investigate. If the investigation proved my allegations were right, he was going to take action with regard to one little racket on exchange charges. I feel there must perhaps be some connection between the silence of the minister and the fact that the other day I asked him if he was asking the chartered banks to exercise the sort of restraint he was asking other factors in the economy to exercise. He told me yes. Later, however, I heard him suggest during an interview that what he had reference to was the action of the Bank of Canada in persuading banks to exercise restraint in the amount they would pay for deposits. He has not yet answered whether or not he pointed out to the chartered banks that really this increase in the prime rate was totally unjustified, particularly since it took place at the very time the banks were reporting high dividends. The profits are very handsome. The Toronto-Dominion Bank makes a handsome profit and says that their profits rose to a record of $12,284,720 from $10,892,000 the year before. There seems to be some connection between there not being any reply by the minister or the Bank of Canada, and the fact the government is obliged to the chartered banks for helping them to recover from their own lack of care by having so many bonds mature in the same year.

The minister has I think a more fundamental problem in coping with this situation in the economy than trying to cope with the particular financial jam in which he finds himself. This problem is outlined in a general way by referring to the continuing rise in prices, the continuing rising unemployment figures and high interest rates. As I said, we have dealt with the matching of government revenues and government expenditures. I think he has something much more fundamental to deal with than merely trying to find enough money to carry on the operations of government. He has perhaps a very difficult situation to face because almost every way he turns he finds a lion in his path. He finds his hands tied wherever he wants to move.

One of the most glaring examples of this is the fact he has committed the government of Canada to two different policies, to be carried out simultaneously, that are in fact contradictory. Not long ago we saw the Bank of Canada attempting to cope with this problem of a fixed exchange rate plus an agreement with the United States to maintain reserves below a certain maximum level.

• (4:30 p.m.)

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker,—and I am sure the minister does,—it was necessary for the Bank of Canada to move into the market to keep the Canadian dollar down to the pegged level, and in the process they were bound to add to their holding of United States dollars, bringing that holding very close to the ceiling.

I think these two contradictory policies are the result of a curious preoccupation which the government of Canada and many others in Canada seem to have had for some years past, and that is the provision of capital for the development of our country. We are told—to my mind told ad nauseam—about the necessity for continually attracting new capital into Canada in order to proceed with the development of this country.

When the minister was in New York—this was the time you remember, Mr. Speaker, when he took time off to pray for stability in the United States economy—the minister also did something that was a little more practical; he tried to persuade the owners of United States capital that Canada was a very safe and sane place in which to invest, and the minister hoped that the United States would invest.

What I am interested in, Mr. Speaker, is why we go to New York in the person of our minister to ask the United States to keep the tap turned on, but at the same time to keep the plug out of the tub at the other end. I have before me figures which appear in the quarterly review of the Canadian balance of international payments, produced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and in which this is reported:

> Canada's current account deficit with the United States in the second quarter of 1967 (excluding gold production available for export which is conventionally attributed to the United States account) was $544 million. Net capital movements between the two countries produced an inflow of $58 million as an influx of $239 million of long-term capital was in part offset by an outflow on short-term account of $181 million. In sum these transactions with the United States gave rise to net payments by Canada of $486 million, over twice the corresponding figure for the first quarter.

This seems to me to raise some doubts in one's mind as to whether or not the inflow of capital from the United States is really required for the financing of our development—indeed, whether it is playing any part in the financing of our development—or if it is in effect merely coping with the results of past inflows of capital from abroad.

In the Dominion Bureau of Statistics report there are figures showing that in 1966 the receipts in the form of interest and dividends, gold available for export, and all other transactions but not merchandise transactions, amounted to $1,151 million. I find that for the first two quarters of 1967 there are receipts of about $510 million, and apparently they are fairly evenly distributed through the year. I think it is not too rash to suggest that our total in 1967 will be not much over $1 billion.

On the other hand, the interest and dividend payments we have made in 1966 amount to $1,135 million, and all other transactions except merchandise transactions amount to $13,15 million. In 1967 for the first two quarters some $543 million was paid on interest and dividends, and all other transactions amounted to $847 million. Again to make a projection, one would assume that for the year very close to $1,700 million will be going out of the country in the form of capital, to which I suggest the report refers. An outflow on short term account of $181 million is mentioned in one place.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is the problem faced by the government. We keep our interest rates higher than those of the United States in order to attract the inflow of capital. We are repeatedly told that is why we have to keep our rates higher, while our bank rate has to be raised above that of the United States. Admittedly the bank rate has only a slight connection perhaps with the general level of interest rates. I notice that Mr. Coleman of the Royal Bank suggested that the reason they raised their prime rates resulted primarily from the boost in the Bank of Canada discount rate two weeks ago to 6 per cent from 5 per cent.

I also find, Mr. Speaker, that many of the world bank rates as at November 21, 1967 were very much lower than ours, and ours are very much lower than those in the United States. On November 19, 1967 the United States rate was set at 4.5 per cent, 1½ per cent below ours, which seems to me a very wide margin for the attraction of capital into this country, and for which I have some grave doubts about the degree of necessity the minister is forever presenting to us.

The other part of the minister's problem is to be found in the rising price index and rising unemployment levels. Although he told us today that he understood that this particular inflationary situation was not a demand inflationary situation—

Mr. Sharp: I said that consistently.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —on the other hand, everything that he and his revenue minister have done and presented to the house during the last two days must be predicated, if it is to have any sense at all, upon the analysis that this is a demand type of inflation. I say this because the measures he has introduced are designed to cut down on consumption, first of all by the surtax on personal income, which admittedly though not all that serious does have some effect, but even more importantly, by the deliberate invitation to rising unemployment.

How the minister can square that with his suggestion this afternoon that he understands this is a cost-push type of inflation is beyond me. Of course he finds it rather difficult to deal with a cost-push type of inflation; he is not prepared. He is not prepared to intervene in the economy to the degree obviously called for at the present time. He has taken no action that I know of—certainly it has not been reported to us and not reported in the papers—to persuade, if that is the right word, the Noranda corporation to reduce their price from the 4 per cent increase. He has made no attempt as far as I have been told to deal with the price increase proposed by INCO the other day.

In the Globe and Mail this morning there appeared a rather disturbing report from the United States concerning similar types of price increases that had taken place in that country. I read from an article which appeared in that paper this morning:

> The latest round of U.S. steel prices increases spread yesterday as three major manufacturers raised prices on a wide range of products.
>
> Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp. raised its base price for cold rolled sheet and strip and galvanized sheet by $5 a ton, and hot rolled sheet and strip by $4 a ton, effective Dec. 15.

Apparently the National Steel Corporation has done the same thing, in increasing its price by $5 per ton. Pittsburgh Steel Company also increased its price by $5 a ton. Other price increases were also mentioned. In polyethylene, natural general purpose resins were raised 1 cent a pound by Union Carbide Corporation, effective January 1. Chromic acid was raised $2 a hundred pounds by Allied Chemical Corporation, effective immediately. Electrical conduit was raised an average of 5 per cent by Thomas and Betts effective January 15. Nylon carpeting, folding cartons and vinyl flooring prices were also raised. They are all going up in conjunction with the rise in the basic price of steel in the United States.

I suggest that if the minister really believes and understands that the problem is that of a cost-push type of inflation, then he has to take some action in this field. He has to exercise the sovereign power of government to deal with this situation. He will tell me of course that constitutionally he is unable to proceed in this area. Technically he is correct, but I cannot believe that the Minister of Finance of Canada would be unable to persuade a provincial government to exercise its constitutional power to curb prices that may affect a whole range of commodities in that province and the rest of Canada. Certainly a well publicized appeal over the head of any recalcitrant provincial government to the people of that province will, I am sure, bring a quick response from the government of the province.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The minister is not prepared to take action like that because he does not consider that that is really the role of government. He has the typical, doctrinaire attitude of the Liberals, that the less government interferes in the economy, the better it is for all concerned. As a consequence the few are benefited by this lack of policy, and the vast bulk of the Canadian population must suffer.

Much has been said about the so-called requirements with respect to the inflow of United States capital. I wish to say a few words about something that is much more dangerous to our economy than the much touted danger of United States ownership of certain Canadian enterprises; I am speaking of the manner in which Canadian governments—this government and past governments—have tied us to the United States market, with respect to raw materials and semi-manufactured goods. That has obviously been done through a deliberate policy, because special concessions have been granted to enterprises which operate in the extractive industrial field.

I had this confirmed not long ago at a committee meeting when I asked the minister's colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), some questions about the export of nickel. At that time I had been getting complaints, since domestic users of nickel had had their supplies cut back to the level of the previous year or had had their supplies held at the previous year's level. At the same time, our nickel exports to the United States were climbing steadily. I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he had ever considered taking steps to ensure that domestic requirements were met first; he could do that perhaps by setting export quotas or by having the government stockpile sufficient nickel to meet domestic needs. I was told that, no, the government would not do that; but it would consider the drastic, revolutionary and dangerous step of possibly putting controls on the export of scrap nickel. As a matter of fact, I have not heard that that step has been taken so far.

I asked the minister another question. I asked him if he did not consider that the first responsibility of the government of Canada should be the development of the Canadian economy. I drew an equivocal answer from the minister. He said that that was one of the government's responsibilities, but that we had to pay attention to our export trade.

Mr. Sharp: That is correct.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Apparently, we have to pay more attention to our export trade than to our domestic economy. Let us ask ourselves some basic questions. What is the purpose of export trade, if it is not to build up the economy of the exporting country?

Mr. Sharp: Exactly.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): And when we have, as we have had in the past, vast allocations of imported capital developing raw materials and semi-manufactured materials for shipment to the United States industrial economy, I suggest that we are doing very little in the way of building our own economy and establishing Canada as a viable, national economic unit.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

I was interested to hear the Minister of Finance compare the situation that Canada finds itself in with the situations that face Great Britain and the United States. Indeed his comparison struck me as strange. Here we have a country which lacks the desperate problems of Great Britain. I am sure he will agree with me that, potentially, we are in a much more fortunate position than the people of Great Britain. Great Britain has no resources and has an inflated population. We have a small but adequate population, and we have probably a greater amount of natural resources per capita than any country of the world.

Mr. Sharp: And a Liberal government.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, that's the trouble; that's the one liability that we have. We have all this on the credit side, but on the debit side we have a Liberal government.

Mr. Knowles: He put us into the red.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The United States is fighting a desperate war in Asia, and it has internal turmoil. They have problems that this government need not face and it is impudent for the minister to suggest that the problems which this government faces are commensurate with the difficulties of Great Britain or the United States.

What sort of policy ought to be followed if we are to build Canada into the viable national economic unit that we all wish it to develop into? My first suggestion is this: The minister should free the exchange rate. He will find, and I can give him a long list of eminent economists in Canada who support this proposition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

An hon. Member: Let him finish.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the budget debate it is my lot, first, to examine the budget record of this government since it came to power and, second, to discuss the effects of this government's budgets on Canada and its people. Finally, while I recognize that the primary task of a responsible opposition is to oppose, I wish to outline some remedies that I think will in future prevent the mess that our country finds itself in today.

When members of this government sat on the opposition side they advanced economic argument after economic argument. Literally, they ground out speeches from their offices on the fourth floor. They said: When we come to power, we shall have all kinds of planning—indicative planning and classical planning. They also said: We shall introduce a kind of master, five year budget, the sort that we see in France. And we were told there would be interim, annual budgets to straighten out minor problems. But the five year budget would be introduced to gain the confidence of all segments of the Canadian population.

The fact is that we have no stability in this country; we have not had any budgetary planning; in fact, we have not had planning of any kind. Not only members of the N.D.P., who are enthusiastic about the mystique of planning, advocate planning. I say that the economic mess this country is in today has been brought about through lack of planning.

Mr. Caouette: Two budgets a year.

Mr. Grafftey: I think it is three.

Mr. Caouette: There will be one every week, next year.

Mr. Grafftey: The Prime Minister has lunged from one extreme to the other in his approaches to the problem. Let us consider the first minister of finance of this administration, Mr. Speaker. He was the daring innovator, the experimenter par excellence. He rushed in where angels feared to tread. In many ways one had to admire the guts of this emancipated gladiator in flight, who was often emancipated from any consideration of the lessons of the past.

What did that minister of finance do? He advanced; he withdrew; the rule book was thrown into the grandstand and he became the first of many promising rookies to be benched by a dumbfounded and confused coach. The coach finally lost confidence in this kind of "be damned with the past" philosophy, only to adopt an equally invalid approach.

• (4:50 p.m.)

At a time when modern economic, monetary and fiscal problems demanded imaginative and daring leadership he opted for an approach perhaps suited the problems of the 'fifties but woefully inadequate to meet the challenge of the 'sixties and 'seventies; he opted for the darling of the mandarin establishment, the present stand pat status technician, who likes nothing better than to keep the pot boiling with three budgets per annum.

As Alice in Wonderland observed: "It is dreadfully confusing to play croquet when there are no rules." To quote again from Lewis Carroll:

> The players all played at once without waiting for turns, quarrelling all the while and fighting for the hedgehogs, and in a very short time the queen was in a furious passion.

There is no doubt about the confusion and the furious passion created by this budget, and there is no doubt that this is a wonderland. We have sat here on the opposition benches in great wonderment, watching first of all the hedgehog activity of the government when it first took office, bringing out a budget and then withdrawing it. Now, we watch while another player wants to take three turns in a row and bring down three budgets in one year. While it may be wonderful, it is still dreadfully confusing and there are still no rules—and there will not be any rules until we have a change of government. Three factors have helped to create the mess this country is in today—the lack of short term or long term planning on the part of the government; its refusal as mentioned by our leader, to plan federal priorities and priorities with the provinces, and its appalling record of confusion in bringing down budgets.

What about the effect on Canada and on the Canadian people? What is the situation in our country today? By its ill-conceived fiscal economic and monetary management the government has destroyed its options of manoeuvre—options which are necessary if we are to face the present economic situation. This has been said before, but it must be said time and time again, because it is of the essence in the decision making functions of cabinet government.

Second, we are faced with rampant inflation involving an unprecedented increase in the cost of living. Interest rates are at record heights. Exports are dwindling. Though the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that employment figures are remaining stable, the increase in unemployment is entirely unacceptable. Let no ministers of the crown quote statistics to those Canadians who are looking for work. Statistics never took the place of a job or filled a lunch pail. Though the d.b.s. figures show employment as stable, unemployment is rising steadily. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) used to remind us of this when we were in office, and as long as this government lasts we intend to make it live up to its responsibilities in this key area.

This is not all. We are facing a national housing crisis which would be considered a disgrace in any civilized nation state; especially is it a disgrace in a nation state such as Canada which claims to have the second highest standard of living in the world.

Mr. Deachman: The angels are against you. That is a sneaky way to win a debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the force of the competition but perhaps the hon. member will continue.

Mr. Grafftey: I am not bothered by the noise. It is not nearly as confusing as the cackles I hear from time to time from hon. members opposite. I am perfectly at ease and I am willing to go on until five o'clock.

While this country is facing an unprecedented housing crisis as a result of which so many people are unable to find a decent home or keep a roof over the heads of their families, the minister is still on the point of calling another conference. Mr. Speaker, Canadians are recognizing that conferences never have taken the place of concrete action to bring about results, and never will.

Whether the government is talking about current estimates or projected estimates, when we are confronted with a sudden cut in those estimates of $1 billion I can only say: "What a way to run a country." Maybe that is a common, vernacular expression. But all I can say is: "What a way to run a country."—finding all of a sudden that one has to do this sort of thing.

I know that governments cannot always be run like business concerns, but can we not expect a modicum of business management in the day to day affairs of administration? What a disgrace. No wonder people are losing confidence in this government and public institutions, when they see such a spectacle, one which makes us the laughing-stock not only of our own people but of nations abroad.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Mr. Barnett: You sound like a Liberal, talking as you would have talked when you were parliamentary secretary to the minister of finance.

Mr. Grafftey: I realize that the hon. member, who has no real expectancy of gaining power, can be very free in his statements.

Budgets are intended to create stability and are expected to do so. The two ministers of finance who have spoken for the administration on the floor of the House of Commons have succeeded only in creating an atmosphere of confusion and havoc.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock and adjourn the debate?

Mr. Churchill: May I rise on a point of order and draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that during the debate this afternoon some of the speakers taking part have been interrupted by noises off-stage. There have been comments about noise. The noise was not in the chamber itself. It was due, and I think Hansard should record this, to the centenary Christmas celebration outside on behalf of the children.

Mr. Deachman: I concur with the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. The noise is from the concluding celebration of the greatest year in Canada's history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Under the poorest government that we have known.

• (5:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Monteith: Before we go into private members hour, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he proposes to continue with the budget debate next week, until its completion?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is my understanding.

An hon. Member: Throughout the whole week?

Mr. Sharp: Just until the termination of the legal time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

DIVORCE

MEASURE FOR DISSOLUTION AND ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGE

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-6, an act to provide in Canada for the dissolution and annulment of marriage—Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the government now has a bill on the order paper which in my opinion is broader than this one, and I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the house to withdraw this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Has the hon. member unanimous consent so that the order be discharged and the bill withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

NATURAL RESOURCES

EXPORT LICENCES FOR PRIMARY PRODUCTS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-10, concerning the exportation of the growth and produce of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to limit, license and regulate the exportation of our basic and primary resources. I am not going to argue that this bill is the answer to all our problems respecting the controlling of our natural resources, but it is an attempt to decide from a national point of view how best those natural resources can serve the Canadian public before we allow those resources to be exported prior to their use in secondary industry.

I am sure hon. members are aware of the arguments in Ontario years ago when it was decided, by an act of the provincial legislature, to limit the export of pulp products from Ontario. The result was the building of pulp and paper mills throughout the area in which pulp is produced. Many new communities were built and employment provided in secondary industry connected with pulp and paper. Wages in these areas are now higher than in many other primary product industries. This is an indication that, given a little direction, secondary industry can be developed. Obviously books cannot be printed in these areas. It is not possible to have all our newspapers printed in them, but it is possible to develop other secondary industry in these areas, and these secondary industries will support new towns in perpetuity.

For years I have been interested in discussions that have taken place concerning the export of our oil and petroleum products, which hold a great potential for secondary industry. No other basic resource has such potential for secondary industry as petroleum has. The number of things that can be produced from it is almost unlimited. It has been said that eventually the world's population could depend on petroleum products for all its clothing, food and other necessities of life. Under the provisions of this bill these by-products could be developed in Canada.

I have a particular interest in Timiskaming and other northern communities where a new industry has recently developed following upon the gold and silver mining industry. These areas contain a number of iron ore deposits, and the mines operating them are fairly large. There is one just south of Kirkland Lake, owned by the Jones and Loughlin Company, which is producing pellets that are exported to the United States. It is to be joined shortly with another large venture in the Timagami area, and this company will be selling its iron to the Stelco plant at Hamilton. In addition there are six or seven other areas that contain large iron ore deposits, and eventually the Belcher island deposits will also become economic to work.

The Canadian people really own these natural resources and they are the ones who should get the benefit from this great wealth and its great potential. They should be able to develop secondary industry from these resources, and these secondary industries could provide more employment than the actual mines provide.

If it were decided that this ore could not leave northern Ontario in its natural state, this would mean the establishment of facilities to produce pig iron. It is generally conceded by people in the iron industry that the expenditure involved in producing pig iron is so great that it is economic to go further and produce steel. If that were to happen, secondary industry producing fabricated products would become inevitable, and this in turn would lead to ancillary industries. This would mean that instead of a mine providing employment for 300 people, some 3,000 people could be employed in secondary industry developed by use of the mine resources.

The purpose of this bill is to restrict the sale abroad of our primary products, and to license and regulate the export of those products, having in mind their potential value to Canada through the development of secondary industry.

Exploitation is becoming a common word in the Canadian vocabulary, but I believe that regulations such as are proposed in this bill would assist not only northern Ontario but also northern Quebec and all other northern areas where primary products are produced. Such regulation would be in the interests of everyone.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I have been interested in this word "exploitation". When I went to school I always had the opinion that if reference were made to the exploitation of someone or something it meant that advantage was being taken of someone or something. "Exploitation" was always a dirty word. Yet, in our northern area we find people using the word "exploitation" as an exchange word for "exploration". There seems to be no particular adverse connotation in the word "exploitation". It seems to be a way of life so far as the Canadian public is concerned.

I believe most members who are concerned with this matter will agree that we should limit the exploitation of our natural resources, keeping in mind the potential each of these resources has in secondary industry, and that they will support this bill. I would be the first to admit that there are fields in which the secondary development of the primary product will be difficult and will take some period of time. I am sure that the regulations which would surround such a bill would take this into consideration. This bill was not presented in the expectation that it would pass. However, I think it will allow the members of the house and the people in the country at large an opportunity to consider a matter which has been of great concern to all who live in the primary producing areas, who see their natural resources being taken out of the area and in some cases taken out of the country as a whole before any manufacturing takes place or before any secondary industrial development is undertaken.

I believe that if a bill in this or in another form should receive the support of the house the transition which would take place in the newly developing areas of Canada would provide many Canadians with an opportunity to reverse the trend which now takes place, where a person has to move to the major cities in order to participate in the secondary industries of our nation. It would have the effect of pushing secondary development into the areas which are so greatly in need of such development, namely the primary producing areas.

I would appreciate support and criticism of this bill, so that Canadians will be able to get secondary development in those areas where at present no secondary industry is contemplated or anticipated.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker in theory, the purposes of Bill No. C-10, are to limit, prohibit or regulate the exportation of primary resources, therefore we can only be in favour in principle of the passing of this bill.

If in a country as rich as Canada, with regard to natural resources, we could process completely our primary products and export them abroad, once we have met our domestic needs, obviously, it would be the ideal solution.

I think that everybody agrees with me that Canada is a great country. But a distinction must be made. It is a country of a tremendous size, very rich in natural resources, but if we compare the small density of its population, still growing over the years, with that of several European countries, smaller in size we can only come to the conclusion that Canada is a small country, which cannot use its primary resources due to its limited population.

Whence the need to satisfy our foreign customers and often to supply them with raw materials which we are unable to use or process ourselves, due to the lack of facilities.

The sponsor of this bill has forgotten, I think, that in a practical sense and under present circumstances, the aims of his bill are achieved.

In the province of Quebec, at least, the law contains specific prohibitions designed to protect our natural products and resources, especially in the case of wood products, in that it is forbidden to export unfinished products.

Unfortunately, the law has not always been adhered to but, nevertheless, I think that all in all, it is being observed and we all insist on that point.

I think also that the sponsor of the bill forgot that administration and development of our natural resources come under the jurisdiction of the provinces. If we consider the facts, the purposes and the measures advocated by this bill are, in practice, already a reality in Canada.

If this bill were passed, I feel that there would be many complications detrimental to the national interest, to the interest of our fellow-citizens.

First, there is a detail which might seem of little importance, but in the bill, there is no definition of "primary porducts". There is no list, not even a brief one, of the main commodities to be considered as primary for export purpose.

In my opinion, the passing of the bill would lead to a very strict control, too strict in fact, of our farm, forest, mining and other products. That could also have detrimental effects at the primary level or, at least, at some levels of our manufacturing and production industry.

Another aspect of the bill must also be considered. Let us not forget the complications that could arise within the public service, the bureaucracy, which we sometimes criticize. I believe with reason that very harmful complications could arise with regard to the administration of the commissions and some government agencies.

Steps should be taken to make sure that the legislation as well as the provisions concerning prices and equity are complied with fully, in the interest of the country. If each case had to be studied closely, it would take a real army of civil servants and experts and that would be going too far.

I think that we must think of raising such groups, such armies in time of national emergency. It is said that comparisons are always unfair but one is needed. It happened when Canada had to raise groups of very competent and learned men during the second world war, for instance, and also when disasters struck some areas and cities in Canada.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I think that to justify the recruiting of such a group of competent civil servants, to whom rather high salaries would have to be paid, we would have to be in an emergency. Considering the present state of our economy, in spite of what some of our opponents claim, and as compared with the world economy, we can say that we have problems but that we are at a normal point on the curve.

We know that our government will take the necessary steps, as it has done to date, so that we may go up another point on the chart of our economy.

Before introducing this bill which is very short and very simple, it might have been appropriate to consider first the present legislation which provides for the existing functions which are very important for our economy, not only on the economy as a whole but in areas the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has emphasized.

I note, for instance, that section 3 of the Export and Import Permits Act provides for the establishment of control lists. I quote:

> The governor in council may establish a list of goods, to be called an export control list, including therein any article, the export of which he deems it necessary to control for any of the following purposes, namely,
>
> (a) to ensure that arms, ammunition, implements or munitions of war, naval, army or air stores or any articles deemed capable of being converted therein to or made useful in the production thereof or otherwise have a strategic nature or value, will not be made available to any destination wherein their use might be detrimental to the security of Canada;
>
> (b) to implement an intergovernmental arrangement or commitment; or
>
> (c) to ensure that there is an adequate supply and distribution of such articles in Canada for defence or other needs.

As you can see, our legislation, at a certain level, already provides, to a certain point, measures to ensure our market, our home market as well as the world market in the field of primary resources but always taking into account our economic progress within the framework of normal commercial activity in our country and in the world.

With regard to fair and reasonable prices for exports and raw materials, I wish to quote subsection 2 of section 17 of the Income Tax Act:

> Where a taxpayer carrying on business in Canada has purchased anything from a person with whom he was not dealing at arm's length at a price in excess of the fair market value, the fair market value thereof shall, for the purpose of computing the taxpayer's income from the business, be deemed to have been paid or to be payable therefor.

It is obvious that the legislators have provided for economic stability not only with regard to our primary resources, but with regard to any revenue concerning the whole Canadian people.

Referring to the various duties, to the various functions which should be assigned to the group of civil servants or special agency entrusted with the application of that act, I read, under Section 4 (1) of the Tariff Board Act, as follows:

> (1) In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall, at the request of the minister, make inquiry as to

(a) the price and cost of raw materials in Canada and elsewhere, and the cost of transportation thereof from the place of production to the place of use or consumption;

(b) the cost of efficient production in Canada and elsewhere, and what increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of efficient production;

(c) the cost, efficiency and conditions of labour, including health of employees, in Canada and elsewhere;

(d) the prices received by producers, manufacturers, wholesale dealers, retailers and other distributors in Canada and elsewhere;

(e) all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada; and

(f) generally, all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries; and report to the minister.

In addition, I should like to quote a most important provision from the act providing for the establishment of the Economic Council of Canada. To my mind, it is imperative that this section be quoted, just as the other one I quoted from the Tariff Board Act a minute ago, because if this bill were adopted, it would interfere with the status, the mandate and the activities of those two organizations which already exist and have already accomplished valuable work for Canada. So I shall quote section 9 of the Economic Council of Canada Act:

It shall be the duty of the council to advise and recommend to the minister how Canada can achieve the highest possible levels of employment and efficient production in order that the country may enjoy a high and consistent rate of economic growth and that all Canadians may share in rising living standards; and in particular it shall be the duty of the council:—

... etc. I come now to subsection (c) and I quote:

—to consider means of strengthening and improving Canada's international financial and trade position;

... From there I pass on to subsection (f) which says:

(f) to study and discuss with representatives of the industries concerned and with representatives of labour, farmers and other primary producers, and other occupational groups and organizations, what specific plans for production and investment in major industries in Canada will best contribute to a high and consistent rate of economic growth;

Apart from those two commissions which are playing a part in the field covered by this bill, apart also from the existing legislation with regard to exportation and the economic interests of the Canadian people, this bill suggests or implies the creation of new positions. As I said a while ago, it contemplates the setting up of new groups of directors or civil employees which, as far as I am concerned and things being as they are, would rather tend to complicate matters.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski).]

According to some parts of this bill, the Tariff Board would actually indicate guide lines to the Economic Council of Canada which, according to the law, is answerable to one head only, one chief: the minister himself.

The Economic Council of Canada could very well find itself some day, following the passing of this bill, with two heads, two chiefs, a situation which would mess up things in the administrative field. Any such complications always trigger off a flight of capital, because of the expenses brought about by these complications in the administration of this country.

• (5:30 p.m.)

There is another point on which I want to insist, namely the aspect of our federal-provincial relations. In this connection, I take the liberty of referring you to section 92 of the British North America Act, a section which is often mentioned in Canada and which deals with the exclusive power of provincial legislatures. I therefore quote the preamble of that section:

In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated:

I will not refer to paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4 but I will quote paragraph 5:

The management and sale of public lands belonging to the province and of the timber and wood thereon.

As I said earlier, our forests are one of our main sources, if not the first, of primary products, all the more so because the products of that source are renewable. We should not forget also our international commitments. Canada has commitments in the framework of the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade, and I quote paragraph 1 of article XI of that agreement:

General Elimination of Quantitative Restrictions

1. No prohibitions or restrictions other than duties, taxes or other charges, whether made effective through quotas, import or export licences or other measures, shall be instituted or maintained by any contracting party on the importation of any product of the territory of any other contracting party or on the exportation or sale for export of any product destined for the territory of any other contracting party.

We all understand that, without neglecting Canada's essential interests, we must show some flexibility in matters of international trade. We must protect our rights in the most flexible way possible, because there are in the world other sources of primary products, if our policy is too inflexible, large international companies, large international financial corporations and other countries will buy somewhere else. Admittedly, Canada needs foreign capital. I think that if our policy is not flexible enough, the same thing will happen with regard to those useful exchanges of capital with Canada.

I shall say in conclusion that this policy, which on the whole is a policy of restraint on the exports of our primary products, is a negative policy. In my opinion, Canada has followed in this field a positive policy to which we should continue to adhere. It is with a positive policy that we can develop our industrial methods as well as our engineering potential, while increasing the capital which will help us compete with foreign countries. That same policy will also make our development possible so that we might increase our delivery of finished products on foreign markets. That is what I call a positive policy.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the member who just resumed his seat said, at the beginning of his remarks, that he approved the principle of Bill No. C-10 and then spoke at length about the economic consequences which this bill could have on our international trade, on Canada's exports.

The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) said that the present situation and the economy in general are getting the necessary attention. However, I wonder whether the creation of secondary industries in Canada would not help, for instance, to solve the difficult problem of unemployment. The recent fiscal legislation brought that home clearly; the number of unemployed will increase further.

If our primary products were processed by the secondary industry, it seems to me that would create jobs; it would also increase our exports considerably.

That is certainly a worthwhile bill because it would ask the government or the tariff board to consider our needs. First of all it wants our primary products to be used as much as possible by the creation of secondary industries, and thus to develop our potential to the full.

That is more or less an invitation to the companies, the investors to set up or create secondary industries in Canada.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) talks about the huge potential of northeastern Ontario, but I must tell him that the same potential is still to be found in northwestern Quebec.

For instance, we have great quantities of iron in Canada. There is also iron in northern Ontario. These mines could produce enough to supply the steel mills in Ontario, Quebec or even in other Canadian provinces. But instead of using these primary products, of developing and processing them in Canada, we prefer to export them in other countries which make them into finished products before they return them to us.

For instance, I remember that during the 1956 provincial election, Mr. Speaker. I was a Liberal candidate and that Mr. Georges Lapalme was precisely talking of these primary products and of operating iron mines in northern Quebec, in the district of Ungava. He stated publicly then: When we are in office, the Iron Ore Company, Jules Timmins and others will come and beg us to renew their charter or their purchase contract for Ungava primary products. Mr. Lapalme said that in 1956.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Four years later, in 1960, Mr. Lesage—a friend of the member for Rimouski—and his government came to power and that was when the government renewed the sales contract with the United States or the Iron Ore Co. on the same terms, for a 40-year period. This agreement was signed in 1961 by the Liberal government of Quebec.

Our natural resources are squandered and then we are told that we must accept restrictions and legislation which make us weaker instead of making us grow and develop. The development of our natural resources demands first that we produce raw material; and if we export these primary products to other countries so that they can finish them before they send them back to us, we are bound to be the losers.

We could insure maximum processing of our primary products in order to export finished goods abroad. For instance, in respect to the forest industry, which was mentioned a few moments ago, we could quite easily export large quantities of our pulp and its by-products, our veneers and plywoods, and all kinds of manufactured articles to the United States. However, we still export these commodities as primary products, and in return we receive finished goods from the United States.

In respect to the steel industry, the situation is worse. We export our steel as raw material to the United States, where it is processed in their steel plants and sent back here as end products. Thus, American workers benefit from this situation, while we, Canadians, remain hewers of wood and carriers of water. We do not process our products, and we are led to believe that our population is not large enough, that our country is too small, that we lack, perhaps, the required skills to develop our primary products or convert them into finished products.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this bill, even if it is not passed by the house, is a reasonable and logical measure which invites the present or any future government to put Canadian interests before those of foreign countries.

This does not mean that we object to exports, far from it. It means that we could export finished products instead of raw materials.

In my opinion, this could apply to many raw materials. I mentioned iron, but there is also copper, nickel, and even oil. Indeed, oil can be transformed into thousands of secondary products. Canada has all these raw materials, Mr. Speaker. Processing plants are what we lack. Those who are ready to invest and who invest now in certain areas in the United States or elsewhere in the world, whether in Japan, or in Europe, could, if invited by an aggressive government, invest here in Canada to create secondary industries and improve our employment level and the standard of living of our Canadian people.

It seems to me that it is perfectly consistent. The bill states clearly that there is no question of stopping exports of primary products completely, but to make maximum use of our primary products to process them, to treat them here and to finish them. If we have a surplus, nothing prevents us from exporting. Quite the opposite, we are ready to export.

Today, we are flying in the face of common sense: first we export, then we realize that we might run out of primary products to create secondary industries.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take any more time of the house. The bill will probably be buried; it does not alter the fact that my principles are right, well founded and likely to help the establishment by Canadians of secondary industries in our country, from coast to coast.

I believe that bills like this one should be examined objectively, seriously and applied in the fullest possible measure.

[Mr. Caouette.]

I know the bill is not perfect. No bill is ever perfect regardless of the subject it deals with. There will always be flaws because bills are prepared by men and not by angels. But, goodwill should always be present, the willingness to consider such bills that will enable us to develop our resources and serve the best interests of the Canadian nation.

Mr. Blouin: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caouette: Of course.

Mr. Blouin: A moment ago, I refrained from interrupting the hon. member, whose speech I followed carefully, but I should like to know what he means by "finished products", since he mentioned the iron ore from the north shore. Is he aware that nowadays iron ore is treated in the form of concentrates and pellets?

Mr. Caouette: With regard to iron smelting, I think of rolling mill sheets and panels which could be sold on the United States market, for instance, to the automobile industry. As concerns pellets, of which I am well aware, since some are made out of scrap metal in Rouyn, I know that we sell them to the Noranda mine, for its own use.

In other fields, instead of exporting iron in its original state to the United States, we could first transform it into steel. Once turned into steel, they could use it for the manufacture of electrical devices, etc. That is what I mean when I am talking of finished or improved products at least compared to those we presently have.

Mr. Blouin: I believe there is already some improvement in that respect. The iron ore is being turned into ingots and then into pellets. It is at least half transformed.

Mr. Caouette: But it is not steel yet. It must be made into pig iron.

Mr. Blouin: I agree there could be further improvement in that respect.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to express my congratulations on the return of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I understand he had a severe illness for some time and it is a pleasure to see him once more in the house.

I also appreciate his bringing this bill forward at this time. Perhaps those of us who come from the northern parts of Canada have somewhat dominated the debate today, but there is ample reason for this. As the hon. member for Timiskaming pointed out in his opening statement, the meaning of the word "exploitation" has changed. He gave the proper definition of the word in a dictionary sense.

It does not matter who exploits you in the north, Mr. Speaker: It still hurts. United States capital is as bad in its own way as capital emanating from Montreal and Toronto. It still means that we in the north have insufficient control over what is going on in the area and we, the population in that area, feel just as exploited as do the natural resources—if they could be said to have feeling—that are being extracted from the north by various companies.

The problem is that we feel to some extent isolated from the mainstream of Canadian society and without the proper assistance of various provincial governments we do not see any great opportunity for an improvement in this condition. One of the difficulties that we in northern Ontario and northern Quebec face is that most of the members in the two legislatures now come from urban areas. When our legislatures were controlled by rural legislators they had very little interest in a progressive or active form of government. Now we have moved into the second half of the twentieth century and the emphasis is the other way. The problems to be solved by the provincial legislatures, and by this one too I may say, are those based on urban development, and we in the northern areas, the exploited areas, if I may use that term, still have no feeling of properly belonging to Canadian society.

In many cases, Mr. Speaker, what we have to do when we discuss problems of this type at constitutional conferences—and these are things we shall have to take into consideration—is to break up the large sized empires that now pass for provinces. I think the time has now come when the problems involved in governing society, which are based on rural enterprises and on urban enterprises, can no longer be reconciled in the same cabinet or legislature. We have to split them apart. It might be necessary to look at the United States model and split areas that have something in common with each other into smaller parts, instead of attempting to combine them into wholes.

To carry the idea further, the new provinces which might be formed, to deal with the problems outlined by the hon. member for Timiskaming, should be regionally based. For example one would not consider throwing the whole of northern and northwestern Ontario into one gigantic province. This would leave us in the same position we are in now. Perhaps what we should consider doing is to chop off northwestern Ontario as one separate unit, with the northeastern part and perhaps part of the northern Quebec section abutting being considered another province. In any case, problems in the north are reaching the point where the people are seething with a great deal of unrest because their needs are not being met. It is not so much a question of representation as one of limited resources, because the two large empires that pass for provinces insist on spending money on urban development. God knows how much we here see the problems of the urban areas, and recognize them, but we are also here to fight for our own areas. Our provincial colleagues are faced with the same problem. Attention is not given to the north because of the framework of political power in a particular province.

The bill introduced by the hon. member for Timiskaming is an indication of the type of problem that exists. He dealt almost exclusively with the difficulties in the north, the feeling of exploitation that we in the north have, and the lack of opportunity to make our contribution as we see it to Canadian society as a whole.

The programs that have been developed both by the federal government and the provincial governments to assist the north are not adequate. It is quite true, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan the Islands (Mr. Cameron) has complained, that the mining companies and oil companies have been specially protected by the federal government. And indeed they were, Mr. Speaker, because that was the design of the particular subsidies when they were first introduced. It may be quite right to remove the special subsidies paid to these companies.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from the north, and mining being one of our few native industries, probably the only major one, I suggest this question should be looked at very carefully. Because capital of this type is very nervous and other mineral deposits are awaiting exploitation in other parts. We would not mind giving up this subsidy if there was something to take its place, but it is a question of our fighting for the survival of the area in the best way we can. Until the federal government and the province of Ontario look at the problems of the northern areas in a more sympathetic light, we will have to take the position of blocking what otherwise might be desirable legislative moves on the part of governments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being six o'clock, this house stands adjourned until 2.30 o'clock on the afternoon of Monday next.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 11, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PROCEDURE

First, second and third reports of special committee on procedure—Mr. MacEachen.

[Note: For text of above reports see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

• (2:40 p.m.)

TRADE

REPORT BY MINISTER ON RETURN FROM EUROPE

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from western Europe where I attended ministerial meetings of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in Geneva and the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development in Paris. In addition I had talks with British ministers in London and visited Brussels, the seat of the European Economic Community, and the capitals of the four Scandinavian countries, Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland.

I beg leave, Mr. Speaker, to table the communiqué of the GATT meeting in Geneva held November 22 to November 24.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, Canada was among the leaders at this meeting in calling for a continued and sustained effort by all countries participating in the GATT toward further reduction and removal of barriers to trade. The conference reaffirmed the primary GATT objective of trade liberalization. In the light of the recent successful conclusion of the Kennedy round it was recognized that no new major and comprehensive trade negotiation could be expected in the near future. It was agreed, however, to proceed to prepare for further advance and a full work program for this purpose has been established.

Canada advocated trade liberalization covering both tariff and non-tariff barriers, including negotiations for freer trade in a number of important industrial sectors. On behalf of the government I urged duty free treatment for primary industrial commodities and the elimination of nuisance duties. While noting the special factors affecting production and trade in agricultural products, I indicated this sector too should be the object of further trade liberalization. I called for a comprehensive program to improve the trading opportunities of the developing countries. Canada also suggested a new look at the possibilities for improved arrangements for east-west trade on a case by case basis.

Although the communiqué is in the general language characteristic of international meetings with representation from a large number of countries, I can assure hon. members that all of Canada's recommendations are reflected in it. Accordingly it constitutes a substantial step forward.

I also wish to table, Mr. Speaker, the text of the press communiqué agreed at the conclusion of the meeting of ministers of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development held in Paris November 30 to December 1.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winters: At this meeting the delegation had the benefit of the able assistance of the hon. member for Rosedale, the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Macdonald).

The main issue was how to assist the developing countries to increase both their present and potential trade. The O.E.C.D. endorsed at the meeting a certain number of considerations relating to a possible generalized system of temporary trade preferences for the developing countries. These considerations will be presented in February in New Delhi at the second meeting of the United Nations conference for trade and development and will form the basis of a common approach by the developed countries at that meeting.

The details of any preferential arrangement remain to be worked out. I indicated the kinds of conditions and reservations which in our view would need to be observed in developing any such arrangement. I said that Canada's final position with respect to the suggested preferential system would depend on the actual arrangements to be developed at the UNCTAD and later negotiating meetings.

The four Scandinavian countries represent an important and active group of markets for Canadian exports. It will be recalled that they negotiated collectively in the Kennedy round and participated together in one pavilion at Expo '67. I am convinced that there are important trading and investment opportunities open to Canadian exporters who are prepared to show initiative and energy in developing sales to these affluent and highly competitive markets. Similarly, these countries are looking for a continuation of their growing exports to Canada.

I am instructing the Department of Trade and Commerce to place increased emphasis on the development of the great potential which I am sure exists for Canadian exports to Scandinavia. Relations between Canada and each of these four countries are warm and friendly. Many factors give us a great community of interest and a healthy flow of valued immigrants to our country. These ties are worth the efforts we expend toward their maintenance and strengthening.

The meetings of the GATT and O.E.C.D. in many ways complemented each other. Taken together they constituted major progress in reaching a consensus among member countries about what the next steps should be in trade policy generally, and more particularly the application to the advancement of the developing countries, for whom it was unanimously agreed much more will have to be done.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the official opposition may I welcome the minister back from his extended trip during which he attended important conferences on behalf of the government. We are glad to hear that once again he has urged that serious consideration be given to developing free trade in primary industrial products and that everything possible be done in world trade to eliminate nuisance duties. We are also interested to hear of his new initiatives in attempting to develop additional trade with the Scandinavian countries. The minister has had an excellent opportunity to sell more Canadian products abroad.

I hope that some time soon the minister will divulge to the house any successes he has had, or any efforts he has made, with regard to obtaining additional markets for Canadian wheat. Our wheat sales have fallen off seriously this year, and we realize how important it is to maintain the sales of this important commodity.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I join in welcoming the return of the Minister of Trade and Commerce from his extended trip. In his statement the minister spoke of the general language in which the communiqué was framed and said such language was characteristic of such communiqués. I hope the minister will not mind my saying this, but the same remark could be made about the statement he made. It is in very general language indeed, and does not indicate to us any precise conclusions which may have been arrived at or any precise considerations and problems that were raised.

Naturally everyone in this house is happy to hear that further steps will be taken to liberalize trade, and everyone is happy to hear that the minister is making efforts to increase our trade with the Scandinavian countries and the countries of eastern Europe. Nevertheless I hoped particularly that the minister might say something more concrete with regard to trade with developing countries. As the minister knows, 66 delegations from developing countries met some months ago in Algiers and adopted what is known as the Algiers manifesto. In that manifesto the problems of the developing countries and their needs are carefully and strongly stated.

It is impossible, from what the minister has told us, to comment about conclusions that were reached. I merely emphasize that increasing trade with the developing countries is one of the major needs of our world today. I hope that the developed countries at UNCTAD, in New Delhi next February, will adopt a common position, as the minister's statement says will be the case, and that in their common position the developed countries will determine to be of real assistance to developing countries, instead of being too narrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister's statement surprises anyone, because it is the continuation of economic procedures followed in the past both by the Conservative government and by the present administration.

It is understood that Canada must increase its exports, but it must be kept in mind, as the minister mentioned in his statement, that the representatives of the countries he met seek to promote their export trade to our country. It is obvious that in trying to increase their exports, Canada and those other countries aim to strike a favourable trade balance.

Accompanied by a delegation, the hon. minister visited countries which might possibly buy our excess production. It would have been far easier for him, had he wanted to give himself the trouble, to start with visiting the underdeveloped areas of Canada where he would have found elements capable of absorbing part of our production. Indeed, the domestic market is a neglected market.

Just when the minister goes to Europe to broaden the scope of our exports, and even our imports, restrictions are being imposed on the Canadian people. This is absolutely contrary to common sense. Just when unemployment is increasing in Canada, and in the province of Quebec in particular—55 per cent of the unemployed are found in the city of Montreal—the minister is trying to dispose of our Canadian production. Those are the areas which should benefit from the efficient assistance of the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), who knows such districts, for there are some in Toronto itself.

So, I do not object to the fact that Canada increases its exports abroad, but the minister should first find a way to distribute our Canadian production on our domestic markets to meet the needs of the Canadian people, then he could consider exporting goods to help the underdeveloped countries throughout the world.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): We welcome the minister back and congratulate him on his efforts abroad to bolster the results of the Kennedy round, results which I believe will generally be favourable to Canada.

Moving on to the next stage in the very general statement we have been given this afternoon, one finds cause for concern. For example, we are told that means will be found to assist the developing countries to increase their trade and that this is to be done through a system of temporary trade preferences. The minister mentioned the importance of these arrangements being worked out on a mutually acceptable basis among the developing countries. I would point out that our experience in connection with the wheat agreement, when we saw what one developed country can do to another in this regard, has made us all the more concerned that future agreements among the developed countries should be on a mutual basis.

We trust that methods of increasing trade with the developing countries, which depend largely upon primary production, should not be paid for at the expense of any single segment of the Canadian economy. The minister and the government must be fully aware of the mood which prevails within Canadian agriculture today, and though I am sure we would all agree on the importance of doing our utmost to increase trade with the developing countries, the cost of such an increase must be borne by every section of the economy, not by one particular group of people in this country.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DRUG POSSESSION, TRAFFICKING, ETC.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-21 (from the Senate), to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE

LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMPOSITION OF COINS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-23 (from the Senate), to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act and the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CALENDAR, FINANCIAL AND PREMIUM YEARS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-24 (from the Senate), to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Questions

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE CROWN CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-29 (from the Senate), to provide for the dissolution of Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DISTRIBUTION OF RURAL DEVELOPMENT FUND

Question No. 369—Mr. Choquette:

1. Have any distribution criteria, by province, been set up following the creation of a $300,000,000 fund to ensure rural development within the country?

2. Will the federal government take into account, in the operation of the rural economic development fund, that a special development fund for the Atlantic provinces has been set up and that the prairie provinces have benefited from a great number of special agricultural measures, and will it ensure that the province of Quebec receives a large part of said fund?

3. Have the SIDBEC authorities asked for assistance from the rural economic development fund in order to build a steel-producing plant at Bécancour?

4. Does the federal government intend making its own feasibility study regarding a steel-producing plant which might be built at Bécancour?

5. Has the federal government held talks with the government of the province of Quebec with a view to setting up an agreement designating the Bécancour area as a special development area?

6. Is the thermo-nuclear plant under construction at Bécancour, and which is financed by the federal government, linked in some way to the project of having a steel-producing plant built in the same area?

7. To date, what are the obligations undertaken by the federal government under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act fund, and what areas will benefit from this?

8. How many requests for aid from the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act fund were made to the federal government, how many were rejected, and how many were taken into consideration?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Forestry and Rural Development, Energy, Mines and Resources and Industry as follows: 1. No.

[Mr. Sharp.]

2. The fund for rural economic development does not take the place of the federal departments resources and activities. In the formulation of any plan under the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act, the already existing federal programs are taken into account and the resources of the fund are used in providing a complement when required, to the normal activities of the federal departments and agencies, some of which are already active in the western provinces and the maritime provinces. The discussions in progress with the government of Quebec should soon allow the signing of an agreement with regard to the lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé and Magdalen islands area.

3. No.

4. No.

5. No.

6. No.

7. Three federal-provincial agreements on rural development have been signed under the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act. They concern the areas of northeast New Brunswick, Mactaquac (New Brunswick) and Interlake (Manitoba). The commitments of the fund for these three areas are as follows: Northeast New Brunswick: $31,461,000; Interlake (Manitoba): $27,606,000; Mactaquac (New Brunswick): $9,433,000.

8. Studies and discussions are in progress concerning Prince Edward Island and some areas of Quebec, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. No request has been rejected up to now.

INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY

Question No. 572—Mr. Harkness:

1. How much has the Canadian money supply increased, both in dollars and at a percentage rate, for each of the years 1963 to 1966 inclusive, and for 1967 to date?

2. What was the amount of the money supply in 1963 and what is it at the present time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): There is no single definition of "the money supply". It can be defined and calculated in a number of different ways depending on the purpose for which the statistics are required.

Canadian dollar deposits at chartered banks make up an important part of any money supply series but there are various categories of such deposits which have different characteristics. There are demand deposits on which no interest is paid, chequable and non-chequable personal savings deposits, notice and term deposits held by corporations and others which have varying maturities and carry substantial interest rates and finally at the end of this spectrum, open market paper issued by the banks which is payable to bearer. These different types of claims on banks are held by various classes of holders to meet different kinds of needs. Because of this fact, different classes of deposits are relevant to the consideration of different aspects of economic and financial developments.

The trends of the various types of chartered banks' deposit liabilities are also affected by changes in the conditions and degree of competition for funds between banks and other financial institutions. Variation due to changes of this nature would be removed in money supply series defined to include not only claims on banks but also liquid claims on financial institutions such as trust and loan companies or Caisses Populaires and credit unions.

Apart from deposits and other very liquid claims denominated in Canadian dollars, Canadians also hold a considerable volume of liquid assets payable in foreign currency which from some points of view are part of money supply. The most important of these are the chartered banks' "swapped" deposits denominated in a foreign currency for which the payment at maturity in Canadian dollars is covered by a forward exchange contract and which are therefore closely equivalent to the banks' term deposits in Canadian dollars.

The following money supply measures can be calculated from data which become available on an up-to-date basis and include those measures most commonly used at the present time.

A. Coin and Bank of Canada notes in the hands of the public plus Canadian dollar demand deposits at the chartered banks.

B. As in A above, plus all other Canadian dollar deposits at the chartered banks.

C. As in B above, but excluding deposits of the government of Canada.

D. As in C above, plus "swapped" foreign currency deposits at the chartered banks.

The figures requested are given below on each of these definitions.

(Monthly averages of Wednesday figures)

	$ millions				Per cent
	A	B	C	D	A	B	C	D
Change from:
Dec. 1962 to Dec. 1963..	219	1,380	959	1,018	3.6	8.9	6.4	6.6
Dec. 1963 to Dec. 1964..	398	978	1,116	1,428	6.3	5.8	7.3	8.7
Dec. 1964 to Dec. 1965..	436	2,129	2,042	1,850	6.5	11.9	12.0	10.4
Dec. 1965 to Dec. 1966..	559	1,328	1,235	1,489	7.8	6.6	6.5	7.6
Dec. 1966 to Oct. 1967..	543	2,608	3,433	3,316	7.1	12.2	16.9	15.7

	$ millions
	A	B	C	D
Absolute level in:
Dec. 1963	6,296	16,861	15,867	16,340
Oct. 1967	8,233	23,904	23,743	24,423

Questions

CLEANING CONTRACT FOR BAGOTVILLE AIR TERMINAL

Question No. 651—Mr. Grégoire:

1. What are the names of all parties who submitted tenders for the cleaning services for the new air terminal at Bagotville?

2. What amount did each one submit?

3. Who was awarded the contract?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. While the majority of airport terminal buildings throughout Canada are operated by the Department of Transport, the air terminal building at Bagotville is operated by Air Canada and it is not the practice of that company to disclose the names of firms or persons submitting tenders, or information concerning proposals received. Seven firms submitted bids.

3. Peintures Saguenay of Chicoutimi.

OTTAWA—GREEN BELT PROPERTIES NOT ACQUIRED

Question No. 653—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Are there now any properties within the greenbelt in the national capital region which have not been acquired by the National Capital Commission by purchase or expropriation with compensation paid?

2. If so, where are these properties located and who is the owner in each case?

3. In each case, what is delaying final settlement?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. There are 34 properties to be settled in the green belt.

---

2. and 3. 2(1) Each of the following properties has been expropriated and the negotiation has been referred to the Department of Justice for the filing of an information in the Exchequer Court.

Former owner	Location
Griffin, John M.	Lot 35 & pt. of Lot 36, Township of Nepean.
Est. of Dr. Herbert B. Moffatt (Silver Spring's Farm)	Pts. of Lots 14 & 15, Con. 2, O.F., Township of Nepean.
Sheahan, Clarence M.	Pt. Lot 34, Con. 3, R.F., Township of Nepean.
Marcus, Benjamin (In trust)	Pt. Lot 35, Con. 5, R.F., Township of Nepean.
Pyrofax Gas Ltd.	Pt. Lot 35, Con. 5, R.F., Township of Nepean.
H. J. McFarland Construction Co. Ltd.	Pt. Lot 34, Con. 6, R.F., Township of Nepean.
Independent Coal & Lumber Co. Ltd.	Pt. Lot 12, Con. 1, O.F., Township of Gloucester.
Levine, Isaac	Pt. Lot 17, Con. 3, O.F., Township of Gloucester.
Central Salvage Co. Ltd.	Pt. Lot 17, Con. 3, O.F., Township of Gloucester.
Cyrville Sand Co.	Pt. Lot 19, Con. 3, O.F., Township of Gloucester.
Macartney, H. Allen	Pts. Lot 16, Con. 5, O.F., Township of Gloucester.
Heafey, Leonard	Pts. Lot 20, Con. 5, O.F., Township of Gloucester.
Heron, William A.	Pt. Lot 6, Con. 3, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Colegate, Robert G.	Pts. of Lts. 7 & 8, Con. 3, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Dowler, Bert H.	Pt. of Lots 7 & 8, Con. 3, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Andrews, Mrs. Rosa	Pt. Lot 7, Con. 4, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Boyd, J. B.	Pt. Lot 9, Con. 4, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Lefebvre, Anna	Pts. of Lot 12, Con. 4, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Lefebvre, Guay	Pt. of N½ Lot 12, Con. 4, R.F., Township of Gloucester.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Former owner	Location
Read, John	Pt. Lot 2, Con. 6, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Dillon, Thomas F.	Lots 1, 2, 4 to 7 incl. 10 to 21 incl., 23 to 49 incl. & 51 to 56 incl., Block A, Pt. Block "B" & Block "C", Reg. Plan 711, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Sherman, William	Lot 8, Reg. Plan 711, R.F., Township of Gloucester.
Chenery, Albert	Lot 50, Reg. Plan 711, R.F., Township of Gloucester.

2(2) The following properties have been expropriated and are under negotiation for final settlement.

Former owner	Location
Bruce, R. A. S.	Pt. S½ Lot 34, Con. 3, R.F., Township of Nepean.
O'Connor, Walter	Pts. of Lot 9, Con. 1, O.F., Township of Gloucester.
Munro, Garnet	Pt. of Lot 19, Con. 2, & Pt. of Lot 19, Con. 3, O.F., Township of Gloucester.
Bergin, William J.	Pt. Lot 23, Con. A., R.F., Township of Nepean.
Goodfellow, Norman E. Jr.	Pt. Lot 30, Con. 3, R.F., Township of Nepean.
John J. Florence Realty	Pt. of Lots 32 & 33, Con. 5, R.F., Township of Nepean.
Cloutier, Aristide and Lorenzo	Pt. Lot 13, Con. 3, O.F., Township of Gloucester.

2(3) The following properties have been expropriated, but final settlement is delayed because the former owner or heirs have not been located.

Former owner	Location
Kustaski, Mona	Pt. Lot 27, Con. 5, R.F., Township of Nepean.
Wadsworth, John	Pt. Lot 13, Con. 3, O.F., Township of Gloucester.

2(4) The following property has been expropriated, but final settlement has been delayed pending a court decision as to the amount of compensation.

Former owner	Location
Munro, Harold	Pt. Lot 20, Con. 3, O.F., Township of Gloucester.

2(5) The following property has been expropriated, but final settlement has been delayed pending settlement of an Assignment of Bankruptcy.

Former owner	Location
Koffman Truck Rentals	Pt. Lot 19, Con. A., R.F., Township of Nepean.

2(6) In addition, there are schools, churches, and federal installations within the green belt. Some of the schools and churches were not expropriated and are acquired only as they are offered for sale by the authorities involved.

Questions

PUBLIC WORKS EXPENDITURES IN CERTAIN QUEBEC COUNTIES

Question No. 676—Mr. Isabelle:

1. How much money did the Department of Public Works spend in each of the counties of Gatineau, Pontiac, Hull and Labelle for various works during the last five years, and what works were involved?

2. How many tourist wharves and launching ramps were built during the last five years in each of the above counties?

[Translation]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. County of Gatineau: Total expenditure, $179,603.00. Projects: Aylmer East—Addition to Post Office, repairs and maintenance. Bouchette—Construction of new Post Office, repairs and maintenance. Gracefield—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Grand Remous—Construction of new Post Office and minor works. Harrington Lake—Construction of two wharves. Lac des Isles—Construction of new Post Office and minor works. Lac Ste-Marie—Construction of new Post Office and minor works. Low—Construction of new Post Office. Maniwaki—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Messines—Construction of new Post Office, repairs and maintenance. Montcerf—Construction of new Post Office, repairs and maintenance. Notre-Dame du Laus—Construction of new Post Office. Notre-Dame de Pontmain—Wharf reconstruction. Val des Bois—Construction of new Post Office.

County of Pontiac: Total expenditure, $130,779.00. Projects: Campbell's Bay—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Chapeau—Construction of new Post Office. Des Joachims—Construction of wharf and launching ramp. Fort Coulonge—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Reconstruction of Ferry wharf. Fort William—Construction of launching ramp. Guigues—Construction of new Post Office and minor works. Lac Coulonge—Wharf reconstruction. Lorrainville—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Notre-Dame du Nord—Construction of new Federal building, repairs and maintenance. Otter Lake—Construction of wharf and launching ramp. Quyon—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Construction of wharf and launching ramp. Shawville—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Temiskaming—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Ville-Marie—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building.

County of Hull: Total expenditure, $3,086,769.00. Projects: Anger—Construction of new Post Office and minor works. Buckingham—Alterations to Post Office building, painting, repairs and maintenance. Gatineau—Painting of Post Office building, repairs and maintenance. Hull—Animal Diseases Research Institute, alterations to incinerator and treatment tank. Canadian Government Printing Bureau, alterations for Department of National Defence Quality Assurance Branch, new Data Processing Centre. Masson—Painting of Post Office building, stone work, and minor works. Pointe-Gatineau—Construction of new Post Office building and minor works.

County of Labelle: Total expenditure, $279,746.00. Projects: Chute St-Philippe—Construction of wharf and launching ramp. Ferme-Neuve—Painting of Post Office building and maintenance. Lac Caribou—Construction of launching ramp. Lac Chaud—Construction of launching ramp. Lac Nominingue—Construction of launching ramp. Lac Ste-Marie—Construction of launching ramp. Lac Simon—Reconstruction of wharf and launching ramp. Lac St-Paul—Construction of launching ramp. Montebello—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building. Mont-Laurier—Conversion of heating plant, painting, repairs and maintenance of Federal building. Notre-Dame de la Paix—Construction of new Post Office building and minor works. Papineauville—Construction of new Post Office building, repairs and maintenance. Plaisance—Construction of new Post Office building and minor works. Ripon—Construction of new Post Office building and minor works. St-André Avellin—Construction of new Post Office building and minor works. Ste-Anne du Lac—Construction of new Post Office building, repairs and maintenance. Reconstruction of wharf. Thurso—Repairs and maintenance of Post Office building.

2. The number of tourist wharves and launching ramps constructed in the last five years by the Department of Public Works in the following constituencies: Gatineau, 3; Pontiac, 6; Hull, Nil; Labelle, 7.

[English]

PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 685—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired federal civil servants are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the following brackets: (a) less than $20 per month (b) $20 to $29.99 per month (c) $30 to $39.99 per month (d) $40 to $49.99 per month (e) $50 to $59.99 per month (f) $60 to $69.99 per month (g) $70 to $79.99 per month (h) $80 to $89.99 per month (i) $90 to $99.99 per month (j) $100 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 to $199.99 per month (l) $200 to $249.99 per month (m) $250 to $299.99 per month (n) $300 per month and over?

2. How many widows of civil servants or of retired civil servants are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the number of retired civil servants and also the number of widows of civil servants or of retired civil servants presently residing in each province?

4. In respect of how many orphans of federal civil servants are pensions being paid and what is the average amount thereof?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. Number of retired civil servants and widows receiving superannuation allowances of amounts within each of the following brackets:

	Retired civil servants	Widows
(a) Less than $ 20.00 per month	462	1725
(b) $ 20.00 to $ 29.99 " "	1194	1994
(c) $ 30.00 to $ 39.99 " "	1899	1922
(d) $ 40.00 to $ 49.99 " "	1898	1671
(e) $ 50.00 to $ 59.99 " "	1908	1507
(f) $ 60.00 to $ 69.99 " "	1873	1365
(g) $ 70.00 to $ 79.99 " "	1735	1251
(h) $ 80.00 to $ 89.99 " "	1596	879
(i) $ 90.00 to $ 99.99 " "	1503	717
(j) $100.00 to $149.99 " "	6251	2067
(k) $150.00 to $199.99 " "	4284	545
(l) $200.00 to $249.99 " "	3070	162
(m) $250.00 to $299.99 " "	1934	81
(n) $300.00 and over " "	2692	69
Total	32299	15955

3. Number of retired civil servants and widows residing in each province:

	Retired civil servants	Widows
Newfoundland	360	133
Prince Edward Island	189	94
Nova Scotia	1512	792
New Brunswick	911	502
Quebec	5674	2851
Ontario	14009	7067
Manitoba	1497	658
Saskatchewan	999	429
Alberta	1742	807
British Columbia	4790	2245
Territories	51	11
Outside Canada	565	366
Total	32299	15955

4. Number of orphans of federal civil servants and average amount per annum: 67, $187.

PENSIONS OF RETIRED MOUNTED POLICE

Question No. 687—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the following brackets: (a) less than $20 per month (b) $20 to $29.99 per month (c) $30 to $39.99 per month (d) $40 to $49.99 per month (e) $50 to $59.99 per month (f) $60 to $69.99 per month (g) $70 to $79.99 per month (h) $80 to $89.99 per month (i) $90 to $99.99 per month (j) $100 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 to $199.90 per month (l) $200 to $249.99 per month (m) $250 to $299.99 per month (n) $300 per month and over?

2. How many widows of R.C.M.P. personnel or of retired R.C.M.P. personnel are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the number of retired R.C.M.P. personnel and also the number of widows of R.C.M.P. personnel or of retired R.C.M.P. personnel presently residing in each province?

4. In respect of how many orphans of R.C.M.P. personnel are pensions being paid and what is the average amount thereof?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. (a), Nil; (b), 2; (c), 5; (d), 9; (e), 21; (f), 41; (g), 54; (h), 45; (i), 58; (j), 405; (k), 400; (l), 335; (m), 267; (n), 522.

Questions

2. (a), 16; (b), 11; (c), 10; (d), 19; (e), 17; (f), 27; (g), 9; (h), 8; (i), 12; (j), 51; (k), 27; (l), 10; (m), 5; (n), 3.

3. Province	Retired Personnel	Widows
Newfoundland	28	2
Prince Edward Island	16	Nil
Nova Scotia	183	9
New Brunswick	77	7
Quebec	169	9
Ontario	473	58
Manitoba	114	9
Saskatchewan	133	7
Alberta	303	29
British Columbia	570	85
Northwest Territories	13	Nil
Outside Canada	85	10

4. 100—Average $24.48 per month.

R.C.M.P. SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 688—Mr. Knowles:

1. What was the total amount of money in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account as at (a) March 31, 1964 (b) March 31, 1965 (c) March 31, 1966 (d) March 31, 1967?

2. What rate of interest does the government pay for the use of this money?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1964 (b) March 31, 1965 (c) March 31, 1966 (d) March 31, 1967?

4. What was the total amount paid out of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1964 (b) March 31, 1965 (c) March 31, 1966 (d) March 31, 1967?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. (a) March 31st, 1964, $45,986,906.99; (b) March 31st, 1965, $57,706,948.59; (c) March 31st, 1966, $65,411,253.45; (d) March 31st, 1967, $85,081,315.27.

2. Interest is credited to the superannuation account on the last day of each quarter in each fiscal year, namely, on the 30th day of June, on the 30th day of September, on the 31st day of December and on the 31st day of March, respectively, calculated at the rate of one per cent of the balance to the credit of the account on the last day of the preceding quarter.

3. (a) March 31st, 1964, $1,576,978.32; (b) March 31st, 1965, $1,929,488.33; (c) March 31st, 1966, $2,420,759.75; (d) March 31st, 1967, $2,841,067.52.

[Mr. Pennell.]

4. (a) March 31st, 1964, $573,195.38; (b) March 31st, 1965, $666,752.98; (c) March 31st, 1966, $848,113.32; (d) March 31st, 1967, $972,646.84.

ICEBREAKING IN ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Question No. 701—Mr. Crouse:

1. What are the regulations covering icebreaking in the St. Lawrence river and the gulf of St. Lawrence area?

2. Are they the same as last year?

3. How many icebreakers will be detailed this winter for service in this area?

4. What are the names of these ships?

5. How many men are employed on these ships?

6. What is the estimated cost of providing this service?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. As in previous years the main fleet of icebreakers will operate in the gulf of St. Lawrence for the support of commercial shipping. A smaller number of icebreakers will operate in the river above Quebec to keep open the channel in view of the importance of flood control. A notice to mariners is being issued to notify shipmasters of the special conditions that exist in the river above Quebec and the way in which the icebreakers operate and to caution them against actions that may complicate or hamper flood control operations.

3. Twelve icebreakers and icebreaking lights and buoy tenders.

4. "John A. Macdonald", "d'Iberville", "Labrador", "Sir Humphrey Gilbert", "Sir William Alexander", "Tupper", "J. E. Bernier", "Simon Fraser", "Wolfe", "Montcalm", "N. B. McLean" and "Ernest Lapointe".

5. 610.

6. $2,176,416.

*POSTAL STRIKE IN NIAGARA DISTRICT

Question No. 703—Mr. Irvine:

With reference to the recent strike action of postal employees in the Niagara Peninsula area (a) was disciplinary action instituted against the letter carriers who took part in the strike (b) if so, what and on what grounds (c) if no disciplinary action was taken, was any threatened?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to question No. 703 is as follows: (a) No decision has yet been taken; (b) Not applicable; (c) No.

Questions

[English]

ASSISTANCE FOR AIR CREW TRAINING

Question No. 726—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Is air crew training for pilots, radio operators and navigators assisted under the vocational and technical training program?

2. Are student loans available for air crew training?

3. What other programs are available or contemplated to meet the chronic shortage of air crew personnel?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration, Finance and Transport as follows:

1. Under the occupational training for adults program required educational upgrading and related skill courses may be purchased. Flying time in aircraft has not been purchased.

2. No.

3. Assistance is now provided in the form of a grant of two hundred dollars equally divided between the school and the pilot for private pilot training. The Department of Transport is presently studying possible methods of financial aid to assist commercial pilots improve their flying qualifications. The studies in this regard have not yet been completed.

AIRPORT CAPITAL ASSISTANCE, ONTARIO

Question No. 738—Mr. Smith:

1. Since March 25, 1965, under the airport capital assistance policy, how many capital assistance grants have been approved for airports in Ontario, and in what amount, and for which municipalities have these grants been approved?

2. How much has been paid on the grants?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Since March 25, 1965, there have been seven capital assistance grants aproved for airport improvements in Ontario. The following list indicates the municipalities for which the assistance grants have been aproved and the amount of the grant. Elliot Lake, $230,000.00; Midland, $38,070,00; Niagara district (passenger-operations bldg.), $41,985.00; Peterborough, $596,000.00; Sarnia (passenger-operations bldg.), $30,562.50; South Porcupine (seaplane base), $26,920.00; Waterloo-Wellington, $374,000.00.

2. The following amounts have been paid on the grants. Elliot Lake, $779.52; Niagara district, $22,610.76; Peterborough, $149,276.27; South Porcupine, $26,920.00; Waterloo-Wellington, $369,709.52.

ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE BOARD, INDUSTRY DEPARTMENT

Question No. 750—Mr. Hales:

1. What are the names of the members of the adjustment assistance board of the Department of Industry?

2. Who is chairman of the board?

3. Who is secretary of the board?

4. How many meetings have they held since its inception?

5. Are minutes kept of these meetings and, if so, are they available to members of parliament?

6. How many people are employed by the board and how many are there in each salary category?

7. How many loans have they approved in each of the following categories (a) $10,000-$25,000 (b) $25,000-$50,000 (c) $50,000-$75,000 (d) $75,000-$100,000 (e) $100,000 and over?

8. What is the rate of interest charged for these loans and what is the duration of the loans?

9. Are any loans in default?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Professor V. W. Bladen, University of Toronto. Mr. R. B. Bryce, Deputy Minister, Department of Finance. Mr. G. V. Haythorne, Deputy Minister, Department of Labour. Mr. R. C. Labarge, Deputy Minister, Customs & Excise Division, Department of National Revenue. Mr. S. S. Reisman, Deputy Minister, Department of Industry. Mr. J. H. Warren, Deputy Minister, Department of Trade & Commerce.

2. Professor V. W. Bladen.

3. Mr. C. D. Arthur.

4. Thirty.

5. Yes, minutes are kept, however, it is not in the public interest to release any of these minutes since activities of the adjustment assistance board with respect to its borrowers are of a confidential nature and the terms and conditions of loans are considered to be "commercial confidential".

6. None. Support for the board's activities is provided by staff of the Department of Industry.

7.

Loan categories	Number approved
(a) $ 10,000—$ 25,000	1
(b) 25,000— 50,000	2
(c) 50,000— 75,000	5
(d) 75,000— 100,000	2
(e) 100,000 and over	31
Total	41

8. A rate of interest of 6 per cent per annum was charged on loans made by the board between August 11, 1965 and October 18, 1967. Since October 19, 1967 an interest rate of 7¼ per cent has been charged. The duration of loans made by the board may be up to 20 years depending upon the circumstances.

9. No.

UNCOLLECTABLE STUDENT LOANS

Question No. 751—Mr. Hales:

1. How many student loans have been returned to the federal government from chartered banks as uncollectable?

2. For what amounts are these loans?

3. What amount in student loans has the government written off?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. As of October 31, 1967, 226 loss claims for a total of $125,403 have been paid. As of the same date an additional 155 claims for $94,657 had been received but were still being discussed with the banks. This latter group of claims includes loans which can be brought back into good standing and on which no claim payment will be required.

3. None.

*COMPENSATION TO OWNERS OF COIN OPERATED MACHINES

Question No. 753—Mr. Southam:

In view of the federal government's program of conversion from silver coinage to nickel coinage, what plans, if any, has the government made to compensate owners of some 450,000 coin-operated machines across Canada who will be faced with a heavy economic burden in the change over to nickel coinage operated equipment?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Member of the Administration): The government at present is investigating the possible costs of the change-over to the vending machine industry and has not yet made a decision on the industry's request for compensation.

[English]

QUEBEC BRANCH, MANPOWER DEPARTMENT

Question No. 756—Mr. Godin:

1. What cities and parishes are served by the Quebec Branch of the federal Department of Manpower and Immigration?

2. (a) Who is the head of this Branch (b) how many unemployed persons are registered at this Branch (c) how many of these unemployed persons have undertaken studies and are receiving grants from the federal government?

[Translation]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Charlesbourg, Loretteville, Ste-Foy, Beauport, Courville, Lac Delage, Montmorency, Orsainville, Ville-Vanier, Notre Dame de Lorette, L'Ancienne-Lorette, St-Félix du Cap Rouge, Tewkesbury, Charlesbourg-Est, Lac St. Charles, St-Gabriel de Valcartier, St-Michel-Archange, Beaulieu, Beaupré, Lac St-Joseph, Château-Richer, Ste-Brigitte de Laval, Ste-Famille, St-François, St-Pierre, Lac Sergent, Deschambault, Fossambault Sur Le Lac, St-Basile-Sud, St-Casimir-Est, St-Marc des Carriers, Notre Dame de Portneuf, St-Augustin de Desmaures, Ste-Catherine, St-Gilbert, St-Joseph de Deschambault, Ste-Jeanne de Pont Rouge, Shannon, Giffard, Québec, Sillery, Bélair, Duberger, Les Saules, Notre Dame des Laurentides, Val St-Michel, Villeneuve, St-Émile, St. Dunstan du Lac Beauport, Stoneham, St-Féréol, Charlesbourg-Ouest, St-Gabriel Ouest, St-Joachim, Ste-Thérèse de Lisieux, Neufchatel, Ste-Anne de Beaupré, St-Jean de Boischatel, L'Ange-Gardien, St-Tite des Caps, St-Jean, St-Laurent, Donnoconna, Portneuf, Pont-Rouge, St-Alban, St-Casimir, St-Charles des Girondines, St-Ubald, Pointe-aux-Trembles, St-Basile, Ste-Christine, St-Thurbide, Cap Santé, St-Leonard de Portneuf.

2. (a) The Manager of the Canada Manpower Centre in Quebec City is Stanislas Picard. (b) Total number of people registered for new employment, as of 31 October, 1967, was 13,343. This figure includes those having full-time, part-time and casual employment as well as those who are unemployed. (c) Of a total of 655 persons in full-time training under the Occupational Training for Adults scheme, 580 were receiving allowances as of 30 November, 1967.

[English]

ROAD TO PUBLIC WHARF, BIG BRAS D'OR, N.S.

Question No. 757—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Did officials of the Department of Public Works discuss improvements to the road to the public wharf at Big Bras d'Or, Nova Scotia, with officials of the Department of Highways for the province of Nova Scotia and, if so, on what date?

2. Did the provincial Department of Highways indicate they would be willing to take over ownership of this road and future maintenance if the Department of Public Works carried out certain immediate improvements?

3. Did the Department of Public Works carry out the certain improvements requested and, if not, for what reason?

4. Was a property survey completed of the area in question and, if so, on what date was such a survey completed?

5. Have negotiations with the Department of Highways for the province of Nova Scotia been started to work out an agreement for the take-over of this road?

6. When is it anticipated that the agreement will be made?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes, on January 27, 1965, by letter.

2. Yes.

3. The improvements entail the widening of the road, but so far it has not been possible to complete the acquisition of the additional land.

4. The survey documents have not been received from the provincial land surveyor.

5. Yes.

6. When the property acquisition and the road improvements have been completed.

ISSUE OF COIN SETS, 1967

Question No. 765—Mr. McCleave:

1. Did the Royal Canadian Mint issue a coin set costing approximately $40 for 1967?

2. Were sales of such discontinued on September 30 and, if so, for what reason?

3. How many sets were sold?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. Yes. The Royal Canadian Mint issued a centennial gold presentation set consisting of a $20 gold coin and one each of all the subsidiary coins from one cent to one dollar. These seven coins were enclosed in a genuine black morocco leather case and sold for $40.

2. The mint commenced accepting orders for this set in early May, 1966. It discontinued the acceptance of orders on 30 September, 1967. Orders were accepted for a period of 17 months. Both the opening and closing dates were well publicized in all numismatic newspapers and by the press across Canada.

The sale was discontinued to afford the mint a three month period in which to manufacture and process all orders received and also to tool up and prepare for 1968 coinage. It was also necessary to give the box manufacturer an opportunity to make deliveries before the end of the calendar year, if at all possible.

3. Approximately 300,000 sets were sold.

AGE LIMITS FOR OVERSEAS TEACHERS, DEFENCE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 766—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. In engaging teaching staff for schools operated overseas by the Department of National Defence, is it the policy of the department to accept applications from male teachers up to the age of sixty, but to place an age limit of forty on female applicants?

2. If so, what is the reason for this differentiation?

3. Have any complaints been received from teachers or other organizations in respect of the differentiation?

4. If so, what action has been taken by the department in respect of such complaints?

5. Does a similar differentiation exist in respect of schools operated within Canada by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes.

2. The age differential was established after D.N.D. dependants' schools overseas were in operation for several years and the limitations were imposed after a period of practical experience in the overseas environment.

3. Yes.

4. Although consideration has been given to eliminating the age differential between male and female applicants it is not intended to change the existing age limits at this time.

5. No.

TRANSFERS FROM DEFENCE DEPARTMENT TO TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Question No. 779—Mr. Orlikow:

1. As of September 19, 1967, how many persons in the Department of National Defence moved to the Department of Transport?

2. Of these, how many were employed in the information and/or public relations services of the Department of National Defence?

3. Of these, how many were military personnel?

4. Of those who moved, how many years of service with the Department of National Defence did each have?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. As of September 19, 1967, six persons in the Department of National Defence moved to the Department of Transport.

2. None.

3. None.

4. Mr. W. M. Lee, 24 years two months; Miss M. M. M. Bulger, four years, five months; Mr. R. G. Edwards, two years, eleven months; Mr. R. G. Gairnes, one year, one half month; Mr. R. J. McDowall, two months; Mr. R. P. Stone, one month.

Orders for Returns

DUTIES OF LLOYD FRANCIS AT UN

Question No. 800—Mr. Faulkner:

1. What were the duties of Lloyd Francis at the 22nd general assembly at the UN?

2. How much time did he spend in connection with these duties?

3. How much was he paid for his services?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. He is serving as the Canadian representative on the fifth (administrative and budgetary) committee.

2. His duties have engaged his full time attention since the commencement of the current session on September 19, 1967, and will continue to do so until the end of the session, on or about December 19, 1967.

3. He receives no salary for service as a member of the Canadian delegation to the general assembly, but is reimbursed for actual expenses.

CONSULTANTS' STUDY, CONSUMER AFFAIRS

Question No. 819—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. What was the amount allotted from Treasury Board Vote 5 for contingencies on or about October 26, 1967, for the expenses of consultant's study on objectives of the federal government in the area of consumer affairs?

2. What amount has been actually expended?

3. What, in detail, was the purpose of the study?

4. What persons, firms or corporations were retained as consultants to undertake the study?

5. Did such consultants retain other agencies, persons, firms or corporations to assist in the study?

6. If so, what are their names?

7. Has the study been completed?

8. If so, when will it be laid on the Table of the House?

9. If not, when is it expected to be completed?

10. Why was it considered necessary that these expenses be paid from Treasury Board Vote 5 for contingencies?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General):
1. $70,000.

2. Nil; First statement expected by mid December.

3. The proposed study is designed to assist the department in defining a government wide consumer affairs program and in formulating its own programs, organization and planning, budgeting and information systems within that framework.

4. Operations Research Incorporated were retained as consultants.

5. No.

[Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne).]

6. N/A

7. No.

8. N/A

9. July 15, 1968.

10. The information of a consumer affairs branch was not anticipated when main estimates for the department were prepared in 1966; therefore funds were not provided in the main estimates for any organization or work connected with the formation of the consumer affairs branch.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

COST OF FEDERAL ADVERTISING

Question No. 448—Mr. Mather:

1. What, in dollars, was the amount of federal advertising placed through advertising agencies in Canada in 1966?

2. What, in dollars, was the commission paid to the advertising agencies?

3. Who were the advertising agencies?

Return tabled.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT ON POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 463—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Since the return was tabled to question no. 2,323 of the last session of Parliament on February 15, 1967, regarding implementation of the list of recommendations appearing from pages 325 to 355 of the report of the Hon. Mr. Justice André Montpetit on working conditions in the Post Office Department, how many of such recommendations have since been (a) implemented (b) partially implemented (c) rejected, in each case specifying which ones?

2. What recommendations are still under consideration and in respect of these, when is it anticipated that a decision may be reached?

Return tabled.

PENITENTIARY STAFF

Question No. 665—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What was the total number of inmates in federal penitentiaries as of the last date for which the annual report was prepared?

2. What was the total staff employed in these penitentiaries and, of these, how many are guards, teachers, psychologists, psychiatrists, etc.?

3. What qualifications are required for the professional staff?

4. What are the minimum qualifications for guards employed in penitentiaries?

5. Is there a compulsory training course for people hired as guards and, if so, what type of course, and how long does it take to complete this course?

Return tabled.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO INCREASE INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTIVITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that productivity in Canada has remained stationary during the past 12 months, a situation similar to that which brought about the present economic crisis in Great Britain, does the government intend to introduce any measures to induce industry to correct this situation before we recess for the Christmas holiday, in view of the fact that we will not be returning until the latter part of January ?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, once again I am afraid I am not able to accept completely the premise on which the question was based, but if there are any additional measures to those being taken in this field they will be announced as soon as possible. I am not sure where my hon. friend got the information that we are not coming back until the third week in January.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary question, would the Prime Minister do me the honour of getting in touch with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and he will receive exactly the information I received, which will tell him my statement is correct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should put his question.

Mr. Hees: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I continue with my question. Would the Prime Minister not agree that whatever the government has been doing during the past 12 months it has been singularly unsuccessful in improving productivity, and would the government not now take action to correct this situation?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for York South.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister in respect of an earlier question regarding the economic crisis. Has the economic crisis in Canada become so much more severe over the week end that members of the cabinet have decided to camouflage their identity?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there is no economic crisis.

UNITED NATIONS

VIET NAM—PROPOSED DISCUSSION IN SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask if he can inform the house whether Canada has participated in any discussions at the United Nations or elsewhere concerning the suggestion that the problems in respect of the war in Viet Nam be brought before the security council. If so, what has been Canada's position on this subject?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think, Mr. Speaker, there have been some informal discussions among members of the security council on this matter. I believe also some consideration has been given by the Secretary General to the possibility of representatives of North Viet Nam appearing. I shall be glad to take my hon. friend's question as notice and perhaps be able to give a more specific reply tomorrow.

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPLICATION TO STAFF OF BILINGUAL BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue in his capacity of President of the Treasury Board.

Did the minister receive a request signed by hon. members from all parties in the house, as well as by parliament employees, asking that the 7 per cent bonus be granted to bilingual employees? In the affirmative, is it the intention of the minister to comply with that request?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): To my knowledge I have not received such a petition. I should point out once again that the matter is one for Mr. Speaker, and not for me.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—POSSIBLE MEDIATION BY CANADA IN CIVIL DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the right hon. Prime Minister; it follows on one I asked last week. In the absence of any official communiqué or news report could the Prime Minister inform the house whether his talks with the foreign minister of Nigeria touched on the civil war in that country and the possibility of Canadian mediation in that dispute?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, that matter came up. The foreign minister expressed the hope that the civil conflict would end very shortly and that Nigerian unity would be restored and peace with it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MAINTENANCE OF ETHNIC PRESS DIVISION IN STATE SECRETARY'S DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. I should like to ask her whether she or the government have given orders to the staff of the ethnic press division in her department that they should seek other employment because of the disbanding of that section.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, I know nothing at all about that.

Mr. Starr: Is there any intention on the part of the government to disband that section in the Department of the Secretary of State?

Miss LaMarsh: None whatsoever.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUESTS FOR DISTRIBUTION OF STUDY PAPERS ON HOUSE LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman will understand why I was unable to give him notice of it. In view of the fact that the statement hereinafter referred to is already in the hands of the press, would the Prime Minister be willing to provide for the benefit of members the alleged study paper dealing with the Leader of the Opposition? In addition, would a copy be sent to the Leader of the Opposition for his guidance in the hope that this may lead to some understanding of the extraordinary political acrobatics of this government?

[Mr. Benson.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I would be very glad indeed to do that, Mr. Speaker. It is a very interesting academic exercise.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister on the matter of the study or position papers. Would the Prime Minister also let the house have a position paper on the various Liberal hopefuls?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. And I wonder whether my hon. friends on the other side would send me a copy of the analyses I am sure they have made over the years of my character and achievements.

PARLIAMENT HILL

INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE OF CENTENNIAL FLAME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the centennial flame has caught the imagination of a great many people in Canada, has the Prime Minister received representations from people and organizations requesting that the centennial flame be maintained in perpetuity?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I have received representations, including representations from many members of the house on this side and others. I agree that the flame should become the symbol of our first centennial year and should not be extinguished. Perhaps it would be desirable to re-light it as we enter our second centennial year.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

When we look at that flame, we see a blue part. Would it be possible to put out only that part and maintain the other?

[English]

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO PROMOTION OF FURTHER SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The report he gave us is very encouraging, but what the farmers really want to know is whether they can eventually get any of their grain to the markets of the world.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that is relatively easy to answer, because eventually they will. I imagine they are a little more concerned than that. What they would like is to have their wheat moved to the markets of the world as quickly as possible. While I was in Europe I did take the opportunity to speak to all the wheat purchasing agencies concerned and was glad to have confirmed that Canadian wheat is held in high regard for blending purposes by all these countries. I think hon. members can assume that these countries will continue to take our wheat at the normal levels.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the recent sale of wheat by France to mainland China have the effect of reducing the sale of Canadian wheat to that country?

Mr. Winters: I would not think so, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he now follow the suggestion I made earlier in the day, that he outline to the house whether he was able to develop any new markets for Canadian wheat or extend any existing markets?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, negotiations of this kind take some time, but I think it is fair to say that as a result of the visit I made Canadian wheat will be sold in some of the countries I visited.

Mr. Hees: I take it the minister really has no concrete idea as to whether we will be able to make any important move to build up our wheat sales in order to correct the situation that has developed this year as a result of the serious decline in wheat sales?

Mr. Winters: That is not correct, Mr. Speaker. I have some concrete ideas, and in due course I hope to be able to inform the house about some of them.

PROPOSED PREFERENTIAL POLICY FOR DEVELOPING NATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Earlier today he referred to temporary trade preferences for the developing nations. Would the minister say whether Canada intends to adopt or propose a policy at the UNCTAD meeting in February promoting preferential buying from the developing nations, as was recommended at the NATO conference?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we will not be proposing such a program. We will be supporting a program along the lines I advocated in the remarks I made at GATT; that is, a preferential program on a temporary and non-discriminatory basis so the weight will be borne by all developed countries. I made one or two other reservations. We will approach it in a spirit of harmony, and if preferences are the wish of all or the majority of the participating countries, Canada will go along.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT BY CHINA OF CANADIAN OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is on a related matter and is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is based on a very interesting section of the minister's speech to the GATT conference in which he said:

> There are opportunities to make further progress on a pragmatic basis with individual countries.

Does this mean that the government now intends to make an offer or invitation to the republic of China on the mainland for the setting up of a trading office to facilitate the sale of goods to this country?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mainland China is a very valued trading partner. Members of the wheat board are currently in Canton endeavouring to negotiate an extension of the wheat purchase arrangements under the over-all contract. I am hopeful that in due course a successful result will ensue.

As part of our trading arrangements we do exchange trade in other goods, and we should like that flow to increase. The specific means to achieve that will have to be worked out having regard to the political circumstances between the two countries.

Mr. Hamilton: To be very specific, I think some 22 nations have granted China the right to set up trade offices in their countries. On several occasions in the past I have asked about the policy of the government in this regard but I have never been able to get a precise answer. In view of the very promising statement made by the minister in Geneva on November 22, will he not make an effort now to invite the Chinese to set up a trade office here so Canadian businessmen can meet with officials of that country in this country instead of travelling all the way to China?

Mr. Winters: That is a matter to which we will have to give consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to those directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which I should like to pose to the Prime Minister. In view of the minister's replies does the Prime Minister think now might be an appropriate time to commence negotiations for an exchange of diplomatic relations with Peking China?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not think this would be the most appropriate moment, Mr. Speaker.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING BREATHALIZER TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wished to address to the Minister of Justice. Perhaps in his absence somebody else might take it as notice. Having in mind the minister's earlier statement in respect of amendments to the Criminal Code to provide for a mandatory test for drinking drivers, can it be indicated when it is hoped to introduce legislation on that point, particularly having in mind the fact that similar action in Great Britain recently has reduced the death rate on the roads by 40 per cent?

[Mr. Winters.]

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO CLOSING OF POOL ACCOUNTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I welcome him back to this low quota, low delivery and low income area. I should like to know when we may expect the 1966-67 wheat pool accounts to be closed off, and whether an attempt will be made to close them off as early as or earlier than last year.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the observation about low income is relative. I have been in some countries recently where they would enjoy the standard of living we have in Canada. As to the matter of the date of the closing off of wheat pool accounts, I will take the question as notice and answer it in due course.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR CONTINUED PRODUCTION OF HALF DOLLAR AND DOLLAR COINS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since the government discontinued minting of 1967 50-cent pieces in July, and $1 pieces in September, and Canadians are forced now to pay as high as $3 for a 1967 Canadian 50-cent piece, will the minister reconsider this decision and again mint these Canadian coins so Canadians will not have to pay this exorbitant price?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I will take note of the hon. member's suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING INCREASED FISCAL POWERS OF YUKON COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the repeated indications by the Yukon legislative council that they desire to institute formal discussions with the federal government relating to increasing the fiscal powers of the council, will the Prime Minister indicate to the house whether the government is prepared to co-operate by participating in such talks with the objective of increasing those powers, and introducing appropriate amendments to the Yukon Act?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss this matter with the minister, who in due course will make a statement in this regard.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—PRESENCE OF FEDERAL MEMBERS AT DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement this morning that the premier of Prince Edward Island will be meeting with the Prime Minister tomorrow to discuss the slowdown in the construction of the Prince Edward Island causeway, will the Prime Minister consider inviting members of parliament representing Prince Edward Island to that meeting in view of their interest in this question?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to convey the results of that discussion to my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Can he advise whether Colonel Edward Churchill is now studying the feasibility of placing hovercraft on the Borden-Tormentine run, and whether these are being considered as replacements for existing ferries or as a substitute for the still non-existent causeway?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, Colonel Churchill is directing the consultant firm examining all possible ways of establishing a crossing from Prince Edward Island to the mainland.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO REGULATION OF CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government contemplating the placing of either severe restrictions or an outright ban on cigarette advertising on radio and television?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): None at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPRESENTATION AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR SCIENTIFIC PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether he can answer today the question I asked on Friday in respect of the charge of the professional institute that the decision of the government not to pay the promised increase to our scientific staff will mean large scale resignations.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have just received a rather lengthy report in this regard, and I should like to condense it and perhaps answer my hon. friend's question tomorrow.

POLLUTION

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED EXPENDITURE TO CONTROL WATER POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will he tell the house whether the $50 million assault on water pollution which was to have accompanied the passage of a proposed new water act has been scrapped as part of government spending cuts?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, personally I was hearing for the first time about a specific amount of $50 million to be affected to the fight against water pollution. We would have liked to dispose of such a fund, of course, but it is not essential.

However, this is a good opportunity to say that next year my department will earmark $48 million for its water resources branch, and out of that amount $21 million will be for oceanography and $9 million to pollution in particular. Other departments contribute also to that undertaking. I feel that this newspaper report should not be given the dramatic importance it seems to have at first sight.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE TO U.S. OF ARMS FOR USE IN VIET NAM

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the dreadful suffering of the people of Viet Nam will the government of Canada reconsider its policy of selling arms to the United States, some of which are used in that country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We do not intend to abrogate our defence sharing agreement with the United States.

URANIUM

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING SALE TO FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. During his recent extensive trade tour did he have an opportunity to discuss the sale of uranium to France?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I had no direct opportunity to talk with the French government during this visit. My purpose in being in Paris was to attend the O.E.C.D. meeting, which of course was attended by some of the ministers of France. I did on one occasion at lunch have an opportunity to discuss uranium in a general way, but there are no changes in the circumstances.

Mr. Hales: Were those discussions along any other lines than the use of uranium for peaceful purposes?

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Speaker; those are still the rules of the game.

OLD AGE SECURITY

ADJUSTMENT OF INCOME SUPPLEMENT TO PROVIDE MINIMUM AMOUNT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister yet found a way to make provision for old age pensioners who are receiving the guaranteed income supplement, when their income drops during the calendar year, to receive an immediate adjustment to restore their income to the minimum provided by the law as it now stands?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this question has been asked two or three times, may I ask the minister whether he is working on this matter?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think it will be possible to make any legislative changes in the law in the present session of parliament. We do have under consideration certain changes which may be necessary as a result of our experience in administering this large program, but we do not think we will have the opportunity to take the necessary steps in this session.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATION OF DRAFT LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and ask him whether the draft of the revised Indian Act has yet been prepared and sent to the various band councils across the nation.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to present it first in the house and then take it to the Indian bands. The draft is just about completed, and I hope that early in the new year we might distribute it first here and then to the bands and other interested parties in Canada.

Mr. Howard: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any intention to delay the second reading of the bill for a reasonably long period of time until the various band councils and other interested people have an opportunity to express their views on the proposals?

Mr. Laing: I am somewhat fearful that the distribution of the act among the Indian bands and their consultation might take more than a reasonable amount of time.

INQUIRY AS TO HOUSING PROGRAM ON RESERVATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the reported change from a five year to a seven year housing program, can the minister say whether it is planned to have these houses serviced with water and sewerage at the conclusion of the seven years?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we could give such an assurance, because certain areas simply do not lend themselves to the introduction of these services.

I might say, with reference to the original five year plan, that we have not quite been keeping pace with the plan, and its extension to seven years is not as serious as it seems. I think we are doing a reasonably good job in housing on the Indian reservations, but I cannot give the hon. member the assurance he requests with respect to the provision of sewerage and water facilities.

Mr. Simpson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made by the deputy minister in Tuktoyaktuk a year ago, that all the Eskimo and Indian houses would be provided with sewers and water within five years, has there been a change in the program since then?

Mr. Laing: I am quite certain that if the deputy minister made that statement, and I cannot recall whether or not he made it, he was not referring to the Indian residents in the provincial areas of Canada.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Can the minister inform us whether the areas in which the house construction program has been slowed down have already been designated, or is this matter to be negotiated?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I should like to explain to the house that the co-operation of Indian bands is required in all these instances, and those which have been most energetic have received consideration before the others. I think this is also to be expected in the future.

BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Friday, December 8, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith (page 5118).

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, Canadians today learned that the high command of the present government, having satisfied itself that the nation's business was in order, has issued a position paper on the Leader of the Opposition—a most interesting exercise. Evidently a bankrupt government prefers to substitute political ploys for public policy. One adjective used to describe the hon. gentleman was "reluctant". In truth, that word is not only a description of the present government but is its very definition. I ask every member in every corner of the house: What are the people of Canada saying today with reference to the word "reluctant"? What other government in the history of this country has been more reluctant to defend, lead and define the federal cause, and more reluctant to act in the face of rampant inflation and the nation's most serious housing crisis?

Mr. Chrétien: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: The minister says "oh, oh". Will he deny that the part of the country he represents is deeply affected by this crisis?

Mr. Chrétien: These matters will be dealt with at the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Grafftey: That is the trouble; instead of acting the government is calling conferences.

Mr. Chrétien: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is the last member to criticize me for referring to the federal-provincial conference, because he proposes a secretariat to organize more of these meetings.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of privilege.

The Deputy Speaker: The minister must state his question of privilege.

Mr. Grafftey: One of the reasons that this government is losing the confidence of the people is that they feel that conferences, symposiums, meetings and committee hearings replace action. What we really want is action, and if the minister thinks that what we are getting in the west block is action he has a lot to learn about government inaction. The government has called the Leader of the Opposition "reluctant". It is noteworthy that they have the time to spend on political ploys of this sort. What government has been more reluctant to act in the face of rampant inflation?

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member has said that already. When will he turn the page?

Mr. Grafftey: I will say it again and again. The hon. member who is supposed to be a parliamentary secretary sits here day in and day out and heckles.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): He sits on his brain.

Mr. Grafftey: Some of the problems facing the government are rampant inflation, a most serious housing crisis, air, water and soil pollution, urban blight, development and redevelopment, rising interest rates, and rising unemployment. If the present Liberal government would spend less time analysing the new Progressive Conservative leader and more time dealing with the problems of the country, Canadians would not be losing confidence in the government as fast as they are. The government has forgotten one simple fact relating to progressive leadership.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Only one?

Mr. Grafftey: Leadership by exhortation and speech making is useless unless it is coupled with leadership by example. The supporters of the government seem to be very irritable today. They are yelling. Perhaps they are worried. Perhaps during the week end they went back to their ridings where some of their constituents have spoken to them.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Did the hon. member say "yelling" or "yellow"?

Mr. Grafftey: Leadership by speech making and exhortation never takes the place of leadership by example. What have been the effects of the government's policies in general and this so-called budget in particular? It can be admitted that productivity cannot withstand a large corporation tax hike. I will concede that, in view of the fact that the government's policies have already seriously handicapped Canada's competitive position and national productivity.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

One of the measures taken by the government in the latest budget was to raise the income tax. Who will get it in the neck again? I wish the Minister of Finance would listen. Who will get it in the neck again?

