ANS UN- DER TRIAL.

The Judge's Charge to the Jury.

Jon. H. A. McKeown continued his address to the jury in the Doherty murder case on Tuesday afternoon. It was a powerful arraignment of the prisoner Higgins, whose guilt he claimed, was proven beyond the shadow of a doubt. He pointed out that after the murder Higgins was the one who took precautions to conceal the crime. He had about it and warned other boys not to tell about his having the revolver, going so far as to threaten one boy that if he didn't deny it, he would "fix him too." The counsel for the defense had talked of mercy; where was the mercy shown to Willie Doherty, who was cut off without being able to cry to God. Turning to the evidence of the boys, companions of Higgins and Goodspeed, Mr. McKeown again alluded to the fact that their memories appeared to be a blank regarding the events of the evening after the body was found. Why is it? And why is it that not a word concerning Goodspeed was said? And yet never in all these conversations, there is not a single word uttered by Higgins to the boys or by them to Higgins that implicates Goodspeed.

"There is the statement that he and Goodspeed would get in trouble," said Mr. Mullin.

Throw out the two confused stories of the crime. One of them did it. Throw out their statements and there is not a single footprint which points towards Goodspeed, and every event so far as it has been detailed. The jury had heard Goodspeed tell his story. Mr. Mullin said that when the boy told his story at the inquest he told it in a sing-song way. No one could agree with him. He also stated that when under examination Goodspeed's story was broken up by the crown counsel in order to break up the continuity. Nothing was further from his mind, said Mr. McKeown. But Higgins story was like a recitation from a book. There was not a single man in the jury box but who knows that the story was written out. Higgins committed his evidence to memory. These things were very painful, especially when counsel seemed to be involved. Also the jury will remember that a piece of paper was taken from Higgins when he was "on the stand." It was passed to Mr. Mullin.

"Why didn't you read it," asked Mr. Mullin.

"I didn't want to."

"Here is the paper, Mr. Mullin," said Higgins, pulling it from his pocket.

Mr. Mullin handed it to Mr. McKeown, who dropped it on the table.

Mr. McKeown went on to say that the boy had a copy of the Daily Telegraph with the depositions in it.

Mr. Mullin then arose and said that Higgins' people were poor and he gave him the Telegraph.

The judge said he would not interfere with Mr. McKeown's line of argument.

If he had the Telegraph with the statement in it, said Mr. McKeown, "what would he want with a copy of the deposition?"

"I forgot that I gave it to him," said Mr. Mullin.

Continuing, Mr. McKeown said he never heard of such an incident before as a prisoner writing out his testimony—it was absolutely incredible. The phraseology, too, and he did not wish to make any insinuations against Mr. Mullin, at least was not of the tanyard. All these things point but in one direction. The jury has every right to judge the story by every incident in it. The way he tells it is very important. Every point of time mentioned in the tale was mentioned as 1.30, 1.45 and the like. Before telling the story of the connected events he spoke of half-past, a quarter to, and the like.

Mr. McKeown dealt with the motive, and said the real motive might be covered up and never known. It was for the jury to weigh the evidence before them. On them lay a great responsibility.

The path of duty was the way of safety. The circumstances of an awful crime were before them, and they were looked to by the whole community.

The court then adjourned until Wednesday morning.

JUDGE LANDRY'S CHARGE.

His Honor reminded the jurors that they must take the law from the judge, the facts by the evidence. There was little law in the case, however. His Honor read from the criminal code the definition of murder, and said it was for the jury to say whether what was done in this case was described in the law. No doubt Doherty's death was due to one of the two causes described—that death was intended, or that death resulted from bodily injuries that reasonably would cause death. As to the evidence of an accomplice it is admissible and it need not be corroborated if that evidence in itself is sufficient to convince jurors. That is a strict definition of law. But he had to say that the evidence of an accomplice must be scrutinized more closely than that of other witnesses. Judges always advise jurors on this point, and he so directed them. But if the testimony of an accomplice is apparently truthful, it is as binding as that of any other witness. In this case there is an abundance of testimony to ask the juror's attention to as corroborating Goodspeed's evidence. It is for the jury, however, to decide on the facts as brought out and to which he would direct attention. Speaking of the value of testimony, there is no doubt when jurors have evidence of persons implicated in crime, His Honor said, that evidence taken by itself is not to be taken with the credence given to other witnesses. But the most hardened criminal may tell the truth. He may tell lies, and it is for the jurors to judge. Both Goodspeed and Higgins stand in the same category in this respect. Jurors must look at all the circumstances in arriving at the truth—truth which must be arrived at regardless of all other considerations. His Honor dilated on the importance of juror's duty and pointed out that their private beliefs on such questions as capital punishment must not be allowed to interfere in the discharge of the duty. They are sworn to carry out the laws of the land. They are sworn to look for the truth and also to protect innocence. Their duty is to unravel the intricacies of the case; they will not be justified in leaving that duty for others. Jurors have nothing to do with the matter of punishment—that is outside their province. His Honor said, however long they took they should seek to find out the truth in this case. It is for the jury to find on the issue as presented to them. Symmetry must not be allowed to come in, justice is what the jurors are sworn to try, not mercy—justice that will not permit an innocent man to go to the gallows, if found guilty, but justice to the community as well.

His Honor next took up the point that there was an abundance of testimony to corroborate Goodspeed's evidence—not in quality, but in quantity. He submitted whether the jury could not find a verdict without considering either Goodspeed's or Higgins' evidence. In his opinion there would be sufficient evidence to find against the prisoner if they had so decided, without either Goodspeed or Higgins testifying. Continuing, His Honor said it had been shown that Higgins and Doherty had been chums. This was proved outside of the evidence of Goodspeed and Higgins. It will be for the jury to say what they were chums for. If in crime, it is important. While chums Higgins said, as proved by other witnesses, that he would get along with Doherty. In unraveling the mystery this must be considered. What did Higgins mean when he said he didn't want Doherty around? What means would he take to prevent him being around? As a final point, there was the purchase of a revolver by Higgins after returning from a tour to part of the United States. What did he want with that revolver, as explained by himself or others? How long did he have it? What did he use it for? Then there was the purchase of cartridges. Higgins did not buy it himself, but through a third person. What evidence is there of a useful use of the revolver and cartridges? It was proved Higgins carried the revolver on the day of the tragedy. His Honor cautioned the jurors against the credibility of the companions of the prisoner. King, for instance, assisted Higgins in discovering Alexander to get the latter to deny statements he had made to a reporter. Doherty, continued His Honor, was last seen alive in the company of Higgins and Goodspeed. There have been cases of circumstantial evidence in which persons were convicted of murder largely because of the fact that they were last seen in the company of the deceased. In this case, Doherty was last seen in the graveyard and in the park and near the park house with Higgins and Goodspeed, Higgins having a revolver in his pocket. Next, there is evidence, outside of Higgins and Goodspeed, that Higgins and Goodspeed were seen coming from the park in the direction of the creek. It was not proved positively that this was on Aug. 1st. If these two youths were not seen coming out of the park, was it deliberate concealment of their tracks, or was it purely accidental? Finally, there was the finding of the revolver in the creek, the five chambers empty, the empty cartridges in the revolver. It was found in the presence of Goodspeed. It is for jurors, if they had no other testimony, to connect Higgins with the crime, because of these facts. The proof is not positive, but it is circumstantial, and forms links in a chain that must be considered by the jury. The revolver and cartridges have been identified as Higgins's. What next is found? Bullets in the body of the victim and there is evidence for the jury to consider that these were the bullets, discharged from Higgins's revolver.

Next said His Honor, trace the conduct of a prisoner. The law books lay down that it is important to consider what an accused man says and does after a crime is being committed. What did Higgins do? He meets Doherty's father and denies having seen his boy after 10 a. m. on Aug. 1st. This is prima facie evidence of guilt, if not explained away. It would be trifling with the juror's intelligence to suppose they would believe Higgins told Doherty's father the truth. Higgins told Kelly he (Higgins) would prove where his revolver was, Kelly having said it would look bad for him. Then take Higgins's conduct at the identification of Doherty's dead body. Was that the conduct of an innocent man? Then there was his attempt to get Alexander to deny his statement about the revolver, going to much trouble to do this, even rising early to see him. There was his anxiety as shown by his reading of the newspapers. What did he mean by cheating to fix Alexander? Why did he say after coming out of the coroner's presence that he would get away? Goodspeed's story had not been detailed at this time. Why did Higgins go away? Why did he resort to subterfuges in going away? Why did he give a wrong name and address? Are these evidences of a guilty man? That is for the jury to consider. What, asked His Honor, was the conduct of Higgins after his arrest at McAdam? Absolute silence on every point. Was that the conduct of an innocent person? Would it, or would it not, be the course of an innocent person who had information to give? There could be circumstances in which an innocent accused person might decide to maintain silence until he could spring his defence on court and jury to show his innocence. That was for the jury to consider. In this particular case great difficulties have been placed in the way of the authorities in ferreting out the crime. Was this the act of an innocent man, or was it a deliberately concocted plan to escape? His Honor said again if the jury decided that with this evidence alone they found a verdict against the prisoner such a verdict would be upheld. Should, however, the jury decide that both Higgins and Goodspeed are both guilty the evidence unexplained would be sufficient to justify a verdict to that effect without word from either Higgins or Goodspeed. What does Higgins deny? His Honor recited the main facts about going with Doherty to the park, the purchase of revolver, finding of revolver, etc. In fact, he denies nothing of importance in the circumstantial evidence. His contradictions are not serious, and it is for the jury to consider whether even these denials point more to guilt or to innocence. His Honor referred particularly to Higgins' statement after the crime as to knowing where his revolver was and his denial of using to Alexander the word "too" when he threatened "to fix" Alexander. His Honor asked the jury, would they conclude that only Higgins and Goodspeed knew of the murder? Did they believe that any of the boy's companions had knowledge of the terrible crime? Did Higgins and Goodspeed keep it to themselves? The jurors should consider the conduct on the stand of these boys, meeting daily, poisoned with bad literature, and was it likely they received no information regarding the crime? Did Higgins and Goodspeed keep the crime to themselves? Was it likely, considering their reading and conversation, that the other boys heard nothing of the murder? Was it not more probable that they knew all about it and kept the facts to themselves, denying all knowledge on the stand? The judge referred to the kind of literature they read, and said they seemed to consider crimes the deeds of heroes. As an illustration he referred to the conduct of young Goodspeed posing on a tomb in the old graveyard with a revolver in his hand as the outlaw Harry Tracy. His Honor strongly commented on the organization of this crowd of boys—perhaps, he said, better organized than the police, moresore than the police. This was a most deplorable state of affairs, but that is not a reason why Higgins should be found guilty. The prisoner is entitled to reasonable doubt, but not the doubt that arises from a desire to leave the case for another jury. His Honor reminded the jury that they are trying only one prisoner; he could not say what the crown will do.

Considering the question of motive, His Honor said there always is one. If the jury should find that both boys were guilty they should consider the circumstances of their visit to the park with Doherty. If murder had been agreed upon, could a better plan have been arranged than was carried out—Goodspeed leading and Doherty following? His Honor recited Goodspeed's statement, which he said contained no evidence of motive, but the jury might conjecture a motive from evidence that had been given. Suppose these boys had thought it desirable to put one of the crowd out of the way. Higgins and Goodspeed might have been selected for the deed. His Honor commented on the hardened conduct and poisoned mind shown by Goodspeed by entering a store and stealing candy on Sunday, two days after the murder. Nothing more horrible could be conceived as showing the condition of mind and morality of this boy. Returning to the question of motive, His Honor said the case against Goodspeed seemed stronger than against Higgins, for a quarrel between Goodspeed and Doherty was shown. If the jury believed Higgins' statement the crime would not be murder against Goodspeed but manslaughter. All these points were to be considered by the jury; they must consider which statement is best corroborated by surrounding circumstances. His Honor pointed out that Higgins had the advantage of telling his story after Goodspeed, and he warned the jury again that the evidence of both must be looked upon with suspicion. His Honor laid some stress on the difference of statement as to the position of the murdered boy when shot. His Honor said a plea had been made on behalf of the prisoner that the murder could not have taken place as Goodspeed said, because the wounds in the face were given according to medical evidence, after death. The jury must consider whether this does not detract from Goodspeed's statement. It was said by a witness that after Doherty was dead rocks were

BREEDING DAIRY COWS FOR PRODUCTION.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the production of milk is the greatest function of the dairy cow. The economical production of large quantities of milk, butter and cheese, determines the value of the cow, and the best efforts of breeders of dairy stock should always be directed towards this goal. If the dairy cow does not yield a profitable flow of milk, she ceases to have any reason for existence. Breeding qualities are of comparatively little importance, except in cases when a good cow loses the use of a portion of her udder, or in some way becomes undesirable as a milker.

It naturally follows that to secure the best practical results, little attention should be paid to what are commonly spoken of as fancy points. It is only in very exceptional cases that color of the hair, size and contour of the horns, graceful carriage and conical teats, can make any possible difference in the actual value of a cow, yet these and many other useless fancy points are held in high esteem by many breeders and judges. Beauty of form and breed type are always desirable, and breeders may well endeavor to combine these in as great a degree as possible with capacity at the pail, but the latter must ever remain the first consideration.

The first great essential point to be sought in the dairy cow is constitution, without which she cannot stand the strain of many years of heavy feeding and milking. The wide chest, good heart-girth, and general appearance of vigor are the chief indications of constitution. Other points largely indicative of production are:—A wide strong muzzle; a comparatively open back; bone or chine, indicating a tendency to make milk rather than fat; a capacious barrel, capable of making use of a large quantity of feed, and a roomy, well-shaped udder, with large mammary veins and milk wells. A well known Canadian breeder has tersely summarized these qualifications in the words:—a big mouth, a big belly and a big bag.

Experienced men are able to select good cows with a reasonable amount of certainty, but the most expert dairy judge is largely at sea when he attempts to select a good bull by appearances alone. When we come to the question of raising good cows, we find that the only road to success is in breeding from cows of known capacity and from bulls whose female ancestors have also been tested for merit at the pail and churn. It is almost imperative that a good bull should be backed by a considerable number of good producing dams and grand dams if satisfactory results are to be expected from his daughters.

About twenty years ago some of the prominent American breeders of Holstein Friesian cattle, impressed with the importance of the above question, started what is known as an "advanced registry" in which cows could be recorded only after making a milk or butter record greater than a certain high standard. This system of registry was greatly improved some eight years ago by the adoption of what is known as official testing. Under this plan all tests made are directly supervised by a capable dairymaid sent as a representative of an experiment station or agricultural college, who sees the cows milked.

