The audience was well pleased with the entertainment, if we could judge by the applause. I might mention the music by Miss Mary Miller was excellent, and we doubt if her equal can be had in the Province; also the recitation of Miss Lily Parker was well spoken of. The dialogue between Miss Florence Elliott and 8.C. Hall brought down the house. I could make special mention of each one, but space will not permit; but they one and all deserve credit and our thanks for theigh energy in getting up such a fine entertainment in so short a time, only having seven day prepare.

Management of Children

There are so many ways of getting along with the little ones when there are a multitude of duties waiting for the careworn housekeeper, mother and maid of all work, who belong to the middle class of our country, that every idea that can be presented to help them should be given. So many censcientious mothers think that they must be very vigilant in watching everything a child does, to keep him in the right way, that they often overdo the matter. Don't—don't notice all the little capers children indulge in to amuse the little capers children indulge in to amuse be attended to. It is time and tempers saved to drop everything else and devise something to divert their attention from the immediate eause of trouble. Begin to tell a story that will interest them—a story of a kitty or of your own exploits when young. You will be surprised how scon, from baby up to the boy of eight, the children will all become interested, and the discord, both cause and effect, will be entirely forgotten.

Your next step should be to turn your attention to the lesson in well-doing that you wish to give these little ones; and again you will be surprised to hear how often a child can be led or attracted from what we call naughty ways by a little tact en a child can be led or attracted from often a child can be led or attracted from what we call naughty ways by a little tact and quick-thoughtedness, thereby saving antagonizing reproof and methods irritating to both mother and child.

A parent should not presume upon arbitrary methods of discipline or upon mere authority simply because he is a parent. Never attempt to teach a child that he must chear our hard proper such control of the control o