Mr. Sharp: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Grafftey: Oh, no, not the Minister of Finance. It will be those who are least able to pay. This condition already exists in this country and that is why, in spite of our so-called second highest standard of living in the world, these people are not getting their share of the national wealth.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Who suffers most from present economic conditions when, coupled with another increase in personal income tax, we have poor housing, a record high cost of living, high interest rates and high unemployment? The answer is the silent, voiceless poor, those on fixed and shrinking incomes who are often locked in grinding poverty. These people invariably are not assisted by public or private social welfare measures. Our party and our leader believe in the quality of Canadian life. I ask this government, what does the quality of Canadian life or democracy mean to the 35 per cent of our population living in deprivation, destitution or poverty?

Mr. Byrne: You are talking about six or seven years ago.

Mr. Grafftey: Does the hon. member get an extra salary for heckling? I know he is not what one would term the most distinguished member.

Mr. Byrne: I am just stating facts.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member has the reputation of being about the poorest speech interrupter. Has he ever read Hansard and noted his interruptions? If the hon. member does not mind my saying so, he has not too high an I.Q.

Mr. Byrne: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: If I could have the assistance of the Chair I should like to continue this speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Kootenay East on a point of order.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, at least when I make a speech I do not read it word for word as the hon. member appears to be doing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Grafftey: What does the quality of Canadian life, or democracy mean to our 500,000 rural families who live on an annual income of less than $2,000? Does this budget or what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is doing help those people? What about the quality of Canadian life when the Treasury Board cuts a billion dollars off the estimates? We are going to examine the question of whether or not they have really done so. We already have a shortage of doctors and we are going to have a greater shortage as the years go by. In spite of this, one of first cut-backs made was the proposed expansion of medical schools. What about the quality of Canadian life when we cut back on research, one thing a viable nation needs to spend more and more upon? What a way to run a country.

I ask every member in this house, is not one of the main functions of government to help and encourage the dispossessed? In a democracy, is not one of the main functions of government to promote equality of opportunity? I ask again, what are the effects of the government's policies on those already up against it? Need I say more?

When a government, as a result of misjudgment and miscalculation, is obliged to cut $1 billion from the estimates, even though it is mostly a public relations gimmick, it does not create stability either at the local or national levels. The effect on those who had made plans for the future based on legitimate expectations is incalculable. In an area where stability is required the government has unwittingly encouraged havoc and chaos.

I wish to touch upon two points which in my view are guide lines to help avoid a similar mess in the future. They are, first, the establishment of priorities in the social and economic fields and, second, constitutional revision and modernization. What about the establishment of priorities? I admit that a lot of loose talk has surrounded this subject. Invoking the principle often sounds like the old, I am for motherhood speech. Surely, however, the time has come to be specific. This government has consistently refused to plan its own priorities on the one hand and priorities with the provinces on the other hand. Coupled with this, sir, it is attempting to be all things to all men and do everything at once, but now the chickens have come home to roost.

As I have already said, this government has systematically destroyed its options for manoeuvre. What greater indictment could be made of a government? After all, we realize that since government is getting bigger and bigger a lot of decision-making power is left to our very excellent bureaucracy. However, decision-making power at the top level is what a government must have and should exercise. What greater indictment can we make of the government, in the face of the chaotic economic situation this nation faces, than the fact it has systematically destroyed its options for manoeuvre? Rather than tying down inflation the government has tied its own hands behind its back. Rather than build viable economic policies the government has built itself into a box. If the federal authority would only exercise the leadership expected of it and co-operate with the provinces in establishing priorities, it is my belief that many would be pleasantly surprised by the degree of agreement we would find.

Canadians recognize that while governments cannot be run completely like businesses some sound business principles must be brought into governmental affairs. The short and long term planning of priorities, agreeing on what must be done first, is one of those principles, a principle forgotten by this administration. The alternative is doing what this government has done, doing everything badly all at once while the nation goes broke.

Mr. Chrétien: May I ask a question?

Mr. Grafftey: I ask the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Chrétien), is the nation not almost broke?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) allow me a question?

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: I will answer questions at the end of my speech. I wish to turn now to constitutional revision. The present Minister of Finance, by calling for the redistribution of taxing powers and general tax reforms before we have a basic constitutional revision and allocation of modern powers and problems to the appropriate level of government, is putting the cart before the horse. This government has consistently refused, as I have already said, to defend and lead the federal cause. Before we have constitutional modernization we must have a dialogue at the national level here in Ottawa in order to deal with national unity and national problems. When will this government act? When are they going to act? We have had the B and B commission, we have had the Quebec legislative committee, we have had the provinces calling a confederation for tomorrow conference, we have had conferences all over the country dealing with something with which the federal authority should deal, national unity and national problems. Why is there this mandarin suspicion of politicians on the part of the present government? Whether you like it or not, whether you believe you know what is best for the people, constitutions and political documents.

You are going to have to have the co-operation of every member of this house in a dialogue in which every member of the house can take part, rather than present us with a fait accompli. I suggest this is one of the things upon which this government is going to have to act. Canadians all over the country are sick and tired of the buck passing between Ottawa and the provinces and the fact that no level of government is dealing effectively with many of the modern problems facing our young nation. I repeat those problems. There is inflation. Ten years ago there was no doubt in the world it was the federal authority that had jurisdiction over inflation and the cost of living. But now, the minister passes the buck and Canadians watch a government that refuses to take the first step to modernize the constitution pass the buck back to the provinces. No level of government seems to be tackling these problems.

There is housing. Hon. members opposite will tell me there is a meeting going on down the hall with the premiers of the provinces.

Mr. Chrétien: Are you against that?

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Grafftey: Holding meetings does not take the place of action. The government is only now meeting with the provinces and it should have taken action one or two years ago. No government is dealing effectively with air, water and soil pollution, with urban blight, development and redevelopment, with highway deaths and injuries, with metro problems and traffic communication. Which level of government is dealing with these modern problems effectively, Mr. Speaker, while hon. members opposite sit on their partisan hands and do not let a national political dialogue take place? French and English speaking Caandians alike do not care as long as some level of government gets on with the job.

As we modernize our constitution we shall obviously find many questions old and new that require joint action, which in turn will require the improvement of consultative machinery between Ottawa and the provinces. ARDA and the resources experience in my view set good precedents in this regard.

Many government supporters point to all of the federal-provincial conferences that have been held. But, Mr. Speaker, these conferences are often held far too late when the damage has been done, as is the case with the one now being held in a crisis atmosphere. The conference the government is holding now should have been held one or two years ago. The government is like a rudderless ship going from crisis to crisis as the people lose confidence in it. If the government does not start establishing priorities, modernizing the constitution and improving consultative machinery with the provinces, then if I may paraphrase the remarks of my leader, Canadians will continue to feel that keeping this government in office is far too high a price to expect the people to pay.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Would the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi allow me just one question? How can he say that the government is holding too many federal-provincial conferences and by the same token suggest that the federal government should discuss priorities and Canadian unity with provincial governments? Does he ignore completely the federal-provincial conference which will be taking place in January with regard to the Bill of Rights?

Mr. Grafftey: Unfortunately, the minister has once again misinterpreted my speech. I suggested nothing of the sort. At last, problems will be discussed with the provinces. But what I said, and I repeat it, is that a national dialogue must be initiated here in Ottawa with all political parties.

That is not what I said and the hon. member misinterpreted my speech.

Mr. J. R. Comtois (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely wonder if the hon. members opposite are serious when they move a non-confidence motion against the government in the following words:

> This house regrets that the government by its vacillation and its failure to manage the economic and financial affairs of the country in a responsible manner has created a situation of instability and uncertainty, and has now proposed an increase in taxes to meet governmental extravagance, thus contributing to the inflationary pressures of the economy.

The government is charged with vacillation and failure to manage the economic and financial affairs of the country.

Let us look back together on the actions of this government. Since its accession to power, the government has tried as had promised to apply the main reforms required to develop a system of social security in Canada. On our recommendation, parliament has also authorized an appreciable increase of contributions to what is now top priority in Canada, higher education. That was done through expenditures and a special tax transfer to the provinces. We have deliberately transferred additional resources to the provincial governments so as to enable them and their municipalities to meet the constantly increasing services required of them. We have put forward measures designed to promote scientific research, industrial development and the recovery of certain areas handicapped by a slower growth and fewer revenues than others.

We have never hidden the fact that all those reforms would require huge increases in government expenditures.

During the last fiscal year, total federal expenditures have reached $9,846 million, or 16.8 per cent of the gross national product. Five years earlier, that is in 1961-62, total expenditures represented 19.2 per cent of the gross national product and five years previously, they reached $5,126 million, or 16.4 per cent of the gross national product. Therefore, even though our expenditures have increased by 92 per cent during the last decade, they represented approximately the same percentage of the gross national product as ten years ago.

Furthermore, during that period, we have decreased our taxation rates in favour of the provinces. Besides, during the same period, parliament passed the Canada pension plan, which is not taken into consideration in those statistics. It is a separate, autonomous plan, fully financed by contributions and where, at this initial stage, contributions greatly exceed payments and make up a great investment fund which is available to the provinces in order to help them meet their capital requirements.

In its assessment of the situation, this year, bearing in mind its various commitments, namely medicare, the government decided that much more severe restraints than in the past several years, would have to be imposed upon the increase in expenditures. Those restraints are necessary if we want to curb inflationary pressures within the economy, reduce our demands on the money market and keep tax increases to a minimum. Therefore, we have chosen to maintain the increase in our budget expenditures with two exceptions—medicare and the amortization of the Expo déficit—at about 4½ per cent, a much lower rate of increase than during the three previous years. When these objectives are reached and when medicare becomes operative, then, I think, we will be able to maintain the future increases of our public expenditures at a level which increasing income from an expanding economy can meet without inflationary effects.

The federal government will have to implement a number of important programs, particularly in the fields of manpower training, research and economic development, but these will not require such a rapid and deeply-felt increase in expenditures as in the case of health and social security programs over the last ten years.

To ensure this transition, we shall have to cut back in the coming year on our programs of expenditures, always excepting medicare, to contain the rapid rate of increase that occurred lately and set a more supportable one, just as we have been trying for 18 months to adjust our rate of economic expansion.

This means, in fact, that restrictions must be imposed in several areas of government activity.

[English]

Here is a partial list, Mr. Speaker, of the programs and projects that will be affected. These were outlined in the speech of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson).

The special planning secretariat within the Privy Council office will be disbanded. Financial provision for the Company of Young Canadians will be reduced by 20 per cent. Funds provided in a number of departmental and agency budgets for emergency measures planning and organization will be scaled down substantially below the current year's levels. The operating budget for the C.B.C. in 1968-69 will be set at a level $11 million less than requested. The capital budget of the C.B.C. will be cut back from $57 million requested for 1968-1969 to $20 million or $5 million below the level for the current year. Further expansion of colour television facilities of the C.B.C. will be deferred.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The size of the Canadian Armed Forces will be reduced from the level of 107,000 reached earlier this year to an average level of 100,000 man-years in 1968-69. The growth rate in the Public Service generally through 1968-69 will be limited to approximately 2 per cent, or 5,000 additional positions.

The government has decided to defer the placing of any further new contracts for the Northumberland causeway pending a thorough review of the situation by Colonel Edward Churchill whose services have been retained as a co-ordinator of the project. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is being asked to defer starts on a number of projects originally scheduled for 1968-69.

There will be a slowdown in plans for the headquarters buildings of three departments in Ottawa, namely, external affairs, transport and national defence. The National Capital Commission will be asked to defer its plans for further driveway construction in the national capital area during 1968-69. The Department of Public Works has already been asked to defer its plans for the construction of a parking garage under parliament hill.

The Department of Agriculture has agreed to postpone the intended start of construction on a new headquarters building for the Board of Grain Commissioners in Winnipeg. Plans of the air services branch of the Department of Transport for commencing work in the construction of a third runway at the Montreal international airport will be deferred.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, all departments are affected by this program, which is vital for the preservation of a sound economy. But what are the suggestions of hon. members of the opposition, who criticize our actions in restricting our spending program and bringing about a small increase in taxes? From reading Hansard of September 27 it will be seen that the hon. member for London (Mr. Irvine) wished the government to reduce the tax on production machinery. On October 10 the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) wanted the tolls on the Saint John harbour bridge removed. On September 25, according to Hansard, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) wanted veterans pensions and disability allowances to be increased. Again on September 25, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) wanted the pensions of retired civil servants increased. On that date also the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand) wanted a C.B.C. station to be built in Saskatoon. Also, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) wanted the roads to resources program to be resumed.

On September 26 the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) asked for increased funds to be made available for house construction. On September 27 the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) asked for assistance to be given to those sectors of industry and agriculture that would be affected by the Kennedy round. Also on September 27, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) wanted the government to reverse its decision to withdraw from the HARP program. On October 3 the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) asked for access roads to be constructed through to the Alaska panhandle.

I could go on and on repeating such suggestions, Mr. Speaker. The ones I have enumerated have been made since September 25. One can realize, therefore, that the opposition lacks seriousness when making its charges. It is totally unable to suggest anything constructive.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the serious aspect of this problem.

During this fiscal year, the federal treasury is lending a net amount of $608 million to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing and other related purposes, after taking into account the reimbursements which we receive. We are also lending a net amount of $167 million to the Farm Credit Corporation. We are advancing $60 million to the War Veterans Loan Board for housing and farm credit purposes. The scope of those lending programs will have to be reduced. I am sure that we can do it without any serious results for our economy.

On the other hand, two of our large-scale lending programs will terminate in 1968, Expo, and the Municipal Development and Loan Board. So, in the future, we can expect to recover a part of the monies loaned under these two programs.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, the government is severely restricting its expenditures and its loans as part of a program to control the inflation of prices and costs and to reduce the excessive pressure being felt on our capital markets.

The tax squeeze necessary at this time may somewhat slow down the growth of our national production next year but this is better than a serious recession later on.

If we cannot, as individuals and organizations, exert the necessary restrictions on price, cost and wage increase, the only other solution will be a collective tax squeeze exerted by parliament. An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. When the government and parliament have taken the necessary steps to brake our expenses and to cover them through tax revenues, those steps must then be accompanied by a serious campaign to obtain, through volontary co-operation, a major decrease in the excessive growth rate of prices and costs, including salary increases.

The present cycle of inflationary increases in prices and costs must be brought to an end, and a way must be found towards conditions enabling all Canadians to work, to purchase, to sell and to invest, confident that with the years their money will keep its full value. To the extent where we can mobilize efficiently public opinion to fight for those objectives, and thwart the initiatives of those who clearly take advantage of their strong position in the market to obtain inflationary increases, we will achieve a higher level of employment, production and income, as well as price stability.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say this government shows that it is realistic and strong when it proposes concrete measures to maintain the continued progress of our economy.

Far from creating an unhealthy climate, as the opposition would lead us to believe, those measures tend to reassure the people of our country and to maintain their confidence in our present economic stability.

Canada's future is bright and promising. We should all be proud to be Canadians and to work untiringly for the welfare of all our fellow citizens.

The Budget—Mr. Danforth

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the introduction of this so-called mini-budget and its effect on our agricultural industry I have felt obliged as never before to stand up in this house and try to put on record for the consideration of all hon. members the plight of the agricultural industry in Canada today.

We have asked the government questions from day to day in an attempt to reflect the feelings of the farmers of Canada and it has become clear that government spokesmen have two answers to these questions and submissions. They say, first of all, that the farmers of this country never had it so good. Two examples are given in support of this contention. It is stated that the gross national agricultural product for 1966 was the largest ever achieved by this country. That is true. It is also stated that measures introduced by this government when the dairy industry was in trouble have led to a reduction in the dairy surplus, that the average return to producers of milk for manufacture has increased from $2.65 to about $4.35 per hundred. This also is true.

Spokesmen on behalf of the government have also pointed out that measures taken on behalf of the farmers have led to the provision of increased credit through increases in the funds available to the Farm Credit Corporation, and that more money is also available for farm improvement loans and farm syndicate loans. This is true. The government also claims to have carried out in a varying measure the program of subsidization of agriculture at a cost last year, I believe, of some $158 million if my memory serves me correctly. This is true.

We, the members of the Conservative party in this house, know that despite these claims agriculture in Canada is today facing what is probably its greatest financial crisis in the history of this country. In these circumstances we have, personally and as a party, refrained as much as we could from trying to take partisan advantage of the situation. We have sought to offer constructive suggestions in our speeches and in our questions we have attempted to ascertain the policy of the government in this field. In addition we have tried to take an active part in the work of the standing committee on agriculture.

In connection with the standing committee on agriculture I should like to point out that invitations to attend its sittings were extended to all farm groups across the country as well as to members of other interested organizations. These invitations were eagerly accepted, presentations were made, and members of the committee asked searching questions. My only disappointment was that I felt the proceedings were terminated just as the committee was beginning to understand the difficulties of the dairy industry, just as it was beginning to understand the problems facing the sugar beet industry, just as members were beginning to form an idea as to the government's long term policy in connection with agricultural matters.

If conditions in the industry are so good and if the government contends that farmers have never had it so good, then why has there been such a rising tide of protest within the industry of late? What led thousands of farmers to march on this capital city? What is the reason for all these emergency meetings of farmers across this country? Why has there been so much talk in the news media about the threat of strikes and sympathy for strikes among the farm population? Why have provincial meetings been held with the encouragement of provincial ministers of agriculture in an attempt to see whether some of the problems facing the industry can be solved?

Having worked and lived among farmers all my life, and as a man who is proud to be one of them, I say that these extreme measures are taken by farmers only when the economic burden is greater than they can support. Farmers are not prone to draw publicity to their plight. They are men who would prefer to run their own affairs on businesslike lines and take their fair responsibility for the operations they carry on. This being so, protest marches and threats of strikes indicate beyond a doubt to anyone who cares to look that agriculture is indeed in a precarious position. In the few minutes allotted to me I should like to present a picture of the state of agriculture across this country, starting with the west.

Everyone thought that our extensive sales of grain and our long term contracts with countries abroad would place us in a position to export all the grain we could grow for years to come without any problems whatever, and that these tremendous sales of grain would provide a substantial economic cushion to the advantage of the government. But one has only to travel in the west today and witness the gloomy picture there to think otherwise. The discouragement felt by these farmers, whose granaries are bulging with first class produce, is evidence that something is drastically wrong in the prairie provinces. One has only to visit the machine dealers, the grocers, or those who make their living selling farm supplies, fertilizers and services, for confirmation of this impression. One has only to look at the files of accounts receivable to find out that all is not going well for grain farmers in the west today. In spite of snide remarks about southern vacations and Cadillacs, there are thousands of grain farmers who are worrying about how they will provide groceries for their families in the next few months. Farmers are more worried about meeting their commitments for fertilizer or financing next year's crop than they are about vacations, investments or anything else.

This is indeed a sad state of affairs considering that the farmers have in their granaries and on their farms the very equity which should provide the finances for their necessary operations. I say to this government: When you see farmers writhing under economic pressure, when you hear of emergency farm meetings and threats of strikes, the time to take action is immediately. I maintain that an entirely new approach should be taken in the west so as to advance the credit which these farmers need. I suggest that the present limits be examined carefully with a view to determining whether they cannot be extended. Cash advances to western farmers have never been a financial liability so far as I am aware. It is my experience that when these men have received money in advance they have been the first to meet their obligations as they came due.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The time has come to look again at the financial picture in the west. There are two things these farmers need. The first is immediate financing to tide them over and the second is increased sales so that they can finance their own business through movement of the wheat and other grain they have on their farms.

Moving a little farther east, let us look at the dairy picture. It is indeed true that the price of manufactured milk has increased. It is indeed true that this part of the dairy industry is better off than it was a year or two years ago. But, Mr. Speaker, this is far from utopia. There is something drastically wrong when we see so many cream depots being shut down. There is something drastically wrong when we see so many cheese factories being shut down. There is something drastically wrong when local dairies are vanishing and are being replaced by amalgamated dairies. There is something dreadfully wrong when we see dairy herds being dispersed literally by the thousands.

The government can rightly say that dairy production is as high or higher now than it has ever been, but this is thanks to the farmers, not thanks to the government, because the farmers have increased their own efficiency, upgraded their cattle and used new techniques so that more milk can be produced with fewer cattle. However, this can only go so far. Efficiency of this kind can only block economic reverses to a degree. We will soon find ourselves in the position of a country that is no longer the producer of a vast surplus of dairy products but one which is hard-pressed to produce all its needs itself, if in fact we have not reached that stage already and are importing some of our dairy produce requirements.

What about the tobacco crop? This is of great importance to my province of Ontario and to a lesser degree to the province of Quebec. It brings in millions and millions of dollars of revenue each and every year. But what is the present position in the tobacco industry? Looking at the records we find that tobacco acreage has dropped steadily over the last ten years, both for burley and flue-cured tobacco. However, 1967 will show an increase in the number of acres planted, but anyone in the industry knows that this is due to the fact that Rhodesia, one of the main suppliers of tobacco to European markets, is no longer able to look after those markets as it normally would because of the trade sanctions in force against Rhodesia. Some of our tobacco crop is filling the gap, but we never know from day to day when trade in Rhodesian tobacco will open up once more and we may not be able to hold our present European markets. Those in the tobacco industry are not looking to the actions of this government with any keenness or enthusiasm.

What about cattle, hogs and sheep? In the cuts in expenditure which the government has announced for next year it is removing the subsidy on hogs and sheep. This subsidy is designed to encourage quality production and assists in increasing productivity. How in the world can we increase productivity when this subsidy is being removed, not at a time when the price of hogs is at the top but at a time when it is the lowest it has been for a number of years? If the government contemplated saving money through the removal of this subsidy it should have taken this step when prices were high and not at a time when the producers are encountering difficulty. This step, as a matter of fact, may deal the death blow to the sheep industry, much to the dismay of the manufacturers of Canadian wool and woollen products.

What about the fruit and vegetable industry? This industry is looking at the GATT treaty with a great deal of suspicion. It is suspicious when the government talks about freer trade among nations. Fruit and vegetable growers know that if the present small tariff protection in force against imports from other countries, chiefly our neighbour to the south, were to disappear much of the valuable Canadian fruit and vegetable industry would also disappear. We cannot compete in fruit and vegetables because of our geographical location and because of the fact that our crops come on the market at a time when overflows from the United States come in and take the major part of our own domestic market. Growers of spring lettuce, cantaloups, cauliflower, celery, greenhouse tomatoes and cucumbers are in a dire predicament today, and if the tariff protection disappears they also will disappear from the scene.

What about corn and soybeans? The price of corn is down drastically compared with what it was one year ago, and the same applies to soybeans. As a matter of fact the soybean association is pressing for a subsidized floor price for soybeans. This is the first time in years that the price of soybeans has dropped so much.

What about canning crops? They are in as dire straits as they have ever been. One may ask why. It is hard to say whether it is due to lack of policy on the part of the government or due to the policy of the government, but the fact remains that talk about a reduction in the tariffs on imports of canned fruits and vegetables and the rising costs of production in Canada have encouraged large Canadian companies to erect factories in other parts of the world where they can take advantage of lower labour costs, lower produce costs and lower production costs and then ship their goods back to Canada in a semi-manufactured or wholly manufactured state, much to the detriment of our own industries.

The government has to decide whether these industries should be retained in Canada and what methods it can use toward that end, whether it be by subsidy, tariff measures, quotas, or something else. A policy has to be determined. The agricultural industry cannot make long-range plans based on the policy announcements of this government. Farmers are not coming to the government seeking handouts. All they are asking is a political climate that will enable them to make a fair and equitable living on their own.

Farmers see announcements by labour unions involving wages of $2.50, $3, $3.50 or $4 per hour. They read announcements about parity with United States labour rates and as a result they wonder what is going to happen to themselves and to Canada. Will we become classed among the poor and the needy? Where is the farmers' status in the Canadian scheme of things?

Farming in Canada is undergoing tremendous changes. At present over 40 per cent of our farmers are part-time farmers. In order to educate and feed their families they must engage in other labour because they can no longer make enough money off the land. We must realize this fact and take steps to make it possible for them to take advantage of farm improvement loans in order to increase their own efficiency. Changes in legislation may be necessary to make it possible for farmers to get such loans even though a large part of their income at present may not be derived from agriculture.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The government has patted the farmers on the back for achieving increased efficiency and productivity, but each year farmers are getting farther and farther behind economically. There is no question that greater efficiency and increased production are being achieved. Production this year is up 9 per cent over last year. When one takes into account the reduction in the number of farms over the last 20 years one finds that during the last ten years the efficiency of the Canadian farmer has increased by 122 per cent. During that time the number of farms fell from 732,000 in 1941 to slightly more than 430,000 today. When we talk about the increased efficiency and increased production, let it be noted that in Ontario in the last ten years there was a 37 per cent increase in output with a 32 per cent decrease in farm workers on 5 per cent less land. I believe this is an efficiency of which the farmers can well be proud. There was a loss of over 100,000 farm labourers in the farm industry. The farm labour population in the last ten years has dropped from 13 per cent of the labour force to 7 per cent of the labour force.

What about the cash return to farmers? I found out that in 1964 total cash receipts for the farms of this nation were in the order of $3,500 million. In 1965 this figure had increased to $3,775 million, an increase of 8.2 per cent which was then a record high. But when we look into the situation we find that farmers last year borrowed $201 million in farm credit compared with $13 million ten years earlier. In farm improvement loans they borrowed $202 million. So in order to farm today they have extended their borrowings by $400 million.

When I speak of the total gross cash receipts of farmers today I should like to point out that I looked into something else. I asked the question, how was this achieved, and I found that in the period 1954 to 1958 the average investment of farmers in farm capital was approximately $10,679 million. I do not very often indulge in quoting statistics in my speeches, Mr. Speaker, but at this time I should like to give a little of the economic picture to show what is going on. By 1966 this investment had increased to $17,282 million or an increase, if my figures are correct, of approximately $6.5 billion. This was the increased investment of farmers in their holdings. How did their returns vary? In the period 1954 to 1958 the average net income per farm—and this is worthy of note—was $1,145 and in 1966 the average net income return per farm was $1,995, an increase of $850 in the net return per farm with an increased capital investment of $7 billion. If the average return per farm today is only $1,995, just think how poor a living farmers in the maritimes and the rural areas of Ontario and Quebec are making.

Canadian farmers talk about the cost-price squeeze. This is what they are fighting. This is what gets them up in arms. The cost-price squeeze means that their returns for what they sell are becoming less and less while their expenses become more and more. I looked into this problem. The figures to which I should like to refer appear on page 37 of a Department of Agriculture publication entitled Canadian Farm Economics. These facts and figures are interesting indeed. I should like to refer to the indices by which the increase or decrease in the economic returns today are measured because they show why the farmers are in trouble today.

First of all I should like to refer to the index of prices received by farmers, using the two years 1947 and 1967 and based on a 1935-39 index figure of 100. The 1947 index figure for prices received by farmers was 215.8. This is the value of the prices received. In 1967 it had increased to 286.6, or an increase of 61 points. Therefore the prices index figure for farm goods increased by 61 points.

Now let us look at the other side of the ledger. What about the increase in the prices of what the farmer buys? Let us take farm machinery. Using the two basic years we find that in 1947 the index for farm machinery was 126.3 but that in 1967 it was 302.8, an increase of 176.5. What about taxes and interest rates? From a low of 125 in 1947, by 1967, 20 years later, the index figure had gone up to 147. Here is the factor which really gets the farmers into trouble. Using the 1947 index for farm labour of 341 we find that in April, 1967 the index stood at 873.3, an increase of over 500 points. This gives an indication of what is troubling the farmers today. It is just a simple matter of less returns on more money invested with a definite downturn in the economic return.

The farmers are looking for guidance, not handouts from the government. They want to know what the government intends to do to cope with the situation which has developed across Canada today. In 1963 this government promised the people of Canada a definite sugar policy. It was to be one of the first actions of the government in regard to agriculture. How prophetic they have been. If in the near future they do announce a sugar policy for Canada, it will indeed be the first government action on behalf of the farmers of this country. Not only have they not announced a sugar policy as promised but they had the temerity in 1965 to tell the farmers they already had one and did not know it.

Why do we have this lack of stability in respect of the farm picture today? I think it is because the farmers across this nation feel that the government does not take a practical approach to their problems and that everything is calculated strictly on the political approach of how many votes will it get. If it does not add up on the right side of the ledger, then there is no help.

It would appear that the government does not have enough basic facts to enable it to make firm decisions. I might point out a concrete example of this. Let us take the dairy industry and ask ourselves how the farmers can have a long-range policy when the government in three years has had three national dairy policies. How can they formulate a long-range policy when faced with something like that? When this government makes an error like this it draws within its shell and there is no further action for months and months.

If there is anything we can criticize the government for it is its procrastination. After five years in office the government has made no attempt to solve the basic problems which face the agricultural community. This is indeed unfortunate because the government is backed up by perhaps one of the finest agricultural bureaux in the world today but one which is hamstrung through lack of direction. There are 11,000 employees in the Department of Agriculture and it costs the taxpayers of this country $72 million per year to pay the wages of these specialists. The taxpayers, particularly the farmers, are beginning to ask what they are receiving for this money.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has now expired.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, I ask for the indulgence of hon. members. I believe I can conclude in two minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the house to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Danforth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to thank hon. members for their indulgence.

In conclusion I say that the farmers of this country are worried today because the government does not appear to have the answers to these problems. In fact, there seems to be ample proof that the government does not even know what the problems are. The government has established a national dairy commission to find out what is wrong in the dairy industry. It has established a national feed grain commission to find out what is wrong in this area. The government has appointed a task force in respect of agriculture to decide what the long-range policy should be. It has also set up a commission on farm machinery prices to study increased prices for farm machinery. The farmers want action. As the hon. member who preceded me said, we have all these commissions and studies but we have no action.

One of the basic mistakes the government made was to split the Department of Agriculture under so many heads including the eastern agricultural administration, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who is concerned with the transportation of grain. We are now going to have a new minister of consumer affairs who will be dealing with prices. The department has been split up to such a degree that the farmers are becoming sick and tired. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) has been reduced to nothing but a purveyor of Liberal propaganda instead of the minister responsible for deciding government policy in respect of agriculture.

In view of all these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the farmers of Canada have no alternative but to request us to do everything we can to remove this government from office.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the opportunity the budget debate provides to make a few comments about the proposed tax structure amendments we hope will be coming before the house within the next few weeks. The reason I should like to comment on this matter at this time is that in my opinion some damage has been done to the economic plans for development in certain parts of the country as a result of the misconception, if that is the word, which surrounded the royal commission on taxation shortly after its recommendations were made public.

Its recommendations suggested a number of profound changes in our tax structure. Indeed, I think it would be fair to say that the acceptance of its recommendations would involve a completely new tax structure compared with the one in existence today. This proposal caused some uncertainty in the minds of those who plan for industrial and commercial development because it wrongly presumes, in my view, that the recommendations of the Carter commission should be the nucleus around which the new tax structure should be built.

I am grateful to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) for inviting comments from interested groups all over Canada on the Carter recommendations? We are also grateful that he made it clear in his speech to the house several weeks ago that the government intends to produce a white paper outlining government policy and that the report of the royal commission would be a useful document but not necessarily the basis upon which government policy would be built.

Having said that, let me hasten to add that there are many good and perhaps ingenious suggestions in the Carter commission report. It is not, however, the beginning and the end of all the amendments required in our tax structure. Whether or not one agrees or disagrees with what the royal commission recommended, there are some areas where insufficient study has been made or at least insufficient attention has been paid to recommendations in respect of equalization of the tax base or contributions. There are suggestions in other areas which are so far reaching it is difficult, indeed impossible, to anticipate the results of their application to tax law. As the Minister of Finance said several days ago in the house, it is unwise for any government to attempt to apply laws when it is impossible to anticipate the results with some accuracy. This is particularly true of tax law because it is so vital to the growth of industry and commerce and to the welfare of Canadians generally.

In looking at the whole matter in what I hope is an objective way I suggest that members of parliament should be concerned about drawing the attention of the minister to inequities, loopholes and injustices of all kinds which exist in our present tax structure. Perhaps they should also make suggestions as to ways and means of correcting these inequities and injustices. It is not my belief that we can suddenly reach a point at which we can set aside everything we have followed over the years and introduce a completely new concept. We must move gradually in this field.

Those of us who have taken some time to study the Carter commission report will recognize that the original suggestion was that this new concept must be accepted in total or rejected in total. I suggest that view is unacceptable. There are some recommendations which ought to be accepted but certainly we should not accept the whole package. I am pleased to note that there has been some retraction of the assertion that we must accept the whole package or leave it alone.

• (4:40 p.m.)

One of the reasons which make the Carter concept objectionable concerns the complexity which would be involved in the keeping of the necessary accounts in order to report to the Department of National Revenue. I should like to quote from the Montreal Gazette of Tuesday, November 21, which contains a report of a meeting of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants held in Montreal. The report is entitled "Carter Too Complex". Here is what was said with reference to the Carter report:

> We foresee great difficulties in the administration of a system which depends for its success on the willingness of all citizens to maintain full records of their financial transactions.

I should like to say that one of the greatest objections that farmers raised when I met them recently concerns the accounting they must do not only for income tax purposes but for the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and all the other agencies which demand statistics and figures with regard to the operation of individual farms and ranches. If accounting on an accrual basis rather than on a cash basis were introduced, as suggested in the Carter report, the complexity of accounts which farmers must keep would be increased. I suggest that regardless of whether or not the amount of taxation would be greater there would be a great deal of resentment simply because of the increased complexity in reporting income.

I suggest also that we consider some other suggestions of the Carter commission. I believe that farmers would also resent the recommendation of the commission with regard to capital gains. For example, if there were to be only a once in a lifetime allowance of $25,000 on capital gains which could be transferred from father to son or to some other member of the family, it would be the end of many farms. Let us say an arbitrary figure would be set as to the value of the farm and all the assets attached to it based on market conditions or the market for land in the immediate area. The result would be that the farmer and his family, with the exception of the $25,000 exemption, would be forced to raise the income tax in cash based on the regular income tax rates. Farmers would have to sell a large portion of their land to meet the cash requirements of such a tax.

Another recommendation made by the Carter commission concerns the integration of family income, which might be a little easier to apply to farmers than to others. But even this would be extremely difficult and I suggest that on these grounds alone this recommendation would be rejected by the farming community.

I should now like to say a word concerning the royal commission's recommendations with respect to resource development industries. One thing we must realize is that a great deal of the important resource development in Canada is undertaken by companies which are active on an international scale. In other words, the creation of a large measure of employment for Canadians is based on capital which could just as easily be spent in some other part of the world where the competition or the risk factors involved might be smaller. This is particularly true of the petroleum industry, but I suggest it is also true of many other resource development industries.

As is suggested by the royal commission on taxation, it is not a question of whether certain capital is invested in petroleum, copper mining or iron mining but whether it will remain in Canada and be invested in risk development or whether it will be used for essentially the same kind of development in other parts of the world. In other words, it is not a question of whether $100 million, for instance, is invested in the petroleum industry or in some other industry in Canada but whether or not the money remains in Canada, because unfavourable taxation structures in Canada might induce a particular company to use its $100 million for risk exploration and development in the same industry in some other part of the world. Throughout the years Canada has been known as an attractive place for petroleum investment and exploration, not because there is a lower risk factor involved here or a lower cost of development but because there has been a better political climate in Canada than elsewhere. So the safety of the investment, if it proves profitable, has been considered far higher in Canada than in most other parts of the world.

I suggest we should consider our taxation law and structure with regard to resource development and we must also consider the relationship between our laws and, for example, those of the United States. There is concern in Canada today about the equity of Canadian ownership in Canadian industry. I suggest that if our laws with regard to resource development companies differ from the laws in other countries, particularly from those in the United States, and if our investors find themselves at a disadvantage in comparison with investors in the United States, the result will be to increase foreign ownership rather than to reduce it. I believe we must be very careful to make sure that our laws make it as easy or even easier for Canadian companies to take the risk to develop our natural resources than it is for foreign companies investing in Canada. If we were to do away with some of the taxation laws now applicable to resource development such as depletion allowances and so on, there would be a great possibility that foreign investors might be given an advantage over Canadian investors in developing Canada's natural resources.

I have already mentioned the complications involved in accounting on an accrual basis. I should now like to speak about the averaging of income which is one of the main recommendations of the Carter commission. I think this is essential in so far as agriculture is concerned because of the extreme changes from one year to the next in the amount of income tax which farmers must pay depending on market conditions and so on. In fact, this is one point on which I am in a large measure of agreement with the commission's recommendations. In my view many other taxpayers should also have the opportunity to average their income if they choose to do so. This opportunity should be available to commission salesmen and, so far as I am concerned, to every other taxpayer who is not on a fixed income or a predetermined salary who is in fact dependent upon business and market conditions so far as his income level in any one year is concerned. I feel that there are some injustices. Such a person is required to pay a substantially higher rate of income tax in a good year and then immediately after he may have a bad year. If he could average his income over the two years there would be more justice obtained. I hope the Minister of Finance will accept that recommendation.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Another area in which I find I am in some agreement with the royal commission report concerns making the regulations tough in so far as expense account deductions are concerned. I think there should be an upper limit on what can be charged as deductions for expenses for travelling, entertainment and so on. I know that these regulations have in fact been tightened up recently but more tightening needs to be done. Apparently the royal commission looked into this subject rather thoroughly and decided that more tightening up was necessary. I agree with that.

In so far as the integration of family income is concerned, I cannot see any practical way of implementing that recommendation. There may be a way of sharing household expenses, the cost of groceries or of maintaining the home, but how this recommendation could be applied with justice is beyond my comprehension, even though I have read in some detail the background material in this regard. I think the integration of family income for taxation purposes should be rejected.

Then there is the matter of capital gains. I pointed out that there would be very serious problems in connection with the transfer of farms within a family if Mr. Carter's recommendation were accepted. Small businesses would also have exactly the same kind of problem because they would be required to find cash for the taxation of assets the value of which was set arbitrarily by a tax assessor. I believe, that this kind of application of a capital gains tax and transferring to income should be rejected so far as small businesses are concerned as well as agriculture. However, having said that I think there is a case that can be made for some form of capital gains tax. I do not believe that it should be at the same level as the regular income tax, nor do I believe that it could be calculated in exactly the same way. I believe that we should look a little further into the application of a capital gains tax because in my view there is some justification for establishing such a tax as a source of revenue for the federal government.

Another matter that I think needs to be corrected has to do with expenses related to the earning of wages or salaries. We know that mechanics, for example, as well as other people, absolutely must have a set of tools if they are going to earn any income. However, the expense connected with the purchase of these tools cannot be deducted for income tax purposes. In my view this is unjust and I feel some changes should be made. There are also people on salaries or hourly rates who may have travelling expenses connected with their work which at the present time are not deductible. These expenses are essential to the earning of the income. I feel that some amendment should be made to the tax laws to take into accounnt expenses which are essential to the earning of the income. I think the same set of criteria could be laid down for wage earners in this regard as for those who are self-employed. We know that in so far as the self-employed are concerned such expenses can legitimately be deducted as part of the cost involved in earning their income. I see no reason why this provision cannot be applied to wage or salary earners as well.

I do not want to detain the house much longer. I hope that every member of parliament on both sides of the house will join with me in bringing to the Canadian people the idea that new tax amendments are not going to be centred around the Carter report. There are certain points that commission has not dealt with which need to be dealt with. There are other recommendations which go completely beyond what is practical of application. Perhaps the report of this latest royal commission provides us with another great lesson about the value and effectiveness of commissions. I say to hon. members that we have had far too many royal commissions recently which have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars and taken a lot of time while essential changes in the law have been postponed awaiting their reports. Then we have found that a second inquiry by the members of this house has been needed to come to grips with the original problem. I might refer to the MacPherson commission on transportation which was appointed in 1958. They did a good job in making inquiries but even after they had reported it was several years before the house was able to agree on a new transportation policy. And I am not so sure that the new policy is acceptable to all the Canadian people.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I suggest that another outstanding example is the joint committee on consumer affairs which studied that question in detail. Whether or not the new department of corporate and consumer affairs is going to be of great service to the Canadian people, the fact is that the legislation was introduced after the subject matter had been referred to a joint committee of this house and the Senate and reported upon. The report was accepted by the government and legislation was introduced. The treatment of this subject is substantially different from what happened in the case of the royal commission on transportation. Transportation problems have been crying for solution as far back as 1960 and yet nothing was done until 1966. The royal commission on taxation was appointed many years ago and substantial amendments to the tax laws have been postponed awaiting its report. You see, Mr. Speaker, if members are going to do their job they need to be familiar with the backgrounds of these royal commission reports. That can be achieved just as easily by setting up a committee and calling the same experts before that committee to testify. When the stage is reached to make a report, with or without recommendations, the members of that committee are then familiar with the background and it is those same members who ultimately have to make the decision.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a great advantage in making far greater use of the committees of this house instead of sending these complex matters to royal commissions. Far too many of them are impractical from the point of view of politics—and I use that word in the very best sense. Politicians, politics and political policies can only go as far as the people will allow them to go at any given time. You can give leadership, but to try suddenly to change the practical application of the law on the basis of some of these ivory tower surveys is just not practical. Therefore millions of dollars and a great deal of valuable time are wasted in trying to arrive at solutions in this manner. So I hope that in the future the government will refer even complex matters to committees for recommendation and report because I am convinced that far more practical recommendations will be made by this method and at far less expense to the Canadian people.

A white paper setting forth the government's policy is going to be introduced very soon, we hope. It is not fair to suggest that the Carter commission report will be completely rejected. But let us be fair about this, Mr. Speaker. We know that the government is going to have to deal with exactly the same matters that were referred to the royal commission on taxation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): This government, Mr. Speaker, is dishonest.

Mr. Winters: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not alone in believing that this government is dishonest. No less an authority than the chairman of the board of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce used a like term when he referred to the economic condition that confronts the country as a result of the government's mismanagement as a massive swindle. The minister has tried to hoodwink the Canadian people into believing that the government was confronted with a unique, new and therefore urgent situation which had to be met by the measures which he has included in his budget.

Mr. Sharp: There is the same general economic condition around the world.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister says there is the same general economic condition around the world. The minister remembers as well as I do that he saw it coming and made statements to this effect, as did the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), over the last two years. But when he tries to have us believe both here and across the land that this is a new situation, at this point I say he is endeavouring to hoodwink the Canadian people.

Mr. Sharp: Oh well, perhaps that is your opinion.

Mr. Nielsen: He thinks they are gullible enough to swallow this. The government goes further, cuts estimates one year ahead, and then asks the public to believe that this is going to result in substantial savings and will somehow solve the economic problems that confront the people.

I am going to refer to one or two things that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has said in the past. He asks us to believe that this is a new situation, that an increase in personal income taxes is now necessary because the country is faced with an economic situation that could not be foreseen. The Prime Minister said at Orillia as long ago as October 13, 1965, as reported in the Ottawa Journal for the next day:

> —economic problems such as inflation would require firm action by a strong central government.

This was said, of course, during an election campaign.

> Every time there is a major expansion in the economy the threat of severe inflation is inevitable. Steps must be taken, boldly and decisively, to guard against inflation, otherwise it could destroy the benefits of the boom.

When the Prime Minister was addressing a Liberal party campaign luncheon in Ottawa on September 21, 1965 he had this to say:

> New programs are being prepared to assure not only that growth will continue but that its benefits will be spread among all Canadians and that the dangers of inflationary pressures and rising costs that are a part of any great expansion are contained...
>
> Our objective is to have full medicare in operation on Canada's 100th birthday, July 1, 1967.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

So much for the campaign, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, medicare became law. The legislation was passed by parliament and the target date was July 1, 1967. This date would have been met had it not been for increased inflationary pressures which caused the government to postpone it. The government's stand today is that there will be no further delay. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon) put it this way in a recent speech in Toronto:

> We are going to have medicare by July 1, 1968, no ifs, ands or buts.

Here we are, Mr. Speaker, faced with the absolutely adamant stand now being taken by the government. Knowing full well the extent of the serious financial situation which they have created they are trying to shift the blame for their own irresponsible behaviour to the provinces. This, sir, is a government that has been in the hole more often than a grave digger. They have that rare gift for instant decision which is heading the country into bankruptcy. They knew as long ago as 1965 that financial problems were on the way.

How did they meet these problems, Mr. Speaker? Where was their planning? Where was the system of spending priorities that should have been established? What evidence exists as to plans to meet the critical housing situation that is now upon us and which was forecast by the economic council? If we are to take any hope from the background papers that were made available to members today at the outset of the conference now under way between the government and the provinces, there is not much expectation of any solution from these discussions.

What about the meteoric rise in the cost of living, Mr. Speaker? Remember the government's 1965 campaign advertising? The propaganda then was that the Liberals had all the answers. Where are those answers? Indeed, sir, I believe that this government has a difficulty for every solution. As I have said before and say again, whenever a problem arises they say that a study will be made, that a paper is being prepared on the matter, that it will be considered in due course—they are a "due course" government—or that a task force will deal with the matter. What their image-makers are endeavouring to accomplish is to create the picture in the public's mind that all of these enemies of the people—inflation, high living costs, lack of housing and high taxes—are rearing their ugly heads without their knowledge, of course, and that the government, like a knight of old in shining armour, will ride them down and slay them with the aid of their task forces. The truth of the matter is that this Liberal government, because of its lack of discipline, its lack of organizational ability and its penchant for mismanagement, is an absolute failure. In fact, it even gives failure a bad name. Members of this government never make the same mistake twice; I will say that for them. Every day, it seems to me, they find fresh mistakes to make.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The policy of the Liberal government has been to introduce ad hoc measures. It meets situations as they arise. It panics, and it chops and changes. Invariably, instead of following a consistent and carefully planned program designed to pace Canada at an even rate of economic expansion, the government reacts by bringing in measures of short term expediency. What is the result? Everyone in this country faces higher costs, increased taxes, higher prices, increased interest rates, inflation, a critical housing situation and general uneasiness, all problems which have arisen because of the policies or lack of policies of this government.

One would think that the Minister of Finance would make an attempt to level with us, especially since his government finds itself in its present mess. But does he do that? He does not. He tries to have the people believe that the country faces a unique situation. He is astounded because we have tight money and inflation at the same time. I think that the Minister of Finance is perhaps too busy trying to maintain his personal position as one of the front-runners in the Liberal leadership contest, which the Prime Minister tells us every day is not about to be waged. The Minister of Finance is supposed to control the purse strings of the federal treasury. Because of the way he manages money, sir, confidentially, it shrinks. Our money is worth less today; it will buy less than ever before in our history.

The most astounding part of this whole, sorry mess is that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the government had ample warning. They were all aware of what was happening from the beginning. I cannot refrain from interpolating at this point that I have discovered the real reason for the quarrel between the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing) and the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh). It hinged on the promise of $3.5 million to be made available to the constituency of Niagara Falls.

One expects leadership from the Prime Minister but obviously he is not giving it. Indeed, it is my observation that the Prime Minister is about as necessary to this government as a fence around a cemetery. The Minister of Finance deluded himself, which seems to be easy for him, with false hopes that all would be well. But he was in the position that he could not impress on the cabinet the need for action and therefore he could not impose the required measures. Under the circumstances he has persistently shut his eyes to the fact that inflation is getting worse and worse, that high prices are undermining economic growth and that the expenditures of the government are adding fuel to the fire.

The government has been and is now all sail and no anchor. On June 1 of this year the Minister of Finance, as recorded on page 860 of Hansard, said:

> By December the economic situation had improved, the rate of expansion in demand had clearly moderated and it did not appear necessary to introduce further measures of fiscal restraint.

Those words were spoken less than six months ago. Now, almost six months later, the country is faced with acute inflationary tendencies. Inflation is still sweeping the country. The Minister of Finance has been forced to impose a third tax increase in three years in order to pay for the government's immoderate expenditures. The government has been warned by those in the money markets that it can no longer borrow with ease and that anxiety and uncertainty are rampant in the country. What plans has the government, apart from hitting the taxpayer again and again, for dealing with the mess it has created? So far as constructive ideas and planning are concerned the members of the Liberal government grope like blind men. This Liberal government, which in 1965 had all the answers, is as broke as a pickpocket in a nudist colony. The only time members of the government know where they are going is after they have taken castor oil. Their conduct is such that they no longer have the confidence of the majority of Canadians.

Mr. Laing: You are embarrassing the members on your own side with that kind of language.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister says that I am embarrassing the members on my side of the house.

Mr. Laing: Yes. That is awful.

Mr. Matheson: Everybody in parliament is embarrassed.

Mr. Nielsen: If the minister would try to exercise some responsibility in his own portfolio he would not embarrass himself and his government, as he is now doing in the whole of northern Canada.

Mr. Laing: Will the hon. member tell us what is going on in the Yukon today?

Mr. Nielsen: I can tell the minister what is going on. The Minister of Transport went up there to address a public meeting and ten people turned up to meet him. When the name of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was mentioned those at the meeting booed. That is the regard in which the policies of this government are held in the north.

Mr. Laing: We shall see about that.

Mr. Nielsen: We shall see about that. I am sure that the Minister of Transport must have told the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development about the regard in which the government is held by those in the north. If he is honest with himself he will know that I wish to help him.

Mr. Laing: Well now, this is different.

Mr. Nielsen: I want to see the minister back on the rails and I want to see him adopt the policies which were initially developed to help the people of the north.

Mr. Laing: I have had the hon. member's help in the past.

Mr. Nielsen: When election time comes I shall not help the minister. Between elections my job here is to assist in bringing about creative policies for the north.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I will tell the minister one thing. I have never spoken at a public meeting in the Yukon and been booed.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: The government is giving the country vague and evasive answers and those who sit on this side of the house are forced to the conclusion that the government is deliberately avoiding answers to questions. One thing is certain. Whether or not my words embarrass members on this side, no one can call the Liberals cheap politicians. Look at what they are costing the taxpayers. I believe that the people of Canada are beginning to recognize this government for what it is and perhaps for what it is not.

On November 1 the governor of the Bank of Canada said in Winnipeg that the central and supreme fact of economic life in this country is inflation. He also said that this government has contributed to that inflation by its extraordinary and premeditated demands on the money market in its haste to be all things to all people. Yet last June the Minister of Finance said that in the present economic circumstances—he was speaking of the circumstances as they then existed—he no longer wished to restrain capital expenditures. That statement was made last June, six months ago. It was made in the course of a budget debate, and because it was made on that occasion it was the policy of the government not to restrain capital expenditures. I mention this because the minister's halo of martyrdom is wearing a little thin.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Speaking in the supply debate on November 20 the minister stated, with that great humility of which he is so capable:

> I have been the one in this country who has recognized this problem more quickly than the Leader of the Opposition and more quickly than anybody else in this house.

Well, if he did recognize it in 1965, as I am sure he did, why did he and his colleagues not do something about it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: It is precisely this holier than thou attitude which makes the minister's position so indefensible. He may have recognized the situation more quickly than anybody else, but last June he was saying that further measures of restraint were not necessary and that the government no longer wished to restrain capital expenditures. Those were his words and he cannot get away from them. They were made in the course of a budget speech and they therefore represent government policy, just as it is the deliberate policy of the government to let Canadians pay through unemployment and high taxes for its own fiscal immoderation. I will refer to this in detail.

This is a stereophonic government, Mr. Speaker, talking out of both sides of its mouth at the same time. Here is something else which may embarrass hon. members opposite: I believe this government has just about as much conscience as a fox in a chicken farm.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) took exception to what the Leader of the Opposition said in a debate on October 4 last in connection with the necessity of allowing slack to develop in the economy as a deliberate part of government policy. When the Minister of Finance referred to "slack" in his speech he meant unemployment. The minister tried to backpedal when he recognized the disastrous implications of his statement but he was unable to do so. This is what he said as reported on page 2809 of Hansard:

> It has been a really quite successful transition except for one thing, Mr. Speaker, and that is that the rate of increase in costs and prices is still much too high. I feel that we must—and we will—find some way to bring this inflationary movement under control even, if necessary, by letting the economy develop a little more slack for a year or two while price and cost increases taper off. We would certainly prefer to avoid the sacrifices of production and income which this would, of course, involve, but if we cannot collectively and individually exercise the restraint that is called for in wage and price increases in the present situation, then there would appear to be no escape from an essential cooling off period.

The only possible interpretation here is that as a matter of deliberate government policy there is to be a slackening in economic growth and an increase in unemployment. Indeed, the increase is upon us since approximately 5 per cent of the labour force is at present unemployed. Yet these are the same hon. gentlemen who, when in opposition, wrung their hands and cried havoc for two years while the former Conservative government was wrestling with the unemployment created by its Liberal predecessor.

Talk about hypocrisy. This sort of attitude is as hypocrytical as a funeral director trying to look sad at a $10,000 funeral. The fact is that we overcame the unemployment left by the Liberals. Now hon. members opposite are deliberately creating it again. I repeat what the Leader of the Opposition said on the occasion of his participation in the debate to which I have already referred: We will not accept that kind of policy. My hon. friend went on to say:

> —surely there is some more civilized way of achieving price stability than by slowing down the economy and deliberately increasing unemployment.

Certainly there are more civilized policies which could be followed. The economic council has put forward certain recommendations, Here again the minister and his colleagues, who were so harshly critical of the former Conservative government for not following advice, take a most peculiar attitude toward the recommendations of the council. Remember, this is a body which the government itself set up; it was a brainchild of the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance now tells us he cannot see his way clear to accepting its advice. He found that the views, of the council were pessimistic. As a matter of fact, the views of the council were, if anything, optimistic. The council wanted the minister to fly by instruments; instead he is flying by the seat of his pants. These are the harsh, simple realities. Painful though it may be to advert to them, it must be done.

Unemployment is running at 5 per cent of the labour force in spite of a drop in the labour force. Lay-offs are taking place all across the country. Where does this lead the man we so often hear described by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) as "the guy with the lunch bucket"? The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance tell us everything is fine. The Minister of Finance is an incurable optimist. If he fell from a skyscraper he would say, passing the 30th floor: So far, so good.

In the meantime the cost of living continues to increase. Taxes go up and will go up again next year. Every time we look the other way another department is added to an already bloated administrative machine and another minister to the cabinet payroll. There are 28 of them now, I believe. The number of persons employed in the civil service increases at the rate of 1,000 a month. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) optimistically says he hopes to limit the additions to 5,000, with 2,000 going immediately to the post office. What a hope!

As has been said so many times during this debate, the government has indeed lost the confidence of the people of this country. It has certainly lost the confidence of members on this side of the house, and if members on the other side did not allow their partisanship to blind them they would support the amendment which is to be voted on this evening.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I did not choose this place in the order of speakers which allows me to take part in the debate right after the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and, moreover, I have no intention of answering him, because it is not my practice to make partisan speeches.

I will not begin my speech by accusing the opposition with being dishonest, because I do not think it is, no more than the hon. member for Yukon believes that the government is dishonest. I am convinced that it is possible in this house to have discussion without accusing one another of dishonesty, and to raise the level of speeches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I must take this occasion, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the post office resolution which was defeated during this session. From my association with the members of all parties in the house I feel certain that its rejection was not a personal attack on me or on my administration of the Canadian post office. Hon. members have received much evidence over the last few years to demonstrate that nothing I would do in regard to the Canadian post office, nothing I would do in regard to this chamber, and nothing I would do in regard to our country itself would ever be undertaken in a frivolous manner. Anything I have proposed, said or backed I have believed in sincerely, Mr. Speaker. I believed in the postal resolution which was defeated, and because I believe and because I recognize my responsibilities I want to inform hon. members that, like MacArthur at Bataan, I will be back.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, before this resolution is presented again, I would like to deal with several points which would have been considered if that important legislation had survived.

The Glassco commission recommended an improved accounting system for the Post Office Department. It was meant to include in the budget of the Post Office Department—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is out of order because the fate of that resolution has already been settled.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I know, Mr. Speaker, that the house has reached a decision regarding that resolution, but I can still talk about the Post Office Department in this house.

I was saying that this new accounting system was designed to include in the budget of the Post Office Department all expenditures incurred by other departments and government agencies. It has been adopted and has dispelled forever the illusion that our budget was always well balanced.

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

A recommendation of the Glassco commission was immediately replaced by another. After setting down the operating costs, a new system was established to breakdown these costs into the various classes of mail. The system was established through the most modern techniques of statistical sampling, added to all possible variations affecting the handling of the various classes of mail.

The results achieved met exactly the wishes of the Glassco commission. In the Post Office Department, we now know the cost of handling each class of mail. We also know how the rates should be changed so that each class of mail may cover its own costs.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the implementation of these two Glassco commission recommendations did away with this dream of a balanced budget with ten-year-old rates.

First class mail rates were increased in 1954. Thirteen long years later, we are considering a new increase. Even without a thorough knowledge of the most modern administrative technique, anyone of us can conclude that rates established in 1954 are obsolete in 1967, unless everything has remained at the same point, such as the mail volume, the number of employees required, the salary levels and the requirements of the service.

For the last part of the fiscal year 1967-68, the handling cost of first class mail will exceed anticipated revenues for that class of mail.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I deeply regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but he is apparently bringing forward the arguments which he should have raised the other evening and which are directly related to the resolution which he introduced. If he wants to deal with the general administration of his department, we are willing to let him do so, but frankly, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. minister is now out of order.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I am now discussing the general administration of the department and as administration is based on revenues and expenditures, I suggest that this is essential, since the department has the most substantial revenues within the government and if the Post Office Department is to be dealt with, it is necessary to refer to its revenues.

Mr. Lambert: But, Mr. Speaker, the minister should not be allowed to use the back door if he has been forbidden to enter through the front door.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I am not submitting a resolution to the house at this time. I am not trying to do by the back door what I could not do by the front door. This is only a speech on the budget and I think this occasion is very important, Mr. Speaker, because we can discuss the revenues and the expenses of the government.

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Postmaster General at the beginning of his remarks was actually reflecting on a decision already taken by the house.

Mr. Byrne: You did not raise the point of order then.

Mr. Nasserden: It is still a point of order. What he has been saying since is substantiating the accusation he made at that time and so is part of the original reflection on a decision already taken by the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I never accused anyone. I simply took my responsibilities, and if the resolution was not passed, as I said at the outset of my remarks, that did not reflect on anyone. I never accused the opposition of anything, and I can take my own responsibilities.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the Postmaster General was making his remarks earlier I did not interpret them as being a reflection on a vote of the house and I am sure he did not intend them to be so. However, I should say to him that we are engaged in the budget debate and I am sure he will confine his remarks to the financial matters that are before the house.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): That is exactly what I am trying to do, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

For the last part of the 1967-68 fiscal year handling costs will exceed anticipated revenues for first-class mail. Our figures—I mean our forecast for first-class mail, in 1968-69, except for international airmail—show a $17 million deficit. Those figures apply to the cost of handling letters and indicate that cost will exceed anticipated revenues at the present rates. The total deficit foreseen for 1968-69, on the basis of the present rates, is $96 million and we want to reduce it to $55 million.

So, Mr. Speaker, I submit that it was with a full knowledge of the facts, that that resolution was worked out and introduced in the house. I knew, at the time, that it would not be a popular move, but I also knew where my duty and my responsibilities lay—

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Twice your attention has been called to this minister using the device of the budget debate to make excuses for the failure of his presentation of a resolution which the house defeated some time ago. I think this is quite contrary to the rules. He is now debating a matter which was debated and settled by the house. A decision was reached with regard to it and he should not be raising it again now.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, every time the Postmaster General brings his estimates or any proposal before the house, he is always asked for additional information.

Members want to know why the Post Office Department had 41,000 employees in 1962-63 and has 48,000 in 1967-68. They also want to know why it was possible to balance the budget in 1962-63, whereas a $96 million deficit is anticipated in 1968-69.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, it is very important for all members, on either side of the house, to obtain as much information as possible.

I said at the outset that I only had myself to blame if the resolution was rejected by the house.

Mr. Lambert: Do not talk about that resolution.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): You are the one who is talking about it, not me.

Mr. Lambert: No, it is the minister who is referring to it, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: The government house leader should have helped you out but he was asleep too.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): No, Mr. Speaker; I take the responsibility for that.

[Translation]

I must first answer for my duties and my responsibilities.

Therefore, as I said at the outset, the resolution which I submitted was quite justified, and I think it will be submitted again at the very beginning of the next session, so that we can meet the required time limit of rate increases and justify the operating cost of the department, while taking into account the quality of the service which the Canadian people already receive and is entitled to receive.

People ask this question: But what is going on in the Post Office Department? I answered part of this question. Now, let me go on, so that I may give you more explanations.

First and second class rates may not be changed without the approval of the house. All the other rates may be changed on the authority of the Postmaster General. If we study the changes made under his authority between 1961 and 1968, we note that all mail categories, other than the first and second class, produced additional revenue totalling $180 million. In other words, Mr. Speaker, all mail rates which do not fall within the jurisdiction of parliament were increased and brought in additional revenue of $180 million. Those new rates, and the resulting income, are based on the principle that each mail category must pay for itself. If the resolution had been examined and had become law, we would have been in a position to increase third class rates, known also as advertising mail.

Hon. members will recall that I announced earlier this year an increase in the rate of the second weight unit for third class parcels. I specified at the time that this was a temporary increase. It was, in fact, temporary, since third class rates with regard to mail handling, cannot be the same as those applying to local mail. Consequently, third class rates cannot be changed without changing those applying to local mail. My intention was to announce an increase in third class rates effective July 1, 1968. It is still my intention to do it, because I am convinced that the hon. members will give me the support I need at the proper time.

Mr. Speaker, I have other statistics to impart to the house; at this time, however, I should like to mention two other points which were embodied in the resolution which I should have liked parliament to pass. One of these has to do with the duration of contracts—

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I raise the same point of order that has been raised before. I have no objection, and I am sure members of the house have no objection, to the minister reporting to us in a general way on the work of his department and particularly with respect to the financial implications of aspects of its work, but it does seem to me that he is violating the rule when he repeatedly returns to the resolution. I believe that he could make his speech more cleverly—and I say this in a kindly way—if he would avoid any reference to the resolution. He keeps returning to the resolution. He says it was responsible and he suggests that it is one which members will support the next time. He is making a speech in support of a distinct proposition which the house has rejected so far as this session is concerned. I do not suggest that the minister should be prevented from speaking about the affairs of his department but I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you apply the rule which states that there shall be no further references to a resolution on which the house has taken a decision.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. At this time I think I should point out to the minister that he is quite in order in discussing the financial affairs of his department or the operations of his department. However, a reference to the resolution which the house debated some time ago may be in contravention of some of the citations. I should like to refer the minister to citation 148 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

> (1) It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

Again, I refer the house to citation 149(a):

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 35, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not: (a) refer to any debate of the same session on any question not then under discussion; nor—

Further along citation 149(k) reads as follows:

> —reflect upon the past acts and proceedings of the House;

I suggest that perhaps the debate would be more in order if speeches were confined to topics more in keeping with a budget debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I could probably talk about the increase in the volume of mail, for instance. I might say that mail volume has increased by 20 per cent since 1962-63. I might add that 5,123 million items are now distributed per year, compared to 4,254 million items in 1962-63. Furthermore, the establishment has grown from 41,500 to 48,000 employees since 1963, an increase of 17.6 per cent.

• (5:50 p.m.)

I can say that this personnel was required to meet a 24 per cent increase in the volume of mail and, to be more accurate the 2,896 new mail carriers needed to serve our expanding localities represent 40 per cent of the staff increase.

That is a service that cannot be limited. Besides, as far as the Post Office Department as a whole is concerned, there is not a single service that can be limited. Each new baby, each new immigrant increases the load of the Canadian postal service.

The mail carriers now deliver mail to 3,840,000 homes and businesses, an increase of 27 per cent since 1962-63.

As all businessmen in this house know, in any industry, salaries or, if you prefer, the cost of labour, constitute the lion's share. That is a fact in the Post Office Department, where labour plays a leading part. In fact, salaries represent 67 per cent of the total operating costs. From 1962-63 to 1967-68, the cost of salaries increased by $113 million, divided equally between an increase in the establishment and a rise in the salaries.

The cost of transportation and that of salaries, established at 67 per cent, represent 88 cents of every dollar paid for operations. To complete this picture, I point out that 8 per cent of the estimates are for premises and 4 per cent cover all other items of administration.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having taken so much time but these facts had to be made known to the public. Businessmen and the general public have a right to know what the Postmaster General intends to do.

Mr. Speaker, the Post Office Department presents a unique challenge. This most imposing of all government departments, this service which concerns all Canadians, is a real industry. Following the recommendations of the Glassco commission, this department can now give a precise report of its profits and losses.

However, unlike a Canadian industry in the private sector, the Post Office Department cannot decide the wages it will pay its employees; Treasury Board has control over salaries. The Post Office Department cannot recruit personnel and promote its employees; that right belongs to the Public Service Commission. The Post Office Department cannot say how much it will charge for those two main services, because it is parliament, and parliament alone, which can set the rates for first and second classes. And, to crown it all, it is the Department of Public Works which is responsible for the construction and maintenance of buildings.

It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, that some unrest exists among postal employees. When they discuss with the management, they realize that they are trying to find solutions to problems over which the management has no control. All these facts make me feel very responsible. I must assume my responsibilities toward postal employees and I must take a stand on all postal matters, including the introduction of bills in the house.

There was some question, Mr. Speaker, of changing the Post Office Department into a crown corporation. It may be that this should be done, since it involves a profitable undertaking. In this way, this important government undertaking could be operated freely as a private enterprise, without all these outside controls of government. I am very close to what is happening in this field in the United States and I am particularly interested in what is happening in Great Britain, where consideration is now being given to a bill that would change the Post Office Department into a crown corporation. The responsibilities of my office lead me to pursue consideration of such a project.

As I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I feel deeply committed to the house, to the Post Office Department and to all the Canadian people. I feel I must do everything possible so that the services rendered by the Canadian Post Office will remain the best in the world. This is the position I must take, even if an unpopular measure has to be introduced and reintroduced. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind all the members that I shall return.

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question? Did I understand him to say that $180 million in new revenue was collected as a result of an increase imposed by ministerial decision without reference to parliament?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): If the house will permit me to answer the question, what I said was that rates can be established by the Postmaster General by regulation. First and second class rates are statutory and it is about them that hon. members have voiced some objection. In any event, since 1961 the department has, under the regulations, increased rates for all non-statutory classes. As a result of these increases the post office has collected $180 million more since 1961. That is why I suggest the other rates should also be increased.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Rapp: Let us call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do hon. members wish to call it six o'clock now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, for some unknown reason it was predicted in press and radio reports over the week end that we in the New Democratic party would vote against the non-confidence motion which is to come to a vote tonight. This is quite incorrect, and no spokesman of this party gave any such indication. We do not agree with everything the Conservative party members have said in support of their amendment, but basically it is a motion of non-confidence in the government because of the imposition of unnecessary taxes on the people least able to pay them. When we proposed our subamendment last week we sought to make this point in even stronger terms, but there has never been any question as to how we will vote tonight. We shall vote for the non-confidence amendment and against the government.

For most Canadians, the mini-budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) represents mini-thinking and mini-concern by the government. In their speeches, my colleagues have stated that at this time the budget is unnecessary, contradictory and inequitable. It is unnecessary because the additional revenues to be gained for the current fiscal year are minimal and therefore the mini-budget could have been delayed until the spring. The government did an effective job of scaring the Canadian people by telling them that taxes were necessary to fight inflation and that personal income tax would probably be increased by about 10 per cent. Apparently the plan was that the Minister of Finance would then increase the personal income tax by about 5 per cent and tell the people that in the circumstances they are very fortunate. I suspect that the minister will add the other 5 per cent in his spring budget, on the basis that it is necessary to cover the expenses of medicare.

This was the minister's approach when he introduced the $30 supplement to old age pensions. He told the Canadian people: "If you want social security measures, you will have to pay for them", and he then increased the ceiling on the old age security tax from $120 to $240. This is the "teacher with the cane" attitude adopted by the minister. He does not search for ways of increasing productivity or cutting down on government expenditures, such as defence spending, to cover the expense of social benefit measures. He prefers to ignore this approach and to make Canadians pay for these measures out of their own pockets.

We in the New Democratic party have stated that the budget is contradictory in that the measures contained in it will sharply reduce demand and will probably increase unemployment from the 4.7 per cent at which it stands now to a much higher percentage. The spring of next year will be the testing time for the minister's measures.

The minister ignores that the alleged inflation is not the traditional supply-demand inflation but rather a cost-plus inflation which requires a different approach than he has taken. The problem does not stem from too much demand, but rather from the fact that prices and profits are out of control. This does not of course apply to housing. That is why we in the New Democratic party have urged the establishment of a prices review board to settle this problem by persuasion and, if necessary, by legislative action. However, the Minister of Finance prefers to develop a surplus of labour on the market in an attempt to solve the problem.

We have also said that the burden of taxation is inequitably distributed in that the weight of tax increases falls on the working people of the country. It is obvious whom the government represents. It does not represent the average Canadian but rather the upper income Canadian, and it is prepared to protect this small group of people at the expense of the rest of the population. We suggested that, in accordance with the recommendation of the Carter commission, the minister should obtain the required money from large corporations, mining companies, and oil and insurance companies. But he chose to ignore these recommendations. His approach is that these large corporations support him at election time and therefore they must be protected in between elections.

The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) criticized the New Democratic party for supporting certain parts of the Carter report, but ignoring the basic principle that the report should be accepted as a package. Of course the government rejects the report completely, but that does not bother the hon. member for Verdun. He then asked us why we did not support certain recommendations in the report affecting trade unions, co-operatives, and social security benefits for workers. Of course the hon. member did not mention that the sweeping reforms in the personal income tax rates recommended by the Carter commission would offset the changes affecting these groups of people. The result would be a reduction of 10 per cent for persons in the lower income bracket of $5,000 or less and 7 per cent for those whose incomes are between $5,000 and $10,000. This would cover most Canadians, but the government has tended to ignore them and is fully protecting those in the upper income group.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Probably the most disturbing part of the budget was the part in which the minister made his remarks about reducing government programs. He stated, as recorded on page 4904 of Hansard for November 30:

> Our problem in regard to the demands we make on the capital market arises, as I have indicated, not only from our spending programs but also to a large extent from our lending programs. In the current fiscal year for example we are lending from the treasury to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing and related purposes a net amount of $608 million, after taking into account repayments we receive.
>
> We are lending to the Farm Credit Corporation for farm mortgages a net amount of $167 million. We are advancing to the Veterans Loan Board for housing and farm credit purposes $60 million. The size of these lending programs will have to be restricted. I am confident we can do this without serious economic effects, when account is taken of the better flow of mortgage funds we can now expect the capital market to provide.

The same approach was taken, Mr. Speaker, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) this morning at the federal-provincial conference on housing and urban affairs. He again reported that there would be a restriction on government financing. It is all very nice to have the Prime Minister state this morning that by the year 1980 two thirds of all Canadians will be living in 29 urban centres and that this year we will have 160,000 housing starts. He stated that we must co-operate; that annual volume is of prime importance with regard to housing. According to the mayors and reeves association the initiative lies with the federal government, and more private moneys are needed to meet the housing crisis. However, in summarizing all this, the Prime Minister said that the government would not lend any further financial assistance; no cash, just plenty of advice. This was the approach of the Prime Minister this morning.

Another answer the Prime Minister made to the housing problem was to suggest the establishment of a council on housing and urban development, possibly with a full time secretariat and a research division. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how necessary is this? Last spring the minister in charge of housing went across the country conducting a housing symposium in all the major centres, collecting the required data on how to meet the crisis.

The Economic Council of Canada has made a study in depth of this problem and come up with plans for meeting the crisis. However, this approach the Prime Minister takes to the housing crisis, that we need a council on housing and urban development, is interesting. It is of interest to note that he outlined four particular changes in federal housing policy which he is prepared to implement. He uses the phrase, so far as the federal government is concerned, "as and when our resources permit". This indicates the attitude of the government with regard to meeting the housing crisis. The Prime Minister said there were four things we should do, and they were: federal financial participation in comprehensive planning of our urban regions and in the advance acquisition of land for transportation corridors and open spaces for recreation and similar community purposes; second, federal financial support for land assembly for new suburban communities; third, housing subsidy programs to serve as an integral part of anti-poverty programs in special areas characterized by general poverty, lack of employment opportunities and slow economic growth and, fourth, a more vigorous housing policy to provide housing for people on modest incomes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, he underlines that program again by saying, "when our resources permit". We in the New Democratic party take a different approach. We say that the housing problem can be solved in two words: more houses. We need more houses and we must turn our attention and energy to solving this problem. We say there are four basic rules with regard to housing which we should follow. First, housing is a basic human right of all Canadians. It is a necessity of life. We have no choice in respect of this need, nor can we postpone it. Second, housing must be designed for different stages of life, for families, for retired couples and single people. There are those who seek different styles of housing. Third, housing is only part of the total urban milieu embracing transportation, recreation, work and services. Fourth, the home and community around it determine the quality of our lives. It cannot be considered apart from questions of beauty, design and space.

What must we do to implement these proposals, and what must we do to solve the housing crisis? The first thing that we in the New Democratic party would do would be to establish a federal authority on housing and urban development, with the C.M.H.C. being directly responsible to the new minister and having the responsibility of suggesting an over-all policy for Canada, based on a survey of housing needs, in co-operation with municipal and provincial authorities. One of the things that will probably come out of this conference will be the federal government urging the provinces to establish provincial authorities. We cannot expect the provinces to set up provincial housing authorities without similar action being taken by the federal government. This would be a recognition that the initiative lies with the federal government. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), who is in charge of housing, is too busy with labour matters. His attitude toward the housing crisis is that of a part time minister. I should say also that his sincerity is not matched by his performance which, if it were in the field of private industry, would not be acceptable.

What we do not need at this time is a council on housing and urban development. Five years from now we would have a committee to study the work of this council. What we need is a department of housing and urban affairs, with a separate minister who will take the initiative in tackling the housing crisis. Second, we in the New Democratic party feel there should be a massive injection of government money into all types of housing, including low rental co-operatives and housing for senior citizens. We feel that the minimum target for the next three years should be 200,000 homes, and of those 200,000, there should be 25,000 earmarked for low income groups.

Now, one of the striking things that the Prime Minister said at the conference this morning was that the annual volume of housing is of prime importance. He is probably aware that in 1965 there were 166,000 housing starts, that in 1966 there were 134,000, and this year we are hoping for 160,000. This is in place of the statement of the economic council, that the required number is 170,000, which indicates how far short we have fallen. The council not only stated that 170,000 starts were required for this year, but this number is also required for the remaining years up to 1970. They then said that 190,000 new starts would be required, and another 10,000 to replace older homes.

• (8:20 p.m.)

When one looks at future needs for houses in Canada, Mr. Speaker, he has in mind the fact that we are told that by the turn of the century there will be 35 million people in the country. According to the experts, beginning 1970 and continuing to the year 2000 Canada needs an average of 350,000 homes a year. This indicates why it is necessary to set up a separate department of housing and urban development headed by a minister who is made responsible for reaching this target. We feel it is unfair to bring 225,000 immigrants into Canada this year when we have no housing program to take care of them, of new family formations and the resulting increase in our own population. The prime minister of Ontario said this morning that Ontario alone would need 90,000 homes for the next three years, and beyond that would need 100,000. This indicates the magnitude of the problem and the necessity for making a federal minister responsible for housing and urban development.

The third step we would take, Mr. Speaker, would be to cut the mortgage interest rate. An immediate cut in the mortgage interest rate to 6 per cent under the National Housing Act and 7 per cent on conventional loans is required. This morning the Prime Minister said that there has been a virtual freeing of the rates as a result of the new formula imposed by the government. We all know that the new formula has now resulted in an N.H.A. rate of 8¼ per cent and a conventional rate of from 8 to 9 per cent. The increase in mortgage interest rates will not necessarily increase the number of housing starts. But what it does do, as we have seen, is to add to the cost of a house. With the maximum mortgage of $18,000 bearing an interest rate of 8¼ per cent, by the date of maturity of the mortgage the mortgagor has paid $42,000. If the mortgage is a conventional one at 8½ to 9 per cent, the range of payment is between $45,000 and $50,000.

The government is depending heavily on private lenders to take care of the mortgage crisis. We can say unequivocally, Mr. Speaker, that in no small part the mortgage crisis has been caused by the private lending institutions, who have ignored their social responsibility in meeting the housing problem. They have stepped into the markets that give a more attractive return. They have lent their funds for the construction of large hotels, motels, and luxury apartment buildings and have ignored N.H.A. lending.

More especially, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has failed to fulfil the original purpose for which it was set up. At the moment, Mr. Speaker, in order to qualify for an N.H.A. mortgage the borrower must have an income of $8,000. This means that about two thirds of the population are out of the picture so far as N.H.A. financing is concerned. More than that, people with low incomes of $5,000 or less are cut off completely. This is one of the reasons we have a major crisis in housing today.

I suggest that after the government has set forth its program as to the number of housing starts required for the year, it should consult the lenders. It should get definite commitments, so as to ensure an annual volume of housing starts and then adjust its lending program accordingly. If it does not get agreement from the private lending institutions, it should take legislative action to direct into housing a percentage of the investment portfolio of these companies. After all, Mr. Speaker, the savings accumulated by banks, insurance companies and trust companies are the savings of the Canadian people, and the Canadian people should have some right to direct where these moneys should be invested.

There is no necessity for any differential with regard to capital that comes into Canada. The amount of mortgage money invested in Canada from the United States is very insignificant, and this has been underlined by one of our leading life insurance executives.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, we should move into the field of land assembly and development. Unfortunately there has been little use made of section 35 of the National Housing Act which enables the three levels of government to acquire land on a shared cost basis, to develop it and to prepare it for use. The federal and provincial governments must help finance large land assembly projects and give encouragement and assistance to the municipalities in servicing lots, helping to build schools, roads, sewers, recreational and other facilities. They must be the wholesalers of land.

The highest increase in housing costs has been in the cost of land for which land speculators are to blame. We in the New Democratic party would make full use of the 50 per cent capital gains tax that was recommended by the Carter commission, so as to deter land speculation.

Fifth, Mr. Speaker, we would create a publicly owned building organization which would tender competitively on major public housing projects, thus providing a yardstick for building costs and serving as a leader in the advancement of building technology. The building industry is characterized by construction of small units, antiquated methods and inefficiency. We would also make use of the new branch known as BEAM, set up by the Department of Industry, for the purpose of increasing productivity and efficiency in the manufacture and use of building equipment, accessories and materials.

Sixth, Mr. Speaker, the government should make more use of the limited dividend provisions of the N.H.A. for public housing, low rental housing, housing geared to income, and for senior citizens housing. The present limitation of 5 per cent is not sufficient. We would recommend that the dividend return should be between 8 and 9 per cent. The reason we make this suggestion, Mr. Speaker, is that at the moment the expertise in the housing industry is in the hands of the private builders, they have the land assembly projects and the skilled tradesmen. We think they should be encouraged to use the provisions of this act. At least 25 per cent of all new housing constructed by these builders should be made available at reduced rents. It is also necessary to spread public housing throughout the community, and families of all incomes should be encouraged to settle in such dwellings. Otherwise there is the danger of creating second class citizens.

At the moment there appears to be a breakthrough in the matter on condominium housing and the provinces, with the assistance of the federal government, should give it every encouragement. There are many retired couples living in large homes today who do not want to lose their security of ownership. If condominium housing was available, these people would retain their security of ownership, at the same time freeing their present homes for larger families.

Seventh, Mr. Speaker, we would remove the sales tax on residential homes costing up to $25,000. This would be done in the form of an abatement. We would not remove the sales tax for the more expensive homes or other buildings.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Eighth, the mortgage limit with respect to older homes should be increased from $10,000 to $15,000, to make the provisions of the act work and to revive competition between private lenders.

Ninth, we should encourage home improvements loans in every possible way. The big dip has occured with regard to housing improvement loans.

The members of the New Democratic party feel, Mr. Speaker, that the measures I have outlined will help to ease the housing crisis and will go a long way to guarantee to the average Canadian the fulfilment of a basic right, that of decent housing.

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, neither of the important measures that the government has announced, the raising of taxes and the cut-back in expenditures, can be described, by any stretch of the imagination, as politically popular measures. I think hon. members must agree that in taking such action the government displayed a great deal of political courage. That the measures were proposed and adopted shows a deep sense of responsibility on the part of the members of the government.

By introducing such measures, the government provided an opening for the opposition parties to criticize the government. The opposition parties have seized on this opening and through their criticisms have indulged in political opportunism. It might be said that the government is always fair game for the opposition, and that the duty of the opposition is to oppose and to criticize. The opposition also has a responsibility to say, in specific terms, what programs should be substituted for those that are undertaken by the government.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Most remarks that I have heard opposition members make have consisted of generalizations. Anyone reading Hansard for the last few days will have difficulty in pinning down to concrete terms the criticisms of the opposition. In fact, in its remarks it has shown a considerable inconsistency. On the one hand it has piously decried what it terms as profligate government spending and, on the other hand, with respect of certain programs it has recommended and demanded more government spending.

This afternoon, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Comtois) spoke of members of the opposition who had asked the government to increase expenditures on certain programs. I wish to add to what he said. The examples I shall cite are culled from Hansard over the last three and a half to four months.

On September 25, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) moved to adjourn the house under standing order 26. At that time he suggested that the government increase expenditures on housing and remove the 11 per cent sales tax. Also on September 25, as reported on page 2430 of Hansard, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) recommended that the government pay increased pensions to retired civil servants.

On September 26 the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) asked for increased loans to be granted for agricultural fairs. Also in September many members of the opposition—the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth), the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) and the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon)—requested extended feed grain freight subsidies to Ontario producers.

On October 3 the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) asked for a second ferry service between Nova Scotia and New England. On October 5 the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) asked for assistance to be given to the herring fishery. On October 13 the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) recommended, that the government invest in a second national park on Prince Edward Island. On October 19 the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) opposed the closing of the air base at Summerside, Prince Edward Island.

On October 23 the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) requested that financial assistance be given by the federal government to the city of Montreal for metro extension construction. May I also cite the debate on Dosco. Hon. members of the opposition advocated that the government take over Dosco. I also cite the debate on the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. In October the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) suggested that the government drop the three year provision in order that drop-outs might receive allowances during training.

I suggest to hon. members that all the projects I have cited are worthy projects and perhaps at some stage, they should all be undertaken. We must recognize nevertheless that they carry a considerable price tag. On that ground, if on none other, I claim that the opposition has shown inconsistency by, on the one hand, demanding government expenditures and, on the other hand, criticizing the government for its so-called profligate spending.

Mr. Sharp: Hear, hear.

Mr. Andras: The opposition's inconsistency is epitomized by the two positions that the Leader of the Opposition has adopted. On one occasion he used words to this effect. "Mr. Speaker, I think anybody who suggests that you can cut down on government spending or offer a substantial reduction in taxes is not being very realistic; but any government can control the rate in the increase in expenditures." That seems to have been a realistic assessment, and it is all the more surprising that, having expressed this common sense attitude, the Leader of the Opposition should depart from that position a few days later.

I ask this question of the opposition: What further cuts in government spending does it recommend? Let us not have generalities; let us have specific proposals. What programs that have been approved by this parliament—and many of them have been approved by the majority of members of the house—would the opposition eliminate, reduce or postpone?

The government has listed the programs that are to be eliminated, reduced or postponed, and every member of this house or every member of the public can readily learn what those programs are. If the opposition wishes to act responsibly, let its members have the courage to set forth, in clear and precise terms, what programs ought to be eliminated, in addition to those which the government has eliminated, reduced or postponed. I suggest that during this debate all hon. members had the opportunity to consider what they wanted to say. Let the opposition say in clear terms, what are the alternatives that it boasts about. Let the criticisms not be vague and general, but let them be specific and detailed.

It seems to me that with the spate of words which flow from this place—words which are often biased and inaccurate, with inaccuracies often being compounded by superficial and biased reporting—we are building a mountain of misunderstanding in the minds of the Canadian public. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, this could start a disastrous landslide some day, and that could destroy this country.

An hon. Member: We are well on the way.

Mr. Andras: I sometimes wonder about our technique of debate in this house. We espouse what is known as the adversary system of debate. Essentially the theory is that merely because the other fellow, in another party, sits on the opposite side of the house, he is all wrong. From then on the debate deteriorates into a shouting match. Skill in debate, nice turns of speech and the manoeuvring for press publicity outweigh such considerations as the truth of facts and the need for objective, responsible and balanced thinking.

• (8:40 p.m.)

May I now refer specifically to taxes. Tax increases at any time are unpopular. Let me quote from the introduction by Mr. C. E. Forget to a study he was called upon to make for the royal commission on taxation. He says:

> The paying of taxes has never been considered a pleasure. Most taxpayers in most countries feel most of the time that they are worse off than their equals were and are elsewhere. They are inclined to strengthen their belief with odd bits of information from abroad, gathered at random.

There are many taxpayers in this country who feel they are bearing a heavy burden in comparison with that borne by taxpayers in other nations. This is not correct, it would appear from an examination of the figures; and I believe that as parliamentarians we should, regardless of party, try to get the facts across to the people. In the course of this study the author stresses the difficulty of making accurate comparisons between taxation levels because of differences between taxation systems in various parts of the world.

I believe it is agreed among professional opinions that comparisons are best made by relating taxation to gross national product. This approach has two major advantages. It produces comparison results related to the size of the economy concerned, rather than directly on a currency basis and, second, it avoids the problem which would be presented by exchange rates operating when currencies are fixed at different values.

A comparison between taxation in Canada and in other countries on this basis is somewhat reassuring. I have a table here taken from the United Nations year book of national accounts (statistics), 1965. The figures given here take into account taxes at all levels of government, municipal, provincial, and federal, as applicable; they include real estate taxes, income taxes, sales taxes, excise duties, customs duties and so on. This table shows that on a basis of the gross national product the country with the highest taxation in the world is Sweden, where the percentage is 38.4. In France, it is 36.9 per cent and in the United Kingdom, 27.3 per cent. Canada enjoys a privileged position, standing twelfth on this list of 17 highly industrialized countries. In Canada, tax revenue from all sources represents 26.5 per cent of the gross national product. Only in Belgium, the United States, Australia, Ireland and Japan is the percentage lower. Thus, anyone who says that we in this country are overburdened by taxation comparatively should look outward to other countries, study the situation there and also reflect on the benefits we are getting from the taxes we pay.

A further comparison can be made on the basis of real income after tax. In other words, how much purchasing power have we left after taxes have been deducted. Again, I have a table here which indicates that while the consumer price index rose between 1957 and 1966 from 121.9 to 143.9 in terms of 1949 equalling 100, an increase of 18 per cent, per capita personal income rose from 148.5 to 228.1, an increase of 53.6 per cent, and per capita disposable income, after taxes at all levels, rose from 145.4 to 218.2, an increase of 50 per cent. I do not think this represents an extraordinary burden on the taxpayers of this country when we consider taxes in relation to the increase in real income.

Another interesting set of figures shows the effects of changes in taxation on the income of a married taxpayer, with two dependent children eligible for family allowance, earning $7,500 a year.

[Mr. Andras.]

In 1950, this taxpayer paid $964 a year in federal taxes alone. In 1966—and this includes federal and provincial taxes in all provinces except Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Quebec—he paid $863. As a result of the tax changes now proposed he will be paying $958 a year. So there really has not been much change, though I suggest there has been a great increase in the services which the government has provided during the period between the years I have mentioned.

We have heard it said, particularly by members of the New Democratic party, that the tax increase now proposed is beamed entirely toward the individual and that corporations have not been called upon to take the burden. I have been doing a little research work on this subject and I have taken the trouble to find out what the position is in this country with regard to the distribution of federal taxation between the individual taxpayer and the corporations. I make no defence of corporations, except to say we are bound to recognize, whether we like it or not, that business and industry constitute one of the major segments of our society, investing money, taking risks, producing goods and providing incomes which individual citizens enjoy. All this is responsible for the standard of living we have reached. We cannot afford to kill the goose which lays the golden egg.

Here are figures taken from the Canadian Tax Journal. In the United States in 1963, 22.1 per cent of direct tax revenues came from corporations and 77.9 per cent came from individuals. In Sweden, 9.1 per cent of direct taxes was imposed on corporations and 90.9 on individuals. In the United Kingdom, 18.2 per cent came from corporations and 81.8 per cent from individuals, and in France 11 per cent came from corporations and 89 per cent from individuals. In Canada, Mr. Speaker, 35.4 per cent of direct taxes came from corporations and 64.6 per cent from individuals.

Thus, though it is easy to say that the corporations should be soaked, we must be awfully careful lest we kill the goose which lays the golden eggs.

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. member permit a question for the purpose of clarification? Would he give the source of the most recent statistics he has quoted?

Mr. Andras: Yes, I would be glad to do so. These figures are from the Canadian Tax Journal issue of January-February, 1966 and they are contained in an article by Marion H. Bryden.

Mr. Nasserden: Very misleading.

Mr. Andras: During the last few years, however, the government has introduced major measures of social reform, such as the Canada assistance plan, the income supplement for the aged, medicare and so on. I personally am proud we have done these things. I think they were long past due. They were badly needed, and there are further measures in this general area of social progress which we should consider in due course.

• (8:50 p.m.)

At the same time, going back to the opinion expressed a few moments ago, there is an economic base from which all these blessings flow, and we have to protect that base. The time has now come for us to stop and temporarily digest the social reform measures we have passed, so as not to overload the economy. It is time now to turn to the theme and to the priority, and for a short period at least as a government to concentrate our investments into economic development, and let the gross national product grow so that the tax base is increased. Then we can afford to move ahead on other needed measures of social reform.

One of these procedures in investment in economic growth, that of regional economic development, has to take place in a much more comprehensive form than exists presently. One can look at the growth of certain sections of the country and see how quickly they are expanding and then turn to other sections and see how slowly their rate of growth is proceeding. Something should be done in such a situation. The urban centres such as Toronto and Montreal—and we could name others—are pyramiding development in their own areas, while other sections of the country are lagging behind.

In particular the province of Ontario requires close examination in terms of subprovincial regional economic development. Ontario is recognized as a "have" province. The statistics of economic performance in Ontario are standouts, so fas as the country as a whole is concerned. But Ontario is a vast province. It contains many different kinds of regions, and there are many different economic regional activity levels in it. There is a wide disparity between the growth rate in the northern part of the province and the tremendous development taking place in Toronto and the golden horseshoe, extending down to Niagara, Windsor and back to Toronto.

The situation in that southern area of Ontario—and I say this without any attempt to be facetious or critical—is creating so many problems and demanding so much of the attention of the Ontario government that it simply cannot afford to devote sufficient energy, time, effort and money to many of the other sections of the province in order to plan the kind of development that we want to see take place in those sections. In my opinion many other provinces, classified as "have not" provinces, have co-operated a great deal more than Ontario with the federal governmment, particularly through ARDA programs, in seeking stimulation for the economies of their various areas. In this respect I am thinking of provinces like Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba. I speak with particular concern about this matter because of the situation in my constituency and in my area of northwestern Ontario. We would be incorrect if we were to describe this as a disaster area. Up to the present time we have continued to enjoy reasonable levels of employment, but it is a slow growth area.

With this thought in mind, some 18 months ago I made a number of specific recommendations for the framework of an economic development plan for the area. I negotiated these recommendations with the federal government. The response was encouraging, and I got written approval form the minister of forestry (Mr. Sauvé) that ARDA, under the federal administration, would assist in financing the kind of research that had to go into it. Simultaneously with these negotiations with the federal government, I spoke with many people at Queen's Park and in the Ontario government. While the approval came from the federal government many months ago, apparently I have not been a good enough spokesman to move the Ontario government to any action whatever. I say this in a non-partisan way because in the province of Manitoba, which enjoys a Conservative government, as does Ontario, the exact opposite has been the case.

Mr. Reid: May I ask the hon. gentleman from Port Arthur a question. Does he know of any other plan which the Ontario government has undertaken, under ARDA or any other program assisted with federal money, that would be comparable to what he has proposed?

Mr. Andras: The answer to that question is very easy. There has been no similar activity by the Ontario government under ARDA, as compared with the provinces of Nova Scotia and Manitoba in which it has co-operated with the federal government in such programs.

This is the sort of thing that has led some of us to think some rather radical thoughts about our political set-up. Several months ago I wrote what I considered a rather whimsical article suggesting that we should consider a separate province for northwestern Ontario and northern Ontario. I know that my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) made a similar suggestion in the house the other night. I am not sure that this is a wild idea. I think that for some long time to come the Ontario provincial government is going to be preoccupied with the demands and the problems of southern Ontario, so that it will not be able to turn much attention to the areas of northern Ontario which demand planning and development.

Some of us, members of different parties in this house, have recently talked to Mr. Kierans of Sudbury. I had a most interesting discussion with him a few days ago regarding his proposal for the establishment of an institute for northern development. I told him that I would prefer that it be called an institute for regional development. I do not think that stress on the word north is what we need now. I believe we need a real study into the formation of a national program for regional economic development, whether that development be in the north, south, west or east. This again brings up juridictional problems, the kind of problems I have faced in my negotiations with the Ontario government, which is responsible for regional subprovincial economic development. It seems to me that basically such development is the responsibility of the provincial government and that the federal government can assist only if it is invited to participate. Most certainly this is the view that Queen's Park is taking. Something has to happen to get these areas going which do not enjoy the same rate of growth as the six or seven very affluent areas of the country. I believe that during the discussions next month in the federal-provincial conference, which basically will discuss federal-provincial relations, this matter of regional economic development should be placed on the agenda and thoroughly discussed in order that jealousies and jurisdictional problems and other impediments can be removed.

I appreciate the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to set these views before hon. members of the house, and I hope particularly that my argument about the need for a regional economic development program on a national scale will receive full consideration.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, this house will be called upon very shortly to vote on the amendment, the motion of non-confidence moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), as our response to the budget message delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). My purpose in participating in the debate at this stage is to review the situation of the country in the context of that amendment and to endeavour to show that every branch of the amendment is justified, and that it should command the support of the house as a serious condemnation of the government, and I say a serious condemnation of the government in the full realization of the implication of those words if the amendment should carry. I hope the amendment will carry because in my view it is in the interest of the country that it should carry and that the government should be forced to resign.

In the amendment now before the house there will be recognized to be three phases. The first is the accusation that the government has created the situation, the mess, to which this budget and the resolutions dependent upon it are supposed to be the response; that is, that the government is responsible for the situation which has brought about this budget. The second phase of the amendment is that the answer of the government is completely inadequate. Their answer is to impose taxes—to increase taxes—which is a completely inadequate response and in no way at all meets the situation which they in fact have created. The third accusation in the amendment is that the taxes—the very measure now proposed by the government—are not only unnecessarily burdensome but may themselves actually aggravate the inflationary condition to which they are supposed to be the answer.

Those are the three branches of the amendment. I should like to develop each one in detail in order to show that they are justified and should indeed command the support of every responsible member in this house.

I shall deal first with the accusation of mismanagement and vacillation. Well, sir, it seems to me that it should not be necessary to advance too much detail in this regard. The fact is that in this year we have had two diametrically opposed budgets. Nothing can more clearly prove the charge of mismanagement and vacillation. There has been a complete change in the government's position between the budget brought down in June and the budget presented to the house within the last two weeks.

I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) says the reason he brought down a second budget is because the circumstances have changed. I say to him that his statement is completely inaccurate and amounts to a gross misrepresentation. The reason he brought down the second budget was not because the circumstances have changed but because the government has grossly overspent and therefore has to impose tax burdens upon the country in order to meet its bills. By its overspending it has dried up the capital markets. The Minister of Finance realizes they are no lower available to him. Therefore, he had to introduce a budget to raise more revenues to pay his bills.

This is not a change in circumstances, because that overspending was the deliberate result of the minister's first budget. In his first budget and in the estimates for 1967-68 which he presented in this house he deliberately forecast expenditures in the sum of $9.5 billion to $10 billion in this fiscal year. That was not an accident. Except in so far as the minister was unable to restrain his colleagues, that was his deliberate purpose. He budgeted indeed at that time for a deficit in the order of $750 million, three quarters of a billion. He had to introduce his second budget, the one we are dealing with, because he found he could not get the money to meet the level of expenditures he himself had imposed upon the country. There is no change of circumstances. This is a budget, a measure of taxation increases, made necessary by the minister's fiscal mismanagement.

There is in addition this feature about his budget: The minister has presented it as an anti-inflationary budget, as an instrument which he tries to pretend is good fiscal management in responding to changed circumstances. Sir, this is not an anti-inflationary budget: It is a revenue raising budget pure and simple. It is a budget to raise the revenues the government now finds it needs in order to meet its own grossly inflated spending programs. It is not a management budget. This collection of individuals opposite making up the cabinet has never had the ability to manage. But, sir, even if they ever had it, they have now lost that ability; they have piddled it away. Even if these individuals have now lost it by their own mismanagement.

Second, I should like to demonstrate conclusively that it is in fact the over-expenditure by this government which has created the situation with which we are now faced. Let us look at a few of the figures which are relevant in this connection. Since the 1963-64 fiscal year when this government assumed responsibility—I will not say power, because they have never been able to exercise power since they assumed responsibility—the levels of federal government spending have increased by some 65 per cent. In this period of just over four years the level of civil service employment has increased at a record pace.

I realize that it is not a valid criticism just to talk about the increase in the number of civil servants or the increase in the amount of their salaries; one must ask: What value is the country receiving for these increases? I defy any member of this house to tell me that the 65 per cent increase in federal spending and the record increase in federal payrolls has been matched by a corresponding increase in service to the country.

All that has been happening is gross over-inflation in civil service payrolls and in government spending authorizations.

