The body of a well developed child only a few hours old was found in Point Pleasant park, Halifax on Saturday afternoon. It was wrapped in expensive linen and placed in a fine yellow case. The people interested are evidently wealthy. The linen bore initials which were not given to the public but may be led to the conviction of the parties responsible for the infanticide. Detectives are on the case. The verdict of the coroner's jury was that the body had been placed where found, by parties unknown.

—Dr. James Coll, the first to explain the movement of the gulf stream, had died at the age of 65, a distinguished fellow of the Royal Society.

—The election in Montreal on Monday resulted in the return of Hon. J. McShane as mayor by a vote of 10,235 against 5,007 for Grenier.

Local Matters.

BRIEF W. H. N. Clements, 420 tons, built at Hopewell Cape, N. B., in 1871, has been sold at New York, by auction, for $1,500.

Mayor W. H. Harris, formerly of Dorchester, now of Moncton, has been made a Queen's Counsel and now puts Q. O. after his name.

This first arrest for drunkenness since the first of the year was made in Amherst, on Tuesday. The unfortunate was a stranger.

Says the Fred rickton Gleaner: supplies for team—still continue scarce, and the lumbermen are obliged to import carloads from the upper provinces. Good oats still fetch 55 cents per bushel.

Mount Allison Law Lecture.

JUDGE PALMER ON PROPERTY.

The third lecture on law subjects in the Mt. Allison course was delivered on Tuesday evening last, by Mr. Justice Palmer, of St. John; subject: "Property, the origin of the idea, its growth and development, etc." President H. H. McFarland presided.

Mr. Justice Palmer was greeted with hearty applause by the audience, and he felt great pleasure in speaking to a class such as he saw before him. As a native of Sackville, he had always been interested in Mount Allison and in its work, although it had not been his good fortune to study within its walls. He had been born in Sackville, and class attended the old Sackville Grammar School, taught by Mr. Allison's educational work. She had been the student of the late Judge Palmer had always taken an interest in the educational work of the province, and particularly in Mt. Allison. He they are branded with the name of Grig, they are easily identified and Uncle Sam might have them all and welcome.

—Messrs Forest and Orlton are addressing a meeting in this place to-night. Should the Captain steer this way, many would be glad to see and hear him; for there are many, even this near to Parrboro who know him well. There is little welcome here for Mr. Casey when there is a Liberal in the field. Were there not these who are branded with the name of Grig, they are easily identified and Uncle Sam might have them all and welcome.

—The political storm which is raging so fiercely around us has made no stir in the serenity of our atmosphere—like a peaceful village on the great prairie, around which the deadly tornado has swept, leaving it untouched. Calm in the confidence of the loyalty of Canadian treatment we await with assurance the verdict of the people as to which shall in future rule us—Blaine or Queen Victoria. There are many Esau's who would trade their birthright for a mess of Yankee potage—for traitors live to-day worse than Reel, only lacking his bravery. But these are in the minority, and they are branded with the name of Grig, they are easily identified and Uncle Sam might have them all and welcome.

The Springhill Explosion.

Mr. Gilpin, Inspector of Mines, is reported to have said, in an interview with a representative of the Echo respecting the explosion:

"I have heard it said that a certain party has information to the effect that two of the miners of Springhill carried open lamps in their pockets. When no one was near, they would take out these lamps and use them in addition to their safety lamps. When any one approached, they quickly extinguished them. If this report is found to be true, it may be an important bearing on the cause of the explosion. If the lanterns of the company did not exceed their instructions, and those instructions were of such a nature as to make an explosion impossible, then of course the company will be relieved of responsibility. Or if the men went beyond their instructions, the company will not be responsible. If, however, it can be shown that the explosion was caused by workmen carrying out official instructions, then the company will likely be in for pretty heavy damages."

The underground force employed at the time of the accident was 490 coal-cutters, 216 laborers, 162 boys, total 868. The number of lives lost was 123; 55 widows mourn their husbands, and 164 children have lost their fathers.

The inquest is to be resumed March 10th.—Record.

Death of W. K. Chapman.

On Thursday evening last, Derchester lost by death its oldest and one of its most prosperous and respected citizens. William Keillor Chapman was born in Dorchester, October 26th, 1809. From 1836 to 1853 he was actively engaged in a general grocery business with Thos. Keillor, in a store situated opposite where the bank now stands. In the year 1853 he was burglarized and the burglars, to cover their work, set fire to the building. After this Mr. Keillor retired, and Mr. Chapman continued his business in connection with his extensive shipping interests until 1865, when he sold out and became interested more extensively in real estate and shipping, until about ten years ago, when he retired from active business life.

