Mr. JOSEPH JEAN (Maisonneuve) (Translation): I had not intended to take part in this debate at its present stage, but, the statement having been made that the increased population of the island of Montreal is the cause of the extensive readjustments that the majority in this house is seeking to effect in 52 of the 65 electoral divisions of the province of Quebec, I thought it advisable to set forth the situation with respect to the island of Montreal, as it appears to me personally, without in any way binding my colleagues or my leaders, in order that it may be well understood that the changes it is necessary to make in the distribution of the Montreal constituencies in no way justify the almost general redistribution it is sought to effect in the remainder of the province.

I wish also to throw some light on certain points regarding the procedure that appears to have been followed in redistributing the Montreal island constituencies, in order that it may not later be said that we willingly accepted, or that we suggested, changes that are not rational and that do not conform to the interests and the views of the people of the island of Montreal.

We, the Liberal members for Montreal, have understood that the majority in this house would decide in the last analysis, and that it would be impossible to reach an understanding were we to insist on the application of logical principles in every case. We had nevertheless to take into consideration the wishes of the majority, to study the various plans submitted, to understand their import, and to protest against the most flagrant wrongs, leaving, for the rest, to our friends opposite the entire responsibility of the changes to be effected.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): It is in that spirit, Mr. Chairman, that we have approached the problem of the redistribution of the Montreal island constituencies and that we have reached. I shall not say an agreement, but more or less satisfactory conclusions, which, though lacking as they are in soundness and in conformity to common sense and to the interests of the population, reflect the opinion of the majority in this house, and which we have been obliged to accept as the lesser evil.

Various bases of redistribution, as regards Montreal, were possible. It was acknowledged in the first place that Montreal was entitled to a larger number of members, by reason of its increased population. It had in 1921 a population of 724,205, divided in thirteen constituencies, giving a unit of 55,700. According to the census of 1931, its population is 1,003,868. The unit of 1921 would yield at least eighteen constituencies. But, in order not to disturb too much the remainder of the province, it was agreed, I suppose, to increase the number of Montreal divisions to sixteen, or three more than in 1921.

The addition of three electoral divisions to Montreal should not, it seems to me, necessitate changes in more than six or seven rural ridings. However, I shall leave the discussion of this phase of the question to my friends representing the other counties of the province.

The addition of three electoral divisions to the island of Montreal would give an average population of 62,000 per constituency. It should have been easy to establish these three new divisions without upsetting the present constituency boundaries of the entire island. The thirteen present divisions of Montreal island have the following populations: Maisonneuve, the division I have the honour to represent, 116,311; Hochelaga, 87,096; St. Mary's 65,555; St. Denis, 140,940; St. James, 54,903; Cartier, 48,064; Laurier-Outremont, 88,579; St. Ann's, 60,696; St. Lawrence-St. George, 37,861; St. Antoine, 36,033; Mount Royal, 93,035; St. Henry, 44,019, and Jacques Cartier, 130,776.

Had we taken the three most populous constituencies of the whole Dominion, viz.: Maisonneuve, St. Denis and Jacques Cartier, which cover the entire suburban area of Montreal and which are practically the only ones where the population is likely to increase, and divided their combined population of 388,027 by the unit of 62,000 established for the sixteen electoral divisions, we would have had six constituencies instead of three. Such a division would have settled the Montreal representation without difficulty or acrimony. For I believe that the electors of the ten other Montreal divisions do not desire any changes and that their present representatives have no objection to retaining them as they are.

Apparently that did not suit our friends opposite, who set about to draw up all sorts of plans, each one more fantastic than the other, until they came to the one now before this house. But it now appears that it is to be changed once more, at the request of the Liberal members, in order to adjust certain wrongs it contains.

I thought it well to ascertain for myself the division of population between the fifteen constituencies as described in the bill, and I wish to lay the figures before the house in order to throw some light upon the subject. According to the bill, the new constituency of Mercier, which is a detachment of the present division of Maisonneuve, would have a population of 68,560, and the new constituency of Maisonneuve-Rosemount, another detachment from my riding, would have a population of 62,558. Hochelaga has 82,100; Lafontaine, a new division, taken from the present constituency of St. Denis, 66,234; St. Denis, 77,259; St. James, 95,942; Cartier, 59,361; Laurier, a new division, detached from Laurier-Outremont, 66,356; Outremont, 50,948; St. Ann's, 41,556; St. Antoine-Westmount, 43,938; St. Lawrence-St. George, 46,632; Mount Royal, 63,451; St. Henry, 75,458; Verdun, a new constituency, 63,107, and Jacques Cartier, 45,544.

As I stated further back, amendments have been suggested to right the undeniable wrong committed in the bill as regards the constituency of St. Mary, and, if I am correctly informed, these amendments will distribute the population as follows: Mercier, a new division, 72,060; Maisonneuve-Rosemount, 69,534; Hochelaga, 76,742; St. Mary's, 76,555; Lafontaine would disappear; St. Denis, 83,949; St. James, 73,813; Cartier, 59,361; Laurier, 66,356; Outremont, 50,948; St. Ann's, 41,556; St. Antoine-Westmount, 43,938; St. Lawrence-St. George, 46,632; Mount Royal, 63,451; St. Henry, 75,458; Verdun, 63,107, and Jacques Cartier, 45,544.

This new plan is certainly more acceptable that the one contained in the bill and we are quite ready to agree to it in order to avoid unduly prolonging the debate. We had prepared, however, a far more suitable plan which we submitted, not as being an ideal one, but as being better suited to the needs of the people of Montreal and as meeting half-way the requirements of our friends opposite. I wish to lay it before you, such as we have prepared it, in order to show that, on this side of the house, for myself at least. . . . .

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me to put a question?

Mr. JEAN (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): Was it not understood last week that the redistribution of the Montreal divisions would be effected following an agreement between the two sides of the House?

Mr. JEAN (Translation): I do not think there was any final understanding, although we reached certain conclusions. If my hon. friend can assure us that there are changes. . . In any case, I wish to submit the changes that we suggested and which are, I say, more acceptable than the one set forth in the bill. I wish to state that we have endeavoured to meet the requirements of our hon. friends opposite.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I would like the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to place his proposals in writing.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): Last week we decided to accept your conditions and we asked the clerks to insert the descriptions as agreed upon. I am greatly surprised to learn to-day that you have other suggestions to make.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Your verbal propositions are worthless.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): They are the propositions of honest men.

Mr JEAN (Translation): In the first place, I must say to my hon. friend that, in so far as I am concerned, I have neither accepted nor rejected these propositions. However, I am keeping an eye on my interests and those of my constituents in connection with this matter.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont) (Translation): Yesterday, I asked the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) to kindly submit the government's plan regarding the island of Montreal. He replied that he would do so later. I am in entire agreement with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier when he says that last week we had reached an understanding regarding the redistribution of the Montreal island divisions. Under that plan, St. Mary's was to remain and Lafontaine to disappear. The population of the latter was to be divided between Hochelaga, St. Denis and St. Mary's.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): And part of it was to go to Mercier.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont) (Translation): We accepted the representations of our friends on the committee, but we received no confirmation of this plan and that is why I asked the hon. minister yesterday, to tell us what the government intended to do regarding Montreal. If my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier will tell us now that the plan submitted last week is the one the government will submit to this house, I think the debate will be greatly simplified.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Marine has just left his seat. I must say that, up to last week, we had practically settled the redistribution of Montreal Island. If, in the course of the day, the Liberal representative on the committee, the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier) will kindly meet the hon. Minister of Marine and myself, we will be ready to continue negotiations with a view to reaching an agreement, if possible.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I am ready to meet the hon. Minister of Marine and my hon. friend the member for Jacques Cartier immediately. Should we come to an agreement, it will be useless to pursue the debate.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): In that case, I shall ask the member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Jean) to postpone his speech regarding the island of Montreal.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Let him finish it.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): I am willing to put off my remarks until the conclusion of the negotiations, but I should like to point out that, in the course of the observations I have made, I did not say that we rejected or that we accepted the proposals and the plan submitted to us. I set out the situation that is being created and gave figures that, I believe, will help to solve the problem.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): It seems to me that, having almost reached an understanding, it is not right to take advantage of the Montreal island situation to make political capital.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): I have no objection to postpone my observations, and, if we succeed in coming to an agreement, I shall be happy to say nothing more on the subject.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton): Mr. Chairman, I have listened very attentively to the debate which has taken place during the last few days. The speech of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Jean), and those of yesterday and the day before, seem to justify the conclusion that it is impossible to come to any agreement in this matter. I had understood for the last four or five days, and my understanding was increased by the speeches of yesterday and the day before, that the question of the island of Montreal had been settled and that an agreement had been arrived at. Since the so-called conciliation committee has been functioning our work has been less direct but I understood that a suggestion had been made to hon. friends opposite with regard to the island of Montreal that had been accepted. But the discussion of the last day or two has led me to believe that it is impossible to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion.

I was somewhat delighted and I must confess greatly surprised at certain remarks made the day before yesterday by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). If we are to take his word the members from Quebec on the special committee have been wonderful prestidigitators. According to him, they have succeeded in making Conservative constituencies out of Liberal constituencies. I must confess that I am not quite as optimistic as the hon. member for Quebec East, although I hope his prediction will be realized. He gave the principle under which he thought this committee should have worked, namely, not to disturb municipal, county or district lines. His exact words are reported on page 5309 of Hansard, as follows:

> —how deeply attached the citizens of that province are to their municipal lines, which have existed from time immemorial. That applies to the municipal lines, the county lines, even the district lines.

Before I go into my argument in detail, I must say right now that I disagree absolutely with the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Quebec East. In disagreeing with him I find myself very much in accord with the opinion expressed yesterday by the former Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin). He admitted that in many cases it was impossible to do this, but I desire to go further and say that in most cases it is impossible not to change these lines. In my opinion municipal, county and district lines should be forgotten absolutely when we are arranging federal electoral districts. I do not intend to argue this point at any length, but how can we respect municipal, provincial and district lines in the province of Quebec when there are sixty-five federal constituencies, seventy-four rural county divisions, and ninety or ninety-one provincial electoral districts? I think these figures show that it is impossible not to disturb these lines and they should be forgotten when we are making a redistribution for federal purposes. But none of these imaginary boundary lines, if you wish to call them that, are being disturbed. The hon. member for Quebec East pointed out that the people should not be set apart. They are not being set apart. Municipal boundaries are not being disturbed; county boundaries are not being disturbed, and the people will continue to work and meet together as they have in the past, whether the federal electoral district is extended or contracted. That will have nothing to do with municipal or county administration. Let me illustrate my point in a very few words by referring to my own constituency which has not been changed. As far as county purposes are concerned, Compton belongs to four different counties. For county purposes, a few parishes in my constituency go in with the county of Stanstead while others have to go to the Sherbrooke county council. In the eastern part of the county they go to the Frontenac county council, and the bulk of the county goes to the county council of Compton. Nobody has ever complained or found fault in regard to that. Yesterday an hon. member said that we were going as far as to divide parishes. I have that situation in my county too; one parish has been divided into two for a long time and nobody has complained. Therefore on that point I wish to give my opinion as strongly as I can. As I said before, I am very much in accord with the ex-Minister of Marine, that this action might have been taken now, but I am sure it will be taken when the next redistribution bill is drafted when county lines and, indeed, all lines should be forgotten.

I wish to make a few remarks in connection with population. It has been said by hon. members opposite and, in fact, by some hon. members on this side, that we in this bill have tried to equalize population. That is true. But as the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin) said yesterday, this is absolutely impossible if we take the province as a whole. I wish to tell the committee the idea on which we worked in this redistribution. Some counties, for certain but not in each case for the same reasons, have not been changed. In the eastern townships practically no changes have been made because, in view of the fact that they are the only rural part of the province where the English speaking element can secure representation, not only was it a matter of agreement but there is in the British North America Act a provision whereby the county boundaries of the eastern townships cannot be changed except by the wish of the majority of the members for those counties; at all events, those counties have not been changed. Therefore we cannot take as a basis for the average population the counties of the eastern townships.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Will the hon. member allow me to ask a question for the purpose of information? Does the reference made in the British North America Act to the counties of the eastern townships not apply only so far as provincial counties are concerned? I am not sure; I am asking that as a matter of information.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The hon. member is right; it applies only to the counties for the Quebec legislature.

Mr. GOBEIL: The hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier) and the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) may be right. I am not a lawyer, but I was told that; in fact, I read it in the act. It may be, however, it applies only for provincial purposes, but I am not going to discuss that.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): It is for the provincial field only.

Mr. GOBEIL: As I have said, the counties of the eastern townships have practically not been changed, so we cannot take the population of those counties as a basis on which to work. Some other counties like Vaudreuil-Soulanges and Argenteuil have not been changed, because it is almost impossible to change the boundaries, but the principle on which we work was to take a group of contiguous counties and try to equalize the population in that group. I am going to take only one group of counties to illustrate my statement, and I will take that consisting of Bellechasse, Montmagny, L'Islet and Kamouraska, four counties in regard to which we heard many arguments yesterday and the day before. My hon. friends opposite declare that L'Islet will disappear and that we should have joined L'Islet and Montmagny as a whole, leaving the other two alone. There was no one county that was bound to disappear, but out of that group of four it was understood that we were going to make three. What we have done is simply this. Instead of joining Montmagny and L'Islet, giving them a population of practically 40,000 and leaving the other two counties one on each side with a population of 21,296 and 24,085 respectively, we thought it was more practical to divide the population in that group of counties so as to make three counties with populations as follows:

Constituency—	Population
Bellechasse	27,480
Montmagny-L'Islet	30,869
Kamouraska	30,852

I am not going to argue this any further; I simply point out that this is the method we have adopted. I might take other groups of counties in other parts of the province and find that the population was perhaps 5,000 or 8,000 or even 10,000 more than in this group, but it all depends upon the population of the surrounding counties.

The county of Chapleau was referred to yesterday by the hon. member for Richelieu. It is quite true that we have a new county there with a population of only a little over 21,000, while the other new county has a population of about 40,000. In the case of Chapleau, however, we took into consideration the fact that it is a new territory which has developed very rapidly. As every hon. member knows, in the Abitibi district fifteen years ago there was practically nobody. In view of the present colonization program which will very likely be further extended due to the present situation, we have considered that in ten years from now the population will probably be 50,000. Another reason for our course is the fact that the county is about 300 or 400 miles long, I am not quite sure which, but at all events not less than 300 miles. As to the other new county taken from Portneuf, Champlain and Three Rivers, which has a population of over 40,000, we thought in that case there was a question whether we should put La Tuque in the district of Portneuf in the new county or leave it out. But as this was almost entirely an industrial county in which the electors were all deriving their living from the pulp industry, we thought it was only logical we should put all that industrial section together.

Another argument advanced against us, as I said at the beginning, was this. The hon. member for Quebec East went so far as to say that we had succeeded in making Conservative counties out of Liberal. That may be true; I am not going to dispute the fact that Champlain and Three Rivers will probably be safer counties for Conservatives after the redistribution than they are to-day, but I would ask my hon. friends opposite to be fair and to recognize that if that is a fact it is equally true, that the new county of Lafleche-St. Maurice, if we take as our guide the vote of 1930, is a solidly Liberal county. We have not done anything to attain that. We have simply taken the population as it was, and according to the vote of 1930 this new county is a county in which the Conservative party has no fighting ground at all. The same remark applies to that other new county. We have taken the people who were in Abitibi. We have not changed their political faith at all, and I think my hon. friends opposite will admit that there too we have a solid Liberal county. But that question was not considered when we made this redistribution. We simply divided the counties the best we could. That was the thought we had in mind, and that is what we did.

The hon. member for Quebec East also said at page 5309 of Hansard:

> And I wish to say immediately that in any place or any constituency where any change was made, as my right hon. friend suggests, in 1924, which should not have been made—I go further, any change that was made either fairly or unfairly—I am quite willing to undo it. But it is not necessary to change the whole map of the province of Quebec for that purpose.

That brings me to a point which I wish to bring to the attention of the house. The hon. member for Quebec East also said in the same speech in regard to the county of Dorchester:

> St. Maxime de Scott was put there in 1924, so let him take it away if that is the purpose of this redistribution bill.

It is not my intention, nor could I do it in any event, to belittle in any sense the remarks of my hon. friend from Quebec East, but at the same time the truth is the truth and the facts are the facts. I say to my hon. friend from Quebec East that there was no change made in the county of Dorchester in 1924—none at all. I have here the official list of all the changes that were made in 1924, and it shows that none were made in the county of Dorchester.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Then why make changes this year?

Mr. GOBEIL: If my hon. friend will wait for a moment I will show him that although the federal redistribution committee did not make any changes, there were changes made. Although the federal redistribution act did not make any change in the county of Dorchester, what do we find? We find that after the redistribution of 1914 the parish of St. Maxime was in the county of Beauce, and part of another township was in the county of Dorchester. We also find that another part of the territory shown here on this map was in the county of Dorchester. That was after the redistribution following the census of 1911. At the redistribution of 1924 no changes were made in that county, but when we look at the official map what do we find? We find that after 1924 this parish of St. Maxime is placed in the county of Dorchester, and we find that there was transferred—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What is the degree of latitude?

Mr. GOBEIL: Never mind that at the moment. We find that another parish that belonged to the county of Dorchester was transferred to Bellechasse. I am simply giving my own word that when I compared the official maps of 1914 and 1924 I found that changes were made in the province of Quebec which involved thirty-three counties, and when I looked to see the number of changes made by the redistribution committee I found that there were only seven. What happened was this: My contention, and I ask every member of the house whether I am right or wrong, is that changes of this nature did not occur in any other province of this Dominion except Quebec. What happened in that province was that between 1911 and 1921, the census years, or between 1914 and 1924, the years in which the Redistribution Act passed the federal house, the Quebec legislature itself made several changes in the boundaries of provincial counties. In fact, it is making changes almost every year in the boundaries of some counties. So in 1924 when the redistribution bill was before this house the changes that had been made by the Quebec legislature were incorporated in the federal Redistribution Act without any special mention of them being made in the act itself; but that act took as a basis the new county boundaries that had been made by the Quebec legislature. That is why I said at the outset that the provincial county boundaries should be absolutely forgotten for federal electoral purposes.

The hon. member for Quebec East also said that we were carving up the province of Quebec, and we have heard the same thing said a hundred times during the last few days. It has been said that we were making changes in almost every county in the province of Quebec. But I ask, is it fair that we should take as a basis of a federal redistribution the changes in the county boundaries that were made by the province of Quebec? In 1924 more than thirty-three such changes were made in the province, excluding the city of Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Might I ask if the hon. gentleman would mention in detail the thirty-three changes that he said were made in the province of Quebec?

Mr. GOBEIL: I will name the counties, if that is satisfactory to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Give the counties.

Mr. GOBEIL: The county of Bagot—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What changes were made in the county of Bagot?

[Mr. Gobeil.]

Mr. GOBEIL: My time will not permit me to give the entire list of all those changes. I have only so many minutes left, Mr. Chairman, but when I have finished my remarks, if there is time left, I shall be glad to give those details.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but might I say this?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Shaver): If the hon. member permits the question.

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I put a question to the hon. gentleman with his permission?

Mr. GOBEIL: No, because you are trying to deprive me of the opportunity to say what I want to say.

Mr. MANION: He has the floor.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The hon. gentleman mentioned certain changes, I ask him to name those changes.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has the floor and has a right to retain the floor, he should not be interrupted.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) is advancing a very serious argument. He says there was an alteration made in 1924 in the redistribution in thirty-three counties. If his information is correct he should name the counties.

Mr. DUPRE: This reply has nothing to do with the point of order. The point of order is whether the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) has the right to interrupt the hon. member for Compton without his permission. Permission not being given the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay is out of order.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Are you the chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Shaver): I ask the hon. gentleman kindly to allow the hon. member for Compton to finish his speech.

Mr. GOBEIL: I am willing and pleased to name the counties in which these changes were made, and if my hon. friends opposite want more details I will have those details typed for them and send them as many copies as they want. They are: Bagot, Beauce, Bellechasse, Berthier-Maskinongé, Brome-Missisquoi—here is another striking example —Charlevoix-Saguenay, Chateauguay-Huntingdon, Chicoutimi, Dorchester, Drummond-Arthabaska, Gaspe, Joliette, Kamouraska, Labelle, Laprairie-Napierville, L'Assomption-Montcalm, L'Islet, Matane, Megantic, Montmagny, Nicolet, Richelieu, Richmond-Wolfe, Rimouski, Sherbrooke, St. Johns-Iberville, Shefford, Terrebonne, Yamaska, Wright. If my hon. friends opposite want more details I have here all the territories by square miles that were transferred from one county to another between 1914 and 1924 by the provincial government and incorporated in the federal bill without any mention of it in the bill.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me to put a question?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): He is more courteous to you than to me.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Is it because you represent a Tory county or because, having narrow views, you were able to do what is being done in the province of Quebec, that you were appointed to the redistribution committee?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I will say quite frankly, in answer to the hon. member for Lotbinière, that I am ignorant of the reasons why my colleagues made me a member of the redistribution committee.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): It is because we had confidence in you.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I suppose my colleagues considered I would do as well as another. In any case, I was a member of the committee.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I must say they made a very poor choice.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): That is a matter of opinion. My colleagues selected me to represent them on the committee; they must have thought I would do the work satisfactorily. I acted to the best of my knowledge and ability, and I am convinced that the bill, as it now stands before the house, is fairer to the people of the province of Quebec than the one—I was on the point of uttering an unparliamentary word—of 1924, which hypocritically effected changes in 26 Quebec counties. These changes had been made by the provincial government and should never have been effected.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I prefer a hypocritical settlement that gives justice to one that does not give justice and is made by a hypocrite who does not name himself.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I have not the least objection to answering reasonable questions put to me by my colleagues. I have never understood, however, that this house is a suitable place to exchange remarks in language that would not be tolerated elsewhere. I can say only this: the member for Lotbinière, I have not the slightest doubt, fulfils his parliamentary duties conscientiously and to the best of his knowledge, and the member for Compton has done and will continue to do likewise.

Mr. Chairman, I am through with my remarks. It was not my intention to go into details in making these few statements. I just wanted to place before the house the rules or ideas under which we worked and to deny certain allegations made in this house by hon. members who have spoken before me. I wanted to place before the house these injustices, as I see them, that were perpetuated in the redistribution of 1924. I will have something more to say later on in connection with the schedule, but at present I am through.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I will now conclude the speech which I started yesterday evening.

The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) said that one parish in his constituency was divided, that he had only part of it in his constituency, that part is in the township of Hereford, which has belonged to his constituency since confederation and before.

Mr. GOBEIL: Mr. Chairman, I never said that.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member said he had part of the parish in his constituency. I have a note of it.

Mr. GOBEIL: I object, Mr. Chairman, I never mentioned constituency. I do not want the hon. gentleman to put in my mouth words that I never uttered.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We heard you.

Mr. POULIOT: I never heard anything so extraordinary. I have a note here that the hon. gentleman said he had the parish for a long time in his constituency; which is the case.

Mr. GOBEIL: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: Then why deny it and disturb me when I speak?

Mr. GOBEIL: I never said "since confederation."

Mr. POULIOT: Perhaps the hon. member has forgotten, just as he has forgotten the name of the constituency of the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Verville). But I know the parish of St. Herménégilde in the township of Hereford which is part in Compton constituency and part in Stanstead. What I say is that the township of Hereford has belonged to the electoral district of Compton since before confederation, and it is still there. The reason why it is still there is that the boundaries of the constituency of the hon. gentleman have not been changed since 1853. If he does not know that he can learn it now, it will be beneficial to him.

There is another thing. He repeated after the big guns, the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) and others, that municipal and provincial lines did not count. Did he say that or did he not? Yes, he admits it.

Mr. GOBEIL: I never said "did not count."

Mr. POULIOT: Did not count for federal purposes.

Mr. GOBEIL: No, I said should be overlooked.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is the same thing.

Mr. GOBEIL: It is not the same thing at all.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, we call that hair-splitting, and as I am not a barber, I am not fond of it. Sir, let us say that the hon. gentleman contends that in a federal redistribution provincial and municipal lines should be overlooked. I take an entirely different point of view. It is a matter of mandate. The hon. gentleman has received a power of attorney from each one who voted for him. I say it is only fair that he should give an account of the way he has fulfilled his mandate, and that he will do, because there is no change in his constituency. The electors said to the hon. member for Compton, to the Solicitor General, to the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Fortin), to the minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and to others, "Go to the House of Commons and represent us there." It is only fair, sportsmanlike and just that a man who has received such a mandate should go back to the same people and have the courage to face them, as the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin) said yesterday. One who is not afraid to meet the people who accorded him such an honour will go back and tell them what he has done. What will my hon. friend from Compton say? "I recommended my brother to the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian government and others so that he could sell his jam." That is a fine way to fulfil a mandate, but that is what the hon. gentleman has done. The hon. member for Compton read a letter which he had received from a man named Vaughan or some other official of the Canadian National who is ready to lick the boots of any member on the government side in order to keep his job; in that letter information was given up to July of last year. Then my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), who is listening to me now, refused to give the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) the further information for which he was asked. I hope the hon. member for Compton, who was so busy selling jam for his brother to the Canadian government and the Canadian National Railways, will tell his electors how much time he devoted to that purpose, and how many of the 15 cent and 25 cent jars of jam were sold after the Canadian National complained that the quantity was not sufficient and that a larger jar must be sold for 25 cents.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Shaver): Order. I think the hon. gentleman is getting away from the question under discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just finished that portion of my remarks, sir. I say this is why my hon. friend from Compton was in a jam when he discussed the matter in committee. I believe in sportsmanship, in fairness, in justice and in equity; that is why I say a man should have the courage to face those who sent him to the House of Commons without putting some of them in another constituency so that he may not have to face their wrath.

We have heard a good deal about the redistribution of 1924 from one of the executioners who were put on that committee for a special purpose. What happened in that redistribution? Yesterday I heard my good friend the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe)—and I will ask my hon friend the Solicitor General to keep quiet and listen to me, because it may bring good results—ask the members on the government side jointly and severally what change made in 1924 has been rectified in 1933. My hon. friend was unable to get an answer. In 1924 the boundaries of the counties were rectified so that they might remain the same for federal purposes. If we look at the description of the county of Dorchester we see that the line of demarcation made in 1924 has been very materially changed in the bill now before the house. I think it is rather needless to continue the discussion along these lines, but I shall be ready to meet any hon. gentleman opposite when we come to discuss the schedules to the bill. To-day the boundaries of the county of Dorchester are the same as they were before confederation. We were told yesterday that this electoral district was created in 1791. That may be so; I do know that since 1853 those boundaries have been unchanged. To-day the population of Dorchester is 33,000, but by this redistribution it will be reduced to 27,000 in order to protect a friend of the government. That is what has been done, and for that change my hon. friend from Compton, my hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) and every hon. member opposite who supports this bill is responsible.

I have before me, Mr. Chairman, some petitions coming from my constituency protesting against the changes proposed in this bill. The constituency of Témiscouata is the same to-day as it was in 1853; the only changes that have taken place have been made in order to rectify the ancient boundaries. When we go back to 1924 we see this description of Témiscouata county:

> Includes the county of Témiscouata, with the exception of that part of the municipality of Notre Dame du Portage formerly comprised in the parish of St. André.

Now let us go back to the statute of 1860, which includes the act of 1853:

> The county of Kamouraska will include that part of the parish of Notre Dame du Portage formerly belonging to the parish of St. André.
> The county of Témiscouata will include that portion of the parish of Notre Dame du Portage formerly belonging to the parish of St. Patrice de la Rivière du Loup. C.S.L.C. (1860), c. 75, Secs. 38 and 39.

The provincial statute is to the same effect. (13 Geo. V, c. 13.)

The provincial statute of 1922 and the federal statute of 1924 are to the same effect. No change has occurred from 1853 to date in Témiscouata or Kamouraska, either provincially or federally, except the splitting of Témiscouata division in two counties for provincial purposes.

I pointed out to the Solicitor General yesterday that the Quebec Liberal bloc of 1921 elected 27 Tories at the last general election. In 1867 a Liberal was elected by acclamation in Temiscouata, and in 1872 a Conservative was elected. In 1874 my grandfather was elected by acclamation. From 1882 to 1896 the constituency was represented by Mr. Grandbois, a Conservative. In 1896 my father was elected, but he died the following year. Then from 1897 to 1924 the constituency was represented by Mr. Gauvreau, a Liberal. In 1924 I was elected a member of this House of Commons at a by-election; I have represented this constituency since that time, and I shall continue to represent it notwithstanding any carving that may be done by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Now let us consider the old act of 1853. This morning I looked up what was done at the session of 1852-53, and I will read it to the house in order to show the care that was taken by the old statesmen in order that no injustice should be done and in order that everyone might receive fair play, justice and equity in the redistribution of seats made that year. Mark you, sir, this is of the utmost importance, because there are several electoral districts which never have been described in full in a federal statute. That is well known, so let us go back to that year. On October 5 the house ordered the printing of 500 copies of the bill in order that all members might familiarize themselves with its provisions, and it was until March 2 that the debate was adjourned after the second reading. On March 2 the debate continued and Mr. Brown, seconded by Mr. Langton, proposed that the representation of the people in parliament should be based on the population and that the number of members of the legislative assembly should be gradually increased in accordance with the progressive development of the population, on a fixed proportion of the population, without regard to any line of division between Upper and Lower Canada. That amendment was negatived, 15 voting for and 57 against. The French speaking members who voted against it were: Cartier, Cauchon, Chabot, Chapais, Chauveau, Dubord, Dumoulin, Fortier, Fournier, Gouin, Jobin, Lacoste, Laterrière, Laurin, Leblanc, Lemieux, Mongenais, Morin, Polette, Poulin, Prince, Sicotte, Taché, Tessier, Valois, Varin, Viger.

Sir John Macdonald did not vote.

The second reading was carried the same day by 58 to 14. No Quebec member voted against it. On the same day Mr. Morin proposed, seconded by Mr. Hincks, an English speaking Canadian, that the bill be sent to the committee of the whole, and that motion was adopted. On March 3 petitions to amend the bill were sent to the committee of the whole house. The house resolved itself into committee and considered the bill in committee for five days. On March 4, 15, 16, 18, and 20, five days, the house studied the whole bill and on March 21 the committee reported it with amendments. On the same day several motions to send it back to committee of the whole were negatived. Finally, on the motion of Mr. Lemieux, seconded by Mr. Fournier, it was ordered that the bill be referred once more to the committee of the whole to have it amended for the purpose of annexing the parish of St. Nicholas to the county of Levis and the parishes of St. Sylvestre and Ste.

Agathe to the county of Lotbiniere. The house resolved itself into committee, considered the bill, and it was reported with amendments which were adopted. On March 23 a motion to send the bill back to committee of the whole was negatived and the third reading of the bill was carried by 61 to 16. Sir John Macdonald and Sir Allan MacNab were among those who voted against the motion.

This, Mr. Chairman, is one page of history which shows us with what care these men in the old days drafted legislation affecting the electoral districts of Canada. It must be observed that at that time the constituencies were much less numerous than they are now and those statesmen gave all their time to the study of the problem. Mark you, sir, in 1872 Macdonald and Cartier had a majority in the house; in 1882 Macdonald had a majority behind him in the House of Commons. But, as I said yesterday, very slight changes were made in our electoral law, the main changes having been made in 1892. I will not dwell on this point for the moment. I will only repeat the flaming words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier with respect to the abominable gerrymander of 1892 by a moribund government—"This is a gerrymander with a vengeance." I hope that we shall not be able to say for very long, "This is a gerrymander with a vengeance, the gerrymander of 1933."

I observed the Prime Minister as he listened yesterday to the speeches which were delivered by my hon. friends, the member for Quebec East and the member for Richelieu. Those gentlemen made admirable speeches, and as the right hon. gentleman listened to them he had under his hand the census book and the Parliamentary Guide. He was following their remarks very closely and I am sure they made a good impression upon him. Now, let me say this. I do not appeal to the fairness of the Prime Minister; I do not make any appeal to him. I know very well however that he wishes to be posted on the facts—the real facts, the facts as they are—and that is why I am giving them to the house. I am giving the facts in order that the right hon. gentleman may have an opportunity to acquaint himself with them.

In 1903 Laurier had a majority behind him in the House of Commons. What did he do? The only thing he did was to rectify the gerrymander of 1892 by putting back old parishes into constituencies where they had been for a considerable length of time. In 1914 Sir Robert Borden, the greatest man alive of the Conservative party, had a majority behind him in the House of Commons. What did he do? Let me quote his words:

I am entirely disposed to follow the course which my right hon. friend pursued in 1903.

Those words will be found at page 617 of Hansard of February 10, 1914; they are the exact words of Sir Robert Borden. In 1924 the right hon. gentleman who is now leader of the opposition and my revered leader had a majority behind him in the House of Commons and he gave fairplay; and the evidence that he did so is the fact that these executioners of 1933 did not change one iota of the rectification of the boundaries made in that year.

Now, I put a question to the Solicitor General yesterday and I put it to him again to-day, because I want to have a direct answer from the hon. gentleman. He will be able to reply to me when I am through, because I have not much time and I must hurry on. We have been told that changes have been made in the rural seats because three new seats are needed in Montreal, and I want to know why this has been done. I do not wish to have the statement, in reply to this question, that it has been done. That is not an answer. I want to know the reason why. As reported at page 5314, of Hansard, May 23, I made this statement:

I ask the Solicitor General why it has been decided by the government to create two new rural seats, one in the Ottawa and the other in Three Rivers district. If three new seats in Montreal were too many, why did the government decide to create two new rural seats when there was no necessity for so doing?

We have heard the hon. member for Compton complaining like an infant about the difficulties he encountered in his redistribution. What was the matter? There was an increase in the seats in Montreal from thirteen to sixteen, that is all. And what did they do? They annexed Laprairie to Beauharnois, Montmagny to L'Islet and L'Assomption to Terrebonne. The problem was solved. Had they stopped there it would have been all right. I am tired of hearing so much about the unit of population. If there is a population unit let it be fixed for good from Gaspe to Ontario; if such is the case, let them divide the province by 44,000 and I am ready to accept it provided everyone is put on the same footing.

Mr. DUPRE: If that theory were accepted it would mean that the urban representation would be very great and the rural representation very small.

Mr. POULIOT: I am very glad to receive that answer because it shows the absurdity of this scheme. I wanted the hon. gentleman to give that answer.

Mr. DUPRE: My hon. friend does not seem to understand. He may be all right in theory, but if we followed that theory we should have to do as he suggests. But we do want to do so because we want to keep a fair and just representation in the rural centres.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, that is all right. I say however that everyone should be treated exactly on the same basis. That is my view of the matter. Now, in 1931, according to the census, the unit figure was 44,186. In 1931, according to the redistribution of 1924, in 49 constituencies 12 had a population larger than the unit, and thirty-seven had populations of less. In 1933, after the wonderful work of the brother of the jam manufacturer, there were forty-six constituencies, eleven of which had larger populations and thirty-five, smaller. In 1931, twelve had more than the unit and in 1933 with three constituencies less, eleven have more than the unit. In 1931, thirty-seven have less than the unit and in 1933, thirty-five have less. The unit of population did not count at all in their minds.

I shall not read the list of constituencies with less than 33,000 population which I gave yesterday, as this list may be found on page 5352 of Hansard. The following are the constituencies with populations of more than 33,000:

Beauce.
Charlevoix-Saguenay.
Chicoutimi.
Drummond-Arthabaska.
Gaspe.
Hull.
Lake St. John-Roberval.

These constituencies had more than the unit in 1931 and in 1933 they still have more than the unit. What did the brother of the jam manufacturer do about that? In 1931 Matane, Pontiac, Temiscouata and, Three Rivers-St. Maurice had more than the unit. They then created a new constituency called Lafleche-St. Maurice and another one called Three Rivers, both of which have more than the unit. What is the fairness in that? In 1933 Megantic-Frontenac will have more than the unit through receiving part of another constituency. A great mess!

I think I have time to show just what kind of a mess has been made in the province of Quebec by this committee and how ignorant of Quebec laws its members have proved to be. They have forgotten all about the provincial enactments. Although they have spent much time discussing this, that and other things in connection with the bill, there are fourteen provincial constituencies which have not been changed. These are Berthier-Maskinonge, Brome-Missisquoi, Chicoutimi, Drummond-Arthabaska, Joliette-Montcalm—this is a transposition but the provincial boundaries remain the same—Lake St. John-Roberval, Shefford, Sherbrooke and Stanstead. There are three constituencies which have been carved up. If the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) does not like that word I will use it again—carved, carved, carved! These are Champlain, Levis and Temiscouata. There are two electoral districts in the latter for Quebec but they have forgotten about those.

Let us see the extent of the gross ignorance of the members of this committee in connection with the legislation of 1931-32, 22 George V, Chapter 16. They have a constituency called Lake St. John-Roberval. That is all right, but the description is wrong. It is stated that this constituency consists of the counties of Lake St. John East and Lake St. John West. I ask my hon. friend not to spend so much of his time in recommending his brother's jam and study the legislation. The names of the provincial counties are Lake St. John and Roberval. I regret that a man so unfamiliar with the law was appointed by the government to sit on this committee. He was not qualified. Témiscouata is mentioned, but not the provincial counties of Riviere du Loup and Témiscouata. This committee ignores that. What about the provincial county of Gatineau? Is it in whole or in part in Hull, Wright, Labelle and Chapleau? That is not mentioned here. In Gaspe they put Gaspe East and Gaspe West, while in the province it is Gaspe North and Gaspe South. These people would be unable to vote. Does Laviolette belong to Laflèche-St. Maurice or Champlain? There is no excuse for such mistakes being made because now the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) appears on the bill. I said yesterday that the bill did not contain the name of a junior member, but that it contains the name of the right hon. the Prime Minister himself. How can he trust these men who sat on the committee when their work is full of such gross mistakes of form and fact?

Does the committee realize how many fractions of constituencies have been put together to form thirty-seven constituencies in the province of Quebec? Ninety-nine fractions have been put together to form thirty-seven constituencies. That is the work of the hon. gentleman. That is the gerrymander; that is the jig-saw puzzle, the casse-tête chinois. That is what they have been working on for such a long time. They wanted to take a little parish from this one and a little one from that one. The Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) thought it would be just as well to put certain electors in Lévis as he might decide to run there. It was just like a bunch of children running after some candy or jam. They were all asking for something, they were all rejecting something else. They were asking for something and grabbing something. That is how they did this very fine work. It is the most stupid thing that has ever been submitted to any parliament in any country.

Here is how they used the fractions to make up the constituencies. In Argenteuil there are three fractions; the county of Argenteuil, part of Two Mountains and part of Papineau. In Beauce there are three; county of Beauce, part of Dorchester and part of Frontenac. In Beauharnois-Laprairie there are four; part of Beauharnois, part of Laprairie, part of Chateauguay and part of Huntingdon. In Bellechasse there are four; part of Bellechasse, part of Lévis, part of Dorchester and part of Montmagny. In Bonaventure there are two; county of Bonaventure and part of Matapedia. In Chambly-Rouville there are four; the county of Chambly, part of Rouville, part of Vercheres and part of Laprairie. Champlain is part of a whole. In Chapleau there are three; part of the county of Abitibi, part of St. Maurice and part of Champlain. In Charlevoix-Saguenay there are four; the two Charlevoix, Saguenay, New Quebec and the island of Anticosti and Montmorency. In Chateauguay-Huntingdon there are four; Chateauguay, Huntingdon, Beauharnois and St. Jean. In Compton there are four; Compton, part of Stanstead, part of Sherbrooke and part of Frontenac. I do not blame the hon. gentleman for this for as it is it represents the federal boundaries.

Mr. HACKETT: It has been that way for thirty years.

Mr. POULIOT: For eighty years. I do not blame the hon. member for that, but it is an exception to the rule. In Dorchester there are two; Dorchester and part of Bellechasse. In Gaspe there are two; the counties of Gaspe East and Gaspe West and part of Matane. In Hull there are three; part of Hull, part of Papineau and part of Laval. In Kamouraska there are three; Kamouraska, part of Témiscouata and part of l'Islet. In Labelle there are two; part of Labelle and part of Papineau. In Lafleche-St. Maurice there are two; part of St. Maurice and part of Champlain. In L'Assomption-Terrebonne there are two; L'Assomption and part of Terrebonne. In Laval-Two Mountains there are three; part of Laval, part of Two Mountains and part of Terrebonne. He seems to have forgotten about the Laurent parcel post contract. I wonder if the Prime Minister sent anyone to the court house in Montreal to look over the files and obtain more details. I think they would find out the truth and what was well known to the public.

Levis consists of part of the county of Levis. In Lotbiniere there are five; Lotbiniere, part of Nicolet, part of Levis, part of Megantic and part of Beauce. This is the winner of the race. Then there is Matapedia-Matane, two fractions, part of Matane and part of Matapedia. Why not put those two counties as a whole together? Then there is Megantic-Frontenac, three fractions, part of Megantic, part of Frontenac and part of Wolfe; Montmagny-L'Islet, two fractions, part of Montmagny and part of L'Islet; Nicolet-Yamaska, two fractions, part of Nicolet and part of Yamaska; Pontiac, three fractions, Pontiac, Témiskaming and part of Abitibi, and I wonder whether there is not something else.

Then we have Portneuf, two fractions, part of Portneuf and part of Quebec; Quebec-Montmorency, three fractions, part of Quebec, part of Montmorency and part of Portneuf; Richelieu-Vercheres, three fractions, part of Vercheres, part of Yamaska and part of St. Hyacinthe; Richmond-Wolfe, two fractions, Richmond and part of Wolfe; Rimouski, two fractions, Rimouski and part of Témiscouata; St. Johns-Iberville, three fractions, Iberville, part of St. Johns plus the county of Napierville; St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, three fractions, part of St. Hyacinthe, part of Rouville, and Bagot; Témiscouata, a fraction; Three Rivers, two fractions, part of St. Maurice and part of Three Rivers; Vaudreuil-Soulanges, two parts, Vaudreuil and Soulanges; Wright, two fractions, part of Hull and part of Labelle.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): That makes a good salad.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I hope the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Barrette) who retains his counties complete, shares our indignation at the partitioning of the other counties of the province. It is an unwarranted indignity. I trust this iniquity will not be consummated and that the Prime Minister will look into it, as he will look into the affairs of Mr. Laurent, of Montreal, who has a contract for the transportation of postal parcels.

Mr. POULIOT: Intact counties number fourteen; fractional counties, three, and added fractions, ninety-nine, making a total of 116. This is without counting the electoral seats for the city of Quebec and Montreal. This is a fine mess. Have you, Mr. Chairman, ever seen anything like it. Would you, sir, who come from Ontario, stand for it? How is it that the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge (Mr. Barrette), whose favoured constituencies are not touched, does not stand with us to condemn the awful and abominable work that has been done by the hon. member for Compton who is bold enough to smile when I cut his suspenders with the scissors of truth? He was so mixed up that when he had to address the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Verville), who now has parts of five constituencies, he could not remember the exact name of that hon. gentleman's constituency and he confused it with Nicolet; his mind is dizzy; let us pray for him.

I will conclude by saying this, that in 1917 we had the Wartime Elections Act and in the sister provinces there was a united cry: Let us be through with Quebec; Quebec shall not dominate Canada. But there was a comeback to this. In 1921, who gave the majority to my revered leader? It was the province of Quebec. There is a comeback; there is sometimes an appeal to prejudice, but it never lasts long; it is a straw fire. Opinions change; the constituencies that have existed for years and years in Quebec have at different times elected members of different political faiths, but the electors were the same people who were judging the parties on their programs, their promises and the way in which they had fulfilled expectations. In 1930, twenty-five constituencies in Quebec chose to elect twenty-five members on the government side, but I am sure that if this bill is passed as it is, correcting the errors of form but leaving in it the gross error of facts, the province of Quebec will assuredly not elect a single member for the Conservative party.

Mr. MANION: Then why worry?

Mr. POULIOT: That is not the point. I do not worry about the results of elections. I am here to condemn an injustice which is presented to the house in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who apparently ignores the existence of that injustice. If the right hon. gentleman knew how constituencies had been carved in order to create that gerrymander, he would have told the hon. member for Compton: I shall at once give orders to the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian government not to buy a jar of jam from your brother.

Mr. GOBEIL: And to the Canadian Pacific also.

Mr. POULIOT: What I have to say now as a final word is this, that the reason some hon. gentlemen opposite want to create a gerrymander in my constituency is that they wish to sell jam; they desire to sell rotten timber for the wharf at Cap St. Ignace; they want to purchase rural mail boxes at $2.75 from Amédée Lesieur when they cost only sixty cents.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Shaver): The hon. gentleman has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. POULIOT: I have a great deal to say.

Mr. J. A. BARRETTE (Berthier-Maskinonge) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, hearing yesterday the hon. member for Terrebonne enumerate the members who had represented with honour that beautiful county in the federal house and noticing that he had forgotten a man who had held a most important place in Canadian public life, I asked him why he had omitted the name of Sir Adolphe Chapleau. The following are the exact words exchanged on the subject:

Mr. Barrette: Have you forgotten Sir Adolphe Chapleau? He, also, represented that county.
Mr. Parent: He represented it at Quebec.
Mr. Barrette: You forgot to mention him just now.
Mr. Parent: He represented the county in the provincial parliament. You do not know your parliamentary history, my friend. Buy a dictionary, an encyclopedia, and study.

Well, I consulted the Parliamentary Guide since last night. I knew that Sir Adolphe Chapleau had represented Terrebonne county in the federal parliament, having replaced Mr. G. A. Nantel, who had resigned in his favour, and I knew also that, in 1882, he had been elected by acclamation in Terrebonne. Later, in 1887, he was elected by the same county to the federal parliament by a majority of 785, and again, in 1891, by a majority of 704. I would ask the hon. member for Terrebonne to take note of these facts and, particularly, to study the Parliamentary Guide.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What page?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Page 302.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Which edition?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): 1932. If my hon. friend from Terrebonne has not a copy of the Parliamentary Guide at hand, I shall lend him mine immediately; that will keep him from making false statements. I shall have to ask him to retract; otherwise he will be considered as unfair or as an ignorant man.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) I think it is necessary that I should refer to the British North America Act to settle the question whether or not the eastern townships are supposed to be changed under our constitution. Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, edition of 1927, at page 432 cites section 80 of the British North America Act as follows:

The legislative assembly of Quebec shall be composed of sixty-five members, to be elected to represent the sixty-five electoral divisions or districts of lower Canada in this act referred to, subject to alteration thereof by the legislature of Quebec: Provided that it shall not be lawful to present to the lieutenant governor of Quebec for assent any bill for altering the limits of any of the electoral divisions or districts mentioned in the second schedule to this act, unless the second and third readings of such bill have been passed in the legislative assembly with the concurrence of the majority of the members representing all those electoral divisions or districts, and the assent shall not be given to such bill unless an address has been presented by the legislative assembly to the lieutenant governor stating that it has been so passed.

In the second schedule annexed to the British North America Act, which will be found at page 460 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, the names of the various constituencies are mentioned as follows: Pontiac, Ottawa, Argenteuil, Huntingdon, Missisquoi, Brome, Shefford, Stanstead, Compton, Wolfe and Richmond, Megantic and the town of Sherbrooke.

If we look to the legislature of the province of Quebec it will be found that some of these seats have apparently been changed, but if so it was with the assent mentioned and according to the provisions contained in the British North America Act. I have read the British North America Act rather hurriedly since the hon. member spoke, and I can find no provision that states that none of the seats of eastern townships are to be changed or that they have to stay exactly as they are and not have their boundaries changed in any way, shape or form in any electoral redistribution such as the one we are now making. As a matter of fact there were changes made in the year 1924 when the counties of Brome and Missisquoi were merged. Chateauguay was also merged with Huntingdon, and minor changes were made with regard to the county of Pontiac I think. In those days when reservations were made as regards certain townships in the eastern townships where an English population predominated, they were made from the point of view of what concerned the legislature of Quebec only and not as regards the merits of any federal redistribution. So I think that the hon. member for Compton, when he states that under the constitution these seats are not to be touched in any federal redistribution, is not right in his contention.

I think we can find one reason why these seats were not changed in the explanation which was given yesterday by the right hon. the Prime Minister, when he said that the party in power wanted to take the best advantage that could possibly be taken in all changes and readjustments made in this redistribution, and that there was nothing wrong or anything to be ashamed about the party in power having its own say and taking the best advantage it could in such a matter as that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The old saying is, to the victor belong the spoils. That is a cry to which the Conservatives used to object and they have said that they would not take advantage of power to take the spoils. Now we find that seats in the eastern townships which might very well have been merged with no trouble at all have not been merged. Bagot, for instance, might have been added to Shefford without any trouble at all, and then that riding would have had the quota under the present redistribution, but the reason why those seats have not been changed and why the government want them to stay as they are at the present time is that most of them are represented in this house by hon. members supporting the government. Only one or two of them—I speak subject to correction—are represented by members sitting on this side of the house. I have no objection to hon. gentlemen representing those seats and sitting on the opposite side of the house because I number some of them among my friends; but the real reason why no changes were made in those seats was to give the members who now represent them as good a chance of being elected as they had in 1930 by the same population.

The hon. member for Compton also made reference to certain changes that were made in the year 1924. He mentioned that when the Redistribution Act of 1924 was passed there had been thirty-four changes made. When I asked him to specify those changes he mentioned certain counties, and I asked him for the details of the changes in these counties, but apparently he did not have them at hand and said that he would supply that information a little later. I would like to have that information because I think it is vital. I have here, and I am giving them subject to correction, some of the changes that were made in 1924, and I consider that they were about the only major changes that were made in the Redistribution Act of that year.

There was the fusion of the two counties of Berthier and Maskinonge, and the fusion of the counties of Brome and Missisquoi, and the county of Chicoutimi-Saguenay was divided into two, and Chicoutimi made a county by itself, Saguenay being merged with Charlevoix, to form Charlevoix-Saguenay. The county of Charlevoix-Montmorency had its name changed to Charlevoix-Saguenay, and part of the district of Saguenay with a population of thirteen thousand was added to the county formerly called Charlevoix-Montmorency to form the present Charlevoix-Saguenay. I think that those realignments were absolutely necessary on account of an increase in population that had taken place in certain districts. They were changes that ought to have been made, and I do not think it could be charged that the party in power made those changes for any political advantage to themselves. Other minor changes had to be made in certain electoral divisions, more especially as regards the island and city of Montreal on account of its increase in population. Its representation was then fixed at thirteen members, and the present bill increases it to sixteen. Those were the modifications most essential which were made in the year 1924, and if there were any others of capital importance or of such great moment as the hon. member for Compton seeks to convey to the committee, I think in all fairness he ought to bring them before the committee. Yesterday when the hon. member for Quebec East placed his case before the house on behalf of the Liberal party he explained the situation in the province of Quebec, starting from its eastern boundaries at the county of Gaspe and going right across the province to the border of Ontario. All the changes that are being made in this bill, changes made at the instance and upon the demand or request of members supporting the government, were explained in detail, and none of those changes made by the committee which has prepared this legislation were made simply with a view to correcting errors or mistakes that were made by the previous Redistribution Act of 1924. I heard with my own ears the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) say; If you can show us that the modifications or changes were made to correct mistakes or errors in those counties in the district of Quebec which I represent, I will be ready to approve of those changes. But what do we find? We find that the changes and modifications contained in this bill now before us are not such as to remedy or alter or improve the conditions complained of by hon. members supporting the government, but, as pointed out by the hon. members for Quebec East, Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) and Richelieu (Mr. Cardin) yesterday, result in nearly every instance in one hon. member getting an advantage in this way and another hon. member being relieved in another way, hiving together in some centre all the Grits, all the Liberal supporters, in order to give political advantage to members who support the present administration. This is the reason why I wanted to ask, before you were in the chair, Mr. Chairman, from the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) not only the names of the counties which he claimed were affected by the redistribution in 1924, but each and every parish or township that was changed or moved from one county to another, so that we would be in a position to change and remedy those mistakes of 1924 which they say injuriously affect the people of the province of Quebec.

If there were slight modifications made in 1924 everyone here who was in this house at that time recalls the fact that the Hon. Mr. Boivin, who represented the province of Quebec, on that committee, who was I think at the head of the Quebec section of the committee, stated on July 15, 1924, when this bill was before the house, that the changes made were only of minor importance and that the modifications made were absolutely necessary on account of geographical conditions and the large increase of population in certain districts. In most counties the redistribution committee of 1924, including at that time Progressives, Conservatives and Liberals alike, recognized the principle that we should not change the boundaries of provincial constituencies, but should adhere as much as possible to the old lines, provincial and municipal. We find reference to that in the speech of Hon. Mr. Boivin as it appears in Hansard, session of 1924, volume 5, page 4534.

We listened yesterday to what was said by the hon. member for Quebec East and the hon. member for Richelieu. Those two hon. gentlemen, who are leaders of public opinion in the province of Quebec, men of high responsibility, would not have taken upon themselves to present the case they did and to place the figures and statements upon Hansard that they did unless they were sure of their ground. I noticed yesterday, when these hon. gentlemen were speaking, that the right hon. Prime Minister took great care to listen and take note of what they were saying; I think in the bottom of his heart he felt that what is before the house at this time under his name is not so good and so accurate as he would have chosen to make it. I think the spirit of fair play so moves him that he will give careful consideration to the remarks of those hon. members, and will favour some of the modifications that have been suggested by them.

When we compare the redistribution of 1924 with that of this year we find that in 1924 there was practical unanimity. It is true, as suggested by some hon. members opposite, and the Prime Minister laid great stress upon the fact, that at that time there was no representative of the Conservative party on the opposition side to act as a member of that committee. But those who were here in that parliament will recall that there was on that committee the able gentleman who now sits with the government, the member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) who was at that time looking after the province of Quebec as well as the eastern provinces. I find at page 4530 of Hansard of that year, volume 5—I have only the French version here—what he said when the report was presented to the house:

> I have no doubt, however, that the redistribution for the province of Quebec is probably as fair as any that could be arrived at under the method adopted, and I for one propose to stand by the report of the committee in this regard.

Mr. GAGNON: May I ask when those words were uttered?

Mr. CASGRAIN: In Hansard, 1924, volume 5, page 4530. I read it myself the other day. At that time the report was practically unanimous. It was agreed that certain slight modifications had to be made and they were made. But, Mr. Chairman, in the redistribution that we have before us to-day we have wholesale changes. Boundaries in the province of Quebec have been shifted about from county to county, and we have now all these discrepancies.

Mr. DUPRE: May I be permitted to put a question to my hon. friend? At that time there were no members from the province of Quebec sitting on the Conservative side?

Mr. CASGRAIN: If my hon. friend had listened to me he would know I just referred to that. There was no member on the Conservative side from the province of Quebec, but, as I said, the hon. member for York-Sunbury was representing the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces. Also I remember having seen with my own eyes in those days most powerful and influential representatives of the province of Quebec, such as the late Mr. Monty, and Mr. Fauteux, who were here serving as advisers, as well as the hon. member for York-Sunbury, who in those days was charged with, I will say, the difficult task of looking after the interests of that province. No one would deny that those two able gentlemen, for whom I have great respect, would have seen to it that proper representations were made before the committee in order that justice should be given to the minority at that time, the Conservative element in the province of Quebec. Also if the redistribution made in 1924, about which there is so much complaint to-day, was calculated to help only the interests of the Liberal party, how is it to be explained that in 1930 this redistribution helped hon. gentlemen opposite to the extent that they secured seats to the number of twenty-five? If this redistribution was so bad, if it was not fair, I do not think that many supporters of the government would be sitting here to-day. But the Redistribution Act of 1924 was as fair as any act could be made; and I think, Mr. Chairman, that only people seeking little political advantages could say that the act of 1924 was so bad that they had to recast it and change it completely when we have before us the demonstration by the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) that no errors made in 1924 are corrected by the present bill, but new ventures and changes are attempted in order to promote the interests of the party which is now in power.

It is sad indeed to consider the difficulties confronting us at present when we remember that in 1924, in 1914 and in 1903, it was possible to effect redistributions which met with the approval of all political parties in this house. If it was possible in those three redistributions, why is it not possible to-day? Yesterday the Prime Minister said those redistribution bills did not go through unanimously. I speak subject to correction, but I think the Prime Minister was stretching the truth a little when he made that statement. History will show that at the beginning of the task there may have been small differences which later were adjusted, but at no time was there any situation such as we are confronted with to-day. At one time we were led to believe that Quebec and Saskatchewan were the only stumbling blocks, the only two provinces not satisfied. If my information is correct, however, there are differences in other parts of Canada as well. I believe there are certain grievances and troubles in the province of Ontario, for instance, which as yet have not been satisfactorily adjusted so that the people concerned will get that measure of justice to which they are entitled. I need not labour this point at length; I believe it would be a disgrace to Canada and to the province of Quebec if it should be said that this bill was put through in its present form due to the brute force which the Prime Minister says he has supporting him and which he will call upon in order to force through this bill if it meets with continued opposition and we refuse to accept the changes and modifications which have been made by the members of that committee.

Those who supported the idea of having a committee of this house attempt to give justice to the various parties in the House of Commons advocated that idea because all parties would be given representation on such a committee. Apparently in the days of Sir John A. Macdonald the government brought the measure before the house and that was the measure that had to be adopted. The first time there was any departure from that practice was when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in the house. In view of the discussion that has taken place with regard to this bill I wonder if we would not avoid trouble and strife and bring about justice and equality of representation if we adopted certain principles that have been suggested and which I understand are in force in other dominions. In looking over the debate that took place in 1924 I find that certain practical suggestions were made; for instance, reference was made to the way the electoral map was changed in Australia. I understand that in that country a commission looks after this work. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to read the statement to which I refer; I shall have to read it in French, because I have not the English version. At present it seems very difficult to secure books from the library which contain the debates with regard to electoral reforms; they appear to be in great demand. Many hon. gentlemen have those books now; I believe they are trying to improve the legislation now before us, and I hope they succeed.

Mr. LAVERGNE: What does my hon. friend suggest?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am going to read it to my hon. friend:

In Australia the redistribution is arranged by three distribution commissioners appointed by the Governor General, of whom one is the Chief Electoral Officer or an officer having similar qualifications—

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): What page, please?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Page 4523 of Hansard of July 15, 1924, French edition.

—and, if his services are obtainable, one shall be the Surveyor General of the State or an officer having similar qualifications. I quote the following sections:

In making the proposed distribution of a state into divisions, the distribution commissioners shall give due consideration to—

(a) Community or diversity of interest,

(b) Means of communication,

(c) Physical features,

(d) Existing boundaries of division or subdivisions,

(e) State electoral boundaries; and subject thereto the quota of electors shall be the basis for the distribution, and the distribution commissioners may adopt a margin of allowance, to be used whenever necessary, but in no case shall the quota be departed from to a greater extent than one-fifth more or one-fifth less.

What follows is interesting.

Before reporting on the distribution of any state into divisions, the distribution commissioners shall cause a map with a description of the boundaries of each proposed division to be exhibited at post offices in the proposed division, and shall invite public attention thereto by advertisement in the Gazette.

Objections or suggestions in writing may be lodged with the distribution commissioners not later than thirty days after the first advertisement in the Gazette of the proposed distribution, and the distribution commissioners shall consider all objections and suggestions so lodged before making their report.

From this it will be seen that under the system in force in Australia there is much less chance of that taking place which we find in Canada to-day. Here we have people who represent a minority of the members coming from a certain province but who support the majority in this house, using that power and support which is brought about by a majority from other provinces in order to change the boundaries of the electoral divisions where they do not possess the majority.

Mr. LAVERGNE: What is the date of the Australian act?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not know the date, but I quoted what was said in 1924. Even though the system to-day may not be quite the same I think my hon. friend, who is fair, will admit that possibly if the suggestions there contained had been adopted, we would not have all the difficulties with which we are faced to-day.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I agree with my hon. friend, and I was wondering why he had not thought of all that in 1923.

Mr. CASGRAIN: At that time I was not myself in charge of the revision of electoral maps.

Mr. DUPRE: But your party was in power.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes; and if my party at that time did not act as hon. gentlemen opposite suggest they should have acted, I would point out that it is time for the party in power now to rectify matters, because it is the party that has always claimed to do better than other people. The right hon. gentleman now leading the government has many merits and good qualities and he claims to be able to set everything right. Well, I think that, having a large majority behind him in this house, he would be well advised to bring about a fairer and more satisfactory redistribution and one more equitable to all parties concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: Since the hon. gentleman has mentioned my name, may I direct his attention to the fact that no such suggestion was made on the second reading, and the house unanimously referred the bill to the committee.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes. Let me point out however that, after the example that was set in 1903, in 1914 and again in 1924, when apparently everyone in the country was satisfied with the redistribution that was effected, no one thought for a moment that this government, with a respectable majority behind it, would take advantage of its position to try to bring about changes in the constituencies in certain provinces as indicated in the house yesterday and again to-day. It is well to repeat these things. If it was not done in 1923 it is only because at that time we were following the system that had been adopted in the past and which had given satisfaction, and there was no reason to suspect that it would not prove equally satisfactory again. But to-day there are difficulties which present themselves in the form indicated to this house, and I think it is only right to bring the matter to the attention of hon. members, because it may serve a useful purpose later on. In the next ten years many of us may not be here, but those who succeed us would be able to take advantage of any improvements we might make, and any body of men not so much in touch with members of the house, and not influenced by the inclinations and ambitions that might be evident in various districts, would be able to effect a better solution of the problem. After all, Mr. Chairman, this is a problem that affects every home, every district, every part of the country in every province in Canada to-day. No one can deny that this bill we are called upon to pass now will stand for the next ten years and will fix the limitations in the various districts throughout the country. This will be the act under which those who follow us will be returned to the House of Commons when the next general election is called by the Prime Minister. On this question of redistribution we have been reasonably calm, but there may be certain persons who have been influenced by personal motives and who in some cases have perhaps sought too much political advantage for themselves, as suggested yesterday by those who replied to the hon. member for Quebec East and the hon. member for Richelieu. At one stage of the discussion yesterday there was some exchange of words between certain members on both sides of the house with regard to some possible changes that might be brought about, and there was a good deal of discussion with regard to L'Islet and Montmagny. But I sincerely point out that if there are minor difficulties in regard to certain parishes they should be adjusted. Any difficulties that could be set aside should be set aside in order if possible to allow the committee to proceed in the usual way with this bill so that it might receive as far as possible the unanimous support of hon. members on all sides.

Mr. GOBEIL: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to misquote me or to misrepresent what I said. He has quoted me as having said that 34 changes were made in the redistribution of 1924. That was not what I wanted to convey to the house. I hope I shall be clearly understood—

Mr. CASGRAIN: If the hon. gentleman will pardon me, I took down his exact words as he uttered them. He said, "33 changes were made in 1924."

Mr. GOBEIL: All right. My contention is that between the redistribution of 1914 or 1913 and that of 1923, concluded in 1924, there were at least 26 or 27 changes made by the provincial government of Quebec in provincial boundaries, provincial redistribution, which were incorporated in the federal bill of 1924, without being mentioned in detail in the bill. If I am correct, and I think I am, the bill refers only to 7 changes made in rural counties in the province of Quebec —I mean the bill of 1924. But when we compared the two official maps in connection with the redistribution of 1914 and that of 1924, we found that the boundaries were not the same, and the changes made by the Quebec government were incorporated in the federal act of 1924 without being mentioned in detail in the act at all.

Mr. POWER: Doesn't the same thing exist in this act?

Mr. GOBEIL: I am afraid it will, and I say that the principle is wrong. I do not think the province should have the task of making a redistribution for federal purposes.

Mr. POWER: Section 5 of the act to readjust the representation of the House of Commons, passed in July, 1924, is identical with section 5 of the bill which is now before us. Does my hon. friend know that? Perhaps the hon. gentleman will pardon me for referring to what he said, but if those who carried the redistribution in 1924 acted surreptitiously—which I think is a euphemism for the translation of hypocritement, which he used a few moments ago—then those who carried it out this year must have acted in the same way.

Mr. J. T. HACKETT (Stanstead): The point is this. Changes have been made which have resulted from provincial legislation. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain), I merely wish to point out, without being drawn too far into the discussion, that the government of the province of Quebec, whose function it is to determine county boundaries, has continuously redrafted these boundaries, with the result that a county defined by the legislature of the province needs only to be referred to by name in the federal act, and in this way a complete realignment may be effected.

Mr. POWER: Not between the periods of redistribution.

Mr. HACKETT: No, not between periods of redistribution.

Mr. POWER: It reads, as it exists at the time of the passage of the redistribution act.

Mr. HACKETT: Yes; but let us assume that a county in 1923 contained five townships, and that by provincial statute two other townships were added. When reference is made to that county in the federal redistribution act it will have two additional townships without any specific reference being made thereto. According to my information there were thirty-four—I have been told there were actually thirty-seven—changes made in the redistribution of 1924 in the alignment of Quebec counties.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, you are wrong.

Mr. POWER: Will the hon. gentleman—

Mr. HACKETT: If the hon. gentleman will permit me. They included seven made by federal legislation and twenty-seven made by provincial legislation. I do not wish to be drawn into the controversial aspect of this discussion but I think we can assume that the party which has been in power in Quebec for nearly forty years was not entirely negligent of its own interests when redrawing county boundaries. I am going to ask the committee to bear with me for a moment while I point out, not all the twenty-seven changes which were made by provincial legislation but two or three of them which came within my personal knowledge.

The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) will recall that the counties of Brome and Missisquoi were put together at the last redistribution. He will find that the only reference in the federal act is to the fact that these two counties become one. Yet the boundaries of these counties had been changed by provincial legislation. For instance, they took from Missisquoi a substantial part of the parish of Farnham and added it to Shefford. I do not know anything about the political complexion of this parish but this seems to have been a more or less reasonable thing to do. At least it can be said that it rounded out the contours of that locality. But at the same time they took a most peculiarly shaped section from the county of St. Johns-Iberville and added it to Missisquoi by the provincial statute 11 George V, 1921, chapter 14. Without any visible reason, unless it was because of the political inclinations of the parishes, these two substantial changes were made by provincial legislation in the riding of Brome-Missisquoi without any reference to them in the federal act.

It may seem strange that I should speak for the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) when he is capable and competent of speaking for himself, but I shall refer to his constituency. I find that a transfer was made to Bellechasse from Montmagny of a substantial area along the confines of Bellechasse. It may not be said that that was done to straighten the line, because it crooked and curved the line.

Mr. FAFARD: What year was that?

Mr. HACKETT: I think that was in 1921. But at the same time a knob was put on to Montmagny by projecting into Bellechasse an area which appears to be about two miles wide and two miles long. I ask the hon. gentleman to look at the map and see if there is any possible reason that can be given for so distorting the outline of the map other than political. There is no road, there is no river, there is no parish boundary and there is no county boundary to justify the change.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Kamouraska?

Mr. HACKETT: I am not attempting to justify anybody. But I do not want the committee to become scandalized and I am trying to show what has been done in the past. I want the committee to be fully conversant with the facts.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The hon. member is speaking at random.

Mr. HACKETT: I am not speaking at random.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Were there any people settled along those miles?

Mr. HACKETT: I would assume that in the prosperous section along the frontier between Bellechasse and Montmagny there would be people and I trust that they voted in a manner not entirely disappointing to those who brought about the changes.

Will the hon. gentlemen bear with me for a moment while I take up the constituency of another hon. gentleman who is well able to speak for himself, the constituency of Dorchester? We find that the county of Dorchester was mutilated by provincial legislation. It will be found that a portion which had been in Beauce was added to Dorchester in 1924. It may be that there was some reason for making this rectification. To one unacquainted with the area it might appear that there was some reason to round out the territory by drawing a line across. But I find that by 15 George V, chapter 12, there was added to Dorchester a very substantial area which had previously been in Bellechasse. The whole point and purpose of my remarks is to show hon. gentlemen that if at any time there was a desire or intention to gerrymander, my friends opposite had a very willing, compliant and successful agent in the government at Quebec. Any and all changes which they wished to have made—I assume it is fair to say that none were made without their consent—were made for them. Out of thirty-four changes made, twenty-seven were made at Quebec and only seven at Ottawa. Nevertheless, those changes made at Quebec were made as effectively as if they had been made here. I am not addressing the committee for any reason other than to let hon. gentlemen know it is not well to feel too complacent or to be too self laudatory when one has a past.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We consider this a very serious matter. It has been said that there were made by the province of Quebec twenty-seven changes which automatically applied here. This will go out to the public. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to give us those twenty-seven instances?

Mr. DUPRE: They were given this afternoon.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We want to have it pointed out where they are.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) gave them this afternoon.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is not so.

Mr. MANION: He gave the names.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Absolutely not. Take, for instance, his own county.

Mr. HACKETT: I would say to the hon. gentleman that I have drawn to his attention seven or eight changes made in three counties.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There was nothing in them.

Mr. HACKETT: There is something in them, and if the hon. gentleman cares to trace out the statutes he will find that those changes were effectively made. If he is sufficiently interested to take the map of each constituency, I have no doubt he will find the number that is given. So far as that goes, if it will be of any particular assistance to him, I shall be delighted to cooperate with him in tracing the origin of those thirty-four changes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is making assertions. Let him make good what he states here. I repeat what I said yesterday: We would be quite willing to accept any changes that would rectify what my hon. friend claims has been done by the province of Quebec.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): I shall be very brief because I gave to my colleagues the time in which I intended to speak and the discussion was very interesting; I do not suppose the committee has lost anything. It would seem as if the committee this year were doing something absolutely new, something unexpected which had never taken place before. I have been listening to the debate; I have heard many challenges, many assertions of injustice, many claims that geography, history and all moral principles were being destroyed. But I must honestly confess that so far I have not heard a fact brought before this committee to justify any such affirmation.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member was not in the house all the time.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I was not in the house all the time, and I may say that when I was out of it—and I shall come to that in a minute or two—it was to grant what my hon. friends opposite call concessions, as I did willingly. I have noticed that after one point was settled, another and then another came up, but I shall not discuss that because it is to me too small a matter.

The people of Canada are entitled to representation, and the province of Quebec with sixty-five members being the pivot, the representations must be adjusted on the basis of that number. It does not matter very much to Jean Baptiste whether he votes on this side of a tree or this side of a street or this side of a brook as long as he has his vote. If you take the maps which have been drafted by one party or the other in the past, at first glance sometimes they certainly present a very queer appearance, but I have never heard a complaint, for instance, from people who geographically belong to Bellechasse that they had to vote in Montmagny. I have never heard a complaint from men who lived in the very county of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), and on the very same street, that they had to vote in Quebec East or Quebec Centre, so long as they were entitled to record their votes. It seems to me as if this whole debate resembles that comedy of Shakespeare called Much Ado About Nothing, because that is what is taking place in the house. Nobody is being deprived of his franchise; not a citizen will not have a right to go to the polls and record his approval or condemnation of the government. We have heard speech after speech from hon. gentlemen opposite, for what purpose? What suggestion have they brought forward? What liberty has been compromised? What injustice has been created? What violence has been done to geography? We have heard nothing except this, which we have heard repeated again and again: This might create a Conservative majority or it might make safer a seat which is Liberal at the moment. Is that what the people of Canada expect from us?

Mr. DUPUIS: No, indeed.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No, they will expect to vote and give their opinion, and whether it be the opinion represented by my hon. friend living in this parish or by one of his colleagues living in the next parish, so long as the people have the right to vote on the deeds of this government, whether the opposition is represented by my learned confrere and hon. friend or by his neighbour to the right, it makes no difference and the people will have no complaint.

Mr. DUPUIS: This argument could serve against the government.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Undoubtedly, and I would be the last one to deprive the people of this country of the chance of condemning the government, if they wanted to do so.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Why change?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Precisely, why change?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Why not leave things alone? ?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Yes, and then Montreal will not have the representation to which it is entitled.

Mr. CASGRAIN: You can give the representation to Montreal and not change the other constituencies.

Mr. LAVERGNE: And not change the other constituencies—

Mr. CASGRAIN: You can change some of them.

Mr. LAVERGNE: —so according to the whip of the Liberal party, as by the constitution Quebec must have sixty-five seats, we will give ten or fifteen more to Montreal which is entitled to them and we will not change the boundaries of the others.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not what I meant. What I had in mind, and what my hon. friend knows is that, as was so well pointed out the other day by the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin), some small counties could be put together instead of being split into two or three pieces, and then there would be room for three more seats in Montreal.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Very good. We shall put two or three counties together. Then who is to decide about the boundaries? I say that those who are entitled to decide —and I am not a strong party man—are the party in power which has the confidence of the Canadian people.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I did not intend to prolong my remarks much beyond eight o'clock, but unfortunately I had only five or six minutes before six o'clock. I intend to accept and to answer the suggestion made by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain).

I do not know whether you have noticed, Mr. Chairman, how extraordinary it is that our Liberal friends on the other side are always coming forward with some wonderful suggestion in the public interest which they never thought of before, when they are in—I will not say the valley of humiliation—but the regions of opposition. This suggestion of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay is certainly one of the most interesting we have heard. Unfortunately it comes rather late in the season. It is strange that the hon. member never thought of it in the redistribution of 1924. There was another suggestion from the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay, a sort of mathematical one, which speaking for myself I would be willing to accept but for this, that under that plan to give Montreal the number of seats it would be entitled to according to its population we would have to work in somewhere seventy-five seats for the province of Quebec instead of the present fixed figure of sixty-five. Otherwise I must admit that the suggestion of the hon. membe for Charlevoix-Saguenay is perfectly acceptable. If he can find a way to work it out, I for my part have no objection.

But what are we discussing, Mr. Chairman? What is the question before the committee? What are our differences? What gross injustice, what great geographical error has been committed? I have waited and listened and heard none. I listened to the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin), the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) and others, and I have not yet heard where or when any injustice or geographical mistake has been committed.

Mr. TOTZKE: You have not been listening, then.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I have been listening very carefully, and I challenge hon. members on the other side to get up and state one case where the people of this country are going to be deprived of their vote or of their right to vote as they want to. I repeat my challenge—show one case, only one, where a man is going to be deprived of his vote or of the right to vote according to his convictions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not what redistribution is for, is it?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Very poor.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Of course it is very poor, because the hon. gentlemen so far in my province at least have been used to manipulating elections, and when they could not win them according to the convictions of the people, buy them; and when they could not buy them, steal them; and when they could not steal them, have a dirty piece of legislation like the Dillon bill.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is the hon. gentleman looking in a mirror? I think he must be looking at his own side when he says that.

Mr. LAVERGNE: If I looked at a mirror it would prove one thing, that there is at least this difference between the hon. member who interrupted and myself, that I can reflect. Let the hon. gentleman get up and state where and when the people of this country have been deprived of their prerogatives—when and where. I have listened to the Liberal members on the special committee on redistribution. I heard the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier) speak of the county I have the honour to represent, and what was his argument? A party argument, that if you divide this county the member for L'Islet (Mr. Fafard) would be deprived of five hundred of a majority. Maybe. I said, "If you can divide it otherwise I am willing to accept it." No answer. I will appeal to the hon. member for L'Islet himself. They came to me and said, "Will you agree to give us this parish?" I said, "Yes." We made that one concession, and it was final. Then there was a second concession asked. I accepted again and it was final. Then a third one. I accepted again, and it was final. But the hon. gentlemen are not yet satisfied.

Mr. FAFARD: I spoke to my hon. friend only twice during the session, so I could not have met him on three occasions.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Spoke twice, but he spoke twice for three different parishes.

Mr. FAFARD: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman has to take my word for it. I never asked him for anything. What was asked to-day was asked by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion), who asked for one parish only. I did not ask for anything and I will not ask for anything.

Mr. LAVERGNE: The hon. member came to me with the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, and I granted what was asked.

Mr. FAFARD: Not my demand.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Tourville, Sainte-Perpetue and Saint-Damase, which makes three—one, two, three—and the hon. member himself asked for Saint-Damase, which was granted.

Mr. FAFARD: The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency asked you. I did not ask for anything and I do not want anything. I want both constituencies together.

Mr. LAVERGNE: You were there.

Mr. FAFARD: Yes, I was there.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Did the hon. member accept? Does he accept it now?

Mr. FAFARD: I will give you an answer when you are through.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I want an answer now.

Mr. FAFARD: I want both constituencies together; that is all.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Habemus confitentem reum—the accused party is confessing. The hon. member wants the whole thing. There is the whole county of L'Islet—

Mr. FAFARD: Throwing the counties of L'Islet and Montmagny together.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Very good. I will accept that principle for one second, of L'Islet complete annexed to Montmagny complete. If I were a strong partisan or had the same spirit as the hon. members opposite I might say, Well, the principle is good, and we are going to apply it. We will annex the whole of L'Islet to Montmagny and attach it to Kamouraska.

Mr. FAFARD: There are 24,000 in Kamouraska.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Together with Montmagny that would be 55,000.

Mr. FAFARD: No, 39,000.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No, 55,000. Half of L'Islet and Montmagny make 30,800. L'Islet and Montmagny together make 45,000, and Kamouraska alone 22,000.

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Chairman, why should not hon. members opposite leave us to make our speeches uninterrupted? Yesterday the hon. member for Quebec East, whom I respect very much, was speaking and he did not wish to be interrupted and we did not interrupt him, but members from this side of the house are always interrupted by French-speaking members opposite, while the English-speaking members opposite, if not out of respect and courtesy, at least because of a calm and peaceful spirit, allow us to make our speeches uninterrupted.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that yesterday, during my speech, the hon. member for Montmagny, who is now speaking, interrupted me at least ten times.

Mr. LARUE (Translation): He asked permission.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I interrupted the hon. member twice to ask questions. But on the point of order, I have no objection to interruptions from hon. members, none at all, because the more they interrupt the more they show the weakness of their position. And they know that although I am a strong Conservative in doctrine I am not a very strong partisan. They know very well that the only reason they have given to this committee so far has been their own narrow, parochial partisanship.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Well, hon. members can laugh, but I repeat my challenge. It would be far braver and more honest on their part to accept it. Show us one case of injustice, just one. Show us one case where counties have been put in that sort of salamander dragon figure referred to by the hon. member for Quebec East, and as far as I am concerned I have enough love of justice and fair play to accept the verdict. Not one can be shown. The people want to be represented, they want to vote and vote for their principles and their beliefs, whatever the government in power may be. In 1917, in 1921, in 1925, and 1926, in spite of all gerrymanders or redistributions, the people of Quebec voted as they wanted to vote. In 1930, in spite of gerrymander—I grant that to the hon. members on the other side—they returned twenty-five seats to the Conservative party. As far as I am concerned I do not believe gerrymanders or redistribution amount to a row of pins. If some gross injustice had been committed, some geographical error, it should be corrected, but I repeat, hon. members cannot show one case, one instance where this redistribution has been unjust. There may be, as one finds in all human enterprises, some imperfection, some case where one parish should have gone to another county. On what principle? On what ground? Why should Ste. Rose du Dégelé be in the county of Témiscouata instead of in another county? On what principle, what ground of justice? There can be only one determining principle—geographical boundaries. There is not one instance in this bill where geographical boundaries have not been respected; quite the contrary. And the only reason offered by hon. members so far has been: Oh, but our party is going to be affected. Outside of this house who in the country cares a rap about the party of the hon. gentlemen? Let them go to the country with their party and their doctrine, which has varied so often—

An hon. MEMBER: We are ready to go.

Mr. LAVERGNE: —and I am a judge to speak about variation. When I questioned the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont the other night in this house, what was his argument? The hon. member is going to have a minority of 500—no other reason. But is that a reason? I take the position of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay; Quebec has to be divided into sixty-five districts. If we must add new counties to Montreal, Montreal would be entitled to twenty more seats. We cannot actually grant them; where are we going to take them from? Some rural seats must disappear. My seat is affected. The other day I accepted the challenge of the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont; annex Montmagny to Bellechasse. Mr. Chairman, you will grant that there I was more just, more generous, more patriotic than the hon. member; I accepted the challenge. Yet when we want to divide one county into two, hon. members say: "You cannot do that; it will split a Liberal seat." Well, sad things have happened to our country in the past; it has survived a great deal; it has passed through conquest, through war, through famine, through ruin, but this is the first time that I have heard that the splitting of a Liberal seat is going to disrupt confederation. Do hon. members think the Liberal party is the whole of Canada? Why, Mr. Speaker, for thirty years they have come here with a solid bloc from the province of Quebec, although forty per cent of the population of that province were Conservative. How did it happen? I ask the hon. members, how did it happen? One of two things, either gerrymander—and they have been accused of that—or the population of Quebec was voting Liberal. Well, changing a few parishes will not change their situation. If they believe in their doctrine, if they are so sure of their position, let them go to the people of Quebec with this map—which is nothing extraordinary, which represents concessions granted to them one after another, and yet they are not satisfied. Do they want us to resign and grant them power without making a fight? As far as I am concerned I cannot go that far, because I feel it my duty to my beliefs, to my country, to my people, to go and tell them that for twenty years in this house they have been betrayed.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): It is a funeral oration.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Yes, the funeral oration of the Liberal party. I do not know whether I am going to run at the next election. I am indifferent—I may run; I may not. If I obey my doctors I shall not run. But as long as I have a breath left in my body I shall stand up in this house to defend what is right, what is true. We have been fighting here, spending the money of the people for two weeks, without one fair suggestion from the other side, without one clear case of injustice having been shown, but just because hon. members are afraid that if their gerrymander of 1924 is changed they will not come back with a baker's dozen from the province of Quebec. They know it.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I will put just one question; in this house, so far as my province is concerned, the Liberal party have ruled for the last twenty years, have been masters federally and provincially. When the people tried to revolt against their rule they had their friends in Quebec bring in that unheard of piece of legislation called the Dillon bill, which is the most disgusting piece of legislation to be placed on any statute book, taking as it does eighty-two ridings out from the courts of justice of this country to be administered by their friends in Quebec, the very friends who brought them to the valley of humiliation. I ask now—and these are my last words—who is afraid? Let us go to the people; they are the masters.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I hear some hon. gentlemen opposite say, "hear, hear." If they are so anxious to go to the people let them pass this bill and then the people will decide.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to repeat my remarks of yesterday. I listened to the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) before the six o'clock adjournment, congratulate the government on the dismemberment of the counties in general and also state that the government was well advised to use force in order to pass the bill we are discussing.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not agree with him and that what I want is not a dismembered Montmagny, or a dismembered L'Islet, but the union of these two counties, for the reasons I gave yesterday.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): It is to be merged with Kamouraska.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The hon. member now asks why it should not be merged with Kamouraska; I shall tell him why. The hon. member for Montmagny objects to the union of Montmagny and L'Islet counties because the combined population would be too great. Mr. Chairman, the combined population of Kamouraska and L'Islet would be at least 5,000 greater.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): It is absolutely the same.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The hon. member has evidently not studied the facts when he states that L'Islet and Montmagny have a combined population of 55,000. The hon. member is not in earnest. In 1931, L'Islet county had a population of 19,404 and Montmagny county, 20,239, which makes a total of 39,643. That is not excessive when there are in the province of Quebec 36 counties with a population of over 40,000.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Granted.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): There are the counties of Matane, Bonaventure, Gaspé, Charlevoix-Saguenay, Témiscouata; in fact, we are surrounded by constituencies of more than 40,000. The hon. member insinuated that I tried to bargain with him.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): No.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I am glad he denies it, as I am not in the habit of bargaining. I stated in this house that I wished to see the counties of Montmagny and L'Islet joined together, inasmuch as their combined population would be only 39,643.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): What would be the population of Kamouraska-L'Islet?