In support of that statement I should like to cite a Canadian Press dispatch which appeared in the Vancouver Sun—which is not a paper favourable to the party to which I have the honour to belong—of October 19, 1967. In examining the figures the Vancouver Sun reports as follows:

> Civil service employment has been creeping up steadily from its wartime peak of 116,000 in 1945.
>
> But it didn't really start to surge until the start of 1965. Since then it has increased by an astonishing 9 per cent.

Then a little later on the report continues:

> The budget estimate for civil service payrolls in the current fiscal year is $1.3 billion, an increase of 44 per cent in three years.
>
> It will take the combined personal income tax revenues from Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Winnipeg and Hamilton to cover the bill.
>
> Most of the staff increases can be traced to an unprecedented upsurge in the creation of new departments, agencies and programs.

That is a statement of the facts—an unprecedented upsurge in the creation of new departments, agencies and programs unmatched by any increase in real services or real production for the people of Canada.

But when faced with this criticism—these facts—unfortunately the minister, on behalf of the government, instead of recognizing that the government is at least partly to blame for the inflationary pressures, indulges in a form of political finger pointing, as thought he were a small boy saying, "Yah, you too."

If we could see on the part of this government any readiness to recognize its responsibility for creating, or contributing to, the situation or to respond by mending their ways, then one might have to be more temperate or more moderate, if you like, in the criticism we make; but unfortunately one sees the reaction only of small politicians, because when faced with this statement of fact by the Leader of the Opposition the other day, what was the response of the Minister of Finance? His reply was typical of a government which is more obsessed with political justifications than with the responsibilities to the job it has to do.

• (9:10 p.m.)

So the Minister of Finance contented himself by saying that the record of the present Leader of the Opposition, as premier of Nova Scotia, had been even worse than the record of the present government. His only answer was to point to the situation in Nova Scotia, Let me read from page 5215 of Hansard for December 8, where the minister is reported as having said:

> Between the years 1956 and 1966, a period when my hon. friend occupied the position of premier of that province, the public service of Nova Scotia, those in government employment, rose from approximately 10,300 to 14,419. This is an increase of just under 40 per cent. In the same period the number of civil servants in Canada rose from 336,000 to 361,000 approximately. This is an increase of just about 7 per cent. These are comparisons that I think should be brought to the attention of the house.

Well, Mr. Speaker, may I ask what kind of a minister is this and what kind of an inept answer is that? If it were an answer at all, it is still a completely political answer. Even if the comparison were apt or fair, to say to somebody else that your record is bad, therefore mine is good, is not an answer. This does not justify to the slightest degree the lack of responsibility and fiscal restraint on the part of this government.

[Mr. Fulton.]

And of course, the situations are not comparable, so the minister's reply is not even apt in that respect. One must look at the question in the light of the starting points. It was recognized by our party and by the government which we formed in the years between 1957 and 1963 that there was a disparity between the levels of the economy and of government services as between the maritime areas and the rest of Canada. We as a responsible federal government deliberately encouraged and made it possible for the government of Nova Socia, as well as other maritime governments, to increase the level of their government services.

As a measure of federal government assistance we introduced the Atlantic Development Grants Act, and it was in response to that act that the government of Nova Socia and the governments of other Atlantic areas were encouraged to increase the numbers of their federal civil servants and the number of government services they could render to their people. That increase in Nova Scotia civil service was the deliberate result of a deliberate federal policy, and all that the Minister of Finance has said provides a record of the beneficial results of the deliberate, responsible, intelligent and effective federal government policy of those days.

Again in respect of this matter of mismanagement and vacillation, it becomes quite apparent that in spite of what the government has been saying, it realizes that it is overspending and that this overspending is one of the major contributory factors to the inflationary trend from which the country suffers today. Let me now prove this point.

The government deliberately estimated for a budgetary deficit of $750 million this fiscal year. That estimate has now risen, as a result of the supplementary estimates, to over $800 million. The sorry fact is that the government really does nothing about this present situation. It has done nothing about one of the root causes of the inflationary trend; that is, its own gross overspending. It has done nothing about its overspending for this year.

But in answer to the criticism—which he recognizes in his heart is valid—the minister makes the pretence of doing something by discussing next year's projected expenditures. So, we have an exercise by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) a couple of nights ago when he listed a long and exhaustive mass of detail about possible reductions in next year's spending programs. Of course this was nothing more than an exercise in a shallow pretence. No single phrase of that minister's speech can demonstrate this shallow pretence more clearly than one to be found at page 13 of the advance text of his speech which was distributed to us. He said:

> We are now approaching the final stages of the 1968-69 estimates exercise.

That is all this great build-up, fanfare and publicity about the huge saving the government is going to make next year amounts to—nothing more than an exercise. It is just that—an annual exercise in the process of the review by the Treasury Board in its regular course of paring the departments' official submissions down to that which comes out in the blue book of official estimates.

A true measure of the folly and the fantasy to which we were subjected last week is shown by some of the so-called savings that are to be made. There was a list of some four or five pages presented. Let me give you some choice examples of these great savings to be made on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada. At page 17 of the advance text we are told:

> The special planning secretariat within the Privy Council office will be disbanded: henceforth its essential functions in the field of co-ordination of social development programs will be carried as part of the normal operations of the cabinet secretariat.

We are then left with this disturbing question: If this is part of the normal operations of the cabinet secretariat, why on earth was this put elsewhere in the first place? How in heaven's name does this return to normal lead to a real saving?

Another example is this:

> Financial provision for the Company of Young Canadians will be reduced by 20 per cent from the $2.4 million budgeted for the current year.

I am sure the people of Canada will welcome that huge saving of 20 per cent of $2.4 million budgeted for the Company of Young Canadians. I go no further, but the implication is obvious.

The next example appears on page 19 of this advanced text. It states:

> Provision for staff travel throughout the public service is being cut by a full 10 per cent from departmental requirements as submitted in estimates for the year 1968-69.

Bully for you boys. But how much was submitted for last year? Departmental travel possibilities for next year is being cut by 10 per cent. I am sure the Canadian people can be expected to cheer about this real saving which will represent such hypothetical hardship to the government. Surely this is a nonsensical statement.

This is the vein in which these examples can be repeated. For instance, we are told the external affairs department planned to open two new diplomatic missions abroad in 1968-69, and trade and commerce planned to open three new posts. These plans are to be deferred as a reuult of the hard and ruthless decision of this government.

Again, according to the speech of the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board there will be a slowdown in the plans for headquarters buildings for three departments in Ottawa, namely external affairs, transport and national defence. These are not projects already in existence, they represent deferments and great savings in respect of things that might never have happened anyway. Is it not amazing that the three departmental headquarters to be deferred do not include the department headquarters of the minister? It is well known that these plans included the construction of an elaborate and expensive new headquarters building for the Department of National Revenue. One might have thought that when the minister was asking for these great sacrifices on the part of his colleagues he would have been willing to set a practical example by cutting out his own departmental headquarters. But no, the measure of the government's seriousness in this program is contained in the words of the minister to his colleagues when he said "you must defer your plans, but mine of course are essential". So the Canadian people are going to pay for a new national revenue headquarters building but are invited to rejoice in the amount of these other so-called savings.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I could go on, but perhaps this is the peach of them all. I refer to item No. 38 on page 25 of the advance text of the statement of the Minister of National Revenue, which reads as follows:

> The Transport Department has also been asked to defer all reconstruction and improvement work on the Rideau and Trent canal systems other than that which is absolutely necessary to maintain the systems in proper operating condition.

What else could the expenditures properly have been expected to cover other than to maintain the canal system in proper operating condition? But that is the nature of the whole fantastic operation, namely raising to the level of a virtue the cutting out of frills and reducing expenditures to what is necessary to maintain the government service in proper operating condition. I do not think I need say more to demonstrate the fantasy and futility of the operation to which this parliament and the country has been subjected by the government.

But what about priorities? What has been done while this exercise in futility has been going on? What has been done to produce a proper program of priorities? Nothing.

The Minister of Finance told us earlier in the session that the true measure of priorities is not what you keep at the top but what you cut off at the bottom. Let us look at this bottom-lopping exercise. What has the government kept at the top and cut off at the bottom? At the top they have kept medicare, and the Minister of Finance refuses to exercise his proper responsibility, and indulges in disgraceful political jockeying with the provincial finance ministers on whom he tries to fob off the responsibility for the program regardless of whether it should go through or not. He has stated officially that medicare remains the top priority program of the present government. But what does he cut off at the bottom? He cuts off at the bottom increases for superannuated federal civil servants who are in need of assistance who need help both from parliament and from the country. This is the measure of the minister's seriousness when he speaks about priorities and about lopping off expenditures at the bottom.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Speaker, I have only a few minutes left in which to complete my exposé. The minister has made two speeches already. Perhaps he will make a third one and really answer the serious criticism with which he is faced. He will not do so by asking questions. All he will do is to ask: "What is your stand on medicare?" Our stand on medicare is on the record. We moved a series of amendments when the bill was being debated in the house in which we clearly indicated the kind of medicare program that should be established, and we would accept our responsibility in that regard.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Next, Mr. Speaker, when it becomes apparent that the government is merely indulging in an exercise of futility with respect to this so-called paring of next years projected expenditures, and when they are asked what they intend to do about their current over-expenditures which are contributing so greatly to inflation, they say: "We cannot reduce current expenditures", and they distort the words of the Leader of the Opposition in support of their own futile arguments. We have heard the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board attempt to distort what the Leader of the Opposition had said. They say: "No government can reduce current expenditure programs".

Of course they cannot do so when they are so pusillanimous about it. But if they were really determined to meet their responsibility and to get the country out of the mess into which their programs and their lack of management have landed it, they could and they would reduce the current expenditure programs. Let me give the minister an example of when it was done and when the federal government accepted its responsibility, grappled with the situation, and in fact reduced the current spending programs in the midst of the fiscal year.

It was not pleasant. All my colleagues here who were in the cabinet and those who were our supporters in the party will recall how unpleasant and how difficult it was. But we did it in 1962.

Mr. Sharp: You were forced to do it.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Finance says, we were forced to do it. Yes, we were forced to it because we accepted our responsibility to restore the fiscal balance of the country. But the difference between then and now is that this minister and his government do not accept that responsibility.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You accepted it by resigning.

Mr. Régimbal: Get back in your seat.

Mr. Monteith: Don't interrupt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order, please. When the Chair calls for order, it applies to both sides of the house.

Mr. Fulton: I am always glad to resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, when I see that Your Honour is on his feet. I know my hon. friends opposite do not like this. We did not like it either, but we did it—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): And then you quit.

Mr. Fulton: —because the welfare of the country demanded it.

Mr. Sharp: You had no alternative.

Mr. Fulton: I know what my hon. friends opposite will say all across the country when they attempt to answer the argument. They will say this was a special situation. We were faced with an unpleasant situation, but I say to you, sir, that as a result of the action we took in which we cut spending by a total of $250 million in the midst of a fiscal year, we laid a further basis for the program which we started in 1961, which culminated in the devaluation of the dollar in 1962, and the final stage of which was the cutting of spending programs in the middle of the fiscal year. These actions were the basis for the greatest continuing expansion of the Canadian economy that has ever been known.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. members who shout from behind the curtain do not have the courage to say it in the house. I trust, Mr. Speaker, I will be allowed an extension of time to compensate for the interruptions of the loud voiced members opposite.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the house would be willing to give me an opportunity to hear what the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Fulton: The fact is that these responsible actions, so different from the actions of the present government, laid the basis for the longest and most uninterrupted economic expansion in the history of the country. I do not only rely on my own words. Let me quote the words of the governor of the Bank of Canada who in his recent speech in Winnipeg verified what I have been saying. I quote the following from page 1 of the text of his speech:

> To provide some perspective for my later remarks, I would like to take a brief backward glance at the great economic gains this country has achieved in recent years. We are now well into our seventh year of virtually uninterrupted economic expansion.

If we take away seven from 1967 it will take us back to 1960 or 1961 when the virtually uninterrupted economic expansion began.

Further, the Minister of Finance himself, in moments of frankness, gave credit to the same policies for having started the trend. At page seven of the "Economic Review for 1966" which he presented in his white paper on June 1, 1967, he stated:

> The generally well balanced nature of Canada's economic progress during the years 1961 to 1965 was a notable feature of that period.

Then, in the "Economic Review for 1965", he said:

• (9:30 p.m.)

> The 1965 advance in output was a continuation of the expansion which began in early 1961 and which has become the longest in Canadian history.

So, there are the facts. When a government accepts its responsibility to manage the economy, when it has the room and gumption left to exercise some management, then it can and does take measures which will put the economy back on an even keel which will once again permit advance and progress. But when a government fails, as this government has failed, to accept this responsibility, when it tries to pretend to the Canadian people that the responsibility belongs to the opposition because the opposition does not give the government a blueprint as to precisely what it should do, we see the measure of the situation with which we are confronted. We have a government here which has created a mess, and to which it now asks this parliament and the country to respond by enacting measures which are inappropriate, by enacting measures which will lay the greatest burden on those least able to bear it, the average taxpayer. This is what the minister's tax proposals will do.

This government has introduced budget proposals which, far from alleviating the inflationary pressures to which it is supposed to respond, will in fact be most likely to fan the fires of those inflationary pressure. There can be no doubt that a 5 per cent average surtax on income tax across the board will bear most heavily on those least able to bear it. There can be no doubt a 5 per cent surcharge on income tax across the board will be followed by further demands for increased wages, and rightly so. I am not condemning those who will make these demands. They will be faced with increases in costs, of course, and they will make demands. What could be more natural or more proper?

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry, but I think the hon. gentleman did not hear my interjection. It is not really across the board, because it stops at $600.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fulton: May I conclude with just a sentence or two. Faced with this situation for which the government is itself is largely responsible, which has brought about the necessity for these budgetary proposals, but with the clear evidence that the budgetary measures the government proposes will not solve but will rather aggravate the situation which they have created, I appeal to responsible members on all sides of this house to accept their responsibility and face facts. The fact is, and their responsibility is, that we will not get this country back on an even keel until we face the first necessity for accomplishing that, namely removing this government from office.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity of saying a few words about our present economic situation, which is not only quite complex, but also seriously affected and not at all flourishing.

When we came to this house, in 1962, the Liberals, who were in the opposition at the time, were voicing the same demands and acting the same way as the Tories today.

At the time, the government was blamed for all sorts of things. It was accused of failing to take its responsibilities, of accumulating deficit after deficit, of being unable to balance the budget. It was held responsible for the inflation and general imbalance that were rampant across the country. Yet Liberals were sitting where the Conservatives now sit.

In 1967, the Conservatives sit in the opposition and blame the Liberals, but none of them suggests a real solution to the problem. None of them speaks in terms of truth, in concrete terms; none of them places himself at the level of concrete truths, of Canadian physical realities.

That political situation exists since confederation. Governments have changed from Liberal to Conservative and from Conservative to Liberal, but the situation has always been the same: always the same recommendations and the same protests. In fact, nothing has changed; the two old political parties have never changed anything in the economy. The financial economy of the nation, old as the world, has never been reformed. It has always led to the same results, either under the Liberals or under the Conservatives.

[Mr. Knowles.]

The fight is still going on; non-confidence motions are moved against the government. The Conservatives would like the present government to resign in order to replace it, but they do not have a better solution to offer.

As far as the New Democratic party is concerned, it advocates planning as the panacea for all the ills of the world but, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary library is overflowing with treatises on planning and not one tenth of those plans have ever been successfully implemented because there was not enough money to finance them. Plans are plentiful but not money to implement them. As long as we lag behind the realities, as long as we fail to deal with the economic situation while taking them into account, we will get the same results.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, it is much easier to make Canadians accept the deficit and the tax increases by dividing the budget into three parts, because it seems that half-measures or quarter-measures are easier to accept. When the Conservative party was in power, the budget was divided into two. Now, it is being divided into three; a third part has been added to it, but that does not help the situation.

The present tax increases will hit Canadians harder than before and I would even say that these measures are robbing Canadians of their purchasing power, which is already limited. These measures are a way of controlling people. They restrict credit and make prices go up. Therefore, this will be worse than the 1929 depression, when there was a restriction of credit accompanied by a slump in prices. These tax increases by the goverment mean that the people are being robbed always more, increasingly controlled by the civil authorities and subjected to a greater surveillance. It means that families and individuals will be poorer. It means a form of slavery imposed by the state. Whether the country is administered by the Grits or the Tories, it is always slavery.

We have never enjoyed a system bringing stability in Canada. We had crises, depressions, tax increases, reductions of the purchasing power, the burden being put on the shoulders of the taxpayers who cannot even provide for themselves, inflation and deflation, but stability, never.

Progress has to be paid by those who have realized it, by favouring those who produce money. Financial exchange is accepted blindly. There are people occupying responsible positions who will never admit being a little irresponsible. Yet, on many occasions, their reasoning and conclusions have no factual basis. In other words, they are in complete contradiction with the facts before their eyes, especially with respect to economic policies. That kind of irresponsibility seems to develop among progressive countries as the population imagine that they are becoming more civilized and boast that their standard of living is improving. They lose the sense of reality which is only regained when circumstances drive them away from civilization or when they are the victims of major disasters.

Mr. Speaker, in the midst of our present civilization which is offering us an abundance of all kinds, we note that in our country and in our cities where stores are full of products, our fellow-citizens and the hon. Minister of Finance are thinking and acting solely in terms of money. If however, money is scarce, they are condemned to die in the presence of abundance which is in fact quite visible.

And so, Canada, a country which is developing magnificently, with a wealth in production and a great potential, subjects the pace of its production, as well as the standard of living of its citizens, to the fluctuations of the financial credit it may be granted or refused, that may be rationed or lavished, not by its producers, but according to the whims of the men or institutions which have taken control.

If the country were drawn into a war which would force it to devote a good part of its productive capacity to supplying machines of destruction or the flower of its manhood to kill or be killed, the present government would immediately cease to impose credit restrictions and would refuse to stop for lack of money. It would then think in terms of realities, of arms and materials. It would no longer want to be hampered by financial nonsense.

After the end of the war—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe), but it being 9.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 5 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on any amendment now before the house.

Division

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Monteith) which was negatived on the following division:

• (9:50 p.m.)

Messrs:

YEAS

Addison
Aiken
Alkenbrack
Asselin (Charlevoix)
Baldwin
Ballard
Barnett
Beaulieu
Bell (Carleton)
Bell (Saint John-Albert)
Bower
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Caouette
Caston
Chatterton
Churchill
Clancy
Coates
Crouse
Danforth
Enns
Fairweather
Fane
Fawcett
Forrestall
Fulton
Germa
Gilbert
Grafftey
Grills
Gundlock
Hales
Hamilton
Hees
Howard
Howe (Hamilton South)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Johnston
Keays
Kindt
Knowles
Korchinski
Lambert
Lewis
Loney
MacEwan
MacInnis (Cape Breton South)
MacInnis (Mrs.)
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIntosh
McKinley
McQuaid
Madill
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
Monteith
Moore
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nugent
Orlikow
Pascoe
Patterson
Peters
Prittie
Pugh
Rapp
Régimbal
Ricard
Rynard
Schreyer
Scott (Danforth)
Scott (Victoria (Ont.))
Sherman
Simpson
Skoreyko
Smallwood
Smith
Southam
Stanfield
Starr
Stefanson
Valade
Wadds (Mrs.)
Watson (Assiniboia)
Winch
Webb—95.

Messrs:

NAYS

Allmand
Andras
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Brown
Byrne
Cantin
Caron
Chatwood
Chrétien
Clermont
Comtois

Division

Côté (Dorchester)	Marchand
Côté (Longueuil)	Matheson
Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska)	Matte
Cowan	Mongrain
Crossman	Neveu
Davis	Nicholson
Deachman	Noël
Drury	O'Keefe
Dubé	Olson
Duquet	Orange
Émard	Otto
Ethier	Ouellet
Forest	Pearson
Foy	Pelletier
Gendron	Pepin
Goyer	Pilon
Granger	Prud'homme
Gray	Racine
Groos	Reid
Habel	Richard
Haidasz	Rideout (Mrs.)
Harley	Rinfret
Hellyer	Rochon
Honey	Rock
Hopkins	Roxburgh
Hymmen	Ryan
Klein	Sharp
Lachance	Stafford
Laing	Stanbury
LaMarsh (Miss)	Stewart
Langlois (Chicoutimi)	Tardif
Laniel	Teillet
Lavedrière	Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Leblanc (Laurier)	Tolmie
LeBlanc (Rimouski)	Tremblay (Matapédia-Matane)
Lefebvre	Tremblay (Richelieu-Verchères)
Legault	Trudeau
Lessard	Turner
Lind	Wahn
Loiselle	Walker
Macaluso	Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Macdonald (Rosedale)	Whelan
MacEachen	Winters
Mackasey	Yanakis—111.
McIlraith
McLean (Charlotte)
McNulty
McWilliam

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon) who, I am sure everybody will be glad to hear, left hospital today after a serious operation.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being after ten o'clock, this house stands adjourned until two thirty o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

It being fifteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 12, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE UNDER AGREEMENT WITH CHINA

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform hon. members that the Canadian Wheat Board, following prolonged negotiations in Canton, has succeeded in concluding a sales contract with mainland China to provide for the export of two million long tons, 5 per cent more or less, of wheat to be shipped from January through October, 1968.

This contract is under the provisions of the third long term agreement with China and consists of No. 1, 2 and 3 northern wheat and a small quantity of Durum wheat.

Assuming that the full tolerance is taken, the sale amounts to 78.4 million bushels. Including the contract covered by this announcement, total sales under the third long term agreement amount to 4.7 million tons or approximately 177 million bushels.

The long term agreement provides for a minimum of 4½ and a maximum of 7½ million tons over the three year period commencing August 1, 1966, with the amounts for each year to be negotiated separately. As in the previous contracts, payment terms for sales under the long term agreement are 25 per cent cash when each vessel is loaded, and the balance of 75 per cent in 18 months, with interest. The deferred payment provision is made possible by a guarantee to the Canadian Wheat Board by the government of Canada.

I know all hon. members will join with me in extending to the wheat board our warmest congratulations on their good work in reaching agreement on a matter which is of such importance to the Canadian economy.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I think I can speak on behalf of all members of the house when I say that we welcome the long term agreement made with the People's Republic of China. The interesting point about this agreement is that China is taking more than the minimum amounts of wheat and thus maintaining its intention which was declared as far back as 1961.

However, I think I should point out two things to the minister. One is that the Chinese are very astute and able bargainers, and undoubtedly the length of time taken over these negotiations indicates that they are determined that any faux pas made by this government and by other governments in connection with the wheat price would work to the advantage of the Chinese. Through lack of foresight on this government's part we agreed to a GATT arrangement with respect to grains that will not take effect until July 1, 1968. We were no longer protected by the international wheat agreement which, so far as price guarantees were concerned, died on August 1, 1967. The wheat farmers of the world were without the protection of a floor or ceiling price. The price of wheat, owing to the actions of merchants on the Chicago and Kansas City exchanges, dropped to around 23 cents and 24 cents per bushel.

• (2:40 p.m.)

As is their right, the Chinese have taken full advantage of this drop in price. At the same time it must be pointed out loudly and clearly that the western wheat farmers will place the blame for this drop in price squarely on the shoulders of the government.

My second point, to which I referred partially yesterday, is that no nation has been more considerate to Canada in these long term agreements than China has been. In 1961 we asked the Chinese if they would not consider setting up a trade office in Canada to facilitate the exchange of business relationships between our private business sector and their crown corporations or government selling agencies. The Chinese agreed to do that, and I did not find out until 1964 why the pledge which our government had given to the Chinese was not fulfilled. I conveyed my intelligence about this matter to the then minister of trade and commerce but to this day a pledge that was given by one government in Canada has not been carried out by a subsequent government. That is why so long as this government persists in failing to carry out something that is very necessary to keep intact the good will between our two nations, I intend to continue to bring this point up. It is only a small matter, but if we do as we promised we shall show the Chinese people that we accept them in the world of nations where we trade with them regardless of their politics, their religion or their colour. I think it is very important to make this kind of gesture, and I hope the Minister of Trade and Commerce will move on this matter as quickly as possible and that he will not procrastinate any longer.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce will be welcome in western Canada, and since his announcement has implications for the entire Canadian economy it will be welcome across the country. It is particularly welcome at a time of growing despondency in western Canada. Our farmers were worried that wheat exports would not be increased. Over many months grain has been building up at terminal positions. Since that grain, which was ready for export, has not been moved, the effect of the build up has been felt all the way back to the country elevators. As a result the wheat producers of western Canada have become increasingly dissatisfied and disillusioned.

Some aspects of the transaction which the minister has announced to the house are not clear to me. I am not clear about the details as to price and as to the grades of wheat that are in the main to be accepted by the Chinese pursuant to the latest agreement. I thought, as did many people, that, under the terms of the master agreement we might face considerable difficulty in exporting wheat to the Chinese, since in this year's crop we had an oversupply of high grades of wheat and an undersupply, considering the demands of the market, of low grades of wheat. I take for granted that these problems have been resolved in the transaction which the minister has referred to.

In conclusion I wish to endorse the closing remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, in which he pointed out, as he has done on several previous occasions, that the continuation of Canadian wheat sales to China, which are crucial, have a lot to do with government policy concerning whether or not China should be allowed to establish a trading office in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) that the Canadian Wheat Board has concluded a deal with China which undertakes to purchase 2 million tons of wheat before July 1968 will surely bring comfort to the farmers of western Canada who were somewhat concerned over the situation of wheat production, particularly the sale of such wheat on the world markets.

Just as the previous speaker, I would have liked the minister to tell us the price which China will pay to Canada. Are we selling this wheat under cost price or are we making some profit on this sale? The minister refrained from any comment on the price we will receive or on the financial arrangement resulting from this agreement with China.

In any event, we must export our wheat. We are one of the greatest wheat producers in the world and we must surely export, but under the best possible conditions, so that the whole population will benefit from the deal, more particularly the western wheat producers.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I am sure we in this party join with others in welcoming this important announcement of additional grain sales to China. I too would endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in which he indicated some of the subtleties involved in this trade. We know China is one of the markets which is left more open to us than many because of the reluctance of the United States to engage directly in trade with this nation.

I am a little surprised, though, that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle should leave the impression that Canada is a nation which trades without regard to politics, at a time when we are a party to a series of sanctions directed against Rhodesia. As we welcome this trade with China we should recall that our world wide attitude toward trade is not quite as open or as simple as the hon. gentleman suggested.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF OIL EXPLORATION PROGRAM IN ARCTIC ISLANDS

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce a new, major step in northern development. About 18 months ago we announced to hon. members the northern grants program to develop mineral resources. This program assisted Canadian companies operating in the territories by way of grants toward exploration costs.

Indications of oil deposits in the Arctic have been known for many years. Geologists have long recognized the potential of the area. The presence of thousands of feet of sediments combined with occurrences of oil sands and other indications of hydrocarbons have produced optimistic assessments. The prospect of major pools of oil in this region will now be tested by a Canadian company.

Using the provision of the northern grants program a new Canadian company, Panarctic Oils Limited, will invest not less than $20 million on a three year oil exploration program in the Arctic islands. Panarctic is a consortium which includes leading Canadian oil and mining companies.

The government of Canada has joined the consortium. Industry and government have co-operated in a unique relationship to undertake the exploration necessary to develop the potential of a special and unusual region.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The participating companies will invest $11 million and the government $9 million over a three year period. In return for this participation of 45 per cent of the exploration costs the people of Canada, through the government, will hold 45 per cent of the common shares and 45 per cent of the preference shares the company will issue. The government's share has been budgeted for within the existing five year program for northern development.

Should the program be extended and the exploration investment be raised to $30 million or more, the government retains the option of extending its interest pro rata. In addition, special provisions in the agreements empower the government to control the transfer of shares and therefore the degree of Canadian ownership and control.

I have a list of the 20 participants and if I may, Mr. Speaker, I would ask leave that they be inserted in the records.

Mr. Nielsen: At this point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give permission to have this list inserted in the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Laing: And may I ask leave to table two copies of the agreements?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the minister have leave to table the said documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The list of company names above referred to is as follows:]

Canadian Pacific Oil and Gas Ltd.
Cominco Limited
Bankeno Mines Limited
Thor Exploration Company Ltd.
Canadian Nickel Company Ltd.
Noranda Mines Limited
Bow Valley Industries Ltd.
Bocadel Oil Corporation
Dome Petroleum Limited
Dome Mines Limited
Campbell Red Lake Mines Limited
Sigma Mines (Quebec) Limited
Canadian Gridoil Limited
Conick Petroleums Ltd.
Scenic Oils Limited
Anticline Petroleums Ltd.
Excel Petroleums Ltd.
Eagle Ridge Petroleum Ltd.
Eric Connelly
Canadian Industrial Gas & Oil Ltd.

Mr. Laing: The companies will acquire stock in Panarctic concurrently with the government. On the basis of stock ownership as of December 1 the company was 56 per cent owned by Canadians; with government participation it is now 76 per cent.

The company will have interests in approximately 44 million acres of oil land through a series of agreements with the original permit holders. As a result some 60 small companies, the majority of which are Canadian, will see their interests explored under Canadian auspices. Without Panarctic many of these interests might have been lost to their Canadian owners because of their inability to finance exploration. Panarctic will control just over 63 per cent of the Arctic lands regarded as potential oil and gas bearing acreage.

Panarctic's interest in this vast acreage varies under the agreement between 50 per cent and 90 per cent. If the full $30 million program should be completed the non-resident interest in these Canadian oil lands will be less than 20 per cent.

It is gratifying, Mr. Speaker, to tell the house that this great Canadian resource potential will be assessed by Canadians and that the majority ownership will rest with Canadians. This is a unique project. It brings together a large number of interests in the private sector on the one hand and the government on the other, under one organization capable of effecting the economies so necessary in the north. Here we have a new development approach in this special region of the country, with optimistic prospects for building the economy of our northern lands.

This is a risk venture. There is no certainty oil will be found. It is certain no oil will be found unless exploration is carried out. This announcement signals the beginning of search, not certain success. I am sure the house will agree with me that the possibilities are so attractive that this venture is wholly justified.

The discovery of oil would be of immense benefits. It could conceivably change Canada's role ultimately from that of a net importer of oil to that of a net exporter, with all the consequent benefits to our balance of payments position and our economic well being generally. In that happy event new oil reserves would represent a welcome addition to the reserves of the western world in the light of the increasing demand for oil.

Marketing of any new oil found in Canada would of course take place within the framework of co-operation which has characterized our relationships with our major trading partners in this and other areas. If this venture is successful, all of Canada will be enriched.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, during the last three or four years those of us who sit on this side of the house have not had too many opportunities to say good words about what the government has done, but this is one such occasion. To make my point very loud and clear I would like to remind all hon. members of the house that the fundamental function of the federal government is to provide the Canadian economic base on which our federal, provincial and municipal governments can afford the services that our people want.

The announcement we have heard from the minister today is a classic example of the type of thing that should be done by this government, and should have been done by it over the last four years. To put the matter into perspective—and I hope all Canadians hear this—it is now estimated, as the result of several studies, that the energy demands of the world will increase over four times by the end of the century, in other words in less than 33 years. To meet that fourfold increase in demand it is estimated that the share of oil and gas will climb from 50 per cent of the current consumption to 55 per cent of the increased consumption.

This means we have to make tremendous efforts in all oil bearing regions of the world to prove the reserves available to meet this fantastically growing demand. At the present time, for example, it is estimated that to maintain a proper balance to meet currently known demands our reserves should be a certain proportion of our known demands. Using very round figures, we have to go out in the world at the present time and multiply our oil reserves by five times to provide that correct balance between reserves and demand. In the case of natural gas we will have to go out and prove up reserves 15 times over the presently known reserves to meet the demand by the end of the century.

This statement by the minister is the first indication I have seen of an effort on the part of this government to play its part in proving these reserves. The previous government did much in that regard by accepting the fact that to meet this great demand for energy it had to have some form of inventory of our resources. Without listing the programs on which we embarked I could give just a few examples to indicate the coherent approach we took after we had won the control of the resources at the bottom of the sea under international law in 1958.

These examples include a polar continental shelf exploration program which is still going on, the extension of hydrographic surveys, the setting up of an oceanography institute, and the oil and gas regulations which were put through in 1959 which dealt with the handling of these reserves in our northern areas and at the bottom of the sea off our coasts. This type of coherent program is the forerunner of the type of program the minister has just announced, because the philosophy is the same.

I should like to point out for the minister's personal benefit something I am sure he knows. In making an announcement such as he has made he is acting in conformity with a wealth of precedent in Canada. I do not want to go back as far as the C.P.R. but starting in the year 1911 there was a man on our treasury benches who had brought into this house a roads to resources program which passed this house but was turned down by the Senate. It was the same minister from Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, who brought in the program for exploration of the Arctic islands. The minister today is acting in conformity with this historic precedent.

I should like to say just a word or two about the agreement itself. With our geography and the economics being what they are, I do not think we have any choice but to accept the fact that in the northern area, particularly the Arctic islands and the land off the shores at the bottom of the sea, the government must take the lead. In this particular proposal we have the device of the government of Canada sharing in the equity because of the risk being taken. This precedent is now being followed by nearly all the provinces. Now that the federal government has gone into this device, it corrects what I think was wrong with the exploration program or the northern grants program announced some time ago in the house. Now with the taxpayer's money going into one of these projects he has some chance of seeing his money coming back. He knows that in this type of proposal he will see it coming back manyfold.

The second point I should like to make about the agreement deals with the question of public participation. The minister in his statement pointed out that the government would have control over the transfer of shares. I wish to remind the minister that we have in effect at the present time in the oil and gas regulations dealing with the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and the continental shelf a regulation which says that if any company moves to ownership in the production of wealth in this area, that company must be formed as a Canadian company and must put its shares as a public company on the stock exchanges of this country. This is the way the Canadian people will be able to participate in the ownership of these resources. Under that regulation the government and any other private company will be allowed to buy the shares if they offer enough money on the open market. This regulation is absolutely fundamental to the ownership of wealth by Canadians in a positive as opposed to a negative way.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Having made these two points I hope private enterprise, which is running this company, will operate it on sound business procedures. I am sure they will. I have in my possession a list of the companies, and I know their reputation for being hard fisted. I am sure they will watch every economic point in the development procedure. I hope these people will read my statement and get clear in their minds the fact that good practice requires the use of the tender system when they are looking for transportation to do these things in the north, so that ultimately the common carriers in Canada will be given a chance to participate in this work.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a point I am not too happy to make but feel that I should. Some time ago one of our members, the hon. member for Yukon, asked this question in the house:

> Has the government engaged in discussions with private oil exploration and/or drilling companies with a view to participating in the establishment of a crown corporation for the purpose of channelling public and private investment funds into exploration of the Arctic archipelago?

This question was answered on November 13. The question and the answer appear at page 4174 of Hansard for that date. The answer was "No". Here we have an example of government deviousness that we are trying to do away with in this house if we are to restore confidence in government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member for Qu'Appelle of standing order 15 (2a). There is no need for me to read it, but perhaps I should say that statements on motions are supposed to be brief, as are replies by the spokesmen for each party. Perhaps the hon. member has concluded his remarks.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I hope my remarks will fall within your proscription and not be unduly lengthy. At the outset I should like to say that as interesting as the statement was it is not particularly newsworthy or new, in that almost all the comments the minister has made appeared in a newspaper yesterday in an article by Jock Osier of the Financial Times news service emanating from Toronto. I do not care whether information of this sort comes to us by way of statements on motions or by way of press releases outside the house, but something of this sort which could have a bearing on the position of those who want to speculate on the market should be kept confidential until such time as the government discloses it in a proper way. I am not sure whether this will have any influence, but prior information of this sort could work to the disadvantage of the desires of the government.

It has long been our contention that the government has a particular role to play in the development and exploitation of the resources of this nation. The minister called this project unique, but I think it might more appropriately be described as one which recognizes the sound thinking and policies emanating from this party to which I belong over the years. I hope the government will not look upon this as unique in the sense that it will be the only one of its kind in the history of Canada, because there is ample opportunity in other fields of activity for government participation of a similar nature.

Industry when left to itself operates primarily on the basis of the need for profit and its responsibility to shareholders. Any benefit which accrues to the nation and its people or the employees from the operations of such a company is secondary to this first need. It is the government's role to protect the rights of the people in respect of their position in the economy. The 45 per cent ownership figure mentioned by the minister suggests that action can be taken to control the movement of shares so this company can operate in a way to protect and enhance the position of Canadians.

There is one factor in respect of the number of directors of the board, not mentioned by the minister, which is of some concern. Perhaps at a later date he will let us know what this means in terms of who shall be members of the board. As the minister knows, in the development of the north we must concern ourselves not only with jobs for individuals but with social aspects and the total economy. I am sure the minister is aware of this, in view of statements he has made on numerous occasions.

In this regard we cannot relate the development of the north only to industries involved in extraction of resources, or industries which exist for the purpose of taking raw materials for export out of the area or out of the nation, which is even worse. We must concentrate on secondary manufacturing and processing industries which will process the raw materials into finished products in order that the maximum benefit will accrue to the nation and to the area. We have passed the stage when we should continue to export raw materials at a certain price and import finished products made from those materials at five or six times that price. When we do this we in effect export jobs and hinder our position in respect of the balance of payments.

Perhaps I might conclude by making a reference to a speech the minister made at a banquet on June 16 at the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member for Skeena that his remarks should deal with the minister's statement. Of course there is no need for me to remind the hon. member of standing order 15 (2a) and the necessity to make replies as brief as possible.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Howard: The minister's speech contained the concept of development and exportation of products to which I refer. I wanted to point out that the minister made another speech in this regard in which he pointed out that in order to maintain the rising standard of living of the Japanese people we must continue to export our raw materials and import finished products. In my opinion this is absolutely contrary to the interests of the Canadian people. I oppose any development whereby we, through this consortium or through private companies, export raw materials in order to support the rising standard of living of another nation to our own detriment. Surely this could not reflect our Canadian pride in respect of our own economy and natural resources.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the measure announced by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing) is a step forward taken by the government.

The minister announced that instead of substituting itself to private enterprise, the government is taking measures to assist it, which is a commendable aim. Besides, this is what our party has always maintained, that is, a government exists, not in order to substitute itself to private enterprise but to help the latter to develop the natural resources of a country like ours. The minister's statement makes clear that the government is about to foster the economic activity of Canada.

The minister actually stated for instance, and I quote:

[English]

The participating companies will invest $11 million and the government $9 million over a three year period.

[Translation]

This means that 20 private companies are taking the risk the minister referred to at the end of his announcement when he said:

[English]

This is a risk venture and I would say that the future of this country belongs to those who are not afraid to take risks. It is my belief that it would be a good move on the part of the government to interest different companies of this kind to unite their efforts in the development of our national resources.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that policy is clearly a Canadian policy, truly progressive and progressist, because 56 per cent of the shares of Panarctic Oils Limited will be held by Canadians, and through the participation of the government, the company will be Canadian-owned in a proportion of 76 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, we are pleased with this decision which goes squarely against socialist principles; for instance, socialists would start by nationalizing the 20 companies mentioned here, and then proceed with the development of our natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, this initiative on the part of the government to encourage companies to invest through its active participation, to my mind, constitutes an example to be followed in the future when decisions are taken in other spheres of the Canadian economic activity.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker. First of all I wish to thank the minister for sending us a copy of the statement so we had an opportunity to look at it.

I have some reservations in connection with the proposal made by the minister. First of all, due to the situation in which Canada finds itself today in connection with the spending of money, the amount of money to be expended in this connection should be a consideration in deciding whether to go ahead with the plan outlined by the minister. Also, I think this proposal encourages what the municipalities call ribbon development.

In other words I believe we are being premature in what we are proposing to do. If we are to develop the north country I think it should be on the basis of a gradual development. If this were done I think the proven oil policies of the provinces would be sufficient to carry out the development and exploration. In that way development would occur in a very, very logical manner, rather than the situation under a policy that is superficially imposed, which I believe will be the case with this one. Therefore I believe we would be wise to take a close look at what we are doing in the way of precedent in connection with the whole question of development of the north country.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO ADDITIONAL FEDERAL FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek some information from the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the proposals put before the conference with the provinces yesterday envisaging an expanded housing program, and in view of the apparent indication that less federal money will be available for housing next year than this year, can the Prime Minister indicate to the house when additional money might be available for this purpose?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be well to await the conclusion of the conference before I or the minister attempt to make a report. As a matter of fact I should be at the conference now. I can assure my hon. friend that the proposals we have put forward do plan in advance, and it is as well to do this, for additional expenditures in the field of housing. Indeed in the forthcoming year, notwithstanding certain financial difficulties, we hope to make available more money in many important respects, for public housing and matters of that kind, than we spent last year.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister give the house some indication of the annual cost of implementing the proposals regarding housing made at the federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Pearson: I think we had better wait to see how the provinces react to certain proposals we have made which will require legislative change. When the conference is over we will be able to make a report covering this point.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful if we had some idea of the financial order of the proposals being made to the provinces.

Mr. Pearson: It will certainly take a great deal of money from all levels of government to deal with the housing problems that face this country.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, without appearing to be persistent, I wonder whether the Prime Minister can indicate to the house in round figures the amount of money required for this program.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think last year it was something around $900 million, which gives an indication of the order of magnitude.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanfield: With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the government has made a financial assessment of the amount of money involved in the proposals put before the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Pearson: The amount of money involved will depend upon the reaction of the provinces to the proposals put forward.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question.

During that conference, did several provinces inform the government of their proposed intention to deal with the problem of housing themselves, saying for instance that this matter came under provincial jurisdiction? Did other provinces besides Quebec suggest that the government should withdraw from those agreements and leave them the responsibility in the field of housing?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, even those provinces which feel they could exclusively deal with housing problems are just as anxious to receive federal financial assistance.

UNITED NATIONS

CYPRUS—CONTINUATION OF PEACE KEEPING OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question regarding the situation in Cyprus. In view of the fact that the security council is due shortly to discuss extending the authority of the United Nations forces on the island and the Secretary General's request that the matter be dealt with as one of urgency, would the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether Canada has proposed or intends to propose that the United Nations force on Cyprus be increased and that it be provided with more effective means to keep the peace than it has had until now?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are discussions going on at the present time, as my hon. friend knows because he has referred to them in previous questions, regarding the extension of the mandate for the United Nations force in Cyprus. There are two opinions about the strength of the force if the mandate is extended. One is that the present force will be strong enough to carry out the new mandate, and there is another opinion that perhaps the force should be enlarged. No agreement has yet been reached because the matter has not come before the security council.

Our own view, Mr. Speaker, is that if the mandate is to be extended it should be extended for a rather shorter period of time than was previously found desirable, so that during that shorter period of time we can see how the arrangements are being carried out that are being discussed now with the government of Cyprus and to which the other two governments have agreed. If the arrangements are carried out successfully, then the chances for peace on the island will be greatly improved.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary question. I am sure the Prime Minister could state better than I that peace keeping is of value if it is the start of peace making. Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether Canada alone or in association with other members of the security council has been preparing some proposals for lasting peace on that island?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As my hon. friend knows, the minimum proposals to deal with the present dangerous situation are now before the three governments concerned. This should be a foundation, I would hope, for the long range proposals which will be required and which we are considering with our friends.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he could advise the house whether any progress has been made toward the establishment of a satisfactory formula for financing peace keeping operations in Cyprus.

Mr. Pearson: Well, a formula has been established, Mr. Speaker, but whether it is satisfactory enough is a matter of opinion. Some participants in the force are paying a greater share of the expenses than others. There are certain members of the United Nations that are not participating in any way, shape or form. This should be in every respect, including the financial, a collective United Nations organization with expenses fairly shared among all the countries.

Mr. Patterson: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that Canada is paying the full cost of keeping its contingent in Cyprus, I wonder if the government is considering making the continuation of Canada's participation conditional upon an adequate sharing of the financial burden by other nations.

Mr. Pearson: We are not, as I understand it, paying all the expenses of our contingent, but we are certainly paying a high proportion of them. I do not think it would be wise, in the situation of emergency in which we have been and which may continue, to make our contribution to this force contingent upon an absolutely satisfactory allocation of expenses.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Will he indicate what nation or nations are contributing to the cost of maintaining Canadian troops in Cyprus?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to get that detailed information. I will get a list of all the members of the United Nations who are contributing to the United Nations operation in Cyprus.

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE EXPANSION OF ACTIVITIES OF CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Is the government engaged in discussions with the government of the United States and other governments with regard to modifying and expanding the activities of the international control commission in Viet Nam and the possible extension of its area of activity to Laos and Cambodia?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The international control commissions, as my hon. friend knows, now have jurisdiction in Cambodia and Laos. A suggestion was made by the Cambodian government some time ago that the Cambodian commission should be asked to take on additional responsibilities along the borders between Cambodia and Viet Nam. The Canadian members of the commission, and I hope the other members of the commission, would be in a position to take on those responsibilities shortly.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I ask a supplementary question. Are any discussions going on at the moment with the United States government? I ask the question in view of the fact that an announcement was made only this morning by the state department that it is the desire of the United States government to extend the activities of the commission, and an announcement by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was discussing this matter with the United States secretary of state.

Mr. Pearson: I will have to take that question as notice in order to ascertain if there have been discussions in the last 24 hours. There may have been some discussions in Brussels, a report of which I have not seen.

POLLUTION

TAX INCENTIVES TO PLANTS INSTALLING CORRECTIVE DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance relating to my question last Thursday and his reply thereto. Is he now in a position to make a definite announcement with regard to the extension of the existing special income tax provision encouraging industrial installation of equipment controlling water pollution? Is there any decision yet with regard to similar action in connection with air and soil pollution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The government has decided, Mr. Speaker, that the special and accelerated rate of capital cost allowances on water pollution equipment will be extended until January 1, 1970. This additional two years will give the government time to gain experience under the proposed Canada water act.

As to the second part of the question, the government has not reached a decision. Perhaps I could illustrate the nature of the difficulty by putting this position before the house. If a mining company, for example, decided it was going to instal a natural gas furnace rather than a furnace that burns coal, would this be an air pollution improvement device? It is considerations of this kind that have led the government to believe that the treatment for tax purposes of other forms of pollution control should be the subject of further intensive study.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): In view of the importance of this matter and its continuance in the future, will the government not reconsider its position, and rather than offering this incentive on an ad hoc basis put it on a permanent basis so there would be continued federal participation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government is not at all certain that this is the best way to promote the establishment of water pollution control, and that is why the tax incentive has been extended only for two years. Indeed, the extension for two years will have the effect of accelerating improvement, because of course this kind of provision may eventually run out. The problem is very complex, and it is the government's view that we should examine our experience under the Canada water act before we reach a final decision as to whether this kind of special incentive should be continued indefinitely.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO PROMOTION OF FURTHER SALES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the recent announcement of a record world harvest of grain during the past crop year, and in particular Russia's increase to 40 million tons during the past 12 months, will the minister outline what the wheat board considers to be Canada's prospects for selling wheat in world markets during next year?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. Actually the over-all production was down only a little this year. The international wheat council estimates that world wheat production in the current year is down slightly from the 1966-67 record. However, because production is more evenly distributed than in the previous year, the wheat council estimates that world wheat trade will decline 4 million tons from the 1966-67 level of 56 million tons.

As I have stated before, this is a tougher competitive year than we have been enjoying. While we cannot contemplate an export total as good as that of the last two years, wheat shipments are picking up as is evidenced by my announcement of a few minutes ago, and as importing countries use up their own crops.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. With respect to the minister's announcement to the house today that the terms of a further sale of wheat to mainland China have been completed, can he indicate when wheat sold under this new contract will begin to move into the market, and into what price range does this sale of wheat fall?

Mr. Winters: I will start moving into the Chinese market in January and continue through October. As to the price range, it has not been the practice to reveal such information because of the adverse effect it might have on world trade in wheat, which we all want to further.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the minister. Can he tell us whether there is any stipulation in the agreement with regard to the percentage of the various wheat grades which the Chinese will accept during the life of the agreement?

Mr. Winters: Yes, there is, Mr. Speaker. The percentages roughly are No. 1 northern, a maximum of 20 per cent; No. 3 Manitoba northern, a minimum of 25 per cent; No. 2 Manitoba northern constitutes most of the balance except for a small amount of No. 3 amber Durum to which I referred in my statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The minister stated at noon that 25 per cent of the purchase price of Canadian wheat by China would be paid in cash and the remaining 75 per cent will be paid within 18 months and bear interest. Is the minister in a position to say what interest rate will be demanded from China?

[English]

Mr. Winters: It is related to the current bank interest rate. But, as I said before, it has not been the practice to divulge these commercial details; therefore I think I should refrain from doing so.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell us whether all the wheat involved in this sale will move to China through the port of Vancouver?

Mr. Winters: Not all of it, Mr. Speaker, but for some of us in other parts of the country there will be a disappointingly high amount.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

DOCUMENTS AT TOURISM CONFERENCE IN ENGLISH ONLY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The minister of tourism of the province of Quebec stated yesterday that he refused to attend the conference on tourism because the preliminary documentation sent to the provinces was written only in the English language. I should like to know whether the minister can explain to the house why this preliminary documentation supplied by his department and sent to the provinces was written in only one of the two official languages of the country.

[English]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am unaware of that point, Mr. Speaker. The province of Quebec is very ably represented by Mr. Prévost, the assistant deputy minister. I might say that I was very pleased and impressed by the spirit of harmony which prevailed.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the minister know that the documents preliminary to that conference were sent to the province of Quebec in English only?

[English]

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Speaker, I was unaware of that point but I will look into it to find out the reason, if that was the case.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): I have another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since the hon. minister is not aware of that, would it be possible for the documents coming out of his department to be written in both official languages, in order to meet the requirements of some provinces?

[English]

Mr. Winters: I think it is only right and proper. It is a fair request, and I will see it is done.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY— REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he received telegrams from the mayor of Charlottetown and the Prince Edward Island command of the Royal Canadian Legion urging that the government reconsider the decision announced by the President of the Treasury Board last Thursday and proceed as promised with the construction of the Northumberland crossing? If so, has a favourable reply been sent to these very concerned people?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the telegrams arrived at my office this morning but I have not yet had time to reply to them.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE MEET IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the chairman of the committee on transport and communications, the hon. member for Hamilton West. Can he indicate whether, since his return to Ottawa, he has had any consultations or communications with the Minister of Transport with regard to the proposed visit of the committee to the Atlantic provinces, and can he report what progress has been made in this regard?

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, on my return yesterday I met with the Minister of Transport regarding the tour by the committee of the Atlantic provinces. As to the time, the agenda and other arrangements, these have not yet been finalized. I will be meeting with the minister again tomorrow and I will then be able to call the steering committee together to make a further report and discuss the procedures with them.

Mr. Coates: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the hon. member indicate whether he was informed of the minister's intention concerning the reference to the committee of the special study on transportation in the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker, this will also be discussed with the minister at that time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPRESENTATIONS AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR SCIENTIFIC PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question put last Friday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. At the outset of my answer I should like to draw attention to the fact that a number of employee organizations are now working very hard to gain and hold members among various groups of public servants in an effort to win bargaining rights under the provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

As of October 1, 1965, a new service-wide research scientist class was introduced, replacing a number of former departmental classes. The employees concerned received salary increases averaging 9.2 per cent as of July 1, 1965. Since that time their average salary has risen from $10,810 to $12,653, an increase of 17 per cent.

I am pleased to be able to tell the house that there is no evidence that research scientists are leaving the public service in significant numbers. The turnover rate of less than 5 per cent, which has taken place in the past 18 months, is regarded as acceptable.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the strong protests made by the professional institute and their charge that commitments made to them have not been kept and that the decision made by the treasury board has been unilateral, would the minister be prepared to meet with representatives of the professional institute to discuss the objections they have raised?

Mr. Benson: First I should like to assure the hon. member that any commitments made by this government have been kept—

Mr. Knowles: Oh?

Mr. Benson: —in this regard. I should also like to tell the hon. member that we are entering into collective bargaining and we will be meeting with the various employee groups as their contracts come up for negotiation.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO REVIEW OF CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that Canadian and United States officials are now meeting to discuss the Canada-United States auto pact, can the minister assure the house that every effort will be made to guarantee that Canadian citizens will be able to buy cars made in Canada at the same price as they are sold to United States citizens?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can give any such assurance in view of the fact that, as I think the house is well aware, the federal parliament has no jurisdiction over retail prices.

Mr. Hales: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be in a position to say whether or not the officials will be discussing the inclusion in the new agreement of replacement auto parts?

Mr. Drury: I cannot give any assurances as to what will be included under future arrangements. The matter of current model replacement parts has been under discussion on both sides of the border for some time, and this problem will be examined during the course of the review.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

LIBAU, MAN.—PROTEST ON TRANSFER OF POSTMASTERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General and it arises out of a Canadian Press report that last night and again this morning residents of a certain Manitoba town have physically prevented the putting into effect of the Postmaster General's order for the transfer of the postmastership and post office in this town. Is it the intention of the minister to call on law enforcement officers in order to enforce his order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this is the type of question that should be asked at this time.

Mr. Schreyer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that the situation has a potential for violence. I should like to know from the Postmaster General what action he intends to take to deal with the situation in that town.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon.

member that there was no violence at all at Libau, the post office to which he is referring at present.

In reply to his first question, I may say that, on some earlier occasions, the Post Office Department had to require the help of the police to transfer a post office from one location to another, but I do not think this is necessary in the case of Libau.

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Postmaster General say whether his ministerial order was made on the advice of the district postal director in Winnipeg or whether it was made as a result of his political advisers at the headquarters level?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, we never hire a postmaster without consulting the district directors. We are now trying, at Libau, to guarantee some stability to the post office location. Indeed, in the last four years the store in which the post office is now located has been sold three times, and in those four years we had to change the postmaster three times.

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, the minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is debating the question.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BREATHALIZER TESTS AND LOTTERIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) asked yesterday, before I got to the house, when the government expected to introduce its bill on driving under the influence of alcohol. I should like to repeat that the government undertook to introduce that bill during the current session. I trust that, with the co-operation of the members, it will be before Christmas.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

Does the minister intend to move, before the Christmas adjournment, his amendment to the Criminal Code dealing specifically with lotteries?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same as the one I gave to the question concerning impaired driving; it is part and parcel of the same omnibus bill of amendments to the Criminal Code. In fact, I hope that it will be introduced before Christmas.

[English]

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO TENDERS FOR DESTROYER ESCORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Defence Production. I wish to thank him for the information he gave earlier this afternoon and to ask him in connection with the tenders which closed today for the four new d.d.h.'s whether he can give some indication to the house of how long it may take his department to analyse these complicated contract tenders?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, these are quite complicated submissions for tender and they are in two forms. They have just been received and we shall proceed as expeditiously as possible, with the Department of National Defence, to complete the analysis. I should not like to estimate a deadline for the completion of this work, particularly since the advent of the Christmas holiday will interrupt it.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of National Defence to take into account the proposals that were advanced by the Halifax city council when the department makes its decision to award contracts?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think we shall take into account all relevant considerations.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF SUBSIDIES ON FISHING TRAWLER CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the great concern that has been shown by some since the Minister of National Revenue announced cuts in the subsidies for the construction of fishing trawlers, and in view of the representations which have been made by fishing companies and by those operating shipyards, would the minister use his influence with the Minister of Finance in order that the 50 per cent cut in subsidies might be restored?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. member that to this day I have received no such representations. Furthermore, I think the hon. member is well aware that during the current year the federal government will pay in subsidies under the ship construction program over $24 million to shipyards with respect to steel vessels, and the Department of Fisheries will pay close to $6.5 million to shipyards with respect to the construction of wooden vessels.

Mr. MacEwan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the remarks that the minister made not long ago in a shipyard in my constituency and the remarks of the president of that company which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald two days ago, will the minister go to the Minister of Finance and ask whether the amount that was cut can be restored?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have received no such representation from the parties the hon. member referred to.

Mr. MacEwan: The minister should read the Halifax Chronicle-Herald.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Robichaud: It is not always exact in its reports.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—POSSIBLE REASSESSMENT OF CANADA'S MILITARY ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom I should address my question. I intended to address it to the Prime Minister but he is not here. Perhaps I ought to address it to the acting minister of national defence or to the acting prime minister, or, perhaps I might address it to the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Greenwood that he should ask his question immediately.

Mr. Brewin: I am about to do that, Mr. Speaker. Was the Minister of National Defence stating the policy of the government when he said in Brussels the other day that Canada should be thinking of abandoning her nuclear air role in NATO for a support role? Is the Canadian government seeking, as the minister indicated in his remarks, the agreement of Canada's NATO allies to a political decision which would modify Canada's role in the Atlantic alliance before the forces goals for five years are approved?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that question ought to be addressed to the Prime Minister when he is in the chamber.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the straightforward statement this afternoon by the President of the Treasury Board that the government always lives up to its commitments—

Mr. Knowles: He qualified that.

Mr. Ballard: —I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister if superannuated civil servants and retired members of the public service can look forward with some hope to an increase in their pensions, as has been promised by the government on several occasions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer that question. The government did not make a commitment in this regard. I simply stated that it was my own feeling that what the hon. member suggests should happen.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Would the minister refer the Woods report, after tabling it, to the various veterans organizations as requested by some of them?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall decide that when I have the report. I am afraid I cannot answer the question in the affirmative at this time.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister say whether he will refer this report to the standing committee on veterans affairs?

Mr. Teillet: I have already answered that. Until I have the report before me and have had a chance to look at it, it will be impossible for me to answer the hon. member's question one way or another.

Mr. Chatterton: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to take it from the minister's reply that whether he will refer the report to the committee depends on the nature of the report?

UNITED NATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SIGNING OF DECLARATION ON POPULATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister is at the housing conference and since I have waited for some time to ask my question, perhaps I might be allowed to put it on the record. Was the Prime Minister invited to sign the declaration on population which was signed by 30 heads of government, including those of the United Kingdom and the United States? Also, was Canada represented at the ceremony at the United Nations yesterday when this declaration was presented to the Secretary General?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

• (3:50 p.m.)

BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on October 11, 1967, I had the honour to participate in the debate which had been resumed on the budget presented on the 1st of June and to make my own comments.

I mentioned, among other things, that the spectre of inflation was more and more threatening in this country and that the fight started by this government should be intensified and should get the support and cooperation of every level of government, in short, of the whole community and of every citizen.

I also mentioned that the government, on account of the urgency of the situation, could be compelled to take drastic steps if conditions did not improve. Among those measures, I mentioned the possibility of levying a special and temporary tax.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I will pause to say that strangely enough, that speech was not mentioned a single time in the information media—except, as far as I know, in the November 1967 issue of La Revue du transport routier du Québec—while the bills on money and postage stamps were loudly publicized throughout the country, due to the opposition members.

At this time, I think it would be advisable and wise to stop and ask ourselves whether this country has not reached the saturation point in its fiscal and tax system.

I find my answer in an article published in the Ottawa Citizen on the 6th of December 1967. I quote:

[English]

Certainly our income tax levels are lower than those of most other western nations. But income tax levels are only a fragment of the total picture.

The yardstick we are concerned with is total taxation at all levels of government. The basis for international comparison is the percentage of gross national product—the total value of goods and services produced in the country in a year—that is absorbed by governments.

One of the most recent compilations, for the 1964 taxation year, looks like this:

Country	Total taxes as percent of GNP
France	37.6
Sweden	36.6
West Germany	34.9
Norway	34.3
United Kingdom	29.4
Belgium	28.8
Denmark	28.1
Canada	27.3
U.S.	27.1

[Translation]

You will notice with me that Canada ranks eighth on this list.

Since we precede by 0.2 per cent our main competitor and supplier, the United States, we must surely continue to ask ourselves, and this seriously, whether our country has not reached the saturation point as far as taxes and taxation are concerned?

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): May I ask the hon. member a question? If he really believes that the Canadian people has reached a saturation point concerning tax increases, should he not denounce his government for these increases that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) imposed as a result of his last budget?

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): If the hon. member will let me finish my speech, he will see that my argument takes his question into account.

The special and temporary tax which I mentioned in my speech of October 11 last has now been proposed by the Minister of Finance and has been set at 5 per cent of the amount of the basic tax assessed on an individual in excess of $100. This surtax will take effect on January 1 and would remain until we have completed the transition to a slower rate of growth of expenditures or until economic and financial conditions call for a change in our fiscal policy.

Knowing the honesty and intellectual integrity of the Minister of Finance, I am satisfied that this tax will really be temporary, and I am sure that the minister is willing to give his word to all Canadian taxpayers that this is a temporary measure which will last only as long as the needs remain and which will be withdrawn as soon as the above-mentioned conditions are restored.

I note with pleasure that this surtax does not apply to small wage-earners until the following annual income has been reached: $2,500 for an unmarried taxpayer, $3,500 for married people without any dependent and $4,000 for a married taxpayer with two children entitled to family allowances.

If you look at the tables showing how the 5 per cent surtax applies, you will realize also that the taxpayer whose annual income does not exceed $10,000 will not have to pay a huge amount in additional tax.

In fact, an unmarried taxpayer will pay about 17 cents a week, a married man without children, 14 cents and a married taxpayer with two children entitled to family allowances, about 12 cents. Therefore, the main burden of the surtax will be borne by the taxpayers whose income exceeds $10,000. The maximum amount payable by that category of taxpayers will be $600.

In my speech of October 11 last, I said this:

> At the present time, those who earn less than $5,000 pay too much tax compared to the other taxpayers, and the Minister of Finance should make the required adjustment.
>
> [Mr. Leblanc (Laurier).]
>
> Still, the full burden should not be placed on the shoulders of those citizens who earn from $5,000 to $10,000, thereby creating another injustice while wanting to remedy the first error.

I am gratified to find that in this 5 per cent surtax at least, the principle laid down in my speech has been observed and I hope that in the tax reform being considered by the Minister of Finance, the experts who advised him will continue along the same lines so as to maintain this principle of equity for all taxpayers, a principle based on a scale which is better balanced with the revenue.

It goes without saying that a tax increase is never popular. The Minister of Finance surely did not take his personal interest into consideration when he presented his budget on November 30. He and his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) are showing an exemplary courage and a rare strength of character in the present circumstances by asking the people to tighten their belt still more and to enter a period of austerity.

The past has shown that tax increases and austerity programs are not wise measures from the political point of view in Canada, because they are always very unpopular.

• (4:00 p.m.)

However, the intellectual development of our population which is the result of better schooling and an improved system of education in my opinion makes it possible for Canadians to understand better today that these measures were necessary to check the disastrous consequences of inflation. All of us in this house must stop being demagogues and explain to the people that these measures will stop the inflationary rise in prices and in the cost of living, which endanger our economic stability. At the same time, we must stop making too many demands on the capital market and, instead, pay for our social security programs.

According to a recent Gallup poll, the federal government is bluntly blamed for the present high cost of living. More than 6 adult Canadians out of 10, that is 65 per cent, believe that Ottawa could have done more to stop the price spiral. It is in Quebec that you find the largest number of dissatisfied citizens in this regard, that is 70 per cent. In western Canada, it is 68 per cent, while in Ontario, this percentage decreases to 60 per cent. Here is the question which was asked:

> Do you think that the government could have done more to stop the rising cost of living? Or do you think that this rise is due to other factors over which the government has no control?

This poll must open our eyes and lead us to wonder whether the federal government is actually the only one responsible for inflation, in brief whether it is the only one to spend large sums of money in Canada.

It is a fact that our expenditures have increased by 92 per cent between 1957 and 1967, but this is about the same percentage of our gross national product as 10 years ago, and a little below that of 5 years ago. During that period, we have lowered our taxation rate in favour of the provinces, while the expenditures of provincial and municipal governments have increased at a faster rate than federal expenditures. In fact, they have increased from 11.1 to 18.6 per cent of our gross national product, while federal expenditures have remained at a fairly constant level during this period, that is 16.4 in 1956-67 and 16.8 in 1967.

Of course, there is no question of blaming the provinces and the municipalities for this, because they have been facing increasing responsibilities with the years. It is just a matter of setting out the facts in order to enlighten the people as to those actually responsible for inflation.

We should not forget, either, the important and ever-growing role of the trade unions with respect to wages increases, and consequently, production costs and price increases. Surely there is a need for greater restraints in regard to increases in prices, wages and other sources of cash income, such as rents, dividends and interests.

Another factor which has also contributed to inflation is related to the large corporations. During the last years, we have seen that profits of Canadian corporations were definitely too high. Today, we realize that this situation is improving, but I think this inflationary factor should be neither denied nor ignored.

In addition, we have seen land and real estate speculators often realizing exorbitant profits, and I am sure that such feverish speculation has definitely helped to bring about the inflation problem we are experiencing today.

Finally, we should add perhaps that Canada is quite sensitive to the reactions of the world markets and especially to the reactions of the American market. It has been shown, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the inflationary period is not a phenomenon particular to Canada but that, on the contrary, several countries, at the present time, feel that calamity more severely than we do and, for instance, I simply have to mention England.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the conclusion that the rise in the cost of living is due, for a major part, to factors over which the government has no control.

The Minister of Finance has devoted a special paragraph to his program of fiscal reform as a result of the Carter report. He tells us that, due to the representations of the Canadian people with regard to that report, the government considers that our taxation system should undergo considerable reform which should take into account the needs of the country but should not interfere with the progress and proper development of the Canadian economy. Our present system is not completely and absolutely bad and it is impossible to reject it all, although it has often been patched up haphazardly over the years at the whim of successive ministers of finance. It is high time it was completely reviewed and the required solutions were applied, in keeping, to a certain extent, with the recommendations of the Carter commission.

I wish to take this opportunity to protest a third time in the house against the capital gains tax, for all the reasons given in my two earlier speeches, but I will refrain from stating them again, so as not to extend this debate unduly.

When the white paper on tax reform is drafted, I hope the minister will take into consideration all the protests made against the capital gains tax and that, in addition, he will consider the possibilities I have already mentioned in the house, in order to encourage Canadian investors to contribute more to the development of our natural resources, that is to increase from 20 to 50 per cent the exemption on dividends paid by Canadian companies; to raise tax exemptions on research costs, to raise tax exemptions for companies developing natural resources and particularly in the case of Canadian companies; to allow companies to deduct from taxable income double the costs incurred by them for the education of their active or unemployed workers; to allow the head of a family to deduct from his income the money spent on the education of his children; to take the necessary measures so that the Minister of National Revenue will completely abandon the field of succession duties or tax on donations so as to enable the provinces to legislate exclusively in these areas; to take a more realistic attitude and raise the statutory exemption on charitable gifts and medical expenses from $100 to $200.

Naturally, I leave it up to the fertile imagination of the minister and his experts to find the other formulas required to stimulate the Canadian economy suffering at the present time from a temporary trouble which might prove disastrous if it becomes chronic.

I am convinced that the Liberal government will find early remedies and that all Canadians, whatever their racial origin, will be able to face with equanimity a higher standard of living in a geographic, political and economic unity with social and cultural diversity.

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate on the budget or, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has dubbed it, the financial message, I want to congratulate him on his performance in setting new records. I must say that they are very outstanding records indeed. I doubt that in the near future or for a long time to come any minister of finance will be able to match the outstanding records he has been able to achieve in such a short time. We here who are closest to the affairs of government, and Canadians generally, have come to know him as the minister who has set records.

We have come to know him as the minister who has the highest interest rates in the history of this country, who has the highest cost of living in the history of this country, who has the highest expenditures in the history of this country, who has the highest prices, who brought about the highest taxation, who brought about the highest inflation, who has had the highest budgets, who has introduced more budgets than anybody else in such a comparatively short time, and who has made a mess of housing in this country. Mr. Speaker, what has Canada done to deserve all this?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: In my opinion this budget is an example of sloppy financing. It is not even a budget because the minister himself has termed it a financial message. It is just a taxation measure tacked on to taxation measures that we already have before us. We did not even have a white paper preceding it. Under this government budgets have become casual things, brought in on a haphazard, hit-or-miss basis. All that Canadians have learned from this exercise is that the government is fiscally unfit. What we are asking it for is a return to fiscal fitness.

• (4:10 p.m.)

We are asking that he let us have expenditures related to need and bearing some relation to objectives. Let us know what the objectives are, let us have priorities, and let us have some order in government expenditures. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has made the point that the government has so tied its hands by uncontrolled and unco-ordinated expenditures that it now has no room for the essential needs of this country.

In these days of bilingualism I should like to refer to Lafontaine's fable about the grasshopper and the ant. This government has been the grasshopper. All summer long it has played about. The members of the government brought in a June budget full of sunshine and light; they gave no thought to the cold winds of December. But like the grasshopper in the fable they come knocking at the taxpayers' door in December begging for a handout.

New taxes are being levied for one simple reason and one simple purpose, to meet the bills which the government has run up and cannot pay because it can no longer borrow owing to the lack of confidence. This is the only reason for this financial message and the additional taxes imposed on the people of this country. The government has lost the confidence of those people from whom it has borrowed money in the past. These people have now dictated to the government that it must impose additional taxation on the people in order to restore their confidence in the government so that it can go to the market again. I would not be surprised if they dictated the terms of the taxation and the areas of taxation because only the small taxpayer is feeling the impact of the taxes contained in this financial message.

The Minister of Finance indicated that the government would be cutting back on housing by slowing down direct lending. This will produce a disastrous effect on construction and on the ability of Canadians to acquire housing. They have removed one dollar of the subsidy on hogs and lambs. It had to be done; their extravagance left them no choice. But why should Ontario and Quebec farmers pay for the wild-eyed schemes of the government? They cut $480,000 from the estimate for the Company of Young Canadians for next year. Mr. Speaker, why wait until the economy is against the wall? Why did the minister not impress upon his colleagues the facts of life long before now, long before the cold days of December? Why did he wait until December to tell them what he should have told them in June of this year?

The Leader of the Opposition in his remarks last week shot down in flames the spurious claims of future savings by this government. For the first time in a democratic world and in a democratic form of government the people and parliament have been told what is going to happen in the next fiscal year. Of course this is not the first time the Liberal party has offered a pie in the sky, Mr. Speaker, but I believe it is the first time they have tried to cut it while it was still in the sky. The government finds itself moving in an increasingly restricted area. I am greatly disturbed by the indications. I know that the municipalities all across Canada will be disturbed that there is no program of assistance for them. The majority of our population is now living in the cities. When one looks at this budget one concludes that the government is completely unaware of this fact.

At this time I should like to refresh the minister's memory with a reference to the submission of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities on November 6. The mayors fully supported the reference in the report of the Economic Council of Canada as follows:

> —there has long been widespread concern about the mounting deficiencies of our cities and the heavy backlogs of essential improvements.
>
> Shortages and inadequacy of urban housing, traffic and transport problems, air and water pollution, the confused jumble of conflicting land uses, decaying neighbourhoods and monotonous suburbs, urban poverty and social disturbance, steadily rising property tax burdens and the frustrations of municipal administration—

One of the most serious of those frustrations is the financial strait-jacket in which the municipalities find themselves. The problems enumerated which affect municipalities also affect 70 per cent of our population living in urban areas. Yet this government seems completely unaware of the urban problems inasmuch as there is no provision in this budget to deal with these matters. Instead of moving to produce results in the field of housing and urban renewal and deal with some of the other problems the government is slowing down its already lethargic pace in these fields.

It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to be as constructive as possible in dealing with the present chaotic situation in which we find ourselves because, after all, as Canadians we are embroiled in this chaotic condition brought about by the government. We must face up to it and try to do the best we can under these circumstances. Even the minister will admit that the fact that the government has to come along now and ask for money within six months of a full budget which was followed by a reassuring statement in October, just two months ago, is an indication of uncertainty on its part. I say, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians generally are fed up with paying through the nose for the extravagance of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: All across the country people cannot afford to buy homes. If they could afford to buy them, there are not enough to meet the demand. If they do buy them the price of everything necessary to maintain a home is sky high. If they do not buy a home they must rent and rentals are sky high. They can go into a high-rise apartment and pay a high-rise rent. If they have anything left the minister takes it away in the form of taxes. The government is spending $11 billion this year and Canadians right across this country are asking: What are we getting for it? The government has reduced the defence forces, but now we find that the reduced forces cost more than the expanded forces.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The minister said that he was cutting down by increasing expenditures by 4.5 per cent. This is the way he has been cutting down all along. The government has been following a policy of inconsistency. In April, 1965, they reduced taxes by 10 per cent. In March, 1966, they increased taxes, and in December, 1966, they increased the old age security and sales tax. In June, 1967, they took the tax off tranquilizers and in December, 1967, they are increasing taxes again. They have not yet put the tax back on tranquilizers. We are now living in a high cost, high tax and high spending economy because of the government's inability to deal with the situation.

The minister has lost control of inflationary tendencies in the country because he cannot control inflation in his own government's spending. The government is in trouble because of their own lack of restraint. They have once more had to increase taxes because of their inability to meet their obligations.

The Minister of Finance is now in a position where he has been forced to increase taxes at a time when unemployment has risen and there is a softening in the economy. Lay-offs have been spreading across the country. We in the opposition have brought this to the attention of the government and have inquired as to what action they are prepared to take to soften the blow of unemployment and provide other jobs. Prosperity in this country is being siphoned off, and some who have never reached prosperity have had their situation worsened by the heavy indirect taxation caused by inflation.

The problem we must deal with is that of rising costs and prices. The governor of the Bank of Canada has warned us about this, as has the Minister of Finance. Everyone is concerned except the minister's colleagues.

Housing is an integral part of this nation's economic and social health. Nothing is more indicative of the government's inefficiency than the way in which they have created havoc in respect of housing. Again this year we are going to be 25,000 houses short of the number Canadians need. The government is making available in 1967, through direct lending and limited dividend housing, close to $500 million. According to those who know, this will provide about 35,000 homes at $15,000 each. However, we need approximately 200,000 homes per year to take care of our population needs. Inflation has hit hard at the housing market by placing the price of homes beyond the reach of most Canadians. The house builders association stated in Toronto on November 30 that the cost of an average new home in metro Toronto has jumped in the past 18 months to $30,000 from $24,000. Surely in view of this the minister must realize that not many Canadians today can afford homes in that price bracket. What are they supposed to do?

The government has made mortgage money somewhat more available through high interest rates, but I cannot emphasize too strongly that this is a device to help those who are better off. Most Canadians cannot afford to buy, rent or borrow at present prices. There is no question that up until the current year the government has been using housing as an instrument to slow down the economy. In the past few months they have begun to realize they have gone too far, but it may be too late now for action to have beneficial effects in the present winter months. These are the months we should worry about, in addition to the long range attitude the government should take in respect of this very important matter.

The minister knows, I am sure, that there were 30,000 fewer jobs in construction as of October this year than there were a year ago. He must also know that the number of building permits for dwellings issued up to the end of August totalled 111,360. This is an improvement over last year but it is still far from encouraging in view of the tremendous backlog of housing demand and need which the government has allowed to grow because of its inactivity in this field.

Let me also point out that industrial production is not picking up as it should. In the first nine months of this year it was only up 2.7 per cent over last year. As a measure of economic growth this is not very encouraging. When the Minister of Finance presented his financial message to the people of this country the other day he showed that this government has lost touch with reality. He made the incredible statement that his policies had brought about a recovery in housing. It is true there has been a slight increase in housing activity and in private borrowing, but surely the minister must know what has happened to prices. Does he not realize what housing costs are at this time? Is he not aware that a new home in Canada is out of the reach of 75 per cent of Canadians? Has he not read the statements of the home builders association in this regard and is he not even aware of the report submitted to his own government and tabled by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) predicting only 160,000 housing starts next year? In spite of all this the minister in his financial message gave a very clear indication that one area in which he intends to cut back, is this very sensitive and needed area of social capital represented by housing. To do this at this time is nothing short of a social injustice of the worst sort.

There is one other point I must make in relation to the minister's budget statement. He is not being above board with the Canadian people when he predicates his expenditures for next year without taking medicare and the Expo deficit into account. Surely the minister cannot leave out whatever does not appeal to him. If he does so, what sort of fiscal jockeying is this? The minister knows that medicare is now part of the law of the land. The Prime Minister has said in the house over and over again that medicare is to be brought in as provided by the legislation. The question now is whether this is or is not government policy. If it is then the minister knows full well that his figure of $10.3 billion is nothing but a joke.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Does he know which provinces are coming in and, if so, perhaps he will inform me?

Mr. Valade: The minister should inform us.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: It is certainly very interesting to have the Minister of Finance asking me for information as to which provinces are prepared to enter the medicare program. It is strange to be asked this question when this government has announced with a great deal of publicity its intention to bring in medicare and has said that the provinces are waiting for it. The government said that the whole country was waiting for it and insisted on introducing the legislation. Yet now the Minister of Finance asks if the provinces have indicated to me whether they are prepared to join the program.

Mr. Sharp: I asked the question, Mr. Speaker, simply because the hon. gentleman seems to assume that everyone should know and I therefore assumed that he must know. I do not yet know what the position of the provinces may be.

Mr. Starr: If the Minister of Finance does not know he had better find out soon—

Mr. Sharp: We will in due course.

Mr. Starr: —because the law says that medicare will come into effect on July 1, 1968.

Mr. Sharp: No, it does not.

Mr. Starr: So the minister has only about seven months in which to find out. This points up the manner in which this government is running the affairs of the country and the relationship it has with the provinces. The government boasts about co-operative federalism, but this points up that they have failed in this area also.

The Minister of Finance has said that medicare will add $500 million; yet I am told that his colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), when appearing on television just the other day, said it would cost only about $80 million.

Mr. Sharp: No, he did not. And I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. I said we would have to raise $500 million in order to pay our share, namely, half, and the Minister of National Revenue agreed with this. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) agreed too.

Mr. Starr: If my information is wrong I certainly do not wish to accuse the minister of making that statement, but I am told that the Minister of National Revenue said on television that it would cost only $80 million. So instead of $10.3 billion the expenditures of the Minister of Finance next year will be closer to $11 billion. And what about Expo? The minister says he is going to write that off.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman wants to understand the situation. We have already raised the money for Expo; the only question is how it will be accounted for. I really feel the hon. gentleman is trying to misrepresent the very valid reasons why I excepted these two matters.

Mr. Starr: This is the first information I have received that the money has been provided for. As an ordinary Canadian and member of parliament I have been led to believe that we had to consider the Expo deficit in next year's budget.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, but just so there is some clarification here I would point out to the hon. gentleman that the money has been raised and spent. The question is, how is it to be accounted for, how much in respect of the Quebec government and how much in respect of the federal government? Until we have settled Expo accounts we will not know what the amount is. Moreover, we do not have to worry about this money; the money has all been raised and spent. It is simply a matter of accounting. Therefore this does not affect my cash figures.

Mr. Starr: Evidently financial provision was not complete in all its aspects because during this debate we have had to elicit more definite and detailed information from the minister, as has just been demonstrated. It is enlightening to know that Canadians will not have to pay the deficit for Expo because, as the minister says, the money has been raised and it is just a matter of bookkeeping. I am sure that Canadians as a whole will now be pleased to pay the 5 per cent surtax in view of the fact they do not have to pay anything for Expo.

This government has to stop clowning around. It has to be honest with parliament and the people in giving information as to where we are going. It is about time the government got down to the business of running the country. I believe that the minister and the government have shown a regrettable inability to manage the fiscal affairs of this nation. So far as the Minister of Finance and his colleagues in the government are concerned it has been a case of stop and go, chop and change.

In 1962-63 the government collected $1.7 billion in income tax. In 1966-67 the government is collecting more than double that amount from the individual taxpayer. As of Thursday, November 30, the amount was even higher. The government is collecting $350 this year in personal income tax from every person employed in Canada. In sales and luxury taxes it is collecting a further $45 this year from every employed person in Canada. It is collecting a further $60 per year from every employed person in Canada in cigarette, beer and liquor taxes. As the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), who made such a worth-while contribution when speaking on behalf of the official opposition, asked the other night: Where does it all stop?

This government is saying to Canadians: You will drink less and smoke less. You will accept an inferior standard of housing. You will pay more for necessities or do without. You will do without luxuries and accept austerity. This is in order that the government can go on with its high spending policies. On November 28 the Winnipeg Free Press had this to say:

> This request—for increased taxes.

> —is a naked confession of the government's repeated budgetary blunders. There would be no need for new taxes in November if Mr. Sharp had not totally misconstrued the nation's prospects in June.

It is not the minister's confession which is naked; it is the taxpayer after he gets the bill. The government's deficits have grown more and more unwieldy, without corresponding benefits. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was quoted in the Edmonton Journal of December 16, 1963, four years ago, as saying:

> We accept deficit financing providing it does what it was intended to do—put people to work.

Now we are getting deficit financing without putting people to work. In October, for example, unemployment throughout the economy was 59,000 higher than a year earlier. In manufacturing there 66,000 fewer jobs than a year earlier. In construction there were 29,000 fewer jobs than a year earlier. In November unemployment was 51,000 above last year. The seasonally adjusted rate is 4.3 per cent compared with 3.7 per cent last year.

But I do not think the Minister of Finance should be too severely blamed for all this. After all, he is in a high-stepping crowd in the cabinet and I am sure that, try as he might, he cannot control them. I refer, for example, to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon), his colleague who dreams about big, bad American bankers under his bed. Then there is the former minister of defence who is now in transport, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). They are both big spenders. There is the Registrar General (Mr. Turner) who is in the throes of creating a new department. He is a big spender.

In view of all this, how can the Minister of Finance, a former deputy minister, control boys like those I have enumerated? And I have enumerated just a few. It cannot be done, Mr. Speaker. This is a government of big spenders. Then, of course, there is the right hon. Prime Minister, with his Company of Young Canadians and the war on poverty. All these things cost money. The poor Minister of Finance runs up and down wringing his hands and saying, no doubt: Please, fellows, not again. This must happen at every cabinet meeting. If the Minister of Finance goes to Treasury Board he really has to plead. But these fellows—

• (4:40 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Ontario but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is there unanimous consent to permit the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: The Minister of Finance pleads with these colleaguess of his who are such big spenders. They pay no attention to him and do you know why, Mr. Speaker? They do not have to pay any attention because they do not have to pay for these things themselves. The taxpayers of Canada pay for them. In the past five years the government has raised its budgetary expenditures from $6.8 billion to $10.3 billion. They have had total deficits of $1.8 billion. This has taken place in an expanding economy. I say frankly that the government has created inflation. I pointed out to the Minister of Finance when I asked him a question that Canadian 50-cent pieces minted this year are now selling over the counters of responsible and respectable stores at $3 to Canadians. I venture to say there are more 50-cent pieces in the United States that are going to be sold to Canadians at fabulous prices, perhaps $4 or $5. This government creates inflation.

Mr. Sharp: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting that we raise the price of silver?

Mr. Starr: I am not suggesting that at all.

Mr. Sharp: Oh, come, come.

Mr. Starr: Surely the minister must agree that every Canadian has a right to pay only 50 cents for a 50-cent piece?

Mr. Sharp: They can have two quarters which have exactly the same value.

Mr. Starr: This is the arrogant attitude of this government. They are not considering the taxpayers of this country when they answer in this way.

Mr. Sharp: There is no shortage of quarters, absolutely none.

Mr. Starr: I say to the minister that the government did not invent inflation; inflation did not start by itself. This government created inflation in this country.

Mr. Sharp: We created it in the United States and in Britain too?

Mr. Starr: Inflation in the United States is not as great as it is in Canada. The cost of living index in the United States has not gone up as high as it has in Canada. Expert economists say definitely that if the cost of living index rises over 2.5 per cent in one year there is cause for alarm.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I have said that too.

Mr. Starr: How much has ours gone up in the past year?

Mr. Sharp: More than that.

Mr. Starr: You're darned right, it has gone up more than that. This is the kind of mess into which the government has gotten the country. The people of this country cannot get essential housing. The prices are out of reach or housing is non-existent. Prices have gone sky high. The government cannot make up its mind about anything, Mr. Speaker. The government's inability to follow a sustained pattern has been most destructive of confidence in this country. Evidently the Minister of Finance does not know where to turn. Obviously he has no control over events or over his colleagues. It is for this reason that there can be no confidence in the government. It does not know where it is going from one day to the next.

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): If the hon. member wishes to ask a question he should do so from his own seat.

Mr. Starr: Does the hon. member want to ask me about the Rhodesian tobacco that is being shipped into Canada from South Africa?

Mr. Roxburgh: It is not coming from South Africa. I just wanted to ask the hon. member a question. We always listen to him with interest. I was not in the house when he started his speech but I came in as he was talking about medicare. I wanted to ask the hon. member what his feelings are toward medicare. Should medicare be implemented on July 1 as this house indicated?

Mr. Starr: My feeling is exactly the same as it was when the bill was debated in the house. I voted for the principle of medicare. I am definitely against the universality of medicare. I think medicare should be available on July 1, 1968 to those Canadians who want to take advantage of it. It should have been available on July 1, 1967.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the budget debate, particularly in view of the emphasis which my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) placed on the importance of productivity improvement as a restraining influence on prices and costs. I will be dealing with a new program which I suggest will make a major contribution in this direction. This program will be another in a series of measures which this government has introduced over the past several years to help achieve this objective, namely, an improvement in productivity. I am particularly glad to see in the house at the moment the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) who has asked on a number of occasions to be informed what this government is doing to improve productivity. I will, as a consequence, take a few moments to mention some of those measures which will also serve to provide a background to the important new arrangement which I propose to outline this afternoon.

As hon. members will recall, one of the first programs which the Department of Industry introduced shortly after its formation was the automotive program. This program, as all hon. members know, is designed to promote growth, efficiency and employment opportunities in a most important sector of the Canadian economy. Following this my department then focused on the need to encourage and substantially increase research development and activity in Canadian industry, with the purpose of developing a technological base from which new projects and processes for world-wide markets can be developed. As a result we introduced the program for the advancement of industrial technology and also the industrial research institute program which puts universities in a position to supply research and development services to Canadian industry.

At the same time the new Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, passed by parliament, came into effect. As members will recollect, this act, imposed upon previous measures for this purpose, makes the incentives more widely available. These three measures, I believe, go a long way toward assisting industry upgrade and expand its technological activities.

I should also mention that the Department of Industry has assumed responsibility for the shipbuilding subsidy program. This is being reintroduced on a new basis whereby the efficiency of this industry will be progressively improved. A further most important program which my department has introduced, and about which I spoke this morning at the federal-provincial conference on housing is the BEAM program. This program, whose purpose is to increase the production, manufacture and use of building materials, equipment and accessories, should contribute significantly, if it continues to enjoy the support which it already has received, to a reduction in the cost of housing.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Sound industrial design is an increasingly essential factor in improving productivity. In this area the Department of Industry has initiated a comprehensive program including design promotion, research and product development, design education, and design information.

Finally, the adjustment assistance program which provides loans and remissions of duty on production machinery to automotive parts producers is an important element in assisting this industry to become more efficient in order to compete on a North American basis.

Although this is not an exhaustive list, I believe it gives hon. members an over-all view of the kind of activities in which the Department of Industry is engaged. As I stated in the standing committee of the house when the estimates of the Department of Industry were examined last June, the improvement of the productivity of a major sector of our economy is a very exciting challenge. No one can dispute the difficulties of obtaining immediate and measurable results, and yet it is a task which must succeed. My department has accepted this challenge.

At this stage I should like to make a statement on a new measure which has been formulated by my department and to which I made reference earlier.

Mr. Barnett: Before the minister proceeds with his statement, would he mind answering a couple of questions arising from what he has already said? The first one arises out of my curiosity with regard to the derivation of the name of the B.E.A.M. program. It was not explained in the background papers of the conference.

My second question is with regard to the minister's reference to the shipbuilding subsidy program. Was he simply referring to the phased-out subsidy program which was announced some time ago by the former minister of transport, or is he announcing what is in effect a new program which will be a substitute for the one I mentioned?

Mr. Drury: In response to the first question let me say that the initials B.E.A.M. stand for the first letters of the elements to which this program is directed, namely building, equipment, accessories, and materials. It also has the advantage not only of encompassing this list but of being in itself a word related to the construction business.

As regards the shipbuilding subsidies, the program to which I referred was not a program of phasing out but one of a progressive reduction in the subsidies hitherto paid to shipbuilders, combined with technological advice and assistance to the shipbuilding industry so that as a consequence of increased efficiency the shipbuilding industry as a whole would find itself in no less of an advantageous position than it was under the higher subsidies.

As I said, I would now like to advise the house of a program for machinery envisaged under the proposed tariff item 42700-1 which is set out in the ways and means resolutions on the customs tariff tabled on November 6. This program is of major significance as a means for encouraging the development of efficient Canadian industry.

The proposed tariff item 42700-1 covers annual imports of machines, as well as accessories, attachments, control equipment, tools and parts for use therewith, amounting to approximately $700 million. It will replace 18 items in the customs tariff and, in addition, will cover certain equipment used with machines which are at present dutiable under other tariff items. The categories of machinery affected by the proposal are, in general, those used by the manufacturing and service industries. Some miscellaneous mechanical products for domestic use are also affected but they represent a small fraction of the total importation involved. The reason for their inclusion is that in accordance with tariff board guidance they are classed as machines and, consequently, covered by item 42700-1 which extends to all machinery not otherwise provided for in the tariff.

For the most part, machinery which will be classifiable under the new tariff item is at present being imported as a class or kind made in Canada at rates of 10 per cent British preference, 22½ per cent most favoured nation, or as a class or kind not made in Canada at rates of free British preference and 7½ per cent. The new item provides that the rates of duty on all goods falling thereunder will be 2½ per cent British preference, 15 per cent m.f.n. The "class or kind" distinction will disappear. In addition, it provides that remission of duty may be granted by the governor in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Industry when such remission is in the public interest and the machinery being imported is not available from production in Canada.

The primary objective of providing for remission of duty in this way is to encourage the development of efficient industry by allowing users of machinery to acquire capital equipment at the lowest possible cost and at the same time enable machinery producers to derive maximum incentive and encouragement from the tariff which will now apply, with a greater measure of certainty, to the products they manufacture. If Canadian manufacturers are to increase productivity and be competitive in international markets, it is of vital importance that they acquire the most modern and efficient machinery. Remission of duty on advanced equipment which is not available from production in Canada will make an important contribution in this regard. Tariff item 42700-1 provides important advantages to producers of machinery as well.

First, the proposed rate of 15 per cent most favoured nation provides a reasonable measure of protection having in mind the tariff rate of other industrial countries pursuant to the Kennedy trade agreement. For example, when the United States reductions are fully implemented, their corresponding rates on machinery will range from 5 per cent to 8 per cent. Other corresponding rates are: United Kingdom, 7½ per cent; E.E.C., 5 per cent to 8 per cent; Japan 7½ per cent.

The second advantage to machinery producers is that the new tariff rate will apply to any product which they can produce as soon as they are in a position to supply, and this represents a substantial change from past practice. Under present tariff provisions, a Canadian made machine is not entitled to "made in Canada" status and the related level of production until such machines account for 10 per cent of domestic consumption in that class. The effect of these provisions has been that the well known "infant industry" argument for tariff protection has been applied in reverse in Canada. When a company is in the early stages of production, little or no protection is provided, but once it is in a position to supply 10 per cent of domestic consumption, substantially increased tariff protection becomes available, and defences against dumping begin to apply.

This situation will be corrected with the introduction of the machinery program. All machinery imports under the new tariff item will be subject to the same statutory rate, and remissions will not be granted unless there is no reasonable availability from Canadian production.

This matter is of particular importance to Canadian producers of custom engineered machines. Under the present tariff provisions, these producers may not be able to benefit from the tariff related to "made in Canada" machinery and, in addition, they are not protected against dumping because they are unable to demonstrate, with legal validity, that they have supplied 10 per cent of Canadian consumption. The facts might be that such custom engineered machinery has never been made anywhere and, therefore, it is impossible to develop a statistical base for applying the 10 per cent rule. When such situations arise at present, decisions as to what rate of duty will apply must be derived from strictly formal interpretations of the law rather than giving effect to what was the probable intention of earlier legislators.

The third advantage for machinery producers is that remission of duty can be granted in respect of production parts classed under tariff item 42700-1 which are not available in Canada. While the governor in council has authority under section 273 (L) of the Customs Act to establish temporary tariff items to permit entry of production components at a free or reduced rate, the new item will provide increased flexibility in dealing with machinery components on a case by case basis. This flexibility is expected to stimulate machinery manufacturing by encouraging specialization and assisting producers to compete more effectively.

• (5:00 p.m.)

While the major objective of the new item is to assist the development of efficient Canadian industry, the proposal has important additional advantages. This change in the machinery tariff was of great value in enabling Canada to pay for tariff concessions offered by our major trading partners in the Kennedy round. Moreover, it constitutes a major simplification in tariff administration with correspondingly greater certainty for both producers and users of machinery.

Negotiation of the machinery proposal was difficult and protracted since removing the formal class or kind distinction required that goods under tariff items being replaced which were classified as "not made" would carry higher statutory rates. In practice the effective rates would be reduced by virtue of the operations of the new remission system.

Trading partners agreed to our proposal in the end on the understanding that an overall reduction of duty would result because remission would be granted on imports of machinery not available from production in Canada. However, they insisted that in order to treat the machinery proposal as a tariff concession by Canada there be some guarantee that it would, in fact, lead to a reduction in total duties collected on the machinery involved.

As a consequence, Canada gave an undertaking that the average annual incidence of m.f.n. duty under 42700-1 would not exceed 9 per cent. This undertaking is tantamount to saying that at least 40 per cent, by value, of future m.f.n. imports under 42700-1 will consist of machinery not available from production in Canada and consequently duty will not be collected on them.

I would emphasize that this undertaking does not involve any risk for Canada. Even though domestic machinery production is growing, a large volume of our total machinery requirements will continue to be imported and, as at present, the largest portion of such imports will comprise machinery which is not available in Canada. During recent years, about 60 per cent of the machinery imports which will be covered under 42700-1 were ruled as being of a class or kind not made in Canada. In 1966, the figure was closer to 65 per cent and this pattern is expected to remain relatively stable. Accordingly, we anticipate no difficulty whatever in meeting our commitment on average incidence.

Another important advantage of the machinery tariff proposal is that it will eliminate the use of distinctions in the customs tariff between machinery of a "class or kind made in Canada" and "not made" in respect of a major portion of our imports and thereby remove a long-standing source of appeals and litigation with corresponding problems for Canadian industry and for customs administration as well.

The purpose of such "class or kind" distinctions in existing machinery tariff items, as stated at the time the most important of them were introduced, was to provide for reduced rates on production machinery not directly competitive with machinery produced in Canada. Also, various statements made by ministers at that time indicate that the words "class or kind" were to be subject to practical rather than legalistic interpretation. This was the basis of customs interpretation applied until about 1950.

By that time the difference between the rates of duty for "made" and "not made" items, which had steadily widened over the years, had become a strong incentive for importers to seek ways to bring their goods within the definition of a "class or kind not made in Canada". The annual volume of imports was also increasing rapidly. Accordingly, increased tariff litigation resulted.

In broad terms, the precedents established by litigation have resulted in a gradual movement away from applying the "class or kind" concept on the basis of practical judgment toward narrow interpretations based on explicit legal determinations. The ever-present possibility of further litigation tended to create uncertainty for machinery producers regarding those categories of machines which they could expect would be protected by the "made in Canada" rates. Similarly, importers would not be certain in respect of the duration of an existing "not made in Canada" rate.

Because of these uncertainties, as well as the costs and delays involved in litigation, both machinery producers and users have made representations over the years that a more practical approach to the original objective of the "class or kind" provisions should be developed. In fact, some of the suggestions have been quite similar to the present machinery tariff program.

While discussing the unsatisfactory aspects of "class or kind" distinctions in respect of machinery, I should also point out that trading partners have frequently objected to them as well. The reason is that low rates of duty on "not made" goods are inherently unstable and can move to protective "made in Canada" levels by administrative action without further negotiation. Thus trading partners contend they have no assurance of continued access to the Canadian market at the low rates. Indeed, they had come to the view prior to the Kennedy round that they would not regard as concessions any tariff reductions which carried a "not made in Canada" qualification.

The procedure for dealing with applications for remissions of duty on machinery is straightforward. Importers who find that their machinery requirements are not available from production in Canada may apply to the Minister of Industry for a remission of duty, either before or after actual importation takes place. These requests will be referred to a machinery and equipment advisory board, established by the governor in council pursuant to the Department of Industry Act, composed of a chairman with a broad experience in commercial policy and the deputy ministers of finance, national revenue, trade and commerce, and industry. The purpose of this board will be to advise the Minister of Industry regarding the eligibility of machinery for remission of duty in accordance with the provisions of item 42700-1. The Minister of Industry will, in turn, advise the governor in council who will have final authority in granting remission.

The machinery and equipment advisory board will proceed on a practical basis rather than the present legalistic and formal approach. Its findings will be based on facts of the case and on practical considerations. In evaluating applications, the board will be assisted by the specialized branches of the Department of Industry which will carry out the factual and analytic back-up work.

In considering applications for remission, the advisory board will have regard for two basic tests. First, it will want to know whether the machinery being imported is available from production in Canada and, second, it will wish to satisfy itself that it is in the public interest to recommend that a remission of duty be granted. The criterion of availability in Canada is to be understood as follows: Machinery is to be deemed available in Canada if at least one manufacturer has proven capability to manufacture machinery which, in so far as its range of physical qualities, operational characteristics and efficiency are concerned, is reasonably equivalent to the machinery for which relief of duty is being sought.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Proven capability may be deemed as existing in Canada if: (a) the full range of technical and physical capabilities necessary for the production of the machinery for which remission is sought exists within the normal operational framework of at least one manufacturer; and (b) such facilities have in fact produced machinery which, in the judgment of the Board, has demonstrated a production competence reasonably equivalent to that required to produce the machinery for which remission is sought.

