Poetry. DO YOUR LEVEL BEST. BOYS. o your level best, boys,

Duty's call is urgent,
And life no empty jest;
Pull yourselves together, boys,
And do your level best. Do your level best, boys, Whate'er your lot may be.
Grinding in the study,
Or sailing on the sea,
Pen or plow or hammer,
Or in scarlet tunic drest,
Pull yourselves together, boys,
And do your level best.

Do your level best, boys,
Of indolence beware.
Yours is now the springtime,
Improve the season rare.
Use each precious moment;
All trifling ways detest.
Pull yourselves together, boys,
And do your level best.

Do your level best, boys,
All honest work will tell.
Though the task be irksome,
Resolve to do it well.
Tinsel oft may glitter.

(By Eben E. Rexford.)

Mrs. Doolittle has spasms of economy. That is, once in a while sh gets an idea in her head that it is he duty, as a faithful wife and mother, to do something to save, thus helping Mr. Doolittle in his provisions for a possible 'rainy day,' and setting a good example betore her daughters who are rapidly growing to woman-possible 'rtany day,' and setting a good example before her daughters who are rapidly growing to womanhood.

She has her most severe attacks of this nature after reading some of the letters in the household magazines in which women tell how they have saved a good deal of money by making things at home which furniture-dealers ask exortatant prices for.

Mr. Doolittle always has a sad look when she has one of her 'economy spells,' as he rather irreverently terms it, because he knows, from painful and 'costly experience, just how matters will turn out. The result is invariably the same. She makes learful and wonderful things, which are supposed to be of great household value, and he and 'the girls' are experimented on with them. After a little, they are relegated to the attic or woodshed, and for a time there is peace in the family. Then the 'disease,' as he calls it, breaks out again violently, and sadness prevails in the household. This sadness, however, never is shared by Mrs. Doolittle, for the worthy woman is upheld, in the face of family opposition, by the consciousness that her motives are most commendable ones. Ought not a woman to do all in her power to make it easier for her husband? This she tries to do, and "It must kind o' bother her some, It reckon," said Mr. Doolittle to the week. "She's been at it four days, now."

"She's had three or four pounds of nails, and eight yards of denims, four rolls of cotton batting, and three papers of tacks, that I know of," said Maggie. "It il cost her something by the time she gets done with it, she'll find out."

"I'm the one that'll have to pay the bill." said Mr. Doolittle, with a long sigh. "An' the thing won't be worth shucks when it's done. It'll go into the runseum in less'n a month." The 'museum' was a room in which a collection of Mrs. Doolittle amounced that her undertaking was nearing completion. "I guess I'll have it ready to bring in by supper-time," she said.

When supper-time came Mr. Doolittle was invited to help bring 'the thing' into the sitting-room. He complied grimly, and accompanied his wife to be bring 'the wing, showing angles of various kinds through the cloth covering, in wields though the cloth covering, in the other work-room. The box-lounge stood in the middle of the floor, a great, un-wields thing, showing an

"It bothered me some to get the joints all right," admitted Mrs. Doolittle, "but I nailed them good, an' they'll hold."

"Marthy," said her husband solemnly, "where did you get the lumber?"

"Out of the granary," she answered.
"Why?"

It requires study and application to excel and nowhere are these things of greater benefit than on the farm. There is no profession which does as little advertising as that of agriculture and for that reason a farmer who does raise good produce may benefit commercially by the advertising which successful competition entails. If a man produces prize, stuff his neighbors want to buy it of him to propagate and any buyer will more readily purchase apples or vegetables from a prize winner than anyone else.

We are glad to give the above letter to our readers as coming from a recognized authority, for we have been considering the necessity of taking up this same subject for some time. This year, though we have not yet seen any of the bluestone on the market, the lower prices over preceding years at which it is quoted has made us suspicious that we may be paying for adulterated sulphate though the low price of copper undoubtedly has some thing to do with it.