During the past year, his health has been failing rapidly, and for three weeks prior to his death, he was unable to leave his bed. The funeral took place on Sunday and was attended by a large concourse of friends and mourners. The deceased gentleman leaves two sons, Albert J. and Clarence H., and three daughters, Maggie, Bessie and Etta.

Milton's Last Poem.

I am old and blind, Men point at me as smitten by God's frown, Afflicted, and deserted by my kind; Yet I am not cast down, I am weak, yet strong, I murmur not that I no longer see, Poor, old, and helpless, I the more be-long, Father, supreme, to Thee.

Oh! merciful One; When men are farthest, then Thou art most near, When friends pass coldly by, my weakness shun, Thy charity I hear, Thy glorious face Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place, And there is no more night.

On my bedded knee I recognize Thy purpose, clearly shown; Vision Thou hast dimmed, that I might see Thyself, Thyself alone, I have sought to feast This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing.

Beneath it I am almost sacred—here Can come no living thing, Oh! I seem to stand, Trembling, where foot of man had never been, Wrapped in the radiance of Thy sinless hand.

Which eye hath never seen, Visions come and go, Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng; From angel lips I seem to hear the sound Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now, When Heaven is opening on my sightless eyes, When airs from Paradise refresh my brow, That earth in darkness lies; In a pure climate, My being fills with rapture, waves of thought Roll in upon my spirit, strains sublime Break over me unthought.

Give me my life! I feel the stirrings of a god, Within my bosom glow divinely fire, Lit by no skill of mine.

HIS FATHER'S SON. (Saturday Night) "Oh! I've nothing against the lad," said Mr. Henfield.

"I dare say he's good enough in his way. But I do not like the stock he comes from. In a place like this, you know, it won't do to risk anything."

Roderick Kelfer, standing in the little telegraph office on the mountain plateau, could hear plainly the words his principal spoke.

"The rock which acted as a complete sounding board, and the color vanished out of his cheeks as the unwelcome utterances reached his ear."

He was a tall, pale young fellow of two or three-and-twenty—not handsome, but nevertheless pleasant to look upon, and at the sound of Mr. Henfield's voice, he braced himself as in a court of justice the prisoner sometimes braces himself to receive the sentence.

"I suppose it isn't exactly an honorable thing for me to be eavesdropping here," he said to himself, "but I don't know that I'm doing anything in particular to do with the race of Kelfer. At any rate, it means life or death to me, so here goes."

Roderick Kelfer was the telegraph operator at Hornet Station, on Hornet Mountain. Matthew Henfield was the local superintendent, and John Jaycox, the round-shouldered little man now walking at his side, was the general factotum at that solitary spot.

"From his vantage point above, Roderick could see when Henfield was sending the stock and sinuous path. A brief silence succeeded the superintendent's remark."

"Humph!" commented Jaycox. "The question is, is it a risk? So far as I know, the young man has always done his duty."

"I thought Jaycox would stand my friend," muttered Roderick. "In our affairs," epigrammatically spoke Henfield, everything that is not certain is a risk. That booby old dogman whom I have just discharged—"

"It's come to that, has it?" thought Kelfer, with a red spot burning into his cheek-rose.

"Oh, yes, I know," acknowledged Jaycox. "But the father and son are quite different."

"I'm sure, I'm sure," said Henfield. "But you know the old saying about what's bred in the bone?"

"I don't think there's anything in that," said Jaycox. "But of course, it's for you to decide. Who would you like to put in his place?"

"So I'm shelved!" muttered Kelfer, savagely gnawing his black mustache. "Two years of hard work and steady behavior are to go for nothing; and all because I'm my father's son!"

A Dumping Ground For Criminals.

An English newspaper, in a recent article concerning the criminal classes of Great Britain, suggests that the system of transportation should be revised, and hints that the newly-opened colony of Africa would make a modern Botany Bay for the reception of those who have offended against the criminal laws of the mother country.

There is certainly a large area in the interior of Africa—the tableland so graphically described by Stanley and others—where Europeans can find a climate suitable to their temperaments; but it is doubtful if the nations of Europe would agree upon converting this beautiful land into a penal colony.

Remember that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has equal as a specific for colds, coughs, and all affections of the lungs and throat.