The criterion of public interest will be applied, in its broadest sense, in relation to the main objective of the machinery proposal, namely, that of encouraging the development of efficient Canadian industry. It is understood that in the main importations of machinery contribute to the maintenance, improvement and expansion of efficient industrial activity in Canada. In the typical case, therefore, remission of duty would be regarded as being in the public interest in cases where such machinery is not available from production in Canada. Such remission should assist manufacturers to be more competitive by reducing their capital costs. There may be instances, however, where the machinery and equipment advisory board finds final authority in granting remission.

firm are clearly inconsistent with the development of efficient Canadian industry. In such exceptional instances, the board may advise the minister that remission is not in the public interest.

Provision is being made for appeals from the findings of the machinery and equipment advisory board in respect of applications for remission of duty under tariff item 42700-1.

Appeals will be referred to a review board composed of three members from outside of government. Such a board will be established by the governor in council pursuant to the Department of Industry Act to deal with cases as and when they arise. The chairman would be selected because of the disinterested vantage point which his experience and position in the community would enable him to take, and the two other members may be drawn from those sectors of industry that are important users and manufacturers of machinery. The review board, like the advisory board, will be expected to take a practical rather than a legalistic view of cases coming before it.

When the machinery and equipment review board is of the opinion that remission should be granted in any case on which the advisory board had recommended to the contrary, the Minister of Industry would normally accept the review board's findings and recommend remission to the governor in council.

In any case where the review board supports an appeal that relief of duty should not have been granted, the advisory board will be guided by the review board's findings in respect of future applications for remission on the machinery in question. However, such an opinion could not be regarded as a firm precedent, since the facts about availability of machinery from production in Canada will be constantly changing.

At this point, I would like to comment on the market for machinery, and the characteristics of Canada's machinery industry.

The predominant feature of much of the industrial machinery and equipment market is that competition is international and severe. No industrial country can hope to produce its total machinery requirements. The range of products is too diverse and manufacturers in various countries have developed specialized products with which it is uneconomic to compete. In 1964, for example, the United States imported industrial machinery amounting to $900 million; U.K.—$1.015 billion; West Germany—$1 billion; Japan—$595 million. All these figures are expressed in United States dollars.

Since competition tends to be international in character, it is important for a nation's machinery industry, particularly in an economy of Canada's size, to aim at manufacturing an increasingly selective range of machinery designed and priced to be competitive in both domestic and export markets. This achievement would help to offset, in our balance of trade, necessary imports of other machinery which cannot be manufactured domestically on an economic basis.

The basic characteristics of the Canadian machinery industry are that it is largely foreign owned, produces a wide range of products in relatively small volume, and is oriented toward the domestic market which has been protected by a relatively high tariff. In many cases, therefore, little product development is carried on, and economics of scale and specialization have not been achieved to any significant degree.

The fact that the Canadian machinery industry is largely foreign owned is at once its principal strength and weakness. The industry's diversity, know-how, and steady expansion since world war II are largely due to the initiative of foreign corporations which established subsidiaries to exploit the advantages arising from proximity to the market, a modest but long-standing tradition of excellence in the metal working industry, competitive wage scales, and tariff protection. However, the resulting orientation of production of parent designed machines toward the domestic market—since markets outside Canada have been largely supplied by the parent corporations or their other subsidiaries—has limited Canada's machinery exports, reduced opportunities for volume production, and discouraged the development of machines of unique design and performance. There are exceptions, of course, in respect of the extent of design and production engineering being carried on in Canada. These are principally in the field of heavy equipment for use in the resource and primary materials industries, as well as in harnessing electric power.

Part of the machinery industry is, I should add, Canadian owned. While the companies are modest in size, they have demonstrated a great deal of initiative both in design and marketing in the domestic and export market. Some of their achievements are quite remarkable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. I regret to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him has expired. Does the house give the minister unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rapp: Not for too long.

Mr. Drury: I thank hon. members. I shall drone on for about a minute and a half longer.

Mr. Hees: Drone away, as long as you remain non-controversial.

Mr. Drury: It is noteworthy also that many of the important contributions to design in these cases have been made by citizens who have immigrated to Canada.

If the development of the machinery industry is to be sustained, it must keep pace with advancing technology in a market which is becoming increasingly international in character. The overriding interest of machinery users in obtaining the most advanced capital equipment is compelling machinery builders in every country to take a critical look at both their manufacturing methods and their products to determine what improvements and research and development are required.

Fortunately, there are encouraging signs that Canadian machinery producers appreciate the necessity for adjusting to these circumstances, and are making various arrangements with their parent corporations to do so. These include moves toward greater specialization, broadening sales policies to include export markets, and expanding design engineering activity. Evidence of these trends to date includes the improved export performance of the industry in recent years, the decisions made by some parent corporations to assign responsibility to Canadian subsidiaries for the manufacture of particular products for international markets, and the industry's increasing participation in the Department of Industry's program for the advancement of industrial technology.

There is good reason for optimism about the future of the Canadian machinery industry. The requirements of our manufacturing and service industries for machinery in the general categories classifiable under tariff item 42700-1 are now about one and a quarter billion dollars per annum. The machinery producers' share of this market has been growing steadily and now amounts to almost half of the total. Further, some of these producers have shown that they can supply specialized products in world markets which are competitive both in respect of design and price. The Kennedy round will provide greatly improved opportunity for expansion along these lines.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I believe that the Canadian machinery industry should be able to cope with the competitive conditions which lie ahead and grow steadily provided, of course, it continues to display imagination and initiative, together with a willingness to adjust. I am confident that the machinery program will impart a strong thrust in the direction of higher productivity in the machinery industry, reduced costs in industry generally, and a better performance of the economy as a whole.

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, at this stage it is not my intention to try to make a major contribution to the budget debate. By this I mean a major contribution covering the whole spectrum of financial and fiscal problems confronting the country, which have been discussed by the minister the other evening and during the debate which has taken place over the past five or six days. At the same time, if my contribution is not major from the point of view of the spectrum it covers I hope it will not be unimportant because there is one specific and particular aspect of fiscal policy and financial affairs to which I want to devote myself and which I think demands some attention, requires some interrogation, and deserves some answers and illumination.

The basic message of the Conservative party with respect to the fiscal and financial affairs of the country, with respect to the economic crisis in which we are currently trapped and with respect to the minister's budget speech, has been clearly and carefully enunciated by the leader of this party and various other hon. members, including the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), and several other hon. members who are highly qualified to discourse on this subject at some length and who have made important and compelling contributions to the debate. Anything I could add in the areas with which they have concerned themselves would probably be nothing more than an exercise in gilding the lily. So, Mr. Speaker, as I suggested a moment ago I am not going to attempt to cover the broad range and spectrum of fiscal and financial ills. The speakers to whom I have referred have done so in an eloquent and illuminating fashion. However, I do wish to place myself on record as agreeing with and subscribing to the general view of my party so far as the budget is concerned and so far as the financial and fiscal affairs of the nation are concerned.

At the present time there is a motion picture playing in movie houses in various Canadian cities. It is called "The Flim-Flam Man". I think its title can be applied most significantly, carefully and meaningfully to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and his colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson). The budget exercise of the past week must indeed be regarded as an exercise in flim-flam. If there is any flim-flam man operating in the nation at large at present it is the Minister of Finance, and if there is anyone assisting him in that exercise it is the Minister of National Revenue, for never in the life of this parliament, which now spans almost two years, have we seen such an exercise in flim-flam as the so-called budget that these two ministers have attempted to foist on this national legislature and on this nation.

The government's so-called savings program, as announced by the two ministers to whom I have referred, is certainly an exercise in flim-flam, double-talk and hypocrisy. No Canadian who has any experience or connection with the business and industrial community, any connection with the corner grocery store, any connection with the fundamental function of bringing up a family and running a household, is going to be fooled by the kind of semantics offered to this house when the budget was introduced and later offered by the Minister of National Revenue when he rose to attempt to defend, rationalize and explain what he described as a serious commitment to savings and to cut-backs in public expenditures.

As I have said, sir, there is really one specific area about which I want to talk, although there are a number to which I would like to devote some attention. Like other Canadians, those who live in my constituency, Winnipeg South, are still waiting for answers to questions dealing with the fiscal and financial area. They are still waiting for answers to legitimate, reasonable, sensible requests that have been advanced by this side of the house during the course of the past two years but which have so far fallen on deaf ears.

[Mr. Sherman.]

I speak of such requests as our suggestion for elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, a tax which militates most severely against construction in cities like my own, Winnipeg. I speak of our request for some action in the area of the cost of living, the cost-price squeeze and the cost-price spiral which now hold hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of Canadian taxpayers, home owners and housewives in thrall, indeed in slavery. I speak of our request for some kind of relief, some kind of escape from the oppression currently being suffered by pensioners, in all categories, including superannuated civil servants, senior citizens and war veterans. The whole community of pensioners is a community in thrall, in slavery, existing in extreme difficulty if not absolutely suffering at the present time as a consequence of the run-away influences and pressures in this country, about which the government has done nothing during the two year life of this parliament.

We have also advanced a legitimate request for action in the area of income tax relief for small home owners in so far as the real estate taxes on their houses and properties are concerned. We have made the legitimate suggestion that real estate taxes on owner occupied homes should be deductible from taxable income for income tax purposes, at least up to a certain level of deduction.

These are among some of the suggestions we have made to prime the economy and restore the faith of the people in the financial affairs of this country, to inspire and generate the populace to a new pride in the jobs, professions and undertakings they carry out for Canada, and to create a new excitement about Canada. We have made these suggestions during the various budget debates in the two year life of this parliament and in the throne speech debates at the opening of both sessions of this parliament.

These are subjects to which I could devote the full time allotted to me under the rules during this debate but they are being covered by other speakers. All I want to do at this time with respect to such items is to mention them and again place on the record the fact that we on this side of the chamber, and I am personally speaking for my own constituency, urgently request the government to take a look at these items, among others. Let members of the government examine their books, hearts and consciences to see whether or not some of the difficulties, some of the enslavement in which Canadians are currently trapped can be relieved if not totally removed by bold action, by improvisation, by experimentation, by leadership along the lines of the proposals we have made.

• (5:30 p.m.)

In moving from that section of my remarks to the nub of the speech I should like to make I reiterate again that we urge the government to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and to adopt and experiment with some of the suggestions which have come from this side of the house with regard to the cost of living. We urge the government to take action to remove the chains from the pensioners of this country in all categories. We urge the government to take a look at the substantial investment the small home owner has in this country and grant him some relief from income tax along the line of the realty tax deduction to which I referred a moment ago.

Having said that I wish to come to the specific item I should like to present to the Minister of Finance at this time, that is, the issue of the new 1967-68 series of Canada savings bonds. It seems to me that the whole history in respect of this bond issue is symptomatic of the manner in which this Liberal administration has mismanaged national financial affairs in Canada today.

The original idea in respect of Canada savings bonds was to develop and establish the savings habit on the part of ordinary Canadians. The original philosophy was that there should be an incentive to exercise thrift and good management among the average taxpayers, among ordinary Canadians like those who sit in this house and those at home who sent us here. At the time the savings bonds program was introduced in Canada there were relatively few vehicles available to the public which offered a secure savings medium that was convertible to cash on demand. There were not very many avenues to which an average wage earner could turn in order to find a good solid investment. Moreover, there were not many investments of this type which were immediately convertible to cash on demand in times of need. Therefore the savings bond vehicle filled a void in the life of the average Canadian in the context of his financial life. Philosophically it provided a valuable assist to the legislators and leaders of this country who, while devoting their attention to preparing more serious political issues, wished to encourage good, sound financial and monetary habits as much as they possibly could.

The philosophy of encouraging thrift and good management on the part of Canadians on every main street in every town and village was a highly laudable one. This, however, no longer is the case. There are now a great many institutions, vehicles and avenues through which the average Canadian can obtain every benefit which originally was available to him only through the savings bonds. Institutions such as trust companies, insurance companies, mortgage dealers, financial houses and mutual funds offer untold opportunities for the small Canadian to make an investment which will provide him a good rate of return and offer him immediate convertibility into cash if and when needed.

As I say, there are today many vehicles and avenues of this type because, as no one in this chamber would deny, times have changed. Times have changed financially, fiscally and socially. They have changed as much in this area as they have in any other area of Canadian life or in any other sector of the Canadian community. With the change of times apparently there has also come a change in government thinking in respect of savings bonds. As an illustration of this point one need look no further than the fact that whereas once the maximum amount an individual could hold in Canada savings bonds, war bonds, or whatever they were called in the original concept, was $5,000 the maximum has now been raised to $50,000.

There are not very many average wage earners in this country who have $50,000 to invest in Canada savings bonds or in any other investment. I doubt that this point would be seriously challenged in this chamber. So from this provision in respect of this series of bonds one can only draw the very obvious inference that the government no longer is seriously concerned about the original philosophy behind Canada savings bonds. What the government is now planning to do by means of Canada savings bonds is raise money to bail it out of trouble.

There are probably many Canadians who could invest $5,000 in Canada savings bonds and a few who might be able to stretch it to $10,000, but how many ordinary Canadians can invest $50,000? The only people who can invest $50,000 are the wealthy Canadians, the affluent investors, the capital money lenders, the people who deal in loans, bonds, investments and securities day in and day out every week. These people know the market, know the business and have the kind of money to invest in projects of this type.

There is nothing wrong in changing the philosophy in respect of Canada savings bonds or in getting away from the philosophy of encouraging the average Canadian to invest by this method. There is nothing wrong with raising the ceiling to $50,000 with the intention of making these bonds available not only to the average Canadian but to the big money men, except the motive behind it. What is wrong with it is not the actual mathematical exercise itself but rather the motive behind it, that is, the motive or objective with regard to the 1967-68 series of Canada savings bonds of raising money for the federal treasury. The purpose is not to encourage the savings habit, as it once was, but to raise money for the federal treasury. That being the case, I suggest to every member of this house and to every person in this country that we have come to a sad day in the evolution of savings bond philosophy.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The question arises automatically and instinctively, is this a sensible way for the government to raise money? The answer to that question is emphatically, unequivocally and unarguably no. It is not a sensible way for the government to raise money. It is a very expensive way for the government to raise money. Why does the government not go into the capital money markets to raise money, as has always been its traditional and acceptable practice? Let me tell you why. The government cannot get money in the capital money markets because there is no confidence in the government, particularly in respect of its bonds.

What has the government done under the guise of giving small Canadian investors and average Canadian home owners the opportunity to get in on the new series of savings bonds which pay pretty substantial rates of interest? This government has gone to the 20 million or 19,999,000 Canadians of average means and decided through this savings bond issue to bilk them of every dollar they can in order to bail themselves out of trouble. In so doing they have undertaken the most expensive exercise in money raising it would be possible for any government in Canada to undertake at this time. The corollary to the first question I asked—is this a sensible way to raise money—must be, is this the only way the government can raise money? Obviously the answer, sadly, reluctantly and regrettably, is yes. Otherwise the Minister of Finance would not undertake such a tortuously expensive method of raising money.

If the government had the confidence of the capital money markets and the people who deal in those markets and could get its money in the normal way, there would have been no flamboyant savings bond issue such as this series which pays an average yield of 5.48 per cent interest to maturity, with the bonds doubling in value if held for 13 years. If this is the only way the government can raise money to bail itself out of trouble then, as I suggest, the government cannot command the confidence of the regular markets where it would normally go to raise the money it needed.

If what I suggest is so and I believe it to be so, the government should have the moral courage to tell us that this is the situation. Canadians have the stamina to take it and to face an economic crisis, but they like to know what the facts are. We have had enough of what I referred to earlier this afternoon as flim-flam. We want to know what the situation is. We will pull in our belts and fight this crisis as other nations have fought other crises in other times.

This is a hopeless exercise in hypocrisy, and I am referring to the government and the minister involved shirking their responsibility and asking us to stick our heads in the sand. The government is confusing us with overture, appeal and embellishment. What I have in mind is the advertising campaigns which were conducted in respect of the 1967-68 series of Canada savings bonds. We are being led down the garden path. The government is deluding us into thinking that everything is right and good and that in fact we can afford to issue a series of bonds with extremely attractive interest rates and extremely impractical results. If the Minister of Finance asks me why I think this is such an expensive way to raise money for the federal treasury I will consider it a privilege and a pleasure to tell him why.

An hon. Member: He hasn't.

Mr. Sherman: This is the most expensive exercise possible in which the minister could indulge because of the cost connected with the issuing of a series of bonds of this type. I refer particularly to the commissions which are paid on these new bonds. We must also consider the extremely expensive cost of advertising, including full page advertisements in national, local and regional newspapers. These advertisements have even appeared in the weekly newspapers in this country from coast to coast. This is extremely costly. We must also consider the cost of direct mail campaigns which include the distribution of pamphlets such as the one I hold in my hand. Various other advertising media have also been used to promote this bond issue. Of course this is salesmanship, and no one challenges the necessity for salesmanship. However, salesmanship for an unnecessary exercise is unnecessary.

In this case the exercise, as I suggested, stems and derives from motives and objectives which are wrong and involve an additional expense to this country which we at this time in our current economic and financial crisis can ill afford. There is an additional cost which I have not yet enunciated relating to the new issue of savings bonds. I refer to the new interest on the turnover versus the old interest. The new interest is to average 5.48 per cent if the bonds are held to maturity. As I suggested, the bonds will double in value if they are held for 13 years. The additional interest, the tremendous advertising costs and the commissions and the bank charges levied in the case of each new bond represent a staggering expense in respect of an exercise developed on the basis of incorrect reasoning; a wrong philosophy regarding savings bonds and an attempt to reach the average Canadian on the streets of this country in every town and village in order to pull the government out of the fiscal difficulty in which it now finds itself.

There is also the question of the risk involved in such a bond issue, and I hope the minister has considered the extreme hazard he shoulders in this regard. What would happen if, for example, the people of Canada should become more worried than they are and create a sudden run for cash in exchange for bonds? These bonds are negotiable at any time. What sort of predicament would the government find itself in then and what sort of financial state would Canada be in? Added to the mistaken philosophy, the disastrous concept, the wrong reason for undertaking this exercise to obtain capital in this risky way, and the exorbitant cost, is this additional risk which is an element in itself that increases the cost. I am sure, the result will be extremely disastrous for the people of Canada. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I go on record as condemning this exercise undertaken by the Minister of Finance and the government as an unwise and most expensive one for the nation at this time.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in the position of having to condense what I have to say into about seven or eight minutes.

An hon. Member: Good.

Mr. Patterson: Someone said, "Good". I thought that would be the response. I will have to leave out the bouquets and perhaps some of the criticisms. I wish to make a few comments, however, with regard to the budget that has been introduced. Various factors, allegedly beyond the control of the government, have been blamed for the situation facing the country at the present time. But I think it is evident that the policies pursued by the government and its disregard of the effects of its borrowing and spending practices have been largely responsible for the problems that face us at this time.

The minister has now introduced a budget which calls for increased taxes and reduced borrowings. I should like to refer first of all to the proposal in regard to tax increases. Under the present system there are only two sources of money with which to pay government expenses, namely, taxes and borrowings. Just a few days ago my colleague the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) spoke about the tax increases and said, as recorded on page 5155 of Hansard:

> Taking these costs—
>
> The costs of government.
>
> —and applying them to the net national income of the Canadian people we find that 57 cents out of every dollar that is earned by Canadians is taken back by governments at one level or another. If we include the net cost of government, that cost which is financed through taxes and not through other sources of income, we find that nearly 50 per cent of every dollar that is earned by Canadians is taken back by government in the form of taxes to pay for the cost of government.

This indicates very clearly the extent to which the taxation structure of Canada is draining the resources of our people. We must consider the effect of rising costs occasioned by tax increases on the take-home pay of Canadians. Our workers are beginning to think that about all they have to do now is sign their cheques and send them to the government. The other evening I was listening to Professor Reuben Bellan, professor of political science at the Manitoba university, who pointed out that the tax increases are liable to increase the demands of workers for increased wages and this process will be carried on to the point where it affects the unemployment picture. Therefore we must consider the entire tax structure as it affects the cost of living. It has now reached the point where it will be a case of diminishing returns if the tax load is increased any more.

However, we find that the government has conflicting policies. We discovered this in respect of the housing situation. The government stressed the importance of housing for our people, gave incentive bonuses for construction and then turned around and imposed the 11 per cent sales tax and cut off the bonuses. This was responsible for the raising of mortgage rates. So we find that in many ways the policies of the government are directly affecting the cost of living, and it now finds it must increase taxes in order to try to solve the problem.

An article that appeared in the Globe and Mail of November 16 last had as its heading, "Can Economy Take Tax Rise? Experts Wonder." The article pointed out that the need for higher taxes to bail Ottawa out of its financial troubles is generally accepted. The article then raised the question of whether the economy will stand a further tax hike.

I believe this is something that we and the government should take into consideration. We believe it will not be effective in solving the problems of inflation. In fact, an article which appeared in the Monetary Times of November, 1967, stated that a tax increase does nothing directly to contain the sort of inflation in which we find ourselves at the present time but instead it risks intensifying it.

We must consider the effect these measures will have on the employment picture. As has been stated, it seems that the government is embarking upon a plan to reduce employment. This will, of course, affect the welfare of Canadians all across the country. It has been said that the government is restricting its expenditures. We concur in the policy of the government with regard to curtailing the cost of government. This has been a source of great concern to the Canadian people for many years. I believe the time has come when this aspect of the problem must be seriously considered.

However, I believe that in outlining the ways in which this is to be effected the minister struck at some very vital areas which I believe should not have been included in the curtailing of expenditures. The question of superannuated civil servants has been raised. As a member of the committee set up to study this problem I, as well as every other member, was shocked to hear the statement that no increase in pensions will be forthcoming.

It has been said that we must reduce borrowings in order to take the pressure off the private capital market. I call attention to the fact that we have means by which this can be accomplished, but the government has acted very slowly. Even though it has moved slightly in this field, we believe that the Bank of Canada should be used to finance at least part of the government's expenditures in order that pressure may be taken off the private capital market, thereby releasing more money for the development of this country.

I would mention the reduction in the lending programs of the government. Here I point out that the government is dealing with very critical situations, for instance, national housing. I intended to deal at some length with this matter, Mr. Speaker, but time does not permit. I believe it is catastrophic that the government should reduce its contributions to the residential home construction program. There are several other factors in this regard but I do not have time to deal with them as my time has almost expired. I simply say that in the absence of adequate and effective monetary and fiscal policies designed to enable Canadians to provide for their immediate needs, they must mortgage their future to provide for the present.

The other evening I viewed the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) on television. He said he doubted that the government would ever be upset because members to his extreme left would see to it that they were not in the house when votes were taken or they would lend their support to the government. I call attention to the fact that if all the members of his party had been present the other evening there would have been more than enough members to upset the government and put an end to the policies that are now in operation. Therefore I repudiate the implication that we must take the responsibility in this connection and I suggest to the hon. member for Perth that he should take a look at his own party.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER ON QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), Weights and Measures—inquiry concerning the adoption of the metric system; the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray), Parliament Hill—inquiry as to maintenance of centennial flame; the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie), Privileges and Elections—election act to committee.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) felt it necessary to attack me and describe me as the official hatchet man of the caucus and of the Liberal machine. This in itself does not particularly concern me, although I might add at the outset of my remarks this language is hardly the type of language that one would have expected from the Leader of the Opposition, who was supposed to introduce a new level of debate into the house. What does concern me, however, is the inference that I would use the cause of national unity as a part of political, partisan tactics.

If the Leader of the Opposition were in the house this evening, and I have adopted the usual courtesy of informing the hon. member that I was about to speak, I could assure him that I share his view about the necessity for caution when we are discussing issues that separate this country today. At the outset of my remarks, I want to assure the house that it is not my intention tonight to retaliate for what I consider to be an unfair and unwarranted reflection on my conduct as a member of the House of Commons. However I would not want the hon. member, if he were here this evening, to interpret the remarks I am about to make as an apology. Since reviewing my speech on Thursday night I am more convinced than ever before that no apology is indicated. I can only conclude, after rereading my remarks, that the hon. gentleman over-reacted to what he presumed I was about to say, rather than to anything which does appear in Hansard. Certainly the newspaper accounts of the furore indicate that the members of the press gallery were also puzzled as to what upset the hon. gentleman. The Montreal Star, in its issue of last Saturday, stated the following:

> The normally cool and aloof Mr. Stanfield slashed into Mr. Mackasey with fangs suddenly bared. He ended up cutting himself.
>
> Coming out of his parliamentary pensiveness for the first time, the new Conservative leader blew his cool on an imagined slight by Mr. Mackasey. Observers today are still wondering what he was angry about.

I want to assure the house and members of the opposition that had I implied that the Leader of the Opposition endorsed the Estates General, or had I said he endorsed their views or their findings, then I could understand the angry and rather violent reaction. If he drew from my remarks that I intended to accuse him or imply that he endorsed separatism, then I can assure him that this was not my intention. The Leader of the Opposition may be surprised to know that in the five years I have been participating in these debates, sometimes rather vigorously I will admit, I have never found it necessary to make my point by attacking the personality, language, religion, personal life or private life of any member of the House of Commons.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I have tried, with some modest success, to be an instrument for national unity in this house and to bring about a better understanding of the problems of national unity amongst the members of the House of Commons. It is my intention to dwell on that subject in a few moments. Had time permitted me the other evening—and hon. members will recall I was cut off by the vote—I had intended to speak about the Estates General. I had intended to point out that I had supported the original concept of the Estates General, the idea of bringing together leaders from all the leading organizations existing in the French speaking communities in the province of Quebec, and outside of Quebec. I had encouraged friends in my riding to attend the recent meeting. I encouraged them in the naïve belief that these friends, true representatives of my community, were believers in confederation as an instrument which, while not perfect had, as Claude Ryan recently points out in the Le Devoir, permitted complete freedom of religion, language and assembly to all French speaking people in Quebec since 1867.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I have as much right as the Leader of the Opposition to express an opinion in this house as to whether or not the Estates General acted in a serious manner in prejudging the issues. I presume they were assembled to discuss the issues in a democratic manner. To refuse to fly the Canadian flag did not seem to me a few weeks ago, nor does it seem to me now, an indication that serious men discussing a serious subject were doing so in an objective manner. This is essentially what I was about to say the other evening had time permitted. I repeat, I had no intention of implying by using the word "endorse" that the official opposition and its leader were endorsing the separatist conclusions of the Estates General. Certainly there were serious people present at the meeting, serious people not only from Quebec but from other communities outside Quebec, and it is regrettable that these serious people were not permitted to advance their arguments for confederation because of the atmosphere which prevailed at that meeting.

I might point out to the hon. gentleman if he were here tonight that as long ago as in 1964 I said in the house, and I gladly repeat now, that under the democratic system which prevails in our country Canadians have the right to endorse any philosophy they wish. They can support the cause of the Liberals, the Conservatives, the New Democrats, the Créditistes, the Social Crediters, or even separatism or communism. The presence in the House of Commons of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) who has decided to adopt the philosophy of separatism is proof of this. I happen to believe that this is the right and privilege of the hon. member under the constitution of this country.

A close look at the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition as they appear at page 5066 of Hansard, as compared with mine which appear at page 5191, will indicate, as the Montreal Daily Star has already pointed out, that I made no attempt to twist the words of the hon. gentleman for political advantage.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) to grant me the privilege of completing my remarks, because they happen to be particularly important to me in view of the fact that I consider the implication of the Leader of the Opposition as a reflection on my integrity, and I have no intention of engaging in partisan debate with the hon. gentleman at the present time.

There is no particular reason why the Leader of the Opposition should be aware of my presence in the House of Commons, nor is there any particular reason for him to be aware of the sentiments that I have expressed in and out of the house on the cause of national unity. But if he were in his seat this evening I would draw his attention to my remarks as they appear at page 2946 of Hansard of October 10, 1967, two months and a day ago. I mention this because my remarks were made about the party which he leads and about their recent Montmorency conference.

Mr. Nasserden: Nonsense.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member should not show his prejudice on a subject as important as this, and he should take the advice given by the Leader of the Opposition the other night, that we should not play petty politics with an isssue this serious. Since I agree with what he said, this is precisely what I am trying to do this evening to convince the house this was not my intention when I spoke previously. On that occasion I said the following:

> When at the recent Montmorency conference the Conservatives accepted in principle the theory that two nations exist in Canada, at least in the cultural sense, I welcomed this. I welcomed it because it represented to me the existence of many enlightened people in that party who were willing to stand up and indicate their willingness to endorse the necessary changes in attitude that must come before true unity in this country becomes a reality.

I went further, Mr. Speaker, and I think the following extract from my remarks made on that day have particular significance because again they were made as a tribute to the party opposite. I said this:

> Certainly it took more courage on the part of members representing constituencies in the west or in the maritimes to openly endorse this concept than on my part or the part of other members who represent ridings in the province of Quebec.

I submit that these are hardly the words of a petty partisan politician who would use the cause of national unity for political reasons.

I suggest, at the risk of upsetting the hon. gentleman were he here this evening—and I say this in true humility—that I have no lesson to take from him or anyone else in the house when it comes to discussing the question of national unity in Canada. The Minister of Finance, as well as the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Groos), made that point quite adequately when they took part in the debate on Friday.

I do not know what the Leader of the Opposition was saying about national unity in 1962, 1963 and 1964, and I do not know what legislation he was passing in Nova Scotia to help the minorities in that province, but I do know what I was saying both in and out of the house. It might be of interest to the hon. gentleman to know that during that period of time I had the opportunity to visit the excellent universities in his province and in the other maritime provinces. Certainly when I went to Nova Scotia I was well received there, and so was my message that tolerance and understanding should exist if Canada is to continue. The intention then, as it is today, was to point out to the country the fair and equitable treatment which I have received in the province of Quebec as one of the English speaking minority who was born in that beautiful province.

Time does not permit me to review all the speeches, or even a few of them, that I have made in the house on this subject, but I am sure the hon. gentleman, if he would take the trouble to look up my maiden speech made in the house in 1962, just a few days after I became a member of the House of Commons, would realize that five years ago I had no hesitation in speaking on this subject or in pointing to my own constituency as a perfect example and blueprint of what Canada in the future should be.

In 1963 I made some observations which may be of interest to the house, since they refer to the B and B commission, and which are set out at page 313 of Hansard of May 27, 1963. Before reading what I said, however, I might remind members of the house that four years ago bombs were exploding in the province of Quebec, and that, apart from Senator Lamontagne and myself, there were not too many people in the province of Quebec speaking against separatism or for the cause of federalism in that province. This is what I said at the time:

> Rather than wait for the full implementation of the royal commission report, I think steps can be taken immediately to further the cause of bilingualism, at least in our senior civil service departments. I do not subscribe to the theory that all must be rectified by 1967. Certainly there is no magic date when all these differences of opinion must disappear. But I do think that confederation should at least mark the date of stocktaking, when we can look back with pride to some improvement in the question of bilingualism and biculturalism. I think, Mr. Speaker, that every Canadian is duty bound to acquaint himself a little more with French Canada. Prominent Canadians found to their delight many years ago that a deep knowledge of French Canada, its culture, its language and its traditions is an exciting and fulfilling experience.

Further in that speech, referring to the constitution and to the royal commission, I said the following:

> I remain one of the optimists as far as the future of confederation is concerned.

I should have said "constitution" instead of "confederation". Then I went on to say:

• (8:20 p.m.)

> However, I believe confederation must be reviewed and its contents more clearly defined. It is important for us to remember that the terms of confederation will mean very little if there is not a desire to make them work, motivated by mutual respect and understanding. The desire for equality of opportunity, equality of language, must be earnestly desired by all Canadians and for all Canadians.

And these words, Mr. Speaker, were spoken three or four years ago. I continued:

> It is not by isolation that Quebec will fulfil its destiny. It is not by retiring from confederation that Quebecers will realize the fulfilment of their economic dreams. The eventual and logical development of Quebec to the full richness of which Quebec is capable must come from within confederation.... If, on the other hand, the commission on biculturalism is given an opportunity to function, if its report is analysed with an open mind, if the differences separating French Canada and English Canada are acted upon, then I feel Canada will eventually reach the greatness predicted for it by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

The hon. gentleman referred to me as the official hatchet man of the caucus and of the Liberal party. That does not bother me particularly. I do not know whether that is a compliment or an insult; it would depend, I suppose, on the definition of hatchet man. I would confess to him if he were here this evening, again hoping not to upset this hon. gentleman, who upsets very easily I am afraid, that the Liberal caucus in recent months has been preoccupied with important matters, with budget considerations and with the cuts which the Minister of National Revenue spoke so eloquently about the other night.

Mr. Nowlan: What about the survey, Bryce?

Mr. Mackasey: It has been preoccupied with the C.B.C., with the international service and with all those other matters that usually take up the time of the caucuses of both sides of the house.

Frankly, and I wish to say this in as non-partisan way as possible, the impact that the hon. gentleman has made on the house so far has not been so impressive that the caucus has felt that any extraordinary tactics are called for to offset that effectiveness.

Mr. Fulton: How clever that is. The time will come when the hon. member will wish he had not said that.

Mr. Mackasey: I can assure the hon. gentleman that if that time should come, character assassination will not be indulged in by this party. There are hon. members in the opposition who have felt, perhaps, that I deserve a better label than that of a hatchet man. In 1964, after a speech that I made in the house—and frankly I do not recall whether two of my good friends in the opposition who have been making remarks were in the house in 1964—after a speech, incidentally, in which the term "English separatist" was first coined and after a speech in which I defended the right of anyone to be a separatist, provided he did not resort to violence in fighting for his cause, the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) made certain observations, and they appear at page 9479 of Hansard. For the benefit of my hon. friend who is taking notes, I will repeat that: They appear at page 9479 of Hansard. These are the words of one who is highly respected in this house. That hon. member's opinion, I understand, is highly valued and sought by the Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Queens said these words on that occasion—and this is his language: If it is flowery I ask hon. members to remember that we all have our own peculiar style.

> Mr. Chairman, I should like to begin by congratulating the hon. member for Verdun on his wise, reasoned, reasonable, very sound and very eloquent remarks which he has addressed to a profoundly important subject.

The subject, if I may remind the house, was national unity.

> In the manner of his delivery he demonstrated that he is indeed gifted, as are most Irish folk, with great felicity of phrase and it was a pleasure to hear him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mackasey: My good Irish friend across the way has the same charm. He does not use it as often as I try to use mine; that is our only difference. I continue:

> I remember his leader, the Prime Minister,—

[Mr. Mackasey.]

He was referring to the present Prime Minister.

> —saying some months ago, when the hon. member for Three Rivers spoke eloquently in French on a similar subject,—

That hon. member was Mr. Balcer, as the house may recall.

> —that the voice of moderation and reason must be heard in this house and in this country both in English and in French.

The hon. member for Queens continued:

> I think today, Mr. Chairman, we have heard in English a most sound and valuable discourse on the subject to which we all must give our very best not only of attention but of effort.

Speaking on a serious note, Mr. Speaker, I should like to think that those words that were spoken by the hon. member for Queens over three years ago are still applicable to me today. If I ever thought that it was necessary for me to use the subject of national unity for political partisan purposes—and I hope that hon. members of the opposition will believe that I speak seriously—I should prefer not to be a member of the House of Commons.

I might also draw to the attention of hon. members of the opposition, and to the hon. member who is not here, the words that were spoken on my behalf by an honoured and respected member of the opposition, a former whip who now sits in the Ontario Legislature, the former member for Grey-Bruce, Mr. Winkler, who gave little quarter in debate and asked for none. He said, as reported on page 9497 of Hansard:

> I am thinking also this evening of the words expressed by the hon. member for Verdun.... I think the hon. member for Verdun did a very commendable job this evening in presenting a sane, fundamental argument with regard to the problem that is before us. He did not over-emphasize it; he did not underscore it. He did not make it a sensational thing, he just brought the seriousness of it to the attention of the house. I feel that perhaps, in so far as this problem is concerned, this is the approach that we should take. I say again that I am pleased the hon. member for Verdun made that contribution this evening.

Mr. Churchill: That is a funny one.

Mr. Mackasey: These are not words about national unity that were spoken yesterday, last week or three months ago. The remarks which I have quoted were made in the house three years ago.

I do not intend to quote the remarks of more members of the opposition, though it is tempting indeed to quote the present right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who felt no inhibition in congratulating me in this house for my contributions in debate. He is a member of the House of Commons, a House of Commons man, and he has often pointed out how mild is the language that we use in this house as compared with that used in what he refers to as the Mother of Parliaments.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must point out something that has gone relatively unnoticed in the remarks that the hon. gentleman made on Friday. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, if the hon. gentleman seriously presumed from my remarks of Thursday evening that I was trying to attack him with the smear of separatism, that was not my intention. I say this and give my word as an hon. gentleman.

What puzzles me is his reference to the alleged fact that I made, not one attack on him, but two. The only other time I have mentioned the hon. gentleman has been during a debate on a supply motion, and if I recall that debate, the hon. gentleman seemed to be enjoying the mood of the house. I might ask him to look at the appropriate pages of Hansard. One can often tell the mood of the house by the humour of the interjections, including those of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). I did not at that time intend to attack the hon. gentleman, nor did I attack him. If the hon. member feels, after reviewing the references that I made to him during the supply motion debate, which he seemed to enjoy, that my remarks constituted an attack on him, then I suggest it is time that he got acquainted with the level of debate in the House of Commons.

• (8:30 p.m.)

There cannot be two sets of rules in this house, one for the hon. member and another for the rest of us. In conclusion I would say—and it is not too often that I pay tribute to my good friends in the far corner—that if any have been subject to my aggressiveness—call it that for want of a better word—in the House of Commons, it has been the New Democratic party and its spokesman; and I may say that in all the years I have been here I have made them my special target, possibly because my philosophy is much closer to theirs than it is to the philosophy of hon. members directly opposite. But never once have they accused me of resorting to a personal attack as members of what I refer to as a gallant little band of misguided socialists.

Mr. Knowles: You are getting into hot water, now.

Mr. Mackasey: Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition needs to develop a sense of humour, and this no doubt will come out in time. But just in case he was being serious in referring to me as a hatchet man, let me tell him that from my observations during the five years I have been here, with very few exceptions members are not destroyed in the House of Commons: They destroy themselves.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): We are being presented at this time with what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) called an anti-inflationary budget. The hon. gentleman has told us that the economy has become "overheated" and must be "cooled off." You and I, Mr. Speaker, know that, in layman's language, this phrase simply means that the government has decided deliberately to create unemployment by withdrawing purchasing power from the taxpayers of this country, through the imposition of a 5 per cent extra tax on personal incomes.

Eighteen months ago the government introduced another anti-inflationary budget. At that time it imposed a 5 per cent refundable corporation tax. This was a fair anti-inflationary measure; it took 5 per cent of the profits which industry had accumulated during the year and, because the government felt there was a great deal to be feared from the spending of too much money in Canada at that time, it set aside the revenue derived from this tax, put it on ice, and promised to pay it back to the corporations within three years at a time when it considered that inflation did not pose a threat to the economy.

As I say, this was a fair anti-inflationary measure, and we know that the treasury will begin to pay back this tax to the corporations next June.

Today, however, in this so-called anti-inflationary budget, we are seeing the imposition of another 5 per cent tax, but this time it represents an increase in personal income tax levied on the people of this country—and it is no refundable tax; it will not be set aside, kept on ice, and paid back to the people when inflation is no longer a threat. No, this money will be spent by this government just as fast as it is paid in to the government's coffers. This tax is not anti-inflationary. On the contrary I intend to show that it is very much an inflationary tax. And it is a tax which is being demanded by this government because this administration has overspent drastically during the last four years; it finds itself today in a desperate financial situation, and this burden is being imposed on the Canadian people because hon. gentlemen opposite do not want to be forced to go to the bond market once again in the very near future. This money is being taken from the Canadian people in order to pay for government overspending. The tax we are considering is no more an anti-inflationary measure than I am. It is a measure to helieve the Minister of Finance and his colleagues, because they are under serious financial stress.

This tax is an inflationary tax. You and I know perfectly well, Mr. Speaker, that from this point on as soon as the unions begin to make their demands to the corporations for which they work, the amount of this tax will be included in their claims, in addition to anything else they expect to receive. As a result, this tax increase will be added to the cost of production, like any other cost, and passed on to the consumer, and it will raise prices to that extent. This 5 per cent tax is an inflationary measure, and this budget is not an anti-inflationary budget; it is an inflationary budget.

The government tells us we are being taxed because we have been overspending. Let us examine just what the government itself has been doing in this regard. What has been its record in connection with the spending of the taxpayers' money? In the last budget which the Conservative government presented, the budget of 1962-63, the country, through its government, spent $6,570 million. In the budget presented for the present fiscal year, 1967-68, we shall spend at least $9,646 million. Thus, in the four years during which this government has been in office, government expenditure has been increased by more than $3,000 million, or 47 per cent. And to show that they have not lost any of their skill in overspending, figures for the first seven months of the year, the latest period for which information is available, show that the increase in government expenditure amounts to 15 per cent. This illustrates the extent to which a government which is lecturing us on overspending is itself overspending, and thereby has created a situation, from which it hopes to extricate itself by the tax measures imposed on the people, as set out in the budget of a few days ago.

The government claims, through its Minister of Finance, that it intends to do a great deal in the way of cutting expenditure. We were told it intends to set an example by cutting down expenditures, both in the present budget for 1967-68, which does not expire until March 31 of next year, and in next year's budget as well.

• (8:40 p.m.)

On November 2 of this year, Mr. Speaker, as noted on page 3775 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) the following question:

I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's letter to the provincial treasurers, tabled in this house yesterday, in which he said—

I quoted the words in his own letter.

"We in the federal government have already re-assessed the spending programs and the lending operations of government departments and agencies—"

Note these words, Mr. Speaker.

"—for the balance of the current fiscal year and for next year."

Then I went on to ask:

Will the minister advise the house when he intends to announce the reductions in expenditures for the present fiscal year which are to result from the re-assessment he has made?

The Minister of Finance replied as follows:

As I have said on a number of occasions, it is my intention to do so shortly.

In other words at that time, Mr. Speaker, he said that shortly he would outline not only the expenditures which they intended to cut in the budget of 1968-69 but also in the present budget of 1967-68.

Two weeks later I asked him in this house when he intended to make this announcement, and again he said he would do so shortly. Then, Mr. Speaker, we had him deliver his now famous budget message and I, like all other members, sat in this house and listened to hear him specify the cuts which he intended to make in the present budget, the cuts which he had said in this house he intended to make and that he would outline in the house for members to hear. I listened to that budget and, as we all know, he did not mention one single cut he intended to make.

The next day in the House of Commons I asked the minister whether, in view of the fact that he had assured us he would make this announcement and give us this information, he would give it to us then. His reply was that his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), who is also the President of the Treasury Board, would be outlining these cuts in detail when he made his speech in the budget debate.

So, Mr. Speaker, we listened with great interest to the speech which the President of the Treasury Board made in this house a few days ago. I listened to it. All members listened to it. Did we hear that minister mention one single reduction which he intended to make in the present year's budget, as had been promised to us by the Minister of Finance? No, Mr. Speaker, we did not. He did not mention the budget of 1967-68.

I have his speech here in my hand, because I could not believe my ears. I thought I must have missed something. I read his speech, page by page, line by line. There was not a single mention of anything in his speech dealing with the budget of 1967-68, the budget in the expenditures of which the Minister of Finance had assured the provincial treasurers, and had assured this house that he intended to make substantial reductions.

Mr. Speaker, this government is developing the same kind of thing from which President Johnson is suffering in the United States. It is beginning to suffer from a credibility gap. We are getting to a point where we cannot believe the word of ministers who stand up and state one thing and obviously do not mean what they say.

I had a similar experience a few days ago with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand). I asked him a question regarding a speech he had made in Toronto to the Liberal association in Spadina riding, in which he was reported as saying that the reason the manpower training program had been held up was because of lack of action on the part of the provincial governments. I asked him, in view of what he had said in that speech, just which provincial governments had held up this program, and in what way? In a very haughty manner he stood up and said he had announced this in detail a few days previously in the house. I did not hear him on that previous occasion, and so I phoned his office. I asked them to send me a copy of the issue of Hansard, marking the statement in the speech which he had told me he had made in the house, so that I could check it. His office sent me the issue of Hansard. They marked the page very carefully but, Mr. Speaker, there was not one word dealing with what the minister told me he had said in this house—not one word; and this was his own department which sent me Hansard, and his officials had done the marking.

We are getting to a point where we are not only getting rotten government from this government but we are getting statements we cannot believe, because they say things that are not true. These two ministers have told me definitely on various occasions that certain things were so, and on checking I have found they were not so.

There is a definite credibility gap developing on the part of this government, and that is a very serious thing indeed. Always up to now—and I have been in this house for 17 years, during which time I have sat opposite governments and I have been a member of governments—I have always been able to believe what ministers of the crown said on the floor of this house to members of parliament. Now we are getting to a point where we cannot believe what members of this government say. It is one thing to get inefficient, rotten government, but it is another thing to have this house misled, and I believe it has been deliberately misled by the two ministers I have spoken about this evening.

The President of the Treasury Board made a great many claims about what he considered to be great savings that he would be making in the 1968-69 budget, the budget which will be brought down next spring. Mr. Speaker, when you have been around here for a while, particularly if you have been a member of government and know the procedure that goes on every year when ministers submit their estimates to Treasury Board, you can understand what a farcical, ludicrous and fantastically amusing statement this public relations document I hold in my hand is, one which was probably produced by the public relations firm hired by the Department of Finance to function at public expense.

Anybody who has been a minister in a government knows perfectly well that every department every year—and this has gone on ever since parliaments began, and I am sure will go on as long as parliaments exist—brings before Treasury Board a list of everything—and I mean everything—that the departmental ministers would like to do for the good of the country, the good of the people of Canada. And these things are good things. A lot of them cost a great deal of money, but in the mind of a department and of the minister in charge of it they are good things and desirable things.

But, Mr. Speaker, they can only be introduced as part of a system of priorities. It is the job of the Treasury Board to decide what those priorities are. Every year any minister who has ever gone before Treasury Board has had ten, twenty, thirty, forty or fifty millions of dollars worth of possible expenditures lopped from his estimates, simply because the Minister of Finance, and through him the President of the Treasury Board, have decided that the government cannot afford to do these things at that time.

Every minister knows that a cabinet meets well before the budget is prepared. They decide what can be the total expenditure allowed, in view of the financial situation of the country at that time. The Minister of Finance then allots a certain over-all figure to each department, and they cut their coats according to the cloth available. Any good minister of finance cuts his series of coats to the cloth that is available to the government. That has always been done.

I would say, certainly while I have been here, that under Mr. Abbott, Mr. Harris, Mr. Fleming and Mr. Nowlan—those four ministers of finance anyway, and I am sure the ones before them—made the kind of cuts this government is making in the 1968-69 estimates, or cuts very close to them. But the reason these seem so fantastic to this government is obviously that the presidents of the Treasury Board in the past four years have simply not been able to bring themselves to cut expenditures down to what the country could afford to pay at that time. They have not been able to say, "Certainly they are things that are very desirable, but they must wait until we have the money to pay for them." As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, these Treasury Board ministers, these finance ministers seem to me to be very much the same sort of people as that very charming character, the girl who played the part of Ado Annie in the famous musical "Oklahoma," and sang the charming song entitled "I'm just a Girl Who Can't Say No." That is what they are; they are Ado Annies; they can't say no. The first time they are forced to say no they become so excited about it that they obtain a public relations firm to write a great speech saying that what they are doing is something new, whereas it is only something which has been done by every conscientious finance minister who ever held office in this country.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us have a look at the part this government has played in creating the inflation we are being taxed for today. As anyone in business knows, late in 1964 there appeared in this country a very marked shortage of skilled workers. That shortage of skilled workers became more acute because this government did not have the foresight to enlarge sufficiently the facilities we introduced in 1961-62. These facilities are to train additional skilled workers to enable our factories, as we move into the automation period, to have the skilled workers they require to keep the factories producing. This government also did not, by means of immigration, bring in additional skilled workers to fill the gap. For that reason we were short of skilled workers. Therefore our factories could not produce up to the demand for goods which the affluent society required, and prices started to rise abnormally.

Mr. Speaker, you and I know that inflation is caused when too much money chases too few goods. There are two ways to cure inflation. The first is to reduce the amount of money available to chase the too few goods; but the positive way is to increase the supply of goods available for the money to chase. I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, because you are a very knowledgeable gentleman and I, would expect this government to adopt the negative method they have adopted. They reduced the amount of money available to buy the goods. They imposed a tight money policy upon this country. This tight money policy made it impossible for producers to enlarge their plant and purchase more equipment, whether they are on the farm, in a factory, in a store or wherever it might be. They could not buy the additional machinery and expand their plant so that they would be in a position to keep up with the demand for their goods. So, once again, prices began to rise abnormally.

Inflation began to take hold in a very serious way in this country. Because this government would not increase the training facilities sufficiently and would not bring in sufficient people through the immigration stream to fill the need for skilled workers, they imposed a tight money policy and inflation steadily increased in this country.

Then we move along to June of 1966. We find that the government stepped in with regard to three labour disputes, and imposed its will. The three labour disputes of which I speak are the wildcat strike of the dock workers of Montreal, and the threatened strikes on the seaway and in the C.B.C. The government intervened and imposed a 30 per cent wage increase in each case. This accomplished two things: First, these wage increases greatly affected all wage settlements that were made later. It is a well known fact that, at the time, the railway workers were in the process of negotiation, and were ready to sign an agreement involving a 19 per cent wage increase. However, when they heard of the 30 per cent increase which the government had given the dock workers, they decided that 19 per cent was not enough. Eventually as you and I know, Mr. Speaker, they were awarded a 24 per cent increase.

Second, because of the government's intervention in the case of the dock workers' strike, by dealing with those who were engaged in an illegal work stoppage they made a wildcat strike legal. This government did not impose any penalty on the members of the union for going out on a wildcat strike. In fact they awarded them a 30 per cent wage increase. Therefore in addition to causing wage demands to be greatly accelerated, which has resulted in the fact that this year, for instance, wage increases in this country have averaged 8.7 per cent compared to 4.4 per cent in the United States—and you cannot compete with your greatest competitor if your wage increases are double his—this government, by stepping in and dealing with a wildcat strike and thereby making it legal, has greatly weakened the influence of good labour leaders who conscientiously try to stop their union members going out on a wildcat strike, or asking for wage increases which are not justified by increased productivity. Once again by these actions this government has increased inflation.

One of the costs of production is the cost of money. If the people of the country have confidence in the government, then the government is able to borrow money at reasonable rates of interest; if not, the rate goes up. The people of this country have lost confidence in the ability of this government to handle its financial affairs. They also know that probably every few months the government will find it necessary to go to the bond market again to ask for more money. So, because of the lack of confidence they have in the government, and because of the fact that the people of Canada know the government will come more and more frequently to the market for money, they have held off time and again, in the knowledge that if they hold off they will receive a higher rate of interest on the money they lend. This is what has caused the cost of money to rise to such a high degree that in this country we have at the moment the highest rate of interest in history, and bonds are at their lowest prices in 40 years. Since interest rates, and hence costs, steadily rise, inflation continues to rise also.

So we see that this government, which is taxing the people of Canada for inflation, is largely to blame for that inflation and, for the following reasons: First, they neglected to expand the manpower training facilities sufficiently to provide enough skilled workers so that our producers would be able to expand their production to meet the demand. Second, they imposed a tight money policy on the country, which has made it impossible for producers to expand their plant and equipment sufficiently to meet the increased demand for their products. Third, by intervening in labour disputes, and imposing 30 per cent wage settlements, they set an example which caused wages in Canada to increase at a rate of 8.7 per cent during the past year, compared to 4.4 per cent in the United States. Fourth, by rewarding a union which was out on a wildcat strike with a 30 per cent wage increase, they have undermined the influence of conscientious union leaders who attempt to restrain their members from going out on a wildcat strike, or demanding increases in wages which are not justified by increased productivity. The fifth reason that the government is to blame for this inflation is that by increasing government expenditures nearly 50 per cent during the past four years, and creating excessive demands on the bond market, they have caused the cost of borrowing to reach the highest level in history.

• (9:00 p.m.)

You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that prosperity depends on the ability of a country to sell its goods in competition at home and on the export market. If costs rise abnormally, then selling prices will also rise abnormally. I have outlined in detail what this government has done to make costs rise and therefore to make selling prices rise.

As we know, the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations will come into effect on January 1 next. For that reason, competition here in Canada will become very much more difficult in the months ahead. Competition will also become more difficult because of the devaluation of the pound in Great Britain. Because of that devaluation, Canadian goods will be 15 per cent more expensive on the British market and British goods will be 15 per cent less expensive in Canada. These will be very important factors in our trading patterns in months ahead.

Unemployment in this country in the past 12 months has already increased by 20 per cent, and by some 14 per cent during the last four weeks for which figures are available. Freight carloadings, which represent a very accurate measure of the prosperity of a country, are down 6 per cent during the past 12 months. If we do not increase productivity very materially and very soon, and if we do not keep taxes from rising, and if this government does not control its spending, we will face exactly the same situation which caused the economic crisis in Great Britain a few weeks ago.

This government at this time appears to be singularly incapable of meeting the demands made upon it to do two things, to give leadership, and to solve problems which are becoming—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has now expired.

Mr. Hees: I expect that within a minute or two I can conclude my remarks.

An hon. Member: Let's give him two minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Does the house give its unanimous consent to the hon. member's request?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of the house, for the courtesy of allowing me an additional two minutes to conclude my remarks.

Let us have a look at the future. What do we see? We see another increase in taxes in the spring to pay for medicare. Based upon the record of this government we will have an additional increase in taxes to cover the cost of this government indulging in increased spending. If taxes are increased they will be passed on to the people in the way of increased prices of goods. This is inevitable because labour demands higher wages to offset tax increases. We all know that commodity or corporation taxes are immediately passed on to the people in the form of higher prices. In the future we can see nothing but a very difficult situation developing.

Now is the time when all Canadians are looking to the government to give leadership in order to maintain economic health, productivity and employment. We do not seem to be obtaining this. All I can say in conclusion is that this government has become a tremendous disappointment to this country. All one can say for this government is that it has at least become a great social asset. Just before the Christmas holiday, we all gather together at this time in celebration of this festive season.

At the various gatherings which take place during this time one has only to mention this government to get people laughing. Those who do not laugh burst out crying. In any event one can get action in this way.

Let me suggest to the government that it should use the opportunity to provide leadership to meet the needs of these difficult times. If the government cannot do this it should get out of the way to allow some others to take over who can provide this leadership.

Mr. Jacques-R. Tremblay (Richelieu-Verchères): Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for this opportunity to express my views on this matter. I am very grateful to those who are responsible for allowing me to sit in this house, and make my modest attempt to enumerate some points. I shall first set out my views regarding the wisdom of our fine Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). Following that I shall make some observations about the speeches of hon. members opposite; and finally I shall offer a few comments about the crucial matter of constitutional affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the house to the negative criticism aimed at the constructive and honest labour of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

It is not necessary to be a veteran in politics to realize that the remarks of my colleagues opposite are filled with superficial arguments, and I suggest that such remarks which sometimes unduly waste the time of the house constitute a perfect sample of political electioneering.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) even tried to project his image to the Canadian people with statements that have likely missed their mark. Last Thursday, he tried to impress his own gallery, that is 46 hon. members, or half his manpower and, between us, Mr. Speaker, it was not very gallant.

The hon. member for Colchester-Hants will not bear a grudge if I remind him of the calm, affable but firmly determined tone of voice in which the Minister of Finance stated his case.

Those wise positions taken by the great accountant of the government have naturally carried back my hon. colleague to a quite recent past, when he was responsible for the budget of a province which, by the way, I find more attractive, especially since the arrival of my hon. friend in this house.

He may have relived some tense moments he had already experienced, and this is the reason for the weakness of his arguments and his ability to elude questions, in order to cheer up his partisans a little.

His financial critic had to resort to traditional expressions, to hackneyed phrases of political gatherings in order to give an appearance of justification to a non-confidence motion that he would not have submitted to the house had he entertained the least doubt about being able to defeat the government.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people no longer fall for that type of game. They are concerned with adopting a mature attitude and assuming their responsibilities, in stride with their government, to reach a common objective: a balanced national budget in the context of a progressive and deflationary economy.

My colleague for York South (Mr. Lewis), whose office is one of the best equipped in Toronto, took it upon himself, in a speech made last Wednesday, to request the cancellation of our defence programs. I quote his words, as they appear on page 5126 of Hansard for December 6, 1967:

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

I suggest, as my leader suggested on November 20 in this house—

This is the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who is speaking, of course.

—that we should postpone the construction of the two support ships and drop the purchase of the CF-5 aircraft. If all these things were cut out we would avoid unnecessary expenditures in the large amount of $500 to $600 million. I do not wish to go into the details of this now, because there will be other opportunities to do that.

and so on.

[Translation]

Once again, the serious nature of such a suggestion may be rightly questioned, as my hon. friend is well aware of what those cuts may entail; indeed, he knows it very well, if only through his affinities with labour unions. He knows the tragic consequences for thousands of Canadian families that may ensue from the postponement of those defence production programs. Only in my riding, the result would be disastrous for at least 3,000 workers, not including the subsequent slow-down of our regional economy. As it happens, the same effects would be felt in the constituency of Lévis.

Now, let us multiply those consequences by the actual number of naval yards in our country, and we will realize the shocking number of workers who would be made jobless through such an irresponsible action. I suggest that this attitude of the hon. member for York South concerning the welfare of the workers of our shipyards and aircraft plants denotes a lack of concern for the working classes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to draw a psychological parallel between the hon. member for York South and the leader of the sovereignty movement in Quebec, who also referred to national defence but in other words, of course, and with a lot of television publicity. In fact, a complete crew of C.B.C. technicians and reporters all last week followed in Seven Islands, in the riding of Saguenay, this idol with clay feet who described as a "damn foolishness" the maintenance of military personnel who, as he said, "drag around Europe".

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, his favourite expression, when referring to the members of the armed forces, is: "Social welfare in uniform".

Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of this intervention to rise before the Canadian people in order to protest against such a flagrant lack of respect toward those who have served and who now serve in the Canadian armed forces. I protest indignantly against this attitude on behalf of the families of those who gave their lives to defend our civilization and on behalf of the thousands of workers who make a living by working in aircraft plants, in defence production plants and in shipyards all over the country.

Let us be serious and let us learn to be opportunists without endangering the livelihood of our citizens and without insulting the Canadian people. Drastic measures which are applied equitably, such as the ones advocated by the hon. Minister of Finance, are acceptable in view of what is at stake.

In my humble opinion, after having read everything I could on the subject, I notice that only demagogues and politicians who subsist on "electoralism" manage to throw discredit on the fiscal policy presented in the house.

It goes without saying that Canadians as a whole are fully aware of an inflationary trend which is caused, as everyone knows, by an excessive increase in expenditures compared with the increase in productivity and revenues. This inevitable cycle is the price we have to pay for a prosperity which is sometimes self-suggestive and which prompts us too often—if I may jest about that—to put a grand piano and velvet drapes in a log cabin. The American giant which casts its shadow over us can probably afford luxuries which we have to do without.

Mr. Speaker, which one of us can accuse the other of being directly responsible for this rather alarming situation, in view of our high standard of living. I humbly submit that the present circumstances must incite us to choose rather than endure those disciplinary measures, and here is what the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board said.

> My remarks are in a vein similar to that of a large company which must from time to time review its administrative policies and its fiscal activities. This review of priorities and the adjustment of expenditures are made from a budgetary angle which invites us to live within our revenue. Radical decisions are called for to ensure continued progress. We must seize the opportunities which we have in the future and invest more in these, while cutting things which appear less important.

Mr. Speaker, we should greet the words of the minister in a spirit of elementary philosophy and practical sense.

A short review of the achievements of the government reveals a remarkable improvement in the Canadian living standard: the national pension plan, the old age assistance program, additional pension for old age security, student allowances, increased aid to the universities, manpower mobility, manpower retraining, subsidies to stimulate industry, water pollution control and countless other measures to improve the standard of living of Canadian citizens and to give them the second highest standard of living in the world.

Practical measures of national import such as the Canadian flag, the Centennial, Expo '67, Man and his World that has revealed to the whole world the capacity of our people, of a strong and dynamic nation.

Mr. Speaker, in such a brief analysis in the context of a fiscal adjustment, there is, naturally, a place for emotional considerations, but reason argues for objectivity, practical sense and moderation and that is what I am striving for when I think of the recommendations of the report on bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Recently, the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) stated that:

> The independence of peoples prevails over the independence of states.

This is a resounding statement which describes perfectly the present reality. If a man like the Minister of Manpower and Immigration—"a prolific honourable man", as he was described by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge)—if this French Canadian, who has devoted twenty years of his life to promote the welfare of Quebec workers, is able to be optimistic with respect to the application of these recommendations of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism—frankly, they are worth much more than those of the separatists and the "sovereignists"—I do not hesitate in saying that, as a Canadian citizen, I want to flourish and prosper with my family and my fellow Canadians in a bicultural and, above all, an economically sound Canada.

The premier of Quebec himself, when he was leader of the opposition, congratulated the federal government about its decision to set up the Laurendeau-Dunton commission. Today, he is in authority and he states that this report might bring about agreements with Ottawa. The same day the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) said that this report would be discussed at the federal-provincial conference in January 1968. What more concrete plan could we ask for to work toward the unification of Canada?

Mr. Speaker, the constitutional climate is improving, needless to say. We are seeing at last the first rays of hope which are the antithesis to the pessimistic utterances of those who want to give Quebec to the United States at any cost, because it is well known that the gist of their separation or sovereignty thesis is to advocate the isolation of a province while serving an ultimatum on the rest of the country.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians look to that formula to achieve the unity of the nation. Fortunately for this house, the Laurendeau-Dunton report was tabled only after the election of the new leader of the loyal opposition. Now, we know, alas, how the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) feels about the subject. On the contrary, and this is all to his credit, the hon. member for Colchester-Hants, his successor expressed very positive opinions, as did also the hon. members for Burnaby-Coquitlam and Villeneuve (Messrs. Douglas and Caouette). With regard to the hon. representative for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson), he expressed his assent, while making a few reservations, when the report was tabled. Those almost unanimous feelings, justify the hope that serenity will reign at the meetings on the orientation to be given the destiny of our country.

My most sincere wish is that the Laurendeau-Dunton report will make English speaking Canadians aware of the Quebec fact, how it wants to become resolutely integrated with its language, its culture and its economy, to the rest of Canada, and take an active part in our national decision-making bodies.

Yes, I am an optimist. As a Canadian from Quebec, I am used to concessions, on the cultural level; I am willing to make that ultimate attempt. I will do my utmost with my limited means to help the cause of Canada, but I am convinced that the great task now rests on the good will and the courage of my English speaking fellow citizens.

Are bilingualism and biculturalism Canada's last chance? I should hope not, Mr. Speaker, because if that constitutional question is not reasonably and equitably settled, our Quebec will be taken over by you know who and, eventually, the giant who holds that $10 billion mortgage in our country will only have to cross the border to recover his property, or else.

Mr. Speaker, those perspectives will never materialize, I hope, and I should like to conclude my remarks by stating my confidence in our parliament, our government, our Canadian people and the courageous people in my riding who conscientiously toil in progressive industries within a favourable and beneficial economic framework from which they do not want to be divorced. Therefore, I am repaying them today this loyalty with which they have chosen to honour me.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is regrettable, Mr. Speaker, that the remarks that I have to make this evening cannot be made for the ears for which I intended them. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has shown a deep concern about the economic plight of Cape Breton, as has the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen). The minister of mines, too, has shown some concern, and I should like to put my remarks before all those ministers, as well as all government members. I should like to put my remarks before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), who is also absent; the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé), who is absent as well. My remarks this evening are directed to these absent ministers. In fact, I regret very much the fact that government benches are so empty there are only three ministers present out of the 26.

An hon. Member: How many are over there?

Mr. Turner: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe most ministers mentioned by the hon. member for Cape Breton South have been in this chamber on several occasions during the afternoon and evening. If the hon. member is going on a counting spree, he should count the three members on the front benches of the opposition.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I thank the minister for drawing this to my attention. I should like him to understand this point: It is the cabinet that is responsible for the administration of this country.

An hon. Member: Why don't you let them do it in peace?

Mr. Knowles: You mean they are dead?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is to the members of the cabinet who are absent this evening that I wish to direct an appeal on behalf of the economy of Cape Breton. It has been pointed out to me that I made a mistake and there are four ministers present. I must apologize.

I should like to make some reference to the Minister of Finance who, when he was presenting his budget, adopted as his own the words of a former minister of finance who was a minister away back in 1868. He adopted these words, as recorded on page 856 of Hansard for June 1:

> Now, sir, I would not wish it to be supposed that, in calling attention to these indications of the future prosperity of the country, I am desirous that we should rush into undue expenditure. On the contrary, I say that we ought to be most careful in our outlay, and consider well every shilling we expend.

He goes on to say:

I trust that whatever government may be in power, the people will demand at its hands a thrifty and economical administration of public affairs. I claim that we who now occupy these benches have shown a desire to follow that course.

We will give him "E" for effort and desire, but the results are lacking. The government, and especially the Minister of Finance, have so botched the financial affairs of this country that only last week the minister had the audacity to say in the house that the economists in this country are a confused lot. These are the words of the Minister of Finance—that he considers all economists in this country are confused. What has this government done? Waste, waste, waste.

Mr. Stafford: Will you cite the page number, please?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): There is no reason why I should do the hon. member's research for him, especially if he does not have the interest to follow the statements of his own Minister of Finance. Why should I draw his attention to what has been said?

• (9:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Give us the page. The hon. member probably cannot find it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is page 5038. Let us see whether hon. members can find it, and let us hope that in the future they will pay attention to what the Minister of Finance says. He said that economists in this country are a confused lot. What has the government been doing? In the past two weeks it has deliberately wasted seven or eight days of the valuable time of the house, and yet they have told us that to waste time is to waste money. They have wasted time debating an issue which had already been settled and over which those who opposed the government point of view had absolutely no control. The government was in complete control of the situation, and for seven or eight days they wasted time and money debating a matter which had already been settled by the house.

It is difficult for me to appeal to the government, most members of which are not present and are not paying any attention to matters which should be given priority. They have not given priority to those matters which deserve it, and yet the Minister of Finance has the audacity to say that economists in this country are a confused lot and that this country is in good hands while he fumbles and bumbles around. This is the second Minister of Finance in this government who is fumbling and bumbling around. They got rid of the last one. He brought in a budget, and what did he do with time and money? We wasted day after day and week after week, but finally we got rid of the budget he brought in and eventually got rid of the minister himself. I have heard appeals from this side of the house asking the government to put their shoulders to the wheel and to smarten up. The first thing they should do for this country is to get rid of the present Minister of Finance whose egotism leads him to state that no one knows anything about finances but himself.

When I started to speak, Mr. Speaker, I said I wanted to make a special appeal to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. I chose these three ministers because I have it from good authority that in the government the Prime Minister, and certainly the Minister of National Health and Welfare, are both very concerned about the economic plight suffered by Cape Bretoners.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The remark that was just made from across the floor is an indication of what hon. members on the other side of the house think about the people in Nova Scotia, and the plight they face. I think the hon. member should rise and apologize, not to me because I can take it, but certainly to the people of Cape Breton. First and foremost he should apologize to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who have shown the same concern for people in that province as I and other members on this side of the house have shown.

Why did I choose to direct my remarks to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, as well as to those ministers who are not here this evening? I also regret the absence of the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) because I should like to get to the bottom of certain statements which he made in the house not long ago in answer to a question with regard to the Sydney steel problem. He said at that time—and hon. members can look it up for themselves this time—that it would be ridiculous and silly for the government to plan a phasing out of the Sydney steel operation. At the same time the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, when he was out in Banff, spoke of government plans to phase out the Sydney steel operation. I ask the ministers who are present here tonight to convince their cabinet colleagues of the necessity for an absolute assurance that in the negotiations with the provincial government they will pay close attention to the plight of the Sydney steel industry. I also ask them to distinguish between Dominion Coal and Dosco, because at the time of the establishment of the Cape Breton Development Corporation the Prime Minister advised the house and the people of Nova Scotia, inadvertently I admit, that the Cape Breton Development Corporation would take upon itself the problem of dealing with the Sydney steel problem. When the matter was finally sorted out a denial of the previous statement was made. However, at that particular time the impression was left that the Cape Breton Development Corporation would look after this particular problem.

I should also like to ask the government to deal with Dominion Coal and the Sydney steel plant as two separate problems, regardless of the fact that Sydney is located within a 20 mile radius of Dosco. It was decided last spring that these two matters would be treated separately and would be looked upon as altogether separate questions. I trust the government will keep them separated and will deal with the Sydney steel problem as a separate problem entirely. I am sure this would be the approach, were Sydney located a couple of hundred miles away from the coal area. In any case these are two separate problems and I ask the government to consider them as such.

Not too long ago the people of Cape Breton demonstrated their concern in a manner which cannot be considered as simply one of crowd gathering, when in that area over 20,000 people organized what was called "the march of concern". The people who organized this march deserve to be congratulated. The behaviour of the crowd was excellent. Courtesy was shown throughout to the guest speakers, including the cabinet minister from Cape Breton.

I ask the government to show consideration for the people who are faced with this problem. I would further ask it to review the remarks made at that time by the federal representative, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who said: "We are searching desperately for a way to assist". On other occasions the minister remarked that this assistance may be extended through the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Although I do not wish to anticipate the results of the negotiations between the government of Nova Scotia and the federal government, I trust they will be successful. I understand that before Premier Smith returns to the province he will discuss this matter with the Prime Minister, and it is to be hoped that the federal government will wish to grant assistance and, if necessary, place Sydney steel under the protection of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, thus enabling them to continue this industry.

Why should the industry be continued? There are many reasons, and I do not propose to take the time of the house tonight to elaborate on them. However, I should like the members of the government to compare the appeals and the statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on behalf of the federal government, when he said that the government is searching desperately for a way to help and that assistance would be forthcoming through the Cape Breton Development Corporation, with the remarks made by the leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia during the recent legislative meeting there. The leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia had many criticisms, to offer at that time, and he left the impression, which I hope will be ignored by the federal government, that the Nova Scotia government has been taken in by Dosco. He listed a number of savings which Dosco has made as a result of the takeover of the company by the Nova Scotia government. He tried to impress upon the people of Nova Scotia that the action of the government of that province has resulted in savings for Dosco. He has completely missed the point. I trust that no one in the federal cabinet will consider that Mr. Regan, the leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia, knows anything about this problem. He has failed to recognize the fact that this was an emergency situation and that there would be many steel workers walking the streets of Cape Breton during the closing down of the Dosco steel operation.

• (9:40 p.m.)

As I said, in listing the savings with respect to Dosco and in listing other figures, he failed miserably to mention that the takeover by the government of Nova Scotia has saved the federal government considerable sums of money with respect to unemployment insurance. He overlooked that. Instead he chose to talk about patronage.

Here is a matter that is vital to the economy of Nova Scotia, Cape Breton and Canada. It has been said before that if something is good for Canada, it is good for Nova Scotia; and if it is good for Nova Scotia, it is bound to be good for Canada. Yet the minister talked of patronage. He failed to note that this same government of Nova Scotia has recommended, for high office with the Cape Breton Development Corporation, a former president of the Nova Scotia Liberal Association. That is an obvious indication that the government of Nova Scotia is concerned only with the development and carrying on of that corporation. The minister failed to mention the fact that the former president of the Liberal association in Nova Scotia, Mr. Regan, had been recommended to the board of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

I could list many reasons why this government should go all out in completely renovating the Sydney steel operation, in order to make it a viable industry. In that renovation the federal government in co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia, should make money available to that industry. It is not fair to expect the provincial government alone to carry this load. The fact that the government of Nova Scotia has moved so quickly in this matter and has avoided the complete shut down of the plant is an indication of its concern for the welfare of the people of this industry and of Cape Breton.

Some false impressions have been left about the aid which has been given to Cape Breton. Granted, without the subventions paid on coal over the last 38 years, our coal could not have reached its markets. Without federal aid the coal industry no doubt would have been dead long ago. Certain important steps have been taken by the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and it is hoped that there will be a future for our coal. This depends of course, on whether the necessary financial assistance is available.

I regret that a false impression has been created with respect to aid to Cape Breton. I think, judging from the representations that I have heard in this house, that members of the N.D.P. support the complete take-over by this government of the Sydney steel operation.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Yet, for some strange reason, some members of this house are trying to leave the impression that Cape Breton depends entirely on government handouts. To illustrate what I mean, let me draw the attention of the house to a question that the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) not long ago placed on the order paper. He wanted to know what forms of subsidy or subvention were paid in Cape Breton; he also wanted to know something about the Cape Breton national park, the roads to resources, including the Cabot trail, unemployment insurance for fishermen, fishing industry subsidies generally, construction or reconstruction of docks, harbours, breakwaters and dredges, assistance to industries in designated areas and, as well, he wanted to know something generally about coal and steel. I do not propose to go over the entire list. An answer was supplied to him, in which coal subventions were listed at $121 million. I have already said that over the last 38 years the assistance we received with respect to coal amounted to about $200 million. The answer to the question said, nevertheless, that total coal subventions were $121 million. A further $1,300,000 was paid in assistance toward the use of coal in the steel industry. That brings the total amount of assistance with respect to coal, according to the answer, to about $122 million.

Payments to the province with respect to development legislation, roads to resources and so on and so forth, added up to about $150 million. That was the figure that was spent in Cape Breton.

The impression that some might gain from such answers is totally false. Cape Breton does not depend on government assistance to any greater extent than any other parts of Canada depend on government assistance. Cape Bretoners are getting only what they are rightfully entitled to. But they only get it after making strong representations to the government with respect to those matters that were mentioned in the hon. members question.

Those in other areas of the country are able to get government help without making the strong representations that the representatives for Cape Breton have to make in the house. I could mention the art centre that is being built in Ottawa. While it was a hole in the ground, the building estimate rose from $19 million to between $38 million and $39 million. The people of Cape Breton ask for what any Canadian citizen is entitled to ask. On the other hand the art centre will not provide work. It is an amusement centre, and before it is finished I dare say that the government will have spent $50 million on it.

What about the $10 million that this government so generously allotted to establishing a film industry in this country. Look around you at the spending that has been going on. I appeal to you, gentlemen, to listen to me. I speak for a worthy cause. Make available to us the funds to renovate completely the Sydney steel operation, and let it stay in business.

My arguments get stronger as I go on, Mr. Speaker. I shall now refer to the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. That seaway was put into operation at the insistence of the government. It was put into operation over the protests of some in the maritimes, because the maritimes have port facilities.

Examine what the seaway has accomplished, Mr. Speaker. Something like $550 million was spent on seaway construction. Why was that money spent? After examining the remarks of members in this house, remarks which were made when the seaway was being promoted, I conclude that the seaway was not developed, primarily, for navigation purposes. I want it to be clearly understood that I do not wish to detract from any assistance that may be given to industries in other parts of the country. I conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the seaway was built, that the $550 million was spent, in order to subsidize that part of the country which is between Montreal and the lakehead.

A snow job was done with regard to many people at that time. The western farmer, because of the seaway, was to get 6 cents more per bushel for his wheat. I wonder what those members who are interested in western farm problems have to say about that? Can they say whether western farmers received that extra 6 cents per bushel as a result of the seaway having been built? The answer is obvious, I think. Every day we hear about the problems of the western farmer. Western farmers have difficulty in shipping their wheat, yet not once, so far as I am aware, has the question of ships been raised. Nor have I heard that in any way ships have been the cause of any delays. I never heard anything about the St. Lawrence seaway improving the situation. All I heard about was the same problem they had faced prior to this $550 million subsidy—lack of the box cars required to get grain as far as the seaway. So here we see a $550 million subsidy to assist this region.

• (9:50 p.m.)

As I have said before, navigation was not the prime reason for building the seaway. I think the prime reason was to provide hydro power for Ontario, with possibly some power kickback to the province of Quebec, though Quebec apparently had plans for its own development. The idea that navigation was the reason for spending $550 million, the idea that this would assist western farmers, is down the drain. As a matter of fact the subsidy has returned nothing in this area; it has been a white elephant; the tolls realized on the seaway today do not even pay the interest on the money required to build it, and this situation will get worse because the Americans are developing ports along their east coast which will increasingly attract shipping away from the St. Lawrence.

When people talk about handouts to Cape Breton, let them look at the handout in connection with the seaway. As a matter of fact I do not regard it as a handout because I realize that although there were many objections raised to the project, in the considered opinion of the house, it was felt to be good for Canada—and being good for Canada it was also good for Nova Scotia. Today there is an opportunity to do something for Nova Scotia which will prove to be good in the long run for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I trust that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is negotiating with Premier Smith he will adopt a generous attitude and provide the necessary funds to revitalize the Sydney steel industry.

It is very interesting to study the background of the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. I believe it was Senator Lodge of Massachusetts who said that the United States steel interests would all move out to the Atlantic coast. However, representations were made by the steel operators of Duluth, Indiana and Michigan to the effect that the United States government should participate in building the seaway in order that they might get cheaper ore from Canada and continue to produce steel in those areas. This is despite the fact that some United States senators were advocating moving the steel industry to the Atlantic coast.

It is also very interesting to bear in mind the argument put forward in favour of the building of the seaway by the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe, who had this to say in the United States: "We had to provide a St. Lawrence seaway, otherwise the steel industry would move to the Atlantic coast." I emphasize this as a reason why the government is more or less obliged to come to the aid of the Sydney steel operation. So, what we have now is a $550 million subsidy provided for the area between Montreal and the lakehead, and one of the reasons put forward to justify it was to allow the operation of the steel industry in this country to remain in its traditional centres and keep it away from the Atlantic area. This is another good reason—and it was put forward by a former Liberal—why the government should be quick to come to the aid of the Sydney steel industry.

If Liberal members wish to do a little research they will find that one of the arguments put forward in favour of the subsidy was that the seaway would allow us to diversify the ship building industry, as carried on in Halifax, and move it to the lakehead.

One of the arguments put forward by the minister of transport at that time was that the seaway would permit the diversification of the shipbuilding industry. So the seaway was built for three or four different reasons. Again I emphasize that one of them was to prevent the steel operation going to the east coast. Another reason was to allow shipbuilding, which had been carried on almost exclusively on the east coast, to be carried on at the lakehead if and when shipbuilders decided to do so.

This is what has happened. The seaway has made it possible for the steel industry to continue to expand, to the detriment of the industry which had long been established at Sydney. At the same time, the seaway made it possible to diversify an industry which has its natural centre on the east coast, and move it to the lakehead.

I repeat, I am putting forward reasons why it is absolutely necessary that the federal government should respond generously at this time to the needs of Cape Breton. I am glad to see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) is back in his place, because this is a subject which is of great concern to him and I am sure he will place all the arguments on behalf of the Sydney steel industry before his colleagues in the cabinet. It is my hope he will be able to convince the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), who should be backing him up 100 per cent, and the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé).

The subsidy which I have mentioned has acted to the detriment of the east coast. Let us turn now to other subsidies which have been granted in a number of directions. I repeat that although coal has received assistance to the tune of $200 million over a period of 38 years, aid has been given to the uranium industry, which is an infant compared to the coal industry. Assistance was given to the uranium industry when it landed in trouble, to the tune of $150 million, over a much shorter period of time. I would call attention also to the assistance given to the gold mining industry under the emergency gold mining legislation. Since 1948 we have assisted the gold mining industry to the extent of some $231 million, not counting a possible further $15 million before the end of the present fiscal year. This represents assistance to the extent of $246 million.

Again, I have no objection to the assistance given to the industries I have mentioned, especially since it has been given because of the economic plight in which the people living in the mining areas would face if the work upon which they depend were lost to them. A similar situation faces the people in Sydney today.

May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should advise the hon. member at this point that his time has expired.

Mr. Knowles: Then may I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: May I ask the leader of the house whether, since the budget debate will end tomorrow, he can give us some idea what we shall be considering on Thursday and Friday—and, possibly, what he thinks should be considered before we rise for the Christmas recess?

Mr. MacEachen: After the budget debate I hope to call the budget resolutions and then the committee stage of the broadcasting bill and the divorce bill.

Mr. Starr: In that order?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, that is the plan at the moment. If there is any change I shall be glad to advise the house.

• (10:00 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked a question of the house leader, a question I have asked on more than one occasion. This had reference to the referral to the standing committee on privileges and elections of the Canada Elections Act. This is a procedure which normally follows a general election and, over the years, has proven to be a very useful one.

I may say I was not very pleased with the minister's answer, which at best was inadequate, and at worst was possibly arrogant and a bit discourteous. He said to me that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had in fact answered the question which, by implication, suggested I had not been listening. Actually the Prime Minister's reply dealt with another matter, namely the referral of the report on the commission on election expenses. When I pointed out to the minister that he had not heard me correctly he casually, and a bit discourteously, said he had heard me correctly. If he heard me correctly he answered me incorrectly; he can have it either way.

This is a most important matter. The machinery whereby the electors elect their government is not a matter lacking in consequence in any well ordered political society. It is an important, a vital matter. The public must have the best opportunity to exercise their franchise, to vote properly, to have the best devices whereby they may register fully their points of view.

The elections act stands today without substantial review and without careful study by this committee. We have had three elections without a revision of it. Many problems have come up. Many submissions have come from citizens pointing out matters which they think are important.

We were led to believe in the speech from the throne that there would be a referral to committee of the report on election expenses. On May 8 we were told that when the study was completed the government would put forward proposals. These we have not yet seen. Away back in 1963, on December 20 of that year, the privileges and elections committee brought in a report to this house which contained a paragraph saying the committee recommended that it be empowered to study the Canada Elections Act at the earliest possible date next session, with a view to affording the committee an opportunity for exhaustive and constructive examination and study of that act. That was in 1963; but that call for an early opportunity has gone unheeded.

We are in a uniquely difficult situation as a result of the Representation Act, whereby there are new returning officers and new districts. Surely we do not want to add to their difficulty by having the elections act amended at the last moment.

It is always imprudent to have the election machinery rusty, but in a situation where you have a minority government, where there could be an appeal to the people at any moment, it is a shocking situation of neglect. We do not know what might happen, but if you look over the history of this government in recent years and see how accident prone it has been, we can see the only accident it has not suffered is a major defeat in this house; and by this I mean something more substantial than on the postal resolution. If such a defeat came we would not have an up to date Canada Elections Act.

Many problems arose in November, 1965. Thousands of our students found that the regulations did not provide them with a chance to vote. Civil servants abroad have constantly requested some machinery whereby they may register their franchise. This has been brought before the committee time and time again. I would hope there would be an opportunity for the committee to recommend, and for the house to adopt, a broader provision, covering not just civil servants and external affairs officers but providing for an absentee vote that would give an opportunity for Canadians abroad, in a general category, to exercise their franchise.

For years we have talked about a permanent list whereby long election campaigns could be shortened. This is the kind of thing to which we should be applying ourselves. I think it is disgraceful; it is neglectful, it is imprudent; it is unwise. If I were the Secretary of State I would say that the fact that nothing has been done about this is an indication of rotten management. We find that the committee has not been constituted. No chairman has been designated. Some of us are becoming weary of calling the government to task in this regard. We would hope that in this area at least they would discard the languid approach and regard the election machinery as something pretty important to a responsible government. I would hope that the step of having referred to the committee for study more than the matter of the age of voting might be taken forthwith.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by assuring my hon. friend that in answering his question recently there was no intention on my part to be discourteous. This is the last thing I would inflict upon him, above any member of the house, and I am sure he is aware of that.

As my hon. friend knows, we have sent at least one resolution affecting the voting age to this committee. The government expects to send the report on election expenses to this committee before the end of this session, and I hope at an early date. With regard to the elections act, I agree with the hon. member that it is desirable that this act be considered by the committee at the earliest possible date. It may not be possible to have a committee study of the elections act at this session, but certainly it will be considered very early in the next session.

PARLIAMENT HILL—INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE OF CENTENNIAL FLAME

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, on November 29 on the orders of the day I asked the Prime Minister whether the government would keep the centennial flame burning after the end of the year as a symbol of Canadian unity. When Mr. Speaker ruled that he did not consider the question to be sufficiently urgent to be answered during the question period I immediately gave notice that I wished to raise it on an adjournment debate. This is the first convenient time this could be done.

I asked my question on November 29 by way of expressing my view that the flame should not be snuffed out permanently on December 31. I felt, and subsequent events proved that I was correct, that this view was shared by most of the members of this house and by millions of other Canadians as well.

I think I should indicate at this time, for the record at least, that I had the privilege of raising this question in the house on the orders of the day perhaps a week before a similar question was put by a member of one of the opposition parties. His question was also not accepted by Mr. Speaker at that time. I do not think I would be giving away any secrets if I said that, joined particularly by other members on this side of the house, I continued my efforts through direct contacts with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) to have the government's original decision not to continue the flame reversed.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Therefore, I was pleased to note the information in the answer given to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) yesterday by the Prime Minister, that the flame would be continued. After all, there are as yet all too few monuments which stand as tangible symbols of Canada as a nation and which are accepted as such by the public at large. The flame has proven to be one of these. Although it was intended only as a symbol of centennial year, the flame immediately became looked upon by the public at large as something more—as a symbol of Canada as a nation.

• (10:10 p.m.)

If any proof of this is required, it has been provided by the way it has drawn almost every visitor to the hill, from the first day it was ignited by the Prime Minister almost a year ago. Further proof has been provided by the public protest when it appeared the flame would be extinguished as of December 31 of this year. To have extinguished this flame at that time could very likely have been interpreted, though wrongly interpreted, by some elements of the press and public as symbolizing in a negative way, again quite wrongly, the fate of our country. However, if this flame continues to burn it can and will be a tangible gesture demonstrating our faith as representatives of the people of this country in the continuing existence of a united Canada from sea to sea.

The Prime Minister has now said that the flame will continue, but I think there are two further points to be made at this time. A press report today suggests that the flame may be moved away from parliament hill to another point in Ottawa. I think this would be the wrong thing to do. The symbolic effect would not be the same if the flame continued to burn at some location other than parliament hill; at another site. Is there a better place than parliament hill for such a flame? After all, it is a place for the coming together of the people of this country as Canadians; it is the focal point of their aspirations and hopes, as Canadians. The parliament buildings provide a fitting background for the flame which could not be found at any other place in Ottawa.

The second point I wish to make is that I have heard that private interests have indicated their interest in providing the cost of continuing the flame. While I understand the good intentions behind such an offer, in my opinion it would be more appropriate if this flame were maintained, not by special interests, but by the Canadian people. Some may raise a question about the cost of having the flame continued, but there would be in any event the sizeable cost of dismantling the mechanism for the flame and repaving the roadway. I am confident that the cost would be very small in comparison to other expenditures that are being made, and if we wanted to I am sure we could come up with ways of tightening up on some of these other expenditures to make up the amounts required. But I am sure the cost at most would be small compared with the symbolic benefits.

When the mayor of Montreal spoke at the closing of Expo he said in effect: Expo is gone, but long live man and his world. The new decision of the government about the flame will enable the Prime Minister to say on December 31: The flame of the centennial will be gone, but this flame at the same time will live on as a memento of centennial year; but, more important, it will be a symbol of Canadian unity and our faith in the Canada of tomorrow.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear the hon. member speak as he has spoken. I am sure that hon. members will feel that the centennial celebrations have somehow created a new pride and faith in the hearts of Canadians. It seems to me that this centennial flame has become a symbol of this pride and faith in Canadianism.

A decision has been made to continue the flame in perpetuity. The question will ultimately have to be decided as to what if anything should be done to improve the layout of the plaza surrounding it. It has been placed on a walk adjacent to a road that was not designed to accommodate the traffic pattern on the hill today. It may be found that the surrounding area should be improved. The actual flame structure was designed for use for only one year. Parts of this will have to be replaced and may involve redesign and the use of different materials. At no time has there been any question that the cost of maintenance of the flame was of such magnitude that it should be discontinued for this reason. That has never been put forward or suggested by anyone.

The question which must be decided is related to the best way to preserve this symbol, which has become well known throughout our centennial celebrations, and how to preserve it during the new century which we are entering. We may at some later time take a decision as to its possible relocation. If you examine its location carefully you will see that at some future time this may have to be reconsidered.

Let me give an illustration of what I have in mind. It has been suggested that when the new museum is designed for location in the central part of the city the landscaping could be such that this centennial flame could be placed at its entrance to great advantage.

All I am trying to indicate is that at the start of a new century in Canada's history it is not wise, perhaps, to make a final decision as to the precise site of a flame of the importance of this one. In any event, the decision is that it will be left exactly where it is for the time being, and these other questions will have to be decided later. I believe that news should be pleasing to all hon. members. As a matter of fact, I am surprised by what has gone out in the news in the last days and weeks. It has got a little out of hand. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into this aspect of the matter tonight.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.19 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 13, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LETTING OF CONTRACTS

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-28 (from the Senate), to amend the Defence Production Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

JET AIR SERVICE, ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.-MONTREAL

Question No. 655—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Has Eastern Provincial Airways applied to the air transport committee for operating rights for a jet service from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Montreal via Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and Charlo, New Brunswick?

2. If the above request has been made, when is it expected that a decision regarding it will be made?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. Eastern Provincial Airways (1963) Ltd. has applied to the air transport committee for an amendment to its licence No. A.T.B. 12/45(S) which authorizes a class 1 scheduled commercial air service to the points Charlottetown, Summerside, Moncton and Iles de la Madeleine by adding the points Bathurst/Charlo, New Brunswick and Montreal, Quebec. The carrier proposes to operate this service with three Handley Page Dart Herald aircraft.

2. This application has been set down for a public hearing after which the air transport committee will reach a decision based upon the evidence adduced.

AIRPORT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 657—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Since the program was inaugurated, how much money has been expended each year under the airport assistance program?

2. What has been the expenditure for each province?

3. What airports have received assistance and to what amount in each case?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The following table shows the approved commitments and expenditures under the airport assistance program since June 3, 1965.

	1965-66	1966-67	1967-68 (to Nov. 30, 1967)	1968-69
Approved commitments	$1,000,000	$1,000,000	$905,477	$223,000
Expenditures	490,608*	540,854*	378,468	Nil

*The difference between approved commitments and expenditures in the year of approval is due in most cases to the time required for local interests to survey, purchase or expropriate the sites concerned, and complete legal matters relating to the land title before construction can commence.

The anticipated expenditure for 1967-68 is expected to be approximately $800,000.

2. The expenditures and outstanding commitments for each province are as follows:

Province	Expenditures	Outstanding commitments
Newfoundland	$318,739	Nil
Prince Edward Island	Nil	Nil
Nova Scotia	Nil	$ 15,000
New Brunswick	97,699	145,301
Quebec	372,381	422,319
Ontario	254,587	763,950
Manitoba	Nil	Nil
Saskatchewan	Nil	33,000
Alberta	273,775	192,725
British Columbia	92,749	149,251

27053—338½

Questions

3. The following airports received assistance in the amounts indicated in each case under the heading "Expenditures". Also shown is the balance outstanding against the approval.

Airport	Expenditures	Outstanding Commitments
Bay d'Espoir, Nfld.	$ 240,460	Nil
Conche, Nfld.	9,790	Nil
St. Anthony, Nfld.	68,489	Nil
Margaree, N.S.	—	$15,000
Bathurst, N.B.	94,687	5,313
St. Stephen, N.B.	3,012	79,988
Woodstock, N.B.	—	60,000
Bromont, Que.	—	158,000
Chibougamau, Que.	—	223,000
Drummondville, Que.	142,681	41,319
Eastmain, Que. (seaplane base)	12,228	Nil
Havre St. Pierre, Que. (additional development)	24,972	Nil
Lebel-Sur-Quevillon, Que.	192,500	Nil
Elliot Lake, Ont.	780	229,220
Midland, Ont.	—	38,070
Niagara District, Ont. (passenger operations building)	22,611	19,374
Peterborough, Ont.	149,276	446,724
Sarnia, Ont.	—	30,562
South Porcupine, Ont. (seaplane base)	26,920	Nil
Waterloo-Wellington, Ont. (aircraft parking apron)	55,000	Nil
Biggar, Sask.	—	19,000
Eston, Sask.	—	5,000
Unity, Sask.	—	9,000
Edson, Alta.	—	43,000
Footner Lake, Alta.	117,115	29,925
Fort Chipewyan, Alta.	100,000	Nil
Fort Vermilion, Alta.	10,200	89,800
Stettler, Alta.	—	30,000
Wabasca, Alta.	46,460	Nil
Creston, B.C.	—	25,000
Langley, B.C. (additional development)	92,749	95,251
Port Simpson, B.C.	—	7,000
Sechelt, B.C. (seaplane base)	—	3,000
Sointula, B.C. (seaplane base)	—	19,000

[Mr. Byrne.]

MONUMENT TO BROTHERHOOD OF MAN

Question No. 663—Mr. Simard:

Has the government received representations to have a monument dedicated to the "brotherhood of man" erected at the entrance of Expo '67 and, if so, does the government intend to proceed with such a project?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices, the Department of Trade and Commerce and my department as follows: No.

COLLECTION OF STATISTICS

Question No. 711—Mr. Enns:

1. How many employees at D.B.S. are involved with statistics concerning health?

2. How many employees at D.B.S. are involved with statistics concerning education?

3. How many employees at D.B.S. are involved with statistics concerning welfare?

4. Are any plans under way to strengthen the D.B.S. staff to collect adequate statistics in the field of welfare?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The health and welfare division of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has an establishment of 116 positions concerned with health statistics, of which 105 were filled as of November 23, 1967.

2. The education division of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has an establishment of 40 positions, of which 31 were occupied as of the same date.

3. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics does not have any employees involved with statistics concerning welfare, in the institutional sense. In so far as age, income, employment status and other demographic characteristics are concerned, as measured by censuses and periodic surveys, D.B.S. has a significant number of employees concerned with welfare statistics.

4. D.B.S. has plans to strengthen its staff concerned with institutional welfare and related statistics. However, such plans will not be made operational until additional resources can be allocated.

INFORMATION SERVICE, FISHERIES DEPARTMENT

Question No. 714—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. (a) For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, how many persons were employed in the information and/or public relations services of the Department of Fisheries (b) in each such year, what was the total amount of salaries paid for such services?

2. (a) For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what persons, firms or corporations, if any, other than the departmental information or public relations services have been employed and/or retained for the purpose of preparing, disseminating or in any manner dealing with the information services and/or public relations of the Department of Fisheries (b) what are the names of such persons, firms and corporations, if any; for what purpose and period was the employment and what was the cost in each instance (c) were public tenders called for the services described in (a) and (b) and, if not, upon what basis and by whom was the selection made?

3. (a) For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what radio and television time has been purchased by the said department; for what purpose and for what cost (b) for each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what advertising or other space was purchased by the said department in domestic and foreign newspapers, magazines and other publications; and for what purpose and for what annual cost?

4. For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what advertising or any other related contracts other than those referred to above have been awarded by the said department?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1.

	(a)	(b)
1964-65	20	$114,165
1965-66	24	124,191
1966-67	26	174,841

2. (a), (b) and (c). The following were employed for building and/or refurbishing exhibits and displays: Canadian Government Exhibition Commission, Ottawa, Ontario: Employed periodically throughout each of the years 1964 to 1967; 1964—$500; 1965—$26,265; 1966—$7,000; 1967—$21,500. This commission is the designated government agency for providing these services. Pierre Guibert Ltd., Eastview, Ontario: 1964—4 weeks, $2,586.30; 1965—6 weeks, $5,256.85; 1966—8 weeks, $6,773.64; 1967—5 weeks, $2,375.75. This is the only local firm available for supervised work under department's exhibits and displays officer; this company hired when Canadian government exhibition commission too busy to handle certain assignments. Challier Display Associates Ltd., Vancouver, B.C.: 1965—3 weeks, $1,962.56. Portable displays constructed on west coast for initial use in that area. Western Displays Ltd., Vancouver, B.C.: 1966—5 weeks, $1,712.07. Portable displays constructed on west coast for initial use in that area. Shopland Construction Ltd., Vancouver, B.C.: 1966—8 weeks, $3,659.00. On-site construction of outdoor fishway in display.

Selection of the three west coast firms listed above was made under supervision of director, information service, either on advice of the Canadian government exhibition commission or following investigation of firms with ability and experience in fisheries exhibit operations.

The following were employed for art work and/or design for conservation posters, fish recipe booklet and booklet designed to promote proper fish handling at retail level: Fairbairn Studios Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario: 1966—approximately 80 hours, $1,068.69; 1967—approximately 100 hours, $1,245.00. Selection made under supervision of director, information service, on the basis of quality and competitive costs of work done by this firm for the department in previous years as Queen's Printer involved with centennial, Expo and other government publications.