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): 44,000.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): That is not so very much more.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Five thousand is a large number.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): That is a great many Liberals in the same constituency.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The hon. member for Montmagny says that this is a great many Liberals in one constituency, although he has stated that the government is not effecting the redistribution from a political point of view. The hon. member for Montmagny sees no harm in having people vote in one place instead of another, on the right side or on the left side of the street. He is perfectly satisfied that the people of Berthier and of Saint-François who voted for him, who elected him, should henceforth vote in the county of Bellechasse.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Absolutely.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): What will be the chances of survival, in a Liberal county like Bellechasse, of the 255 Conservatives who voted for the hon. member for Montmagny?

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): I have more confidence in the hon. member for Bellechasse than in the hon. member for L'Islet. I think they will be very well off.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The people think otherwise.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The hon. member for Montmagny and I are as one, for I, also, have more confidence in the hon. member for Bellechasse than in him. The hon. member for Montmagny says: Mention a measure by means of which we have prevented people from voting. I wish to recall to him a measure adopted in 1916, called the War-time Elections Act, by means of which thousands of men were deprived of their vote which was given to unknown persons in England.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Will the hon. member say when he denounced it in the house?

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I was not here. I will recall to the hon. member that in that year he was, in the county of Montmagny, the candidate of the government that caused that measure to be adopted.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): The hon. member is greatly mistaken. There was a Liberal candidate, Mr. George Blais; a Conservative candidate, Mr. Dechene, and an independent candidate, myself. Both parties acted together to bring about my defeat. I do not blame them.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I happened to take part in that campaign in 1917. I spoke against the hon. member in the parish of St. Ignace.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): That explains my defeat.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Perhaps not, but I certainly did not help you. The hon. member for Montmagny was a Nationalist until one week before nomination, when he became the Conservative candidate.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): The hon. member is mistaken once more.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I should like to take just a few moments of the time of the committee, Mr. Chairman, to reply to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) this afternoon. Since the hon. gentleman quoted the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), who was not and is not in the house, I think perhaps it might be well for the committee to know just what attitude was taken by the hon. member for York-Sunbury.

The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay referred to the hon. member for York-Sunbury as having supported the redistribution of 1924 as a fair and reasonable measure, and I thought I would look up the speech of the hon. member for York-Sunbury to see just what he did say. In the first place it must be remembered that at that time we of this party did not have any members in the house from the province of Quebec, and the only reason the hon. member for York-Sunbury represented our party so far as Quebec was concerned was that he was one of the members from the maritime provinces, and therefore was put on the committee to represent not only New Brunswick and the maritime provinces but the province of Quebec as well. The hon. member knew as little as I know about the boundaries of the different constituencies in Quebec, and certainly I should not say I was capable of passing upon the boundaries of the constituencies there, and I do not intend to attempt to do so to-night.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury pointed out, at page 4517 of Hansard for 1924, the very fact I have just stated. He uses these words:

> —especially in view of the fact that for the most part I was ignorant of local conditions, particularly in the province of Quebec.

Then he goes on to enumerate some of the injustices which were being done by that legislation. He said:

> With regard to the province of Quebec I expressly reserved to myself and my colleagues the right to discuss the disparity between the urban and the rural representation in that province. If hon. gentlemen have examined the census statistics, and also if they heard the observations that fell this morning from the lips of the hon. member for Chambly and Vercheres (Mr. Archambault), they will at once agree with me that the work of the committee has not done full justice to the population of the city and district of Montreal.

Then he went on to mention some ten or twelve seats in the province of Quebec that had populations of less than 23,000, and he pointed out that in the city of Montreal the average was 56,000. I refer to these facts only to show that the hon. member for York-Sunbury did not agree that the redistribution was fair.

> There are 10 seats in the province, principally situated on the island of Montreal, which have a population in excess of 50,000, or two and a half times the population of the 12 seats to which I have referred. . . . It is not fair, it is not equitable, it is not in accordance with the principles laid down in this house by the Prime Minister himself or with the views of anyone who has given careful attention to the problem, that there should be this disparity. I admit that there should be some disparity, but I do not think it should be anything like the disparity that exists here. . . . You cannot prove it to my satisfaction or to the satisfaction of any fairminded man in this house. I think I know the underlying reason actuating our friends in the province of Quebec for not wanting to make this change.

I can hardly concede that to be an approbation of the redistribution of that date. But if you read any of the speeches made at that time on our side of the house, bearing in mind that we had then only fifty members, you will find that the same complaints were made with respect to the redistribution that was then effected as are being made at the present time, only they were more severe. Practically all the speakers on our side of the house complained of the treatment which they were receiving at the hands of the government of that day. I might quote from Mr. Donald Sutherland, not the Minister of National Defence in this house to-day but a relation of his, who represented the constituency of South Oxford. So far as the province of Ontario was concerned, he named seat after seat which was wiped out altogether, and the only reason he could give was the fact that they were Conservative seats. For instance, as reported at page 4514 of Hansard of 1924, Mr. Sutherland said, referring to the constituency of Mr. Stansell which was wiped out:

> We find one of the Elgin constituencies is eliminated. It is also somewhat significant how constituencies with a Conservative record were struck off. The constituency of East Elgin which had been Conservative in 1904, 1908, 1911 and 1917, while it went Progressive for a short time, went back into the old Conservative column in 1921. This was one of the first constituencies disposed of.

He named others that were wiped out because they were Conservative. Then he went on:

Then coming down further east in Ontario we find the constituency of East Peterborough is being merged with the two Hastings. This also was Conservative for a long time although it went to the Progressive party in 1921. East Hastings has been a Conservative constituency from 1904 to the present time. . . . I am pointing this out to show that the Conservatives on the committee were in a very small minority, and historic Conservative constituencies were ruthlessly eliminated as a result; that they were not in a position to exercise much influence, and were helpless to prevent the government from eliminating Conservative constituencies in accordance with their own desire. . . . There were four cardinal principles which he—

The then Prime Minister.

—laid down and asked the committee to adhere to. The committee have absolutely disregarded every one of them, and not in a single instance have they carried out the instructions which the Prime Minister issued to them. . . . The report of the committee laid on the table of this house on Friday, July 11, is very misleading, and I think the chairman of the committee should have explained the attitude of the minority more in detail than he did this afternoon. One would assume from reading this report that the committee were practically unanimous with regard to fixing the boundaries of these constituencies. That was not the case; but after we realized what the situation was, we finally consented under protest to a scheme of redistribution for the province of Ontario. It was the best we could obtain. It is not satisfactory, and if the government have any regard for their reputation in this country, they will take steps to see that a fair representation is made and that three constituencies in western Ontario will not have three representatives in the House of Commons with a less population than another county which is only to have one.

Mr. POULIOT: Is that a quotation from the hon. member for York-Sunbury?

Mr. MANION: No; I have just been quoting from Mr. Donald Sutherland, the late member for South Oxford. He made an elaborate speech on that occasion—

Mr. POULIOT: He always did.

Mr. MANION: Well, he was a very able member, and he was giving the Conservative point of view; just as my hon. friends have tried to show their dissatisfaction with the present redistribution measure, so Mr. Sutherland and other Conservative members in 1924 were complaining about the redistribution which was being carried out at that time. We have learned during the past two days that hon. gentlemen are not satisfied, and I have no quarrel with that; but I have read these extracts from the speech delivered by Mr. Sutherland on that occasion to show that there was as much dissatisfaction on the part of Conservative members at that time with the redistribution of that day as there is among hon. gentlemen to-day with respect to the bill now before us. And we should probably have been able to be more explicit and severe in our complaints with regard to the province of Quebec had the Conservatives been represented in that province. None of us however were from that province and consequently the only provinces with which we could deal effectively were those in which we had representation. I do not say this for the purpose of stirring up any ill feeling; I merely wish to impress upon the committee that the Conservative opposition of that day felt as strongly against the government as the present opposition feels against the government now in power, though I will add this, that I do not think they made speeches which were quite so impassioned as the speeches that have been made with reference to this bill by the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Quebec East. Other members opposite have made more reasonable speeches than the speeches which we have heard from the two gentlemen to whom I have referred, but the speeches that were made in 1924 by the Conservatives were very forceful and were intended to show the injustice that was being done.

Mr. POULIOT: May I say to the hon. gentleman that the Prime Minister did not make an impassioned speech yesterday; he was calm.

Mr. MANION: That was a slip of the tongue; I meant the leader of the opposition. I should have said the then Prime Minister. Possibly he may live long enough to be Prime Minister again.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MANION: I must add, however, that he will be much older than he is now. Let me quote another member of that day, Mr. Stansell, whose seat was wiped out. He represented one of the Elgins. As reported at page 4540 of the same Hansard, he said:

Under the present division nearly half the constituency of East Elgin is put into West Elgin, and the remaining part of the county, a little more than half, is attached to the county of Norfolk. I am not complaining because I am deprived of a constituency, but I am complaining on behalf of the people themselves. I am afraid that in the dying days of the session any protest on my part with regard to the arrangement would be futile.

Mr. Stansell's seat was wiped out. He never came back; his constituency was eliminated. He wanted them to retain the name of the constituency but this they would not do.

An hon. MEMBER: Mr. Stansell won the election in 1925.

Mr. MANION: Well, he is not here now. He won the election in 1925 but he lost the 1926 election, so that it does not make much difference. In 1925 the sweep was strongly for us and in 1926, heaven knows why, it was the other way. I could never understand why it was, because in the interval between the two elections there had occurred the customs scandal, and why the government of that day should have been returned in the face of that I do not know. At any rate, they were returned and Mr. Stansell's seat was wiped out in 1926. I wish to quote finally from the late Mr. E. M. Macdonald, who was a minister of the government at that time and was chairman of the redistribution committee of the day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He is still alive.

Mr. MANION: Well, he is "late" so far as being in office is concerned. That hon. gentleman was chairman of the committee, and I wish to show from his own words, as reported in the same volume of Hansard, his attitude towards the complaints that were then being made. I am bound to say his remarks do not show a spirit of great conciliation. At page 4541, after listening to the complaints made by Mr. Stansell, Mr. Macdonald said:

> If every hon. gentleman who feels that his constituency has been affected adversely by the redistribution owing to its being one of the smaller constituencies proceeds to move an amendment, we are going to have a very complicated situation. This committee is hardly in a position, on the complaint of an hon. member who does not want to have his constituency interfered with, to decide adversely to the report of the committee. . . . There are a great many hon. gentlemen who have greater ground for complaint than my hon. friend.

He was referring to Mr. Stansell.

> I am free to say that there are hon. gentlemen sitting in this house who have cases which on their face they might well complain of, but in view of the discussion which took place in the committee, I do not think my hon. friend has very much ground for complaint.

That was the nice sympathetic attitude adopted by Mr. Macdonald, the chairman of the committee of that day. That was the sympathetic attitude taken by the government of that day towards the complaints raised from our part of the house. In other words, he said: we are sympathetic towards you but we cannot do anything about it. And nothing was done about it.

The constituency of East Algoma was mentioned in the house the other night. I do not think there has ever been a constituency which has been changed as much as this one was during the last redistribution. It was not this government that did that, it was the late government. The hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) has lived all his life in the town of Chapleau, the chief town in the constituency. The old constituency line ran down west of the town of Chapleau which was included in the constituency. But to get around this they brought the line down and cut around the town of Chapleau and a couple of other little places. They even took the hon. gentleman's own mill and ruled it out of the constituency. The line then swung back again. In spite of that the hon. member succeeded in coming back in 1925, but like my friend, Mr. Stansell, he went down in the tight elections of 1926. There has never been a seat in Canada so unfairly dealt with as the seat of the hon. member for East Algoma was dealt with in that redistribution.

I do not mention this to stir up any ill feeling, as I think we have had enough acrimonious discussion in this debate. I have referred to only two or three of the speeches made at that time. I could quote every speaker on our side who took part in that debate in order to show that every one took the same stand as the Hon. Donald Sutherland and Mr. Stansell. We had fifty members in that house and we were represented on the committee as fifty is to one hundred and eighty-five, which I think was the number of the government and their supporters in the Progressive party. We got consideration in exactly the same proportion. We certainly did not get as much consideration as my hon. friends opposite have been given in this redistribution. I am informed that since the debate commenced there have been concessions made by hon. members from practically all the provinces. My hon. friends have received many more concessions than we received in 1924. When my hon. friends try to make out the government of to-day as being such terrible criminals they should remember how the little Conservative party of fifty was treated in 1924.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, it is always most pleasurable to listen to the genial Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion).

I have been to the library to try to get the fifth volume of the debates of 1924 but I find myself in the same unfortunate position as the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) who was unable to obtain certain volumes which had been loaned to other hon. members. The speech of my hon. friend was divided into two parts. The first was a quotation from a speech of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), and the second was a quotation from a speech of Mr. Sutherland, who is no longer a member of this house. The Minister of Railways and Canals quoted the hon. member for York-Sunbury to show that he had disapproved of the redistribution of 1924. My hon. friend is such a fast speaker that I was unable to take notes, but if my memory serves me aright he said that the hon. member for York-Sunbury said that the only complaint in the province of Quebec was the discrepancy which existed between the urban and rural populations and the fact that the urban population was much larger than the rural. My hon. friend can correct me if my quotation is not correct. This was very impressive and I shall attempt to show to what extent it made an impression upon the minds of Mr. Sutherland and the government of that day. The speech made by the hon. member for York-Sunbury was so convincing that the government, because of the increase in urban population, felt bound to reduce the number of rural seats in the province of Ontario as well as in the province of Quebec and at the same time increase the number of urban seats. The same thing is being done this year by this bill. Not only are the urban seats in the province of Quebec being increased by three but the rural seats are being increased by two. It was probably because of the strong speech made by the hon. member for York-Sunbury that the government of that day had to take the steps about which Mr. Sutherland complained so much. My hon. friend referred to the constituencies which have disappeared. Why does he not mention the constituency of Digby which will disappear? The hon. member now representing that constituency will be short a seat.

Mr. MANION: He will probably take the new one.

Mr. POULIOT: Probably so, but then the other constituency will not be represented; he will represent three together. The hon. gentlemen from Ontario who lost their seats following the redistribution of 1924 should have run in the new electoral districts which had been merged together.

I listened with great interest to something said by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) just before recess. He said that it did not matter whether a man was put on this side of the tree or on that side. I have not read Hansard but I think that is what the hon. member said.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Whether he votes on one side of a tree or on the other.

Mr. POULIOT: Let us go to the garden of Eden. There was a tree of good and a tree of evil; if one side is evil and the other side is good, why not leave the voter on the good side?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Why give all the chances to the serpent?

Mr. POULIOT: Where is the serpent? I have no apple to offer my hon. friend and if I had I do not think I would dare to offer him the forbidden fruit. The forbidden fruit in this case is the argument the hon. gentleman has offered to us in a spoonful of sugar. The argument presented by my hon. friend is this: what does it matter if a man votes in this or that constituency as long as he is not deprived of his vote? I am glad the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is in the chamber because I shall answer that argument at once. I shall be very brief in expressing my views. It is only a matter of fairness, it is only a matter of decency, it is only a matter of justice and equity and it is only a matter of course. Suppose that Joe in the parish of Berthier voted for the hon. member for Montmagny in 1930 after having listened to his speeches. Now that my hon. friend has spent a few years in parliament, thanks to the votes he has received from Joe, Paul, Tom and Jim, is it not natural that he has to go back to Joe, Paul, Tom and Jim, the same men who voted for him and who sent him to the House of Commons, and explain what he has done? If they are satisfied with him, then they will elect him again and, if not, they will send him back home. That is only fair. The names do not count, but I give them in order to explain my views on the matter. Those who vote for a member of parliament have the right to judge him after he is through with his mandate, after parliament has been dissolved, and it is those people to whom he has to go back to explain what has been done and each one of his votes in the House of Commons.

Mr. LAVERGNE: What about those who have moved away or who have died or who are not yet born?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not complain about interjections from my hon. friend provided that he utters them in a voice loud enough for my ear to catch them. When a man dies, it is a case of force majeure and I shall not insist on my point in such a case. My hon. friend's idea is that a man who has voted for him once and who has helped to send him to parliament, has no right to judge him after he has fulfilled the mandate that has been given to him.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Where did the hon. member get that?

Mr. POULIOT: That is what I understand from my hon. friend's argument. He finds it absurd. I am expressing what he said as I understood it, and when he said it I found it most absurd. When a man votes for a candidate and when that candidate is by that vote and others elected to the House of Commons, he has to return to the same people to tell them whether he has been true to his promises.

Mr. LAVERGNE: What about those who have moved out of the county?

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend will be kind enough to say that in a louder tone, I shall be glad to answer him.

Mr. LAVERGNE: What about those who have moved out of the county? Would he have them brought back to the county to vote?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): I should be glad if the speaker were allowed to proceed without interruption.

Mr. POULIOT: I am pleased to answer questions to the best of my ability. If they decide to move out of the constituency, that is an entirely different matter, but when they remain in the same constituency, they expect their member to return and to tell them what he has done in parliament; they have a right to judge him; if they are satisfied with him, they will reelect him and, if not, they will send him back home. That is my viewpoint in regard to the matter and why I say it is a question of fairness. If you give a power of attorney to anyone he has to report back to you and not to your neighbour. This is an elementary principle of law based on common sense and this is why I find the contention of the hon. member for Montmagny most absurd and illogical. I do not see how he can explain it any further except by saying that he is afraid to go back to his electors; that is all.

[Mr. LaVergne.]

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier): I had no intention of taking any further part in this debate, but in view of the citations by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) from the debate of 1924, believing that citations, like chickens, very often come home to roost, I thought it might be well to quote a little further from the speech of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson). I have a copy of the 1924 debates; I am sorry if the fact of its being in my possession has deprived anyone else of its use, but I was very much interested in the debate and for that reason I still have the volume with me. I quite agree with the quotation made by the minister from the speech by the hon. member for York-Sunbury. The minister naturally, being who he is, quoted correctly and I notice that, as reported on page 4517 of volume 5 of Hansard of 1924, the hon. member for York-Sunbury said:

> As a member of the redistribution committee, and as a member of the subcommittees for the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, I must confess that I fully appreciated the responsibilities that were placed on my shoulders. The work was arduous and I desire at the outset to convey to the other gentlemen of the subcommittees my sincere thanks for the courteous treatment which was accorded me and for the consideration that was shown me as a member of each of the subcommittees—

And particularly by the members of the subcommittee for Quebec. I notice in this debate the main issue in so far as the redistribution in Quebec is concerned, was the same as it is now, the disparity between the rural and urban populations. The hon. member for York-Sunbury, as reported on page 4518 of the same volume, went on to say:

> With regard to the province of Quebec I expressly reserved to myself and my colleagues the right to discuss the disparity between the urban and the rural representation in that province. If hon. gentlemen have examined the census statistics, and also if they heard the observations that fell this morning from the lips of the hon. member for Chambly and Vercheres (Mr. Archambault), they will at once agree with me that the work of the committee has not done full justice to the population of the city and district of Montreal.

The same question comes up to-day. Montreal, like someone whose name should not be mentioned in polite society, is blamed for many sins, but I want to repeat that the main subject matter of discussion at that time was in reference to rural and urban representation. The hon. member for York-Sunbury, as reported on page 4525, continued:

> So that it will at once be apparent that with one or two exceptions there is a very great disparity between what might be termed the purely rural seats in the province of Quebec and what might be termed the urban seats. That disparity is altogether too great and it will some day have to be corrected, because it is growing. I have no doubt, however, that the redistribution for the province of Quebec is probably as fair as any that could be arrived at under the method adopted, and I for one propose to stand by the report of the committee in this regard.

Mr. CASGRAIN: From whom is the hon. gentleman quoting?

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier): From the hon. member for York-Sunbury, at page 4525 of Hansard of July 15, 1924.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is what I quoted this afternoon.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier): The hon. member for York-Sunbury goes on to say, and here he is very prophetic:

I would like to point out, however, that those who come after us ten years hence will have to grapple with this situation, and so far as I am aware there is only one possible excuse for maintaining the disparity that it is apparent now exists, and that is the question of sentiment. This, of course, is a very strong element. No member and no group of members like to see any particular historic constituency disappear, and the province of Quebec being in sentiment the most Conservative province in the whole confederation, probably that sentiment is stronger there than in any other part of Canada.

Further on he says, speaking of the county of Sunbury in New Brunswick:

The people of that county and the people of that province did not take to that change very willingly, but the force of events was so strong as to compel them to do so, and it will be necessary for the people of the province of Quebec to look forward, at least in the next redistribution, to seeing some of their rural constituencies disappear and be united with others of a like population if the disparity is not to continue.

In his concluding remarks the hon. member for York-Sunbury says:

That duty has been cast upon parliament, and while I have no doubt that in days gone by there have been what might be termed outrages, yet in my humble opinion, in so far as I have personal knowledge, the committee in this case, at least the subcommittees I have had the honour of serving upon, did their work in as fair and equitable a manner as was humanly possible, having regard to the fact that there were three divergent elements on every one of the subcommittees. On that very acount it has been no easy task to arrive at a settlement.

And again:

With the exception, therefore, of the disparity with respect to the urban and the rural constituency, I am free to say that, in the light of all these circumstances, having regard to the long and patient sittings of the subcommittees, in which the spirit of compromise at times had to be called into effect, and with the further possible exception of some individual cases of certain constituencies in different parts of the country, I believe that redistribution as now presented to the house in this bill is at least an attempt at a fair settlement of what, in any event, is bound to be a very difficult problem.

The present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) in the same debate, at page 4526 of the same volume of Hansard, says that the problems in the province of Ontario are more difficult than those in the province of Quebec owing to its geographical formation, and on the next page, 4527, the Minister of Public Works says:

This, however, is not so serious, and the objections which I desire to urge to this report are those with respect to the city of Toronto, the county of York, and the Niagara peninsula. I feel that something has been gained in the direction of removing some of the anomalies and inconsistencies that existed prior to our meeting. We have not had a full measure of success. There has been some compromise in which we have all been concerned; but subject to these reservations and criticisms which I have made I propose to support the report of the committee so far as it affects the province of Ontario.

And his concluding words were:

The work has been very trying indeed and very difficult to all concerned, but as I have said, subject to these objections and these criticisms, I intend to stand by the report of the committee.

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I had intended replying in English to certain statements of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne), but, as he is not in the house at the moment and as the remarks I was going to make would require his presence, I shall speak in French on the subject that interests most particularly the riding of Laprairie-Napierville, which I have the honour to represent in this parliament. Just now, I heard the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) bewail the fate of a former member whose constituency had been divided in 1924. I do not propose to ask any one's sympathy for my own person. It is quite natural that, from a personal point of view, I should somewhat resent what the party in power has done respecting the riding of Laprairie-Napierville; but allow me, sir, to rise above personal considerations and to discuss the question on its merits. Last autumn, towards the end of the first part of the present session, this bill was presented to this house, it was first suggested to merge Laprairie-Napierville with Chambly. Some time afterwards another plan was evolved by which Laprairie-Napierville was to be joined to St. John's-Iberville.

Mr. GAGNON (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me to put a question? The hon. member for Montmagny is here now; do you wish to reply to his statements?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I do not look upon the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) as the guardian or protector of the hon. member for Montmagny. I consider the hon. member for Montmagny capable of looking after himself and, if need be, of helping the hon. member for Dorchester.

Mr. GAGNON (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): When the hon. member for Dorchester feels like speaking, he will have his turn.

Mr. Chairman, I was enumerating the various plans submitted respecting the riding of Laprairie-Napierville. I had mentioned the second one: the union with St. John's-Iberville. Subsequently, the party in power, that brute majority to which the right hon. the Prime Minister referred a few days ago, decided to add Huntingdon to Laprairie-Napierville. I shall refrain from mentioning in this house the influences that led the Conservative party to drop the second plan; however it may be, the third one was the Huntingdon-Laprairie-Napierville combination. A little later, the suggestion was made to join Laprairie-Napierville to St. Johns and Iberville to Brome-Missisquoi. Finally came the last plan, which, I am sure, will make the hon. member for Montmagny change his mind when he hears of it, the plan to join Laprairie and Beauharnois.

The ex-Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin) showed us yesterday how lacking in sense was this union from the geographical standpoint. The member for the new division created by the bill will represent a portion of the people of the province of Quebec whose virtues are many, whose prosperity is well-known, a people endowed with various advantages of which it may well be proud.

Let us, however, lay aside such considerations and consider rather what the hon. member for Montmagny has called a geographical monstrosity. May I be permitted to exhibit to this house the results of the efforts of the hon. member's friends. I hold in my hand the last part of this misshapen plan.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): All I can say is that it is beautiful compared with the riding of Quebec East.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): It is beautiful in comparison with Quebec East! Well, I am not accustomed to be satisfied with a thing because my neighbour has something worse.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): It is not very beautiful.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): May I ask the hon. member for Montmagny what he would call this drawing, judging it by its shape, if he could not see the geographical map traced upon it?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): A rhinoceros.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): I would have to know what it is. What county is it?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I thank the hon. member for Montmagny. I see that he does not understand it. His question shows that he agrees with me that it is a geographical monstrocity. I shall explain it to him: the portion of the map that I hold in my left hand represents the county of Laprairie, which extends this far. The white part is the Caughnawaga Indian reserve. The part enclosed by a red line constitutes what the ex-Minister of Marine called the famous corridor. Here it is. It would be dangerous for a drunken man to drive his automobile here, for the laws of Quebec are strict and he might fall out of the corridor and be severely punished.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): He should not let his horse run away.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The corridor is detached from Chateauguay county. This portion is inhabited by very distinguished people. The other part, extending up to this one, which I do not dare to name, but which my hon. friend certainly recognizes, is the county of Beauharnois. This slice, cut off here from the lower end of Beauharnois county, is the parish of St. Etienne, with which the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon is so much in love. He wants some more Conservatives! This part is the parish of St. Etienne, which, in 1930, gave a Conservative majority.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): It has been removed.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The section I hold in my right hand—it interests the hon. member for Lotbinière very much—is Sainte-Barbe.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Does the hon. member want St. Etienne?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Were it only a question of St. Barbe! My beloved mother taught me always to invoke St. Barbe in stormy weather. I am happy to keep the parish that bears her name.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): I am speaking of St. Etienne. Does the hon. member want St. Etienne?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Certainly. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I wish to discuss this question in an impartial, sensible and logical manner. I say it is absurd to detach this portion and to place the parish of St. Etienne in Beauharnois county. I think it absurd to take St. Barbe and attach it to the end of Beauharnois.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Will the hon. member show us the conformation of the county of Lapraire as it was prior to the bill we are now discussing?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Laprairie county was composed of this quasi-quadrilateral—

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): With this hanging tail?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): It is the parish of St. Jacques. The hon. Minister of Marine should avoid using such expressions in this house.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Does the hon. member think it is a fine conformation?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The hon. Minister of Marine evidently does not know that this part represents the parish of St. Jacques le Mineur, which his political friends detached from the adjoining county.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): No, it has been replaced in Napierville.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): This parish having given a Conservative majority, it is sought to place it in Laprairie county.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have convinced the hon. member for Montmagny, at least, that the project of his political friends respecting Beauharnois-Laprairie is one of those that might well be called—I shall not say a geographical monstrosity—but, to say the least, rhinoceros-like. I am not ready to accept it.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): That is very moderate.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I asked the hon. member for Montmagny to say what he thinks of the shape of this cutting. Somebody said it resembled a rhinoceros. I am not ready to admit that, for I have to much respect for the citizens of the district in question.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): The river passes there.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Yes, the river passes there, but it is not the cause of this cutting, as my hon. friend has found out.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): That is something I did not know.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The hon. member for Montmagny is an expert on the shape of animals. As this seems to surprise him, he will perhaps permit me to recall an incident from the past.

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): Beaver!

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): In 1920, not very far back in the life of the hon. member—allow me, Mr. Chairman, to digress for a moment. In the days of my youth nothing could stop me from running away or from borrowing a horse from my father in order to go and hear the hon. member for Montmagny, who was then on the threshold of his political life. I had fallen under the spell of his eloquence, without sharing his political opinions. Like many of us, I admired a good debater, an eloquent speaker, and, as I said, I followed with great interest the hon. gentleman's career, particularly after his election to parliament. I liked the independent judgment he brought to bear on public questions, and I was glad to see him mingle with the Liberals of the Quebec Reform Club. I used to be happy to read the following day's newspaper reports of his speeches, so much so that I clipped the following article from La Patrie, of Tuesday, December 28, 1920, which summarizes the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Montmagny:

> The province of Quebec represents the Liberal party; that is what makes its strength. Liberalism has been able to draw from Quebec a solid bloc that we must refrain from undermining, for through it Quebec enjoys an enviable position of which it should make profitable use. The Liberal party has been the Canadian party, the party of Papineau, of Lafontaine and of Morin. It is still the supporter of the aspirations of our race. The party question is now simplified: the Conservatives of Quebec have been reduced to the form of museum fossils.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Very good. Did the hon. member notice one sentence in that quotation? "The Liberal party now forms a solid bloc of which it should make profitable use." Inasmuch as it has used it, as always, against the interests of our race, I abandoned it.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): It is not proper to question a man's convictions. I respect the political views of the hon. member for Montmagny, just as I respect those of my constituents who do not share mine and who voted against me. Whenever I have an opportunity to see that they obtain justice, I do so regardless of whether they are Conservatives or Liberals. I gather from the remarks he has just made that the hon. member for Montmagny came to the conclusion that the Liberal party did not stand for the views he held and consequently that he crossed over, once again, to the Conservative side.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): If it can be put that way.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I think I express his mind to a certain extent when I say that he is not permanently attached to his present party.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): No, no. When the solid bloc controlled the majority in this house and in the party, and the hon. leader of the opposition was prime minister, I judged that the time had arrived to do justice to our compatriots and to claim the things we requested this year but did not get.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): You have 19 members this year, but you are not doing anything in that respect.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): The hon. member may be right. These 19 members did not obtain what they sought, but can we blame 19 for failing to accomplish what 65 lacked the courage to attempt?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the opportunity will come to discuss the merits or demerits of the Liberal policy.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): I hope so.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): For the present, may I be permitted to proceed with my remarks concerning the riding of Laprairie-Napierville.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Quite so, let us return to the question.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): If I recalled this incident to the hon. member—

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): It is not distasteful to me .

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): —it was not with any intention of hurting his feelings—

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): It is not distasteful to me.

[Mr. LaVergne.]

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): —but simply in order to ask him—I have reason to believe, judging from what I have just read, that he is an expert on fossils—if the form I now exhibit does not represent a fossil or the outgrowth of the fossils he must meet on his side of the house.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): It is possible. It bears a striking resemblance to Montmagny as it was prior to the change.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I really admit that Laprairie-Napierville, with 21,000 of a population according to the census of 1931 is too small a riding. It is necessary to build it up by the addition of surrounding territory. But do our friends the Conservatives count as nothing the history of a county, its people, its business, the mode of life of its citizens? Are the customs of a people to be set at naught? Is it reasonable to separate two old counties like Laprairie and Napierville? As a matter of fact, Laprairie is one of the oldest counties in Canada, after Montreal, if not the oldest, for it was founded only a few years later than Montreal. If our friends opposite consider the customs of a people as a matter of some importance, why do they not take into account the fact that the citizens of Laprairie-Napierville have lived together for more than two centuries?

Mr. MERCIER (St-Henri) (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Laprairie was founded a few years after Montreal and its excess population spread out southwards to form the parishes of St. Philippe, St. Constant, St. Edouard, Napierville, St. Michel, St. Rémi. May I be permitted to say that one of the first families to settle at Laprairie was that of an ancestor of mine who, after leaving Paris in 1648 and spending some years in Quebec, arrived at Laprairie in 1668 and finally settled at St. Philippe, where his descendants have always resided. You will understand, Mr. Chairman, the close relations that unite these people, whom we find, if we go back to their origin, to be nearly all related to each other. As to their business relations, the farmers composing the population of the counties of Laprairie and Napierville have their markets either at Montreal or at St. John's. When have they business in Beauharnois county?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Never.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I know of only a dozen citizens of Laprairie-Napierville who, once a year, visit the Valleyfield fair. No relations whatever exist between the citizens of Laprairie-Napierville and those of Beauharnois. They never meet. Supposing that at the next election a resident of the western end of Beauharnois county, of St. Barbe, for instance, were elected to this house, and that a citizen of St. Philippe had business with him. To see his representative this citizen would have to travel 70 or 80 miles and when he had done that the member would probably have to tell him that in order to obtain the position he seeks he must be within the age limit and possess the required qualifications.

If I may be permitted to use the expression, I would say that this merger, this marriage, is an absurdity. I appeal to our friends opposite, to their common sense, to their spirit of fair play, to their good judgment. Ever since I came to this house I have noticed that, no matter how just their claims, how serious the grievances they expose, members sitting on this side seldom succeed in obtaining justice for their people. It seems to me that every member should realize the consequences of the redistribution set forth in Bill No. 2 and which we have been denouncing. We all know that this measure, if adopted as planned, will prove so unpopular that, should the government sooner or later decide to appeal to the country, the wrongs inflicted by this bill, even were they the sole issue before the people, would suffice to bring about the downfall of our friends opposite and to assure to the Liberal party a large majority throughout the country. Our hon. friends on the government side must be aware of this; the thought must constantly haunt them. What consoles me when I appeal to their good judgment is the increased spirit of conciliation, the better understanding between the two parties, that I have observed in recent days. There seems to be a tendency towards mutual concessions, a readiness to yield certain points that had previously been insisted upon, with the result that grievances are daily diminishing in number. There are still some left, however, and, to my mind, the gravest of them is the one relating to the ridings of Laprairie-Napierville and Beauharnois. In the name of justice, of common sense and of sound logic, I ask that this wrong be redressed.

Allow me to recall to the hon. members opposite that a similar attempt was made in 1892 when the Conservatives, then in power, were effecting a redistribution of constituencies. There was then before the house a plan providing for the dismemberment of the counties of Napierville, Laprairie and Châteauguay. Up to the final days the intention was to leave the two parishes of Châteauguay and St. Philomène in Laprairie and to transfer to St. John's the parishes of St. Cyprien, Napierville and St. Michel. But thanks to the good sense of certain Conservatives, thanks to the spirit of justice and fair play of the leader, Sir John Thompson, thanks to the conciliatory methods of the then leader of the opposition, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, better counsels prevailed and it was decided to unite the counties of Laprairie and Napierville without cutting them up, without scattering some of their parishes left and right, as it is sought to do now.

It seems to me that in the present case it should have been easy to yield certain claims based on political considerations. As the right hon. the Prime Minister said yesterday:

Is it not fair to say that hon. gentlemen opposite must recognize that fact and to recognize the further fact that when a choice has to be made in one of two given ways we must expect that choice to be made in the way that would be most advantageous to the party in power.

Notwithstanding these very human sentiments expressed by the right hon. the Prime Minister, it seems to me that, while taking into due account the legitimate convictions of all concerned, it should be possible to avoid going to extremes, it should be possible to preserve a happy medium and to act in accordance with the principles of common sense. Would it not be possible, while adhering to these principles, to unite Laprairie-Napierville and Chambly? I put this question to the hon. Minister of Marine. Does he believe his chances will be better in Rouville? He is an intelligent man, a man whom I hold in high esteem; I have never missed an opportunity of saying so in public and I do not hesitate to say so in this house. I consider him a gentleman and I know he is well endowed with good judgment, sufficiently, in any case, to realize that in such a matter one must not look only at the results of 1930, but that one must go further back in a county's history to ascertain the political leanings of the various elements of its population. If the hon. minister will look up the history of Rouville he will find that that county has always acted loyally and freely and has sent to this house men of distinction, like Hon. L. P. Brodeur.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The county has undergone transformations since then.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Yes, but the majority has always rested on the Liberal side.

I wish to speak frankly. If the hon. Minister of Marine will study the history of the county of Laprairie he will find that it is not necessary to go very far back to see that, as recently as 25, 30 or 40 years ago, the Liberals in the town of Laprairie could be counted on the fingers of both hands. He will find that for 25, 30 or 40 years Laprairie county was represented by Conservatives, the last of whom, prior to 1896, was a friend of his and of mine, Mr. Conrad Pelletier, a former batonnier of Montreal, who resided in Laprairie. Would it not be in his own interest to join Laprairie-Napierville to his own county? I do not wish to leave the house under the impression that I am tendering bait to the hon. Minister of Marine. He knows human nature; he is not unaware of what has happened in Laprairie county at the last three or four elections. He knows that the citizens of Laprairie are not intense partisans; they are men of honour and I have no hesitation in stating that the spirit of liberty prevails in the constituency of Laprairie-Napierville.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Because of this spirit of liberty the citizens of Laprairie have given a Liberal majority. When they found out that the Liberal party was the party of liberty—with all due deference to the hon. member for Montmagny—when they found out that the Liberal party instilled a little more happiness in their life and gave their children a little more hope for the future, they voted Liberal. I am unable to foresee the destiny of my party. Should the day come—which God forbid—when the Liberal party finds itself guilty of the distressing blunders committed by the Conservative party in recent years, I am sure that the civic spirit and good judgment of the citizens of Laprairie will lead them to vote against the Liberals and for the Conservatives

In that event, will the hon. Minister of Marine find himself better off with the citizens of Rouville than with those of Laprairie?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me to put a question?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): We might as well dispose of the subject immediately. Does the hon. member consider that it would be fair, from the standpoint of the unit of representation, to join Chambly to Laprairie-Napierville? Does my hon. friend not know that the south shore, that is Chambly, is increasing its population from year to year? With this constant increase Chambly will likely have, within five years, a population from 20 to 25 thousand greater than it has now. Would it be fair to join Chambly to two other counties? I must say to my hon. friend that the committee took all that into consideration when it prepared the schedule to this bill. The question of political advantage or of whether the Minister of Marine would find himself in a better position at the coming election, should he be a candidate, did not enter into consideration at all.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Let the hon. Minister settle the present; we will look after the future.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): My hon. friend is well aware of the high regard in which I hold him. I thank him for the kind words he uttered about me a moment ago. I may say that the feeling is mutual. What I said about the conformation of Laprairie county was spoken in jest. All the circumstances were duly weighed before preparing the schedule to the bill, and my hon. friend is well aware of the difficulties the committee encountered in respect of Laprairie-Napierville in its endeavours to effect a suitable redistribution. The hon. member admits that it was necessary to merge two counties in that part of the province in order to give Montreal a larger representation. Having gone through all these difficulties, the committee deemed it well to perform the marriage to which my hon. friend has referred and which is not such a bad one after all. I acknowledged yesterday that the arrangement was not a perfect one; but, in the circumstances, the committee considered it was the best it could do.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Did the committee notice that it was placing two members of this house in conflict?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. Minister of Marine, I would point out that the combined counties of Laprairie, Napierville and Chambly would have a population of 47,601, which is slightly higher than the unit established by the 1931 census and far lower than that of many electoral divisions described in the schedule to Bill No. 2. My hon. friend entertains great hopes for an increase of population in Chambly. I readily admit that Chambly, like Laprairie, being contiguous to a large city, will likely increase faster than other counties, but I do not think that the next ten years will see its population increase as greatly as the hon. minister appears to think. In any case, we are legislating for to-day. I am ready to believe that, in the redistribution of electoral divisions planned by the hon. minister and his friends, this factor of future increase in population was not taken into account. Why, therefore, should it be taken into account as regards Laprairie, Napierville and Chambly?

The hon. minister told us just now, in the course of his remarks, that he was not speaking for himself personally.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): He possesses the virtue of disinterestedness.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Yesterday, I heard the hon. Solicitor General speak in the same sense and go even further. He went as far as to say that the redistribution had been effected in such a manner as to improve the chances of the Liberals. See, he exclaimed, we have increased your chances in eight Liberal counties, while we have increased ours in two only! Indeed, if I have to accept the statements of my hon. friends opposite—I am obliged to do so in this house, for it is one of the principal rules of parliament—I shall be inclined to think that, seeing bankruptcy on the point of overtaking the country as a result of their policies, noticing the value of our money decline, in consequence of their disastrous administration, to a point where, within a few months, the Canadian dollar will be worth only 40 cents and perhaps less, foreseeing the fate that awaits them, they feel like doing all they can to bring about their eviction. If we must believe our hon. friends, they are the instruments of their own defeat. We Liberals have therefore but to sit still.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): We are all elected in advance.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): It is quite possible that, when the summons comes, not one of the members now sitting at the right of the Speaker will be a candidate. Therefore, if we must take their word, it is quite useless to further waste the time of the house and of all its members discussing this bill. However, without flatly contradicting the assertion of my hon. friends, I can at least say that when I try to look at the facts, not from the point of view of an irreconcilable Liberal, but in entire detachment from party politics, this is what I find: ever since this bill was laid before this house, our friends opposite have, as a primary consideration, sought to rid themselves of the parishes or the counties whose Liberal influence they feared.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Why not?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Why not? My hon. friend from Berthier-Maskinongé is right. Why not? I understand him. He expresses his innate thoughts; they do not surprise me. Why not? Indeed, it is magnificent. I noticed what they were doing; who can blame me for seeing clearly enough to do so. Then I noticed that in order to provide new city divisions it was necessary to eliminate some rural counties in the province. Did they eliminate counties represented by Conservatives? Can they name me one? Can they name me a single electoral district represented by a Conservative which they joined to another one also represented by a Conservative, thus eliminating a Conservative county? They cannot mention a single one. I noticed that, and who shall blame me?

While they have selected for elimination no electoral districts represented by Conservatives, I notice that, on the other hand, they have taken divisions represented by Liberals, such as Laprairie-Napierville. From the south, they have detached Napierville and attached it to St. John's, which is represented by my good friend Mr. Rhéaume, a good Liberal. From the north, the county of Laprairie is to be joined, through the Thermopylae pass, to Beauharnois, which is also represented by a good Liberal, Mr. Maxime Raymond. They did that with the ulterior design—I stand ready to be corrected if I am not expressing the truth—of creating dissension in the Liberal ranks and with the inevitable consequence that one of the two Liberal representatives will thereby be eliminated, as in my case.

May I say here that, as regards my humble person, it matters very little. I am speaking from the standpoint of the general interest of the people of the counties concerned. It is evident that at the next convention, which will be held either at Beauharnois or at Laprairie, it is Mr. Maxime Raymond or some one else that the Liberals of Laprairie and of Beauharnois will select as their standard-bearer. It will not be Vincent Dupuis.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Why not?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Vincent Dupuis represents but a very small part of the population of the proposed riding. Vincent Dupuis is unknown in Beauharnois and, besides, the present member for that county deserves the confidence of his constituents. Some of my friends opposite may say, sarcastically, that it is an advantage for me not to be known, but let us face the facts as they are. I am not known in Beauharnois and it is evident that one of the two Liberal representatives will be eliminated.

Our Conservative friends, whose seats, from their own point of view, are in danger, have endeavoured to make them safe by buttressing them with Conservative parishes, as the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon is now doing, and ridding themselves of Liberal parishes. I might mention the hon. member for Dorchester, who has carved out for himself a fine little county in the legitimate hope of coming back to this house, but not with the bravery of the knights of old. In this connection, I would like to say a word about the hon. Minister of Marine. I do not look upon him as a coward; I should like to consider him a "brave homme" (excellent fellow) . .

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): "Brave man."

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I know he is an excellent fellow ("brave homme") and I should like to consider him a brave man ("homme brave"). I should like to see him show the valour that characterizes Canadians of French descent. Our fellow-citizens belonging to other races possess many qualities indeed, but the Canadian of French origin is specially distinguished for bravery. I should like to see the hon. Minister of Marine display this trait. I am afraid, however, that he is not exactly what I should wish him to be, when I see him abandon the good people of Verchères. The citizens of Verchères, among whom live a large number of my relatives and of my friends, are people of excellent judgment, just as much so as the people of Laprairie and of Rouville. When I recall the facts of our history and the great bravery of the immortal Madeleine of Verchères, whose monument stands in the parish of Verchères, I conclude that the hon. Minister of Marine should be the last man to fail to perpetuate the gallantry that has distinguished our compatriots from time immemorial. I am ignorant of the reasons that prompted the hon. minister to abandon that county, but I venture to think cowardice is not one of them. Why did he exchange, why did he bargain, or should I say why did he jockey, the county of Verchères for the county of Rouville? Is it because of the mountain in Rouville? Does he expect the mountain to come to him? In order to believe that, he will need greater faith than he will need courage to keep Rouville.

Mr. LARUE (Translation): The mountain labours.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The mountain labours, but not to the advantage of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. Larue), for I fear that at the next election the voters will put him on the street.

Mr. LARUE (Translation): For you, it will be the bottom of the well.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): From the bottom of the well generally come the greatest truths.

May I, sir, be permitted to draw a comparison regarding the attitude of my hon. friend. As Minister of Marine, he is our chief mariner, and seamen are brave in the face of storms. I wonder if he did not commit a capital blunder in trying to repair his small craft on the sides, when the leak is at the bottom. I am afraid he made a mistake and that he will miss his aim. At the next election he will not be able to say, with the fabulist Lafontaine, that it is the bottom that will be the least defective; I think it is the bottom that will be the most defective. Instead of grabbing Rouville and ridding himself of Verchères, he should have crossed the river and taken the part of Maisonneuve division that contains the Vickers dry-docks in order to be able to have repairs made to the bottom of his little boat. Mr. Chairman, I do not say those things with any intention of hurting the feelings of the hon. Minister of Marine. I know how good-natured he is—

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The metaphor is rather far-fetched.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I know he can take a joke. I shall now revert to serious matters. It is some of my friends opposite who led me to jest.

I seek no favours, but only justice and fair play for the citizens of Laprairie-Napierville. Do not separate these two counties that have been united since 1892 and whose citizens have lived together for centuries. Let them continue together. Join to them, rather, citizens like those of Chambly, and your redistribution will be fair and just. These people live side by side, go to Bonsecours market together, belong to the same societies and attend the same meetings. It is natural for them to be united. As for me personally, it matters little whether you settle this question in the manner in which my humble judgment leads me to see it or whether you adopt the senseless plan submitted to this house. From the days of my youth I resolved to devote the best of my life, of my energies, of my small talents and knowledge to the service of my fellow-citizens. Since those far-away days I have not failed in the task. I have endeavoured, ever since entering public life, to work for those who did me the honour of making me the representative of Laprairie-Napierville, regardless of race, religion or party. Should this bill eliminate me from public life, it little matters; I shall continue, in whatever field Providence assigns to me, to work for my people according to my capacity, if not in public life at least in private life.

May I be permitted to recall the advice given to some young students by the most illustrious of Canada's public men. These are the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

> Be gentle and kind to the weak; let your aim and purpose, in good report or in ill, in victory or in defeat, be so to live, so to strive, so to serve, so to do your part, to raise the standard of life to a higher and better sphere.

Mr. Chairman, such is my aim; such is the path I intend to follow, whatever may be my political future. If I am destined to return to public life, I shall strive to do honour to the people who will have given me their confidence. Should I not return, there will still be found on the map of the country the result of the iniquitous measure that has separated the citizens of two counties accustomed to live together in order to place them in other counties whose geographical situation prevents all close contact between them.

Mr. GAGNON: I have listened with a good deal of attention to the speech of my hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville. I will not attempt to follow him along the line he took because it seems to me that when a member has to defend a just cause he need not employ abusive epithets and insulting insinuations towards members opposite in the expression of his views.

Mr. DUPUIS: On a point of order, I would ask the hon. member for Dorchester to cite the insinuations that were insulting to him, because the use of such insinuations was far from my intention. I am sure I did not use any, and when he maintains that assertion he must mention the word I used. Otherwise I would ask him to withdraw the remark.

Mr. GAGNON: The tactics are always the same. When a member on this side of the house, especially when he is a French speaking member, is addressing the chair he is always interrupted by hon. gentlemen opposite, who ought to remember that we never interrupt them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: No one is interrupted more than I am.

Mr. GAGNON: The hon. gentleman has challenged me to quote some of the insulting insinuations he has used. First of all, he said in very clear terms that I was a coward, that I had not been a brave cavalier, in setting up for myself a safe constituency.

Mr. DUPUIS: On a point of order, may I say that I never said the hon. gentleman was a coward. I never said that and I do not want him to assert such a thing. I have never intended, here or outside, to insult any citizen of this country by the use of such an expression. The hon. member should not say what he has said.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): He simply told you you were building a fortress.

Mr. GAGNON: I am not at all offended because the hon. gentleman insinuated that I have not been brave in arranging a county. I merely want to point out to this gathering of gentlemen, this committee, that some hon. gentlemen opposite have defended their so-called just cause by using insulting remarks with regard to gentlemen on this side.

Mr. DUPUIS: I should like your honour to decide the point of order. I want a ruling on my declaration that I never said what the hon. gentleman has attributed to me. I have asked him to withdraw the remark and I should like to have the decision of the chair.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): He never used the word "coward."

Mr. GAGNON: This afternoon we heard my hon. friend from Témiscouata—

Mr. CHEVRIER: On a point of order, an hon. gentleman has asked the chairman to give a ruling. Will not the chairman declare on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Tummon): Unfortunately, being unable to understand the language in which the hon. gentleman was speaking, I do not know whether or not he used the word attributed to him. At any rate, the hon. gentleman says he did not say it.

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Chairman, I am ready to comply with your ruling and withdraw anything that may have displeased the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis). However may I say that my ears are still in good shape and I think I can hear.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The correction should be made without any reservation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Tummon): I think the withdrawal is satisfactory. It is satisfactory at least to the chair.

Mr. GAGNON: The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), who is always a very interesting speaker, began the exposition of his case by throwing insulting remarks at the members of the committee. He said that they were insipid and ignorant. He referred to their ignorance in erroneously describing the constituency of Gaspe as being composed of the counties of Gaspe East and Gaspe West. He said also that they had erroneously described the constituency of Lake St. John-Roberval by saying it was composed of the counties of Lake St. John East and Lake St. John West. I would refer the hon. member to the redistribution bill of 1924 which was drafted by the skilful engineers of the Liberal party. I refer hon. members to 14-15 George V, 1924 at page 229 where the county of Gaspe is described as follows:

Gaspe consisting of the counties of Gaspe East and Gaspe West and the Magdalen islands.

The constituency of Lake St. John is described as follows:

Lake St. John consisting of the counties of Lake St. John East and Lake St. John West.

If the members of this committee have been ignorant and insipid because they have described the constituencies of Lake St. John and Gaspe in the manner in which they are described in the bill, they have only followed the language used in the act of 1924. I think it would be proper to throw back at hon. gentlemen opposite the expressions which have been used in referring to the members of this committee. It seems to me that this committee should be able to discuss a question like the bill now before us without entering into personalities and using abusive epithets and making insulting insinuations.

Mr. POULIOT: If the hon. gentleman is insulted, I am satisfied.

Mr. GAGNON: The seventh interruption. The bill which was prepared by this committee is a fair one. It gives fair representation to all the counties in the province of Quebec. This afternoon the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) made a clever exposition of his views by trying to quote only one part of a speech made by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) in 1924. I was happy to hear the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier) quote the whole speech to-night. If we refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont we will see that in 1924 the hon. member for York-Sunbury criticized the method employed by the government of that day in setting up the constituencies in the province of Quebec. I refer hon. members to page 4518 of Hansard of 1924. The hon. member stated that he was not conversant with the geography of Quebec, but he pointed out that there were many constituencies where the population was under 22,000 while in others the population exceeded 60,000 and went as high as 70,000. He gave the following constituencies as having a population under 22,000:

County—	Population
Argenteuil	17,165
L'Islet	17,859
Richelieu	18,764
Yamaska	18,840
Wright	21,850
Vaudreuil-Soulanges	21,620
Laprairie-Napierville	20,065
Beauharnois	19,888
Montmagny	21,997
Bagot	18,035
Bellechasse	21,190
Kamouraska	22,014

In showing the discrepancy which existed between the rural and urban constituencies, he quoted the following constituencies with their respective populations:

County—	Population
St. Denis	78,920
Hochelaga	73,526
Laurier-Outremont	72,047
Jacques Cartier	68,000
Maisonneuve	64,933
St. Mary	63,975
George Etienne Cartier	54,800
Beauce	53,841
St. Ann	52,049
Three Rivers	50,845

A reference to the map and the act of 1924 will show that hon. gentlemen opposite shirked their duty at that time to a large extent. They did not make a proper, a just and a fair redistribution. I think I have demonstrated that the new bill is more just and more fair towards the province of Quebec. I have studied attentively the work of the committee and I have divided the constituencies in this province into three groups. The first consists of those in the cities of Montreal and Quebec, the second of the rural constituencies and the third of the semi-rural and semi-urban constituencies.

The first group would include the constituencies in the city of Montreal but I shall not touch upon those because I am informed that certain changes will be made when the schedules are being considered. Anything I might say might prove to be superfluous. In connection with the city of Quebec, I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Quebec East say yesterday that on the whole the redistribution of the city of Quebec was fair. If I am not mistaken those were his exact words. If the hon. member for Témiscouata was right when he said yesterday that the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) had made a bed for himself, he was contradicting his leader, the hon. member for Quebec East, who was fair enough to pay homage to the generosity and justice of the redistribution of the city of Quebec. But, on the other hand—

Mr. POULIOT: I did not say that for St. Sauveur; I said it for Levis.

Mr. GAGNON: The eighth interruption. The Solicitor General was careful enough to keep his constituency as it ought always to have been, as an urban seat, and to send away to the neighbouring county the rural parishes which belonged formerly to the counties of Quebec and Portneuf, and which parishes ought never to have been merged in the ward of St. Sauveur in the city of Quebec.

Let us take, for instance, the county of Quebec East. The hon. member for that constituency (Mr. Lapointe) cannot complain, because only very few minor changes have been made there. Yesterday I heard him trying to be very clever and funny in criticizing the map which was drafted by the committee and to explain that it was more or less like a jig-saw puzzle. Let me show some exhibits of the maps which were prepared by hon. gentlemen opposite in 1924 and let hon. gentlemen of the committee judge for themselves. Let me take first the map of Quebec East. Look at the beautiful map that was set up by the hon. member for Quebec East in 1924! Look at those curves, those protuberances and at the needle point! Was it a kind of dagger with which to stab Conservatives or was it rather a safety pin to try to retain the Liberals who were deserting the Liberal flag? I leave it to the committee to judge for themselves.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will the hon. gentleman kindly permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GAGNON: Certainly. The ninth interruption.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does he not know this delimitation of Quebec East was made in 1914 by the Conservative government and retained?

Mr. GAGNON: It might have been. I have not studied the matter, but I use that argument to show that if there has been a jig-saw puzzle, this puzzle has satisfied the hon. gentleman for three elections and he did not change it in 1924.

Let us look at the jig-saw puzzle of Richelieu, the seat of the former Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin), who is going to interrupt me, and this will make the tenth interruption. Look at this beautiful little thing which I hold in my hand, and look at the needle points, protuberances and curves! Look at this protuberance! Is it a river, a mountain or a brook?

Mr. CARDIN: Why does the hon. member not show the present map?

Mr. GAGNON: Let us look now at the map of the county of Berthier-Maskinonge. What is that beaver tail which I indicate on this exhibit? What are those protuberances which were left by the Liberal party in 1924?

Mr. CARDIN: Why do hon. gentlemen opposite not have it changed? They have the opportunity.

Mr. GAGNON: Let us look at the map of the county of Chateauguay-Huntingdon. This is the shape of the constituency with which the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon had to be content when he was fighting in the last election. These are the jig-saw puzzles drafted and made by the Liberal party. Look at those ridiculous salamanders or snakes which have been left by the Liberal party!

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. GAGNON: I would ask my hon. friends to take their own medicine. This part which I indicate, which is absolutely ridiculous is now taken away by the redistribution committee and joined to the neighbouring county.

Let us look at the map of the constituency of the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré). I ask any fair-minded, serious, man to tell me whether this is not the most ridiculous configuration.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Made in 1914.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The work of the Tories.

Mr. GAGNON: I am not surprised that the hon. member for Quebec East is wriggling like a fish in a frying pan.

Let us look at the map of Drummond-Arthabaska, at those ridiculous misdirections, those needles which represent strips of land taken from an adjoining county because there are Grits there who have to be taken in order to swell the majority of hon. gentlemen opposite. I am exhibiting the map of the constituency of Lotbinière, which is now being corrected by the redistribution in order that the map may be less ridiculous.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is untouched.

Mr. GAGNON: Let us look at the map of the county of Brome-Missisquoi. This was made by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Let us look at the map of the county of Chambly-Vercheres, represented by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau). It has a beaver tail which has to be cut now in order to give a fair representation to the county.

Let us look at the map of the county of Richmond-Wolfe, in which the hon. member for that constituency (Mr. Lafleche) has been obliged to fight against a former stalwart of the Liberal party.

Let us look at the map of the county of St. Johns-Iberville. Can hon. members think of anything more ridiculous?

Now I shall take the worst. Let us look at the map of the county of Beauce. The hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) is an expert in using an argument which can be thrown back to his own party when to-night he showed the map of his constituency. He tried to be funny, but nevertheless I challenge any hon. gentleman opposite to show in the new redistribution such ridiculous figures as the one I am now exhibiting to the committee.

Let us look at the map of the constituency of Bellechasse, the county of my distinguished neighbour (Mr. Boulanger). Can hon. gentlemen find anything more strange than that? How can he explain the triangle, the protuberance which comes into my county, and all the curves and protuberances?

Now I am going to show the map of the county of Nicolet. I may say that a great number of the protuberances which are visible are being cut out in order to give a fair representation.

Mr. CARDIN: Not at all, to make it worse.

Mr. GAGNON: That is the seventeenth interruption. Of course when hon. gentlemen who live in other provinces look at the map of Quebec, they always wonder why the counties have been thus carved and are different from those in the other provinces. They need not be scandalized, because this can be explained to a certain extent owing to the tenure of the land. In the other provinces the land is divided into townships, whereas in Quebec many districts have been taken from the old French seigniories and the French settlers, instead of using square pieces of land, preferred to gather in a small village, so that when the counties were carved out, they showed some more or less strange shapes. I will be fair enough to admit that: It has been more or less the custom since confederation to have some strange carvings of constituencies, and in showing these exhibits I did not do so with the view of offending hon. gentlemen opposite or of trying to minimize their efforts, but rather to show that when they were trying to explain that our map was funny, it was much less strange and funny than the map which was drawn up by hon gentlemen opposite.

[Mr. Gagnon.]

May I try to prove the first proposition that I discussed before this committee, the proposition that the new arrangement that was made by the special committee was fair and was drafted in order to secure a more just and fair representation to the population of Quebec.

Before I tried to show the carvings of the past I was explaining that in the city of Quebec the distribution has been fair. It is true that the county of my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) has a much smaller population than the others, but hon. gentlemen opposite will remember that ever since confederation it has been the practice and the cherished custom to leave the county of Quebec South to the English minority in the province of Quebec, and this county has been represented almost I think since confederation by an English-speaking member. If this year we had taken away some parts of the county of Quebec West or of the county of Quebec East and merged them with the county of Quebec South, the hon. gentleman from Quebec South, who is a friend of mine and a distinguished gentleman, might have thought that the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) was desirous of being unfair to the Irish and the English minority of the city of Quebec. But when the French speaking people of all parts of Canada are asking that the English minority make sacrifices in order to give satisfaction to the aspirations of the French race, we are happy to say to them that in the province of Quebec we have always been fair and desirous of giving fair play to the English minority of the province of Quebec.

I must apologize to you, Mr. Chairman, if like the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin) I sometimes speak in a high tone of voice. I know that small things cannot be compared with great, but nevertheless I have been made like him in that way. I have no desire to offend or intimidate in any way hon. gentlemen of this house.

I turn now to the other group of seats which I will call the rural group. If hon. gentlemen will bear with me for a few minutes I shall try to show that the rural seats in the province of Quebec have almost the same unit of population. For instance, Dorchester has a population of 27,156, and other counties as follows:

Country—	Population
Dorchester	27,156
Argenteuil	27,885
Bellechasse	27,480
Chateauguay-Huntingdon	24,412
Stanstead	25,118
Compton	31,858
Wright	27,107

County—	Population
Shefford	28,202
Montmagny-L'Islet	30,869
Brome-Missisquoi	32,069
Kamouraska	30,852
Berthier-Maskinonge	35,575
Portneuf	37,305
Lotbiniere	38,546
Laval-Two Mountains	31,896
St. John-Iberville	32,259
Richmond-Wolfe	36,568

Those are what I might properly call the rural seats of the province of Quebec. It is true that in some of those counties you will probably find a small city or a town but the largest town or city in these counties will have a population of less than five thousand people, and if hon. gentlemen have listened attentively to my humble remarks they will agree that in these rural seats the population on the whole does not vary by more than 1,500 people. Now is not that a fair representation, a fair distribution of population as between all the urban seats of the province of Quebec irrespective of their party affiliations?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What are the figures for Gaspe?

Mr. GAGNON: I will come to that in a few moments. I have done my best, Mr. Chairman, to set out as just a grouping as possible, but you, sir, and hon. gentlemen of this committee will understand that the work of the special committee on redistribution has been very difficult because that committee was obliged to reduce into sixty-five counties the territory which for provincial electoral purposes formed ninety counties.

I now come to the third group, which I have called the group of semi-rural and urban seats. I will give the names of the counties and the population of each and it will be seen that in this group the distribution and representation has been as fair and as just as in the other groups:

County—	Population
Richelieu-Vercheres	35,782
Champlain	37,526
Sherbrooke	37,386
Matapedia-Matane	39,977
Joliette-Montcalm	39,154
Beauharnois-Laprairie	41,399
Pontiac	42,950
Chambly-Rouville	40,353
L'Assomption-Terrebonne	47,215
Beauce	51,614

It will be noted that in those counties the population does not vary by more than two or two thousand five hundred people. Is that not fair? The committee has been faced with the task of doing justice so far as possible to all these different groups of population.

Hon. gentlemen opposite will see that I have made an exception, that I have not mentioned the county of Labelle. I have not done so because the county of Labelle will be amended when the schedules are under consideration. Nor have I quoted the county of Levis, not because I was afraid, but because I have reserved Levis for a special chapter in order not to wound the delicate sensibilities of the hon. member for Quebec East.

The county of Levis has been left with a population of 28,548, which is almost the same as that of neighbouring counties. But the members of the committee have been willing to establish an urban seat in the region south of the St. Lawrence river. If the gentlemen of the committee will bear with me they will see that from Nicolet to the Gaspe peninsula there is not one big town or city with a population of more than 15,000 or 20,000 people. Why was it not fair to try to make an urban seat of the three urban corporations consisting of the city of Levis, the city of Bienville and the town of St. Joseph de Lauzon? It is true that in the new constituency some rural parishes have been left, but in these rural parishes such as Charny and Pintendre the population is composed of as many workingmen as farmers, because, Mr. Chairman, everyone knows that the corporation of Charny is a railway centre. The committee has been willing to make an urban seat of the city of Levis; in this the committee may have been wrong or may have been right. It is not my business to discuss what belongs to the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Fortin), but I will say that in so doing the committee has not been unjust or unfair to the neighbouring counties, because the parishes which have been detached from Levis to be joined to the county of Bellechasse will not endanger the chances of the hon. member for Bellechasse, and those which have been detached from Levis to be joined to Lotbinière will not endanger the chances of my hon. friend the member for Lotbinière (Mr.

Verville), who yesterday was fair enough to admit that he had no objection to the two or three parishes from Levis to be joined to Lotbinière.

Mr. POULIOT: It will not improve the chances of the hon. Solicitor General in Levis.

Mr. DUPRE: May I reply to the hon. gentleman and settle that question once for all? In 1930 I had the great honour of being offered the candidature in the county of Levis, which is my native county, and at the same time I was offered the candidature in the county of Quebec West, and for reasons of my own I chose to run in Quebec West. That settles it once for all.

Mr. POULIOT: That says nothing for the future.

Mr. GAGNON: It seems to me that the remark of the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) is most unfair and ungenerous when he tries to insinuate that the carving of the county of Levis has been done by the Solicitor General.

Now if I may continue, I have made three exceptions; there are three counties which have not been joined in that group. If I did not mention them I might be taxed with unfairness by hon. gentlemen opposite, so I hasten to speak of them. I refer to the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, which has been left as it is, with a population of 55,594; and Vaudreuil-Soulanges and Chapleau. It is true the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay is a very large constituency, probably one of the largest, but, Mr. Chairman, if it is too large now, why did not hon. gentlemen opposite leave it as it was in 1924? Surely this committee cannot be accused of unfairness when they have left the county almost as it was in 1924. I will say immediately, if we had divided the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay into two counties the task would have been very difficult, because the population is not the same, and because in the county of Saguenay, which is a territory of more than 300 square miles, the population is too sparsely scattered to make a fair distribution by the separation of those two counties.

Now, Mr. Chairman, time is flying, and I would not like to conclude my remarks without replying to an insinuation made by the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville that the member for Dorchester was willing to organize a special seat for himself. I will tell this committee that the hon. member for Dorchester is not afraid to be judged by the electors of Dorchester but will resent very much being judged by the electors of the county of Beauce. The hon. member for Quebec East yesterday was fair and generous enough to admit that in 1924 the former Solicitor General, Hon. Lucien Cannon, took the parish of St. Maxime and joined it to the county of Dorchester because he was sure of a Liberal majority of 250. I have decided, and have asked the committee—and I will not hide myself behind any committee, I am ready to take my own responsibility—I asked the committee to try to give back to the county of Beauce the presents they have made in the past. I have also asked the committee to give back to the county of Beauce the parishes of St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurélie which have always belonged to the county of Beauce for provincial purposes until 1931 and which were joined to the provincial county of Dorchester in 1931 and 1932 because they wanted to destroy the chances of the Conservative candidate in Dorchester in the provincial elections. I am sure my hon. friend from Bellechasse will ask me why I have deemed it wise to ask that the parish of St. Luc be joined to the county of Bellechasse. I will tell my hon. friend that in the county of Dorchester there is also a protuberance, a little square joined to the county of Dorchester like a postage stamp. This postage stamp, which has been made up of parts of the county of Dorchester and Bellechasse, I want to be given to the county of Bellechasse, and I will tell you why. When hon. gentlemen opposite made the redistribution in the past what did they do? They carved the parishes of Ste. Sabine and Honfleur, in dividing the population in two—half the parish votes in Dorchester and half in Bellechasse. If I had followed the same distribution as hon. gentlemen opposite I would have kept half of St. Luc and given half to the county of Bellechasse. I would not do such a thing. I am not for half measures, I asked that the whole parish go to the county of Bellechasse.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I have not hitherto taken any part in this discussion, because personally I have nothing other than perhaps an academic interest in it. Speaking for the constituency which I represent I had better thank the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) and the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) for their magnanimity and generosity towards the English speaking population of the city of Quebec, in allotting to them a smaller constituency than some of the others. But may I say to the Solicitor General, and he probably knows it if he has followed the elections in the city of Quebec during the past few years, that as far as I am concerned I have never claimed election in the constituency of Quebec South on the ground that I was English speaking. I have merely asked my electors on every and all occasions—and the question has presented itself at every election—not to reject me on the ground that I was English speaking, but to give me the same chance as any other citizen of Quebec or of the Dominion of Canada. As far as the constituency being English speaking is concerned, I think the Solicitor General knows that the population has now shifted considerably, and I would say, without having looked at the census figures, that at least two thirds of the population are now French speaking. And if I may make a further personal reference I would say that of the one-third which is English four-fifths vote against me. I do thank the hon. gentlemen for their generosity, but as far as it affects me personally I hardly think I am likely to derive any benefit from the seat being made into a so-called English speaking seat.

Now I should like to take up for a moment some of the observations made by my hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon). The hon. gentleman alleged that the profile maps which he showed were specimens of Liberal handiwork. I took down some of the names of the constituencies, pictures of which he showed to this house, greatly to the amusement of hon. gentlemen opposite. Quebec East was formed in 1914, when Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden was Prime Minister and when it is to be assumed that the late Hon. L. P. Pelletier looked after the redistribution of the seats in the Quebec district. Quebec West, to which my hon. friend complains certain rural centres were added, also was so constituted in 1914 under the guidance of the same hon. gentleman. In consulting the statutes of 1924 I find that Chateauguay-Huntingdon was allowed to remain as it was in 1914, so it also is a specimen of the handiwork not of hon. gentlemen on this side of the house but of the well-revered predecessors of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. HACKETT: I think the hon. gentleman will find that two square miles was taken away from Chateauguay-Huntingdon, in the parish of Ste. Clothilde.

Mr. POWER: Would those two square miles have made the salamander-like picture exhibited by my hon. friend?

Mr. HACKETT: Provincial legislation in 1921 did the trick.

Mr. POWER: But I hardly think the ridiculous part of it, if I may use that term, resulted from the provincial legislation of 1921 as much as from the legislation of 1914. I understand that the changes being made now will not improve the picture even from a futuristic standpoint. As for Drummond-Arthabaska, I find that it was allowed to remain as it had been in 1914, with a very slight correction.

Mr. HACKETT: My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. POWER: There was a slight correction in the township of Upton, was there not?

Mr. HACKETT: The change was made by provincial legislation.

Mr. POWER: I am referring to the federal statute of 1924.

Drummond-Arthabaska consisting of the counties of Arthabaska and Drummond, except that part of the municipality of St. Edmond lying in the township of Upton.

Mr. HACKETT: Those boundaries have been modified by provincial legislation.

Mr. POWER: But not sufficiently to make the picture shown us by the hon. member for Dorchester. As for Brome-Missisquoi, there was a change made by provincial legislation.

Mr. HACKETT: Two changes.

Mr. POWER: But generally speaking it was the same constituency, and it is being carried into this legislation as exactly the same constituency; if it was so ridiculous in 1924 it is equally ridiculous to-day. I understand the situation is the same with regard to Chambly-Vercheres and Richmond-Wolfe. In his opening remarks the hon. gentleman was somewhat severe with hon. members on this side of the house who had made some complaint with regard to the statutory accuracy of the descriptions given in the present bill. The hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) stated on the floor of the house that the description of the constituency of Gaspe, which in the bill was made up of Gaspe East, Gaspe West and the Magdalen Islands, was inaccurate in that the description should be Gaspe North, Gaspe South and the Magdalen Islands. My hon. friend took exception to that statement. I refer him to the 1930 statutes of the province of Quebec, which constituted two new constituencies in the county of Gaspe, one to be named Gaspe North and the other to be named Gaspe South. Section 5 of the present bill is identical with a section in the statute passed in 1914, which states:

Wherever in the said schedule any word or expression is used to denote the name of any territorial division, such word or expression shall, unless the context otherwise requires, be construed as indicating such territorial division as it exists and is bounded at the date of the passing of this act.

Therefore if it is intended properly to describe the county of Gaspe one must describe it as including the counties of Gaspe North, Gaspe South and the Magdalen islands. In referring to Gaspe East and Gaspe West I believe my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) was referring to registration divisions, but I think in this bill we are dealing with territorial divisions, counties as represented for the purposes of the elections.

Mr. DUPRE: May I interrupt my hon. friend to refer him to section 40 of the British North America Act, which states:

Quebec shall be divided into sixty-five electoral districts, composed of the sixty-five electoral divisions into which Lower Canada is at the passing of this act divided under chapter two of the consolidated statutes of Canada, chapter seventy-five of the consolidated statutes for Lower Canada, and the act of the province of Canada of the twenty-third year of the Queen, chapter one, or any other act amending the same in force at the union, so that each such electoral division shall be for the purposes of this act an electoral district entitled to return one member.

In other words, the federal division is based on the provincial division.

Mr. POWER: Certainly it has been the custom to follow the practice which was followed in 1924. In this act itself we speak of the county of Matapedia, the county of Frontenac, the county of Papineau and a large number of provincial counties. We might as well be consistent all through the act; instead of describing the county of Gaspe as a registration division I think we should describe it as a provincial division for the sake of statutory accuracy.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 25, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*TUG OCEANEAGLE

Mr. GARDINER:

What price did the St. John Dry Dock Company receive for the steel tug Oceaneagle, from the Department of Railways and Canals?

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. MANION: This question was answered directly to the hon. member the other day, by mistake, so I presume it may be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

FRENCH FILMS

Mr. HURTUBISE:

How many French speaking films have been returned to France during the years 1931 and 1932 after being refused by the provincial boards of censors?

Mr. BENNETT: I think this will have to stand as an order for return, since it involves communication with all the provinces.

HUDSON BAY ROUTE—INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I desire to make a statement with regard to insurance rates on the Hudson Bay route. The Imperial shipping committee, at their meeting held on Friday, May 19, decided to report that as the result of discussion between their chairman and the chairman of the joint hull committee, the rates and conditions governing insurance of hull and machinery of ships on the Hudson Bay route will continue for the 1933 season as they were in the 1932 season, except that minimum rates for suspending warranties will hold from August 10 to October 7, both dates inclusive, instead of to September 30. From October 8 to October 15, both dates inclusive, the rates will be increased as heretofore by 25 per cent. The full report of the Imperial shipping committee will be presented to the governments concerned.

STE. ANNE DE BELLEVUE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): A day or two ago the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) asked some questions in the house with regard to complaints that had been made to him concerning the hospital at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, and I said I would make inquiries. I have done so, Mr. Speaker, and I am informed that the officer in charge of the hospital and the chief medical officer have not heard of any of the complaints referred to. The officer against whom the charges are made is not a returned soldier, but has been specially trained in diseases of the chest. He positively states that he did not give expression to the words mentioned and I think the language quoted by the hon. member for Temiscouata was such that no official in the hospital would be allowed to carry on his duties if it were found that these statements had been made. This official states emphatically and positively that it is not correct.

May I say that this officer has some knowledge of French, and my information is that when suitable opportunity offers he speaks to the French patients in their own language. In the ward there are about 35 patients, 7 or 8 of whom are French, and one of the ward nurses is French as well. I may tell my hon. friend from Temiscouata —and this may be of interest to other hon. members—that the nurses and officials generally in this hospital have been encouraged to speak to the French patients in their own language, and it has been pointed out that it is their duty and to their advantage to do so. I may say further that last winter classes were held for the purpose of improving their knowledge of the French language. The hospital is fortunate in having as full time chaplain a French speaking Catholic clergyman, who was kind enough to conduct the classes during the winter. He states that these classes were well attended, and that much interest was taken in them. I make this last statement of my own personal knowledge, because I may say in a modest way that these changes were instituted at the suggestion of the minister himself.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 2, to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.

He said: I desire to inform hon. members that an agreement has been arrived at with regard to the redistribution of seats in the province of Ontario, and with the agreements that were arrived at with regard to the other provinces through the efforts of the special committee, there remain only a small number of seats in the province of Quebec, I cannot say how many in the province of Saskatchewan, and possibly one in the province of Alberta. I would suggest that the house proceed in committee to dispose of the bill with the exception of section 3, which would enable the whole matter to be discussed further at large after the schedules had been settled. We should thereby be enabled to adopt the schedules in Ontario and in the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and British Columbia, which has now been agreed upon; and Alberta, I fancy, cannot take very long; the whole of Manitoba and a number of seats in Quebec regarding which there is no contest, besides some at least of the seats in the province of Saskatchewan, leaving the matter in such a position that the whole question could be reconsidered and rediscussed under section 3. Section 3 would stand while we discussed the schedules.

That I think would conduce to the disposition of this matter which is now in the fourth day of discussion, which discussion has not been directed, except incidentally, to specific instances of constituencies mentioned in the schedules.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Replying to the right hon. the Prime Minister, I can assure him that I am as anxious as he is, and hon. gentlemen on this side are as anxious as hon. gentlemen opposite, to conclude the discussion on this measure. I would point out, however, that what the right hon. gentleman now suggests would very materially handicap some of us who are anxious that the house in its entirety should know the position we are contending for and should have it as fully discussed as possible.

I need not point out to my right hon. friend how many members are already absent from the chamber. It is not surprising that, having been here for over seven and a half months, if we include the two months of recess, members should be anxious to get away to their homes as quickly as possible. What has happened up to the present time is that as members have felt assured that their own constituencies were safe they have for the most part left the House of Commons and returned home. What the Prime Minister suggests now is that we should continue the process of eliminating members from the house—I do not say he suggests this in so many words, but that would be the effect of his proposal. The result would be that when we come to discuss the really contentious part of the measure there would be but a handful of members left in the house.

I do not think it is fair to follow that course; I do not think that in the long run it would make for justice. If what we are seeking in this matter is fair play, I think we can reach a conclusion quite as expeditiously by following the regular course with respect to this measure as by adopting any exceptional method at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: I can only say that the thought suggested by the right hon. gentleman had not even entered my mind. I would say, however, that in committee of the whole house it has always been the rule, and as a matter of fact I think the chairman would be within his rights if he endeavoured to do so, to confine the debate to specific matters; and section 3, as was pointed out by the former Minister of Justice, would be the appropriate section on which a general discussion could take place, because section 3 provides:

> The said provinces and territory respectively shall, for the purposes of the election of members to serve in the House of Commons, be divided into electoral districts, and be represented as provided in the schedule to this act.

We were proposing to adopt a plan that was not very acceptable to the government of the day in 1924, that is, to take the schedule constituency by constituency and province by province, commencing with the province of Ontario, and if it were desired that instead of proceeding with the next province after Ontario we should take some other the convenience of the house would be considered. I still think that is the correct and proper course to pursue in view of the fact that as regards all the provinces but two there is substantial agreement, and with respect to at least ninety per cent of these two there is also such agreement. So that it leaves a very small number, around which discussion could centre. However, if the right hon. gentleman takes the view that this would not be conducive to the further exposition of the views of hon. members I will do no more than direct attention to the suggestion, because that is all it is, that we should proceed to consider the schedules and pass those that have been agreed upon. If I adopted my right hon. friend's argument all I would say is that if it were pursued to its logical conclusion the only members that would remain in the house would be those from Quebec and Saskatchewan. That is what it would lead to logically.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What the prime Minister has suggested would mean that by taking up the schedules before taking up section 3—

Mr. BENNETT: Section 3 would stand.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —we should be confined to a discussion of one schedule at a time, which would prevent our discussing the entire province to which that particular section might refer.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I point out to the Prime Minister that there is no need to discuss section 3 at all—

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —if you settle all the provincial seats that are in agreement. If you did that, certainly section 3 would not be discussed so far as they are concerned, so that it would apply only to those in dispute. That being the case, of course the house would empty out. I would go home myself if I felt that matters were settled in that way. It is therefore quite natural to presuppose that only those members interested would remain.

Mr. BENNETT: The motion is that the Speaker do now leave the chair.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Stirling in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On Tuesday afternoon the Prime Minister spoke at some length with reference to the measure which is before us. I did not follow him at that time because the discussion had begun to centre round the province of Quebec and I was anxious not to interrupt it. For that reason also I made no further reply to the Prime Minister's remarks yesterday. I think however it is advisable that I should not delay beyond this afternoon in touching upon some of the matters which were referred to by my right hon. friend in the course of his speech.

One subject mentioned by the Prime Minister had relation to the representative character of parliament as effected by previous redistributions. The significant paragraph in that connection is one which appears at page 5339 of Hansard. I will read the paragraph in full and then comment upon it very briefly. The right hon. gentleman said:

> Let us pause for a moment, endeavouring if possible to be perfectly fair in this matter, and look at the position of the parties in this house, bearing in mind the conditions which existed in the province of Quebec. Let us for a moment look at what the position was in 1921. There were elected to this house from the province of Quebec sixty-five Liberals—see page 316 of the Parliamentary Guide—Conservatives none. So it would appear that when the redistribution was made the Conservative party was without representation in this chamber from the province of Quebec. Behold the result. In the succeeding election, notwithstanding the fact that the Conservative party polled between forty per cent and forty-five per cent of the entire votes, they did not elect any candidates. I ask this committee if that, in itself, does not give cause for thought. I am endeavouring to be as fair as a man can who has had some little legal training, and I shall stick to a recital of the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: I said between forty and forty-one; I did not say forty-five. I notice that that should be French speaking representatives.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. gentleman continues:

> Will any judge say that the fact I have recited would not, in itself, give cause for thought? Does it not cause every thoughtful man in this house just to ponder a moment on the situation?

The impression I got at the time the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) was speaking, and I think the impression left on the committee, as well as the impression likely to be conveyed to anyone reading this paragraph, was that as a result of the Liberal redistribution the province of Quebec had been left without any representatives in the House of Commons. While the paragraph does not say so in so many words, the manner in which the presentation was made would leave the inference that it was the redistribution made by the Liberal party in 1924 to which reference was made. The Prime Minister says that he is anxious to give the facts; let me give some. The fact is that the election of 1921 was fought on the redistribution made in 1914 by Sir Robert Borden. My right hon. friend, the Prime Minister, was a member of the committee that initialed the agreement which was come to at that time. In other words, if there was any injustice in the province of Quebec during the 1921 elections because of redistribution, it was the government of Sir Robert Borden and my right hon. friend who was a member of the redistribution committee who were responsible for the injustice.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no allegation that there was unfairness in 1914.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let us go a step further. The Prime Minister said:

> In the succeeding election,—

That was the election of 1925.

> —notwithstanding the fact that the Conservative party polled between forty per cent and forty-five per cent of the entire votes, they did not elect any candidates.

As a matter of fact they elected four candidates at that election.

Mr. BENNETT: French speaking candidates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister now says that he was referring to French speaking candidates. I am quite prepared to accept his correction but it does not appear on the record of his original statement. They did elect four candidates in the election of 1925 and they elected twenty-four in the election of 1930. Any candidates elected in 1930 were elected under the redistribution measure framed by the Liberal administration. The inference which the Prime Minister sought to draw from these two redistribution measures has not been borne out by the facts as to what took place under them. The truth of the matter is that the returns in these various elections bear out what has been said so frequently in the course of the present debate, that the issues at a general election are apt to be more important than the alteration of a redistribution map, all important as that may be, it being the basis upon which representation is obtained in this House of Commons. In 1921 the government of the day was just as unpopular as the present government is at this time, and the results disclosed the extent of the unpopularity of the administration. There were issues which came up in subsequent elections which helped to account for the changes which have since taken place but the fact is that so far as any inference is to be drawn from a redistribution measure under which the province of Quebec received no representation in this House of Commons must be drawn from the redistribution measure framed by the Conservative party itself, and by a committee of this house of which the present Prime Minister was a member.

I think it is important to do just what the Prime Minister has suggested should be done, pause for a moment and consider the significance of the facts. The Prime Minister says:

> I ask this committee if that, in itself, does not give cause for thought.

That is to say, that an entire province should have no representation in this house of one of its leading political parties. The Prime Minister might have added that in the general election of 1921, the Conservative party did not elect a single member in six out of the nine provinces in the dominion.

> I am endeavouring to be as fair as a man can who has had some little legal training, and I shall stick to a recital of the facts. Will any judge say that the fact I have recited would not, in itself, give cause for thought? Does it not cause every thoughtful man in this house just to ponder a moment on the situation?

With the Prime Minister's desire to pause for a moment and give thought I am in complete accord. Having given a good deal of thought to the matter I am more than ever convinced that the fact that a political party of an entire province should remain unrepresented in a parliament following an election indicates that there is something fundamentally wrong with the system under which our elections take place. It is not merely redistribution; it goes deeper than that; it has to do with the method of electing members from single member constituencies. I venture to say that if there ever was a strong and unanswerable argument for the need of adequate provision for minority representation in parliament it will be found in what has occurred under the various redistributions which have taken place whereby in some cases certain provinces were without any Conservative representation and in other cases, certain provinces and large cities were without any Liberal representation. I believe that the only true method of securing a representative parliament is by a system of proportional representation properly worked out with regard to the dominion as a whole. The reform should commence with the cities and the larger municipalities in our country. When the Liberal government was in office we introduced into this house a measure of proportional representation in connection with city constituencies. It was fought for some little time, there was considerable opposition from the then opposition and the measure was not proceeded with. It was not re-introduced because the government of the day had not a majority in the other chamber which would ensure its enactment, and there were more pressing matters requiring attention. I might add the late Liberal government did not have a majority in the Senate all the time it was in office. If we had had a majority in the other house upon which we could have relied, we would have proceeded with our proportional representation measure. If we are ever returned to power a proportional representation measure will be a feature of the Liberal platform and program of legislation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will you do away with the Senate then?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), who has just interrupted, has a constituency containing about 70,000. He ought to be content with that and not interrupt.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You would not correct that in 1924.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to be drawn into replying to a lot of interruptions. I am anxious to present this matter, which I think is one of the most important with which parliament has had to deal, in as impartial a way as I possibly can.

