Gussle Hamilton and Florence Lincoln

Gussie Hamilton and Florence Lincoln had been inseparable friends previous to Mr. Lincoln's death, and their friendship had in no wise abated.

This summer Florence had accompanied her to L., to spend a few weeks, and Mr. Thornton relied on her cooler judgment to keep in check the giddiness of his ward.

when the conversation concerning the gypsies took place.

Upon Mr. Thornton's arrival he was assailed by his ward, who, after a considerable amount of teasing, prevailed upon him to grant her request.

In her eagerness to obtain her end, she had not noticed that Mr. Thornton was accompanied by a young man whom he now introduced as his son. Henry Thornton, who had been studying the past eight years in Europe, and had now recurried—changed from a noisy poy of fourteen to a polished man of the world.

He had known Gussie Hamilton only as a romping school girl before he left home, and she appeared all the more lovely to him from contrast when his ther introduced him.

Henry Thornton decided to remain a week at L—, and the next morning found them on their way to the gyps e.

camp.

Upon their arrival they were immediately assailed by several old hags, who offered to tell their fortunes for fifty cents. They each surrendered themselves and were borne off in triumph.

To Florence and Henry they repeated the usual rigmarole obout "flight complected gentlemen and dark eyed ladles —strangers and marriages—letters and journeys—riches and deaths"; but Gussie fared somewhat differently.

She had dropped her money tremblingly in the hand of a villainous looking beldame, who drew her aside to a clump of bushes, out of sight of camp; and,

"Fair lady, beware of the water!"
Frightened at ahe strange manner of the gypsy, Gussie fled to her friends.

"Why, what's the matter, Gussie!—
You look scared to death!" Florence exclaimed on seeing her pale face and

At one end of it she found an old boat rigged a seat and paddle, so that she could go out and get pond lilies. Here she brought her work and books, and would sit for hours at a time in her little boat on the placid water of the pond—a pond, in which there was a quantity of water lilies. During her wanderings through the woods, Gussie had discover-ed this pond, and was struck with its boat on the placid water of the pond—sometimes working or reading, but oftener dreaming away the time.

One day they received a dispatch at L—from Henry, saying that he had finished his business and should be there the next day, and for them to send a carriage to the depot for him. Accordingly it was agreed that Gussie should take the pony phaeton and drive to town to receive him.

The time arrived for her to start, but she was nowhere to be found. The house

While the search was going on, the cars arrived, and Henry found no one to receive him. Thinking that something must be wrong, he hastened to the house. Going up to the group, he enquired of the coachman: "What is the trouble, Mike?"

"Shure, it's the young Missus Hamil-ton as hasn't been seen sence dinner eyes I seen her a sitting on the plazy arter d nner; and says she: 'I guess I'll go,' sez sne, 'and get some lilles,' and I han't laid eyes on her blissed face

Upon mention of lilies, the the gypsy's warning recurred to Henry wi h great force, and, without waiting to hear the last of Mike's harangue, he started with long strides toward the pond, the only place where lilies were to be obtained.

He broke into a run. Everything seemed to detain him and hold him back. With impatient hand he thrust aside the branches which obstructed his way. Would he never reach the pond? Surely he had been more than a mile! At length he caught a glimpse of the water shining through the trees. He redoubled his pace, and in another moment was tremblingly parting the foliage which hid his view, fearing the worst.

A sight burst upon his vision which made his heart leap for j y, and, falling on his knees, he thanked God that he had spared to him the life of the woman he William street.

Little remains to be told: Henry Thornton and Gussie Hamilton were married the following winter. Florence Lincoln was also married and is now in Europe with her husband, a man in every

Let us take one glimpse of the home of Henry Thornton and his wife.

The old gentleman who is called grant's pa by those two laughing children on his knee is none other than James Thornton, the guardian of Gussie Hamilton.

"Henry, dear," exclaimed Mrs. Thorn-ton, suddenly, "did you know we have been married just ten years to-day?"

J. L. STEWART, EDITOR. SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 17, 1873. The Criminal Course of the Cabinet in Dallying with Unconstitutional Projects—Appeal to the People. Mr. Costigan asks what steps have been taken by the Government for the carrying out of his unconstitutional resolution. Does the Premier reply that New Goods the Government has no right; under the List of Letters-Act of Union, to disallow constitutional Public Notice Acts, and will not be a party to the proposed outrageous violation of the Con- New Booksstitution they have sworn to maintain? Does he reply that he will never advise His Excellency to interfere with the sacred rights of the Provinces of Canada? Does he point to his own decision on the onstitutionality of the School Act and the Supreme Court's decision and assure the Frenchmen that the granting of their request is impossible? Oh, no; not at all. He has "laid the resolution before His Excellency."

Out upon such trifling with the sacred is based. The Premier and his colleagues should be ashamed of dallying thus with the poisonous arrow that has been shot into the body politic. They should scorn to seem for a moment to waver between right and wrong for the sake of political expediency. He aid he believed that he must light the CARRIAGE BOLTS, said he believed that he must light the gas hereafter when putting up prescriptions in the night, as he could not tell by the sense of sinell so well as he could before he had the catarrh. However, it's an ill subject for jesting. How many people are killed every year by careless druggists, and especially by careless doctors of medicine, can never be known. Naturally, when the disease is of the violent sort, the death is attributed to it. Add to this carelessness the adulteration of drugs, and it isn't pleasant to think of the matter. Millinery. Millinery. is that of a man who was born an invalid. At ten he could neither walk nor talk. At that time, apparently idiotic, he began to walk on his toes. Losing his balance one day, he fell down, striking his head, when he cried out "Bump!" This was the first and only word he was known to speak until 'he was nearly twelve. Then he tumbled over again, and again cried out "Bump!" After this he talked freely. As soon as he began to talk, he could read nearly as well as other children of his age. He is now in trade in company with his brother, and is doing most of the work of the store. Whether he keeps up his mental culture by occasionally failing down and crying out "Bump!" we are not informed. is that of a man who was born an invalid. "One of the most ingenious and beautiful.
Every part of it is an exhibition of exquisite aste on the part of its inventor, and must be seen to be appreciated; no description can do it justice."

"It is a fine piece of engraving, besides forming a beautiful ornament for every home."

"The design is very elaborate and beautiful. and those who wish a family record for framing will not fine anything to please them better."

A very elderly bachelor, perceiving the lady's dilemma, obligingly took the sleeping infant she carried, in order that she might more easily enter the carriage. At that moment the train started, and a porter appeared just in time to drag away the nervous lady from her dangerous struggle to get into the moving car. Awful were her feelings, but worse were those of the elderly bachelor, who was a stout person in spectacles, and who in vain attempted to stifle the wild howls of the frighted child by dandling it, amid the laughs of his companins in the carriage. The little creature was deposited at the next station, and the horrified old gentleman sank back almost fainting in his seat, wiping beads of lately rushed up to a train on the point PHILADELPHIA ONION SETS; Potat mar 27 d w tf General Superintend. Messes. R. C. Marchesin & Co.—Gentlemen:
I have been afflicted with gravel and stone up words of a year and a half—tried everything I could hear of for its relief, without avail; saw your adverti-ement of CALULI-UGE in the distifux papers—took three bottles according to directions, and is the short space of four weeks am entirely cured. I willingly add my testimony to "it value, and heartly recommend it to all afflicted as I have been.