3. (a) 1964-65, television, $1,999; for promotion of lobster conservation. 1965-66, nil; 1966-67, radio, $1,776; television, $2,040; for publicizing experimental lobster conservation programs. (b) 1964-65, $40,776.00; 1965-66, $44,879.64 for display advertisements in domestic newspapers and magazines to promote quality control; placed through Tandy Advertising Co. Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

4. Nil.

FEASIBILITY STUDY OF SMELTER FACILITIES FOR PINE POINT ORE

Question No. 740—Mr. Nielsen:

1. Was the firm of Canadian Bechtel appointed or retained to investigate and report on the feasibility of the establishment of a smelter and/or smelter facilities for the treatment of ores from Pine Point in the Northwest Territories?

2. If such appointment was made, upon what date was it so made?

3. If such appointment was made on a contract basis, what was the contract price of the work to be performed?

4. If such appointment was made and the services were to be performed on a cost plus or other financial arrangement, what are the details of such financial arrangements?

5. If such appointment was made, has any report yet been received from Canadian Bechtel?

6. If such report was received, is the investigation by Canadian Bechtel completed and, if not, when is the same expected to be completed?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development: 1. Yes.

2. February 10, 1966.

3. Maximum of $160,000.

4. The contract specified that Bechtel would be paid the lesser of (a) $160,000 or (b) the aggregate of the recoverable costs and fee. The recoverable costs and fee include (a) Payroll and related personnel costs. (b) Indirect costs, mainly maintenance and operation of Bechtel's regularly established offices, calculated at 75 per cent of (a). (c) Materials and supplies costs. (d) Travel and subsistence costs. (e) Consultants fees and outside services costs, related to consultants other than Bechtel. (f) Communication costs, telephone, telegraph, etc. (g) Miscellaneous costs, all other costs incurred in the performance of the work. (h) Fee, 15 per cent of the aggregate of items (a), (b), (c), (e) and (g) above.

5 and 6. A confidential report has been received and reviewed by the department. This review indicated areas which required further investigation and Canadian Bechtel Limited has agreed to do this. It is expected that the final report will be completed by mid-February, 1968.

*COST OF CANADIAN PAVILION, OSAKA, JAPAN

Question No. 743—Mr. Isabelle:

1. How much will the Canadian pavilion cost which is to be built for the 1970 international exhibition in Osaka, Japan?

2. What firm of architects has been chosen to draw up the plans and specifications for this pavilion and how was this firm of architects chosen?

3. To the knowledge of the government, what will be the main theme exhibits which Canada will show inside its pavilion?

4. Has the Commissioner who is to represent Canada at this exhibition been chosen yet and, if so, what is his name?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The estimated cost of the Canadian pavilion for the 1970 international exhibition in Osaka, Japan, to be held from March 15 to September 13, 1970, is $3,200,000.

2. The firm Erickson/Massey of Vancouver won the architectural contest for the design of the Canadian pavilion. The contest, organized under the rules set up by the Royal Canadian Institute of Architecture, drew 208 contestants and the jury of eight members was composed of architects and stand designers.

3. The basic theme of the international exhibition in Japan is "Progress and harmony for mankind". The main theme exhibits for the Canadian presentation have yet to be chosen.

4. No.

[English]

*PROVISION FOR EXPROPRIATIONS IN HULL, QUE.

Question No. 744—Mr. Isabelle:

1. What amount was provided for expropriations by the federal government or by government agencies within the limits of the City of Hull in the estimates for the year 1966-67?

2. Was this amount spent and, if not, was it included in the estimates for 1967-68?

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Capital Commission as follows:

1. The National Capital Commission provided $800,000 in its capital budget for 1966-67 for the acquisitions of property, by expropriation or otherwise, including $300,000 for Gatineau park, in the national capital region in the province of Quebec. The region includes the city of Hull. Amounts that might be spent within the corporate limits of the city of Hull were not specifically identified.

In 1966-67 an amount of $631,760 was spent for the acquisition of property in the national capital region in Quebec as follows: $249,010 for Gatineau Park; $287,646 in Hull; and $95,104 in other areas in the region.

2. No specific provision was made in 1967-68 for acquisition of property located within the corporate limits of the city of Hull. The sum of $1,000,000 was provided for the acquisition of property in the national capital region in Quebec, including $600,000 for Gatineau park properties.

[English]

PURCHASE OF SNOWSHOES

Question No. 745—Mr. Hymmen:

1. Did the government, through the Department of Defence Production, recently purchase an order of snowshoes and, if so, what was the total amount of the purchase?

2. From whom were they purchased?

3. How many pairs were ordered?

4. What was the price per pair?

5. For what purpose were these snowshoes intended?

6. If these are for military purposes, how many military personnel or units will be so equipped?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Defence Production and National Defence as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Magline of Canada Limited, Renfrew, Ontario.

3. 7,815 pairs.

4. $32.50 f.o.b. No. 26 central ordnance depot, Cobourg, Ontario.

5. To replenish stocks.

6. 17,065.

FEDERAL PAYMENT FOR INDIAN BURIAL, QUEBEC

Question No. 752—Mr. Laprise:

1. What amount is paid out by the federal government for the funeral, religious service and burial of an Indian in the province of Quebec?

2. When was the last readjustment of this rate made?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1 and 2. The Indian affairs branch welfare policy provides for the payment of burial costs on behalf of Indians when it is not possible to meet such costs from the estate of the deceased or from band funds.

The Indian affairs branch allows the same rate for the burial of an indigent Indian on the reserve as the surrounding community allows for the interment of an indigent non-Indian. These rates vary from municipality to municipality and also may vary within a large urban community such as Montreal or Quebec where all funeral directors may not have the same indigent rate.

COMPLETION OF MAIL CENSUS

Question No. 754—Mr. Pascoe:

1. Has the government completed its test of taking the next Dominion census by mail?

2. If so, are the completed questionnaires being processed in Canada?

3. If not in Canada, where are they being processed?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. No. However, the field work of a test in London, Ontario has been completed.

2. Yes, except that scanning by electronic equipment and transfer to computer tape in connection with the London test is being done by the United States bureau of the census, Washington, D.C. This involves only the transfer of information from forms to computer tape using advanced and complicated electronic equipment available at the present time only in the United States bureau of the census.

3. See answer to (2) above.

FOREIGN OWNED AND CONTROLLED INDUSTRIES

Question No. 768—Mr. Rynard:

1. What is the total number of foreign-owned and controlled industries operating in Canada?

2. What are the names of these foreign-owned and controlled industries?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. In examining the industrial structure of the Canadian economy, The Standard Industrial Classification published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has divided activity in Canada into 10 industrial divisions, excluding government departments, broken down into 51 major industry groups. These are further subdivided into industries.

The extent of foreign investment in each of these industries is not readily available at the present time. However, in three industrial divisions, agriculture, forestry and fishing, foreign investment is very small and in another five industrial divisions non-resident owned firms carry on less that 25 per cent of the activity. These industrial divisions are construction, transportation, communication and other utilities, trade, finance and service industries.

In the mining industrial division, oil and gas wells are largely foreign owned while metal and non-metal mines in total are equally divided between resident and non-resident owned companies. Certain of the individual metals are dominated by foreign owned firms while others are dominated by Canadian owned firms.

In the manufacturing industrial division information is available on a basis of 89 industries. In 19 of these industries, more than 75 per cent of the sales are by companies that are more than 50 per cent foreign owned.

2. The industries in which more than 75 per cent of the sales are by corporations more than 50 per cent non-resident owned are as follows: Mining industrial division, oil and gas wells. Manufacturing industrial division, rubber footwear and tires, other rubber products, synthetic textile mills, non-ferrous metal smelting, miscellaneous metal fabricating, commercial refrigeration and office and store equipment, motor vehicles and parts, aircraft and parts, electrical industrial equipment, battery manufacturers, refractories manufacturers, other non-metallic mineral products, petroleum refineries, other petroleum products, pharmaceuticals and medicines, toilet preparations, soaps and cleaning compounds, plastics, synthetic resins and explosives, scientific and professional equipment.

CAR FERRY, BORDEN, P.E.I.-TORMENTINE, N.B.

Question No. 770—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

1. Is a new ice-breaking car ferry being constructed to operate between Borden, Prince Edward Island, and Tormentine, New Brunswick?

2. When was approval given for the construction of this car ferry, what was the expected date of commencement of service at that time, and what was the predicted cost?

3. When was construction begun, by whom, where is it being constructed; was construction begun there, and if not, for what reason?

4. When is it expected construction will be completed, how much has it cost to date and what will be the completed cost?

5. When will it begin active service?

6. How many passengers will it carry?

7. What form of restaurant, restroom and lounge facilities will be available?

8. How many automobiles will it carry?

9. How many railroad cars will it carry?

10. How many persons will be employed and in what capacity?

11. What is its length, breadth, depth, draft and expected speed?

12. What will be the name of this new car ferry?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Cabinet approval in the amount of $14,000,000 was granted on July 9, 1963. The then target date for service was the fall of 1967.

3. Construction was begun December 25, 1965 by Marine Industries Limited, at Sorel, P.Q.

4. Up to November 30, 1967 progress payments totalling $11,878,769.70 have been made to the shipbuilder and the vessel will be completed in September, 1968 at an estimated total cost of $13,900,000.

5. October, 1968.

6. One thousand.

7. Passengers facilities will be available on the promenade deck: aft—cafeteria for 144 persons and numerous seats on the open deck; amidships—lounge seating 90 persons, five double berth cabins and ladies' and gentlemen's rest rooms; forward—observation lounge seating 196 persons.

8. Ninety.

9. Twenty-four.

10. Crew total, 82, comprising: Captain, 8 deck officers; 10 engineer officers; 1 catering officer; 6 petty officers; 22 catering crew; 24 seamen; 10 engine room crew.

11. Length, 400 feet; breadth, 67 feet; depth, 45 feet three inches; draft, 20 feet; service speed, 18 knots.

12. John Hamilton Gray.

PAY OF VETERANS HOSPITALS ORDERLIES

Question No. 781—Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West):

1. What are the rates of pay for hospital orderlies in D.V.A. hospitals in Vancouver, B.C.?

2. What are the rates of pay for similar orderlies in London, Ontario?

3. When was the last regular increase made in these rates?

4. Is an interim increase now in effect?

5. If an interim increase is now in effect, when is a regular increase expected to be made?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Grade 1 (trainees), $3,510-$3,831; Grade 2, $4,317-$4,959; Grade 3, $4,553-$5,195; Grade 4, $5,045-$5,527.

2. Grade 1 (trainees), $3,510-$3,831; Grade 2, $3,836-$4,317; Grade 3, $4,071-$4,553; Grade 4, $5,045-$5,527.

3. October 1, 1966.

4. No.

5. It is expected that the next regular increase will result from collective bargaining.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 786—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

1. What are the regulations governing the activities of the Canadian Film Development Corporation?

2. How much money has the Corporation disbursed and on what projects?

3. Who are the Chairman of the Corporation, the members of the Corporation, the Executive Director and Secretary?

4. Has an advisory group been appointed to the Corporation and, if so, what members have been appointed?

5. What staff or special advisers are employed by the Corporation?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. The corporation is governed by the provisions of the Canadian Film Development Corporation Act. There are no regulations enacted specifically with respect to the Canadian Film Development Corporation.

2. None.

3. Not yet appointed.

4. No.

5. None.

*ENTRY OF CATTLE FROM ENGLAND

Question No. 791—Mr. Ricard:

How many permits were issued by the government of Canada in November 1967 to allow entry into Canada of cattle from England?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): In November three permits were issued for the purpose of amending the importation date on earlier permits covering 26 cattle which had been in the Glasgow, Scotland, quarantine station since September 9, prior to the outbreak of foot and mouth disease in England. Their movement was delayed because of shipping difficulties.

MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION

Question No. 794—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. For each of the past five years, how many original motion pictures have been produced by the national film board (a) for the government (b) for crown corporations (c) for private companies?

2. What has been the total cost for (a) and (b) above?

3. For the same period, how many original motion pictures have been produced under contract by commercial film companies, and what has been the total cost of these films?

4. Who produced the film for Labyrinth at Expo 67, and (a) what was the contract price (b) were there any costs in excess of the contract (c) if so, who pays these costs?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. Original motion pictures produced by the National Film Board (a) for government departments, 1962-63, 17; 1963-64, 23; 1964-65, 44; 1965-66, 41; 1966-67, 38. (b) for crown corporations, 1962-63, 2; 1963-64, 2; 1964-65, 9; 1965-66, 2; 1966-67, 6. (c) for private companies, 1962-63, nil; 1963-64, nil; 1964-65, nil; 1965-66, nil; 1966-67, nil.

2. (a) for government departments, 1962-63, $284,632; 1963-64, $473,366; 1964-65, $680,064; 1965-66, $439,437; 1966-67, $759,988. (b) for crown corporations, 1962-63, $59,106; 1963-64, $88,439; 1964,-65, $157,277; 1965-66, $68,739, 1966-67, $326,956.

3. Original motion pictures produced under contract by commercial film companies (a) Total films, 1962-63, 2; 1963-64, 1; 1964-65, 3; 1965-66, 3; 1966-67, 8. (b) Total cost, 1962-63, $68,855; 1963-64, $6,963; 1964-65, $65,007; 1965-66, $60,365; 1966-67, $61,481.

4. The National Film Board produced the film for Labyrinth at Expo '67 as contractor to the Canadian Corporation for the World Exhibition 1967 (a) The contract price was $4,420,000, as follows: (i) Manufacturing and installation including major items such as Canadair rental, mock-up, rental of special equipment, and equipment, $2,705,179; (ii) Operating expense of exhibit, $214,821; (iii) Building construction (not NFB responsibility), $1,500,000. (b) Yes. $90,000—Additional costs of operating the exhibit, including extra staff, overtime, prints of film. (c) Payment has been requested from the Canadian Corporation for the World Exhibition 1967. Matter still under negotiation.

RICHARD WRIGHT—EMPLOYMENT AS CONSULTANT

Question No. 803—Mr. Jorgenson:

Is Mr. Richard Wright currently being employed by the Department of Industry as a consultant and, if so (a) what are his terms of reference (b) to whom does he report (c) what is his remuneration?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yes. (a) 1. To develop a statement of what the external communications objectives of the Department of Industry should be, particularly in respect of its two major programs, area development and industrial development.

2. To provide an analysis of the existing external communications activities now being carried out, particularly in the information and promotion branch, as well as in the rest of the department, and an evaluation of how these activities are contributing to achieving the objectives of the two above mentioned programs of the department.

3. In the light of (1) and (2) above, to make recommendations regarding the development of an external communications program and the necessary resources to carry it out. Attention should be paid as to whether the department should "make or buy" some of the services involved.

4. In the light of the above, and particularly with reference to item (1), to develop a detailed statement on what the communications policy and program should be in respect of the BEAM program; and, if time permits, the machinery program.

(b) Mr. A. R. Bailey, head, financial and administrative services.

(c) One hundred and seventy-five dollars per diem, with a contract ceiling of $5,000, including expenses.

Housing Crisis

ASSISTANCE TO VENDING MACHINE OPERATORS

Question No. 806—Mr. Coates:

Is the government giving consideration to providing assistance to vending operators in Canada who will be materially affected with the issuing of new coinage and, if so, what form will this assistance take?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The government is currently investigating the possible costs to the vending machine industry arising from the introduction of a nickel coinage and has not therefore reached any decision on the industry's request for assistance.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

EXPO '67—DISPOSITION OF ARTICLES FOUND

Question No. 576—Mr. Korchinski:

What disposition is to be made of all the articles turned in to the lost and found department at Expo '67?

Return tabled.

HOUSING

ALLEGED FAILURE OF CONFERENCE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to place before the house. I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the continuing and growing housing crisis in Canada, particularly in view of the failure of the federal-provincial conference on housing to deal with the crisis, caused primarily by the lack of any new and effective proposals by the federal government.

Due to the pressures on our translation staff I was able to obtain only one copy of the motion in French, which perhaps could be made available to the leader of the Créditistes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. As the house knows, the question that faces the Chair is not the urgency of the problem itself but the urgency of debate. I would welcome any contributions which members might wish to make regarding the urgency of such a debate at this particular time. As there are not enough copies of the motion for the members, I shall read it. It is as follows:

I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview, to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the continuing and growing housing crisis in Canada, particularly in view of the failure of the federal-provincial conference on housing to deal with the crisis, caused primarily by the lack of any new and effective proposals by the federal government.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could address the Chair on the question of urgency of debate. I would first like to say that in moving this motion on behalf of the New Democratic party it is not a move we make with any feeling of happiness. I hope the house would believe that. Mr. Speaker, all of us welcomed the conference. All of us had high hopes for it. Most of us attended it and listened to its deliberations but unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the conference did not adjourn; it died, and it died because—

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Scott (Danforth): —because after the first day it became evident—

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Scott (Danforth): —there was really nothing very much to discuss—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of National Health and Welfare on a point of order.

Mr. MacEachen: I am rising on a point of order because the hon. member is now commenting upon the housing conference. He is making gratuitous political comments instead of addressing himself to the matter of urgency of debate. I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member be asked to observe the rule in this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken. I suggest to the hon. member for Danforth that the only argument the Chair wishes to hear at this particular point is an argument in favour of urgency of debate.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly will abide by your statement. It seems to me, however, that we are trying and have tried for several years to raise a matter which constitutes probably the most urgent social problem facing Canada.

This was so evident at the recent meeting. If that is not something which urgently warrants debate in this house, then what is urgent? Since I have been here we have had debates on the drought problems of the farmers and on the tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway; yet here we have a problem which confronts every single Canadian in a very direct way. If parliament cannot speak, who can? I do not retract my remark. I regret what happened at the conference. In fact the best speech was made, strangely enough, by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer).

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member again that whatever may be the opinion regarding the importance of this matter, the question before the Chair at the moment is not the urgency of the problem but the urgency of debate. I would expect the hon. member for Danforth who knows the rules quite well, to abide by my wish that he discuss the urgency of debate at this particular time.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had thought the breakdown of the conference would have created urgency for parliament to talk about it. Some suggestions were made by the various premiers which many of us liked, one dealing with sales tax remission, which obviously can be dealt with only by parliament but which, if accepted by the government, would have a very important influence on the housing problem. With respect, the reason I still think there is urgency is that the failure really came because nothing of a concrete nature was presented by the government. If the government will not speak, surely parliament must. Somebody must hold out some hope to the municipalities and provinces that this area of government is prepared to assume responsibility and act.

It seems to me that if the government will not act then parliament itself must be heard. If we are not to be heard, who is to be heard; and if not now, when? We must have an answer for people across the country who wish to hear what the federal parliament is prepared to do to provide leadership and a program to deal with the housing crisis which everyone who attended the conference acknowledged is one of the major social problems facing the country. What greater urgency could there be? When else will we have a chance so to do?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I know the answer, Mr. Speaker, is that there is an opportunity during the budget debate which is in progress, but over the years we have found that this procedure simply is not an effective way to pin down an urgent problem in the social sector. It seems to me that the case for the discussion of housing today, as an urgent matter of public concern and public business, is overwhelming. I am surprised to hear opposition from the government benches in respect of this highly difficult, highly urgent and highly important matter. I believe there is no other opportunity for this matter to be taken up at this time by the parliament of Canada, and I am surprised that the government would not accept the debate immediately.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the question before the house is whether there is an opportunity under the rules to discuss this matter. We are in the sixth day of the budget debate. On any of these days it has been possible for hon. members to bring forward the question of housing. In a moment or two we will be continuing with the budget debate. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor when the budget debate resumes, and if it is important that the hon. member for Danforth state his case it would be very easy for the whip of that party to arrange for that hon. member to be heard immediately when we resume the budget debate.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, there is no need to try to convince Your Honour of the importance of the matter referred to in this motion, because everyone knows that in Canada we have been falling short of the target for house building. What Your Honour has asked the house to discuss is whether it is important to discuss this question of housing at this moment.

Let me point out that throughout this entire session members on this side of the house have sought to raise the question of housing, to impress upon the government that there is a housing crisis in Canada and that conditions will be much worse in 1968 unless action is taken now. The government's reply has been that a conference was to be held between the federal and provincial governments during which these problems would be resolved and policies and programs would be enunciated.

That conference has taken place, and it is generally agreed by everyone that nothing productive has come from it. Therefore we are faced today with a situation totally different to any other which has faced the house at any time during this session. That is, the whole question of housing now is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Registrar General wishes to speak on a point of order.

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): This point has already been raised, but surely the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam should restrict himself to the urgency of debate and not to the urgency of the subject matter he wishes to discuss. I think the citations are quite clear to the effect that the urgency within the rules does not apply to the subject matter but refers to the urgency of debate, when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject matter to be brought on at an early date.

After orders of the day hon. members of the N.D.P. will have ample opportunity to discuss this matter. This is the question to which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam should restrict himself at the moment. With the greatest respect, he is abusing the rules of the house.

Mr. Douglas: That was an entirely unnecessary and gratuitous interruption.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: I was just about to deal with the representations made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The first point I should like to bring to Your Honour's attention is that the failure of the conference presents a new situation and makes this debate urgent at this time. The second point is that there will be no adequate opportunity to debate this question until after the Christmas recess. Today the orders of the day provide one half hour, so at best we could resume the budget debate at 3.30. A vote must be taken by 5.45, which means we would have one hour and fifteen minutes to debate this matter. This will provide no opportunity whatsoever for members of the various parties in this house to express their views in respect of housing, nor will it provide any opportunity for the responsible minister to make a statement. All this cannot be done in one hour and fifteen minutes.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Members of the government are simply trying to muddy the waters when they say there will be ample opportunity to discuss this matter during the budget debate. They know very well there will not be adequate opportunity, and it is because they know there will not be this opportunity that they seek to get Your Honour to disallow this motion. I suggest to Your Honour that the question of housing, which is now made doubly urgent because of the failure of the conference, should be discussed and should be discussed here and now. I think the people of Canada expect parliament to discuss this matter, and discuss it immediately.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Gaspé.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam a question?

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gaspé.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has agreed to accept a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Gaspé.

Mr. Nowlan: I would like to ask the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam a question. I am not detracting from the urgency of the matter but—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would be prepared to permit the hon. member to ask a question of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam only if his question has to do directly with urgency of debate—

Mr. Nowlan: It has.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —and not the urgency of the substance of the matter.

Mr. Nowlan: I think Your Honour will find that my question falls within the guide lines you have laid down. I ask the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, in view of the urgency of the problem and in respect of the allocation of funds, does he feel there is a higher priority for funds to solve the housing crisis or funds to solve the medicare crisis?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The question is out of order.

Mr. Douglas: I would be glad to answer it.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I agree that there is urgency of debate on this question. To illustrate that urgency I would remind the house that only a short time remains in the budget debate, and there certainly will not be time for members of all parties to express their views on the housing crisis which now faces Canada. We must remember that the calling of a dominion-provincial conference was an acknowledgement that there is a housing crisis in this country. I do not believe anyone in Canada has ever seen such an exercise in futility as has been indulged in by the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is only asking assistance from members of the house in so far as urgency of debate is concerned. I recognize that this is a problem, but the only assistance the Chair needs is on the matter of urgency of debate and not on the importance of the problem itself.

Mr. Keays: The urgency is demonstrated by the fact that everyone can witness the suffering of people in the urban areas of Canada because of the congestion in those areas.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would say to the hon. member that it is urgency of debate in which the Chair is interested.

Mr. Keays: With all deference, Mr. Speaker, I believe that when there is suffering there is always urgency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Keays: Unless we have a debate on this important subject I do not see how we can ever hope to tackle and solve the problem. It has been acknowledged that there is a housing crisis in Canada, and all we have been told is what will be done in 1969.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Keays: There is urgency in our finding a solution to the problem. I maintain that the urgency of the matter calls for action now and not in two years' time.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, you recognized earlier the importance and urgency of the matter. The question is to decide whether it is urgent to adjourn the regular business of the house in order to discuss that matter. The best proof of the urgency of a debate is that members of the government obviously fear that such a debate will be allowed at this time.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) suggests that the question should be raised during an insignificant debate that fails to arouse public opinion.

We are aware, as mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), that the budget debate will come to an end in about an hour, an hour and a quarter, and yet, the Minister of National Health and Welfare suggests that the housing problem should be discussed at that time.

Now, as the government knows, the recent federal-provincial housing conference was a real fiasco. I feel the matter is urgent because it means discussing housing for Canadians across the country.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) for having introduced this motion which the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) seconded. If ever there was a time to discuss housing—members have tried to bring up the matter for debate in the house repeatedly, but in vain—this is it.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, more than ever before the matter should be discussd now. If a motion such as this one is needed, well, let us pass it graciously and then endeavour to find a solution to the most important and pressing problem of housing in Canada.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, addressing myself to the matter of urgency of debate I would like to draw your attention to the fact that there has just been a two day debate in Ottawa on this subject. At that conference were representatives of the federal government and senior officials of the provincial governments, which share responsibility in the matter of housing. As I said, a two day debate has just been concluded on this subject.

I suggest to Your Honour that some matters involved in this question, namely land assembly costs, building codes and so on, are the exclusive responsibility of other levels of government. I ask, why is it urgent to have such a debate now when a debate on the subject has just been concluded?

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam advanced the most effective argument of all for having this motion ruled out of order when he suggested that there is insufficient time left between now, at about ten minutes after three, and five o'clock in which to discuss this matter. I suggest to Your Honour that the time left before the adjournment of today's sitting is exactly the same whether the debate takes place as the result of a motion to adjourn the house under standing order 26 or in the budget debate. There is no more and no less time. Therefore I suggest that if hon. members opposite are really serious about wanting a long period of time to discuss what they say is an urgent matter, they should not do it when our time is limited but should raise the question at a time when we could spend the whole day discussing it.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to argue against urgency of debate on this matter; I think most people are very much aware of the urgency of the housing problem. However, in view of the fact that this conference has just terminated, and in order to save time and give the leaders of the parties an opportunity to comment on the question, I suggest to the right hon. Prime Minister—and I think he would receive unanimous consent—that we revert to motions in order to permit him to make a statement on the conference. I believe this would give spokesmen of all parties ample opportunity to comment on the matter. We would be prepared to give that consent now.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can do better than that. There is no question about this being a serious problem. It will be with us for a long time, of course.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Therefore the question of urgency has to be related to the continuing nature of the problem. I think it would be a good idea to have a day's debate on housing. We were going to adjourn, as indicated, on December 21. We can stay here another day, and we will arrange for a housing debate on December 22.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to speak on this matter but I must say I am very surprised that the right hon. Prime Minister should treat this matter as lightly as he does. I made a serious suggestion that we revert to motions, which would give him the opportunity to make a statement. He would then be able to speak about the conference on housing and the future plans of the government in respect of housing. An opportunity would also be given to a spokesman from each party to voice their opinion and their position. If the right hon. Prime Minister would take this matter seriously and agree to this suggestion we are prepared to revert to motions.

Mr. Pearson: May I say on this point, which I do take very seriously, that unfortunately a statement on motions does not make a debate possible, as my hon. friend knows, but merely permits a statement from one representative of each party. We would like to do more than that and have a debate on housing. I suggest we do this on December 22.

Some hon. Members: Good idea.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman is acceptable to us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have been very generous in their advice to the Chair, and if there is no further assistance to be given I would be prepared to make a ruling now.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I am sure the members of this party would be happy to accept the suggestion that a full day be allowed for a debate on this urgent matter. However, I wish to make one further point with regard to the necessity of a debate on this subject some time before the house adjourns for Christmas. Various people at the conference, including the prime minister of the province of Quebec, made practical suggestions which could be put into legislative form before we adjourn. I refer, for example, to the removal of the sales tax, a matter which could be dealt with by parliament before Christmas if we were allowed to deal with it. This was a practical suggestion which was made at the conference, and I guarantee or I feel certain that all the opposition parties would be only too happy to put through legislation dealing with this urgent crisis as quickly as possible.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one point with regard to the contribution by the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Contribution?

Mr. Chatterton: I said "contribution" with a certain accent. The hon. member indicated that the amount of time available for debate would be the same no matter what subject we might discuss. There is one important difference. There is no doubt that if we deal with this subject in the budget debate today no member on the government side will dare mention the subject of housing, whereas if the business is adjourned for the purpose of dealing with the subject of housing hon. members will have to restrict themselves to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. First of all I should like to refer members of the house to citation 100 (8) of Beauchesne's fourth edition. The following is a ruling made by a former Speaker, part of which reads as follows:

"I do not think that, under the standing order of 1882, a motion on a subject of this kind, having such a very wide scope, was ever contemplated. What I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs—"

Now I should like to refer to the motion moved by the hon. member for Danforth which contains the words "the continuing and growing housing crisis". One must conclude from these words that this is not a sudden emergency.

I must point out that one day remains in the budget debate during which, if hon. members so desire, they could discuss the housing problem. I should point out that I am not very impressed by the argument that there cannot be a long debate today, that not much time would be available to discuss the housing problem. Whatever the house decides to do today, there will be the same amount of time in either case. May I also point out that on an earlier occasion this year, on October 3, this question was discussed on a supply motion and was voted upon.

In view of these facts I believe the motion by the hon. member for Danforth cannot be accepted at this time.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, would you be good enough to call notices of motions Nos. 21 and 33?

Motions for Papers

[English]

C.N.R. PASSENGER SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 21—Mr. Schreyer:

That an order of the house do issue for a return showing, with respect to C.N.R. passenger train service in Newfoundland:

1. The number of passengers carried for the years 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965 and 1966 by coach and first class.

2. The revenue from passenger traffic for the years noted in part 1.

3. The cost to the railway for operating the passenger trains for the years noted in part 1.

4. The average number of coach cars, parlour cars, dining cars and other cars used in passenger service per train for the years noted in part 1.

5. The number of S.D. & P.C. and other train passenger employees for the years noted in part 1.

6. The number of new cars and other equipment purchased for train passenger service for the years noted in part 1.

7. The number of employees that will be displaced, if the train passenger service is discontinued, and their total earnings for 1966?

8. The fastest time that a train proceeded from Port aux Basques to St. John's and the stations or sidings at which it stopped.

9. Prior to the public announcement on April 4, 1967, that a bus service would start by the C.N.R., were discussions held with any governments?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by the Canadian National Railways that there are no documents covering the nine points raised by the hon. member in his notice of motion for production of papers. I suggest that the hon. member withdraw his notice of motion, and I will give him the assurance that the railway will provide answers to the points raised in his notice of motion which could then be placed on the order paper in the form of a written question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the absence of the hon. member for Springfield perhaps the motion should stand.

Mr. Hellyer: I understand that the hon. member agreed to withdraw his motion earlier in the day.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is also my understanding, Mr. Speaker. On his behalf I agree to this notice of motion being withdrawn so that he may re-enter it as a question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTS ON HARP PROJECT

Motion No. 33—Mr. Harkness:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of reports which have been made to the government on the HARP project, and in particular those made by Dean Ruptash of Carleton University and by Mr. Brightwell of the Defence Research Board.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary North asks for reports in relation to the HARP project, and in particular those made by Dean Ruptash of Carleton University and by Mr. Brightwell of the Defence Research Board. A special study in connection with the HARP project has been published by the science secretariat, known as the Chapman report, as well as the report from the Science Council of Canada. I would be glad to see that these are made available to the hon. member.

In respect of the two specific reports to which the hon. member makes reference, they are internal reports and contain items of military information classified as "security" by the military, and consequently are not publishable. If the hon. member is prepared to withdraw his motion I will see that he gets copies of the two reports which are publishable.

Mr. Harkness: I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

HOUSING

STEPS TO BE TAKEN FOLLOWING DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether he can indicate to the house when the government will move to set up the national advisory housing council, which he proposed to the housing conference on Monday.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There seemed to be a difference of opinion at the conference as to how this work of co-ordination and research could best be done, and we are pursuing the matter further with the provinces.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the numerous requests which have been made in the past to reconvene the standing committee of the house on housing and urban development, and now that the dominion-provincial conference on housing has been held, would the Prime Minister please intercede with his cabinet colleagues to ensure that the committee is set up so we can get to the root of the problem?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice; I am not sure whether I got the whole import of it.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the developments at the recent conference, at which there was virtually no support from the premiers for the setting up of an advisory committee—about which we are all sorry, because it was a good idea—and in view of the previous statement of the Prime Minister that he had under consideration the setting up of a ministry of housing and urban affairs, can the Prime Minister tell us whether he will now reconsider this matter and make a statement to the house during this special debate to be held on December 22?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is a question touching upon very important government policy that I cannot deal with on the orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, and I ask him to answer me clearly.

Will the expected housing shortage be caused by a lack of materials or by a lack of money? Could the Prime Minister answer that question clearly?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to be clear on such a speculative question.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether the Bank of Canada would be able to finance the legitimate housing programs of the provinces?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think this is a question that might be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I see that the right hon. Prime Minister has asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to answer the question and that the minister is rising to do so. He was delayed by the slow interpretation.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair is still of the opinion that the question should be put on the order paper.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN SUPPORT FOR GREATER USE OF FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether the remarks reported to have been made in Paris by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in regard to Canada's encouragement of the extended use of the French language around the world is an indication that Canada will support the current move to increase the use of French in the United Nations when this move is voted on next Monday.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of the details of the motion at the United Nations to which my hon. friend refers. As he knows, French is already one of the official languages of the United Nations and is also used at the United Nations as a working language. I should like to look at the text of the resolution before I say anything more about it.

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE EXPANSION OF ACTIVITIES OF CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I was wondering whether he is now in a position to answer the question I put to him yesterday concerning the activities of the international control commission in Viet Nam.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday there is a proposal before the commission to enlarge its activities on the Cambodian border. There has been some controversy about the use of Cambodian territory by Viet Cong forces. We will be glad to see that done, and we are discussing the proposal with other members of the commission. I think this might well be done, because the Cambodian government itself has approved of this kind of action by the commission.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister inform the house whether there is any relationship between the revived consideration reported in the United States with respect to the doctrine of hot pursuit across the border and the proposal for an enlarged role for the international control commission, and whether Canada would support this latter proposal as the only sensible and realistic alternative in protecting the borders rather than engaging in hot pursuit across them?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have seen that report about the possibility of the United States government extending the international doctrine of hot pursuit which would permit the pursuit of an enemy beyond the borders of a country. I myself am confident that in view of what we have said to them in the past the United States government would be aware that Canada would have very grave reservations about any action that might result in the extension of the scope of the fighting in Viet Nam, and which by such extension would raise the possibility of direct involvement by other countries. If this doctrine of hot pursuit would be likely to have that result, we certainly would not support it.

Mr. Fulton: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister consider it appropriate, then, that Canada should actively pursue and support the proposal for an enlarged role for the international control commission along the borders to obviate the very danger to which the right hon. gentleman has referred?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to think that any extension of the mandate of the commission would have that result. However, as my hon. friend knows, now that the demilitarized zone is the scene of heavy fighting, to put this commission into the zone would not seem to be very practical. Perhaps the situation will change before long, and then the commission could be used for that purpose.

Inquiries of the Ministry

RHODESIA—REPORT BY SECRETARIAT RESPECTING SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Is the government studying the report of the United Nations secretariat regarding the effectiveness of the Rhodesian sanctions, and is the Canadian government planning to make any proposals to the United Nations security council to plug the loopholes and make the sanctions more effective?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, we are studying this report with great interest. It is an important report. We have been following the matter not only through the United Nations but as a result of our membership on the commonwealth sanctions committee in London. We are discussing this report in New York, and when the security council next directs attention to the Rhodesian problem, which I believe will be shortly, we will have the advantage of this report and will make our position known on this problem on the basis of this report.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister about Canada's increased purchases of tobacco and sugar from South Africa, and ask whether there is any indication that these commodities originate in Rhodesia but are being shipped to Canada under the guise of being South African exports?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have already looked into that matter as the result of a question that was asked the other day. My information is that attempts to circumvent our ban on imports from Rhodesia, not only with regard to tobacco but also with regard to other goods, are brought to the attention of the government from time to time. All such reports have been thoroughly investigated to determine whether in fact a violation of our regulation has occurred. Previous reports of attempts to import Rhodesian tobacco have been investigated and have proven to be unfounded. If anyone possesses evidence of a violation of our regulation it would, I hope, be put at the disposal of the Canadian authorities at once so that appropriate action could be taken by the government.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it relates to a social problem affecting Rhodesia. Has the government a plan to assist the working people of Rhodesia who have been or may be thrown out of employment by the continuation of sanctions?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to send the hon. gentleman the report of the last prime ministers' conference at which we did agree to help the Rhodesian people, of whom four fifths are coloured, in the difficult times they are experiencing.

Mr. Churchill: Would that assistance be economic assistance in order that their standard of living might be maintained?

Mr. Pearson: It would certainly include that but it would also include, as an important factor, educational assistance to help prepare them for taking over their own country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GREECE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED CRISIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister has a statement for the house regarding the current crisis in Greece, and whether our own diplomatic personnel and other nationals who might be in that country are safe.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have received a very short telegram to the effect that a situation has developed in which the king of Greece is presumably trying to alter the nature of the existing Greek government. There have been more details over the radio and in the press than those received by us in our official telegram, but perhaps that is not unusual. We are asking for a full report, and we may get that report this afternoon. At the moment we have no official report on fighting or casualties resulting from these developments. I will be glad to make a further statement on this matter in the house tomorrow.

TRADE

PLUTONIUM—REPORTED SALES TO FRANCE AND JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the announcement made yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that Canada had agreed in principle to sell plutonium to France, would the minister advise the house whether this is part of the negotiations in regard to the sale of uranium to France, and whether France has now agreed to the limiting conditions that Canada had imposed upon the sale of uranium products to that and other countries?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can answer that question to the extent that I have discussed this matter with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This will be a separate negotiation from that which has been brought to the attention of the house in connection with uranium. It is this other negotiation, or possible negotiation, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was discussing in Brussels. I am waiting for the full text of what he said, and until then I do not feel that I shall be in a position to report on it.

I can say at once, however, that the export of plutonium from Canada will be governed by the general considerations which are also applicable to the export of uranium and which were set forth in my statement to the house on June 3, 1965. The statement was that such exports would be permitted subject to an agreement with the government of the importing country to ensure, with appropriate verification and control, that the material would be used for peaceful purposes only.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What are the international safeguards which the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to when announcing that this sale would be made?

Mr. Pearson: They would be the United Nations safeguards which have been drawn up by the international atomic energy authority.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government of France has indicated its willingness to sign such an agreement which would restrict the uses of plutonium for peaceful purposes?

Mr. Pearson: The government of France knows, from the previous discussions we have had, that we can only make sales on the basis of the acceptance of that verification and control which I have indicated. They know that.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of what the Prime Minister said about the announcement of the sale of plutonium to France and also the recent announcement—I believe it was made yesterday—that this country will sell plutonium to Japan, will the government of Canada require Japan to adhere to the same regulations that France will be required to adhere to?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. They are entirely the same.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister consider delivering a Christmas present to all those interested in the future of the Air Canada base at Winnipeg by advising the house how far he has got in his quest for a president of Air Canada and when he expects to announce the appointment?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the choice of a president for Air Canada is a question for the board of directors of that company. The board has asked the present president to remain in office for a few months while the changes in corporate structure, if any, which might be necessary in order for the company to obtain financing on the market, are explored. I can assure my hon. friend that this does not mean that we shall not pursue with diligence our goal of establishing a basic, long range plan for Winnipeg in order to provide basic facilities there for maintaining aeroplanes.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question in connection with Air Canada. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that in so far as the government has any connection, direct or indirect, with the appointment of the new president of Air Canada, it will not make a Pickersgillian type of appointment from among those who are in the cabinet?

Mr. McCleave: I hope the minister himself is not appointed.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): If we can get an appointment in this field of a man as skilful—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): "Skilful" is the right word.

Mr. Pearson: —as wise and as expert as Mr. Pickersgill is in the field of transportation, we shall be very lucky.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—REPORTED CREATION OF NORTH ATLANTIC NAVAL FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Are news reports correct when they allege that there was an agreement between our Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs prior to the NATO meeting that Canada's position at the NATO conference would be that a North Atlantic treaty naval force should be set up, with Canada supplying a destroyer to that command; and that our armoured brigade would be changed to a light brigade, with four transport aircraft to be purchased from United States suppliers? Was the decision to adopt that position taken before the two ministers went to the NATO conference?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I am not at all sure that it has been decided at Brussels, either. I have not received any official confirmation of the report. Until I get an official report I do not wish to comment on the press report, but I would be very surprised indeed if any such decision was taken during the meeting.

NOVA SCOTIA

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Is the right hon. gentleman in a position to advise us whether he has conferred with Premier Smith of Nova Scotia about the steel crisis at Sydney? Would he make known to the house the result of such deliberations and can he say what financial assistance will be available to the province from the central government with respect to the purchase of the plant as well as to make good any losses that may be incurred?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we had a very interesting and useful talk this morning, as a result of which the premier of Nova Scotia will put in writing the report he gave to us about the negotiations that had been going on with the company, explain in writing the legislation that has been passed and its implications, and then make suggestions, on the basis of our discussion, as to how he thinks the federal government can assist most effectively in meeting his problems. Then we shall have a document before us from which we can decide what to do.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the right hon. gentleman aware that the labour federations of the four Atlantic provinces, meeting in Moncton two days ago, discussed and dealt with the possibility and economic feasibility of the separation of the Atlantic region from the rest of Canada, as a result of federal governmental neglect?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, while I hope that will not happen, I will say this. If the Atlantic regions ever decide to separate from the rest of Canada, which I do not wish and I am sure my hon. friend does not wish, we shall not be in a position to help them, as we are helping them.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I fully accept the Prime Minister's statement about separation. But, will he get with it and get down to the business of helping Nova Scotia with regard to this problem?

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend should look at the record of the last four years in regard to assistance in Nova Scotia. That assistance has been given by this government, to the point where more than half of the revenue of the government of Nova Scotia now comes from the federal source.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: Is that why 20,000 people down there are marching in protest?

Mr. Pearson: I hope my figures are right.

RESEARCH

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I am sorry that the Prime Minister is carrying such a heavy load today. I hope he will not mind if I move from Cape Breton to the world.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: We must do that, Mr. Speaker, once in a while. Can the right hon. gentleman give the house a progress report on the proposed international development centre which is to be located in Ottawa and which, I understand, will be dedicated to fundamental research of how modern technology can help with man's economic and social problems?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Before I try to answer that question I wish to assure my hon. friend that, on this side of the house, Cape Breton is a most important part of the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I thank the hon. member for giving me the opportunity to say that. As to the point he has raised concerning the possible development of an international centre, we have been pursuing this possibility as one which would be important and useful for Canada in the international field. We have been discussing the subject with the United Nations, which has sent officials here to confer with our external aid people and others, and we have asked Professor A. F. W. Plumptre of Scarborough College to report to us on the desirability and advisability of this project so that we may have a document on which to consider and base our decision. I very much hope we shall be able to work out something in this field.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made yesterday in Brussels by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the effect that Canada's relations with France had never been better, is it the intention of the government to make similar approaches to other heads of state so that our international relations may be generally improved?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In view of the fact that the minister of tourism and industry of the province of Quebec refused to take part in the federal-provincial conference on tourism because all the documentation sent by the Department of Trade and Commerce in Ottawa was written in English only, could the minister say whether this is a result of the recommendations of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission on bilingualism?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not think this is a question which should be asked at this time.

HOUSING

POSSIBLE RESUMPTION OF DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question. In view of the progress which was made at the housing conference between the federal and provincial governments, can the right hon. gentleman say whether there are any plans to resume the conference at an early date?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we did discuss at the conference the possibility that the ministers responsible for housing might meet again in about six months' time to discuss the progress which has been made. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to put on record the very important proposals for changes in legislation made by the government at this conference. It would take a long time—

Mr. Starr: The right hon. gentleman will get that opportunity on December 22.

Mr. Pearson: I will wait until then.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

MONTREAL, QUE.—SUICIDE OF PORTUGUESE NATIONAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I wished to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but, in his absence, I shall address it to the Prime Minister. Could he inform the house of the circumstances of the suicide of a young Portuguese immigrant in a federal building in Montreal last week?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about this, but I shall be glad to make inquiries.

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Would the Prime Minister indicate, at the same time, whether that is not the third such incident in Montreal within two years, and whether similar incidents have occurred in Canada during the same period, always in relation to the department of immigration?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to look into that aspect.

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Speaker, another supplementary question. As human lives are involved, may we hope to have a reply this week?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Yes. If the hon. member had given me notice of his question this morning he might have had a reply this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

WATER RESOURCES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROPOSED DIVERSION FROM SHUSWAP LAKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I know he is interested in this subject because in one sense we both have water on the brain. Has the minister or any of his officials had discussions or correspondence with any member of the British Columbia government or its officials with respect to proposals for the diversion of water from Shuswap lake, which normally flows into the Thompson river system, into Okanagan lake?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think this question should be placed on the order paper.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Several days ago the right hon. gentleman issued a statement concerning the possible establishment of a national capital area and announcing that a joint study by officials of the federal government and those of the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec would be instituted to examine this matter. Would the Prime Minister consider extending participation in this study by including officials representative of all Canadian provinces?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure the Prime Minister has heard the representation made by the hon. member.

TRADE

TOBACCO—INCREASE IN IMPORTS FROM SOUTH AFRICA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether it is the intention of the government to take appropriate steps to place a fair value for duty purposes on tobacco which is now unexpectedly pouring into Canada from South Africa, or perhaps from Rhodesia, in order to protect Canadian growers. This tobacco is coming in duty free at the present time.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into this matter. I know of no allegation that there have been breaches of the Canadian anti-dumping law; none have been brought to my attention. Should breaches be alleged I can assure the hon. member that we shall take every step necessary to ensure that our anti-dumping laws are enforced.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEETINGS OF ORGANIZATIONS OF EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a most important question to the Minister of Labour. Has any progress been made in giving practical application to the hon. gentleman's oft-expressed opinion that employers and employee organizations should get together to discuss the state of the economy for the purpose of arriving at policies mutually agreed upon in the interests of the country?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there has been an encouraging response to my suggestions. The Department of Labour is arranging a series of meetings with leaders in the industries which come under federal jurisdiction. We are now engaged in a series of meetings with representatives of the railway industry and we intend to move into other fields before we call a general conference.

Mr. Winch: Are the employers' organizations being invited to these meetings or to the other meetings which are proposed?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, there has already been one meeting with the representatives of the employer organizations and I believe another is being held later this week.

TRANSPORT

INTRODUCTION OF MEASURES RELATING TO MARITIMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I know the Prime Minister has left the chamber but perhaps this question could be answered tomorrow. Is it the intention of the government in the next session to bring in measures relating to maritime transportation?

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REVIEW OF PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he has anything to add to the statement by the Prime Minister in a press release issued this morning with regard to the Northumberland strait crossing and specifically whether he can give some indication of when he expects the review now being conducted by Colonel Churchill to be completed?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as to the first part of the question, I can only say that the statement is an excellent one and there is nothing I could usefully add to it. I regret I cannot give any precise date for the completion of the review by Colonel Churchill, but I can say it is going on very well now and that we have every reason to be optimistic about it.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

LIBAU, MAN.—PROTEST ON TRANSFER OF POSTMASTERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General but in his absence perhaps the Acting Postmaster General would take it as notice and answer tomorrow. In view of the events depicted on C.B.C. television last night, showing the residents of Libau, Manitoba, vigorously opposing the government's decision to transfer the post office there, will the Postmaster General now reconsider his decision and leave the post office in its former location, which obviously is the expressed wish of the local residents?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Member of the Administration): I shall take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time allotted for today's question period has expired.

BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, December 12, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I sought an opportunity to speak in this debate because of a serious and important issue which I wish to discuss. It is my intention to stay with the subject that prompted me to take part in this debate. However, before I get into that question may I say that we in this party regret that the government was not willing to have a debate today on the important question of housing. We are glad that the government is prepared to find a day fairly soon to discuss this matter, but we think a debate ought to have taken place today.

The government may not realize it, but the working press who covered the housing conference and the people of Canada who have read about it, heard it on the radio and seen it on television know it was a colossal failure. The very fact that it wound up in two days instead of the scheduled three days is evidence—

Mr. Nicholson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: I have only 30 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nicholson: When the hon. gentleman says the conference concluded at the end of two days instead of three, has he taken into consideration that it sat on Monday evening and for two extra hours late yesterday afternoon and evening, thus giving the full time that had been anticipated?

Mr. Knowles: The conference was still concluded in two days, and I suggest the reason it did not continue was that the premiers of the various provinces were finding it not worth their while to stay.

Basically the reason the conference failed is that the federal government is not prepared to measure up to its responsibilities in the field of housing. For the federal government to suggest to the conference that its financial contribution to housing in Canada in the next fiscal year is to be $300 million less than it has been this year is hardly the way to make the conference a success. I hope the government will yet realize the importance of this issue and the nature of the role it must play in this important problem.

Hon. members will not be surprised if I indicate that the subject to which I wish to devote most of my remarks this afternoon is the announcement by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) on Thursday, December 7, that it is not the intention of the government to go ahead with the provision of increases in the pensions of retired civil servants. May I say at the outset that when I look over the list of cuts that the President of the Treasury Board announced in his speech last Thursday night, I am impressed with the fact that a good many of them relate to matters that the government did not want to go ahead with anyway. I have a gnawing suspicion that this is the case with respect to increased pensions for retired civil servants.

Let me indicate a few examples which support my contention that many of the cuts simply represent not going ahead with something the government was against doing anyway. For example, it is proposed to cut out the selling of government annuities. No suggestion was made as to how much this is going to save, but it was put forward under the excuse of its being an economy measure. Those of us who have been around here for any length of time know that for many years the insurance companies of this country have been lobbying against the federal government being in the annuity business. The last time the federal government sought to improve the Government Annuities Act was in the year 1951. I remember the occasion very well. We had a government bill which was given second reading and referred to one of the standing committees of the house. It provided for certain improvements to be made in the Government Annuities Act, but the insurance people came here in force. Although we finally got the bill passed by that standing committe, when it came back to the house the government let it die on the order paper. It is obviously because of its desire to stop pushing the sale of government annuities that the government has dropped the selling of these annuities.

Then I notice that the government has disbanded the special planning secretariat in the Privy Council office. This special planning secretariat was in effect the high command of the war on poverty. How much real interest has the government shown in the war on poverty? This is one area where the government is pacifist, one area where it is prepared not to go to war. It has not shown any real interest in this supposed effort, and so under the excuse of economy the special planning secretariat has been dissolved.

I should like to join with my colleague the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman), in saying a word with respect to the cut that has been handed to the Company of Young Canadians. I know the many criticisms that are made about this organization and the people in it, but the fact of the matter is that these are young people who belong to a generation that maybe some members of this house cannot understand, but they are young people who are concerned about social conditions.

We had a few witnesses before us yesterday in one of the standing committees of the house, including two or three people who had worked with the Company of Young Canadians. I think all of us who were at that committee were impressed with how much knowledge they had of a certain social problem, a knowledge much in advance of that of many of the conventional agencies. Somehow or other the government does not like what the Company of Young Canadians is doing and so, under the excuse of economy, a cut is made in its budget. Incidentally, it is my understanding that the director of the Company of Young Canadians heard only on the television news that a cut was being made in the budget of that organization.

I still do not know where we stand with respect to the Prince Edward Island causeway. One day it is off; another day it is on. I suspect that the government is still uneasy over the fact that it promised it during the last election. The promise did not result in the Liberals winning very many seats in Prince Edward Island and obviously they would like to get out of this project or postpone it. I suggest again, Mr. Speaker, that economy is being used as an excuse when there are really other motives.

I mention just these three or four examples. I could cite others but I do not want to take time away from the subject with which I am mainly concerned today. I merely mention these as situations parallel to the situation with respect to pensions for retired civil servants.

I am convinced that there are voices in the federal cabinet which have never wanted to agree to increased pensions for retired civil servants. I am personally convinced that one of those voices is that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), and that the so-called drive for economy is now being used simply as an excuse for not going ahead with this proposition which was unanimously recommended on May 8 by a special joint committee of both houses of parliament.

Seldom have a group of people been misled so extensively as have the retired civil servants of the federal government. For many years they have been asked to wait for one thing or another before their plight would be considered. At one time they were told to wait until the Canada Pension Plan was put through.

• (4:00 p.m.)

When our Canada Pension Plan committee was in session representatives of the retired civil servants were permitted to appear before that committee to argue their case. They were told, however, that nothing could be done for them under that legislation and that they should wait until it was through. They were told that their situation would be dealt with separately. Also, when old age pensions were being discussed they were told they should wait until that legislation was completed and then their case would be looked into.

A couple of years ago when matters relating to the civil service generally were being discussed they were told that when the coast was clear an opportunity would be made for their whole problem to be discussed by a special joint committee of parliament. That joint committee was given their problem as a term of reference in January, 1967. It held extensive meetings during the early months of this year and made a unanimous report to parliament on May 8. It recommended without any qualification that there should be immediate increases in the pensions of retired civil servants.

In our report, when using the phrase "retired civil servants" we made it clear that this should include retired armed forces personnel and retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel as well. Our report also included widows and orphans in all cases. It added up to a comprehensive statement by that committee that this is a problem which parliament should deal with.

Hon. members will remember the atmosphere which prevailed in respect of this matter in May, June and early July. Some of us were on our feet every week in an effort to get the government to act at that time. The type of answers we were given led us to believe that action would be taken before we recessed for the summer. Certain ministers on the other side including the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), cannot deny the assurance they gave me that action would be taken in the month of June. When on July 7 this house was faced with an adjournment some of us opposed that adjournment without action being taken on this question. We lost, but even so we were led to believe then that action would be taken in the fall. We came back on September 25 and the issue has been raised in one way or another by one member or another two or three times a week since then.

We were told repeatedly that the matter was still under consideration, but finally on December 7 the President of the Treasury Board told us a decision had been made not to proceed with these increases. I suggest that this was a cruel way to mislead these people. Their hopes were built up, they were given a feeling of confidence that something would be done, and then they were told that nothing would be done for them either now or during the fiscal year 1968-69. Despite the finality with which the President of the Treasury Board spoke on December 7 and despite the fact that the Prime Minister expressed a hope that this matter could be reconsidered some time which sounded like delaying it for five or ten years, I still appeal to the government to act on this issue during this session of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to make some specific suggestions concerning what can be done. First, however, may I remind hon.

members on both sides of the house that there are about 36,000 retired civil servants and about 16,000 widows of retired civil servants who are on pension. If you add to these two figures the retired members of the R.C.M.P. and the retired members of the armed forces and then add their widows, you arrive at a total of about 58,000 federal superannuates of various kinds and a total of about 18,000 widows of the various federal superannuates. If hon. members are interested, I might point out that answers to questions of mine have been placed on Hansard of November 22, November 29, December 4 and December 11 which give the numbers of these people living in the various provinces and the number receiving pensions in the various categories. Rather than confuse members with a whole host of statistics may I say that most of these people—I am referring to the retired civil servants rather than the widows—are on pensions of less than $200 a month. The average for the widows is much lower.

There was a time when a $200 pension sounded like something one could live on, but I should like to say to the members of this house that the heart-rending letters I get come not only from people whose pensions are down in the $30, $40 or $50 a month bracket but also from people who have served this country and this government for many years and who retired a few years ago on a pension of $150 to $175 a month. These people have seen living costs rise so many times in the decade since they retired that they are now living in virtual poverty.

I submit that the federal government of this country as an employer has a responsibility to these people. What can it do to discharge that responsibility? Let me say that you will never convince these people, no matter how many arguments you advance on the basis of figures, that they are not entitled to increases in pension on the basis of the money they paid in and which is in the superannuation fund. When you tell them that the money is not there, that it is only so many figures on a book and that these figures are there to protect future retirees you do not solve the problem for them.

These people know that on the books of the superannuation fund at the present time there is an amount approaching $3 billion. They know also that the interest paid on that fund each year is greater than the amount that is paid out each year in pensions. They know the fund is growing by leaps and bounds. They do not understand why they cannot be paid out of that fund. Roughly speaking, what is happening at the present time is that each fiscal year about $100 million is being paid into the fund by employees who are working and paying their percentage. About $100 million is put in by the government to match the employees' contributions. Something approaching $100 million is put in by the government as interest on the fund that is there. I say "put in"; the employees put the money in because they do not get it in their pay cheques, but apparently it gets used right away. So there is a total of about $300 million a year credited to the superannuation account while the amount being paid out in pensions to the people who are now retired is only $75 million to $80 million a year.

How can any member of this house explain to these people that they cannot have their money in the form of a pension because there must be some kind of an economy drive? I do not accept the reasons for the cut or the budget or the economic plans this government has, but even if these plans are to be gone ahead with by this government one cannot explain to these people why, since the money is there, they should not receive increased pensions. If the members of the government feel that they must not touch the money now being credited—that is what they say—because it is put there for future retirees or, on the other hand, if they say that the money really is not there, what confidence does that give present employees for their time of retirement

Let me remind the government of what I thought was a very useful suggestion made by the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada last session relating to the rate of interest the government pays on this money. The rate of interest which this government pays—mind you, it is only so many figures in a book—is 4 per cent. That is a pretty cheap rate of interest to pay on money today. The suggestion has been made that the government might consider paying 5 per cent on that money. I wonder whether hon. members realize that if that were done, if an additional one per cent were paid on the money in the fund, this would produce an extra $25 million or $30 million a year. That would be sufficient to increase the pension of every retired civil servant, every widow of a retired civil servant, and the others I have mentioned, the armed forces and R.C.M.P. personnel, by about one third of their present pension. To put it round figures, this would mean an average pension increase to every superannuate of about $60 to $65 per month. Hon. members can do this figuring for themselves if they read the figures which appear in the various issues of Hansard to which I have referred, and if they will look at the figures in the estimates and elsewhere.

• (4:10 p.m.)

All the government has to do today is admit that interest rates have gone up everywhere. Interest rates on housing and bank loans have gone up to 8 per cent or more. This government should be fair and credit these people with 5 per cent interest on their own money in the fund which would provide a sufficient amount to make it possible for the government to increase the pensions of all our retired civil servants, members of the armed forces, members of the R.C.M.P and their widows by an average of one-third of the pensions they now receive. In dollars and cents terms this would amount to $60 or $65 per month for every pensioner. I am not suggesting that it should be a flat one third across the board increase because I am aware of the fact that certain adjustments should be made, but I give this figure to indicate what would be possible if the government followed the suggestion made by the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, supported by the Public Service Alliance of Canada, to our committee.

There is no use in the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) trying to tell these people that this is a matter involving a cash position versus figures on the books, and so on. These people had money deducted from their pay cheques which they did not get. The same is true of civil servants working today. A deduction of 5 per cent or 6½ per cent is being made from their pay cheques. They do not get that money. Where does it go? Does it go into a fund out of which pensions are paid? No, this money becomes figures in the books. The government is spending this money and it should pay interest on it.

These civil servants are assured that the reason they will receive pensions when they retire is that the government is there behind them. If they have to count on the government being behind them 10, 20 or 30 years from now the way the government is behind retired civil servants today in respect of their pensions this will not make for a very happy situation. That is no doubt the reason that Mr. Trevor Gough of the Public Service Alliance of Canada wrote such a strong letter to the Prime Minister a day or two after the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) announced the decision of the government not to go ahead with this matter.

There is no question in my mind that there is a need. These people clearly have a right to an increase, and even though the President of the Treasury Board stood up in this house and said the government did not commit itself in black and white that it would raise pensions by a certain date, it did commit itself that it would deal with this matter on the basis of the report to parliament by the special joint committee of both houses.

We hear a great deal these days about what could be done to improve parliament by strengthening the committee system. If this is an example of how the government is going to strengthen committees it should not bother. The committee to which I referred was chaired by Senator Bourget and the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard). This committee held hearings for a considerable period of time over more than a year. It dealt with many matters involving the civil service. It went into these things exhaustively. The committee was made up of members of all parties in both houses and represented all points of view, social, economic and otherwise; yet it came up with a unanimous recommendation that these pensions should be increased. For the government not to follow this recommendation is an insult to the committee and to the committee system, and certainly it is an offence to those people who are affected by this whole situation.

I see that my time is running out and I will have to say in a very few minutes what I wanted to say to put this special problem in the context of a larger problem that is very much with us and will be with us in increasing terms as time passes. People sometimes ask me about other pensioners and whether they should not also receive an increase in their pensions. The answer is a resounding yes. That goes for railway workers and all our pensioners. The day has to come and come soon when the principle is recognized that people who retire should not be compelled to live for the rest of their lives on a fixed pension.

Let me put it this way. There are people retiring in 1967 at younger ages, at 60 and so on, who no doubt have a chance of being alive in the year 2000. Some ten years from now there will be many people retiring who will have a good chance of living until the year 2000. Does anyone in this place imagine that people in the year 2000, will be able to live under the conditions we will have then on pensions fixed in the years 1967, 1970 or 1975? We must reach the point where there is built into any pension scheme arrangements for pensions to escalate as time passes. This situation is true for all other sections of society. No one expects workers, farmers, businessmen or people in ordinary jobs to spend all their working lives, from the time they are 21 until they are 65, on a fixed income. It is the nature of things for costs to go up and living standards to improve. People are entitled to meet these higher costs and share in these higher standards of living. Where is there any common sense in the suggestion that when you reach 60 or 65 years of age and retire this process must stop? Pensions have to be subject to escalation.

The government can tell us it recognizes this principle, and it has in respect of old age security and the Canada Pension Plan, but this has been a very meagre recognition. Everybody knows what will happen in respect of old age security in January. It is to increase by $1.50. That is a recognition, but it is pretty meagre. It is not good enough to do just that. I suggest we must do this across the board and on a scale to keep up with rising costs and rising standards of living.

I am satisfied in my own mind that the reason the governmment does not want to grant this increase in pensions to its own employees is that it is afraid business will then say it has been put on the spot and must do the same thing. That is the trouble with this government. It never leads and never faces up to problems which require leadership.

It is not good enough to wait until 1980, 1990 or 2000 to discover that our whole pensions structure has fallen apart because we did not make provision for pensions to escalate. The time for leadership in this regard is now, and I suggest the place for the government to begin is in respect of its own employees. That is why I take as strong a stand as I do in support of retired civil servants and other retired employees of the federal government, of the Canadian National Railways, and so on. They have a right of their own and they have their own needs. The government has an obligation to them as an employer and also because of the need to establish a principle that must be carried through the whole of our economy.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Let me return to the position I took at the beginning of my remarks. The government has committed a cruel hoax on these people by giving them the hope that something was going to be done. It is time for the government to undo the harm and offence it has done to these people. It is time to stop the policy of discouraging them. The government must act in respect of this question.

There are broad policies that can be worked out in the next few years with regard to pension increases across the board and they must be worked out. But there is no excuse whatsoever for the announcement of last Thursday night contained in paragraph 13 of the list of cut-backs by the President of the Treasury Board. This money is available and I call upon the government to implement the recommendation of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada during this session. I call upon the government to increase the pensions of our retired civil servants, former members of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P., their widows and all our federal superannuates. The time for this action, Mr. Speaker, is now.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Charlotte wishes to ask a question.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): I believe the hon. member when he says that we have this increase of 3 per cent more or less going on every year, and it is inflationary—

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: On a point of order—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. May I ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): I will ask the question in a minute. In 1934 the price of gold was $35 an ounce, and we expect our miners to go on mining gold to be sold at the same price today. The hon. member said there should be an increase in the price of gold because in 1934 it was mined and sold for $35 an ounce and today the price is the same. In my opinion this is really at the bottom of everything. Would the hon. member agree that an increase in the price of gold is necessary? Gold and its control under the International Monetary Fund are at the bottom of everything. Everything is based on the price of gold. Would the hon. member agree that in the interests of our miners the price of gold should be increased and should not be the same now as it was in 1934?

Mr. Knowles: The miners are getting much better wages today than they were in 1934. This is mainly due to their unions. So as far as the question itself is concerned, I think we should get farther away from gold as a standard rather than back to it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac rising on a point of order?

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am calling your attention to the fact—

[English]

Mr. Otto: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Will the hon. member resume his seat.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, we claim we have been treated somewhat differently from the others or unjustly. We also had suggestions to make or solutions to offer on the present budget, but we were not given the opportunity to do so. In fact, only one member of the Ralliement Créditiste took part in the discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I thank the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac for his remarks concerning the list of speakers who are to participate in the discussion, and I regret that his speech on the budget was interrupted by the vote on the amendment. In view of the fact that only a few minutes remain before the vote on the main motion, I must recognize the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto).

[English]

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, it seems that I have a few minutes in which to speak at the end of this debate. I shall try to summarize the issues. First, I think it should be made very plain that the issue is not as stated by hon. gentlemen on the other side, namely, that the government has got itself into a financial morass because of political pressures. The fact is that the government at all times has tried to resist the political pressures that have been applied by hon. gentlemen opposite. Time after time we have had votes of confidence because hon. gentlemen opposite wanted more money to be spent and the government was forced into the position of resisting increases in spending. So that is not the issue.

The issue comes about to a great extent because of the report of the Carter commission. I agree wholeheartedly with the minister when he says that the Carter report cannot be adopted in toto. I also believe the minister when he says that the government will introduce very serious reforms in respect of fiscal policy. I believe they are needed. I shall try to explain my position with regard to the Carter report and why I think it cannot be adopted.

The Carter report is, of course, a very fine document. Surprisingly, the commission was chaired by a member of the establishment who will probably lose his membership in the National Club, the York Club, and so on, because of the report. Although vast changes are envisaged in the report and it contains many suggested reforms, in one way it is just as hidebound, just as restrictive, as our present fiscal policies.

For example, it is said of the Carter report that when faced with hard choices between equity and economic expansion the commissioners consistently gave the greatest weight to the objective of equity. This means they are taking the very ancient viewpoint of taxation, namely, that taxation is merely a burden to be shared, in other words, that we should share the poverty. The modern concept of taxation is not merely to share the burdens of the cost of government but it also has a great deal to do with our economic destiny, industrial expansion, area industrialization, balance of trade and efficiency of production. All these things have a great bearing on the question and are indeed controlled by the tax incentives given to industry.

The most important part of taxation today is that which affects industrial expansion, employment, or what we might call the destiny of industrial expansion. Second is equity. If equity is the first principle, as the Carter commission said, it cannot apply today because if this were the case the whole ARDA program would be out, the whole industrial incentive program would be out.

Obviously it is not fair to give a farmer in one area a tax advantage and not give it to another, as the Carter commission report suggests in respect of horizontal equity.

The commission says that the prime objective of taxation policy is equity, but that cannot apply today. Therefore it cannot apply as far as the government is concerned. There is another principle that we must examine very carefully. The commission would tax the command of goods and services and not the consumption of goods and services. But I wonder whether it is desirable today to tax the command or control of goods and services. If those goods and services are used for industrial expansion, would we not be penalizing those who have this command at the expense of industrial expansion?

I believe we should at all times tax the consumption of goods and services, and possibly the command of goods and services where that command is not of benefit to the nation. But where the command of goods and services is beneficial to the country through providing additional employment and industrial growth, to impose a tax strictly because of a very hidebound principle such as the Carter report seems to contain is wrong, and this principle cannot be applied today.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I have no particular quarrel, and I think very few businessmen in Canada have, with a tax on capital gains and a tax on inheritances. But all these things must be pliable. I believe this is the essence of what the minister is trying to get at when he says that reforms will be made. If they are made, I believe we have to be very flexible in these areas. A capital gains tax on land—I shall refer to this matter later—would be beneficial today. But to impose a capital gains tax on the return of risk capital may not be the thing to do. What we need today is a flexible policy whereby a capital gains tax need not be imposed on all capital gains. Indeed, the same applies to inheritance and corporation taxes.

I heartily endorse the recommendation of the Carter commission that corporations should be taxed once, whether the money is in the hands of the corporations or in the hands of the shareholders. But I think we all agree that this must not be an inflexible rule because in some cases it would be advantageous to tax the profits of the corporation and not those of the shareholders and in other cases the reverse would apply. In other words, if the corporation reinvests its money and expands its industrial potential it is obviously of advantage to the nation not to tax the corporation but rather the shareholders. On the other hand, if this principle is applied inflexibly, as is suggested by the Carter commission, we will find that people will demand shares in companies which always pay good dividends, regardless of their reserve for expansion and growth. So what we want is flexibility.

I agree with the views of the Carter commission with regard to expense accounts, not necessarily because their recommmendation is fair but because I believe that expense accounts do not make good, efficient producers. High living at the expense of corporations must not continue if we expect employees in the lower echelons and workmen to work efficiently. An esprit de corps must exist in industry because it increases efficiency. For this reason I am definitely opposed to expense account living. I believe that it ruins efficient production and therefore I agree with the recommendation of the Carter commission with regard to this subject.

Now I should like to say a word or two with regard to the demand for homes, land development, etc. There is no necessity to repeat that there is a housing crisis in Canada today, because we all know it. It has also been said that there is no money to deal with this problem properly. I suggest we do not need money. The first thing we need is the guts to make changes. Of course, money is required to some extent, but what we really need now is a decision to change the circumstances which make houses very expensive.

Let me put it this way. I can safely say to anyone, and I can back it up with figures, that construction costs today are less than they were 15 years ago when one considers what one gets in material, handling, premanufacture, etc. The construction industry has been very efficient and has kept up to date. This leaves one cause for the crisis in homes—land. The price of land has increased enormously. In 1951 I paid $1,200 for a lot. Now I am paying $16,000 for a smaller lot in the city of Toronto. Historically the price of land has always gone up because it is a hedge against inflation. There is no sense in buying diamonds if you want to ensure that the value of your money will remain the same. What you should do is buy land, and there is tremendous pressure exercised by people who want to buy land strictly as a hedge against inflation. This applies to insurance companies, pension plans, and all people who wish to ensure that 15 or 20 years from now their money will have the same value in proportion to the price of goods. This is a historical fact.

How must we combat this problem? First of all, we must recognize its existence. At this point may I suggest—and I hope the Minister of Finance is listening—that some form of accelerated bonds might be put on the market, the value of which would rise with the cost of living. This would be another hedge against inflation and would remove the pressure on land. I know this is a radical suggestion but it is now being considered by a well known United States insurance company which is studying the possibility of paying insurance benefits in real money because it recognizes the tremendous pressure on land.

One cannot make more land, but the demand for it increases steadily. As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) said, cities can be further expanded by the addition of suburbs which would have to be made accessible to and from the centre in no more than 20 to 23 minutes or half an hour at the most. A new form of transportation must be introduced, namely, rapid transit systems. This will make suburbs attractive.

There is another point which could be considered by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue. People who own land are granted all sorts of exemptions from income tax. We give them exemptions for real estate taxes. Land owners and speculators receive all kinds of advantages. No one but speculators would take issue with the minister if he were to say he is going to impose a capital gains tax on land speculators or on anyone who sells land because, as everyone knows, these people cannot lose money on their transactions. Since no risk is involved, why are these people given an exemption in respect of capital gains?

The municipalities in turn foster higher land prices by allowing land to remain stagnant and by giving tax concessions on vacant land. Indeed, back in the 1940's the city of Winnipeg applied a very good principle whereby land purchased from the city was allowed to be taxed as vacant land in the first year and thereafter was taxed as if a building were on it. As a result there was no land speculation because it was not worth while. In 1946 I bought land in Winnipeg for $1.65 per foot of frontage. Today it is worth $3 or $4, and it is in the suburbs.

I think the Habitat scheme should be modified to allow people to own their homes. Obviously they would not want to live in the middle of a cube structure. This will have to be modified. N.H.A. mortgage insurance for homes should be reduced from $18,000 to $12,000.

Mr. Nicholson: That is a good suggestion.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Otto: Essentially this is a provincial matter and only partially under the jurisdiction of the federal government. We must have the guts to say: We will take over the area, zone it and build on it or have someone build on it; if the township or municipality will not take it over, we will make it our own municipality. Essentially municipal politicians are agents of the established people. It is the home owners who elect the municipal politicians to represent them. These politicians do not care about people without homes. They are our headache. We will never get the municipalities to speed up the pace of development. Someone else must do it. I suggest that the province could establish a principle in this regard to the effect that as long as a subdivider or land developer abides by these regulations there will be no trouble. I had to go to 37 meetings before I could get a piece of land subdivided. This involved a lapse of time of about four and a half years. There is no hope that the waiting period will be reduced because these people resist changes of that sort.

With regard to finding more money, I suggest to the minister that a great deal of money that could be used for N.H.A. financing is now being used for short-term investment. This money goes into the banks for 90 or 180 days and billions of dollars are used by the finance companies in this way. By breaking down national housing mortgages into small units this money could be lent for short-term investment purposes and as a result over a long-term period we could derive about $2.5 billion.

Another point is this, Mr. Speaker. In my own case, if my creditors, especially my suppliers and labourers, could be assured that having built my house they would still get their money I am sure many of them would provide credit for the building of homes. I suggest that C.M.H.C. should insure not only mortgages but also creditors to an amount equal to the value of the home. For example, tradesmen and suppliers could be given a certificate for the equivalent amount of the work or materials supplied which would guarantee payment. When the home was sold these certificates would be redeemed. The creditors would all be paid, and I would suggest that as a result more houses would be built.

There is a shortage of money, of course, and people are becoming less and less inclined to lend money for mortgage purposes. They would rather buy equity stocks. Conventional sources of mortgage money will be more and more hesitant to lend. Changes are required, but we must have the guts to make them.

A word about the Carter report in conclusion, Mr. Speaker. The Carter report is a very inflexible document. I believe that the minister is going to introduce reforms which will give it flexibility and will impose a capital gains tax in some instances and not in others. In this way fiscal policy can be brought to bear on industrial expansion rather than merely equity investments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 4.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 6 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Main motion (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of ways and means on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Excise Tax Act. The text of this proposed resolution is appended to the notice paper of Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, June 1, 1967.

EXCISE TAX ACT

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That effective June 2, 1967, all goods listed in Schedule V to the said Act be exempt from sales tax.

2. That effective September 1, 1967, any material, substance, mixture, compound or preparation, of whatever composition or in whatever form, including materials for use exclusively in the manufacture thereof, sold or represented for use in the diagnosis, treatment, mitigation or prevention of a disease, disorder, abnormal physical state, or the symptoms thereof, in humans or animals, or for restoring, correcting or modifying organic functions in humans or animals be exempt from sales tax but that this exemption shall not apply to cosmetics or confectionery products.

[Mr. Otto.]

3. That effective June 2, 1967, goods enumerated in tariff item 48100-1, namely "specially constructed boot or appliance made to order for a person having a crippled or deformed foot or ankle", and in tariff item 48105-1, namely "individual pairs of boots or shoes for defective or abnormal feet, when purchased on the written order of a registered medical practitioner", and articles and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

4. That effective June 2, 1967, artificial breathing apparatuses purchased or leased on the written order of a registered medical practitioner by an individual afflicted by a respiratory disorder for his own use be exempt from sales tax.

5. That effective June 2, 1967, plans, drawings, related specifications and substitutes therefor, and reproductions of the foregoing sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them directly in the manufacture or production of goods be exempt from sales tax.

6. That where materials for use exclusively in the construction of residences for students have been purchased by or on behalf of a company wholly-owned and controlled by Her Majesty in right of a province and established for the sole purpose of providing residences for students of universities or other similar educational institutions, the Minister of National Revenue may, upon application by the company made in such form as the minister prescribes within two years from the time of the purchase of the materials, pay to the company an amount equal to the tax imposed by Part VI of the said act that has been paid in respect thereof.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister going to make a statement? He is itching to, I am sure.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the first paragraph of the Excise Tax Act resolution, "that effective June 2, 1967, all goods listed in schedule V to the said act be exempt from sales tax", of course proposes that the date of full exemption of sales tax on a comprehensive list of production machinery and equipment described in schedule V of the Excise Tax Act be advanced from April 1, 1968, as originally proposed, to June 2, 1967.

This move forward in the date of full sales tax exemption for production machinery and equipment is motivated by a desire to reduce Canadian production costs. It was stated in the spring budget speech of 1966 that it was not intended that the taxation of these goods should remain as a permanent feature of the federal tax structure. However, fiscal policy considerations in 1966 called for some restraint on investment and therefore it was not advisable to give immediate and full relief for production machinery and equipment at that time. Instead it was announced that the goods concerned would be made exempt from sales tax in stages over a two-year period. When this matter was reviewed before the presentation of the main budget this year the government decided that the need to reduce costs of production and to encourage Canadians to acquire modern machinery so that they could more effectively compete with manufacturers in other countries outweighed all other considerations. Therefore full exemption was proposed on June 2, 1967.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, during the budget debate in the fall all of these matters were extensively covered so far as the resolutions were concerned. I do not think it would lead to any greater clarity if I were to speak to them at length.

All I should like to say is that with regard to the removal of the sales tax on drugs I trust the drug manufacturers and distributors have acted responsibly vis-à-vis the request of the government. In this connection I do not think that anyone in the committee quarrels with the objectives of the government. In essence we are hoping that the drug manufacturers and distributors will pass on to the consumer, who is a very hard hit individual today, every possible benefit from this tax reduction. That is all I want to say in that connection.

So far as the other matters are concerned, Mr. Chairman, the sales tax on production machinery should, of course, never have been imposed. This we know. It was a terrible mistake and is one of the legacies of those notorious 100 days of decision that the present administration inflicted on the country.

Mr. Cowan: It was 60 days.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, 60 days. I thank the hon. member for York-Humber for reminding me of that bit of history.

Mr. Knowles: We could not have stood 100 days.

Mr. Lambert: As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says, Mr. Chairman, it is a good thing it was not 100 days; I do not think the country could have stood it. Sixty days was bad enough. However, the present Minister of Finance has seen the error of the ways of his administration and is gradually undoing some of the harm.

We will be seeing the bill and the technical provisions relating to the implementation of this resolution, and I will reserve any minor comments I may have until that time.

27053—340

Mr. Sharp: May I add, Mr. Chairman, that I have only dealt with the first paragraph. The hon. member has dealt with the second paragraph which deals with the exemption with regard to drugs. Then there appear some miscellaneous items under paragraphs 3, 4, 5 and 6. I will be glad to answer questions about them, but I do not think it is necessary for me to make any general statement.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Resolution agreed to.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The Chairman: The house in committee of ways and means on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Income Tax Act. The text of this proposed resolution is appended to the notice paper of Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, November 30, 1967.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether it might not be more in accordance with the desire of hon. members if we were to take the excise tax changes announced on November 30 instead of dealing with income tax immediately. I suggest that we take the remainder of the excise tax resolutions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Order, please. House in committee of ways and means on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Excise Tax Act. The text of this resolution is appended to the notice paper of Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, November 30, 1967.

EXCISE TAX ACT

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act to provide among other things:

1. That effective December 1, 1967, the excise tax on each five cigarettes or fraction of five cigarettes contained in any package be increased from two and one-half cents to three cents.

2. That effective December 1, 1967, the excise tax on each pound of manufactured tobacco, including snuff but not including cigars and cigarettes, be increased from eighty cents per pound to ninety cents per pound.

3. That effective December 1, 1967, the excise tax on cigars be increased from fifteen per cent to seventeen and a half per cent.

4. That effective December 1, 1967, an excise tax of

(a) two and one-half cents per gallon on wines of all kinds containing not more than seven per cent of absolute alcohol by volume, and

(b) five cents per gallon on wines of all kinds containing more than seven per cent of absolute alcohol by volume, be imposed in addition to any other excise tax imposed by the said Act payable at the time of sale by the Canadian manufacturer and at the time of importation or withdrawal from bonded warehouse by the importer or transferee who takes imported wines out of bond for consumption.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Lambert: No, Mr. Chairman. I expect that the minister wants to make a statement.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, paragraph 1 of the resolution proposes that effective December 1, 1967, the rate of special excise tax on cigarettes be increased by half a cent per five cigarettes. At present cigarettes bear an excise tax of 2.5 cents per five cigarettes or $5 per thousand under the Excise Tax Act and an excise duty of $4 per thousand for cigarettes weighing not less than three pounds per thousand under the Excise Tax Act. In addition, they are subject to the general sales tax.

It is proposed that only the excise tax levied under the Excise Tax Act be increased. The proposed change amounts to an increase of approximately 10 per cent in over-all cigarette taxation. The rate increase will affect both Canadian produced and imported cigarettes because the taxes levied by the Excise Tax Act apply to imports as well as to goods produced in Canada. The additional revenue from the proposed change would approximate $50 million in a full year at 1968 levels of sales. The additional revenue expected over the remainder of the current fiscal year is estimated to be of the order of $12 million.

The rates of the special taxes on cigarettes have not changed since 1959. It is considered fair that cigarette smokers should be called upon to meet a greater share of the increase in the costs of government services which has taken place since 1959.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, since there is a great division of opinion among members of the public about whether tobacco is a necessity or luxury, with some damning tobacco roundly and others praising it just as vehemently, it has become the custom of governments to consider that tobacco and its related items under this resolution are fair game for tax impositions. This has become almost a game of tweedledee and tweedledum with the provinces, the game being who shall impose what increases and when shall they be imposed. Frankly, I am surprised that the federal government has been so patient all this time and has not increased the tax on tobacco and commodities related to it under this resolution but has left the field open to the provinces.

With regard to tobacco there is one difficulty. No matter how much the tax is increased the demand remains inflexible. There may be minor modifications or abatements in demand as tobacco prices increase but these last for about a month only. Then it seems that the volume of consumption returns to its former level and even goes up.

It is said that increased demand for tobacco results from our increased population. In this day and age it seems that the younger you are, the harder you smoke. Smokers these days begin to smoke at younger ages than formerly. The tax on tobacco is spread right across the population. As one sees youngsters going to school these days one wonders whether they arrive at school smoking. That sort of thing I deplore. Nevertheless, we must bear in mind that you can tax this type of commodity to the point where smuggling becomes attractive.

After the war, as many of us remember, a heavy special tax was imposed on cigarettes and tobacco in Canada. The result was that smuggling cigarettes into Canada from the United States and abroad became attractive. Smuggling was a very lucrative and dangerous business but the bottom was knocked out of that nefarious activity when the tax was removed. There are limits to the taxation of tobacco. Under ordinary circumstances, if the minister must obtain extra revenue from tobacco, and there is some question about that, though I smoke not cigarettes but a pipe and cigars I am quite prepared to accept my responsibilities in that regard, as I think all hon. members are.

An hon. Member: Are you willing to pay for it?

Mr. Winch: May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Chairman. I am not boasting but I happen to be a cigarette chain-smoker. The minister has increased the cost of my cigarettes by 10 per cent. When he explains the reasons for this tax increase will he be kind enough to explain something else?

The other day on orders of the day the hon. member for New Westminster received a reply to a question he had asked. In the answer that was given we discovered that the Department of National Health and Welfare, if my memory is correct, has spent about $126,000 across Canada on publicity to discourage cigarette smoking and the use of tobacco generally because such activities bring with them the danger of cancer. On the other hand, the Department of Agriculture spent $450,000 on research to develop and improve tobacco that is grown in Ontario.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Roxburgh: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: I see that I am being applauded. The Department of Agriculture spent, as I said, approximately $450,000 during 1966 on research to improve tobacco that is grown in Ontario. At the same time the Department of National Health and Welfare spent $126,000 on publicity in order to tell the people of Canada not to smoke. Would the minister please explain the reasons for this apparent paradox?

An hon. Member: Half a million dollars lost.

Mr. Sharp: At least it can be said, Mr. Chairman, that through tobacco users we are raising money for the purpose of discouraging the use of tobacco. I understand that some provinces raise very large sums of money from the sale of alcohol in order to spread the virtues of prohibition.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Winch: The minister has not understood my point at all. Will he please tell me, as Minister of Finance interested in saving the taxpayers' dollars, why one department spends $126,000 in publicity telling people not to smoke while another spends $450,000 to increase tobacco production? Come now, what is the hon. gentleman's answer?

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Lambert: No. There is something I want to say with regard to spirits.

Mr. Roxburgh: On a point of order, I want to say something on the subject of tobacco before we go on to anything else.

Mr. Chairman: Order. I would point out to the committee that the resolution called was the resolution on the excise tax which deals with spirits. The one which follows is the resolution on the Excise Tax Act which deals with tobacco.

Mr. Monteith: No, Mr. Chairman, you called the Excise Tax Act resolution.

An hon. Member: It is five o'clock, anyway.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

27053—340½

Suggested External Aid Program

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID PROGRAM—SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF FAMILY PLANNING ASSISTANCE TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to including in its external aid program, family planning assistance to developing countries requesting such assistance, and that the government of Canada should take a more active role at the United Nations and its specialized agencies in supporting measures dealing with world population problems.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is tempting in considering the whole subject of external aid in a debate of this type to begin by discussing whether or not we are doing enough. A recommendation was made a few years ago at the first United Nations conference on trade and development that the developed countries should give 1 per cent of their gross national product toward external aid. We have not reached that target yet. However, time is limited and I shall attempt to keep to the subject of the motion.

Many of us are not satisfied with the total effort Canada is making in the field of external aid. However, it can still be said that this country is doing a great deal. We give food to countries which need it, capital in the form of money and equipment, and we are sending skilled manpower to help operate installations built in the developing countries. In addition we have given a considerable amount of aid to education. The government has done a good deal in this direction and there are many private agencies which have a good record in the field of external aid.

However, there seems to be one blind spot in relation to the question of population which is one of the most important problems facing the developing countries. A year ago a declaration on population was drawn up and presented to heads of government through the United Nations. This declaration was returned to the Secretary General of the United Nations two days ago in New York. I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) whether he had been invited to sign it because I noted he had not done so.

I should like to make it clear that I am not one of those who oversimplify this problem. I am not one of those who say that if the developing countries would only do something about birth control and family planning all their problems would be solved. I realize it is not as simple as that. Many things have to be done if we are to minimize the suffering from famine which I think will surely come in the years ahead. We need to increase the production of food in this country for export to places where it is needed. We must help the developing countries to increase their own production and to develop both primary and secondary industries. And we must maintain our aid to education. I am, however, suggesting that the question of population is a most important one and that it should be considered by the Canadian government in its external aid program.

Many experts have predicted that whatever is done there will be very serious famine in the world within the next ten years. In recent years there has been famine in India particularly, but from now on famine is likely too occur in many parts of the world in spite of the best efforts we make. I am suggesting we could do certain things to reduce the effect of the famine which hundreds of millions will be facing.

I should like to quote briefly from a speech made on November 24, 1966 by Mr. Herbert H. Lank, chairman of the board of Dupont of Canada Limited, in an address to members of the Society of Chemical Industry, which has since been reprinted in a booklet called "Production And Reproduction, The Great Imbalance." Speaking of the famine threatening the world, Mr. Lank had this to say;

• (5:10 p.m.)

Famine will probably reach serious proportions in India, Pakistan and mainland China in the next three years. Indonesia, Iran, Turkey, Egypt, Brazil and a number of other countries are only a few years behind this timetable. Tens of thousands of children who will die of starvation within the next decade have not yet been conceived.

Complete anarchy could occur if hunger gets the upper hand in three-quarters of the world. We can hardly expect to escape the repercussions of such a catastrophe.

Storm signals are already flying. There were food riots in India again this year. In some parts of Africa there have been six consecutive years of drought. Fortunately, Australian production of cereals and animal foodstuffs will be better this year than last. But drought and flood in China will reduce this year's grain crops to the lowest in five years.

He was speaking of last year. Whenever we get into this subject I think it is necessary to quote figures which show the population growth in the world. I know hon. members may have heard them before but the figures are quite staggering and illustrate the extent of the problem. Today there are three billion plus people living in the world. In 1900, at the beginning of this century, there were two billion people. In 1800, 100 years earlier, there were one billion people living in the world. It had taken all of the time before that to reach that figure.

There are various estimates as to what the population of the world will be at the end of this century. A few conservative estimates put it at something less than six billion, or about double the present population, and there are other estimates which put the figure much higher at somewhere around seven billion.

I have just been reading the minutes of the external relations committee of the Senate, volume No. 1, for Thursday, December 7. Mr. Maurice Strong, director of external aid, was the witness, and in reply to a question about the population of the world he said:

By the year 2000 the population could rise to more than seven billion; even with a 30 per cent decrease in fertility the figure would be six billion.

The chairman then asked him what is the present population and he replied:

About 3.3 billion, which would be a little less than doubled at the six billion figure.

But, in terms of food production, this means that even to maintain the present inadequate nutritional levels in the less developed world, we will have to double the world's present food production by the end of the century. This involves matching in the next 33 years everything we have been able to achieve in food production since the beginning of time.

Even if many countries of the world adopt methods to try to control the size of families, the population of the world will approximately double by the end of the century, and that really is not a very long time away. However, the earth will not be any bigger. It will still be the same size as it was when we went to school and learned the facts and figures about the size of the earth, how many square miles of land it contains, how many square miles of ocean, and how much of the land is productive. The earth may become more productive. We may get more yield per acre in many parts of the world, but I suggest it will not be that much more productive. In fact in recent years the increase in population has been 2 per cent a year for the world as a whole and the increase in food production has been about 1 per cent a year. We cannot win at that rate.

When famine comes, and it is almost a certainty in the next 10 to 20 years in different parts of the world, we in Canada probably will not suffer. We will have enough to eat but other people will not. It is altogether unlikely that the food supply can be increased rapidly enough to feed the increased population.

I have heard of various schemes to produce food from the ocean. I have heard of various plans to produce wonder foods on land, to produce synthetic food from chemicals. These things may happen some time but we should not count on them. We must count on the fact that food production in the world will continue to increase at a much slower rate than the people of the world will continue to increase.

There are many factors which block rapid increase in food production. Some of them are historical and cultural. It is hard to get people in underdeveloped lands to change their ways. It requires a long educational process to achieve that. It is possible that there will be more intensive use of fertilizers and the building of more plants to make fertilizers, but I suggest these things will not happen in time to prevent a very great shortage of food in the years ahead.

We can count on the fact that for the remainder of the twentieth century the production of people will greatly outstrip the production of food. Some countries have recognized the problem of the very great increase in world population and have realized that something must be done about it. Some of the developing countries have recognized the problem but others have not. For various religious and cultural reasons some countries will not face up to the problem, but others are ready to accept the idea that something should be done. India and Pakistan are two countries where there are no religious barriers to family planning.

Some of the developed countries which supply aid to underdeveloped countries have taken steps to meet the problem. The United States is one of them. This is something which I have followed with a great deal of interest. I first became aware of the subject when I was a parliamentary observer at the United Nations in 1962. At that time one of the committees I was attending, the second committee, was debating this subject. That year, for the first time, the United States government changed its position. Prior to that time, whenever there was a vote on population matters the United States had taken the same position as Canada had and which I believe Canada still takes. They both abstained. But that year, on orders from President Kennedy, the United States delegation cast a vote in favour of a resolution which called for the United Nations to take action in this field. Since that time the United States has gone a great deal farther.

An hon. Member: Why do you suppose Canada abstains?

Mr. Prittie: My colleague wonders why Canada abstains. I shall come to that later. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Macdonald) may have something to say about that. However, the United States did change its position starting in 1962 under President Kennedy, and under President Johnson it has gone still farther. It contributes to the United Nations agencies which are trying to do something about family planning and population control. In fact the United States includes this kind of aid in its own bilateral aid arrangements with various countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America. Other countries have also recognized the problem. The United Kingdom gives this sort of aid. So do Sweden, Denmark and Japan. This list may not be complete.

The whole purpose of my resolution today is to suggest that the Canadian government should recognize this very important fact. I want to suggest one way in which the Canadian government can do so. It may not wish to get into the field directly itself. I think it should but if it will not there is another way. There is a private world-wide body called the International Planned Parenthood Organization. It carries out educational programs in various countries, but may I say at once only in those countries whose governments are willing to accept this kind of help. It is not trying to force anything on anyone. This organization obtains funds from several governments. For example, this year it is getting $3 million from the United States, £50,000 from the United Kingdom, $400,000 from Sweden, and from little Denmark $25,000. I know that officials of this organization have approached the Canadian government and have made a request for funds so that it may give assistance in this field. I suggest that this is one way in which the Canadian government can help if there is still unwillingness on its part to get into the field itself.

I know that according to the Criminal Code of Canada the dissemination of information on birth control is against the law. Over the past several years we have debated this subject a number of times in the house. The health and welfare committee has reported on it. The government has introduced a bill which is now in the Senate and in due course will be coming to this house. I would think that this prohibition in the Criminal Code will be removed within the next few months.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I suggest, however, that this is no bar. No one else in Canada is paying any attention to the law. Indeed, government departments over the years have prepared contraceptive materials. I suggest that in drawing up the external aid program for next year the Canadian government should change its policy. I suggest that it earmark certain funds to be made available to countries which wish aid in family planning. If the government is not willing to do this directly I suggest that it consider giving some money to agencies which are willing to do so.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out the importance of this problem in very real terms. Let us take a country like India where there are hundreds and thousands of starving people. I am sure all of us have seen pictures of cities such as Bombay and Calcutta which show wretched-looking people lying on the street with their ribs prominently exposed and also beggars in the street. These people do not have enough to eat. If Indian families can be persuaded to have two children instead of three, or five children instead of six or seven, then the problem could be alleviated to that extent. India and Pakistan are quite willing to accept this kind of aid from Canada, from the United States, from the United Nations or from any source which is willing to give such help.

Finally I should like to say that I do not wish to oversimplify the question of external aid. This is just one aspect of it. Increased food production by the farmers of Canada is very important. Increased food production by the people of the developing countries is very important. But let us not ignore this very important aspect of the whole problem of world population and how to feed people. Feeding the people is not the only problem faced by these countries. They do have to find food, but a rapidly increasing population means that somehow or other they also have to find schools, housing and all the public facilities which are necessary. They simply cannot cope with the problem they have today. They deserve some help from us in this particular field.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond to the hon. member under three particular headings. First I should like to deal with the philosophical background of the problem of carrying out a particular policy in which there may be a contest among the principal religious groups in this country. Second, I should like to place on the record, for the benefit of the hon. member and the house generally, the actual approach which Canada has taken in international discussions. From this it will be seen that his generalities perhaps are a little out of date. Third, I should like to make some mention of the recent international discussions which have taken place in this field and make more particular reference to the international programs which are currently in existence with regard to population control.

First, therefore, the philosophical aspect of the problem, which the hon. member has acknowledged, is not removed from the controversy which has taken place principally among people of different religious convictions in this country concerning the propriety or otherwise of section 150(2)(c) of the Criminal Code. As a Protestant and a long-standing advocate of the amendment of this section I certainly would have no personal difficulty in seeing the government of Canada respond to a request for technical assistance and aid in dealing with the major international problem of population control. But as an elected representative, and one having some association with the government, I should like to suggest that not only this government but any Canadian government would have to take into account the difference of opinion which at the moment at least exists between the two principal religious groups in this country. I recognize the responsibility of taking into account the religious convictions of a very substantial minority of Canadians, a very large number of Canadians, whose religious views differ from mine.

In the face of our internal Canadian policy on this question, I believe the arguments for altering our law within Canada are unanswerable and I am glad the government has taken the initiative by introducing a bill in the Senate. As the hon. member knows, most of the Protestant churches are in favour of family planning not only in a permissive manner but in certain circumstances in an imperative manner. It is therefore contrary to the fundamental concept of our society that conduct which a very large religious group regards as proper should be declared to be criminal. Those who do not share that religious belief are not under any imperative to practice family planning. But for those who do believe in family planning there should be that freedom of choice without running into jeopardy in the face of the criminal law.

I think it is only fair, however, to relate the argument put forward by persons of other religious faith that in dealing with foreign policy on this question the exact reverse of the logic applies with regard to Canadian participation in international aid projects. With regard to the amendment to the Criminal Code to abolish section 150(2)(c), those of us who are abolitionists could quite legitimately say that it should be a matter of our personal choice as to what we do and that that choice in no way binds others. The argument which has been turned on us by those who oppose family planning assistance in the international context is that their funds, taken from them by the general tax system, are being used to further practices which, on religious grounds, they abhor. They say that the freedom of action which I claim for myself would not be reciprocated if they must, like it or not, see their taxes go for family planning at the international level. The logic of that argument compels recognition even though I do not share the premise upon which it is founded.

I am cognizant of the very intensive consideration which this question of family planning, and particularly the question of the world population explosion, is now receiving within the highest councils of the Roman Catholic Church. I am cognizant of the fact that many leaders of that church both in Canada and abroad have expressed support for a change in the church's doctrine. I am hopeful that an effective accommodation between that doctrine and the awesome reality of the world population explosion can be achieved. I also hope for a definitive conclusion in the near future of the re-examination of traditional Catholic doctrine on this question. I think the hon. member would be the first to agree that it is better to make a change by persuasion, particularly a change on the basis of religious faith, rather than attempt to do it irrespective of belief.

Principles which have governed the government of Canada in the field of external aid with regard to family planning are several. I should like to take the opportunity to set them out for the benefit of the house.

Suggested External Aid Program

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member deals with this aspect of his speech would he like to answer a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): By all means.

Mr. Brewin: Does the hon. member not feel that it is quite impossible to deal with the problem of world poverty by increased production and programs of external aid until the world successfully grapples with the question of population control or the population explosion which the hon. member's resolution has brought before the house?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think it is an indisputable fact that the question of economic development alone cannot be solved without some resolution of the world population problem. It is because of the very awesome nature of this problem that the policies I am about to set out have been followed by the government. As I have said, surely any government of this country should take into account the religious convictions, which at the moment happen to be opposed, of two very large religious groups and should arrive at a policy which we would hope at least would offend neither.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The first principle that should apply in this field is that the initiative for action should come from the governments of the developing countries. Indeed, one could say in general terms that this is the thrust of all international aid programs. The initiative and requests for aid should come from developing countries, particularly where population pressures present the gravest problems for the economic development and well-being of their societies. It is quite reasonable for developed countries, the United Nations organizations and others, to look for a decision by the developing countries in respect of a request for this kind of assistance, and then carry out aid programs in co-operation with the countries in order to deal with population problems.