Was Pale, Weak And Very Nervous

Mrs. Benj. Hatfield, 77 Hilliard St., St. John, N.B., writes:—For three years I was a sufferer from extreme nervousness and female weakness. I was pale and weak, had no appetite and would sometimes faint two or three times a day. I underwent a very painful operation and for seven weeks was under the doctor's care but he seemed unable to help me.

Despairing of recovery, I took the advice of a friend who told me that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food would build me up and make me strong and well again. I continued this treatment, using in all sixteen boxes, and believe that I am as strong and well as ever in my life. As a result I cannot say too much for Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. knowledge as influential manufacturers of woollen goods.

This is a very extraordinary statement, and notwithstanding the wide circulation of the article quoted, no refutation has been forthcoming from the manufacturers interested.

The importance of the frequent sales of rags of every description, stockings, mungos and the like despatched from all parts of the British Isles, and several Continental countries held at Dewsbury, Batley, Leeds and other centres in the manufacturing districts, prove the truth of the foregoing assertion.

It is further stated that to several large woollen manufacturers these sales are far more important than any of the great wool sales held in London, Bradford and elsewhere.

Melton, 42 in. wide, 6d. to 7d. per yard, extensively used for skirts and frocks, contains no wool being absolutely all cotton warp, the weft being entirely spun from rags and a little raw cotton blended together to give it strength and sold as woollen goods. It is stated that thousands of pieces are sold weekly in the shape of meltons, serges and the like, and that the art of finishing as practised in Yorkshire has reached such a state of perfection that it is now quite impossible to distinguish the ultimate buyer the defects of the fabric, particularly hiding the foundation material of the cloth.

In the Yorkshire Daily Observer of March 29th last, reference is made to a cheap class of coverlets brought out by some leading manufacturers, composed of a mixture of worsted warp, and a cheap carded weft termed Angola, a high sounding name for a blend of cotton with mungo. Having a satin or venetian weft, the cloth is thrown on the back of the cloth leaving the face with a worsted appearance. The cloth is well constructed and has a large demand.

An assize trial at Leeds on March 17th last, has settled the vexed question of the vague terms, all wool and woollen, and we now know that all wool means all wool and woollen means anything that is composed of shoddy, mungo and cotton.

NEURALGIA. THIS DISTRESSING COMPLAINT IS DUE TO IMPOVERISHED BLOOD.

When the blood becomes thin and watery, as a matter of course you become weak, vitality goes down, and there is but little power in the system to ward off disease and pain.

Neuralgia, hounds out a weak spot, and makes a home there, so secure that it is hard to drive it out. But by using the proper medicine it can be driven from the system, never to return. To obtain immediate relief, first apply to the painful parts, a good quantity of Peppermint Nervine, and then bind on a hot flannel cloth.

This local treatment will be found very efficacious, but must be followed by a course of Peppermint Nervine. Peppermint is a blood tonic, and a mild purifier, and quickly strengthens the system by its further attacks may never be feared. It makes the rich red blood, that gives strength and vigor to weak constitutions, and puts them in good shape to resist neuralgia attacks.

This combined treatment of Nervine and Peppermint in Neuralgia, Sciatica, and Rheumatism, is a most efficacious remedy, and cures all or almost all the cases. Because of the unique success of these remedies we have no hesitancy in endorsing their use to our readers. All druggists sell them. Sold by A. E. Shaw.

HEART OF A THUNDER-STORM.

Its Resemblance to a Battle Fought in the Clouds

An English aeronaut who made an ascent in his balloon was gradually borne by the wind into the very heart of a thunderstorm. In Pearson's Magazine he gives a vivid account of this unusual experience:—
"But ere we were reluctantly compelled to admit that we were caught in bad weather there was a wild shriek in the air all around, and in less than a minute's space we were swallowed up in a pitiless onslaught of hail which cut and bruised us, rattling with a furious patter on the silk above, and on the sides of our wicker car, bringing down, too, from the upper regions—from what height, who shall say—an ice-cold draught, for which we were ill-prepared."

"And then the thunder broke out. Up to this moment we had little or no preliminary warning in the usual growling of an approaching storm. Indeed, the thunder, though appalling enough, proved not the most striking feature of the grand phenomena we were now about to experience—a fact, in accordance with the experience of the mountaineers, already quoted. Moreover, the reverberations of the bomb which I now exploded, a hundred feet below down away with unwonted quickness. This was remarked by all our party, and deserves further consideration. Certainly to our senses the tolling of the thunder was not prolonged. But again, this may have been merely that its frequency and its nearness drowned after sound."

"For crash now followed crash with the briefest intermission. It was like guns opening at short range, fast and furious, as in some sham fight which one may watch at a distance. The flashes which came from all sides were invariably somewhat above us, as though from batteries, on commanding heights; and each was followed smartly with a burst resembling the solemn boom of heavy ordnance. They were single shots from masked embrasures."

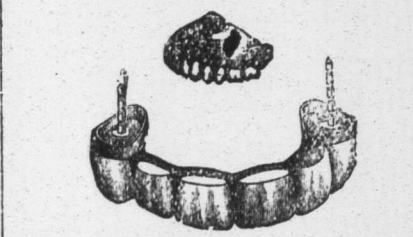

"On one flank would come a fork of light—for even in the home of the lightning the eye could not give many other sights—which for a brief interval inhaled painfully in the eye. Then the crash followed, and the black cloud closed up a shot, as it were, with smokeless powder answered promptly by light discharges from opposite heights. It was a wild, terrible war, to which the rovery of our situation lent a real terror. For it was borne in upon us that this was not a sham affair at all, but that all the sky around us was a real battle ground and we were in its focus."

HIGGINS AND GOODSPEED.

While it is right that every effort should be made in behalf of Frank Higgins by his counsel, and the prisoner should be given the benefit of everything that can be legally done in his favor, it is to be hoped there will be no unnecessary delay in proceeding with his case and that of Goodspeed. It is a cause of reproach to the courts of the United States that Justice is neither swift nor sure. In Canada it has generally been the case that punishment followed crime more speedily than across the border. It may be that in the cases of Higgins and Goodspeed a good purpose will be served by the delay, since there is much that is only half revealed in connection with the movements of the tanyard gang, and deeds of which they probably know more than has been stated to the public. The police should be able, as a result of the testimony that has been given, to gather further information of great value to themselves in preventing the spread of crime among the boys of the city. No one regards the unhappy youths who are now in jail with any spirit of vindictiveness, or has a desire to see them made in any sense the victims of injustice; but public safety demands that in so far as they have transgressed the law they should pay the penalty. The only fact to be considered, not as an extenuation, but as a ground for a possible degree of leniency, is their youth.—Star.

The Editor's Mail.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—

With your permission, I would like to make an earnest appeal to the Christian people of town to show their sympathy with the work of the Young Men's Christian Association. As far as I know, this Association is the only organization in the town, outside the churches, engaged in any positive Christian work. Surely, the object of the Y. M. C. A. has in view is one that should elicit the hearty co-operation of the members of the churches to a greater extent than is apparent at the present time. It is now nearly a year since the organization was launched at a public meeting held in the Town Hall. A considerable sum was subscribed to aid in its establishment. But, sir, it is a movement of this kind, something more than financial assistance (such as this was and is appreciated) is required, viz., the co-operation of the Christian public. The rooms are open every evening from 7 to 10 for young men at the small cost of $2 a year for membership. Surely a sufficient inducement for the young men to join the Association.

It was felt by the organizers that the young men, during the evenings and after their day's toil is ended, had no place to go where they might either amuse themselves or improve their minds. They either had to remain at home or congregate at the street corners. So far, the efforts of the Committee have not met with that appreciation from the young men for whose benefit it was started, that they had a right to expect. Whether it arises from a lack of desire for mental and moral improvement or not, it is not for me to say. The question may fairly be asked:—Are we deteriorating intellectually? Then, on Sunday afternoons, there is a meeting held which in no case has been nearly so largely attended as one would wish. The men who are the leaders in our churches have, for the most part, so far ignored these gatherings, giving the impression that they are either unsympathetic with the work of the Association, or that they take little or no interest in the social, moral and spiritual well-being of the young men. This should not be.

Unless the young men show more appreciation of the efforts of the Association in their behalf, and the Christian public give more encouragement to the work it is to be feared that this (what might be, and ought to be) useful institution will eventually succumb to the apathy of the people who should be, of all others, its active supporters and sympathizers.

Yours Truly,
A MEMBER.

CANADA TO THE NIGHT WIND.

Reveries low, that softly steal across the sea,
As from the east the sad night-shadow creeps;
To that wide void where my dead hero sleeps,
O carry thou this gift to him from me!
Go stealthily, lest thou disturb his rest;
Breathe low thy song of utterance and grief.
Take thou my gift, his loved maple leaf,
And leave it there upon my hero's breast.

MUSKOKA.

Mr. James Bain, of Toronto Public Library, on Who Discovered It.

Mr. James Bain, D.C.L., writes:—The discussion on this subject, which has been started by "Knoxonian" in The Westminster, revives early recollections. The lakes of the Muskoka district were a favorable hunting ground from the earliest times for the Indians, and for the white trapper from the middle of the eighteenth century until the influx of civilization destroyed the game within our own time. No abundant were Muskoka furs that Mr. Quetton St. George regularly visited Washago from 1800-1801 to purchase from the trappers. Mr. Bailey was agent for the Hudson's Bay Company for many years previous to 1800, at what is now Bracebridge, and the ruins of a trading post were visible on the banks of the Joseph River some 40 years ago. A rough outline of the lake appears in Mitchell's map of North America, published in 1790, but the division between Lakes Muskoka and Roussau were not shown in any map till the publication of the S.P. V.K. atlas in 1835. In this map the whole route from the Ottawa to Pentagouishene is laid down from the descriptions of Alexander Sherbrooke, who crossed in either 1829 or 1830 by the Potowawa and Muskoka Rivers, describing in his paper the general appearance of the lakes and rivers and approximately giving distances. The first Government survey was made by I. Houghton Dennis, C.E., in 1859, who discovered Lake Joseph and named it after his son. The Muskoka road was one of the earliest cut through the dense bush to open up the free grant lands and was finished as far as Bracebridge in 1850-59. In July 1860, Mr. John Campbell, now Professor Campbell, and the writer walked over this road and the trees on the shore of the lake. Not a tree was cut along the shores, and the park from what is now Gravenhurst on the bay was one of Nature's own providing. Two Indian bark wigwams stood on the beach where now the railway station and lumber pile hold sway. The following year we returned with a party of five, bringing with us a cart which was carried across the Muskoka road by a yoke of oxen, who occupied nearly fourteen hours on the journey of thirteen miles. The party reached on this occasion the upper part of Lake Joseph and found so much to interest them that the trip became an annual one, and the writer purchased on behalf of some of the members 300 acres of islands among which is the one now known as Yoho. It is pleasant to see testimony borne to the energy and perseverance with which Mr. A. P. Cockburn devoted himself to opening up the lakes to the general visitor, though it interfered sadly with the unrestricted freedom which the few who visited Muskoka had heretofore enjoyed. Mr. Cockburn's first visit was in 1865, and his first steamer was launched in 1866.

A Question of Color.

Benjamin Constant when painting the portrait of Queen Victoria made the grand ribbon of the Garter, which was part of his illustrious sitter's costume, a certain tone of blue. The Queen criticized this part of the picture, but Constant stuck to his color. One day he received from Windsor a little parcel containing the order of the Garter. The Queen, fully convinced that she was right, had sent him the ribbon to prove his color sense was wrong. She did not confer the Garter upon him, however.

The Trappists.

Many letters come to the monastery announcing the death of relatives of the monks; these are seen by the abbot only, and at chapter he may simply announce: "The mother of one of our number is dead; let us pray for her soul."

Never to his dying day does the hermit Trappist learn that he was praying for his own mother.

8 Cents

Eight cents a pound is what a young woman paid for twelve pounds of flesh.

She was thin and weak and paid one dollar for a bottle of Scott's Emulsion, and by taking regular doses had gained twelve pounds in weight before the bottle was finished.

Eight cents a pound is cheap for such valuable material. Some pay more, some less, some get nothing for their money. You get your money's worth when you buy Scott's Emulsion.

We will send you a little free.

A Cough

"I have made a most thorough trial of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and am prepared to say that for all diseases of the lungs it never disappoints."
J. Early Finley, Ironton, O.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral won't cure rheumatism; we never said it would. It won't cure dyspepsia; we never claimed it. But it will cure coughs and colds of all kinds. We first said this sixty years ago; we've been saying it ever since.

There is no other remedy for an ordinary cold, but for bronchitis, hoarseness, and all the most common ailments of the throat and lungs, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the best.

WHAT SIR WILFRID SAID.

Premier Delivers Eulogy of His Country in London, England.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was received with prolonged cheers, at the coronation banquet held at the Guildhall, London, on July 11, 1902, in honor of the self-governing colonies. It was, he said, his privilege five years ago to represent his country, Canada, at the celebration held in this ancient city in commemoration of the jubilee year of a reign forever made famous by the personality of the Sovereign, by the remarkable advance which took place under it of all the arts and sciences which contributed to the happiness of mankind, but whose characteristic for them would be the still more remarkable development of the British Empire as it existed to-day. (Cheers.) The British Empire, as all other creations of human effort, had been the cause of many conflicting sentiments. It had inspired, and perhaps more than ever would inspire, in the breasts of millions of men a deep sense of enthusiastic attachment. (Cheers.) British subjects could call the word "Empire" the most beautiful word in the language, and almost phenomenal degree of prosperity, and among all those peoples, to whatever race they belonged, there was a universal sense of satisfaction and pride in British institutions. (Cheers.) Such, at all events, was the case in the self-governing colonies. Canadians present could bear testimony to the truth of his assertion that Canada to-day was a free, prosperous and happy country. (Cheers.) It was not always so, but the granting of representative institutions had worked that miracle. Prosperity and contentment had followed in the path opened by freedom. What was true for Canada was equally true for New Zealand and for Australia—indeed, there was only one shadow to that picture—South Africa. Until a few weeks ago, South Africa was scourged by war, which would not have brought out, if free civil rights under the law of full citizenship to all had been given there, any discrimination. He was convinced, however, that what had taken place elsewhere, would now be seen in South Africa under British rule. It was in the genius of British history to make political changes simply for the gratification of a theory, or to round off sharp angles, but it was in the genius of British history to proceed slowly and cautiously, and never to change the condition of things, unless there was a grievance, and then to remove the grievance and to go on further. Historic experience taught with almost unvarying certainty that political changes brought about in the hope of carrying an object not immediately prompted by practical necessity generally failed. He afterwards referred to the steadfast allegiance of Canada to this country. There was no finality in human affairs. He did not say that the time might not come when the British Empire would be a great spectacle no doubt, but not greater than the spectacle presented at this moment of a galaxy of free nations bound together by a sole allegiance to the same Sovereign. (Cheers.)