Having stated what I believe to be the really important consideration, namely, the manner in which the representative character of parliament itself can best be brought about, namely by a measure of proportional representation rather than through the single member constituency plan which has existed up to the present time, may I now proceed to say a word with regard to the next point referred to by the Prime Minister and with respect to which I am inclined to think that neither he nor I greatly differ in opinion. The Prime Minister has referred to the trend of population from the rural to the urban centres. I do not know whether my right hon. friend will agree with me when I say that it is unfortunate that in a country with vast agricultural resources and other vast natural resources the urban population should come to exceed the rural. I think it is a trend in the wrong direction and I believe that greater prosperity and contentment on the part of the people as a whole will be found when they can be profitably employed in larger numbers on the land and amid the other vast resources of the dominion rather than becoming overcrowded in the urban centres. For that reason I believe that in this country policies which have to do with the shaping of our national development should be so fashioned as continually to keep in mind the effect which they are going to have upon the general trend of population. The fact that the urban population in Canada is to-day larger than the rural, notwithstanding the vast size of this country, is the strongest evidence that our industrial policies have been wrong; that the policy of protection has had the effect of bringing people into the cities, over-industrializing the manufacturing side of our country and as a consequence helping to deplete the rural sections.

I believe whatever difference of view there may be as to what I have just said as respects the wisdom and justice of giving the rural communities a larger unit of representation than is given to the cities, there cannot be a doubt in the mind of anyone who really for a moment considers the effect of the basis of representation in this parliament. Different arguments have been advanced why the unit of representation should be larger in the cities. One reason given is that in the urban centres so large a number of voters do not turn out to vote as is the case in the rural parts. I do not know that that argument appeals particularly to me; I have never cited it in giving the reasons why the unit of representation in urban centres should be larger, but it may nevertheless be a good reason. One reason, however, is is found in the fact that parliament exists for giving expression to the popular will, not necessarily to numbers of persons merely, but to the prevailing opinion. I wish to submit that with respect to the opinion of urban communities there are a thousand and one voices which are brought to bear upon this parliament in its decisions and acts as compared with one voice which comes from a rural constituency. There is first of all the voice of the press. There is no other factor that plays so large and powerful a part in determining opinion in the country as the press, and particularly the daily press. There is no daily press in the rural parts; such press as there is in the rural parts is weekly, semi-weekly, by-weekly or monthly. But the daily press comes from the urban and particularly the large urban centres. May I point out another feature; the city papers are read in the rural parts and influence thought there, but the rural papers are not read to any extent in the urban centres. So you have urban opinion constantly making itself felt to a degree that is not at all possible so far as rural opinion is concerned.

In addition to that, there are a hundred and one agencies that exist in the cities for the purpose of influencing and organizing public opinion, and some of them for bringing their vews immediately before parliament. These are organizations of a character that are found only spasmodically in the rural parts. Take, for instance, the chambers of commerce, the boards of trade, the great social service organizations and the like; all of these are continually, by resolutions, meetings and in other ways, helping to formulate and to voice public opinion and to make that opinion find its echo in the House of Commons. There again the influence of the urban centres on opinion and thought in parliament is a hundredfold greater than is that of any corresponding number of persons, in the rural parts. There is also this further factor: it is not uncommon in this parliament to find on both sides of the house hon. members representing rural constituencies though they themselves come from and their business associations are entirely with, urban communities. You find many a member of parliament coming from a city who is a representative of a rural constituency, but you do not find except in a few rare instances one who is resident of a rural community representing an urban constituency. Therefore, if we take only these factors into consideration —and they are but a limited number—there is every reason that a much larger unit should be assigned to the urban than to the rural centres.

I have not mentioned another factor that is coming to play a very important part, and that is the radio. Radio broadcasting stations are all located in urban centres. There is no head office of a radio broadcast in the rural parts of the country, and those who are using the radio for broadcasting purposes are for the most part people whose interests and associations are entirely with the urban centres. These are all factors that are increasing materially in importance and influence and they must be taken into account with respect to a redistribution measure. So I say that a redistribution measure which assigns to a city a considerably larger unit than that assigned to a rural constituency is tending wholly in the right direction, and where that rule is not recognized, the redistribution cannot possibly be fair as representing public opinion.

Mention has been made of the island of Montreal as having the equivalent of almost half of the entire population of the province of Quebec. One might add to what I have already said the fact that Montreal, the largest city in Canada, is the nearest to this capital of any centre of importance in the whole of the dominion. The influence of Montreal as we all know—we have only to walk into the corridors in the evening to see it—is exerted day after day by gentlemen coming here from that city to have interviews with the Prime Minister and other members of the government, but those who come from British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba, or from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island, have to consider ways and means to a large extent before they can venture on a journey to the seat of government in order to make their views personally known to the ministry of the day. In these circumstances it is not fair, where the endeavour is to secure the expression of all shades of opinion, minority as well as majority opinion, that the island of Montreal should be accorded a unit of representation at all comparable with that which is given to the rural portions of the country.

I come now to the next remark of my right hon. friend which had to do with the method of arranging redistribution by a joint committee. The Prime Minister has given his views as to what, where their are alternative courses, should govern such a committee in its endeavour to reach a decision. Let me quote his words as reported on page 5341 of Hansard. He said:

> But knowing human nature as I do and knowing the instincts that govern men with respect to political matters I do say that I am perfectly clear that when there was a favour possible by doing a thing in one of two ways, with either way just and proper, they would choose that method which gave the greatest benefit to themselves and their friends.

A little further on:

Undoubtedly where two courses were open our friends chose the course that was more helpful to them.

And further:

Is it not fair to say that hon. gentlemen opposite must recognize that fact, and to recognize the further fact that when a choice has to be made in one of two given ways you must expect that choice to be made in the way that will be most advantageous to the party in power.

I believe the Prime Minister in those remarks did not intend to convey that he was seeking in this redistribution measure, to see that the government got the advantage in every case. His language is guarded, but as one reads what is asserted there it is impossible to do other than believe that in the view of the Prime Minister, whatever government is in office, when a redistribution is being arranged, if there are two courses open then the course that is likely to give an advantage to the government of the day is the one to be taken.

Mr. BENNETT: Both parties being equally right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I notice what was said in that connection, but in matters of justice there cannot be two courses one of which gives an advantage, and both be equally right or just. There can be only one course. That is the essential feature of agreement; the feature we are seeking at the moment; agreement comes instantly the moment it is recognized by both sides that a certain course is right and just. As long as there is ground for debate between two courses, if the two sides cannot decide between themselves, it becomes necessary to call in an umpire to decide upon the fair and just course. It does not do to say that we have argued the matter up to this point and that we cannot agree and therefore we are going to give to the government the advantage of the position that it wishes to take. I do say I am afraid that the view expressed by the Prime Minister has prevailed to a very considerable extent in this redistribution. I will be perfectly frank and try to be as fair as my right hon. friend says he wishes to be and will say that in previous redistributions an element of the same kind has undoubtedly crept in with respect to some decisions. That brings up the whole question of our present method of settling the redistribution of boundaries of constituencies. It comes down, apart from the superior power which a majority possesses, very much to a matter of endurance, and physical endurance at that, a question as to which side can hold out the longest for a particular contention that is likely to be to its benefit.

I am going to show in a moment that when the redistribution of 1923 was made, I laid down, as the Prime Minister of the day, what I regarded as the view that should be taken as the basis of all decisions. Certainly it was in quite a different direction from that which has been taken by my right hon. friend, and from what he has said in the passages I have quoted.

But before coming to that, I wish to say that I think we might well consider whether the present is not the time for some statement to be made of considerations of which account should be taken in future redistributions. I do not wish to make this matter contentious by saying that this and that thing has been done at the moment, but no one can have been in this House of Commons within the last month or two, and especially within the last week, without knowing that those who have had to do with the arrangement of the redistribution map have been beset on every side by members of the house, no matter on which side of the house they are, wanting to make perfectly sure that their particular seats are going to be safe for them if at all possible, that in some way the map shall be arranged so that those now in the house shall come back again, whether they are on one side or the other. I say that that is not playing fair with the people of Canada as a whole. The constituencies of Canada do not belong to the members of this present House of Commons. They belong to the people at large, and the task of those who have to do with a redistribution map is not to see that those who are at present in the House of Commons shall be made perfectly sure of coming back again but rather that whoever does come back will come back with the knowledge that so far as the people themselves are concerned he is coming here as a result of a fair and just redistribution in a capacity truly representative.

Allied to what I have been saying is the theory—I might call it the practice advocated —of the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) with respect to what should govern in arranging a redistribution map. As I listened to the Solicitor General, what I understood him to say was this: There are some Liberal seats that as matters stand, are very strongly Liberal and we have made them even more strongly Liberal. On the other hand, there are some Conservative seats none too strong, and we have made them a little stronger, and therefore we think we have been just to both sides.

What does this mean, Mr. Chairman? It simply means, if that has been the guiding principle governing the committee, that the parties who have been on it have been trying to dig in for themselves and others regardless altogether of the effect the redistribution is going to have on the complexion of the next parliament. Any principle of that kind is wrong and should not be countenanced. If that kind of thing is going to be thought of, I think that this house should give expression of its views upon it. We cannot do so now, but those of us who are here to-day may well leave on record our views as to what should govern ten years hence when another period of redistribution will come around. I shall avoid saying anything that may be referred to the present or to what may be done now. But in the light of what we have seen and heard in this house within the last month something ought to be said.

My own view, and I have come to it after observing pretty carefully what has been taking place and what has been said in debate in this house as well as in the corridors, is that redistribution should be taken out of the hands of the House of Commons, where the parties are immediately interested, and should be put into the hands of a commission of judges. I would have that commission composed of judges selected in equal numbers by both sides of the house. The redistribution, if it is carried out in a fair way has not to do with party advantage at all. It ought to have soley to do with seeking to effect a fair and impartial division of the constituencies, and if three judges were named from one side of the house and three from the other, and if the choice were made, if you will, from among those who have been in politics and who therefore may be presumed to know something about conditions generally as they exist throughout the country, I think a redistribution which would be regarded as fair might be arrived at. Probably it would not be perfect, and any report which the commission made would have to be submitted to parliament and made subject to discussion and debate in parliament. But I do think that something of that kind would serve to bring about a much fairer result. May I say that if the choice were made in the manner indicated the judges in my opinion ought to be chosen from different parts of Canada. The result would be that in the matters that came before them, there would always be a majority of the commission of judges from outside of the particular province whose affairs might be under consideration by the commission at the time a decision was to be made. It is impossible to get perfection in anything, but I do submit that part of the duty of every member of this house is to consider not only the problems of his own day, but as well the future of his country. I hesitate to think of the complexion of this house as it may be ten years hence. Looking back on the past ten years, the changes that have taken place in that period have been very many. I imagine that the greater part of those of us who are now here will before the time for another redistribution comes have, so far as continuing as representatives in this House of Commons is concerned, passed beyond its bounds. In the circumstances I think it a duty that those of us who have views as to what we believe would most be in the interests of our country should assert our views and leave them of record, that they may be there to guide future parliaments in so far as their members may wish to be governed by them.

May I now come to the point that I mentioned a moment ago, and this brings up a matter which was a subject of discussion earlier in the week. I said that at the time of the last redistribution in 1924 my attention had been drawn to the fact that the members of the joint committee were finding it difficult to agree because amongst other things no agreement could be come to with regard to the constituency of North York, a constituency which I was representing in the house at that time, when I was also holding the office of Prime Minister; that in reply to my inquiry as to what the committee thought should be done, I had been told they wished to add the townships of Markham and Vaughan in the county of York to the then existing riding, and that I had said that if that were the view of the committee, if they thought it was just, if it would serve to bring confidence generally, by all means that that should be done. At the time I made that statement I said that I believed that the result would be prejudicial to myself but that I did not intend as Prime Minister to take advantage of my position to seek to make secure the riding I then represented at the expense of any others.

My statement as to the result having proved prejudicial to my chances of election has been challenged.

The present hon. member for North York (Mr. Lennox), speaking in the debate of that day, made the following statement:

If it had not been for the assistance he received—

That is to say, which I received——from the new municipalities which were added, instead of having a majority of 494, I would have had a majority in the old constituency of 681.

Then, later, the Prime Minister, following what had been stated by the hon. member for North York, added these words:

—just as the right hon. gentleman had with respect to his position in North York. It turns out as a matter of fact that had it not been for the two townships that were added by the redistribution of 1924 he——would have been beaten by a much larger majority than he was.

Myself.

Then the Prime Minister added, characteristically.

I am not for a moment asserting that he made the misstatement deliberately. It is just one of those accidents that sometimes happens to one's memory, and I merely correct the misstatement in order that the record may be historically correct.

The historically correct record will be found in the report of the chief electoral officer for the fifteenth general election, 1925. I have that report in my hand, and I would refer hon. members to pages 179 and 180 in which the total ballots cast are recorded. They are recorded under the headings "Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King" and "Thomas Herbert Lennox." I shall read to the committee the figures as therein set forth, as respects all of the parts added by the redistribution of 1924. I shall read the figures as they go down the list in this book. Markham township gave me a majority of 71; Vaughan township gave Mr. Lennox a majority of 282; Woodbridge village gave Mr. Lennox a majority of 167; Richmond Hill village gave Mr. Lennox a majority of 58; Markham village gave me a majority of 16. These are all of the localities and communities included in the addition made by the redistribution of 1924.

What do they show? They show that of the total number of votes cast in two subdivisions I received a majority of 87, and in the three remaining subdivisions Mr. Lennox received a majority of 507. Subtracting the 87 from the 507, the majority for Mr. Lennox in the new part taken in in 1924 was 420. The hon. member is in his seat, and if I am making a misstatement I ask him to correct me.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Those are the facts. Out of that newly added part the hon. member received a majority of 420 votes. And I am not surprised that he received a majority, in the light of the knowledge which was before the committee at the time redistribution was under consideration. How did the probable results appear from the information which the committee had before it when they were preparing the redistribution bill? The latest figures were those of the general election of 1921. In that election there were three candidates in South York and in West York in which the constituencies of Markham and Vaughan were then situated. These were in parts of those constituencies which in 1924 were taken into North York. I shall place on record just what majorities were given to Liberal, Conservative and farmer candidates, respectively, in the election of 1921. May I say in a word that while there were three candidates running in South and West York, that is, in the parts to which I have referred, in every case except one where the majority was 3, the majority was against the Liberal candidate. Markham township in South York, gave a majority of 595 against the Liberal. Markham village in South York gave a majority of 3 for the Liberal candidate. Richmond Hill gave a majority of 86 against the Liberal; Woodbridge, in West York, gave a majority of 109 against the Liberal; Vaughan, in West York, gave a majority of 939 against the Liberal. In other words, in these parts which were added in 1924 to North York, in the election of 1921 a majority of 1,726 was rolled up against the Liberal candidate in that election.

Mr. BENNETT: Does that include the votes for both other candidates?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I referred to the three candidates. Those were the figures which the committee dealing with redistribution had before it in 1924. I have shown the results after 1924, namely that these new parts gave the present Conservative member a majority of 420. I did say that I had carried the old constituency of North York. It may appear that in that statement I was not wholly correct, but I shall point out to the house just exactly what I meant. I should perhaps have specially mentioned the persons who came up from Toronto to vote in North York, but who were not, in any sense of the word, electors in the old North York constituency.

May I point out that the majority of the hon. member for North York was 494. That would mean that in the old riding of North York the hon. member received apparently a majority of 74, having received 420 in the added parts. As I have said, those 74 votes are more than accounted for by persons who came from the city of Toronto to vote in North York constituency. My hon. friend cannot deny that. I believe he has said that that was not the year in which they came up, but I say to him it was the year in which they came up and in which they came in large numbers. What took place was this: Many hon. members who are familiar with Toronto and the parts adjoining know that a large number of Toronto citizens, persons whose names appear on the voters' lists in Toronto, have summer residences in certain parts of North York constituency. The election in 1925 was held on October 29 of that year. The writs were issued on September 5, and according to the act as it stood at that time, although it was never contemplated in the minds of hon. members that anything of the kind should take place, those persons who had been in the constituency for a period of two months prior to the issue of the writ, and had been in the country for a year, were permitted to vote in that constituency. As I say, the persons who were in North York as summer residents only were not intended to be as hon. members in this house will understand, in any sense electors in the constituency of North York. They were voting municipally in Toronto; they were voting in general elections in Toronto—

Mr. HEAPS: Did they have two votes?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that many of them did vote twice—I do not think there is any doubt about it—voted in North York and Toronto as well. I know one person who told me he did. The point I make is that it was never intended by any parliament of Canada that persons on the voters' lists in the city of Toronto should exercise their franchise in a rural constituency. So much was that condition of affairs regarded as an outrage at the time, that I stated that if a Liberal administration was ever in power again we would see that before a general election took place the intention of parliament, as it undoubtedly had been understood, would be carried out to the letter.

Hon. members will recall that immediately after the election in 1925 there was no opportunity for the then Liberal administration to deal with the Dominion Elections Act. The government headed by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen came into office for a short time in 1926, and conducted the general election of that year. Again summer residents voted in North York. A Liberal administration again came into power and before the election of 1930 the Dominion Elections Act was amended by this House of Commons, to meet the situation I have just referred to. The amendment reads as follows:

> No person shall, for the purpose of this act, be deemed to be resident at the date of the issue of the writ in quarters or premises which are ordinarily occupied only during some or all of the months of May to October, inclusive, and ordinarily remain unoccupied during some or all of the months of November to April, inclusive, unless—
> (a) he is occupying such quarters in the course of and in the pursuit of his ordinary gainful occupation; or
> (b) he has no quarters in any other electoral district to which, at the date of the issue of the writ, he might at will remove.

I am sure that was always the intention of parliament with regard to what should govern with respect to the franchise. So I repeat that what I said the other day is correct, that the constituency of North York as it was in December of 1921, when electors from Toronto could not go to summer residences there, was the constituency that returned me, and had only the residents of North York voted in the next election I certainly would have had a majority in my old constituency.

Now I should like to point out what the Prime Minister is reported as having said at page 5342 of Hansard:

> Undoubtedly where two courses were open our friends chose the course that was more helpful to them.
> Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.
> Mr. Bennett: Of course, just as in 1924 the course chosen was the one more favourable to the party then in power.

I say to the Prime Minister that the course followed in 1924, so far as I had anything to do with it, was one by which it was sought to be eminently fair and just to all parties in this house—

Mr. MANION: Not in Ontario.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and with regard to my own constituency of North York, to which I have just referred, the irrebuttable evidence is that the course pursued was decidedly to my own disadvantage.

Now let me pass on to Prince Albert. For reasons best known to himself the Prime Minister seemed to take some exception to the fact that in my reference to Prince Albert I said that it had elected Sir Wilfrid Laurier and that it had a certain Liberal tradition. I imagine the Prime Minister spent a good part of the dinner hour in an endeavour to see what he could discover that might help appear to refute that statement.

Mr. BENNETT: You are mistaken there.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps just part of the dinner hour.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I knew it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend knew it from memory, then. I am surprised that, remembering so much, my right hon. friend did not remember that the people of Prince Albert, whom he has visited at different times, take to this day a great pride in the fact that they helped elect Sir Wilfrid Laurier as their representative. As hon. members well know, at the time Sir Wilfrid was elected the western constituency was much larger than it is to-day. In the contest of 1896, Sir Wilfrid Laurier ran for two constituencies, Quebec East and Saskatchewan. At that time the constituency of Saskatchewan included what is now Prince Albert, and the people of Prince Albert, as I think I can show in a moment, gave a majority to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In that sense—and it was in that sense I meant it—I said the riding had an association with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and that he had been elected in Prince Albert, just as my hon. friend said the other day that when he was first returned to parliament he represented the whole of Alberta.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I was defeated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend ran for the whole of Alberta; I am sorry I did not hear him say he was defeated. At any rate I do not assume that my hon. friend will deny that if Calgary was a part of the constituency of Alberta at that time, which I assume it was, he was a candidate in Calgary.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I was a candidate in the constituency of Alberta.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Did Calgary have separate representation?

Mr. BENNETT: No, Edmonton, Calgary, Macleod and Wetaskiwin were all part of the constituency; Battleford was part of it also, when it was the capital of the old Northwest Territories.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then my right hon. friend would be quite correct if he said to-day that he had been a candidate in Calgary at that particular election. It was a larger constituency, but it included Calgary.

Mr. BENNETT: There was no constituency of Calgary.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, the constituency of Alberta included Calgary, and if my hon. friend had been elected in Calgary —I do not know whether or not he was—I should think he would be very proud to mention that fact to-day and would not deny it. The Prime Minister sought to give particular emphasis to what he was saying by citing the Parliamentary Guide, but let us cite what the Parliamentary Guide indicates with regard to the question whether or not Prince Albert was represented by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and has a certain Liberal tradition. The constituency of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, is referred to at page 278 of the Parliamentary Guide, and in that connection there is this footnote:

> See Assiniboia, and particularly the reference under that head to the old electoral division of Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: I read that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, my right hon. friend read it, but he did not place on it the construction that I think should be placed there. Now if we turn to page 218 of the Parliamentary Guide, we find:

Saskatchewan
Record General Elections

1887—D. A. Macdowall, C..	166
1891—Macdowall, C..	283
1896—Hon. W. Laurier, L..	44

So the Parliamentary Guide itself links up the constituency of Prince Albert with the old constituency of Saskatchewan, for which Sir Wilfrid Laurier was returned by a majority of 44. I admit that the whole matter is a very, very small one, but I know also that Sir Wilfrid Laurier took a great pride in the fact that he had been elected to parliament in that particular part of Canada, and I do not see why my right hon. friend should want to have it appear that he did not represent the constituency which is now called Prince Albert. May I give these further figures, which place the whole matter beyond shadow of doubt. If we take the report of the eighth general election, 1896, at pages 316 and 317, we find recorded there the exact vote that was polled in the subdivisions of Prince Albert East and Prince Albert West, as follows:

	William Craig	Hon. W. Laurier	James McKay
Prince Albert, East.	10	143	102
Prince Albert, West.	7	68	90
	17	211	192

The majority for Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in the combined subdivisions of Prince Albert East and Prince Albert West, was 19 over Mr. McKay and 194 over Mr. Craig. That is the parliamentary record with regard to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's election in Prince Albert.

As to whether or not I was justified in saying the constituency had a certain Liberal tradition, let me cite exactly what appears in the Parliamentary Guide in addition to what I have already read. The first member returned in 1908 was A. W. Rutan, a Liberal, with a majority of 129. In 1911 James McKay, a Conservative, was returned with a majority of 355. In 1917 Andrew Knox, a government candidate, received a majority of 3,590. Everyone knows that Andrew Knox was a Liberal who supported the Union government; later he became a Progressive, but he never at any time sat on the Conservative side of any legislative body. In 1921 Mr. Knox was again returned, this time as a Progressive, with a majority of 3,578, but he was a Liberal-Progressive, and in 1925 Mr. Charles McDonald, a Liberal, was returned with a majority of 2,663. In 1926 I was elected with a majority of 4,095, and in 1930 again, the majority being 1,192. I need not refer to the by-elections; there were three of them. But that is the record of the constituency. There was one Conservative returned in 1911 and the Prime Minister says he sat here for so many years in parliament. It was the only one election in Prince Albert that had returned a Conservative. I must apologize for having taken even the time I have on this matter which is wholly incidental, but since the Prime Minister felt it necessary to endeavour to throw doubt on my veracity in relation thereto I thought I should place on record the precise facts.

Having begun to speak of the constituency of Prince Albert, perhaps I might say a word or two with regard to some of the things that have been said in the course of this debate with reference to my connection with the constituency. The Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Weir), seemed to regard it as necessary to make a particular attack upon me—a characteristically nasty attack; but everyone has his own style and method, and I cannot take exception to that. At page 5280 of Hansard will be found some of the statements that were made by the hon. member for Melfort, the present Minister of Agriculture. The first point he thought it necessary to dwell upon was the fact that I had, as he said, moved about considerably during the past few years. He has repeatedly said, in Prince Albert and elsewhere throughout the country, as many hon. gentlemen on the other side have said, that no constituency would keep me as its member very long—that I have had to move on from one place to another. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is quite true that I have represented a number of different constituencies. I have fought a good many political battles and have won a considerable number and lost a considerable number; but let me say that I am just as proud of the battles I lost as I am of those I won. I have the satisfaction of knowing that in the battles which I lost I stood for principles which I find hon. gentlemen opposite supporting to-day, principles which however they were denouncing at the time of those campaigns.

Let me give the hon. member for Melfort a statement of the reasons why I may have moved from one part of the country to another, a statement which I believe will appeal to hon. gentlemen in this house as being of a character such as I may well afford to regard with a certain degree of pride. I have not sought at any time to get into this House of Commons by an easy road, or on any occasion to shirk a fight. On the contrary, when I have run for parliament, in the major battles I have fought, I have chosen to contest a Conservative constituency; as hon. gentlemen well know, it frequently happens that a constituency won from the opposite party not infrequently swings back at a subsequent election. There were, however, reasons apart from this which, where I lost, readily explain what took place.

I entered parliament in the year 1908. At that time I was holding the position of Deputy Minister of Labour which I had held for eight years in the civil service of this country; a life position, if I had cared to have it such. I gave up that position to contest North Waterloo, which had been Conservative since 1896. It was the county in which I was born and had lived as a boy. In 1896 North Waterloo returned a Conservative, and hon. gentlemen opposite will remember who represented that constituency for so long a time—the late Mr. Joseph Seagram, who I think they will agree was no indifferent candidate to contemplate opposing. In 1900 Mr. Seagram was elected by acclamation and in 1904 he was returned by a majority of 306. When in 1908 I ran in that constituency I was tackling a constituency that had come to be regarded as strongly Conservative, and I won that constituency by a majority of 263. In 1911, at which time I was a minister in the cabinet of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I was defeated in North Waterloo as the result of the reciprocity campaign. I was standing at that time with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, loyally fighting for wider markets in the great country to the south. I am glad I was privileged to put up that fight. I do not have to change my coat to-day when I continue to fight for reciprocity. The right hon. the present Prime Minister appeared in all parts of the country denouncing reciprocity at that time. Well, I would much rather have gone down to defeat supporting my leader on principles which I believed were right and sound, and which it so happens are being advocated in all parts of the country to-day, than to have won the seat by opposing those principles, the very principles which my right hon. friend opposite opposed at that time but which I understand he is supporting or supposed to be supporting to-day.

Having been defeated in that campaign I was out of parliament for a time. The next general elections came on in 1917. In 1917 we had the Union government in office, as hon. members will recall, and I believed then, as I believed in 1911, that in opposing conscription Sir Wilfrid Laurier was right in the position he took. Having been invited, I chose to run in North York in 1917.

Mr. LENNOX: In the reciprocity election Armstrong, the first Tory member, was elected by only 59.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In 1917 I ran in North York which, in the preceding election of 1911, had returned a Conservative and which was a Conservative constituency at the time. Not only was it Conservative at the time but, as hon. gentlemen know, the government of Sir Robert Borden, which had been formed to carry through the conscription measure, had supporting it a large number of Liberals as well as Conservatives. I knew there was very little chance, no chance in fact, of succeeding in North York when I accepted the nomination, but I believed it was a battle that should be fought, and that Sir Wilfrid Laurier should have at his side from Ontario men who felt and believed as he did, whether it meant defeat or success. I decided to stand by him and to fight for him, and I am glad I did so. And may I add this further fact, that if there was any doubt at all regarding the position I was in when I fought in North York in 1917 it would have been removed—

Mr. SPOTTON: Such a hero should get an iron cross.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hear the insulting remark of the hon. member. It is no surprise coming from him.

Mr. SPOTTON: Just a remark.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that in 1917, when I ran in North York, I was told by more than one of those in the confidence of the Union government, that there was no use contesting that riding seeing that there were sufficient votes allotted to North York, out of the ballots of the soldiers overseas, to make absolutely sure of the defeat of any candidate who might oppose the Union government. I was told moreover, by one of the leading members of the Liberal press, that members of the press of Ontario, at a meeting of a large number of representatives from both parties, had made up their minds that no one who opposed the Union government would receive support from the press should he ever seek to get back into public life. Those were two grounds urged upon me in 1917 by some of my Liberal friends as reasons why I should not run in North York constituency as a supporter of Sir Wilfrid Laurier if I had any regard for my future in the political life of the country. I give the statement concerning the press as made to me by one prominently connected with one of the largest papers in Canada. I give it in the words in which he gave it to me at the time. I know nothing of the facts myself. Parliament is also a place in which regardless of consequences, battles have to be fought which involve principles fundamental in the protection of individual rights and liberties, and a battle fought for the preservation of what one regards as right is infinitely better even if lost than a battle won in which no possible sacrifice is involved on the part of him who enters it. That was my first experience in North York. I was defeated there in 1917 and I am proud of that defeat.

An hon. MEMBER: We were too.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. gentleman says, "We were too." Well, I would much rather owe my position as head of my party to-day to the fact that I stood by my leader, even though it meant defeat; fighting for principles for which he stood, principles which have been vindicated a thousand times since, than to a victory or many victories gained in any other way.

In 1919, at the Liberal convention of that year, I was chosen to be the leader of my party. I had not at the time a seat in the House of Commons but there was a vacancy which had been occasioned by the death of the sitting member in Prince county, Prince Edward Island. The Liberals of that constituency invited me to run in the constituency of Prince, and by that means I was enabled to come back into the House of Commons to fulfil in parliament the duties of leader of my party and leader of the opposition in this House of Commons. I cannot help but contrast in my own mind the attitude taken by the Conservative party of that day with respect to that seat, with the attitude which hon. gentlemen opposite are taking to-day with respect to the seat I now hold in Prince Albert. When I accepted the constituency of Prince, the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden, then Prime Minister, and his colleagues, together with the Conservative members of the constituency of Prince, agreed that there should be no contest, but that I should be allowed to reenter the House of Commons without opposition. I came in unopposed, and I am pleased to have this opportunity again to acknowledge in this House of Commons that act on the part of the then Prime Minister of Canada, and those who were then associated with him.

Prince constituency was considered at the time a very safe seat for a Liberal candidate. Being the leader of my party it was of some importance to the party that I should have a safe seat in order that I might be able to devote the time which a leader is supposed to devote to the country at large. When the general elections of 1921 came on, Liberals, not only of Prince but of other parts of Canada made repeated overtures to me to run again in Prince. I was told that there would be no doubt in the world about my re-election there, and it was urged I would be able to give my whole time without concern to speaking in other parts of the country. Did I accept that offer? I chose instead to run again in North York where I had been defeated in 1917, amongst other reasons to see whether or not the people of that constituency believed that I was right in the stand I took in 1917. I ran in North York and I carried the constituency by a very considerable majority, 1,055 in fact. That was not choosing the easy path to the House of Commons. It is true that in 1925 I was defeated in North York by the means I have shown to the committee to-day, and by other means of which the hon. member for North York to-day, and by other means of which the hon. member for North York (Mr. Lennox) no doubt could tell. I was defeated in 1925; but how much time may I ask had I to devote to the constituency of North York? I was during the entire campaign in the constituency but a part of a week. A leader has to choose between what is his duty to his party as a whole and his duty to his constituency, also between his duty to his constituency and what may be his own personal interests. Whenever the interests of my party have conflicted with anything else, I have stood or at least sought to stand by the interests of my party; whenever my personal interests appeared to run counter in any way to those of the constituency which I represented, I have sub-ordinated them or sought to subordinate them to the interests of the constituency. May I say that, in that particular election, had I been able, like my opponent, to spend my entire time in the constituency I think I would have given him a run which would have surprised him.

Mr. LENNOX: Why did not you stay there?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The reason I did not stay there was the one I have just given. I owed a duty to my party to speak in all parts of this country, and that duty had to be carried out whether or not it involved my personal defeat. May I tell the hon. member and hon. gentlemen opposite that in any future election with which I may have to do, I intend, whatever it may involve, to put the interests of my party as a whole before any personal interests.

Mr. LENNOX: Then you do not care about the country?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Someone says, "you do not care about the country?" My party is fighting for the best interests of this country, and when I speak of my party I speak particularly of the policies which it has supported and is supporting and which I believe are for the best interests of Canada. The people of Canada are coming to see pretty clearly that Liberal policies are in the best interests of this country.

Having been defeated in North York, in 1925, several hon. members in this house without any solicitation offered me their seats. Mr. Charles McDonald, who had been elected that year in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, was foremost among the number. He was insistent that the constituency he represented would welcome the Liberal leader and would be prepared to allow him a considerable amount of freedom at times of election to visit other parts of the country as well as to reside in Ottawa while carrying out his duties as leader of his party, and as was the case at the time, leader of the government. He said the electors of Prince Albert would understand the situation and would be quite prepared to make allowances for the more or less continuous absence from the constituency which might be involved. I accepted the kindly offer of my friends in Prince Albert and I was elected in the constituency. Here again may I refer to something which seems to be characteristic of a change that has taken place. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. McDonald had won his election after a considerable fight, that the constituency had been carried by the Liberals in the federal elections, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. McDonald was giving up his seat to his leader in order that he might take his place in the House of Commons, the Conservative opposition of the day and its supporters were not prepared to see that an election was avoided. In that particular contest a Conservative candidate was put in the field to oppose me. I was opposed, but the decency, the good sense and the chivalry of the electors of Prince Albert was shown by the fact that they gave me a majority of 5,621. That is how that majority came to be the size it was. I was supported in the constituency by men and women of all parties. May I contrast the attitude mentioned with what took place when Sir Robert Borden, at the time leader of the opposition, was defeated in a constituency in which he ran. Sir Robert Borden was chosen leader of his party, I think it was in 1901. Could my right hon. friend give me the exact information?

Mr. BENNETT: My memory is that it was around about 1901.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Sir Robert was defeated in Halifax in 1904. It is interesting to observe that practically all the leaders of political parties in Canada—my right hon. friend says that he was defeated, I think twice, but he was not then the leader —have been defeated at one time or another. This is almost inevitable, unless fortunately they are in very safe seats, due to the fact that they have had to give their time to the country as a whole rather than to their personal interests in their own constituencies. That is what happened to Sir Robert Borden in 1904. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Kidd) offered Sir Robert his constituency. Carleton was regarded as a safe seat for a Conservative leader, but did Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his supporters arrange to have a candidate oppose him? Not a bit of it; Sir Robert was allowed to be returned by acclamation. This is what any one at all fair-minded would have expected would be done. Later on Sir Robert Borden returned to the constituency of Halifax and was reelected there.

I need not go further with regard to my own record in this matter of elections, save to mention that in 1930, I was again returned to this house as member for Prince Albert by the handsome majority of 1,192. I would not have said what I have except for the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) has seen fit to insinuate that no constituency was prepared to retain me for very long as its member. Before touching upon what the minister had to say with regard to the constituency itself, may I just add that, especially where one is in the position of leader of his party, I believe those he represents are quite sensible enough to entertain the view that the place at which they need representation is in the House of Commons at Ottawa and not necessarily in the constituency itself. It is a very fine tradition in the old country that a man may be free to reside in one part of the country and represent a constituency in another. I hope that that tradition will never fade from our parliamentary life because it offers the only means whereby many men who ought to be in public life can be brought into public life. If the tradition ceased to exist anything of the kind might no longer be possible.

It is true I have been unable to spend much time in the constituency I have the honour to represent in this parliament. This unfortunately has been equally true of the other constituencies I have represented. Although I have not been privileged to spend the time I would have liked to spend in Prince Albert, I do not think I have been neglectful in any particular of the interests of that constituency. I think hon. gentlemen opposite will find out that the good people of Prince Albert understand the situation pretty well, and will not be found lacking in appreciation of what I have endeavoured to do on their behalf.

Here is what the Minister of Agriculture said on Tuesday last with regard to the Prince Albert constituency. I will quote the passage in full, because I think it ought to be carefully preserved:

> The right hon. leader of the opposition made one statement referring to the will of the people to which I take exception, and if the committee will bear with me for a few minutes I think I can show that he is not correct in his statement. The last redistribution made it impossible for the people in the federal constituency of Prince Albert to express their will. I have before me the results of the last federal elections and they show that poll after poll in the northern part, and especially in the city of Prince Albert and the districts in the neighbourhood of Prince Albert, returned majority after majority against the right hon. gentleman. This is what happened in the Anglo-Saxon and French speaking part of the constituency and the only thing that enabled him to carry the election were the votes of a large block of people of German descent who had been left in the southern part of the seat in the last redistribution. I am not making any inference that these people should not be given every opportunity to exercise their franchise. They are of German descent. I had the privilege and pleasure of working throughout that whole district for years as a school inspector. Under the redistribution which was in force during the last elections a large block of these people in the southern end of the Prince Albert constituency and another similar block to the north of Saskatoon, totalling in all about forty-five thousand progressive Mennonite farmers by being thus divided were practically denied the opportunity of nominating one of their own people so that this very worthy part of the Canadian population would be unable to express its opinion in this house. I know many of these people personally and they take second place to none, but this is what happened because of the work of scientific and highly specialized political racketeers. I do not think it was the work of the leaders of the Liberal party as we like to think of Liberalism. I believe it would have been a distinct gain if we could have as a member one of these people of German extraction who had made such a success. But that was made impossible because of the block left in Prince Albert constituency, evidently just to affect a vote of the people in the northern part of the constituency. By doing that, both these peoples have been practically disfranchised. The right hon. the leader of the opposition and his followers have therefore made it impossible for these people to express their will.

First of all let me say a word about people being disfranchised. What the Minister of Agriculture evidently had in mind was the Wartime Elections Act under which all the Mennonites were disfranchised, and under which, in some of the western communities, nearly everyone who happened to be of foreign origin was disfranchised. He just unconsciously let slip what was in the subconscious area of his mind—the thought of disfranchisement of Mennonites and others. There was no disfranchisement in 1930; everyone had a vote; everyone was entitled to vote as he thought best. What the minister could have meant by speaking of disfranchisement, unless unconsciously this thought crept into his mind, I am unable to understand, but what is interesting in connection with the minister's statement is this. He says that they were disfranchised, as he calls it, because the boundaries of the constituency had been so arranged as to bring these Mennonites and others into contact with the Anglo-Saxon people of Prince Albert; that the part of Prince Albert which votes Conservative was placed alongside this part of the constituency which votes Liberal. He says that this was "the work of scientific and highly specialized political racketeers." That, I shall show, was pretty hard on his own party, and on its past and present leaders.

I have taken pains to look at the redistribution of 1924 as it affected Prince Albert constituency. The Minister of Agriculture has sought to have it appear that this bringing together of these two elements and what he calls disfranchising them, in that way, was the work of political racketeers, and he has tried to apply to the Liberal party in 1924 that offensive designation. May I tell him that the constituency line of Prince Albert which determined that all these people shall be in the one riding, the Mennonites and the Anglo-Saxons, was the line laid down by Sir Robert Borden in the redistribution of 1914, a line moreover to which the present Prime Minister agreed, and for which he is part responsible. The southern boundary of the constituency of Prince Albert was left by the Liberal party in 1924 exactly where Sir Robert Borden and the present Prime Minister placed it in 1914.

Mr. TURNBULL: Is it not a fact that the statement which my hon. friend has just made applies only to the eastern part of the present constituency of Prince Albert and does not apply to that part west of the third principal meridian?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am speaking of the part referred to by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. TURNBULL: The Minister of Agriculture referred to the whole constituency.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am speaking of the constituency of Prince Albert as it is now, and I say that the southern line was fixed by the government of Sir Robert Borden. It was agreed to by Liberals and Conservatives alike and the present Prime Minister was himself on the committee that determined it. I say that it was a right and proper line in 1914; I say that it was a right and proper line in 1924 and I say that it is the right and proper line for 1933.

I want to take direct issue with the view that the aim of a redistribution should be to segregate the different elements of our population. I believe in all our efforts with respect to the public life of our country and the making of a country, a nation, we ought to regard the citizens of Canada as Canadians, and Canadians only, irrespective of what their origin may be. The more we can get the different groups and classes which compose the nation to intermingle and understand each other, the more united and happy our country as a whole will be. I take direct issue with the Minister of Agriculture when he says that simply because some people happen to be born of a different origin from his own, that an effort should be made in redistributing constituencies to have them placed in another district, so that they will in no way come into contact with those who happen to be English speaking; I do not think such a view is manly or British, or has anything to be said in support of it.

Let me say, with regard to the Mennonites to whom the minister refers in the way he has, that there is no finer community of people to be found anywhere. As to their having the right to choose whomever they may wish as their representative, may I say that when in 1908 I was first nominated as a candidate for parliament, in the constituency of North Waterloo, the man who nominated me was Mr. Leander Bowman and the man who seconded my nomination paper was Mr. Henry Hostetler, each of whom belong to that community which my hon. friend said should be entitled to name a representative of their own for parliament. These gentlemen were outstanding citizens of North Waterloo, the constituency represented in this parliament at the present time by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler). Is there any finer class of citizens to be found anywhere in Canada than is to be found in North Waterloo? Many of the Mennonites in the part I am speaking of in Prince Albert constituency come from the county of Waterloo itself. May I add this further fact, that when I was opposed in the by-election in Prince Albert in 1926, whoever was responsible for the choice of the Conservative candidate in that constituency chose Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker, to oppose me. It would seem he was of foreign origin. This gentleman, or at all events, his father whom I knew years ago, strangely enough came from the same county of Waterloo as I do myself. It ill becomes any minister of the crown to seek at this or any time to stir up racial strife and differences in this country.

An hon. MEMBER: The right hon. gentleman has done a great deal of it in his life.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is all right for the Tories opposite to do it, but the minute a member of the opposition takes exception to their action, it is wrong so to do.

Mr. STANLEY: That is pretty small for the leader of the Liberal party.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I just draw attention to the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible for interruptions and if they make interruptions, they must expect to get the replies they deserve.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): May I appeal to hon. members in committee to allow this debate to be carried on without such frequent interruptions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

May I now say a word in reference to the new boundaries of Prince Albert as set forth in the schedules that are before us. The government have brought down a redistribution map and they have presented to us the boundaries of Prince Albert among those of other constituencies. Let me first of all draw attention to the fact, as I did the other day, that the average unit of representation for constituencies has been fixed at 44,186. Let me draw attention to this further fact. It has been admitted on all sides, that where there are cities there should be a larger unit of representation than in the rural districts. Now the constituency of Prince Albert has in it the fourth largest city in the province of Saskatchewan, the city of Prince Albert, which has about ten thousand population. The present constituency of Prince Albert has a population of 50,898. The map which hon. gentlemen have presented and which they ask us to accept reduces the total number of electors in the constituency of Prince Albert to 38,469. Though the unit in a rural district is 44,186, Prince Albert is reduced to 38,469 under the measure which is now before the house.

We are told that the problem which the committee was confronted with was to reduce the size of the constituency. How have they gone about reducing the size of the constituency? What they have done is first of all to add to the constituency on its eastern side a considerable part of the constituency of Melfort, the present seat of the Minister of Agriculture. I ask this house and the country, is there evidence of fair play with respect to a constituency that is to be reduced in size, when it is found necessary to begin by adding to it a considerable portion of another constituency? I have looked at the part that has been added to see if I could discover the reason why an addition should be made, and I think I have found it clearly enough in the fact that in the last general election the part which is added gave a considerable Conservative majority. It has been found desirable in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite to add to this already very large constituency of Prince Albert a part of a Conservative majority from another constituency.

What else have they done? They have taken away from Prince Albert a great part of the southern portion of the constituency. When one examines the constituency as a whole one finds exactly what was in the mind of the Minister of Agriculture when he said the other day that Prince Albert in all its northern part had voted against me. He stated that on the floor of the house. He has had to do with the drafting of this map. He knows all about it. The part that voted against me he is allowing to remain in, but the part that supported me most strongly in the last election is being taken out. The pre-eminently Liberal portion of the constituency is being taken away, and they have taken away so much that it has been found necessary to add something from another constituency so as to have a constituency which will look reasonably large. But even then the constituency which they have given me at the present time is considerably below the unit. They have reduced the constituency of Prince Albert, notwithstanding the fact that there is a city in it, to 38,469, when the unit of population even in the rural districts is placed at 44,000 odd. They have by this process of gerrymandering changed the Liberal majority of 1,192 which I received in 1930 into a Conservative majority of 967.

May I add this? Take a look at the other constituencies in Saskatchewan. Have any of them been reduced in this fashion? Last Mountain, a purely rural constituency, has according to this map a population of 48,657; Mackenzie, 47,458; Regina, 53,209; Saskatoon, 47,362; South Battleford, 47,084; Yorkton, 49,423. Does that look like a desire to be fair as between the different constituencies of Saskatchewan? The new constituency that has been created immediately to the south of Prince Albert has been given a population of 46,285, and it is made up largely or partly out of what has been taken away from Prince Albert. Prince Albert has been reduced to 38,469, eight thousand less than the population of the new constituency that has been created, and which is a purely rural constituency while Prince Albert has a very large and growing city in the very centre of the constituency. If that is not gerrymandering, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what is.

The Prime Minister has said: If there is any fault to find, if there is any injustice, we are here to remedy it. Now I have presented a case to him and I am going to leave it with him and the government. They must do whatever they think best.

Mr. BENNETT: I say here and now that the letter written by Mr. Turnbull and Mr. Totzke fixing the boundaries of the constituency will be accepted by the government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The letter written by Mr. Turnbull to Mr. Totzke was in reply to a plan that related to the province of Saskatchewan as a whole. It was not a communication that had reference to the constituency of Prince Albert.

Mr. BENNETT: I mean the letter about Prince Albert.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Pardon me, it was a letter that dealt with the general plan of the constituencies. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) is here to speak for himself. He will say that he never proposed or agreed to anything that had not relation to the province as a whole, and the reason the committee did not come to an agreement was that they could not agree on the constituency of Prince Albert among other constituencies.

As the Prime Minister has requested it, Mr. Chairman, I am going to state to my hon. friend opposite what I believe in the circumstances to be a perfectly fair redistribution with respect to the constituency of Prince Albert, and I shall leave myself in the judgment of the house and the country as to whether what I suggest is or is not fair.

I have in my hand the constituency map of Prince Albert as it stands at the present time. I notice that most of the constituencies in Saskatchewan have their boundaries marked out by lines parallel both east and west and north and south.

Mr. BENNETT: The townships.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, the townships are all framed on the square. What has happened in regard to these northern constituencies in previous redistributions and in the present redistribution has been to narrow the territory between the boundaries east and west. That is to say, the constituency is made narrower, and narrower for this reason, that the population continues to run up to the north. What is happening in the redistribution map in Saskatchewan is much like what one sees on the banks of the St. Lawrence in Quebec, where as the population has increased one will find a large farm which has come to be subdivided among the members of a family, in a manner which will give to all a certain frontage along the river. These northern constituencies run to an indefinite part of the country, a part not inhabited at all, and as the population continues to increase towards the north they have been made narrower. I say that that same process should be followed with respect to Prince Albert at the present time. It is being followed with regard to constituencies lying to either side of it.

The boundary on the east side is along range 24 west of the second meridian. The lower part of the constituency of Prince Albert as it exists at the present time is on a range line between ranges 25 and 26. My suggestion to hon. gentlemen opposite, and it is only a suggestion of what I think is fair, is that the line which starts between ranges 25 and 26 at the southern part of the boundary be carried direct north, and that that portion of the constituency which lies to the east of that line be made a part of the adjoining constituency. I should be sorry to lose any part of the present constituency, but if the constituency is to be reduced in size this would appear to be the fairest way to all concerned to go about it.

I did not know when I looked at the map what would be the result of that arrangement politically. I may give to the house what I think is a correct statement, and that is that the total number that would be affected is something around four thousand. I think about four thousand would be taken out of the constituency as it exists at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: What would the population remain?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The population would remain about 46,000 as I gather it. At the present time it is 50,800, and if 4,000 were taken out 46,000 odd would be left. In my view 46,000 for Prince Albert constituency is a small enough unit. It is smaller than that of the constituency of Mackenzie, smaller than Last Mountain, smaller than Regina, smaller than Saskatoon. It would be the same as the new constituency of Hague. As a matter of fact, owing to the fact that there is a city in it, it should be one of the larger constituencies of the province. I have since looked to see, so far as I could figure from the results at the polls, what the effect would be.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the population of Prince Albert now?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Nearly 10,000.

Mr. TURNBULL: It is 9,905.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, about 10,000. As I figure it out as a result of the transfer I have suggested there would be a loss of Liberal votes. In round figures there would be a net Liberal loss of about 100 votes. It would take off, as I have figured it out—and I am subject to correction although I believe my figures are correct—it would take 4,420 from the present constituency which would mean a loss according to the figures of the last election of 678 Conservative votes and 761 Liberal votes, or in other words a net Liberal loss of 83. I know the government have to consider other constituencies, and that the addition of 83 Liberal votes to the Melfort division might occasion some concern. But I submit that that could be offset by a rearrangement of the line, elsewhere.

Mr. BENNETT: Leaving out the question of votes—because those of us in the west know that only small importance attaches to that from one time to another—what is the effect upon the population of the nearby ridings? I am asking that question for information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The effect on the population?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, by the addition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Melfort, as I see it here, is 36,237. It is a very small unit under the proposed map.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member is referring to Melfort?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it is an adjoining riding. If 4,000 were added to it it would bring Melfort nearly to 40,000, leaving Prince Albert considerably lower than it is at present.

Mr. TURNBULL: It is impossible to transfer those two ranges without retransferring to Melfort that portion on the east side of Prince Albert which has come from Melfort to Prince Albert, and about which the right hon. gentleman now complains. So in addition to transferring 4,400 of the Prince Albert vote there would be a transfer back to Melfort of 4,835. That along with the 39,000, at which Melfort will stand under the proposed redistribution, would bring the population of Melfort up to 48,853, with no city in it. In that way that constituency would be made much larger than Prince Albert which has a city in it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank my hon. friend for adding that which I had left out of my calculation. I was speaking of the constituencies as they are at the present time, and not what they would be under the new arrangement. I have another suggestion to make along the same line. I have not discussed it with the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) but I do not see, if it is necessary further to reduce Prince Albert, while I should be sorry indeed to lose any of those who reside in the western townships, why a line might not be taken on the west side of the constituency, in a somewhat similar way. The line there also stretches far to the north. I do object, however, to cutting out of the southern portion of Prince Albert constituency, a part which is quite thickly populated and which should be retained.

Mr. BENNETT: I must say at once that I am most anxious as far as possible to meet the views of the right hon. gentleman. As my questions have indicated, the difficulty is that we would be leaving a rural constituency of 48,000 people without a town in it. It would be hardly fair to impose upon a government the necessity of accommodating an opponent to that extent. If there is any way out of it I should like to hear it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I agree with the right hon. gentleman that I should not ask the government to do anything for me which would embarrass the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that is not the point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do say, however, that if my right hon. friend will confer with hon. members in charge of the maps he will find it might be possible to take from the constituency of Melfort some part of what is now being given to it, which part could be added to one or other of the adjoining constituencies in a manner which would do no injustice to anyone. I do not know anything about the political complexion of these areas, but I do think something of that kind could be done. At all events I am quite content to leave the matter, so far as Prince Albert is concerned, with the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

I have only one other word to say, and that is with respect to North Battleford. I understand it is the intention to change the name of north Battleford constituency to that of Redberry. The city of North Battleford, the one which gives its name to the constituency. will probably disappear from Redberry, and the city which is now called North Battleford will go into what will afterwards be known as the Battlefords. I do submit that there is something in retaining names having an historical significance. North Battleford and South Battleford are names which have figured in the history of our country and it would, I submit, be a pity to have them disappear from the maps. Redberry may have some associations—I know it has with one very distinguished gentleman—but the name at present means but little to the people of Canada as a whole. The name of North Battleford does mean something. The constituencies of North Battleford and South Battleford are separated by the Saskatchewan river. Further than that the constituency of North Battleford serves commercially that part of the country lying to the north of the river which will be included in the new constituency of Redberry. The business and community interests of the latter are bound up with North Battleford.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that Battleford was at one time what might be termed the capital of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. VALLANCE: The old town.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the old town of Battleford. Along the line of what the right hon. gentleman has said concerning the undesirability of perpetuating differences, I might say the idea is to follow the provincial lead and call them one community, namely the Battlefords, rather than accentuate the differences which have grown up between north and south.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They are joined together, provincially.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do not follow the provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think elsewhere in the province provincial boundaries are not closely followed. I do think there would be a distinct advantage in retaining the name which has been associated with that particular part of the province. That which will be the new constituency of Redberry is in considerable part the old constituency of North Battleford. I believe if the government could see its way clear to retain the old name of North Battleford, rather than calling it Redberry, and would bring the town of North Battleford into that constituency, making whatever other adjustments they may find necessary and may wish to make with respect to the boundaries, they would at this stage settle any difference there may remain between us as regards that constituency.

I wish to say further that in view of the remarks of my right hon. friend in the course of the last half hour, if the government is prepared to reconsider and to meet us in the few particulars I have mentioned there would be no desire on our part further to discuss the situation in Saskatchewan. I do not for one moment admit that we are or would be satisfied with the redistribution in the province as a whole, because we are not. But we cannot expect to be satisfied. We realize hon. gentlemen opposite are in power, that they must and will have the last word, and also that they must take the responsibility for their say. I think the members on the Liberal side both in committee and in the house have made the strongest plea they can and have fought to the limit of their endurance in seeking to protect what they believe to be the interests of their own and other constituencies and of the electorate in the different parts of the province, and I do not want to lend encouragement to any further discussion if we can get this Saskatchewan situation settled by an amicable arrangement. I have made suggestions which I believe will at this stage lead to a settlement in that province, and at this point I am prepared to leave the matter in the hands of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman will observe that the difficulty lies in the general disposition of the population; in shifting the boundaries of one constituency all are affected. I do not see how we can change the Battlefords if we are to maintain the relative population in the adjoining constituencies. I desire to assure the right hon. gentleman at once that I shall wait for a transcription of his remarks and endeavour to adjust the Prince Albert situation in some way.

Mr. TOTZKE: Perhaps as a member of the committee I might suggest a way by which that difficulty may be overcome. There is a certain portion of the proposed constituency of Redberry lying south of the Saskatchewan river. The population in that particular area is contiguous to the old town of Battleford, and this district contains a population of something like 4,000, if not more. This could be added to the constituency now called Battleford, and the transfer of the city to the constituency now called Redberry would not make so much difference with regard to the population.

Mr. LENNOX: I am very glad indeed to have the opportunity of saying another word or two with regard to my own riding. The other day in referring to the townships of Markham and Vaughan the right hon. gentleman said:

> They were added, and when the general election came I carried the old constituency of North York but was defeated by the additional majority in the added townships.

That statement is not correct; the right hon. gentleman knows that he did not carry old North York, and he must have known it when he made that statement. I was dealing with what he made reference to himself, the addition of the two rural townships of Markham and Vaughan, and while I was a little mistaken in the figures my right hon. friend was very badly beaten. Let us see what he says to-day; I took down his words. He said, "I repeat what I said before with respect to North York," and then he said that the reason for his defeat was the additional votes from Toronto. That was the reason he gave to-day; that was how he excused himself for being defeated in North York.

I would ask you to bear with me for a moment, Mr. Chairman, while I give the figures with respect to the Toronto vote in 1925 and 1930. In 1925, when my right hon. friend—not too friendly—was the representative of that riding, it was perfectly legitimate under the act to poll any person who had been living in the riding for two months prior to the date of the issuing of the writ; there was nothing wrong about it. Any man who came up there had the same right to vote under the law as it was then constituted as any person had who lived in the riding permanently. In 1928 or 1929 that vote was entirely eliminated, and so far as I was concerned I was confined, as was my opponent, to the resident vote. Now let me point out where the Toronto vote came in. We had Sutton, which includes Jackson's Point, which of course is the largest summer resort we have in North York; we have North Gwillimbury, which also borders on the lake and runs to Jackson's Point, and on the other side we have Georgina township. Those are the only three municipalities in my riding that come within miles of lake Simcoe.

Now let us see how fair my right hon. friend was, or perhaps I should say how mistaken he was. When we had this Toronto vote, Sutton gave my right hon. friend 179 votes and myself 300 votes; North Gwillimbury, which takes in Orchard Beach and other places, gave the right hon. gentleman 454 and myself 475, and Georgina gave my right hon. friend 411 and myself 367. So these three municipalities bordering on the lake gave the right hon. gentleman 1,044 votes and myself 1,146; my majority, which he says to-day resulted from the presence of the Toronto vote, was 102. Let us see what happened after the Toronto vote was cut off, because not a single soul from Toronto had the right to vote or did vote in 1930. In that year these three municipalities gave me a majority of 232 votes though not a single person from Toronto was permitted to vote. My right hon. friend stated that he was told by some person that he had voted in both places. All I can say is that it must have been a friend of his who did so, because no one else would tell him. So we have the admission on the part of the right hon. gentleman that apparently his own friends voted in both places, because I am sure no friends of mine would vote twice and certainly if they did they would not tell him.

Now let me refer for a moment or two to what the right hon. gentleman said with regard to the sacrifices he made by going into constituencies that were not safe seats so far as he was concerned, and I dare say that would apply to a great many constituencies. I want to show his chivalry to the men and women who got out and worked night and day for him in North York. He ran first in the constituency of North Waterloo against Mr. Weichel, I believe, and was elected by a majority of 263 in the riding in which he was born. In 1917 he was defeated, in the same riding which knew him so well, by 315, and after his defeat he left the riding and never came back. In 1917 he was defeated by Liberals, because the leading Liberals were Unionists in the riding of North York.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is not correct.

Mr. LENNOX: Wait a moment; I would not get into trouble again if I were you. One of the outstanding Liberals who appeared upon the platform and worked tooth and nail against the right hon. gentleman was no less than the Liberal candidate in the provincial election in 1923, Mr. Pearson. And in Newmarket, which is preponderatingly Liberal, or was, there was a very large majority for Mr. Armstrong, if I remember rightly. That of course was in an election during the war. Then my right hon. friend went down to Prince Edward Island where he got an acclamation. Then he summons up courage and comes back to North York, and I may tell the committee that apart from the election during reciprocity, when Mr. Armstrong was elected by 59, prior to this, there never was, to my recollection a Tory elected in that riding. Sir William Mulock represented it for years, and by very large majorities; and Sir Allen Aylesworth represented it by very large majorities. So that the only time in my recollection when it was represented by a Tory, was at the reciprocity election of 1911, when practically the whole country went against my hon. friends, and during the war.

Then the right hon. gentleman was elected in 1921 by a majority of 1,055. He says that I was mistaken in my figures. Well, I was; I did not know that I had beaten him so badly in the newly added portion of the territory. He was beaten by 408 in a riding that had never in its existence given a Conservative majority where there were two running. With 1,055 to his credit, a gerrymander took place—I should not say that; I should say a redistribution. In the election of 1921 he had 1,055, and he gave the house the impression that he was so very generouus in helping a Conservative candidate that he was willing to sacrifice himself, which he ultimately did in the election.

Let me say to the right hon. gentleman here to-day that in the election of 1921, taking in the new additions, the Liberal majority in Markham, Vaughan and the other municipalities that were added was 2,800; they got a majority of 2,800 over and above the number that voted for the Conservative candidate. And these are the municipalities which had snowed under the Conservative candidate in the immediately preceding election. My right hon. friend had the temerity the other day to get up and say that he added these places because he wanted to please the Conservative party.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but I gave the house the figures, which are a matter of record.

Mr. LENNOX: The right hon. gentleman did not give them for 1921.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes; I stated what the results of the 1921 election were in the total vote polled against the Liberal candidate.

Mr. LENNOX: At all events the right hon. gentleman was elected in 1921 by 1,055 in old North York, and in that same election, taking West York and South York, or East York as it was called, taking the two constituencies—because Vaughan is west and Markham is east of Yonge street—I may tell the right hon. gentleman, who never shirked anything, that there was a Liberal majority against the Conservative candidate in these sections that were added to North York of 2,800.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member is now talking about the combined majorities against the Conservative candidate. I gave the combined majorities against the Liberal candidate, and I think the house can determine which of us is right.

Mr. LENNOX: With respect to Vaughan and Markham, there is not a Conservative candidate who ever got a majority in the former township except Tom Wallace, who lived in Vaughan; and he obtained a Conservative majority against Mr. Dewart, who was a Liberal, a Toronto lawyer, and who ran at the time the market gardeners were supporting the Conservative party.

Now let me refer for a moment or two to something else. I might observe here that even during the Union election in 1917, when Mr. Wallace was a Conservative candidate and ran against a lawyer in Toronto, Mr. Denton, a nephew of the judge, Mr. Denton defeated the Union candidate by a majority of 40 or 50 in the township of Vaughan—I have not the figures by me. But even at that time that township went Liberal.

My right hon. friend has rebuked the government and more especially the Prime Minister and the committee for their lack of chivalry towards him with respect to his position in Prince Albert. He says that Markham and these other places that were added were Conservative. Well, let me say this to him: We are taking Markham out and putting it into another riding so that he should not object to that. I say to this distinguished gentleman who is leader of the opposition: "Come on back to North York. You are boasting that we are going to be beaten in the next election. Well, I invite you to come back to North York. I have no intention of running again, but I will if you come. If you want to keep me in public life and you want to go out of it, you come back."

Let me say a word or two with respect to the chivalry or lack of chivalry on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and members of the committee. It is said that they should not have interfered with the right hon. gentleman's riding. What chivalry did the right hon. gentleman display when he deserted Waterloo, when he deserted North York after they had defeated him? What chivalry did he show to the men and women who had gone out day and night working to defeat me? I am told that he never even wrote a letter thanking the Liberals for their support.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know who said to my hon. friend anything of the sort, but it is quite untrue. I am quite prepared to have my friends speak for themselves in that matter.

Mr. LENNOX: They spoke for themselves in 1926 and they never asked you to come back again. The fact is that upon every occasion, except one, the right hon. gentleman has never gone back to a riding in which he was defeated. Chivalry, courage, yes! My riding was preponderatingly Liberal. But what happened after the redistribution? I had intended to retire from public life at the end of 1923; I intended to go back to my legal practice. What happened in 1924 when they all thought and I myself thought that I was not going to run again? After the redistribution of 1924 the Liberal papers taunted and goaded me and did everything they possibly could. They boasted that by reason of the redistribution they had a majority of 1,500. They were blowing around that I would not dare to enter the constituency to oppose my right hon. friend. I had no intention of opposing him but they drove me to it. I never went to the convention of over 1,200 people where I was nominated. They telephoned to me in Toronto and asked me to come up during the afternoon and I did so hours after my nomination had taken place. The night before at the Albany Club I met a deputation of 80 or 100 who asked me to run. I told them that I would not. The next day when I went to the convention and met the executive downstairs I still said that I would not run. I felt that I had done my duty, having had seven elections up to that time. I had three elections in two years and a half and two protests, both of which I won. What happened? Brave as I think I am, when I got up on the platform—

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX: There is another brave man over there.

An hon. MEMBER: What a man!

Mr. LENNOX: When I got upon the platform for the purpose of telling them I would not accept the nomination, in a moment of weakness I wilted and weakened and, finally accepted it. Believe me, when I accepted it I thought that the right hon. leader of the opposition was more popular than it afterwards turned out he was. He has drawn the attention of the committee to the fact that my majority was 76; he is wrong there, without the new addition, it was 89. That is just an error in addition but I made one myself the other day. I do not hold that against the right hon. gentleman. I ran down and got the figures after dinner as I did not expect to speak. I had not the slightest conception of the apparent unpopularity of the right hon. gentleman in Markham and Vaughan.

In the next election the right hon. gentleman had the opportunity to come back. He would not have been opposing any local man because they were looking around for a candidate. They brought in one of my warmest personal friends, Mr. Harry Sifton. He was brought in from Toronto and was a stranger to the people of North York, but he got a majority of 247 in Markham. He was totally unknown personally to the people. The liberal majority in the provincial house in 1926 was 1,184 in Markham alone and the liberal candidate was a farmer living in Scarborough while the premier lived in York, which adjoins Markham. In 1929 the Hon. Mr. Henry ran again and he was opposed by Mr. Saunders, a young lawyer who lived in Stouffville. Mr. Henry was a farmer and he was opposed by a lawyer in a constituency which was preponderatingly rural. There is only one village in Markham but the people gave this young lawyer who had only been practising a few years and who did not live in the riding a majority of 892 against the premier.

According to the figures of previous elections, I thought that the majority of the right hon. gentleman in the township of Markham would be 400 or 500, but much to my surprise this was reduced to 71. The right hon. gentleman said that he would have defeated the present member for North York if it had not been for the city vote. They had added no less than 13,000 people to my riding. I was an entire stranger to Markham which is south of my riding. I was an entire stranger in every municipality that had been added. Being somewhat of a practical politician I decided what I would do. I said to myself: You had better get down into Markham and Vaughan. I did not put in as many days in old North York as did my right hon. friend. He spoke in all the large centres; he had nine cabinet ministers speak for him in 1925 and all of them with the exception of one were defeated by coming into my riding. There was George Graham, Mr. Massey, Mr. Marler—the whole crowd of them. It served them right, they should not have come in; but they did. My right hon. friend stated that it was the new parts that had defeated him. That, of course, is incorrect, and I am sure my right hon. friend, if he were to try to explain the matter to-day, after what the Toronto Globe has said, would be only too glad to admit I am correct. But I had no idea that the townships of Vaughan and Markham, traditionally Grit, and the other municipalities such as Richmond Hill and Markham village which never gave a Conservative majority, would all, except Markham, which gave a majority of 87 against me, give me large majorities. So I begin to think perhaps that when the election of 1926 came along, my right hon. friend sought a constituency as far north from me as he possibly could get.

He speaks of Prince Albert and I am going to say just a word or two about that. My right hon. friend ran in a by-election in Prince Albert in 1926 and in that election he was opposed, not by a Conservative or anyone running as a Conservative, but by an Independent soldier candidate. In that election he got a majority of 5,621, and strange as it may appear the more the people of that constituency saw my right hon. friend and the better they knew him, the smaller majority he got. When he ran in North York in 1921 he got a majority of 1,055 which was changed at a succeeding election into an adverse vote of 494, making a change in 1925 of between 1,500 and 1,600. In 1926, in Prince Albert, when he was opposed, I am told, by a Conservative candidate, he got a majority of 4,095. In 1930 he might have come back to North York, knowing there was at that time no Toronto vote which he said had defeated him in 1925, but having had a majority of over 5,000 in Prince Albert he remained as a candidate there and his majority was reduced by over 4.000. I do not see why there should be any difficulty about the Prince Albert riding. I would leave it as it is. If it reduced the Liberal majority from 5,600 to about 1,000, one can realize what the result would be in the next election, but I have nothing to do with the committee and for that reason I am not responsible for what is being done.

I am not going to take up any more of the time of the committee except to say that the additions made no difference to my riding and to renew my cordial invitation to the right hon. gentleman, now that Markham is out which he said was put in to help defeat him, to come back to North York at the next election and see how popular he is in that constituency.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just a word in reply to a couple of remarks made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Lennox). First of all, I noticed the other evening in discussing this bill he said that he wanted to have the riding of North York with the same boundaries as the provincial ones. I just want to say that the plan that was handed to the redistribution committee of the proposed future North York was handed to that committee before the provincial boundaries were fixed, so that the provincial boundaries are following the plan of redistribution that is shown by this map. I know something about my hon. friend's courage and I do not think it is necessary for him to protest it as much as he did this afternoon. But what struck me as being rather remarkable is this: if he is as good a man as he was in 1924 and in the various contests to which he referred—and I think, from his remarks, he is willing to admit he is—I am just wondering why he thought it should be necessary to get in the next election an advantage of about 1,100 more than he had during those previous campaigns.

Mr. LENNOX: So far as I am concerned, if I were running again, the boundaries would make no difference to me; I would take a chance on any man who ran against me. I am not worrying about that. I do not propose to be a candidate at the next election and maybe the other candidate who will represent the Conservative party will not be as well known.

Mr. ELLIOTT: He may need the assistance.

Mr. LENNOX: Perhaps he may. What my hon. friend wanted was for me to consent to the old boundaries as they were; that is what he suggested to me, but I do not think he was serious in doing so. My hon. friend says that I am getting an advantage of 1,100. I am sure he will agree with me when I say that when I start within the boundaries of the old constituency I am from 800 to 1,000 in the red. Therefore if they gave me an advantage of 1,100, which they have not done, altogether the constituency would represent an advantage of only 200 or 300 Conservative votes. I have been fighting for ten years against an adverse majority of from 800 to 1,000 and now perhaps some little concession should be given to me. I notice that the ex-Minister of Justice got all that was coming to him.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am proud of the fact.

Mr. TOTZKE: If we were all such wonderful men as the hon. member for North York, there need not be any difficulty about redistribution. So much has been said in this discussion with regard to my action and the action of the committee in connection with the redistribution of the constituency of Prince Albert that, while I have already expressed as well as I could what really has happened, still I think I must go over the matter once again. It has been charged that at one time I suggested a line running southeast and west to the south of the town of Duck Lake. I admit that that line was suggested, was talked of, but at the time that line was spoken of, I was trying to get from the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) an idea of just what he would do in connection with the constituency of Prince Albert. Prior to that I had been told that the southern boundary of Prince Albert would not be changed. I had been informed, not by the hon. member for Regina but by other hon. members from my province, that they were making the map and that there would be no alterations of any kind. Is it any wonder that there was not much opportunity for the hon. member for Regina and me to come to any agreement? But I want to say further that any suggestions which I made in connection with the constituency of Prince Albert were made as part of the general plan for the whole province. The hon. member for Regina said to-day that I had never agreed to the boundaries of any constituency as proposed by him. I say that that is true; I did not. There were a number of tentative agreements made between the hon. member for Regina and myself, but invariably these agreements struck a snag when we came to other portions of the province, and there was no agreement on any of them.

Also at the time I made the suggestion that the line might possibly go across at a point south of Duck Lake I also asked that the portion that had been taken into Prince Albert from the constituency of Melfort should be removed, but I was told that that could not possibly be done. I said to the hon. member for Regina, "I will look into this." After I had looked into it I went back to him and said, as I am sure he will admit, that that line would not do.

With regard to the proposal that I made at the time, that the territory that had been taken from the constituency of Melfort and put into the constituency of Prince Albert should be returned to Melfort, I want to read just one extract from the letter I received from the hon. member for Regina, dated March 25, very early in the negotiations. At page 3, section 7, he says:

> I am also willing to consider the advisability of leaving the boundary line between Prince Albert and Melfort north of the north branch of the Saskatchewan river as it was.

The hon. member for Regina, and the Prime Minister in his remarks the other day, were very insistent that I had received an offer or a letter saying that the hon. member for Regina agreed with my suggested line. I would like to read to the committee just what that offer was. It is in these words:

> With regard to Prince Albert I will be prepared to make the southern boundary of that approximately on the line suggested by you.

The only thing I want to reiterate in connection with this particular constituency is that the line suggested was part of a general plan. I was still working on a plan upon which I thought we might come to some agreement, and if that line had been proposed by itself certainly there would have been no agreement upon my part.

While I am on the constituency of Prince Albert I want to say just a few words in connection with some remarks that were made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) the other day. I do not intend to open up the controversy again. This is just a matter of figures that he presented and which I want to show to the committee could not possibly be correct. He made the statement that there was a solid German block or a block of Mennonites of German extraction of 45,000 people in the two constituencies of Prince Albert and Saskatoon. The population for the entire district of Prince Albert, according to the census returns, is 50,896, and according to the same returns the population for the city of Prince Albert itself is 9,905. The population as shown for Saskatoon constituency is 60,636, and the population for the city of Saskatoon is shown as 43,291, making the total for the two constituencies of Prince Albert and Saskatoon of 111,532 and for the two cities of Saskatoon and Prince Albert, 53,196. Subtracting the population of the cities from the total population of the two constituencies leaves a total of 58,336, and the Minister of Agriculture says that of this 58,336, 45,000 are German Mennonites or people of German extraction. That would leave a balance of 13,336 for all other races—Anglo-Saxon, French-speaking, Ukrainian and any other nationalities who may be living in that constituency. I say, Mr. Chairman, that that computation shows that the statement of the Minister of Agriculture is absolutely absurd. There cannot possibly be 45,000 of that particular class of population.

The Prime Minister the other day in his remarks on the province of Saskatchewan made much of the fact that the population was moving northward and that of necessity changes in the constituencies must be made in that province more nearly equalized to the population. We on this side have from the outset of the negotiations in connection with redistribution in our province taken the stand that all that was necessary, seeing that there was no change in the number of the representatives from our province, was to rearrange the boundaries of the various constituencies in order that the population might be more nearly equalized. That was the idea behind any proposals and behind any map that we submitted.

The hon. member for Regina has made much of the fact that the redistribution of 1924 was a mistake, that in the central part of our province a certain number of constituencies were formed which should not have been formed and which were 18,000 below the unit of population. I want to deal for a few moments with that aspect of the question. The Prime Minister I am sure was quite sincere in his remarks, but I think I can show by the figures I am going to give that he did not have a clear picture of the situation in Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there any doubt that the population has moved north since the last census?

Mr. TOTZKE: Not at all.

Mr. BENNETT: Then is there any doubt that there must be a rearrangement of the constituencies?

Mr. TOTZKE: Not at all.

Mr. BENNETT: Then it is only a question of how.

Mr. TOTZKE: Exactly. I have said that right along. I have a list of the constituencies as at present constituted in Saskatchewan with the populations as shown by the census of 1921 and the census of 1931. I may be out a little in the unit as shown for the province of Quebec, for I did not pay much attention to the old boundaries which were to be used for the purpose of making the unit, but I do not think I am out very much. The unit according to my computation was 36,317 for 1921 and 44,219 for 1931, or roughly 36,000 in 1921 and 44,000 in 1931. According to the population of Saskatchewan, divided by the number of members to which the province is entitled, the unit was 36,072 in 1921 and 43,861 in 1931, showing that the units are close enough to 36,000 and 44,000 for the same unit to be used in each computation.

The first constituency I have listed is Assiniboia. In 1921 its population was 34,789. In the last ten years its population has increased by 18·2 per cent. So that was not too bad—34,000 and the unit was 36,000. While I am talking about populations and equality of populations, I may say that personally I do not think it matters very much whether the populations are a few thousands high or a few thousands low. We have nothing in our province to be compared with the disparities in population that exist elsewhere, for example in some portions of eastern Canada. I am told that in Ontario one rural constituency has as high a population as 80,000 and another one as low as 20,000. I will continue with the table:

	1931	1921

Constituency—		1921
Assiniboia..		34,789
Humboldt..		37,128

It will be noted that Humboldt's population in 1921 was 37,128, and the unit was 36,000. Kindersley's population in 1921 was 28,997, or approximately 29,000, a little low.

It seems to me that while some of these constituencies may have had a slightly lower population at that time, there was not sufficient difference to make any big parade about it. The six seats which the hon. member for Regina claims were by mistake, on account of low population, put into separate constituencies, are the constituencies of Kindersley, Last Mountain, Long Lake, Melville, Rosetown and Yorkton. Let us see what the populations were at that time, so that we may ascertain whether or not there was such a serious mistake made in connection with the redistribution. Kindersley had a population of 28,997, which was a little lower. The population unit was 36,000. Mind you, this is not making any allowance for the generally accepted principle that there should be a higher unit of population for cities than for rural constituencies. If that is taken into consideration the unit of population for rural seats in Saskatchewan would be considerably below 36,000. Kindersley was a little lower, but I find that during the last ten years the increase in population in that constituency has been over twenty-one per cent. It has been over the average increase in population for the province of Saskatchewan. So that it would appear that that arrangement was not too bad.

Mr. BENNETT: The increase in Prince Albert has been thirty per cent.

Mr. TOTZKE: I referred to the average increase for the province. I may tell the right hon. gentleman the increase in Melfort was seventy-one per cent. The population of Last Mountain was 34,054, very little below the unit for the entire province. Allowing for larger representation in the city constituency, I would say that Last Mountain had approximately a proper population. Next comes Long Lake, with a population of 32,308. That is a little low, also, and I think perhaps there is a little excuse for saying that that constituency was too low, because this, of all the constituencies in the province of Saskatchewan, instead of increasing in population, had a small decrease in the last ten years. But there are other circumstances in connection with the creation of the Long Lake seat which must be taken into consideration, when we study that particular part of the matter.

Next we come to Melville. In 1921 Melville had a population of 36,842, which was above the unit—considerably above when you allow for a smaller unit on account of giving a larger unit to cities. Rosetown had a population of 29,341, also below the unit. Yorkton had 37,857, or considerably above the unit, because there was a small city in the constituency. Therefore the population of the constituency at that time is not at all out of the way. We find that in these six seats in the redistribution of 1921 there were two seats below the accepted unit, although not very much below. Therefore I say when hon. members suggest a terrible mistake was made in the redistribution of 1921, their argument is far fetched.

Let us see what has happened to these constituencies in ten years. Let us see what the populations are now. I shall read first the populations for the entire list of constituencies in Saskatchewan, to show hon. gentlemen opposite that at that time there was no radical need for change in the constituencies in Saskatchewan.

Assiniboia	41,144
Humboldt	44,146
Kindersley	35,290
Last Mountain	36,507
Long Lake	31,266
Mackenzie	44,869
Maple Creek	43,903
Melfort	52,668
Melville	39,338
Moose Jaw	42,334
North Battleford	53,708
Prince Albert	50,896
Qu'Appelle	35,938
Regina	60,858
Rosetown	32,526
Saskatoon	60.636
South Battleford	45,199
Swift Current	41,717
Weyburn	41,684
Willow Bunch	48,466
Yorkton	38,692

Hon. members will recall that the unit is 44,000. I ask if there are any very serious discrepancies in the populations of those constituencies. When we allow for the extra unit of population which, it was agreed in committee, should be given to urban centres, you will find there is not much discrepancy among any of the constituencies in the province. If we allow for extra representation in the cities we could say that possibly the unit for rural constituencies might be put at about 40,000. Under 40,000 we have Kindersley with 35,290; Last Mountain with 36,507; Long Lake with 31,266; Melville with 39,338; Rosetown with 32,526 and Yorkton with 38,692. There were only three constituencies in which there would be any excuse for making a change. Those were the constituencies of Kindersley, Long Lake and Rosetown. These constituencies are in the centre of the province. The suggestion I made was merely to add territory so as to give a little greater population to these constituencies and to take some of the population from those which were too large.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. TOTZKE: When the committee rose at six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I was about to place some figures on record with regard to the population of the various districts in Saskatchewan following the census of 1921 and the census of 1931. So much has been said with regard to the basis of population in connection with the redistribution of seats in that province that I thought it would be well to have these figures on record even though they are not of much interest to members of the house other than those concerned with the province of Saskatchewan. So much has been said also with regard to the larger percentage of increase in the northern part of the province that I should like to place on record the percentage of increase in all the constituencies during the last ten years, as follows:

	Increase per cent
Assiniboia	18.2
Humboldt	18.9
Kindersley	21.7
Last Mountain	7.2
Long Lake (decrease)	3.2
Mackenzie	29.4
Maple Creek	13.7
Melfort	71.4
Melville	6.7
Moose Jaw	.02
North Battleford	55.8
Prince Albert	30.
Qu'Appelle	8.8
Regina	49.8
Rosetown	10.8
Saskatoon	48.9
South Battleford	28.8
Swift Current	3.5
Weyburn	11.3
Yorkton	2.2

On several occasions the Prime Minister has mentioned the fact that the population in the northern part of the province has increased much more rapidly than the population in the central and southern portions. I have always admitted that fact, and in any proposals that were submitted by this side of the house with reference to redistribution that matter was taken into consideration. Now I should like to place on record the population of the different constituencies in accordance with the last proposal submitted by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull); I do not think I need weary the committee by putting on record the other proposals, except the last one submitted from this side. In one or two instances the figures I give may be a little inaccurate, because I think the hon. gentleman did make some slight changes in a few constituencies. I can assure my hon. friend, however, that any inaccuracies will not be intentional on my part. The figures according to the last Conservative proposal are as follows:

Assiniboia	40,946
Humboldt	45,443
Kindersley	39,632

Last Mountain is to be amalgamated with Yorkton, and I have no figures in that connection; formerly the population was 45,518.

Long Lake	42,146
Mackenzie	46,475
Maple Creek	42,428
Melfort	38,928
Moose Jaw	43,668
North Battleford	41,725
Prince Albert	44,658
Qu'Appelle	38,318
Regina	53,209
Rosetown	40,708
Saskatoon	46,535
South Battleford	44,658
Swift Current	46,447
Weyburn	44,710
Willow Bunch	44,558

Prior to this suggested change Yorkton had a population of 49,006, and the new constituency which I have listed under the name of Hague would have a population of 45,102. Perhaps I should say that some of these names have been changed, so hon. members may have a little difficulty in getting a correct picture. For example, Last Mountain and Yorkton combined are to be called Touchwood; Long Lake is Lakeside; North Battleford is Redberry; South Battleford is the Battlefords and Willow Bunch is Wood Mountain.

Mr. TURNBULL: The figures my hon. friend has quoted for the city of Saskatoon would be for the city of Saskatoon with six townships added. For the city of Saskatoon with nine townships added the figure will be 47,362.

Mr. TOTZKE: And that is taking off Hague?

Mr. TURNBULL: Yes, or Rosthern, as it is called now.

Mr. TOTZKE: I do not intend at this time to discuss the northern portion of the province of Saskatchewan, but in connection with the southern portion of that province I should like to direct the attention of the committee to what I think are some glaring instances of unfair redistribution. This is the portion with regard to which the Prime Minister said recently we had come to an agreement. I want to say that never with regard to at least one of these constituencies have I agreed to the proposals of the government. I want to show the alterations that have been made in these constituencies, and I believe I can show that those alterations are unnecessary.

In the southeast corner of the province we have the constituency of Assiniboia. According to the last census, under the present arrangement Assiniboia will have a population of 41,144. If hon. members will look at the map of Saskatchewan they will see that this is a very symmetrical, rectangular constituency; the north, south and west boundaries are almost straight lines. The east boundary has a few jogs in it, but those are correction lines in the townships. Hon. gentlemen opposite now propose that this constituency shall have a population of 40,946, and it seems to me that here they are not adhering to their policy of a proper redistribution of population. What have they done with that portion they are taking away? In the north corner they have taken off four townships and put them in the constituency of Qu'Appelle immediately to the north. Then they have taken a row of townships on the west side, a complete row extending the full length of the constituency, and put them into the constituency of Weyburn, although Weyburn did not particularly need it, because it has a population of 41,684. But what did they do to give it a little more population? In Assiniboia, instead of taking a straight line, they took four townships in the northeast corner and went up six miles, traversing three rows of townships, eighteen miles, and up another row of townships into Qu'Appelle, taking out these townships from the constituency of Qu'Appelle and putting them into Assiniboia. Let us see whether Qu'Appelle was too large in population and had to be reduced. Qu'Appelle, according to the last census, had a population of 35,938. It is a little small, and should be added to rather than taken from. But they took these places away and added more on the western end of Qu'Appelle in order to bring up the population a little, and we find as the final result of their manipulations here that Qu'Appelle has a population of 38,318. That is considerably below the unit, but perhaps the Prime Minister will say it has increased in population more rapidly than the constituency of Assiniboia. Let us see what happened.