The second foundation of our Canadian view on this matter is that the United Nations, particularly through agencies included under its own budget such as the United Nations development program and UNICEF, and specialized agencies such as UNESCO, FAO and the world health organization, are particularly well placed to respond in an effective manner to requests for information and other assistance on the question of population problems from developing countries. It is in this respect that we have been prepared to support the United Nations' endeavours in this regard.

In respect of our bilateral program I should like to say that the bilateral program, contrary to what the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) suggested, is not one in respect of which Canada has received a request from any developing country for assistance. This is the practice followed in this field throughout the world. Canada has not received any requests for bilateral assistance from any developing country. The hon. member mentioned India and Pakistan. No such request has been forthcoming. It has been the view of Canadian authorities that we would be in a position to respond to requests for help in certain specialized fields which are central to the problem of population control, such as demographic and sociological studies.

I should like to refer in this regard to the report of the fourteenth session of the population commission which is United Nations document W/CN.9/219 published in October, 1967. It gives the results of a study and a description of the problems of family planning, and at page 9, paragraph 17, the following is stated:

> The growing importance of population trends as a factor in development calls for a more systematic and detailed study of all factors influencing population growth, its structural changes and the consequences arising therefrom. Nuclei of staff with demographic and related types of background and training are only just beginning to emerge in the developing countries, however; the lack of professional staff in these fields is being increasingly felt. Requirements for professionally trained persons grow constantly, whereas training itself is a slow process.

It is this kind of thing to which the government of Canada is prepared to respond. The report continues at page 11 to emphasize the importance of demographic studies in an approach to this particular problem. In respect of bilateral assistance I think it is fair to note that except for Sweden no bilateral assistance was forthcoming in this field until approximately 1964 or 1965. Since that time three Scandinavian countries, the United States and the United Kingdom have been providing assistance.

The hon. member referred to his experience at the United Nations during the 1962 general assembly. I do not argue with the position that he took, but I should like to point out that the position of the government of Canada in respect of this international council has changed. More particularly it was changed during the 1965 summer meeting of the economic and social council of the United Nations. That was the first year that Canada was represented on that council in its current term. This is a three-year term and it expires at the end of this month.

The question of population control was brought before the economic and social council as a result of the delivery of the report of the thirteenth session of the population commission which has made an extensive study of the problem. At that time the economic and social council adopted, with the positive support of Canada—not just an abstention but an active vote—a resolution with regard to assistance by the United Nations and its specialized agencies to help resolve this problem in respect of population control. This is economic and social council resolution 1084 dated July 30, 1965.

Let me refer to some of the provisions of this resolution to indicate the endorsement given by the economic and social council to these endeavours by United Nations agencies with the positive support of Canada. The resolution endorsed the recommendation in a resolution of the thirteenth session on the long range program of work in the fields of population, including its recommendation with regard to the increase and improvement of demographic statistics, the strengthening of regional demographic training and research centres, and other activities to increase the supply of technically trained personnel in the developing countries, expansion and intensification of research and technical work, widening of the scope and increase of the amount of technical assistance in population fields.

The resolution also called to the attention of the general assembly the need to provide, within the framework of decisions taken to balance the budgets of the United Nations, funds for the United Nations to carry out the intensified and expanded program of activities in the fields of population, recommended by the population commission. It also recommended consultation with other specialized agencies of the United Nations as to the co-ordinated program which might be followed in the population field. One of the particular impacts of that resolution was the authorization of further action by the United Nations development program, a program to which Canada in recent years has provided financial support. It has provided over $10 million this year. This is a program undertaken by the U.N.D.P. to assist those countries which request assistance in respect of population control.

The resolution of the economic and social council, which was passed with Canadian support, was further supported by a resolution passed by the twenty first general assembly and the second committee, on which I had the honour to be representing the government of Canada. This is dated December 29, 1966 and is general assembly resolution 2211. I think several aspects of that resolution are of value because they indicate the approach the United Nations has taken to this question of international assistance to family planning.

The general assembly resolution recognized the need for further study of the growth structure and demographic distribution of population to economic and social development, including national health, nutrition, technical and social welfare programs to be carried out at all levels of government activity. It also recognized the sovereignty of nations in formulating their own population policies with due regard to the principle that the size of a family should be according to the free choice of each individual family. The members of the house will note that this also recognizes the sovereignty of individual countries to make their own decisions. The resolution also notes with satisfaction the success of efforts by the world health organization, the economic and social council and other United Nations entities in promoting assistance in family planning.

I think I can say with some justice to the hon. member and to the house that the position of 1962 has been reversed and that in respect of international multilateral institutions the government of Canada has been prepared to support resolutions in favour of family planning and population control and is prepared to continue to provide funds to these institutions in order that they may carry out their functions, including these programs.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Initiatives which have been taken by the U.N.D.P. have also been matched in the World Health Organization to which Canada is a contributor and has given its support, in the Food and Agricultural Organization to which Canada is also a contributor, and in the UNICEF program in which Canadians have played a particularly prominent part. I would not like to mention UNICEF without referring to the leadership given to that organization by the deputy minister of National Health and Welfare, Dr. Joseph Willard, who has been chairman of the executive committee of UNICEF for the past two years, and particularly to our late colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg South, Mrs. Margaret Konantz, who played such an active part in the role of UNICEF in this country.

Canadians have been active in the international institutions in dealing with this important problem of population control. The Canadian government, by its formal votes both in ECOSOC and in the general assembly, has given support to the proposals put forward and has seen that funds made available to these multilateral agencies have been applied in carrying out these United Nations resolutions.

In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think it can legitimately be said that it has been a useful occupation of the hon. member to bring this important question before the house. I think he would agree that his rather pessimistic assessment of the role of the government of Canada in this field has not been justified and we have been active in the international field in supporting these measures.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to support the notice of motion presented by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie).

I am pleased to see that this motion is intended to help foreign countries, because many requests for assistance are presented by various underdeveloped countries.

The resolution reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to including units external aid program, family planning assistance to developing countries requesting such assistance, and that the government of Canada should take a more active role at the United Nations and its specialized agencies in supporting measures dealing with world population problems.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that many needs have to be met in the world. It is also obvious that different countries are facing numerous economic difficulties, but we must not forget that we have our own economic problems. We are supposed to help various foreign countries in need of our assistance, and we have different ways of doing so.

The New Democratic party says that planning is necessary to find a way to help these countries.

Mr. Speaker, I think that plans were made a long time ago. I had the honour of visiting the United Nations and I learned of the great needs of each of those countries. The economic upheaval resulting from wars, the lack of understanding and various economic factors have created great and urgent needs in these stricken countries.

The situation is not one of economics as a result of production. In fact, on my visit to the United Nations, I asked the representatives of several countries who were requesting the assistance of more prosperous countries what they wanted. I asked them: Do you want products or other things? I was answered: Products are not difficult to find; the problem is finding money to purchase the products.

So it is always a money problem. There are always, in the end, various problems that cannot be solved except by money. That is why we are always speaking of money wherever we go, even at the United Nations, where the main problem is to find the money required to give the necessary aid to these countries. There are only two methods whereby a government or a country like Canada can find funds to aid foreign countries.

First, by increasing taxes even more or by borrowing money through financial institutions. When money is borrowed from these, the taxpayers are left with an unpayable debt which will nevertheless have to be paid later on and, as a result, the citizens will have to be taxed to reimburse these loans.

Mr. Speaker, in this century of technology and progress, when immense resources are unexploited on the face of the globe, it is a scandal that millions of people should feel cold and hungry. This mere fact irrevocably condemns our civilizations. Proudly materialistic, they have the duty to satisfy at least the material needs of the people. They have not done so. There are no doubt privileged nations in this regard, such as ours, but their comfort and welfare are only an insult to the distress of others. This situation cannot go on.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that Canada is able to help those emerging countries more than at present, but we are prevented from doing so due to our very difficult economic situation. First of all, by doing so, we deprive our own people who are so needy. No Canadian is afraid that the land will stop producing, that cows will no longer give milk to produce butter and help the people of various countries.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, if the land cannot produce abundantly or if we cannot help other countries more, this brings about results which I impute to our financial economic system which keeps the land from producing.

At the present time, in my riding, nearly 70 per cent of the farms have been abandoned for about fifteen years. Men refuse to cultivate a land which is rich, which does not refuse to produce. It is not cultivated because we do not have the means to do so, because we do not have what is necessary, in our economy, to make that land produce more.

Since our system is thus designed, the system which we advocate will maintain all the political rights of men and will also proclaim the bill of his economic rights. Economic security will strengthen the politics of the Canadian people and of various countries.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that our present system of "finance-debt", under which practically all the money is circulated in the form of debts bearing interest is detrimental to the welfare of humanity, finds no justification in the nature of things, and perpetuates a false motion concerning the function of money in the human society.

We believe that the potential monopoly in our banking system is contrary to reason and justice. When a bank grants a loan, it gives cash value to the credit of which the client is deemed worthy. That service is necessary, but when the bank extends it and gives the client the value of his credit—like a bank debt, a debt increased by 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 per cent—there seems to be an anomaly in the practice which should be looked into.

The true basis of credit is found in the assets of the nation and individuals, of qualified workers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I feel he is straying somewhat from the subject now under study, that is, the advisability of helping foreign countries with regard to family planning. The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac is constructing a monetary theory which is doubtless interesting but which may not, in this instance, help foreign countries.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for your remarks, but now I would like to point out in turn that, if we are to help foreign countries, we must first try to find the money. This is exactly what I am doing. Money is needed to accomplish something, for nothing can be done without it.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are convinced that our present system is an impediment to peace and disarmament; it gives rise to commercial abuses which degenerate into international conflicts. That is the cause of the serious problems we are experiencing at this time. What other countries are requesting is the means for self-financing, so they can meet their needs for adequate living conditions.

The financial pump is primed for tremendous arms expenditures. In the present state of the cold war, a great deal of money is thus issued for the production of items that are kept off the market. So, when the tools of war, engines of destruction are being made, no food is being produced to feed the hungry. That, Mr. Speaker, is the point we have reached with our unbalanced system favouring only a few people privileged by the economy or the system who have the avantage of controlling everything and of laying their hands on everything. If we want to have something, we must first eliminate the problem, that is to say this vast pact which weighs on the whole economy of the nation or of the nations.

So, I will say that it is difficult to deny the statement of Professor Galbraighth and others who claim that without an economic expansion based on arms production, there would be an economic breakdown in the United States.

Well, I support the statements of this professor. If, tomorrow, we were to cease the production of arms, a recession would settle on the country. There are means other than the production of arms and betting everything on war, mortgaging the whole Canadian economy, taking what the Canadians are entitled to have and what other countries are rightfully entitled to expect from the Canadians so as to invest all that in the making of tools and ships to wage war.

When we go to war, we sow destruction; when we sow destruction, we have no respect for the human being. The human being is the primary factor in a world economy; whatever their race, their colour or their language, human beings are entitled to the greatest respect.

We should be able to organize our economy so as to give work to all unemployed in Canada who live at the expense of others, and all those who are in receipt of welfare payments and who do not participate in production. Those who are trained under the retraining program do not take part in production for Canadians or to assist foreigners. By giving work to all these people, in short, by putting the financial economy at the service of Canadians, at the service of production, we could assist others with our surplus products.

We could use our surplus production to help other countries to a large extent and we would be true Canadians. We would be proud to help foreigners.

But since our economy is unbalanced, uncontrolled, misdirected, we cannot do it. We must think of ourselves first; some Canadians lack clothing or wood or oil for heating.

There is a lot to be done for Canadians and charity begins at home. Even if some foreign countries have great needs, great problems, we have ours. We are told that Canada is the second most prosperous country in the world; we enjoy affluence by borrowing money or letting debts pile up. That is our kind of prosperity.

Nobody can enjoy prosperity without getting into debt. We should realize that changes in our economy are necessary. Our economy should be balanced and we should accept the logical solutions which are proposed in this house. We should do something, that is we should become realistic and stop living in fantasy as we do now.

Realities do exist in Canada; there are physical things which can be achieved. There is a labour potential, capable of doubling Canada's production in two or three years. We could double the country's production if we were to put the financial interests at the service of the Canadian people. Instead of doing that, we restrict credit, we lower the purchasing power of the Canadian people and we put them out of work, we prevent them from producing and developing Canada.

Suggested External Aid Program

That, Mr. Speaker, is the situation where we find ourselves, and that is the objective we must set for ourselves if we want to help other countries.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I support this resolution in the hope that it will be passed quickly.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 14, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO MR. SPEAKER ON RETURN AFTER ILLNESS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think I am speaking for all members of the house when I express to you, Mr. Speaker, our happiness at having you back among us in the chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: We were sorry indeed when we heard that you would be away because of indisposition. We were delighted to learn that your ailment, whatever it may have been, has yielded to medical and surgical treatment and that you are strong, active and vigorous again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: May I, while expressing our happiness at having you back, also express our thanks to your deputy, the hon. member for Humber-St. George (Mr. Batten) for having filled your place during your absence. There is only one thing; in order to maintain the important principle of bilingual equality Your Honour will have to read the prayers in the French language for four days in succession.

Mr. Speaker: Frankly I thought the Prime Minister was about to make a statement on another subject. If I had thought otherwise I might not have recognized him.

[Translation]

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Second report of standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts—Mr. Berger

[Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

• (2:40 p.m.)

INTEREST ACT

LIMITATION ON INTEREST CHARGED BY FINANCE COMPANIES

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-188 intituled "An Act to amend the Interest Act".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to impose reasonable limits on finance companies by putting a ceiling on the interest rates, in all cases, of 12 per cent, in order to better protect Canadian citizens who must resort to loans.

Motion agreed and bill read the first time.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GREECE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED CRISIS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is in possession of full information as to the situation in Greece. If so, could he report to the house on the matter, and especially on whether any Canadian interests—that is, interests apart from our natural concern with the state of affairs in a NATO ally—in the form of Canadian lives, persons or property are in danger in Greece at the present time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not easy for me to report on the actual situation inside Greece, talking about the domestic and political situation. My hon. friend probably knows as much from the press reports as we have been able to ascertain officially. The King, the Queen and the royal family have left Greece and are in Rome.

So far as the situation in Greece is concerned and the effect it might have on Canadians who are in that country, we have had a report from our embassy that the situation is quiet and that Canadians are in no danger. Our embassy has been in touch with Canadian citizens to give them the appropriate advice in the circumstances, but there do not seem to be any circumstances requiring their immediate withdrawal from that country.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CANADIAN COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the reports that are emanating from the NATO meeting in Brussels, where some important decisions seem in the course of being made. I want to ask the Prime Minister, has the Secretary of State for External Affairs been given any authority to make firm commitments in so far as Canada is concerned? If so, what is the nature of those commitments?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, no authority has been given to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that would involve any change of commitments on our part. As my hon. friend knows, at the annual meeting of the NATO council the affairs of the coalition generally are discussed, including its defence policies, and proposals made by military headquarters and also by the council.

There has been no authority given and no authority required to make any changes in Canadian policy, nor have any changes been made. Some reports have been made which will have to be considered, and as a result of that consideration there may be changes, but if so the house will have a chance to discuss them. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be home I think either late tonight or tomorrow, and will probably have a chance to make a report to the house Monday afternoon.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the report that a NATO naval force is being contemplated, has Canada made any commitment respecting a contribution to supply NATO naval ships?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we already have a north Atlantic naval force and we have committed ourselves—and the house knows about the commitments—to make contributions to that force. There may be under consideration now an alteration of that force, but if so that will have to be discussed by the government in so far as any Canadian commitment is concerned, if one indeed is envisaged.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I also have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of our announced intention to participate in an international NATO fleet to help counterbalance the strength of the Soviet naval fleet, which is now the second largest in the world, is the Canadian government giving any consideration to increasing the number of ships we have at present in the Canadian navy?

Mr. Pearson: I do not know of any proposal that would require us to increase the number of our ships, but I am sure my hon. friend would wish me to wait until I have a report from the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning exactly what is involved in this proposal, if it is a proposal. That is all it would be, a proposal.

[Translation]

DETECTION OF FOREIGN SHIPS IN CANADIAN WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, in relation to what was discussed a moment ago, since the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) stated Tuesday that foreign vessels came within rather close range of our coasts.

Is the Minister of Transport able to inform the house whether the hovercraft purchased by the government could be equipped for the detection of foreign vessels or submarines coming close to Canadian shores?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Is my hon. friend referring to the hovercraft?

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: It is not intended to be used in the search for submarines role. It is to be used for search and rescue work, looking for seamen in distress or aircraft downed at sea; that is the purpose for which it is being bought and tested. The Royal Canadian Navy has a very substantial anti-submarine capability, along with the Royal Canadian Air Force, and listening devices which are installed as part of the over-all defence of the north Atlantic region and the North American continent for detecting and if necessary destroying submarines.

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTED DEPORTATION OF U.S. CITIZENS AT TORONTO UNIVERSITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister considering the advisability of taking deportation proceedings against the two United States citizens who have been engaged in disrupting the administration of the University of Toronto?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I take the question as notice and I will try to obtain the information which I do not remember at this time.

[English]

FINANCE

REPORT OF TASK FORCE RESPECTING FOREIGN OWNERSHIP IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise the house when the government expects to make known the findings of the committee which has been sitting under the chairmanship of the President of the Privy Council studying the question of foreign investment in Canada, so that Canadians generally may be made aware of the government's attitude toward this most important subject?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we had hoped the report would have been made available to the government before now, but I understand it will not be ready until the end of this month. I hope we will be able to report to the house on this matter when the session resumes in January.

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ON FARM STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance who above all others is the person most aware of the slow movement of wheat off farms in western Canada this year and the forced necessity, because of low quotas, for farmers to build excessive new storage facilities which may be surplus to their needs in future years when more normal shipping conditions return.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his question?

Mr. Kindt: Is the minister in a position to announce the restoration of the accelerated write-offs in four years on farm storage which was in effect during 1965 and 1966 but was terminated at the beginning of this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kindt: Well, can't we ask a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kindt: I think we should be entitled—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked his question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I heard the representations of the hon. gentleman and I will take them into sympathetic consideration.

Mr. Kindt: Can the farmers look forward to some relief after the beginning of the new year, when they start filling out their income tax returns?

Mr. Fairweather: There are enough of them who are delegates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

UNITED NATIONS

VIET NAM—PROPOSED DISCUSSION IN SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, last Monday I asked the right hon. Prime Minister whether Canada had participated in any discussions at the United Nations or elsewhere concerning the possibility of bringing before the security council the question of the Viet Nam war and the search for solutions to it. The right hon. gentleman gave some general information and ended his answer by saying he would take the question as notice and perhaps be able to give a more specific reply tomorrow. Since this is two days after "tomorrow" I wonder whether the right hon. Prime Minister could give us some information on this point.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, discussions are still going on among members of the security council as to the desirability of inscribing this item on the agenda of the security council for an early session. No decision has been taken on that matter as yet. I understand that if it is a matter for discussion at the security council there will be no difficulty in having representatives from North Viet Nam and the Viet Cong take part as observers and participants in that discussion. There will be no difficulty about them reaching New York.

Mr. Lewis: Will the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether Canada is supporting the idea of the security council becoming seized of the problem?

Mr. Pearson: I think there are great difficulties in the way of any discussion of this matter at the security council which will lead to any constructive results. We are exchanging views with other members of the security council to see whether they feel in fact there might be good results from such a discussion.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASES IN PENSIONS AND DISABILITY ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs when we can expect him to make the announcement referred to by the Minister of Finance in respect of disability pensions and other matters of concern to veterans and their dependants.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that in dealing with disability pensions an announcement will be made some time next week, certainly before the Christmas adjournment.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, has the departmental committee on pension rates reported to the minister?

Mr. Teillet: Not as yet, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Lewis.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister which arises from a letter addressed to him and all members of parliament from the Canadian cattlemen's association, in which that association asks whether universal medicare is still to be put into effect in Canada in view of the protests by provincial governments, and in spite of the contrary judgment indicated by members of the cabinet. Does the government intend to institute medicare on July 1, 1968?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the law.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It was last year, too.

Mr. Hales: In view of the Prime Minister's answer I should like to state that this house passed a law concerning capital punishment but still we are—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is an argument.

PROTEST RESPECTING LACK OF WELFARE STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises out of the reply to written question No. 711, in which we are advised that in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics there are 105 people working on health statistics, 31 on education statistics and none on welfare statistics. The standing committee on health and welfare has been dealing with the question of abortion and its work is hampered by the lack of adequate statistics on welfare. I am shocked at the fact that no staff is allocated—

Mr. Speaker: Is that the hon. member's question?

Mr. Enns: My question is, will the minister ensure that sufficient funds are allocated to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics so they may hire staff to collect welfare statistics?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has now made a representation.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF HOLIDAY SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. Having in mind the rather unique situation existing in the country in regard to such holidays as Boxing day and Remembrance day, could consideration to be given to consultation at the federal, provincial, municipal and private levels in an attempt to rectify this confusion?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of National Revenue to deal with this question.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): First of all, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the public service there is no confusion with regard to Boxing day. It is not one of the holidays available to public servance except in the particular circumstance of being the extra holiday which may be designated by the deputy head of the department. Whether a day is a holiday may vary across the country, but the important thing to the working people is the days they have off, which are usually defined in collective agreements and vary greatly across the country. I believe the average in Canada is about eight, whereas the public service of Canada has ten.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR GREATER PARTICIPATION BY INSURANCE COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. If the minister has not already done so, would he consider requesting insurance companies to immediately make available for housing mortgages a greater proportion of their dollar reserves?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I expect to be having discussions with the insurance companies and other institutions about the needs of the housing market in the coming year.

Mr. Walker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If such a request brings no appreciable results, would the minister consider other, stronger measures?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary question is hypothetical.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEXT STEPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of his press release yesterday indicating the continuation of the Northumberland strait crossing project, and in light of the considerable uncertainty in the minds of many about succeeding phases of construction of this crossing, would the Prime Minister be willing, say in the next few days, to provide the house with a schedule of events so we might know in more specific terms the details of this project?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I should await the report of Colonel Churchill before attempting to answer this question.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the Prime Minister that this report is important. I wonder, then, when we might expect to have the report in order to see what are the next phases of construction.

Mr. Pearson: We have asked that the report be prepared as quickly as possible, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue in a further effort to obtain clarification of the status of the Northumberland crossing project as a result of the Prime Minister's announcement yesterday. Are we to consider now that in effect item No. 17 has been deleted from the minister's list of slashed expenditure which he gave us?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that my friend read carefully item No. 17.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL RESOLUTION RESPECTING AMENDMENTS TO YUKON ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the Yukon legislative council yesterday unanimously passed legislation calling for the establishment of a committee on constitutional reform and for discussions leading to amendments to the Yukon Act, is it the intention of the government which the Prime Minister leads to assent to the legislation and co-operate in the establishment of that committee?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in questions of constitutional reform it would be our obligation, as well as our desire, to consult and co-operate with the council.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one I directed to the Prime Minister a moment ago. I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—I am sure he is aware of the legislation to which I referred in my question to the Prime Minister—whether he will be instructing his commissioner in the Yukon to assent to that legislation.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this question has to do with a financial agreement for a two year period that was agreed to between the government of Canada and the council of the Yukon Territory. It was agreed to in Ottawa, but when the old council returned to higher latitudes they repudiated the agreement and we rewrote our agreement accordingly. They have now imposed some taxes in order to have us revise our agreement; they have also put a stipulation in the agreement which affects it. I have not talked to the commissioner yet, but I expect to be speaking to him later today.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, since the council's request merely calls for discussions, will the minister not assure the house that on that basis he will instruct the commissioner to assent to the legislation?

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot; because the council is fully aware and has been informed that we are preparing a white paper on the entire matter which covers more constitutional ground than that suggested in their own resolution.

[Translation]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCES

DOCUMENTS AT TOURISM CONFERENCE IN ENGLISH ONLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Is the minister aware that among the invitations sent out to the provincial ministers of tourism, the one received by the Quebec minister was in English?

Has the minister checked to see why this invitation sent to Quebec was written in English, and can he tell us whether he is taking steps to make sure that this will not happen again?

[English]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker; some of the material sent to the province of Quebec was inadvertently printed in English. This was because there was a consolidation of reports from all the provinces and these reports arrived in Ottawa to be consolidated just prior to their dispatch to the provinces. This is a matter that we will endeavour to correct next year. It was certainly inadvertent and is regretted.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO CLOSING OF POOL ACCOUNTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On Monday last I inquired whether the 1966-67 pool was going to be closed early, or earlier than last year. Is the minister now in a position to provide an answer?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am. The 1966-67 wheat pool account will be closed somewhat later than last year because of the fact that wheat deliveries by producers during the 1966-67 crop year were at the highest level in the history of Canadian wheat operations. I am informed by the wheat board that they expect to close the 1966-67 wheat account some time during the first quarter of 1968.

DRUGS

SUBMISSION BY PHARMACEUTICAL MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Registrar General, but in his absence I will direct it to whoever is acting in that capacity at the moment.

Is the minister in receipt of a submission produced by the pharmaceutical manufacturers association of Canada and sent to all members of parliament which makes certain misleading assertions about the price of prescription drugs and is intended to influence the introduction of a government bill on patents that is to come before the house tomorrow? Can the minister assure the house that this submission will have no effect on this bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Parliamentary Secretary to Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, I am taking notice of the question on behalf of the minister.

[English]

FREIGHT RATES

MEETING WITH RAILWAYS TO DISCUSS NEW L.C.L. RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the meeting he held yesterday with the three maritime premiers concerning l.c.l. rates, I should like to ask the minister whether he has been able to arrange a date for a meeting with the appropriate officials of the two railways to discuss this rather united submission.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet been able to, but I hope to do so at an early moment and to get their reaction to the request of the Atlantic premiers.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

MONTREAL—SUICIDE OF PORTUGUESE NATIONAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes asked the Prime Minister, in my absence, whether we knew something about the circumstances of the suicide of a young Portuguese immigrant in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes; we know that a young Portuguese immigrant named Manuel Gomez Rosa threw himself from the eighth or ninth floor of the national revenue building in Montreal, and died.

Mr. Rosa had been informed a few minutes before by an immigration officer in Montreal that he had to leave the country by December 21.

Mr. Roger-E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I put a supplementary question to find out whether it is true that two other cases of suicide had been noted in Montreal on exactly the same spot during the last two years and possibly another incident in Toronto, again at the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that the supplementary question should be put on the order paper. It concerns events which may have taken place some time ago.

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Speaker, may I put my question in another form?

In view of the fact that similar events have already occurred, is the minister considering a study or a review of the procedure concerning the immigrants, so as to make sure that it is adapted to the difficult human and social circumstances in which the people affected by the decision of senior immigration officials find themselves?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know I think we are trying to proceed as humanely as possible, but there is one thing we will do very soon, and that is put bars on the windows of the ninth floor.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING DAIRY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that at the present time the dairy farmers of Canada are meeting in Ottawa with the minister's officials on the dairy policy, has the minister anything to announce to the house?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that whatever the minister has to announce should be announced on motions.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Whelan: This is an important matter to the dairy farmers, Mr. Speaker, and I have had some tremendous representations.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Whelan: I should like to ask the minister whether anything beneficial is being done to help the dairy farmers of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Even beneficial statements have to be made on motions.

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE CHEQUES FOR CROP FAILURE AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister inform the members of the house and the many interested farmers in western Canada whether the P.F.A.A. officials have completed their inspections of the crop failure areas, and whether it is the government's intention to have the assistance cheques in the hands of the farmers before Christmas?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe all inspections have been completed, and I have not yet received a report as to when the cheques will go out. I will be very pleased to look into the matter for the hon. member and to make every attempt to have these cheques sent out before Christmas to farmers in those areas which have been inspected.

NATURAL GAS

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE USE OF NUCLEAR EXPLOSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the apparent success this week of an industrial nuclear explosion in New Mexico, U.S.A., to free natural gas, can the minister report any progress in a similar experiment in Canada, particularly as it relates to the tar sands?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member does not think that this again is the type of statement that ought to be made on motions. The hon. member might ask whether the minister proposes to make a statement on motions.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Aiken: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the minister intends shortly to make a statement on motions in this connection.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government or the minister's department been following closely this exploratory work done in the United States, and does it have beneficial implications for the situation in Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I had a report this morning from the chief engineer of the National Energy Board who was present at the explosion, and he tells me that it will take a couple of months before an assessment of the result of the experiment is available.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTED BONUS TO PERSONS ATTAINING AGE OF 100

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of national health. Some time ago the minister indicated that the government considered it might be inflationary to grant a centennial bonus of $100 to old age security recipients. I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to grant such an award or bonus to those who attained the age of 100 years or more during centennial year.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a representation which I assume will be considered.

TRADE

PLUTONIUM—REPORTED SALES TO FRANCE AND JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask whether the contract for the sale of substantial quantities of plutonium, which I understand has been made with the government of France, contains safeguards relating to their use for peaceful purposes in the interests of international safety.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am informed by usually reliable sources that this question was asked yesterday.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

PROTEST RESPECTING LAY-OFFS OF SHOP WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has he received representations from representatives of the machinists union for Canadian Pacific's western shops in Winnipeg protesting general lay-offs of Canadian Pacific personnel scheduled to take place during Christmas week? If so, can he tell us what he is doing about the matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I did receive representations, Mr. Speaker. A reply has been prepared, but I am not sure whether it has been despatched.

HOUSING

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in his capacity as the minister for housing. In view of the reports of encouraging discussions between the minister and the province of Ontario following the recent housing conference can the minister say whether any similar discussions took place with the government of British Columbia, and if so with what result?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Highly satisfactory discussions took place yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTIONS IMPLEMENTING TARIFF REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the agenda remaining to be dealt with prior to the Christmas recess. Since the tariff reductions resulting from the Kennedy round are intended to come into effect on January 1 next, can the minister inform the house how that will be accomplished in view of the fact that the resolutions based on the Kennedy round are not coming before the house or the committee before Christmas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that these resolutions will come into effect in the same way as other budget resolutions, that is either coming into effect at the time of the announcement or on the date announced in the resolution itself. In this respect there is no difference between these and any other budget resolutions. I was careful to make these inquiries because, of course, we are under an obligation to make reductions in accordance with our agreements in Geneva. I am advised that we can do so without in any way offending the ordinary practice of this house.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since this means they will come into effect before parliamentary discussion and decision, I suppose one has to assume they will come into effect subject to our approval?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand this is always the case. If parliament were not to approve the resolution the government would then have to either make refunds or collect from the taxpayers.

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SATELLITE TRANSMISSION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the completion this morning of the committee hearing on the Bell Telephone bill, and in view of the urgent need for a decision in connection with it, will the minister make a statement before Christmas concerning the department's study of satellite communication?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I do not know whether it is necessary, Mr. Speaker, to make a statement about the study of satellites as they relate to the bill before the committee. If it were felt essential this matter could be given consideration, because the government has made considerable progress in its plans in respect of commercial satellites. I hope it might be possible for the committee to complete its deliberations on the Bell bill and report it to the house in such a way that it could be given final consideration at the current session. It would seem to me that a reasonable effort should be made to do so.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF IMPORT QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the great flood of turkeys coming into Canada from the United States and the apparent failure of the value for duty regulations, would the minister consider imposing a quota system or some other system that would enable the turkey producers to make plans for next year?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): When turkeys from the United States were imported into Canada at less than the cost of production early this year, the government took prompt action and fixed a value for duty of 21.5 cents, which considerably improved the situation.

I have not had any reports from the turkey producers that these measures have not been successful or if I have had such reports I do not specifically recollect them. If in fact these measures have not been successful we will review the situation, because it is our intention to protect the turkey growers or any other agricultural industry from unfair competition from the United States or anywhere else.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TURKEYS—REPORTED DIFFERENCE IN PRICE BETWEEN TORONTO AND OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I intended to put this question to the Registrar General, but in his absence I will put it to the acting minister or perhaps to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the government aware of the fact that a prominent chain store, with outlets in several cities, is presently advertising grade A turkeys of over 20 pounds at 38 cents a pound in Toronto and 43 cents a pound in Ottawa? Why is there this five cent per pound penalty on the consumers in Ottawa?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I will certainly take up this matter with my colleague the minister of consumer affairs, and see if he can take any action.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: The house in committee of ways and means on a proposed resolution to amend the Excise Tax Act. The text of this resolution will be found appended to the budget papers in Votes and Proceedings for Thursday, November 30, 1967. Yesterday afternoon when the committee was discussing this resolution there was some confusion. May I suggest that the one we began discussing yesterday was the Excise Tax Act, as recorded on page 5 of the budget resolutions for Thursday, November 30. I apologize to the committee for any confusion the Chair might have caused.

EXCISE TAX ACT

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act to provide among other things:

1. That effective December 1, 1967, the excise tax on each five cigarettes or fraction of five cigarettes contained in any package be increased from two and one-half cents to three cents.

2. That effective December 1, 1967, the excise tax on each pound of manufactured tobacco, including snuff but not including cigars and cigarettes, be increased from eighty cents per pound to ninety cents per pound.

3. That effective December 1, 1967, the excise tax on cigars be increased from fifteen per cent to seventeen and a half per cent.

4. That effective December 1, 1967, an excise tax of

(a) two and one-half cents per gallon on wines of all kinds containing not more than seven per cent of absolute alcohol by volume, and

(b) five cents per gallon on wines of all kinds containing more than seven per cent of absolute alcohol by volume, be imposed in addition to any other excise tax imposed by the said Act payable at the time of sale by the Canadian manufacturer and at the time of importation or withdrawal from bonded warehouse by the importer or transferee who takes imported wines out of bond for consumption.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words about the increase in the excise tax on tobacco. I fully agree with the sentiments that the hon. member for Edmonton West expressed yesterday. When a government wishes to raise extra revenues through taxation, invariably it ends up by increasing taxes on tobacco and liquor.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roxburgh: There is a limit to this sort of taxation, Mr. Chairman. I hope that the minister and the anti-smoking propagandists have not forgotten the lessons to be learned from prohibition in the 1930's. Fortunes were made by those who engaged in bootlegging, smuggling and the illegal manufacture of liquor. The minister will agree with me, I am sure, that nothing is more degrading to a government than to have to engage in the costly business—and I emphasize those words—of stamping out or controlling smuggling, bootlegging, and so on.

The tobacco industry, at least, through the taxes it pays puts half a billion dollars into the pockets of government every year. If the government increases taxes on tobacco and liquor to the point where smuggling, bootlegging and allied activities become attractive, not only will it lose revenue that it otherwise might have gained through taxes but it will need to spend much needed money to suppress those activities.

Another point was put well in an article in the Globe and Mail written by Bruce West. His remarks concisely sum up my feelings about the matter. He said:

> I don't like being taxed in the fashion of a naughty little boy being made to pay for his follies.

Then he went on to say:

> And by silently accepting each new levy on such things as drinks and smokes, we seem to be admitting that we are bad little characters.

I wish to say to the minister, to the government and to Mr. Bruce West that I am one of those naughty little boys and I will not take the tax increase sitting down. I feel that the limit has been reached in imposing excise taxes on liquor and particularly on cigarettes.

I know it has been some time since the federal government increased the excise tax on tobacco. The last increase took place in 1959. That merely illustrates the point I am trying to make. Away back in 1942 there was a tax increase on tobacco and there were other increases in 1943, 1951, 1952 and 1959. Obviously, since the tax has not been increased since 1959, the government must have realized that the limit in excise tax on tobacco had been approached. The latest increase brings the excise tax to the maximum amount that can be imposed. It is the limit.

As I said previously, the tobacco industry alone brings approximately $500 million to the coffers of the government. At the present time there is dissension in the house about whether medicare ought to be introduced. Some say it should be introduced and others say that because of our present economic position it should not be introduced. I will not go into the merits of the argument but I will say that the tobacco industry by itself, through the taxes it pays, could support a large part of the medicare program. In fact, if anyone ever stopped to think about it, the tax that the tobacco industry pays in one year enabled the St. Lawrence seaway to be built.

I acknowledge that excess use of tobacco may be as bad for one as excess use of anything else. A friend of mine died through an excess use of coffee. He drank 40 cups a day approximately. Nevertheless, tobacco has brought a lot of enjoyment and relaxation to many. When one considers what a night editor has to do in editing some of the reports which come out of Ottawa, surely it can be said with truth that if he had no cigarette, pipe or cigar to help him to relax his nerves his life may be very, very short. The same may be said of active businessmen, secretaries and many others who work under tension. Tobacco was a great boon to our boys who were fighting overseas. When they were under heavy fire their nerves were raw and often they preferred to sit down and smoke a cigarette or pipe instead of eating food. I know that chaps who have served overseas will agree with that statement.

I sincerely hope the minister and the department have decided that the present tax represents the limit in taxation that can be imposed on tobacco. These remarks apply equally to another product over which the minister has jurisdiction. Taxes on this product have also been raised recently.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to enter into a discussion with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken about the merits or otherwise of taxes on tobacco. I thought it might interest the house to know that the general problem of smuggling, which at one time was an important consideration in the level of taxes on tobacco in this country and remains an important factor, has been altered by the tendency of the United States federal government and state governments to impose taxes on cigarettes, as has been done in Canada. For example, the United States federal tax on cigarettes is 8 cents per package. In California they impose another 10 cents, in Massachusetts another 10 cents, in New Jersey 11 cents, in Pennsylvania 13 cents and so on. Whether this is a good or bad practice I will not say, but I feel that governments generally agree that this is an excellent way of raising money.

Mr. Roxburgh: May I ask the minister a question? I shall not ask him to go into detail with respect to the various states in the U.S.A. Each state in that country is similar in many ways to each province in this country. I am thinking particularly of Ontario.

• (3:30 p.m.)

As stated by the minister, certain states add an extra tax upon tobacco. Would the minister compare the excise tax imposed on tobacco by the federal government with that imposed by the government of the United States across the line?

Mr. Sharp: I thought I had given the relevant figures. In the United States there is a federal tax of 8 cents a package. In Canada the tax is in two parts. We are now proposing that there should be a tax of 3 cents per five cigarettes, which is 12 cents for 20, plus $4 a thousand approximately—there are some differences by weight—in excise duty, which is another 4 cents per 10 cigarettes, which is 8 cents per package.

Mr. Roxburgh: In other words, the federal government in Canada imposes a tax amounting roughly to 20 cents on 20 cigarettes compared with a United States federal tax of 8 cents.

Mr. Sharp: Yes. But in the United States the states as such tax cigarettes more heavily than our provinces do.

Mr. Roxburgh: What about Virginia, Kentucky and the other tobacco-producing states? How do their taxes compare with the taxes in some of the other states?

Mr. Sharp: Their taxes on cigarettes, as might be expected, are very low. For example, in Virginia and Kentucky the tax is 2½ cents on a package of 20 whereas in states which do not produce tobacco and where consumption is high, such as New York and Pennsylvania, the tax is four or five times as much.

Mr. Roxburgh: I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman that there is certainly quite a difference between the excise tax in the United States and that imposed here, with the result that there is a chance of smuggling being carried on. But I will leave the subject at this point, expressing the sincere hope that both the present government and any future government will feel a limit has now been reached in the taxation of this product.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the minister has just said that the 16 cent federal tax on a 20 cigarette pack is higher than in the United States, where it is 8 cents per pack, and he added that the provinces levy less taxes than the American states. Does the minister know the amount of the tax levied by the Quebec government on a 20 cigarette pack, for instance? Could he give us that information?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I am informed that in the province of Quebec the tax is six-twenty-fifths of one cent per cigarette, about a quarter of a cent, or 5 cents on 20.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister or for the hon. member who spoke just before him. We have been given a lot of figures concerning the revenue which the federal government secures by taxing the sale of cigarettes. Has the minister at hand a figure indicating the expense to which the public of Canada is put by reason of heart trouble, lung cancer and other diseases which are caused by smoking? I do not want to make a speech, but I suggest the cost is comparable with the revenue that is produced.

Mr. Sharp: I know that the cost of the diseases which may be caused by tobacco is very great but apparently there are people who believe they get a great deal of enjoyment out of tobacco. It is very difficult in this kind of calculation to decide where the benefit lies.

This is a matter for personal judgment and not one which is particularly relevant to the revenue. May I say that as far as the federal government is concerned our application of a tax has nothing to do with our moral or individual views about the tobacco question.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to make a few comments on the question of cigarette smoking. Many of us were very pleased when we heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare announce a few days ago that this subject was to be referred to a committee for consideration. I have been very interested in this question ever since the former minister of national health and welfare told us that a fund of $600,000 would be set up to study the subject of cigarette smoking and its effects. Since that time almost $400,000 has been spent on this project and studies have been undertaken which indicate the hazards caused by cigarette smoking.

In spite of this, however, and notwithstanding medical advice and the publicity given to this subject by the news media, statistics show that the sale of cigarettes has been increasing. In view of the fact that such large amounts of revenue are being obtained by the government from tobacco taxes, I feel some action should be taken to provide the safest possible cigarette filter.

In this connection I was interested to receive a letter from the chairman of a senate committee in the United States which is making an investigation into the subject. There is one paragraph in this letter from Senator Warren Magnuson which I should like to put on record.

Last August, the Senate commerce committee held two days of hearings on the progress which is being made toward the development and marketing of a less hazardous cigarette.

I feel that Senator Magnuson's committee has an important task on its hands and I hope it will be found that more research in this direction is necessary. Should this be the case I hope the Minister of Finance will look favourably on any request by the Department of National Health and Welfare or the National Research Council for any assistance desired in finding the safest possible filter for the smokers of Canada in order that they may have a choice available to them instead of smoking cigarettes which we feel are bad for their health.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I am rather glad of this opportunity to make an addendum to the speech I delivered when the budget was introduced. I was, as it were, cut off in my prime and in full flight on that occasion.

I should like to make a passing reference to begin with to the strange discrepancy between the two sides of this budget. I have no doubt whatever that the minister will tell us he combined the two possible courses open to him. One was, of course, to contain expenditure and the other was to increase revenues. Technically he would be quite right. But if we notice the order of magnitude of the two parts we see it is a strange chemical mixture he has produced. His plans, according to his own figures, will bring him in only $270 million extra in a full year. On the other hand, his partner, the Minister of National Revenue—

• (3:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Partner in crime.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I take it for granted people will realize that the minister is his partner in crime but I will say "his partner" and leave it at that—presented the house with a series of cuts in government expenditures which amount to some $1,200 million.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is not possible to make cuts of that magnitude without very severe repercussions on the entire economy. Any adding that the minister did in the way of adding to his revenues was a very halfhearted attempt. I am not going to go over again the list of alternatives for revenue which I derived from the report of the Carter commission, but I would like to point out that in this morning's Globe and Mail it is reported that Canadian corporation profits are up by 2.6 per cent over last year, which would at least gently indicate there was another place where the minister could have got some of his revenues.

I think we have to examine the possible reasons for this action because it is too simple to say that the minister is really another Scrooge and just loves to increase taxes.

Mr. Chrétien: I would like to ask the hon. member a question in French if he does not mind.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Please do.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Does the hon. member not know that during the forthcoming fiscal year, half of the additional revenue of the federal government will result from the fact that we have compelled corporations to advance their payments to the treasury by two months, and that half of our revenue for the fiscal year, following this mini-budget, already accrues from corporations? In budgetary terms, that revenue represents an additional tax for corporations for the forthcoming fiscal year, that is 1968-69.

[English]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would point out to the Minister without Portfolio that this is a one-shot business. You are merely advancing it and getting the money earlier than usual. Therefore there will be a longer period between the time of that payment and the next payment to accommodate that change. It is really no increase in revenues.

We have to examine the circumstances in which the minister found himself and which to my mind probably induced him to take this rather disastrous course of action. To do that we have to make a brief review of the events which led up to the pegging of the Canadian dollar at 92½ cents American.

From 1950 to 1962 the Canadian dollar was on a floating exchange rate and in all those years it oscillated within a very narrow band of 3 cents American, never extending either way beyond that 3 cents. Then in June, 1961, there came a very dramatic change and our dollar rose to over 100 cents American. The next month it went up to 103 cents American and by the end of 1961 and the beginning of 1962 it was running as high as 10 cents over the American dollar, understandably causing very serious repercussions on the Canadian economy. Exporters began to encounter difficulties. Import prices rose with a consequent effect on the whole range of prices. I think we should now look at the next cause.

The development which triggered this explosive rise was a massive inflow of American capital, possibly due to the policies of the Canadian government of the day, and the policies of the Bank of Canada which produced high interest rates in Canada and attracted this inflow. The next stage was reached when the United States government took steps to stem the outflow of capital from that country and brought in the interest equalization act. Immediately the government of Canada, by this time the Liberal government, sent representatives to Washington to beg that Canada be exempted from the operations of that legislation. They succeeded in getting that exemption but had to pay a price for it, and the price was that the Canadian government would maintain its holding of reserves at a certain level, some $2.4 billion or $2.5 billion.

From that moment on, Mr. Chairman, the government of Canada was in a strait-jacket. It was unable to use monetary policy as an instrument to promote economic growth. All its policies had to be tailored to the twin problems of maintaining the tight rate of the Canadian dollar and keeping our reserves below that ceiling. I may say that only a few weeks ago the Bank of Canada had to get into the market to press the Canadian dollar down a bit and in doing so added to our holding of American dollars, showing that these two policies are incompatible. But more important, Mr. Chairman, these two policies together have tied the hands of the government.

I suggest that if the Minister of Finance hopes to get out of the bonds which he is in now—I am sure he realizes it is a very difficult situation, if not politically very dangerous—he has to take some rather drastic and decisive actions. The first of these, I think, would be to free the exchange rate. It is difficult to forecast with any certitude what would be the immediate result of freeing the Canadian dollar and having it on a floating exchange rate. However, the last occasion is not long ago when the Bank of Canada had to move into the picture to control an upward pressure on the Canadian dollar, and in today's particular circumstances the American dollar is under pressure following devaluation of sterling. So I think it is safe to assume the pressure would be upwards. If that were the case the government would be free to pursue an expansionary policy, to expand the money supply and promote growth and production in Canada.

However, with our minds on what took place in 1961 and 1962 we would also have to take some steps to see that history would not repeat itself. There would have to be some control over inflow and outflow of capital. We could not afford another massive inflow of the type which threw the whole exchange situation out of gear in 1962. There would have to be some controls in that regard. I think it is time the government of Canada looked at the outflow of capital and ceased always parroting the plea that we require massive importation of foreign capital, without paying attention to what is taking place in the economy at the present time. These are two of the things I think the government will have to do.

Then, there is the problem of controlling the type of inflation we have today. As I said the other day, I was interested to hear the minister say he understood it was not a demand type of inflation. This left me very perplexed because the only way in which his budget could make sense would be if it were a means of controlling a demand type of inflation, since it was directed toward cutting down on consumer spending, toward a contraction of the economy of the sort that should take place if there is a rapid development of a classic type of inflation, of too much money chasing too few goods. No one, not even the minister, suggests that the present inflation is of that type. But he is unwilling or perhaps unable to take the only sort of inflation control measures that must be taken in the circumstances of a cost-push type of inflation. He is not prepared to move in the direction of selective price controls on basic commodities whose costs enter into all other costs of the economy.

I know the minister will take refuge in the constitutional position and suggest, technically quite rightly, that this is beyond the powers of the federal government, that only the provincial authorities have jurisdiction over price controls. But I suggest, Mr. Chairman, it would be a very bold provincial government indeed that would be prepared to defy the federal Minister of Finance if he placed before them the necessity for them to exercise their constitutional power to control prices, and if he accompanied that with a well-planned publicity program. In such circumstances I cannot conceive of any provincial government in its right mind persisting in refusal. It would be not only politically disastrous but also economically disastrous, as any such provincial government would be refusing to alleviate the situation of its own citizens.

I want to return for a moment to the question of the control of inflow of capital. For long I have been very doubtful of the statements made time and time again about how dependent we are on an inflow of capital. When I examine the figures I find we have a very small net inflow. I think there was only some $85 million last year as the balance left over following an outflow of some $1,300 million. When we examine some of the ways in which this inflow capital has been used we cannot help but be struck by the extravagant and wasteful ways in which that capital has been invested.

• (3:50 p.m.)

For instance, as I believe my colleague from Waterloo South mentioned the other day, we have invested in the oil industry some $7 billion to develop an industry which is now incapable of operating at any more than 35 per cent of its capacity because it runs up against market values. As one can imagine, half that investment would have produced all the oil wells we require at the present time. However, that capital flowed in without the government exercising any control over its volume or direction. This minister or his successor and this government or its successor will have to consider very carefully the direction of investment in this country by an investment board such as those which exist in many countries whose function it is to select the areas in which massive investments will be permitted and those areas in which they will not be permitted.

One may say that this is a drastic alternative to the minister's budget but I suggest, despite the Prime Minister's denial the other day that we have a crisis, that we actually face a crisis of such proportion that only drastic action of this type will enable us to gain control of our economy and to expand and grow by our own decisions in Canada and not be dependent upon the by-products of decisions made elsewhere. Otherwise I can see the minister and his successor staggering from crisis to crisis while our development and growth are inhibited in a way which will not be tolerable to the 20 million people living in Canada who are conscious of the fact that we have vast stores of natural wealth from which they should be able to build a growing and expanding economy without these continuing crises and restrictive measures. I would think that if the minister and the government or the government which follows are not prepared to take this kind of action, eventually the people of Canada will place their hope in a government which will be prepared to take such action. I shall not be here at the time but I shall watch the situation with interest. My colleague from Winnipeg seems to take exception to that, but I should like to point out that the calendar tells me differently.

However, I beg the Minister of Finance to consider very seriously the necessity for these several measures—a return to a floating exchange rate, the exercise of control over the inflow and outflow of capital, selective price controls to control the cost-push type of inflation, and eventually some measure of control over the direction of investment in this country, so that he or some successor will be able to present to the people of Canada a more hopeful and optimistic budget than the minister has been able to present in any of the many many budgets he has presented during his short term of office.

Resolution agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The house again in committee of ways and means on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Excise Act.

EXCISE TAX

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Act and to provide among other things:

1. That effective December 1, 1967, the duty of excise on spirits distilled in Canada be increased from thirteen dollars to fourteen dollars and twenty-five cents per proof gallon.

2. That effective December 1, 1967, the duty of excise on Canadian brandy be increased from eleven dollars to twelve dollars and twenty-five cents per proof gallon.

3. That effective December 1, 1967, the duty of excise on all beer or malt liquor be increased from thirty-eight cents to forty-two cents per gallon.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, on this resolution there are a few remarks I should like to make in respect of what I consider has taken place with regard to the price of spirits over the past few years and what I consider to be a quite improper practice on the part of the liquor control boards. I refer to the difference between what must be done by the federal and provincial governments when they wish, in effect, to increase the tax on bottled spirits and bottled beer. Under the provincial liquor administrations it is merely as a result of an administrative order that prices are hiked 25 cents, 15 cents, or whatever it may be. Usually it is said to be on the basis of increased costs. No one, of course, is fooled by that sort of transparent justification for a good number of the increases over the past few years. We know it is merely a desire by the provincial administration to take more and more in the way of taxation from this field. An administrative order by a liquor control board, when it is not fully justified by increased cost or by an increased tax at the federal level, can thus put in force a tax without approval by the legislature.

The federal government, however, in order to increase its revenues from wines and spirits must pass amendments to the Excise Tax Act. A certain practice has developed as a result of what the minister proposes. There have been almost immediate increase in prices by some of the liquor control commissions on the stock they had on their shelves and which had already been cleared from bond. This is something which someone in private business would refer to as unconscionable windfall profits and it is something which we always complain about as a result of any tax action that is taken by the government. Somebody immediately hikes the price on stock which is not actually being covered by the increase in the tax. I say this as a reflection on the action taken by a number of the liquor commissions across the country.

There is another aspect of this matter involving the activities of some of the liquor commissions which in effect act as blenders and bottlers. The question arises whether they shall be deemed under the Excise Tax Act to be manufacturers. This is something which I believe the minister should consider because it does affect the level of revenue. Certainly in this case the excise tax should be leviable at a different level from that on which it is now calculated. We see more and more of the liquor control boards in effect importing in bulk and blending, mixing and bottling. These people have an advantage over the people who bring their spirits in by the case. I wonder whether the minister has considered this point, because I believe it is an area in which some examination might be made.

[The Assistant Deputy Chairman.]

I think I have said all I want to say with regard to this type of taxation, because the same principles apply in some ways with regard to both liquor and tobacco. I was glad that the hon. member for Norfolk discussed the question of smuggling. In respect of spirits which the old people all know of as moonshine, it becomes very, very—

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: What is it?

Mr. Lambert: I do not know whether the minister has ever had any experience in this regard or whether I have even tasted any, but I suppose that somewhere along the way I have tasted it.

An hon. Member: You didn't go blind.

Mr. Lambert: It is my understanding that some of this product is alleged to be very good. In any event the minister will realize that the temptation becomes very great to indulge in the illegal manufacture of spirit alcohol and it is difficult to control this. A market is readily available. The minister does not have to go back too far to know the situation. When he was with the Department of Trade and Commerce I am sure he was aware that the Department of National Revenue was having very great difficulty controlling the smuggling of cigarettes from the United States into Canada, particularly into the province of Quebec where the level of provincial tax makes it very attractive and where there is a ready market.

We just cannot get into this type of situation because not only is it self-defeating in that revenue is not being obtained but the expenditures for control become so great. It was my hope that we would have all the bills in respect of these matters today. I am sorry the minister is not able to produce them because I hoped that all the bills resulting from the resolutions except those in respect of the Kennedy round could be dealt with at this time. We have discussed these matters during debate and the fact that we find some of the tax increases repugnant has been made known. Saying so again I do not think will improve the situation.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Resolution agreed to.

The Chairman: We will now consider the resolution concerning income tax which is to be found in Votes and Proceedings for Thursday, November 30.

Mr. Lambert: I wonder whether we could do the customs tariff resolutions first as they are rather minor ones?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am in the hands of the committee but I had thought that members would prefer to deal with all the customs tariff matters at the same time rather than the inconsequential amendments I brought forward in June and then the others I tabled in connection with the Kennedy round.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, but there are some here.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, that is right, but I would have preferred to have them all together in one bill. I am in the hands of the committee, but I really do not see much advantage in passing just those few I brought forward in June without dealing with them along with the Kennedy round resolutions which I tabled later. I would prefer to do it this way and I think this would make possible a better discussion.

Mr. Lambert: There is just one observation I should like to make. It was my hope that we could deal with the June customs tariff amendments and those which appear at page 6 of Votes and Proceedings for November 30. These are the ones in respect of the imposition of additional duties on wines and spirits and are the ones to which I referred.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I understand what you mean.

Mr. Lambert: We could consider the ones in respect of the Kennedy round as something else entirely.

Mr. Sharp: Very well. Mr. Chairman, perhaps you would call the customs tariff items of June 1 and those of November 30. I would be very happy to deal with them now.

The Chairman: The house in committee of ways and means on certain proposed resolutions to amend the customs tariff as noted in Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, June 1, 1967.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. Resolved, that Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 20925-1, 21045-1, 22001-1 and the heading thereto, 22002-1 and the heading thereto, 22003-1 and the heading thereto, 26325-1, 40938-1, 42761-1 and the heading thereto, 42762-1 and the heading thereto, 44043-1, 44047-1, 47600-1, 56400-1 and 69315-1, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of those items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

Item 3805-1 agreed to.

Customs tariff-15640-1. Tequila, per gallon of the strength of proof; British preferential tariff, $5.00; most favoured nation tariff, $5.00; general tariff, $10.00; and in addition thereto, under all tariffs, $9.00 per gallon of the strength of proof.

When the goods specified in this item are of greater or less strength than the strength of proof, the measurement thereof and the amount of duty payable thereon shall be increased or decreased in proportion for any greater or less strength than the strength of proof.

Mr. Lambert: I should like to make one comment in regard to the customs tariff resolution of June 1 in respect of item 15640-1. I thought perhaps a quick tab name for this tariff proposal might be the "tequila" item. There was a reduction in the tariff but if we look at the resolution put before us on November 30 we find that the tariff on tequila has gone up. This tariff item on tequila could be referred to as being in a yo-yo position. Outside of that one item I do not wish to make further comment.

Mr. Lewis: It is like the difference between sobriety and inebriation, up or down.

Item agreed to.

Items 20925-1, 21045-1, 22001-1, 22003-1, 26325-1, 35240-1, 40938-1, 42711-1, 42761-1, 42762-1, 44043-1 agreed to.

Customs tariff-44047-1. Aircraft engines, when imported for use in the equipment of aircraft:

When of types or sizes not made in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

On and after July 1, 1968: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Mr. Lambert: Ever since I have been in the house, at least once a year we have dealt with the customs tariff on aircraft engines which is shown as item 44043-1. Perhaps we could have some finality in respect of this item. I have asked about this in the past and have been furnished with various explanations, some good and some not so good. Could the minister indicate some finality in this regard or are we going to have to deal with this item from now to the year 2000?

Mr. Sharp: I am not sure whether I am able to answer this question satisfactorily; therefore I will not try.

Item agreed to.

Items 46241-1, 47600-1, 56400-1, 69315-1 agreed to.

Resolution No. 1 agreed to.

Resolutions 2, 3 and 4 agreed to.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could ask the minister for some explanation in respect of paragraph 14 shown in Votes and Proceedings for November 30 under customs tariff. Paragraph 14 states that customs tariff changes are deemed to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said resolution imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day and before January 1, 1968, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before December 1, 1967.

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps I had better ask one of my officials to come down to help me on this technical matter. Possibly in the meantime we could go on to something else.

Mr. Lambert: Subject to that explanation we could carry the two resolutions.

The Chairman: Shall this resolution carry?

Mr. Lambert: Subject to the explanation.

Resolution agreed to.

The Chairman: We will now proceed to the resolution to amend the customs tariff as listed in Votes and Proceedings for Thursday, November 30, 1967.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, while we are waiting for the officials, would it be possible to stand these resolutions and go on to the income tax resolution?

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we stand the resolutions on the Customs Tariff and proceed with the resolution on the Income Tax Act?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: House in committee of ways and means on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Income Tax Act. The text of this proposed resolution is appended to the notice paper of Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, November 30, 1967.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1968 and subsequent taxation years, in addition to the income tax otherwise payable by an individual under the Income Tax Act, a special surtax be payable equal to the lesser of

(a) 5% of the amount of the basic tax as determined under section 33 of that act in excess of $100, or

(b) $600.

2. That for the taxation years commencing after November 1968 a corporation shall during the 12 months period ending 2 months after the close of each taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(a) on or before the last day of each of the 12 months in that period an amount equal to one-twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(b) on or before the last day of the month ending 3 months after the close of each taxation year the remainder of the tax payable on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year and that for the taxation year commencing in the period after and that for the taxation year commencing in the period after November 1967 and before December 1968 a corporation shall during the 10 months period ending 2 months after the close of its taxation year pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(c) on or before the last day of each of the 10 months in that period, an amount equal to one-tenth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(d) on or before the last day of the month ending 3 months after the close of its taxation year the remainder of the tax payable for the year at the rate for the year.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as the house knows, the first paragraph of this resolution proposes a special 5 per cent surtax on individuals, which is imposed on the amount of an individual's basic tax in excess of $100.

All those whose basic tax is less than $100 will be exempt, and the tax will not exceed $600.

For the benefit of hon. members who may not be fully acquainted with these terms, it might be suitable to define what the basic tax is. It is defined in section 33 of the Income Tax Act and is used in the computation of the abatement to make room for provincial taxes. It was also used in the calculation of the tax reduction introduced in 1965. It was used in computing the 20 per cent tax reduction for those with very low incomes introduced in 1966, and it is not disturbed by the present proposal.

Basic tax is income tax as computed on taxable income using the graduated rate schedule. This tax is computed before making the abatement on account of provincial taxes and before deducting the 20 per cent reduction with a maximum of $20 introduced in 1966. It does not include the old age security tax, and it is after deducting the 20 per cent dividend tax credit and before deducting any foreign tax credit. Essentially, it is the graduated rate schedule applied to taxable income, and before the abatements for provincial taxes.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister a question? Could the minister explain to the members of the committee the reasons—I am sure there must be some and perhaps in my stupidity I cannot understand them—for the ceiling of $600 of which the minister speaks. In other words, the maximum increase which any person will have to pay is $600. There may not be many people in that income bracket, but surely they are precisely the people who can most afford to pay. I wonder whether the minister could explain this.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the reason for putting on the maximum here was exactly the same reason for putting on the maximum when we applied the process in reverse. When the tax was reduced in 1965, we provided that it would not be reduced by more than $600. So when we put a surtax on—this is not a change in the graduated scale of taxes; it is additional to the amount of tax—it was felt that if the process worked in one direction it should work in the other. It was not our intention in 1965 to benefit the rich by reducing their tax by the whole of the deduction from the basic tax. So when we came to apply the surtax we said we should apply the same principle in reverse and not apply this surtax as if it were just an ordinary increase in the graduated rates of tax. That is basically the reason why the government applied the principle in both directions, when we reduced it and when we increased it.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, it is a fact, is it not, that practically all the reduction made in 1965 was brought back in the budget of 1966?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, that is quite true. But when we did reduce the tax we neutralized the effect in 1966. When we went in the other direction we applied the same principle as we had when we made the reduction in the amount of basic tax.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, since the minister has given his explanation I shall make my comments on the resolution at this time. I did not participate in the budget debate and I am not going to make a budget debate speech now. I have one or two comments to make in addition to those which my colleagues have made with regard to the necessity of imposing taxes and the type of taxes that have been imposed.

I would like to say something about what I believe to be a little bit of nonsense that has been bandied about with regard to the position taken by the members of the New Democratic party, and why we could not possibly support their subamendment. They have taken the position that the minister has completely abandoned the Carter report. As a matter of fact, some of the members of the New Democratic party called for a wholesale implementation of the recommendations of the Carter report. I do not think too many of them were aware of all the recommendations contained in that report because they could not possibly endorse some of them before their so-called supporters. If they did, they would have their hides taken off by their supporters.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: You know that?

Mr. Lambert: I have certainly had representations from the same type of voter who feels that he does not want things like unemployment benefits and other items deemed to be income in accordance with the Carter report; he wants them carefully kept out.

Not all of the representations requested by the minister in connection with the Carter report have been made. Not all of the provinces have replied. There has been no white paper published, so the house has not had an opportunity to discuss a government white paper on the Carter proposals. Yet we are told that in this particular budget we should have implemented holus-bolus the recommendations in the Carter report.

Mr. Lewis: No one said that.

Mr. Lambert: That statement appeared time and time again in the speeches of the members of the New Democratic party, and that is certainly their attitude.

Whether or not the minister has abandoned the Carter report is for him to say; I am not going to speak about what he is going to do. However, I will say that having attended the deliberations of the Canadian Tax Foundation, at which were tax lawyers, tax accountants and economists, many of whom support the N.D.P., I think the report merits far more study than it has been given up to now. Anyone who dares suggest that the report should have been implemented, in whole or in part, in this budget is being completely naïve. As a matter of fact, this to me is a dangerous attitude to adopt.

I have been trying, Mr. Chairman, to get the minister to refer the Carter report to a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons before the government commits itself to a white paper. I have gone through the deliberations of the tax foundation earlier in November and I am more than ever convinced that I am right in this suggestion. There is a wide divergence of opinion at the academic and professional tax lawyer and tax accountant level. Some very prominent tax accountants and tax lawyers advocate, for example, a capital gains tax. Others are quite in favour of the principle of integration. Others are in favour of the removal of the depletion provisions for the extractive industries, and just as strong views are held the other way.

I would put it to the minister and to the members of this committee that there is no crushing need to implement the provisions of the Carter report. The inequalities in our taxation system have been there for a long period of years. It took a lot of time to determine their exact nature and for the royal commission to make up its mind on the kind of system it was going to recommend. We know the commission based itself on a particular system of taxation advocated by some economists from Chicago, and these questions have been kicking around for some time.

I think it is certainly open to question whether the commission has fastened upon a tax system that was primarily designed for the United States economy, a capital accumulating economy, and has decided to impose it upon the Canadian economy which is far from capital accumulating but is actually a capital borrowing economy.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I again put it to the minister as forcefully as I can that some members of this house should be appointed to a joint committee with members of the other place. The other place is eminently suited for the long and deliberative study that is required for the consideration of the Carter report and the submissions which have been made to the government. Then this house will be able to make up its mind and in the end we will have a much better result. The government is going to take a certain position for political reasons, and the white paper will commit the government to certain courses of action.

There is no such thing, Mr. Chairman, as being partially in favour of a capital gains tax. I could use another simile and say there is no such thing as being a little pregnant. One is entirely sold with this idea or not. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will reconsider the position and that, in light of certain events which are now taking place and which will take place in the future, the house will be given the opportunity to appoint members of all parties to a joint committee to study the Carter report, instead of the government publishing a white paper first. That is all I have to say with regard to this resolution.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I was going to rise in any case to repeat the very strong objections of the members of this party to the measures contained in this resolution, but perhaps I may take a minute or two to answer the strictures directed against the members of this party in connection with the Carter report.

My hon. friend from Edmonton West is wrong in suggesting that any one of us asked the minister to implement the Carter report now holus-bolus. What we said—and I am not going to retract what we said for one moment—was that we were in favour of the principles of the Carter report. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I do not qualify that statement by reference to any particular recommendation as far as I know and understand it, and I hope I know and understand most, if not all, of the recommendations.

I was fully aware when I spoke, as were my colleagues when they spoke, that the minister had not yet completed his studies of the Carter report. I cannot put my hand on Hansard for November 30 so I am going to speak from memory, and no doubt the minister will correct me if I misrepresent him. But what the minister said on that day was this. As I recall, he cited four objections that have been raised to the Carter report and intimated—he did not explicitly state—that he agreed with them. Those four objections were made by what I call the vested interests whom the Carter report was trying to get into the taxation net.

The minister then went on to say, according to my recollection of his remarks, that as far as the government were concerned they were not going to implement the Carter report but would merely amend and revise our present taxation system in what they thought were appropriate ways. In other words, what the minister said was that as far as the basic principle of the Carter report was concerned, which is that all purchasing power from whatever source, whether coming from what we now call income, or transfer payments, or benefits, or from capital gain, that came into the hands of a Canadian citizen, either individual or corporate, subject to the integration of taxes, was to be regarded as taxable.

• (4:30 p.m.)

That is the principle we accept, Mr. Chairman, and it is the principle that the minister rejected, as I understand the situation. We were, of course, not naïve enough to think that the minister should bring in an entire restructuring of the tax system immediately. What we did say to him, and what I say to him without any qualification again today, is that if he was desperately in need of revenue before next spring then he ought to have imposed other taxes. He ought to have immediately removed the concessions to the extractive industries. I shall have something to say in a moment about the absurd position which the minister took. In fact, it is suggested that quite possibly he would have made more out of removing the concessions I mentioned than he could out of increases in the personal income tax. This is what we said, and I do not withdraw from that position for one moment. This is where the money is, and this is where he should have gone. I oppose this resolution, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my colleagues as well as myself. Others may well take the opportunity to tell you this themselves.

I believe that this increase in income taxes is unfair, is unnecessary and in its economic consequences is bad. I do not know why one needs any more reasons to oppose it. It falls on the working people of this country. This attempt to equate the exemption of the first $100 of basic tax with the ceiling of $600 at the other end seems to me a kind of cynical illogic that we should not be willing to accept. In fact, it is a kind of sophistry which is intended to throw sand in people's eyes. The fact is that the exemption of the bottom $100 will mean some people will be exempted from paying an additional $5, that is, 5 per cent on the basic tax of $100. The limit of $600 for any person having an income of about $30,000 or more, as I have calculated, will mean anywhere from $100 to $400 or more. So far as I am concerned, you do not do justice by offsetting $400 or $500 at the top, for the person who can well afford the money, against $5 at the bottom.

This is typical of the justice that I have witnessed in this house, and when I was not in this house, which is often meted out to our people—the equality of one horse to one rabbit, and that is not equality. You do not achieve equity by removing $5 at the bottom, which the rich guy also gets because his first $100 is not taxed either under this proposal, when in addition to that he gets an exemption on anything over $600 which he would have had to pay.

The minister tells us in a soft voice that the reason for this is that in 1965 when there was a reduction of 10 per cent, if I remember correctly, there was a limit of $600 at that level so now he feels morally obliged to have the $600 ceiling when he increases the tax. What nonsense this is. What utter, unmitigated rubbish it is. Of course the other limit was justified.

Mr. Sharp: Why?

Mr. Lewis: Because the people who pay more taxes at that level can afford to continue to pay more taxes. In any tax system in any society the important thing so far as the individual is concerned is what he has left, not what he pays. If I may bring in a personal note, I recall when I was national secretary of the C.C.F. and getting the amount the C.C.F. could afford to pay; I paid very little tax and I was left with little.

When I resumed the practice of law I paid much more in taxes but I was still better off. As I say, the important thing is not the amount a person pays but the amount he has left. It was right to establish a $600 limit at the time taxes were reduced because the person at the top could afford to pay more. It is inequitable, it is unjust, it is unfair, it is anti-social so far as I am concerned, to establish a $600 limit when you increase taxes. The person making $50,000 or $60,000 a year—there are not many, but there are some—can afford to pay $1,000 or $1,200 in additional taxes much more easily than the ordinary worker can afford to pay even $1 per week more in taxes.

The increased taxes to which I have referred would not affect the normal living of the wealthy person, whereas an additional $50 for the ordinary working man means cutting down on the necessities of life for his family. When you add to that the increased cost of cigarettes and beer, which are the ordinary working man's luxuries, then you hit him very hard indeed. This is why we oppose this measure. This is why I do not accept this sophistry in respect of the $600 limit. I cannot think of any other reason for this move than that the minister wanted to be kind to the people whom he hopes will buy his bonds. These are the people who have the money with which to buy his bonds. We cannot, under any circumstances, support such a proposition.

The budget is also unnecessary, Mr. Chairman. I do not, for the life of me, see why the minister had to bring down this budget on November 30. Do you know how much the minister will raise in the remaining part of this fiscal year? He will get about $25 million out of the increase in income tax and a total, if I remember correctly, of some $40 million or $45 million including the other taxes on tobacco, beer and spirits. If the minister suggests to this committee that an additional $25 million for the remainder of this fiscal year even begins to touch his problem, he would be less intelligent than I sincerely believe him to be. He will make no such statement. He knows quite well the revenue he will raise between now and next March or April when his regular budget would be presented will be, in terms of the size of our budgets, peanuts. It will not even affect his money market position. You are not going to affect anybody by getting $25 million in possible revenue when you think in terms of a total picture of $9 billion or $10 billion. You are not going to persuade anyone there is any real difference, and therefore the change is unnecessary at this time.

All of this could have waited until the spring and until the minister had an opportunity of completing his study of the Carter report. At that time he could have informed parliament of what he wanted to do in relation to the complete picture. He could have corrected the many inequities in the present tax laws and closed up many of the holes by means of which people avoid taxes and evade them, at least, avoid them within the bounds of the law as they have learned to do. He could have plugged up the extensive holes in connection with expense accounts which are deducted from taxable income. In that situation the minister could have told us what other revenues or taxes he required for his purposes. He could have waited until spring rather than giving a Christmas present to the ordinary working people of Canada of an additional 5 per cent surtax. This is a mean thing to do when it is unnecessary.

However, the minister thought it necessary, Mr. Chairman, in order to raise a measly $25 million for the remainder of this fiscal year. He thought it necessary because he wants to slow down the economy. His purpose is to increase unemployment. His manner of dealing with what he calls the inflationary pressure is to produce what is known in the fancy language of economists as more slack in the economy. This really means more slack in the belly of the working man. What he wants is more unemployment or he would not have brought down this totally unnecessary budget or this unfair surtax of 5 per cent. The minister is deliberately aiming at slowing down the economy and cutting down aggregate demand through taking money from those who spend their money in the consumer market and are incapable of saving for investment purposes. He wants to cut down that aggregate demand in order to slow down the economy, to increase unemployment, in the hope that increased unemployment will bring down prices. That is a questionable hope.

• (4:40 p.m.)

We do not live in that kind of classical economy any more where a larger dose of unemployment will necessarily bring down prices. Wages are much less flexible now because they are embodied in collective agreements. They do not come down quickly, and I do not believe they should come down quickly; let me make that clear. The labour unions have considerable power and they use that power for the benefit of the workers they represent. I believe it is right that that should be so.

Prices in the economy are frequently administered and controlled, not necessarily by cost pressures but by other factors which have nothing to do with costs and which have nothing to do with the public welfare. There is no guarantee that an increase in unemployment which the minister is after in this budget will reduce the pressures on inflation that the country is now faced with. In my opinion and in the opinion of my party it is wrong to have a policy that is directly aimed to increase unemployment. The minister's present policy is aimed to do just that. I see no other explanation for the tax increases which the resolutions that were dealt with a few minutes ago and the present resolution contain. Their acceptance will reduce the rate of growth of the economy and increase unemployment from the present level of roughly 5 per cent to 7 or 8 per cent in the next number of months.

Let me remind the committee, as I respectfully tried to remind the house, that when we increase unemployment across the country we do not increase it evenly. Ontario, Alberta and Saskatchewan, to name three provinces, will be faced with unemployment increases that will be below the national average; Quebec, the Atlantic provinces and British Columbia probably will face increases in unemployment that will be away above the national average. And if that is serving national unity, I do not understand the meaning of simple English words. At this time in Canadian history, to undertake an economic policy that may increase unemployment in one of the provinces that is concerned and deeply concerned with our search for unity is to take a thoughtless and reckless action in terms of the future of this country.

If you increase unemployment across the country as a whole by 2 per cent you will increase it east of Ontario by 4 or 5 per cent. This distortion has always been a fact in the economic history of this country. Other countries experience similar distortions. Every time you increase unemployment generally you increase it in the disadvantaged areas in greater proportion than you increase it in the areas which have enjoyed a comparative advantage. This follows logically, mathematically and historically, and this is wrong. It is wrong to burden Quebec and the Atlantic provinces with higher levels of unemployment than they now suffer from. It is wrong in social terms and in terms of the future of this country. We cannot and we do not intend to let this resolution pass without continuing our protests as firmly and as strongly as we can. We protest that the tax the minister has imposed is unfair, unnecessary and wrong at this time.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I comment on the statements which have been made by the hon. members for Edmonton West and York South. The hon. member for Edmonton West repeated his suggestion that the Carter commission recommendations should be referred to a committee of the house for study. I gave serious consideration to this possibility and in a way I am inclined to agree with the hon. member. It will be very difficult to bring down proposals that will satisfy public opinion in this country. Tax reform is one of the most difficult and delicate matters that any government must deal with. Perhaps it would have been easier to remove that responsibility from our shoulders and place it on the shoulders of a committee. Nevertheless, I believe that the government has a responsibility that is very special with regard to the raising of revenues, and I did not think it was in accordance with the traditions of our system of government for the government to say to a committee of the house: Please tell us how to reform the tax system. It is perfectly all right to ask a committee to make suggestions. My hon. friend's government asked a committee to advise the government on suitable methods of tax reform. But I believe that any proposals which are brought before the house must be brought by the government itself.

I also felt that if we were to refer the Carter commission recommendations to a committee the government would only get another advisory report. We had already received a very thorough, indeed, a monumental study on tax reform and we had asked the public to comment on the report. I felt that the time had come for the government itself to bring before parliament a scheme of tax reform.

I recognize, as the hon. gentleman said, that once we have made our recommendations we are to some extent committed to them in the sense that once I have brought down a budget I am committed to it, since the government stands or falls—

Mr. Lewis: Unless you change your mind.

Mr. Sharp: Unless we change our minds, that is right.

Mr. Lambert: The minister's predecessor in office pulled back from his budgets.

Mr. Sharp: That is right. This is always possible. To a certain extent I believe that our traditions are changing. I believe it is now recognized that some of the old traditions which say that governments must never alter the proposals that they make with regard to legislation, that they must stand or fall on every comma or period, have now been surpassed by modern developments in our parliamentary institutions.

Mr. Lewis: They have been surpassed by simple common sense.

Mr. Sharp: By simple common sense, I quite agree. As my hon. friend from Edmonton West knows, the minister watched the bill with respect to the Bank Act being altered and improved as the result of the work of the committee. I expect that the white paper on tax reform that we bring forward will improve as the result of the study that will be given to it by the parliamentary committee and I hope that the government will be ready to accept amendments that appeal to it as being improvements and that it will not stand on the principle that since the government has not proposed the amendments they are not therefore good. I hope that this is how it will work out and I believe that this is a superior method of dealing with the subject. But my hon. friend from Edmonton West no doubt sincerely believes that his method of dealing with the matter is superior. He may turn out to be right—

Mr. Lambert: I want parliament to have more authority than the government has.

Mr. Sharp: I think that not only will parliament be asked to approve of the government's proposal but that there will be an opportunity, during the discussion of the white paper, for the independent views of members of the house on all sides to be expressed. This is a most difficult matter and no study that I have ever engaged in during my long experience in government has taxed my intellectual capacity more than trying to understand the implications of the Carter commission recommendations, to say nothing of improving on them.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Turning now to the remarks of the hon. member for York South I should like, before I say anything else, to correct the impression that was left by his leader with the Canadian public. I listened one day to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam talking on the program "The Nation's Business". He was talking about the budget. As I listened to him I became surprised that he would make such a misleading statement about the incidence of the surtax. As I recall, he said the surtax would not increase beyond an income of $12,000 a year, creating the impression that we were increasing our tax by 5 per cent of the income of an individual and not by 5 per cent of the tax. I do not believe the hon. member meant to mislead, but he certainly did mislead many people who listened to that program.

Mr. Lewis: I did not hear the program but I am sure the minister is not suggesting that people were misled deliberately. He agreed that the $12,000 figure he mentioned is perfectly accurate in relation to the basic tax, and 5 per cent with a limit of $600 means that the limit on the basic tax is $12,000. Is it not true that this misstatement was in a context which could not have been misinterpreted? This is what I have been given to understand. I am told that instead of saying income tax my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam left it as income.

Mr. Sharp: I do not think the leader of the N.D.P. meant to mislead but it was clear within the context of what he said that at this relatively low level of income in our modern society the ceiling applied.

I would like to correct this impression and say that the ceiling applies at an income of $32,060 where the basic tax is $12,100. To put this in perspective, the number of taxpayers who benefit from the ceiling is about 20,000 and the amount of revenue involved is very small.

An hon. Member: They are the ones who can afford it.

Mr. Sharp: That may be so. The reason there was a limit on the amount of the reduction in 1965 and the reason why, in reversing the process, we have placed a ceiling on the amount of the increase is the very rapid acceleration of a surtax on the basic tax. It changes drastically toward the top; it makes very little change at the bottom but it makes a tremendous change at the top.

I was listening to the hon. member for York South extolling the virtues of the Carter commission and when I recalled what the commission had recommended by way of alterations in the schedule of income tax I could not help being surprised by the stand he is taking today. I recall that the top marginal level of tax under the Carter commission is to be 50 per cent. I am surprised he should agree so wholeheartedly to that principle when he objects to there being a ceiling of $600 on the surtax which does not apply until you get to an income of $32,060. The commission recommends that we should so alter our tax schedule as to reduce the marginal rate from 80 per cent to 50 per cent in some cases. This he approves, though at the same time he objects to our efforts to avoid distortion of the present schedule of rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Will the minister now permit a question? Is he afraid of questions?

Mr. Sharp: No.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Does the hon. gentleman not agree that he is misrepresenting the recommendation of the Carter commission, because the 50 per cent level was to include capital gains as well as income from other sources? Has he not read that part of the report?

Mr. Sharp: I am not misrepresenting either the Carter commission or, I hope, anyone else. The fact of the matter is that the marginal rate of tax was to be reduced to 50 per cent not to compensate for the addition of capital gains but because it was believed that the present rate of tax interfered with incentive. I am surprised, as I say, that the hon. gentleman should at one and the same time be supporting this principle and objecting to our avoiding distortion of the present rates.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What the Carter commission said was quite different. They pointed out that in the upper income brackets the recipients gained more through capital gains than from ordinary income and that is why they were placing the level where they did.

Mr. Sharp: The commission is clear on this point. If earnings or income from salary or wages are high it is quite likely the recipient receives no capital gains whatever. At one time I happened to be in private business where my income was fairly high and I found myself in just that position. If the Carter commission recommendations had been accepted my rate of tax would have gone down, and that is what the commission meant to happen.

Mr. Lewis: Exactly. May I ask the minister a question, because he is really, if I may suggest this without offence, making a kind of high school debating point?

Some hon. Members: What about you?

Mr. Lewis: The minister is fully capable of answering for himself. I have greater respect for him than have his supporters. He does not need help in defending himself.

I am not sure whether the 50 per cent limit would be permanent. I am ready to accept it now, certainly. But is it not a fact that the Carter commission calculations, if adopted, would produce at the 50 per cent limit more revenue than is presently derived at the 80 per cent level, that if all the income from the various sources is integrated the consequent revenue will be at least as great as it is now? The point we are urging on the minister concerns the equity of the base for taxation.

Mr. Sharp: I really do not want to enter upon that kind of debate with the hon. gentleman. I attribute to him as much intelligence as he attributes to me.

Mr. Lewis: What a mistake.

Mr. Sharp: The Carter commission, when adopting the idea of a comprehensive tax base in which all forms of income were included, had in mind that total revenue from this system would be about the same as formerly or maybe a little more. The point I was making—and the hon. gentleman has not satisfied me about it—is that in so far as income from salary is concerned a rich man would be better off under the Carter recommendations than under the present tax system. This is undeniable, and this is what Carter intended. There is a very close relationship between personal income tax rates and his proposed method of taxing corporations. However, I shall not pursue this argument any further. I wished to make the point because I am sure the hon. member wants to be consistent in his arguments, as I hope to be consistent in mine.

Mr. Lewis: And I still am.

Mr. Sharp: May I pass now to a further point which he made, one which has been put forward by other members of his party, namely the allegation that this budget was intended to create unemployment. I can only say to the hon. member for York South that I know of only one government in the world which has deliberately tried to do this and that is the government of the United Kingdom. It is a government with which I believe he has some sympathy and whose principles he supports. If we want a good example of what not to do, it is that we must not follow those principles, and I do not intend to do so. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that unless we take this ounce of prevention now it is exactly that pound of cure we in this country may face. The purpose of this budget is to prolong our expansion and not get into the kind of difficulties that would force us into the stop-go kind of economy that we in this country have avoided for seven years.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I wish to mention one other point, coming back to what the hon. member for York South said. This is something I want to say not only about his comments but about the comments of other hon. members. The statement I made on the Carter commission report was very carefully considered. Nothing more is to be read into it than what I said. Each word was very carefully considered. I see from the press that there has been a tendency to say that the government has ditched Carter.

Mr. Orlikow: You have.

Mr. Sharp: My words do not say that. All I recommend to hon. members is that they read what I said and not what the newspapers say I said, and may I point out that they have Hansard available to them.

Mr. Orlikow: It is not what you said; it is what you did.

Mr. Sharp: All I have done is what I have said.

Mr. Orlikow: Exactly.

Mr. Sharp: And when the white paper comes down the house can then judge what the government is going to do about tax reform. What I said was this:

> The government believes that substantial reform is necessary if its revenues are to be raised as fairly as possible and with a minimum of interference with the proper development and functioning of the Canadian economy. I believe that the report of the royal commission will turn out to have been of great value to the government, to parliament and the people of Canada in helping us all to recognize the deficiencies in our present tax system and to devise sensible ways to reform the system.
>
> However, the work we have done within the government, as well as the analyses we have received from others, leads us to the conclusion that while the reforms we will place before parliament and the public in the form of a white paper and ultimately in draft legislation will undoubtedly be influenced by the monumental report of the royal commission, they will be more in the nature of reforms of the existing tax structure rather than the adoption of a radically different approach. They will not necessarily be limited to items which the commission has recommended.

That was what I said and that, I hope, is what parliament will debate.

When I asked the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands the other day whether he agreed with the Carter commission report he said yes, without qualification. I then asked him a special question on a very sensitive matter, and he said he would tax veterans disability pensions.

Mr. Herridge: No, no, no. I won't go for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, if the minister is going to quote me I wish he would quote me in full. I said yes, if they were brought into a tax bracket that would cause them to be taxed, but I think the minister could count those in that category at present on the fingers of one hand because the government has not been all that generous.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I think if the hon. gentleman will examine the question he will see that if these payments were taxable now a great many veterans would pay tax on them. I am quite sure the hon. member for Kootenay West will agree.

Mr. Herridge: Absolutely.

Mr. Sharp: I can recall one other incident, perhaps one of the first incidents in the house arising out of the Carter commission report when the hon. member for Skeena asked a question indicating he believed that the three year tax exemption for mines should be continued. I do not know whether it should be. But when I hear the members of the N.D.P. trying to support the Carter commission in principle because they believe this is a good political thing to do and then individually disagreeing with some of the essential principles of the Carter report, I really do not know where they stand on the matter. As I listened to the hon. member for York South he said, "Yes, I agree in principle with the report but not necessarily with everything in it." That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. Lewis: You are wrong.

Mr. Sharp: I think this represents the view of most people in this house. They are very much in favour of tax reform, as I am, but they do not agree with everything in the Carter report. I believe this is the position of most hon. members in the house. I hope the N.D.P. will agree with this, because I believe that is the position they also should have.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, the discussion was warming up and becoming so interesting that I would willingly have allowed it to go on, but I should like the time to explain why I intend to vote for the minister's bill and say why.

I say immediately that it is not because I find it perfect, and I have heard a good many suggestions that I would willingly support, but I also have heard the minister call for suggestions and criticisms, because he realized better than anyone else in the house that this is a most complicated situation which it is not easy to settle.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is an outline of the reasons why I propose to support the government.

First, I believe it is important inasmuch as I am concerned at least, to state that I have no partisan interest in doing my utmost to bring the government down. On the contrary, I believe it is important to do everything I can to ensure a certain stability to the government. I find the present system of exposing the government to non-confidence motions, one after the other, to have the sword of Damocles constantly hovering above your head, is an inconsistent way of doing things in our advanced world. In view of the complicated problems that have to be settled, the governments should be assured of some stability, four or five years in office, so that they may have the time to arrive at policies, the good or bad results of which can then be observed.

If the government errs, we will have an election campaign during which we will have the opportunity of making them—and the electors—understand the error of their ways, but it seems to me that the tendency to bring down the government every five or six months is futile, childish and out-of-date in the complicated world in which we live.

There is another reason, Mr. Chairman. It is that in the field of finance and taxation, we realize today that the problem is worldwide and complicated, to the point where even an expert like the minister who has spent a lifetime in the field and who is surrounded by experts in the matter, who has met experts in taxation and in international finance of every country of the world, himself recognizes, as he has this afternoon, that he has trouble in finding equitable solutions.

Therefore, if an hon. member—were he the most brilliant, the most intelligent, the most talented, the most experienced—suggested that the solution he offers is absolutely unchallengeable, I would call him presumptuous. All the suggestions which have been made may have some merit but the minister responsible for the administration, in this instance the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), in co-operation with his colleagues of the cabinet, must take the final decision under the system by which we are governed.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I have the feeling, Mr. Chairman, which is shared by many other members, that the hon. Minister of Finance is a victim of a system over which he has no control; he is struggling in a sort of strait jacket conditioned not only by international but intercontinental circumstances and he does his best under such circumstances. In view of the complexity of this problem, of the difficulty to find an absolutely unchallengeable solution, I give the minister and his colleagues the benefit of the doubt. If experience shows that they were wrong, we shall have another election and then we shall have the opportunity to ask them for an accounting.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, I feel it would be advisable to go to the bottom of things, to use the expression of that great man who came here to meddle in matters that were none of his business.

The bottom of things is not merely a gesture of good or bad administration of some government or other. The bottom of things means that we are going through a financial and economic cycle which affects at present every capitalist country of the world, as well as socialist countries. I need not recall what is happening at present in England. The minister, as well as others, have mentioned it earlier. I need not recall either what is happening in France, where open demonstrations and uprisings involving thousands of citizens are taking place, in protest against certain pieces of legislation, such as the reduction of social security benefits enjoyed up to now, and against some other measures.

There is no need for me to evoke the cry "Vive la Bretagne libre" which stems from absolutely obvious economic deficiencies, as well as other French possessions. There is no need for me to evoke here the fact that for months the President of the United States has been calling for an increase of 10 per cent in the personal income tax. Some will tell me that this is due to the war in Viet Nam. That is possible, but it is a fact, and we, any and all of us, can do very little, if anything, to put an end to it.

We are caught in this international whirlpool, we are conditioned by it. I say, therefore, that we must give the government the benefit of the doubt and rally around it to spare our country even more serious economic troubles than those we now suffer.

I repeat the words: Whoever is without sin in this house—to encourage whoever thinks he is infallible in the field of financial reform to get up and tell us so. I think we will then see someone who is unbelievably presumptuous.

So much for that, Mr. Chairman. However, constructive suggestions can still be made. I was told, for example, that we dislike the realization that taxes must be raised and that we must deprive ourselves and tighten our belts. But who among us can say that he has not lived beyond his means in trying to imitate the Americans who live in a style which only a rich country like the United States can afford.

But, anyhow, Mr. Chairman, who among us, once again, can suggest a measure obviously better than the one proposed by the government, with proof and experience to support it? Who among us has, in these financial matters, the experience which the Minister of Finance has with all the years he spent at the service of the government? Who can take advantage of the advice of experts as able as those around him and those he meets when he goes to see the ministers of finance of other countries

Mr. Chairman, this being said, I repeat that there still are things which surprise us. For instance, I am one of those who do not understand very well why something like $17 billion—official figure for the world last year—are still being devoted to manufacturing armaments to kill people, while only $1.75 million is devoted to preventing people from dying of hunger. This is something surprising, and one might be allowed to express his surprise before that state of affairs which is not necessarily Canadian but once again international. I repeat that the problem is international.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Mr. Chairman, I will not mention the difficulties we are experiencing in this country and which on the whole are almost all taxation problems which result from the economic conditions due to what I mentioned earlier. One knows, for instance, that the maritime provinces complain that they are neglected. One knows that if Quebec is talking about separatism, it is mainly because Quebec probably does not enjoy the relative affluence it hoped for. One knows that the wealthy province of British Columbia sometimes complains and toys with the idea of separatism too. One knows that when the provincial premiers come to Ottawa, it is to ask for money, because they never have enough. We also know that our municipalities and school boards are desperate.

Mr. Chairman, I refer again to some basic suggestions, because I see the need to go once again to the bottom of things. I believe—and anyone may say it, even those who endorse the proposal—that the present capitalist world, the leaders and the lords of high finance find comfort and reassurance by shouting "socialism", even when some socialists are proposing measures acceptable to all. By the same token, I think that perhaps some socialists are too prone to curse capitalists, instead of seeking opportunities to sit down and discuss things with them, and afterwards ask the government to implement measures so that the bosses of national and international high finance may proceed of their own accord with this self-reform, before a hungry and deaf people resort to violent rebellion, because it is no use preaching to a hungry man.

Mr. Chairman, it will be said that I exaggerate, but I wish I had the time to mention some facts to prove that such is not the case. I think that, in the field of high finance, there is a lack of co-operation with the Minister of Finance or the government, if you wish. There is insufficient acceptance of the reforms made necessary by conditions in 1967; instead, they will have to be imposed upon them.

Mr. Chairman, when I heard the chorus of boos which greeted the appearance of the Carter report, what my English friends call the true and tried, from private business, I was greatly concerned. I said to myself: In all likelihood, this hurts them, they are concerned with this discernible trend to the left; so I read the Carter report very carefully. I admit that I am not as qualified as other hon. members, but I read it several times, and I said to myself: Even if it may be said that the report will not be fully concurred in, it contains a large number of recommendations which, at least, might give a hard push in the right direction to our economy and our financial system, maybe not toward perfection, since perfection is not of this world, as we all know.

There are other things, Mr. Chairman, which are surprising to us. I think I would agree with my socialist friends—I hope I do not insult the members of the New Democratic party by calling them socialists—who say that the government should have recourse to a greater number of these sources of profit which are now reserved for private enterprise and which could benefit the general public, that the government should try to reserve a certain number of them for itself, or at least try to establish some kind of joint enterprise or force private enterprise, which derives considerable revenue from these sources, to establish priorities with regard to its investments. In fact, a certain severity should be shown private enterprise to make it understand that if it does not willingly respect these exigencies of modern life, it will be forced to do so by circumstances and not, I hope, by violent actions on the part of the population which is beginning to find present conditions extremely trying. The people always find that they are being imposed upon and that the national burden is not borne by everyone equally.

Mr. Chairman, there are other things that amaze me, such as our antiquated tax collection system. The school boards collect taxes, with all the staff and the whole system that is involved; municipalities collect taxes, with all the staff and the equipment required; provincial governments collect taxes, with all the staff and the expensive equipment they need; the federal government collects taxes, and God knows how complicated that system is. Therefore, I am wondering if the time has not come to simplify this a little and to say, for example: The provinces will collect taxes and then, they will make an agreement with the federal government for a distribution of some kind, in order to reduce this army of tax collectors who hound us day and night. I am not referring to those in debt to finance companies which are still more exacting and probably demand their pound of flesh with more cruelty. But all that becomes extremely costly for the taxpayer who is pressed by the school board collector, the municipality, the province or the federal government and all the other agents and who is at the end of his tether.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, when reference is made to adjustments in the financial field and when prime consideration is given to a reduction of government expenditures, as persistently requested by newspapers—I hear the provincial premiers telling their ministers that it is essential to make savings—I wonder whether it is not time to regroup the provinces and make them a little more viable.

One after the other, the members for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland are heard complaining about their provinces being handicapped, abandoned and poor. Would it not be time for those provinces to group together, to pool all their available resources, in order to reduce their administrative costs? Why have four provincial administrations trying to attain the same economic level as Quebec and Ontario? Would it not be advisable for the central provinces to do likewise? Of course, British Columbia will always stand apart, being a rich province, but I feel that it would not be illusory to start serious discussions—there has already been talk about it—to start a serious dialogue in an attempt to reduce the number of provinces; in short, to regroup the provinces considered poor, so that they might pull together, save in their administration and also offer greater economic value when they negotiate loans on the market.

Mr. Chairman, those are all remedial measures which could be suggested. Many others have been put forward. I think the minister would welcome them, all the more so because he has asked for them admitting that, in spite of his experience, the problem is extremely complex for all the countries in the world and that it is not the exclusive concern of the federal government.

I would say that, when such a difficulty arises, we should think about the welfare of our country. When we are not sure of reaching perfection, we should try, at least, to choose the lesser evil. With the best interests of the country in mind, at least in my case, I must vote for this bill, which is probably not perfect, but since I have yet to see anyone showing me something better, I will accept it at this time, with its good points, the sacrifices it calls for, keeping in mind the words of President Kennedy: This is not the time to ask ourselves what our country can do for us, it is the time to ask ourselves what we can do for our country. My country is Canada.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, we in the N.D.P. have made it very clear that we oppose these tax proposals. We have said, and I will return to this point later, that this is the wrong time to increase taxes. A tax increase at a time when we have increasing unemployment can only lead to more unemployment, and for the minister to deny that this action will lead to increased unemployment is a complete contradiction of the facts.

We are opposed to the particular proposals because they are completely unfair. If ever there was a class budget, this is it. This budget is designed to increase the burden of the ordinary taxpayer and let those people who have large incomes get away almost scot free. A 5 per cent surtax will mean that the bulk of the money raised will be from income tax paid by those in the lower or middle income brackets. The provision to which the minister referred relating to a maximum of $600 which can be paid by anyone exempts those people who can most afford to pay increased tax from paying their share. I think the minister said there were 32,000 people in the income bracket that will be required to pay increased taxes to the extent of $600. It may well be that not much money will come in as a result of the 5 per cent surtax collected from these very wealthy people, but the fact is that this sets a very poor example because the ordinary citizen will have to pay the full increased tax while 32,000 wealthy people will have a limit in respect of what they must pay.

The minister said again that he had not rejected the recommendations and basic principles in the Carter commission report. He put on the record again this afternoon what he said earlier. No matter how thin the minister slices the boloney, it is still boloney. The facts are very clear. The minister proposes by this mini-budget to increase the personal income tax and ignore entirely the recommendations of the Carter commission. These recommendations may be accepted at some later date but in light of the situation it is pretty obvious to most of us that the majority of the Carter commission recommendations will be forgotten.

The minister has tried to scare us off by telling us and the Canadian people that we surely do not want unemployment insurance classified as income and therefore taxed. He asks us whether we want veterans benefits classified as income and therefore taxed. He says that surely we do not want these things but he did not say today, though I am sure he will on another occasion, that we do not want members of co-operatives to pay tax on their co-operative patronage dividends.

What the minister is doing in defence of the mining industry, the oil industry and other business interests is chipping away from the basic concept the Carter commission enunciated in respect of its support of the interests of low income bracket group. I do not think it makes any difference whether the minister talks about a tax rate of 50 per cent, 45 per cent or 55 per cent. What the Carter commission stated was that essentially the low and middle income groups in this country were paying an unfair share of the taxes collected while the higher income group is getting away with a limited tax.

