So I would rather not become the purchaser.'
Alice took the ring, (Lady Dynvor's gift in happier days, and held sacred when all ornaments had gone to gain them daily bread,) and with a heavy sigh was departing, when a fashionable equipage drew up to the door, and a party alighted. In the hurry of the moment Alice dropped it; one of the ladies picked it up, glanced first at her then for a moment on the value like beauble, and gracefully presented.

'La, ma'am, there be some great visitors in our parlor to see, you.'

'To see me!' exclaimed the startled girl, and the blood rushed to her cheek and brow; are you sure they asked for me, my kind Mrs. Bray?'

'Surely, ma'am, and looked so pitiful the while I was telling how sick your husband was and how you watched him, and would not sleep or eat; and tears were in the lady's beautiful blue eyes as she listened.'

With a faltering step Alice entered the neat 'The ring is valuable, Madain, and the setthe valumble beauble, and gracefully presented it and passed on; and the young wife stole from the crowded store to her lonely home.