Mr. BENNETT: Isn't the position simply this? You say that we should redistribute Saskatchewan in your way and we say we won't; we are not going to. Isn't that the story?

Mr. TOTZKE: No, I cannot agree to that. The redistribution in Saskatchewan, I say, should be done in a fair way, and there was no necessity for all this.

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is, we have done it.

Mr. TOTZKE: But I am trying to show—

Mr. BENNETT: And we are not going to undo it.

Mr. TOTZKE: Well, so far as that is concerned—

Mr. BENNETT: It is perfectly clear, and the leader of the opposition agreed that we had made the position clear. We agreed, as the hon. gentleman has said, on three things. We agreed that there should be a redistribution, and that the population had moved north; therefore the adjustment must take place in that way. We have gone into it and spent months at it and have arrived at a conclusion as to how it should be done. Now, the question is: Although we are the majority, are we to accept the will of the minority? We are not going to do so.

Mr. TOTZKE: I am quite satisfied that the Prime Minister is right when he says they are not going to do it, but I am sure that the right hon. gentleman will not say that that decision should close my mouth.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I did not suggest it.

Mr. TOTZKE: Well, I am stating my position.

Mr. BENNETT: You have talked three times and said the same thing.

Mr. TOTZKE: And I will talk three times more if I have to.

Mr. BENNETT: Very well. I am content to stay here another two weeks or two months to listen to it twenty times if necessary. You need not worry. I do not desire in the slightest to curb the hon. gentleman's loquacity or his explanatory powers. He may continue as long as he likes.

Mr. TOTZKE: The Prime Minister has no right to accuse me of loquacity; I have not done much talking in this house. Others have done more than I have.

Mr. BENNETT: That is true, except as to this.

Mr. TOTZKE: Well, I have a grievance and it is my duty to state the position as I see it. I represent the Saskatchewan members in this matter and it is my duty to point out the mistakes that have been made. The Prime Minister has spoken about a perfect agreement in the constituency south of Qu'Appelle. I say that we have not had a perfect agreement. There is one of the most glaring instances of unfair redistribution in the province. The population of Qu'Appelle was low; it is not up to the unit. I want to give the percentage increase. I have already given it but I want to refresh the memory of hon. gentlemen. The percentage of increase in the constituency of Qu'Appelle was 8.8, which, compared with the increase in the northern constituency of Melfort, is very low. It is much below the average in the province of Saskatchewan. But that is not the particular complaint I have with respect to this constituency. I have always said that there was not so much complaint about discrepancies in population, but in this particular instance they have changed the straight line on the south side of Qu'Appelle and made a regular staircase of it. Starting with the eastern part, they go over a distance of twenty-four miles, then up six miles and over eighteen miles, then up six miles again, then over thirty miles, and then up to within about ten miles of Qu'Appelle valley. The only apparent reason for this alteration is, in my opinion, to try to secure a safe seat for the member representing Qu'Appelle and to ensure his return to this house. Now, I have no desire to see the hon. member for Qu'Appelle kept out of this house. I like him very much; he is a very nice chap and a good member. But in spite of what they have done for the hon. gentleman I am sure he will be left at home next time.

I say this is one instance where I could not come to an agreement with hon. gentlemen in regard to the southern part of Saskatchewan. The constituency of Weyburn provides another example where the population was practically all right. But what have they done here? They have put another row of townships on the west side and taken off a few townships on the northwest corner. The constituency of Willow Bunch was too high in population and had to be cut down, and I have no particular complaint to make in that regard. Maple Creek had a population of 43,903 and the percentage of growth was below the average of the province; still, they had to make some alterations. In Maple Creek, instead of adding a little to the population, they have made it 42,428. Moose Jaw is another instance where I could not agree. It had a population, according to the last census, of 42,334 and they have brought it to 43,668. They have added five townships and taken off a row of townships on the west side. Nine townships have been taken off from the west side. Moose Jaw constituency has the third largest city in the province of Saskatchewan, a city with a population of 21,000. Therefore, under the principle adopted generally by the redistribution committee, it has a little larger population than some of the rural areas close to it. Moose Jaw now has a population, under the last proposal, of 43,668, and Willow Bunch has a population of 44,558. The next constituency, west of Moose Jaw, is Swift Current, which has a town of 5,000 people. Under this redistribution it is given a population of 46,447 as compared with Moose Jaw, 43,668.

Is it any wonder I said I could not agree to the redistribution in the southern part of Saskatchewan? There is no question in my mind that these manipulations were carried out not with a view to equalizing population but with a view to making or trying to make safer the seats of hon. members occupying them behind the government. If that is the intention why do not hon. gentlemen say so? Why should they try to justify manipulations of this sort on any other ground? Moreover, there is in Qu'Appelle a glaring instance that has developed lately, and that is, taking a certain number of sections of land out of Qu'Appelle and throwing them into Melville —just little sections, six I believe, with a population of perhaps 150 or 200. I believe the vote the last time was 11 to 77 or 79. It happened to be a Liberal vote because the Liberals had a pretty good majority. The excuse given for doing this is that it is more convenient for the people living in this poll to vote at Le Bret across the Qu'Appelle valley in the constituency of Melville. That may be so but I can give hundreds of instances where it would be more convenient for the people in one constituency to vote in a town in another constituency. If anyone will look at the map they will see how ridiculous it is. They start across the line of railways, then they go up across the line, come back again, up again and then back. There is no excuse for manipulation of that kind. It was bad enough before when its narrowest point was about ten miles wide. I know it will be said that that was done in 1924, but even so there is no particular justification for it. I am informed by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), who was on the redistribution committee at that time, that he consulted with the then leader of the Conservative party from Saskatchewan, in another house, and this was one of the changes he asked for. This change was given to him. They have now made a jig-saw puzzle out of it. I wish I had cut it out because it is almost equal to some of those shown last evening. I think I have shown that there was no justification for the changes made in the constituencies south of the South Saskatchewan river and the Qu'Appelle valley.

[Mr. Totzke.]

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I am in order but with great deference to yourself, I think I must say a few words. We like you in our province and we appreciate what you have done, but since you are interested in this matter and have taken an active part in discussing certain matters now before the committee, I think it would be only proper that you leave the chair and let some other hon. gentleman preside in your place.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is futile for me to add any further protests to those already made by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) in view of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said a few moments ago. He said: This is our plan and we are going to put it through. As has been suggested, I suppose that statement is based upon the fact that he has the majority.

I have represented the constituency of South Battleford in the province of Saskatchewan since the 1925 elections. For the information of the committee, I may say that this seat was created by the redistribution bill of 1924. It is proposed to eliminate this constituency by the redistribution bill now before us. If that is done, I suppose there will be one thing to my credit—I will have been the only member who has ever represented South Battleford in the federal house. Of course, that will be contingent upon the Prime Minister carrying out the threat he made a few moments ago.

I should like to direct attention to some of the glaring instances which have been referred to already during this debate. The constituency of South Battleford has a population of 45,119, and according to the figures given by the hon. member for Humboldt, there are probably only eight or nine constituencies in the province of Saskatchewan with a smaller population. I suppose there is some reason for the elimination of South Battleford, but I would like to know what it is. I can conjecture as to why the present government is so keen to eliminate this seat. I join with the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) in protesting against the amalgamation of the two Battlefords. In my opinion it was wholly unnecessary to abandon any of the existing constituencies in Saskatchewan and create new ones. It has been argued all through this debate that the population in the north was growing faster than the population in the centre and south of the province. With that statement I am in entire agreement. It will be found that the constituencies in the extreme north of the province average some 50,000 in population. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Humboldt and by the Prime Minister himself, these constituencies have increased their populations to a greater extent than any others. In view of the argument adduced that the population in the north is growing at a faster rate and is likely to continue to grow at a faster rate, I think four constituencies could have been created instead of the present three. This could have been done without disturbing the province as a whole to any great extent. I think if you were to take a group of individuals who were uninterested in redistribution and ask them what constituencies should be eliminated, they would answer: those with the smallest populations.

In spite of what the Prime Minister has said that this bill is going to go through, I rise to object to the joining of the two Battlefords. They do not belong to each other. Those who know the geography of the province of Saskatchewan know that the northern Saskatchewan river has been the natural boundary between these two constituencies ever since they were created. In the southern part of the province the Qu'Appelle valley is recognized as a natural boundary. This valley can be crossed at practically every hundred yards but when you get away from the city of Battleford; the North Saskatchewan river can be crossed only by ferry. There are very few bridges and the two sides of the river do not lend themselves to amalgamation.

I am more opposed now than I was at the beginning of this discussion to the present system of redistribution in the various provinces. I am in absolute agreement with my leader. I think the province of Saskatchewan is an example of the abuses which can be resorted to under the present system. In spite of all that has been said, I contend that abuses have resulted.

Much as been said about the type of population in the different constituencies. If you look at the northern portion of the proposed constituency of Kindersley you will see that the five rows of townships which were previously at the south end of South Battleford are settled by Russians, Germans and other people from continental Europe. This type of population predominates over those from the motherland and the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec. It will be noted that in the last election in this constituency there was an overwhelming majority in favour of the Liberal candidate. In fact, the Conservative candidate made the statement that if the five rows of townships were eliminated, a Tory could win in what would now be South Battleford. Therefore, when the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) tries to tell me that it was only a matter of redistributing the population, that does not go down very well. Right in this city immediately after the last election during the special session of parliament, a western member, when he congratulated me on winning the election, said: "You have won this one, but you will not win the next; we will get you in the redistribution." I hate to think I have been such a menace to the government, they are so desirous of eliminating me from this house.

The only consolation that I have is that I am just about twenty-four miles from the western boundary of Saskatchewan and it is impossible to redistribute Saskatchewan in such a way as to put me out of the province. I now find myself in the position, if this bill goes through, of being in what will be Kindersley constituency. According to the 1931 census the population of Kindersley was only 35,290. You will find some of them as low as:

Constituency—	Population
Rosetown	32,526
Yorkton	38,692
Moose Jaw	42,000

You can go through the whole of the constituencies in Saskatchewan and you will find probably four that at the present time have a larger population than that of South Battleford.

I notice that this afternoon while my right hon. leader was talking, the Prime Minister drew attention to the fact that he himself had at one time been defeated when he ran in 1896 for the constituency of Alberta. That took in the whole of what is now known as the province of Alberta and my right hon. leader pointed out to him that of course Calgary was in that constituency at the time. That is true. I do not remember Calgary in 1896, but I remember Calgary ten years later and even then it was only a cow town or a rather small city. He was defeated at that time probably because Calgary was a cow town. I would tell him to-night that if Calgary were again a cow town he would again be defeated there; his chances would not be one bit better than those of my right hon. leader were when he ran in North York.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) the unit of population for the constituencies in Saskatchewan were set at 43,861, and I would like the hon.

member for Regina, or the government or any member of it to tell me why they should eliminate South Battleford with a population of practically 46,000 when the unit is only 43,861. If this bill goes through I shall be so far moved into the centre of Kindersley that it will be impossible for me to suggest to the hon. member for Regina that he might take out a little portion at one point and put me back into South Battleford; he could not do it. I appreciate the difficulty in which he is now and the only suggestion I have to make to him is the one made before by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) and myself, namely, to return to the boundaries as they exist to-day and then by a mere redistribution of population of a few hundred here and a few hundred there we can retain every constituency that now exists and work no hardship even on the Conservative party.

This is truly a political gerrymander and until somebody proves to me it is other than I say it is, I still maintain and believe that this was done with no other intention than to make safe as many seats as possible for the Conservatives and to jeopardize every Liberal constituency they could. I absolutely agree with the hon. member for Humboldt that when the ballots are counted in the next election, they will not get eight Conservative members from my province; in fact I predict they will not get eight west of the great lakes.

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I have listened with considerable interest to the debate on the redistribution bill and as yet have taken no part in it, but I feel it is my duty to express my opinion regarding one or two matters. I have no grievance so far as my particular constituency is concerned, but before I sit down I want to make a suggestion with regard to the redistribution in Saskatchewan generally. Anyone looking at the map of that province will immediately realize how difficult it is to make an equal redistribution with regard to population. We have in that province twenty-one members, the same as we had formerly, but in studying the map one cannot help being struck by the fact that there are some natural boundaries which cannot or should not be overlooked in redistribution. We have such natural boundaries as the Saskatchewan river, which is navigable only at certain points by ferries and which should so far as possible be considered a natural boundary. Then we have the Qu'Appelle valley, which has always been and should be considered another natural boundary. In addition to that we have Long Lake, which divides the present constituency of Long Lake from that of Last Mountain, a lake about sixty or seventy miles in length and some three or four miles in width; that should be a natural boundary. In the redistribution map now before us I notice that the proposed constituency of Long Lake goes right around the borders on both sides of the lake. That seems to be a ridiculous proposition. That was the former situation, but it was changed ten years ago and in all fairness I think the proposed redistribution should be changed back again, so that the eastern boundary of Long Lake constituency will border on the lake called Long Lake.

I believe a sincere effort has been made to reach a satisfactory conclusion with regard to the redistribution in Saskatchewan. As I said before, I have no personal complaint because the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and I some time ago agreed with regard to the boundaries between our two constituencies, his riding lying immediately to the north of Assiniboia which I represent. In addition to that, the hon. member for Humboldt prepared a map, which was also agreeable to me, and his map added some population to my constituency to the west instead of to the north. Personally, it makes very little difference to me whether an addition is made one way or the other; I am satisfied with everything that will be a fair and equitable distribution of the whole province. I feel rather keenly the position in which some of my colleagues in Saskatchewan are placed in the redistribution which is now under discussion. I do not see that there is any necessity for eliminating one seat. That has meant now that the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) and the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) are in the one seat; one or other of them will be eliminated. Then we have the situation in Battleford which has been explained by the two members for that double constituency. Had it not been for the fact that some of my friends have been rather discriminated against in this redistribution, I should not have taken any part in this discussion. When it comes to making additions to any of the constituencies or changing the boundaries it must be remembered that in the western provinces the constituencies, especially in the rural districts, comprise very large areas, and we do not like the idea of having new territory added because we find it difficult now to keep in touch with our people and get acquainted with them even in several years when there is such a large territory to cover. For that reason we are averse to having additional territory added.

In the redistribution following the census of 1921 the unit of population was a little over 36,000, and in looking over the bulletin of the seventh census of Canada in 1931 we find that although 36,000 was the unit of population there were nine constituencies which had a population below 36,000. One was some 8,000 below the unit of 36,000, having a population of about 28,000. At the present time the unit of population in our province is approximately 44,000, and we have only one constituency with a population less than 22,500. Compare that with some of the seats in Ontario in regard to which we had a full discussion a few days ago. One seat in Ontario, practically a rural seat, with not more than one small-sized city, has a population of over 80,000, and another seat has a population below 20,000. Surely if 18,000 or 20,000 is sufficient for a constituency in Ontario there is not very much objection to one constituency in Saskatchewan having a population of between 31,000 and 32,000.

I realize the truth of what the Prime Minister said yesterday, that we cannot put through a redistribution measure that will conform exactly to the unit of population. He also said that it was not his desire unnecessarily to disturb existing boundaries. Therefore I suggest to the government along the lines of the suggestions that were made this afternoon and this evening, that they should leave the constituencies in the province of Saskatchewan practically as they are now. I do not think there is very much need of adjusting their boundaries. If we readjust the boundaries of constituencies it means that all our polls will have to be renumbered, entailing a great deal of inconvenience, and therefore so far as practicable I would suggest that the present constituencies be left as they are.

I want to give a few figures in regard to our province. There are nine constituencies at the present time with populations between 38,000 and 45,000, namely, Assiniboia, Maple Creek, Melville, Moose Jaw, Swift Current, Weyburn, Yorkton, Humboldt, and Mackenzie.

Then we have five constituencies with a population under 38,000, namely, Kindersley, Last Mountain, Long Lake, Qu'Appelle and Rosetown.

We have seven constituencies with a population of over 45,000—Melfort, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Regina, Saskatoon, South Battleford and Willow Bunch. It will be noticed that four of these seven with a population over 45,000 are urban seats or at least have a small city such as North Battleford and Prince Albert. The two larger constituencies, with a population of over 60,000, include the cities of Regina and Saskatoon, the two largest cities in our province.

I ask the government to consider whether it would not be practicable to leave the Saskatchewan constituencies as they are. Why disturb them when we have a more equitable distribution at the present time than the province of Ontario has even after these proposed readjustments? That is the only proposal I have to make, and I hope that the government will consider it.

All the constituencies in Saskatchewan except that of Long Lake have increased in population since 1921. I have given figures showing the population in 1921. The only constituency that appears to have lost population since that date and that might require some readjustment is Long Lake, but the difficulty there is the lake, which by all means should be left as the eastern boundary of that constituency. As I said before, a constituency with a population of 31,266 should not be considered too small when there are several constituencies in the other provinces with a population of 20,000 and less. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask the government seriously to consider whether it would not be advisable to leave our constituencies as they are.

Mr. THOMAS F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): I did not intend to take any part in this discussion until I got hold of this bill which we are supposed to put through for the redistribution, and when I looked through it I found that the constituency of Willow Bunch, which I have represented in this house for the last eight years, has entirely disappeared, gone by the board. The constituency of Willow Bunch is of great historical interest, and naturally since I have had the honour of representing it for the past eight years and was the first member for that constituency I hate to see it pass away. I do not know why it was changed at all. But I find that the clump of willows has grown into a wood, and the bunch has grown into a mountain, and now the constituency is called Wood Mountain.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Woodpecker.

Mr. DONNELLY: I am no longer the member for Willow Bunch if this bill goes through and I am the representative of that constituency in the next parliament. I am no longer a willow or a bunch; I am a wood mountain. I ask hon. members of the redistribution committee, why did they change the name? They know very well that the name Willow Bunch is of historical significance. For many years it was known as an old Royal Northwest Mounted Police headquarters. Hon. gentlemen also know that for one winter a band of Indians who had rebelled in the United States and escaped into the northwest wintered at Willow Bunch, and it became famous on that account. To my mind the only reason for changing the name and for making these other changes in the names of constituencies is that the government want to get rid of the returning officers. By changing the name they get rid of the returning officer. If they want to discharge the returning officer why do they not come out like men and discharge him? Why adopt this underhand way to get rid of him? Why don't they play the game? I am not asking for any quarter. I ask for none and I give none, but I say that if they want to play the game like real sports, real men, they will discharge the returning officers if they want to get rid of them, instead of adopting this underhand method of doing it.

As far as the redistribution affects my constituency, I am not concerned at all. First they took off one corner, and they found that that would not work; then they cut off another corner, and that would not work. I told them that the only thing to do with all that southern part of Saskatchewan was to give it to Montana until after the next election. That is the only way you will ever stop Liberalism from representing the southern part of Saskatchewan. Do not make any mistake about it, the southern part of Saskatchewan after the next election will be represented solidly by Liberals. The only way you can stop it is to give it to Montana; then there would be American representatives in the Canadian House of Commons. However, so far as the general redistribution of the province is concerned, to my way of thinking in view of the movement of population some rearrangements of boundaries have to be made in the different constituencies. We will admit that. Some districts have grown faster in population than others. Certain readjustments or rearrangements of boundaries are necessary.

There is also something else necessary. In the readjustment of these constituencies natural boundaries such as rivers and lakes should be considered. One thing further should in my opinion be given consideration: If we want to play the game, with twenty-one members from Saskatchewan at present in the House of Commons I say there is no necessity to redistribute a man out of public life. Why put two members now in the house in the same constituency? It is not necessary. It is done for one purpose only, namely to get rid of one of those members.

The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) spoke about the redistribution which took place in 1924. He referred to those seats lying north of the Qu'Appelle valley and north of the south branch of the Saskatchewan river, and tried to show that they were low in population. As a matter of fact, after the last redistribution they were not very low in population; their population was equal to that of other constituencies. For example, the population in the constituency of Melville was 36,000, and for all practical purposes 36,000 was the unit of population. The constituency of Last Mountain had a population of 34,000, Long Lake had 32,000 and Yorkton had 37,000. The other two, Kindersley and Rosetown, were low. But the three lying in the eastern part of the province, namely the constituencies of Melville, Yorkton and Last Mountain, nearly reached the unit. Despite that fact, however, that was the point where it was decided that three constituencies had to be made into two, or that one had to be cut out. In other words, one of those constituencies in the eastern part of the province had to be done away with. They were not the three lowest in population; the three lowest were on the western side of the province. It was decided that Melville, Last Mountain and Yorkton must be united into two. Why not unite the other three?

Mr. TURNBULL: Four had to be united into three, not three into two. Long Lake was mentioned with the others.

Mr. DONNELLY: Why not take the three lowest ones? Why not take Kindersley, Rosetown and Long Lake, the three lowest in population. Why take two constituencies with high populations, when they had the matter under consideration? The fact of the matter is that they had made up their minds that the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) or the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) must go. First a map was produced indicating that the former Minister of Agriculture must go. Then following some discussion and furore in the committee it was decided that he could remain, and either the hon. member for Yorkton or the hon. member for Last Mountain must go. The decision was made that they were to be put into one constituency. The same is true with regard to Kindersley. The hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) and the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) were put into one constituency, thereby eliminating the constituency of South Battleford. It is because of such actions as these that we speak of gerrymandering.

If the government wanted to play fair they could readjust the seats and leave the members now in the House of Commons in their places, so that those members might have at least a fighting chance for their political life. So far as I am concerned, outside of the change of name I have nothing to complain about in connection with my constituency. Whoever gets the Liberal nomination there at the next election will be elected; I am convinced of that.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy many minutes of the committee's time. I wish, however, to say a few words in regard to the situation as it concerns the Battleford constituencies. Hon. members of the committee will recall that the old town of Battleford was built many years ago on the south bank of the Saskatchewan river. That was before the days of railway building. The country around the town developed and was tributory to it. The town was the commercial centre. There was no settlement north of the river until the coming of the railway. When the Canadian Northern railway went through it opened up the north country, and as a result the town of North Battleford was established on the north bank of the river. That town became the commercial centre of the new territory opened up north of the river. At the last redistribution two constituencies were set up, South Battleford on the south bank of the river and North Battleford on the north bank, the river forming the natural boundary. That condition has been satisfactory. The proposal now is to take from North Battleford constituency a certain number of townships and add them to the South Battleford constituency. I cannot think that that was done with the object of gerrymandering a seat, because I have counted the votes at the last election, and I find that the Conservative majority in the piece of territory being taken from North Battleford and being put into South Battleford was only 153. I do not believe that 153 votes are going to determine how that seat will go in the next election. I venture to assert that whoever is elected in the the new Battlefords seat which is to be made, whether he be Conservative, Liberal, or C.C.F., will have a majority of more than 153 votes. He will have several times that many. I say therefore that the Conservative majority of 153 votes cannot be the determining factor. Why, then, do the government want to take territory from the North Battleford seat and place it in the seat across the river? The answer is obvious. Roughly speaking the population of North Battleford is 53,000, while the unit of population for the province is only 44,000. That is to say the population in the North Battleford seat as at present constituted is 9,000 too large. The proposal is to take some territory from that seat, and for equalization purposes to put in the seat across the river. In that piece of territory is the city of North Battleford. However the important consideration is this: Will the people in that territory be better represented in this parliament by one member sitting for all the territory north of the river, and representing 53,000 people, or by a member representing 43,000 north of the river and another member on the south side of the river representing 10,000 people north of the river and several times as many south of it? I think that is the important consideration, and I do not believe there is much doubt in the mind of any fair minded person as to which course those people would prefer, or as to which scheme would give them the best representation. If you take that territory from North Battleford, with its commercial centre, the city of North Battleford; if you lift it out of that constituency and put it into another you are dividing the interests of North Battleford and taking away a piece of territory in which they have a common interest. You are adding that territory to a constituency which in the past, rightly or wrongly, has conceived itself to have interests not identical with those of the North Battleford seat. If you add that territory to South Battleford here is the condition that will arise: The people north of the river will say, "Let us run a man from the north of the river; let us get our own man in." The people south of the river will say, "Those fellows north of the river are trying to elect a local man. Let us see that they do not do so. We will run a man from the south of the river." Since the portion of the constituency south of the river is several times larger than the other portion, the southern portion will prevail, and the people of that portion which is taken from North Battleford, the portion lying north of the river, will always feel that they are not properly represented, and that their representative has a greater interest in furthering the cause of the portion of the district south of the river than in furthering the cause of the portion to the north. They will always feel that they have a grievance, and they will not be satisfied to remain in that situation; they will always want to get back to their old seat.

I believe that should be the paramount consideration in this matter. I think that is more important than considering whether 153 votes should go to one side or the other, and I think it is even more important than considering whether the population in each constituency is exactly the same. It is important that the population of each constituency should be as nearly equal as possible, but it is more important that those who have a community of interest should be placed in one seat, with those who have another community of interest placed in a different constituency. That is more important than the mere counting of heads. I submit that consideration to my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Turnbull) and the government generally, because I believe that if they consider the matter in that light they will admit that there is some justification in the claim of the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) that this territory should be restored to him.

Mr. HARRY BUTCHER (Last Mountain): It will take me but a very few minutes to explain the situation in the constituency I have the honour to represent, Mr. Chairman. I cannot complain that several townships, with a majority of Conservatives, have been added to my constituency with the view of lessening the chances of the Liberal candidate in the future. I cannot complain that several townships preponderantly Liberal have been removed therefrom. I cannot complain that a large number of Liberals have been added to the constituency in order to limit the prospects of the Liberal candidate in an adjacent riding. I can only complain that sentence of death has been passed upon the constituency which I have the honour to represent. The execution is to take place at the next general election. The body is to be divided into three parts. One part is to be buried in the constituency of Melville, another in Yorkton and the third in Long Lake.

You have been advised already, Mr. Chairman, that the representation in the province of Saskatchewan will be the same after the next election as it has been during the last two parliaments. In the past we have had twenty-one members, and after this bill is adopted we will still be entitled to twenty-one members. We agree with hon. gentleman opposite that some sort of adjustment is necessary, because the population is not equalized as between the various constituencies. We were under the impression, however, that these adjustments might be accomplished by making alterations in boundaries, rather than by the elimination of some constituencies and the creation of others. Some of us supposed that because we were to have the same number of members it would not be necessary to make any change at all in the map, that we might continue with the constituencies we had in the past. We were informed, however, that there were objections to that course of procedure. One objection was that some of the constituencies were too low in population while others were too high.

I found myself very much in accord with some of the principles enunciated by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) during the course of his remarks a few days ago. He said that a redistribution should be based upon the population as disclosed by the census; that the unit in urban constituencies should be greater than in rural constituencies, and that no greater disturbance should be made with regard to existing constituencies than was absolutely necessary. Bearing in mind these principles I took the trouble to analyze the results of the last redistribution as well as the results of the present measure. I find that after 1924 we had seven constituencies with populations of less than 41,000, while under the present measure we will have six. After 1924 we had seven constituencies with populations between 41,000 and 45,000; after this measure passes we will have eight. After 1924 we had seven constituencies with populations of more than 45,000; we are still to have seven. With regard to the central constituencies referred to by the hon. member for Regina, those of Long Lake, Melville, Last Mountain, Rosetown and Kindersley, there is no doubt that the population was very low indeed, but I am distinctly of the opinion that the map first presented by the hon. member for Humboldt rectified those irregularities. I found that the unit of population in Saskatchewan was 43,861 and that Regina was left with 56,186, Saskatoon with 52,823 and Kindersley with 39,775, while the eighteen other constituencies ranged between 40,601 and 44,494. It did seem to me that it was unnecessary to eliminate any constituency or create any new ones; for that reason I greatly deplore the passing of the constituency of Last Mountain, and I believe my feeling in that regard will be shared by my constituents.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Everything seemed to be running along so smoothly this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, after my right hon. leader had spoken, that I thought I was going to get out of talking again in connection with this redistribution bill. This is the fourth day we have been engaged on the matter this week, and during that time I spoke for twenty minutes on Monday, in a very moderate way—at least for me—and everyone wondered just why I was pedalling so lightly. There were reasons for that, which I indicated at the time. I felt quite appreciative of what had been done with respect to my own riding, but I indicated that I could not remain in that condition of quiescence forever while my fellow members were suffering as I had suffered, and some of them perhaps to an even greater extent. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat is one of the most cruelly used members in this house under this present redistribution bill.

Before I go further, Mr. Chairman, I suppose I may assume that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) is leading the house at present, and I should like to know if I understood the Prime Minister correctly in the remarks he made just before he left. In response to something said by the hon. member for Humboldt I understood the Prime Minister to say that the bill had been prepared and it was going through in its present form. I thought the Prime Minister meant that the constituencies we had disposed of would be put through, and that the right hon. gentleman did not want us harking back to Qu'Appelle and those other constituencies that have been practically dealt with, but that our attention should be devoted to the problems raised by the right hon. leader of the opposition this afternoon, that is, the questions of Prince Albert and North Battleford. I also understood the Prime Minister to indicate that the government was still open to conviction in regard to those two constituencies. I wonder if that is the position.

Mr. RHODES: I think the words of the Prime Minister must speak for themselves, but my recollection of them is not that of the hon. member for Melville. I did not understand him to say that the bill had to go through as it stood; what I did understand him to say was that if it were a question as to the opposition having their bill or the government having its bill it would be the government's bill

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, of course we were told that several times yesterday; we were given to understand that where there was a conflict between us that would be the situation. I will come to that later, but it will alter the tenor of my remarks very much whether I am beating the air or speaking for the purpose of trying to induce the government to yield to fair representation as they have done in regard to other bills. I do not see why this bill should be any different from any other. The government have acted wisely in not resorting to closure. I do not feel like complaining about the Prime Minister's absence, because he has been here almost constantly, and he cannot do that without some hardship and inconvenience. I therefore appreciate his presence when he is here. Unfortunately however, unless we know that we are talking to some purpose, we are merely beating the air, and if we do beat the air we will use a different kind of air than if we knew we were going to get somewhere as the result of our invocation.

I am not going to take the Prime Minister's statement that the matter is closed; I do not see how he could make such a statement after my right hon. leader's presentation. My right hon. leader presented the case unanswerably on behalf of Prince Albert and Battleford, and if the government wants to fight it could not choose any better ground for the purpose from our standpoint than the claim of Prince Albert and Battleford. "We don't want to fight, but by jingo if we do," and so on. We would rather not if it could be avoided.

I have a crow or two to pick before discussing the matter of redistribution, and I was almost going to include, for comment here, the remarks of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull). I will not do so however. That hon. gentleman intimated that I was only pretending when I presented a map to the late Senator Willoughby. Well, we will wait and see what the Tories will do when we are similarly situated. If it ever happens that we have no members in a province—and it might happen, because it has—and the Tories have the redistributing of constituencies, we shall see what advances they will make to give us representation on the committee, and we can then compare it with what we did. But in justice to everyone in this parliament I think I should refer to the statement made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), who I am sorry is not present. When I was discussing this same matter of referring the map of 1924 to the late Senator Willoughby I wondered whether my statement was accepted as accurate. I said I hoped it was, but that if there had been a tribunal to refer the matter to I could have wired those gentlemen in the west who knew something about it, such as Fred Johnston and John Millar; and the hon. member for Lincoln interjected. "And Senator Willoughy?" That appears in Hansard; that was what he said—well, I should not say that was what he said, because the hon. gentleman's remark was one of these unintelligible mutterings that I could not catch sufficiently well. My answer was:

I will not wait to ask my hon. friend to repeat what he said.

One would almost think I did know what he said, but I did not. I was anxious to get on with my speech and though many people might interpret the answer I gave the hon. gentleman to mean that I had heard what he said, as a matter of fact I had not. If however what he said was that I should wire to Senator Willoughby—and it is reported in Hansard—then there is one thing that the hon. member for Lincoln has indicated, and that is the kind of two-legged cattle they raise in Lincoln county. And if he did wire in the spirit in which he made that remark, he would get no response. So much for that gentleman. I think it is most unfortunate that not only the hon. member for Lincoln but many other gentlemen with whom I have had communication have discredited the late Senator Willoughby in order to discredit my evidence. That is going pretty far in politics, further than I care to go, and I do not believe that there is one man who will approve of that sort of thing apart from the man who made the remark—well, yes, there are two or three others because they have engaged in the same sort of thing.

Now I will come to the remarks of the Prime Minister yesterday. He made certain supposedly axiomatic statements, which have already been referred to by my right hon. leader, and indicated that under such circumstances there was only one thing and that was for the government's view to prevail. Let me quote what he said:

Undoubtedly where two courses were open our friends chose the course that was more helpful to them. . . . Is it not fair to say that hon. gentlemen opposite must recognize that fact, and to recognize the further fact that when a choice has to be made in one or two given ways you must expect that choice to be made in the way that will be most advantageous to the party in power?

Carry that to its logical conclusion and the government can decide everything that way. The leader of the government does not say whether the dispute is about a major or a minor fact or matter; if there is a difference, whether great or small—because he makes no distinction—then obviously it must be determined in favour of the party in power. That is gerrymandering, no matter how the Prime Minister glosses it over with nice phrases. It was a statement of policy on the part of the government; they were out to gerrymander. You can clothe it in nice language if you want to, but that is what it meant. And that is what they are doing, or trying to do. Later on the Prime Minister made a great deal about the fact that everyone on this side admitted that the boundaries of the northern constituencies should be readjusted—that Prince Albert was admitted to have a wrong boundary. Well, the very fact that we are engaged in redistribution is an admission of a certain growth beyond the old boundaries. The old boundaries are not essential nor inherently wrong, they are not wrong because of anyone's fault, but simply because the country has outgrown them. The leader of the government either intentionally or unintentionally tried to leave the impression that we had put our foot in it because we had admitted that the boundaries needed changing. Did you ever hear of such claptrap? That is what I call bunk, and it is my business to debunk the bunker, if I can.

I do not think there is anything else worth while bothering about in this statement of the Prime Minister's; he is just preaching what he practises, the doctrine of gerrymandering in its most glaring form. The pills are sugar coated so that they may go down slick and easy without causing the patient to make a wry face over them.

Now may I devote a moment's attention to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), who was very ably dealt with by my leader. It will not take very long for me to dispose of him. It is an open secret that the Minister of Agriculture does not like my right hon. leader up there. Like Charlie McIntosh of Kinistino fame he wants to be cock of the north in that northland. Charlie is not looked upon as cock of the north now but possibly the Minister of Agriculture will indulge that dream a little while longer without molestation. I would not have referred to the minister's remarks only he made such an insidious suggestion. I do not know whether he intended it in that way but he spoke about the Germans as though they were something undesirable. He said that my right hon. leader got his majority with the German vote.

Mr. TURNBULL: There was not a single word said by the minister which could be considered objectionable to Germans or anyone else.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am saying that all qualified people should be given every opportunity to exercise their franchise. Have they not been promised all the rights of citizenship? Why then talk about them being Germans? The minister tried to make out that because they are Germans they should have separate representation. Could anything more unkind be said? He was going to segregate them, going to put them in a sort of isolation camp.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Like the Indians.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They will have them on reserves next. That shows how little he knows about the non-English settlers in the west. They want to be Canadians in the truest and broadest sense of the word; they do not want special representation or special segregation or special blather such as that handed out by the minister. This is especially true after what took place during the by-election when the minister's secretary was running against my right hon. friend. The minister spoke about the French, the Ukrainians and the Scandinavians; how their votes in the north seemed to be nullified by those of the Germans in the south. Are they going to give special representation to them all? Is that the reason for these little pocket boroughs? If the Germans are to have separate and independent representation, these others are entitled to the same thing. See what such nonsense leads to? Yet this is the sort of stuff indulged in by the Minister of Agriculture. He is a gentleman of parts, he is an educationist, he has lived in the scholastic world nearly all his life and he knows what is what. He is acquainted with the amenities of life; he is a university graduate. Yet, here he is. He must surely be hard put to it when he has to indulge in that kind of talk. If he is trying to cultivate the Mennonites with that kind of talk he does not know them at all. He speaks about the others living peacefully together, but do not the Mennonites live peacefully together? Is there a more peaceful and God fearing people in the world? They are the resisting ones who do not want to fight and some people think that is carrying peace to the extreme. Yet he is going to segregate them for representation purposes.

There was a little different tune played in the by-election of 1926. We all recall when our right hon. leader was defeated in North York. He was without a seat and, worse than that, we were without our regular house leader. The members of the Liberal party felt like a football team without a captain. It is true he was here for consultation purposes but he was not in the house. And we wanted him in the house. Eventually an opportunity was given by the good people of Prince Albert through the medium of Charlie McDonald, then the member for Prince Albert. He said that he would vacate his seat, and the present leader of the opposition ran in that constituency. There was great mortification on the part of the Tories down here. The papers and the air were blue with explanations about the big majority of 5,300 for Mackenzie King. How was that explained away? It was said that this majority came from the non-English, the Eskimos, the bohunks, the Austrians, and all the other things they were said to be. That went all over the country and I think that balderdash added about 1,000 to the majority. That stuff was printed in the eastern press, it was copied by the western press and proved to be just meat and votes for the Liberal side. That was possibly one of the reasons why the majority was possibly about a thousand more than normal. But it was still a great majority. The following is from the Toronto Daily Star:

> Prince Albert, where the Prime Minister was elected, is made to figure in opposition prints as a place where "the voters' list reads like the pay-roll of the tower of Babel"; a constituency "which contains about the smallest percentage of native-born or British-born electors of any riding in the whole Dominion of Canada."

They then proceed to show that that was a fictitious fable or, in other words, a lie and give figures in proof. The Toronto Saturday Night, true to its upbringing, had this to say:

> Captain Burgess had a splendid record as an aviator in the great war which did not count for much with an electorate largely alien in origin.

As long as it is not Sunday night that says that, I suppose we should not worry.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Charlesworth's paper.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Border Cities Star were good enough to say this:

> This thrust at the west is a typically Toronto Tory utterance.

The Toronto Telegram, being true to its type, had this to say:

> The voters' list at Prince Albert reads like the pay-roll of the tower of Babel.

They then went on to say that the constituency of Prince Albert contains about the smallest percentage of native-born or British-born electors of any riding in the whole Dominion of Canada. There are more such utterances but I do not think I will tire the committee by repeating them. The whole Tory press of the country was lousy with that stuff, so is it any wonder the majority was so large? The majority was jacked up by means of that kind, so naturally it dropped somewhat quickly.

I regret the necessity of making these remarks with regard to the Minister of Agriculture. I have not had occasion to refer to him critically for some time. I recall very vividly his first speech. I have forgotten and forgiven what he said regarding myself because I am quite sure it hurt him far more than it did me. But it gave hon. friends opposite some heart for about ten minutes. He referred at that time to my right hon. leader as being an "outcast". We will just let that go, seeing where it came from, and the apparent urgency to say something. There are very few people who have been in public life as long as my right hon. leader who have not had to find another seat at one time or another. As Sir John Macdonald used to say: It is the best apple tree that has the most sticks and stones under it. The man who is doing things has a lot of fellows at his heels during election time who would like to get rid of him. Very often they are able to get rid of him. The leader of this government was defeated in Calgary by Joe Shaw, but he was not then the leader of his party. Joe Shaw was one of the C.C.F'ers or whatever they were called at that time. There is no disgrace in that, so why make such an ado about the defeat of my right hon. leader under the circumstances recited this afternoon?

With regard to the bill as it affects Prince Albert—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am glad I am giving hon. gentlemen a little entertainment. They have been keeping very quiet and not saying very much because they knew I was giving them the facts. As regards Prince Albert, that constituency, as suggested by my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) this afternoon, is established on Sir Robert Borden's base line across the province from the Manitoba to the Alberta boundary, laid down in 1914 and confirmed by the Liberal government's redistribution committee in 1924, ten years afterwards, practically without any deviation. I think there is one place where it is five or six miles wider; I am not sure, but outside that, over the whole width of the province, 400 miles, it runs exactly along the line established by Sir Robert Borden and confirmed by Richard Bedford Bennett as a member of the redistribution committee of that day. Therefore we had these two great men, both prime ministers of this country, establishing that line on which we stand to-day. What better foundation could we have? What better base line from which to operate a campaign of education, if you like to call it such, towards this government, inducement, invocation, pleading for the cause of right, for justice to be accorded not only to the constituency of Prince Albert but to my right hon. leader?

I want the committee to understand that so far as I am concerned I am in this fight until justice is given. I do not know how long that will be and I am hopeful that we did not get the real meaning of the Prime Minister this afternoon; that the meaning of his words was not what the tone of them implied and that he is still open to conviction. I have far more faith in the Prime Minister's sense of justice than some people believe I have. If it were not for the hampering influences that are around him, he would have this afternoon yielded a point and a good big one. But of course the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) would have to be turned down and the whole map partly spoiled. I may say in the last analysis, as has been said two or three times to-night, it will not make very much difference in the first election how you jiggle up these seats, not a Tory will get a look-in anyhow at the next election. By chance we may have a number of other parties like the Equity Leagues and the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation and others of like nature; if they rush in and compete at all points, a number of Conservatives may get elected. That happened at the last election, and while not a single one of those special new groups were elected in Saskatchewan in 1930, two or three additional Tories were slipped in. That is liable to happen again, and that is why I have considered, since the C.C.F. have cropped up, that they or rather their leaders are the left wingers and allies of the Conservative party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, they are their allies too; without them the Tories would not get forty seats in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Men have been killed before this for saying less than that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Conservative party has been pretty nearly down to that before.

The constituency map of Prince Albert was first added to by two ranges on the east side thereof. The government admitted, everybody admitted that the three northern constituencies should be made smaller. The government, as its first step, proceeds to make Prince Albert smaller by adding to it. By making it wider, they were given an excuse to pull the southern boundary up northwards as was indicated by my right hon. leader this afternoon. But how did they go about correcting the others? Let us examine that first, that is, Melfort and Battleford. How did they go about correcting the size of those two? Not by raising the southern boundary line the way they did so generously with Prince Albert, but they reduced Melfort and Battleford by running up a companion seat alongside, making it long and narrow; they ran up alongside Melfort the constituency of Mackenzie, a great big frontier country and gave it a greater population—I am subject to correction now—than the university city of Saskatoon. I think I am right; if it is not greater, it is in the same even thousands, 46,000; it is so close that it is not worth while making a distinction between them and one is a frontier country covering hundreds of miles of frontier while the other is the university seat of Saskatchewan. That is "rep by pop" with a vengeance! Nevertheless it served the purpose in reducing Melfort by taking a corridor along the east side, running it away up to the north pole and then taking another part off the west side of two ranges of Melfort and adding it to Prince Albert. First they took a good, substantial piece off the east side. In Battleford they did much the same thing; they took a great big chunk off it and ran it somewhere into the aurora borealis; I do not know whether it went the full distance or not. But the fact remains that what were formerly three large seats running into the hinterland are now five seats running into the hinterland. If that is the case—and it is—why did they adopt a different method with regard to Prince Albert? They broadened it in order to make an excuse for shortening it and then they say that they are not gerrymandering. They are about the crudest and coarsest bunch of gerrymanders that I ever ran across. They do not know how to do this without giving themselves away, exposing themselves to the gaze of everybody as they have done this afternoon; there has been nothing so rank as the exposure made this afternoon when it was discovered that the Liberal base was right on top of that established in 1914 by Sir Robert Borden right across the province, and that affects Battleford exactly the same way. Listen to my hon. friends opposite now! They are not cackling much. Pullets usually do a lot of cackling over their first egg. But there is no first egg over there; they are not laying at all; they are just quiet.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) knows quite well that my right hon. leader has a good case in regard to Prince Albert. If my right hon. leader suggested that a population of 45,000 would be quite reasonable for Prince Albert seeing that it contained a thriving city and we did not complain much about Melfort having only 36,000, and maybe less if the figures were checked up, surely we cannot be accused of being very exacting about some of these things. For instance, take Qu'Appelle. My good friend from that constituency knows what the situation is in regard to it. I have not said a word about it and I do not intend to say much; it is quite good enough for me. The 500 or so votes he has slipped over we can more than make up for by holding up the map.

But as regards Prince Albert, this is one of the most shameful, disgraceful treatments I have ever heard of by one leader towards another of equal status. I wonder for which of these deeds my right hon. friend is going to enter court? Is it an earldom or a dukedom or a marquisate or some of the other high positions of state that are at the disposal of His Majesty that my right hon. friend is to get for ruthlessly putting his heel on his political adversary? Is it for that that he is going to be so honoured in London? I trow not. Then what is it for? If he is to be an earl, why cannot he act like an earl? Why can he not treat his adversary like a man? We will want to know these things. I am not making these statements because my right hon. friend is out of the chamber at present. Let my hon. friends not think that. If he were in his seat, I would say quite a little bit more, as I have on other occasions. I do not get any answer about all these dukedoms and earldoms and what not. If that is the way they act now before they get them, what will they do afterwards? What will that sound like throughout this country, with people niggering along with the heels out of their stockings and the elbows out of their underwear, and then all this regalia and fine feathers. Somebody said behind me that he thought it would be Lord Gerrymander. I do not know how that would sound, but I think it would be quite appropriate if he insists on this bill going through.

We have always felt that we were on safe ground when we followed in the footsteps of Sir Robert Borden in redistribution matters. When Sir Robert put through the redistribution bill of 1914 the people of the west never knew it was going through; we never knew such a thing existed. Compare that with conditions of to-day. Look at this bill and the admissions it makes on the part of the government, the admission that they have their backs to the wall and that their only hope of rescuing enough of themselves for seed purposes is to get seats by stealth. I could go a whole lot further. I do not want to, but if the mild and gentle touch of last Monday will not have any effect we shall have to try the mailed fist; that is all. I had to stand the reproaches of some of my best friends on this side of the house because I was too gentle with the government last Monday and too complimentary to the Prime Minister. I do not mean that complaint to be made to-night. What is the use of casting one's pearls all over creation if they are going to be thrown back in one's face?

Prince Albert is a characteristically Liberal constituency, but what is not generally understood is that in Prince Albert there is a nucleus of the old Kildonan settlers who came out with Lord Selkirk away back in 1810 and 1812. We have all read that tragic story. I forget who was the captain of the vessel. It was not the captain of the Bright Fan. He got through better than the Bright Fan. He came through to Hudson bay, and the intention was to winter at Port Nelson. He was in a hurry to get back for fear of an early winter and he landed the settlers at Fort Churchill. The settlers had scurvy, and the guard that was there would not let them into the regular camp and they had to dig holes in the ground and live in those dugouts all one winter until spring, and over half of them died. Then in the spring they left and finally got to lake Winnipeg and on to the Red river, and to Kildonan, very much emaciated, and over half of them had died; children had been born in the meantime some of whom had also died. There is a wing of these early Kildonan settlers in Prince Albert to-day to whom a large stone monument has been erected. That stands as a nucleus of pioneering spirit in Prince Albert, and not so called bohunks and Eskimos and other picturesque figures that were represented as largely peopling that northern land. No wonder the Minister of Agriculture wants to hand out a little palaver to set himself right with the citizens of that north country. This is a bold and barefaced piece of fancy gerrymandering, without mercy and without shame on the part of the perpetrators. Look at them having to take all that. Would not that kill you? There is not much to them if they would take it without cause. They are either guilty or no good or both.

A word about North Battleford. I happen to know something about that town, and I know something about the old town too. My team drew supplies in 1885 from Qu'Appelle to Prince Albert and later on to Battleford during the rebellion. The old capital was on the south side of the river on a beautiful flat, and that is where the seat of government was for a few years before it was moved to Regina in 1883. Both are historic places, as indicated by the hon. member for Weyburn. When the first railway came it did not go through old Battleford, and there was great rivalry between North and South Battleford, and it was thought advisable to keep the two towns in separate constituencies for peace purposes. Later on they were joined provincially. I do not know why; I do not think it made any improvement. I want to point out that the assumption of the leader of the government is quite wrong when he says that provincial boundaries in Saskatchewan are tried to be followed in federal redistributions. We never thought of provincial boundaries of constituencies being followed when establishing federal ridings in western Canada. Neither provincial nor municipal boundaries were ever thought of for one minute in connection with the establishment of federal boundaries. Ever since there was a federal South Battleford and North Battleford they have been distinct and separate, and the right hon. the Prime Minister was himself on the redistribution committee that recommended that that should be so. North Battleford as an entity is the work of his own hand, and so is the Prince Albert southern boundary. The boundary lines of those two constituencies are the work of his own hand, and now he wants to deny his own child, his own progeny, his own product. I do not know where he is going to get a foster parent for it, but I think some of us will have to take up the cudgels for the child.

Mr. F. W. TURNBULL (Regina): Mr. Chairman, if there was any part of the redistribution map of Saswatchewan that could be said to be rank or anything gross or anything that was wrong it would be the east and west boundary through the constituencies of Last Mountain, Melville and Yorkton, which was granted to the hon. member who has just sat down as a result of the sympathy plea he put up through the committee and through all the press of Canada. In the face of the change that was made to suit him personally in answer to that plea of sympathy, he has the ingratitude to stand here in the house and declare this to be a redistribution without mercy and without shame. If there was any possibility of hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house talking themselves out of anything they now have it is the kind of talk that we have had in the house this afternoon and evening, so far as I am concerned. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister held out the olive branch to the other side of the house this afternoon when he proposed a compromise for the constituency of Prince Albert that in all fairness and in all justice should have been accepted. It was a compromise that their own member on the committee declared was a fair compromise but it was repudiated upon his return to his own party, and the proposition was refused.

Mr. TOTZKE: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. TURNBULL: I did not interrupt my hon. friend.

Mr. TOTZKE: It is a matter of setting the hon. member right. I do not know what the compromise was.

Mr. TURNBULL: At one time in the discussion, as the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) knows, a line was drawn across the map in my office, which line is still there and speaks for itself. That line represented a tentative agreement with regard to Prince Albert. My hon. friend says that it was at that time arranged that some 4,800 of a population added to the east side of Prince Albert should be removed, as well as the acceptance of that boundary. The line which was drawn on the map went right across the territory which he said was to be removed.

Mr. TOTZKE: Does my hon. friend say I drew the line?

Mr. TURNBULL: It was either put there by you in my presence or by me in your presence.

Mr. TOTZKE: I did not draw it, and I never made that agreement at any time.

Mr. TURNBULL: That offer was then made in writing, and my hon. friend will not deny that he received a letter with the offer in it.

Mr. TOTZKE: I read it to-day in committee.

Mr. TURNBULL: My hon. friend says that was part of a proposed general settlement. True, that is on his part. On my part it was an offer made without conditions, without concessions, standing by itself which could have been accepted by the Liberal side of the house and left the rest of the case for Saskatchewan wide open. In fact in the same letter I asked my hon. friend to join with me in defining the differences which would now remain between us with respect to the province, so as to narrow the field of discussion and hasten prorogation. My hon. friend refused to do it. He said, "You will either settle the whole of the map, or we will settle none of it."

Mr. TOTZKE: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member does not wish to be unfair. It is true I did not reply by letter, but he will admit that we discussed the matter afterwards.

Mr. TURNBULL: My hon. friend replied by telephone and refused it. There is no dispute between us on that point. Why interrupt?

Mr. TOTZKE: I refused the Prince Albert one.

Mr. TURNBULL: He replied about Prince Albert. There is no doubt about that point; he refused it.

Mr. TOTZKE: Absolutely.

Mr. TURNBULL: Absolutely, and at stages of the discussion he said I will either have to agree with him on the whole map or we would leave the whole matter open for discussion.

Mr. TOTZKE: That is not true.

Mr. TURNBULL: He said it again in the house to-night.

Mr. TOTZKE: I did not say—

Mr. TURNBULL: I have only forty minutes to speak. I did not interrupt my hon. friend, and I hope he will not interrupt me. Whether he said it or not, that has been the attitude of my hon. friend for two months—that and nothing else. I was presented with a map in the earlier stages of negotiations. I was told if I would accept their map they would concede some changes in the boundary line here and there. That was the attitude from the beginning. This afternoon, in spite of the refusal, my right hon. leader offered to restore the line which had been discussed by the hon. member for Humboldt and myself, if that would settle the trouble in Prince-Albert. I hope my hon. friends opposite are not going to talk themselves out of that concession, before they are through. It has been stated that the southern boundary line of the constituency of Prince Albert is the same southern boundary line that was established twenty years ago by Sir Robert Borden. It is the first time in my life I have ever heard that a boundary established twenty years ago was like the law of the Medes and Persians and could not be changed when population changed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not the point.

Mr. TURNBULL: There was not any point. The constituency of Prince Albert as established in 1924 was very far from the constituency of Prince Albert as it existed in 1914.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. TURNBULL: The constituency of Prince Albert as it existed in 1914 went from the third meridian to the eastern boundary of Saskatchewan. It included all the territory now in the constituency of Melfort. The southern boundary line of the constituency was not the line established by Sir Robert Borden, so far as the west side of the constituency was concerned. The north Saskatchewan river was the southern boundary. The boundary north of township forty-one was the boundary from the east boundary of the province of Saskatchewan to range 7 west of the third meridian, and from there the boundary was the north Saskatchewan river to the western boundary of the province of Saskatchewan. Prince Albert constituency was delimited in 1924, as hon. members will find by reading the schedule in the act passed in that year, being chapter 63 of the statutes. They will find that practically a new constituency was established. The whole constituency of Melfort was cut out of Prince Albert, and there were taken into Prince Albert seven ranges from the constituency of North Battleford. Of course there were changes in population there, and when an hon. member in this house states that there was no change in the constituency of Prince Albert in 1924—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No one has said that.

Mr. TURNBULL: Anyone who says that is departing from the fact. Here is why hon. members opposite wish to leave the whole map open—we had an exhibition to-night when the hon. member for Humboldt criticized the plan south of the south Saskatchewan and Qu'Appelle rivers. Member after member sitting behind him repudiated his stand. Member after member got up and stated that he was satisfied with his constituency south of the river, and pleased with the fairness with which he had been treated. Not one member from that part of the country said there was anything wrong with the redistribution south of the river, and they repudiated completely the stand taken by the hon. member for Humboldt. He gets up and complains about the boundary line between Qu'Appelle and Assiniboia which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie) states was arranged satisfactorily between him and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley). The hon. member for Humboldt has said that we were guilty of a deliberate attempt to gerrymander, to which the hon. member for Assiniboia was a party. He has said that there has been a deliberate attempt to give the hon. member for Qu'Appelle 500 Tory votes—

Mr. TOTZKE: Does that make it any better?

Mr. TURNBULL: The hon. member for Assiniboia states that he is satisfied.

Mr. TOTZKE: That does not make it any better.

Mr. TURNBULL: He complains about the size of the constituency of Swift Current. It is within a population of 701 of the very size he made it on his own map. There is all this fuss in a constituency of 46,000 people because there is a difference of 700 in the population. That is one of the great things wrong with this map, so far as the southern part of Saskatchewan is concerned. I had drawn a map to remove some of the population by extending Kindersley south of the south Saskatchewan river, and the hon. member for Humboldt went to room 429, protesting loud and long because I had disregarded the natural boundaries by going across the south Saskatchewan river.

Mr. TOTZKE: Did you make the change at my request?

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. VALLANCE: He does not have to sit down.

Mr. TURNBULL: In the same committee room the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) stood and told everyone in it that if the constituency of Melville was readjusted he would withdraw his opposition.

Mr. VALLANCE: I beg your pardon; I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. TURNBULL: I leave it to the press or to any member of the committee. That is a sample of his good faith.

Mr. VALLANCE: I rise to a question of privilege, and it is this: The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) has accused me of making a statement I did not make. If he will allow me to state what I did say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. VALLANCE: I will not sit down.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are very polite over there.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Chairman, what I did say in the committee was that if the seat of the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) was reinstated, so far as South Battleford was concerned I would withdraw my objection. That is what I said, and I stood by it—until the bill came into the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. TURNBULL: I do not need to establish my case any better than it has been established right now by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance). What took place to-night is a test of the good faith of the hon. member to whom I am referring. It is a plan which was arranged from the start, namely that they would try to make political capital out of redistribution through accusations of gerrymandering. They knew the minute the map was presented they never intended to take it.

Mr. VALLANCE: Why did you abolish the South Battleford seat, with a population of 45,000?

Mr. TURNBULL: The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) told why it was abolished. The hon. member for South Battleford did not observe the truce with regard to his own seat. He has said that in regard to his own seat there has been gerrymandering, but the hon. member for Weyburn agreed with me that it was not for that purpose at all.

Mr. VALLANCE: He was dealing with the Battlefords.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Anderson, Toronto-High Park): I must ask hon. members to observe the ordinary rules of debate.

Mr. TURNBULL: My hon. friend from Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) has only one complaint to make with regard to his riding, and that is that the historic name of Willow Bunch has been taken away and the much older and more historic name of Wood Mountain substituted therefor.

Mr. DONNELLY: It is not as old.

Mr. TURNBULL: Wood Mountain was a mounted police post for many years. Many people who travel through that part of the country have never heard of the Willow Bunch trail, but they have heard of the old Wood Mountain trail right down to the Hudson Bay post.

Mr. DONNELLY: If you are just as wrong in everything as you are in that you are away off.

Mr. TURNBULL: Several suggestions have been made during the course of the afternoon with regard to this matter of redistribution. One was that we should leave it alone, that we should accept what the Liberal party did in 1924. Any person caught with stolen goods can make that suggestion and say, "Leave it with us; do not take it away. We got it in 1924, so let us continue to have it." That is the proposition, in spite of the fact that it is admitted on all sides that there must be a redistribution in Saskatchewan because of the fact that the population in the north has increased by from 30 per cent to 71 per cent, while the population in the centre of the province has decreased.

Another suggestion that has cropped up from time to time during the negotiations, and in the course of the debate in this house since it began, is that we should let the Liberals do it, that we should take their map. They will alter a line here and there for us, but they are to do the work of redistribution. Hon. gentlemen forget that while they have been in office in Saskatchewan for twenty-five years, and were in power in this house the last time redistribution had to be dealt with, they are not always in power.

An hon. MEMBER: Wait till we get back.

Mr. TURNBULL: The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) once told me that I spoke in this house too much for a young member. I would suggest to him that he speaks in this house too much for an old member.

Mr. SANDERSON: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I never said a word, and I want my hon. friend to take that back.

Mr. TURNBULL: If that is the case I apologize to my hon. friend, but I was of the opinion that he made a remark.

Mr. SANDERSON: I did not.

Mr. TURNBULL: Another proposition was that the judges should be allowed to carry out the work of redistribution. If the day ever comes when the members of this House of Commons are incapable, either through a lack of intelligence or because of a desire not to use that intelligence, of conducting their own business in their own way, then I will say it is time to let the judges do it. When hon. gentlemen opposite get into opposition they become very non-partisan; they do not want the house to do anything. Everything must be referred to an independent commission; everything must be referred to a commission of judges; everything must be done in this way or that way, just so long as the government does not do it. Why did they not suggest some of these things when they were in office? Why do they not suggest that we all go home and let the judges do everything, because after all redistribution is only a matter of legislation, the same as anything else.

The fourth suggestion is that we should have proportional representation. This hoary old theory is trotted out again. We had it in the famous chart of 1919. When my right hon. friend says anything about this government not keeping its election promises let him never forget the chart and compass of 1919. At least we can say that we have tried to keep our promises, while my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition says he never intended to keep that promise, that he only made it as a sort of chart which he might or might not follow, according to his own sweet will. But he says, "Oh, we could not put proportional representation through because we had a hostile Senate." Hon. gentlemen opposite never tried the Senate; they never put it through this House of Commons. It was introduced here and withdrawn, and that is all the right hon. gentleman did. A hostile Senate did not prevent the right hon. leader of the opposition, then leader of the government, from sending the amendment to the criminal code with regard to section 98 to the Senate five times during the course of his period in office. I cannot say why he did that; he would get up and say it was not true, but the fact remains that the suggestion that he could not put through proportional representation because of a hostile Senate fades into insignificance when we consider what happened to the amendment to section 98 of the criminal code.

With regard to what took place in the constituency of Last Mountain, no person regrets more than I do that the result may be to eliminate the hon. member representing that constituency (Mr. Butcher). I made an attempt to prevent that elimination from taking place, but I could not do so because of the campaign put up in the press by the friends of the hon. member for Last Mountain, as he well knows. I am sure my hon. friend does not attach any blame to me with regard to what has happened. In a moment of weakness, probably, I did something which the speech of the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) would indicate that I should not have done; nevertheless it was done, and I hope the wheel of time will bring the hon. member for Last Mountain back to the House of Commons, because he is a member who is respected very highly on this side of the house.

I do not intend to traverse at length all those things which have been repeated over and over again this afternoon, nor do I intend to do what the hon. member for Melville deliberately tried to do to-night. The hon. gentleman stood up in this house and said that his friends had criticized him because he had not tried to provoke us sufficiently, and he was trying to make up for that oversight to-night. Because he could not sufficiently provoke us to-night he said we were no good or something else, simply because we respected that which he did not respect himself. When he speaks of the right hon. leader of the opposition moving from place to place I agree that he speaks from the bottom of his heart, because he has had bitter experience.

Some complaint has been made about the constituency of Moose Jaw being too small and the constituency of Swift Current being too large. The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm), speaking in the house the other night, said some regard should be had to the number of votes polled in these various constituencies. I do not say that is the only factor to be considered, but I do say it is one of many factors that might be taken into account. The figures show that if the percentage of votes cast in 1930 was applied to the new territories of Swift Current and Moose Jaw there would be 22,667 votes in Moose Jaw and 19,729 votes in Swift Current. So while Swift Current is larger than Moose Jaw in point of population, Moose Jaw would have over 3,000 more voters on the list than Swift Current would have. There are many matters that must be taken into consideration as well as population; there are natural boundaries to be considered, and so on, and all these considerations must be applied in each case.

With regard to the constituency of North Battleford my hon. friend from Melville got into trouble again by saying we were sending five seats to the north pole or the aurora borealis or some similar place. His own friends on the opposite side want to do that; it is their proposition to send five seats to the north. It is true that at the present time we are sending four seats north, but not five.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If you count them up you will find that there are five.

Mr. TURNBULL: I should like the hon. gentleman to tell me what they are.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: North Battleford, South Battleford, Prince Albert and Mackenzie.

Mr. TURNBULL: My hon. friend is wrong; the proposition from his own side is that South Battleford should be sent to the north. On our map South Battleford has its northern boundary at township 53.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It goes up far enough, anyway.

Mr. TURNBULL: I do not propose to answer further arguments with regard to North Battleford. They have been repeated and they have been answered; doubtless they will be repeated again, but during the course of the whole afternoon not a single new argument with regard to North Battleford or South Battleford was brought forward. There has been repetition, it is true, but that does not add any particular strength to the argument, so I do not propose to pay very much attention to it. There has been nothing new brought forward with regard to the constituency of Prince Albert, except some statements which I have shown were not particularly well founded on fact. It is admitted that the boundaries of Prince Albert must be changed; both parties have changed them. It is admitted that something should be taken out of the southern part of Prince Albert, because both maps take something out of that southern part. It has been proposed to take two ranges off the east side of Prince Albert and put them in Melfort, leaving the south boundary where it was before. That was the proposition of the leader of the opposition. I attended him in his own room on Tuesday morning and we discussed that very proposition, and I pointed out to him that to do as he suggested would make the population of Melfort over 48,000 and leave the population of Prince Albert, with a city, around 45,000 or 46,000. As far as I knew, the suggestion dropped at that particular point. I thought the leader of the opposition was satisfied at that time that that proposition was not a feasible one. So far as Prince Albert is concerned, the population of that constituency is 50,896. The population of the constituency has increased thirty per cent in the last ten years. It includes a large territory to the north which is likely to develop into a mineral area between now and the next redistribution. There have moved into the area a considerable number of people, between 1,500 and 2,000, since the last census, and when we start with a population to-day of 39,000, allowing for people who have moved in since the last census, and allowing for the trend of population, I think we are pretty well following the precedent established in 1924 with respect to these northern seats. I think we are following that precedent when we start them slightly below the regular unit of population.

My hon. friend from Melville attempted tonight, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, to put into that gentleman's mouth words which he never uttered.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What were the words?

Mr. TURNBULL: There is not one word, there is not one sentence, there is not one paragraph, there is not one idea in what was said by the hon. member for Melfort which was as interpreted by the hon. member for Melville.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I quoted him.

Mr. TURNBULL: Yes, with the hon. gentleman's unkind interpretations, inferences and insinuations.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I quoted him.

Mr. TURNBULL: There is not one single word in what the hon. member for Melfort said that will bear the colour which my hon. friend opposite tried to put upon his remarks. There was not one single disrespectful remark made by the Minister of Agriculture with respect to any resident of Prince Albert, nor was there a single disrespectful remark made with respect to any resident of the old Saskatoon county, the new county of Rosthern. My hon. friend opposite is playing the same game that he has played all over Saskatchewan for the last twenty years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Bah!

Mr. TURNBULL: There has not been an election since 1917 when my hon. friend and his friends have not preached racial prejudice all through the province—not even in 1930.

Mr. DONNELLY: Who started the Ku Klux Klan?

Mr. TURNBULL: The hon. gentleman's friends in the United States.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Who started it first?

Mr. DONNELLY: Will the hon. gentleman deny that they were out parading in Regina on the day of his election?

Mr. TURNBULL: I don't know what you said.

Mr. DONNELLY: Can you deny that they were out parading in Regina on the day of your election, saying that they elected you?

Mr. TURNBULL: If they did I didn't see them.

Mr. DONNELLY: Deny it if you can; be honest about it.

Mr. TURNBULL: The less my hon. friend from Willow Bunch says about the Ku Klux Klan the better. In Saskatchewan they have cleaned up a number of things that might be quite interesting to the hon. gentleman, and they will clean up my hon. friend, the member for Willow Bunch, at the next election. Let me say that among the ranks of the Ku Klux Klan, so far as I know, there are many Liberals, respectable citizens in Saskatchewan, who are carrying on their business in a very respectable way, and the hon. member has no more right to cast slurs upon these people, who as I say number among their ranks some of the best citizens of the country, than I have to cast slurs on any other order either in Saskatchewan or in any other province.

Mr. DONNELLY: Why was it made a political organization?

Mr. TURNBULL: It is not a political organization.

Mr. DONNELLY: They use it as such.

Mr. TURNBULL: The constituency of Prince Albert, Mr. Chairman, has to be reduced; it is agreed that this is so. Now, let us see how far we can get on common ground. It is agreed that it must be reduced. Both maps produced show that it should be reduced, and it is agreed that the reduction must take place in the south; both maps indicate the necessity for a reduction in the south. The question then is only as to where the line should be drawn, and taking into consideration the trend of population I drew it where I thought right and proper. My hon. friend from Humboldt thought that a different line would be fair. I agreed to accede to his wishes and after I did so he threw the offer back in my face. I do not want to adopt the same language used by my hon. friend from Melville, about casting pearls before swine, but that is what happened.

Mr. TOTZKE: I have denied many times the statement the hon. member is making when he says that I agreed to it. I said it was only a suggested line which I would look into, and I telephoned him and told him that I could not accept it.

[Mr. Turnbull.]

Mr. TURNBULL: My hon. friend is quite right in a way. He said it was a fair line—

Mr. TOTZKE: I did not.

Mr. TURNBULL: —but he would not agree to it unless we agreed to the rest of the province.

Mr. TOTZKE: I said, "What about this line? Would you agree to that?"

Mr. TURNBULL: If my hon. friend did not think it was a fair line why did he ask me to agree to it?

Mr. TOTZKE: I did not ask you to agree to it.

Mr. TURNBULL: As a matter of fact, although the discussion has wandered all over the map of Saskatchewan to-night, picking up every little thing that could be picked up anywhere, the member of the committee who refused to be of any assistance in fixing up any of the details of the map unless the main propositions were agreed to—and I do not blame him, because it was the power behind him that compelled him to do it—now comes into the house and criticizes these little details in a map regarding which his own friends declare that it makes no difference anyhow because we could not elect a Conservative member in the whole province under that map. We have spent four days studying a map which, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, will make no difference because we cannot elect anyone under it. That is the exhibition which we have in the House of Commons in the closing days of the session. That is what hon. gentlemen mean when they say, "If you don't give us what we want we will hold the house in session and fight to the bitter end." That is the proposition that is put up to us; that is exactly where hon. gentlemen opposite stand.

There are only two points of major importance in dispute; one is Battleford and the other Prince Albert. That is all. The others, it is all agreed, are minor.

Mr. TOTZKE: I have more complaints to make.

Mr. TURNBULL: Both parties admit that in these two there must be changes, and both parties admit pretty well where the changes should take place. But my hon. friends say, "If you don't make the change where we want it we will keep the house in session." And then they tell us that they are not trying to govern the country by minority; they tell us that they are reasonable and are adopting the proper course that representatives of the people should follow.

So far as I am concerned, the fact that not a single member south of the South Saskatchewan river has criticized his own seat or his own boundaries or any other boundaries is an indication that the redistribution south of the South Saskatchewan river is a reasonably fair one. It is true that there are constituencies that are smaller than the unit, and the time will come when the boundaries of these constituencies will have to extend northward across the course of these rivers. I do not think that the time is ripe for that at this redistribution, and my hon. friends agree with me because they have not proposed a single extension of one of these constituencies. If you divided the population south of these rivers into eight you could not get 44,186 in each constituency and allow for excess population in Regina. When I reduced the population in my own seat, when I reduced my majority by 300, by taking that population off, I wonder whether I was creating a deliberate Tory gerrymander in my own favour. I sought no advantage from the redistribution. The map which I made is to my own disadvantage but I think it is in the interests of the people of that part of the country just as is the map of the northern part. It is my own settled opinion that it represents justice to the people who will elect the members to the next parliament. No real criticism of it exists to-day beyond the fact that it is said that it will hurt the chances of some Liberal members of being reelected.

In one of the speeches made since this debate commenced, the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) said that redistribution should not be in the interests of a particular member or a particular constituency but in the larger interests of the people of Canada. Yet the whole fuss has been over the question of how this new constituency of Prince Albert will affect him personally. I would say that there are enough intelligent people left in Prince Albert constituency under the map as drawn to be able correctly to weigh the policies of th right hon. the leader of the opposition. If the boundaries now set are allowed to stand there will be between 38,000 and 39,000 people in this constituency. They are among the most intelligent people that there are in Canada, they are the descendants of the old Lord Selkirk settlers about which the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) was moaning a few moments ago. If these men are not of sufficient intelligence to form a jury to weigh my right hon. friend and find him either righteous or wanting, I do not know where you will find them in the Dominion of Canada.

My right hon. friend complains that he does not want to be elected by 39,000 people; he wants a larger constituency of 51,000—this where there was an increase of thirty per cent while in other parts of the country constituencies containing a smaller population are considered as much too large. If the line suggested by my right hon. leader (Mr. Bennett) this afternoon is accepted, there will be an additional 6,600 of population. This would bring the total up to 45,000, or more than the average for the province itself. In addition to those which I have included, he would then have in his constituency a number of old-time settlers who have settled around Duck Lake and Carlton. These are French Canadians who settled there in the early days and their descendants are still in this district. It would not detract any from the intelligence of the constituency which will pass upon my right hon. friend's policy if it were allowed to remain as proposed, but perhaps he is afraid of one of the most intelligent electorates in Canada.

As I said in the beginning, the reason why I decided to unite four of these constituencies into three was because of the deficiency in population in the central areas of the province. I shall put certain figures on Hansard to indicate the condition which existed. It was suggested that because Yorkton was one of the largest constituencies there was no reason for its subdivision, but if hon. members will look at the rate of increase in population they will see the reason why this was done. The population of Yorkton in 1921 was 37,857; in 1931 it had increased to 38,692; under the new map it will have 48,473. There has been an increase in ten years of 835 and the average percentage of increase is 2.2. The population of Melville in 1921 was 36,842; in 1931, 39,338; under the new map, 47,499. There has been an increase in ten years of 2,496, or an average increase of 6.7. In 1921 Last Mountain had a population of 34,054; in 1931 this had increased to 36,507 while under the proposed map it will contain 45,518. In ten years there has been an increase of 2,453 or 7.2 per cent. In 1921 Long Lake had a population of 32,308; in 1931, 31,266 and under the new map it will have 42,146. In ten years there was a decrease of 132 and as the percentage was so small I did not attempt to work it out. In 1921 Rosetown had a population of 29,341; in 1931, 32,526 and under the new map it will have 40,708. There has been an increase of 3,185 or 10.8 per cent. In 1921 Kindersley had a population of 28,997; in 1931, 35,290, while under the new map it will have 39,632. There has been an increase of 6,993 or 24.7 per cent.

While the eastern constituencies had the largest populations they showed the smallest percentage of increases. The western constituencies had the smaller populations but they show a larger percentage of increase. In addition to that, the ratio of voters to populations is greater in the western constituences than in the east and that is why I seleced these four eastern seats for amalgamation.

I think I have covered all the arguments which have been made to-day and which had not been covered previously by myself. As I said before, I have no intention of repeating what I said the other day or in attempting to follow my hon. friends in what they have said. I merely point out that out of the members on the opposite side of the house who rose to-night to discuss the Saskatchewan map, five had no complaint as far as the boundaries of their own constituencies were concerned. All of them complained of the boundaries of Prince Albert but they have presented no argument which has changed the situation in the slightest. As far as I am concerned, I see no reason to be impressed by their arguments.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to add anything to what I said this afternoon, but as the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) who has just taken his seat made reference to some of my remarks, possibly I should say a word in reply.

The first point touched upon by the hon. member was the reference I made this afternoon to the advisability of having redistribution made by a commission of judges rather than following the method which has been adopted at this and the last two redistributions. I think I was careful to say that my suggestion did not apply to this redistribution. I recognize quite well that at this stage no one is thinking of changing the method of the present redistribution, but I realize also that ten years hence the House of Commons of Canada will be faced with a problem similar to that with which we are now dealing. I was careful to say that I thought every hon. member owed it to his country when he saw a position which he believed would better its future to state it. None of us can say what opportunities there may be for those who are now in the house to state a position ten years hence. Of one thing we can be perfectly sure: a very limited number of those who are here to-day will be here to speak ten years hence of what has taken place at this time. It was because of that and because of what must have impressed itself upon everyone who has been present during the past two weeks that I thought it advisable to say that when the House of Commons was again confronted with the question of redistribution of the constituencies of Canada, it would in my opinion be wise for it to adopt the plan of referring the whole matter to a commission composed of judges who would have the opportunity of viewing the situation impartially, not from the point of view of the self-interest of any individual member but rather from the point of view of the wider interests of the people of Canada as a whole. That is the position which I took this afternoon and which I take again to-night. Anyone reading the Hansard report even of to-night's debate must realize to how small an extent the redistribution being effected at the moment is based upon the foundational principle of the division of the various constituencies according to the general interest of the country as a whole regardless of how those general interests may be influenced or affected by the special interests of individuals who are sitting in the House of Commons at this particular time. I make that statement without reflection upon anyone. I was careful to say that the same thing might have applied to previous redistributions.

May I say that at the time Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in the house, when it was suggested that a commission of judges might be appointed for the purpose of making a redistribution, Sir Wilfrid himself opposed the idea. He said very much as the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) has said to-night, that he thought a committee of the members of the House of Commons would be not only as able but as honourable in dealing with the whole situation as would any commission of judges. I must add that the commission that was proposed at the time Sir Wilfrid made his remarks was one composed of judges appointed only by the government of the day. What I proposed was a commission that would have represented on it in equal numbers judges nominated by both sides of parliament, a body of six judges who should be chosen from among judges of the different provinces and who would be able to view the electoral map as a whole in the light of their previous experience as members of parliament, had they served as such, and in the light of all the information that could be brought before them by the chief electoral officer, members of House of Commons, and others who might wish to appear. I believe that method would avoid what I think has been in some degree an unseemly discussion on a matter which is not one simply of legislation but one essentially judicial, where parliament acts in the capacity of a high court seeking to do justice and justice only to all concerned. The hon. member for Regina, who has just spoken, said that after all redistribution was only a matter of legislation. I do not agree with him in that at all. Redistribution is a matter of legislation, but it is also one essentially of justice in the redistributing of the constituencies of Canada in accordance with principles which will be observed above all else as fair and just. I believe those principles will probably be observed most fully if the matter is carried out in the manner which I have indicated.

I have no more to say on that topic, but I come to the next one to which my hon. friend referred. It was that proportional representation was a fairer method of providing for representation in the House of Commons than the one which we have at the present time of determining that representation by single member constituencies, constituencies arrived at in the present fashion. I was careful there again to say that I was speaking not of the present but of the future, in the light of our experience at this time. This is the moment for one to speak of these things, when they are present to the minds of all who are here. The Prime Minister has spoken of the obvious unfairness—he did not use those words; what he said was that it ought to give us all occasion to pause—but I take it that I am not misrepresenting him by saying the obvious unfairness of representation where a situation existed where all the members returned from one province were of one political party alone. His reference was to Quebec after 1921 when the entire membership from that province in the House of Commons was Liberal. He might have spoken of the absence of any Conservative representation in six provinces out of nine after the elections of 1921. The Prime Minister says that that ought to give one occasion to pause for reflection. I shall go a step further and say that a system which results in the body of opinion of a political party of an entire province having no representation in the House of Commons has, I believe, something lacking, something inherently wrong about it. It is not a truly representative system. I wish to go just one step further and point out to hon. members what the complexion of the House of Commons at the present time is as compared with what it would be were it truly representative of the electorate of Canada as evidenced by the votes which were cast in the general election of 1930. I am doing this, not for the purpose of stirring up controversy at the moment, but for the purpose of supporting by reference to actual facts as known to all, the argument which I have put forward that proportional representation is a much fairer way of determining the representation in the House of Commons, in order that it may represent minority as well as majority opinion and represent more truly the will of the electorate at large, than the system which we now have. The figures that I am going to quote are official ones given by the chief electoral officer. They are the same figures that will be found in his report, with this exception, that his report, in referring to total ballots cast, includes, I understand, all ballots, those that were discarded as well as those that were counted. The figures that I give are from an official statement given to the press by the chief electoral officer at the time of the last general election, and it includes the ballots which were counted but not those which were discarded. The numbers of the latter are so insignificant that they do not affect the argument.

The total membership of the House of Commons is 245. I am speaking now of the situation as it was when parliament came into being after the last general election. The total number of Conservative members is 137. That leaves a balance of 108 members including all who are other than declared Conservatives in the House of Commons. The vote cast on July 28, 1930, for the Conservatives was considerably less than that cast for members who constitute the Liberal party, the present Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and the Independents, all of whom are on this side of the house. I want to make that point clear, that though hon. gentlemen opposite to-day have the larger representation in the house, namely, 137 members, yet the 108 members who are sitting on this side represent of the actual ballots cast a larger number of votes than those cast for the hon. gentlemen opposite. I say to the Prime Minister that that gives pause for reflection. It is an indication that there is about the system under which our parliamentary institutions at the moment are operating, with respect to representation in the House of Commons, something which is not wholly sound, or just or fair.

The total vote cast on July 28, 1930, was 3,898,995. Of that total the Conservative party received 1,909,955 votes. The vote represented by those who are now sitting on this side of the house was 1,989,040 votes. May I say that in that total I have not included what would have gone to the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) had there been elections in their constituencies. They were both returned by acclamation and I have left out the votes that would otherwise have gone to them. I think I am safe in saying the vote which would have gone to either of them would have increased the total vote that is opposed to the government.

May I now give the significance of these figures? A total of 1,909,955 Conservative votes returned 137 members. In other words, 13,941 votes were cast per member. On this basis, 1,989,040 votes, which represent the total number of votes that were cast for those opposing the government, would have returned 142 members opposed to the government. There would have been a larger representation in this house of those opposed to the Conservative party than there are members of that party in this House of Commons at the present time.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Would my right hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I do not wish to interrupt him. Has he any licence to say that those who sit as members of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, the Progressive party, would have voted for the Liberal party had my right hon. friend been leading the government of the day?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; I have been very careful to avoid saying anything of the kind, and my words appear in Hansard. I have spoken of those who are sitting on the other side as representing Conservatives returned to office, and those who are sitting on this side, but I have not said a word about—

Mr. MACDOUGALL: If my hon. friend will be indulgent enough to allow a word, I think he has talked of those who sit on the other side of the house as being favourable to the Liberal party and opposed to the government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; I say that they are not supporters of the government.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: They are not supporters of the right hon. gentleman's party either.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not say that they were.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Why add them to your vote?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let me make this perfectly clear. I know that some of them are distinctly opposed to our party. One has since the election become a member of the tariff board. I am not for a moment saying that they are supporting my party. They are not supporters of the government and, according to very sound doctrine, those who are not for us are against us. But let us come to the votes cast for the Liberal party and in this instance I shall leave out votes cast for Liberal-Progressives which will include some who sit on this side and who have supported the Liberal party on every vote. If you take the total votes which were polled for straight Liberals, not including Liberal-Progressives, or members of the C.C.F. or any independents or any Labour members, you have a total Liberal vote of 1,714,860, which would have returned on the ratio of 13,941 votes per member, 123 Liberals to this house, whereas at the present time there are 88 Liberal members. May I repeat, I am raising this question at the moment because it has been raised in the course of this debate and has been referred to again this evening by the hon. member for Regina. That is the reason I bring it up at the moment. It cannot affect the present redistribution, but, it is a matter which ought to cause all those interested in democratic government and the fair representation of opinion regardless of the particular shade of political belief to which that opinion may belong, to consider very carefully whether it is not desirable to have a fairer method of representation of the will of people at large in the House of Commons which has to do with the making of the country's laws.

There is only one other matter, Mr. Chairman, to which I wish to refer at the moment, and that is with regard to what the hon. member for Regina has said respecting the constituency of Prince Albert. My hon. friend referred to his kindness in coming to my office the day before yesterday, I think it was, to have a word with me concerning the map of Saskatchewan, or perhaps I should say more particularly the constituency of Prince Albert. I told my hon. friend at that time that I would not wish to say anything to him which I would not say on the floor of the House of Commons, and that what I was saying to him then was what I would say when I came to speak in the house. He will bear me out that those were my words and that what I said in the house this afternoon was wholly in accord with what I said to him. That is where our conversation began and ended so far as I understood him. There were no undertakings or commitments in any particular, but I stated to the hon. member for Regina that I had understood the Prime Minister to say from his seat in the house that the government were prepared to do what was fair and just with respect to Prince Albert and would welcome suggestions and that I therefore would be glad to present the point of view which I thought was fair and just, but that I would certainly so far as Prince Albert was concerned leave the matter in the hands of the government. I think my hon. friend will bear me out in that. If that is true I must take exception to his saying that most of the discussion about Prince Albert has been simply as to how the matter is going to affect myself.

Mr. TURNBULL: Will my right hon. friend pardon me? He misunderstood my reference. When I made that remark it was not with reference to the conversation between my right hon. friend and myself in his room, but with reference to the debate my right hon. friend carried on in the house to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It referred to what was said in the house to-day? That is quite right. I am of course in the judgment of the house as to the significance of my remarks this afternoon. I was speaking this afternoon, as I said the other day, both as the member for Prince Albert and also as the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, but I wish the government in its decision on this matter to consider the position of the constituency of Prince Albert, and to consider that alone. I do not ask any consideration as the leader of the opposition. It is for the government itself to say whether or not they think that position merits any consideration. But I do want to make a very strong plea for justice to the people of the constituency of Prince Albert. In that connection I have only to repeat that I cannot consider as just a means of altering the boundaries of a constituency which has to be reduced in size whereby you add to the constituency to begin with, a double row of townships on one side comprising something like four thousand additional persons. I cannot see the justice of that method of proceeding, especially when I have pointed out, as I have this afternoon, that constituencies in the northern part of Saskatchewan have been more and more narrowed with each redistribution. That is the exception that I take very strongly, in the first place, to the redistribution that is proposed in the government map. It adds to the eastern side of the constituency of Prince Albert a section from the adjoining constituency, a section which brings into the constituency of Prince Albert an additional number of some four thousand persons, a part moreover which is largely Tory. The constituency has already 50,000, and the government claim that that is too large and that its duty is to reduce it. Well, to reduce it by beginning to add to it does not seem to me a fair way of proceeding. It is against that in the first place that I wish to protest.