What has the minister said about this situation? Has he made one single proposal to plug the loopholes documented so very well by the Carter commission? He has not, and I do not think he will because he represents a constituency made up of people who are in the high income bracket.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, veterans.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister has not said a word about the large number of people in the upper income bracket who do not pay a penny income tax in terms of expense accounts. He does not say anything about the large number of people who are in the position to deduct a very substantial part of their car expenses on the basis of being a business expense whereas the ordinary construction worker who may have to travel 25 miles each way between his home and his job cannot do this because this cost of transportation is not considered a business expense. The minister has not said a word about the number of people who deduct conference expenses. I have in mind a group of doctors who hold annual meetings in different cities and different countries. Recently this conference was held on a ship travelling the Caribbean. The cost of this was a legitimate business expense and deductible for income tax purposes. We have not heard a word about this sort of thing being inherently wrong.

The minister has not said a word about the basic recommendations of the Carter commission. The commission suggested that oil, mining and insurance companies are not paying a fair share of the taxes. The minister tries to create the impression that we are all animals of a strange kind because we think these people should be paying their share of taxes. In the event that the minister has been too busy to read the Toronto newspapers, let me draw his attention to a couple of editorials which appeared this month in the Toronto Star. This newspaper at election time will promote the interests of the Liberal party and urge Canadians to elect Liberal candidates in all parts of Canada. Let us look at what the Toronto Star said about the minister's tax proposals and how he ignored the basic recommendations of the Carter commission. The editorial suggests that he has buried these recommendations but I think he has killed them. This editorial, which appeared in the Toronto Star of December 7, 1967 under the heading "Have The Insurance Firms Won", includes the following paragraph:

> It noted that Canadian insurance companies, with 30 per cent of their business placed abroad, paid $13,800,000 in income taxes to foreign governments. It pointed out in contrast that foreign insurance companies in this country paid no income tax to Canada on life insurance policies written in this country.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The editorial went on to say:

> The 1964 revenues of Canadian insurance companies exceed their expenditure by $90 million. But they paid tax on less than $5 million of that amount.
>
> The report acknowledged that insurance premiums might have to be raised, or policy dividends reduced, if insurance companies were required to pay their fair share of income tax.
>
> But the commission clearly believed that this was wholly acceptable since it would mean a substantial increase in federal revenues and a consequent easing of the tax load on the ordinary taxpayer.
>
> These were reasonable and just proposals, long overdue. Are they now to be discarded by Mr. Sharp because of pressure from the insurance companies?

I think it is obvious that they have been discarded by the Minister of Finance. In an editorial which appeared a few days later on December 11, entitled "Mines Should Pay Fair Tax Share", the Montreal Star said:

> How can finance minister Mitchell Sharp justify his decision to dig new tax revenue out of the ordinary wage earner while continuing to provide special tax privileges to big business—notably the mining industry?
>
> The Carter Royal Commission on Taxation found that mining, along with the insurance and petroleum industries, was a potentially rich source of tax revenue that had long been enjoying unnecessary exemptions.

It is estimated in this editorial that the amount the mining industry would have paid, calculated on 1964 figures, if they had paid the ordinary taxes which all businesses except mining, oil and insurance pay, was somewhere between $133 million and $250 million annually. It is for this reason that we say—and we are not alone in saying it, as I have pointed out—that the minister, despite all his protestations, has killed the basic recommendations contained in the report of the Carter commission.

The minister has ignored another basic recommendation of the Carter commission, namely, that Canada should do what nearly every other modern industrial country has done and implement a capital gains tax. If such a tax were imposed it would bring into the coffers of the Canadian government tens, if not hundreds, of millions of dollars. To the extent that this is not done, and for each year in which it is not done, the ordinary taxpayer is paying substantially more income tax than he should be paying. Yet the minister gets up again and again and says he is not ditching the Carter commission recommendations. I will believe that the minister is not ditching them when he brings in proposals to tax the mining, insurance and oil industries. I do not think I will be in this house long enough—and I expect to be here for some time—to see the Minister of Finance do that, because he believes, as apparently his government does, that those industries which have shall continue to have and those which have not shall pay taxes. That is precisely what the minister has done in implementing the 5 per cent surtax on income and the extra tax on beer and tobacco.

If we take the minister's budget speech together with the speech of the Minister of National Revenue in which he announced very substantial cut-backs in government expenditures for next year, we can come to no other conclusion than that there will be substantially more unemployment next year than there is this year. We reject such a policy. We reject it nationally and even more emphatically in terms of regional welfare and development.

It may not be a very serious matter to booming areas such as Toronto and Vancouver if the government cuts back on its expenditures. But I say to the minister and to some of the members of the official opposition who have been saying, if I understand them correctly, that the fault of the government is that it has not cut expenditures enough, that to impose the kind of cut-backs which the government proposes in the slow growth areas of this country is a disaster.

While contractors may be building new factories, shopping centres, houses and apartment buildings at a record rate in central Canada in the Toronto and Hamilton areas, if you take away government expenditures in the Atlantic provinces there will be nothing left. I was there about a month ago at the invitation of railway workers. At that time I visited Sydney. I cannot remember when I spent a more depressing day, because I heard about lay-offs in the coal mines, in the steel mill, lay-offs of railway workers and longshoremen at North Sydney.

The proposals of the government to cut back expenditures mean that the unemployment situation in our slow growth areas will be of catastrophic proportions in the coming year. We do not agree that government expenditures need to be cut back at all. Certainly I will never agree that government expenditures should be cut back by the meat-axe method which the Minister of National Revenue announced the other day, while there is not the slightest sign of intention by the government to do anything to in any way restrict expenditures in the private sector of our economy.

I remember that when the Minister of Finance brought down his budget last year, I think it was in February, he announced not the cut-backs which we have had announced now but some kind of pause. I remember that the minister announced one specific project that would not be proceeded with. This was a building here in Ottawa which the government had previously agreed was necessary, namely, a building for the National Research Council.

The day after the minister made his speech announcing that pause, the day it was reported in the Ottawa newspapers that the government would not go ahead with this building, in the Ottawa Journal, and I presume in the Citizen too, there was a two-page spread about the new hotel-office building complex within a few blocks of the parliament buildings which Campeau Construction Company Limited was going ahead with. I have no objection to another hotel being built in Ottawa. Perhaps it is needed. But as far as I am concerned we needed the building for the National Research Council a great deal more that we did the Skyline hotel. If we must have restraints, let us have them in respect of those things which are not necessary. We would be somewhat more sympathetic to the minister's ideas on restraints if we thought they would be applied to things we can do without.

At the housing conference which took place the other day, which I think ought not to have been proceeded with if the federal government could not increase the amount of money it was prepared to devote to housing, the premier of Ontario, Mr. Robarts, and the premier of Quebec, Mr. Johnson, made what I thought was a very worth-while proposal. It was not a proposal that would cost the federal government money. It was in relation to houses whose cost, exclusive of land, did not exceed $15,000.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but while the Chair has allowed quite a bit of straying from the resolution now under study I think the hon. member is going a little farther than his predecessors. I therefore ask him to come back to the resolution under study.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I think I am precisely on the paragraph we are studying. I am trying to illustrate why I intend to vote against this 5 per cent surtax on income tax. First of all I am suggesting that we do not need this increase in taxes and, second, that if restraint is needed it should be in more sensible fields. One area in which we do not need restraint is that of housing.

The suggestion of the premiers of Ontario and Quebec was that if the federal government would rebate the sales tax on building materials used to construct relatively modest homes, the governments of Ontario and Quebec would in turn be prepared to rebate from their provincial coffers the provincial sales tax on building materials. They calculated that the federal and provincial rebates would amount to between $1,200 and $1,500. In other words, the two rebates would be sufficient to raise the down payment on a house.

I thought this was a very sensible and modest proposal that the federal government would jump at, but it did not do so. It is opposed to this kind of planning, to this kind of common sense. The federal government wants to charge everybody tax.

I suggest that people who build shopping centres, service stations and luxury office buildings can well afford to pay this tax. Why not? They merely pass the increased cost on to their customers. However, the ordinary citizen who wants to buy a house simply cannot afford this extra tax, so less and less people are buying houses.

This government simply refuses to interfere in the slightest way with the private sector. When there is need for restraint the restraint is focused upon the public sector. The federal government is setting an example which I am sure it hopes the provinces and municipalities are going to follow. If they do, then it means there will be a cutback in the building of schools. This is precisely the area in which the economic council, among others, has said we need to increase our efforts. It has already been announced that there is going to be a cutback in the building of new health facilities. As a matter of fact, the Minister of National Revenue has announced that the money from the health resources fund which goes toward assisting the provinces and universities in the building of medical colleges will have to be stretched out.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member again but this resolution is to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Orlikow: But is that not precisely the point, Mr. Chairman? The minister is increasing income tax because he needs more money. If the government needs more money I am suggesting it should look at the expenditure that is being made. Because I do not like the proposals of the minister for the spending of money I am outlining as briefly and as closely to the resolution as I can the reasons I intend to vote against this measure.

I am not going to go into the arguments presented by the leader of my party, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who referred to items of useless military expenditure such as the Bonaventure, the supporting destroyers and obsolete aircraft. We are pouring not small amounts, Mr. Chairman, but hundreds of millions of dollars into this sort of equipment.

I am suggesting to the Minister of Finance that he should manage the economic life and social needs of the country in such a way that the ordinary citizens are given some equity. Instead of doing this he is indicating clearly that he believes in the maxim that those that have shall continue to have. Until he changes his views he will not get support from the members of this house.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal very briefly and basically with a comment made by the Minister of Finance which rather disturbed me. However, I must say that I do not rise as an authority on fiscal and budgetary affairs; I leave those matters to persons who have given them much more study than I and who have been more successful in forecasting financial affairs than I have in my lifetime.

I rise first of all, Mr. Chairman, because I thought the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West was a good one. He suggested that the Carter report go before a committee of this house or, if I understood him correctly, before a committee of the Senate.

Mr. Lambert: Both.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, or both. I think that is a good suggestion. I have argued for a long time that we should make much greater use of committees in the Senate when dealing with particular problems. These committees have done some good work in the past in such matters as manpower, land use, and so on, and they might well study other current questions instead of our spending large sums of money on royal commissions.

I understand why there is some hesitation on the part of the government in implementing the Carter report, because there have been widespread objections. The farmers organizations of Canada have objected on certain grounds to certain proposals in the Carter report. The beef producers have objected on certain grounds to other proposals. So have the fruit growers and the co-operatives. The national credit union has made strong protests against the effect of the application of certain proposals in the Carter report. Some unions have also objected to the implementation of certain sections in the Carter report, as have some large companies.

These larger companies have mostly been concerned with making representations to protect their write-offs and that sort of thing. However, I cannot understand why they did not have enough common sense and understanding of public relations to bring the plight of other people to the attention of the government when they were making their own representations.

The Royal Canadian Legion has been concerned about some of the proposals in the Carter commission report. As a matter of fact the Legion has written a letter to the Prime Minister explaining the attitude of their members. So have the army and navy veterans and other veterans organizations across the country. I have had a lot of correspondence on this matter and can fully appreciate their attitude to proposals in the Carter commission report that would tax veterans disability pensions. It was largely a comment of the Minister of Finance that stirred me for a moment or two to say a few words.

• (5:50 p.m.)

This has been a matter of great interest to me since I was president of a Great War Veterans Association branch in 1919. I was one of those who helped prepare the resolution which was presented to the government urging exemption from taxation of disability pensions. In that connection I have some extracts from Hansard of the day. I recall the change in the attitude of the government at that time. This matter was brought to the attention of the house on June 13, 1919 by Sir Herbert Ames and Mr. Lemieux. As a result of their representations Sir Thomas White, who was minister of finance at that time, had this to say:

> I am disposed to regard very favourably the suggestion put forward by the two hon. members. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Sir Herbert Ames) had drawn the matter to my attention and it strongly appeals to me. It is not necessary to make any amendment to the resolution, because it is open to us, when the bill is in the committee stage, to extend the exemptions by cutting down and not adding to the burdens of taxation. I will have a note made of the suggestions and get an appropriate amendment to the bill when it is in the committee stage.

Later, on June 24, the same question came before the house and the minister of finance, Sir Thomas White, had this to say:

> I am glad to have the matter drawn to the attention of the Commissioner of Taxation.
>
> I now wish to move an amendment by inserting the following clause immediately before clause 4:
>
> "4. Section five of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:—
>
> (i) Income derived from any pension granted to any member of His Majesty's military, naval or air forces for any disability suffered by the pensioner while serving in any of His Majesty's forces during the war that began in August, one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and the income derived from any pension granted to any dependent relative of any person who was killed or suffered any disability while serving in the said forces in the said war."
>
> I think that meets the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Sir Herbert Ames) and concurred in by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux).

This was agreed to unanimously by the house at that time. When this amendment was passed the government received letters of thanks from the various veterans organizations, including the Great War Veterans Association, for taking this humanitarian approach. I was closely associated during that period in the organization of the Great War Veterans Association. I remember it quite vividly. This principle has been accepted by parliament since 1919 and there has never been any suggestion of varying it until the Carter commission report was made public. This caused concern amongst a number of veterans organizations across Canada including the Royal Canadian Legion, and that is why the president of that organization wrote the Prime Minister a personal letter on this question.

This principle was endorsed by all parties at that time and has been endorsed by all parties until this date. They realize it is a humanitarian principle. Not only has it been endorsed in Canada but it is followed by almost all democratic countries. In order to illustrate this point I want to quote from the World Veteran for July-September, 1967, which contains a report of the proceedings of the international conference on legislation concerning veterans and war victims. When the standing committee on veterans affairs was in Europe in 1966, the members had an opportunity to meet with the executive of this organization and to attend one of their meetings. I was surprised because this organization, which represents veterans from about 50 countries in the world, is doing excellent work in connection with the promotion of world peace. It may interest some people to know that Colonel So-and-so, Major So-and-so and Brigadier So-and-so were sponsoring resolutions directed toward the promotion of peace in the world. Why did they do so? Those who have served in war or have suffered in war are usually the ones who are most concerned about maintaining peace in the future.

As I have said, most countries in the world exempt disability pensions from taxation. This matter came up for discussion again at this conference and the following resolution was passed:

> Considering that war victims pensions are compensation for injuries occurred or for the loss of family members;
>
> Noting that financial means for them are provided by the whole population of a country concerned through taxation;
>
> Recommends governments concerned to decide that the compensation provided by war victims legislation be exempted from tax.

This is the accepted practice. I think we all realize that throughout the years it has been the practice of this government to exempt disability pensioners and their dependents from income tax on their pensions. It has been the policy of the government in connection with workmen's compensation payments. It has been the policy of the government not to tax civilian disability payments or allowances. I urge on the members of this house, therefore, that they continue to support this humanitarian principle that has been in effect in our country since 1919. I can tell you that as a veteran and a socialist you will not get me to support any other policy.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance made a number of assertions with which I want to deal for a few minutes. I may say, first of all, that the minister made what I suggest was a basic distortion of the meaning and intent of the Carter report by trying to indicate that because there may be some details in it about which some may have questions, this means the Carter report as a whole is affected. It may well be that the disability pensions of veterans which are paid as a result of the gratitude of a country for service in war ought not to be included for income tax purposes. I have a strong feeling of agreement with this principle. There are one or two other benefits of a similar kind that ought not to be included in income. It may well be, therefore, that the Carter commission in seeking to put up a completely logical device did as a good many logicians have done many times in history, failed to recognize some of the exceptions which make logic stronger rather than weaker.

But when the minister suggests that these possible exceptions from the general framework of the Carter report justify him in ditching the report as a whole, he is treating the members of this house and the people of Canada as if they were children.

Mr. Sharp: Who ditched the report?

Mr. Lewis: You did.

Mr. Sharp: I did not say that.

Mr. Lewis: This is what the minister said. I do not always agree exactly with the way members of the press report things but it is not an accident, it cannot be an accident, when every report of his speech said the minister has rejected or ditched or jettisoned the Carter report. We are not all imbeciles.

An hon. Member: Read his words.

Mr. Lewis: I see it is six oclock, Mr. Chairman.

• (6:00 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. In order that the house may now proceed to consideration of private members' business it is my duty to leave the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The house will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

SEABOARD FINANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

On the order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Cameron (High Park) for the second reading of Bill S-15, an act to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada.

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, by leave, I move:

That order numbered 7 under the heading "Private Bills" appearing on this day's order paper, for resuming debate on the motion standing in my name for the second reading of Bill S-15, an act to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada, be discharged and the said bill be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for High Park have leave to move this motion?

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker.

Order stands.

CABRI PIPE LINES LTD.

The house resumed from Tuesday, December 5, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-16, to incorporate Cabri Pipe Lines Ltd.—Mr. Jorgenson—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this bill might be said to be the twin of another bill that the house considered the other day, though the bills are not related. When this matter was being discussed in the house previously the hon. member for Skeena and other hon. members of this party objected to the wording of the bill. The company seeking incorporation has sought powers to carry on activities which are wholly beyond its means. As I understand it, the company specifically wishes to build a pipe line between Lloydminster and a storage point in Saskatchewan. In addition to seeking power to build such a pipe line the company, through clause 6 of the bill, seeks the power to carry on a great many other activities. A great many of the powers that are being sought are not needed and I hope that the company will see fit to withdraw its request for some of these powers if it wishes this bill to receive favourable consideration by this house.

I am sure that the sponsor of the bill will agree that a radar chain is very expensive to build and that the $4 million capitalization of this company will not cover the cost of such a chain. I am sure that the company's money will not be enough to cover the construction of one microwave tower. Certainly the company will not build an airport and it will not buy aircraft for that airport. It cannot provide its aircraft with an adequate communications system. In short, Mr. Chairman, by being asked to accede to these powers which are listed in clause 6 members of parliament are being made to look like damn fools. The company obviously will not undertake everything that it seeks power to undertake under clause 6.

I have asked officials of the Senate if they can correct what is becoming an increasing problem. I am informed that representatives of companies such as this one which wish to become incorporated look at a copy of a bill that has recently been passed and adopt many of the provisions which have been included in such former bills. That, I suggest, has happened in this instance.

It is possible that some day this company will gather, process, refine, treat, transmit, transport, store and deliver gases, liquids and solids or any of them, but I very much doubt that in the foreseeable future the company will wish to bring about the expansion of a four inch pipe line. That is a very small pipe line. Its diameter is about one third of that of the pipe line which is now being laid on Kent street in Ottawa. The municipal authorities are forever laying new pipe lines on Kent street. From personal observation I would say that the pipe line on Kent street is an eight inch or a ten inch pipe line. Certainly such a pipe line would carry three or four times the gas that the pipe line which this company is to build will carry.

One thing is clear, Mr. Chairman. If this company wants to build a four inch pipe line I suggest that it must ask parliament for permission to do so. If they do not ask for that permission they will meet with little success in their application. They must say what they want to do.

Having listened to the hon. member for Provencher who is sponsoring this bill I realize that the idea of transferring gas to dry wells from which it can be drawn during peak consumption periods is a worthy one. The idea makes economic sense and seems to be economically sound. I think the company would be well advised to go ahead with some of the projects it proposes but not with all these projects. In my opinion the company is not capable of developing some of these other projects for which they are seeking approval. I refer among other things to the clause which speaks about facilities for communication, the installation of teletype, microwave or television communication systems, and so on. Possession of these rights would mean that the licences could probably be sold as a step toward setting up a third broadcasting system in Canada. I do not suppose this will happen and I am sure the sponsor of the bill will tell us that the company does not have this in mind. I agree that when a licence is granted to a pipe line company it is advisable for the company to ask for assent to arrangements which would provide for certain types of communication to be carried on in connection with its operations but these, I suggest, would fall outside the Broadcasting Act or the Radio Act.

• (6:10 p.m.)

No one can foresee some of the needs which may develop in connection with pipe lines. It may be possible for pipe lines to be fitted with closed circuit television which will allow for the observation of the progress of packaged capsules within a line. But I am sure that no company would establish a closed circuit television operation in connection with a 20-mile four inch gas line between Lloydminster and a dry well hole. If this is indeed the case, I suggest it is time to clean up the bill before us and remove some of the clauses from it.

It is high time these bills were drafted in such a way as to meet the real needs of the company seeking a charter. The legislation before us does not tell us where the operation will start or where it will end. It does not say what the line will carry or what it is intended it shall carry. It says the line may go across interprovincial boundaries. The bill does not say where. It says the line may go across an international boundary, and the nearest international boundary is a long way from the area in which I suppose this line is to be located. The line may carry gas or it may carry oil. All these eventualities are met by the terms of the bill before us.

Many hon. members are interested in a proposition which is still before the house in connection with solids pipe lines. Every one will agree, I think, that solids pipe lines constitute a totally new form of communication which is likely to play a major role in years to come in our economy. Yet this company which proposes to build a 20-mile pipe line has asked for the right to carry solids as well.

Nobody seems to object, though in my opinion the company has very little chance of operating a solids pipe line with the amount of capitalization which is suggested here. I believe it is up to parliament to decide whether companies should be granted these valuable rights. In this case, if the company is a bona fide company, as we are led to believe, I think it should at least remove some of the garbage which is contained in the bill presented to us. I note that the sponsor did not rise here today to tell us he has been in touch with representatives of the company and that they are prepared to have removed from the bill some of the powers they obviously are not likely to use.

What does this company intend to do with a railroad? I am sure the sponsor of the bill will tell us that to his knowledge it does not intend to build one. I believe he would also tell us that to the best of his knowledge it does not intend to build a townsite, or go into the housing business, or buy and lease land, or do all the other things we are being asked to sanction.

If all our legislation were cluttered up with the junk which could be accumulated from other departments not directly concerned we would soon build up the greatest bureaucracy that ever existed. This is not how we handle legislation, and I suggest we follow the same principle in connection with legislation proposed by a private company. I lack sufficient knowledge of the law to explain why the lawyers thought fit to put all this stuff in the bill we are now considering. It certainly sounds stupid. We may get around to reading it all yet. Anyone who looks at it carefully would agree it is stupid, bearing in mind that the avowed purpose of the company concerned is to build a gas line four inches in diameter for a distance of 20 miles.

Some of the powers being requested seem altogether unreasonable. Suppose, for example, this company were to decide to enter upon housing development at the edge of Lloydminster. Despite its limited facilities it would no doubt be able to buy land, raise money, subdivide the land into building lots, establish streets with the necessary sewerage and drainage, electric light, telephone communications and all the other facilities needed to operate a townsite. I do not know what the people in Alberta would do. I am not sure what the people in Lloydminster would do, but I would be very surprised if they were pleased with the federal government granting this company the right to do these things, and I presume these powers cover expropriation and other necessary measures in the establishment of a townsite. I doubt very much that the municipal and provincial governments will agree with this proposition.

• (6:20 p.m.)

It is interesting to look at the names of the directors as given in the bill. They include a petroleum executive, a second petroleum executive, a third petroleum executive, a chartered accountant and a solicitor. I suggest that each of these will not be going into the housing development business. I suggest it is probable they will not set up a telecommunications agency or undertake many of the other things mentioned in the bill.

I ask the sponsor of the bill, why does the company want all these powers? In his evidence to the committee the solicitor for the company said that his clients might want to expand. Their pipe line might run across an international boundary but I understand such a boundary is 300 miles away. The company has no reason to build such a pipe line now, but it might. Certainly everything is possible, Mr. Chairman, but usually it is not very likely. I suggest that the likelihood of these people using the powers granted to them in this bill is in the realm of possibility but not likely in the realm of feasibility, advisability or probability.

I think a matter such as this should be of great concern to all hon. members. Such concern on the part of all members is not usually shown just because one person says it should be shown. But I find that after the general public decides something should be done about a situation and members read the public's comments, they change their approach and become concerned. I suggest that many of these powers in bills such as this are drafted simply because a company lawyer says, "I do not want to overlook anything and it is better to be safe than sorry." There would be no objection to this bill if the company simply said it wanted to build a 20-mile pipe line. It should specify exactly what feasible plans it has for further expansion, and in that case there would be little opposition to the bill.

I was impressed with the comments made by the sponsor of the bill. I was also impressed with the proceedings before the committee. I think everyone agrees that the project which this company has decided upon warrants support. From the company's point of view I suppose it is unfortunate that its pipe line will cross a provincial boundary. Had it not, the company could have gone ahead and built its 20-mile line. It might also have expanded to another well five or ten miles away.

In such a case the company could have justified its expansion program before the Alberta oil board, conservation board, or whatever the name of the provincial agency may be. I understand the provincial board is very strict in its regulations covering gas and oil and that it performs its job efficiently and effectively. I suggest that members of that board would have been very shocked if they found a company appearing before them, one to which they had already granted several charters under other names, asking for permission to build a railroad and establish a town. I suggest that members of the board would be very surprised if they were told the company wanted the right to manufacture electricity and undertake all the various ancillary operations mentioned in this bill. I think there are only three or four companies in Canada which have distribution systems and gas producing wells—

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member has raised a few questions concerning the activities of this company I feel I should reply briefly to some of the points he has raised. I gather that the burden of the criticism and the opposition of the N.D.P. respecting this bill and others of its nature rests on the fact that companies are applying for powers which to the N.D.P. appear to be in excess of their immediate requirements. Without pretending to be an expert in the oil exploration, discovery and refining business, I should like to point out to the hon. member that the nature of the oil business is such that a company really does not know to what extent is must become involved in other ventures in order to provide the type of service it is necessary for it to provide if it is to operate on an economically sound basis.

I point out to the hon. member, as I indicated in my remarks when introducing the bill and as was later substantiated by the witnesses who appeared before the standing committee, that in the initial stages the company intends to ask the National Energy Board for permission to construct this pipe line, but the other powers are being sought because they are the normal powers that could be required depending upon discoveries of oil or gas, the location of the area where they wish to extract oil, and various other factors involved in the production and distribution of gas and oil.

For example, it is quite common for pipe line companies to have their own communications systems and to build air strips so that they have accessibility to the various stations along pipe lines. But in each one of these cases they must apply for permission to the National Energy Board, whose members have the best technical knowledge and information to determine whether the right to build an air strip should be granted. Such companies have to conform to the regulations under the Aeronautics Act and under the Radio Act, but they do not do any broadcasting other than what is required to carry out their own operations. In addition to this the oil and gas conservation boards of the provinces are required to give their consent as well. So although the powers which are being sought here appear to be quite broad, in effect, before any operations can be initiated these companies must appear before the National Energy Board and before the oil and gas conservation boards of the provinces in order to obtain permission. Therefore, I feel that this is where the real safeguard should be, because these are the people who are in a position to determine whether a particular project is feasible.

• (6:30 p.m.)

The hon. gentleman suggested that these conservation boards and provincial governments would be shocked if they were to learn of the powers this company is seeking through this charter. May I suggest to him that the conservation boards would be shocked if these powers were not there because that would mean that the company would be incapable of providing the type of service that would be necessary in order to operate their lines effectively. So long as these powers are contained in their charter the energy board can determine whether or not the operation is one which should be licensed to go into these other fields of operation.

It is for this reason the company is seeking broad powers. This is not unusual in these cases, because it is assumed that the members know full well that before licences can be granted the company must first appear before the National Energy Board and the oil and gas conservation boards of the provincial governments, which are provincial bodies set up for the purpose of examining applications of this nature.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have listened as attentively as I could to the remarks of the sponsor of this bill. He said he could not claim to be an expert in the oil and gas exploration and producing business. I certainly do not lay any such claim, so far as my own knowledge or experience is concerned. I do know, however, that the bill we have before us has to do with a transportation system; at least this is what the title says and this is what the hon. member sponsoring the bill said it was when he introduced the bill. I think it is in respect of that aspect of the matter that some of us are concerned.

I might perhaps draw to the attention of members of the committee that when we were considering this bill earlier my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena, made a point of suggesting, and securing from the house at that time the undertaking that this bill should retain its position on the order paper. I think, from that action on his part coupled with some of the remarks he made during the course of the discussions in the committee stage, it should be apparent to the committee that so far as any of us sitting in this part of the house are concerned we are not desirous of impeding the construction of a necessary facility for the transportation and storage of fuel in the area outlined by the hon. member when he introduced the bill.

I realize, when the hon. member says that the bill is in the normal or usual form, that perhaps he has some precedents in mind. This parliament has approved a great many bills in form similar to this. However, I believe that this is just the point; we believe it is time that this parliament took a good look at whether or not this is the proper form for bills of this nature, or whether we should take steps to make it clear that we wish to have proposals of this nature put forward in a different form, and in a form which some of us think would be much more sensible and rational. It is to that point that I should like to address myself today.

When I was discussing this matter earlier I endeavoured to draw some parallel between what has been happening in recent years in the development of pipe lines for the transportation of various commodities, principally petroleum, to what happened in an earlier era in our history in the field of railroad transportation. Some similar suggestions were drawn to the attention of the house by my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. He referred to the fact that at a certain stage in our history we were left with a conglomeration of railroads. The Canadian National Railways was formed by the coupling together of a number of uneconomical lines, and the taxpayers were faced with the burden of financing them.

There is a very real question in my mind as to whether in the future this parliament and the people of Canada will be faced with a situation where some of these companies which have been granted certain broad powers under charters—and the hon. member sponsoring this bill did not seek to deny that these powers are broad—will in effect attempt to cash in on a capital gain of substantial proportions, simply because they have a piece of paper which this parliament has granted them in the form of a charter.

I am old enough to recall some of the tail ends of the sad era of the railroad building boom in this country. I recall some of the views expressed in this house during the period following the end of the first world war, during the 1920's and during the economic situation which faced the country as a result of the recession in the 1930's. I believe it is a matter of legitimate concern that, if we can, we should take steps to prevent, a situation in the future facing the country in respect of the transportion of commodities by pipe line similar to that which developed in an earlier era in respect of the railroads.

I recall a bill which was dealt with a number of sessions ago and its passage through the house. It will be found in chapter 54 the Statutes of Canada for 1956. This act is entitled "An Act respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company," and it was an attempt, so far as parliament was concerned, to rationalize something that happened in an earlier era, when apparently parliament was willing to grant railway charters almost willy-nilly, on request. This is very relevant to the present subject, in view of the powers for which this company is asking. May I recite to the committee what parliament was asked to do in that bill assented to on June 7, 1956.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Barnett: Yes.

Mr. Nugent: The hon. member suggested that this charter would perhaps be something from which the company could make a capital gain. Would he agree that this could only be the case after the company had appeared before the National Energy Board and the energy boards of both provinces and had proven that its plans were economically viable and feasible? Then after the company has gone to all that trouble and obtained permission to operate, is this not the sort of thing we want to encourage, rather than worry about the possibility of their selling off the rights?

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: I am not in any way trying to disregard the position of the National Energy Board in this context, but I would refer the hon. member to clause 6 of the bill, which says in part:

> The company, subject to the provisions of any general legislation relating to pipe lines enacted by parliament may—

It then goes on to refer to construction, purchase, lease or otherwise to acquire and hold, develop, operate, maintain, lease, mortgage, hypothecate, create liens or other security upon, sell, convey or otherwise dispose of these assets. Perhaps I am wrong in my understanding of what that means but I am perfectly aware that if this or any other company wants to enter into a specific proposal for construction they must get the approval of the National Energy Board. As far as I know the National Energy Board has no control over the sale or transfer of property which may take place. What we will be doing is giving these companies the power to trade with one another. This is the kind of thing I am referring to. In the course of time there might be a very inflated value placed upon doubtful assets, because of various sales and other financial transactions.

Sooner or later the cost of all these transactions will be placed upon the users of petroleum products, just as the high cost of transportation in this country has been placed upon the users of the railways, because of uneconomic moves in the past. This is the kind of thing I think should be of concern to us.

The measure to which I referred, respecting The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, stated in its preamble:

> Whereas Canadian Pacific Railway Company, The Campbellford, Lake Ontario and Western Railway Company, the Columbia and Kootenay Railway and Navigation Company, The Fort William Terminal Railway and Bridge Company, The Georgian Bay and Seaboard Railway Company, The Guelph and Goderich Railway Company, the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company, The Kettle Valley Railway Company, The Kootenay Central Railway Company, The Midland Simcoe Railway Company, La Compagnie du Chemin de Fer de Colonisation du Nord, The South Ontario Pacific Railway Company, The Vancouver and Lulu Island Railway Company and The Walkerton and Lucknow Railway Company have by their joint petition prayed that it be enacted as hereinafter set forth—

Then section 2 of the Canadian Pacific measure sets these companies out again, and indicates that they have all been amalgamated into the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It does seem to me that if one were to follow through the processes that have taken place, under which the Canadian Pacific Railway acquired the charters of the companies I listed, he would find that the company came back to this parliament to ask that we in effect undo what earlier parliaments had done. That being the case, there might be some greater cause for considering the points I am trying to raise by the hon. member who asked the question.

I should like to suggest to the committee a parallel situation in relation to the kinds of bills which are passed by this parliament, so far as pipe line companies are concerned. Perhaps a bill along the following lines might be much more logical or acceptable, because it so happens that chapter 54—

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not see how there is anything in the preamble read by the hon. member that is relevant to this bill. I cannot see how this argument is relevant. Certainly if the N.D.P. wants to stop a Canadian company from being formed by talking this bill out, so the company cannot be formed this winter and provide work necessary to those people who want to build the line, there is not much we can do about it; but I think members of that party should play the game properly. If it is their intention to keep this Canadian company from being formed so that it cannot proceed with a necessary project out west, then I think the hon. member—

Mr. Barnett: On the point raised, let me say that I feel the objections we have raised relate to the form of this bill. We have stated some reasons for thinking that the bill is objectionable as it stands. It seems quite relevant to suggest a positive way of designing the bill, which might be in an acceptable form. I have referred to one which has to do with transportation, although in different form. In my view this reference is quite relevant to the points I have raised. The measure to which I have referred was assented to on June 7, 1966 and is contained in chapter 54 of the statutes of that year.

The preamble reads as follows:

> Whereas Canadian Pacific Railway Company has by its petition prayed for the passing of an act authorizing it to construct a certain line of railway, as hereinafter set forth, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the petition—

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like you to rule on the question I raised.

Mr. Barnett: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nugent: There has been no suggestion as to what is wrong with the form of this bill. The hon. member simply wants to read us this act, as a way of passing time. If the member has any logical or reasonable questions about the bill, I am sure the sponsor or myself could answer. I would be glad to answer any specific objection to the form.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I object to the hon. member imputing motives and suggesting that I am simply talking to waste his time and mine. I think that no hon. member has the right to make a suggestion of that kind in this house.

The Chairman: I suggest to the hon. member that it does appear to the Chair that his remarks are slightly outside the confines of clause 1 of Bill S-16. Perhaps the committee would make better progress if hon. members confined their remarks to the clause, although I realize that a general discussion is permissible on clause 1. Perhaps the hon. member will continue.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the act to which I have just referred—and I will not continue reading the preamble in deference to the hon. member's sensitivities—would allow the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to construct a line of railway. The point I am trying to make is that if the company referred to in the bill now before the committee were prepared to put forward a proposal in the form in which the Canadian Pacific measure was put forward, and indeed in the form in which the member sponsoring the bill suggested, this would be a much more simple and straightforward proposition. The bill in its present form has been described by my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming, in his colourful manner, as containing a lot of garbage.

The Canadian Pacific Railway was authorized by parliament to construct a line of railway from a point on its line of railway at or in the vicinity of Brocket in the province of Alberta, thence in a generally southerly direction for a distance of approximately 20 miles to a point in township 4, range 29, west of the fourth meridian in the province of Alberta. Section 2 of this Canadian Pacific measure states:

> If the construction of the said line of railway is not commenced within a period of two years, or if it is not completed and put in operation within a period of five years after the passing of this act, the powers of construction hereby conferred upon the company shall cease and be null and void as regards so much of the said line of railway as shall then remain uncompleted.

It just happens that this is the same area where this company wants to build a 20 mile pipe line. If the company came to parliament and asked for incorporation, subject to the approval of the National Energy Board, to construct the line with the necessary appurtenances and said that if they did not fulfil this within a period of a reasonable number of years their powers would lapse, I would suggest we would have a much more realistic proposition before us.

• (6:50 p.m.)

We object to parliament being called upon year after year to give these broad charter powers to an apparently ever increasing number of concerns without any regard to a logical pattern. We are concerned that one of these days we or our successors in parliament may be faced with the kind of situation which parliaments in the 1920's were called upon to deal with in respect of railway transportation. It seems to me—

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member accept another question?

Mr. Barnett: Yes.

Mr. Nugent: I am not sure that I understood his point. It seemed to me that he was suggesting we should go back to the system that we had before we set up the National Energy Board, so it would take the load off this house. Is that what the hon. member is suggesting? Is he suggesting that we repeal the legislation setting up the National Energy Board and go back to the old system?

Mr. Barnett: I did not try to suggest that this bill was exactly parallel. It might very well be that something in between what is in this bill and that particular railway bill might be desirable. I am suggesting that we are granting a multiplicity of these firms powers beyond all reason.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Barnett: Yes.

Mr. Jorgenson: The hon. member seems to object to this type of company coming before the house and asking for a charter which has broad powers. He is suggesting that each time such a company wants to build an extra five miles of pipe line it should come back to this house for permission to do so. If that were the case, would it not increase the number of times we would have to consider bills of this nature?

Mr. Barnett: As I understood the hon. member when outlining the company's immediate plans, it had in mind building a particular 20 miles of line. I am not suggesting that the bill should necessarily be couched in those precise terms, as are bills in connection with railway expansion.

Mr. Jorgenson: Does the hon. member honestly believe there is a comparison between the oil exploration business and the building of a railway line between point A and point B?

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am very surprised at the interventions which have been made—

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether it would be in order to put to the hon. member for Provencher a question having to do with the subject of his last question?

Mr. Jorgenson: Certainly.

Mr. Schreyer: If it would be in order, Mr. Chairman, for the sake of clarification I should like to ask the hon. member for Provencher this question. Even if one accepts in large part his premise that in the oil exploration and development business it is not possible, as it is in transportation matters, to be specific with regard to locality, is it not feasible and reasonable at least to stipulate the region within which the company seeking a charter shall operate? One need not specify a locale, but would it not be reasonable to specify a region?

Mr. Jorgenson: I suppose it would, Mr. Chairman, if we were competent enough in this field to determine just where pipe-lines were required, but since parliament has set up a body, the National Energy Board, to take the burden of responsibility off members of parliament, it seems to me they are the proper people to make the decision as to where pipe lines could or should be built, and what facilities should be permitted in connection with the gas distribution business.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the point just made by the hon. member would be a good one if it applied in this case. In my opinion that is not the role of the energy board, and I am sure the board would agree that it is not. I am sure the National Energy Board will not grant the company the right to build houses, to broadcast, to build a railway; but we are being asked to grant the company the power to do all these things.

There are, I am sure, ancillary services in the telecommunications system which would be useful to the company. I am quite sure that 20 miles away it would be useful to have a telephone, and perhaps a private exchange. Telecommunications, testers and devices of that nature would probably be useful to the company in its exploration work. But there is another problem in this connection. For tax purposes we ask the company to declare its capitalization. This company is asking for powers that I do not think even Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has. As you know, Mr. Chairman, that is a fairly large company. It will be discussed in the house shortly when a bill respecting Trans-Canada Pipe Lines comes before us.

I understand that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has in its capitalization structure 15 million common shares of the par value of $1 each. The company wants to increase the number of common shares to 25 million at $1 each. It will have 5 million preferred shares of the par value of $50 each. The value of the company is decided on the basis of these figures and it will be taxed accordingly. In view of the situation in respect of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, surely it is being cheated when compared with Cabri Pipe Lines. I am sure that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines does not have refineries. It does not have a railway line, as far as I know. It does not have the other facilities concerned with the handling of oil which will be granted to Cabri Pipe Lines if this bill is passed. Yet Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has a capitalization of probably—

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted for private members hour has expired.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston), Company of Young Canadians—reported subsidization of private school in British Columbia; the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald), Construction of Northumberland strait crossing.

It being seven o'clock, the house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: House again in committee of ways and means. It being seven o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of ways and means on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I had been challenged by the minister and some of the members behind him on my suggestion that the minister's budget speech was an indication that he had rejected the Carter report. I was pointing out that all the reports I had read, seen or heard of the minister's budget speech interpreted his speech as meaning that he had ditched, jettisoned or rejected the Carter report. And, Mr. Chairman, all of these reports could not be wrong. In any event I will be referring to the minister's words.

I think it is of significance that Mr. Carter himself appeared on one of the television networks on the evening of the budget speech to say that he took it from the speech of the minister that the minister had rejected his report. I suggest that he also could not be wrong, Mr. Chairman.

The minister and the government clearly have put the report in the waste basket, except perhaps to the extent of including some of the suggestions in the report in the government white paper. Indeed, what the minister said in his speech this afternoon proves that. His attempt now to ditch the report and to hang on to it at the same time in order to have the support of those he is trying to confuse, as well as the support of those who see through the manoeuvre, is just not going to work.

What the minister said, Mr. Chairman, was this. He indicated that there had been four main objections to the report, with which he agreed, drawn to his attention. I would pause here to point out that in effect those four objections deny the acceptance of the report; that is the implication of them. Then the minister went on to say this, as reported at page 4906 of Hansard:

> However, the work we have done within the government, as well as the analyses we have received from others, leads us to the conclusion that while the reforms we will place before parliament and the public in the form of a white paper and ultimately in draft legislation will undoubtedly be influenced by the monumental report of the royal commission—

I pause here, Mr. Chairman, to indicate the careful use of the words "undoubtedly be influenced by". I would be very much surprised if the reforms were not influenced by the Carter report. There are many facts in the report about which the minister had no knowledge and they may have some influence upon him. Whether in the right or the wrong direction remains to be seen.

The minister continues his remarks:

> —they will be more in the nature of reforms of the existing tax structure rather than the adoption of a radically different approach.

If those words, Mr. Chairman, do not mean complete rejection of the report, I should like to know what does. Surely the report means nothing at all unless it means a radically different approach to our system of taxation. It does not necessarily mean the adoption of every point made and every recommendation contained in the report. Nobody who gives advice expects that sort of thing to result. But a radically different approach would mean the acceptance of a basic and fundamental change in the taxation system of Canada.

When the minister says that all he is going to do is to reform the existing tax structure and not adopt a radically different approach, he is rejecting the Carter report, and no amount of shaking of the head on the part of the minister will change that fact. He will not be able to fool anybody that he intends to do anything else. I was always impressed, Mr. Chairman, by something I read many years ago written by a writer in Europe on philosophic subjects, who indicated in one of his books—I could not recall during the recess the title of the book—that the most common weakness of all people is a refusal to consider big ideas because of little objections and little difficulties.

I would suggest that when the minister tries to raise questions about the specific details that may or may not be included in the comprehensive tax base recommended by the Carter commission, he too is guilty of this failing. He is trying to divert the attention of the people of Canada from the importance and validity of the report by raising little objections, and is trying to prevent them from recognizing the really great ideas in the report by introducing little prejudices in one direction or another.

I would suggest—and I do not say this offensively—that this is a shabby way to deal with a monumental report, as the minister described it. It is a report which took four and a half years to compile and cost many millions of dollars to produce, using in the process some of the best taxation brains in the country.

As a matter of fact. Mr. Chairman, the commissioners themselves foresaw this situation. I went back to the report to refresh my memory about something that was said on this matter, and I should like to quote a fairly lengthy passage from page two of the first volume, where they say this:

> We are fully aware that these conclusions constitute a severe criticism of the present tax system. They were not arrived at lightly nor are they the inevitable result of preconceived opinions. Our bias when we began our task was that the present system was basically sound and compared favourably with the systems of other countries. While we are still of the opinion that the present Canadian tax system is as good as most other systems, we are convinced that it falls far short of the attainable objectives. We therefore recommend many fundamental changes which, if adopted, would produce a complete transformation and, we believe, result in greater equity and efficiency.
>
> We hope Canadians will accept the challenge implicit in our recommendations. And there can be no doubt that our recommendations constitute a great challenge. Preconceived opinions about taxation are deeply and firmly held. Many will find it extremely difficult to take a new look at old questions. Because some facts cannot be readily ascertained, honest differences of opinion are inevitable.

Then this is the sentence I want to draw to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman:

> There is a danger that the debate about these minor factual questions will divert attention from the major issues.

This, Mr. Chairman, is exactly what the minister has tried to do with the Carter report. He has tried to focus attention on minor factual questions and thereby attempt to divert attention from the major issues with which the report deals. I therefore feel confident to repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the statement that the minister has jettisoned the Carter report is a correct and accurate statement, and the minister cannot get out of that situation. Whether or not the reforms of the minister will be adequate from another point of view and whether or not they will be acceptable remains, of course, to be seen when he brings them before parliament.

• (8:10 p.m.)

The minister denied that his budget was intended to increase unemployment. He did not answer this charge directly, and in order not to answer it directly he did what I suppose we all do, Mr. Chairman: He diverted our attention to the United Kingdom. He was ignoring the point by drawing the attention of the members of my party, who proudly have associations with members of the Labour government in Britain, to the fact that that government has pursued policies intended to deflate the economy, with the result of very massive additions to their unemployment rate.

I have only three things to say about that, Mr. Chairman. First, we are not bound, as a party, and we do not intend ever to be bound, by the policies of any other party anywhere else, whether in Canada or elsewhere. I have very grave doubts myself as to whether, if I were in Britain, I would be in entire agreement with the policies there pursued. What is much more important, and what I suggest to the members of the committee questions the relevance if not the honesty of the comparison, is that the minister knows quite well that to compare the problems facing the United Kingdom to the problems facing Canada is to do something that on any basis is not permissible.

They are faced in that country with problems of industrial development, modernization, monetary problems and the fact that sterling is a reserve currency, with all that flows from that. They are different from Canadian problems not merely in degree but in kind. To try to compare what is happening there with what is happening here is surely intellectually a thoroughly impermissible thing to do. Surely, Mr. Chairman, the minister cannot change the effect of his budget by merely pointing to the fact that it was done over there. I remember that the late Mr. G. D. H. Cole, from whom I had the good fortune to learn some things about economics when I attended a university in England some years ago, wrote a little play dealing with the general strike of 1926 in that country. One of the characters in the play was accused by the prime minister of Great Britain of having fomented trouble, a march on 10 Downing street. This character who was thus accused said, "Who, me? No, it's him that did it." Well the minister cannot do that. He cannot say, "Who, me? I did not do anything about unemployment, but Harold Wilson or James Callaghan or whoever it is in Great Britain did."

He is not going to persuade anybody with any intelligence he is dealing with the problem at all when he makes that kind of diverting statement. The fact is the increase in income tax is intended to reduce aggregate demand. The fact is that this increase in income tax, when coupled with other tax increases and coupled, as he and the Minister of National Revenue claim, with massive retrenchment, particularly in the field of construction with its multiplier effect, will necessarily result in increased unemployment. Since I give the minister credit for sufficient intelligence to know that result will follow, I must assume he intended that result. The result will not be accidental.

He and his advisers know greater unemployment will inevitably follow the policies announced in his budget. Since they know unemployment will follow these policies, then they must be assumed to deliberately intend increasing the rate of unemployment in Canada. Again I say you have to study the minister's statement carefully, as I did. When he said, "Read my words about the Carter report", he was very careful not to say that he accepted the report. He criticized those of us who said he had ditched it, but at no point in his answer did he say "I accept it" or "I accept the principles of it" or "I accept some of the principles in it". He was very careful not to commit himself.

When he dealt with the charge that he was going deliberately to create increased unemployment, he pointed to the British government. Nowhere in the statement which he made, even this afternoon, did he deny that the result of budget policies will be increased unemployment. In my opinion, the result will inevitably be increased unemployment. He was very careful not to say it. He was very careful not to say to this committee or to the country that in his opinion his budget will not increase unemployment in Canada. I challenge him to rise to his feet now and say just that. If he denies the charge which we make after studying his budget, that the results of these policies will be increased unemployment, then he ought to have the courage to get to his feet and say, "In my opinion unemployment will not increase in this country as a result of these policies". He was very careful not to state that. What he did say in his main speech on November 30, as reported on page 4905 of Hansard—and in more than one place, but the quotation of one short phrase will be enough to make the point:

> The fiscal restraints that are essential now may limit somewhat the increase in our production next year but such a limitation now is far better than a serious recession later.

What in heaven's name do the words, "may limit somewhat the increase in our production next year", mean if they do not mean that he knows the results of the budget policies will be a decrease in the rate of growth in this country, and a decreasing rate of growth will necessarily mean increasing unemployment in this country? What does that carefully chosen gobbledegook which I have just quoted from page 4905 of Hansard mean if it does not mean increased unemployment? The minister says that will be the result of his budgetary policy.

As I have said two or three times, there has been a rather puerile attempt to divert us from discussing this serious result of his budget in Canada by trying to twit members of my party with the fact the British government is pursuing a certain policy. This will not hide the fact the minister is pursuing a deliberate policy of unemployment. I will be happy to be proven wrong if this does not happen, as will every other member in the opposition who shares this view. If I remember correctly, the Leader of the Opposition reached the same conclusion on this point in the budget speech, and I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would be as happy as I and my colleagues would be if we were proven wrong and the minister were proven right.

No one looks forward to even a small increase in unemployment at any time with anything but horror in a country like Canada. I am forced to come to the conclusion, however, after careful study of the minister's policies, that increased unemployment is the inevitable result of these budgetary policies. When that increase in unemployment occurs in the next months the people of Canada will know, and I hope they will for a long time remember, that the gentlemen on the treasury benches deliberately induced that increased unemployment to deal with a situation which might have been dealt with in many other ways.

I know, as I have said, the minister has rejected the Carter report. However, since he said that he will be influenced by it I commend to him the following sentence on page 28 of volume 2 of the report where the commission deals with the kind of inflationary situation we have:

> Certainly what is needed is a policy that strikes at those responsible for the inflation rather than a policy that represses aggregate demand and eliminates the inflation only by generating unemployment and general idle capacity.

• (8:20 p.m.)

This is what the budget is intended to do, generate unemployment and idle capacity, in the hope that that will eliminate the inflation that this country is faced with. The budget, instead, should deal with the forces that are responsible for the present inflationary pressures. I therefore say on behalf of my colleagues, and on my own behalf, that nothing the minister has said can possibly evade the facts, and they are facts, which say that this resolution with respect to income tax is unfair. The burden will fall on the ordinary people of Canada. The tax is not necessary since it does not raise any additional revenue worth anything at all in terms of the total budget. It is deliberately intended to produce unemployment, and in that respect it is antisocial and inhuman.

This totally unfair and unnecessary budget is one of the crosses that the Minister of Finance, who impresses one with his competence and intelligence, will have to carry in an attempt to achieve certain heights which have now apparently become achievable.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Before this resolution carries I wish to enter a word of protest on behalf of the married women of this country. I am concerned about the way that the income tax increase affects an especially large group in this country, the women of this country who must work outside their homes.

On previous occasions I have asked whether it would be possible to enact provisions which would allow our working women to deduct from their taxable income expenses which are incurred in connection with the care of their children. While our women are at work someone must look after their children. Since businessmen are allowed deductions with respect to business expenses, could not our working mothers be allowed deductions with respect to the expenses they incur for the care of the children. In the 5 per cent income tax surcharge a special provision is made for our well to do people. The greatest amount that our well to do persons will be asked to pay in addition to their normal income tax is $600.

I urge the minister to give special consideration to the needs of our working women.

I wish that the minister would give me the courtesy of paying attention, because I am speaking for a large group of women in this country.

Mr. Lambert: The minister makes no comment.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): The Ontario department of labour the other day published a survey which shows that one out of every three workers in Ontario, is a female. In 1941, on the other hand, only one married woman in 20 worked. Today, one married woman out of every four holds down a job outside her home, and a great percentage of these women are in the province of Ontario.

This dramatic rise in the number of women who are employed outside the home can be attributed to the fact that more mothers these days are leaving the home for the office. The more educated a woman is, the greater is the probability that she will work full time after she is married. I wish the minister would listen. In fact, I shall pause in my remarks until I have his attention.

An hon. Member: Please.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Half the working wives in the province of Ontario have children who are under 15 years of age. That represents 40 per cent of the women who work outside their homes. If half the working wives in Ontario have children who are under 15 years old, it is high time that consideration be given to allowing child care expenses to be deducted from taxable income in computing income tax. Surely, if businessmen are allowed expense accounts and deductions with respect to business expenses, there is merit in allowing the working wives in this country to deduct from their taxable income the expenses they incur in connection with child care. That makes more sense than increasing the income tax burden for those women who already have a difficult enough time in making arrangements day after day for the care of their families.

Many people brush working wives off with the remark, "These women are just out to get a bit of pin money." Nevertheless, many married women in this country are working and the time for income tax reforms is long overdue. I submit that the minister should give consideration to allowing our working wives a tax rebate. They badly need the money that would be rebated from their income tax to pay for the care of their children.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. lady that these kinds of matters are precisely the kinds of tax reforms that the Carter commission was concerned about. They are the kinds of matters that we are examining in the proposals with regard to tax reform that we will be bringing before the house.

When I was listening to the hon. member for York South answering my reply to him, I thought I would not continue the discussion because my remarks might tempt him to reply once more. I have two or three things to say about the Carter commission report which I hope will complete the discussion of it. My remarks bear on the attitude that the hon. member has displayed toward the report. He still persists in the view that he and his party are supporting every part of the Carter commission report. May I draw to his attention what was said by one of his colleagues, the hon. member for Skeena. I had forgotten the exact words that were used, but I remember being struck by the fact that the hon. member for Skeena should be the first member in the house to enter a protest against the Carter commission report. His words may be found on page 15 of Hansard for May 9, where he said:

> I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the disastrous effects of the Carter commission report on the mining industry, particularly in British Columbia, will the minister be making an announcement soon regarding the government's intentions in respect of that aspect of the commission report relating to taxation of mining companies?

I have not heard anywhere in the country, during any of the representations which have been made to me, words more damning of the Carter commission report so far as the taxation of the mining industry is concerned than the words, "in view of the disastrous effects of the Carter commission report on the mining industry".

Mr. Lewis: Nor have I.

Mr. Sharp: I have raised this question because I believe that this kind of lip service to Carter, while holding reservations on essential points in the Carter commission report, is not the sort of attitude that my hon. friend would wish his party to adopt.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a question. Can he quote from the leader of this party or from the financial critic of this party words that contain any such reservation or qualification? The minister is indulging in his diverting tactics. I suggest that nowhere in the remarks of the leader of this party, in the remarks of its financial critic, or in my remarks, as one of the spokesmen of this party in this field, will the minister find words which contain any such reservations.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I cannot say in this respect who speaks for the N.D.P.

Mr. Lewis: Come now, come now.

Mr. Sharp: I should have thought that the hon. member for Skeena in this respect was speaking for an industry that was in his own area. He has a particular interest in that industry. He spoke about that industry with greater authority than the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam could have spoken, since the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam does not happen to have any mines in his constituency.

Mr. Lewis: How nice the minister is. The hon. member was asking a question on his own behalf, and not for the party.

Mr. Sharp: Well, now, let me ask whether the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands speaks for the party when he speaks about the taxation of disability pensions. Does the hon. member for Kootenay West speak for the party when he raises some of his questions.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Sharp: And what about the hon. member for York South? For a moment I was not sure on which side of the question he stood.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the minister a question. When the hon. member for York East yesterday made some interesting observations on taxation with respect to the Carter commission, was he speaking for the Liberal party?

Mr. Lewis: And what about the hon. member for York-Humber?

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: When I made my statement on the budget it carried the full approval of the cabinet, and that is all I said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member for York South, since he seems to believe that the recommendations of the Carter commission should be followed—I do not know whether he says without question, as does the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, or whether he simply agrees in principle—whether he agrees with the principle of the comprehensive tax base? If he does, this means that he would tax sons who inherit farms from their fathers at the full personal rates the proceeds from the inheritance. The strongest protests I have received about the report is that while the principle may be all very well, this is extremely unfair and would cause grave disruption. What the hon. member is saying is that he agrees that it is desirable to tax those inheritances at the full rate.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Kamloops on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: I am not rising on a point of order; I wish to make a contribution to the debate. I love to see the two socialist parties in the house having a fight and I can understand the temptation of the minister to make campaign speeches.

An hon. Member: What about yourself?

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Fulton: But I would think that the minister would prefer to get along with the business before us. I raise the question of the relevancy of the general subject of the Carter report to a proposal to place a surcharge of 5 per cent on the income tax. Why not get on with the business, instead of pursuing a general debate on the work of the Carter commission? Such a debate could have taken place on the budget motion, but it is irrelevant at this time, it seems to me.

Mr. Sharp: As you well know, Mr. Chairman, we were discussing the income tax resolution when some general speeches were made by members of the New Democratic party, and I felt it was incumbent on me to reply to some of their general contentions. I would have preferred not to undertake this general discussion, but since the Chair permitted those speeches of a general nature it seemed to me I should be permitted to reply to them.

Mr. Lewis: On the point raised by the hon. member for Kamloops, if my memory serves me correctly—and I say this in a sense of fun rather than by way of criticism—the general discussion on the Carter report was begun by the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West.

The Minister of Finance asked a question a moment ago and I should like to deal with it briefly. For the record, whether the hon. gentleman is interested or not, our party, last July held a federal convention—

Mr. Fulton: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. Lewis: Just a moment. Wait.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Stick to the rules.

Mr. Lewis: At that time we adopted a policy of support for the Carter report. It is in line with this policy that I and others in this party have made our comments.

In the second place, we do agree with the idea of a comprehensive tax base. This does not mean that the minister or anyone else, in seeking precise components for inclusion in that base, may not come to the conclusion after listening to representations that a particular part of the recommendations made by the commission might not have to be amended or changed.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Lewis: You can say "oh" as long as you like. The principle of a comprehensive tax base would not be affected by any minor revisions which might have to be made.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have not had the opportunity to speak on this resolution yet, but I now wish to protest against the tax increase that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is asking us to approve today. I object to that increase for several reasons.

The first is that when taxes are increased, usually something is given in return. The resolutions under consideration are designed to increase taxes and do not provide anything in return. On the contrary, works are cancelled, reductions are made, a check of the economic development is sought and, at the same time, taxes are increased. I find this completely unacceptable. If, at least, the people were given something for the additional money extracted from them by force. What they get is a cut in expenditures, fewer work projects, but all the same taxes are being levied. Why? If we are to increase taxes, we should give our people something in return. But this is not what is being done. We raise taxes, but we give nothing; on the contrary, we take something away. So, that is the first reason why I object to this resolution.

The second reason, Mr. Chairman, is that I feel we should be sick and tired of having two governments, one in Ottawa and one in Quebec, one after the other, each in turn, raising our taxes. We are the only nation in the world to be separately taxed by two governments, both of which levy income taxes.

The jurisdictions are really spread around and the same goes for us here.

I admit that Ontario does not have a minister of revenue and that the federal government collects taxes from the citizens in that province and then transfers them to the provincial government. But in Quebec we have two: one provincial minister of revenue and another minister of revenue in Ottawa. That means that we have two ministers of revenue to increase taxes alternately. Of course, we always have increases. When taxes do not go up in Ontario, they go up in Quebec; when not in Quebec, then in Ottawa. That is the system we know. I see some Liberal members from Quebec seem to like that. "Come on with the taxes". They were not called "taxers" for nothing. We had "Jean la taxe" in Quebec; we now have "Sharp the Taxer" in Ottawa, and the Liberal members from Quebec accept that.

I wonder how the Minister of Finance can start his campaign for the leadership of the Liberal party under such bad auspices. In fact, he is starting on the wrong foot, with taxes.

An hon. Member: It is none of your business.

Mr. Grégoire: Can you see that, Mr. Chairman? He is only the minister of taxes. How would he be if he were Prime Minister?

So, Mr. Chairman, I want to protest against these taxes and I even want to move an amendment to the resolution. So I shall ask my good friend, the member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) to second the amendment.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval:

That the resolution be amended by deleting clause (1) of the said resolution.

Clause (1) provides that for the year 1968 and subsequent taxation years, income tax shall be increased by 5 per cent. It is called a special surtax. There are all kinds of designations. Sometimes, it is taxes; other times, it is surtaxes, to show the people they are overtaxed.

That is why it is called thus: it adds up to a lot.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Therefore, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this resolution be amended by deleting clause 1. Let the government ask anything it wants from the companies, but the people, I think, already pay enough taxes. Therefore, I ask that this part of the resolution which is to increase private income tax be deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When a resolution is before a committee, a part of it only cannot be amended. An amendment may be considered, however, in respect of the resolution as a whole. For this reason, I must declare that this amendment deleting clause 1 of the said resolution is out of order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I understand you to say that to amend a resolution, the amendment must relate to only one part of the resolution; that is what I am doing.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Does the hon. member for Lapointe want me to repeat the ruling I just made?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Grégoire: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I say that it is not possible to amend only part of a resolution but that the resolution as a whole has to be amended. That is the reason why the amendment is not accepted.

[English]

Shall the resolution carry?

Resolution agreed to: Yeas, 61; nays, 43.

During the taking of the vote:

Some hon. Members: Out, out.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must draw to the attention of the committee that some hon. members entered the chamber when the vote had started, and I would ask them in a gentle way to please withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Out.

After the taking of the vote:

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I object to one of the votes cast.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the resolution adopted.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I request that you would reduce by one the number of yeas which have been recorded, because one hon. member who came into the chamber after you had called the division, nevertheless stood and voted and his vote was counted.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like also to call to your attention that, in this corner, when you asked members in a given row to sit down, some of them remained standing and voted with the next row so that they voted twice. I was beside them, Mr. Chairman, and I saw them remain standing after you had told them to sit down.

I protest against the fact that some members voted twice.

Some hon. Members: Name them.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. On this question of members coming in and going out and who could be in and who could be out, I wish to say I do my very best to see the north, south, east and west sides of the chamber. I made an appeal to certain members who had entered the chamber after the proposition had been put before the house, and I did not see any other member who came in after that.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Chairman, I voted because I was of the opinion, rightly or wrongly, that I was in the chamber at the time the vote was called. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, I need any lectures from the eminent and distinguished member for Kamloops—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): You need a great many of them.

Mr. Cashin: This is a matter of judgment. While I respect his opinion in these matters I trust he will allow me the privilege of deciding myself, in my own judgment, whether I was in the chamber or not. Nevertheless I thank him for his gratuitous advice.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member in question has now identified himself—although I gave him the courtesy of not identifying him—and has attacked me, I think I should be allowed to develop my point. My point is that the rule must be applied equally and equitably to all hon. members. Your Honour ordered, or suggested to members who came in after you had called the division, that they retire from the chamber. There were a number of such members. At least three on this side accordingly retired from the chamber. The hon. member, upon whom my eyes were focussed because I was looking towards the curtains on our side to see whether our members would come in on time or not—I was looking at that spot—came in from behind those curtains after Your Honour had called the division and while the "yeas" were standing. My colleagues over here, several of whom were also looking there, will confirm this.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order—

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member did not see fit to withdraw when you invited those who came in late do do so—

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Kamloops has the floor.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Fulton: Now, sir, my only request when the vote was concluded was that you would order a reduction by one in the number of those who had voted in the affirmative. I know it will not make any difference in the over-all result. My only interest is that the rule which you yourself properly invoked should be applied with equal force to all members. This was my only purpose in raising the matter. It was not my intention to give offence to the hon. member because I did not identify him; he has done that for himself. He has chosen to identify himself. I said that in my considered opinion he was in violation of the rules of the house.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Chairman, the reason I rose in my place is that the hon. gentleman did not identify me, although he did turn and speak to me across the house. For doing that I thank him for his advice and I assure him I would hope that my own action would be no less than his. In the circumstances I did what I thought I was entitled to do.

The Deputy Chairman: I think this very important question has been debated long enough. The Chair certainly has been enlightened and will have to have broader eyes in order to see all corners of the house so that no one will peek in, creep in or crawl in.

House in committee of ways and means on a certain proposed resolution to amend the customs tariff. The text of the proposed resolution appears as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings for November 30, 1967.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

13. That the Customs Tariff be amended by adding thereto a section as follows:

There shall be levied, collected and paid as a customs duty on all goods hereinafter enumerated in this section when imported into Canada or taken out of warehouse for consumption therein, in addition to the duties otherwise established, an amount determined as follows:

(a) in the case of goods enumerated in tariff items 15605-1, 15610-1, 15615-1, 15620-1, 15625-1, 15625-2, 15630-1, 15635-1 and 15640-1, one dollar and twenty-five cents per gallon of the strength of proof; and

(b) in the case of ale, beer, porter and stout enumerated in tariff item 14700-1, four cents per gallon.

14. That any enactment founded upon the foregoing resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of December, 1967, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said resolution imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day and before the 1st day of January, 1968, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before the 1st day of December, 1967.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolutions carry?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, while one of your colleagues was presiding this afternoon a question was asked of the minister. He deferred the answer because it was a very technical one. All that is required at this time is an answer to that question.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as I recall the question it had to do with the amendment to the Customs Tariff which appears in Votes and Proceedings for November 30. These resolutions are consequential to the increase in the excise duties on spirits and beer produced in Canada. They provide that effective December 1 the customs duties on imported spirits and beer be increased by an equal amount; that is, $1.25 per proof gallon of spirits and 4 cents for a gallon of beer. Resolution 13 need remain in effect only until December 31 since, as provided for in resolution 7, effective January 1 imported spirits and beer are subject to the charges provided for under the Excise Act for these products.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolutions carry?

Resolutions agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF NOVEMBER 6 RESOLUTIONS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would ask leave of the house to move, seconded by Mr. Laing, that the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs be empowered to consider the subject matter of the proposed customs tariff resolutions the texts of which were laid before the house, Monday, November 6, 1967.

Mr. Speaker, I should have asked if I have the agreement of the house to revert to motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the house revert to motions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs be empowered to consider the subject matter of the proposed customs tariff resolutions the texts of which were laid before the house, Monday November 6, 1967.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I feel I have the right to make a few brief remarks about that motion. I would therefore like to say a few words.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) proposed today to refer the resolutions which the house has just passed to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs—

Mr. Lambert: No, no.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Grégoire: —the bills that will follow.

Mr. Lambert: Not at all.

Mr. Grégoire: Did I fail to understand the resolution?

Some hon. Members: You did not understand.

Mr. Lambert: It is the resolution about the customs tariff known as the Kennedy round.

Mr. Grégoire: That will do just as well, Mr. Speaker, if those are resolutions dealing with the customs tariff.

This is why I should like to say a few words about that resolution presented by the minister because, since I do not sit on any committee, I cannot take part in the discussions concerning those pieces of legislation or those tariff changes.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that an hon. member is continuously and systematically prevented from sitting on committees brings about, in my opinion, a quite undemocratic climate.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The remarks which the hon. member is now making are not relevant at all to the motion before the house. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, this motion is debatable. Therefore—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair agrees that the motion before the house is a debatable motion, but the membership of the committee or the fact that the hon. member is not a member of that committee is not relevant to the discussion.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Then, I shall, Mr. Speaker, refer to something dealing with that.

I was simply tying to explain why I object to sending that resolution to the committee, because as long as the committee is not prepared to expand its membership, in order to include the representatives of every ideology, it will not be able to do a complete job and that is why I object to sending the motion to a committee. If we are not wanted as members of the committee, then let us deal with the motions in the house, otherwise let us allow those who wish to be members of the committee attend its sittings.

Mr. Lambert: You have the right to attend the sittings.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Grégoire: On division.

Motion agreed to.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed to government order No. 45, resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of Justice for the second reading of Bill C-187, an act respecting divorce.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it not the intention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to give first reading to the budget bills based upon the resolutions which have been passed? We are quite ready to proceed in an attempt to get these matters settled.

Mr. Knowles: Not all of them.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have two bills available but not all of them. Therefore I felt it would be better to proceed with all of them together.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The minister has had since last June to do something in relation to these bills. Surely he can introduce them tonight.

Mr. Lambert: Surely we can have first reading. We have been very co-operative today and I hope the minister will be as co-operative. The efforts of opposition members today have been more than co-operative. I would think it would be very simple for the minister to introduce the bills for first reading. Certainly we should have first reading at least in respect of those resolutions of June.

An hon. Member: They are not ready.

Mr. Lambert: If they are not ready, what is this house coming to? It is ridiculous that these bills should be introduced tomorrow or at some later date for first reading, when we have passed the resolutions today.

Mr. MacEachen: The understanding was that we would dispose of the resolutions today, but not that we would introduce the bills for first reading. There is nothing irregular about this, and I think we should proceed now with the next order of business.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): If this government does not have the bills ready, and they have had since June to do so, there is something irregular about the government's conduct and the conduct of parliament.

Mr. MacEachen: The intention from the beginning was to deal with all the resolutions, and then the bills together. In order to do that the bills will be introduced for first reading at the earliest possible moment, at which time hon. members will have a full opportunity to discuss them and pass them speedily with the same co-operation they have shown today.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The bills are just not ready; that's all this means.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the government house leader?

Is it the intention of the government to have the house approve all the bills deriving from the budgetary resolutions before the Christmas recess? I see that the minister agrees.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the minister that if he intends to give notice before moving second reading, it would be advisable that we obtain the bills beforehand to have at least the time to read them. There is only one week to go and we do not even have them. How do you want us to complete our study before the end of next week if we do not even have the bills? That is why I think the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) are justified in asking that the bills be tabled immediately, so that we may, at least over the week-end, have time to study them. Otherwise, we shall not be able to do so.

[English]

DIVORCE

MEASURE RESPECTING GROUNDS, JURISDICTION, JUDGES, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, December 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau for the second reading of Bill No. C-187, respecting divorce.

[Translation]

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I will resume my remarks where they were interrupted on December 5 last.

I was putting forward my second argument in support of the indissolubility of marriage through the very nature of love.

First of all, this supposes a love-match and not a marriage of convenience or interest. A notable proportion of the petitions for divorce stem from this marriage of convenience which we cannot advise against too much. Experience has proved that marriage without love does not last long. The parties involved very soon turn to divorce.

If it is a marriage for love, the nature of such love remains to be known. A marriage based on physical attraction only, on sex-appeal only, purely on sexual instinct finding satisfaction in the physical charms of the spouse, such marriage is as precarious and shaky as physical love itself. Love based only on physical attractiveness and in which sexual instinct finds satisfaction cannot last. In no time at all, it will crumble. This is a cause of another goodly proportion of petitions for divorce. They are marriages mostly gone into by couples while still minors. One could never advise often enough against these early marriages without sufficient proof of true love.

However, those marriages are quite valid, even if they are based on physical and psychological love, without any depth. The indissolubility of such marriages, which are not deeply rooted by this precarious love, finds its basis in the explicit will of the contracting parties, expressed in all freedom and lucidity. I will come back to that point later on.

A marriage contracted in an atmosphere of genuine love which supersedes, yet includes, purely physical love, essentially admits of an absolute and irrevocable bond of faithfulness. Let all those who married under the influence of genuine love call upon their own experience; they will soon feel that the indissolubility of marriage is intimately bound with the constancy of love. Provisional love, short-term faithfulness, those are contradictory terms. The daily experience of true lovers demonstrates this. How often they promise to be true to each other in life and death! How often they plight their troth! If one of them were to say: "I will love you for two years", the other could rightly answer: "In that case, you do not really love me." The basic reason of all this is that true love is necessarily faithful and irrevocable. At the beginning of all true love there is the intention of being absolutely, definitively and permanently faithful. The lover will not love where he does not intend to be faithful. How real, then, should be conjugal fidelity which is based on the most intimate relationship that can exist between two people, a relationship sealed in the physical union of two bodies! I could elaborate on this point, but I think this will suffice to show the strong basis on which rests the indissolubility of marriage. However, I will add two confirmatur.

• (9:10 p.m.)

First, the exclusive character of true love indicates the necessity for an absolute and irrevocable fidelity. It is a fact ascertained daily that two lovers do not admit a third party between them. What is the origin of jealousy in love if not from the fact that true love excludes any person other than the parties concerned. As soon as one of the two goes towards a third party, the other suffers, and how! Love tragedies, suicides resulting from deluded and unrequited love find an explanation in that. These facts illustrate in a concrete way the necessity for an absolute and irrevocable fidelity in love.

Secondly, if we take a look at forms used to certify the existence of marriage, whether in the civil tribunal or the religious tribunal, we always find this little formula: until death do you part. Why that? On what is this little formula based?

What does it express exactly, if not a requirement for absolute and irrevocable fidelity? And to bless the remarriage of divorced people with those words: until death do you part, seems to me a monumental farce which alters to a considerable extent the seriousness of fidelity and love.

Thirdly, the indissolubility of marriage is based on a contractual promise. Marriage is looked upon as a contract. Therefore, it comes under the law. A special obligation of fidelity results from a promise given and accepted by words, signs or equivalent acts.

Two beings are tied to one another by contract and that until death do them part. Some might say that any contract can be terminated if both parties to it so desire. That is true and that is the reason why I do not insist too much on the indissolubility of marriage. However, I wish to point out that the object of the marriage contract is not outside things. The interested parties are the main object of it, which makes the marriage contract a unique contract. Individuals have an absolute value and nobody can dispose of them at will as can be done for purely material objects. I therefore believe that the indissolubility of marriage is also based on a special obligation of fidelity which does not only proceed from love as such, but from a given and accepted promise.

In concluding this first part, Mr. Speaker, owing to the divine will concerning the nature of true love and a mutual and contractual promise, it must be admitted that indissolubility is an essential characteristic of marriage. It is therefore ascribable to natural law. Since such is the case, there follows an inevitable consequence, to wit that no human institution a fortiori, nor any individual can break marriage ties without going beyond his rights. This statement does not prejudge the quite exceptional cases which can occur beyond the scope of those principles. But a worthwhile reflection must be based on duly recognized principles rather than on exceptional cases. My views on divorce can be readily appreciated. But before dealing more specifically with this matter, let us draw a last corollary from the preceding remarks.

Our modern world rejects indissolubility as an extreme requirement for a normal marriage. Among other fatal remedies, it proposes what is commonly called trial marriage. Of course, such a sexual union, deprived of the intentional faithfulness and responsibility of genuine love, has nothing to do with a true marriage. To try marriage is about as sensible as trying death in an extended sleep. Trial marriage to me is the same as public concubinage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to consider the attitude of the state toward divorce.

As we have seen in the first part of these thoughts, indissolubility of marriage to which divorce is opposed arises directly from natural law as such. Now, the principles of natural law are absolute standards. Thus, there is not and cannot be a true dispensation from a natural, moral law. As a result, divorce, which purports to be a dispensation from the natural law of marriage, a dispensation of indissolubility, is totally objectionable because it undermines the very basis of marriage which God decreed to be indissoluble. Does that mean that the state should adopt toward divorce an attitude of total prohibition? No, as we shall see later on. The impossibility of a true dispensation does not preclude the possibility of a legal tolerance. It will be the first point of the following thoughts. Then, we shall briefly consider the motives likely to legitimize such a tolerance. Finally, we shall put forward some remedies likely to control a social ill which is contaminating an entire nation.

First, the possibility of the legal tolerance of divorce. Let us first recall some guiding principles.

The Church alone can legislate on marriage between Christians, that is baptized people. The state alone has the right to legislate on the marriage of non-Christians, that is to say non-baptized people but, of course, only in the framework of the natural institution. As far as marriage of Christians is concerned, the state has exclusive rights on the civil effects of the marriage (for instance, right of succession, legal guardianship, family allowances, etc.).

• (9:20 p.m.)

When mention is made of religious divorce or civil divorce, strictly speaking and in principle, it can only involve the breakdown of the matrimonial bond. Even after the religious or civil judgment, except certain most exceptional cases, the matrimonial bond is always there because it is permanent by nature. Such a judgment can only ensure certain religious or certain legal or civil effects.

In the light of these principles, let us clarify the attitude of the state while I shall summarize in this way:

Always, the morality of right had to face the question of whether a legal tolerance and the regulating of bad things are allowed and may be more prudent than total interdiction which, through the wickedness of man, may have worse consequences. For instance, since St. Augustine, numerous theologians have held as licit the legal regulation and, therefore, the tolerance of controlled prostitution, provided this did not result in the apparent moral justification of vice and the multiplication of offences. Similarly, Christian politicians and jurists can participate in the legal regulation of civil divorce, but only if the legislation does not multiply the divorce offences and does not give the impression that those same Christian politicians and jurists approve morally what they believe they cannot prevent legally. The tolerance or, rather, the legal damming up of an evil reality must, as a whole, serve morality.

I, therefore, define my opinion in five points.

(1) Divorce is, and will always be, a moral offence, because it is contrary to an essential and natural propriety of marriage. This must be clearly evident in the civil legislation or, better still, the civil legislation must not be such that it presents divorce as something which is normally beyond reproach.

(2) As already stated, none but God should have the power to allow a true exemption from this natural law called indissolubility of marriage. However, a duly established institution such as the state may accept a legal tolerance and legislate accordingly.

(3) In conclusion I say once more, because this seems to be of crucial importance, that civil legislation should not be established under any colour of moral legalization of divorce. Tolerance does not mean moral approval. On the contrary, the whole civil legislation system of the state, more precisely its marriage legislation, must be geared above all towards family happiness, the preservation of chastity and the durability of natural marriage.

Modern society, which seeks any number of grounds for divorce and increases the frailty of marital unions through legislation on the property of married couples and other arbitrary provisions of marriage laws, digs its own grave.

(4) If society can tolerate divorce, while trying to decrease its frequency, it can also tolerate marriage between divorcees to ensure its civil effects only.

(5) In practice, society will have to consider each individual case with the utmost care. It will have to carefully consider the alleged motives of the litigants and, especially, ensure maximum security for the children. We have no right to allow innocent children to feel the effects of the marriage breakdown.

These few considerations, however schematic, are enough to allow the legislators to undertake a sound discussion. Now, let us look into the grounds which can justify this tolerance on the part of the state with regard to divorce.

There can be many grounds, all more or less valid. However, my attention is caught more particularly by four of them.

The first one is the non-consummation of a valid marriage. Marriage is consummated after sexual relations. If a sexual act has not taken place, the marriage can be annulled. Since there has not been real sexual union, we cannot really speak of an indissoluble marital tie. This situation can happen quite often when the two spouses, for some reason or other, had no opportunity of living together after the marriage took place. If they have lived together, the marriage is presumed to have been consummated.

Secondly, the impossibility of a peaceful cohabitation where one of the spouses, most often, the wife, is victim of the brutality of the other or of a professed hatred. This ground is more imperative if the children of the marriage must live in an infernal atmosphere. Of two evils, one must choose the lesser.

Thirdly, adultery may be a valid ground. The infidelity of one of the spouses deprives them of every right to a complete partnership between husband and wife. Even if condonation is an ideal, one can understand the unbearable situation of the spouse who remained faithful.

Fourth, the definitive and unjustified desertion of one of the spouses, especially if the children of the marriage suffer by that in a special way.

The grounds could be manifold. But I would like to point out two things about them. All grounds are not to be accepted simultaneously. It is absolutely necessary to limit them; otherwise, we will be opening the door to anarchy in society. The legislators must adopt only a few, those which seem the most imperative, according to the situation in the country.

Any civil legislation that really wants to put a stop to divorce, that social evil, will have to be demanding with regard to the procedure to be followed. That will be a way to emphasize the disapproval aroused by such a state of affairs. It will be most important to find out whether the husband and wife deliberately made up the grounds which could justify their divorce petition. It must be recognized that whoever wants to leave the other can easily and with the explicit intention of getting a divorce create the unfortunate situation which would justify such a petition to the state. The latter must therefore be in a position to bring to light that deceitful intention.

In short, Mr. Speaker, even if civil law recognizes the validity of certain grounds for divorce, this law and the judicial procedure to be followed must be established in such a way that people can say that it is not easy to get a divorce in Canada. If they say the opposite, it is a sign that the state morally approves divorce and accepts the practice on a wide scale. Therefore, such legislation is harmful and fully deserves the censure and indignation of all those who still possess a remnant of natural morality. The state itself, I repeat, is digging its own grave. The experience of foreign states in past centuries is quite revelatory with regard to this unescapable consequence. If part of the population has lost all natural sense of morality, the lawmakers must show some instead, even though it is sad indeed to realize that such a substitution is necessary.

• (9:30 p.m.)

And what of the remedial action to be promoted against divorce? The state must therefore take a negative attitude toward divorce, that is, show its disapproval by being exacting with regard to grounds for divorce, as well as to the legal procedure to be followed. But it must not restrict its role to a negative attitude. A squarely positive position is perhaps the best way to check that disease. Such a positive position should consist in promoting, by every means possible, the indissolubility of marriage. Those means are many and varied. I shall point out a few.

Through special grants, the state should promote and encourage social organizations whose main purpose is to protect the family and the marital community. For instance, several institutions are designed to prepare future spouses properly. Others bring together couples with some experience of married and family life, to study some specific problems peculiar to married people and to strengthen finally the bonds which unite them. Other agencies work toward the reconciliation of separated spouses. It seems to me that the government should give positive help to such agencies which contribute to the welfare of society in general, and of the marriage institution in particular.

To prevent under-age weddings, which are too frequent, society should, for instance, further promote youth recreational activities which aim at the development and flowering of young people in a healthy climate. Even if some young people sometimes commit the well-known blunder, society should provide them with some protection against shotgun weddings, as they are called. The parents of those young people have no right, even to hide a certain shame, to push them into a marriage they do not want. One evil cannot be cured by another evil.

Finally, it might perhaps be well to review all our statutes on marriage, and see if they really serve the family well, and do not burden it with certain obligations which, in the final analysis, are detrimental to the strength of marriage. Some spouses consider giving up marriage because the state imposes obligations upon them which they did not have in single life.

Many other ways could be enumerated, Mr. Speaker, but it is up to us, legislators in this house, to seek and find the most efficient means to reinforce the stability, the indissolubility of matrimonial ties and to stem the social evil of divorce. The state should always endeavour to promote variously the solidity of that small cell which the family, the conjugal community constitutes. Is society not made up of thousands of such small cells? If the cells deteriorate and break down under the influence of divorce-cancer, what will happen to the great body, society? Deteriorating cells indicate a dying, or already dead, organism. However, if cells are teeming with life, that is, if the married community maintains an indefectible stability, the organism as a whole will be in a state of growth and sound development, in other words, society is on the straight road to full development.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, when this matter was discussed at the resolution stage I welcomed the fact that at long last we had a bill for the reform of our divorce laws which had been introduced by the government. I must admit when I saw the bill itself it was a serious disappointment. It now represents a considerable improvement from the existing law of Canada, but it is not very difficult to accomplish this because the existing law of Canada, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) pointed out, was either pre-confederation law or the law of England of 1857 as modified in 1870. The existing law of Canada is so antiquated and has produced such grave hardships that any change in it was bound to be an improvement. However, the bill goes very little if any further, than the changes made in the law of Great Britain in the 1930's.

I think it is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that when parliament at last tackles the problem of divorce it does not take advantage of the British experience. It is too bad that the law, as introduced by this government, is not atuned to contemporary society or to the needs of the second half of the twentieth century. It is to be regretted the government has not seen fit to listen to the advice of the churches, although the government does refer to this advice. When I say "the churches", I mean almost all of the recognized churches in Canada. They have advocated a totally new approach, an approach based upon the concept of marriage breakdown. This is a totally different way of handling the problem of divorce from the old concept of matrimonial offences. The basic philosophy behind this new approach, known as marriage breakdown, was enunciated, so far as I know, by Lord Walker, one of the members of a royal commission on marriage in 1955, who said:

> The true significance of marriage, as I see it, is lifelong cohabitation in the home for the family. But when the prospect of continuing cohabitation has ceased, that true view of the significance of marriage seems to require that the legal ties should be dissolved. Each empty tie—as empty ties accumulate—adds increasing harm to the community and injury to the ideal of marriage.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that the bill before us makes a sort of verbal nod to the breakdown theory but, as I shall point out, it rejects that theory in essence. The matter was very well put by one of the English law lords in a debate in the House of Lords in June, 1963 when he said this:

> There are only two theories alive in this problem —namely, are we going to act on the matrimonial offence or are we going to act on the breakdown of marriage theory? That is the fight.

That is still the fight here.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The bill which the minister has introduced mixes up the two theories of matrimonial offence and marriage breakdown, and the mélange is neither logical nor sound. It contains other defects which I shall try to point out and rectify by way of amendments when we reach the committee stage. I know that the minister has promised to take seriously such amendments as may be presented in committee.

Once again this government has put the members of the House of Commons on the horns of a dilemma. It has introduced a bill which contains serious defects, both in its basic approach to the matter with which it deals and in its details. Nevertheless it may be impossible for us to reject this bill as its provisions contain a great advance, as I have already said, over the existing law. It is just too bad that once again we are asked to accept the second best.

Before I discuss some of the major faults of the bill may I say that certain features of it should be welcomed. The first of those is the provision with respect to Canadian domicile, whereby the domicile of a married woman shall be determined as if she were unmarried. That means in effect that a married woman can bring her action for divorce where she lives. This reform is long overdue. The old rule that a husband's domicile prevailed was based on an English judicial decision, which in turn was based on the survival of the theory of the unity of the spouses. The theory in effect was that the wife had no separate existence apart from that of her husband. I think that any married man in this house will say that that theory was not founded on fact.

Mr. Groos: I agree with you there, Andy.

Mr. Brewin: Thank you.

Mr. Knowles: That was a plaintive response.

Mr. Groos: I just wanted the hon. member to know that I was listening.

Mr. Brewin: The theory, apart from its hoary nature, has worked grave hardships. I am glad that that matter is being changed.

I also welcome the final elimination of parliamentary divorce and the conferring on the Exchequer Court of Canada of jurisdiction to pronounce divorces, pending the acceptance of jurisdiction by the Superior Court of Quebec and the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. It is not necessary to recall the long battle that was waged by my colleagues, the hon. members for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and Skeena (Mr. Howard) to bring about this reform and to remove from parliament the responsibility of exercising a judicial responsibility which it was in no way fitted to discharge.

We welcome, further, the fact that the bill grants to the courts the right to deal with corollary relief, that is to say, those questions to do with the maintenance and custody of the children of the marriage and the payment of alimony to deserving spouses. It is my view that any law would be irresponsible if it failed to provide that the authority which dissolved the marriage could, at the same time, have authority to deal with the obligations that have arisen out of and been created by the marriage.

I welcome another feature of the bill which recognizes the duty of the courts to be concerned with the question of reconciliation. For reasons which I shall go into later, I have come to the conclusion that the provisions in the present bill, divorced as they are from the new approach of marriage breakdown, may turn out to be of little effect. It is however, some comfort that the existence of this problem is recognized.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, so far as the good aspects of the bill are concerned, if the grounds for divorce are to be expanded instead of the new theory of marriage breakdown being adopted, I welcome the extension of these grounds to include physical and mental cruelty, rendering continued cohabitation intolerable. We welcome the recognition that where a marriage has broken down and has resulted in an extended period of separation, that that marriage then should be dissolved.

Having recognized and welcomed these features of the bill, let me now turn to what I consider to be the basic defect. That is, as I have said before, the rejection of marriage breakdown as the sole ground for dissolution of the marriage. As I said before, this approach was put forward to the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons by a number of highly responsible groups: the United Church of Canada, the Anglican Church of Canada, the National Council of Women, the Canadian Mental Health Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Committee on the Status of Women and a number of individuals who are experienced in this field.

I have just this week received a communication from the Family Services Association of metropolitan Toronto which points out that in the second annual report of the British Law Commission of 1967 the following statement is to be found:

> We are satisfied that if parliament were to accept the principle of breakdown as the basis of divorce, practical and feasible proposals making use of the separation grounds could be prepared for the consideration of parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit me a question?

[English]

Mr. Brewin: Perhaps I might deal with the hon. member's question after I have finished. I have limited time in which to speak.

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member explain, or at least, give us a definition of a marriage breakdown?

[English]

Mr. Brewin: I say to the hon. member that I am just coming to that in the course of my speech. I might say that I think there has been considerable misunderstanding of what is involved in the marriage breakdown proposal. That proposal was adequately and fully set out in the report of a group that was appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury in January, 1964. That group reported in 1966. The committee consisted of leading churchmen, lawyers, judges, sociologists, psychiatrists, and even included a politician. The report is embodied in a book entitled, "Putting Asunder". Its subtitle is an interesting one: "A Divorce Law for Contemporary Society". The report says that the essence of the principle of divorce that is based on marriage breakdown is that the court studies and makes findings on the state of the marriage and not on the conduct of the parties. This change of approach is not accomplished by listing a series of circumstances, and saying that they are to constitute a breakdown.

In discussing their conclusion, the writers of the report say this:

> We very soon decided that it would not be an improvement, but the reverse, to introduce the principle of breakdown of marriage into the existing law in the shape of additional ground for divorce; and our objections to any such compromise multiplied and hardened as the time went on.

I and others on our committee went through precisely the same mental process. I suspect that others who subject themselves to studying the evidence and thinking about it will emerge with the same conclusions that the English committee emerged with.

In dealing with the choice of alternatives the English committee emerged with.

> Although some of our witnesses still had faith in the matrimonial-offence system, our study of it elicited little to its credit and nothing at all to make us want its perpetuation.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the English report was based on a period of 30 years experience with expanded matrimonial offences such as are contemplated in the bill that is presently before the house.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I want to read the conclusion of the committee report on this matter.

> Indeed we were persuaded that a divorce law founded on the doctrine of breakdown would not only accord better with social realities than the present law does, but would have the merit of showing up divorce for what in essence it is—not a reward for marital virtue on the one side and a penalty for marital delinquency on the other; not a victory for one spouse and a reverse for the other, but a defeat for both, a failure of the marital two-in-oneship in which both its members, however unequal their responsibility, are inevitably involved together. So we arrived at our primary and fundamental recommendation: that the doctrine of the breakdown of marriage should be comprehensively substituted for the doctrine of the matrimonial offence as the basis of all divorce.

The report proceeded to deal fully with what has been the main objection to basing divorce on breakdown, namely that it is not a triable issue and would impose an undue burden on the courts. This is the point of view put forward by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau), and I propose to deal with his remarks in more detail later.

May I first call the attention of the house to what the English committee said on this issue?

> For the most part we were advised that a judge would not find it unduly difficult to decide, after hearing the evidence, whether or not there was a reasonable probability in all the circumstances of cohabitation being revived. Actions and conduct which under the present law constitute matrimonial offences, though no longer in themselves and by themselves grounds for a decree, would still be available as evidence for breakdown.

It is true, as the minister said—and he gave it as his main reason for turning down this proposal—that this would involve procedural changes. The minister said these changes were unrealistic, and would impose on the existing courts of law and on the judiciary an inquisitorial approach coupled with a broad administrative discretion.

In this statement, the minister differs from the view of the experienced members of the English committee. I suggest he is also overlooking the fact that in this field of family relationships the courts have had to deal with general issues for many years, and deal with them on an administrative basis. For many years the law in Canada has laid down that the custody of children is to be determined on the basis of regard for their welfare. This administrative jurisdiction has existed in English law for centuries since the courts of Chancery exercised a quasi parental jurisdiction over the affairs of children based upon the theory that the crown, which they represented was parens patriae. It is also true that the marriage breakdown theory as applied to divorce would require the courts to determine whether the marriage was dead, whether there was any chance of its revival, or whether as it was a mere legal shell. It is not beyond the ability of the courts to do this, and anyone who says it is cannot be too familiar with what the courts are doing now.

It is true that the procedures required in arriving at such decisions would involve a somewhat different approach. This is one of the reasons I am advocating the change. It might involve the assistance of reports from social workers or other experienced people in the community. But there is nothing new in this. In divorce cases in the province of Ontario the rules of the court provide for the receiving of reports from the official guardian which, in turn, he obtains from the children's aid societies, in relation to conditions affecting children of the marriage. I am not sure whether this is the practice in other provinces, but these reports affecting the children are used by the courts to determine the highly important question of the custody of children in divorce cases.

It is said there is a lack of trained and experienced personnel. We have not heard about that from the Canadian Mental Health Association. If there is a lack, then I suggest the existence of a new approach to divorce would undoubtedly direct attention to it and the gap would be filled; more and more people would be trained in this field.

The responsibility would still belong to the court. But to turn down the proposal on the ground that it would introduce a new procedure is to turn it down on an unsatisfactory ground. In conclusion, I wish to refer for a moment to a further passage in the English report which says, in connection with whether the issue of breakdown is triable:

> The evidence we have received suggests that judges would be reluctant to be put in the position of having to make predictions about the future of marriages, but in fact a judgment of breakdown does not require any greater measure of prediction than, for instance, the judgment that the proved conduct of a spouse would, if continued, cause injury to the health of the other spouse. In both cases it is a present probability that has to be assessed.

The report goes on to give other reasons why one should not mix the breakdown principle with the principle of matrimonial offences. I wish to deal with this subject once again when I return to the question of provision for reconciliation.

[Mr. Brewin.]

In the opinion of the writers of this report who, as I say, were highly experienced, the principle of breakdown ought on no account to be introduced into the existing law in the form of an additional ground. If I may put this in my own words, the tendency of lawyers handling divorce cases would undoubtedly be to avoid basing their cases on breakdown except where they do not fit into any of the other categories. As a result, the basis of the present law would remain; the unreality of determining misconduct would remain. The accusatorial procedure, with all the bitterness it engenders, would remain.

I see it is almost ten o'clock. In the light of these observations I wish to proceed, when I have the opportunity tomorrow, to deal with the general provisions of this bill and to show that unfortunately it does not provide the best solution for the problem of divorce procedure.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Ricard: I should like to ask the leader of the house whether there is any change in the business for tomorrow and whether he can indicate the business for next week.

Mr. MacEachen: Tomorrow we shall continue our consideration of this bill. The business for next week is reasonably clear: it will be consideration of the broadcasting and budget bills.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS—REPORTED SUBSIDIZATION OF PRIVATE SCHOOL IN B.C.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question arises from an article which appeared in Maclean's magazine for December, 1967, "Maclean's Reports". It is about an unusual school in Vancouver which has grown up in response to the wishes of half a dozen or so disgruntled students from Lord Byng high school who complained about the high school system. By the end of the summer this group had grown to about 20 youngsters aged between 12 and 18 from all over Vancouver. They appealed for help from the Company of Young Canadians and in response, Colin Thomson, a 20-year-old graduate from the University of British Columbia and a C.Y.C. employee, agreed to work as co-ordinator. So they set about developing a rather unusual school.

● (10:00 p.m.)

They were able to rent space in Vancouver. They were able to obtain a library by lugging their own collections of books from home, which does not sound very much like a poverty stricken clientele and, as this article reports:

Their 1,000 volume collection leans more heavily on John Lennon and Henry Miller than it does on Shakespeare.

The problem of full-time teachers was almost insurmountable until the efforts of Mr. Thomson were augmented when the Company of Young Canadians, as this article reports, "agreed to underwrite salaries for five full-time staff members". But I learned by checking that there are three full-time staff members from the Company of Young Canadians at this unusual school.

I quote further from the article:

To achieve the freedom they want, the kids have thrown out formal lessons, exams, report cards, grades, predetermined curriculum and timetables.

Instead they have something called independent study. They stay home for days, if they are working on a project. They organize field trips, and have heard a Buddhist monk lecture on Viet Nam.

As I read this article it struck me that this was a rather unusual engagement for an organization that was supposed to be one of the main arms to be used in the drive in the war on poverty. I looked up the act establishing the company, and find that in the objects and powers defined in section 15 the company may:

—engage in community development work in urban and rural areas in Canada:

organize and carry out programs designed primarily to widen the social and economic opportunities of young people who leave school before completing their schooling; organize and carry out programs... to reduce the number of young people who leave school before completing their schooling; assist vocational training projects... undertake recreation programs for young people where recreation programs are not available; undertake programs in public health—

And so on. All of these deal with poverty as we ordinarily recognize it. When the act was introduced in this house the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) himself said:

It is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that in all such proposed projects or programs the company would operate only in co-operation with the many other organizations and agencies already in the field which are already attempting to deal with these social and economic problems.

I would maintain nothing is in the field of education as much as the public school system of British Columbia, but here we have the Company of Young Canadians going completely outside its mandate, not to co-operate with that school system but in a very real sense to subvert it.

Checking again, I found there was no co-operation either with the provincial department of education or the Vancouver school board. The entire project has been set up without the least co-operation from there, and it is being treated as another private school. Unless there is a complaint from a parent or from a student within the school it will not normally be investigated by the provincial department or by the Vancouver school board.

What I am really interested in are the constitutional points that this experiment raises. Although the volunteers from the Company of Young Canadians may not be receiving any direct grant, or a salary from the school, nevertheless their expenses are paid through the company. Taking these three teachers as a fraction of the 180 volunteers in the field, and allotting them a percentage of the total budget for the company last year, we find that providing these volunteers for this school for middle class and wealthy students, costs the taxpayers of Canada well over $13,000. It does not matter how indirect it is, the subsidy is there. It seems this is a strange intrusion of the federal authority into the field of education.

I would be interested to know if other provinces in the country can expect the same sort of treatment that is being provided to British Columbia. We who come from British Columbia know very well that on a variety of aid programs we have had to battle tooth and nail in order to get federal assistance for that province, and so it seems strange that this organization can move so openly in opposition to the existing organization, indeed in contempt of the existing organization, to set up a school system the virtue of which is highly doubtful, and the operation of which has nothing whatever to do with the sort of poverty that was contemplated when the act setting up the Company of Young Canadians was being debated and passed by this parliament.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for his representation. I am informed by the Company of Young Canadians that after being approached by a number of young people and parents who wished to establish an experimental school in Vancouver, the company now has three volunteers at the Knowplace school. The organizers of the school have consulted provincial educational authorities. Provision of these volunteers is undertaken under the terms of section 15(h) of the Company of Young Canadians Act. That is the extent of my information from the company.