THE BOY FROM TOWN.

Fact didn't buy him here from town
To stay a week or so,
Because his name is all run down
And needs a rest, you know.
His name is Cecil, and he's eight,
And he's a real little fellow.
His name she calls him "Fai", I'd hate
To have a name like that.
He wears a collar and a tie
And can't hang by his toes;
I guess that I would nearly die
If I had on his clothes.
He can't ride horseback, and today
When we did on the errand,
The act of roosters helped to lay
The egg I took for meat.
When our old gander kissed he run
As though he thought he'd bite,
And he ain't ever shot a gun
Or had a horse made like.
He never killed a cow and he Can't even shoot an arrow.
I'd hate to think that he was me,
I'm glad that I ain't him.
He thinks it's lots of fun to pump
And see the water spurt,
But won't climb in the barn, and jump,
For fear of getting hurt.
His clothes are off'n nice and fine,
His hair's all over curls,
His hands ain't half as big as mine,
He ought to play with girls.
A little while ago when we
Were foolin' in the shed
He suddenly got mad at me,
Because I bumped his head.
There's lots of things that he can't do,
He thinks that sleep's like
And he's afraid of ganders, too;
But he can fight all right.

MILLERTON AND DIANTOWN.

James Robinson, M. P., is erecting a large tenement house on the lot above Mr. John Graham's. The work on the building is being rapidly pushed along and it will be ready for occupancy before the snow flies.

Mr. Frank Jardine of Pinedale Farm, Jarline, P. O., has the largest and best garden seen by your correspondent for some years. His assortment of Royal Giant sugar beets, as well as his cauliflower, carrots and other root crops would be hard to beat at any of our fall fairs. A prominent Agriculturist who visited the farm last week said it surpassed any farm he had seen in Canada for garden produce.

Mr. Peter J. Forsythe, who has secured the contract for building the Renou Bridge, is having the work carried on in an energetic manner.

The roads in this locality are in excellent condition at present, and many of our town friends are taking advantage of this fact and paying us a visit.

Messrs. G. A. Wheatley of Toronto and H. C. Palmer were the commercial men to visit Millerton during the week.

The Blackville Derby Agricultural Society No. 8, are to hold their Annual Fair in the Hall on Tuesday next. It promises to be a success.

The largest gasoline yacht in the lower provinces is owned by Mr. John W. Miller of Millerton. This yacht which is called the John W. was built by Adam Moore, the Fredericton boat maker, and is "dandy." Mr. Miller has also a smaller boat which is run by gasoline. It was also built by Mr. Moore and is a nice craft. In addition to his boats, Mr. Miller is quite an Automobile fancier and has just returned from an automobile trip over to Fredericton down through Sunbury and Kent county.

RENOUS RIVER.

Several sportsmen have returned from the head of the River with trophies already.

Wages are better here this season than have been ever known before and several of our young men have departed for the woods.

Everywhere we hear the thrashing mills at work and grain is reported a good yield and of excellent quality.

A new bridge is being erected over the Renous at the sight where once stood the Red River. Mr. Peter Forsythe having been awarded the contract.

Mr. Arthur Hayes and Miss Teresa Hayes left here for Maine last week.

Mr. Henry Underhill of Montana U. S. A., is blasting in Mr. Jeremiah Mahoney's mine. The mineral has proved to be of excellent quality and the idea is to see if there is a large quantity.

JANEVILLE.

Janeville, Sept. 18.—The people of Janeville spent a very enjoyable time at the picnic on Monday night, Sept. 15th in the school house. It was largely attended by the people from the surrounding country. The school house was crowded, over two hundred being present. The proceeds amounted to over $50 which will be spent in the school. The highest bid was $3.75. Our teacher Miss Bella Eddy deserves great credit for the concert.

A concert of sacred songs was held in the Presbyterian Church on Thursday night Sept., 11th. The singers were from New Brandon. The night was enjoyed by the large crowd that attended. The proceeds are to help to build the Manse in New Brandon.

We are having fine weather now for the harvest and the grain will soon be all cut. Miss Clara Crowley of Pukashaw is spending a few weeks with friends in Janeville.

Mrs. H. A. Cais and Mr. Walter Cais spent a few days of last week in Beresford. Mr. and Mrs. Brennan of Teteogouche spent a week with Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell of this place.

Janeville, Sept., 25th.—We are having a very heavy gale and cold weather.

WHY DON'T YOU TRY OUR

BATHURST.

The weather during the past week has been disagreeable, and as we write a nasty easterly storm, accompanied with cold rain is in progress. This is very bad for farmers who have not yet harvested all their grain and we learn that there is considerable yet standing in Gloucester County. About the middle of last week we had quite a heavy frost, sufficient to freeze water to the thickness of glass and it is noticeable that the more tender shrubs plants and flowers are drooping owing to this.

The lumbermen all along the shore are sending in their teams and supplies and generally getting ready for their long winter work. It is satisfactory to note that prices of lumber in the English markets are keeping up and advices from brokers and dealers on the other side are most encouraging for spring shipments in the spruce and pine trade. We hear of good specifications being at present as high as eight pounds, which with freight as they are and have been for some time should yield a handsome profit to shippers.

In sympathy, probably, with the prices obtainable for long lumber in England, shingles and smaller stuff for the United States markets also keep well up, the prices of the former being better than they have been for many years. The only class of lumber which seems to be a drag in the market of the other side at present is birch. The demand from the Tin-plate district and other localities where this wood is principally used seems very small, and strange to say, birch is only worth about a pound less than spruce. This state of things may possibly improve before spring, but it is very doubtful.

The wet and disagreeable weather prevailing at present does not seem to affect the hunters, parties of strangers coming and going continually and those who have returned from the hunting grounds being most enthusiastic as regards the opportunities for killing moose, caribou and bear. A party of Philadelphia gentlemen who came down from the head of the river on Friday brought three moose heads, one a fine one measuring nearly fifty inches in the spread of the horns.

An English gentleman Mr. Fairbrother of Devonshire who has been hunting in this vicinity and who has just left for England with a fine head, is so pleased with the country that he has decided to bring out his family next year and settle in New Brunswick. Mr. Fairbrother informs the writer that there are thousands of men like himself in England, with

OBITUARY.

The death of David C. Anderson, which took place at Douglastown on Friday, the 28th, removes from that village one of the old block-makers, one who before the Iron Ship displaced the wooden ones an important factor on the river. After this, he became a yeoman and adhered to that calling up to the time of his death.

He was always regarded as an honest man and his death is deservedly regretted.

ONE LOVE TOO MANY.

To Bel, I imagine, there would have been little difference, where edibles were concerned, between barbed meat and the nectar and ambrosia of the gods. Upon this occasion she seemed payer, more capricious, and more beautiful than usual. She sent poor Harris first into the seventh heaven of delight by her gracious acceptance of his hand for the dance, and then suddenly tiring of him, she turned and walked off from him and set down alone upon a log at a little distance from the arbor.

This may or may not have been a little manoeuvre of hers to provide herself with a more agreeable companion. If so, it was speedily successful, for, ere many moments young Marshall sauntered up and standing in front of her, said lightly:

"Do you hate everybody to-day, Bel?"

"No," she replied, looking up at him without embarrassment of any kind, "not everybody. Not you, for instance."

"And you can hear to look upon my face again?" he asked, seating himself on the log by her side.

"Yes," she answered, smiling, "as long as you behave yourself."

"But seriously, Bel," he said, gravely, "what was the cause of that little tantrum of yours the other day? What have I done to offend?"

"Oh, nothing in particular! It was really very unreasonable in me to be offended because you are simply yourself. I ask pardon for it."

"I should think it was rather unreasonable," he said, with much seriousness, "since that is a fault I am not able to correct even with your commands upon me. However with so great an incentive I might make some alterations, perhaps. Upon what model shall I commence to rebuild myself? How, for instance, do you like Harris?" with a slight touch of scorn, not so much for the man as that he should presume to approach with him and contend for the same goal.

"You might borrow some very commendable traits from Len Harris," she said, defiantly. "He is one who goes straight about his business, and whatever he does, good or bad, is always in earnest. He is one also, sir, who never trifles with the hearts of women."

"Which I am not, I suppose," he said, a little nettled at her tone.

"Which you are not, I suppose," she repeated, composedly.

"Where did you get your favorable opinion of me?" he asked, with some asperity. "Perhaps it was a relation of my merits with which your friend Harris was entertaining you the other day when I so inopportunistly interrupted you."

HIGGINS UNDER TRIAL

thrown on his head. Did these produce the wounds spoken of? Much, said His Honor, has been said regarding a miscarriage of justice if it should be found that the prisoner is not guilty. The jury must not consider that at all. The jury need pay no attention to public opinion. They must consider only the merits of the case, the carrying out of the law, the doing of justice. If the jury conclude that both boys are guilty the prisoner cannot escape. If they decide Goodspeed was guilty of murder they could find Higgins guilty of manslaughter. As Judge, however, he could find no evidence to show Higgins guilty of manslaughter. Goodspeed's case is different because there was a quarrel over the revolver. Perhaps the jury could find evidence that Higgins' crime was manslaughter, but he could find none. The jury, he said, if they are convinced, need not go over the circumstances, they can take a ballot when they retire to their room. His Honor now contrasted the evidence of Higgins and Goodspeed. It Higgins stated the truth, was his evidence corroborated? If Goodspeed had shot Doherty in a violent fit of temper, would the jury expect Higgins, an innocent boy, to help bury the body without threats, to strew paper so that the body could be found, to cover the body with wood, etc. It did not appear Goodspeed threatened him. Would it not be more natural to make threats against Higgins instead of discussing the shooting in the cool manner described by Higgins?

CUSTOM TAILORING

it not more natural, as Goodspeed described, to have threats made by Higgins to compel him to assist in burying the body? Or is the secret of it all that both are concerned in the crime—a crime to end with the burning of the body of the murdered boy. It is for the jury to consider if Higgins did not tell the truth about going back to the place to burn the body. What did they go back for? Each accuses the other. If one stayed in the lane and left the other to go to the body, what was it for? Was it that one should keep watch to prevent detection? His Honor said he brought these facts to their minds for their consideration. Law, he said, is not for the punishment of criminals, but for the protection of society. The penalties imposed are to deter others from committing crime. Jurors must not consider the prisoner at all; they must consider the evidence only. If any reasonable doubt exists—not for the purpose of shirking responsibility—the prisoner is entitled to it. If they consider the prisoner guilty regardless of the consequences.

The judge conclude at ten minutes past 12, and after ordering that lunch be served the jurors, if they so desired adjourned the court until 2.30 o'clock. If wanted in the meantime he would be at his hotel.

Civil business will be taken up this afternoon if there is any.

Throughout the judge's charge Higgins paid strict attention to what was said but did not seem to be moved in any way. When he left the court room, after the jury had retired to decide on his fate, he was as calm and apparently as undisturbed as any of the spectators.

St. JOHN, Sept. 24.—Frank Higgins was found guilty of the murder of William Doherty.

The jury recommended mercy, but, under the law, the prisoner must be sentenced to death.

Goodspeed's trial, as an accessory after the fact, will be called this morning.

Higgins betrayed slight emotion as he listened to the verdict, but within half an hour was whistling "I'd Leave my Happy Home For You" in his cell.

Below is the story in detail.

Generally speaking the verdict was something of a surprise, although after Mr. Justice Landy's keen analysis of the evidence, many were certain the jury would say "Guilty."

That the verdict was justified by the facts there is no doubt in the mind of the general public. The jury-men wasted little time in discussion. Argument among themselves was unnecessary.

At midnight Higgins was peacefully sleeping. Such was found to be the case when interrogation was made at the jail.

Sentence of death will probably not be imposed until tomorrow morning for His Honor, Judge Landy, when asked regarding the matter, stated he wished to confer with the crown officers first in reference to certain legal points, and that he did not anticipate imposing sentence today at all events.

With a view of ascertaining the attitude of the different jurymen during their final deliberation several members were approached but each firmly refused to make any statement whatever.

GOODSPEED'S TURN NEXT.

The attorney general and Mr. McKeown announced that Goodspeed's trial as an accessory would be called this morning.

THE STORY OF MORNING TIREDNESS

It is told by impure blood, poor digestion sluggish liver and tired nerves. It is a warning of every serious trouble ahead, and should prompt sensible people to take a bracing tonic like Ferrozone, an energetic invigorant and restorer. Ferrozone will give you a sharp appetite, promote good digestion and sound sleep; it will feed and energize the enfeebled organs, strengthen the nerve and vital forces and regulate the heart. Ferrozone changes that tired feeling into vigor, strength and ambition, and does it quickly. Remember the name, and insist on having only Ferrozone; it's the best tonic made. Price 50c. per box, 6 boxes for $2.50. at Druggists, or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont. Sold by A. E. Shaw.

The Navy—Quite right, mum. It's a bad habit for ladies of your time of life.

DESPAIRED OF BEING CURED

Mrs. W. E. Jeffries 34 Hicks Ave., Kingston, Ont., states: I suffered agony with itching piles. In fact, I don't believe that any person who has had piles can realize what I endured. The first application of Dr. Chase's Ointment brought relief and it has since entirely cured me. I hope that this testimonial will be the means of bringing comfort to other sufferers by making known the great power of this ointment.

Posei—Which nation do you think loves America the most?

Bighead—The one that needs her the most.

You say his money fell to him? No; he fell to it—tumbled through a coal hole and sued the city.

HAD NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

Mrs. S. W. West, Dayton, Ont., states: "I got terribly run down, and finally became a victim of Nervous prostration. I had no appetite, seemed to lose interest and ambition and could scarcely drag myself about. Hearing of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I used three boxes with great benefit, gaining eleven pounds. It made me strong and well and I had such an appetite that I wanted to be eating half the time."

MISS JONE'S VOICE GREATLY IMPROVED.

A startling improvement at is noticeable in Miss Jones's singing. Her voice is strong and sounds clear and sweeter than before using Catarrhoxone, which is a wonderful aid to singers, speakers and ministers. CATARRHOXONE INHALER insures absolute freedom from Cough, Croup and Catarrh, clears the nose and throat, and prevents hoarseness and huskiness. Catarrhoxone makes the voice brilliant and full, and is uncommonly well recommended by Prima Donnas, members of P. Chautauque, Lawyers, Doctors and thousands that use it daily. Better try Catarrhoxone. Price $1.00; trial size 25c. Dispensed by N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

HAMILTON'S PILLS FOR THE LIVER.

