the principle that the State shall not give

That principle, it is well known, is maintained by a majority of the people of the indirectly, be infringed upon by the people's Legislature. He thought the Legislature should leave the taxing of the Hospital optional with the City Council.

Mr. Blake contended that the Hospital

While Churches and Woollen Factories, and Boot Churches and Woollen Factories, and Boot and Shoe Factories are exempted by the Legislature from taxation, he thought there should be no hesitation about exempting the Charlottetown Hospital. It is not proposed that the exemption shall apply to property other than that strictly necessary to the carrying out of the charitable objects of the Institution. He hoped there would be no division about the matter.

Mr. FERGUSON strongly upheld the clause as it stood in the Bill. He read from the evening paper an advertisement of a Bazzar

He said that while all persons requiring treatment are received at the Hospital, without reference to their creed, the religion of none is tampered with.

Dr. Gillis reminded the House that the Legislature authorized every year the expenditure of about $18,000 to maintain the Provincial Hopital for the Insanc, and the only difference between the good works done in it and the good work done in the model of the second works of the control of the second works of the control of the second works of the province of an institution in which the physicians of the city meet together to consult over difficult cases, and in which the best of nursing is given.

Mr. Gordon was willing to concede that that it was open to Protestants as well as Catholics; and he was willing to apply to

In the meantime His Holiness had entered the Hall of the Paramanti, surrounded by all the nobles of the Papal Court and attended by the Cardinals, Patriarchs, and Bishops now in Rome, the presidents of the different colleges, and numerous officials connected with the Vatican. Mr. McLean (J. R.) contended that the Hospital was not a denominational institution. If it were, he did not think it should be taxed. There can never be more than two or three charitable matitutions of the kind in the Province, and, Catholic or Protestant, he thought they should be exempted from taxation.

NOW AND THEN.

BY LADY WILDS

The sunshine falls
Upon ruined walls
ne desolate places lying,
Like a desert vast
Of ruin and waste
a with wrecks of the dead and dying.
And the exile roams
From the roofless homes
own fair, beautiful islet
With never a care
In his dull despair
a the winds or the wayes may pilot.

Yet, the fever strife
Of a nation's life
Is a fearful thing and a splendid,
For through storm and night,
The glory and light
Of the coming of day is blended.
The cry of despair
In the silent air
So beliness it seems and feable. So helpless it seems, and feeble;
But the dying groans
May have shaken thrones
From the lips of a murdered people.

Great thoughts will move

Great thoughts will move
In the mighty groove
Of a nation travelling onward,
As the fiery flood
Of the wrath of God
When the whirlwind is sweeping down
And the chanted song
Of a nation's wrong
To the low, sweet chords of the player.
Can sever the chain
Of the slave in twain,
Like the hammer of Thor, the Slayer.

For our right is might In the deadly fight ge with the powers of Evil, And our thunder-words Are like lifted swords

To war against man or devil.

Lo' the path we tread

By our martyred dead

Has been trodden mid ban and blessing, And unconquered stil Is the steadfast will And the faith they died confessing

For never a gain
Made failure vain
But the dead have helped to win it;
And the holiest shrine
Of a cause divine
The hands of the dead begin it.
Like spirits of doom
They traverse the gloom,
The souls of the mighty forces
That can break the spell,
Were it woven in hell,
Of the haughtiest tyrants' courses.

For never a gain

New strength will come
From the martyrdom
That has driven a people frantic;
They will take their stand
In a mightier land
Beyond the broad Atlantic.
And, the 'changeless still
Be the wrongs and ill,
Yet each hand will be nerved with power,
To rend the net
That is round them set
When destiny strikes the hour.

inv strikes the hour

They will tread the soil Where brave men toil With a brave heart's self reliance,
They will drink of the streams
Where the Star-Flag gleams

And will learn pow mer Win their freedom when The soul of a weary nation Grows sick of the chain Of the tyrant's reign And the brand of his desolation.

For Ideas span The infinite plan
With an onward and ceaseless r
Flinging wide an arch
For the people's march
Over river and land and ocean;
And town and tower
Will feel the power
Of the silent revolution,

Of the silent revolution,

When the weapons wrought
In the forge of thought
Dash down each old delusion. The toilers rude

The toilers rude
In their servitude,
Will hear the exulting chorus;
And resolute hands
Will guide our bands
On the path heroes trod before us.
For strong as winds
The tempest unbinds Will be the song of the Nation
When the deathly pall
Of oppression will fall
From the soul of the generation