TRANSPORT—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEXT STEPS

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, earlier today in the question period I raised with the Prime Minister the matter of further details with reference to his press statement of yesterday, when he indicated to the general public that there would be no scrapping of the Prince Edward Island crossing project. I think Prince Edward Islanders and many other Canadians can be forgiven if they become increasingly sceptical about the future of this project. Indeed I find it difficult to obtain support in any quarter for the belief that the government is in fact serious about the continuance of this project. Some people suggest there never was any seriousness on the part of the government, even in the early stages, in respect of pursuing this project. I find this difficult to believe.

Since I am not privileged to know about the various discussions going on in cabinet circles about this matter, it is difficult for me to know the actual state of mind which exists with regard to this particular project. However, I must admit that if people had some doubt concerning the furtherance of the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick crossing, they must have had that uncertainty heightened to a considerable degree when only a few short hours following the release of the announcement that the project would continue the man who made that announcement indicated his own resignation.

I do not suggest there is a connection between these two events, but I do suggest, if the government expects to be taken seriously in the matter of dealing with this most important project, that it is high time we had some action. It is an important project, not only to the end that it will achieve for the first time a permanent means of transportation to and from two provinces of Canada, but also it is important—as will be realized by those concerned about this, if they investigate the matter—from the standpoint of the future standard of living which may be enjoyed by the people of Prince Edward Island.

I would think that this government and indeed any government ought to be concerned about the fact that there are provinces of Canada which have a standard of living much below the standard of living in other parts of Canada. It is a fact well known to members of this house that the standard of living in the Atlantic region is at a figure of roughly 70 per cent of the national average. Until major steps are taken by the national government to rectify the serious problems which face this region we will never effectively achieve a national standard truly enjoyed by people in all parts of the country.

I believe this crossing is fundamentally important because it involves two great problems which confront Prince Edward Islanders. One of these problems is transportation. If we wish to become competitive in the manufacturing business related to our basic industries of farming and fishing, it is imperative that we have the kind of transportation which can only be provided by a causeway or crossing facility. I think this is well understood by most people.

Of almost equal importance to Prince Edward Island is the whole business of a power link which, as I understand it, will come with the establishment of the crossing. The idea of a submarine power cable has been accepted for some time now. However, Prince Edward Islanders cannot look forward to the benefits to be derived from large amounts of low cost electric power until that crossing is completed. There is the third argument that the national government at the present time is expending annually $5 million in the form of a subsidy to make up the difference in the cost of the present ferry transportation service.

• (10:10 p.m.)

These are all good economic reasons for all Canadians to be concerned about the future of the Northumberland strait crossing. Yet, during the past two years we have seen the most unusual performance ever witnessed on the part of this government. On several occasions in the house we have been told that the government is not going to do this right now—that at some time they plan to get it under way, or that at the moment it is being reviewed.

It is not my concern and intention this evening to bring out the many questions and comments that have been made in this house because they are all of public record, and known. What concerns me, and the reason I asked the question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) this afternoon, is the hope that we can get some assurance from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) that in the next few days we can expect some schedule indicating that the people of Prince Edward Island and of Canada generally may be assured that the project is going ahead, rather than some general statement that the government is committed to maintaining a transportation link, which is something I find now a bit devious. I hope to get a firm commitment that a permanent link will be established, whether it involves a complete causeway, or a causeway, tunnel and bridge complex, which will be established and built in the shortest possible time; because this makes good business sense and will provide the kind of economic opportunity this island province both needs and desires.

I find it very difficult to accept, as I am sure that people do, that in the two budgets which have been presented in just a little over a year the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) on one occasion and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) on another occasion have taken what I thought was a light approach, that they could with complete abandonment suggest that this project could be deferred, delayed, rescheduled—whatever euphemism you want to use—and expect the people to be satisfied.

Therefore I ask the Minister of Public Works to give the members of this house and the people of Prince Edward Island some assurance that we may have some specific assurance shortly, rather than the usual generality that tells us very little and fills us with great disappointment.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I must say I have listened with some amazement to the tenor of the remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. Fulton: You always do.

Mr. McIlraith: I quite appreciate the hon. member from British Columbia, but I hope he will stay out of this debate. After hearing him earlier this evening I do not think he has anything useful to contribute to this debate.

There never has been any time since I was made the minister that we have said we were not proceeding with this crossing. We have spent a great deal of money on it and the project is proceeding extremely well.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): You mean the studies.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member keeps interjecting. Surely I am entitled, since I am limited to three minutes, to be heard in reply to the seven minute statement of the hon. member, during which time I did not interrupt.

Mr. Fulton: Injured innocence.

Mr. McIlraith: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the house does not wish to hear me, that is fine, but I would ask that the rules be enforced, particularly if these would-be, but unsuccessful, leaders keep on interrupting.

Mr. Fulton: In view of the several over there I say this is injured innocence.

Mr. McIlraith: There may have been doubt created by some press reports, and undoubtedly more now, created by the remarks of hon. members opposite. In case there is such doubt I want to make it very clear that this project is proceeding. To do this I can do no better than read from the remarks of the Minister of National Revenue as reported in Hansard at page 5181 of December 7. He said in respect of this question:

> This next item is most important to many of my hon. friends from the maritime provinces. The government has decided to defer the placing of any further new contracts for the Northumberland causeway, pending a thorough review of the situation by Col. Edward Churchill, whose services have been retained as a co-ordinator of the project. This review, made necessary by the drastic escalation in the estimated cost of the project as originally conceived, will include the examination of alternative ways of meeting, on a more economically justifiable basis the commitment of the federal government to the government and the people of Prince Edward Island.

There was an interjection following, which the minister stated:

> That commitment this government will keep.

The press release of the Prime Minister to which my hon. friend referred is as follows:

> There is no thought of scrapping the P.E.I. crossing project.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Revenue Minister Benson told the House of Commons on December 7 that the federal government would keep its commitment to the people of Prince Edward Island. I now confirm what he said.

We intend to proceed with the project. In fact, we are busy on it now. Colonel Edward Churchill is now actively directing a full review of the plans made by Northumberland Consultants Limited.

We believe that the people of Prince Edward Island want us to honour our commitment in the most efficient and practical way. I have asked Colonel Churchill that there be no delay in completing a thorough review of the plans and this review is proceeding at full pace.

That engineering review is going on extremely well at the moment. I cannot give a definite date as to when it will be completed. I cannot foretell what precise form of crossing will be recommended in the review. It is impossible to give a precise time schedule of construction work when you do not know the precise form of the construction work that will be undertaken.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.19 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 15, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PREVENTIVE DETENTION OF SEXUAL OFFENDERS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-189, to amend the Criminal Code (preventive detention of sexual offenders).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to deal with a problem which became apparent in the Supreme Court of Canada decision in the case of Klippert v the Queen. The court decided that under the present wording of a section of the Criminal Code a homosexual might be held in preventive detention for life if he were likely to commit the offence again.

The majority of the court said the wording of the section as at present in the code would have that result. A minority of the court, of which Chief Justice Cartwright was one, held that the real intent of parliament was that this should only apply in the case of a dangerous offender. The purpose of this bill is to amend the law to make it comply with the view of the minority of the court.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING IMPORTATION OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-190, to amend the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act to allow compulsory licenses to import prescription drugs, having the effect of injecting more competition at the manufacturers' level in the drug industry, and beneficially affecting the prices of drugs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (11:10 a.m.)

FISH INSPECTION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONTAINERS, PROCESSING, ETC.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-27 (from the Senate), to amend the Fish Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Translation]

MANPOWER

QUEBEC—REPORTED REDUCTION IN RETRAINING PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger-E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the fact that nearly 100 instructors in the area of Toronto alone have been laid off for lack of trainees under the manpower training program, has the minister planned to remedy this apparent breakdown of the training program?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Régimbal: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the minister give us some idea, since this matter is urgent and causes serious concern in many areas of the country? At the same time, could he say if this situation prevails elsewhere in Canada and where?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have explained in the house why the number of recruits had decreased. I also stated that we were taking measures designed to correct that situation and we have every reason to believe that everything will return to normal as of January.

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the fact that the minister and his department have contracted with the provinces for a great many man days of training, does the minister not think it is imperative that steps be taken immediately to accelerate the program so the taxpayer will get his money's worth out of the training, and so that many more people will be trained?

Mr. Marchand: This is exactly what we are doing now.

Mr. Starr: Where is the result?

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the fact that 4,000 out of a total of 5,000 unemployed in a certain area of the country are eligible to maintenance allowances to students, can the minister tell us whether he intends to make an investigation in the Quebec area where only 580 unemployed out of a total of 13,000, have been accepted?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the exact figures, but there is no need for a special inquiry. All the necessary information is available as received from our manpower centres.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GREECE—CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH MILITARY RÉGIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister regarding Canada's relations with the military régime in Greece. Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs earlier this session said that Canada's relations with that administration were not in question because the chief of state was still there; and in view of the fact that the prime minister of Britain has now said that the United Kingdom's recognition is no longer valid because King Constantine has left the country, may I ask the Prime Minister what are Canada's relations with the military régime in Greece? Will this régime still be recognized, and will diplomatic relations be maintained with that country?

[Mr. Starr.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): In view of the uncertainty of the situation in Greece from the constitutional point of view, and in view of the effect on the constitution of the withdrawal of the king, it is not possible for me to give a definitive answer to that question at this moment. We are studying this matter, and as soon as the situation has cleared up, as I hope it will before many days, I will be in a better position to reply to the question.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that many Canadians of Greek origin are concerned about the safety of their relatives in Greece, and in view of the widespread arrests which have been going on and which have been accelerated in recent days, is the Canadian government making any representations to the government of Greece regarding these violations of basic human liberty?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have no information to the effect that such arrests have been accelerated in recent days. However, we will be receiving a report from our ambassador in Greece with regard to the effect, if any, of recent developments on the matter of arrests. We have already indicated our attitude toward the régime. I would prefer not to say anything further until we have a more accurate picture of what is happening in that country.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement just made by the Prime Minister, when he makes a report to the house will he also include a statement concerning the attitude of Canada with regard to the position of Greece within the NATO alliance?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend knows, of course, that the NATO council has been meeting and the Greek government has been represented at that conference.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether he believes that, in view of the situation in Greece, the plans concerning Cyprus may be altered and whether a decision has been taken as to the renewal of the mandate of the peace-keeping force we are maintaining in Cyprus and which is to terminate on December 26 next?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Our information is that the recent events in Greece have not affected in any way the attitude of the Greek government toward the arrangements which were worked out among Turkey, Greece and Cyprus. The question of the mandate of the United Nations force in Cyprus and its possible extension I believe is coming before the security council on Monday.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN SUPPORT FOR GREATER USE OF FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Has he had time to study the resolution to be presented to the United Nations on the increased use of French there, and will Canada be stating its position in respect of that resolution?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had a chance to study it. My hon. friend will be glad to know that Canada is one of the sponsors of this resolution, so naturally we will be supporting it.

Mr. Johnston: Have any representations been received from the government of France in regard to Canada's support for this resolution?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think any representations were required, Mr. Speaker, because we joined with other delegations in drawing up the resolution. I think the French delegation was one of them.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL RESOLUTION RESPECTING AMENDMENTS TO YUKON ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The minister has no doubt by now been in touch with the commissioner of the Yukon in respect of legislation passed by the council the day before yesterday. Can he now say he has agreed to the request of the council for the establishment of a committee on constitutional reform, and that the government will cooperate in discussing with the council the question of reforms to the Yukon Act?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. This seems quite in order, because the council yesterday agreed to withdraw all the conditions it had inserted the day before.

Mr. Nielsen: As the minister is aware, the council did so with the request that the minister give a written undertaking to enter into discussions on constitutional reforms. I wonder whether the minister has acceded to this request of the council.

Mr. Laing: I think my information is a little more up to date than that in the possession of the hon. member. The council withdrew entirely its suggestion that it required me to make any statement. I want to say that I cannot agree to the council imposing a condition that instructs me to take a certain action which I had informed the council at least six weeks ago I was going to take.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder whether the minister, in keeping with the reply of the Prime Minister earlier this week, would make a statement on this matter some time early next week, so the position of the government can be established with respect not to the demands but the requests of the Yukon council?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, we will be making a statement when we call the council together to discuss the white paper we are preparing.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTED DEPORTATION OF U.S. CITIZENS AT TORONTO UNIVERSITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) asked me if the department intended to deport the two young Americans who took an active part in a demonstration at Toronto University against the representatives of a chemical company who were recruiting on the campus.

Those two American students, Messrs. Carl Gilbert and Paul Hocks, are in Canada after having complied with the regulations. They have been admitted to complete their postgraduate work at Toronto University and have in no way violated the Immigration Act. As long as they respect the provisions of the act, I believe they will be allowed to express themselves freely in Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in relation to his statement yesterday that bars would be put on the windows of the immigration department's building to stop rejected immigrants from committing suicide in this way on the premises. Does the minister not consider it would be simpler and more humane to remove the bars in the Immigration Act and regulations?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Ontario wishes us to remove all restrictions from the Immigration Act, I am ready to discuss the matter in the house.

[English]

[Later:]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a question supplementary to the one asked yesterday and to which he replied a few moments ago, with respect to incidents at the University of Toronto. Is the minister or the government satisfied that no action is called for by the immigration authorities with respect to the conduct of a man who comes here from another country and deliberately advocates that action be taken to bring to a halt the administration of one of our great Canadian universities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking a very general question. He is asking for an expression of opinion, the way the question is put.

Mr. Lambert: The question is very direct; it is not general.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I was asking for a statement of fact as to whether the government is satisfied that no action is called for under these circumstances.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I have received information to the effect that those two young students took part in a quite legitimate demonstration in Canada. All students have this right, and students who come here to receive formal university education have the same rights as others.

[Mr. Marchand.]

[English]

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL GOLD TRANSACTIONS TO SUPPORT DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Does Canada form part of the consortium, and if not has it been consulted by the consortium of central bankers, who have been taking action in the gold market in recent weeks and days in order to protect the dollar? Also, could the minister advise the house how this action may affect Canada and its relationship with the international market?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Canada is not a member of the so-called gold pool. However, we have been kept well informed of the operations of that pool. We have not been asked to join it. Of course, as the hon. member and the house know, the outcome of the present transactions in the gold market are of the very greatest importance to Canada.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this mean that dealing in futures in the gold market will not apply in Canada as well as in the pool countries?

Mr. Sharp: I would like to take notice of that question, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED NATIONS

REPRESENTATIONS BY CANADA RESPECTING ARAB REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. It concerns the terribly difficult question of Arab refugees now before the special political committee of the United Nations general assembly. Can he advise whether the Canadian delegation is to propose any initiative toward the solution of this long standing problem, on which the Israeli representative made some interesting suggestions yesterday?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been continually discussing this matter with other delegations at the United Nations. I will have to look into the question to see whether any representations have been made by us in the last few days.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON EXCLUDED PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board arising out of the recommendation made by the joint House of Commons-Senate committee on the public service that within six months of the coming into effect of the law an advisory council to deal with compensation and related matters of excluded personnel be set up. I would ask the President of the Treasury Board whether this council has been set up, and whether he can give us the names of the people appointed to it.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): As I indicated to the house earlier, Mr. Speaker, the cabinet has agreed to the setting up of such a council. I have been approaching persons to be members of the council. I anticipate that I will be able to announce the names of those appointed by the end of this month.

ADJUSTMENT OF INTEREST PAID ON SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the concern of ex-government employees over the government's decision not to adjust their pensions, will the government give consideration to increasing to a more realistic rate the interest which is now credited to the balance in the various superannuation accounts?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, may I take this question as notice.

DRUGS

SUBMISSION BY PHARMACEUTICAL MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Hamilton South asked me whether I had received a submission from the pharmaceutical manufacturers association of Canada which had been sent to all members of parliament.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In recent months the government has received a number of submissions and representations from the pharmaceutical manufacturers association of Canada. The hon. member for Hamilton South by now will have had, or shortly will have, an opportunity of reading the bill amending the patent and trade marks acts, which has just been introduced. I can assure him that all representations which I have received from any quarter regarding this bill have been carefully considered.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR CANADIAN RECIPIENTS OF U.K. PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. On December 6 last I asked the Minister of Finance whether there was any legislation or any regulation which permits the government to compensate Canadians who are in receipt of old age or disability pensions from the British government. In reply he said he would take my question as notice and discuss it with his colleague. Has the minister any further information to give the house on this question, which does concern a good number of Canadians suffering the effects of the devaluation of the pound?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the new Canada-U.K. income tax agreement all pensions from Britain, except certain government pensions which were in force prior to January 1, 1965, are exempt from U.K. tax. Even these pre-1965 British pensions may be received free of British tax if the pensioner elects to have them taxed in Canada.

We have these U.K. forms in all the district taxation offices. They will be supplied to people interested along with instructions on how to apply for a refund of the British tax.

[Later:]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kootenay West asked a question today about British disability pensioners, and my colleague the Minister of National Revenue answered that question. The hon. member had also asked a previous question, and I believe I owe him a reply. The question concerned the effect of devaluation upon these pensions. The answer is that British disability pensioners domiciled in Canada who have qualified for the Canadian supplement in the past will not lose because of the devaluation of sterling.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to thank both ministers for their complete and comprehensive answers respecting the present situation.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EQUIPPING OF MOTOR VEHICLES WITH EXHAUST CONTROLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and ask him whether the officials of his department have now completed their study of the clean air package required by law for all motor vehicles in the United States in 1968.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that air pollution is a serious problem in our country, can the minister give us some idea as to when he expects this study to be completed?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be very happy to consider the matter with my officials and give an answer later.

Mr. Grafftey: I have a further supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell us whether, in so far as the matter involves transportation, the officials of his department are looking into this very serious matter of a clean air package for motor vehicles in 1968?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE ON PROPOSED CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether there has been any correspondence with the provinces regarding the proposed dominion-provincial conference on the bill of rights, additional to that which was laid on the table of the house on November 21 and printed as an appendix to Hansard of that day. If there has been, would the Prime Minister be so good as to seek consent to have it laid on the table of the house before the recess next week and have it similarly printed?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. To the best of my recollection there has been only one suggestion for an additional subject, and that is the B and B report. There may be others, but provincial leaders have indicated they would not like to have the agenda restricted to subjects already on the agenda, and we are very much in favour of that.

In that way the conference can be the beginning of a consideration not only of these specific subjects but of the process of constitutional revision, and with that purpose in mind we are setting up in the federal government a special office of qualified officials and others who would be giving full time consideration to the agenda and to other problems before the conference opens.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

I should like to ask the hon. Prime Minister whether he expects to receive the other volumes of the report by the Laurendeau-Dunton commission before the federal-provincial conference which is called for February next.

[English]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I doubt that they will be ready before February 5. However, I have been in touch with the commission to urge them to complete the other volumes as quickly as possible. As the house knows, I have been informed that they might be completed in the new year.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the obvious importance of maintaining a proper perspective on all aspects of the B and B commission report, can the Prime Minister give us now or will he undertake to obtain from the commission a rough estimate of when the remaining volumes of the report will be available?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression this question was just asked by the hon. member for Lapointe.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

LIBAU, MAN.—PROTEST ON TRANSFER OF POSTMASTERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): My question is for the Postmaster General. Last Wednesday, I believe, the hon. member for Selkirk asked the Postmaster General if he would reconsider his decision to transfer the post office at Libau, Manitoba. The question was taken as notice in the absence of the minister. Can he now reply to that question?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the situation in Libau seems to be quite normal at this time.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General must surely be aware that a petition is being circulated in Libau asking for his resignation. He could stave off this petition by acting in a manner that will settle the question in Libau once and for all.

Mr. Schreyer: If I understood the Postmaster General correctly, Mr. Speaker, I believe he said the situation was normal. I wish to ask him if he would now take the opportunity to correct two matters of fact which he misstated here in replying to my question on Tuesday. This almost amounts to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Postmaster General stated that the two facts upon which he relied in making the decision to transfer the post office were, one, that the post office had changed hands three times in the past four years. Upon checking I am informed the post office has changed hands only twice in 30 years.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that at this stage of the proceedings he can only ask questions; he cannot make speeches.

Mr. Schreyer: This is a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Postmaster General if he will not take the time now to correct his statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a question of privilege. I fail to see how the hon. member's privileges have been affected by the situation of which he complains.

Mr. Schreyer: I suggest it is a question of privilege because the Postmaster General misinformed this house in replying to my question.

[Later:]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether he would not show a sense of grace and magnanimity in this matter and transfer the post office—

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

I do not have to accept any lesson from the hon. member as concerns my conduct as Postmaster General. I believe that since I have been here I have done everything I could to satisfy everyone.

As for the post office of Libau, the member charged me a moment ago with misinforming the house because I said that this post office had changed hands at least three times since 1962. I do not have the exact dates on hand because the file has gone back to the department, but I can assure members of the house that the business establishment or the building where the post office used to be has been sold three times. All postmasters who operate a business in the same premises should be told that they cannot sell the post office when they sell their business.

The present postmaster is a resident of Libau. Every time the postmaster changed, in the same business, it was always someone from outside who purchased the business and it is a policy of the department to appoint residents of the community where the post office is located whenever a postmaster has to be appointed.

I would not want this question to become a political issue, Mr. Speaker, because I have discovered that the demonstration which took place had been organized by certain members of a certain party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, in order not to make it difficult for Your Honour I shall confine my retort to a very short question. Will the minister refer this matter to an appropriate committee of this house so the circumstances can be properly investigated?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): No, Mr. Speaker, I can take decisions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the Postmaster General refuses to refer this question to an appropriate committee of this house or to any impartial tribunal, may I ask him whether he will not take the opportunity next week, after reading his reply to my question on Tuesday last, to correct his statement which on at least two matters of fact is completely erroneous.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are again obviously getting into a debate on this question. I suggest to hon. members that we might well go on with orders of the day.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

RHODESIA—REPORT ON SANCTIONS BY UN SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Secretary General has tabled a report with the security council on the effects of mandatory sanctions against Rhodesia, can the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether the commonwealth members are having or are planning to have a further meeting on the question of sanctions?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to check, but my recollection is that they had a meeting last week at which they considered this report, among other things. I will try to find out whether they are having another meeting next week.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the right hon. gentleman's very great contribution to establishing the sanctions committee and the steps that have followed, can he inform the house whether Canada has formulated any proposals for overcoming the obstacles which the sanctions have encountered?

Mr. Pearson: I think we ought to study the United Nations report first. It was just received a few days ago. After we have studied that with the other members of the commonwealth, then we will be in a better position to report on what should be done with regard to this matter.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): May I ask a supplementary question about the sanctions report. Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether we are now purchasing from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics the chromium we used to buy from Rhodesia?

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

Mr. Pearson: I do not think so, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to look into that matter.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF CONTINUED RAIL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I should like the minister to assure the house and the people of Prince Edward Island, if he can, that there will not be any curtailment of the present passenger service by rail—I stress those words "by rail"—between Charlottetown and Borden.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will have to take the question as notice and refer it to the railway company, because it is a matter within their jurisdiction.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF INCREASE REFUSAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister is making up the list of things to attend to before he leaves office, will he put on that list a reconsideration of the question of pension increases for retired civil servants, in line with his statement that he hoped this reconsideration would be possible soon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have stated that we hope the situation will be such that we will be able to reconsider sympathetically this very difficult problem. I hope the situation will so improve during the remainder of my period on this side as Prime Minister that this may be possible. Perhaps it would be also a good thing to reconsider, in these circumstances, the question of members' pensions.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

FORT OGILVIE, N.S.—REQUEST THAT DEMOLITION BE CANCELLED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): I should like to direct my question to the minister for Indian affairs. I should like to ask the minister if it is at all possible for his department to reconsider the recent decision to demolish Fort Ogilvie, near Halifax.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made his representations to the minister now.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION FOR STAFF OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In the absence of the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister regarding the staff of the centennial commission. On May 20, 1965 Mr. Lamontagne, who was then secretary of state said, as reported on page 1501 of Hansard:

> I want to assure the staff of the commission that everything will be done to ensure that they suffer no hardship or sudden break in employment when their task has been accomplished.

In view of the fact that I understand over 50 of the fairly senior employees of the centennial commission have not been placed in any employment, may I ask if the government is making any endeavour to see that this commitment made by Mr. Lamontagne is carried out?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I understand the Public Service Commission is doing its best in this regard. I will make some inquiries.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a complementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether the centennial commission is to make a financial report and whether this report will be presented to the house?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: I should expect there would be a report.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE CHEQUES FOR CROP FAILURE AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar asked me a question about P.F.A.A. payments which I undertook to answer today. I understand payments commenced on December 1, and some half million dollars has been paid. Most of the inspections have been completed and payments will continue. Inspections in the Peace River area will not be completed until late spring. They are the only ones with which we contemplate any delay. Total payments are anticipated to be in the neighbourhood of $12 million, and these payments will be made as far as possible by the end of January.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO SUPERVISION AND CONTROL OVER SEAL HUNT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desired to ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries, but he seems to have disappeared for the moment. Since he was here a couple of moments ago perhaps I can address the question to him and he can take it as immediate notice. I understand the minister is behind the curtain, so if he will come into the house I will ask my question.

In view of so many authoritative complaints about the last seal hunt and matters within the jurisdiction of Canada, may I ask the minister whether new and special provisions will now be issued under the authority of the minister for the next hunt and killing of baby seals.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I have stated many times in this house, proper supervision and control were exercised last year during the seal hunt. If at all possible, still better supervision and control will be exercised during the next season.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the report of the minister to the house has been contradicted by those who attended the hunt in a supervisory capacity, will there be any special provisions and supervision this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to answer this question. Those who were sent to the hunt by the S.P.C.A. reported exactly as I stated in the house. Responsible observers reported that control was adequate, and that there has been much improvement in the last two or three years.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): A supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the importance of the sealing industry to the economy of the Atlantic provinces, could the minister state whether the price of seal skins has improved so it will be economically possible for those engaged in this industry to carry on this year?

Mr. Robichaud: I am sure the hon. member is aware that in view of the most unfortunate propaganda about this operation on the part of irresponsible observers the price of seal skins has been depressed so much that the livelihood of those who depend on this operation for a living has been affected. However, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the new regulations which will be introduced next year whereby the season will be reduced by delaying the opening date, both in the gulf and on the front, will have a beneficial effect on the market.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Fisheries could advise the house as to how many years these so-called experts in sealing have been in the business, to give the minister advice.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the advice which the department is acting upon is given by experts who have engaged in this particular aspect of research for the last 25 years. I feel they are much more responsible than the reports I have been given by those people referred to by the hon. member and who have no interest whatsoever in this operation.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether hon. members do not feel that we are now into a debate.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a question of privilege, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Trinity-Conception.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know from the minister whether his department has considered prohibiting the taking of seals by aircraft.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I would not say we have considered abolishing completely the operation of aircraft in this hunt, but we have been in communication with the Department of Transport in order to better control and limit the use of such aircraft.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. The minister completely misunderstood my question. I was not referring to the experts within his department; I was asking about these so-called experts who are trying to advise the Minister of Fisheries and his department, and who are outside the department.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be agreement now between the minister and the hon. member.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I understood perfectly the question put by the hon. member.

Mr. Winch: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement by the minister may I ask him whether he would be prepared to go before the agriculture committee on this matter and have evidence presented on every side of the question.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that concerns the Department of Fisheries, not the Department of Agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, could the hon. Minister of Fisheries inform the house whether he has considered adding an observer from the Progressive Conservative party and from the New Democratic party to the list of government observers?

[English]

An hon. Member: What about the trained seals over there?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are now passing on to a new subject.

• (11:50 a.m.)

DIVORCE

MEASURE RESPECTING GROUNDS, JURISDICTION, JUDGES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, December 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau for the second reading of Bill No. C-187, respecting divorce.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether you can hear my voice but I will do my best. Last night when I was speaking in this debate I sought to outline in general terms the main objection which I and some others have to the bill we are discussing. This objection is that it fails to accept a new approach to the question of determining the proper basis for divorce, that new approach being by way of marriage breakdown.

May I turn now to discuss the present bill in the light of the general observations I have made. The main provisions of the legislation are contained in clauses 3 and 4. Clause 3 provides that adultery, cruelty and certain other matters shall be grounds for divorce. Cruelty includes both mental and physical cruelty so as to "render intolerable the continued cohabitation of the spouses." It is fairly obvious that if the breakdown principle were adopted such a situation would be clear evidence of marriage breakdown and the petitioner would be able to obtain a divorce on that ground without specially naming cruelty. Clause 3 retains as a ground for divorce the commission of the act of adultery. Under the breakdown theory, if it were adopted, it might well be that an act of adultery or continued acts of adultery would form the basis of a breakdown of a marriage. However, there might well be circumstances in which the commission of an act of adultery would not be sufficient ground for saying a marriage had broken down. There seems little reason why the law should concentrate on such a superficiality, if I may use such language about conduct which is clearly wrong and which may, indeed, wreck a marriage. But, after all, it is a wrong which is nearly always a symptom rather than the cause of the failure of a marriage.

If the law is amended as proposed by the minister we shall continue under the new law to hold trials based upon contrived hotel and motel assignations. This will continue to be the easiest way to secure a divorce. Its popularity, in the sense of its frequent adoption, will continue, and I suggest the abuses attached to it will remain.

Clause 4 pays lip service to the idea of the breakdown of a marriage as a ground for divorce. It lists a number of situations which are said to constitute a permanent breakdown. However, it will be noted that subclause 2 provides that a permanent breakdown of a marriage is deemed to have been established when any of the circumstances named in subclause 1 are shown to exist.

Perhaps the minister will tell us later whether this is intended to be what lawyers call an irrebuttable presumption. I assume it is. In other words, once any of these circumstances has occurred it is presumed that the marriage has broken down. If this is the proper interpretation, and I believe it is, what is the purpose of referring to permanent breakdown at all? The individual paragraphs themselves spell out the circumstances which are the basis for divorce. May I point out that these specific headings make no provision for other circumstances not listed which may cause the breakdown of a marriage. They therefore restrict the courts on occasions when the courts should, I suggest, grant a divorce—cases in which the marriage is clearly dead but the circumstances do not fit into the pigeonholes of the bill.

On the other hand, the clause presumes the irreparable breakdown of a marriage whenever any of a list of circumstances exist. This is quite apart from any marriage breakdown. Imprisonment for a long period may well lead to a marriage breakdown, it is true, but I cannot understand why imprisonment alone, unaccompanied by evidence of marriage breakdown, should be a proper ground for divorce.

One of the unfortunate features of the bill before us is that it continues all of the present rigmarole which lawyers know as the three C's—collusion, connivance and condonation. These are the formulæ whereby the dissolution of a marriage can be refused on the ground that the parties have agreed to it, have forgiven an act of misconduct complained of or have encouraged its commission. I believe all lawyers familiar with divorce cases are well aware of the farce which is carried on in the courts whereby a petitioner for divorce is drilled to repeat a firm denial that he has offended against this formidable though somewhat unintelligible legal proposition.

The bill goes even farther. I do not know whether it intends to do so, but I invite the attention of the minister and the house to clause 9 which provides that it shall be the duty of the court to refuse a decree based upon the consent of the parties. In the context it may have been intended that this should refer to formal, written consent. But it might well be interpreted by the courts to mean that where the parties have consented to a divorce or to the circumstances upon which the divorce is based, a decree must be refused.

Take the question of separation. Suppose the parties have been separated for not less than three years, as mentioned in the bill. Such a separation might obviously be the subject of consent. Indeed, it could be the subject of legal agreement, and the parties might well have contemplated that at the end of the period of separation one or other would seek a divorce. Under the wording of this bill would it not then be the duty of the court to refuse to grant divorce on the ground that the petition was based on the consent of the parties?

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member permit a question? Taking the example he has given, would not the consent be consent to the separation, not consent to the divorce? In other words, the court would be passing judgment not on the consent to separate but on the issue of divorce.

Mr. Brewin: I confess the wording is ambiguous. It says the court should refuse a divorce based on consent. If the court found that the consent of the parties was the basis of the divorce proceedings it might well interpret the bill as saying that divorce should be refused, and this would negative the provision for divorce based on separation. I suggest to the minister that before we get to committee this point be looked at again in order that the sense of it may be clarified, because the reality of the matter is that many divorces are and always will be based upon consent, whatever subterfuges may be forced on the parties to conceal the element of consent.

• (12 noon)

I agree with many hon. members who have the view that divorce should not be based solely on consent. The marriage contract is not a mere private contract of partnership that can be terminated at the will of the parties. Marriage creates obligations with which the state is concerned. It is important that there be independent tribunals so that people cannot unilaterally, or even by agreement, get out of the obligations created by marriage. I am not suggesting that agreement by itself should be sufficient to bring about a divorce, but it is quite unrealistic to say that because the parties happen to agree they should not have a divorce. Under existing law, as a lot of people know, many divorces are arranged, but it is nevertheless necessary for the parties to go through a parade of empty words before the courts. They are obliged to swear on oath that in fact there is no element of agreement or consent although this is often not true.

It is in this context that I want to deal with the provisions of the bill with respect to reconciliation. I suggest they will be virtually useless. Clause 7 provides that the legal adviser should draw attention to the provisions of the legislation with regard to reconciliation. Clause 8 provides that the court may adjourn a hearing for divorce in order to afford an opportunity for marriage reconciliation or marriage counselling. Judging by the experience in divorce courts today, the total effect of this is likely to be the addition of some extra words to the formal pleadings, plus the addition of a few extra sentences at the trial. Counsel or the judge will ask a few perfunctory questions about attempts at reconciliation. This is particularly true where the divorce is based upon the old grounds of adultery and matrimonial misconduct. Now lawyers will have to add another formula to the three c's they have been asking about in the past.

However, I point out that if the breakdown principle were adopted it would alter the existing situation. In that case it would give substance to the question of reconciliation. A judge would not make, except in the case of a long separation, a finding of complete breakdown of the marriage until satisfied that a reasonable attempt at reconciliation had been made. This would make it a matter of substance rather than a mere matter of formality.

If I may sum up on this aspect of the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that it is really a continuation, with changes, of the old system. It rejects a new approach. It seems to me to be quite ridiculous for the government to say, as many members supporting it have said, that public opinion is not ready to accept such a sweeping change in the law and that we must maintain the old, familiar concepts. The fact of the matter is that the churches, usually noted for a conservative approach to questions of marriage, have opted for the new approach and have urged it upon the government.

The churches are naturally conservative in matters of this sort. Although they have disclaimed any intention of forcing their opinions upon others who do not share their faith, they are particularly concerned about the stability of the family and marriage as a permanent institution. But the churches have been able to say, and nearly all of them have said, that when a marriage has broken down and there is no hope of reconciliation the institution of marriage is more honoured by declaring that it is at an end than it is in trying to maintain empty legal ties. In these circumstances I find it strange to hear a Liberal government, and a Liberal party that prides itself on being a party of reform, maintain that the churches have gone too far and are too radical and that public opinion will not accept such a change. It is not just the churches which have urged the new approach. Social workers, experts in mental health, councils of women and some of the most experienced lawyers have also given their support to the new approach.

Now that the government has accepted the other, more old-fashioned approach, the approach adopted in Britain more than 30 years ago, and has declared this bill to be a government measure, I suppose there is little likelihood of a quick change of mind and we shall once again have to accept the second best. However, I hope that this discussion and the issues involved will be the subject of widespread examination by the Canadian people, and that it will not be too long before the legislators as well as the people are ready for a totally new approach to the question.

There is one other general matter, although it is partly a matter of detail, of great importance in regard to the bill that I wish to raise. I refer to the decision of the minister and the government to turn down the unanimous recommendation of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons that jurisdiction in respect of divorce in provinces other than Quebec and Newfoundland should be conferred upon county and district courts and not confined to supreme courts.

The committee heard a strong plea in this regard from former Chief Justice McRuer of the Supreme Court of Ontario. He pointed out that judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario—and I think the same is true in other provinces—go on circuit throughout the province. They may visit a particular county town once in five years or ten years or only once. Therefore the judges of the Supreme Court are not accessible in large parts of the country. Yet this bill gives jurisdiction to that court with regard to all sorts of ancillary and corollary provisions dealing with maintenance and custody, provisions that have been varied from time to time and which require constant supervision. The minister has said that the matters involved in divorce are at least of equal importance to property matters dealt with by the highest courts. Of course they are as important, perhaps more important, but intimate family affairs are better dealt with by a court closer to the people and more accessible to the people.

Another advantage of transferring jurisdiction to the county courts or district courts would be that it would substantially cut down the cost of divorces. This is surely an extremely important matter. I wonder why the decision of the committee, which was composed of many lawyers from all parts of Canada serving both in the Senate and the House of Commons, was turned down. I can only suspect that someone with a more academic acquaintance with the subject decided that the matter should be confined to the supreme courts alone. I urge the minister to reconsider this point.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member will accept a question, does he know that all provinces can, and some provinces do, provide that county court judges be also named to the position of local judges of the supreme or high court?

Mr. Brewin: This is an elaborate procedure. It would not cut down the cost. You would have to go to the supreme court to have the matter referred and, when referred, it would be subject to review by the supreme court.

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid the hon. member's academic knowledge is not good enough.

Mr. Brewin: It may not be, but I have a great deal more practical experience in this field, a great deal more experience than the minister has ever had or is ever likely to have.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member for Greenwood that the time allotted to him has expired.

Divorce Law Reform

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, today, in 1967, we are discussing the proposed reform of a law we inherited in 1867 that was based on the English law of 1867, which law was completely altered in 1937, and is more antiquated than the law of Rome in 37 B.C. The world of our great-great-grandfathers was a completely different world from our world in this centennial year. Yet most of our social laws have hardly changed. No laws in Canada are crying out more for reform than our divorce laws. They cause more suffering than did the rack in the middle ages.

• (12:10 p.m.)

It would be an ideal world if every married couple lived happily ever after. For various reasons marriages go on the rocks, families break up. The reasons are legion. It may simply be because the wrong people went to the altar. It may be because of the immaturity of the partners, a failure to adjust, lack of understanding of the responsibilities of marriage, or even simple selfishness on the part of one partner or both. I have personally seen dozens of situations where because of one mistake people have been condemned to unhappiness and frustrating loneliness owing to our antiquated and uncivilized divorce laws.

For example, I recall the case of a girl who married at the age of 18. Three months later her husband deserted her. A child was born seven months after the desertion. Since that time the husband has travelled all over North America. She has attempted almost frantically to obtain evidence of adultery on his part. She has been unable to afford the tremendous detective fees and 15 years later is still trying to find evidence of adultery. During this period of 15 years she has supported herself and her daughter. The daughter is now a lovely teenager going to high school. For the past ten years this woman has wished to remarry. She refuses to live with the man with whom she is in love because of her child and her own religious views. Here is a girl who has excellent marital prospects but because of a youthful mistake is confined to a form of imprisonment from which there is at present no escape.

Many people, of course, do not have the self-discipline and views of the lady I just mentioned. Personally I know of hundreds of so-called common law relationships. In most cases illegitimate children are born and in many cases the couple live together as happily as possible. However, they live together under tension created by the fear that their neighbours, friends and fellow workers may find out. When the children start to school the names on the birth certificates create crises. The sense of guilt, the recurrent feelings of insecurity, are always just below the surface. Unhappiness is not only promoted; immorality and illegitimacy are invited.

One of the strongest indictments against our present divorce law is the fact that disrespect for the law is the natural result. This disrespect amplifies into a disrespect for all laws. Seldom is adultery the real cause of a marriage breakup. In order to obtain a divorce adultery must be found or created. My experience in hundreds of these cases has convinced me that in only a very small percentage is there not perjury or collusion. I have observed almost a contempt for the law in the minds of the people involved. This is a most natural human reaction, because how can a law be respected when a single act of adultery is considered far worse than 20 years of beatings or far worse than a man deserting his family or going to jail for 20 years? On no rational or religious grounds can such laws be defended.

May I say a few words about the marriage breakdown concept. There is no doubt whatsoever in my mind that when a marriage has irretrievably broken down it should be dissolved if one of the parties desires dissolution. This would not be a case of breaking up a marriage; it would simply be a case of making legal what has in fact already happened. To confine ourselves to the principle of matrimonial offence is to give no relief to either party when a man and wife without misconduct or matrimonial offence, have become so estranged as to be beyond the possibility of reconciliation. It would give no relief either when the so-called innocent party refuses to take the initiative and seek a dissolution, preferring to imprison the other party within bonds which become meaningless.

The elimination of the marriage offence provision and substitution of the breakdown theory would result in something which would be difficult to carry out in practice. The law must have definite rules; otherwise the people affected will not know where they stand and the lawyers who advise them will not be in a position to give definite advice.

In the past few months I have attempted to give the problem very serious thought in the light of my own practical experience and particularly in the light of the experience of others who have been closely connected with the practical problems. I have concluded that the proposed bill is excellent and that the retention of the matrimonial offence theory, plus the introduction of the marriage breakdown theory, is by far the most realistic and practical approach.

If divorce were to be granted solely as a result of the breakdown of the marriage, the result could well be long delay in determining whether the marriage actually had broken down even though the situation was crying out for a remedy. The fact is that the vast majority of problems will be solved under the matrimonial offences provision. Those that will not be solved under this provision will be solved under the recognition of marriage breakdown, proven by three years of separation and subject to the discretion of the court. I have observed over the years that once a couple has actually separated for a considerable period of time the chances of reconciliation are very slight. When one party has indicated a desire for divorce and has commenced proceedings the chances of reconciliation have been reduced to almost nil.

I am pleased to note the presence of clauses 7 and 8 which relate to marriage counselling and reconciliation. In considering the whole question of marriage and divorce our prime objective to promote marriage and to protect the family must be maintained. When a marriage has deteriorated to the point where one of the parties is actively considering the dissolution of the marriage bond, the likelihood is that the marriage has deteriorated beyond repair. The marriage then has gone beyond the point of no return.

We agree that the time for counselling and the educational process is before the first cracks in the marriage begin to occur. This period is both before marriage and early in marriage. Sometimes we do not appreciate the adjustment required by marriage. Two persons who had no need whatsoever to consider the interest of anyone but themselves suddenly must adjust and accommodate each other. This adjustment carries on throughout life and marriage as people change.

As soon as possible we should make provision for counselling. This should be patterned on the provision introduced in Australia in 1961. Australia's matrimonial causes act provides for support to marriage guidance organizations. As I understand the act, provision is made for both voluntary and full time counselling services for both premarital education and marital counselling. A complete program and network must be set up. The availability of this program must be known generally. The reluctance to seek help must be overcome. There must be no shame or stigma attached when both parties actively and sincerely seek assistance. Many marriages which would otherwise be broken can be made viable and happy if help is given early enough.

The bill, unfortunately, does not follow the recommendation of the committee with respect to giving jurisdiction to the county courts. Like the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) I am in favour of giving the county courts concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme courts in the matter of divorce. In Ontario actions for divorce have taken their place in a long list of cases to be tried as rapidly as possible in a short time. If there are recurrent problems it is impossible in most cases to arrange to have the matters brought before the same judge who heard the case in the first instance. In the county courts, on the other hand, the judges are local. Appointments can readily be made and orders with respect to children and maintenance can be explained or reconsidered with the minimum of procedure. By this means costs could be greatly reduced. Of course, when we reform our divorce laws the divorce rate will increase. For a time, of course, the number of cases will increase greatly because of the great backlog of broken marriages in respect of which relief has been denied. After this accumulation has been taken care of the rate will still be higher than previously. This need not alarm us, however. The increase will simply reflect the reduction in common law marriages.

• (12:20 p.m.)

I disagree with the view that an increase in the divorce rate indicates a weakening of the institution of marriage. On the contrary, the fact that a person seeks a divorce to bring to an end a shell of a marriage is an indication of greater respect for the institution of marriage. It is the widespread common law marriages with their illegitimate children that seriously threaten the institution of marriage. The great reduction in the indicence of these relationships that will follow the enactment of this bill will strengthen and foster both marriage and the family.

We in Canada had a great ability to retain our Victorianism in the twentieth century. While England, Australia, New Zealand, Scotland and other commonwealth and European countries have reformed their divorce laws to reflect modern conditions and views, we have lagged behind. We have not only lacked the courage to innovate, we have lacked the courage to follow. We have condemned tens of thousands of our people to unhappiness and immorality. While thinking we are perserving the family we are in actual fact undermining the family. Let us make this a real centennial year for all those we have imprisoned through our archaic laws by passing this bill.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Stafford) in spite of the fact that he and I part company on one aspect of the problem which faces us. I suggest to him that if he will read his speech in Hansard tomorrow he will see that the arguments he has made in fact buttress, support and lend foundation to the belief which I hold and which has been expressed by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and other members on this side, that irretrievable marriage breakdown with certain safeguards can be the only ground upon which a marriage can be dissolved. It is my belief after listening to the hon. member that his arguments point in that one direction.

In any event, legislation of this kind touches closely and deeply the social conscience of all of us, as it must. I think that when we come to methods we must weigh any legislation on the scales of balance of the good of society. We must decide what are the good points and what are the bad. We must place on the scales the different views we hold and the different points we advance to find out whether on balance the good features of this legislation outweigh the bad. With great reluctance I must say I will vote for this bill on second reading because there is certain specific good it will do, but I must also say that there are many aspects which I think it is a great pity the government has seen fit to introduce in the legislation in the face of what I believe is an irresistible movement toward accepting the marriage breakdown philosophy as being the sole ground for dissolution. In my judgment, and I venture to make a prediction, within ten years most of the countries which have now dealt with the problem of divorce will have embraced the philosophy of marriage breakdown as the sole ground for divorce.

What are the good points? The very fact that there is a change and that this legislation breaks loose the solid grip in which this country has been held for so many years in regard to the very serious and difficult social problem of divorce is good. The minister, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Stafford), and others have said that the subject of divorce takes us back to the first divorce bill in the United Kingdom around 1857 which, as a matter of fact, was simply a restating of old ecclesiastical law developed over many centuries. It provided that adultery would be the ground, not for the dissolution of marriage, and I hasten to point that out, but for divorce from bed and board. The only exception to that was, I think, shortly after the accession of King Henry VIII to the throne and his becoming head of the church. He, being somewhat of a marrying man, came to the conclusion that he either had to cut off his respective wives' heads or divorce them. He decided that it was probably less expensive to cut off their heads than to go through the process of divorce.

Mr. Knowles: We have made some progress.

Mr. Baldwin: Outside of that exception in Great Britain, in ecclesiastical law adultery was the ground not for dissolution of marriage but for separation from bed and board. Late in 1857 this was brought up to date and allowed for the dissolution of the mariage in the United Kingdom and so became the law in Canada. It has subsisted here for some 100 years. Now we are at least making a change. We are breaking out of the grip in which these ancient laws have held us.

Another provision has been introduced in the bill which I have no hesitation in saying is an improvement, and I refer to the provisions in respect of domicile. Many members of the bar who have struggled with the very difficult problem of domicile in the ten provinces are very glad, I am sure, to see that the recommendation of the joint committee has been virtually adopted so that there may be Canadian domicile. This will do away with the double standard and put married women, to all intents and purposes, in the same position as their husbands. I congratulate the minister and the government on this very excellent change which is so very desirable.

With regard to the introduction for the first time into the courts dealing with matrimonial issues of these provisions for certain conciliation procedures, I think they are fumbling and weak and that a great deal of difficulty will be experienced in trying to apply them. But at least this is a beginning. This is not an easy problem because of the lack of precedents. It is only recently that in Australia and New Zealand, and I believe in the United Kingdom, a somewhat similar proposal has been the subject of serious consideration. Society must regard the institution of marriage as its most important unit. Society must be concerned, as well as the individuals who are involved, with making every effort to preserve marriage and to preserve couples in the bonds of matrimony for the sake of society, for the sake of the children and for the sake of everything else that is involved.

The other day I spoke on this subject to a club in Calgary. A meeting had been held, sponsored by the university there, at which some professor had made a speech. The next day in the newspaper headlines appeared to the effect that this professor had suggested that the cure for divorce is trial marriage. This is a very interesting suggestion but it seems to me it involves one of the difficulties we face today. Many television programs and books relating to the disintegration of the bonds of family units make the suggestion that there can be a complete abandonment of those things that have been held sacred and upon which western civilization as we know it has been fashioned and improved. This is a very dangerous suggestion and I welcome any attempt, no matter what its faults may be and no matter what defects we may see in it, on the part of the government to recognize the role of the courts and government services to try to preserve marriage and to link this attempt with the new divorce procedure. I think any such recognition is excellent and represents a step forward. My guess is that within five or ten years so many changes will be made in these procedures that the minister will not recognize them.

• (12:30 p.m.)

I should now like to state very briefly my criticism of this aspect. I think there will be a tendency for an automatic approach to the procedure in regard to conciliation. Lawyers consulted by a litigant seeking a divorce will now be compelled to give certain advice to their clients and they must endorse this fact upon the pleadings. The court is directed to give the respondent, if he or she is available, as well as the petitioner notice that these conciliation procedures are available. I think it will become automatic in the same sense as today there are automatic questions and answers with regard to condonation and collusion. However, this provision is a start and to that extent I am very happy to see it in the bill.

I am also pleased to see that at long last we have done away with that travesty of the legislative process by which parliament was required to sit as a judge and deal with private bills for the relief of people seeking divorce. For too long this has been a black mark on the record of parliament. I am very happy to note that the procedures contained in the bill will provide, first, for a divorce division of the exchequer court and ultimately, I hope, the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland will see fit to clothe their courts with jurisdiction to dissolve marriages by the method provided in the bill.

I am also very very glad to see that the opinion given by Mr. Driedger, then deputy minister of justice, to the committee to the effect that in his opinion—I should say that he hedged it with the statement that he was giving it not necessarily as deputy minister but as his personal legal opinion—the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction to deal with ancillary and related matters of custody of children, maintenance and alimony. In fact, I think Mr. Driedger went as far as to suggest that this jurisdiction would include dealing with judicial separation.

This is something to which we may have to come in due course. I recognize that various provincial legislatures have dealt with this question. It is a subject that has not been dealt with by a federal government. I doubt that a case dealing implicitly with this question and which has established a binding precedent has been dealt with by the supreme court. I am glad to see that parliament will now recognize this question so that we will ultimately have a situation where one court alone can deal with all the issues which are so closely and intimately related to marriage and its dissolution.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, another good feature of this measure is that at long last there will be an opportunity for the thousands of people all over this country, who have for so many years been handicapped because of the grim rigidity of our divorce law, to legitimize the unions which so many of them have in good faith and with the best intentions in the world entered into. I think all of us know people who because of the reluctance of the other party, religious scruples or various other reasons have not had a legal dissolution of their marriages, and one party has then entered into an illegal liaison with somebody else and children have been born of that union. In some cases these unions have subsisted since the first world war. I believe that this bill, through its provision dealing with marriage breakdown will bring relief, help and assistance to the thousands of people who have waited so long for such a measure to be introduced.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I have exhausted all the good things I can say about the bill. I must say that I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who said it was unfortunate that the government and the minister had not seen fit to adopt the principle of marriage breakdown. In respect of that aspect of the bill which attempts to bring together these obviously opposing views, I can only say that in my opinion it is a ramshackle, motley conglomeration of inconsistent and irreconcilable proposals which will never work. It is my belief that within a few years whatever government is in power will be asking parliament to enact necessary and essential modifications to the law in this respect.

This bill continues the principle of matrimonial offence whereby one person must be the offender and the other must be innocent. One is black, one is white; one is guilty of a matrimonial offence, the other is innocent. This raises the whole question of the consideration of matrimonial offences and the dissolution of marriage. In my view this position is not sound and does not correspond to facts.

I recall sitting in a court waiting for a case in which I was concerned to be tried. I listened to a supreme court judge complete the hearing of ten cases and grant decree nisis in one hour. That is six minutes a case. How is it possible for a judge in five or six minutes to go through the formal proof of the marriage, the formal proof of domicile, the formal proof that there was no condonation and no collusion? How is it possible for a judge, devoting approximately two minutes to each of these points, to say that because of an allegation of adultery which has been proved by evidence of a certain type a dissolution of marriage shall be granted? How can he in six minutes undo 20 years of marriage and conjugal life? I think those of us who have been concerned professionally in the practice of law will agree that the practice to which I have just referred is not sound. I believe this fact is being increasingly recognized in many countries throughout the world.

I have here the Montreal Star of Friday, November 24 which contains an article on the proposed new divorce law in the United Kingdom. I notice that the measure has not been introduced by the government, although the government has indicated that it will give tacit approval to the bill which will be introduced by a private member. I shall deal with this matter later. I do not know whether the minister has been able to secure a copy of the bill which has been introduced in that country. All I have in the newspaper article is a condensed report of the major provisions of the bill. England has experimented with its divorce law, as I believe the hon. member for Elgin and the hon. member for Greenwood said, since 1937 as a result of the book "Holy Deadlock", written by Sir Alan Herbert. The government widened the grounds for divorce and has now had 30 years of experience with those wider grounds based upon matrimonial offences. All those who are concerned with this question, sociologists, judges, people in public life, the clergy, all those who direct their attention to this problem, are satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt that the principle of the matrimonial offence must be eliminated. The following is proposed in the new bill introduced in the United Kingdom:

• (12:40 p.m.)

> There will henceforth be only one ground for divorce in Britain—proof that "the marriage has irretrievably broken down". This will be deemed to have happened:
>
> (a) If the parties have ceased to cohabit for two years...
>
> (b) If the couple have ceased to cohabit for five years, even though one does not want divorce...
>
> (c) If there is conduct which a husband or wife cannot be reasonably expected to endure, or adultery which either cannot after reflection forgive.

However, even these provisions do not go as far as I would like them to go. I should like to see the addition of a provision stating "and for such other reasons as may seem adequate to the court". In other words, a catch-all phrase would be inserted which would entitle a court to say that the marriage has irretrievably broken down for other reasons related to but not necessarily the same as those which have already been set down.

I agree with the hon. member for Greenwood that in fact the government is only paying lip service to the marriage breakdown philosophy. I think it is merely attempting to appease a very substantial body of public opinion represented by various church groups and womens organizations as well as other people who have felt that the marriage breakdown philosophy should be adopted in the new legislation, and that in using the words "marriage breakdown" there may be a hope on the part of the government, if not on the part of the minister, that this will appease and satisfy them. We are still harking back to the virtually mediaeval conditions under which there was trial by ordeal and under which if a man had been injured or killed through accident by an inanimate object the court would try that inanimate object and find it guilty. Sometimes a man accused of a criminal offence would have his arms and legs tied and would be thrown into a pool of water. If he rose to the top he was deemed to be guilty and was immediately taken out and executed, but if he did not rise he was deemed innocent. However, all too often, even when the accused was finally brought up from the bottom he was drowned in any event and it did not matter.

I do not know how carefully the matter of divorce was studied and I do not know to what extent the government seriously considered adopting the marriage breakdown philosophy, but I must say I am bitterly disappointed with what they have done. Let us take a look at the bill and see to what extent it substantiates my view. A draft bill was attached to the report of the joint committee. It provided for certain matrimonial offences and in subsequent sections it went on to provide that certain acts should also be considered as constructively establishing marriage breakdown.

Under the bill before us anyone seeking a divorce will first direct his or her attention to clause 3 which provides four grounds as the basis for dissolution of marriage, namely, adultery, acts of sodomy, bestiality, rape or homosexuality, most of which have already been considered and accepted by the courts as being a basis for the dissolution of marriage. Another ground for divorce is when a person has gone through a form of marriage with another person. This is in fact adultery because anyone going through a form of marriage with a person other than his or her spouse must have the intention of going to bed with that person shortly after the marriage, which is in effect constructive adultery. The final ground for divorce is when a person has treated the petitioner with physical or mental cruelty of such a kind as to render intolerable the continued cohabitation of the spouses.

What will happen is that people seeking a divorce will first turn their attention to the provisions of clause 3 in looking for a quick divorce or a "quickie", as it has been called in some speeches. Under clause 3 there will be an opportunity for an immediate petition to be issued claiming the dissolution of marriage on the ground of either adultery or cruelty. For those who are adverse to committing adultery for the purpose of securing a quick divorce or in cases where cruelty cannot be established, clause 4 will provide an answer. It contains all that can be considered in this bill as coming within the four corners of the marriage breakdown philosophy. It provides an alternative means of securing a divorce when it cannot be secured on the ground of adultery or cruelty, namely, minor or inferior matrimonial offences or constructive marriage breakdown established by certain specific acts.

All the witnesses and organizations which appeared before the joint committee and proposed the adoption of the marriage breakdown philosophy stated quite clearly that in their opinion these two differing philosophies cannot be included together. Let me refer to the evidence of Reverend Hosking, a very distinguished member of the clergy who has also had experience in the family courts. He was a very impressive witness. When asked whether it is possible to have these two opposing principles in one bill he said:

> I am sitting here as a witness, but I would hope to high heaven you would not do that, for this reason. This is something fundamental: You are lifting the struggle from the shoulders of husband and wife and looking at the institution known as marriage in a way that removes from it much of the bitterness and sense of failure and hopeless frustration. For heaven's sake, let us take our courage in our two fists and make this step. For I think it is profoundly sound; and, speaking as a religious person, I believe it is the will of God. I honestly do.

This is the view taken by all those who have considered this new approach. All of them have come to the firm decision that it is not possible to link these two principles or these two means of securing a dissolution of marriage. This is amply established by the fact that in England they have come to the same conclusion, having pioneered much of the new forward looking legislation dealing with the problem of divorce. In their view marriage breakdown is the only basis for a divorce. I should like to refer to the article from which I quoted previously in which Mr. Abse, a member of the British parliament who has been keenly interested in this issue, is reported as arguing that the aim of the bill is not easier divorce but rational divorce. He said:

> I am for the family, not against it. A divorce is the death certificate of a dead marriage. You can't stop people dying by refusing to issue death certificates.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I think I have made it quite clear where I stand on this issue. I just want to refer to one or two of the objections which have been raised to the marriage breakdown theory. It has been suggested that marriage breakdown is not a triable issue. I think this is nonsense. The minister took it a step further in his speech on second reading and said it would appear too much like an inquisition rather than a trial. The minute the government introduced the conciliation procedure they introduce a peg upon which there will from time to time be hung in process of an inquisition. Trials in all courts involve the process of inquisition. I do not think that is a fair answer at all.

However, the suggestion it is not a triable issue is, I think, one which must be met. I should like to look at some of the problems which courts have met, very much more difficult problems than having to make a declaration that a marriage which has irretrievably broken down, in which there is no hope of reconciliation, is dead and ought to be so legally pronounced. The courts have tackled successfully the defence of insanity, the burden of proof in criminal cases, that is, establishing guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. The courts have had a mandate from parliament to deal with problems under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act and the Combines Investigation Act which involve a difficult assessment of the result of present actions.

I think there is no real problem at all in this regard. When two people find they are unable to live together, that marriage, something which was once alive, is then dead. There are only the ashes left and no fire can be breathed into those ashes. The marriage should be dissolved. There may be difficulty for the courts, but the courts exist to serve the people. The minister might look at it in this way, that specific directions could be given to the courts which would permit them to evolve a jurisprudence over a period of time by which it would be, if not easy, at least possible for the courts to declare there had been a breakdown of the marriage.

As a matter of fact, I think there is some recognition of that principle in the bill. The draft bill proposed by the committee, which appears on page 159 of the report of the committee, provided that two of the grounds which would be established as matrimonial offences were desertion for a period of three years and wilful refusal to consummate the marriage for a period of at least one year. When we come to the constructive grounds which the government has introduced in clause 4 of the bill as being the basis for marriage breakdown, we find they have lifted these two proposals out of the section which provided for the creation of matrimonial offences. The minister has said, we will not accept these as matrimonial offences but we will accept them as constituting a basis upon which a court can deem the marriage has broken down. This is proof of the proposition I have been trying to make that the line between matrimonial offences and marriage breakdown is very tenous and should no longer be continued.

I suggest this quite seriously, Mr. Speaker. I know that at this time the government has all the pride of paternity in this legislation. The minister has indicated, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has confirmed, that there will not be a free vote on this issue. There is no doubt that this bill, with some improvements and modifications, is going to pass. I sincerely hope that, after it passes, what has been said in this house and what has been said in all the briefs that have been presented to the committee will be given the most earnest and serious consideration. I hope the government will not be wedded to these proposals in the bill, at least not to the extent that the old marriage and divorce legislation which we have had in this country has been continued in the past. I hope that in the course of his reply the minister will give an indication that the principle of marriage breakdown as the sole cause will not be abandoned. Perhaps in the light of the experience of the courts there will be another look at this matter within two or three years.

The only other point I want to make is to confirm what has been said by the hon. member for Elgin and the hon. member for Greenwood. Why should not county and district courts be given jurisdiction? The minister has said that divorce is a very important and fundamental matter, but so is 20 years in prison. The district and county courts have jurisdiction to impose substantial sentences in criminal cases. As a matter of fact, I think it is about time we took a look at the division of jurisdiction between county and superior courts. I do not know why we should have on one side of the street 5 and 10 cent store justice merely because the judge receives a lower salary and on the other side of the road have plush department store justice for the carriage trade, and yet this is implicit in what is said. I think it is about time we eliminated all these distinctions.

The courts are going to be engaged in a great many trials of divorce issues which will follow the completion of this bill. Surely the government should be prepared to allow county and district courts to try these issues to ease the load which will have to be carried. I hope before we get into committee the minister will give some indication of his interest in this matter. I hope he is not hidebound and is prepared to consider the proposal made by members of his own party as well as members of this party to invest county and district courts with the power to hear these trials for the dissolution of marriage.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock, if you please?

[English]

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Speaker, I deem it advisable to take part in the debate on this bill because to my mind very serious implications are involved for our society as we have known it up to now. I wanted also to bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) some suggestions which, I am sure, must have been considered, just as the other factors that have been brought to his attention, concerning the bill now before us which provides for a reform in depth of our divorce laws.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable attention to the comments of the preceding speakers, particularly those of the member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). However, I must say that even though I sat on the divorce committee, most of my time was taken up by the finance, trade and economic affairs committee sitting concurrently. Nevertheless, this did not prevent me from reading most attentively all the briefs presented.

I should like at this stage to make some observations on the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood concerning what is commonly called marriage breakdown.

Mr. Speaker, in considering the clauses of the proposed bill, more specifically clauses 3 and 4, we realize that on the whole the government is being blamed for not going far enough with this measure. As I reject marriage breakdown as the essential and only valid ground for divorce, I should like to bring forward an opinion or at least a thought.

I have read with considerable attention the briefs that were presented by some religious authorities on this point. To my mind, what is difficult to reconcile is the permanent marriage breakdown with clause 4 of the bill. In fact, if marriage breakdown were accepted as grounds for divorce, I think we should conclude that this would overly facilitate or at least considerably facilitate in the mind of husband and wife the possibilities of obtaining a divorce.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Even though the briefs submitted to the committee were to the effect that marriage breakdown could not be agreed upon by mutual consent, I fail to see how one could possibly suggest, by the same token, that marriage breakdown does not enable to obtain a divorce by mutual consent, a solution that the bill is trying to prevent.

Mr. Speaker, it is precisely on that particular point that the bill, even though some may feel it does not go far enough, gives rises, both in its spirit and its letter, to the serious thought that a state cannot possibly admit that a married couple can, merely by mutual consent, without giving any reason or justification, obtain a divorce, which would be possible, if the principle of marriage breakdown were accepted as criterion.

But when the champions of that theory tell us that this does not allow divorce by mutual consent, but merely becomes a permanent breakdown in the marriage, I refer them to clause 4 of the bill which, to my mind, gives wise and intelligent support to those who claim that a permanent breakdown of the marriage is sufficient cause for divorce. We see that in particular in clause 4 of the bill and more specifically in paragraphs (b), (c), (d) and (e) where it is stipulated that a spouse may petition for divorce when the respondent has been grossly addicted to alcohol for three years, or has deserted him for the same period, or after a year where the marriage has not been consummated, and where, in fact, the spouses have lived separately for over three years, or where one has abandoned the other for five years.

What is it, if it is not, really and truly, marriage breakdown? However, there may have been a degree of shock about clause 3; perhaps the legal profession did come to the conclusion that it is generally disagreeable, for the parents as well as the children, to have to publicize the grounds for their separation, or again, before a divorce is granted, to have to commit acts of cruelty or others.

Mr. Speaker, I think the bill as it now stands is based on a sound principle, which is to respect the marriage institution and that the state should try as much as possible to consolidate it. The acceptance of the marriage breakdown concept as the only grounds for divorce is a confirmation by the state that a married couple may, by mutual consent, agree to separate for a period of one, two or three years, and then, without any other factor than such a separation, be able to secure a divorce.

Of course, my hon. friend from Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) will object that this is perhaps not possible in practice, but this makes it too easy to get a divorce. And when the state takes it for granted or wants to maintain the de facto responsibility for both husband and wife in important cases, the crown will be forcing the spouses or those about to be married to understand that it is a contract or a compromise and that, in such a case, there must be tolerance, forbearance and sound understanding, above all because it gives crucial importance to the sad and deplorable results for society and unfortunately a cause for divorce occurs, especially if there are children from such marriages that are terminated by decree.

I do not wish to repeat, Mr. Speaker, everything that has been said about the bill. It is, of course, a great step forward compared to what has been done in the past, but I think it should be said that if, generally speaking, legislators did not dare to deal with that matter, it was because of religious convictions and perhaps also of a certain weakness on the part of our politicians who were afraid to tackle this important social problem, precisely because of the fear of setting certain religious authorities against them, which might have had a considerable impact on future elections.

That is so true that this legislation has not been dealt with for 97 years so that, for instances, so far as the province of Quebec especially is concerned, our civil code which is now in force and exists, as the minister said—and as it is well known—since 1866, a few days before the adoption of the Canadian constitution, stipulated that marriage was indissoluble.

The Canadian constitution of 1867 states that marriage and divorce are matters of federal jurisdiction, thus applying the provisions of section 129 of that same constitution which states more explicitly that, in each province, the laws existing on the day when the constitution came into force will continue to apply in the respective jurisdictions of the federal or provincial authorities.

Under the circumstances, the application of the constitution prevented, on the one hand, the Quebec legislature from amending its constitution, and in the absence of legislation by the federal government, there was not any way of remedying that situation or of amending the Civil Code of our province.

Of course, we see how slowly we proceeded. In fact, as reported in the proceedings of the committee, No. 2, Mr. Maurice Ollivier, legal adviser to the House of Commons, said that section 188 of the Civil Code of the province of Quebec, which existed until 1954, stated, and I quote:

> A wife may demand the separation on the ground of her husband's adultery when he keeps his mistress in their own home.

Naturally, this disappeared and from that time until a few years ago, as has been pointed out, private bills were introduced in the Senate. Those who, on account of religious scruples, objected not so much to the principle of these bills but rather to their form, professed to be shocked and would not vote, so that the Canadian parliament passed one private bill after another without any deep understanding of the motives.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to put on the record what constitutes to my mind real progress, the very wise statements made by the Canadian Catholic bishops in the brief they submitted. I will quote these statements verbatim, because I think they show why no one can take offence at the decision of the government to take the initiative in presenting this bill and not to allow a free vote for, in my opinion, there is not lack of respect shown to individual conscience.

It is said, in this brief of the Canadian bishops, and I quote:

> Canada is a country of many denominations and it is possible that other citizens, equally anxious to promote the common good, feel that under certain circumstances, it is less detrimental to the individual and to the whole society to permit divorce. As far as we are concerned, we are not opposed to changes in the present divorce laws, really intended for the common good of the lay society.

I think that it is a text clearly conceived, freely expressed and which obviously makes it possible for all legislators, whatever their religious convictions, to make their views known clearly and freely without being accused by the religious authorities of endangering their faith or their religious principles.

When we consider this whole problem, we are obliged, I think, to admit that it prevails in our society, as other actual situations.

• (2:50 p.m.)

And when a member of parliament speaks in support of divorce legislation that does not mean that he favours divorce in itself. In the same way, when he votes in favour of a law amending the Criminal Code, concerning theft or any other crimes, it does not mean that he is in favour of theft or crime, but those are facts that entail important civil consequences. I suggest the government and specially the present Minister of Justice deserve to be commended for the generous thoughts, they have expressed in introducing this bill before the house.

I have dealt with the important effects of the legislative amendments since the constitution was adopted, by referring to section 129 of the Canadian constitution. But nevertheless, this will result legally in keeping the citizens of the province of Quebec at a disadvantage, compared to the citizens of other provinces, to such an extent that mixed or parallel procedures will be necessary.

We know, for instance, that the French civil code provides for parallel jurisdictions, which provide, on the one hand, for separation from bed and board, in itself a divorce without the right to remarry and, on the other hand, the granting of divorce, when the party involved is convinced, in all good faith, that he retains the right to remarry, if he so wishes. I really do not think we should attach too much importance to this point, because those who are granted a divorce are not obliged to remarry. The law merely tells them that they may do so in the future, if they so desire. This, then, does not affect their conscience. I am no expert in this field but I cannot see why much importance should be attached to this point.

In Quebec, a legal separation is granted in those cases. This separation is, as I have just said, a divorce without legal right to remarry, since the Civil Code has not been amended and precisely because of the inertia of the central government, the provincial authorities, I say that incidentally, did not show any desire to deal with it and they have never amended the Civil Code to remove the section that stipulates as follows: Marriage is indissoluble and cannot be dissolved by preventing the legislature from enacting divorce laws.

We may, as I have said, obtain a judicial separation which implies to a certain extent separation from bed and board. The Supreme Court of Canada has already ruled that a divorce decree also provides automatically for division and total separation of community property. But, Mr. Speaker, the consequences—and I want to bring the attention of the Minister of Justice to this—for Quebec citizens pending acceptance by the legislature of the offer under clause 22 of the Act to set up its own courts as in the other Canadian provinces are such that any petitioner wishing to obtain a divorce under the new legislation shall petition the exchequer court and at the same time, in order to protect or prevent squandering of property by the respondent or to protect possible claims on community goods, such petitioner is required to initiate procedures for a separation as to bed and board before the superior court of the province of Quebec which will allow through protective seizure the withholding and custody of property until such time as a divorce decree is issued.

This, of course, necessitates two actions. It has been said in society, in public, that divorce was previously possible only for rich people because it cost a lot of money. The simplification of the present jurisdiction will permit married couples, whatever their social rank or position, to come before the courts and be equal to all other citizens, whenever they unfortunately find themselves in similar circumstances. On the other hand, the result of this joint jurisdiction, this parallel jurisdiction, will be that the citizens in the province of Quebec will assume before the courts double charges and a double burden. Here, Mr. Speaker, as a federal representative of the province of Quebec, I should simply like to appeal to the legislative authorities in my province and ask them to take advantage of section 22 of the act so as to accept, once and for all, in a clear and objective way—even though it may not be something pleasant, something fortunate, even though it may not be something essentially flamboyant, in a multiconfessional society—the responsibility of putting their own citizens on an equal footing with the other citizens of this country and of allowing the superior court of Quebec to be empowered to hear divorce cases.

We have heard this morning about ancillary powers, or the theory that when the federal authorities have the constitutional right to decide on divorce cases, they have at the same time the power to decide on the consequences, be it alimony, care of children or domicile which is, of course, established and is rather a factual matter.

I want to call the attention of the minister to this point and ask him to enlighten the house. When a decree nisi is granted by the court for example, what happens when the constitution stipulates that the civil rights of ownership are under provincial jurisdiction, when it becomes necessary to apportion the property?

I appreciate that if the federal law does not deal with that, property separation will be carried out according to existing provisions—in Quebec, for instance, by division and licitation—because, of course, the Supreme Court has found that divorce breaks the community property.

There is one point I regard as particularly important and I will come back to it briefly. Until the province of Quebec decides whether it would be advisable to entrust the superior court with the hearing of divorce cases, would it not be possible to conciliate the field covered by the Civil Code and the ambit of this legislation? What could happen or what amendment could be presented to prevent duplication of procedure by one of the spouses when it is a question of protecting the property during the proceedings?

That could have extremely important consequences, because one can readily understand, for instance, that if it is necessary to wait a year or two to get a divorce ruling and if, at the same time, a conservatory garnishment procedure is necessary to ensure the conservation of the property during the hearing, failing an agreement between the spouses, the garnishment or conservation, will be extremely detrimental and costly for the petitioner or for both parties.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, personally, I can but do otherwise than support this bill. I know that the bar as a whole, at least in Quebec, and throughout the province, I am sure, supports it in principle. They are quite happy that legislation finally is forthcoming on this matter. There will be no concern in the province, because the Quebec bar itself, about a year ago, submitted a brief in which the provincial authorities were requested to establish juvenile and family courts for the express purpose of effecting attempts at reconciliation.

On the basis of my own experience as a lawyer, I must admit that we are extremely poor, not only in Quebec, but throughout Canada, in respect of agencies that might work to reconcile unfruitful or unhappy marriages.

We have practically never gone to the root of the problem. However, and this speaks well for all Canadian lawyers who practice their profession, I think they are the only ones who have understood that point and who, generally speaking, have tried to effect reconciliations; they have often failed, but at least they tried.

I myself have seen couples who wanted to obtain legal separation simply give up because they decided that it was better to endure the other's faults and to make other sacrifices than to make a public show of their sufferings and to face all the attendant, disastrous consequences on the economic and social levels as well as with regard to their children. Those people simply changed their minds and decided that it was wiser after all for them to accept their partner's faults and to live a life of compromise in the hope that their spouse would change for the better.

Another point, Mr. Speaker, on which I wanted to draw the attention of the minister, is section 2 of the bill which defines a "child" as being any person under the age of sixteen years. That may give the impression that in the case of people over 16, the bill does not apply. I would like the minister to tell us what jurisdiction will be involved. Will it be clearly the provincial jurisdiction? In the case of a child 17 or 18 years old who attends school or university and who wants to get money from his father, even if he is divorced, what power will he be able to exercise to get the necessary money? Would the decree of divorce, which would thus be established and which would define the financial responsibilities of either one of the spouses, prevent a child of more than 16 to go to court and claim from his father, even divorced, or his mother, if she had financial means, to accept alimony. I feel that that is extremely important.

On the other hand, I can hardly see how anyone could get a divorce and thus evade his judicial responsibilities towards his dependents, even if he does not have to support his wife, for instance, in short how he could be not responsible for looking after his children, until they are 21, and seeing to their education in particular, because one knows that during such periods the children especially need to be looked after and to pursue their education as far as possible.

Mr. Speaker, those are the main points I wished to draw to the minister's attention. I am, I repeat, in favour of this legislation and before concluding, I hope that the Quebec legislative authorities will take advantage of clause 22 which makes it possible for them to give the superior court jurisdiction over divorce cases. That may represent a certain revolution in the minds of some people but, fortunately, we have seen many newspaper editorials which said that the legislation is reasonable and sound and that it was up to Quebec to deal with it as the other provinces. That will spare considerable trouble to all those who will benefit from it, and I think Quebec will understand that there is obviously no question of giving it responsibilities that belong to the federal authority since in all other areas, the organization of the courts, briefly, the administration of justice comes under the provinces. Why would it not be the same for the implementation of this legislation on divorce to avoid heavy additional expenses and parallel jurisdictions to protect the interest of either spouse?

In closing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I may say that, to my mind, this is good legislation. It is not only good, but it is sound for our society as it is organized at the present time and I am in favour of implementing it. I think that I am expressing in this not only the views of the majority of the members of the Quebec bar but also those of society as a whole, because this legislation is in the interest of all citizens unfortunately placed in this deplorable situation.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to most speeches delivered on divorce. I should like to point out three that I found particularly interesting, that of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and the one of hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme).

From another point of view I find the presentation of this bill rather amusing. I wish to point out that it took a Minister of Justice who is a confirmed bachelor to present a bill so up to date on the question of marriage. I hope this will not convince the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) to remain unmarried until the end of his days, because, after all, the country should not be deprived of such brilliant offsprings, since the potential father is so much so. I would not want him either to be discouraged from taking a wife, because of all the disquieting things he has been hearing in this house.

Mr. Speaker, all this to say in a rather light vein, that it was high time for the divorce legislation to be improved.

I shall not discuss it from a legal point of view, because I am not qualified to do so, nor from a moral point of view, because it seems to me that is not our concern. I think we all agree, here in the house, that divorce in itself is an evil. As far as I am concerned, my religion tells me it is inadmissible. The fact remains, however, that we also believe, and more strongly than ever since the last council held by the authorities of my Church, where oecumenism and similar topics were discussed, that it is not admissible either that we, legislators, Catholics or others, should impose our convictions on those Canadians who do not share our convictions.

Mr. Speaker, like most hon. members in this house, I believe, for instance, that human life is sacred. However, I recognize that, under certain circumstances, such as war, self-defence and, as I persist in believing, retribution, the state has the right to take human lives, to put people to death.

Personally, I feel that the physical integrity of a human being, man or woman, is also sacred, but, in some cases, to prevent a greater evil, an arm or a leg may be amputated, an organ may be removed.

So, I think we should consider the matter of divorce somewhat in the same light. In itself, it is wrong; morally speaking, my conscience tells me it should not be allowed; still, there may be borderline cases, people who hold divergent views, and we have no right to impose upon them such conditions as would lead them to live immoral or hypocritical lives.

• (3:10 p.m.)

That is why I find it comforting that the Canadian spokesmen for religious groups of every hue should have told us that it was high time to amend the divorce legislation, even to modernize it, and put an end to the hypocrisy which leads to perjury and false representations. There is no need to dwell on the subject for it was taken up brilliantly in this house, and I am quite convinced that all the members of this house even if the bill is not perfect, must approve of it in principle. We shall never have a perfect bill in this house, although we may have bills that are less imperfect. The fact remains that this bill certainly has its good points, that it improves the situation even if every member can still suggest amendments.

Still Mr. Speaker, some figures are shocking and we simply cannot refuse to take notice. For instance, there were in Canada, at the close of 1966, about 400,000 people—this figure comes from authoritative social agencies—living in common law marriage. So, we may reasonably assume that many of these people, if more reasonable divorce legislation had been available, would not live that way and would probably be living in more normal conditions.

At the end of 1961, there were in Canada 81,000 separated women living alone, in many cases in conditions of hardship, and of this number 15,600 were divorced. I am speaking only about women, but we can assume that the same figures probably apply to men.

In the United States, in 1965, there were 1,780,000 marriages, and of these 481,000 broke up within one year or since and most recent statistics show that there are 6 million divorced people in the United States.

Naturally, this is not a situation of which most of my colleagues and I can approve in conscience, but it is a definite situation which must be faced and which we cannot refuse to examine in order to see whether it could not be helped in some way.

I wonder, therefore, whether we might not look at this divorce law in a broader context, and whether we should not add to it a preventive measure against divorce, so as to create a certain cohesion between all the social welfare agencies and family services in the country. In doing this, we could first reduce the causes of divorce and then try to act as mediators, negotiators or advisers, when trouble starts in a marriage, to prevent that final rupture between two people called divorce, which is always regrettable.

Aside from the religious considerations of which I spoke earlier, there are natural considerations which make divorce normally unacceptable. One of the best studies of this problem, or at least that which seems to me to be the best, was written by representatives of various religious denominations and submitted to parliament by the Canadian Anglican Church, through its Christian Social Service. I am translating as best I can, for I only have the English text.

[English]

Anglican Church of Canada, Christian social service; Canadian Catholic Conference, family life bureau; Lutheran Council in Canada, division of social service; Mennonite Central Committee, Canada, peace and service office; Presbyterian Church in Canada, board of evangelism and social action; United Church of Canada, marriage guidance council.

[Translation]

In my opinion, this study—and we have received a great deal of documentation—is excellent.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may quote some passages from it at this stage of our consideration of the divorce bill, because I think it expresses my opinion better than I could express it myself.

This brief says, and I quote:

> In this collective brief, however, we feel that there is presently in Canada a common agreement on the need for reform of our legislation in order to facilitate the setting up of more adequate social welfare facilities to settle marital troubles.

And this should be emphasized, Mr. Speaker, that as legislators we would fail in our responsibilities if we merely make divorce easier in the case of marriage breakdown. I think we should add, parallel to this legislation, some provision making it possible to prevent marital trouble and cure it when it has become too serious.

And the brief goes on to say:

> Canadians are agreed on the following points: (1) The need for a reform of present divorce laws and legal procedures.

Now, I should like to refer to a point raised a moment ago by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, to the effect that, with this legislation, divorce proceedings costs would be brought down to reasonable proportions. I do not feel it is enough, as there are a large number of very poor families who, in some cases, would like to secure a legal separation, if not a divorce, but who do not have the means to do so.

I will quote a few cases which have come to my knowledge since the last few weeks. I have in mind, for instance, a particularly sad case where, for 7 or 8 years, every effort was made, with the help of matrimonial agencies, to make the marriage successful, but, as things now stand, there is no solution possible, other than a legal separation. This, not a divorce, has been requested.

The poor wife who must ask for a judicial separation is told by her lawyer: you have to deposit $300. She does not have it, Mr. Speaker. In that case, will she have to bear her lot till the end of her days? Would not legal aid have a formula or could not the state provide that inherent expenses be reduced in keeping with the means of those who may require divorce or judicial separation? Otherwise, people will continue to say that there is a double standard of justice in our country: one for the poor and another for the rich. I think a situation where such things can still be said is unwholesome.

I continue reading the brief:

(2) Divorce proceedings are taken as a last resort in the case of a marriage which, obviously, seems to have broken down. The ideal is to ensure a lasting marriage—

—in that respect, everyone agrees—

—and that ideal will be achieved only if the preparation starts at home and continues through educational programs sponsored by schools or other organizations. Those organizations should receive public funds as a help and as an encouragement to private enterprise.

There, of course, I see the need for a conference in the future between the provinces and the federal government to discuss legislation, to reconcile the laws which might be urgent, for instance, in the case of Quebec and Canada, to undertake that educational program, to prevent marriage from floundering on the shoals of misunderstanding or other reasons.

Here is another extract of the report:

(3) Sometimes, even the best of marriages may be in need of counselling at a given moment. All Canadians should be able to have access to such services. And in order for these services to be effective, it is necessary for the state to have an interest in them and to help them financially.

Some already exist. Perhaps there is a lack of co-ordination throughout the country. Perhaps they lack the means of improving techniques by themselves or the qualified personnel they would need in order to analyse each case, because there probably are no two identical cases, and this is where the help of the state is needed; I suppose this would be a joint effort by the provinces and the federal government.

Here is the fourth recommendation of this report, and I quote:

Reconciliation procedures are often of great help in restoring marriages that are far from being examples of harmony and stability. Attempts to reconcile the parties should be made part of any legal procedure that deals with marriages that have broken down or are on the verge of a breakdown.

As a layman, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should have courts specialized in family or marriage matters.

There are family courts in Quebec, but I would rather call them embryos of family courts which are not always headed by competent people, who themselves do not always have counsellors conversant with social, psychological or pedagogical matters. There would be room for much improvement.

But I feel that if the conservation of our natural resources and research in the physical and scientific fields are taken care of, we should first of all, under a priority which, in my opinion, is obvious, invest the amounts needed so that research and organization are made to meet the needs of our human capital.

Married life, family life, marriage are certainly the basis of social life in our country.

I quote again from the same report:

(5) Even if we are not all in complete agreement, it should be noted that, in divorce proceedings, the "matrimonial offences" concept should be replaced by the "breakdown of marriage" concept. This last concept, as explained to the joint committee, answers more adequately the needs of the programs and services which are concerned with the consolidation or rehabilitation of marriages.

Further on, mention is made of federal-provincial co-operation, of which I spoke earlier. This is the conclusion arrived at:

1. Federal divorce legislation should not play a purely negative role, in the sense that it would merely facilitate the dissolution of already broken marriages.

I spoke about this a little earlier.

2. The federal government, and all the members of parliament, should be dynamic leaders in promoting and helping the provincial and municipal authorities, as well as the private organizations to have their own legislation, special educational and welfare programs which would supplement the federal policy in order to insure the success of marriages.

It will not be enough, as law-makers, to wash our hands once the divorce legislation is improved. To make it easier in the valid cases, our responsibility must go further than that, that is we must try to prevent the ailment before it becomes acute.

A third recommendation reads as follows:

3. If Canada wants adequate marriage programs, its legislation and bills should be submitted to constant inquiries, review and scientific assessment.

At least as much as in material fields.

And I say in closing:

It is the duty of the state to strenghthen marriage and family life.

Mr. Speaker, when considering that bill, certain things strike me. I told you that quite frankly when I admitted that I do not have the legal qualifications of many of my colleagues.

• (3:20 p.m.)

For instance, under the heading "Grounds", clause 3, page 3 of the bill, it says:

3. Subject to section 5, a petition for divorce may be presented to a court by a husband or wife, on the ground that the respondent, since the celebration of the marriage, (a) has committed adultery;

I find it a little hard to understand that because the husband or wife commits adultery once, the spouse would be justified to ask for an annulment or a divorce. That is beyond me. I am under the impression that if Christ came back on earth, he would show the same generosity he had for the adulteress; he would probably forgive a third and a fourth time and would not be pleased to see a marriage dissolved when there are innocent children, unless the judge should decide, of course, that the situation is becoming extremely serious, which is not the case as a rule, except if the spouse who feels badly treated listens to his or her pride or hurt feelings. I wonder whether we are not opening the door a little too wide. In the past, we complained because adultery could be the only reason for divorce, and we noticed that in a great many cases, the adultery was forged, brought up under false representations. That case still remains.

I find it a little hard to accept that clause, Mr. Speaker. The second paragraph in the same clause states that:

If the respondent has been guilty of sodomy, bestiality or rape, or has engaged in an homosexual act;

Rape, bestiality, sodomy—I have no objection to that because it is against nature. But if we are now prepared to legislate in order to make homosexuality legal, unless it is habitual homosexuality, which has lasted for years and which prevented one of the spouses from fulfilling his or her matrimonial duties, I still think that a distinction should be made. I imagine, I suppose and I assume that the judge dealing with that case will have enough leeway to say: It has happened once, therefore, it is not grounds for divorce. I do not have the legal competence to pass a final judgment on that but I still submit that it is a matter which impresses me.

There are other grounds a little further, such as for example:

(a) the respondent

(i) has been imprisoned, pursuant to his conviction for one or more offences, for a period or an aggregate period of not less than three years during the five year period immediately preceding the presentation of the petition—

Here again, I suppose that judges would have some discretion, because I could mention cases where a fellow was sentenced to three or four years in prison, but he was not necessarily a bad husband, for all that. But if during that period, the wife gets bored, acquires bad habits which are not in accordance with the requirements of marriage, and if she decides that it would be absolutely necessary to ask for a divorce or a separation, well that would raise problems for the children.

I hope that the judges called upon to settle those cases will not feel bound by the wording of the act which provides three years of imprisonment for adultery and homosexual offences. It is automatic, absolutely cut and dried. They should have enough discretion to say: Since your particular case is not as serious as some others, I shall not allow divorce.

Mr. Speaker, I shall support this bill even though it may be amended, as many of my colleagues have suggested. I suppose that in future years, other amendments will be made to improve it still more, since, for once, this is legislation dealing with such important human problems that year round research and studies should be made in that field and consultation should take place between all competent social and religious organizations, in an attempt to find new formulas.

I repeat it again—it must be repeated, and I am pleased that my colleagues stated it—what has been said in this house in favour of this divorce bill must not be interpreted in the misinformed areas of our country, and that is why it is well that we should say it often, as an approval of divorce as such.

I believe most members, if not all, in this house consider divorce, first for natural reasons, and second, for religious reasons, as inadmissible in principle.

In principle, it is evil but we must make allowance for human weakness and consider the fact that we have no right to impose our religious beliefs on those who do not share them. We must also do our utmost to put an end to the old system which fostered hypocrisy, false representations, perjury and a whole lot of things which were denounced in this house.

And we are in good company, since we find that we have the support of religious authorities of almost all religious denominations in Canada. There might be differences of opinion on some details, on such or such a word or condition, but I believe that, on the whole, we have the support of all responsible people who are concerned with the vital cell of society, the family, which will enable the state to survive and to thrive.

It is in this spirit, Mr. Speaker, that I intend to vote in favour of the bill.

[English]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am in complete agreement with the purpose of the bill before us, namely, to improve the divorce law of Canada. However, reaction to a number of the provisions of the bill is not good. I believe that the government has in several areas missed an excellent opportunity to make the new divorce law more acceptable to Canadians generally. I believe there was an opportunity to legislate a better definition of the marriage breakdown principle, a better arrangement to bring about reconciliation, and with regard to several other matters with which I shall deal in the course of my remarks.

I say that the government has missed an opportunity because for the first time in many years, following the hearings of the special joint committee which ran over a period of a year, public opinion at this moment is favourable to extending the grounds of divorce to a much greater degree than is the case now. At the same time, the major religious groups in Canada are ready for this type of legislation. Many members of the house who have had reservations in the past are now ready to consider some really profound changes in the divorce law of Canada. Here was an opportunity for the government not only to follow public opinion but perhaps to lead it. I say that in several fields they have missed this opportunity.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Before the bill is passed this situation might be remedied by amending the bill in the committee stage at which time the house and the minister will have the opportunity to consider some of the amendments which I believe will be necessary anyway in the next few years and might better be brought in now so that the total jurisprudence on new divorce legislation may be developed at the same time. However, be that as it may, I would say there are several grounds on which the government has completely missed its opportunity.

The first one is on the principle of marriage breakdown. The bill goes so far in accepting marriage breakdown that the government could really leave out matrimonial offences as a ground and extend the definition of marriage breakdown, thus making a uniform divorce law in Canada. Instead, one part of the bill is based on matrimonial offences in which the cause does matter and another part of the bill is based on marriage breakdown in which the cause does not matter. How these two absolutely opposite principles can be blended and a reasonable jurisprudence developed so that the intent of the bill is made clear to the courts and to the people is beyond me. This is why I feel that the opportunity of taking one more step has been missed.

I will not spend much time on the marriage breakdown theory because others have gone into it fairly completely. But I would like to say one word in reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency who spoke a few minutes ago. He said it was his fear that the adoption of marriage breakdown as the sole ground for divorce would make divorce easier. This is a misconception which it took the committee almost a year to clear up, because in many cases divorce would be more difficult to prove in courts.

The fact is that under a satisfactory marriage breakdown system, as recommended by the special joint committee in its draft bill, several safeguards would have to be included. The first one is that reconciliation efforts have been made and can be proven in court in every case. This is not the case under the proposed law and, as I will show later, a simple question put to the applicant in court will settle all the efforts at reconciliation. What we really want is proof that there is no hope of reconciliation and that it has been tried. This is not found in the bill before us.

The second proof is that the marriage is at an end because of the separation of the spouses. This also is not in the bill before us. Under this bill, if a divorce is sought on grounds of adultery it can be obtained on the proof of a single act of adultery. A divorce which is obtained on only one ground, namely, a matrimonial offence, is what we now call an easy divorce. But it will not be so easy if, in addition to adultery, you have to prove that efforts have been made at reconciliation and that the marriage is at an end and is not likely ever to recover. Finally, in a marriage breakdown bill you would have to provide for care of the children and other ancillary matters to make sure that no one suffers as a result of the divorce.

So I say that marriage breakdown as a ground for divorce would not make divorce easier in a good many cases but would make it more difficult. It would establish to the satisfaction of those interested in the good of society that there is no hope of reconciliation, that all possible efforts have been made, that the marriage is at an end, that the children are provided for, and that the parties are actually and have been living separately for a number of years. In such a case it could never be said that marriage breakdown would make divorce easier. I merely raised that point because it is a misconception which has existed and which was repeated today.

First, I should like to comment on reconciliation procedures. We have heard from the minister and from other members that this bill will provide for procedures for reconciliation of the parties, if there is any hope of this. I say that the bill lacks anything along these lines, and I wish to refer particularly to clause 8. I know that normally we do not refer to specific clauses at this stage of the debate but I wish to quote the wording of the clause because it is important. Clause 8 reads in part as follows:

> On a petition for divorce it shall be the duty of the court, before proceeding to the hearing of the evidence, to direct such inquiries to the petitioner and, where the respondent is present, to the respondent as the court deems necessary in order to ascertain whether a possibility exists of their reconciliation—

It goes on to say that if the court believes there is some hope of reconciliation, many possibilities are open for action. The court can adjourn the proceedings, nominate a person to engage in marriage counselling or guidance, and so forth. However, that is only done when the judge feels on examining the parties that there is some hope of reconciliation. Under this bill—and I am sure this will be the case—all that the judge will have to do is to ask the petitioner whether there is any hope of a reconciliation with the spouse and the only answer necessary in that case will be "no". If such is the answer the judge will have satisfied the statute, and that is all there is to it; all effort will have gone out the window.

Under our present divorce proceedings a number of questions are asked. For example, on condonation the question is asked: Have you forgiven your husband or wife? The petitioner is always warned by counsel of the meaning of this question because a good Christian might think the best answer would be to say that he had forgiven his spouse; she might have erred but he has forgiven her. We know that there will be no divorce if adultery has been condoned. So I am sure that most petitioners seek divorce in the courts with the complete knowledge that they must answer this question correctly. It is a simple question and you can be sure of the answer. When the judge asks you if there is any hope of reconciliation you have to say no. If you say anything else your divorce is delayed or is gone altogether. You must make sure there is no mistake about this.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Clause 7 of the bill provides that counsel must certify he has advised his clients fully upon the opportunities for reconciliation. Counsel cannot even pass by this provision. He cannot even say, I will let this client satisfy the judge on whether or not reconciliation is possible. He will have to advise his client not to say that there is a possibility of reconciliation because the client will not get the divorce. If the client says there is no possibility, the divorce will be granted. I do not believe either the petitioner or counsel will go ahead with a case with the firm intention of having that case thrown out. I cannot see it. If you are going to have any real hope from reconciliation procedures you have to have more than is provided in this bill. There will need to be some other provision than just the necessity for the judge to ask the question, which is all that has to be done at this moment.

This brings me to the next point I want to discuss and it is closely tied to this question of reconciliation. Under these circumstances, we are going to try divorce actions in the high court. They are still going to be on the list for trial at the assizes and there will be half a dozen other cases, civil or criminal. If every trial court does the same thing as is done in Ontario, it will mean the court will try to find half an hour when nothing else is taking place to slip in these divorce actions. Sometimes this occurs when the jury is out considering a criminal case. Sometimes this will occur when there is an adjournment to allow counsel to attempt an agreement in a case. Since there is just a limited amount of time, many of us feel that these cases will be hastened.

We feel, therefore, that county and district courts should be permitted to handle divorces. County and district court judges, except in the larger centres, are always available. They will be there today, tomorrow and next week and so will have some time to give thought to the question of reconciliation. They will not just pass off the question of reconciliation with a simple question as the high court judges are going to do. I know, just as sure as I am standing here, this is what the high court judges will do. They will put the simple question: Is there any hope of reconciliation? The answer will be no. If the judge has nothing else to do he may take some time to probe, but in the normal case the judge will just ask the question. The high court judge will be anxious to get these cases off his list. If he receives the right answer to that simple question the case will be disposed of. The high court judge will not want to be tied up with the question of reconciliation because he will move to another assize next week and may not be back to that centre for two years. Counsel would have to chase him around to another centre or try to find another judge, and in some cases may have to wait until the next time the judge is in that place.

Under those circumstances what hope is there for reconciliation? I believe for all these reasons that this bill is absolutely useless, especially in so far as the reconciliation procedure is concerned. The fact that county courts are not being given jurisdiction in these cases means there is no hope of people pursuing the possibility of reconciliation if that would be helpful. I say, therefore, that the bill falls short of what many of us thought it would do.

I should like to follow up the other question about county courts because their use is not related just to the reconciliation procedures. The special joint committee gave this matter a lot of thought. We heard a lot of witnesses. When the minister made his introductory remarks I asked him why the county and district courts had not been given jurisdiction under this bill. He gave two answers. He said, first, that we were dealing with the fundamental rights of people which should be settled in the high court and, second, that jurisprudence would be built up over the years and this should be done in a high court. I should like to deal with these two matters.

In the first place, I have already mentioned the question of reconciliation and of marriage breakdown. There is in addition the question of cost, and this is an even greater reason for putting these divorces into county courts. Under this bill we are trying to make divorces available to those whose marriages have broken down and for whom there is no hope of reconciliation. Many of these people cannot now obtain a divorce and in some cases they cannot afford it. If we could put these divorce actions into county and district courts, the tariffs and fees in those courts are half of what they are in the supreme court. While we are trying to make divorces more available to Canadians under this bill, regardless of their ability to pay, at the same time we are keeping divorce actions in the superior courts to which these people cannot afford to go. It has been pointed out on several occasions that if there is any possibility of reconciliation the procedures established under this bill that counsel will have to undertake will be monumental. These procedures are going to shove up the cost. The procedures are not those that can be undertaken by social workers or by other people engaged in this type of activity at public expense. These procedures, in a large measure, are going to have to be carried out by a lawyer. When a lawyer starts a case, therefore, he will start it with the possibility of reconciliation procedures in mind.