Another objection I wish to make is this. The unit of representation of Prince Albert as it stands in the proposed redistribution is away below what is the unit of representation of rural constituencies generally in the province of Saskatchewan as they appear on the map. It is down to 38,469 in Prince Albert whereas the unit in a rural constituency is 44,186.

Mr. STEVENS: Not rural constituency but the average for all.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the right hon. gentleman has confused two things.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING. The unit that is recognized, and my right hon. friend knows that where there are cities in a constituency we have pretty well agreed that the unit of representation should be above that in purely rural seats.

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And I have pointed out that the city of Prince Albert is in the constituency of Prince Albert, and that the constituency as it appears on the electoral map should therefore have above the average unit of 44,186. It ought to have at least in addition another couple of thousand. That at all events is my view of what is fair and just in the matter.

I would say further that the redistribution should seek to be impartial as between the political parties. If that may be considered a factor—I do not say it will necessarily be considered as such—but if it were to be considered as such the aim I think should be, where there has to be the taking away of any part of a constituency, that it should be taken away in a manner which will reduce in equal numbers or approximately equal numbers the representation of both political parties.

Those are the points that strike me as being fair. I am stating what I believe to be what the people of the constituency of Prince Albert will regard as fair in the light of the position as it is. I do not wish hon. members on this side to keep up the discussion in order to attempt to force the hand of the government in any way as to what it is going to do in Prince Albert. I have stated the case so far as Prince Albert is concerned, and I propose to leave it at that and to abide, as of necessity I shall have to abide and the constituency will have to abide, by the decision of the government in the matter. But I will expect the government to do what they believe to be right, and they must be prepared to have their action judged in the light of the perfect freedom which they have in the matter of reaching a decision. I hope I am making clear the view I take. I am not asking for anything, personally. May I say to the hon. member for Regina that frequently this afternoon and in his remarks this evening he said my reason for stating my position was that I was afraid of something, that I was afraid of this or afraid of that.

Mr. BENNETT: He was adopting the language of some hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have not heard any hon. member from this side saying any hon. gentlemen opposite were afraid.

Mr. BENNETT, Oh, yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think so. At any rate, the hon. member is free to choose his own language. I just wish to say to him that I am not in the least afraid of the consequences of a campaign in Prince Albert, nor am I afraid of a general campaign whenever it may come, so far as the fortunes of the party which I have the honour to lead are concerned.

Mr. MANION: The same applies on this side of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have spoken longer than I had intended. We have come practically to the closing hour of the day, but before taking my seat I should like to say just one word further about the Battleford constituencies. I do believe an injustice will be done if they are left in their present form. I mean, the form in which they appear in the redistribution map. Why should we seek the creation of new constituencies under new names, when at the present time we have names which form part of the history of Canada associated with particular areas?

Mr. BENNETT: May I draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman to one matter which concerns me, and with which I have much difficulty. To change any one constituency in the area to which attention has been directed will necessitate the redrafting of the entire schedule concerning that area. It is a great difficulty. I know the right hon. gentleman opposite appreciates, as he did this afternoon, that the general quota is substantially the same in the whole area. obviously sometimes you have to add on in order that you may properly arrange the population—and this has nothing to do with politics. That was done in some of the seats to which reference has been made. The difficulty is if you change the Battleford constituencies and Prince Albert the whole matter is open again, and you have to rearrange all the northern part of the map. That was the stand taken by the representative on the committee: "You do this, and if you do not do it in the way in which we want it we will object to the whole." If the right hon. gentleman has any explanation I am most anxious to hear it—and I must say I have spent some time looking at the maps to-night. Just how it will be possible to follow his suggestion without recasting the whole, I cannot see.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to the Prime Minister that while it is perfectly true that in the negotiations, whatever proposals have been put forward from this side have been put forward in reference to a map which represented the constituencies as a whole, so far as the present stage of the discussion is concerned it is not our intention to attempt to continue the discussion on all constituencies. The hon. member for Regina has said some hon. members have not spoken, and he has concluded from that they were—

Mr. TURNBULL: No, no. I said they had all spoken, but had not complained of their own ridings.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It would be a most extraordinary thing if a redistribution were made in which every member would be so badly treated that he would have to complain about his constituency.

Mr. TURNBULL: It does not take much to bring complaints from that side of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am prepared to admit we are all inclined to search out and it is our duty to search out what appear to us to be insufficiencies or inaccuracies. I wish to say at the moment, however, that we do not intend to go over the entire map of Saskatchewan and hold up this House of Commons simply to have our own way with respect to any map which has been presented. I realize and have said from the start that the government has its majority. Further, the Prime Minister has made it clear that he intends to use that majority to have this redistribution put through. If it will facilitate conclusion of matters to have it known that our chief difference at the moment comes down to the constituency of Battleford, or Redberry as it is now proposed to call it, leaving the question of Prince Albert as I have left it, I would say that that, as matters stand, is the point of greatest importance.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the right hon. gentleman refer to the name or to the arrangement of the area?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I have in mind is that the constituency to be called Redberry should be permitted to retain the name of North Battleford. For the constituency to retain it appropriately the city of North Battleford, to which the whole commercial and industrial area in the north is related, ought, it seems to me, to be in it. And to arrange this is a matter of very slight readjustment, so far as I can see, because there is only the distance of six miles from the boundary of Redberry to North Battleford. Furthermore, the city of North Battleford is not very large. So far as we are concerned, I think we would approve of any adjustment by hon. members opposite which could be recognized as fair, even if it were to involve taking a corresponding population from one constituency and adding them to another.

Mr. BENNETT: Speaking from memory, I must say to the right hon. gentleman that to do what he suggests will necessitate a change in the constituency directly south, namely that of Kindersley. That matter was considered by the committee, and they found it impossible to adjust the population basis if the boundary of the new projected constituency of North Battleford were carried farther south and took in part of Kindersley. That would make an adjustment necessary in that area, and so on throughout, and the whole map north of the Saskatchewan river would have to be recast. The right hon. gentleman must appreciate that that is the real difficulty. I have looked at the map with great care to-night and I really do not see, in view of the arrangements which have been arrived at with regard to the general principles of equality of population, how such a change could be made. I make that statement frankly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have reached the hour for adjournment. I should like to ask the Prime Minister to take another look at the map to-night, to see if it is not possible, without in any way prejudicing the map as a whole, to make the slight readjustments which ought to be made. I have looked at it and I must say I cannot agree when he states that to do this will in any way upset the whole arrangement.

Mr. BENNETT: Did the right hon. gentleman look at the Kindersley situation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: And Rosthern?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: And Rosetown?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. I think it is quite possible to take part of the immediate environment as between the two Battlefords themselves and make the necessary adjustment. However I shall leave the matter in the hands of the right hon. gentleman.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 26, 1933

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SATURDAY SITTING

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Saturday the 27th May, instant, the house shall meet at 11 o'clock in the morning. That in addition to the usual intermission at 6 o'clock p.m., there shall also be an intermission from one to three o'clock p.m., and that both the order of business and procedure shall be the same as on Friday.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

The house resumed from Thursday, May 25, consideration in committee of Bill No. 2, to readjust the representation in the House of Commons—Right Hon. R. B. Bennett—Mr. Morand in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 1 carry?

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Encouraged by the remarks of the Prime Minister a few days ago, in which he intimated first of all that he was not aware of the exact boundaries even of his own constituency in Alberta, and further encouraged by his subsequent remarks towards the close of his address on that occasion, when he said, as reported at page 5347 of Hansard:

> I am not yet advised as to the whole issue in Alberta and not having had an opportunity to discuss it fully with anyone who could inform me, I am not going to do more than say that I believe the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) with his conciliatory spirit, and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) will have no difficulty in working out that problem.

And again, on the same page:

> To-day the problem of the boundaries of Bow River is one of some difficulty, but I think there should be no really insurmountable obstacle in the way of its solution.

—encouraged, I say, by these remarks of the right hon. gentleman, I intend to devote a few minutes to the consideration of this question. What I propose to discuss is not so much the boundary of Bow River itself as the conditions in connection with the Calgary seats and the effect which that division has had on the rest of these constituencies. Before I come to that part of the discussion this morning, however, I must say that I share the views of many in this house, that redistribution left in the hands of those who are directly interested in its results is perhaps one of the unfortunate features of our so called democracy. After listening for several days, in patience and silence, to the somewhat bitter and acrimonious discussion that has been carried on, I do feel that the public interest would be better served if we could work out some practical method by which redistribution would not be left to us as members of the House of Commons. I do not however see the practical side of the proposal made by the leader of the opposition in that regard.

The leader of the opposition suggested that there should be set up a committee of supreme court judges, three from one side of the house and three from his party, I presume—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not say party; I said opposition.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There was no other possible interpretation of the right hon. gentleman's words.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but I was very careful to make it clear that the government represents one side of the House of Commons while all those who sit opposite represent the other side. I did not try and was careful not to limit the opposition to one party.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But there still remains a practical difficulty, because this corner, or this group on this side of the house, has never yet been in the happy position of being able to appoint judges. Again let me point out to the right hon. gentleman that in the division he makes he implies, what I think he did right to imply, that judges, no matter how high spirited they may be, might under pressure of political influences revert to their former political partisanship.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite the opposite was in my mind. I felt they would view matters judicially though with special knowledge.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Such a conclusion is inevitable from his suggestion that three be selected from one side and three from the other; he cannot get away from it.

Mr. STEVENS: You would have a political judiciary.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If on the other hand we could secure something as intelligent, poor as it may be, as we have in our election act, it would not be so bad. The chief electoral officer is appointed for life, and if the chief distributing officer were appointed for life, not subject to the continual whims or influences of political parties, then perhaps we could get somewhere. Let me say this to the right hon. gentleman. I will support any practical proposal that will place redistribution beyond the power or influence of private members, but at the moment I see no practical way by which it can be done. If I thought it could be done I would support it heartily.

I come now to the second constructive proposal of the right hon. gentleman, namely, proportional representation. He says that if returned to power the party to which he belongs and has the honour to lead will once more bring up this question in the House of Commons—I presume with the intention of putting it through the house. I am very glad indeed to hear him say that, but my pleasure in the matter would be much greater if I did not have vividly in my mind a recollection of what has taken place in connection with this very question, during the government of the hon. gentleman. He was careful to say yesterday that his own ministry had introduced a bill into the house. He did not say just why it was not proceeded with but in soft tones he implied that it was because of the position of the Senate. What are the facts? They are set forth in the journals of the House of Commons, sessional papers 1916 to 1930. In 1917 a motion was made by Mr. Turriff that necessary legislation should be enacted. There was a debate thereon which was adjourned as so often happens with these private members' resolutions. In 1921 a further resolution was introduced that some system of proportional representation should be adopted. An amendment was moved by Mr. Calder that a subcommittee should be appointed to consider the subject, and this was agreed to. The committee was appointed by leave, and there was a motion by Mr. Davidson to reduce the quorum, to report from time to time, to have leave to print and so on. The first report appears on page 391 of the records of that year. In 1922 there was a resolution to adopt the alternative vote method moved by Mr. Good, but the debate was adjourned. In 1923 there was a resolution to adopt the alternative vote method. That also was moved by Mr. Good who was a member of the group in this corner of the house. He came from Brant and I think he sat in the seat now occupied by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). The motion moved in 1923 was agreed to. In a moment I will check it up and see what happened. It will be noticed that that was a motion to adopt the alternative vote method in constituencies like city constituencies. That was carried by the house at a time when my right hon. friend's party was in power. But no further move was made in that direction. In 1924 there was a resolution to adopt the alternative vote method, also moved by Mr. Good. The debate was interrupted by the six o'clock closing rule for Wednesdays.

Mr. STEVENS: May I interrupt my hon. friend? Has he the record there of what happened to the resolution regarding the alternative vote?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, I have the whole record. In the year 1924 the former Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) introduced Bill No. 128. The purpose of this bill as stated in the explanatory note was to make to the Dominion Elections Act the amendments necessary to provide for the single alternative vote at any election when three or more candidates had been nominated and only one member was to be returned. That bill was given first reading and then allowed to stay on the order paper. In 1925, the hon. gentleman introduced a similar measure, the purpose of which was precisely that of the bill of the year before. All of us who sit in this corner of the house know perfectly well why that bill was introduced, why it was placed upon the order paper, and why it was given only first reading. The only reason was to prevent further embarrassing discussions of the subject from this corner of the house. It was nothing more or less than that. I have a too vivid recollection of what happened. Why was not the bill given second reading so that there could be an intelligent debate? Why was it not sent to a committee, if necessary? The right hon. gentleman would have had the support of this group, and it was no mean strength at that time. Why did he not challenge the Senate when with the two groups combined he had such an overwhelming majority as to make it beyond question that the bill would carry. But he went no further in the matter. According to the records of 1923, I find that Mr. Good, seconded by Mr. Brown, then in this corner of the house, moved a resolution This contained many whereases and ended up with the resolve that in the opinion of this house an alternative vote method should be adopted for use in future elections for this house in all single member constituencies where more than two candidates were running for election. After a debate thereon, the motion was agreed to without division. The records of 1923 show that. May I ask my right hon. friend why this legislation was not pressed through in view of the non-contentious character of the decision of the house on that occasion? In the same year another resolution was introduced by Mr. Good, again seconded by Mr. Brown. After many whereases it resolved that in the opinion of this house, for the purpose of demonstrating the working and effects of the system of true proportionate representation, one or more multi-member constituencies should be constituted by the redistribution legislation in which that system should be applied at the next general election. There was a chance to pass that resolution and pass that legislation. It was not a sweeping form of proportionate representation, such as is now proposed, but only a moderate experiment to see if it would work out and if it really was subject to all the frailities and flaws to which it is said to be subject. What happened? When the vote was taken, although the right hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Quebec East voted in favour of the motion, among others, there was lined up the following Liberals against:

Mr. Benoit	Mr. Maclean (Halifax),
Mr. Binette	Mr. MacLean (Prince)
Mr. Bouchard	Mr. Malcolm
Mr. Boucher	Mr. Marcil
Hon. Mr. Cannon	Mr. Martell
Mr. Dechene	Mr. Michaud
Mr. Deslisle	Mr. Marler
Mr. Denis (St. Denis)	Mr. Mitchell
Mr. Duff	Mr. Power
Mr. Fafard	Mr. Rinfret
Sir Lomer Gouin	Mr. Roberge
Mr. Macdonald (Pictou)	Mr. St-Père
Mr. King (Kootenay)	Mr. Séguin.

There were five or six ministers who voted against that motion and I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he has consulted those ministers and received their consent as well as the consent of these various genial French Canadian members to the legislation which he now proposes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say that the matter has been discussed and agreed to in a Liberal caucus.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am afraid that it was also agreed to by the party upon a former occasion. I am pointing this out in all kindliness because we do not want to be disappointed again. If the right hon. gentleman does come to power again we want to nail him down now to this principle.

Mr. STEVENS: They are just kidding the troops.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman's party has kidded us plenty.

Mr. STEVENS: I have always voted against it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But on other questions. I am not so sure that the promises of my hon. friend's party have been always implemented. I do not think they are in a position to cast any stones.

There is the record and the right hon. gentleman says that he will introduce a bill. I may say that if I am here at that time I will support it and I am quite sure that if the group in this corner is back again—I do not think there is any question but that it will be back in greater strength—it will give its full support to such a measure.

Mr. STEVENS: Do you think that promise is safe?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The right hon. gentleman can rest assured that whatever government is in power, this group will support any measure for proportionate representation or even the single transferable vote.

As a matter of fact if that is not done we will see that they get the opportunity.

There can be no two views as to the justice and the logic of the position taken in regard to the necessity for this alteration. I say frankly to any hon. gentleman present who is concerned with serving the public interest and getting just representation that there can be no two thoughts on this question. Let me give the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) another illustration. He heard the excellent one given yesterday by the leader of the opposition in connection with the actual results of the last elections. These results are wholly unjust and out of proportion to the actual votes cast.

I come now to the Irish Free State election of 1933. Ireland is a country in which proportional representation has been put into effect and in which it functions admirably. Indeed, so efficiently does it function now that the whole world was astonished at the rapidity with which the results were published after the general election of January, 1933. The complete fairness of this method was indicated in the figures that were published in pamphlet No. 73 of the Proportional Representation Society. The parties are grouped into two lots: the De Valera group and Labour who were cooperating and the opposition group consisting of the Cosgrave group, Centre and Independents. The De Valera and Labour group polled 770,968 votes and won 185 seats, or 9,070 votes per seat. The Cosgrave, Centre and Independent group polled 615,358 votes and won 68 seats, or 9,049 votes per seat, almost an identical number. Approximately 9,000 votes elected a member, exactly corresponding, as I have suggested, to the support that was given. It should be noted, however, as was pointed out by the Ottawa Citizen in an editorial the other day, that in these figures are included the university seats and the seat of the Speaker, the candidates for which were returned by acclamation. If we exclude these, we find that the total vote cast for the De Valera and Labour group was 768,889 and that 82 seats were won, or 9,376 votes per seat. In the other group, 613,666 votes won 64 seats, or 9,528 votes per seat, an almost exact reflection of public opinion.

Let us compare this with the British election in 1931. In Great Britain in that election the National party, formed as it is of many parts, polled 14,519,016 votes and won 491 seats, or 29,000 votes per seat. Labour on the other hand polled 6,649,630 votes, but won only 46 seats, this working out at 144,000 votes per seat, whereas the National party won its election and power on 29,000 votes per seat. No other argument is necessary than to give illustrations of that character. I admit there are practical difficulties, geographical difficulties, difficulties of area and all that sort of thing, but none of them is insurmountable. In Ireland they have worked out this method for the whole nation on an intelligent basis under which, as I have just indicated, the results are as happy as they have been.

Mr. STEVENS: Is my hon. friend aware that this was tried for a number of years in British Columbia, in Vancouver, New Westminster and other places, and that after an earnest trial it was discarded?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It was also tried in Winnipeg. It operates as a single transferable vote method in Alberta for provincial elections with every satisfaction; so far as I know there is nobody in that province who is not satisfied with the results. Just because the forces of reaction were stronger in British Columbia than were the forces of progress is no reason for suggesting for a moment that the principle is unsound or impracticable.

I now revert to the question of the redistribution in Alberta and again I quote the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett):

> To-day the problem of the boundaries of Bow River is one of some difficulty. but I think there should be no insurmountable obstacle in the way of its solution.

I am prepared to accept the words of the right hon. gentleman when he said that he was not even aware of the exact boundaries of his own constituency. I am prepared to accept his words when he said that he had not yet been fully informed as to the whole issue in Alberta. May I in a few words that will be as noncontentious as possible, indicate to him precisely, as I see it, the situation in my province?

Mr. BENNETT: I have gone over the map since.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am very glad. I had hoped that that had been done and that some reasonable arrangement could have been arrived at, but apparently it is hopeless. Calgary is a city of exactly 83,761 population. In the city of West Calgary my right hon. friend holds his seat. The city of East Calgary did the hon. member for that constituency (Mr. Stanley) the honour to elect him. The city of Calgary with a population of 83,761 would, with the addition of a very small proportion of agricultural territory in its neighbourhood, perhaps with the addition of a very little beyond the surburban townships, have resulted in an excellent two-seat city, and on the principle that industrial population should be kept as closely as possible to itself, this would have been an excellent two-seat city. What has happened? For some reason and I am not going to say for what purpose I think it may be—

Mr. BENNETT: There has never been a two-seat constituency in the west.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I mean two constituencies to the city. I am glad the right hon. gentleman has helped me to clear that up. I do not understand why it has been divided virtually into three seats, for that is actually what has happened. It seems so illogical, so unfair to divide a city of that small size into three seats. On the same basis the city of Montreal would have about twenty-five seats, Vancouver between eight and nine, Winnipeg eight and Ottawa around five, with the addition of the country territory around; as has been done in the case of Calgary. Obviously this is unfair; it it not the just system of redistribution of which the right hon. gentleman has spoken.

The old East Calgary constituency embraced part of the city and a part of rural territory, about twenty-four miles wide by about thirty-six miles long running immediately north of the city. For some reason the hon. member for East Calgary desired to get rid of that and he abandoned his old rural East Calgary. He then also desired apparently to get rid of a part of industrial East Calgary, in fact a large portion, amounting, I am informed to 19,000 or 20,000 people out of a population of 83,000. For the new East Calgary is carved a channel down through the centre of the city and it is extended onward along the boundary of the Bow river down to a line south of Okotoks and then west to take in the Turner valley oilfields. This is an amazing constituency, an astonishing one to make. I would like to know why it was necessary to give up old rural East Calgary or industrial East Calgary. Surely these people were faithful to the hon. gentleman in the last election, but now he is willing to cast them to the chilly waters of Bow river and to betake himself to the warmer and ever green pastures of Turner valley. I cannot for the life of me understand why the hon. gentleman did this unless he is afraid he cannot be elected again in the old constituency of East Calgary. That may not be just to him; I do not know. But that is the only reason that comes to my mind as possible at the moment for his extraordinary action.

Now will hon. gentlemen note that having once made such a distribution of the Calgary population and having taken in a large portion of the old constituency of Macleod, the constituency of Macleod was left without sufficient population, and so Macleod is extended out into the southern portion of Bow River. That is the first dislocation that results from what the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Stanley) has decided upon. Medicine Hat, a constituency that like the southern Saskatchewan seats suffered from drouth for many years, and depopulation consequent thereon, had fallen below the necessary quota. Its actual population was 32,709, and evidently it was desirable to build that up. Now the constituency of Lethbridge had a population of 47,871, or over 3,000 more than was required for the quota even if 44,000 was to be regarded as a fair quota for rural constituencies of the character of Medicine Hat, Macleod and so on, which by the way I would not for a moment attempt to sustain. It is my impression, and I am upheld I think by all fair-minded persons, that city constituencies should always have a larger unit of representation than rural areas which are more difficult to cover, and for various other reasons which were given in the discussion yesterday.

Be that as it may, here was a constituency absolutely adjacent to Medicine Hat from which a surplus population could be drawn without injury either to the people themselves or to the sitting member. It would not have disposed of his seat or affected him in any way whatever. It would have taken in a few townships from the eastern side of Lethbridge and added them to Medicine Hat, and in that way built up its quota to a fair degree anyway. But instead of that the new Lethbridge constituency is left with a population of 46,401. Again I ask the question, why? It has been said, because the people living in the eastern townships of Lethbridge had a greater community of interest with Lethbridge than with Medicine Hat. That argument, if it is valid in that case, must be valid in other cases, some of which I shall cite in a moment or two. But it is not valid. It has never been regarded as valid. Look at the shifting around of population all over this country in this present redistribution. The convenience of the people concerned in a district must sometimes be affected by the actual requirements as a result of over- or under-population.

Medicine Hat, then, had to have population, and so they came to Bow River and took a second bite at the cherry, and they have just about destroyed it at that. The second bite runs up along the Canadian Pacific railway line to just west of the town of Strathmore. The right hon. leader of the government knows as well as I do that the interests of the people of Strathmore and of Gleichen and of those little towns in between are far closer to those of Calgary from which Strathmore is distant twenty-eight or twenty-nine miles, and from which Gleichen is distant forty-eight miles, than they are to those of the city of Medicine Hat, from which they are distant some 132 miles. But for some purpose, population or other, the boundaries are moved up to embrace the towns of Strathmore and Gleichen.

It just happens by a strange turn of the wheel of fortune that I reside in the town of Gleichen, and therefore under this redistribution I will reside in the constituency of Medicine Hat. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not protesting on that basis, and for this reason: When I was elected in 1921 the constituency of Bow River ran far north of Drumheller and embraced my farming place and my home town. After the hon. gentlemen to my right, the Liberal party, redistributed the constituencies in 1924 that constituency was shortened up considerably, by 27 or more miles, and it left me just 27 miles outside the boundary of my own riding. So this is the second time that I have been redistributed out of my constituency. But notice that whilst since 1921 I have resided 27 miles outside of my constituency my good friends in the constituency have been loyal to me and have elected me three times, in 1925, 1926 and in 1930. So I cannot argue that being resident outside the constituency is any great handicap in my case, nor would I so argue. As a matter of fact, I have sufficient confidence in the loyalty and intelligence of the people of that portion of Alberta and of western Canada to know that it does not much matter what is done in regard to that particular seat. The only thing I am pointing out to the right hon. gentleman is that this injustice is being done to the population in Strathmore and Gleichen. It is utterly unjust to Strathmore especially, and to a slightly lesser degree to Gleichen, to be tacked on to the city of Medicine Hat in the Medicine Hat constituency 132 miles away, while they are respectively only 28 and 48 miles away from the city of Calgary.

There may be an explanation for all these things but I cannot for the life of me see what it is. When I learned what was being done I did what was expected of me in the ambit of my duty. I saw our representative on the committee, the member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), discussed the matter with him and told him that I looked upon this as a quite unfair form of redistribution, and he unavailingly took the matter up with the chairman of the subcommittee, and came back to me and said, "You had better prepare an alternative map." I went to work and prepared an alternative map, no easy task for one without an adding machine, but we prepared one and I submitted it to the whole caucus of our group on two occasions, and on two occasions they endorsed it as the fairest in every way. It displaces no person from his riding. It displaces materially no boundary line, except for a township or two, shifting them around a little, and it gives a fair unit of representation. Let me point out what it is. Under the proposal that I made both to the subcommittee and to the main committee, Macleod would have 41,855; Lethbridge, 41,011; Bow River, 41,565; Medicine Hat, 40,347; and the two Calgary seats 47,600 or 47,700 apiece, as best determined between the two sitting members for Calgary. It would have left Calgary still a two-constituency city. That is the feature evidently that it was thought desirable not to retain. The map I have submitted is absolutely fair. It disturbs nobody, and it leaves the boundary lines just in the general direction they were in before.

When this matter was discussed it was pointed out that that "impassable river" called the Bow river should be regarded as the boundary line and should be a factor in the redistribution. But, Mr. Chairman, strangely enough the impassable character of rivers has not always been used as a reason for a just redistribution but frequently has been used for an unjust redistribution, as in this particular case. The Vegreville constituency was extended north over an impassable river over which there is only a single bridge in the whole district, and it was extended to embrace a Ukrainian settlement. I have no objection whatever to that. I think that was the intelligent thing to do and I am raising no objection, but I am pointing out that a river was crossed although it was an impassable river. Let us take a look at the Bow river. In this very portion of the river that is under consideration there are no less than three splendid provincial bridges, steel structures, and traffic moves freely to and fro, winter and summer. It is the height of absurdity for any hon. gentleman to contend that the river is any longer an impassable boundary. The community of interest between one side and the other is complete. As a matter of fact, as the right hon. leader of the government knows, the population of that district south of the river, the Arrowwood district, travel across the river either at Cluny, at Gleichen or at Carseland and move on up to Calgary when they take their motor trips to the Calgary stampede or for business reasons or to purchase supplies. The right hon. gentleman knows that as well as the hon. member for East Calgary. Yet this form of redistribution is to be enacted. Let me assure the house and government, and particularly the government, that in my view they would be well advised to reconsider the distribution of these six constituencies; only six are involved. The boundary lines of North Calgary on the north side, Bow river on the north side and Medicine Hat on the north side remain practically unaffected, except for a small jog to take in East Coulie. To that, again, I have no objection. But it does not affect any of the constituencies in the north of the province. Apparently it does not concern them. Those six constituencies might be redistributed on a fair basis; in my view the present basis is quite unfair. It disturbs the lines everywhere, disturbs the population everywhere. The point I wish to make this morning is that Calgary should not be divided into three seats, because such a change would be an injustice to the labour element of the city. It would weaken their position. Secondly Gleichen and Strathmore should not be tacked on to the Medicine Hat riding.

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary): I shall not deal with the first part of the address of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) in connection with the general subject of the electoral system. At this time it is an academic question, because we have long since passed the point where we must make any decision on matters of that kind. An interesting point, however, and an interesting piece of information which I think should be extended to the house and which the hon. member avoided very carefully was an analysis of the condition of representation in the legislature of the province of Alberta. As he intimated we have proportional representation in force in two of the cities, and the alternative vote in the provincial constituencies throughout the province. Therefore we should have a fair report from the results of the elections in those places. I regret I am not able to give the exact figures, but I understand there are in the neighbourhood of sixteen members, all told, who are not listed as supporters of the government, and whose aggregate vote exceeds that of all the government members put together. There is a chamber of sixty-one members. The government party in that legislature has a very large majority, but the party in majority holds office on a minority vote—a very considerable minority vote. Some time later we may be able to discuss that situation.

However, coming to the immediate question which concerns us to-day in regard to redistribution in the province of Alberta and particularly that part of it which refers to the constituency of Bow River, first allow me to deal with the map which the hon. member himself prepared. This matter was fully discussed in committee; all representations were made there. The subcommittee met dozens of times and discussed the whole situation. In my view the rehashing of these details before the house serves no useful purpose. May I emphasize the fact that the hon. member who has just spoken stands out as the lone objector from the province of Alberta. There was agreement between the two hon. members representing the Liberal and Conservative parties. There may have been some small objections, but there have been no serious objections raised by representatives from other constituencies in the province. Some other hon. members may have some objections concerning the particular constituencies to which the hon. member has referred, but we have not heard of any serious objection being taken. In a few moments I shall deal with the details of his remarks.

First allow me to take the map which he has presented. It is a model of straight lines; there is no question about that. It is made with the idea of having straight lines, without any consideration for natural boundaries. The hon. member has been the author of these proposed straight line constituencies, and he still insists upon placing those straight lines to suit his own convenience. In our redistribution we took cognizance first of natural boundaries and secondly of community interests. In spite of what the hon. member has said, that section of the province of Alberta located south of the Bow river never has had and has not at the present time any community interest with that portion north of the Bow river, and particularly those people living in the Drumheller valley. To most hon. members these names may be only terms, but to the people living in the province of Alberta they mean more than that.

The constituency of Bow River came into existence in 1924. I am informed it was formed from the leftovers, after all the rest of the province had been redistributed. I have no doubt about that. Certainly it presents a leftover constituency, and as Bow River exists to-day I consider it has the most unfair representation of any portion of the province of Alberta. The hon. member proposes straight lines to continue the condition existing in Bow River to-day. To that the committee cannot agree. Personally I certainly cannot agree to it. I state that the constituency as framed violates every idea of fair representation. Let us turn to the constituency of Macleod, to which the hon. member has referred. That portion of the constituency of Bow River south of the river which now becomes part of the constituency of Macleod naturally belongs to Macleod. It has and always has had a community interest with Macleod that no other constituency can claim. It extends eastward to the Bow river, and in spite of what the hon. member has said, there is an insuperable barrier between the Macleod constituency on the west and the Medicine Hat constituency, as proposed, on the east. It is a natural boundary. Having lived in that portion of the country, having covered almost every yard of that whole country from top to bottom by horse and otherwise, I know the country; and I know this, that the farmers of the early days who came and settled west of the Bow river came over to the Calgary and Edmonton railway and marketed all their grain in the Calgary and Edmonton towns prior to the construction of the present railways. That country now is traversed by two other lines of railway running generally north and south, and it is covered by some of the most excellent highways of any province in the country. So there is a community of interest beyond dispute.

Now the hon. gentleman says that Macleod is over the quota. It is, I admit. Personally it was my desire that a portion of Macleod should still belong to the proposed East Calgary constituency. But it was represented that it would be preferable from the standpoint of the member representing Macleod that that portion which would naturally come in should remain in Macleod. Personally I have no objection whatever to it coming in. Even yet I am quite prepared, if hon. gentlemen, or the hon. gentleman who represented the corner in the subcommittee, would consent I would be quite happy to have it come into East Calgary, because that particular portion was my old home and my constituency in the province of Alberta. But in all fairness I do think yet that it belongs to Macleod constituency. In a moment I shall explain what I mean by that.

Coming to the Lethbridge constituency may I say that in its centre is the town of Lethbridge, and radiating out of Lethbridge are the various railroads, including the Crowsnest pass and the railway to the south. Inseparably connected with the city of Lethbridge are the irrigation districts known as the Lethbridge northern irrigation district and the Canadian Pacific irrigation district. The straight lines of the hon. gentleman would have cut right through the heart of both those districts and thrown them into districts which are not immediately concerned with the irrigation problem. I consider that is a serious indictment of the suggestion of straight lines. May I further say that the straight line proposed by the hon. gentleman would have cut off the southern portion of the railway running south from Lethbridge and taken away the town of Milk River and the Milk River district which have no connection directly or indirectly with the city of Medicine Hat or the constituency of Medicine Hat, but belong in every sense to the city of Lethbridge. So that in all fairness, while we took off two townships that could be added to the constituency of Medicine Hat, the two townships to which the hon. gentleman refers would cut off Taber and Milk River and all that district.

Then going northward the hon. gentleman referred to the constituency of Vegreville and to our violating the principle of natural boundaries. I may say that I personally hesitated very seriously before I consented to the extension of the Vegreville district northward above the river. The river is a very serious barrier between the southern portion and the northern portion of that constituency. In spite of the discussion we have heard during the last two or three days the committee were unanimous and the subcommittee were unanimous that that was the proper thing to do. The hon. gentleman who represents Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) was also consulted in regard to this situation, and after going into the whole matter it was agreed all round that it was a fair thing to cross the river and take in the block of townships north of the river in the Vegreville constituency. The reason for doing that I have no hesitation in saying was that the large Ukrainian-Canadian population might be included in the constituency of Vegreville and have their representation in this house. Further it was also done—and done after consultation and by unanimous consent of the subcommittee—in order that those residents who live immediately east and immediately west of that particular part of which we speak might be included by themselves in the other constituencies immediately north and immediately west of them. These are largely French-Canadian citizens, and we had sent to us through the chairman of the general committee, through the Prime Minister, through the various members of the subcommittee, representations from various French-Canadian societies both in the west and in the east asking that these settlements of French-Canadians might be allowed to remain intact and not be included in the Vegreville constituency. Out of respect for these and by consent of every person concerned they were left as outlined in the map.

Then when we come to the central portion of the province, may I say with regard to the large rivers, that we respected them as natural boundaries and these were retained. The exception which the hon. gentleman pointed out is the one single exception, and that was only done after due consideration and consultation, and upon unanimous agreement.

Coming back to the constituency of Bow River as it exists to-day may I point out that there has not been in the past and is not now any community of interest between residents in the town of Carmangay or the district of Carmangay and the residents in the town or valley of Drumheller, none whatever. Nor is there any community of interest between those living in the rural portions of that part of the province and those living in the rural portions west of Drumheller. But there is a very decided community of interest between those living in the Drumheller valley and engaged in the coal-mining industry and the settlers in the rural parts of the province contiguous to Drumheller. There is also a very distinct community of interest between the farmers living in the rural portions of the proposed part of the Bow River constituency contiguous to the city of Calgary. So that the inclusion of the rural portions of the proposed constituency of Bow River with the other industrial portions is perfectly compatible.

Now the hon. gentleman comes to the city of Calgary. I need hardly point out to members of this house, and the hon. gentleman knows it just as well as any person, that a city in western Canada is not comparable to the city of Toronto or the industrial cities of eastern Canada. Our centres are related to the whole country contiguous to them. "All roads lead to Rome." In the southern portion of our province all roads lead to Calgary just the same as in the northern portion all roads lead to Edmonton. It is only natural that the rural portions be included in the representation of the city of Calgary. That is not a new principle; it is one that has always been recognized. It is a principle that exists at the present time.

There are two Calgary seats, and the hon. gentleman would give one to understand, at least according to the words he uses, that the proposal divides Calgary into three seats, giving the city of Calgary three representatives. That is not the case by any means. Calgary West continues; Calgary East modified continues; and the industrial extreme east end of the city of Calgary forms part of the Bow River constituency. So that when the hon. gentleman tries to make it appear that Calgary is having three seats he is stating what is not correct.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman states that what I said was not correct. What I have said is that the city of Calgary has been divided into three seats by the addition of large areas of rural territory.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not correct.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is correct.

Mr. STANLEY: But that was not what the hon. gentleman said. I do not want the house to get a wrong impression, but if my hon. friend now wishes to correct the statement he made, in accordance with what I have said, then we are starting out on the correct basis.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Everyone understood what I said.

Mr. STANLEY: They understand it now since I have made the correction, and I hope they understood it before, when the hon. gentleman made his incorrect observation. May I point out here that Drumheller and Drumheller valley are engaged in the coal mining industry. It is a large and extensive industry, and the industrial population in that valley approximates 10,000 or more. Operators, labouring men and labour organizations in the valley are engaged directly or indirectly in the coal industry. Now, I think that hon. gentlemen in this house will agree with me that labour and operators engaged in that industry are entitled to some exceptional consideration when it comes to the matter of representation. Decidedly that has been so in the province of Alberta with respect to representation in the provincial legislature. Drumheller Valley has it own representative. I do not know what his particular proclivities are, but I understand he was elected largely by the labour vote. At any rate, they certainly have their own constituency and select their own representative, and I understand that he was elected by a very large majority. He is independent too; he is certainly not attached to either of the old line parties. In the city of Calgary the labour and industrial organizations, occupying almost exclusively the extreme east end of Calgary, have their representative in the house.

Some of us have our ideas as to how the matter should be arranged, and some of us oppose in detail just the particular way in which it is done. But I do not think that within the city of Calgary you will find any opposition among reasonable men to the inclusion of a representative for the city of Calgary for the Labour ranks. Certainly I have no objection, and so it is that the city of Calgary for years past has been represented in the legislature of the province of Alberta by one or more Labour members.

I will leave it to hon. gentlemen and to you, Mr. Chairman, whether there is anything unreasonable or unfair that those engaged in industrial occupations, representing the extreme east end of Calgary, and those engaged in industry, in the way I have indicated in connection with Drumheller and Drumheller valley, should be united in order that they may have a representative in this house. For the life of me I cannot see how any man in this house can stand up in his place and take exception to that reasonable proposition, and least of all can this be done by the hon. gentleman who represents himself as champion of labour from one end of the country to the other. If there is one man I can think of, apart from the two hon. gentlemen from Winnipeg and the hon. member for East Hamilton, if there is one member of this house who has a right to see that Labour gets a fair deal in the matter of representation in this house, I should think it would be the hon. gentleman who speaks so much about the co-operation between the U.F.A. and Labour.

Take this constituency as it is. You have that labour and industrial population in Drumheller and Drumheller valley, and there is the industrial and labour population I have spoken of in the extreme east end of Calgary. May I point out that in the extreme end of which I have spoken you have the Canadian Pacific Railway Ogden shops; the Imperial Oil refineries; the stockyards; and you have flour mills and other kindred industries; and in large part these activities are remote from the rest of the city. As a matter of fact, I am informed that a considerable proportion of it was not in the earlier city and more recently it was decided that it should be included in the city in order to obtain some of the facilities which the city has to offer.

There is the proposal, and that proposal, we decided in the committee, should constitute the Bow River constituency. The hon. gentleman spoke of a fair deal for labour. Allow me to put this to him. Here we have a constituency which is engaged, two to one, in all these industries of which I have spoken, and along with that you have the best organized U.F.A. section in the province of Alberta. I say that without equivocation; there is not a part of Alberta which is better organized, from the U.F.A. standpoint, than the country intervening between the two industrial sections of the proposed Bow River riding. As I said in the committee, if there is anywhere in Canada a proposed seat which will represent the ideals so loudly vaunted by my hon. friends of the C.C.F., it is the constituency of Bow River. If that relationship, that cooperation is real and genuine as my hon. friend would try to make the people believe, then I say that is the constituency which he should accept. I have heard of several ways in which labour in the city of Calgary could be strangled out of representation but I have never heard of a more effectual way than that proposed by the hon. member for Bow River. The city of Calgary can be divided into two constituencies or made into a two-member constituency, where labour would not have a chance in the world. The hon. member represents himself as one of the exponents of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, as one of the great champions of labour, as one who promulgates the spirit of cooperation between the different sections of the country and yet he comes here and when faced with an opportunity of cooperating to the extent of giving them representation in this house, he says it is a gerrymander or something of that kind.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I said no such thing.

Mr. STANLEY: He did not use that word.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not yet.

Mr. STANLEY: Not yet, but no doubt he will. If there is any thing which the hon. gentleman's imagination can express in words, I have no doubt he will do it. His facility of expression, capacity of imagination and ingenuity of argument are altogether beyond me.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): You are far too modest; you are doing very well.

Mr. STANLEY: The hon. gentleman is alone in his serious objection. He stands up in this committee and represents himself as one of those pleading the cause of those who have been used unjustly. He says he is talking for democracy, not for himself at all. I assume he is a democrat to the hilt, whatever a democrat may be. I was reading the other day where the great Lamb asked Lord John Russell what was a democracy. Lord John Russell defined a democracy as the greatest good for the greatest number. Lamb asked what was that greatest number, and the reply was, number one. Unquestionably the hon. gentleman is a democrat to the hilt and he is looking after number one in connection with this constituency. In this case number one is not looking after the interests of labour for whose cause I have been speaking.

The hon. gentleman seems to be particularly anxious to be saved from the friends of the cause he assumes to speak for throughout this country. I have been at labour conventions and I know all about them. May I just tell the hon. gentleman and this committee that labour is not all on one side by any means; labour is not all included in the little official organizations which assume to control it. Labour is the most free in mind and the most free in expression of any people I know of. When labour calls a convention they have a habit of saying just exactly what they want to say and doing just exactly what they want to do. They have a habit of choosing just exactly the candidate they want to choose. I have no doubt that when the labour men of the Drumheller valley and the industrial section of East Calgary meet together, they will do exactly as they want to do and choose the candidate they want to choose. The hon. gentleman may have some fears in that regard. He would like to have a United Farmers of Alberta convention where the official representatives would select a candidate. I know enough about those conventions to say that if I wanted to be sure of the expression of public opinion, I would take the choice of the labour convention. In the province of Alberta there are four or five thousand members of the United Farmers of Alberta and they presume to represent the 175,000 or 200,000 farmers in the province. When they meet in convention to select a farmers' candidate, it is the members of this four thousand group which select the delegates. When a United Farmers of Alberta convention meets in Bow River it is composed of the members of the organization and they select a candidate according to the desires of those who belong to the group. There are possibilities of some difficulty and I have no doubt in the world that the hon. gentleman is sometimes embarrassed with the possibilities of labour interfering in the selection of the candidate in that particular constituency.

I do not think I need bother particularly with the question of residence, outside of saying that the hon. gentleman is now living in Gleichen. Since 1924 he has not lived in his own constituency but he moved last fall to the town of Gleichen. I must confess that that moving was very quietly done. That was quite proper and it was done in such a way that not very many of us knew that he had moved. I shall leave that because the hon. member preferred not to press it as a particular excuse.

He referred to the constituency of Medicine Hat and intimated that the population was much below what it should be and that it should be extended. This extension would have to be northward or westward. If it went northward it would mean going over the large Red Deer river. You would then get into a country which is very thinly populated and which would add very little population to the proposed constituency. If you went westward you would have to take in part of the proposed constituency of Macleod. This would mean crossing the Bow river into territory which has absolutely no relationship in a community way to the constituency of Medicine Hat. The hon. gentleman did not tell us that the extension of Medicine Hat westward including the town to which he referred, was on the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway and took in a thickly populated part of the country together with several larger towns and villages. The hon. gentleman says that those towns are not related to Medicine Hat, that they are closer to Calgary. He is perfectly correct in regard to these towns being closer to Calgary, but if he wants to be fair I think he will be the last one to ask that they should be included in the constituencies of Calgary. That would remove Bow River entirely and it would not overcome the difficulty in which Medicine Hat finds itself. We have taken into the proposed constituency of Medicine Hat a sufficient population to run it up to between 38,000 and 39,000. It is still under the quota but in view of its expanse and the area taken in, the subcommittee and the general committee considered that it was a fair redistribution.

I do not know that I should take up any more time of the committee. The Liberal member of the committee, the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart), together with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), discussed these matters in all fairness and before I sit down I should like to say a word of appreciation of the fairminded way in which the consultations were approached, the fairmindedness of both members in connection with all the questions that were discussed. The hon. member for West Edmonton was agreeable to all the arrangements that were reached, not that he considered that they were the best from his standpoint, but they were acceptable in view of the situation taken as a whole. The hon. member for Peace River was fair enough to say that in general the undertaking in Alberta was just, but that he objected to some details in the outlines in connection with the constituency of Bow River. May I conclude, therefore, by saying that on a mathematical computation, 98 per cent of the boundaries as set out in the constituencies of Alberta was acceptable to the subcommittee and 100 per cent was acceptable to the larger committee.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If this be an illustration of the government's idea of co-operation or of compromise, I submit that it is indeed compromise with a club. The hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Stanley), who has just taken his seat, paid a tribute to the fairness of the subcommittee and, I think, with considerable justice. As a matter of fact I have endeavoured so far to dispossess myself of any particular feeling of possible discouragement or rancour in connection with the matter, and even after the hon. member's speech I do not propose to let myself be led astray into a mere harangue.

That I am, as he suggested at the outset, a lone objector from Alberta, is not correct I explained to the committee, when I opened the question, that our group had discussed this matter on two occasions and that they were unanimously behind me in regard to it. So much for that.

He pointed out that the map I proposed consisted of straight lines and took no recognition of natural boundaries. It no more took straight lines than the old ones did; it no more ignored natural boundaries than the old ones did, and no injustice whatever was done to anyone in connection therewith. I have not had a single complaint except from a tiny corner of the constituency of Macleod immediately where the Bow river enters; they wanted to be included in Bow River. There is not a bridge in that section. That is the only complaint and that is the position with respect to that.

The hon. gentleman furthermore described the community of interest of the northern portion of Bow River with the southern portion of it. His description was so stirring, so plausible, that honestly, I was almost convinced. We were told that Drumheller had no community of interest with the country south of the Bow river. Perhaps it has not, but is community of interest to be a deciding factor? If community of interest is to be the deciding factor, then the coal mining area of the Crowsnest should be joined up with the city of Lethbridge, both of them being coal mining areas. But they do not want that; there are too many labour men there. Just as the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Stewart) would dislike caring for all the Crowsnest wildcats, so the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Stanley) sloughs off the labour fighters of East Calgary; they are too much for him to handle.

Mr. STANLEY: Then why does the hon. gentleman object?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not. What I am objecting to is the absolutely improper character of the redistribution in Calgary itself principally and in this seeking to tie up Strathmore and Gleichen with Medicine Hat, 130 miles from them. Neither of those matters has been adequately dealt with by the hon. gentleman, nor has he successfully defended his action in connection with it. Why does he not tie up Lethbridge with Crowsnest pass which is only 76 miles away and Lethbridge is also a coal mining city? Why not join up the coal mining area if the hon. gentleman is so concerned about the welfare of communities that have a common interest?

Let us take just one other illustration to show how specious and unreliable is the hon. gentleman's argument. He said that the industrial section of East Calgary has some community of interest with the industrial district of Drumheller. Of course it has. This move, were it possible without injustice to Calgary, would be admirable. I have no objection, wherever it is practicable, to joining up industrial communities, but may I ask the hon. gentleman, if community interest is to be a factor; why, when he had a chance to join, has he severed the Imperial Oil Company and other oil holdings in Turner valley from the refinery section of East Calgary? In this case he has taken the refinery section with the refineries, the workers and everything there and sloughed them off into a coal mining area when they might have been joined up with their own oil area. The hon. gentleman was very careful to avoid any reference to why he had given up his natural territory of rural East Calgary? Why did he abandon that and take to himself a new section around Turner valley? I heard it said that this was because of community of interest of Turner valley to East Calgary. If that is logical and reasonable, why slough off the refinery section of East Calgary? No, his argument does not hold water. The hon. gentleman referred in very similar terms to those used by the Prime Minister the other day to Bow River as being the left-over of all the other constituencies. That may have been the case; of course I do not know what happened in the earlier days of Bow River. It has not been there very long, but if it is only the left-over, may I congratulate the hon. member on having now elevated it to sufficient importance to become what I assert it is, virtually a third Calgary seat.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman must admit that he is incorrect in saying that Calgary is divided into three seats. The country for 100 miles west and for twenty miles north is included in West Calgary, and in East Calgary the country twenty miles south is included, so that Calgary cannot be divided into three seats. The territory that goes into Bow River is part of Calgary; it is not three seats in Calgary.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman is quite correct as to areas, but here you have a city with the possibility of getting three representatives as a result of a gerrymander which adds three large areas of rural territory to it.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the hon. member will not mind an interjection, because I am not going to speak on the subject, but he realizes that the country west of Calgary has been most difficult to handle because of an Indian reserve immediately south and on the main line of the Canadian Pacific and since West Calgary became a constituency it is the only one in which that territory can be placed, Banff, Morley and as far west as Lake Louise, at one time as far north as Olds and now as far north as Carstairs. My hon. friend knows the geographical difficulties that cannot be overcome.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I want to be fair and as regards the Prime Minister's seat, I recognize that the action taken in dividing Calgary the way it is, may have actually endangered his seat more than otherwise.

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Whatever has been done in this matter has not been done to the advantage of the Prime Minister. I concede that at once, but what has been done has been to the direct and distinct advantage of the present sitting member for East Calgary. He has deliberately rejected the labour section, for which he speaks himself or pretends to speak. He is deliberately sacrificing that, giving it up and giving up the rural area lying north. Why? Because he wanted to hunt some other safer seat. It is the only explanation. He has not denied it. I wish he would tell the house or the committee why he had to travel south, having abandoned all north, and run into the Macleod riding. He is going to say that it is because of the community of interest between the oil fields down there and the city of Calgary, but gracious, he has already thrown off the direct community of interest by rejecting the refinery section of East Calgary. These arguments don't go.

I was going to say that whilst the Prime Minister himself and the member for East Calgary referred to Bow River as being a left-over, it appears to me that they are now concerned with making it a great deal more than a left-over. They are leaving it in the position, as I submitted a moment ago, of being a part of one of the three Calgary seats. I am not worrying very much about the constituency of Macleod, not in the slightest, but when the hon. gentleman argues that the territory east of the present line and running to the Bow river is a natural part of Macleod because of its excellent unequalled highways, he is speaking of something that he evidently does not know anything about. All the roads running east there are dirt roads, and not highways.

Mr. STANLEY: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I beg my hon. friend's pardon.

Mr. STANLEY: I beg my hon. friend's pardon too.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Outside of the one from the city of Calgary there is not a single highway running into the new portion of the Macleod riding. They are all dirt roads. Heaven knows I have travelled over them enough in the last twelve years to know. Whether it is to Lomond, Retlaw, Vulcan or the rest of them, they are dirt roads, and as for ease of transportation, in all that territory transportation would have to be by car unless you are going by rail, and to get the rail you would have to go to Calgary. In one case you can go north of High River and get the Blackie line, but that is the only point of contact. The lines run north and south, and not across east and west as the hon. gentleman would have led the house to believe. If an election is called in winter time, and we have known elections in winter time, these people, unless happily there is a chinook, are going to have a good deal of difficulty in getting about during the election period. Of course, the argument can be used that all parties will be equally handicapped in that respect.

The hon. member for East Calgary said that they could not or did not want to make up the deficiency in Medicine Hat by adding the over-population from Lethbridge, the adjoining constituency, because he said it would split the Lethbridge Northern and the Canadian Pacific irrigation district. All right; I will agree with him that it would have that effect. But let me take him to what he has done himself. He has split the Canadian Pacific irrigation district which is east of Strathmore and turned it into Medicine Hat. The important part of the Canadian Pacific irrigation system, the greatest irrigation system that I know of in western Canada, is now split and a part of it is turned over to west of Strathmore and part to the east of Strathmore. If arguments like that are going to be used, they should be valid throughout. But instead of that the hon. gentleman puts up an argument just to suit a particular purpose and not for general application, and that kind of an argument is not just.

The hon. member for East Calgary also said that Calgary, being a western city, was not comparable with other cities. I ask him to give just one single instance of any other city, with a population of about 83,000, that is so divided as to form, with the addition of contiguous rural territory, three seats. I ask him to give just one other illustration even under the present bill where such a condition prevails.

My hon. friend at the end of his remarks said something that would have been better left out. He said that as for the U.F.A. conventions, when they were nominating candidates, the officials came there and nominated the candidates.

Mr. STANLEY: I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What did the hon. gentleman say? I do not want to do him any injustice.

Mr. STANLEY: I said that the delegates of the U.F.A. convention were those who were officially members of the association. Perhaps those were not my exact words, but that was their purport.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Ah yes, and it is democratic because each local, scattered, as the hon. gentleman himself has said, over the most highly organized and one of the most efficient U.F.A. districts in Alberta sends its delegate to the convention on the basis of one delegate to every ten members, or minor portion thereof. Each local is entitled to one delegate, and they vote, nominate and decide. The officials have nothing to do with it. The president is in the chamber at the moment and can corroborate what I say. The officials take no part in the constituency nomination or in financing the election of the candidate. It is the most completely democratic representative type of political movement that you have in Canada at this moment, and no one knows it better, if he would only do himself and it justice, than the hon. member for East Calgary.

Further on in the course of his speech the hon. member did disclose one of the underlying objectives. First of all I have alluded to his desire to try and make for himself as safe a seat as possible under the circumstances by getting rid of what he knows is going to be an adverse vote for him in the next election in East Calgary, by getting rid of the rural territory north of Calgary.

But there was another and a deeper motive. He hopes, as was intimated, to split the labour and farmer cooperative forces. He hopes that by getting industrial Drumheller and industrial East Calgary together they will be anxious to nominate a straight Labour candidate, and that the Labour men will vote for the Labour candidate and the farmers will vote for a farmer candidate. That is the hon. gentleman's hope. I personally have no fear in the matter because there is no section in all of Canada in which a finer feeling of cooperation between farmer and Labour groups exists with such completeness as in that very district. As far as I am concerned, the hon. gentleman himself said to me, "What are you objecting to? You will be safer there than in any other seat." He does not deny it.

I am not going to enter into the field of political controversy in this matter. If the government is determined to put through what will look to everybody who looks at the map as a distinct gerrymander of the city of Calgary, if the government is prepared to accept responsibility for that, that is their business. If the government is willing to accept responsibility for dissociating the cities of Strathmore and Gleichen from their natural Calgary interests and the district contiguous thereto, that is their responsibility. I have put in my protest, and in as reasonable a fashion as possible, and with that I rest my case.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Chairman, we have heard from almost every province in the dominion except Ontario. I desire to say a word or two about the redistribution in that province, particularly in western Ontario. I fully realize that a redistribution of seats is a large problem for any government, and from the discussions which have taken place from day to day in this chamber, and perhaps will continue longer, it shows that there is still a great division of opinion as to whether the proposals are fair or unfair. Any remarks I have to make will be more in the way of criticism, particularly with regard to western Ontario.

When the government introduced this bill they apparently had in their minds the thought that they would decrease by four or five seats the representation in the rural sections of the province of Ontario, and that they would add three seats to the city of Toronto and the one or two remaining seats to some other point in the province. I want to warn the government, if they have not already been sufficiently warned, that cutting out rural representation and adding more seats to the city of Toronto will not help to quiet the unrest which abounds throughout the country. This is a very dangerous time to go ahead with any such scheme. I am fully conscious of the growth of the population of the city of Toronto. The Prime Minister speaking the other day said that if Montreal had its fair proportion of seats it would have twenty-four.

Mr. BENNETT: No, not its fair proportion,—if it had its proportion on the basis of the unit of population.

Mr. SANDERSON: I said fair proportion, and I know that is what the right hon. gentleman had in his mind.

Mr. BENNETT: No, because we had agreed there should be a higher quota for city than for country constituencies, for that very reason, namely that the old doctrine of representation by population was being departed from.

Mr. SANDERSON: Yes. By following the unit of population Montreal would have twenty-four members. I have often watched hon. members from the city of Toronto, and it always appears to me that the greatest difficulties they have in reaching the House of Commons are those of securing nomination. That is where they have their elections; that is where they have their difficulties; that is where they have their worries. Having received the nomination they are practically elected.

Mr. MORAND: Conservative nomination.

Mr. SANDERSON: Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Tory Toronto.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am speaking particularly about the Conservative members from the city of Toronto. I am glad to say that there is one Liberal member from that city and while I do not wish to make any prophecies as to what will happen in a future election, I would go as far as to say that after the next general election, whenever it comes, there will be four or five Liberal members from that city.

Mr. MORAND: Hope springs eternal.

Mr. SANDERSON: That will be the result, despite the gerrymandering, if you wish so to term it, which is going on in the province of Ontario, and the effort to deplete and take away from the farmers their proper representation, thereby increasing the representation of the city of Toronto from nine members to eleven members. We have heard the statement that members from the province of Ontario are satisfied with the proposals which have been made and which, in the course of a day or two, will be brought down in the redrafted bill. I wish to say however that so far as I am concerned—and I believe I voice the views of many other Liberal members from the province of Ontario—I am not at all satisfied with the arrangements which have been made, despite the fact the statement is made that everything has been agreed upon and that it will go through without protest. It shall not go through without my first registering a criticism and protest against it, no matter whether it has been agreed upon or not.

My criticism applies to western Ontario. The proposal is to go into three historic counties of Ontario, namely, Bruce, Perth and Oxford, and to eliminate one seat from each of those counties. I do not know that I have any objection to the union of counties, where population and areas warrant only one representative. That procedure may be proper, if it were done fairly and with a spirit of justice. I wish to speak concerning that part of the county of Perth which I have the honour of representing, namely South Perth. The proposal is to unit the two constituencies in the county of Perth into one seat. But that is not the proposition which will come before this House of Commons. The proposal which will come before us is to unite North Perth and South Perth, with the exception of two townships. It is suggested that if these historic townships are left in the constituency the population of Perth will be too high. That is the excuse given.

Let me point out what the provincial government has done in their redistribution of the county of Perth. Apparently they thought Perth had not sufficient population. They united South Perth and everything in South Perth with everything in North Perth, and by some process of elimination or of moving through the air or under the ground they have added the town of Palmerston in South Wellington to the county of Perth, increasing the population one way and proposing to decrease it in another. There is only one reason for taking the townships of Hibbert and Fullarton out of South Perth and putting them into South Huron. It was done for political purposes, to weaken the Liberal candidate who will run for the county of Perth in the next federal election. There was only one reason why the provincial government took from another county the town of Palmerston and added it to the county of Perth; it was done to load the dice, to stack the cards.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to refer briefly to the political history of the county of Perth, showing that from 1867 right down to the present day North Perth—not altogether consistently, but almost consistently—has elected a Conservative to the House of Commons; and you will find that South Perth has done exactly the opposite, that since 1867 South Perth has voted Liberal with the exceptions of 1911 and 1917, 1911 being the famous reciprocity election, and 1917 the war time election. I want to read to the house the record of the general elections in North Perth:

Year—	Party	Majority
1867	Liberal	208
1872	Conservative	56
1874	Conservative	163
1878	Conservative	83
1882	Conservative	252
1887	Conservative	200
1891	Liberal	71
1896	Conservative	46
1900	Conservative	280
1904	Conservative	320
1908	Liberal	41
1911	Conservative	407
1917	Conservative	1,868
1921	Liberal	756
1925	Conservative	661
1926	Liberal	640
1930	Conservative	863

I would like now to put on the record the results of general elections in South Perth from 1867 to 1930:

Year—	Party	Majority
1867	Liberal	97
1872	Liberal	427
1874	Liberal	*
1878	Liberal	77

* By acclamation.

Year—	Party	Majority
1882—	Liberal	179
1887—	Liberal	93
1891—	Liberal	177
1896—	Liberal	218
1900—	Liberal	10
1904—	Liberal	144
1908—	Liberal	29
1911—	Conservative	82
1917—	Unionist	57
1921—	Liberal	261
1925—	Liberal	414
1926—	Liberal	515
1930—	Liberal	717

My point is that in uniting South Perth with North Perth the government should have been fair enough to take the chance on the record of the elections even going back to 1867. It is a horse race, it is practically a tie, a neck and neck race, in South Perth and in North Perth. But they are not fair enough to take all that comprises South Perth; they take out two townships with a population of over 3,000 and add them to South Huron. Now what is the reason for that; what is the explanation? Is it not to handicap the Liberal candidate when he runs in the whole county of Perth and give an advantage to the Conservative candidate? That is not fair. It cannot be defended in any way, mathematically or geographically. I would like hon. members to look at the map of the county of Perth. It will be seen that what they propose to do is deliberately to reach over the fence and take two historic townships which have been in South Perth since confederation, for purely political purposes to take them out of Perth county and put them in another county. I want to be perfectly fair and candid about this matter; there is not a Liberal in South Perth who would be opposed to the joining of the whole of South Perth with the whole of North Perth, making one seat for the county and taking their chance, win or lose. But in this way the government and the committee are taking an unjust advantage, doing an injustice to the Liberal party and the Liberal candidate, whoever he may be. There is no justification for it in respect of population, as I propose to show.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, in order that we may deal with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 71, an act to amend the criminal code, about which we have had a good deal of discussion, I propose to move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again in order that the Speaker may take the chair so that we may send a message to their honours for the purpose of enabling the Senate to reconsider the amendment. I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

NON-CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house disagrees with their amendment to Bill No. 71, an act to amend the criminal code, for the following reasons: "Because the deletion of subsection 3 of section 3 makes the whole section 3 not sufficiently effective."

That the clerk of the house do carry the said message to the Senate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is my hon. friend going to do about it now?

Mr. DUPRE: The bill comes back to us after having been amended by the Senate. Section 3 is the section that deals with irrebuttable presumption, and it is struck out; therefore the whole section 3 becomes practically inoperative. I have reason to believe that a new amendment will be proposed in the Senate, I hope in the course of the day, which will acceptable to this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope my hon. friend is correct in his surmise, because if he is not I am afraid the bill will be worn out travelling back and forth so often.

Mr. STEVENS: It is printed on good paper.

Mr. BENNETT: For the information of the right hon. gentleman I may say that the question of the surroundings of children has received careful attention on the part of the Social Service Council, and Mr. Macdonald of Toronto, the chairman, has interested himself greatly in the matter, in consequence of a decision of the court of appeal of Ontario which held that the statute was to be so construed as to make it almost impossible for conviction to be secured. It is proposed to provide as a compromise to the original proposals passed by the house that the magistrate shall exercise discretion in the first instance, and if he decides, upon the findings, that the condition is likely to have an injurious effect on the moral character of the child, then that shall, for the purposes of the trial of the accused, be regarded as an irrebuttable presumption, and the accused will then be confronted with the necessity of proving by adequate testimony that immoral surroundings do not exist.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am in accord with the Prime Minister with respect to the bill and I hope that the amendment to which he refers will carry.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

The house again in committee on Bill No. 2, to readjust the representation in the House of Commons—Right Hon. R. B. Bennett—Mr. Stirling in the chair.

Mr. SANDERSON: When the committee rose at one o'clock I was putting some figures on the record in regard to the population of Perth county. Under the last census the population of the entire county of Perth is about 51,000, and the proposal is to take out the townships of Hibbert and Fullarton from South Perth and add them to South Huron, which would bring the population down to about 47,816. The population of Oxford, if it goes into one seat, will be 47,825. The Prime Minister, in correcting me this morning with reference to what had been said in regard to the claim that Montreal might ask for 24 seats, said that the unit of population was not always a factor in redistribution. With that I agree.

Mr. BENNETT: It was hardly put that way—not always the only factor.

Mr. SANDERSON: I accept the correction. I am going to attempt to show what the position is with regard to the population of some of the other constituencies that are left untouched by this redistribution, and I am speaking only of the province of Ontario. It is proposed now to take the town of Clinton and the township of Goderich from South Huron and put them into North Huron. I mention it now only to show how the figures will work out. If that is done it will make the population 26,095 in what will be the riding of North Huron after the redistribution. In regard to the proposal to take the two townships of Hibbert and Fullarton from South Perth and put them into South Huron, with the town of Clinton and the township of Goderich taken from South Huron and put into North Huron, and two townships from South Perth put into South Huron, it will have the effect of giving South Huron a population of 19,085. That appears to be a low figure, and it is. I would point out however that in the province of Ontario there are some constituencies that are lower than that and they are not being touched by this redistribution. For instance, there is the constituency of Glengarry, with a population of 18,666; there is Haldimand, 21,428; and there is Brant, 21,202. These are all represented in this house at the present time by supporters of the government. And when we come to analyze some of the counties where there is only one member we find that the population far exceeds the population that Perth will have under this plan of redistribution. Perth, with the two townships out, the townships to which I have referred, would be 47,816. We have Lincoln, represented by one member, with a population of 54,199; there is Welland, represented by one member, with a population of 82,731; and there is Nipissing, also represented by one member, with a population of 70,204.

I quite agree with the Prime Minister therefore that the unit of population is not always the only factor in redistribution. I hope I have the right hon. gentleman correct this time. There are many constituencies far below the unit and many far above, and I know it is quite difficult to deal with this redistribution and balance the units of population.

I come back now to my own county of South Perth. In regard to the joining of the two Perths, I say again, as I said before the adjournment at one o'clock, that I have absolutely no fault to find with this proposal. As a matter of fact, I am and always have been in favour of it. The constituency of South Perth is low in population, less than 18,000. Yet under this bill it is proposed to take away almost 3,500 of population. I have always been under the impression that there was only one fair way in which to effect a redistribution in my riding. That was by joining the whole of the Perths together. There is no reason for taking two townships out of South Perth. It is an injustice to the people who live in those townships.

Let me enlarge on that for a moment. This morning the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Stanley) spoke about the community spirit. I quite agree with what he said. These two townships have been in South Perth ever since confederation and it is now proposed to move them to South Huron. I know that in some cases these matters cannot be adjusted but the only equitable and fair way to make an adjustment here is to leave these two townships where they have been since 1867. I know that it will probably be said that on the basis of the 1926 and 1930 elections there was not very much difference between the Liberal vote in South Perth and the Conservative vote in North Perth. The figures for the 1930 election show that in North Perth the Conservative candidate was elected by a majority of 863 while in South Perth I had a majority of 717. Without taking out these two townships, the Conservative candidate would have an advantage of 146. This goes to prove the statement which I made this morning that since confederation the elections in the two Perths have been more or less of a horse race. But under this bill they do not propose to leave it that way, they propose to take out the townships of Hibbert and Fullarton. In the 1930 election the township of Hibbert gave me a majority of 245 and the township of Fullarton, a majority of 45. This makes a total of 290, which added to 146 will give the Conservative candidate in the next election an advantage of 436. Some hon. members opposite may say that that does not amount to very much. But why disturb South Perth at all? Why not leave it as it is so that there will be an even break between the south and the north, so that the next candidate may have a fair show and a fair run?

I have no desire to delay this committee nor do I want to break any agreement which may have been made. I am perfectly willing at all times to take a sporting chance, but there has been no justification for disturbing townships in South Perth. I have always been under the impression that county boundaries should be adhered to as far as possible in making a redistribution. If that principle were followed we would have a different picture to-day in western Ontario. Bruce county would be one seat and the same with Huron, Oxford, Middlesex and perhaps many other counties in the province. I am of the opinion that one hon. member is quite sufficient to represent a whole county in the House of Commons. I am sorry the Prime Minister has vacated his seat as I had a plea to make. I do not want to be misunderstood in making this protest. There has been an agreement arrived at and it may be said that I was a party to that agreement. But it cannot be an agreement when one has given his consent under pressure. If the agreement is not fair there is no reason why this committee could not adjust it and make it fair. I am asking for no special privileges, I ask simply for fair play. It will not be fair unless the whole county goes into one seat. If the committee in its judgment decides that there shall be no change, let it go at that but I am inclined to think that the good farmers of South Perth and North Perth will resent the fact that the whole county has not been joined together and that townships have been taken away. I think they will come to the same conclusion as I have, that an unfair advantage is being given to my opponent.

If the county of Perth were made into one riding it would make one of the largest rural ridings in the province of Ontario. It would be a rural riding inferior to none in the whole province. There would also be large manufacturing interests in the riding. The city of Stratford is a divisional point of the Canadian National Railways and there are about seven or eight hundred railway employees. The railway vote in Stratford has always been the deciding vote in an election. There will be the towns of St. Mary's, Mitchell and Tavistock, as well as six or seven smaller villages. I ask only for fair play in this matter; I ask that these two townships which have been in the riding since 1867 be not interfered with. If that were conceded there could be no criticism. There cannot be any criticism where justice is rendered, but there can be and will be severe criticism if injustice is done and the whole of South Perth is not included in this amalgamation with North Perth.

I want to say this about my good friend the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol): I have no fault to find with him. He has had a very difficult task to perform in this redistribution in Ontario. He has had many problems that must have been on his mind day and night. He has always been very courteous and fair with me any time we have had any conversation and I appeal to him as one coming from the city of Toronto and as one who, once he gets his nomination, is, as I said this morning, elected. He does not know what an election contest is; he has no handicaps; it is only a question of a majority or of thousands of a majority in the city of Toronto. I ask him to put himself in my position to-day. Will he be a party to handicapping me or any other gentleman who happens to be the Liberal candidate in Perth? Be fair about this. Never mind about these agreements if they are unjust. Now is the time to remedy that; now is the time for this committee to put itself on record and I appeal especially to hon. gentlemen opposite to be fair in regard to joining the two Perths. I say again that I am not pleading for any advantage; I am pleading only for justice, fair play, an even break and a chance for the Liberal party in the next general election in the county of Perth.

Mr. MacNICOL: I want to thank the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson), who has just taken his seat, for the very kind remarks which he has made in reference to the committee and myself. I can also say that all my negotiations and those of the committee—and I think I can speak for all the committee in this regard—with all the Ontario members have at all times been on the same plane on which the hon. member was so kind as to say I had negotiated with him on behalf of the other members of the committee.

I suppose I ought to be very careful in what I am now going to say because I may be treading on dangerous ground. Private members cannot make any prophecies or references as to what may be done in the future. The situation referred to by the hon. gentleman was, as he knows, not in our original picture. I am not going to refer to any reasons for changing the original picture; I suppose throughout the country many original pictures were changed, but in the final picture a situation resulted that I must confess we tried to avoid from the beginning. I believe all the members of the Ontario committee set out with the object of affording each hon. member an opportunity to return to his riding in so far as the redistribution was concerned. I am happy to say that with the exception of only the hon. member representing South Perth and the hon. member representing North Perth (Mr. Wright), every member from Ontario will have a free contest, one might call it, for election without being in opposition to anyone now in the house. The situation is that in the picture which finally resulted, in one lone riding my two good friends the hon. member for South Perth and the hon. member for North Perth may be nominated in opposition to each other in the next contest. The hon. member for North Perth does not desire this situation any more than does the hon. member for South Perth. We did not have to change the riding of the hon. member for North Perth so far as population went because he had approximately 34,000 and at the commencement we did not propose to alter it. Naturally he has a very strong case on which to oppose this bill, but I hope he does not do so; I hope he will accept it just as it is. In the next contest he appears destined to be up against one of the ablest members opposite, certainly one of the best speakers in the country, a thoroughly experienced organizer and a man with a great prestige in the western part of Ontario. I am sympathetic towards my warm friend the hon. member for North Perth because he will have a contest on his hands.

Mr. POULIOT: Give him a divine mandate.

Mr. MacNICOL: What I started out to say a moment or two ago was this: After the next general election, if all the prophecies my hon. friend, the member for South Perth, has been making about the result of the next election come true, if he is elected he will then be sitting behind the then prime minister. If he is not elected and his prophecy in regard to the success of his party comes true, he will be the defeated candidate in that riding. If I am not treading on ground I should not tread upon, perhaps the then prime minister will appoint him to a safe seat in the Senate if he will accept it.

Mr. SANDERSON: Will my hon. friend permit me? I made no prophecies about the coming election except in regard to Toronto and I said that I thought in that city, after the next election, perhaps three or four Liberals would be returned to this house. I never make prophecies.

Mr. MacNICOL: Not in the speech the hon. member has just made, I quite agree with that, but in many prophecies in former speeches. I want to speak in the same courteous manner as my hon. friend did, because I do not want to raise animosities as they get us nowhere. With the other members of the committee I want to see the whole Ontario schedule go through, but I should like to refer to a few figures in connection with those presented by my hon. friend. The present picture so far as the three ridings that are proposed for the counties of Perth and Huron are concerned, will be as follows:

Constituency—	Population
Perth	47,816
North Huron	26,095
Huron-Perth	22,661

We had to have some ratio of population to go by as a basis for these ridings and on examining the tables we found that in the proposed riding of Perth there is contained in the city of Stratford, the town of Listowel, the town of St. Mary's and the town of Mitchell—I am not sure whether it is a town, but I will give it that distinction anyway—a total of 25,808, or an urban population of over one-half of the new riding with a population of 47,816.

In connection with North Huron with a population of 26,095, there is an urban population of 6,239 and in Huron-Perth, with a population of 22,656, there is an urban population of 3,352. That strikes me as pretty fair ratios of population for those three ridings. One of them, that is Huron-Perth, is almost entirely rural. The riding of North Huron is not as largely rural as Huron-Perth, having twice the latter's urban population, and therefore it should have a larger unit than Huron-Perth. The riding of Perth itself, being over fifty per cent urban, should have a larger population than either of the other two. The fact that the city of Stratford has a population of 17,742, in the riding of Perth entitles that riding to a considerable larger unit of population for representation in this house.

As far as the townships are concerned the riding of Perth will have eight townships and four urban municipalities; North Huron nine townships and three urban municipalities; Huron-Perth eight townships and one small urban municipality; it therefore is much more rural than either of the other two.

The hon. member for South Perth has referred to Toronto. I shall give a few figures with regard to the city of Toronto, not with a view to criticizing what has been said at all, but simply to show that the city of Toronto has a very substantial unit for each of its members. Under the last redistribution there were twelve members for the county of York and the city of Toronto, which together may be called urban, the unit being 53,970. As a result of the present redistribution each of the 15 members proposed for the county of York including the city of Toronto will have a unit of 57,537, or approximately 4,000 more than after the last redistribution.

Taking it in another way, at the census of 1921 the two counties of Huron and Perth had a population of 97,731, and returned four members, so that the average unit was 24,443 as compared with the unit for the entire province of 35,776, which gives a percentage of 68. As a result of the present redistribution Huron and Perth will have a combined population of 96,572, and will return three members, giving a unit of 32,191 or 72 per cent of the unit of 44,186 for the entire province.

The counties of Bruce and Grey have been mentioned. There again we have reduced the number of ridings from four to three. In the redistribution of 1921 the counties of Bruce and Grey had a combined population of 103,786, and returned four members, giving a unit of 25,946, or 72 per cent of the average of 35,776. Under the present redistribution these two counties will have a combined population of 99,985, and will return three members, giving a unit of 33,328, or 74 per cent of the unite of 44,186 for the entire province.

Under the present redistribution there will only be a few counties left in all Ontario that will have their own boundaries as the boundaries of their new ridings. That gives the house some idea of the changes that have had to be made throughout Canada as a result of the increase in the population of the province of Quebec, which population, as hon. gentlemen know, is divided by sixty-five, representing its representation in this house, in order to give the unit for all Canada. In my opinion that is one of the saving clauses of the British North America Act. If it were not for that clause this house would likely be twice its present size. I believe this country is over-governed to-day. By that I mean that there are altogether too many members of parliament, senators, legislative councillors and members of legislatures. To put it in another way, too many men are engaged in the government of Canada and its provinces. That saving clause in the British North America Act I hope will never be removed.

The counties of Brant, Durham, Elgin, Glengarry, Haldimand, Essex, Wentworth, Welland, Lincoln, Lanark, Middlesex, Norfolk, Northumberland, Leeds, Prescott, Peel, Halton, Renfrew, York and Waterloo are the only counties in this province to-day that it is not proposed to associate under this redistribution with other counties, and I doubt if in the next redistribution there will be more than two or three counties in that category.

Something has been said about the counties having a smaller population as the result of the present redistribution, but under the present redistribution the following rural communities will have a larger unit than the county of Perth, namely, Nipissing, Welland, Wentworth, East York, West York, South York, Waterloo and Kent.

Reverting to what was said about the cities, the city population has very considerably increased since the last redistribution. Brantford has increased in population by approximately one thousand, but its representation has not been increased. Fort William has increased by approximately six thousand, and the increases in other cities have been as follows:

City—	Increase of population
Hamilton East	12,538
Hamilton West	3,051
Kingston	2,076
London	5,183
Ottawa	13,730
Peterborough	1,233
Port Arthur	4,932
Windsor	24,517
Toronto	115,344
York	99,976
Nipissing	15,033

In view of its increased population the city of Toronto will receive two more members under the present redistribution and the county of York one additional member, Toronto's population having increased by 115,000 and York's by approximately 100,000. Those are the only two in the above list of Ontario urban centres that will receive increased representation.

I want to say that the committee did work hard. They tried to give an opportunity to every member from Ontario, and they tried to maintain the county boundaries wherever possible, but that could not be done in every case. Every member of the committee regretted that in the end we had to do what we finally did in connection with Perth, and Huron, but I cannot see that there is anything else to do. If you make the county of Perth a one-member constituency you would then have two adjacent counties, one of which will have a population of 51,392, returning one member, and the other with 45,180, returning two members. That would hardly be fair to either the county of Huron or the county of Perth. So we had to put them together. All we could do was to strengthen North Huron in population, and we did that by adding two municipalities to North Huron, bringing its population up to 26,095, and then we took two townships in Perth South adjacent to Huron and added them to Huron-Perth, making the latter's population 22,656. I agree that that is a small population. Under this redistribution there is one riding left in the province of Ontario which will have a population of only 18,000 odd. I am not going into that question now. Under the previous redistribution there were also a number of ridings with a very small population. Generally speaking, the unit in Ontario has been raised. Although I have not the figures before me there are more ridings as proposed in Ontario to-day close to and over the unit than there were as the result of the last redistribution. I am not criticizing those in charge of the previous redistribution. There is no doubt that hon. members at that time met the same difficulties as those with which we are confronted and no doubt they had to do the best they could. We endeavoured to do our best, and could do only what we did. As a result of the last redistribution ten or twelve members had to contest in five or six seats. The committee which acted at this session I believe may look with a feeling of satisfaction upon the fact that of the eighty-two Ontario seats there is only one in which we had to place two men now in the house. If the whole of Perth county had been put together South Huron would have been left with a population of less than 20,000, and we would not have been acting fairly to the county of Perth. I cannot help thinking that we have done our best.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

None of us claims that the redistribution is perfect. I say to-day as I have stated before that until we have legislation to conform to that of many other countries, and to that of two provinces in Canada, namely Nova Scotia and Ontario, in which legislation has been enacted stating a minimum unit of population per riding, there will always be some anomalies. I believe however that there have been fewer this time than on any previous occasion, and that the redistribution in the province of Ontario will result in fewer heartburnings than any previous redistribution has caused.

May I close by stating that the hon. member for South Perth and the hon. member for North Perth have both been very kind in what they have said about the redistribution since they have known what is proposed. Neither has been harsh in his criticism. Both have acted like real men. I am sure, that they realized the committee had a very difficult task, and that it did the best it could.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say only a word or two in reply to the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol). He has compared the population in the two Hurons with the population in the two Perths. I do not wish my remarks to be misinterpreted when I point out that the proposal is to take the town of Clinton, which has voted Conservative by a good sized majority, and the township of Goderich, which is largely Conservative, and both of which are now in South Huron, and place them in North Huron constituency. Then, after taking out the town of Clinton and the township of Goderich, in order to adjust the population it is proposed to take these two townships from one riding and put them into South Huron. That constituency is Liberal, and has been Liberal for years. In that instance the committee has used a double edged sword. It is endeavouring to build up a stronger riding for the hon. member representing North Huron (Mr. Spotton). But on the other hand by shifting these two townships into South Huron, the committee has endeavoured to weaken the Liberal candidate in the county of Perth.

I shall offer a solution to the hon. member from Toronto. If he accepts my suggestion in the spirit in which I offer it he can leave North Huron as it is. If this suggestion were adopted rather than the proposed scheme the difference in population would be only a few hundred. The hon. member for North Huron has come through two or three elections successfully, and I feel sure he need not be afraid of the result. Surely he can come back again. Then the committee could leave South Huron just as it is, there would be no fault to find and the question of population would be adjusted. There would be in each riding of North and South Huron a population of almost 23,000, and the two townships would be left in South Perth as they are at the present time. By accepting my suggestion no one would be adversely affected. Justice would be done not only to the hon. member for North Huron but to the hon. member for South Huron and to myself. Neither would there be any injustice done the hon. member for North Perth. My suggestion is very simple, and would not be very difficult to put into operation. It would adjust this whole grievance.

The hon. member for Toronto Northwest has not given and I suggest he cannot give or will not give the real reason why the townships of Hibbert and Fullarton should be moved from South Perth into South Huron. The only reason is that it would give an advantage to hon. members opposite. Give us an even break on this. Treat us fairly, and you can adjust this matter in five minutes in the way I have pointed out.

Mr. H. B. SHORT (Digby-Annapolis): For several days we have been listening to a discussion among hon. members from Saskatchewan, Quebec and Ontario. I propose now to say a few words about Nova Scotia. As hon. members are aware, on account of the redistribution, Nova Scotia was obliged to lose two members. And to preserve county lines I have been given a constituency with a population of 50,859. Previous to the last census my constituency had a population of 34,650. It is composed of the counties of Digby and Annapolis. When we realized it was necessary to lose two seats in the province of Nova Scotia, one on the island of Cape Breton and the other on the mainland those people familiar with the map of Nova Scotia expected the counties of Colchester and Pictou would have to be joined. Colchester was the smallest county in the province, having a population of only 25,051. We naturally expected, those of us in the western part of the province, that that constituency would be joined with Pictou and Cumberland. There was another way it might have been divided. There is the county of Antigonish-Guysborough, represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Duft) and having a population of only 25,560. That adjoins the county of Pictou. There was a suggestion put before the committee that the county of Pictou be divided and half joined with Antigonish-Guysborough, which would bring that constituency up to the unit number, and let the western part of Pictou county take on Colchester. But the committee did not accept this proposal, they preferred to keep the county lines, which I realize are very highly regarded in my province. We have not yet, I think, in any redistribution disturbed county lines except in my county of Digby where they have been disturbed in practically every redistribution. We have in the county of Digby two municipalities, Digby and Clare, which latter is composed of Acadian French, having their own municipal council. In 1911 that municipality was joined with Yarmouth. In the redistribution of 1924 Clare was taken away from Yarmouth and rejoined with Digby-Annapolis. I felt and still feel that I am being legislated out of my seat in the constituency of Digby-Annapolis. I feel that there was another way in which the seats in Nova Scotia could have been redistributed. However, I realize that when these redistributions take place someone has to make sacrifices. My turn has come, and I suppose I shall have to make the best of it. However, I do not like it and I protest against it most vigorously. Personally I feel it very keenly, and more keenly on behalf of my constituents and those who come after me, because it is going to make it utterly impossible for a Conservative to win that seat. Whatever my friends from Ontario and Saskatchewan and Quebec may say about everything in this redistribution having been done for the advantage of the Conservative party, I want to say that as far as Nova Scotia is concerned every advantage has been given to our Liberal friends. As I say, they take the municipality of Clare and join it to Yarmouth which has always given a Liberal majority. In the last three elections I am happy to say I reduced the Liberal majority very materially, and we have almost broken even; however it has been traditionally Liberal since confederation. That district is given to my hon. friend the member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), making his majority the greater. I have had attached to my constituency the county of Kings, which has 24,357 population. It has given a Liberal majority since confederation, with just two exceptions. In the last election the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) had a majority in Kings county of over 900. I feel that I would be lax in my duty to my constituents if I did not make a protest in connection with the redistribution in Nova Scotia.