Do you know that flour should be kept in a cool dry place? If possible, there should be some kind of a close receptacle for it, and too large a quantity sometimes spoils by being kept too long. It should also be remembered that mites which often get into flour are more destructive than mice.

HAMILTON'S PILLS CURE CONSTIPATION.

It is not generally known that the body of Fred Archer, the famous English jockey, is buried within 200 yards of the winning post for the Cambridgeshire.

It is said among railway men that the series of changes which witnessed the departure of Mr. Russell have not yet ended; and that among the reforms at present contemplated is the abolition of the office of Sup't. of Car and Telegraph service.

A number of young people drove to Douglastown last Friday night to attend a farewell party in honor of Mr. Wilnot Coulter who left yesterday for Boston. After tripping the light fantastic till the "wee sma" hours the party returned to Newcastle tired and happy.

The attention of our readers is drawn to the announcement on another page of this paper, which affords a splendid opportunity to secure that great family paper, the Family Herald and Weekly Star, of Montreal, absolutely free of charge for the balance of 1902. The Family Herald and Weekly Star is acknowledged to be a class entirely by itself as a family paper, and the desire to introduce it into new homes has enabled us to make this arrangement with the publishers of that great paper. We learn that the Family Herald publishers will shortly announce their new premiums for this season, and the public will get a pleasant surprise. Read the announcement in this paper.

While loading a steamer at Hickson's wharf on Friday last, Mr. Frank Ryan met with an accident which will confine him to the house for some time. In some manner the scales slipped from the sling striking Mr. Ryan and cutting an ugly gash in his forehead. The unfortunate young man also had his right foot badly crushed. Mr. Ryan was taken to his home and Dr. Desmond who was called rendered the necessary surgical aid.

Mrs. Burger of St. Louis, Lecturer and organizer of the World's W. C. T. U. spent Sabbath in Newcastle. She spoke in the Baptist Church at 4 o'clock. Rev. Mr. Palmer presiding. Her address was based on John 4-28, dealing on opportunity, improved or lost. For 20 minutes she held the undivided attention of the audience which was frequently moved to tears by her pathetic appeals. Her illustrations were very apt and among many names mentioned none drew forth a warmer response than her beautiful reference to Lady Somerset.

The service at half past eight was in the Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. Palmer presiding. Her subject "The Knight of the 20th Century". She presented a high ideal, claimed that the men of to-day should be satisfied with nothing less, showing clearly by argument and illustration the possibility of meeting the requirement. Purity of heart and life glowed through the beautiful address. Dealing with a delicate subject she did it in such a way as not to offend the most sensitive and yet to begot in the hearts of all a determination to lead a better life. If her words could have reached all the men of the town they would surely have resulted in creating and strengthening a chivalry which would be a great boon to society. In her appeal to her sisters she said they could greatly aid in bringing it about by being careful of their conduct and conversation and of the young men with whom they associated. Her address was a timely one and the W. C. T. U., of Newcastle deserve thanks for arranging for her visit, and no doubt have received an inspiring and encouraging result. At the close of the service quite a number took the opportunity to call on the lecturer.

The Blackville and Derby Agricultural Society Exhibition opened yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, in the Temperance Hall, Millerton. The attendance was fair. The exhibits did not come up to the average but some fine specimens of farm, garden and dairy produce were shown. The garden, field and dairy products were exhibited down stairs in the hall and made a very creditable showing. The fancy and domestic work displayed upstairs was tastefully arranged and much admired by those present. The horses and cattle, etc., were exhibited in the field adjoining the hall. There was not much of a variety of live stock but what was exhibited was worthy of mention.

SEPTEMBER WEDDINGS.

A very interesting event took place in the Baptist Church, Newcastle at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, Sept. 24th, when Miss Hannah Mitchell, eldest daughter of Mr. Geo. Mitchell was united by the holy bond of matrimony to Alex. McKay of this place. Rev. A. F. Brown officiating. The bride who was given away by her father, was becomingly attired in a white organdie trimmed with white satin ribbon, and bridal veil and carried a bouquet of white roses. The bridesmaid looked very pretty in white muslin. As the bridal party entered the church Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by the organist, Miss Maud Lonsbury.

Miss Alice Mitchell, sister of the bride, acted as bride's maid, while Mr. Stanley W. Miller supported the groom. After luncheon at the residence of the bride's parents, the happy couple left for a trip through the Annapolis valley. The bride was the recipient of many tokens of esteem from friends.

A Generous Friend.

On last Sunday at Douglastown, Father Dixon when making his usual announcement, informed the congregation that the Hon. S. Adams prior to his departure for New York donated a thousand dollars towards the purchase of a bell, Stations of the cross and erection of a fence around the church building.

LIGHT ON OULTON MURDER.

CONVICT HOLM TELLS

How It May Have Been Done. In Such a way as to lead to the Belief that some of the "Tanyard Gang" were the Murderers.

St. John, Sept. 29.—The Daily Telegraph this morning prints a most interesting interview with Holm, who is serving a term in Dorchester for robbery and who was not allowed to testify in the Higgins case. Holm says Miser Oulton was murdered and tells practically how said work was done, though no names are mentioned. Some of Holm's statements are withheld, to be submitted to the proper authorities. Those who believed Oulton was murdered for his money will find food for thought in the concluding remarks of Holm.

Doherty wasn't at Oulton's when "Paddy" (Detective Killen), arrived the night the old fellow was murdered. Said the reporter, But some people do not believe Oulton was murdered. Holm, the reporter went on to say that Chief of Police Clarke did not believe Oulton was murdered.

Holm turned his eyes upward and with a quizzical nod and a wink said, No, I know that, of course. There are a lot of things the Chief doesn't believe but that doesn't make them any the less true.

I suppose now, there were two or three people glad to learn the Chief didn't believe that Oulton was murdered?

You can just depend on that. Continuing Holm said he saw Detective Ring on the way over to Oulton's after the first alarm had rung and continued, I guess Doherty had ideas about Oulton and I guess Oulton was murdered all right.

Holm was asked, Have you any suspicions as to the guilty parties? Have I suspicions? Well, no, not exactly suspicious but there are other words equally as strong. Now who do you think would be likely to know the way of opening the door by the ring when the bar wasn't in place?

It's barely possible—possible—I don't know of course, with a light laugh and succession of winks—but it is just possible—note that I say just possible—that some one was hiding in the house when Oulton went in.

Holm was encouraged to continue his remarks and said, Say, you're alright. Now we'll just suppose some one was laying for him inside and when the old fellow came in they demanded his money. My idea would be that being a miser and a great lover of his money he'd show fight. Don't you think so?

Holm was asked if he and Doherty were in the north end the night of the Oulton murder. Well, yes, Doherty and I might have taken a walk out that way that night but mark you we didn't see each other. See? Do you think there was more than one person in the inside?

No, but I would suppose that some one watched outside. When a fellow goes in for that sort of thing the worst thing he could do to let too many in on the game.

Holm then gave it as his opinion that the guilty parties would have been foolish to leave the country, as in this manner they'd surely give themselves away.

What's your opinion of the fire? Was it accidentally or otherwise? Oh, otherwise I guess. It was likely started to obliterate all trace of the crime, for his hand to find bruises on a charred body.

After the murder, what then? I should say the parties would take a look around. They probably had other plans laid to be seen somewhere else most of the evening. It's a good thing to have an alibi always on hand. That's the way the gang always worked things at any rate.

It is noteworthy that Holm speaks of fire as useful in destroying signs of foul play, and that Higgins when he testified in his own defence said that a suggestion was made about burning Doherty's body, thereby introducing a matter which hadn't been mentioned before.

As a matter of fact, Holm, have you ever heard it said that it would be easy to kill this—well the other miser? No, not exactly that, but I have heard it suggested that it would be easy to get in his house and get the money out from under his pillow. He was watched several times putting it there, you know. I never heard it suggested to kill him but I've heard chloroform talked about.

In addition Holm gave some interesting information concerning the manner in which burglaries in which he was concerned were committed. "Now our gang always selected Thursday or Friday night for such things. Why? Say now you're not up in the game, are you? Because there's always more money in the tills Thursday and Friday nights. Saturday night's no good but if you do it Thursday or Friday you are pretty sure to get the stuff left on Monday and Tuesday.

BOER MANIFESTO.

Alienates British Sympathy.

LONDON, Sept., 24.—The tone and contents of the manifesto of the Boer generals which was issued in the form of an appeal to the civilized world for contributions to assist destitute Boers and help in the education of Boer children, excite the utmost resentment of the whole British press, and the document tends to alienate the sympathy which has hitherto been felt for the Boer people in many quarters.

It is regarded as a manifesto of hostility to Great Britain, and the work not of General Botha, De Wet and Delany, but of Dr. Leyds, the European representative of the Boers, and Mr. Reitz, former secretary of the Transvaal, and a blunder which the Boers will live to regret.

The statement contained in the manifesto that thirty thousand houses have been burned is declared to be a gross exaggeration, and complaint is made that while the document presents the case against Britain in the worst possible light, it dishonestly ignores the fact that the British government has promised to advance loans free of interest for two years to enable the Boers to re-settle on their farms.

It is pointed out that even if the Boer estimate of thirty thousand farms destroyed is correct, the $15,000,000 granted under the peace terms will give each family $500.

The idea that the appeal is likely to result in getting anything like $15,000,000 is ridiculed and preposterous.

The Standard contends that a friendly appeal to the generosity of the British people would have been more productive than such angry appeal to foreigners.

RIOT AT HALIFAX.

Soldiers in Conflict With The Police.

HALIFAX, N. S. Sept. 26.—For the first time in many years troops were called out in Halifax to-night to quell a disturbance on the streets. A gang of drunken Royal Canadians, celebrating their release from the stern discipline of military life, caused the trouble. They came in contact with the police near the City Hall, and as a result two of the soldiers were lodged in the police station. Their comrades in an ugly mood, gathered in front of the City Hall and threatened to storm the station, overpower the police officers and release the imprisoned soldiers. In the meantime a crowd of a thousand people had gathered, and the scene was a very lively one. The police were unable to cope with the situation. The danger of a rush on the police station and a possible conflict between the soldiers and civilians on the street became imminent, and the police authorities appealed to the Imperial authorities for assistance. Fifty men of the Royal Engineers were hurriedly marched to the scene, and the usual picket from the Royal Artillery and Royal Canadian was doubled and patrolled the streets until after midnight. The troublesome Canadians, who composed the "toughs" of the regiment, discreetly dispersed on the appearance of the Royal Artillery, and there was no further trouble. The episode was deeply regretted by the men of the R. C. E. L. who are sorry to have their reputation injured by the action of the few hoodlums of the regiment.

LATE LITERARY NEWS.

Perhaps the most interesting character in the story of the American Revolution is Alexander Hamilton. A study of the man, his characteristics and guiding motives, was prepared by John Fiske before his death, and appears as the closing article in the October CONSERVATIVE. No paper could illustrate more clearly the difficulties through which the American Union had to pass on its way to the excellence already attained and the perfection which it must ultimately reach.

Holm detailed particulars of the Brownville trip. According to his story Higgins was a prize hunter in the affair and not only carried a club but furnished the lead they were filled with. He told Holm he got the lead at a plumber's on King Square. In referring to a certain burglary Holm made remark that if he were sure a certain man was dead he'd give the whole thing away. Holm was asked if it was true that one of the boys in the crowd usually followed detective Killen's steps from the time he left the Central Police station until he went off duty.

Not always, he replied, but we did when there was anything doing. It was always safer to know where "Paddy" was when there was a job on. The boys were a little bit scared of him.

The prisoner told with the utmost coolness about the time disorganization came to the gang there was a plan to rob the opera house. Holm used excellent language and is a right talker. He says he was never a reader of dime novels but, preferred, as he expressed it, more solid reading.

Go to your man, said he, and station and ask for a Keweenaw. Late Tuesday night, in a bar room, and when he came out a crowd of soldiers and police were waiting for him. He was asked if he would be glad to trade him off for a second-hand barrel saw, or a mostly rusty and thin one. But he caught him all the same, and you wouldn't have guessed him as much of a catcher.

Then a gentleman from Syracuse got into a boat the other morning on his first fishing expedition. He was ready to go to bed at 11 o'clock and was the very thing, and found new. He was a dandy, and said he didn't see any reason why he couldn't new. He caught a crab on the second stroke, and when he came up and under the boat he went in to know if a water spout had sprung there, or what it was anyhow. It is all right, dear boy. If catching is what you are after, go to your man, said he, and station and ask for a Keweenaw. BIG GAME.

A Large Number of Part After Game.

A SUCCESSFUL SEASON.

Many Returning to town With Beautiful Specimens.

The Miramichi is more than sustaining its reputation as a big game district and the Advocate feels a pardonable degree of pride in knowing that some of the most successful of visitors obtained their knowledge of our district through our Souvenir Edition. Chief game warden Robinson, has kindly furnished us with the following list of parties who are at present in the woods and those who have returned since our last issue.

Messrs. Oswald Simpson, H. J. Cockendall and Fred Cockendall of New York are at the head of the Northwest Miramichi, guides, Edw. Menzies, John Keating and Jas. Brander, cook, Archie Stewart.

Messrs. J. K. Johnson and Blair Wallace of Harrisburg, Pa., are on the lower north branch of Little Southwest. Edmund and Robt. White are guides and Allen Matchetti, cook.

Mr. E. W. Gurnsey, N. Y., who has been in the Bay du Vin district, returned with a nice moose head, 17 points and a spread of 20 inches. His guide was Donald Fraser and Pat. O'Donnell, cook.

Messrs. F. R. McDonald, Cambridge, Mass., and Jos. H. Williams, Boston, have been in the Dugaron district with Jas. S. Manderville, sr., and J. Ronald McDonald as guides and Robt. Asles, cook.

They brought out a head each with them, one spanning 33 inches and the other 49 in. R. A. Thompson and G. E. Brigham, North Adams, Mass., with Geo. and Wm. McKay as guides and Jos. Cain, cook, have returned from the Tomogonops district with one nice moose head each.

Geo. F. Dominick Jr., Wall St. N. Y., with Carl Bering guide, Frank Lemaden, packman, and Sam Duncan, cook, has returned from Peabody lake. Mr. Dominick got one nice head with a span of about fifty inches and reports game very plentiful.

Richard D. Ware of Boston who has been hunting on the North Tenous brought in a very nice head. His guide was David Manderville, cook, John Cochran.