We took this question up briefly two years ago in this column, and now take the liberty to repeat what appeared then:

That copper sulphate is copper sulphate, no matter where it is purchased or made, has long been the opinion of the writer, though several local farmers and dealers have spoken of different kinds. One farmer last year and the search of seed when it is supposed the grain before the season gets too late, but we have often seen this work left until the last minute when inferior seed would have to be sown, as there was no time took for better. This spring we particularly advised that seed corn, be secured early and tested. Last season being so unfavorable to the growth of corn, the seed offered this spring will probably be of a very low vitality. At some of the American stations, where corn has been tested, not more then 75 per cent. These resilies would seem to indicate that twee the amount used other years of seed corn will be required per acre this year. This is a matter that requires impediate attention, as there is always a strong demand for corn of the second farmers and dealers have spoken of different kinds. PIES AND CAKES.

Of course, it is understood that no one factor of our lives passes out to leave a void untilled and unfillable, so it is not to be thought that the retirement of pie and cake has left us without recourse to sweets of their nature. Children need models more than crit-

—Shoestring belts are a recent discovery. They are made of black and white and brown and white shoestrings braided in strands enough to make a cincture of the desired width. The ends of the strings are to be tied in hard knots, then fringed, the result being a series of tassels. Some of the more festive belts are of plaid choestrings, and others have baby ribbon in one or more colors braided through them. These belts, queer though they sound, are said to outline the waist very prettily, besides having castiron wearing properties.

At last she seemed to have forgother it; but one Sunday Mrs. Jones, who had been too ill to go to church, asked her if she could tell what the minister had preached about in his sermon.

"Ch, yes'm," she answered. "He preached about our Lord going up and to the mountain and being tempted by—by—by the gentlemen who keeps hell!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

OVERREACHED HIMSELF.

OVERREACHED HIMSELF.

It is not often that an outsider gets ahead of a Fittsburg man of business, but occasionally they score against each other. The president of one of the largest trust companies a few weeks ago completed the purchase of some valuable coal lands by paying an old farmer who lives near the Smoky City several hundred thousand dollars. He sent for the cashier of his trust company.

"I am paying this man in cash, Mr.—" he said, "and it is a fine chance to secure a big deposit for the trust company. Make him a good interest offer."

The cashier sent for the man and made a strong talk for the deposit. "How much interest are your cetting.

"Did you see a coach go down the road a while ago?"

"Indeed I did sir. One of the horses was a gray horse, and the other was a roan and lame in the off leg."

"I thought I heard some hunting there on the edge of the woods."

"Yes, sir. One of them was Colonel Jones. He was the tall one. The second was Major Peters, and the third one was Tom McKee. Colonel Jones had one of them newfangled breech-loading guns that break in two."

The breasts of veal, a part usually scorned in this country, can be made into a delicious roast by boning at. A great many of the bones do not need taking out, but become tender when cooked. Remove only the larger, firmer bones. Flatten it and season it thoroughly. Make a stuffing of foremeat, including about a pound of lean veal ground fine, three small skinneds assages, the crumbs from half a loaf of bread, soaked in water and then squeezed; a tablespoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of pepper, with a little sage and chopped parsley, and finally two onions chopped fine and fried in butter. Grind the dressing as fine as possible and rub it through a sieve. Stuff the breast, roll it up and either roast it or braise it. If braised it will be necessary to slice an onion and a carrot over it, and add a pint of rich stock to baste it with. In the oven the meat should be cooked until it is thoroughly browned, and frequently basted while it is cooking. It requires a great deal of intelligence in cooking to use veal as economically as the French do. Not one piece is ever used to disadvantage in their kitchens. The toughest ends are carefully saved and seasoned and made into as delicious a dish of meat as the imagination can well conjure up. In America the piece used chiefly is the fillet veal, as veal cutlet, and because this is an expen ive piece it is used continually and the proper it is used continually and the filled wars.