This constituency in length is 145 miles. It is in one of the most thickly populated districts of Nova Scotia, the Annapolis valley.

It has a coast line of some 200 miles. It has seven incorporated towns. So you can readily see that it is going to be a big job for any one man to take care of a constituency such as that.

Every time a redistribution has taken place in Nova Scotia it has been done in the western part, the eastern part has never been affected. Always everything has been given to the eastern part. The western part of Nova Scotia is entitled to just as much consideration in redistribution as the eastern part. That is another reason why I enter my protest in connection with the way my seat has been dealt with.

I object also to the name. They have named this seat Evangeline. Evangeline was made famous by Longfellow. It is a name that is famous in Nova Scotia.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Is it made infamous by small fellows?

Mr. POULIOT: You are a long fellow yourself!

Mr. SHORT: It is all right for poetry and tradition but I do not think it is a proper name for a constituency. I am therefore going to suggest to the committee that they change the name to Digby-Annapolis-Kings, so that the identity of the three counties will not be lost. I think that is only right. I am also going to suggest that the constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth, which is having Clare added to it, should have the name Clare included. Clare, as I said before, is an entirely Acadian French district, they are very proud of their history and traditions, and for that reason I ask the committee that the name Clare be included in the name of the seat.

I do not know that there is any further protest that I need to make; I just want to state in closing that I am very much opposed to the manner in which my seat has been redistributed. I feel that an injustice has been done to that part of the province.

Mr. R. K. SMITH (Cumberland): Mr. Chairman, I feel it necessary to reply briefly to the remarks of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis. Due to the reduction of two seats in Nova Scotia the redistribution problem there became one of extreme difficulty, surrounded by intricacies. Of necessity some sacrifice had to be made in rearranging county lines to make the necessary reduction. The island of Cape Breton was pretty well agreed to as between the other members of the committee and myself, and I do not feel it necessary to dwell on that phase at this moment. Later I wish to refer to the comparative length of a constituency there, in reply to the remarks made by the hon. member regarding the length of his new riding.

Now, with respect to the mainland of Nova Scotia, Colchester being in the centre of the province was the pivotal point from which we had to approach the solution of the problem. The population of Colchester is roughly, 25,000, and it was felt that we should concentrate our attention on Colchester in a manner that would be satisfactory to the people there, as well as just to the other bordering constituencies, some of which would be affected in whatever rearrangement was made. Three different proposals were considered. It was proposed to divide Colchester county, throwing one half into Pictou and the other half into Cumberland. That would mean the complete elimination of Colchester. It would mean throwing the people of Colchester county, at least part of them, into Pictou, notwithstanding that their general interests were not common; the community interests of each are as far apart as one could possibly imagine. The same applies to the other half which would have been thrown into Cumberland. Consequently the committee opposed it, and the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) agreed with me that it would not be fair to divide Colchester, eliminating it completely. That proposal was therefore put to one side. The next proposal was put forward by the hon. member for Hants-Kings, namely, that the county of Pictou be practically split in two, and one half of the population and area thrown into Antigonish-Guysborough, which would bring the county of Antigonish-Guysborough up to approximately 45,000, the other half in with Colchester, making the second constituency out of the existing three. That again would mean the complete obliteration—yes, the complete elimination of Pictou county, that fine old Scottish county with their high pride of ancestry and tradition. The population according to the last census, is over 39,000, and the proposal would have meant throwing these people of Pictou into other constituencies with whom they had nothing in common; and whose interests were as far removed as the poles. I did not think it was fair; I did not think it would be just to divide Pictou county throwing one half into the county of Antigonish-Guysborough and the other half into Colchester. With respect to county boundaries, it would have split in two a county which is a municipal entity; it would have disrupted the county lines federally, provincially and municipally. It would have been a most disturbing and far reaching change. That proposal was submitted by the hon.

member for Hants-Kings, and I felt I could not agree to it, and I am convinced to-day that I was right. The third proposal was to treat the county of Colchester as a unit, linking it with the county of Hants, making a population of 44,444—five fours—which is approximately the unit of representation, taking the rest of Hants-Kings, namely, the county of Kings, and joining it to the constituency of Digby-Annapolis and cutting off the municipality of Clare from the western end of Digby-Annapolis and throwing it into Shelburne-Yarmouth, which would leave the constituency that has been named Evangeline. That is the name given it by the committee but it can be changed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is a beautiful name.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): That would leave the constituency of Digby-Annapolis and Kings with complete counties containing people of common interests maintaining their county and municipal lines with the exception of the municipality of Clare.

In effect, all that has happened to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis is this. He has had a small portion cut off the western end of his constituency, namely, Clare, and he has had a larger portion added to the eastern end, namely, Kings. It is unfortunate, I admit, that this constituency is larger than desirable in population and area, and no one regrets it more than I do, but we had to come to that conclusion under the circumstances. Somebody in the province of Nova Scotia had to get hurt in this redistribution; someone had to make a sacrifice, and in the layout and recasting that presented itself to me I felt that the sacrifice would have to be made where recommended.

With respect to the length of the new constituency, my hon. friend said that it was 140 miles—he says now, 145. Well, according to the official map, leaving out that portion comprising Long Island and Digby Neck, the length of his new constituency as the crow flies is only about 100 miles.

Mr. SHORT: Not by the main highway.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): By comparison, as regards the length of the constituency, I would refer the hon. gentleman to the constituency represented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), which has been stretched out to the extent of 220 miles. I would refer him also to the constituency of Inverness. These two constituencies combined have a length of 220 miles as the crow flies. I do not think therefore that my hon. friend has very much to complain about in that regard.

The hon. gentleman says he is being legislated out of his seat. There has been a lot of talk in this chamber within the last few days with regard to political majorities, and comparisons have been made between parties' standing, and no doubt this is important and significant. But we were up against a problem in Nova Scotia that had to be dealt with on a higher plane, a problem that had to be approached from the point of view of principle and ideals, and we could not take into consideration the question of party advantage one way or the other, because the problem did not lend itself to that sort of treatment, nor could we have solved it either on the island of Cape Breton or on the mainland if we started out on the premise that we had to carve constituencies in Nova Scotia with an eye to seeking political advantage one way or the other, either for the Conservative or for the Liberal party.

I do not know that there is much more I have to say except this. The hon. gentleman speaks about the large population of his constituency, and as I said it is regrettable that it is so large under the present arrangement; and he complains about the small population in the constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough. In 1924 when the unit of representation in the dominion was slightly over 36,000, a constituency was formed in the province of Nova Scotia containing a population of slightly over 17,000, less than one-half the unit of representation. On the other hand, there was another constituency formed containing three times that population. In the province of New Brunswick we have a constituency with less than 22,000, another one containing over 60,000 and a second one very close to 60,000. In the province of Quebec there are a good many rural constituencies containing well over 50,000 and a half dozen or so containing under 22,000. In the province of Ontario there is the urban-rural constituency of Welland containing 83,000; there are others with 60,000 and 70,000 and many under 22,000. There is an anomaly in the province of Nova Scotia the same as there is in New Brunswick, the same as there is in Quebec and Ontario, and I assume in every other province of the dominion. It would be impossible to deal with the questions dealt with in this and past redistributions without having anomalies. They are impossible to overcome under the procedure followed in the past and which is being followed to-day.

Mr. I. D. MACDOUGALL (Inverness): Mr. Chairman, in my humble judgment we have had an unduly and unnecessarily protracted debate on this redistribution bill. Had I any selfish motive to serve I would not continue this discussion for a single moment. When I rise to say a few words I do so in no small, petty, party sense. Like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), I have had added to my constituency about 110 miles of coastline. I am not quarrelling with that because in Nova Scotia we have not forgotten the fact that representation in the parliament of Canada is governed by the provisions of the British North America Act. There was not sufficient population in my constituency to have it remain as a single unit, although that constituency contains the finest races to be found in any part of Canada. It has splendid traditions. When confederation was consummated there was a great deal of opposition stirred up in the province of Nova Scotia. In the provincial elections immediately following the consummation of Canadian union there were only two members elected in the whole province of Nova Scotia. One was Doctor Tupper, afterwards Sir Charles Tupper, an outstanding Nova Scotian and Canadian statesman. The other was Hiram Blanchard from the county of Inverness. The element of religion sometimes enters into political discussions and it might be well to remember that at that time the constituency of Inverness was eighty-nine per cent Catholic. But they believed in Canadian union and they elected Mr. Blanchard against a Catholic opponent. That is a salutary lesson and one worth remembering by politicians, no matter to what party they give allegiance.

I do not intend to discuss this matter from the point of view of my constituency; I shall deal with it from the point of view of the province of Nova Scotia. In my judgment there are two unfortunate angles to this protracted debate. After listening to the speeches made by members of the official opposition, both in English and French—it is my good fortune to understand both languages—I have come to the conclusion that there is no desire upon the part of the official opposition to agree to anything in connection with redistribution. I am sorry to have to make that statement but to my mind that fact is abundantly clear. But there is something still worse. The people of Canada are interested in matters more important than the maintenance of line fences here or there in some constituency and deciding whether Tom Brown shall vote at polling booth number one in a certain constituency instead of number two in another. There are other matters in which the Canadian people are more interested, and one of them is the approaching world economic conference. This conference will mean much to this and every nation in the world. It is a conference to which the better thinking people who are not playing petty politics are looking with a great deal of hope. It will deal with most important problems, the problem of monetary reform and the problem of disarmament, which if satisfactorily solved will lead to the peace and security of many of the nations of the world. To my mind these things are of more importance than the haggling over a line fence in some constituency, whether it be in mine or in some other hon. gentleman's. After having evinced no desire to agree on this redistribution matter, hon. gentlemen opposite have put it up squarely to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). Instead of having an opportunity of studying these great matters of world import, the Prime Minister has had to remain in this chamber listening to—may I say this, Mr. Chairman? —a cat fight about boundary lines and whether or not somebody will vote Grit in this district or Tory in that district.

Much has been said about chivalry. That is a great word but I think that a little chivalry could have been exercised by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). He should have realized that the right hon. gentleman who leads this government has not had a holiday in three years. He should have realized that he has had a very strenuous session of parliament and must go to the most important conference at which any Canadian statesman ever attended. A little chivalry could have been exercised by saying to him: We will try to agree because, after all, the parties were equitably, fairly and ably represented on this redistribution committee. A little chivalry could have been shown to the right hon. gentleman by saying: We will wind up this matter, we will not play politics with the voters of the nation or with those problems that are of such vital importance to the whole world. We will give you a couple of days to rest, if you desire to rest, although we know you are not very fond of doing that, or we will give you an opportunity to devote your great talents to the study of those important problems which will come before the world conference. That, in my humble judgment, would have been a little chivalry on my right hon. friend's part.

Another point which struck me very forcibly was in the first speech of the leader of the Liberal party. I think he made three on this subject and I am not criticizing him for doing so. My right hon. friend is an outstanding Canadian. He has for a number of years occupied the highest office within the gift of the Canadian people. He is a gentleman with high educational qualifications. Knowing the tender sensibilities of my right hon. friend and the chivalrous conduct of which he is always capable in this house and out of it, I was somewhat surprised in his first speech of record in Hansard of May 22 to find that he devoted almost all of it to a discussion of the boundaries of his own riding. He subsequently laid down the broad principle that ridings should not be of such very great importance; that redistribution should be discussed without reference to any members who happened at the moment to be sitting on this or the other side. In that he was quite right and I agree with him. Knowing his chivalry and his high cultured standards, I can readily understand—and I am going to speak very frankly to the Liberal party now—it must have been humiliating to my right hon. friend to have to spend so much time in talking about his own riding. But he gave us his reasons for doing so and as I say I wish now to speak frankly to his supporters. After all, loyalty is due to any political leader. The right hon. gentleman has given of his time and of his undoubted talents to the service of his party and his country. He has done this unselfishly and I could well understand the humiliation which he must have felt when in his speech he had to refer for two or three hours to his own particular riding. The reason was this: "If," he said, "they wish to legislate me out of my seat in parliament, they can do it in this way"—presumably referring to the committee on which his party was represented by very able gentlemen, "and if I am to be thus prevented from coming back to continue to serve my country in the House of Commons, I have no doubt I shall outside the walls of parliament find plenty to do to which I shall be able to turn with energy and zeal." I certainly also agree with that. But why should the leader of any party be faced with this dread of personal defeat in the constituency in which he elects to run? Were I supporting my right hon. friend I would immediately, when that statement was made, have stood up in the house and said: Sir, if you happen to meet with personal defeat and I happen to have won a seat, you can have mine because you are the leader of my party. But I did not see any Liberal standing up to say that. What I wish to say to the Liberal party is this: After your leader has given of his best to the service of his party, if he happens to be defeated in Prince Albert, surely to goodness you will find a seat for him somewhere else so that we may not be deprived of his undoubted talents and he may not, as he seems to dread, have to resume a position in private life. That is something that his party should disillusion my right hon. friend about because, evidently, according to his statement, he would not have spent so much time in discussing his own riding if he had not had this in his mind.

I am now going to speak of Nova Scotia and I make the claim that in the redistribution of 1924—and I speak not for my own constituency but in reference to all the people of my province irrespective of party allegiance—Nova Scotia was in that year deprived of a seat in the Canadian House of Commons. My reason for making that statement is this, that it is both the letter and the spirit of the British North America Act that for the purpose of representation in parliament the electoral unit of Quebec shall be taken, 65 members having been accorded to that province under the act. Dividing that into the population of Quebec we get the unit of representation which applies in all the other provinces. It is the letter, the spirit of the act that the population of Quebec for purposes of representation should be the population confined within the original boundaries of that province as at the time of confederation. I make the statement now that this was ignored in the redistribution of 1924. The ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), speaking in the house the other day, said that if mistakes were made in 1924, as probably they were, they should be remedied. We shall be charitable enough to say that they were mistakes that were made. There was one mistake that, instead of taking the population within the original boundaries of Quebec, they took that and added to it the population in that territory that was added to Quebec by the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act in 1898. The result was that they added 78,000 people to the population of Quebec for the purpose of determining the unit of representation throughout this country. That addition of 78,000 deprived the people of Nova Scotia, at that time, of one, if not two representatives. If I wished to play politics—and I do not wish to do so because the matter is too important—I would remind the committee that at that time when a seat was taken from Nova Scotia we had sixteen Liberals from that province supporting my right hon. friend opposite and we have not had our full quota of representation for ten years. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) has pointed out that the redistribution works a great hardship on him. For ten years we have been deprived, without any reason whatever and most unjustly, of at least one seat. I do not say that this was premeditated; it was probably due to the carelessness of some people who were not looking closely enough into the representation of the province which they represented, but the fact is that we lost a representative for ten years. As the ex-Minister of Justice said, if mistakes were made in 1924, let us remedy them now. This is a mistake that can be remedied. If we could be deprived of a representative in Nova Scotia unjustly, unfairly, in an unwarranted manner and also unconstitutionally, surely we can undo that wrong and allow the constituency of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis to remain as it is. I wish to say in regard to the hon. gentleman that we from Nova Scotia need men of his type in the House of Commons. If you go over the population of that province you will find this, that where we have suffered most materially in regard to population has been in the fishing hamlets there. There is no one in this House of Commons who knows the fishing industry as well as my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short). That industry is vitally important to the economic welfare of the province of Nova Scotia, and we from the province of Nova Scotia need his wise guidance in matters affecting the fishing industry of his native province and mine. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice said that the wrongs that were done in 1924 should be righted. May I again point out that in 1924 we lost a seat in Nova Scotia unconstitutionally and wrongly in every other way. We were deprived of that seat. I do not know and I do not care whether it was a Liberal or a Conservative seat, but I believe that in the province of Nova Scotia we have made sufficient sacrifices so that we ought not to witness, at every decennial redistribution the sorry spectacle of a diminution of our voice and influence in the central parliament of Canada in this union which Nova Scotia, and I say it advisedly, made possible, because Nova Scotia was brought in to act as a buffer and to bridge the gulf which unfortunately existed at that time between upper and lower Canada. Since, therefore, we have been deprived of a seat in the province of Nova Scotia for the last ten years, is there anything wrong in undoing now the wrong that was done in 1924, when Nova Scotia was deprived of one seat after the last decennial census? I put it to the sense of fairness of every hon. member of this house.

[Mr. Macdougall.]

There is another matter. In the population of Quebec there are to-day, according to the census, 78,800 aliens. They are not British subjects, they are not naturalized, and they have no right to vote. They cannot vote for any member whether he is on the Liberal or the Conservative side or attached to any other political party. Yet they are counted in, and naturally so, with the population of Quebec, and by the extent of 78,800 aliens who have not the right to vote at all, the electoral unit of representation is increased. We in the province of Nova Scotia have in the vicinity of 6,000 people who have no right to vote. If we take that into consideration there are enough aliens counted in the population of Quebec when determining the electoral unit to deprive Nova Scotia of a seat. But of that there is no account taken. In this regard the statements I make are correct; they are not debatable because they are questions of fact. I submit, Mr. Chairman, through you to the committee, following in the conciliatory spirit shown by my friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), that this wrong that was done unintentionally or thoughtlessly in 1924 should, in view of the facts I have placed before the committee, be undone at this time, and only one seat should be taken from the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): This afternoon we have listened to the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson), who made an excellent speech, and to the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol), who gave some explanations of the redistribution in the province of Ontario, and who promised to my hon. friend from South Perth a seat in the Senate. As he is in such a generous mood to-day, why does he not confer on my hon. friend from South Perth as he did on his right hon. leader the other day, a divine mandate? I would like to see him confer it right now in order that I might witness the process by which he can confer such a divine mandate on a human being. Then we heard some complaints from the hon. member from the Conservative constituency of Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short). He was answered by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith), who made an excellent speech and who repeated what every member on this side of the house has said since the beginning of this debate as to county lines.

As to my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Macdougall), he gave a lecture to my right hon. leader. He is a young man and he will mellow with age. He is young and impetuous now, but much may be given to him on account of his natural gifts. If he finds that Bill No. 2, an act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons, is a kind of holy book, let him kiss it and he will have cold sores.

I wish to refer to what was said in this debate on May 24 by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil). At page 5378 of Hansard he is reported as follows:

> But I ask, is it fair that we should take as a basis of a federal redistribution the changes in the county boundaries that were made by the province of Quebec? In 1924 more than thirty-three such changes were made in the province, excluding the city of Montreal.

Then my hon. friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) and my hon. friend from St. Henri (Mr. Mercier) asked him to be more precise and to give details, and the hon. member for Compton mentioned several electoral districts. I have here the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, volume 4, which contains the Redistribution Act of 1924. The first constituency mentioned the other day by my hon. friend from Compton was Bagot. I find that in the act of 1924 the constituency of Bagot consisted of the county of Bagot. In 1933 the county of Bagot is annexed to part of St. Hyacinthe and part of Rouville. So there was no change in 1924, and there are several changes in 1933.

As to Beauce, what was done in 1924 to the parish of St. Benjamin is exactly the same thing as is done in the enactment of 1933. In the enactment of 1924 ten parishes of the county of Frontenac were left to Beauce, and in the enactment of 1933 six other parishes of that constituency are transferred from Beauce to a new constituency to be called Megantic-Frontenac. St. Severin and St. Elzear are transferred from Beauce to Lotbiniere, and St. Maxime is transferred from Dorchester to Beauce under the present redistribution. So all the changes of 1924 are incorporated in the enactment of to-day, together with other changes.

As to Bellechasse there are the same divisions concerning Honfleur and Ste. Sabine in 1933 as in 1924, and in addition there are three new changes in 1933.

As to Berthier-Maskinonge the provincial county boundaries were taken in 1924 and the same in 1933. There is no change there. The same applies to Brome-Missisquoi, where there is no change in 1933 as compared with 1924.

As to Charlevoix-Saguenay we have the same description in 1933 as in 1924, the only difference being that in 1933 a new parish Ste. Brigitte de Laval, is added to the constituency of Charlevoix-Saguenay, which is the largest in the whole country. That constituency is very well represented by my good friend the sitting member (Mr. Casgrain). It has a population which exceeds the unit by 6,000. Chateauguay-Huntingdon in 1924 comprised the counties of Chateauguay and Huntingdon as a whole. In 1933 that electoral district is divided into four parts. Chicoutimi includes the whole provincial county of Chicoutimi in 1924. The same description applies in 1933. There is no change made at this time. In 1924, Dorchester comprised the county of Dorchester, and the only difference in 1933 is that two municipalities are parted with or are taken away from that constituency. I believe in the amended bill two others are to be taken away. In 1924 the description of Drummond-Arthabaska showed that part of the municipality of St. Edmond in the township of Upton is excepted. Upton belongs to Bagot. In 1933 it includes, the complete counties of Drummond and Arthabaska. For Gaspé, in 1924 the only change was in the description. The old lines remained the same. In 1924 it included the two provincial counties of Gaspé, and also the Madeleine islands, which have been part of that electoral district since 1882. In 1924 nothing is changed in it, with the exception that two parishes from the old county of Matane were added. Therefore the only change has taken place in 1933. For Joliette there is no change in 1924. In 1933 Montcalm is annexed to Joliette. For Kamouraska there is no change in 1924 but in 1933, part of two constituencies are added to the electoral district of Kamouraska, namely parts of Témiscouata and L'Islet. The description in 1924 respects the old division which has existed since 1860, the date of the foundation of the parish of Notre-Dame-du-Portage. For Labelle there is no change in 1924, but in 1933 several parishes are taken from that constituency to be transferred to Argenteuil. For Laprairie-Napierville there is no change in 1924, but in 1933 that constituency is divided between Beauharnois-Laprairie and Chambly-Rouville. In 1924 L'Assomption-Montcalm was made up of two counties, whereas in 1933 L'Assomption is joined with parts of Terrebonne and Montcalm with Joliette. For L'Islet there is no change in 1924, but in 1933 that county is annexed to Montmagny, and five parishes are taken away. In 1924 Matane was comprised of the whole counties of Matane and Matapédia, the latter a subdivision of the former electoral district of Matane. The change in 1933 is that two parishes are taken from Matane to be transferred to Gaspé and four others in Matapédia are annexed to Bonaventure. In 1924, there was no change in Megantic, but in 1933 part of Frontenac, a former subdivision of the electoral district of Beauce, is annexed, and six municipalities of Megantic are transferred from that county to the county of Lotbinière. In 1924 there was no change in Montmagny, but in 1933 part of L'Islet is transferred to part of it. Two big Liberal parishes are taken away from Montmagny. In Nicolet there is no change in 1924, but in 1933 part of Nicolet is united to part of Yamaska. In 1924 there was no change in Richelieu, but in 1933 Richelieu is annexed to part of Vercheres, and to part of Yamaska and part of St. Hyacinthe. In 1924 there was no change in Richmond-Wolfe, but in 1933 six municipalities of Wolfe are dispensed with, to be transferred to Megantic-Frontenac. In 1924 there was no change in Rimouski, but in 1933 four municipalities of Témiscouata are added to that constituency. For Sherbrooke there was the same description in 1924 as there is in 1933. For St. John-Iberville there was no change in 1924, but in 1933 the county of Napierville is annexed to the county of Iberville and part of the county of St. John. In 1924 there was no change in Shefford, and there is no change in 1933. For Terrebonne there was no change in 1924, but in 1933 part of the county of Terrebonne is annexed to the county of L'Assomption. In 1924 the description of Yamaska respected the ancient limits of the county with regard to part of St. Edmond in the township of Upton. In 1933 part of Yamaska is annexed to part of Nicolet. There has been no change in Wright as the description was the same in 1924 as it is in 1933.

I shall now quote the words of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil):

> I am willing and pleased to name the counties in which these changes were made, and if my hon. friends opposite want more details I will have those details typed for them and send them as many copies as they want. They are: Bagot, Beauce, Bellechasse, Berthier-Maskinonge, Brome-Missisquoi—here is another striking example—Charlevoix-Saguenay, Chateauguay-Huntingdon, Chicoutimi, Dorchester, Drummond-Arthabaska, Gaspe, Joliette, Kamouraska, Labelle, Laprairie-Napierville, L'Assomption-Montcalm, L'Islet, Matane, Megantic, Montmagny, Nicolet, Richelieu, Richmond-Wolfe, Rimouski, Sherbrooke, St. John-Iberville, Shefford, Terrebonne, Yamaska, Wright. If my hon. friends opposite want more details I have here all the territories by square miles that were transferred from one county to another between 1914 and 1924 by the provincial government and incorporated in the federal bill without any mention of it in the bill.

We have contended that the federal boundaries have always agreed with the provincial boundaries. Sometimes small changes have been made by provincial authorities, but the redistribution of 1924 which was carried on under a Liberal government was entirely in accord with the orthodox rules set down this afternoon by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith).

Mr. Chairman, may I ask you something? I wish to abide by the rules of the house, but I should like to know if the following four words are parliamentary: Onneyout, Goyogouin, Tsonnontouan, Onontagué?

Mr. STEVENS: I would suggest the chairman take those words under advisement.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not speaking French or English. They belong to a different language. They are the names of four Iroquois tribes, and I wonder if it would be parliamentary to apply one of those names to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) who has made such misstatements to the House of Commons. I can say that he is an Onneyout, that he is a Goyogouin, that he is an Tsonnontouan, or an Onontague; that is what he deserves.

Now, sir, I have to condense sixty speeches into one speech, and I will not be long now I am the only member from the province of Quebec against whom the leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec in 1925, 1926 and 1930 went to speak in his constituency. I am proud of that fact; it shows that they pay attention to me. First of all on October 17, 1925, Mr. Patenaude—he wears overalls now on Sunday in Montreal as a leader of a sort of branch of a club ouvrier or fédération, and they must be greasy—held a meeting at the city hall in Riviere du Loup One young man asked him a very bold question; you remember, sir, at the time that Mr. Patenaude was ashamed of his leader, the then Prime Minister, the right hon. Mr. Meighen, and the interrupter was bold enough to ask Mr. Patenaude: "Where is your leader, and who is he?" And Mr. Patenaude said, "Wait a minute, young man. On the matter of chieftain I will tell you more than your measure in a minute." And what was done? Did Mr. Patenaude speak? No, four or five strong men pulled the heckler out of the hall. That was the answer that was given. But I was elected by a majority of 2,000.

At the following election in 1926 I wrote to my leader, saying I had done my share for my party and I wanted a breathing spell to resume my legal practice. I said: "Sir, if you want to take another candidate in Témiscouata I am ready to support him, but if you want me to run I will do so as a matter of loyalty to the party." Here is what I received in reply on July 17, 1926:

My Dear Pouliot,—

I was delighted to receive your letter of July 13. This is just to thank you very cordially for it and to wish you every possible success in the campaign.

You have had your share of contests, but that I believe has only helped to make you a better fighter.

Then at the request of my leader I was a candidate again in September, 1926. It was my third election within twenty months, as I had been elected first at a by-election in December, 1924. Then the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, who was the Prime Minister of the three months' government in 1926, held a meeting attended by 8,000 people in Rivière du Loup. They listened to him politely, as they do to all, and he said to them:

Even in the west I have fought for protection which is in the interests of the province of Quebec.

A man named Johnny Emond, who fortunately was not in the employ of the federal government, before the polling day went from house to house telling people it was not necessary for them to register, that he had received instructions to take their names and give them to the registrar. What did he do? He took the names of a great many people, selected the Conservatives and gave their names to the registrar and did not give the names of the others.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Shame!

Mr. POULIOT: Owing to that I lost about 500 votes in that election, but I was elected by over 1,900.

In 1930 the third leader of the Tory party within a brief space of years came to my constituency and held a meeting. He was very well received, I went to give him my good wishes, but I should have rather given my good wishes to the country if I had known what would be the result. Here is the program of my opponent as it was widely distributed in the constituency before the election day:

(Translation)

Program of Mr. Charles Eugène Dubé, Conservative candidate in Témiscouata:

1. The Honourable Mr. Bennett's program for the revival of our industry and the development of our agriculture;

That is fine—great success in industry and agriculture.

2. The Honourable Mr. Bennett's program to end unemployment immediately;

Mr. CASGRAIN: Immediately! Shame! He was to end unemployment at once.

Mr. POWER: It was a joke.

Mr. POULIOT: But unfortunately it was taken seriously.

(Translation)

The Honourable Mr. Bennett's program for a federal system of old age pensions;

Mr. CASGRAIN: He did not do it.

Mr. POULIOT: You will have to pay nothing to the federal treasury, we will pay all.

(Translation)

4. The Honourable Mr. Bennett's program for a Canadian preference in return for a British preference;

5. Canada for Canadians.

That is a St. Jean Baptiste phrase that we could find to-day on the lips of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne). It is very nice theoretically, it would be very nice practically, but when we see my hon. friends opposite walking arm in arm with the Ku Klux Klan I cannot see Canada for the Canadians being so much in honour on the other side of the house.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Has the hon. member forgotten that we are discussing Bill No. 2?

Mr. POULIOT: No, sir, I will explain why I read it. It is in consequence of the argument I made the other day, that each member should go back to the people who listened to these promises, within the same boundaries, in order that they may judge if they were fulfilled or not. I do not wish to impose on the time of the house, but I wish to tell you what has been said in my constituency and what my people have believed in, and I would like the same people within the same limits to meet the people who have believed them, who have tried this government as an experiment, to see what they will do when the bugle calls an election again.

(Translation)

6. For my county, Témiscouata.

(a) Revival of the project involving a branch line connection between Rivière-du-Loup and the Transcontinental;

Nothing has been done in that regard.

(Translation)

(b) Revival of the project to the development of our harbour;

I had a motion on that in the House of Commons; the Prime Minister, the hon. Minister of Marine and the Conservative party as a whole voted against it.

(Translation)

(c) Restoring our railway shops to their former level of activity by keeping the work in the province of Quebec for the workingmen of Quebec and Riviere-du-Loup;

There are 800 railway employees in my constituency, 500 are laid off—this is the success my people have got.

(Translation)
(d) To end, by the economic revival of development of our industry and our agriculture, the five day week and the decrease in wages of our railway employees;

Now they are set back. It is far from being better; the farmers do not receive many cents for their products.

(Translation)
(e) The construction of a new station so long expected at Rivière-du-Loup;

About the Riviere du Loup station I have to say this, that it was not a new one; the old one was repaired. But if the government had been fair enough to settle the matter when it came first before the hon. Minister of Railways—and may I say that it was unfortunate that the hon. Minister of Railways had to go to Churchill at the time—you would never have heard me say a word about it except to praise the government. But I could not do it; I worked too much. I could only credit them with having done part of their duty.

(Translation)
(f) The carrying out of public works in the county (post offices, wharves, etc.) to give employment to the working classes and enable them to purchase from our farmers agricultural products at prices which will enable the latter to live on their farms.

No post office has been built. Moreover I had some money voted by parliament in 1930 for the building of a post office at Trois Pistoles and that post office has not been built and that money has not been spent.

Now, sir, there is something I wish to say about Notre Dame du Portage. That is rather a small parish, part of it is part of the old parish of St. André in the electoral district of Kamouraska, and part is part of the old parish of St. Patrice du Riviere du Loup in Temiscouata county. I know nearly everyone that lives there; they are all fine people and highly intelligent. The division lines have been the same for sixty years, ever since the creation of the parish, and some time ago I had the honour of assisting at a celebration in the parish at which there was present His Excellency Monseigneur Hallé, Vicar Apostolic of Northern Ontario. It is an excellent parish, and I have no reason for wishing to discontinue my happy association with the people. But a change has been made, for no other reason than that it has been requested by those who prevented the spending of $1.000 to repair the wharf there. That money was voted in 1930 and was available to make the necessary repairs to the wharf, but it was not spent. The people were told during the election that $15,000 would be spent there to complete an extension to the wharf, but nothing was done; the money was not spent. The result is that there is a great hole in the wharf, and it is in danger of drifting away by force of the ice in the winter. No wonder hon. gentlemen are ashamed to go there and explain to the people their actions in this regard. They can offer no excuse for not having spent the money in time for this purpose, and their negligence is all the more shameful when we remember that this is a splendid summer resort which is visited by people from Montreal and Toronto and other places.

Trois-Pistoles is another wonderful parish, one of the finest in my constituency. The farmers in that locality are just as prosperous as this government will permit them to be. They have very comfortable homes, as my hon. friend from L'Islet knows, as the hon. member for Kamouraska knows, and as my esteemed and respected friend and Quebec leader, the hon. member for Quebec East, also knows; indeed, no one knows better than he does. It is a wonderful part of the country and has belonged to the constituency since 1853, a period of eighty years. Now it is going to form part of another constituency. I shall congratulate my hon. friend from Rimouski if it goes through without change while the schedules are being considered in committee. I congratulate him because this is a genuine gift to him, for it is one of the most beautiful places in the whole province and, what is more, it is a summer resort. The people are all intelligent, fine people, and there are excellent schools, so that altogether I am justified in describing it as a wonderful section. I am sorry to see it go because I have fond memories of it. At Trois-Pistoles there took place some time ago the blessing of a monument which was erected at The Rasades, a small island, and the Bishop of Rimouski attended. It was during the summer and the gathering was great. This is one more link of remembrance that binds me to my constituents, and it is something that cannot be forgotten.

As regards Ste. Françoise, I may say that I was one of the godfathers of the church bells, and the bishop attended that ceremony also. People came from other parishes on that occasion. This is also a wonderful spot, situated in a valley between beautiful mountains, and it is a farming district as well.

The farmers there are good, law-abiding citizens, and I do not see why that parish should go to Rimouski. If the hon. gentleman from Rimouski is fortunate in having Trois Pistoles, he is twice lucky in having Ste. Françoise added to his constituency. Again, St. Jean de Dieu is a parish nineteen miles inland from the Canadian National Railways, with a population of two or three thousand, a place of which anyone might well be proud. Its agricultural society is a notable feature of it and the farmers are quite up to date; they win prizes in fairs, and they show a most enterprising spirit. My hon. friend from Rimouski is thrice happy in having these people join his constituency, and for my part I am thrice unhappy—yes, and four times, if you consider Notre Dame du Portage, which goes to the other constituency.

I have written, to one man in each of these parishes, the following communication. I prepared it and sent it off when I was first told that these parishes would be removed from the electoral district of Témiscouata:

(Translation)

You have all been too good to me that I should consent to sever the ties that bind me to any of you. Therefore, I would ask you to read this letter to all the electors of your parish, both Conservatives and Liberals, and to have petitions signed by the ladies who are entitled to vote as well as by the men, and forward same to me as soon as possible.

I look upon the county of Témiscouata as one large family and I do not want them to take away a single one of my electors, no matter what his political persuasion may be.

I consider myself in a priviliged position, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I am the only member who has presented to the house petitions from heads of families in my own constituency protesting against these changes. These petitions were signed by 113 electors of St. Francois; 180 electors of Notre Dame du Portage; 212 electors of St. Jean de Dieu; and 480 electors of Trois Pistoles parish and town—all heads of families.

Mr. ST-PERE: Were they only Liberals?

Mr. POULIOT: Both Liberals and Conservatives, and from St. Jean de Dieu I received a letter from the mayor saying that the petition was signed by all except two, who had their own reasons for not signing it, but who were equally opposed to the change. I can assure the committee that the people in that county will be outraged at these changes. I am not going to say anything further on that score but will simply leave it to my hon. friends opposite to do what is fair. These petitions were tabled in the house and I asked the chairman of the committee to call for them. He told me he did so, but the fact is that they have been entirely disregarded, notwithstanding that these parishes have been in the constituency for eighty years.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I have a duty to perform, a duty which is neither pleasant nor unpleasant; it is not an elegy, it is merely a matter of form and course. In case there is an election this summer or in the fall, or in the interval at any time between now and the next meeting of parliament, I wish to say good-bye to my hon. friend from Champlain (Mr. Baribeau), whose constituency has been divided. I wish to say good-bye to my hon. friend from Berthier-Maskinonge (Mr. Barrette), who has two provincial counties. I wish to say good-bye to my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Bell), in whose constituency there is a change—all Conservatives. I wish to say good-bye to my hon. friend from Pontiac (Mr. Belec), and to my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bourgeois), whose constituencies have been changed to serve him better. There is one member from the province of Quebec to whom I will not say good-bye, and to whom I will refer later. I am speaking now of the hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan), whose dignity, efficiency and competency are admired by us all on this side. But I will say good-bye to my hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion), though I cannot congratulate him upon the mess the committee made of things. I wish to say good-bye also to my hon. friend from Lake St. John (Mr. Duguay), and to the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre), who is the member for Quebec West. To him I say good-bye and farewell. I say good-bye also to the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau), and so far as he is concerned there is one thing that causes me regret—I will tell him frankly. Naturally he is fair; he has an excellent legal training and is one of the masters of his profession at the bar. He is highly respected in that profession, which he adorns. The only complaint I have to make is that he paid too much attention to the silly petitions and the unfair requests put before him. I have not had any business dealings with him but I like him very much personally. I bid good-bye and farewell to the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Fortin). He will be no longer a member of this house because the Solicitor General will run in that constituency. But I am sure he will be defeated by any candidate who runs for the Liberal party. I have known the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) a long time. I knew him at college where he was doing better than I was because he was ahead of me. He was a member of the academic society, he had medals and all that. He does very well at the bar and I regret very much that he has not given a measure of his talents to the House of Commons. I regret very much that this committee cannot hear him arguing a case in court because he does it much better than any arguing he has done in the House of Commons. But that may be because he has better cases in court than he has in the house. To the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) I say, farewell, farewell! He can go to the Indian tribe and live with them. I say good-bye and farewell to the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett). However, I am sure he will be appointed assistant general counsel for the Canadian Pacific Railway within a very short time. I am sorry the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Laflèche) does not feel as I do with regard to the parishes which have been taken away from his constituency. Apparently the hon. member for Matane (Mr. Larue) is sucking his nipper somewhere because we do not see him in the chamber. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Laurin) was here a short time ago but he has apparently gone to the washroom to brush his hair. I say good-bye to the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne). He should not change his attitude in the house, he should speak up like a man. He should say:

(Translation)

When I die, plant a willow in the cemetery. . . . To die for one's country, is the happiest fate, which is to be most envied. . . . Pro patria mori.

He should do better and act as a man in the House of Commons; he should preach by example rather than by words. I say farewell to the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Moore). He has been of no use in the house. He made a couple of speeches but they were most insipid. I am sure he will go without leaving any sore hearts. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) has said in the house that I had attacked his old age and infirmities. I told him that he was not old or infirm and that I had never referred to him in that way. He must have been suffering from amnesia because I had previously written him a letter congratulating him upon an excellent speech which he had made. He lost the full effect of my congratulations because I took back everything I had said. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) is a dear old gentleman. He is most inoffensive and unprovocative. He does not refer to the majority which he has behind him when he is acting Prime Minister. He is the antithesis of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) nor do I put them on the same level when it comes to the understanding of things. That is a different matter. To the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauve) I say: good-bye and farewell to thee. When he leaves the House of Commons I am sure Amédée Lesieur will give him nice quarters in the house he must have built with the profit of $20,000 which he made on the rural mail boxes.

Mr. O. L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I could begin the brief observations I intend making with a sentence that we often hear in this house. I had not intended taking part in this discussion. As a matter of fact, I had promised myself not to open my mouth in the course of the present debate, and if I break the promise I had made with myself, I fear the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) is responsible. Wednesday night, I believe, my hon. friend for Dorchester exhibited to the house the outline of the constituency I have the honour to represent, and it seemed to me he was trying to be witty in connection with that outline. He could have just as well exhibited the outline of the county of Dorchester which would not have appeared any better than that of Bellechasse. He tried to give the house the impression that the Liberal party was responsible for the present shape or outline of the county of Bellechasse. I wish to state to my friend from Dorchester that the county of Bellechasse as now shaped, save for one important change, was constituted in 1791. The county of Bellechasse, like the county of Dorchester, is one of the original counties created under the act of 1791. The only important change effected in the territory constituted as the county of Hertford, in 1791, which became in 1829 the county of Bellechasse, without any territorial alteration, was made in 1853, when the counties of Lévis and Montmagny were created.

In order to establish Montmagny, in 1853, the parishes of Saint-François, Berthier, Saint-Pierre were detached from Bellechasse, and the remainder of the territory was taken from L'Islet which was also an original county of 1791. The county of Lèvis was formed from a part of the county of Dorchester which prior to 1853, extended to the river. This is about the only important change that was made in respect to the boundaries of the county of Bellechasse since 1791. Therefore, the Liberals are not responsible for the present shape or outline of the county of Bellechasse.

My hon. friend for Dorchester pretended to be shocked the other evening because two parishes are half in Bellechasse and half in Dorchester. He should know why this situation exists. These are two comparatively new parishes which the diocesan authorities placed astride the boundary, on both sides, if I may express myself thus. The parish of Honfleur which was settled about 1904 or 1905 is composed of part of the parishes of St-Gervais and St-Lazare, in the county of Bellechasse, and of part of the parishes of St-Claire and St-Anselme, in the county of Dorchester. St-Sabine was created about 1912 and is composed of parts of the townships of Bellechasse and Roux in the county of Bellechasse, and of part of the townships of Langevin and Ware in the county of Dorchester.

Provincially, as my friend from Dorchester knows—he is acquainted with the administrative customs and administrative law of the province of Quebec—each county is a civil municipality administered by a county council composed of the various parishes in the county. After the creation of these two parishes straddling the boundary of Bellechasse and Dorchester, it became necessary to include these two parishes in a civil county municipality, in order that the mayors of the new parishes may form part of a county council. They could be put either in Dorchester or Bellechasse. The Quebec legislature decided to place them both, in their entirety, in Bellechasse, and the boundary line was corrected accordingly.

The same thing happened as to the boundary between Bellechasse and Montmagny. I believe the member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) raised this question a couple of days ago. There again, they created parishes straddling the boundary line of Bellechasse and Montmagny. The parishes are known as St-Euphémie and St-Fabien. And, in order to make the boundaries of the civil municipalities conform to those of the religious parishes, the Quebec legislature was only required to make some very slight boundary changes between Bellechasse and Montmagny.

The hon. member for Dorchester is shocked over the fact that the parishes of St-Sabine and Honfleur are divided between Dorchester and Bellechasse. Why did he not correct that in the bill which we are discussing today? I note that in this bill the situation created in 1924—possibly earlier, I do not know, but let us say under the redistribution of 1924—is left as it was: these two parishes remain divided between Bellechasse and Dorchester. The hon. member for Dorchester stated the other day that he appeared before the committee, that he told them what to do, that he insisted on the changes and alterations he wanted in his constituency. Since he considers the division of these two parishes between two neighbouring counties abnormal, why did he not ask to have this state of affairs changed, that this abnormal situation be remedied, when he appeared before the committee? He merely had to ask the committee to make the federal boundaries conform to the provincial limits.

I did not appear before the committee on redistribution, I did not even go into the room where the committee met. The members of the committee never consulted me respecting the changes they wanted to make in connection with the county of Bellechasse. I asked for nothing, I made no bargain and I agreed to nothing. I have a too wholesome respect for the feelings of the people.

I share many of the views and ideas of my friend from Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne), but I certainly do not agree with him when he says: "It matters little where they vote, so long as they vote!"

Mr. LAPOINTE Hear, hear.

Mr. BOULANGER: I believe the people have not only the right to vote but that they have also the right to vote at home; they have a right to vote for somebody they know and to vote where their vote will be most effective. I certainly did not ask for the parishes or the municipalities of the counties of Dorchester, Lévis and Montmagny that are being annexed to Bellechasse. My friend from Montmagny says: "It matters little? What has that to do with those people, so long as they vote"? I ask myself, for instance, if that would be very consoling for the inhabitants of the municipalities of St-Henri, the village of St-Henri, Rivière-Boyer, and St-Jean-Chrysostôme, if they were told:" "What does it matter to you if you vote in Bellechasse or in Lévis? You do not lose your right to vote." As I stated a moment ago, the people of these four municipalities, Rivière-Boyer, St-Henri Village, St-Henri-de-Lauzon and St-Jean-Chrysostôme, have formed part of the county of Dorchester, from 1791 to 1853, and since then they form part of the county of Lévis. They never had anything in common with the county of Bellechasse, they never had any connection whatever with the county of Bellechasse, they do not form part of the same judicial district, their registry office is at Lévis, there is absolutely no link between them and the people of Bellechasse.

Mr. GAGNON: Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOULANGER: With pleasure.

Mr. GAGNON: I observe that he has studied the regional history of his district closely. Is it not true that Rivière-Boyer formed part of the county of Bellechasse, in 1867?

Mr. BOULANGER: No. The line which divided the counties of Dorchester and Lévis prior to 1853, and which since then separates the counties of Lévis and Bellechasse, was never altered. It is the easterly line of the Lauzon seigniory, and no area of the Lauzon seigniory ever formed part of the county of Bellechasse. This line has remained unchanged since 1791.

Of course, I am speaking from memory, I have no notes before me, but I do not believe my hon. friend from Dorchester can contradict me on this point.

To return to what I was saying a moment ago, here are people who never had anything in common, since almost two hundred years, with the county of Bellechasse, who are told by way of consolation: "You are not losing your vote!" One thing must be borne in mind, the vote of those people in the county of Bellechasse, is merely one more drop of water in the ocean. It will have practically no influence in this county which normally gives a large majority to the Liberals. But, in the county of Levis, for instance, their vote could be much more effective; it would be sufficient to defeat the Conservative candidate.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The Conservatives want to avoid that.

Mr. BOULANGER: Those people have a right to cast a vote where it will be of most value, where it will be most effective, and there is no reason why they should be denied the pleasure they would experience in contributing effectively to the defeat of the Government candidate.

I asked myself, for instance, what my hon. friend, the member for Montmagny, would say, if his argument were invoked to console the people of the county of Russell,—if, perchance, it were to disappear—this was strongly mooted, for being denied the right, privilege and satisfaction of electing a representative of their race and language to the House of Commons. I wonder if it would be a great satisfaction to them, should their constituency disappear, were the hon. member for Montmagny to go to them and say: "What is the use of you being distressed because you are losing your county and the right to elect one of your people, you will vote just the same!"

I am sure the hon. member for Montmagny did not give it a thought. He never intended being so cynical and brutal when he submitted the following argument to the house: "It matters little where the people vote so long as they vote; what difference does it make whether they vote on this side of the river or on the other side, on this side of a tree rather than on the other side."

The counties form a large family, as already stated, they like to vote for somebody they know. Take the case of the five or six parishes that are annexed to Bellechasse. They will be like strangers in the midst of the population of old Bellechasse; they will almost feel they are mingling with unknown people. It is evident they will not have much say in the selection of the candidate at the next election. That candidate will be selected by the population of the old county and he will be a man which these newcomers will scarcely know. Thus they will be only a comparatively negligible quantity both with respect to the selection of the candidate and the vote they will cast, since it is only a matter of adding a few hundred additional votes to the already large Liberal majority in the county of Bellechasse.

I do not discuss this from a personal standpoint or from the standpoint of the person who will be the Liberal candidate at the next election in the county of Bellechasse. I consider the matter simply from the viewpoint of the people to whom the counties which they inhabit belong.

The people should have something to say in regard to alterations of county boundaries. They are not mere cattle that can be bartered on the public square; they are not a common herd which the government or its supporters can push to the right or to the left, unite or amalgamate according to their fancy. The government consulted nobody. It did not even consult the present representative of the county of Bellechasse in respect of the additions it proposed to make to this constituency, neither were the parties to be annexed consulted.

I do not want my hon. friend, the member for Dorchester, or other opponents, to place a wrong construction on my words. I said a moment ago, that I had asked for nothing, that I had not solicited additions to my constituency, that I made no bargain with any person and that I had agreed to nothing. I do not want my words to be interpreted as meaning that I refuse to accept the municipalities that are to be annexed to the county of Bellechasse and that I do not want those people. Our opponents are capable of saying that.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): They can say anything.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): Our opponents are experts at misrepresenting our thoughts, words and attitudes. That is the reason why I am anxious to explain my attitude in that regard. We do not refuse to accept them with open arms and open hearts. whether I or another person is the Liberal candidate at the next election, we will do the best we can to treat those people just as if they had always formed part of the population of the old county. We will do even more; we will treat them with a special regard, goodwill and kindness, in order to make them forget "the great derangement" and "the dispersal."

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a few words to say to conclude. I am glad to see the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Moore) in the chamber now. I was saying that his silence was contributing a great deal toward enlightening the debate. As for the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel), he spoke often about the trouble in the dairy industry in his part of the world. That is because they have a pickle in the milk can. To the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan), I say good-bye and I say good-bye and farewell to the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Tetreault). As for the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. White), who is the wise man on the other side of the house, I say: Au revoir and perhaps he will not be a candidate again. To each one of the members of the Conservative party from the province of Quebec I say good-bye and farewell.

Mr. QUINN: They might come back.

Mr. POULIOT: There is a comeback to everything. I say good-bye to my old seat on this side of the house; I say au revoir to the House of Commons and to my old seat on the other side after the next election. After that occurs, whether it be next year or this, if this legislation is not changed, we shall see a change of government and that is why I say farewell to hon. gentlemen opposite from the province of Quebec, except probably the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan), and why I say au revoir to the House of Commons and to all the members on this side.

Hon. gentlemen opposite who represent Quebec constituencies have a great responsibility because it is with their twenty-five seats that they gave a majority to the government. They have shown no independence; they have been slaves from beginning to end since July 28, 1930. They have shown no independence of character; they have not had the courage to tell the Prime Minister the truth, to give good guidance to him. They have supported him all right, but they have not been columns of light. I do not put into that category some of the front benchers for whom I have great respect and personal liking; but I say this, that if there has been something wrong in the government of this country; if the promises that were made to the electors have not been fulfilled, this is because each one of the Conservative members from Quebec, with the exception of the Secretary of State, have not had the courage to tell the truth to the Prime Minister.

Mr. M. RHEAUME (St. Johns-Iberville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much time, but I wish to protest on behalf of the people of Lacolle whose municipality forms part of the county of St. Johns since almost 60 years.

The county of St. Johns was created in 1860 and at the time of the gerrymander of 1892, the parishes and village of Lacolle were annexed to the county of Missisquoi. This did not bring luck to the Conservatives who had made that change. Their intention in transferring the people of Lacolle to that county was to secure the election of the Conservative candidate. He was defeated nevertheless. At the time of the redistribution of 1903, the people of the municipality and parishes of Lacolle who previously had been annexed to the county of Missisquoi asked to return to the county of St. Johns. They had a right to make that request because from the standpoint of the county council, two parishes and a rather important village form part of the county of St. Johns, provincially. Yielding to the entreaties of the citizens of the parishes and village of Lacolle, the Liberal party restored them to the county of St. Johns in 1903.

After a lapse of 30 years, the government decides to transfer them to Huntingdon, in order to increase the population of Chateauguay-Huntingdon, where parishes were removed so as to establish a corridor linking Laprairie with Beauharnois. At all events, I am sorry to see them leave, because I had some good friends there, and I am sorry that they will no longer form part of my county, although my majority is not very large. At all events, I wish to protest on behalf of the people of that part of my constituency.

I would also like to say a word in respect of the county of Laprairie-Napierville. The county of Napierville was created in 1860 and united with the county of Laprairie in 1892. My county does not contain the population it should have, only, I regret that the citizens of the county of Laprairie-Napierville should be separated after having lived side by side for a period of 41 years. I receive the people of Napierville with pleasure and I bid them a most cordial welcome. They are no strangers in St. John's. They form part of the same judicial district, they come to market at St. John's; they are worthy farmers and I know several of them. I can assure them that the population and I—having the honour to represent the county of St. John's-Iberville in this house—look on their coming very favourably.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I wish to state that I could not suffer the removal of that part of my county, the parishes and village of Lacolle, without protesting on behalf of the people living therein and who desire to remain in this fine county of St. John's-Iberville from which they had been removed in 1892 and to which they had been restored in 1903 on their own entreaties. I greatly regret these changes that have been effected in my constituency and I wish the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Moore) all possible success with the people of that part of my constituency.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The bill which I have says, The Representation Act, 1932.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know whether the government intend to have the date changed. If so there should be an amendment. We are now in 1933.

Mr. BENNETT: The reprinted bill meets that difficulty. There were some typographical errors in the bill as first printed, and to correct these and to meet the changes that have been made we are having the bill reprinted, so that it will be available to hon. members.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We have not a copy of the reprinted bill.

Mr. BENNETT: I have a copy and the leader of the opposition was sent a copy this morning.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have seen a reprint of the seats in Ontario.

[Mr. Rhéaume.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have what is called a revise with the corrections as made last night. This was kindly sent to me during the course of this afternoon, but it is not a bill reprinted in form for distribution.

Mr. BENNETT: The one the chairman has says 1933, and I think the copy in the hands of the leader of the opposition says 1933.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): My copy says 1932.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The revise I have says 1933.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I would move, Mr. Chairman, that the figure "1933" be substituted for the figure "1932."

Mr. CASGRAIN: If we are going to discuss the schedules I think it is most important that members of the committee be supplied with copies of the reprinted bill. The leader of the opposition has one, but we have not copies.

Mr. BENNETT: I wholly agree, and I have endeavoured to expedite the printing, but last minute changes were made in some of these schedules and checked over by Mr. Castonguay after agreements were arrived at in connection with Ontario and in three cases I think in Quebec. The Saskatchewan schedule was also changed so that Touchwood becomes Yorkton, and there are other changes to which I shall allude. I think hon. members will find that at eight o'clock copies will be available for distribution.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that I wish to put some matter on Hansard when we come to section 3.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): We are on section 1 now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know, but section 3 may easily be passed unless I give notice now that I want to speak on it with regard to the schedules, which sooner or later, and I hope it will be sooner, will come before the committee. How in the world are we going to discuss them unless we have a map?

Mr. BENNETT: The same as we did in other years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Other years is quite a while ago, and I do not just recall what was done. There have been a number of mistakes already, and in any event we would like to have a map to check over the description.

Mr. QUINN: You would tear it up.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The primary purpose of redistribution is to equalize the population in the different constituencies, but population seems to be the last thing under consideration in this bill. At all events, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some observations before we pass section 3.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the new bill or any part of it is being substituted for the whole or any part of the old one, some motion will have to be made to that effect; otherwise we shall be at sixes and sevens.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a substitution. The chairman has the bill as introduced, and motions will be made as we proceed to deal with the changes. In connection with the schedule for the province of Ontario, for instance, I propose to move that a new schedule be substituted, the schedule that has been initialed by the committee and checked by the chief electoral officer and by the law officers and by the geographers—shall I say?—of the departments, so that there is no question as to the accuracy of the description. That is really what has been holding up the printing and distribution of the bill. As the right hon. gentleman knows, it is a difficult task to check up all these boundaries and be sure that they are accurate. Mr. Castonguay has been giving his entire time to the matter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understand some minor adjustments have been made concerning other provinces since the original bill was drawn.

Mr. BENNETT: Do I understand the hon. member to ask whether or not any changes have been made with respect to Manitoba?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Nothing, with the exception of the checking of spelling and some verifications made by the law officers and the chief electoral officer. There has been no change in substance at all, I am sure.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I believe there was a change, which was agreed to by the various groups, which was to be introduced. It was to be brought in at the time the schedules were being discussed.

Mr. BENNETT: Which one was that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The change I refer to concerned my own constituency of Winnipeg North Centre, and particularly a certain block now belonging to Winnipeg South Centre. I was not on the committee, but I understand certain changes were agreed to by all parties concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: To date, no change has been made in it. We will deal with it when we come to it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The right hon. Prime Minister has stated a new schedule has been printed because some arrangements have been concluded so far as Ontario is concerned, and in regard to two or three places in Quebec. As the press stated yesterday and this morning that there had been arrangements made for Quebec, with the exception of one or two cases, I desire to correct that wrong impression. So far as I know there have been no arrangements made for Quebec, and the bill is just as bad to-day as it was two days ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Speaking of newspaper reports, I notice this evening's Journal has reference to changes which are supposed to have been made in the revised bill. If this is authentic I think it is extraordinary that the Conservative press should receive information ahead of parliament on a matter parliament is discussing. I should like to read from the Ottawa Evening Journal of to-day the article dealing with alleged concessions which have been made:

> Names Of Two Ottawa Seats Are Changed
> Constituencies Will Be Known as East and West Ottawa
> Concessions Made In Prince Albert
> In the new draft of the schedules of the Redistribution Bill, the proposed names of South Ottawa and North East Ottawa for the two constituencies of the capital have been altered to West Ottawa and East Ottawa respectively. Concessions have been made by Conservatives to Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal leader, in the Saskatchewan riding of Prince Albert.
> It is definitely understood that the government is amending the representation measure to restore some 6,000 residents to Prince Albert. This, as was pointed out, leaves little uncertainty over the reelection of Mr. Mackenzie King in Prince Albert.
> Conservative members further explained that nothing was being done in West Calgary to further the reelection of the Prime Minister, who is the member for that seat. It was stated that the change being made in East Calgary, which is represented by Doctor G. D. Stanley, if anything, endangers Mr. Bennett's prospects.
> A deadlock was still in evidence to-day between Conservative and Liberal members over the redistribution in Quebec and Saskatchewan. Despite this it is forecast that parliament will certainly prorogue to-morrow. The opposition members have registered their protests and now all that remains is the formal approval of the representation bill.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask where the Ottawa Journal gets this information? The house has not yet even had a copy of the bill which, according to the report I have read, has been discussed in parliament.

Mr. MANION: May I say that the Evening Citizen has an article on the front page, too. I presume the newspapers got this information from somewhere.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That only makes it worse.

Mr. MANION: It is a different article.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The information must have come from a government source.

Mr. MANION: Not at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Information of this kind must have been given out.

Mr. TURNBULL: So far as the province of Saskatchewan is concerned, may I say that all the matters to which reference has been made in the article were only yesterday subjects of debate in this chamber. The concession in connection with Prince Albert was offered yesterday; the amount of population was mentioned, and is recorded in Hansard. In connection with the statement concerning the seat in Calgary, may I say that the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) made similar statements in the house to-day. The article appears to be merely a repetition of what has taken place in the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yesterday the government made no statement to the house as to what it was going to do with respect to Prince Albert constituency. Hansard will show that. May I say that if what has been done in Prince Albert is only what the Prime Minister said the government would then undertake to do, it is anything but a fair redistribution. If the change that has been made accords with what appears in the article I have read, or the bill I have as revised, the present constituency of Prince Albert has been gerrymandered from a safe Liberal seat into what would appear to be a safe Conservative seat. When the schedule is before us I wish to point out that the government has enlarged the constituency on one side so as to bring in an increased number of votes, and has only not taken away quite as large a portion of the southern portion of the constituency as was proposed in the map presented in the first instance. However, what has been done certainly has had the effect, if we take the figures of the last general election as any indication, of changing the constituency of Prince Albert from a Liberal constituency into what would be a Conservative constituency. In the face of that, I fail to see what authority any publication could have to say it understands:

—that the government is amending the representation measure to restore some 6,000 residents to Prince Albert. This, as was pointed out, leaves little uncertainty over the reelection of Mr. Mackenzie King in Prince Albert.

May I say that from any suggestion of restoring residents the public will assume that some reference is being made to the constituency as it existed originally. As a matter of fact when the bill was brought in there was such an obvious gerrymander of Prince Albert that the government itself admitted the lines were wrong, and it now appears that in one particular it has modified them, but certainly not in a particular which will make a fair redistribution of the constituency of Prince Albert. I just wish to protest against any impression going abroad, before this house has had any opportunity to see the changes which have been made, to the effect that what is being done in Prince Albert is being done in a way which will make that constituency at all safe for its present member.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Was the Prime Minister under the impression that these new up-to-date schedules had been distributed to the house?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the use of talking about them then?

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry any incorrect statements should have appeared in the press, but I assure the right hon. gentleman that this government is not in any way responsible for them. When he protests against them, he is within his rights, as a matter of privilege, to assert that statements have been made for which there was no justification. The government is no more to blame for it or no more responsible for it than someone on the street. The truth is that in these modern days newspapers have ways of obtaining what they regard as accurate information which is printed and which in some instances turns out to have some foundation, and in other instances none. No one knows better than the right hon. gentleman that we have all suffered from that. For instance not long since I was amazed to read in some newspapers certain statements as to what was transpiring in connection with matters of considerable international importance. How the news could have been discovered I do not know; it did not come from the government. I thought at the time that it was rather a bad thing that it should happen. In this instance I assure the right hon. gentleman that as far as I can ascertain the government is not responsible for this position.

As to the schedules, the usual course, I understand, is to move that the schedules be adopted, beginning with the province of Ontario. At the last redistribution the right hon. gentleman pointed out that the word was schedule, not schedules, but finally an adjustment was made by which each province was treated as a separate schedule. I propose, when that is done, to move an amendment wherever it may be necessary to make clear just what departure has been made from the schedule as printed. My constant effort during the day has been to have those amendments embodied in the form of a printed schedule that may be distributed to the members. Of course some constituencies are not affected at all except to the extent perhaps of a change in spelling, or a plural for a singular or vice versa. These are matters that ever since the bill came into this house have been engaging the attention of those responsible for them. It has been a rather heavy task for Mr. Castonguay and an equally heavy task for the law officers and those who have to double check it, those who are more expert than the chief electoral officer or the lawyers in the reading of maps, to make certain that the committee's conclusions are properly embodied in the bill. I certainly share the view of the right hon. gentleman, and I have expressed it frequently, that it is to be regretted that statements appear in the newspapers, statements which sometimes have some foundation in fact, but which are elaborated in such a way as to cause embarrassment and inconvenience in the transaction of public business before parliament has been apprised of the facts, or any opportunity given to members of parliament to consider or deal with them.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is there a possibility that these schedules will be ready for distribution at eight o'clock?

Mr. BENNETT: I am very hopeful that that will be so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad the Prime Minister has made the statement he has about what I have quoted from the press. Seeing that it has appeared and that we have been discussing the matter, I would at once like to make clear the facts about any alleged restoration of some 6,000 of population in Prince Albert, if this is what has been done. Should such be the case I would like to point out that in the first map brought in, 12,000 had been taken away from the original constituency. It is now said 6,000 are being restored. How the remaining 6,000 have been distributed I shall point out when we come to discuss the schedules.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course the right hon. gentleman realizes that there has been an increase of population in the last ten years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the present population.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, please leave that until after the adjournment.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PUBLIC BILLS AND ORDERS—OATHS OF ALLEGIANCE ACT AMENDMENT—ORDER DROPPED

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I understand that on account of the public bill standing on the order paper in my name the ordinary procedure would require that Your Honour take the chair at eight o'clock. I wish to say that I do not desire to proceed with the bill; I will not have time to do so, and I shall have to ask that the order be discharged. Your Honour will therefore not be compelled to assume the chair for that purpose.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

The house again in committee on Bill No. 2, to readjust the representation in the House of Commons—Right Hon. R. B. Bennett—Mr. Smoke in the chair.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): I wish to say a word or two with regard to the situation in the province of Nova Scotia. Hon. gentlemen discussed the matter this afternoon very briefly and I should like to point out what has been done in that province and at the same time to correct an impression which was left by the Prime Minister when he spoke the other day with reference to the situation down there. The right hon. gentleman's reference to Nova Scotia will be found at page 5344 of Hansard. He said:

Now, what had the committee to face in that province? There had to be faced the question whether or not you would break up, as might have been done, the county of Colchester, represented in this house by a Liberal. Add half of it to Cumberland and you would still be under your population. You would not be over the population according to the unit and you have eliminated the one seat that had to be eliminated on the mainland. What did the committee do? Because county lines are so highly regarded in that province it left Cumberland, Colchester and Digby; it left Antigonish-Guysborough with its 25,000 and left Shelburne-Yarmouth with the addition of the parish of Clare from the county of Digby. It then took the county of Digby, the county of Annapolis and the county of Kings and made them into one riding without disturbing the lines, and this new riding has a population of 50,000. It is said that according to the principles laid down, that is unfair but the committee felt that rather than dismember counties, rather than split them in two and put part of the population here and part there, it was better to have a county which was 6,000 over the unit than to have all the consequent confusion and ill feeling which would arise from following the course I have mentioned.

Then he speaks of an objection made by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short), which objection was voiced again this afternoon. I am afraid that my right hon. friend has been unintentionally misled in regard to what was done in Nova Scotia. He professes in that passage to be exceedingly solicitous in this matter, not wishing to dismember or to split up counties. He asks what had the committee to face, and says that the committee wanted to regard county lines; therefore, he says, they left Cumberland, Colchester and Digby. Let me tell my right hon. friend this—

Mr. BENNETT: Not Digby, Pictou.

Mr. RALSTON: Perhaps my right hon. friend meant Pictou; he said Digby. The Prime Minister is pointing out how desirable it is not to dismember counties, and he says that the committee were faced with this problem. They might have cut up Colchester, adding part of it to Cumberland, and I suppose he suggests adding part of Colchester to Pictou. But he says they left these counties. As a matter of fact, what they did do was precisely the thing against which he was protesting; that is to say, they dismembered the county of Digby. They cut it in two. Digby county, I would point out, comprises the district of Digby and the district of Clare. That county has been electing members to the local legislature ever since there have been elections there; they have been electing members all these years locally and they have also been electing federal members. At least, they have been electing federal members until the Conservative government in 1914 dismembered the county and put Clare in with Yarmouth and Digby along with Annapolis.

Looking at the figures giving the population, I find that the district of Digby has 10,231, and the district of Clare, to which my right hon. friend referred as the parish of Clare, has 8,122. It is not a parish at all but a district. As a matter of fact, for municipal purposes it is a municipality, the municipality of Clare, but Digby county is one provincial constituency and has been electing members for many years.

My hon. friends on the other side have more than once suggested that provincial lines should not be disturbed, but here provincial lines are being disturbed with a vengeance; for never until the redistribution of 1914 had that historic district been dismembered for purposes of federal representation. As I say, Digby and Clare together have elected a local representative as well as a federal representative throughout the years. After Clare was restored to Digby under the redistribution of 1924, we find once more, in spite of the protestations against the dismemberment of counties, that the county of Digby is being broken up with the result that Clare district goes to Shelburne-Yarmouth and Digby district to Annapolis-Kings. My right hon. friend asks: What had the committee to face? Well, this is what they had to face. They had to face this question: Shall we add a portion of Colchester on to Cumberland and thus endanger the seat of the hon. member for Cumberland, by adding on a portion of Colchester which would give a Liberal majority, or shall we on the other hand add the other portion of Colchester on to the county of Pictou and thus make another Liberal constituency? Shall we put the eastern portion of the county of Pictou on to the constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough and have possibly a Conservative majority in East Pictou outvoted by a Liberal majority in Antigonish-Guysborough? Well, they acted on exactly the principle which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister laid down as reported at page 5342 of Hansard:

Undoubtedly where two courses were open our friends chose the course that was more helpful to them.

That is the real explanation. It was not that they did not wish to split counties, because they have in fact done so. My right hon. friend interrupted a moment ago to say that he meant the county of Pictou where he spoke about leaving counties as they were. I suggest that it was not because he has any particular love for Pictou, and had it been regarded as advantageous I have no doubt the other course would have been followed. This however is the more "helpful" arrangement and this is the redistribution that has been made, with the result that Digby finds itself dismembered, with the municipality of Clare torn away and tacked on to Shelburne-Yarmouth, while in the other end Digby district is tacked on to Kings-Annapolis. My hon. friends had other alternatives such as I have spoken of with regard to Colchester and possibly with regard to Pictou. They had alternatives in connection with the readjustment of Halifax. They also had an alternative which would not have necessitated the dismembering of a single county line; yet they chose this particular course, with the result that Digby is wiped out. That is in the Annapolis valley, one of the richest parts of Nova Scotia, with a population who I believe treasure their representation. But, this notwithstanding, the Annapolis valley is made to lose a member at this time.

I sympathize with what my right hon. friend says, that it is undesirable to break up county lines, having people who have always voted together separated—people who, though they may have voted on opposite sides, have nevertheless voted in the same constituency and discussed their problems together. Suddenly they find that from one side of the street they are voting in one constituency, while from the other side of the street their friends are voting in another riding, though they are all in the same county. I can fully realize the undesirability of this and the heartburning there must be in counties that are thus dismembered. But that need not have been done here. What is the result? The result has been this. In the county of Hants-Kings, which is represented by my colleague (Mr. Ilsley), there was on the eastern end the county of Hants which give 189 Liberal majority. That county has been cut off this constituency. And what has been put in its place? A county and a half, that is to say, the county of Annapolis and half the county of Digby—with a Liberal majority, do you suppose? No, but 188 of a Conservative majority in that new western end. They cut off a Liberal majority of 189 and added a Conservative majority of 188. Two counties and a half have been put together. I do not think the hon. member for Hants-Kings was wrong when he protested against this disruption of his constituency.

Mr. SHORT: Is my hon. friend not aware that in the last election the county of Kings gave the hon. member a majority of over 900?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, but I know that this has been a fighting ground ever since it has been a county.

Mr. SHORT: It has given but two Conservative members.

Mr. RALSTON: In 1926 the Liberal majority was only about 100; in 1925 there was a large Conservative majority. The county of Kings has always been a fighting ground, although it gave the present hon. member a large majority at the last election. Generally speaking, that is the situation. They are now taking away the Liberal majority of 189 and putting in its place a Conservative majority of 188, so I say that the hon. member for Hants-Kings was quite justified in protesting against that injustice which is being done him at this time.

He had this further reason. He had run in two elections in the county of Hants; he knew the people and the people knew him. There has been a county and a half added and although he knows the people in a general way, he has not been in as close touch with them as he has been with those in his own constituency. So I say that he was perfectly justified in protesting against the disruption of his constituency.

This redistribution has been a selection from one of a number of different courses and, consciously or unconsciously, the committee has apparently succeeded in carrying out the ideas which have been expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). He reiterates this idea at page 5343 of Hansard when he says:

—when a choice has to be made in one of two given ways you must expect that choice to be made in the way that will be most advantageous to the party in power.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be well to take the preceding sentence which says "both equally right."

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry but it does not say that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I said before. I would not expect the hon. gentleman to make any reference to that, of course.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend can make any reference to it he likes.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that both ways were equally right.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend took pains to lay down without any qualification in two different places the principle that if there were two courses open, the course to be taken would be that which was advantageous to the party in power. Somewhere else he said something about the two courses being equally right. I think I have demonstrated that these two courses were not equally right, that the course taken was the one that was least right.

Mr. BENNETT: They all involved the dismemberment of counties.

Mr. RALSTON: I assure my right hon. friend that they did not all involve the dismemberment of counties. Arrangements could have been made which would not have involved the dismemberment of counties. The counties could have been left intact and the constituencies would have been no larger than those produced by this redistribution.

As a result of this redistribution the hon. member for Hants-Kings now has a constituency with a population of 50,885. If the county boundaries had not been disturbed a new constituency could have been arranged which would have been no larger. I should like to put on record for future reference the populations of the various rural constituencies in Nova Scotia as a result of this proposed redistribution. They are as follows:

Kings-Annapolis-Digby	50,885
Hants-Colchester	44,444
Lunenburg-Queens	42,286
Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare	41,546
Pictou	39,018
Cumberland	36,366
Inverness-Richmond	34,797
Victoria-Cape Breton	31,615
Antigonish-Guysborough	25,516

This new constituency of Kings-Annapolis-Digby will have a population of 50,885. Outside Hants-Colchester, which is 200 over the unit, this is the only rural constituency with a population above the unit of representation. Even the two Halifax seats have only an average population of 50,000 per member. This new constituency with its two and a half counties has a population equal to the city constituencies of Halifax. The Prime Minister says that the two courses were equally proper, but I say that they were not and that that redistribution should not have been made.

While I am on my feet I should like to refer to another matter mentioned by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) this afternoon and to which I referred last November when this bill received second reading. It refers particularly to the representation for the maritime provinces, and I do not intend to allude to the province of Nova Scotia alone. This matter perhaps should be discussed under section 2 of the bill, but if the committee will bear with me I shall take it up while I am on my feet.

[Mr. Ralston.]

As I stated last November, we from the maritime provinces feel that applying the strict letter of the bond as laid down in the British North America Act, the results of the representation provision have resulted in a real injustice being done to our provinces. I have not the figures before me for New Brunswick, but in 1867 Nova Scotia had a population of 364,000 and a representation of 19 members. In 1933 we have 513,000 of population and according to this bill we are to have 12 members. I am not finding any fault at the moment with the calculation, but the result is that while we have had an increase in population of 42 per cent there has been a decrease of 37 per cent in the number of members. I am quite satisfied that such a result was not contemplated by those who had to do with the drafting of the act of confederation. They selected the province of Quebec as a unit because they regarded that province, while not having the largest population, as one in which the variations in population would be normal. They did not anticipate the increases in territory which have taken place since confederation. When they put in subsection 4 of section 51, which provides that if the proportion of population of a province as compared with the population of Canada does not decrease by more than one-twentieth then there will be no reduction in members, as a saving clause they regarded it as sufficiently protective. They never anticipated that there would be such an increase in the unit of representation that the smaller provinces would have their original representation reduced. Let me read just a sentence from what was said by the Hon. George Brown in introducing the resolution with respect to representation. He said:

> The practical result will be that while Lower Canada certainly will not be less and the lower provinces may increase in population, they cannot decrease in the number of representatives.

I ask hon. members to note that particularly.

> It keeps the house within a reasonable limit;

Sir Alexander Galt, three years before confederation, in dealing with its terms, said:

> We have supposed that the population of Lower Canada being tolerably equable in its character, would afford the best basis. But having respect to the rapid increase of Upper Canada, we think the lower provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio. Therefore the lower provinces would have the same as they have now—unless in the very improbable case of any one falling off by five per cent or more.

That decrease, when the fathers of confederation framed the bill, had to do with the four original provinces, namely, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario. It was held by the privy council, I think in 1905, that that fractional proportion should be taken rather to have regard to the whole of the Dominion of Canada as it at present exists, and applying it in that way in the maritime provinces we are not protected by the saving clause, but our representation has been steadily going down.

I have read what was thought at the time of confederation. What has happened? A yardstick was set up as the unit of representation. That yardstick was this: Quebec will always have sixty-five members and the representation of the other provinces will be based thereon. The fathers of confederation did not anticipate that in 1898 more than 100,000 square miles of territory would be added to that yardstick, nor that in 1912 something like 400,000 square miles more would be added to it, so that now we find our unit of measurement completely out of line with what it was at the time section 51 of the British North America Act was drafted.

We have in section 51, subsection 3 of the British North America Act as emended in 1871, a provision for altering the limits of provinces. This is what it states:

> The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution, or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

Let me point out that neither in 1898 nor in 1912 was provision, as is permitted in the subsection I have just read, made respecting the effect and operation of the increase of boundaries in relation to the provinces affected thereby. The result is, as I say, that we now find our yardstick completely changed with the consequence that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are going down hill in the matter of representation notwithstanding the fact of our increase in population.

Mr. BENNETT: But the population of the newly added territory in Quebec was deducted in determining the unit. The hon. member knows the statistician was very careful about that.

Mr. RALSTON: I am pointing that out in another connection, and it is this: In Quebec there is a possibility of increase in population by reason of the very large addition of territory. In Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island there is no such chance of increase. The other day I got from the Canada Year Book some rather startling figures. What did I find? Hon. members may or may not be surprised at this, but I was. I find that the most densely populated province is Prince Edward Island, as one would expect, with a population of 40 to the square mile. The next province in density is Nova Scotia with 24.71. The tabulation is as follows:

Province—	Density of population per square mile
Prince Edward Island	40
Nova Scotia	24.71
New Brunswick	14.73
Ontario	9.45
Quebec	5.04
Saskatchewan	3.37
Manitoba	3.11
Alberta	2.94
British Columbia	1.98

That is, I think, from the Canada Year Book of 1932. I ask hon. members to visualize where Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces would be without a provision for a minimum to which I shall refer in a moment, if the other provinces keep on growing and acquire any density of population comparable with that which Nova Scotia has at the present time. When they begin to fill up their waste spaces, where will Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces be in the matter of representation?

Mr. BENNETT: They will always have the number in the Senate.

Mr. RALSTON: It will be said to me, as the Prime Minister mentions, that to some extent the situation began to be realized in 1914. That was not with regard to Nova Scotia, as he knows; it was rather with regard to Prince Edward Island, and at that time an amendment was passed providing that a minimum of not less than the number of senators should be given to every province. But remember that at that time Nova Scotia had a representation of sixteen. I do not believe it was anticipated then that in 1933 we would be passing an act giving Nova Scotia twelve members and it looks as if in 1943 we shall be passing an act giving her ten members, or down to the limit. That minimum is not adequate, having regard to the change which is taking place in the other provinces. When I point out that the density of population is so sparse in the other provinces, that simply means every other province than the maritimes has an opportunity to grow and fill up its vacant lands. We are not, I agree, filled to saturation, but Prince Edward Island is pretty well populated; it has forty per square mile; Nova Scotia has over twenty-four, so that we are coming towards saturation for a province which is rural rather than urban. Before long I believe the necessary procedure will be taken for an amendment to the British North America Act providing that the minimum be increased.

Hon. members will say: Well, that was in the pact of confederation; representation by population, is, after all, the rule by which we go. I would point out to the committee that that is not so; that Manitoba when it came in in 1870 had sufficient population for one member according to the unit of representation at that time, but it did not get just one member; it got four. Population was not considered as the deciding factor in the matter of representation. In 1881 Manitoba had a population sufficient for three members and it was given five. Prince Edward Island in 1873 had a population for five members and was given six as one of the terms of its coming into the union. British Columbia is perhaps the most outstanding case. When it came in it had a population of 40,000. It got six members although as a matter of fact that population, according to the unit of representation at that time, would have been given only two. In 1881 British Columbia had a population entitling it to two members and again it got six. Further than that, as hon. members know, an express provision was inserted in the Imperial order in council admitting British Columbia, that it should never have less than six members. Therefore, I submit to the committee that population has not been the exclusive yardstick at least with regard to provinces entering subsequent to confederation.

What I am pointing out to the committee is this, that the minimum which was provided in 1914 is not adequate, not fair, not a proper minimum having regard to the importance of the maritime provinces in confederation. I realize that one cannot altogether alter the basis of representation, but I feel this committee and the country will consider and consider sympathetically a suggestion that the maritime provinces should have the representation which they had when they came into confederation, or at least a fair and adequate minimum at least comparable with their status in confederation and their economic and geographical importance.

Mr. BENNETT: That would give 85,000 people five members in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, I know, and I say I am not tying myself to any definite number at the moment; the number is a matter for consideration. I am endeavouring to show that in the matter of representation as it stands at present we are facing the possibility of a reduction to ten members perhaps the next time, and that that is not adequate representation for either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. Let me read just one paragraph from a speech that was delivered by Sir Robert Borden, then Mr. R. L. Borden, in this house in 1907, as reported at page 2202 of Hansard. He was speaking to a motion which was made by Mr. Hughes, a member from Prince Edward Island, to the effect that the maritime provinces should be entitled to a minimum representation based on the number with which they came into confederation. First of all he speaks of the Australian system, and points out that in Australia they provided in the constitution itself for an irreducible minimum. He says:

This—

Referring to the Australian system:

—is a direct illustration of the principle which has been contended for by my hon. friend from King's and by every hon. gentleman from the maritime provinces, and it seems to me that it would not be going too far to comply with the principle, and it would not be too much for this government to take immediate action—it might well have taken action before this—to consult the other provinces as to whether or not there would be objection to a proposal of that kind. I am inclined to think that the larger provinces would answer a question of that kind very much in the spirit which the Prime Minister himself has expressed and would be inclined to give the three maritime provinces, whose population has not increased so rapidly as that of other parts of the dominion, representation which should never be smaller than at the time when those provinces entered confederation.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking on the same occasion, gave utterance to very much the same sentiment. He said, as reported at page 2199 of Hansard of 1907, volume 2, that this is a matter in which we can afford to be generous. He said:

For my part I say without hesitation that this is a matter in which we can afford to be generous. Even if the balance of representation by population be not absolutely and minutely kept, even if Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia or New Brunswick should have one or two members on the floor of this house beyond the number provided by the original constitution, the granting of such excess of representation would perhaps be a gracious and generous act and one which would redound to the benefit of confederation. But this house ought to hesitate in passing judgment until it has before it the views of all the provinces affected.

That request was made again at the provincial conference in 1913, when a resolution favouring that principle was passed but afterwards withdrawn. I say that the number of the minimum is a matter for consideration, but two of the original provinces of the dominion, hemmed in as they are by the sea, and as to which it was not contemplated that the present yardstick should apply, with no chance to expand and being the most densely populated parts of the dominion, should I submit have more adequate representation.

My hon. friend from Richelieu (Mr. Cardin) the other day expressed the view, in which I think the right hon. the Prime Minister concurred, that there ought to be before very long a general readjustment with regard to representation. Whether or not Quebec will remain the yardstick is a question, in view of the situation which has arisen in Quebec because of its increased boundaries, and increased population. Quebec under present conditions of territory and population being held down to sixty-five members makes one doubt whether the fathers of confederation correctly visualized the future when they drafted the provisions of the British North America Act regarding representation.

I would like to point out that the three provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are the only three provinces in the whole list of provinces of this dominion whose representation has been reduced below that with which they went into confederation. Let me put on Hansard the figures. Ontario had 82 and has 82 to-day; Quebec had 65, and has 65 to-day; Nova Scotia had 19, and in 1871 that was increased to 21, and under this bill it will have 12; New Brunswick had 15 and under this bill will have 10; Prince Edward Island had 6, and under this bill will have 4, the number under the last redistribution; Manitoba had 4, and under this bill will have 17; Saskatchewan and Alberta had 4 originally and under this bill will have 17. British Columbia had 6, and under this bill will have 14.

May I say one further word? It may be said that this is not in the pact of confederation, although I do not believe that will be said. I believe this is a matter as to which the letter of the bond may well be disregarded in view of changed conditions. The letter of the bond has not been adhered to closely, particularly in the last two or three years, when it has become necessary on account of emergent conditions to make special arrangements so that the combined strength of the whole dominion should be exerted for the benefit of particular parts. The letter of the bond has not been observed and nobody has insisted upon it being observed in the matter of relief. The letter of the bond was not observed in the matter of the return of the natural resources which were the property of the dominion. The letter of the bond has not been observed with regard to the extraordinary efforts which have had to be made in order that our people may be clothed and fed and in order that the emergent conditions in which we find ourselves may be met.

So, Mr. Chairman, although I realize it cannot be remedied by this parliament, I want to put on record once more what has already been put on by representatives from the maritime provinces before, namely, a plea that reconsideration should be given to this matter of representation of the maritime provinces, of those provinces which originally came into confederation, particularly Nova Scotia and New Brunswick which formed two of the cornerstones of that edifice, so that they may have adequate representation to which by reason of their contribution to the dominion, by reason of their geographical position, by reason of the social contribution they have made, by reason of their resources, their economic position and their importance, I think they are entitled under confederation.

May I just in that connection mention what has been said by one of our representatives in the past? The Hon. Mr. Pugsley, speaking in this house on June 11, 1914, at page 5305 of Hansard, said:

> We may be wrong in this,—

I do not admit we are wrong. I believe that all the members from the maritime provinces and the members generally will say that we are right:

> —but I should not be doing my duty as a representative of my province if I did not bring the matter to the attention of the house and say that I do not believe that the representatives of the lower provinces will acquiesce in that view. I believe that they will continue to raise the point again and again until they secure what they believe to be justice.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to intervene in this discussion because I have always taken the attitude that if the house appoints a committee in which it has every confidence, and that committee spends weeks and months in close and attentive study of its work, unless there are sound reasons to the contrary the report of that committee ought to be accepted. I must say that I had every confidence in the report of that committee, and without the slightest desire to make invidious comparisons I must say that I had complete confidence in the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith), who represented the province of Nova Scotia from this side of the house.