Messrs. W. H. Goodwin and N. C. Nash, Boston have returned from the Bald Mountain with Sydney Thomas and Dave Fringle as guides. They report game as very plentiful having seen about forty moose and a great many caribou and are well pleased with their trip having obtained one moose, one caribou, and one bear each.

MARRIED.

BROOKLYN, Mass. Sept. 28. (Special to the Advocate).—H. B. Anslow, editor of Union Advocate, Newcastle, N. B., and Miss Mary A. Corbett of this city, formerly of Newcastle, were united in marriage at eight o'clock this evening. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. D. McKinnon.

Loss of Good Catches.

A gentleman in Pittsburg wishes to inquire about the lakes, and asks what there is to be caught. The gentleman is requested to pack his grip and come right along, for there is more catching done here than he ever dreamed of. Why in the canal alone, only a short stretch that runs in front of the office of this great journal, there is all the catching any man can wish for. To commence with, and it commences at 6.15 a. m., there are three boats to catch, and the catches made by fully twenty percent of the catchers would make a horse laugh. A Washington's led the other day caught seven perch, thirteen sunfish, and two mudcats, and little Tommy Schur got in on the river to his neck and caught the trout and old herring of his life. He has been lying on his little trap, over since, and it happened at these days ago. A gentleman from Toronto caught over five lakes in less than ten minutes on Monday last, and the fisherman caught a cod and a half dozen driftwood. Last season a young lady, near two young girls, caught a fish while sitting on the wharf waiting for the Saturday night boat. She would be glad to trade him off for a second-hand barrel saw, or a mostly rusty and thin one. But he caught him all the same, and you wouldn't have guessed him as much of a catcher.

Then a gentleman from Syracuse got into a boat the other morning on his first fishing expedition. He was ready to go to bed at 11 o'clock and was the very thing, and found new. UNION ADVOCATE WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 1, 1902.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE TO THE JURY.

The Judge's Charge to the Jury.

Hon. H. A. McKeown continued his address to the jury in the Doherty murder case on Tuesday afternoon. It was a powerful arraignment of the prisoner Higgins, whose guilt he claimed, was proven beyond the shadow of a doubt. He pointed out that after the murder Higgins was the one who took precautions to conceal the crime. He lied about it and warned other boys not to tell about his having the revolver, going so far as to threaten one boy that if he didn't deny it, he would "fix him too." The counsel for the defense had talked of mercy; where was the mercy shown to Willie Doherty, who was cut off without being able to cry to God. Turning to the evidence of the boys, companions of Higgins and Goodspeed, Mr. McKeown again alluded to the fact that their memories appeared to be a blank regarding the events of the evening after the body was found. Why is it? And why is it that not a word concerning Goodspeed was said? And yet never in all these conversations, there is not a single word uttered by Higgins to the boys or by them to Higgins that implicates Goodspeed.

"There is the statement that he and Goodspeed would get in trouble," said Mr. Mullin.

Throw out the two confused stories of the crime. One of them did it. Throw out their statements and there is not a single footprint which points towards Goodspeed, and every event so far as it has been detailed. The jury had heard Goodspeed tell his story. Mr. Mullin said that when the boy told his story at the inquest he told it in a sing-song way. No one could agree with him. He also stated that when under examination Goodspeed's story was broken up by the crown counsel in order to break up the continuity. Nothing was further from his mind, said Mr. McKeown. But Higgins story was like a recitation from a book. There was not a single man in the jury box but who knows that the story was written out. Higgins committed his evidence to memory. These things were very painful, especially when counsel seemed to be involved. Also the jury will remember that a piece of paper was taken from Higgins when he was "on the stand." It was passed to Mr. Mullin.

"Why didn't you read it," asked Mr. Mullin.

"I didn't want to."

"Here is the paper, Mr. Mullin," said Higgins, pulling it from his pocket.

Mr. Mullin handed it to Mr. McKeown, who dropped it on the table.

Mr. McKeown went on to say that the boy had a copy of the Daily Telegraph with the depositions in it.

Mr. Mullin then arose and said that Higgins' people were poor and he gave him the Telegraph.

The judge said he would not interfere with Mr. McKeown's line of argument.

If he had the Telegraph with the statement in it, said Mr. McKeown, "what would he want with a copy of the deposition?"

"I forgot that I gave it to him," said Mr. Mullin.

Continuing, Mr. McKeown said he never heard of such an incident before as a prisoner writing out his testimony—it was absolutely incredible. The phraseology, too, and he did not wish to make any insinuations against Mr. Mullin, at least was not of the tanyard. All these things point but in one direction. The jury has every right to judge the story by every incident in it. The way he tells it is very important. Every point of time mentioned in the tale was mentioned as 1.30, 1.45 and the like. Before telling the story of the connected events he spoke of half-past, a quarter to, and the like.

Mr. McKeown dealt with the motive, and said the real motive might be covered up and never known. It was for the jury to weigh the evidence before them. On them lay a great responsibility.

The path of duty was the way of safety. The circumstances of an awful crime were before them, and they were looked to by the whole community.

The court then adjourned until Wednesday morning.

JUDGE LANDRY'S CHARGE.

His Honor reminded the jurors that they must take the law from the judge, the facts by the evidence. There was little law in the case, however. His honor read from the criminal code the definition of murder, and said it was for the jury to say whether what was done in this case was described in the law. No doubt Doherty's death was due to one of the two causes described; that death was intended, or that death resulted from bodily injuries that reasonably would cause death. As to the evidence of an accomplice it is admissible and it need not be corroborated if that evidence in itself is sufficient to convince jurors. That is a strict definition of law. But he had to say that the evidence of an accomplice must be scrutinized more closely than that of other witnesses. Judges always advise jurors on this point, and he so directed them. But if the testimony of an accomplice is apparently truthful, it is as binding as that of any other witness. In this case there is an abundance of testimony to ask the juror's attention to as corroborating Goodspeed's evidence. It is for the jury, however, to decide on the facts as brought out and to which he would direct attention. Speaking of the value of testimony, there is no doubt when jurors have evidence of persons implicated in crime, His Honor said, that evidence taken by him is not to be taken with the credence given to other witnesses. But the most hardened criminal may tell the truth. He may tell lies, and it is for the jurors to judge. Both Goodspeed and Higgins stand in the same category in this respect. Jurors must look at all the circumstances in arriving at the truth—truth which must be arrived at regardless of all other considerations. His Honor dilated on the importance of juror's duty and pointed out that their private beliefs on such questions as capital punishment must not be allowed to interfere in the discharge of the duty. They are sworn to carry out the law of the land. They are sworn to look for the truth and also to protect innocence. Their duty is to unravel the intricacies of the case; they will not be justified in leaving that duty for others. Jurors have nothing to do with the matter of punishment—that is outside their province. His Honor said, however long they took they should seek to find out the truth in this case. It is for the jury to find on the issue as presented to them. Sympathy must not be allowed to come in, justice is what the jurors are sworn to try, not mercy—justice that will not permit an innocent man to go to the gallows, if found guilty, but justice to the community as well.

His Honor next took up the point that there was an abundance of testimony to corroborate Goodspeed's evidence—not in quality, but in quantity. He submitted whether the jury could find a verdict without considering either Goodspeed's or Higgins' evidence. In his opinion there would be sufficient evidence to find against the prisoner if they had so decided, without either Goodspeed or Higgins testifying. Continuing, His Honor said it had been shown that Higgins and Doherty had been chums. This was proved outside of the evidence of Goodspeed and Higgins. It will be for the jury to say what they were chums for. If in crime, it is important. While chums Higgins said, as proved by other witnesses, that he would get along with Doherty. In unraveling the mystery this must be considered. What did Higgins mean when he said he didn't want Doherty around? What means would he take to prevent him being around? As a third point, there was the purchase of a revolver by Higgins after returning from a tour to part of the United States. What did he want with that revolver, as explained by himself or others? How long did he have it? What did he use it for? Then there was the purchase of cartridges. His Honor reminded the jury that Higgins did not buy it himself, but through a third person. What evidence is there of a useful use of the revolver and cartridges? It was proved Higgins carried the revolver on the day of the tragedy. His Honor cautioned the jurors against the credibility of the companions of the prisoner. King, for instance, assisted Higgins in discover-ring Alexander to get the latter to deny statements he had made to a reporter. Doherty, continued His Honor, was last seen alive in the company of Higgins and Goodspeed. There have been cases of circumstantial evidence in which persons were convicted of murder largely because of the fact that they were last seen in the company of the deceased. In this case, Doherty was last seen in the graveyard and in the park and near the park house with Higgins and Goodspeed, Higgins having a revolver in his pocket. Next, there is evidence, outside of Higgins and Goodspeed, that Higgins and Goodspeed were seen coming from the park in the direction of the creek. It was not proved positively that this was on Aug. 1st. If these two youths were not seen coming out of the park, was it deliberate concealment of their tracks, or was it purely accidental? Finally, there was the finding of the revolver in the creek, the five chambers empty, the empty cartridges in the revolver. It was found in the presence of Goodspeed. It is for jurors, if they had no other testimony, to connect Higgins with the crime, because of these facts. The proof is not positive, but it is circumstantial, and forms links in a chain that must be considered by the jury. The revolver and cartridges have been identified as Higgins'. What next is found? Bullets in the body of the victim and there is evidence for the jury to consider that these were the bullets, discharged from Higgins' revolver.

Next said His Honor, trace the conduct of the prisoner. The law books lay down that it is important to consider what an accused man says and does after a crime is being committed. What did Higgins do? He meets Doherty's father and denies having seen his boy after 10 a. m. on Aug. 1st. This is prima facie evidence of guilt, if not explained away. It would be trifling with the juror's intelligence to suppose they could believe Higgins told Doherty's father the truth. Higgins told Kelly he (Higgins) would prove where his revolver was, Kelly having said it would look bad for him. Then take Higgins' conduct at the identification of Doherty's dead body. Was that the conduct of an innocent man? Then there was his attempt to get Alexander to deny his statement about the revolver, going to much trouble to do this, even rising early to see him. There was his anxiety to show the reading of the news-papers. What did he mean by trying to fix Alexander? Why did he say after coming out of the coroner's presence that he would get away? Goodspeed's story had not been detailed at this time. Why did Higgins go away? Why did he resort to subterfuges in going away? Why did he give a wrong name and address? Are these evidences of a guilty mind? That is for the jury to consider.

What, asked His Honor, was the conduct of Higgins after his arrest at McAdam? Absolute silence on every point. Was that the conduct of an innocent person? Would it or would it not, be the course of an innocent person who had information to give? There could be circumstances in which an innocently accused person might decide to maintain silence until he could spring his defence on court and jury to show his innocence. That was for the jury to consider. In this particular case great difficulties have been placed in the way of the authorities in ferreting out the crime. Was this the act of an innocent man, or was it a deliberately concocted plan to escape? His Honor said again if the jury decided that with this evidence alone they found a verdict against the prisoner such a verdict would be upheld. Should, however, the jury decide that both Higgins and Goodspeed were innocent, it would be sufficient to justify a verdict to that effect without one word from either Higgins or Goodspeed. What does Higgins deny? His Honor recited the main facts about going with Doherty to the park, purchase of revolver, finding of revolver etc. In fact, he denied nothing of importance in the circumstantial evidence. His contradictions are

HIGGINS AND GOODSPEED.

While it is right that every effort should be made in behalf of Frank Higgins by his counsel, and the prisoner should be given the benefit of everything that can be legally done in his favor, it is to be hoped there will be no unnecessary delay in proceeding with his case and that of Goodspeed. It is a cause of reproach to the courts of the United States that Justice is neither swift nor sure. In Canada it has generally been the case that punishment followed crime more speedily than across the border. It may be that in the cases of Higgins and Goodspeed a good purpose will be served by the delay, since there is much that is only half revealed in connection with the movements of the tanyard gang and deeds of which they probably know more than has been stated to the public. The police should be able, as a result of the testimony that has been given, to gather further information of great value to themselves in preventing the spread of crime among the boys of the city. No one regards the unhappy youths who are now in jail with any spirit of vindictiveness, or has a desire to see them made in any sense the victims of injustice; but public safety demands that in so far as they have transgressed the law they should pay the penalty. The only fact to be considered, not as an extension, but as a ground for a possible degree of leniency, is their youth.—Star.

The Editor's Mail.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir—
With your permission, I would like to make an earnest appeal to the Christian people of town to show their sympathy with the work of the Young Men's Christian Association. As far as I know, this Association is the only organization in the town, outside the churches, engaged in any positive Christian work. Surely, the object of the Y.M.C.A. has in view is one that should enlist the hearty co-operation of the members of the Churches to a greater extent than is apparent at the present time. It is now nearly a year since the organization was launched at a public meeting held in the Town Hall. A considerable sum was subscribed to aid in its establishment. But, sir, in a movement of this kind, something more than financial assistance (such as this was and is appreciated) is required, viz., the co-operation of the Christian public. The rooms are open every evening from 7 to 10 for young men at the small cost of $2 a year for membership. Surely a sufficient inducement for the young men to join the Association.

It was felt by the organizers that the young men, during the evenings and after their day's toil is ended, had no place to go where they might either amuse themselves or improve their minds. They either had to remain at home or congregate at the street corners. So far, the efforts of the Committee have not met with that appreciation from the young men for whose benefit it was started, that they had a right to expect. Whether it arises from a lack of desire for mental and moral improvement or not, it is not for me to say. This question may fairly be asked—Are we deteriorating intellectually? Then, on Sunday (Mr. and Mrs. Goss), there is a meeting held which is well attended. No case has been nearly so largely attended of this as one would wish. The men who are the Janivillars in our churches have, for the most part, so far ignored these gatherings, giving the impression that they are either not in sympathy with the work of the Association, or that they take little or no interest in the social, moral and spiritual well-being of the young men. This should not be.

WHY
Unless the young men show more appreciation of the efforts of the Association in their behalf, and the Christian public give more encouragement to the work it is to be feared that this (what might be, and ought to be) useful institution will eventually succumb to the apathy of the people who would be, of all others, its active supporters and sympathizers.

Yours Truly,
A MEMBER.

CANADA TO THE NIGHT WIND.

Breeces low, that softly steal across the sea,
As from the east the end night shadows creep;
To the wide void where my dead hero sleeps;
O carry this gift to him from me!
Go stealthily, lest thou disturb his rest;
Breathe low thy song of bitterness and grief;
Take thou my gift, his loved maple leaf,
And leave it there upon my hero's breast.
Chatham, 1902. A. P. McKislinic.

MUSKOKA.

