

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE PROTECTOR. Sir,—In making the following observations upon an editorial in the last Examiner, on the subject of the approaching fast, I would premise that I am unimpaired by any captious spirit, or desire to find fault. On the contrary, I consider the remarks of the editor in the main to be both suitable and proper; but there is one remark which I am about to notice, evidently founded on error, and calculated to mislead the unwary. The writer would fain impress upon the public mind, that the act of fasting and humiliation serves as an atonement for sin. Now, this is totally at variance with revealed truth. No amount of external humiliation, nor even the most earnest prayer, can effect so important an object. Nothing save the blood of Christ can atone for sin. Fasting, though doubtless a Christian duty, is merely an evidence of contrition. It may be, and often is, accompanied by those Divine graces which can alone make it efficacious—namely, genuine faith and deep repentance—both the gifts of an all-merciful God. The hypocrite may fast in sackcloth and in ashes, and call in vain upon his God. His offering will be unbloody and unaccepted. We are not to infer, however, that national humiliation, or even personal acknowledgment of sin may not propitiate in some measure the Divine mercy. We find that Ahab, that wicked prince, humbled himself, and fasted, and wept; and that the Lord, in consequence, postponed the infliction of his wrath. The outward and public acknowledgment of God, and painful submission to his will, may avert for a while his chastisement; but when repentance is insincere. But the humiliation of the believer is of a very different stamp. With them it is no work of merit, no facious atonement for sin. It is no hypocritical service, but the outward exhibition of the anguish of the soul, the anguish of a broken heart, and the bitter grief of a mournful and subdued spirit. Sins national and personal are, on these public occasions, more vividly brought to his remembrance; and the miserable sinner, when he looks upon himself as miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. He considers, also, that "his very prayers are sin"—that his repentance needs to be renewed; "and that he should not cease to cry for mercy, until he has seen the face of his Father in Heaven." He looks to God, not to himself, for the atonement of his sins. He looks to the merits of Christ, and not to his own. He looks to the Divine institutions, he only hopes for pardon and acceptance through the blood and righteousness of his gracious Redeemer. He trusts that these brief remarks may serve to counteract the ill impression that may result from the above error, and which was probably inadvertently penned. I am, &c.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE PROTECTOR. Sir,—In reviewing Maclean's letter in the Islander of date Nov. 6th, my remarks may happily be very brief. The first three paragraphs, being apart from the subject in dispute, and quite in keeping with the well known character of the writer, require no answer from me. The fourth, he brings forward an instance "illustrative" of what he calls my "deceptive disposition." What is the instance? It is a story of a man, who had broken off, for the purpose of misrepresenting what he wrote; and that the readers of the Protektor might believe that he "had deliberately undervalued prebyterianism" in a comparative point of view. Let the Protektor and Protektor turn to that clause in my letter beginning with the quotation—"We do not mean to insinuate that prebyterianism," &c., and read my remarks upon it: they will find that I have not only stated the value of prebyterianism, either absolutely or comparatively. Who now is the deceiver? The object of the quotation was to criticize the term "prebyterianism"—to which my remarks were entirely confined. I have expounded its meaning, so far as could be ascertained, the clause in which it appeared alone was necessary. One of two conclusions follow: either Maclean's mental powers are imbecile, or he has intentionally attempted to deceive the public. In the next, he alludes to my statement that the vast majority of the Scottish members in the British parliament voted in favor of the evangelical mission, or, in other words, "in favor of the statement"—By no means. The quotation is followed by some vague allusion, showing the nature of the foundation upon which he rests his charge. "Neither that appeal, nor any appeal of the sort, goes before the House of Commons at all; nor do any of the peers vote upon it." It is in these words that he has intentionally attempted to deceive the public. MISCELLANEOUS.

HOW TO PREVENT COLDS. If people were blessed with common sense, and a little wholesome self-denial, they might often escape severe colds and fevers by resolute measures adopted in season.

There is probably not a man, woman, or child, who is not as often as once a year afflicted with a severe cold, which ends in a cough or catarrh; and thousands there are who die every year of consumption, brought on by taking cold. He, then, who should discover a certain and effectual remedy for this complaint, would be justly regarded as one of the greatest benefactors of the age.

"A bad cold, like measles or mumps, or other similar ailments, will run its course in about ten days, in spite of what may be done for it, unless remedial means are employed for it within forty-eight hours of its inception. Many a useful life may be spared to be increasingly useful, by cutting a cold short in the following safe and simple manner.

On the first day of taking a cold, there is a very unpleasant sensation of chilliness. The moment you observe this, go to your room and stay there. Keep it as quiet as possible, and let the fever run its course. On the second day, when the fever has subsided, and the chilliness has passed away, take a hot bath, and then go to bed.

"In addition to this, put your feet half leg deep, as hot as you bear it, adding hot water from time to time for a quarter of an hour, so that the water shall be hotter when you take your feet out than when you put them in. Then dry them thoroughly, and put on thick, warm woolen stockings, even if it be summer.

The above expedient is a severe one for epicures and gluttons, but most persons will find it easier to fast one day than to be sick a fortnight. The writer has usually found that fasting for three or four meals is sufficient, but doubtless the whole remedy is better than a part.

Let those who are often afflicted with colds—ministers, students and consumptives generally—cut out the above directions and preserve them; if faithfully followed, they will do you more good than all the pulmonary, cold cordials, and other hurtful nostrums, which now load your shelves.

HE NEVER WILL MAKE ANY NOISE IN THE WORLD. How often do we hear these words sneeringly used by men in speaking of their contemporaries! Especially do we hear them from the lips of educated men, who have acquired some little notoriety upon which they pride themselves.

Every Laplander, however poor, has his dozen or two dozen deer; and the flocks of a Lapp Crozen amount sometimes to two thousand head. As soon as a young lady is born—after having been duly rolled in the snow—she is dowered by her father with a certain number of deer, which are immediately branded with her initials, and thenceforth kept apart as her special property.

How to Cultivate a Talent for Drawing.—The ability to delineate objects of nature and art is not only one of the most graceful, but most useful accomplishments, and should be cultivated by every person who has a taste for it, and especially should it be fostered in childhood. On this subject Ruskin, the eloquent writer on architecture, painting, and the ornamental arts, says:—"If a child has talent for drawing, it will be continually drawing on what paper it can get; and should be allowed to scribble at its own free will, due praise being given for every appearance of care or truth in its efforts. It should be allowed to amuse itself with cheap colours almost as soon as it has sense enough to wish for them. If it merely dabbles the paper with shapeless stains, the colour-box may be taken away till it knows better; but as soon as it begins painting red coats on soldiers, striped flags to ships, &c., it should have colours at command; and, without restraining its choice of subject in that imaginative and historical art of a military tendency, which children delight in, (generally quite as valuable, by the way, as any historical picture painted by their elders,) it should be gently led by its parents to try to draw, in such childish fashion as may be, the things it can see and like—birds, or butterflies, or flowers or fruit. In later years, the indulgence of using the colors should only be granted as a reward, after it has shown care and progress in its drawings with pencil."