But one or two observations by my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) require a word or two in reply, but I shall endeavour to compress what I have to say in the fewest possible sentences because it is not my desire at this stage of the session to delay the committee.

My hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth, in his opening remarks, made a statement capable of a party and political interpretation which the facts do not warrant. For example, he said that under the Conservative redistribution of 1914 the county of Pictou was dismembered. Let me point out to my hon. friend that that statement is not accurate. It is true that there was a Conservative redistribution in 1914, but my hon. friend has either overlooked or forgotten or neglected to remind the committee that the committee on redistribution at that time had upon it, as the committee of to-day has, representatives of the different parties in the house, and the Liberal party in the province of Nova Scotia was at that time represented by a very astute politician, E. M. Macdonald, afterwards, as is well known, a member of the administration of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). That committee brought in a report, and if hon. members opposite are interested they will find reference to that report in the journals of the house for the year 1914, at page 673. It is as follows:

> Your committee have prepared and unanimously agreed to report upon the description and the return of members contained in the several electoral divisions, which are set forth in the schedules hereto appended, in respect to the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Yukon Territory and upon the description and the return of the several electoral divisions which are set forth in the schedule hereto appended, in respect to the province of Nova Scotia, with the exception of that portion of the last named schedule which relates to the return of two members for the proposed united counties of South Cape Breton and Richmond, in the province of Nova Scotia, to which a majority of your committee have agreed.

In other words the division of Digby county was at that time agreed upon, not only in the committee by Mr. Macdonald, the then member for Pictou, but unanimously by all parties in the house. I recall that we had a whole day's discussion with regard to the constituency of Richmond West-Cape Breton. But there was not one word of objection taken either then or afterwards, in the House of Commons or in the country, so far as I am aware, with respect to the division of the constituency of Digby.

So, for the purpose of accuracy I wish to correct my hon. friend, because he has left the impression that the division of the constituency of Digby in the first instance was attributable to the Conservative administration of that day. My hon. friend characteristically has left himself in this position: He has taken exception to the redistribution, particularly with regard to the manner in which it has been effected so far as the mainland of the province of Nova Scotia is concerned, but he has taken care not to place on record any alternative proposal. To begin with I point out that salient fact. My hon. friend attempted to suggest that the Prime Minister had not been true to his professions when he suggested that we should maintain county boundaries. That has always been construed, not only in the province of Nova Scotia but elsewhere, as municipal boundaries —county boundaries if possible, but if a county has to be severed, then you must come to recognize the municipality.

Mr. RALSTON: It does not have to be severed.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend states it does not have to be severed, but I point out to him that the first variance which took place in Nova Scotia was in Digby, and was agreed to by all parties. But what are the alternatives? I will tell him the alternative suggested by his colleague upon the committee, the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley). His alternative was what?—to truncate the constituency of Pictou, that is to say, without reference to county, municipal, township or other boundaries, to sever it by drawing a lead pencil through the map. That was the suggestion made by the hon. member for Hants-Kings, and the only concrete proposal in opposition to the one suggested.

For the first time, so far as I am aware, my hon. friend has indicated that the redistribution in the province of Nova Scotia was dictated by political motives. I can assure him that a careful and close analysis of the results of redistribution as effected by this bill will indicate that the Conservative party, assuming that at the next election the voting population remains in the same position as it is to-day, stands to lose and not to gain by the proposals. In the first place, on the island of Cape Breton there are four seats to-day represented by Conservatives. One seat has been eliminated, and to that course I note my hon. friend has taken no exception. Coming to the mainland another seat had to go. We might have played politics in another way with the constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough. My hon. friend has suggested that it was for political reasons that we did not carve Colchester in the manner his colleague suggests we should carve Pictou. I say it was because there was no natural boundary by which we could do it, as there was in the county of Digby. What we have done is this: We have placed an hon. member of this house, who has represented his constituency with satisfaction to his party and to his constituents—I refer to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short)—in a position whereby, if he is again a candidate, at an advanced period of his life he will have to take on a very onerous task to retain the representation of his constituency. I am not for one moment suggesting that the proposed constituency of Digby-Annapolis-Kings represents a fair division of the population as between constituencies—not by any means. But unless we are going to divide the constituencies on the basis of counting heads, for one or two reasons which I shall indicate, no fairer proposal could be made. In the first place my hon. friend has referred to that constituency as being purely rural. I take exception to his description. It has within its borders seven incorporated towns, towns of some importance. Many of them have rich historic associations. Beginning with the town of Windsor, which formerly was the seat of King's college, we continue and pass through the town of Wolfville, the seat of Acadia university.

Mr. RALSTON: Are you speaking of the new constituency?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Then you should leave out Windsor.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, quite so. We begin with the university town of Wolfville, then go on to Kentville, Annapolis and Digby. Not only is there a comparatively large urban population, but there is no constituency to be found within the confines of the maritime provinces which irrespective of its size, is so compact from the point of view of community of interest and culture. They are a highly cultured people; their interests are common. There is no point of conflict between any two of these constituencies. The same may be said with respect to the constituency of Colchester-Hants. They come together naturally; they are contiguous. A portion of east Hants I venture to say does as much as if not more trading with, and has more communication with the town of Truro in the neighbouring county of Colchester to-day, and has for years, than it has had and will have with respect to the town of Windsor, the shire town of the county of Hants.

I do not desire to say any more on that phase of the matter, except to reiterate that with the possible exception of the Halifax Chronicle, which will always of course take an extreme partisan political point of view—I have not seen it with respect to this proposed redistribution—it has remained for my hon. friend to suggest for the first time in the house or out of it that there has been anything political in the manner in which this redistribution has been carried out.

My hon. friend has referred to the reduction of representation for the maritime provinces. I do not propose to follow him in detail with respect to the various phases of that question, and particularly with respect to the feelings of the people in the maritime provinces, although it is a very interesting subject. But let me say that any argument my hon. friend has to propose looking to the remedies which he suggested should be addressed to the committee on redistribution. That committee should make its report to the house, and as a result there should be a joint address, which would result finally in an amendment to the British North America Act. This ground has all been canvassed before very fully. I recall that very well because I had the honour of being a member of the redistribution committee in 1914. That subject was argued before us at that time at very great length. If my hon. friend will refer to the report of that committee he will find the following:

> Your committee also, have had under consideration the claim of the province of Prince Edward Island to have its representation restored to six members, as at the date of its entrance into confederation. The case on behalf of the province was very ably presented by the Honourable J. A. Matheson, the premier and the Honourable John McLean, member of the council. We have been unable to find that the case presented would justify us in recommending an amendment of the British North America Act for that purpose. For this reason, we have concluded that the representation of Prince Edward Island must be reduced to three members, in accordance with the provisions of section 51 of the British North America Act.

Let me say to my hon. friend that that report containing the paragraph I have just recited was agreed to unanimously by all parties on that committee.

> We are of opinion, however, that it was undesirable and indeed incongruous that any province in Canada should have a similar representation in the House of Commons than in the Senate; and therefore recommend and report that an humble address should be presented to His Majesty praying; That the British North America Act, 1867, be amended by the enactment of the following section:—

51 (A) Notwithstanding anything in this act a province shall always be entitled to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators representing such province.

I hope I shall not be accused of immodesty if I say that I was the author of that amendment. It was moved by me finally for this reason: that after all the representations had been made on behalf of Prince Edward Island and the other provinces with respect to the representation of the maritime provinces it was felt that the committee could not properly recommend that those provinces have restored to them their original number of members; but it was felt, as this report indicates, that it was incongruous that there should be a larger representation in the Senate than in the House of Commons in any province, hence this amendment. And I may say to my hon. friend had it not been for that amendment Prince Edward Island would now have two members instead of four; in other words, it has double the representation to-day that it otherwise would have.

The province of New Brunswick has now reached the irreducible minimum of ten members as a result of that amendment. It is true that the people of the maritime provinces very greatly regret that their representation in this house is smaller numerically than it was at the time of confederation, or after confederation for that matter; for, as pointed out by my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth, we had at one time as many as twenty-one members from the province of Nova Scotia. Yet as a matter of history we must not lose sight of this fact which had very considerable weight with the committee of that day, that although the House of Commons is very important, perhaps the most important branch of parliament apart from His Majesty's representative, we must remember that parliament consists, in addition to the representative of His Majesty, of the Senate and the House of Commons; and that the Senate has just as much voice in matters of legislation as the House of Commons. And whatever the position may be as far as representation in the House of Commons is concerned as between confederation and to-day, we have, not only in the province of Nova Scotia, but in each of the maritime provinces, the same representation in the Senate now as we had in 1867. Furthermore this fact must be borne in mind, that to a very great extent there is a community of interest between the historic province of Quebec and the maritime provinces; and there are twenty-four senators allotted to the maritime provinces under the constitution and twenty-four to the province of Quebec. Thus we have in those two older provinces of Canada half the Senate representation of Canada. Furthermore, to present that in a still more striking way, it may be said we have to-day as many senators in the maritime provinces as in the whole area west of the great lakes. That is a contributing factor of very great importance in maintaining to the people of the maritime provinces and the eastern part of Canada their opportunity to have full voice in the parliament of Canada. I may say it was one consideration which weighed with me very greatly in concurring in the report of the committee on redistribution in 1914.

There is much more that I could say, but my purpose in rising was only that of making one or two observations in reply to my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth, and I shall be content with that for the moment.

Mr. RALSTON: What I pointed out to my hon. friend with regard to Digby-Clare was that his leader had protested that they were anxious to avoid dismembering counties, and that the underlying principle which caused this particular redistribution was the desire to avoid doing so. I pointed out, and I reiterate it, that under a Conservative government in 1914 Clare was first taken from Digby. My hon. friend says the committee consented, but the government was in power, and we have heard enough these days to know it has control—

Mr. BENNETT: But it was a committee of the house that consented. It was done by consent of all parties.

Mr. RHODES: Does my hon. friend suggest that the government of the day throttled the hon. member for Pictou?

Mr. RALSTON: I am not suggesting that; I am pointing out what was done in regard to Clare, and I say it falls strangely from the lips of the right hon. leader of the government to suggest that they are not dismembering the county, yet the 1914 redistribution was the first time Clare was taken from Digby. I am pointing out that this is the second time, in spite of the fact that the right hon. leader of the government says that they are not dismembering counties, and that they want to preserve county lines. My hon. friend is ingenious, as he always is; he says: "Oh, by county lines we mean municipal lines." He knows what we mean; we mean the lines of the constituency that elects the provincial representative, in order that the people who are voting together in provincial elections shall vote together in dominion elections. I am pointing out that by this redistribution he has made, the citizens of Clare will vote with their own county of Digby for provincial members but will vote with Shelburne-Yarmouth for the federal representative. That is the dismemberment which his leader was talking about the other day, which they desired to avoid.

With regard to the people of Kings-Hants-Digby, my hon. friend cannot say anything more complimentary or worthy of them than I can or anyone else who lives in Nova Scotia. They are admirable people in every respect, the very best citizens, none better in Nova Scotia. But my hon. friend surely does not suggest that the people of Digby Neck for instance are engaged in the same occupations as those in Hants-Kings—

Mr. SHORT: They are just as fine a class of people as any others anywhere.

Mr. RALSTON: Certainly they are, but my hon. friend was talking about them being engaged in the same industries as the people of Kings-Annapolis.

Mr. RHODES: No, I did not say that.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend was making the argument for this particular division. We have been told by the leader of the government, that they can make any division they like, but they should not attempt to justify it on grounds inconsistent with the facts. I was taking the position, and I repeat it, that my hon. friend has carved up this constituency of Hants-Kings by taking off from Hants-Kings a considerable Liberal majority at one end and adding one and a half counties at the other with a Conservative majority. The country can come to any conclusion it likes with respect to the motives when the facts are known. My hon. friend has been particularly nimble in getting by altogether the suggestion I made, that you can do this without disturbing any county boundary. He knows the province of Nova Scotia as well as I do, and he is well aware that it can be done, making a constituency no larger than the constituency as proposed, and it would not break up the county of Digby at all. My hon. friend slides by that suggestion however and talks about five incorporated towns.

Mr. RHODES: Seven.

Mr. RALSTON: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. SHORT: Seven.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, there may be seven in the new one, but so far as that goes it does not make it necessarily urban. These are small towns which serve the surrounding country but they do not make it an urban constituency in the sense in which we generally understand that term. The situation, after what my hon. friend has said, is doubly clear. Hon. gentlemen opposite missed entirely the opportunities they had to deal with the situation in Nova Scotia without in any way interfering with county boundaries; but for some reason or other—let us leave the reasons to the judgment of the people—they have decided to make the redistribution in this way, thus dismembering the county of Digby, after all the protestations of the Prime Minister.

Perhaps I misunderstood my hon. friend's attitude; he spoke rather forcefully. I was surprised to hear him take what appeared to me to be a position rather hostile to my contention with regard to representation in the maritime provinces. The attitude which I understood the hon. gentleman to take was not perhaps the attitude he meant to imply; at least it should not be his attitude. The fact that he was the author of the minimum resolution with regard to the provision making our representation not less than the number of senators does not in my opinion count one way or the other with regard to the point I was making, namely, that the minimum was too small, and I should have hoped that he and other hon. members also would join with me in urging that when the British North America Act is to be amended some readjustment be made in this respect. I made my representations when the second reading of this bill was being considered. The committee on redistribution cannot change that situation; it must be done by means of an amendment to the British North America Act, so that all we can do now is to urge the matter in the house. I regret therefore that my hon. friend did not receive my suggestions in the spirit in which I hoped they would be received and in the spirit in which I hoped the committee would receive them. I believe that ten members for the province of Nova Scotia is too small. It is all very well to talk about quality, but Nova Scotia is entitled to a respectably large body of representatives in order that its voice may be heard and the views of the province be adequately put forward on the floor of this house, having regard to the position in confederation of Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces. I repeat, in my opinion a minimum of ten is too small. It should be increased, and regard should be had to the fact that whereas we went into confederation with nineteen members, with an increase of nearly forty-two per cent in population, our representation is smaller today than at that time. On the other hand, every other province outside the maritimes has maintained or has had consistent increases in representation. That is why I urge that the minimum be increased for the maritimes, and some day sooner or later—sooner I hope—I trust that my hon. friend will join with me and other members from the maritimes and other parts of the country as well in an endeavour to have justice done in this regard.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: This afternoon, before my hon. friend came into the house, I made some observations with regard to the redistribution bill as it affects his province and mine. I am not talking politics in this connection, but I would ask the hon. gentleman whether there was anything in the British North America Act in 1924 whereby his native province and mine should have been deprived of a representative in this parliament. That representative might have been Liberal or Conservative; I am not concerned about that, but—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Not at all. I wish to have the united support of all members of Nova Scotia in an effort to have the largest number of representatives in this House of Commons from that province, whether they be Liberals or Conservatives.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know whether my hon. friend was here when I spoke, but I did say, on the second reading of the bill, that we felt that if in the last parliament a calculation had been made strictly in accordance with the British North America Act, the added district of Quebec being excluded, we might have had another member.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: It is not a question of might; it is a matter of absolute mathematical fact. I am not attaching any blame to my hon. friend because he was not in the house at the time, nor was I here. But the fact is that there was stolen from the province of Nova Scotia, if I may use an extravagant term, a representative who might have been Liberal or Conservative, it matters not which. But that was done at a time when my hon. friend's leader was in power and when there were sixteen Liberals in Nova Scotia.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know what the hon. gentleman is trying to imply. I would refer him to the Minister of Finance who sets such store by the unanimous report of a committee. I think he will find that the committee of 1924 was unanimous.

Mr. RHODES: While I should be quite content with the interpretation which the remarks I made a moment ago will bear as disclosed in Hansard, I owe it to myself not to allow to pass unnoticed the suggestion of my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth that I was hostile to the attitude he took. I thought I made it clear that I was quite in sympathy with the aspirations of the people of the maritimes in this respect. What I did say at the outset was that it was idle to discuss the question in an academic way in committee at this stage. I clearly pointed out that the procedure would be to make representations before the committee on redistribution and have that committee report to the house, as a result of which there would be an address which would lead to an amendment to the British North America Act; and I pointed out that this was the procedure that was followed in 1914.

Mr. SHORT: I wish to remove a misapprehension that has been created by my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth. He would lead the committee to believe that the county of Kings, added to my constituency, is a Conservative county, but I want to point out that only twice since confederation has the county of Kings ever returned a Conservative member to this house. It was traditionally Liberal, but in the year 1882 a Conservative was elected in the person of D. B. Woodworth, and never again until 1911, in the reciprocity election, was there a Conservative elected there. In that year A. de Witt Foster beat Sir Frederick Borden in that constituency. At every election since then the county of Kings has given a Liberal majority, and in 1930 it gave the present member a majority of over 900. How my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth can think that it is an advantage to the Conservative party to have that county added to Digby-Annapolis I cannot understand. I regret also that we are losing two members again this year but I would point out that we also lost two under the redistribution made by my hon. friend's party in 1924 when there were sixteen Liberals representing the province of Nova Scotia. You cannot find a word on the records to show that they made any complaint at that time; they were perfectly satisfied to lose two members.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has not read the records. If he will do so he will find a resolution on the very subject introduced by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff).

Mr. MACDOUGALL: And supported by how many members from Nova Scotia? I have read the record.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend can look; I cannot tell.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I have read the record.

Mr. SHORT: Because we are losing two members under this redistribution my hon. friend considers it is a terrible thing. I regret that just as much as he does, but the fact is that our population has decreased to such an extent that we must bear the penalty until the constitution is changed. I cannot understand why he should blame this government for Nova Scotia losing two members when the same thing happened in 1924.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend misunderstood me entirely; I did not blame the government.

Mr. SHORT: At that time Nova Scotia was represented by sixteen Liberals.

Mr. GOBEIL: Just before six o'clock the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) stated that the delay in reprinting the bill was due to certain changes made and agreements arrived at at a late hour in connection with some of the provinces, including the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) then got up and said that as far as Quebec was concerned no agreement had been arrived at and that the bill was now as bad as it was before. As a member of the Quebec subcommittee I cannot allow that statement to pass unanswered because it is absolutely inaccurate and contrary to the facts. With all due respect to the hon. member for Quebec East may I tell him that as he was not a member of that committee it was quite possible that certain agreements might have been arrived at without him being consulted. That is exactly what happened. On Wednesday night between eleven and eleven thirty o'clock there was a meeting of several members from the city of Montreal, including the hon. members for Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père), Maisonneuve (Mr. Jean), St. Mary (Mr. Desiauriers) and Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier). I do not think these hon. members will contradict me when I say that a final agreement was arrived at for the city of Montreal. Before leaving the room to go up to the committee room to see if the bill had been sent to the printers I asked these gentlemen, "Is this a final agreement?" and every one of them said, "Yes." I went up to the committee room but as we could not supply the boundaries at that time the matter had to be left over until the next morning. That is one of the reasons why the bill was late.

There have been included in the bill several changes suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite. For instance, the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin) suggested the other day that the counties of L'Assomption, Joliette and Montcalm should be joined together. We did that. Certain changes were made in the county of Terrebonne by returning the parish of Ste. Therese to that county. Several other changes suggested by hon. friends opposite were made. When the hon. member suggests that the bill is just as bad now as it was before, he is not paying a compliment to his friends on his own side of the committee. I think this offers an illustration of the good faith of certain hon. members opposite in their work in connection with this bill.

Mr. DUPUIS: To whom does the hon. member refer when he mentions hon. members from this side? I want him to name them.

Mr. GOBEIL: If the hon. member had been a little more patient his desire would have been met, as I was just starting to give them. I am pleased to say that several of our hon. friends opposite have shown a real desire to arrive at a compromise, but I must say also that since the first time the hon. member for Quebec East appeared before the committee I have felt personally that he had no desire to arrive at an agreement and that whatever concessions were made would not satisfy him.

Mr. CARDIN: Will all due respect to the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Gobeil), I am afraid that I must say that he is not reciting exactly what happened. Certain suggestions were made with regard to Montreal and certain points were in agreement between the representatives, but my information is that there was no final agreement and that the bill as it is now printed and the amendments as now made are not what was understood when several members from Montreal met with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DURANLEAU: In what respect?

Mr. CARDIN: As far as the other changes are concerned, I am afraid that the hon. member for Compton is not correct. But why should we discuss these points now? Let us dispose of the clauses of the bill and when we reach the schedules we can discuss the new proposals and the amendments contained in the reprinted schedules.

Mr. GOBEIL: I only wanted to correct an inaccurate statement.

Mr. CARDIN: The statement made by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) was absolutely correct.

Mr. GOBEIL: It was absolutely inaccurate and incorrect. I was not alone in the room; there were at least eight or ten other members.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We see what kind of diplomat we had on that committee.

Mr. GOBEIL: Those who were there do not deny the statement.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was not worth denying.

Mr. CYRILLE DUMAINE (Bagot), (Translation): Mr. Chairman, listening to the hon. member for Dorchester, one would gather that his friends to the right made all the sacrifices in the present redistribution.

I have followed the debate on Bill No. 2 with a great deal of interest and every time the Conservatives spoke they always posed as victims. They always said they were giving all the advantages they could to the members on the left. In my opinion, the government made no sacrifice for the left, or for French-Canadians or for the rural representation of the province of Quebec.

This bill affects all counties in the province of Quebec—I say: all counties except those represented by Conservative members. Not a single constituency represented by a Conservative is affected by the present redistribution of the province of Quebec. The Conservatives most effected by this bill are those whose counties were not touched, and in those cases where their counties were altered, this was done to enable them to secure a larger majority or to eliminate Liberals who might hamper them.

With respect to the present bill, Mr. Chairman, I believed the Conservatives supposed to be most influential in Quebec would face the situation like brave men, that they would retain their ridings such as they were in 1930 and that they would face the same electors. If we take the case of the ministers from the province of Quebec, we note that they each carve out a small Conservative fief for themselves, and, I, the member for Bagot, am the victim of this weakness of the ministers representing my province.

If the hon. minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) had retained his county of Chambly-Verchères, the county of St. Hyacinthe-Rouville would have remained as it was with a fine population. The hon. minister of Marine abandoned the county of Verchères to take only part of the county of Rouville, and because of that, the county of Bagot, which is a small yet fine county must almost as a matter of course be added to the county of St. Hyacinthe. The people have the same mentality, the same customs, I might say the same hopes; it is almost a natural union. Yet the county of Bagot which existed long before Confederation, which was established in 1854, is entitled to remain on the electoral map of the province of Quebec and the country. I see no reason why a new county that will not have a large population is established in the north of the province, when they disdained to retain an old county such as Bagot.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Is he aware that the county of Bagot has a population of only 16,914 according to the last census returns?

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Will the hon. member dare claim that this county should not be united to another?

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): The hon. minister will allow me to tell him that there was a very easy way of retaining the county of Bagot by uniting it not with Drummond-Arthabaska which has a population in excess of 53,000 but with Drummond only, this being a rural riding. The county of Bagot skirts by almost its whole width the county of Drummond, and it would have been possible to constitute a county of Drummond-Bagot with a population in excess of 33,000, including Drummondville. Drummond and Bagot would have formed a county where Liberals as well as Conservatives would have had a chance of retaining their identity. As I stated at the outset of my remarks, all sacrifices are made by the Liberal members who now represent these counties in this Parliament. I believe the union of Drummond and Bagot would have satisfied everybody.

Mr. Chairman, to amplify my argument, allow me to remark that the county of Bagot is united in its entirety with the county of St. Hyacinthe. I am happy over this. It had been originally proposed to include the parish of St. Pie in another county. I protested to the Committee with my hon. friend from St. Hyacinthe-Rouville (Mr. Fontaine) and the matter was settled. The county of Bagot united to that of St. Hyacinthe constitutes too large a population and the Government was compelled to dismember the county of St. Hyacinthe and place part of it, five parishes and one village, in the county of Richelieu. The parishes of St. Barnabe, St. Jude, St. Bernard, St. Charles and St. Denis belonged to the county of St. Hyacinthe since Confederation and even prior to that. Provincially, they belong to this county; their county council meets at St. Hyacinthe and their judicial district and shire-town are located there. They are detached from this county and annexed to the county of Richelieu. I know these parishes will be welcome in the county of the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin), but I also know that the people of those parishes would rather remain in the county of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, because they would not feel, I will not say like exiles but like strangers in another county. The parish of St. Barnabe is barely six miles from St. Hyacinthe; the parish of St. Jude, 8 or 9 miles; the parish of St. Denis is more distant, but citizens of these parishes will be compelled, when regional conventions or meetings are held, to leave localities situated 6 or 7 miles from St. Hyacinthe and travel a distance of 30 to 35 miles to attend a convention at Sorel.

I consider that such changes should not be made for the mere pleasure of one man or to oblige him, whether he is a minister or a member. Each county should retain its citizens who should form only one faimly.

I have no protest to make with respect to Rouville.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): If my hon. friend will allow me, we will settle this point. What would the hon. member for Richelieu have done with his population of 21,000?

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): It would have been given to Yamaska.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I asked the question to the hon. member who is now speaking.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): I will tell the hon. minister that this county could have been added, either to Yamaska or to another county. I do not know the adjoining counties well enough to answer him in that connection.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): And what of Nicolet?

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): Nicolet could have remained as it was; it had a sufficient population, even larger than the populations of Stanstead, Shefford, Dorchester and Compton which are left to the Conservatives.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): And the new county of Chapleau?

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): And the new county of Chapleau will have a population of only 21,000.

It is not necessary to throw a whole province into confusion in order to increase the population of one county and assure the election of a Conservative. These changes could have been effected very easily. The redrafting of the electoral map of the province of Quebec could have consisted in giving two additional counties to the city of Montreal. All the members of the Island of Montreal, Liberals as well as Conservatives, were agreeable to accept the addition of two counties only. Two counties could have been merged without trouble, Bagot and Yamaska, or Bagot and Shefford, or L'Islet and Montmagny. The problem of redistribution would have been settled by merging a few counties. Our friends to the right did not face the question in that manner because they want to assure themselves of seats in the province of Quebec. The hon. Solicitor-General (Mr. Dupré) so stated in his speech the day before yesterday; he does not want a solid "bloc" in the province of Quebec any more. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the province of Quebec decides some day to elect a solid "bloc" to the House of Commons, it is not redistribution consummated by the Conservatives, to-day, that will prevent it from sending such a "bloc" to represent the ideas, ambitions and will of the people of that province.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): No government can impose its will and force the people to act according to its desires. In our country, according to the constitution, the people govern. We must as much as possible allow the people their freedom. If I am opposed to Bill No. 2, as presently submitted to this house, it is because the government wanted to impose its will on the people without consulting them. They want to create Conservative fiefs and Liberal fiefs. Mr.

Chairman, we do not want Liberal fiefs in the province of Quebec, and we want Conservative fiefs still less. And I know that after the next elections few of my hon. friends opposite will return to the House of Commons.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): That is a wish that comes from the bottom of the heart.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Absolutely.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): I will make an exception in the case of the Hon. Solicitor-General.

I mentioned a moment ago the part of Rouville that remained in Bagot and the hon. Minister of Marine asked me a question. Allow me to tell you frankly that in so far as I am personally concerned, in so far as the county of Bagot is concerned, I am satisfied that such part of Rouville should remain in the county of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot because they are fine agricultural parishes belonging to our district. I do not know why the hon. Minister of Marine should refuse to accept parishes like L'Ange-Gardien, St. Paul-d'Abbotsford, the village of Canrobert, the parish of St. Césaire, also the village of St. Césaire. They are old parishes founded more than a century ago. The people of those parishes are peaceful, well-to-do farmers, excellent citizens, and despite their separation from the remainder of the county we are proud to retain them in our midst.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to speak at too great length. I have outlined practically all my grievances. I trust the Government will not request the adoption of the bill as presently submitted, I trust changes will be made, that families will be reunited, that so far as possible counties will be left as they are and that justice will be done to the province of Quebec, to both rural and urban representation.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to reply to my hon. friend in respect of the county of Chambly-Rouville. My hon. friend said: The Minister of Marine should have included the parishes of St. Césaire, L'Ange-Gardien, Abbotsford and other parishes in his county. I will point out to my hon. friend that I was not a member of the committee on redistribution. That committee decided after considering all the circumstances that the county of Chambly with that part of the county of Rouville had a sufficient population. The county as now constituted will have a population of 40,000 according to the 1931 census. My hon. friend is probably not aware that the population of the county of Chambly is increasing yearly and that at the present time it exceeds by at least 2,000 and 3,000 the population computed at the 1931 census. The hon. member is well aware that the county of Chambly is situated on the south shore, opposite Montreal, and with the means of communication established since last year, thanks to a motor bus service which I succeeded in securing for the south shore, the citizens of that county can now reach the business centre of Montreal within eight minutes. Since the establishment of this motor bus service, the population of the south shore, in the county of Chambly, is increasing daily and, according to the prognostigations of business men, the county of Chambly will have within five years a population of from 20,000 to 25,000 souls.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Railway revenues are decreasing on account of motor busses.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The committee was acquainted with all these facts. It considered that the addition of the largest part of the county of Rouville to a county of this importance gave a just representation. My hon. friend says: The population of those parishes—St-Césaire, L'Ange-Gardien, Abbotsford—is a very fine population; we are proud to have those people in the county of St-Hyacinthe. I know the county of Rouville quite well and I agree with what my hon. friend says respecting the qualities of its inhabitants. I was brought up in that district. I was educated there and ties of friendship bind me to several citizens of the district, and had it depended on me only, the problem could have been settled very easily. But I do repeat that the representation given to Chambly-Rouville at the present time is amply sufficient, if one compares it with that of neighbouring counties.

My hon. friend stated a moment ago: Why did they detach certain parishes from St-Hyacinthe and link them with Richelieu? My hon. friend is well aware that Richelieu had a population of only 21,000. It was necessary, in order to give it proper representation, to add certain adjoining parishes to that county, and that was done. According to the bill now being discussed, Richelieu-Verchères has a population of only 35,000, whereas Chambly-Rouville has a population in excess of 40,000 and St-Hyacinthe-Bagot has a population of 42,000 in round figures. I believe the Committee made an equitable division, and I consider that my hon. friend has no reason to complain as he does. My hon. friend has just said that Bagot has a population similar to that of the county of St-Hyacinthe, a population with the same aspirations and customs; that Bagot forms part of the judicial district of St-Hyacinthe and that the union of Bagot with St-Hyacinthe was quite natural, I believe my hon. friend admitted that a moment; then why does he complain?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Well, yes!

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): When one admits that a county with a popuplation of only 16,000 had to be merged with an other county, in whole or in part, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that such remarks are made for political reasons and nothing else. The representation which the committee established is equitable and I am convinced this committee will accept that representation such as it is.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister of Marine has just made a statement in which he claims that redistribution as applied to St-Hyacinthe-Bagot and Chambly-Rouville is very equitable. The county of Chambly-Verchères had a population of 42,000 the same as the county of St-Hyacinthe-Rouville. The hon. Minister of Marine claims that he cannot accept what remains of Rouville. Why did the committee not consider the fact that the hon. Minister of Marine withholds three parishes of the county of Verchères; Beloeil, McMasterville and St-Julie-de-Verchères? Why does the hon. Minister retain that part of the county of Verchères when the committee was ready to annex it to the county of Richelieu? The county of Richelieu had a population of only 35,000. Why are parishes of Verchères detached and added to Chambly-Rouville. I know the reason, Mr. Chairman; it is due to the fact that those three municipalities gave a Conservative majority.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I beg your pardon.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): They gave a Conservative majority in 1930. On the other hand, the four parishes of the county of Rouville gave a large Liberal majority.

The hon. minister says he did not attend the committee meetings, but there are such things as coincidences that one finds amusing when one sees them from a distance.

A MEMBER (Translation): That is not politics!

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): The hon. Minister of Marine charges me with playing politics in this short ten minute speech which I have just made and he provides himself with a county for ten years under this bill. Which of the two plays politics the most?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Actions speak louder than words.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): As for the union of St-Hyacinthe and Bagot, it is a natural one. Only, had the hon. Minister of Marine retained his county I would have had a chance of retaining my own. I consider as the representative of the county of Bagot, I should secure justice in the House of Commons, to the same extent as any other member.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, allow me to revert to the question respecting Montreal and to tell the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) that he is absolutely right when he states that the members representing the city of Montreal had agreed upon a definite plan. I will add that the fault lies not with the Liberal members but with our friends if that plan was put aside. When we succeeded in eliminating the new county of Lafontaine and reestablishing the county of St. Mary's, it was understood between Conservatives and Liberals of Montreal, that we would have the privilege, we, the Liberal members for St. James, St. Mary's, Mercier and St. Denis, to divide our counties as we saw fit so as to restore to the map of Montreal the fine county of St. Mary's. The matter was so adjusted and accepted by our Conservative friends of the city of Montreal. When my friend the member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Jean) was delivering his speech, he was interrupted by the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Laurin) who asked him whether there was not an understanding between the members from Montreal on certain points, and that he was still willing to accept that plan. That is true, and upon his request, my good friend ended his speech, believing that the proposed plan had been accepted. On the contrary, when he reached the point where we made final arrangements, the county of St. Denis was not to be touched. It was to retain the boundaries specified in the first redistribution bill. This was not in accordance with the agreement. Secondly, the county of Laurier-Outremont was to be divided in the manner mentioned in the bill as presently submitted to the house, but they still wanted to take away part of this county to create a fine seat for a friend by the name of Penverne. The members to the right, Mr. Chairman, are responsible for the changes made in connection with the agreement concluded and accepted by the members from the Island of Montreal, and as the hon. member for Compton was not a member of the committee he cannot definitely state what transpired. I was one of those members who acted as advisers, and I state that what took place is just as I have described. We are still ready to accept the arrangements made, but one would imagine that certain persons have urged our good friends to delay matters or to change the arrangements previously concluded.

Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of speaking, because as was so well stated by the member for Bagot (Mr. Dumaine), from the very outset of the parleys, we told our Conservative friends from Montreal: With respect to the number of additional members to be given Montreal, the responsibility is yours; assume that responsibility and tell us if you are going to add two, three or five counties to the Island of Montreal; we will make plans accordingly.

It was decided to give Montreal two counties. The committee presented a plan, and we, Liberals of Montreal, submitted a counter-proposal. The plan we submitted had been approved by the majority of Conservative members of the Island of Montreal. Believing this plan too beautiful, they decided to add three counties to Montreal. We then made a second proposal which was again accepted by the majority of Conservative members of the Island of Montreal. It was as a result of prolonged parleys that we secured the elimination of the county of Lafontaine and the restoration of the beautiful county of St. Mary's which the present member (Mr. Deslauriers) represents with such dignity, so loyally and sincerely in this house.

If there are persons in this house, members who have respected the given word, they sit to your left, Mr. Chairman. When we concluded arrangements with the right, it was with the desire of avoiding a greater evil, for the members to the right never wanted to accept perfection. That is why you observe in this bill crying injustices to the representatives of the eastern portion of Montreal whose population constitutes almost two-thirds of the city of Montreal, which entitled it to two additional representatives, whereas by the terms of this bill two of the new counties are situated in the westerly part. The easterly part is content with one additional county although its population is almost double that of all the Conservative candidates on the Island of Montreal.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): May I ask the hon. member before he takes his seat whether he has perused the appendix respecting the Island of Montreal which was reprinted and has just been distributed?

Mr. DENIS: I have seen the reprinted appendix and state that it does not contain what the assembled representatives had agreed upon. The easterly limits were to extend as far as Papineau street; the northerly limits of the constituency of the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) were to extend as far as the Canadian-Pacific railway tracks and now they cross two quarries and end at Belanger street. I am not complaining about the division embodied in the first bill; but, when I make an agreement with anybody, I keep my word and I wish those who enter into an engagement with me did likewise.

Although the county of St. Denis contains the largest population in the city of Montreal, I would rather still remain with my numerous family which has placed its confidence in me since 1921, than to see similar injustices done to my colleagues of Montreal. I am still ready to assume my responsibilities and to give satisfaction to the 140,000 inhabitants of the St. Denis division.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Do I understand those are my hon. friend's only objections?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): As far as he is personally concerned.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): He complains about the limits of his county and those of the hon. Mr. Rinfret's county? Is that it?

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Not only about the boundaries of the hon. Mr. Rinfret but also with respect to the constituencies of my friends from St. Mary's and Hochelaga as defined in the reprinted bill.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. Chairman, we would like to know exactly from the representative of the Liberal party on this committee whether the appendix now before the house appears acceptable or not to him.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): It is not acceptable.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I am putting this question to the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier). Otherwise, we shall revert to the delimitations which were established in the first place, because we consider them more in the interest of the people of the Island of Montreal. We have sought to please our hon. friends the Liberal representatives of the Island of Montreal, we have agreed to all their requests, and now one notes an effort to make political capital in this house by way of complaints against the appendix as reprinted. If the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont states he is not satisfied with the appendix as now submitted, we shall revert to the one which was prepared in the first instance because we deem it more advantageous to the citizens of the Island of Montreal.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Will the hon. minister allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I put a question to the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont, the representative of the Liberal party on the committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): There is no more committee.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The committee no longer exists.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I would like to find out from the hon. minister if he is announcing to my hon. friend on the committee that he can only chose between death and the hospital.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I thank my hon. friend for his remark; it is very clever, very intelligent.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): (Translation): I would have preferred retaining Laurier-Outremont intact, such as it was, and that is the request I made to the committee. Within the past few days, outside influences have entered the committee, and as for the latest changes in the easterly part of the city of Montreal, I have not been consulted in that regard. Personally, with the bill such as it is to-day, I was compelled to accept the two divisions of Outremont and Laurier in order not to have less. Of two evils I necessarily chose the lesser, but I must tell the minister that I was not consulted with respect to the changes in the easterly part of the city of Montreal. I have not had the time to study them fully and I am not in a position to answer his question. However, I must say that we always asked our colleagues on the committee not to wipe out the county of St. Mary's. We succeeded, and we are all proud. As regards what took place in the easterly part of the city of Montreal,—and I repeat designedly what I have said,—I was not consulted; changes were made in the divisions of St. Mary's, St. James, St. Denis, Hochelaga, Mercier. I was not consulted in that connection and I am not in a position to answer. I must state that the bill presented in the first place as it applied to the divisions of Laurier and Outremont was acceptable to me. As for the changes made in the eastern section of the city of Montreal, I am not in a position to express an opinion.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Mr. Chairman, for my own information and that of the committee, I will ask the hon. members for St. Mary's, Hochelaga and Maisonneuve who were present. I do not know the city of Montreal well enough to determine the boundaries of counties,—whether the arrangements we came to, Wednesday night, in room 272, arrangements concluded between our friends to the left and the member for Jacques-Cartier, are not those embodied in the schedule submitted to-night?

Mr. E. C. ST-PERE (Hochelaga) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, last Wednesday night, at about eleven o'clock, I was summoned to room 272, in order to accept what was suggested to me as a new layout of the electoral division which I have the honour to represent in this house since 1921. Our accredited representatives, those who had been in touch with the redistribution committee handling the electoral map of the city of Montreal had submitted to me a report which was known—I mean it was known at least to those in our circle—under the designation of report No. 4. It embodied the following boundaries for the Hochelaga division: eastern limit, Boulevard Pie IX; southern limit, St. Lawrence river; western limit, the centre of Frontenac street east, Rachel street north, Delorimier east to the south of Boulevard St. Joseph; western limit, Papineau street east; extreme northern limit, Rosemont Boulevard.

At the last minute my good friend Mr. Laurin, who was no doubt acting in good faith, asked me whether I would accept—and he did so in the presence of my friend Doctor Deslauriers, member for St. Mary's—the strip of land situated between Delorimier street east and Iberville street and extending as far as Belanger street. I was then told that following a previous agreement it had been decided to extend the boundary of the county of St. Mary's to Belanger street, also the county boundary of my good friend the mayor of Montreal, the present member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret). I was told to-day that the hon. Minister of Marine had suggested this plan in order to definitely settle the delimitations of the county of St. Mary's. Under the circumstances, I believed I was proving my loyalty to my good friend, Doctor Deslauriers; the objection which I now voice relates to the fact the hon. member for St. Mary's receives a much larger population than that embraced in several adjoining counties.

I may say I have adopted this old line of action based on sportsmanship, that is to help my neighbours as well as myself. I cannot state that I prefer the limits that I am now given to those embodied in report No. 4, which was presented to me, I believe, by my good friend Doctor Denis, at the time.

I must tell the house I do not approve the new limits mentioned in the bill under discussion as heartily as I did the limits described in report No. 4 submitted to your committee. Those are the explanations I wished to give this house at this stage.

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspe) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, if the committee will agree, we will leave the large city of Montreal for the time being and proceed for a short stay in a county more to the east, the county of Gaspe.

When the committee decided to add two parishes to the county of Gaspe, I had an opportunity to discuss the subject with the hon. member for Matane (Mr. Larue) who asked me whether I would be satisfied to accept these two parishes. I told the hon. member for Matane that this change from a strictly political standpoint was favourable to me, and that I was in favour of the project. However, in justice to the population detached from the county of Matane, I deem it my duty to point out to the committee that Gaspe is already an immense county. It embraces three provincial counties and there is added to this county part of Matane, that is to say part of a fourth provincial county. Under the circumstances, if the committee decides to add to the county of Gaspe the two parishes mentioned in the bill now before the house, I will accept them and, from a political standpoint, I will be quite satisfied and do all in my power to act fairly towards those people. However, I believe they would be represented more equitably if they were left in a more restricted area. The county of Gaspe, as I stated, is very large and has at the present time a population of 47,000 souls. These two parishes which it is proposed to add were not very distant from the county town of Matane, whereas my new electors will be required to travel between 225 and 250 miles in order to reach their new county town. Under these circumstances I believe it incumbent upon me to ask the committee to take these two parishes out of the county of Gaspe and restore them to the county of Matane to which they belonged previously, this notwithstanding the fact their addition to my county would constitute a political advantage for me.

Mr. HERMAS DESLAURIERS (St. Mary) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I deem it my duty in the circumstances to give some explanations to the house respecting the county of St. Mary's. This constituency has been wiped out and restored several times a week. Proposals aiming at an arrangement have followed one another and been multiplied. It is true that at the outset, when bill No. 2 was presented, I had no choice as my county was completely wiped out. The first project that aimed at retaining the county of St. Mary's on the electoral map of which I had any knowledge appeared satisfactory to me to a certain extent, it was for that matter acceptable. I felt I should recommend its acceptance and I believe it was accepted. That was plan No. 4 to which the hon. member for Hochelaga referred. This plan proposed the creation of the county of St. Mary's with a population of 76,000 souls. This plan was set aside. As stated by the hon. member for Hochelaga, we had an interview at about eleven o'clock; new proposals were made with respect to the county of St. Mary's and they were accepted I am not opposed to them, the hon. member for Hochelaga agreed, and I believe that is the arrangement the hon. member for Compton spoke about.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Thank you.

Mr. DESLAURIERS (Translation): This project gives the county of St. Mary's a population of about 96,000. According to the plan we accepted the population of the county of Hochelaga is reduced to probably 78,000.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): That is still respectable!

Mr. DESLAURIERS (Translation): That is still quite respectable, quite reasonable. And the county of St. James extending to Belanger street, as well as the counties of St. Mary and Hochelaga would have a popula- of 74,000. These new conferences resulted in a new arrangement. It lowered the county of St. Mary's a peg or two, brought it back to a population of about 82,000 and gave the county of St. James an almost equivalent population. But this deranged the boundaries which we had agreed to accept that night at about eleven o'clock. This proposal was approved.

Now, the government is quite free to adopt the eleven o'clock proposal to which we acceded; it is also free to accept the proposal approved at noon to-day. So far as I am concerned, I have only one word, I was offered something, I said I accepted it—I am still ready and always willing to accept it.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I thank the hon. member for St. Mary's for the statement he has just made and which justifies me entirely. The hon. member for St. Mary's tells me that another project was submitted at noon. I was not aware of that. I put the question to my friends opposite for the information of the house and for my own enlightenment, because some changes might have been made without my knowledge. I asked them whether it had not been decided at eleven o'clock, Wednesday night, that I was to see the secretary of the committee in order to advise him of the final arrangement concluded between my hon. friends to the right. The hon. member for St. Mary's is no doubt aware that a new arrangement made at noon to-day utterly precluded the possibility of printing a new bill by to-night.

Mr. ST. PERE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to add a few remarks. Certain details have come to my attention—at least, I believe so. It was stated in the event of the retention of St. Mary's division and the disappearance of the county of Lafontaine, the counties of St. James, St. Denis, I believe also St. Mary's and Hochelaga were to absorb the population of this county that was to disappear. Following a survey which the future member for Mercier, I would venture to say, made in his county, he noted—one must state the facts as they are—that the population of the constituency was too large and he may have asked that part of same be absorbed by the other members. Mr. Chairman, I agreed to accept my share, and since the hon. member for Compton is ready to describe as chivalrous those who respect their word—I am not asking for any such qualificatives—I must state that I never was opposed to accept the surplus population represented by that new chimney added to my county which forms a quadrangular figure. If the hon. member for St. Mary's is willing to accept the enormous population that is added to his county, it goes without saying that the member for Hochelaga will follow the same line of action and will do his utmost as in the past to retain for the Liberal party the county of Hochelaga which he represents in the House of Commons since 1921. That is my statement.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Number of members.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, before this section carries, I would like to point out to the house that it is stated in the bill under discussion that the Yukon will be represented by one member. The note opposite page 2 of the bill reads:

The representation of the Yukon is not determined by the British North America Act, but is within the competence of parliament to decide. In the following statement it is presumed it will continue to be represented.

I understand the representation given to the Yukon is the same as that given in years past. I note however in examining the statistics that the population of the Yukon district has not increased to any extent since the last redistribution.

We note in the report of the chief electoral officer covering the 1930 election returns that the number of electors entered on the lists was 1,719 of whom 1,408 voted. We note in the census report that the population increased by only 73 from 1921 to 1931. Moreover, if we look at the bill which is now before the house and the explanatory notes with reference to basis on which the representation in the House of Commons is established, we read the following in respect of the Yukon:

The representation of the Yukon is not determined by the British North America Act, but is within the competence of parliament to decide. In the following statement it is presumed it will continue to be represented.

Thus, there is apparently no justification for granting a representative to that territory, when the representation is to be determined by the House of Commons, especially when one bears in mind the times in which we live and when by reason of circumstances, heavy expenses and the debts which the country must pay, everybody is urging economies. One must also consider another point. I do not believe there is any likelihood that the population of this territory will increase in the future to the same extent as in the past, seeing it did not increase measurably between the years 1921 and 1931. So, when it was decided in 1924 to grant representation to that district, it was assumed that the population would show an increase in the following years.

You will allow me to submit another question to the consideration of the committee. At the present time, there are certain regions in the province of Quebec as in other parts of the country that reflect greater activity and development, and while they are developing faster, their population shows a greater ratio of increase and industries are being established; however, it has not been deemed proper to give them a representative. In the county which I represent for more than 15 years and where I again hope to appeal to the electorate, because the population has always given me a kind welcome and accorded me the most loyal support, there is a large district from Tadoussac to Labrador, including the island of Anticosti, which numbers all told a population of about 19,000. There is said to have been some talk for a time to divide my county and to create a special county with a representative in the house. I know this question was very much to the fore in the Quebec legislature some years ago. Rumours reached me that certain requests had emanated from certain parts of the county for the division of this county and to have a member represent that part of the territory I have just mentioned. However, Mr. Chairman, those requests and petitions never reached me, were never handed to me. As I was not a member of the committee, I was unable to represent the interests of those people who claim they are entitled to a member in this house.

Now, I am aware there was a somewhat recent agitation on the part of certain newspapers and a certain Conservative press of the province of Quebec asking in view of the disappearance of the county of L'Islet, that the part of the territory which I have the honour to represent and which embraces a large area be detached and divided by a line running from Chateau-Richer to Pointe Desrochers and extending to the Straits of Belle Isle. These suggestions were put forward by the Journal of Quebec in an article published on May 12. The article mentioned these facts in detail and stated that owing to the disappearance of a county in the Quebec district,—L'Islet,—a member should be added for that district and territory. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that it is rather difficult to grant a member for that region, today, in view of the fact the territory embraces an extensive area and does not contain the population considered necessary. However, I deemed it my duty to lay these facts before the committee, so that it may be well understood that the persons who might have made these requests did not address themselves to me but applied to members on the right. I do not know whether those requests reached them. At all events, I am in no way responsible for that.

Another observation and I will close. According to the reprinted bill, I believe a new parish is added to my county,—a parish situated to the north of Montmorency Falls. This parish forms part of the county of Montmorency at the present time. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that I never meddled with the affairs of the committee and never asked a favour from anybody. I did not ask that such and such a thing be done in the district which I have the honour to represent until now. Yet, while the committee decided to add that distant parish to my county, a parish which can only be reached by a road that does not connect with the remainder of the county. I am happy to state, Mr. Chairman, that I welcome this new population of Ste. Brigitte de Laval in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, and I will do for those people as much as I have been able to do so far for the county which I have the honour to represent.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Division into electoral districts.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I ask that that section stand, and that we proceed with other sections.

Section 3 stands.

Sections 4 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On the schedule—Ontario.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): I presume that we shall now take the schedule for Ontario, which begins at page 3 of the bill. I shall call No. 1, Algoma East.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the province of Ontario the bill which is in your hands has been before the committee and has been subject to some amendments since it was printed, and the reprint on the table to-night embodies all those amendments with the exception of some technical errors in description, and typographical errors. These have been corrected, and I now submit a schedule embodying the corrections, all of which have been submitted to and approved by the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott), who represented the opposition on the committee. We have agreed upon all these changes, and they have been checked by the electoral officer and the officers who prepared the descriptions. I therefore move, seconded by Mr. MacNicol, that the schedule of the bill with respect to the province of Ontario be stricken out and the following substituted therefor. The substitution is in the terms of the schedule as it appears in the reprinted bill, with, as I have indicated, certain minor technical and typographical errors.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Before the motion is put may I say that while the schedule is not as I should like to have it, and while as a matter of fact there are in it some things which I much dislike, nevertheless I have realized throughout that the government has the majority and that the government must take the responsibility for this redistribution. A great deal of time has been spent on the Ontario schedule. It was unfortunate that the opposition was represented by only one member from a province containing eighty-two constituencies. The changes involve a great deal of detail. I suggest that whoever may be in the house at the time of the next and subsequent redistributions should regard representation on redistribution committees from the standpoint of the number of constituencies in a province. I do not believe it is fair that a province such as Ontario, containing one-third of the total membership of the house, should have an opposition membership on the committee of only one.

In view of what has been said by the Prime Minister and other government members since this bill was introduced I believe the redistribution schedule as now recommended is as good as we are likely to obtain, even if we were to spend the next two weeks of the time of the house and a good deal of the country's money in further discussion. Some concessions have been made, and if the schedule is put through as finally passed by the committee, I do not purpose taking up further the time of the committee of the whole house at this time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Shall the schedule as amended carry?

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like some explanation in regard to schedules 46 and 49. Number 46 is:

Oxford, consisting of the county of Oxford and that part of the town of Tavistock that lies in the county of Oxford.

Then number 49:

Perth, consisting of the county of Perth, excepting therefrom the townships of Fullarton and Hibbert, but including the city of Stratford, the town of Mitchell, and that part of the village of Tavistock that lies in the county of Perth.

In number 46 Tavistock is described as a town and in 49 as a village.

Mr. BENNETT: I noticed that. Which is it, a village or a town?

Mr. SANDERSON: It is a village.

Mr. BENNETT: At the top of page 10 the word "town" should be "village."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Shall the schedule carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would not like to allow this schedule to carry without protesting very strongly against what I think is a ghastly gerrymander of the constituency of North York. That constituency as it was framed and kept by the redistribution of Sir Robert Borden of 1914 was a compact rural constituency, essentially rural with important towns and villages. It included the village of Stouffville. In the redistribution of 1924 two townships in the county of York were added, rural townships, Vaughan and Markham, but leaving the constituency a compact, purely rural constituency. The present redistribution takes out one of the townships which was added in 1924, the township of Markham, but what is more extraordinary it takes out the village of Stouffville which is in the township of Whitchurch, and in so doing makes a considerable jag in the side of the constituency as it has been heretofore. While the whole of Markham township is taken out there is added to the southern part of the constituency the township of North York, a township which reaches down close to the city of Toronto. It makes a constituency that is semi-urban, and certainly it loses the aspect of cohesion and compactness which a constituency of the kind should have.

I cannot believe this change has been made for any reason other than to give a distinct advantage to whoever may be the Conservative candidate. In the election of 1930 Markham township, which is being taken out at the present time, gave a Liberal majority of 248; Stouffville village a majority of 282, and Markham village a Liberal majority of 25, a total Liberal majority of 555. That will all be taken away when the township of Markham and the village of Stouffville are taken out of the constituency. On the other hand North York township is being added, which gave in 1930 a Conservative majority of 615. So if we take the figures of 1930 we shall soon see why the present distorted shape has been given to this old historic riding of North York. The position of the Conservative candidate, whoever he may be, will be bettered in the following way:

Liberal majority lost..	555
Conservative majority added..	615
Total gain..	1,170

And this notwithstanding that as the riding stood the Conservative candidate had a majority in 1930 of 298. That, I think, indicates very clearly what was in the mind of those who have been urging and who have insisted upon this change. The change is the more regrettable for a reason which I gave the other day, namely, that speaking broadly and generally, rural opinion is too little represented in this parliament in comparison with urban opinion. I think every effort should be made to see that rural constituencies should be as largely as possible distinctively rural. As the Prime Minister mentioned, we have now reached a point where the urban population of Canada exceeds the rural, a tendency I believe wholly in the wrong direction, in a country like Canada; and that tendency is being artificially furthered where constituencies are being gerrymandered in this manner. Looking at the constituency as it will hereafter appear it has a resemblance to a Turkish scimitar. It does not resemble any properly designed compact riding fashioned with regard to the regular boundaries of townships, but has this extraordinary gash in its side, giving it a semi circular appearance with a sort of handle provided through the addition of York township in the vicinity of Toronto, an addition which I do not think can be justified in connection with any constituency which should be classed as a rural constituency.

I would like to say a great deal more. There is one point for example that I would mention, namely that Yonge Street, which is the main highway running from Toronto to Lake Simcoe, will hereafter run through the centre of the lower part of the constituency, and through the centre of the upper part, but alongside only one of the townships in the middle of the constituency. The township of Markham which has been taken out on the other side of Yonge street is thrown into another constituency altogether. Richmond Hill, which is one of the villages located on Yonge Street, finds half its population in the constituency of North York and the other half, which since the distribution of 1924, has been in North York, has gone into some other constituency. A more glaring and ghastly gerrymander I do not think could be presented to a House of Commons, and I certainly protest as strongly as I can against the schedules for Ontario passing so long as they include that particular riding in the distorted form in which it now appears.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is a word to be changed in 46, suggested by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson). The municipality of Tavistock is described as a town, while in 49 it is described as a village, I move:

That in 46, second line, the word "town" be struck out, and the word "village" substituted therefor.

Amendment agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

On the schedule—Nova Scotia.

Mr. SHORT: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Quinn), that the names of constituencies No. 7 and No. 11 be changed. I move that No. 7 be amended by changing the name from Evangeline to Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

Amendment negatived: Yes, 28; nays, 29.

Mr. BENNETT: Pairs were observed on one side and not on the other.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I was paired and I did not vote.

Mr. POWER: I was paired and I did not vote.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I never thought that this was a government amendment.

Mr. BLAIR: I was paired and I did vote, but I should not have done so.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): I was paired and I voted inadvertently. If it be possible to withdraw my vote, I am willing to do so.

Mr. RINFRET: I observed my pair with the Secretary of State and did not vote.

Mr. ROBINSON: I was paired and did not vote.

Mr. SHORT: There seems to have been a misunderstanding and I think the vote had better be taken again.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that in all fairness the vote should be taken again, because a number of gentlemen have observed their pairs while others have not. As I understand it, it is perfectly competent for all hon. members to disregard their pairs. The ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) suggests that pairs need not be observed unless there is an arrangement to that effect; the amendment was moved by a private member and not by the government.

Mr. POWER: A discussion has already arisen in the house with respect to pairs, but I believe that each individual member has an arrangement with his pair, and so far as I am concerned my arrangement with the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) is that I shall not vote when he is not in the house. That is a private arrangement, nothing being signed.

Sir EUGENE FISET: By arrangement with the Minister of Health I was not to vote when he was not in the house, and I did not vote.

Mr. SHORT: I have a similar arrangement with my pair. I thought the hon. gentleman was in his place but I notice that he has just come in. I should not have voted.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My arrangement is the same, that I am not to vote when my pair is not here.

Mr. RHODES: I fear that inadvertently this matter has become complicated. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) did not put his motion on one sheet of paper. He announced, when he moved it, that he intended to propose an amendment with respect to Shelburne-Yarmouth and Clare, to preserve the name of the district of Clare as part of the new constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth. There may be some misunderstanding as a result of the vote that has been taken.

Mr. SHORT: I have another amendment to move with respect to Shelburne-Yarmouth and Clare, which I did not include in the original motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are several members on the committee who have not really appreciated the significance of my hon. friend's amendment. Perhaps he will tell the committee just what each amendment is. I am inclined to agree with the Prime Minister that we should take the vote over again.

Mr. SHORT: The explanation is this. I object to the name Evangeline—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why?

Mr. SHORT: Because we lose the identity of our counties, and Evangeline is known historically in but one of the three counties. I do not want to lose the identity of the counties, and I think the name I propose is much more appropriate. For that reason I move to have the name changed. The second motion was that the constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth, which has had Clare added to it, be changed in name to include Clare. I move these two amendments.

Mr. CASGRAIN: With regard to the question of the observance of pairs, I should like to know whether the government assumes responsibility for the motion in connection with that particular constituency, because it would have something to do with our voting on the motion. I have here a copy of the undertaking which is generally signed by members on both sides of the house with respect to pairs. It reads:

> We, the undersigned, agree to pair for the present session of the House of Commons upon the following conditions:
> Our pair is to be in force on all divisions on measures and resolutions introduced by the government or for which the government assumes responsibility, also on divisions on all measures and resolutions introduced or supported by the official opposition.
> The agreement is to apply not only when the Speaker is in the chair, but also when the house is in committee of the whole.

It is therefore of considerable importance whether or not the government assumes responsibility, because, unless hon. gentlemen make special arrangements among themselves, as indicated by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), they are relieved of their obligation only if the government does not take the responsibility for any motion that is put. If the motion is moved by a private member hon. gentlemen are free to vote as they please.

Mr. QUINN: What objection is there to a private member making a motion with regard to the title of a constituency in which he is primarily interested?

An hon. MEMBER: No objection.

Mr. QUINN: Why should the government take responsibility for it? Are you denying a private member the privilege to which he is entitled? As seconder of the motion moved by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) I ask that it be put now.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the statement made by the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) as to why he voted indicates clearly the appreciation of the committee of the character of the motion before it. It is a motion of a private member that the word "Evangeline" be stricken out and the words "Digby-Annapolis-Kings" be substituted therefor. It was not in that sense a government motion and I think the hon. member for Quebec East was right in voting for it. His pair with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) I think is in the terms of the document read by the chief whip of the Liberal party (Mr. Casgrain). There are pairs which are made on an entirely different basis, such as the pair of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) with the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugène Fiset). Their pair is that when only one member is in the house the other does not vote. I am not quite sure of the character of the pair which I have with the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) but in a general way I do not think either of us would vote if the other was not in the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have proceeded on that basis, although I do not think we have had a distinct understanding with respect to private members' motions.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think we have had any differences about that, because we have both usually been in our places when votes have been taken. Having regard to all the circumstances I think it would be better if the vote were taken over again as a means of ascertaining in a fair and equitable way just what is the position of the committee with respect to the matter.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): I submit that once a vote has been taken it cannot be taken a second time.

Mr. RHODES: A motion to rescind would be in order. I therefore move that the vote just taken be rescinded.

Motion (Mr. Rhodes) agreed to.

Mr. SHORT: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Quinn) that number 7 of the schedule for Nova Scotia be amended by eliminating the word "Evangeline" and substituting therefor the words "Digby-Annapolis-Kings."

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry I was not in the house at the moment when the motion was put. I have not had any direct representations with regard to the wishes of the citizens in these counties but I have no doubt that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) has taken steps to inform himself. As far as I am concerned I intend to favour the motion of my hon. friend to maintain the names of these counties in order that their identities may not be wiped out. While I am on my feet I might refer to another matter which will be reached in a moment. There is a proposal to change the name "Shelburne-Yarmouth" to "Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare." As the citizens of Clare are to be added to my constituency I thought I should ascertain their wishes in this regard. I find that their wish is that the name "Clare" should appear in the name of the constituency. Therefore, if my hon. friend will make the motion, I am glad to support it. There is a good deal of justifiable pride and sentiment about the retaining of these old names. I may say further that my thought is that one of these days some change may be made and it might be just as well to preserve the identity of the divisions in order to make that change with the least possible dislocation.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say that that is the sole reason that influenced me. All the constituencies with the exception of this one bear the old historic names of counties. It will be observed that the description of this constituency reads as follows:

[Mr. Bennett.]

Evangeline consisting of the counties of Kings and Annapolis and that part of the county of Digby exclusive of the municipality of Clare.

That is the reason why I supported the motion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry if this change is to be made in Nova Scotia. I was pleased when I saw in the report that the fine name of "Evangeline" was to be given to a constituency in a province which has been made famous by its sons and daughters. I am sorry to have to oppose this change and I hope my hon. friend will not take it amiss when I do.

Amendment (Mr. Short) agreed to on division.

Mr. SHORT: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Quinn) that number eleven of the Nova Scotia schedule be amended by adding the word "Clare" to the words "Shelburne-Yarmouth" making the name of the constituency read "Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare."

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I do not know the first thing about the motion now before us. I wish the chairman would speak loud enough so that we could hear.

Mr. RHODES: The new constituency will be composed of the counties of Shelburne and Yarmouth and that part of the county of Digby contained in the municipality of Clare, and it will be called "Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare."

Amendment (Mr. Short) agreed to.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Before the Nova Scotia schedule is carried, and without wanting to be at all parochial in this matter, I should like to find out from the members representing Nova Scotia whether or not the facts which I laid before this committee this afternoon are worthy of consideration.

Mr. RHEAUME: Sit down.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Will you stand up, please?

Mr. RHEAUME: I can stand up better than you can.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I wish to register a last objection as a Highland Scotchman. After all, we remember that in the days of our forefathers we fought to the last, and we will fight to the last until we drop the claymore. There is no question that in the last ten years because of the actions of the Liberal party—

Mr. RHEAUME: Sit down.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Stand up. This matter is important to the people of the province of Nova Scotia and I want an answer from those who represent Nova Scotia constituencies in this committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Chairman, I think you had better call it eleven o'clock.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Under the Liberal regime of 1924 a seat was stolen from the province of Nova Scotia. I want to ask—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Chairman, it is eleven o'clock.

Schedule as amended agreed to on division.

FREE CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE IN VIEW OF AMENDMENTS

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, before the house rises I would like with its consent to deal again with the criminal code amendment. It appears that the Senate does not feel like amending its own amendments and we do not feel like amending ours, so it will be preferable to have the resolution passed by the house this afternoon rescinded and to move another resolution asking for a free conference between the House of Commons and the Senate. Therefore I beg to move:

That the resolution passed by the house this day, disagreeing with the amendments made by the Senate to subsection 3, section 3 of Bill No. 71, an act to amend the criminal code, be rescinded.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DUPRE moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate respectfully requesting a free conference with their honours to consider a certain amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 71, an act to amend the criminal code, to which amendments this house has not agreed and upon which the Senate insist, and any amendment which at such conference it may be considered desirable to make to said bill or amendments thereto.

That the clerk do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Saturday, May 27, 1933

The house met at eleven o'clock.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

The house resumed from Friday, May 26, consideration in committee of Bill No. 2, to readjust the representation in the House of Commons—Right Hon. R. B. Bennett—Mr. Smoke in the chair.

On the schedule—New Brunswick.

Schedule agreed to.

On the schedule—Prince Edward Island.

Schedule agreed to.

On the schedule—Manitoba.

Mr. BENNETT: Certain questions were asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) in connection with this matter and it was decided that an amendment would be moved by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Burns) who was on the committee to be seconded by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). This has been embodied in the description which has been agreed upon. I suppose a formal motion should be made that the schedule now printed in the new bill should be substituted for that in the old. Am I right in assuming that the descriptions now given in the reprinted bill are correct?

Mr. HEAPS: They are satisfactory.

Mr. BENNETT: My amendment would be that the schedule in the reprinted bill be substituted for the schedule in the old bill.

Amendment (Mr. Bennett) agreed to.

Schedule as amended agreed to.

On the schedule—British Columbia.

Mr. STIRLING: I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) that the schedule in this bill respecting the province of British Columbia be stricken out and the schedule as appearing in the new bill be substituted therefor. This is in accordance with the arrangement arrived at between the members for British Columbia, it having been signed by them.

Mr. MUNN: Is this amendment the same as printed in the new bill?

Mr. STIRLING: In the reprinted bill.

Amendment (Mr. Stirling) agreed to.

Schedule as amended agreed to.

On the schedule—Alberta.

Mr. BENNETT: In connection with this schedule it seems to be necessary to make certain changes. The following amendment is being suggested:

(a) By adding after the words "fourth meridian" in the sixth line of said description, the words "including Edmonton settlement" and deleting the said last mentioned words from the eighth and ninth lines of the said description;

(b) By deleting the word "and" in line eight of said description, and by adding in said line after the figures "(24)" the words "and of twenty (20) east of the centre line of 101st Street Edmonton or its production northwards."

Mr. STANLEY: I may say that this was a technical error and we took it up with the chief electoral officer. I also spoke to the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) who went into the matter carefully and the amendment was drafted in conference with the chief electoral officer. I move the amendment accordingly.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Possibly the hon. member for East Calgary will explain the effect of the amendment.

Mr. STANLEY: There is no alteration whatever in the agreed boundaries. The northern boundary of a very small portion was omitted from the original description as it is in the schedule. When I was speaking to the chief electoral officer, he said that he thought it would be preferable to have the amendment as suggested. He stated that he had the power to make the change when he came to officiate, but he would prefer to have it put into this new schedule.

Amendment agreed to.

Schedule as amended agreed to.

Schedule—Yukon Territory—agreed to on division.

On the schedule—Quebec.

Mr. GOBEIL: As there were several technical errors in the bill as originally printed and some changes have occurred since, I move, seconded by Mr. Tétreault, that the schedule of the bill with respect to the province of Quebec be stricken out and the following substituted therefor. The substitution is in the terms of the schedule as it appears in the reprinted bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE: So far as this schedule is concerned, there has been no change from the original schedule as regards the twenty-five constituencies which are considered as being in the district of Quebec. Twenty-three out of those twenty-five are being altered in some way or another. I do not desire to repeat my objections to those changes. I expressed my views three days ago and they stand as I expressed them on that occasion. Since then I have received many letters of protest from various constituencies, one letter in particular from Causapscal which was transferred to Bonaventure, being couched in language which would hardly conform to parliamentary rules. I desire again merely to register my protest as to all those changes, more particularly with regard to Témiscouata, Lévis, L'Islet-Montmagny and Dorchester. I will ask the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon), who is at present in the chamber, to give the committee the reasons for the change contained in the schedule with respect to his constituency. The municipalities of St. Luc, St. Maxime, St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurélie are being transferred, St. Luc being placed in the constituency of Bellechasse and the three others in the constituency of Beauce. I will ask my hon. friend to give us the particular reasons for which each one of these changes is made.

Mr. GAGNON: I would suggest that the hon. member proceed with his speech and afterwards I shall be entitled to answer.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think I am entitled to know the reasons for these changes. Why does my hon. friend favour the throwing of those four municipalities into other constituencies?

Mr. GAGNON: I was not a member of the redistribution committee, but I am not afraid to speak.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would ask a member of the committee, a member of the government or, indeed, anybody to give the reasons we should approve these changes in the county of Dorchester.

Mr. GAGNON: I shall speak right now if the hon. gentleman insists, because he might say in another quarter that I am afraid to answer him.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member is afraid to keep those parishes.

Mr. GAGNON: Will the hon. member keep calm and quiet. I cannot answer three or four hon. gentlemen at once. The reasons for these changes are very clear. First of all, I may say, at the outset of my remarks, that in spite of the fact that the so-called conciliation committee was formed last week in order to reach some agreements, I think I can safely state with respect to Quebec that the hon. member for Quebec East has not at any time been willing to come to any arrangement; what he did was only to repudiate the arrangements which had been made with the hon. gentleman of the Liberal party who was on the redistribution committee. I think when an hon. gentleman wishes to make some change in his constituency, the first thing he ought to do is to try to see the hon. member representing the neighbouring county where the different parishes will have to be joined. What he has to do is to see that the members of his party who are on the redistribution committee, make an arrangement with the member who represents the other party. The arrangement was made between the Conservative members of the committee and the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier) that, with respect to Dorchester, the parish of St. Luc would be joined to Bellechasse and the parishes of St. Maxime, St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie would be joined to Beauce. So far as Beauce is concerned, the hon. member for that constituency (Mr. Lacroix) agreed to accept those parishes. He agreed to such an extent that the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) stated the other day in this house in the presence of the hon. member for Quebec East that the hon. member for Beauce had put in writing that he agreed to accept the parishes of St. Maxime, St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie. This has not been denied. The parish of St. Maxime in Dorchester it is true has belonged to the electoral division of Dorchester for provincial purposes for about twenty years. But up to the year 1924 the citizens of St. Maxime always voted in the electoral division of Beauce.

I have here a statement of all the electoral returns from the year 1900 up to the year 1930. I shall not take up the time of the committee to give the figures, but I can do so if I am challenged by the hon. member for Quebec East. It appears from the electoral returns that the citizens of St. Maxime have voted in the electoral division of Beauce up until the year 1925, but in the Redistribution Act of 1924, upon the demand of the former Solicitor General, the parish of St. Maxime was joined to the electoral division of Dorchester.

With respect to the parishes of St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie, in the Redistribution Act of 1924 they were described as being in the township of Metgermette and Metgermette North. Those parishes always up to 1931 belonged to the provincial county of Beauce. It is true that for twenty-five years the citizens of those parishes had voted in the district of Dorchester for electoral purposes, but nevertheless the parishes of Metgermette, Metgermette North, St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie had up to 1931 always belonged to the electoral division of Beauce for provincial purposes.

But after I had been elected member for Dorchester in 1930 the provincial government, following its usual tactics of changing electoral divisions at its will and fancy, began to make changes in a great number of counties which had elected Conservative members for federal purposes. I have here the statutes of Quebec, 21 George V, 1930-31, and I would refer the hon. member for Quebec East to chapter 15, section 1 of which reads as follows:

> The township of Metgermette North and that portion of the municipality of the north part of the township of Metgermette North forming part of the electoral district of Beauce are detached from such electoral district and annexed, for electoral purposes to the electoral district of Dorchester.

The hon. gentleman challenged the member for Stanstead the other day to quote one instance of a provincial change in provincial electoral divisions. There is one change.

I would also refer the hon. gentleman to the same statutes, 21 George V, 1930-31, chapter 16, section 1 of which reads as follows:

> The lots of the tenth, eleventh and twelfth ranges of the official plan and book of reference of the cadastre for the township of Ware are detached from the electoral district of Bellechasse and annexed to the electoral district of Dorchester, for all purposes including school purposes, and as to such school purposes, from the next school year, and are declared to have formed part in the past, for school purposes, of the parish municipality of Ste. Sabine, county of Bellechasse; they are declared to form part of the parish municipality of St. Luc, county of Dorchester.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in 1931-32 not only did the provincial government annex the provincial parishes of St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie to the county of Dorchester for electoral purposes, but they also attached some lots from Ste. Sabine in the county of Bellechasse to the county of Dorchester.

In a statute passed in the following year, 22 George V, 1931-32, chapter 18, section 6 provides as follows:

> The name of the township municipality of Metgermette North is changed, by this act, into that of the "municipality of St. Zacharie," and the name of the municipality of the north part of the township of Metgermette North is changed, by this act, into that of the "municipality of Ste. Aurelie."

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, when the first bill was drafted the members of the committee, including the Liberal members, were not aware apparently of the changes which had been made by the provincial government since the Redistribution Act of 1924, and consequently when they drafted the bill they did not insert the names of Metgermette North, St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie. But when the so-called conciliatory committee sat last week, the hon. member for Quebec East did not object to the changing of St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie because he stated himself to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) and the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) that he had no objection to the removal of the parishes of St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie from the electoral division of Dorchester to the adjoining electoral division of Beauce. But now that the bill comes before the house and amendments have been made only in order to meet the difficulty which has arisen in view of the change made in the boundaries of the county of Dorchester by the legislature of Quebec in 1931 and 1932, the hon. gentleman from Quebec East, only with a view to making political capital, tries to make this committee believe that some new changes have been made since the printing of this bill. Such an opinion is absolutely unworthy of the high reputation of the hon. gentleman who, as I repeat, stated last week that he had nc objection to the parishes of Ste. Aurelie and St. Zacharie, which had always belonged for provincial purposes to the county of Dorchester, being joined to the county of Beauce. As I stated in my speech the other day the hon. gentleman last week in his speech said that people resented being changed from one district to another for voting purposes. Well, Mr. Chairman, if people resent having to vote in another district, I think the electors of the county of Dorchester will resent the fact that their majority might be swollen or drowned by the votes of the people living in the division of Beauce I think, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that I am perfectly in order in asking that the limits of Dorchester comprise the electors of the county of Dorchester alone. I think those details are sufficient, but if the hon. gentleman has something else to say I shall ask permission to answer him later.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall ignore the personal attacks of my hon. friend.

Mr. DUPRE: There were no personal attacks.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He has demonstrated the truth of the maxim that when one has no case the best thing to do is to abuse the other party.

[Mr. Gagnon.]

Mr. BENNETT: Abuse the attorney.

Mr. LAPOINTE: However, I shall try, Mr. Chairman, even from my hon. friend's own statement to demonstrate how unfair this change is in Dorchester county.

First, the parish of St. Luc, which gives a strong Liberal majority, has never been elsewhere than in the county of Dorchester. It is a place which when it was erected as a municipality was situated in the county of Dorchester, and it was erected civilly and canonically, as we say in the province of Quebec, in the constituency of Dorchester, and placed there for all purposes, and it is now being put in Bellechasse because it gives a strong Liberal majority.

As to the other place, namely St. Maxime de Scott, it was erected in 1895, canonically and civilly, in 1897 and was placed in the county of Dorchester. It always was part of the county of Dorchester, provincially, and was not added to that county federally because, if hon. members will look at the redistribution acts of 1924, 1903 and previously they will find that so far as the schedule in the province of Quebec was concerned it was stated that the counties of the province of Quebec would remain as at that time constituted except in certain particulars. So, when there was no mention of any change the counties remained as they were federally, and the provincial changes did not affect the constitution of the federal ridings. St. Maxime de Scott voted provincially in Dorchester all the time, and as there was no mention of it in the federal redistribution act it continued to vote in the county of Beauce until in 1924, at which time the provincial counties were accepted as the basis, except where changes had been made.

It has been stated that those changes have been made there and automatically applied to the federal redistribution act because the province of Quebec had a Liberal government. Let me tell the committee that when in 1897 St. Maxime de Scott was declared by the legislature of Quebec to be in the county of Dorchester, that province was under a Conservative government headed by the late Mr. Flynn, and the provincial member for Dorchester, the Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Conservative, was attorney general. On January 9, 1897 the legislature of Quebec erected the parish of St. Maxime de Scott, at that time stating it was part of the county of Dorchester.

As I have stated, had the changes been made in 1924 we would have had no objection to the undoing—to use the Prime Minister's word—of what had been done. According to all principles, St. Maxime de Scott is and should be in Dorchester. But because automatically in 1924, after being in Beauce federally it was transferred to Dorchester, I had no real objection to its being replaced in Beauce, because I have stated that I had no objection to the Prime Minister undoing what he said had been done in 1924. But if that argument applies to St. Maxime de Scott, why not to Ste. Aurelie and St. Zacharie? I have consulted all the electoral reports and although St. Zacharie and Ste. Aurelie were in Beauce provincially, they were in the federal district of Dorchester not only in 1924, 1914 and in 1903, but before that. I went even to the election of 1887, when Mr. Duchesnay and Mr. Lesage were candidates in Dorchester. Those places have always been part of the county of Dorchester. Surely my hon. friend does not want to throw them away because in 1924 they were placed in his constituency. They were there before that. When the other day I said I would have no objection, because I had been told that federally they had been in Beauce, I was misinformed, because I find that they were not. I have learned that they were and have always been part of the county of Dorchester. So my hon. friend is taking four Liberal strongholds and sending one to Bellechasse and three others to Beauce. I say it is unfair for him to try to select his own constituency in that way. I say that the people in that constituency who elected him in 1930 will resent his action and I protest against the change. It is manifestly unfair, and cannot be justified or excused. It has been done for political purposes, and my denunciation of such practices will not be confined to this place.

Mr. C. E. FERLAND (Joliette) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to deliver a long spech. I simply wish to add a few personal observations to the vehement protests of the opposition against this proposal to redistribute the federal electoral districts, which, as we have noted, is not colourless, scentless or tasteless. In a word, I consider this bill reeks with the most odious stupidity and fanaticism that was ever found in any piece of legislation unless one excepts possibly what was labelled the "Stolen Wartime Elections' Act."

The bill converts the electoral boundaries of the province of Quebec into a regular jigsaw puzzle. I know the words which I might utter and the remarks I might make will bring about no change, since the Government with its haughty and arrogant majority may accomplish anything and has the power to enact this legislation.

The Conservative party submitted three projects respecting the county of Joliette during the consideration of this bill. By the first project inscribed on the electoral map which we found at the sub-committee on redistribution, they had first of all annexed the county of Montcalm to Joliette minus St. Donat where the electors give a majority to the Liberal party. They had also thought of adding the parish of Lavaltrie to Joliette and to take away at the same time from Joliette the parishes of St. Paul and Crabtree-Mills. They were annexed to L'Assomption whose population totals 15,323; then, they took that part of L'Assomption and united it to the Island of Montreal, with a population of 50,000. In the face of our protests, our friends of the Conservative party were not slow in realizing that this was a stupid project and told us not to waste any time in discussing it as they were going to abandon it.

Then, they submitted a second project to us. Before being modified, it involved the transfer of the entire county of Montcalm to the county of Joliette. I have had occasion of visiting my county since the debate on this bill got under way, and the people of my county told me they approved this project—at least those whom I met at Joliette where they go to transact business. They stated they were quite satisfied with the proposed union of the county of Montcalm with Joliette. It was quite logical, for the county of Montcalm forms part of our judicial district, it forms part of the diocese of Joliette and the citizens of Montcalm go regularly to Joliette on business matters. So the people seem to be delighted to have their county annexed to the county of Joliette.

Since then, in view of the injustice done to the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm, a new readjustment was proposed and the latter county will form with Joliette the finest diocese in the province of Quebec and will henceforth be called the county of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. From a religious standpoint, all the electors of the county of Montcalm, as I have said, also a few parishes of the county of L'Assomption form part of the diocese of Joliette. The new county as proposed in the bill becomes certainly the largest, perhaps the most populous, and the most beautiful county in the province of Quebec. It comprises two classical colleges, one at L'Assomption and the other at Joliette; three very distinguished provincial members in the person of my friends, Messrs. Reid, Duval and Bastien, respectively members for L'Assomption, Montcalm and Berthier; a Legislative Councillor, my very distinguished friend Notary Daniel; a senator no less distinguished, the Hon. Mr. Casgrain, finally, a town of the importance of Joliette. This new county will have a population of 56,773. I may add that you will also find among the provincial members, my excellent friend, Mr. Lucien Dugar, of Joliette.

The population of this county is divided as follows: Joliete, 27,585; L'Assomption, 15,323; Montcalm, 13,987. The two counties of Joliette and L'Assomption-Montcalm had the following population: the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm, 29,188 and Joliette, 27,585. You can see that the two counties contained a sufficiently large population without the necessity of adding thereto. They would have been justified in increasing the population of Argenteuil which is less than 30,000. It is a crying injustice to increase the county of Joliette to such a great extent by annexing thereto L'Assomption-Montcalm to give it a rural population of more than 40,000 and an urban population in excess of 15,000, when the population of neighbouring counties is much smaller.

Take Three Rivers, for instance. The member for this constituency who took good care of his seigniory simply gave himself electors in his city to the number of about forty thousand. It is said he is afraid of the "country" and he rid himself of the rural parts of his county.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): Of the Liberal sections only.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): We find in Berthier-Maskinonge a population of only 30,000. The hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Baribeau) that dauntless fellow who fears the coming elections, took good care to delimit his county in such a manner as to retain a population of only about twenty thousand. They created a new county in the region, St. Maurice-Lafleche, which also has a population of only about thirty thousand souls. As for Joliette and Montcalm which constitute a magnificent region, which form beautiful counties, they said: We will make them larger, more beautiful and they will find men sufficiently industrious and qualified to represent a lot of people. The likes and consent of the electors count for little, we will create a county with a population of 57,000 souls in a region that covers an area of more than one hundred miles, this no matter whether it suits or does not suit the people of these counties.

The salient feature of the present redistribution bill, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that the Conservative party went to great pains to create for itself nice little sky-blue counties and to achieve this end, to form large Liberal strongholds, solidly Liberal. The redistribution project is not fair to the Conservatives of the county of Joliette. In that county the Conservatives had an even chance of electing one of their representatives from time to time, as they did succeed in the past. With Joliette-Montcalm, there still remained some prospect of electing, perhaps one of these days, a Conservative candidate, and I know that one of the most eminent Conservatives of my district—who became a judge—I will not say in what court, expressed the opinion one day that the Conservatives would win the county of Joliette the day it was united to Montcalm. But it is evident now that the Liberal stronghold of L'Assomption-Montcalm is annexed to Joliette, that my friends of Joliette for whom I have much sympathy, have lost all their chances. They will tell the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Sauvé) who had his party in opposition at Quebec financed by one of my friends, Mr. Jos. Dufresne, a former provincial member, they will say: Sir, you are satisfied with your work, now that you have immolated us on the political altar in order to secure for yourselves small Conservative counties in the province of Quebec!

Mr. BARIBEAU (Translation): May I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. BARIBEAU (Translation): The hon. member has just stated that the new county of Champlain will have a population of about 20,000 souls. I will tell him that the population will total 37,500, about double the figure he has just mentioned.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): You rid yourself of 15,000.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I knew my hon. friend had taken care to decrease the population of his county considerably. I quoted these figures from memory, but the principle remains the same.

Mr. BARIBEAU (Translation): There is a very great difference.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): My hon. friend lacked courage. He was elected by a population of about 45,000 or 50,000 and he became frightened on the eve of the election and said to himself: I cannot be reelected member at Ottawa if I retain that population, because I did not carry out any of the promises which my leader and I made to my people.

Mr. BARIBEAU (Translation): We will see as to that later on.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): It is extraordinary to see how badly our friends look after their interests in the province of Quebec.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): They are real cowards.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): People are crying out in all parts of the province of Quebec that the project is unjust and hurts the Conservative party. They are so afraid of the people that they listen to the protests that come from all sides, from Conservatives as well as Liberals, ad they persist in wanting to have this bill approved. The most beautiful photograph of their stupid project was presented in one of our newspapers, L'Action Populaire, of Joliette, which in a remarkable article dated April 30, 1933, and written by my good friend, the Rev. Albini Lafortune, priest, gives the following sketch: The party in power, he states, usually avails itself of the opportunity to enlarge its fief or consolidate its positions. In the circumstances, there is no better tailor.