Mr. James Bain, of Toronto Public Library, On Who Discovered It.

Mr. James Bain, D.C.L., writes:—The discussion on this subject, which has been started by "Knoxonian" in The Westminster, revives early recollections. The lakes of the Muskoka district were a favorite hunting ground from the earliest times for the Indians, and for the white trapper from the middle of the eighteenth century until the influx of civilization destroyed the game within our own time. No doubt were Muskoka furs that Mr. Quetton St. George regularly visited Washington from 1806-1807 to purchase from the trappers. Mr. Bain was agent for the Hudson's Bay Company for many years previous to 1860, at what is now Bracebridge, and the ruins of a trading post were visible on the banks of the Joseph River some 40 years ago. A rough outline of the lake division between Lakes Muskoka and Rousseau were not shown in any map till the publication of the S.P.V.K. atlas in 1895. In this map the whole route from the Ottawa to Penetanguishene is laid down from the descriptions of Alexander Sherbrooke, who crossed in country in July, 1830 by the Petawawa and Muskoka Rivers, describing in his paper the general appearance of the lakes and rivers and approximately giving distances. The first Government survey was made by J. Houghton Denison, C.E., in 1850, who discovered Lake Joseph and named it after his son.

The Muskoka road was one of the earliest cut through the dense bush to open up the free grant lands and was finished as far as Bracebridge in the winter of 1859. In July, 1860, Mr. John Campbell, now Professor Campbell, and the writer walked over this road and camped on the shore of the lake. Not a tree was cut along the shores, and the park from what is now Gravenhurst to the bay was one of Nature's own providing. Two Indian bark wigwams stood on the beach where now the railway station and lumber piles hold sway. The following year we returned with a party of five, bringing with us a boat which was carried across the Muskoka road by a yoke of oxen, who occupied nearly fourteen hours on the journey of thirteen miles. The party reaction on this occasion the upper part of Lake Joseph and found so much to interest them that the trip became an annual one, and the writer purchased on behalf of some of the members 300 acres of islands among which is the one now known as Yoho.

It is pleasant to see testimony borne to the energy and perseverance with which Mr. A. P. Cockburn devoted himself to opening up the lakes to the general visitor, though it interfered sadly with the unrestricted freedom which the few who visited Muskoka had heretofore enjoyed. Mr. Cockburn's first visit was in 1865, and his first steamer was launched in 1866.

A Question of Color.
Benjamin Constant when painting the portrait of Queen Victoria made the grand ribbon of the Garter, which was part of his illustrious sitter's costume, a certain tone of blue. The Queen criticized this part of the picture, but Constant stuck to his color. One day he received from Windsor a little parcel containing the order of the Garter. The Queen, fully convinced that she was right, had sent him the ribbon to prove his color or sense was wrong. She did not confer the Garter upon him, however.

The Trappists.
Many letters come to the monastery announcing the death of relatives of the monks; these are seen by the abbot only, and at chapter he may simply announce "The mother of one of our number is dead; let us pray for her soul." Never to his dying day does the bearded Trappist learn that he was praying for his own mother.

8 Cents

Eight cents a pound is what a young woman paid for twelve pounds of flesh.

She was thin and weak and paid one dollar for a bottle of Scott's Emulsion, and by taking regular doses had gained twelve pounds in weight before the bottle was finished.

Eight cents a pound is cheap for such valuable material. Some pay more, some less, some get nothing for their money. You get your money's worth when you buy Scott's Emulsion.

We will send you a little free.

WHAT SIR WILFRID SAID.

Premier Believes Ruler of His Country is London, England.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was received with prolonged cheers at the coronation banquet held at the Guildhall, London on July 11, replied on behalf of the self-governing colonies. It was, he said, his privilege five years ago to represent his country, Canada, at the celebration held in this ancient city in commemoration of the Jubilee year of a reign forever made famous by the personality of the Sovereign, by the remarkable advance which took place under it of all the arts and sciences which contributed to the happiness of mankind, but whose characteristic for them would be the still more remarkable development of the British Empire as it existed to-day. (Cheers.) The British Empire, as all other creations of human effort, had been the cause of many conflicting sentiments. It had inspired, and perhaps more than ever would inspire, in the breasts of millions of men a deep sense of enthusiastic attachment. (Cheers.) British subjects could call the world to witness that the British Empire, wherever it had held sway, especially within the last 60 years, had carried with it everywhere an instrument of good government. In all His Majesty's possessions there was at this moment a remarkable and in some instances an almost phenomenal degree of prosperity, and among all those peoples, to whatever race they belonged, there was a universal sense of satisfaction and pride in British institutions. (Cheers.) Such, at all events, was the case in the self-governing colonies. Canadians present could bear testimony to the truth of his assertion that Canada to-day was a free, prosperous and happy country. (Cheers.) It was not always so, but the granting of representative institutions had worked that miracle. Prosperity and contentment had followed in the path opened by freedom. What was true for Canada was equally true for New Zealand and for Australia—indeed, there was only one shadow to that picture—one exception, which was South Africa. Until a few weeks ago South Africa was scourged by war, which would not have broken out, if free civil rights under the law of full citizenship to all had been given there without any discrimination. He was convinced, however, that what had taken place elsewhere, would now be seen in South Africa under British rule. It was not in the genius of British history to make political changes simply for the gratification of a theory, or to round off sharp angles, but it was in the genius of British history to proceed slowly and cautiously, and never to change the condition of things, until there was a grievance, and then to remove the grievance and to go on further. Historic experience taught with almost unvarying certainty that political changes brought about in the hope of carrying an object not immediately prompted by practical necessity generally failed. He afterwards referred to the steadfast allegiance of Canada to this country. There was no fault in human affairs. He did not say that the time might not come when they might have a Parliament assembled in London from all parts of the globe. That would be a great spectacle no doubt, but not greater than the spectacle presented at this moment of a galaxy of free nations bound together by a sole allegiance to the same Sovereign. (Cheers.)

THE BOY FROM TOWN.

Last night a boy came here from town
To stay a week or so.
Everyone he met he ran down town
And needs a rest, you know.
His name is Cecil, and he's eight,
And he can't swim the cut.
It's now he calls him "Pete"; I'd hate
To have a name like that.
He wears a collar and a tie
And can't hang by his toes;
I guess that he would nearly die
If I had on his shoes.
He can't ride horse-back, and to-day
When we slid on the straw,
He and I roared and helped to lay
The case I pick for him.
When our old gander blazed he ran
As though he thought he'd bite,
Or had a homestead kitchen.
He never milks a cow and no
Can't even drive a wheel.
I'd hate to think that he was me,
I'm glad that I shied him.
He thinks it's lots of fun to pump
And see the water spurt.
But won't climb in the fern, and jump.
For fear of getting hurt.
His eyes are often nice and fine,
His hair's all over curls.
His hands ain't half as big as mine,
He ought to play with girls.
A little while ago when we
Were fooling in the shed
He suddenly got mad at me,
Because I bumped his head.
There's lots of things that he can't do,
He thinks that sherrill's like
And he's afraid of ganders, too;
But he can fight all right.

The Country. An Epitome of Events Gathered by ADVOCATE Reporters

MILLERTON AND DIANTOWN.

James Robinson, M. P., is erecting a large tenement house on the lot above Mr. John Graham's. The work on the building is being rapidly pushed along and it will be ready for occupancy before the snow flies.

Mr. Frank Jardine of Pinedale Farm, Jardine, P. O., has the largest and best garden seen by your correspondent for some years. His assortment of Royal Giant sugar beets, as well as his cauliflower, carrots and other root crops would be hard to beat at any of our fall fairs. A prominent Agriculturist who visited the farm last week said it surpassed any farm he had seen in Canada for garden produce.

Mr. Peter J. Forsythe, who has secured the contract for building the Renouf Bridge, is having the work carried on in an energetic manner.

The roads in this locality are in excellent condition at present, and many of our town friends are taking advantage of this fact and paying us a visit.

Messrs. G. A. Wheatley of Toronto and H. C. Palmer were the commercial men to visit Millerton during the week.

The Blackville Derby Agricultural Society No. 8, are to hold their Annual Fair in the fall on Tuesday next. It promises to be a success.

The largest gasoline yacht in the lower provinces is owned by Mr. John W. Miller of Millerton. This yacht which is called the John W., was built by Adam Moore, the Fredericton boat maker, and is "a dandy." Mr. Miller has also a smaller boat which is run by gasoline. It was also built by Mr. Moore and is a nice craft. In addition to his boat, Mr. Miller is quite an Automobile fancier and has just returned from an automobile trip over to Fredericton down through Sunbury and Kent county.

RENOUS RIVER.

Several sportsmen have returned from the head of the River with trophies already.

Wages are better here this season than have been ever known before and several of our young men have departed for the woods.

Everywhere we hear the threshing mills at work and grain is reported a good yield and of excellent quality.

A new bridge is being erected over the Renouf at the place where once stood the Red River. Mr. Peter Forsythe having been awarded the contract.

Mr. Arthur Hayes and Miss Teresa Hayes left here for Maine last week.

Mr. Henry Underhill of Montana U. S. A., is blasting in Mr. Jeremiah Mahoney's mine. The mineral has proved to be of excellent quality and the idea is to see if there is a large quantity.

JANEVILLE.

Janeville, Sept. 18.—The people of Janeville spent a very enjoyable time at the pie social on Monday night, Sept. 15th in the school house. It was largely attended by the people from the surrounding county. The school house was crowded, over two hundred being present. The proceeds amounted to over $50 which will be spent in the school. The highest bid was $3.75. Our teacher Miss Beila Eddy deserves great credit for the concert.

A concert of sacred songs was held in the Presbyterian Church on Thursday night Sept., 11th. The singers were from New Brandon. The night was enjoyed by the large crowd that attended. The proceeds are to help to build the Manse in New Brandon.

We are having fine weather now for the harvest and the grain will soon be all cut. Miss Clara Crowley of Pukehaw is spending a few weeks with friends in Janeville.

Miss H. A. Cais and Mr. Waldie Cais spent a few days of last week in Beresford. Mr. and Mrs. Brennan of Teteagouche spent a week with Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell of this place.

Janeville, Sept., 25th.—We are having a very heavy gale and cold weather.

Mr. John Dempsey, et., an aged resident of this place died at his home here on Saturday night, Sept. 20th at the age of 87 years. He was interred in the Grand Anne R. C. cemetery on Monday where he was followed by a large concourse of friends. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Wm. Murphy, W. J. Scott, A. E. Chapman, T. O'Donnell, H. J. Barry and S. Miller.

Mrs. Thomas Smith of Chatham spent the past week with friends and relatives here.

Rev. Mr. Reid of Bathurst exchanged pulpits with the Rev. Mr. Vans last Sunday.

Rev. Mr. McRae a former minister of this place visited here last week. He is now a missionary in Trinidad.

H. B. Anslow, Editor of the Advocate, Newcastle passed through here last week.

Mrs. H. A. Cais and Mr. Clyde Cais spent last Saturday in Bathurst.

Messrs. Ellis Jennings, Ephraim Scott, and Charlie Jennings and Miss Mina Plant left for the States on Wednesday morning.

Mrs. James Morrison spent a part of last week in Teteagouche with friends and relatives.

P. J. Mahoney spent a few days here during last week.

The crops are very good this fall. Oats have turned out better than what was expected. The fruit crop is better than ever it was before.

The fishing is very poor.

Mr. James A. Morrison spent Saturday and Sunday in Bathurst.

We are sorry to hear that Eddy Barnes fell off a load of oats a few weeks ago and broke his arm.

Mrs. Edward White spent Saturday in Bathurst.

A. J. W. McKenzie is spending the week in the lower end of the county.

A. E. Chapman, H. Buttiner and S. O'Donnell left on Wednesday for a trip to Prince Edward Island.

BATHURST.

The weather during the past week has been disagreeable, and as we write a most easterly storm, accompanied with cold rain is in progress. This is very bad for farmers who have not yet harvested all their grain and we learn that there is considerable yet standing in Gloucester County. About the middle of last week we had quite a heavy frost, sufficient to freeze water to the thickness of glass and it is noticeable that the more tender shrubs and plants and flowers are drooping owing to this.

The lumbermen all along the shore are sending in their teams and supplies and generally getting ready for their long winter work. It is satisfactory to note that prices of lumber in the English markets are keeping up and advices from brokers and dealers on the other side are most encouraging for spring shipments in the spruce and pine trade. We hear of good specifications being at present as high as eight pounds, which with freights as they are and have been for some time should yield a handsome profit to shippers.

In sympathy, probably, with the price obtainable for long lumber in England, shingles and smaller stuff for the United States markets also keep well up, the prices of the former being better than they have been for many years. The only class of lumber which seems to be a drag in the markets of the other side at present is birch. The demand from the Tin-plate district and other localities where this wood is principally used seems very small, and strange to say, birch is only worth about a pound less than spruce. This state of things may possibly improve before spring, but it is very doubtful.

The wet and disagreeable weather prevailing at present does not seem to affect the hunters, parties of strangers coming and going continually and those who have returned from the hunting grounds being most enthusiastic as regards the opportunities for killing moose, caribou and bear. A party of Philadelphia gentlemen who came down from the head of the river on Friday brought three moose heads, one a fine one measuring nearly fifty inches in the spread of the horns.

An English gentleman Mr. Fairbrother of Devonshire who has been hunting in this vicinity and who has just left for England with a fine head, is so pleased with the country that he has decided to bring out his family next year and settle in New Brunswick. Mr. Fairbrother informs the writer that there are thousands of men like himself in England, with sufficient money to live on fairly comfortably, but with no chance of advancement for their sons in the old country, who would be only too glad to come out to Canada, particularly to New Brunswick, if they knew as much even as he has learned about the country in the past few weeks. This gentleman says that the majority of people in England, particularly in the agricultural districts have even yet the most imperfect ideas of Canada generally, and they know nothing at all of the Maritime Provinces, whatever they may know about the West. The Canadian Pacific Railway people have flooded the country with literature about the west, but lots of their information is not taken seriously and as stated nothing is known about our province at all. On being informed that the Province of New Brunswick had a paid lecturer in England for the past few years, he smiled, and said we Canadians had almost as crude ideas of England as Englishmen had of Canada, and that one man doing such work would be very little use in England. If the Province had one man in each county in England and Scotland it is true it might do some good, but even then the majority of men who should be reached would never be seen at his lectures. Something more is needed and it is difficult to say what, but Mr. Fairbrother says the younger generation might be reached in the schools if some arrangements could be made to teach the children. What counts the cities of England is the younger sons of respectable farmers and men of small independent means who live in the country districts. If a farmer has several sons the farm goes to the eldest and the others have to get out and make a living in the best way they can. To give a boy a profession in England costs a lot of money and in consequence the younger sons seek the cities without a trade or profession to give them a chance of a living with ten chances to one of their fathers in the great army of unemployed who form the floating population of the larger towns and cities. There are, this gentleman informs us thousands of fathers in the old country, men as he said, with small fortunes, or sufficient money to invest in the funds or console to live on, who are in despair of getting employment for their growing sons and daughters, who would be creditable settlers in the Maritime Provinces if they could be reached, and it is his opinion, notwithstanding what he has heard to the contrary, that a family can live just as cheaply here as in England.

Mr. T. E. Kenny President of the Royal Bank of Canada spent two or three days in Bathurst last week. We notice that the Bank building is being painted, and that some nice new furniture is being put in.

The Peoples Bank of Halifax which has been doing its business at Bathurst in the Court House has moved into the new building which Mr. Geo. Robertson erected for their use on the Street opposite the hotel.

Hon. Samuel Adams of Adams & Co. New York was in Bathurst for a few days last week and all his old friends were glad to see him looking so well. Mr. W. A. Humphrey M. P. of Westmorland also visited us last week. We understand Mr. Humphrey, who is one of the most energetic business men of the Province is pushing his clothing trade, and intends to see if he cannot compete successfully with clothing manufacturers in Quebec and Ontario. All things being equal, we think Mr. Humphrey should have the patronage of our North shore merchants, as his enterprise is well recognized.

Mr. Wing the energetic Manager of the Tracade Lumber Company was in town on business on Thursday.

We notice that Mr. James Howell and Mr. Oscar Fenwick are improving their new residence by erecting handsome verandas and porches.

Politics, Politics, Politics, the air is full of it, and all concerned are anxiously awaiting the word from the grand stand to begin the race. Messrs. Burns and Poirer were in this end of the County visiting their constituents last week and are very confident that their ticket will be returned with a large majority. If they are as strong in the other Parishes of the County as they are in Bathurst they need not fear any rivals. When the fight actually begins, the readers of the Advocate will be fully informed how things are going in Gloucester.

OBITUARY.

The death of David C. Anderson, which took place at Douglstown on Friday, the 20th, removes from that village one of the old block-makers, one who before the Iron Ship displaced the wooden ones an important factor on the river. After this, he became a yeoman and adhered to that calling up to the time of his death.

He was always regarded as an honest man and his death is deeply regretted.

Or THE FUGITIVE BRIDE

By F. W. CHAPPELL.

It might have been supposed that young Marshall should have suffered some in his family pride when he became the rival of his "bachelor, baker and candle-stick maker," for Bel's lovers came from all ranks. Her beauty and grace were sufficient attraction for the highest, while her humble origin encouraged those of a lower degree. And among them all she reigned impartially. Whoever behaved well to her, to him she behaved well in return, but not one of them could boast of the slightest favor. With a certain proud wilfulness, she kept them all at an equal distance.

This was such a state of affairs as well might be unadvised upon by the old family servant who had the boy's real welfare at heart, but with him it only had the effect of deepening his wild and wilful passion into the determination that to no such rivals would he succumb. He swore that Bel Pointer should be his wife, and with his customary careless arrogance reckoned not who fell in the race where he was to win. As to Jim Pointer and the other manifest incompetencies, he gave them no thought, but rushed straight toward the goal of his desire. He dropped for the nonce all his old coquetries with the other beauties of the neighborhood and addressed himself solely to the one object in view.

It is only fair in this connection to mention one fact in partial exoneration of the career of this erratic and unheroic hero of ours. Although we cannot approve of his treatment of the gentler sex so far as their affections were concerned, he certainly had the grace to spare their pride, which he never wounded under any circumstances.

After winning his way into their hearts and gaining an expression of their feelings, he invariably so contrived it that a quarrel should presently ensue, in which the girl always took the initiative, and which ended in his ignominious dismissal from the engagement. But, singular to relate, he never lost their favor, and there was scarcely a girl in the whole county who did not say to herself sometimes: "Poor Charley! I might have married him had I chosen," though few were shrewd enough to realize that they would still do so very readily were he but say the word. Whether Bel feared to subject herself to the usual fate of his lady loves does not appear, but certain it is that she placed him nothing to his eager advances.

In vain he tried upon her his old and formerly successful arts. She laughed at his pathos, she scorned his passion, until he began to think that now he really felt he could inspire no feeling in return. All this but added new fire to his eagerness, and his unvarying determination again and again he rallied to the siege.

Although his slaves, with the exception of a few too old or too faithful to make new ties, were all freed and gone, the work on the place went on as of old. But Jim Pointer's fragility, acquired wealth had made no difference in his habits, and he still "over-sees" the hired hands of the younger generation as he had done the slaves of the elder Marshall. So poor Charley was left entirely at the mercy of that had personage, who, it is said, finds mischief for idle hands, and right energetically he he second the endeavors of that arch enemy of our kind, though I would not have it understood that it was the devil who prompted him to fall in love with Bel Pointer. Far be it from me to make so ungallant a suggestion. I do but speak on general principles for the good old unmissable truth in those beautiful old nursery rhymes.

Entire physical idleness is impossible to a man of energy, and if his life or his surroundings furnish him no pursuit, the devil is always at hand to supply the deficiency. But I did not take up my pen to deliver homilies, moral or otherwise, but simply to relate some incidents in the lives of Charley Marshall and others, and just now to give you some idea of the state of his mind when he went whistling away from the door of his kindly though ill-advised monitor. As for Bel Pointer, whether worthy or otherwise, whether indifferent or fond, being a woman let her speak for herself.

CHAPTER III.

Time, noon of a midsummer's day; scene, a rude gray porch thickly embowered in wisteria and trumpet creeper, and for dramatic purposes a girl, tall, dark of hair and eyes, with skin pure and well tinted; head small and well set upon a faultless neck; form slender, lithe, and instinct with nervous grace.

Having expended so many words upon the girl, we can only say of her companion that he was short, stout and of neutral tints, and totally unlike her except in a certain sombre fire of the eye. His attire, tawdry yet flashy, his manner self-asserting, yet ill at ease, his voice loud and unmodulated, all bespoke his place in the lower stratum of Bel Pointer's admirers, but, to a keen and sensitive observer, he was not a rival to be despised, nor a lover to be dismissed with a frown. There had evidently not been the most pleasant of interviews, and the girl had risen from the bench where he had sat at her side and stood leaning against the rude lattice among the vines.

The picture she made, with the dark leaves and brilliant blossoms swaying about her was one well calculated to fix the eye of even an indifferent observer. Her dress of light, thin material was of a deep orange color, and set off her dark beauty well. How is it that women of dark rich tints always evince a taste for suitable colors, while blonde women seem to have no sense of what is fitting, but select a garment for its intrinsic beauty alone, and thus subordinate themselves to their dress?

It is not to be supposed that Bel Pointer had arisen and placed herself among the vines for the simple purpose of posing for the admiration of her rustic lover, but she certainly did, as usual, what best became her, and his eye followed her with a gaze of intensest admiration and anger. "Look here, Bel," he cried, roughly, "this thing has gone far enough! Do you think you can keep a man laughing after you forever? I've loved you honest and true, and told you so often enough for you to know it by this time, but you seem to think all men were made just for your amusement. I, for one, don't agree with you. I don't give all and ask for nothing back. So, once for all, Bel, I ask you, will you marry me? I've no, plain and square, and no beating about the bush, for I won't stand that any longer, by gracious!"

"What have I done," she said, scornfully ignoring his question, "that you should call me Bel?"

"Do you are up your Marshall calls you Bel," he retorted, significantly. The blood deepened in her cheek. "And what has Charley Marshall done," she asked, with augmented insolence, "that his conduct and name should be weighed in the same balance?"

Now this, it must be confessed, was not an answer calculated to cool the anger of an ill-used lover, but Bel never made attempts either to anger or please. She simply went on her way doing as she pleased—kind, if she felt in a kindly mood, or much the other way if anything had occurred to vex her. Her favors were by no means awarded to deserts, but more to occasion. The personage here addressed evidently thought forbearance had ceased to be a virtue. He sprang to his feet angrily.

"Some man will kill you yet for your devilish tongue," he cried, approaching her.

She stood entirely calm, looking at him with supercilious indifference. "How do you suppose I am to stand such talk from you, Bel Pointer? Wasn't I raised right here in the neighborhood with you? Didn't I go to school together, you and me, and your sweet Charley Marshall? And didn't we always call each other Charley and Bel and Len together? I'll own that the Marshall's have a ways in the world, but even they can't be too good to have us call their names."

And just let me tell you right here, Miss Bel Pointer," with scornful emphasis, "that this great young gentleman of yours may not be as sure a thing for you as an honest and common man. He's fooled many a poor girl in his day, dang him! many a girl that's ranked you, Miss Bel Pointer, by a long way. You needn't think because you are so proud and so handsome that you'll fare different from the rest. He'll bow, and scrape, and beg, and plead until you give in, and then he'll be off after some other fool. Oh! I beg pardon, Miss Pointer; I suppose I ought to be more choice in my titles, but when a man's in dead, downright earnest, he ain't apt to pick and choose his words. If you throw me over for Marshall's soft speeches, you'll rue the day you did it. Can you think of a single passable girl in this neighborhood that he hasn't made love to? And what has become of it all? No broken hearts, I reckon, because he's too smart to go so far. But do you suppose he ever really loved one of those girls, or cared how many wounds she got in the fight? And now that all that's over, he's looking at her sternly, 'do you suppose Charley Marshall would ever marry his overseer's daughter?'"

"He opened his mouth to speak further, but suddenly on the soft air broke a voice singing:

"Oh, canst thou doubt my heart,
Genevieve?
Say not that we must part,
Genevieve?
Love, canst thou bid me go!
Love, canst thou grieve me so?
Thy heart and mine cry me,
Genevieve."

The young man, Leonard Harris, frowned darkly, and made a movement as if to go, but with a sudden, defiant gesture stepped back and seated himself again upon the bench. Bel did not move. During the tirade of her angry lover's face had lost a shade of its bright color, but she still looked straight at him with unmoved and scornful eyes. Her foot had begun a restless tattoo upon the rough oak floor and her long, slender fingers were pulling at the tender flowers among which she stood.

The voice ceased singing, the gate opened and shut, and a light step came up the walk to the portico.

"Good day, Len," cried Charley Marshall's cheery tones. "Where is Bel?"

She stepped forth from the shadow. "Here I am," she said, chillingly. "May I ask what your business with me?"

"Heigho!" he exclaimed, looking from one gloomy face to the other, "what is the matter here?"

Len looked equally puzzled, but his sombre visage brightened visibly. "Come, Bel," continued Charley, "in what have I offended?"

"I can tell you," said the snubbed Bel, "you have called her Bel."

"What else should I call her? Surely not Belinda?" queried the other, in laughing tones.

But Bel's face had grown stormy. "Call me nothing! never utter my name again!" she cried, passionately. "Never let me look on your face again as long as I live! Nor yours, either, Len Harris!" turning fiercely upon that worthy. "I hate you! I hate everybody!" and without a backward glance she fled into the house, leaving the two men looking blankly in each other's faces.

"What is the matter? What does she mean?" asked the last comer. "I don't know! The devil himself couldn't's humor," she cried, passionately. "I'm disappointed and discomfited, and jerking his hat from the bench, he jammed it over his eyes and strode angrily down the walk.

After waiting awhile, in hopes that the girl might return, young Marshall also went away.

CHAPTER IV.

But Bel's little fury was not of great duration, for the next time she met the two young men, which was a few days after at a picnic, she was all smiles and graciousness, completely ignoring the last scene upon the portico.

Perhaps it would be well just here to inform the reader that the scene of this little story lay in one of the Western States formerly slave-holding, and that the time when these events occurred was a few years after the war. Also that the various strata of society there, though, perhaps, not quite so clearly defined as in some of the older states, had yet sufficient distinctness to furnish as many feuds and heart burnings as in the oldest. There were, as in most similar sections of the country, a few families who, being possessed of superior wealth, refinement, or education, generally took the lead in matters social, political or otherwise, and were eagerly but blindly followed by the rest of the community.

It was not long, however, that the two young men, who were now, whose long experience in such labors made them able to tell to a moment when, after long roasting and repeated lastings with salted and peppered vinegar, the savory messes were ready for table. It was to those past the lighter enjoyments of youth, however, to whom these homely details were of interest.

he considered the first in the neighborhood, had given her certain advantages even beyond the mere educational ones bestowed by the late Mr. Marshall and his daughter. She had always had free access to their library, and had naturally acquired tastes far above her ignoble origin. She was born pretty, willful and passionate, and with a true love for the beautiful. Miss Connie and other members of the family had given her some other graces which her really nature had soon made her own. Thus she was to some extent without a place in the rather ill-defined circle of her neighborhood. By some of the better families she was received with cordiality, by others quietly ignored, but none of them ever made the smallest advances to Jim Pointer, her father. And as he, ignorant, ill-bred, yet totally unassuming, was not a desirable host, it was impossible for the ladies of her acquaintance ever to meet her upon equal grounds. Nor is it to be supposed that she did not feel her anomalous position. But she was young, high spirited and gay, and took to some extent, at least, "the goods the gods had provided!" her. She never accepted invitations to visit at the houses of her neighbors, and led ordinarily a very solitary life for one so young and so beautiful; but there were some occasions when she could indulge her natural gaiety without expense of her pride. Such were the picnics and other entertainments of a semi-public character where it was impossible that any slight should be put upon her. At such times, even, she held little conversation with her own circle, but always shone resplendent among a multitude of admirers of the other sex. As might readily be supposed, her beauty, the admiration it excited, and her utter loneliness, as far as women were concerned, were not calculated to make her many friends among them, and some few there were who did not hesitate to cast envious sturs upon the character of one whose life was so peculiar. But these detractors found little encouragement even in their own circle, and Bel Pointer went on her way a proud, wayward, but singularly pure hearted woman.

It happened then as usual that her appearance on the picnic ground was the signal for a certain but gradual assembling of her rustic court. At the word picnic the reader has doubtless in his mind a free, informal little group of friends, intent upon amusement of the simplest character—of rambles through the leafy woods, of eager, noisy voices in the contention of laughter and song, of a feast laid out on the grass, and well seasoned with mirth and jollity. But such was by no means the picnic of that day. The large sprinkling of Germans in the State had made itself felt in many of the habits and amusements of the people, and the entertainment where Bel met her two ill-advised admirers was a formal affair, and rather dull. I imagine, except to those who carried their own fund of pleasure with them. A huge arbor had been built by planting many posts and surmounting them with poles laid lengthwise and across, the whole thickly covered with green boughs. In the center was the musician's stand, and all around the outer edges were rude benches improvised for the occasion and upon which sat the observers of the dance.

The ground beneath was thickly strewn with sawdust through which the dancers plodded as gracefully as the nature of the case would admit. At convenient points near by were stalls devoted to the sale of candy, refreshments, and sometimes more ardent recreations, and further off was a large space inclosed by ropes wherein stood long, rude tables covered with such solid edibles as the far-seeing elders had seen fit to provide.

If there was meant to be barbecued pork, over the head of gnarled kitchen presided old negro men, whose long experience in such labors made them able to tell to a moment when, after long roasting and repeated lastings with salted and peppered vinegar, the savory messes were ready for table. It was to those past the lighter enjoyments of youth, however, to whom these homely details were of interest.

In almost every case where woman suffers from this peculiarly feminine disease it is to be found in a weakened and exhausted condition of the system. The nerves are depleted and the blood thin and watery. If medicines have failed to cure, it is because the wrong treatment has been used.

Mrs. Henry Clark, Port Hope, Ont., states: "I have used seven boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for nervousness and a completely run down system, and can heartily recommend it as a wonderfully effective treatment. Before using this remedy I had been in very poor health for some months. I seem to have no energy or ambition, felt tired and listless most of the time, and could scarcely drag myself about the house. I was weak, irritable and nervous, could not sleep well, and felt discouraged about my health. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has taken away these symptoms, given me back my usual health and vigor, consequently I am well and happy."

Dear Sirs:—

Not long ago I had a severe sore on my leg, which became so troublesome that I was obliged to go to the hospital at St. John. After remaining some time, however, I felt no better, notwithstanding the careful treatment there received, your agent here, Mr. R. Power, then asked me to try Gates' Medicines.

I began a course of your Bitters and Syrup to purify my blood and made external applications of your Nerve Ointment and Canadian Liniment to the sore. When I had used 6 bottles of Syrup, 6 boxes of Ointment and 2 bottles of Liniment the sores had entirely disappeared from my leg which was completely healed except a very small spot. I feel very grateful for the wonderful cure this effected and I certainly think your medicines "can't be beat."

Yours truly,

THE UNION ADVOCATE, WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 1, 1902

LOVE TOO MANY.

To Bel, I imagine, there would have been little difference, where edibles were concerned, between barbecued meat and the nectar and ambrosia of the gods. Upon this occasion she seemed gayer, more capricious, and more beautiful than usual. She sent poor Harris first into the seventh heaven of delight by her gracious acceptance of his hand for the dance, and then suddenly tiring of him, she turned and walked off from him and sat down alone upon a log at a little distance from the arbor.

This may or may not have been a little maneuver of hers to provide herself with a more agreeable companion. If so, it was speedily successful, for ere many moments young Marshall sauntered up and standing in front of her, said lightly:

"Do you hate everybody to-day, Bel?"

"No," she replied, looking up at him without embarrassment of any kind, "not everybody. Not you, for instance."

"And you can bear to look upon my face again?" he asked, seating himself on the log by her side.

"Yes," she answered, smiling, "as long as you behave yourself."

"But seriously, Bel," he said, gravely, "what was the cause of that little tantrum of yours the other day? What have I done to offend?"

"Oh, nothing in particular! It was really very unreasonable in me to be offended because you are simply yourself. I ask pardon for it."

"I should think it was rather unreasonable," he said, with much seriousness, "since that is a fault I am not able to correct even with your commands upon me. However with so great an incentive I might make some alterations, perhaps. Upon what model shall I commence to rebuild myself? How, for instance, do you like Harris?"

With a slight touch of scorn, not so much for the man as that he should presume to approach with him and contend for the same goal.

"You might borrow some very commendable traits from Len Harris," she said, defiantly. "He is one who goes straight about his business, and whatever he does, good or bad, is always in earnest. He is one also, sir, who never trifles with the hearts of women."

"Which I am not, I suppose," he said, a little nettled at her tone.

"Which you are not, I suppose," she repeated, composedly.

"Where did you get your favorable opinion of me?" he asked, with some asperity. "Perhaps it was a relation of my merits with which your friend Harris was entertaining you the other day when I so inopportunistly interrupted you."

thrown on his head. Did these produce the wounds spoken of? Much, said His Honor, has been said regarding a miscarriage of justice if it should be found that the prisoner is not guilty. The jury must not consider that at all. The jury need pay no attention to public opinion. They must consider only the merits of the case, the carrying out of the law, the doing of justice. If the jury conclude that both boys are guilty the prisoner cannot escape. If they decide Goodspeed was guilty of murder they could find Higgins guilty of manslaughter. As Judge, however, he could find no evidence to show Higgins guilty of manslaughter. Goodspeed's case is different because there was a quarrel over the revolver. Perhaps the jury could find evidence that Higgins' crime was manslaughter, but he could find none. The jury, he said, if they are convinced, need not go over the circumstances, they can take a ballot when they retire to their room. His Honor now contrasted the evidence of Higgins and Goodspeed. If Higgins stated the truth, was his evidence corroborated? If Goodspeed had shot Doherty in a violent fit of temper, would the jury expect Higgins, an innocent boy, to help bury the body without threats, to strew paper so that the body could be found, to cover the body with wood, etc. It did not appear Goodspeed threatened him. Would it not be more natural to make threats against Higgins instead of discussing the shooting in the cool manner described by Higgins? Was it not more natural, as Goodspeed described, to have threats made by Higgins to compel him to assist in burying the body? Or is the secret of it all that both are concerned in the crime—a crime to end with the burning of the body of the murdered boy. It is for the jury to consider if Higgins did not tell the truth about going back to the place to burn the body. What did they go back for? Each accuses the other. If one stayed in the lane and left the other to go to the body, what was it for? Was it that one should keep watch to prevent detection? His Honor said he brought these facts to their minds for their consideration. Law, he said, is not for the punishment of criminals, but for the protection of society. The penalties imposed are to deter others from committing crime. Jurors must not consider the prisoner at all; they must consider the evidence only. If any reasonable doubt exists—not for the purpose of shirking responsibility—the prisoner is entitled to it. If they consider the prisoner guilty regardless of the consequences.

The judge concluded at ten minutes past 12, and after ordering that lunch be served the jurors, if they so desired, adjourned the court until 2.30 o'clock. If wanted in the meantime he would be at his hotel.

Civil business will be taken up this afternoon if there is any.

Throughout the judge's charge Higgins paid strict attention to what was said but did not seem to be moved in any way. When he left the court room, after the jury had retired to decide on his fate, he was as calm and apparently as undisturbed as any of the spectators.

St. John, Sept. 24—Frank Higgins was found guilty of the murder of William Doherty.

The jury recommended mercy, but, under the law, the prisoner must be sentenced to death.

Goodspeed's trial, as an accessory after the fact, will be called this morning.

Higgins betrayed slight emotion as he listened to the verdict, but within half an hour was whistling "I'd Leave my Happy Home For You" in his cell.

Below is the story in detail.

Generally speaking the verdict was something of a surprise, although after Mr. Justice Landry's keen analysis of the evidence, many were certain the jury would say "Guilty."

That the verdict was justified by the facts there is no doubt in the mind of the general public. The jury wasted little time in discussion. Argument among themselves was unnecessary.

At midnight Higgins was peacefully sleeping. Such was found to be the case when interrogation was made at the jail.

Sentence of death will probably not be imposed until tomorrow morning for His Honor, Judge Landry, when asked regarding the matter, stated he wished to confer with the crown officers first in reference to certain legal points, and that he did not anticipate imposing sentence today at all events.

With a view of ascertaining the attitude of the different jurymen during their final deliberation several members were approached but each firmly refused to make any statement whatever.

GOODSPEED'S TURN NEXT.

The attorney general and Mr. McKeown announced that Goodspeed's trial as an accessory would be called this morning.

THE STORY OF MORNING TIREDNESS.

Is told by impure blood, poor digestion, sluggish liver and tired nerves. It is a warning of every serious trouble ahead, and should prompt sensible people to take a bracing tonic like Ferrozone, an energetic invigorant and restorer.

Ferrozone will give you a sharp appetite, promote good digestion and sound sleep. It will feed and energize the feeblest organs, strengthen the nerve and vital forces and regulate the heart. Ferrozone changes that tired feeling into vigor, strength and ambition, and does it quickly. Remember the name, and insist on having only Ferrozone; it's the best tonic made.

Wife(sobbing)—Only to think—three years ago you vowed eternal love!

Husband (angrily)—Well, how long do you expect eternal love to last any way!

In the doctor's office: The Doctor's Friend—Why didn't you tell that lady to leave off that fur collar? You know well enough it is the cause of her taking cold.

The Doctor—I didn't tell that simply because I don't want to lose a patient. She'd give me up before she'd give up that collar.

It's my opinion that marriage is a failure, said the misanthropic bachelor.

You are decidedly wrong, replied the popular clergyman. My June wedding fees will buy my wife's clothes for a year.

MESSRS. C. C. RICHARDS & Co.

Gentlemen,—In June '98 I had my hand and wrist bitten and mangled by a vicious horse. I suffered greatly for several days and the tooth cuts refused to heal, until your agent gave me a bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT, which I began using, and the effect was magical. In five hours the pain had ceased, and in two weeks the wounds had completely healed and my hand and arm were as well as ever.

Yours truly,
A. E. ROY.

Carriage maker, St. Antoine, P. Q.

My what a lot of books! exclaimed Miss Gossypie. Does your husband read much?

No, answered Mrs. Gad. He buys expensive books, and he's so busy working to pay for them that he does not have time to read.

The Old Lady (in a railway carriage)—I object to smoking. The Navy—Quite right, mum. It's a bad habit for ladies of your time of life.

DESPAIRED OF BEING CURED.

Mrs. W. E. Jeffries 31 Hicks Ave., Kingston, Ont., states: I suffered again with itching piles. In fact, I don't believe that any person who has had piles can realize what I endured. The first application of Dr. Chase's Ointment brought relief and it has since entirely cured me. I hope that this testimonial will be the means of bringing comfort to other sufferers by making known the great power of this ointment.

Posel—Which nation do you think loves America the most?

Bighead—The one that needs her the most.

You say his money fell to him? No; he fell to it—tumbled through a coal hole and sued the city.

HAD NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

Mrs. S. W. West, Dayton, Ont., states: "I got terribly run down, and finally became a victim of Nervous prostration. I had no appetite, seemed to lose interest and ambition and could scarcely drag myself about. Hearing of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I used three boxes with great benefit, gaining eleven pounds. It made me strong and well and I had such an appetite that I wanted to be eating half the time."

During the reign of Elizabeth English dukes wore shoes three feet in length, the toe pointed and fastened up to the garter with gold chains, to which little bells were attached.

An authority says that in boiling macaroni it is fatal to permit it to stop boiling for a moment until done. Have plenty of salted water in the saucepan at the boiling point when the sticks are added, and when they are tender throw in a glass of cold water to stop the cooking suddenly, and drain at once.

MISS JONES'S VOICE GREATLY IMPROVED.

A startling improvement is noticeable in Miss Jones's singing. Her voice is strong and sounds clear and sweeter than before using Catarrhoxone, which is a wonderful aid to singers, speakers and ministers.

CATARRHOXONE INHALER insures absolute freedom from Coughs, Croup and Catarrh, clears the nose and throat, and prevents hoarseness and huskiness. Catarrhoxone makes the voice brilliant and strong, and is uncommonly well recommended by Prima Dornas, members of the Dramatic, Lawyers, Doctors and thousands that use it daily. Better try Catarrhoxone. Price $1.00; trial size 25c. Dispensed by N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

HAMILTON'S PILLS FOR THE LIVER.

Do you know that flour should be kept in a cool dry place? If possible, there should be some kind of a close receptacle for it, and too large a quantity sometimes spoils by being kept too long. It should also be remembered that mites which often get into flour are more destructive than mice.

HAMILTON'S PILLS CURE CONSTIPATION.

It is not generally known that the body of Fred Archer, the famous English jockey, is buried within 200 yards of the winning post for the Cambridgeshire.

HAMILTON'S PILLS CURE CONSTIPATION.

Impatience is the nickname of a certain dear little flower which should be in every collection. It is nicknamed because of its impatience to bloom. It is good for either potting or garden culture and will blossom steadily for months at a time.

There was no meeting in the rooms of the Association on Sunday last. A meeting was arranged for in the Baptist church at 4 o'clock, at which Mrs. Burger was to speak and by request, the members of the Association were asked to attend this meeting. Next Sunday the meeting will be as usual at 4 o'clock, to which all are urged to attend. Let all members of the Association take notice that Tuesday, the 7th day of October is, according to constitution, the day on which officers are elected for the year and other important business transacted. A financial statement will be rendered showing the amounts secured and how expended, also plans made for the winter. Let every member, active and associate, make a point of being present on Tuesday. All others interested are invited.

A Generous Friend.

On last Sunday at Douglastown, Father Dixon when making his usual announcement, informed the congregation that the Hon. S. Adams prior to his departure for New York donated a thousand dollars towards the purchase of a bell, Stations of the cross and erection of a fence around the church building.

Miss M. Quigley who on a visit to Bathurst, was handed a cheque for the amount by Mr. Adams. Mr. Adams' generosity off repeated, is appreciated by his native Douglastown.

Mrs. Burger of St. Louis, Lecturer and organiser of the World's W. C. T. U., spent Sabbath in Newcastle. She spoke in the Baptist Church at 4 o'clock, Rev. Mr.
Pickles presiding. Her address was based on John 4-28, dwelling on opportunities, improved or lost. For 20 minutes she held the undivided attention of the audience which was frequently moved to tears by her pathetic appeals. Her illustrations were very apt and among many names mentioned none drew forth a warmer response than her beautiful reference to Lady Somerset.

The service at half past eight was in the Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. Palmer presiding. Her subject "The Knight of the 20th Century". She presented a high ideal, claimed that the men of to-day should be satisfied with nothing less, showing clearly the argument and illustration the possibility of meeting the requirement. Purty of heart and life glowed through the beautiful address. Dealing with a delicate subject she did it in such a way as not to offend the most sensitive and yet to begot in the hearts of all a determination to lead a better life.
If her words could have reached all the men of the town they would surely have resulted in a great and strengthening a cavalry house which would be a great boon to society.
Drop and greatly aid in bringing it about by will calling attention of their conduct and conversation and of the young men with whom they associate. Her address was a timely one.