The CHAIRMAN (Translation): Order. The hon. member knows it is strictly forbidden by the rule to read newspaper articles commenting a debate or a question actually under discussion in the house.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Talking about the tailor, as the Evenement says, when one carves out a county, one may also ride to a fall.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): To sum up, this article states—I can at least comment on it—he runs the scissors as he likes through the home-spun cloth; he cuts to the right, cuts to the left, scallops on the sides; he lengthens one end, shortens at the other end; destroys here, patches there.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): It is a counterpane!

Mr. FERLAND: (Translation): To put it in a nutshell, he tries to dye as much as possible according to his own colour. I think, sir, you are well advised to prevent me from reading what the newspapers say about this infamous bill. It is very clever of you, sir, to suggest to me not to read what the newspapers have written in that connection.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): I am not preventing the hon. member, the rule prevents him.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The session would last until New Year's Day.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Even the Conservative newspapers insulted you. Who could ever have thought that the Conservatives of my province whom I love, esteem and admire and for all of whom I bespeak fair treatment, would find themselves in this situation? Did you ever conceive a more shocking spectacle than that of this great Conservative party being insulted even in Conservative newspapers? You all know what the Evenement said about you, Conservatives of Quebec, in its issue of May 22 relevant to this iniquitous measure we are now considering. Everybody knows that the Evenement is a great Conservative daily, loyal to the Government party, loyal to the Ottawa Conservatives. In its issue of May 22, that newspaper went so far as to state that the Quebec Conservatives who advise the right honourable Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) are fools. They even used a language that is unparliamentary; they used a language I would be compelled to withdraw were I to use it in the House of Commons.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): The hon. member does not use it, but he is on the border line.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): There remains very little after that!

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): They stated among other things that the Prime Minister's French-Canadian advisers are good fellows, if you will, but not very intelligent

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): They are not advice-boats!

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): Fortunately they are good fellows.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): But they are not brave fellows.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Protest against the insults of the Evenement, do not let them say such harsh things about you! Defend yourselves against such attacks! If you are not courageous enough when it comes to appear before those who elected you, be at least courageous in defending the rights of your race.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): Order! The hon. member must not address his colleagues. If he has harsh comments to make, let him address them to me.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): The Soleil said less than the Evenement.

Mr. FERLAND: (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I was addressing myself to my country over your head. My learned colleagues to the right believed perhaps that I was addressing myself to them. I will address them shortly in another language; I will be courteous and polite.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): One sure thing, the hon. member did not address himself to his pair in that manner.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): We do not belong to the same family!

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): One must not forget that he is not my father in the natural order of things, otherwise I would have a poor father. He is a charming fellow, naturally, who honours me greatly by pairing with me. Our friends generally—I will name nobody, since I must address myself to you, Mr. Chairman—our friends wanted through the remaking of the electoral map to carve out little counties which they believed "sure things," which they believed unmistakably Conservative. They wanted to carve out counties which I might call, permanent, everlasting. One would imagine that taking their inspiration from our ancestral traditions they wanted to imitate our Canadians of old, who, in marriage contracts, always gave their daughter "an everlasting cow and a reasonable pig." I can see your efforts to be delivered of an everlasting cow, but I do not find your pig reasonable.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear! hear!

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the worst feature about this bill is not the fact my county has been enlarged, that they have created a diocese for me, it is not the fact some of my friends will have much more work and many more people—we do not fear the people, the more we have the happier we are—but the fact that even Conservative newspapers like the Montreal Gazette, independent newspapers, like Le Devoir, l'Action Populaire, l'Evenement, have found that we French-Canadians must everlastingly be the dupes—that is what I do not like.

Mr. Chairman, fear is evidently what characterizes our hon. friends to the right. It is said fear is the beginning of wisdom, and they deem wise to seize the opportunity to rid themselves of many counties, of a large number of people who elected them. They are all afraid. They removed from each of the counties which they reduced in size a certain number of electors because they considered them Liberals.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): They are afflicted with colic.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I am sure it is because they are afraid. Thus, the hon. member for Champlain who interrupted me a moment ago might be justified in being afraid. For all that, he is a good fellow.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): He is not very brave.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): He has not had as great an opportunity to distribute political favours as our minister. As for our French-Canadian ministers is it not astonishing to see how afraid they are, how they are frightened, notwithstanding the fact they gave positions, replaced postmasters, expended possibly hundreds of thousands of dollars holding investigations and making changes in post offices, and have important "patronage" at their disposal. How does it happen they are afraid?

A minister in a small county such as Chambly-Vercheres whose population is not very large would be afraid of his electors? A minister, a barrister in Montreal who did us honour as batonnier, who has a big voice, who speaks loud, who makes many promises at election time and who even erected a monument to himself by building with unemployment relief money on the banks of the St. Lawrence a wall that resembles those monuments one finds on the Marne or at Verdun and which are nothing else than monuments erected to the memory of the dead! Since when does one erect monuments during one's lifetime? Has he a presentiment that he is going to die when he erects such a monument to himself on the shores of the St. Lawrence? When we pass that spot on our way to Montreal, we see this monument, this large cement wall in front of which the beautiful St. Lawrence river traversing the region of Montreal flows by.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): He is so to speak an unreliable minister.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): There is no doubt about it; my hon. friend is right when he says he is an unreliable minister. He trembles so much he cannot conceal his fear. It is true he is the leader of the marine boys, but he does not wear the sailor's wide-legged trousers to hide his shivering limbs when the electors approach.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): They should give him a "tam-o'-shanter" to wear.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Is it not astonishing, Mr. Chairman, to see the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) tremble. Has he reason to fear?

Sir EUGENE FISET (Translation): He is accustomed to run away.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): The hon. Postmaster General has a small county, Laval-Two-Mountains. This county was sympathetic to him to the extent of electing his son to the Quebec legislature.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): He wanted to have it wizened up.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): It is astonishing to see that the hon. Postmaster General is also afraid of his electors. The municipalities of Pont-Viau and Laval-des-Rapides are in the Laval-Two Mountains district. It is said French-Canadians live in that district. Is he afraid of the rapids? He fears that in retaining Laval-des-Rapides he will be carried away by the rising wave of the people and he transfers them to my friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Jean). It is amusing to note that our Franch-Canadian representatives who have power, "patronage" and might should be such cowards. Yet, one would have expected from the hon. Postmaster General a vehement protest against anything that savoured of injustice. I remember, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Postmaster General always had countless virtues in the province of Quebec.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): He never practised them.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): He was for a long time leader of the Opposition and he was so virtuous that the prime minister, Mr. Taschereau, and his party wanted to keep him always at Quebec. Had the Quebec people not discovered New Zealand butter in 1930, they probably would not have lost their opposition leader. I have heard him sometimes in the course of patriotic addresses, moralizing on everything and nothing. He asks us to follow the ancestral traditions, and to practise the virtue of justice. It is extraordinary that people like him allow such injustices to be committed. I would like to give you an example showing how Mr. Sauvé —I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman; I withdraw; I should not have named him, I broke the rule unintentionally, I am very sorry. Here is what the hon. Postmaster General said in 1921. He was better than us, he was better than you, Mr. Chairman, because he said things. . . . A friend tells me the comparison is odious. I have much sympathy for you, Mr. Chairman, you are one of my colleagues at the Bar, I must be very careful as you might be appointed judge some day and I would not want to jeopardize the interests of my people in the cases which you might hear. I would rather offer you compliments. The hon. minister is better than others. Here is what he said after the elections of December 7, 1921:

> The electorate evidently displayed the resentment they harboured for a long time against the federal government. . . Since 1911, the Ottawa government has been a source of care and trials for the old party of Cartier in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise a point of order. I have listened with impatience and patience—with both feelings—to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Ferland). I claim he has no right to speak as he has done for the past ten minutes and I believe I am perfectly right in calling the hon. member to order. There was a mistake in connection with that letter and La Presse—I say so beforehand—published a rectification two days later. How can that concern the people of L'Assomption-Joliette and of Montcalm? I would ask the hon. member for Joliette—

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of discussing the merit of the counties of L'Assomption, Joliette and Montcalm. If my hon. friend wishes to voice an objection against certain words I may have uttered, he can voice it, but he has no right to take my place and deliver a speech.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): It is the first time the sun rises at ten minutes past twelve!

Mr SAUVE (Translation): He failed in his play to the gallery.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): Order, gentlemen!

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Will the hon. Postmaster General allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): On the point of order, I am inclined to believe the references quoted by the hon. member for Joliette are not very relevant to the debate, but at the outset of the discussion on the redistribution bill I wanted to call one of our colleagues to order and bring him back to the subject matter of the debate; unfortunately, the right hon. leader of the government ruled against me. I am therefore compelled to give the member for Joliette the same latitude as is given others and to declare the point raised is not well taken.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): What I was going to say, when the hon. minister did me the honour of interrupting me, was that he found his party had been more Tory than Conservative, from 1911 to 1921. At that time, it was no virtue to be a Tory, it was a dreadful crime. My hon friend said his letter published in La Presse on December 7, 1921, was corrected later on—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I never sent any such letter to La Presse I repeat La Presse made a correction on December 9 and stated there had been a mistake.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): The hon. member is bound to accept the hon. minister's denial.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I accept his denial. I merely want to ask him whether La Presse published a letter bearing his signature in its issue of December 7, 1921?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, but there was a mistake, as I have just shown.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): The letter was published by mistake? That is to say it was not intended for the newspapers?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I do not have to undergo a cross-examination at the hands of the hon. member.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): The hon. member must accept the hon. minister's explanation.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I will not insist on reading that letter because it contains such ridiculous things that I would feel ashamed for my learned friend.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Precisely, that is the reason why La Presse rectified the mistake.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I wish to be courteous, gracious, and not avail myself of every opportunity to trample on my opponents.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): It is easy when they are on all fours.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I now refer to the fear of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion), my pair. He was in his seat a moment ago. I see him conversing with the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): It is not the member for Quebec-Montmorency, it is the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dupré).

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): West and South.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): My hon. friend from Quebec West is also in a blue funk on the eve of the election.

[Mr. Ferland.]

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): That is natural.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): He had another kind of fear, fear of Quebec's solid Liberal "bloc" and of Liberal domination in the province of Quebec. As he candidly admitted to us the other day, with redistribution as effected: "We are sure now that there will no longer be any solid Liberal "bloc." Liberal domination in the province of Quebec is ended," he said. If he means he is afraid to see French-Canadians uniting around a standard or an ideal, a mentality or one policy, then he would rather see his compatriots divided than united. Has he forgotten, he who cannot deliver a speech without recalling the memory of Cartier and Macdonald, has he forgotten the promise of Sir Georges-Etienne Cartier, one of the fathers of confederation? When Sir Georges-Etienne Cartier was approached for limiting the number of members to 65 in the province of Quebec, is it not true, he replied, that we could secure the triumph of the just claims of French-Canadians in the province of Quebec by the formation of a solid "bloc"? He did not want to say it would be a solid Liberal or Conservative "bloc," he simply said: "When your interests are threatened, you, French-Canadians, you will have no need to fear the English majority of the country, all you need do is to form a solid "bloc" around your national flag and your ideal and there is no party that can win or hold its place at Ottawa if it lacks the support of the province of Quebec." Is it not true that the future justified him? Is it not true that the Conservative party only succeeded in achieving power temporarily in 1911 and in 1930, thanks to the province of Quebec? Without the province of Quebec, were it not for the mistake made by that province in 1911 when it voted against reciprocity—which the prime minister hopes for now—were it not for the mistake made by the province of Quebec in 1911 which made us lose twenty years' benefits which would have accrued from that reciprocity treaty, were it not for the mistake made by the province of Quebec in 1930, the Conservative party would never have been solidly maintained in power. My hon. friend from Quebec West is wrong in fearing the union of his French-Canadian compatriots. It seems to me it is not important and necessary to the extent of wanting to immolate and sacrifice the French-Canadian minority in the country in order to achieve one's political ends.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): There are others also who are afraid. Unfortunately, they are not all in their seats.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): They have the shivers.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): One of your friends, Mr. Chairman, made a rather witty remark in your presence, a remark that characterizes—

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): Since my hon. friend has concluded his remarks about me, would he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): He complains of the manner his county was arranged: Is he aware that this readjustment is absolutely in line with the suggestion which the former Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin) made in this house on May 23, 1933?

Mr. CARDIN (Translation): The hon. minister will force me to say something.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I know that speech. After all, one must choose the lesser of two evils. I would rather have Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm than to see L'Assomption sacrificed and the people of that county smothered in the population of Montreal or compelled to go to the Laurentians, to St. Jérôme or Terrebonne.

I believe, sir, one of your friends made a rather witty remark in your presence that characterizes the situation respecting all the poisonous matter contained in this bill. I do not assert it was in your presence. I know there were several Conservative members at the committee. He said jokingly and laughingly: Look at the map of Richmond-Wolfe and tell me whether the arrow (Laflèche) does not point to the scene of the crime. My hon. friend from Richmond-Wolfe is one of our most sympathetic colleagues in the House of Commons. I have had occasion to travel quite often with him for several years. I esteem him very much, but it seems to me that he also, although he is a physician and capable of curing himself, it seems to me he is afraid of swallowing the pill at the next election; he has taken care to reduce the size of his county and he is also afraid of returning before the same electors.

The CHAIRMAN (Translation): The hon. member has spoken forty minutes. He may continue after one of his colleagues has spoken.

Mr. FONTAINE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on behalf of the county of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot which is described in appendix No. 39 of the bill. First, I would like to make a few observations respecting the designation of this county. As one may read in the bill, the new county consists of:

1. Of the largest part of the present county of St. Hyacinthe, from the standpoint of population;
2. Of the entire county of Bagot;
3. Of a comparatively large section of the county of Rouville.

I think it would be but fair that the designation of this new county should take in the name of Rouville into account and I can see no objection to that as in certain other counties the names of three counties are retained. In the case of the hon. member who spoke before me, his county bears the name of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. In other cases, four names are retained. One must remember that part of the county of Rouville remaining attached to St. Hyacinthe, as defined in the bill just presented, is fairly large. As a matter of fact, this part of the county of Rouville comprises more than one-third and almost one-half of the total population of this county, that is to say about 5,000 souls or, more exactly, 4,938.

It seems useless at this late hour to cover once more the whole ground of discussion that has taken place on this score, but if as claimed, it was absolutely necessary that Bagot should be annexed to St. Hyacinthe, to which I personally have no objections, I conceive it might have been difficult to retain Bagot intact, St. Hyacinthe intact and Rouville intact. But when this bill involving the remaking of the electoral map was first considered, when there was talk of annexing part of the county of Bagot to St. Hyacinthe, I took, in company with my colleague from Bagot, steps and made representations, both orally and in writing, to the committee charged with the task of readjusting the representation in the province of Quebec, to the effect that if Bagot must of necessity form part of the county of St. Hyacinthe, they should respect the entity of the two counties, that is to say, maintain Bagot in its entirety and St. Hyacinthe in its entirety.

They granted my request with respect to Bagot and also in regard to one parish in St. Hyacinthe, that of St. Damase, which they wanted to annex to St. Johns, but they did not grant my request respecting the remainder of the county of St. Hyacinthe or the county of Rouville. As I stated previously, I regret it, as the county of St. Hyacinthe, like that of Rouville, is one of the oldest in the province of Quebec, and never had been subdivided before. It is partitioned in this bill, and this should never have been done, neither in the case of St. Hyacinthe nor that of Rouville.

I will not further discuss St. Hyacinthe, as everything that had to be said was said and repeated, but I subscribe fully to the remarks, observations and protests made in that connection by the hon. members for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin) and for Bagot (Mr. Dumaine). I have myself registered my protests in that respect, both orally and in writing. But the point I do wish to stress at this stage is the fact that while they leave me part of Rouville which I accept with pleasure, they take from me an important section of the county of St. Hyacinthe which they should have left in this new county. And I do not think my colleague whom I esteem very much, the hon. Minister of Marine, could have objected to that. He keeps as his share in the county of Rouville a larger section than the section which he leaves in St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. Matters should have been left as they were, and as I told the members of the committee when I voiced my protest, if changes were necessary, they should have respected the entity and present limits of Rouville, St. Hyacinthe and Bagot. That part of Rouville which is left to me is very important, not only from the standpoint of population but also by reason of the fact it contains three prosperous parishes and two or three large villages, one of which is the seat of the principal business college in the county of Rouville, a college well known throughout the province and even in the United States.

If one takes the population figure of that region into account, it would be proper to retain in the designation of the new county of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot the memory of the county of Rouville. I think it would be quite possible to say: St. Hyacinthe-Bagot-Rouville, as we will say: Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I reiterate I can see no objection why the designation of the county could not be altered in that way.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Does the hon. member believe we could use the word Rouville in the designation of two counties in the same province? There is already Chambly-Rouville. That part of Rouville annexed to Chambly comprises a population of 8,838 citizens. Is it not more fitting to use the word Rouville with Chambly and to leave the words St. Hyacinthe-Bagot? It must not be forgotten that the word Rouville is already on the map with Chambly-Rouville.

[Mr. Fontaine.]

Mr. FONTAINE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I fully understand the hon. minister's reply when he remarks that the part of Rouville remaining in the county of Chambly is larger than the section joined with the county of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. I also understand that if it were a case of annexing only a couple of parishes it would perhaps not be necessary to add the name, but I think one must consider that the part of Rouville remaining with St. Hyacinthe-Bagot constitutes more than one third and almost half its population,—almost 5,000. That part is not quite as large as the part of Rouville joined with the hon. minister's county, but I believe the hon. minister should not object to the word "Rouville" being used twice in the province. If there was any confusion, one could possibly add the words Rouville East, which does not appear necessary to me. There should be no objection to this word being repeated in two counties, following the practice that prevails in certain parts of large cities, such as Winnipeg and others; and that is what I request.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): Before recording a final protest against the bill under discussion, you will allow me to make a rectification. At page 5695 of unrevised Hansard, French edition, I stated in reply to a question of the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) that the total population of Nicolet, following redistribution, would be 47,000 and a few odd hundreds. As I gave those figures from memory, I confounded the 1921 census returns with those for 1931. The total population of Nicolet-Yamaska after the coming redistribution, with the union of Nicolet and Yamaska, will be exactly 43,493, which is about the normal unit for the province.

I repeat I do not understand why six parishes are taken from the county of Nicolet and a half parish from the county of Yamaska, when these two counties united completely would only form a population of 45,493.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me? The hon. Solicitor-General (Mr. Dupre) moves that the Committee report progress and the Speaker take the chair for a few minutes. The hon. member may then continue his remarks.

Progress reported.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

FREE CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE IN VIEW OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate hath agreed to a free conference desired with the Senate for the purpose of considering certain amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 71, an act to amend the criminal code, to which amendments the commons have not agreed and upon which the Senate insisted; and any amendments which at such conference it may be considered desirable to make thereto, and hath appointed Hon. Senators Graham, Chapais and Meighen as managers on its part at the said conference, and also that the managers of the free conference on the part of the Senate will meet in Senate room 258 forthwith.

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General) moved:

That Messrs. Lapointe, Heaps and Dupré be appointed managers on behalf of this house of the free conference with the Senate with respect to the amendments made to Bill No. 71, an act to amend the criminal code, and that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours therewith, and

That the clerk do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to thank the hon. gentleman who was speaking for his courtesy in this matter.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, in the course of my speech last Tuesday, I believe I treated my hon. friends with all possible politeness, kindness and courtesy. I stated my case most earnestly when I asked the hon. gentlemen to reconsider their decision with respect to the county of Nicolet-Yamaska. I see by the newly printed amendments that no change has been made in Nicolet or Yamaska. Will the hon. Minister of Marine tell me why, having regard to the normal population of Nicolet-Yamaska, the committee decided to take away half the small parish of St. Michel? Can the hon. minister tell me why that was done?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The hon. member knows perfectly that I was not a member of the committee, and in order to answer him, we would have to discuss once more the map of that whole region of the province of Quebec. However, I will tell my hon. friend: Had we not detached a few parishes from the county of Nicolet and annexed them to Lotbiniere, the hon. member would have noted that Lotbiniere had a much smaller population than that of Nicolet-Yamaska. Even with the addition of several parishes from Nicolet to the county of Lotbiniere, this county has a population of only 38,546. As I stated in the course of this debate, we wanted to give the citizens of the province a unit of representation that was as equitable as possible. That is the reason why a few parishes of Nicolet were united with Lotbiniere.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Why half a parish?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I do not know that detail.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept this reply from the hon. Minister of Marine. If he really wanted to do justice to me and the people of my county, he could have used his influence with the members of the committee on redistribution. When he tells me he acted thus merely to equalize the population of the county of Lotbinière with the population of the adjoining counties, I think the hon. minister gives a rather specious answer. The county of Lotbinière, minus the population of 5,000 taken from the county of Nicolet, would still have a population of 33,000, which is larger than the population of Dorchester, Argenteuil and other counties. The county of Nicolet by retaining its entire present population and the present population of the county of Yamaska, will still have a population of only 45,493, which is a smaller population than that of the counties of Charlevoix-Saguenay, Drummond-Arthabaska, Chicoutimi, and that of many other counties. I believe I can detect the whole manoeuvre underlying this matter. Half of the parish of St. Michel is taken from the county of Yamaska, because it is a Liberal parish. Six parishes, also Liberal, are taken from my county. And why? Unless it be to create a fief, a safe constituency for the future Conservative candidate. And when the hon. Minister of Marine dares accuse us, Liberals, of only playing politics in connection with this bill, I ask myself what one must call this method of dealing with the counties of Nicolet and Yamaska.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): It is an abomination!

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): It is a national crime!

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): I protest once more and as strongly as I can against the present bill No. 2. The people of my county and those of the county of Yamaska are being treated unjustly. In support of my renewed protest, I will read to this house a last appeal of the people of the county of Nicolet. Here is the telegram which I received in that connection:

Mr. L. Dubois,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

We are sending you copy of a message forwarded to the right hon. prime minister and we urgently request you to use all your influence to secure justice for us. Here is the text of the message addressed to the prime minister. Mr. Premier, respectful representations have been made to your Government asking that the county of Nicolet which has a sufficient population be retained as a distinct entity, but if a union is necessary the two counties of Nicolet and Yamaska should be united in their entirety. We had understood your Government had condescended to adopt the second alternative that was so just and legitimate in every respect and decided to merge completely the two counties of Nicolet and Yamaska. To our surprise, the bill as presented dismembers and subdivides not only the counties of Nicolet and Yamaska but also the diocese of Nicolet by the annexation of half a parish to the county of Richelieu, St-Hyacinthe diocese, and of six parishes to the county of Lotbinière, diocese of Quebec. We believe it sufficient to point out this involuntary error in order for you to have it corrected in such a manner as to give complete satisfaction to the interested authorities and taxpayers. We are submitting the same request to your French-speaking colleagues and to the member for Nicolet. We remain,

H. N. Biron, mayor,
J. Alfred Gaudet, barrister,
Secretary-Treasurer of the Municipality of the Town of Nicolet.

I will point out that this Mr J. Alfred Gaudet, barrister, is the very man who was my opponent in 1930 and I must bear witness in this house to the fact that he is no coward. I must bear witness that he had enough courage and honesty not to ask for the dismemberment of the county of Nicolet. Mr. Gaudet is ready to run again at the next election, with the same county and same parishes which he faced in 1930.

Mr. DUMAINE (Translation): He is courageous.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): I am convinced this dismemberment effected in the county of Nicolet and in the county of Yamaska was requested by Mr. Comtois, defeated candidate in the county of Yamaska. This gentleman has not the courage to again face all his electors of 1930, and to-day he asks the Government to dismember the county of Yamaska and the county of Nicolet, in order to try and secure a somewhat safer riding for himself. I have no compliments to pay to the gentleman, but I am proud to be able to say that my opponent of 1930 appears to me to be much more courageous than the candidate who was defeated in the county of Yamaska.

Those petitions which I mentioned the other day, those resolutions and telegrams were sent to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and to the members of the committee, and I observe that those documents received no consideration whatever. They were thrown into the waste paper basket and no recommendation was taken into account. They preferred deciding with a ruling majority to drive six parishes out of the county of Nicolet and expel half the parish of St. Michel from the county of Yamaska. I understand, sir, that those sitting on your right are mighty enough to do such things, but magnanimous people can never be made to understand that might is right. I ask that Bill No. 2 be modified. The clause that reads as follows:

This Act may be cited as The Representation Act, 1933, should read: The Deportation Act, 1933.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): I consider it most deplorable that six parishes in the lower part of my county and the parish of St. Michel should be compelled to form part of other counties at the next election when they expressed the explicit desire to remain with their old counties. This bill is a cowardly, deceitful and felonious measure. In order to justify the expulsion of these parishes they try to make me and my people believe that this is being done to establish a uniform unit of representation in the province of Quebec. What deceit! I am about through, Mr. Chairman, and if you will allow me, I will make a comparison. On September 5, 1755, more than 400 Acadians were assembled in the little church at Grand-Pré. Winslow who was instructed to read Lawrence's orders to the little gathering deprived of all means of resistance was seated at a table in the aisle. One of my ancestors formed part of the group. That night, the clock struck the end of century of tranquillity and happiness. The following morning, those poor Acadians were looking at their homes and farms for the last time. They were being expelled. And it happened to be a Saturday, just like to-day! I need not tell you that history branded the perpetrators of that villainy of 1755.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, before this appendix of the redistribution bill relating to the province of Quebec is adopted, I trust you will allow me to add a word of protest against this government's arbitrary measure that involves the disappearance of the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm as an entity.

The first project conceived by the Conservative party which had sworn to wipe out the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm, involved originally the union of Montcalm with the county of Joliette and the annexation of L'Assomption with Maisonneuve.

The attention of these gentlemen having been called to the absurdity of uniting an essentially rural county with a city county, they deemed fit to give up this ridiculous project and to add the county of L'Assomption to that of Terrebonne.

It is true, concessions were made when they agreed to give up this more or less stupid second alternative and not separate the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm whose common interests require that its component parts remain united, but take the whole county of L'Assomption-Montcalm and join it with the county of Joliette.

Viewed from certain angles this project might appear rational and, of the three proposals I believe it should be in the interests of the people of the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Yet, I do not want to be understood as exonerating the heads of the administration who apply the saying: "Might is right," and unite two electoral districts whose respective populations are sufficient to secure each one its separate existence, particularly when one considers the Conservatives create under the present bill a new electoral district, that of Chapleau, whose population is smaller than that of the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm by 9,000, and smaller than that of Joliette by 7,000, and when this same bill provides for the maintenance of the county of Argenteuil as a separate entity with a population of less than 20,000.

The present government realizing its unpopularity by reason of the complete failure to implement any of its promises, is trying by all possible means and every possible injustice to mend its fences. Allow me to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that the Conservative party has so deceived the people, that no matter what it may do, the next appeal to them will witness its defeat, and with all due deference to my hon. friend, the Solicitor-General, despite the efforts he and the honourable French-Canadian ministers have made to improve their prospects, it might well happen that the province of Quebec may once more form a solid bloc to show it cannot be deceived with impunity. Moreover, when the province of Quebec forms a solid bloc it has good reasons for doing so.

If I am bound, sir, to accept the provisions of the present bill that are imposed on us, I must inform you again that it is simply a case of choosing the lesser of two evils. My hon. friend from Joliette (Mr. Ferland) and myself cannot help but feel the insult that each of our electoral districts suffers in not being allowed to retain their respective identities although they both had an absolute right to remain as they were.

Those are, Mr. Chairman, the few remarks I wished to make before the adoption of the appendix to the bill respecting the province of Quebec.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I would be lacking in dignity were I to complain about the treatment I have been subjected to. I do not intend complaining about what was done to me as member for L'Islet. Therefore I wish to protest once more on behalf of the county of L'Islet against the political crime that is about to be perpetrated.

Since it is the last time the county of L'Islet, as a county, may be heard in the House of Commons of Canada, I want the last words I am to speak to be devoid of bitterness. I simply want to avail myself of this opportunity to thank the people of L'Islet for the confidence they have reposed in me since 1917. I thank the Liberals, I thank the Conservatives; they were both excellent soldiers and on the morrow of the battle, they knew how to join hands and work for the prosperity of their district. I also wish to thank my colleagues for the support they have given me. I thank particularly the hon. members for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and for Quebec South (Mr. Power) who lent me their full support in trying to preserve the beautiful and historic county of L'Islet. Unfortunately, we failed to achieve the results we were seeking, but I am proud of one thing, we did not get on our knees, we remained standing.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Chairman, I desire to avail myself of the precedent established last night by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short). I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dumaine), that number forty of the schedule for Quebec be amended by adding the word "Napierville" after the words "St. Johns-Iberville." This would give the new constituency the following denomination, "St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville."

Amendment (Mr. Dupuis) agreed to.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, there have been some petitions tabled which were in proper form. They were signed by interested parties, people living in the four parishes which are to be taken away from the constituency of Témiscouata. They were signed by both Conservatives and Liberals. The clerk of the house said that they were presented in regular form. I will therefore ask of the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) three questions: first, what has been done with those petitions? Second, why have they been disregarded? Third, at whose request?

Mr. DUPRE: I have nothing to answer. I do not know what has been done with those petitions.

Mr. POULIOT: Who knows about them?

Mr. DUPRE: I am not supposed to take care of them. They are not under my care.

Mr. POULIOT: That is the answer Cain gave about Abel: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Mr. GAGNON: I rise to a point of order. Surely, to compare a minister of the crown with Cain is unparliamentary.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the hon. gentleman the guardian of the Solicitor General?

Mr. GAGNON: I ask you, Mr. Chairman, kindly to see that those words are withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think the comparison in the way it was used by the hon. member for Témiscouata was unparliamentary.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Toutes les comparaisons ne sont pas odieuses.

Mr. POULIOT: I will ask another question of the Solicitor General. The government has enfranchised the Indians—

Mr. DUPRE: I will tell my hon. friend at once that this is not a court and I shall not stand for any cross-examination from him.

Mr. POULIOT: I have never in my life seen anyone so dumb.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is out of order. That expression is certainly not parliamentary.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I shall withdraw it and say that I have never heard anyone speaking so little apropos as my hon. friend has done.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member must go further than he has done.

Mr. POULIOT: I have withdrawn the expression. I always abide by the rules.

Mr. TURNBULL: Perhaps I can clear up the situation. In committee, in the course of the discussion I was informed by the chairman that the petitions to which my hon. friend refers had been received from the clerk of the house by the select committee on redistribution and had been before that committee and considered.

Mr. POULIOT: And therefore they were disregarded and thrown into the waste paper basket. But I have to say this and I shall ask another question of the Solicitor General about the course that he will follow with regard to this legislation. The parishes of Notre-Dame-du-Portage, St. Jean-de-Dieu, Ste. Françoise and Trois-Pistoles are not in Témiscouata county; they are in the county of Rivière-du-Loup which is not mentioned in this bill on account of the ignorance that has been shown by either the members of the committee or by somebody else. The description is wrong.

What I was about to say is this: When the government is giving the franchise to the Indians, why do they refuse it to the French Canadians of those four parishes? That is the question I ask of my hon. friend and I also ask him whether it is not the intention of the government at least to change the description so as to state that those parishes are taken away from the county of Rivière-du-Loup in order to give those people the right to vote, or whether my hon. friends wish to create a most abominable gerrymander by depriving more than 1,000 people of the right to vote. That is the question. They would not have the right to vote because Témiscouata as described in this bill does not exist; it is twenty-five miles from there.

Mr. DUPRE: I will answer my hon. friend.

Mr. POULIOT: Let him answer then.

Mr. DUPRE: Yes. Nobody will be disfranchised, and if my hon. friend is right and this description is wrong, we shall see that we get the correct description.

Mr. POULIOT: So much the better. It is wrong.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is the county of Rivière du Loup and Témiscouata.

Mr. DUPRE: I may tell my hon. friend that the hon. member for Témiscouata has already raised that point. We consulted the officers who told us that this description was the right one, but we shall once more make sure about the matter.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member should look at chapter 16 of the Quebec statutes of 1931 and he should show it to the officers and learn it himself.

I have two things to say now. I received two letters one from Notre Dame du Portage. I will first ask the Solicitor General whether the old lines of the former constituency of Témiscouata will be changed around in the amendment, or whether the parishes will be taken away as mentioned in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the schedule carry?

Mr. POULIOT: I ask that question of the Solicitor General.

The CHAIRMAN: He does not answer.

Mr. POULIOT: I ask him whether, in the amendment changing the description of the county so as to make it correct in order not to deprive those people of the right to vote, he will restore the actual lines as they are now or whether he will take away the four parishes mentioned in the bill?

Mr. DUPRE: We shall leave the schedule just the way it is. If the definition is not correct, we shall see that it is corrected.

Mr. POULIOT: That is all right.

I wish to mention two letters I have received, one from Notre Dame du Portage. It is asked whether it is because the Prime Minister has been appointed Knight of Grace of St. John of Jerusalem that we receive so many Palestine oranges in this country. The second letter is from St. Jean de Dieu saying that when the right hon. gentleman goes to the world economic conference, he should see that there is no Bible on the boat—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: —because if the sailors read the story of Jonah and the whale they will throw him overboard.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Témiscouata should take his seat or at least talk like a gentleman.

Mr. POULIOT: I am. I am quoting the Bible.

Mr. CARDIN: I think there is a mistake in the Quebec schedule so far as the county of Chateauguay-Huntingdon is concerned. If you read the schedule with respect to that county, you will find that it states that the county of Chateauguay-Huntingdon consists of:

(a) the county of Châteauguay except such part thereof as is included in the municipalities of Ste-Philomène, St-Joachim, the town of Léry and of Châteauguay;

(b) that part of the county of Beauharnois as is included in the municipality of St-Etienne;

(c) that part of the county of St-John as is included in the municipalities of St-Bernard de Lacolle, Notre-Dame du Mont-Carmel and the village of Lacolle.

The county of Huntingdon is not mentioned in the reprinted schedule which I have in my hand.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): It is mentioned in the French version.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CARDIN: I have just a few remarks to offer. It was suggested this morning by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) that the addition of L'Assomption-Montcalm to Joliette had been done practically at my suggestion. That is not representing exactly what I had said. If the report of my observations is read carefully it will be very clearly understood that my suggestion, made with a view to reaching a compromise, was this: First of all I object to the disappearance of the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm. I contended that it should be kept as it was because of its importance for comparison with other constituencies. But I said that if the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm had to disappear it should disappear by being joined in its entirety with the county of Joliette. I said that this would create a large county, but it would not be the only county with a large population. My suggestion was made in order not to destroy the limits of the constituencies as they exist at the present time. I object to a part of the county only being taken to be added to an adjoining constituency. That was my main contention. My suggestion was that L'Assomption-Montcalm should be added to the county of Joliette in its entirety rather than be divided up, and that all the other constituencies in the northern section of the province be kept in their entirety without any subtractions from their territory. But in the reprinted bill which we have before us I find that that part of my suggestion has not been carried out. It is true that the county of Labelle is going to remain in the same condition as it is at the present time, and the same is true of the county of Argenteuil and of the county of Terrebonne, but that is not the case with Laval-Two Mountains. That county is being changed. Two parishes from the north of the county, the municipality of St. Colomban and the municipality of St. Canut are being added to the county of Argenteuil. It is a matter of only one thousand of a population; it does not amount to very much; so why change it, and two other parishes in Laval-Two Mountains are being transferred over the river Desprairies to Mercier on the island of Montreal. We have all been complaining that the population in the island of Montreal was large enough, and it was due to that fact that we had difficulty in adjusting the rural seats in the province of Quebec. If that is the case, and we are all agreed on that, those two municipalities transferred should have been left in the county of Two Mountains.

What is going to be the result of this? We are increasing the population of many constituencies in the province of Quebec, because we say they are not large enough as compared with others, but, in the case of Laval-Two Mountains, the population is being reduced. We are making a large county of L'Assomption-Montcalm-Joliette, giving that new county a population of over fifty thousand, and we are destroying the limits of the county of Laval-Two Mountains and reducing its population to 25,000. The population of Laval-Two Mountains in the reprinted bill which is going to pass, because nobody can prevent it passing now, if the government is determined to put it through, is reduced by nearly five thousand. The population of the constituency of my hon. friend the Postmaster General is going to have a population of 25,000, and the adjoining county of Terrebone 35,000, and the new Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is going to have over 50,000. That is the kind of a redistribution which is presently offered. Hon. gentlemen opposite always speak of equalizing populations. That was to be their main objective so far as possible. But everybody can see in what way they are equalizing the population in the different constituencies in the province of Quebec. They are equalizing the population where equalizing is to their advantage, and reducing the population when they think they can derive from it a certain political advantage.

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly it is my opinion, and the interjection of my good friend the Minister of Marine reminds me of something which can be said in regard to his constituency. He said that he was not disposed to take the whole county of Rouville because with that county as established, not to say carved, by the present bill he would have 40,000 of a population, and he said: "think of the development of that section of the province of Quebec with the service that I have established over the Montreal bridge." He said: In a few years you will have that constituency increased by 20,000 or 25,000. If that is the case it would not have been worse for him to keep the constituency of Chambly-Vercheres, where he had a population of 39,000, instead of 40,000, and then he would have been in a position to take care of the development of Chambly if these important developments are going to take place in the next two or three years. But if he wanted to get rid of that part of Vercheres that is his business. He knows why and I know why this change is being made. The reason is obvious. But there is no justification for him saying, "I cannot take the whole of the county of Rouville because it would give me too much population because I will have to take care of the future development of the county of Chambly." His position would be exactly the same, indeed he would be better off, if he kept the county of Chambly-Vercheres which has done him the great honour of electing him as its representative after that seat has been represented in this house by many distinguished Liberals. I think he should be a little more fair to his people in Chambly-Vercheres and show a little more appreciation of what they have done for him in keeping him within their fold; and obviously he could do more for them as a minister of the crown, if his government were returned to power, than any private member could. So I say that there is nothing in his argument as to population, because his population would have been the same and he would have been in the same position to take care of the future developments in the county of Chambly.

Mr. GAGNON: May I in a few sentences show how inconsistent are my hon. friends opposite, especially the former Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin). Speaking in this house on May 23, for about one hour and a half, the hon. gentleman said, as reported at page 5328 of Hansard:

> Instead of separating L'Assomption and Montcalm, I think we would be ready to join with Joliette, not only Montcalm but also L'Assomption. It is true that that would make a very large constituency but the county of Joliette—
> M. Dorion: Nous sommes prêts à accepter cette proposition de l'honorable député.

I will translate Mr. Dorion's remark into English, "We are ready to accept those proposals of the hon. member." The former Minister of Marine continued speaking for a further hour, and at page 5335 of Hansard he said:

We object to that, but if the question with regard to L'Assomption, Montcalm and Joliette can be decided without regard to these requests from the Postmaster General we will agree.

Those words implied very clearly that if the three counties of L'Assomption, Montcalm and Joliette were joined there would be no objection from my hon. friends opposite. Now that it has been done in order to please hon. gentlemen opposite, we have hon. gentlemen opposite standing up and blaming us for doing what they asked us to do.

Mr. CARDIN: It takes some courage for the hon. gentleman to speak in the way he does. If I were looking for a witness to corroborate the truth of the statement I have just made the hon. member who has just spoken would be the best witness. If he would read intelligently his words he would find that they are corroboration beyond dispute of what I said previously. We were ready to accept if the Postmaster General had not insisted upon destroying the line of the county.

Mr. SAUVE: I never insisted. The representative from the opposition agreed to it.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no such agreement.

Mr. SAUVE: If you do not know, I do. I will not be denied by others.

Mr. CARDIN: There have been negotiations to settle difficulties. Certain representations have been made from this side of the house. We were ready to go a certain length if hon. members opposite would go a certain length. We find in the bill some of our proposals but not others which were to serve as compensation. They have not accepted the proposals we made.

Mr. SAUVE: On Thursday at noon the hon. member for Richelieu told me that he accepted the proposition.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I was ready to accept the proposals if something were done for us.

Mr. SAUVE: No, not on Thursday.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It seems useless to fight.

Mr. CARDIN: I was ready to accept certain proposals provided something were done. But I ask hon. members to look at the bill and they will not find that any of our requests have been granted. The hon. member for Dorchester has just mentioned the conditions which were made, an agreement concerning the adjoining two counties, provided the Postmaster General did not insist upon reducing his own constituency. But he does not agree. He persists in his desire to keep the population of his constituency down to 25,000.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): When the committee rose at one o'clock there was a question as to Chateauguay-Huntingdon not being mentioned in the schedule.

Mr. GAGNON: I have an amendment to move. The hon. member is quite right. The bill which was drafted in the first instance was correct, but in reprinting it yesterday the printer left out one line. Therefore I move the following:

That the description of the constituency of Chateauguay-Huntingdon in the schedule be stricken out, and the following substituted therefor:

12. Chateauguay-Huntingdon consisting of:

(a) the county of Chateauguay except such part thereof as is included in the municipalities of Ste-Philomene, St-Joachim, the town of Lery and of Chateauguay;

(b) the county of Huntingdon except such part thereof as is included in the municipality of Ste-Barbe;

(c) that part of the county of Beauharnois as is included in the municipality of St-Etienne;

(d) that part of the county of St-John as is included in the municipality of St-Bernard de Lacolle, Notre-Dame du Mont-Carmel and the village of Lacolle.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Before considering the amendment I should like to say a few words. I do not know whether or not I understood the hon. member for Dorchester, but I thought he said that the representative on this side of the house on the committee had accepted certain proposals in reference to the county of Dorchester. As this committee knows, the subcommittee worked very hard. When our deliberations were concluded we differed in regard to Levis, Montmagny-l'Islet, Dorchester and Temiscouata. One night—I believe it was Tuesday night of this week—we thought we had come to a settlement. There was a question of leaving the constituencies of Dorchester and Temiscouata as they were. I should like to explain right here and now the authority under which members of the committee operate. Representing the Liberals I would not take upon myself the responsibility for settling anything at all; especially in regard to the county of Dorchester. I have great admiration for that county, but I do not know anything about the parish of St. Anselme, or anything of that nature. For that reason I could not take upon myself responsibility for settling things about which I knew nothing

No more did the hon. members for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) and Compton (Mr. Gobeil) take upon themselves any responsibility for settling anything without referring to those people who were especially interested. I was acting for Liberal members on this side of the house. I had a mandate; I was not the principal at all. Any proposals which were made by hon. members opposite must be submitted to hon. members on this side of the house, and I followed out the instructions I was given. The hon. member for Compton did the same for hon. members opposite. We made proposals and counter proposals and tried to agree upon this and that. We went away at night in good humour and said, "It looks pretty good to us; tomorrow everything will be settled." But when we came back next day it was all off. On Tuesday night of this week the question of a settlement concerning Temiscouata again engaged attention, and the suggestion was made that Temiscouata should be left as it was. Levis was to include that part of Levis which had been transferred to Bellechasse and so far as I can remember—and I am speaking subject to correction—an arrangement was made concerning Dorchester. Prior to 1924 St. Maxime de Scott was not in the county of Dorchester, but in 1924 the Liberals put it back into that county. If I remember correctly the ex-Minister of Justice said that if the parish of St. Maxime de Scott were put back in the county of Dorchester we would be willing to stand by it. When our committee ceased deliberations we could not agree on—well, as a matter of fact we did not agree on anything at all—but our main objections concerned Montmagny-l'Islet, Dorchester and Temiscouata. And when these learned, white-haired gentlemen came in and superseded us they deliberated and worked hard. Although the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) is not in his seat I must say we admired his diplomacy. In fact, because he was so diplomatic we conferred upon him the title of the Count of Talleyrand. But the new committee of wise men broke up. We did not accept anything. So far as the province of Quebec is concerned there was no question at any time of accepting the proposals in connection with the constituencies to which I have referred. I do not know whether or not it was the hon. member for Dorchester who said someone else or myself had accepted the proposal concerning that constituency, but I say now there was no acceptance in regard to Dorchester, Montmagny-L'Islet or Temiscouata. It was on these questions that the subcommittee on redistribution for the province of Quebec and the committee which superseded it failed to come to an agreement. I want to go on record as saying that I did not know anything about the county of Dorchester any more than I knew about L'Islet; I referred it to my friends, got my instructions from them, and whatever they told me I accepted. I did not want to take any responsibility for it any more than members on the other side took any responsibility for constituencies they did not know.

For Laurier-Outremont I could accept responsibility; I knew about that. I wanted it to remain as it was; I did not want it to disappear. The Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) is a good friend of mine; although we differ here, he was an elector in my constituency and I wanted to keep him there.

Amendment agreed to on division.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand that the representatives of the territory covered by the new constituencies of St. Mary and St. James are of the opinion that the population would be better distributed if certain changes were made. Therefore, to meet the wishes so expressed, I move:

That the description of the constituency of St. James in the Quebec schedule be amended by adding after the word "Papineau" in the fourteenth line the words:

"to the centre of the Canadian Pacific railway tracks, thence following the centre of the Canadian Pacific railway tracks to the centre of Dolorimier avenue; thence following the centre of Delorimier avenue."

It consists, I understand, of a few thousand people, and this is to equalize the population as far as that can be done. I am not doing this at the instance of the Conservative party or of the Conservative members on the committee, but to meet the wishes expressed to us, that this would be a more equitable distribution of the population.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to put a question in order to ascertain why the committee refuses to extend the eastern limits of my county to Papineau street as was agreed at the meeting I mentioned yesterday, in view of the fact the population of my county is smaller than that of the counties of St. James and St. Mary's?

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont) (Translation): I believe the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) is right.

Mr. BENNETT: That correctly interprets the request, doesn't it? The amendment I have moved was requested on behalf of those concerned in the constituencies in question

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I desire the implementing of the agreement whereby the county of St. Denis was to extend to the east as far as Papineau street and from the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks as far as Belanger street.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I had no agreement and I am much better off.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that my question deserves a reply.

Mr. LAURIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I believe there was an agreement at the outset with the hon. member for St. Denis and he was quite satisfied with the boundaries of his county. There is no reference whatever to the county of St. Denis in this amendment.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): I beg your pardon, when an agreement was made with the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Laurin) it was understood that the easterly limits of the county of St. Denis would extend as far as Papineau street and from the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks to Belanger street. The changes made are satisfactory to me, but if my friend from Maisonneuve discontinued his speech it was due to the fact an agreement had been reached that provided for the extension of my boundaries to Papineau street. That does not mean I am not satisfied with the limits I have, but I want the given word to be respected.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Under protest.

Quebec schedule agreed to.

On the schedule—Saskatchewan.

Mr. TURNBULL moved:

That the schedule of this bill with respect to the province of Saskatchewan be struck out and the following substituted therefor.

Then follows the schedule as it appears in the reprinted bill, with one or two minor changes which neither add to nor subtract from the arrangement. The first is in paragraph 10, Prince Albert, where after the word "portions" in the first line the words "within the province of Saskatchewan" are added. The second is in paragraph 15, striking out the word "to" in line 11. The next is adding in line 30 of the same paragraph the words "in range 27 west of the second meridian."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As is apparent from the remarks of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), the only changes in the schedules as they appear in the revised copy are those that affect the constituency of Prince Albert—

Mr. TURNBULL: They are only typographical changes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and incidentally the boundaries of the constituencies affected thereby. For that reason, what has already been said in the course of the discussion would apply equally at this time, with the exception of what might be said in regard to Prince Albert. As to Prince Albert constituency I said at the time we were discussing the matter that I would make my appeal to the government and would leave the question of the boundaries in the hands of the government. I have made my appeal to Caesar, and I propose to abide by the decision that has been given and not argue the matter further. However, I wish to state exactly the position in which the constituency of Prince Albert is placed as a result of the redistribution which is now proposed under the bill revised. What I say about no further discussion with regard to Prince Albert, is subject, of course, to the understanding that further discussion is not provoked by anything I may say just now or anything that may be said by hon. gentlemen opposite. I would ask the hon. members from Saskatchewan on this side who are here to-day, since we are all anxious to conclude this afternoon if possible, to direct their remarks—

Mr. BENNETT: With the consent of the right hon. gentleman I should like to make a brief statement which may shorten this discussion. With respect to the constituency of Prince Albert, to which my right hon. friend has referred, so far as possible having regard to the redistribution as arranged we have endeavoured to meet the views of the right hon. gentleman. A few days ago it was suggested that the southern boundary of Prince Albert had been fixed in 1914, when both the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and myself were members of the committee under the government of Sir Robert Borden. I suppose it is unnecessary to remind the right hon. gentleman or this committee that since 1911 two censuses have been taken, one in 1921 and the other in 1931, and obviously during that period of twenty years, with the increase in population which has taken place the boundaries of most of the constituencies must be altered if regard is had to the unit of population. In 1914 the southern boundary of Prince Albert, as perhaps the right hon.

gentleman will observe, commenced at the extreme eastern boundary of the province and then moved straight west, forming the southern boundary of several constituencies as well as the boundary of Prince Albert. The 1924 redistribution did not affect the southern boundary of the constituencies of Melfort and Prince Albert as they had been constituted. Unfortunately, with regard to our being able to meet the wishes of the right hon. gentleman, I only desire to point out that the shifting of the population in the last ten years has involved the adjustment of boundaries and the increase of representation. On the new map—and I went into it with some degree of care—there is built up a new constituency called Rosthern which, if one has regard to the returns in former elections, will return a Liberal candidate with a substantial majority. Unless there is a change in the voting sentiments of that population there is very little doubt, according to past returns, that a Liberal candidate will be returned in this constituency. The town of Rosthern lies within the present constituency of Prince Albert, under the redistribution of 1914, and is north of the line fixed in that year. The redistribution measure now before the house involves moving the line, which is the southern boundary of Prince Albert, twenty-four miles north, which would leave the town of Rosthern in the new constituency of the same name.

Mr. TOTZKE: If the right hon. gentleman will pardon me, the southern boundary is moved only twelve miles north.

Mr. BENNETT: Pardon me; I should have said twelve miles, and I thank the hon. gentleman. I now suggest, in order at least partially to meet the views of the right hon. gentleman and his friends, that the southern boundary of Prince Albert be moved north not twelve miles but six miles only.

Mr. TURNBULL: That is correct; it was twenty-four miles previously and now it is twelve miles.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I thought; my memory is fairly good. I was right in that we moved the southern boundary line of Prince Albert twenty-four miles north in the original draft; that is, four townships of six miles each. I now suggest that instead of moving the boundary line twenty-four miles north we meet the right hon. gentleman half way and move it only twelve miles north. Instead of carrying it straight through to the point of intersection with the boundary of Melfort, it is now proposed that we proceed east as far as the Duck Lake reserve, then up the side of that reserve and easterly until we strike the river, and then proceed downstream to the point of intersection with the westerly boundary of Melfort. The effect of that will be to throw out a triangular piece of territory in which I am told, according to the last election returns, there was a majority adverse to the right hon. gentleman of about 250. Instead of the line being moved twenty-four miles north, therefore, it would be moved only twelve miles north, and the town of Rosthern would be included in the new constituency of the same name, which has been built up. Instead of proceeding east in a straight line to the intersection of the constituency of Melfort, when the boundary reached the Duck Lake reserve it would proceed downstream to the western boundary of the riding of Melfort. I believe this will not make any appreciable difference to the right hon. gentleman from the standpoint of voting power; the population in that triangular strip of land to which I have referred, lying south and east of the Duck Lake reserve, between that reserve and the point of intersection with the Saskatchewan river, will be withdrawn from that constituency.

I may tell the committee frankly that it is quite impossible to readjust the boundaries without involving a general change, and those who have followed the matter know that this results very largely from what was done with regard to the constituency of Melville. Because of what was done in that regard the plans have been entirely changed, because it must be remembered that this is a redistribution not of seats but rather of population. That is the difficulty in Saskatchewan. There is no change in the number of seats but there is a change with regard to population. The whole difficulty arises because of the need to equalize as nearly as possible the population in the various ridings. With regard to Melville we have yielded to popular clamour; hon. members from Saskatchewan have been most insistent that Melville should remain unchanged. They have importuned members of the government; they have told us that if this were done all would be well. Man after man spoke to me and asked me if I did not think this should be done. I foresaw what would happen; the result has been exactly what I expected. Those who listened to the address delivered in this house the night before last by one who was thus accommodated will realize how sound was the view I took. I only mention this in passing, and I want to say that I have done the very best I could, conscientiously and carefully. I consulted my friends on the committee, not only the hon.

gentleman who sits to my right at the moment (Mr. Turnbull) but others as well, and so far as I can see the only way to meet the situation is by moving the line only half the twenty-four miles originally suggested. This will compensate for not bringing it the whole distance that the right hon. gentleman is suggesting. We are giving half the territory that lies to the south and east of the Duck Lake reserve and between there and the western boundary of Melfort and south of the river. As I say, I have done this after consultation with the members of the committee and with a most earnest desire to meet the wishes of the right hon. gentleman so far as I could having regard to the fact that the constituency of Rosthern had been built in. The last election returns indicate that this territory would be favourable to the opposition. As was originally intended, the town of Rosthern would be within this territory. I have done the best that could be done under the circumstances and have endeavoured to make an equitable disposition by making certain changes in the original electoral map.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, for the time and trouble which the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and those associated with him have given to the matter of the readjustment of the boundaries of Prince Albert constituency, I should like to thank them. I appreciate what has been done, although it is far from meeting the views which I expressed as to what I thought would be fair and just. Nevertheless, it is a change for the better as compared with the boundaries of the constituency as contained in the original report of the special committee to this house, and which the Prime Minister himself quite frankly stated were recognized as not satisfactory boundaries even from the point of view of the government. They were not boundaries that were intended to be retained, and they were evidently put there at the beginning for the purpose of negotiation and were kept there when in some particulars the negotiations broke down. May I say to the Prime Minister that while he says that he has met me half way, as far as half of the southern portion of the constituency is concerned, he may have met me in part half way geographically, but he has been very far from meeting me half way politically. After all, the political is the important consideration in studying the effects of any redistribution.

It will I think be recalled that my suggestion was that first of all there should be no additional territory added to the constituency of Prince Albert. The other point which I pressed most strongly was that the southern boundary of Prince Albert constituency as it is at present should be retained. The part lying immediately to the north of the southern boundary of the present constituency has been taken away in part for twelve miles to the north, in part for more than double that distance. This is the strong Liberal portion of the constituency, and it will affect the Liberal candidate, whoever he may be, most seriously. The government is adding to the eastern side of the constituency of Prince Albert certain territory from Melfort. It is true that under the revision the extent of this added territory will not be as large as was previously intended. It is also true that what is now being added will add a small Liberal majority. Based on the figures of 1930, it would be something like 50. This is being done instead of adding a Conservative majority of twice or three times as much as would have been the case under the bill as introduced. A portion of the additional territory which it was proposed to add and which gave a Conservative majority remains under the revise in the constituency of Melfort. As I have said, a portion giving a Liberal majority of 50 comes into Prince Albert. The effect with respect to what is being done in the southern portion of the constituency is however quite serious, in what it wipes out of the Liberal majority in the constituency itself. The figures for the 1930 election will bear me out. The Liberal majority in Prince Albert in the 1930 election was 1,192 whereas the redistribution as it is now made would give with the added 50 Liberal majority in what is being added from Melfort a Conservative majority of 136.

Mr. TURNBULL: I suggest that if my right hon. friend would check those figures again he will find that they are not exactly correct. According to the figures I have, it is the other way around.

Mr. BENNETT: It gives a Liberal majority.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am giving the figures as I have them. I have gone over them very carefully and checked them back and forth but I speak subject to correction if other figures can be shown. It may be that my hon. friend has other statistics but that is not as I figure it from the official records. I shall state the basis of my calculation. In 1930 the constituency of Prince Albert gave a Liberal majority of 1,192.

Mr. BENNETT: That is in the twenty-four mile territory?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am speaking of Prince Albert constituency as a whole, as it was in 1930 and is at present. Taking the 1930 vote as a basis, the constituency as it will be after the boundaries now suggested supersede those of to-day, instead of giving a Liberal majority of 1,192, according to my figures will give a Conservative majority of 136.

Mr. BENNETT: We make it a Liberal majority of 60 in any event.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have not so figured it out. As I say, I figure it would give a Conservative majority of 136. That is one feature.

The other feature will be recognized as being even more important. The constituency of Prince Albert as it is at the present time is out of a total of 21 constituencies the third largest rural or rural-urban constituency in Saskatchewan. It now becomes the second smallest constituency in the province. If one includes the city constituencies, Prince Albert as it now stands is in fact the fifth largest constituency in the province of Saskatchewan. The populations of the constituencies are as follows:

Melfort	52,668
North Battleford	53,708
Regina	60,858
Saskatoon	60,638
Prince Albert	50,896

The population of Prince Albert constituency under this new redistribution will be only 39,874 which, as I say, brings it down to being the second smallest rural constituency in the province. May I say that this is so notwithstanding the fact that the city of Prince Albert, a rapidly growing city, is situated in the constituency. All along we have been arguing that where city constituencies are concerned the unit should be somewhat larger than the average. The population of the city of Prince Albert is in size over one-quarter of the population of the new Prince Albert constituency.

I shall now give figures to show how the proposed redistribution affects the population, and if Hansard will print them in tabulated form the result will be much clearer:

Prince Albert Constituency
Change by Redistribution as it Affects Population

Population of constituency	50,896
Taken away from Prince Albert by schedule as revised	12,594
	38,302
Added from Melfort	1,572
Population in constituency as redistributed	39,874

Average unit of constituency—44,186.
Present constituency—4,312 below unit.
Fair unit for Prince Albert—46,000 or 47,000.
Present constituency—6,000 or 7,000 below what unit should be.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The population of the constituency as it stands now is 50,896. There is to be taken away by the present schedule a population of 12,594. That leaves the population of the part of the new constituency which is made up from what is taken from the old constituency as 38,302. But there has been added from Melfort to what remains of the old constituency of Prince Albert a population of 1,572, so that the population of the constituency as redistributed is 39,874. The average unit as we have been discussing it all along is 44,186 so that the new constituency of Prince Albert will be 4,312 below that unit. As I have pointed out, however, wherever a city is concerned the unit has been taken to be somewhat larger than the average. I would say that, having regard to the size of the city, a fair population for the new constituency of Prince Albert would be between 46,000 and 47,000. If that be correct, the present constituency will be between 6,000 and 7,000 below what its unit ought to be under what may well be regarded as a fair redistribution.

The Prime Minister has spoken about the line that is to form the southern boundary of the new constituency as it has been drafted. I believe there was some difference between the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) and the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) as to just what proposal was made during the course of negotiations with respect to the southern boundary, provided that other matters could be satisfactorily arranged. I gather that what the hon. member for Humboldt said was that the southern line as he had it in mind would have continued right across from the western boundary to the eastern boundary of Prince Albert; it would not, on being drawn from the western boundary, upon reaching the South Saskatchewan river, have run up north following the course of the South Saskatchewan river. It is true that a portion of Melfort that was on the map as brought in from the committee, and which would have given a Conservative majority has now been eliminated, but there has also been eliminated part east of the South Saskatchewan river, from the southern boundary to the river, a part of the old Prince Albert constituency which gave a very considerable Liberal majority. All that section that lies to the east of the South Saskatchewan river that remains in Prince Albert constituency as it now is, gave a pretty good Liberal majority and that is being taken out and put into one of the other constituencies.

Mr. BENNETT: Largely into Rosthern, is it not?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is quite right; it is going into the new constituency of Rosthern. Let me say that if the unit that I had thought of as a fair one in Prince Albert, that is to say 46,000 or 47,000, had been the one considered; if the section that lies east of the western boundary of Prince Albert constituency on the south to the South Saskatchewan river had been left just as it is over to the South Saskatchewan river, I think, with the other changes made, the constituency might be regarded as having been fairly redistributed. But all that part has also been taken out of Prince Albert constituency and it is, so far as the fortunes of any Liberal candidate is concerned, the really important part of the constituency. The Prime Minister, in referring to this part, said that this part contains the town of Rosthern; that the new constituency is named Rosthern and therefore that Rosthern town and the country round about should be in the new constituency of Rosthern. But when the committee were negotiating in regard to the matter, the new constituency was not referred to as Rosthern, it appeared under the name of Hague. That was the name given to it and the one which appears in the schedules as reported. But now the new constituency is to be called Rosthern. I do not object to that name being given to any constituency; it is a fine name, but I certainly object, and object very strongly, to losing from Prince Albert the good people of Rosthern because I know of no finer lot of citizens or electors anywhere than one finds in that particular community and that part of the province.

Let me say just a word as to the effect of the redistribution on the political complexion of the riding. This will show more clearly than anything else what the effect of the changes are. Here again they will be most apparent in tabular form:

Prince Albert Constituency As Redistributed
Effect on Political Complexion of Riding Added from Melfort, a Population of 1,572 Persons

Of that number in the election of 1930—	474 votes were cast
Of which Conservative	199
Of which Liberal	262
Of which Farmer	13
Majority of Liberal	63	over Conservative
	or 50	over both combined

There is added from Melfort a population of 1,572 persons. From that number in the election of 1930, 474 votes were cast and of them 199 were cast for the Conservative, 262 for the Liberal and 13 for a Farmer candidate. In other words, that portion which is being added from Melfort to Prince Albert gave a Liberal majority of 63 over the Conservative candidate or a Liberal majority of 50 over both candidates combined who were running in Melfort at that time. But let me now give the effect of the change as respects the old constituency of Prince Albert, that is the constituency as it is at present compared with what it will be when the redistribution goes into effect:

In Prince Albert
Liberal
1930 vote was	9,283
Conservative
1930 vote was	8,091
Liberal majority, 1,192.
What is left in of 1930 vote—
Liberal	6,536
Conservative	6,735
Conservative majority, 199.
What is taken away of 1930 vote—
Liberal	2,747
Conservative	1,356
Or a Liberal majority of	1,391 is taken out of Prince Albert.
Where total Liberal majority for Prince Albert constituency in 1930 was	1,192
Which becomes now Conservative	199
Subtracting Liberal majority from Melfort which is being added	63
Leaves Conservative majority	136

In 1930 the vote cast for the Liberal candidate totalled 9,283 and for the Conservative candidate 8,091, or in other words there was a Liberal majority of 1,192. If we take what is left of the old Prince Albert constituency, under the 1930 vote the figures would then be: Liberals, 6,536; Conservatives, 6,735, or a Conservative majority of 199. If from that Conservative majority of 199 we subtract the 63 which is the added Liberal majority from Melfort, this would give a Conservative majority of 136. In other words, the effect has been to change a Liberal majority of, as I have said, 1,192, into a Conservative majority of 136.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the right hon. gentleman counted the triangular piece I mentioned a few minutes ago that is now taken away from him?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thought I had—the piece in the southeast corner of Prince Albert constituency, yes, as I figure it. The other triangle does not enter into the picture.

There is now one remaining and all important point to which I wish to draw particular attention. Of the vote that is taken away from the constituency of Prince Albert to go into the new constituency of Rosthern, there will on the basis of the 1930 election be a total Liberal vote taken away of 2,747. The Conservative vote taken away that will be going into the new riding of Rosthern will be 1,356. In other words, a Liberal majority of 1,391 is taken out of Prince Albert in that part which is to go into the new constituency, whereas the total Liberal majority for the constituency of Prince Albert as a whole as given at the time of the last election was 1,192. It means this that, as matters now stand, on the basis of the 1930 election, a larger Liberal majority will go into the new constituency of Rosthern than that which represented my majority for the whole constituency of Prince Albert in 1930. Let me put it in this way: the total Liberal majority in 1930 was 1,192. The total Liberal majority that has gone into Rosthern and is taken away from Prince Albert amounts to 1,391. In other words on the vote of 1930 my majority would be found to-day in supporters who have been taken into the new constituency of Rosthern, rather than in those who remain in Prince Albert constituency as redistributed. I admit it is very difficult to work out these matters as both sides might wish to have them, and I accept the situation as it is. In pointing out, in the way in which I have, the position of Prince Albert, I am speaking as the representative of Prince Albert constituency in the interest of the electors. I hope I have been fair and impartial, and have spoken without feeling one way or the other. I repeat that I am obliged for the time and trouble that hon. members opposite have given in seeking to rearrange the constituency, and that in what I have said I have simply stated the position as it is.

May I conclude with just one word in reference to another constituency; it was the concluding word of what I said when we last discussed the constituencies of Saskatchewan. As a whole I did hope that the administration would see its way to keep the names of North Battleford and South Battleford as those of separate constituencies rather than change the name of North Battleford to Redberry. I notice to-day that among the amendments that were moved was one to change the name as it appears on the revised schedule to what it had been before, and that that amendment was accepted. I hope it will not be too late yet for the government to accept an amendment which would retain the old name of North Battleford instead of the name of Redberry which has not, as far as I see it, any real significance in relation to the history of Canada. Certainly I would hope that this might be adequately done by also bringing the town of North Battleford into the North Battleford constituency. It should be in the North Battleford constituency. But even if there is hesitation about that, what will be called the constituency of Redberry will nevertheless be a constituency that is allied so far as commercial, business and social interests are concerned, with North Battleford, not a constituency that will be particularly associated with Redberry, except that Redberry finds a place in it. I believe the changes I have proposed may be made merely by an adjustment as between the townships in North Battleford and South Battleford without affecting or altering in any way the boundaries of any other constituency. If the government would as a last act, one of grace, if you wish, make that change I feel that we would all go away with a pleasanter feeling.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to follow up the remarks that have been made by the leader of the opposition in regard to the change being made in the constituency of Battleford, and I do so because I know that country well. I went into it in the year 1903, long before the railways were ever there and I traversed most of it. I was simply amazed when I found that the proposed redistribution map of Saskatchewan brought both Battlefords into one constituency.

Looking over the map of Saskatchewan one of the constituencies that struck me first as being rather peculiar was the Qu'Appelle constituency. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) has made the statement on more than one occasion that the reason for having a constituency of that shape was the natural boundary known as the Qu'Appelle valley. I know that part of the country well; I worked there as a hired man for some years before I went north, and I remember that you could cross the Qu'Appelle valley almost everywhere. The Qu'Appelle valley is no natural boundary in the way that the Saskatchewan river might be called such. I remember that in 1902 the town of Indian Head shipped more wheat than had been shipped from any other shipping point in the world. Where did it come from? The bulk of it came from north of the Qu'Appelle valley, and naturally because of the fact that you could cross the valley at almost any place you wished to cross it. Since then there has been a great deal of road construction, and if my hon. friend from Regina wants any importance attached to his statement that Qu'Appelle constituency is shaped as it is because of the natural boundary of the Qu'Appelle valley, then I say that applying the same reasoning to the constituencies of North Battleford and South Battleford as they are at the present time, there is a greater reason why this map should be changed before this committee rises.

The other evening when the Prime Minister spoke he seemed to be disposed to make a change in the two Battleford constituencies. The present proposal is to have one constituency known as the Battlefords and another called Redberry. The Prime Minister said that there might be some difficulty in that it might be necessary to change the boundary between the Battlefords and the constituency of Kindersley. I think the Prime Minister has a map before him, and if he will look at it he will see that there is no need to change that line at all, that Kindersley can be left exactly as it is.

May I also call the attention of the committee to the fact that not only is the Saskatchewan river in so far as the two towns of Battleford are concerned a natural boundary, but if the Prime Minister will look at the south end of the Redberry constituency as now proposed, he will find that there is a piece of the Redberry constituency south of the North Saskatchewan river, and I am informed that in that piece of territory between the Rosetown constituency and the North Saskatchewan river there are some 4,000 people. There was only one crossing at that time so far as I know, and that is the bridge at the elbow. There may have been more put in within recent years, but the last time I was there, a few years ago, there was just one crossing. That forms the natural boundary between the south end of Redberry constituency and the north end. That part could very easily be put into the Battleford constituency because it is closer to South Battleford than to Redberry. The old Saskatoon-Battleford trail passed through that territory, and the people immediately south of the north Saskatchewan river are more interested in South Battleford than they are in Redberry. A change could very well be made there so as to restore the city of North Battleford to the old constituency of North Battleford.

There is another possibility. If the Prime Minister will look at the map before him he will see that he can take the townships in the range immediately north of North Battleford and going north for five or six townships make the change there very easily and substitute on the north side of the proposed Battlefords constituency a range of townships there which would probably equalize the population. I think that the people living in that area would appreciate that change very much. I do not speak of this matter with any heat or for any particular reason of my own, but merely because I happen to know that part of the country, and I think that as it stands at the present time the bill proposes a ridiculous situation which I am sure the government when it is acquainted with the facts will recognize.

Mr. McINTOSH: Mr. Chairman, I spoke briefly once before on what is being foolishly done in connection with the redistribution of North Battleford and South Battleford, and perhaps I should say something this afternoon. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) stated to-day that man after man from Saskatchewan made the statement in the committee room when the general redistribution committee met that if the constituency of Melville were fixed up everything would be satisfactory.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say in the committee room. I said they had urged upon the government.

Mr. McINTOSH: I beg pardon, that they had urged that upon the government. All I know, and I want to be as fair as possible as I know the Prime Minister himself wants to be fair, is that two members from Saskatchewan made that statement, and no other member from Saskatchewan, so far as I know, made it. So far as I am concerned I asked that something be done to rectify the situation in Melville, but I concluded what I had to say by drawing the attention of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) to the absolutely ridiculous position of the Battlefords. I said there was a general feeling that something should be done to rectify the blunder committed in the Battleford seats.

This afternoon I am asking for a proper redistribution of these two seats. I am not necessarily making an appeal for myself; I am not thinking of doing that. Nor am I making an appeal for the Liberal party or any other party. I am trying to make as plain as possible that which in my view ought to be done to redistribute fairly the population north and south of the North Saskatchewan river which separates the two Battlefords. It is a question of recognizing that the boundary line in existence is a marked type of boundary. The gully formed by the river and the river itself at the Battlefords is easily two miles wide. That natural boundary line is perhaps as clear cut as any in western Canada. As a result of this, north of the North Saskatchewan river, a great community has grown up in the last twenty-four or twenty-five years, a community stretching from the city of North Battleford and the North Saskatchewan river northward over one hundred and fifty miles, westward to the Alberta boundary, and eastward to the same river a short distance from Saskatoon. It is a great developing community. And it is equalled by another great community which has developed south of the Saskatchewan river, a community including the old town of Battleford, the towns of Wilkie, Unity and Lloydminster. In the present redistribution measure practically one-quarter of the old North Battleford riding has been taken and thrown in with three-quarters of the old South Battleford riding. Notwithstanding the fact that North Battleford is a city and Battleford is a town, only one-quarter of the area north of the river has been added to three-quarters of the territory south of the river to make the new constituency known as the Battlefords.

May I draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that in the campaign of 1930, which was based on the redistribution of 1924, the North Battleford federal riding gave a Liberal majority of approximately 1,100. In balancing up the votes cast in the 1930 election I find that under the new riding drawn up by the hon. member for Regina, instead of giving a Liberal majority of 1,100 votes the majority will be turned around to practically the same number of votes in the other direction. In other words, on the 1930 election date, there would be a majority of about 900 against a Liberal candidate. That is the result of the redistribution that has taken place. I ask the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and any other hon. member whether or not that is a fair distribution. Further than that, I do not believe any such change has taken place in the constituency the Prime Minister represents, namely that of West Calgary. I am quite satified there has been no such change in the constituency represented by the hon. member for Regina.

Mr. TURNBULL: My hon. friend's figures are very much exaggerated.

Mr. McINTOSH: Which figures?

Mr. TURNBULL: About the change in voting strength of the new constituency of Battlefords.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. McINTOSH: These are figures that I have worked out. What figures have you?

Mr. TURNBULL: My figures are very different from those.

Mr. McINTOSH: I prepared my figures correctly from the last records. If the hon. member has anything different I should like to have them, but I believe he will find I am substantially correct. They were taken from the poll records for 1930, and I do not think there has been any mistake in adding them. North of the North Saskatchewan river, that great natural boundary—

Mr. VALLANCE: I suggest that the hon. member for Regina is counting the three-cornered fight in South Battleford, and adding the farmers and Grits jointly as against the Conservative vote.

Mr. TURNBULL: No, I have taken the figures only for Liberals and Conservatives. I left the third party out of my calculations.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am satisfied if the hon. member for Regina has done that he will find that his figures, not mine, are out of range or wrong.

I have stated that north of the North Saskatchewan river in the last twenty-four or twenty-five years a great settlement has grown up. North Battleford, as a young and ambitious city, is intimately associated or connected with that settlement, that is with all that expanding northern country. In fact for over a quarter of a century it has taken a leading and magnanimous part in its attempt to build up facilities of one kind and another for the development of this fine fertile belt of territory. Its distinctly unselfish aim was always to give this district an impetus to help it in years to come. The work of railroading this north land in the last twenty-five years has been a prodigious job. North Battleford has taken a prominent part in trying to provide this vast territory with adequate railway facilities, and its task is not yet completed and will not be for years.

The argument may be urged, "Well, although you are changing the constituency electorally, you are not destroying its associations." I say you are doing just about as much as could be done to destroy those associations, putting in a wedge as it were between the city and "The North". In my view there is no reason for taking North Battleford away from its surrounding territory and putting it into a new territory only part of which can be said to be connected with it. The building of highways alone has been another important matter that has had to be directed and supported north of the North Saskatchewan river. A great work has been done in that connection. North Battleford has played an important part in the development of highways in every direction throughout that area. Then telephone, telegraph, postal and air services have had to be carefully considered. Throughout the years all these services have grown and grown into greater importance. I believe practically every elector in that part of the country will say that the leading part taken by the citizens of North Battleford in providing all these services has been most helpful, and without such help very much of this essential pioneering work might not have been done.

In addition to all these accomplishments North Battleford has been one of the pioneer centres in western Canada in the building up of a live stock organization. Years ago when wheat growing was claiming the attention of other awakening parts of western Canada the citizens of North Battleford took an active part in initiating a movement of placing live stock on the land, hither and thither throughout the country, with the result that to-day the effects of that movement can be seen in more ways than one. Facilities of one kind and another and municipalities have grown up, towns and villages have developed, rural districts have come into being. Further, all these districts, centres, municipalities and services are linked one way or another with the population of North Battleford.

To take North Battleford out of that area, out of these surroundings, out of its environment, and place it in a district by no means as closely connected or associated with it, is I think very unwise. If the government or the Prime Minister could do anything in the way of preventing a mistake of that kind, I feel satisfied the people of North Battleford and the surrounding country would respond to such an act of generosity which under the circumstances is nothing more than justice. I am not speaking politically at all; I am speaking for the city of North Battleford and the miles and miles of country beyond it. I realize I am on fundamental ground in saying that what is being done in this bill is not fair, and the sooner it is corrected the better.

Now I might go south of the river and show that around the towns of Battleford, Wilkie, Unity, and Lloydminster and other centres in that great south country similar developments have taken place. But these developments are south of the North Saskatchewan river, and they have been largely tributary to the towns I have mentioned. Much of the lower part of this territory is much more tributary to Saskatoon than to North Battleford. Into that southern area, some parts of which will be one hundred miles from the city of North Battleford, you are throwing North Battleford, and taking it out of its natural setting. This I am sure is a vital mistake. It can however be readily corrected without interfering politically with the map which my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Turnbull) has made. I would say that anything the government can do ought to be done and done at once. I realize that the government is in power. I realize that my own party is out of power. I am not complaining about that. What I am asking for is fair play for the city of North Battleford, the people back of it, in a word justice to all concerned. I am satisfied that if the government would give a little thought to the problem the adjustments desired are very easy to make, if there is a disposition to make them.

The electoral history of Saskatchewan, especially northwestern Saskatchewan, is to a large extent linked up with the Battlefords. That is one reason why I do not like to see the names North Battleford and South Battleford disappear from the electoral map of Canada. I think this would be a blunder. In 1887 the northwest territories were given four seats; the two Assiniboias, Alberta and Saskatchewan. In 1902 the representation was increased to six; Assiniboia East, Assiniboia West, Mackenzie, Humboldt, Qu'Appelle, and Saskatchewan. In 1907 we had ten constituencies; Assiniboia, Battleford, Mackenzie, Humboldt, Prince Albert, Regina, Saskatoon, Moose Jaw, Qu'Appelle and Saltcoats. In 1914, following the census of 1911, when the hon. Prime Minister was a member of the redistribution committee in the government of Sir Robert Borden, the present Prime Minister himself established these two outstanding names. It was decided in 1914 there should be a South Battleford and a North Battleford. Ever since 1914 these names have been on the electoral map of Canada. In 1924 under Liberal rule there was a redistribution and these two names remained unaltered.

I have a map here showing the outline of the constituency of North Battleford as it was in 1914. To the north it is bounded by the Northwest Territories, to the west by the Alberta boundary, to the south by the North Saskatchewan river, and from a southerly point easterly by the adjoining constituency of Prince Albert. In 1924 when the redistribution took place under the Liberal government the constituency was left practically intact, only the eastern boundary being moved westward a certain distance from its Prince Albert boundary. For instance Shellbrook was formerly in North Battleford, now it is in Prince Albert. And until this bill was put before the house the boundary line was practically the same as in 1914, 1917 and 1924. By this bill the riding of North Battleford is demolished to a certain extent, about one quarter, as I have said being taken out of it and thrown in with three quarters of South Battleford. In addition the names North Battleford and South Battleford disappear. The great area surrounding North Battleford is given the new name Redberry. I leave it to other hon. members speaking for Saskatchewan to say what more suggestive name if any ought to be adopted. Surely the government can take a matter of that kind into consideration and take some action.

In concluding may I say I am pleased to have had another opportunity of presenting this very controversial question to the committee. I do not want to be acrimonious, do not want to show any feeling in the matter, but I desire to say that what is being done in view of the history of these topographically interesting constituencies is astounding—amazing.

Finally I wish to move two amendments, which will bring the matter definitely before the committee. I would say that if the amendments are not satisfactory to the government we would accept any reasonable suggestion to rectify the matters to which I have drawn attention. The first amendment is, moved by myself and seconded by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance):

That townships 43-48 inclusive, north of the North Saskatchewan river, range 16 west of the 3rd meridian be taken from "The Battlefords" as at present constituted and transferred to Redberry as at present constituted.

The second amendment is:

That townships 39-41 inclusive, straight north to the North Saskatchewan river following in a southeasterly direction to township 39, ranges 11-15 inclusive west of the 3rd meridian be transferred from Redberry as at present constituted to "The Battlefords" as at present constituted.

These two suggestions were brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). The amendment for the change in names if necessary can come later.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member cannot move two amendments at the same time.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. McINTOSH: Well, I will move the first and the hon. member for South Battleford will move the second.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The two were mentioned together to show the relationship.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Chairman, would you mind telling us what is the amendment now before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Regina has moved that the schedule with respect to the province of Saskatchewan be struck out and that the reprinted schedule be substituted therefor.

Mr. BENNETT: That should pass on division first.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The amendment of the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) will have to be a sub-amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: If the amendment of the hon. member for Regina is adopted the reprinted schedule will be carried, and then the amendment of the hon. member for North Battleford will be in order. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the amendment of the hon. member for Regina shall be adopted?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. VALLANCE: You will notice, Mr. Chairman, that these two amendments submitted by the hon. member for North Battleford are complementary; that is, if you take townships 44 to 48 inclusive out of the Battlefords as at present constituted, you must substitute something in lieu thereof. For the information of those who are not as familiar with the geography of that portion of Saskatchewan as those who represent it, I may say that there are two Battlefords. There is the old town of Battleford which, as the Prime Minister said on a previous occasion, once was the capital of the Northwest Territories; I think it is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, settlement in what is now known as the province of Saskatchewan.

The amendment now before the committee is not what I would have desired, but it is better than the suggestion contained in the present bill. I have always argued that the northwestern part of the province of Saskatchewan, north of the Saskatchewan river should be one constituency, and I think that is pretty well agreed upon by those who have given the matter any consideration. If you go back to the redistribution of 1924 you will notice that this principle was definitely adhered to. In my opinion it is a great mistake to put the two Battlefords together; there is no community of interest. The city of Battleford is the distributing centre of all the country north of the river, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh). If you look at these two communities you will find that South Battleford contains four railway centres. There is the town of Wilkie on the Canadian Pacific main line between Saskatoon and Edmonton. If you go to the southern end of the constituency there is my home town of Kerrobert, which is another divisional point on the Canadian Pacific line between Moose Jaw and Lacombe. If you go to the northwestern corner of the constituency you find the town of Lloydminster, also a divisional point, and when you get down to the southwestern portion you find the town of Macklin, which is also on the Edmonton-Saskatoon line of the Canadian Pacific.

One only has to look at the various institutions in the two communities to see that there is no community of interest. In the old town of Battleford we have a collegiate and other institutions which are duplicated across the river, proving conclusively that there is no community of interest in those two municipalities. Even the provincial government realizes that fact; a land office has been established in each town so that those residing on the southern side of the Saskatchewan river need not cross that stream in order to file on their homesteads. They have even established a liquor store in each town, and I think these facts prove conclusively that there is practically no community of interest there. The old town of Battleford has been in existence for well over fifty years; people are living there who left Ontario more than fifty years ago. I well remember that in 1906, when I settled in that district, the settlement north of the river was very sparse indeed, and the only communication was by means of a ferry. So it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is a very sad day for the Battlefords when they are placed in the same federal riding.

The hon. member for North Battleford gave some statistics with regard to the vote in the last election. If you take that portion of the constituency of South Battleford which, under this bill, is placed in the constituency of Kindersley you will find, on the basis of the 1930 election, that whoever receives the nomination there will have a majority over both the Conservative and Farmer candidates, if there is a three cornered fight as there was in 1930, of 547. According to the figures as I have worked them out, in the last election the Conservative candidate received 1,689 votes; the Liberal candidate, who was myself, received 3,090 votes, while the Farmer candidate received 864 votes. The Farmer and Conservative candidates together received 2,553 votes, so the majority for the Liberal candidate was 547. But when you take that portion of the Kindersley constituency which, under this legislation, is placed in the new riding, you get a different picture. In the last election there was a straight fight in Kindersley between the Liberal and Progressive candidates. The Progressive candidate was the present hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael); he polled 4,648 votes while the Liberal candidate polled 3,502 votes, showing an adverse vote so far as the Liberal candidate was concerned of 1,146. If you carry the Liberal majority of 547 in that part of South Battleford into the constituency of Kindersley, you will see that the result will be an adverse vote of approximately 600 I do not want to say that the alterations as proposed in the bill have been made for political purposes. If the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) proposes to reply, I should like him to answer a question which I asked the last time I spoke on this matter. South Battleford as at present constituted is the sixth largest constituency as far as population is concerned in the province of Saskatchewan. In 1921 the population was 35,070 and it has increased at the rate of one thousand per year, until we now have a population of 45,199. I should like to ask the hon. member for Regina and those who were responsible for drafting the new map why it was thought necessary to eliminate a constituency which had 45,199 population, the sixth largest population in the twenty-one seats in Saskatchewan. These are the questions that are being asked me. I am receiving daily communications from South Battleford although I will admit to the hon. member for Regina that those who are writing me are undoubtedly those who supported me in the last election. They feel very much annoyed at South Battleford being disrupted in this matter. As was pointed out by the hon. member for North Battleford, the Battlefords and perhaps Kindersley will not offer a good fighting ground for the government. I say quite frankly to the government that this proposed set up will jeopardize any chances they might have had of winning those two constituencies. We have twenty-one members now in this house. I have argued from the beginning, and submitted a map in support of my argument, that it would be quite simple to redistribute the excess population to be found in the north among the three northern constituencies. It must be remembered that the number of members from Saskatchewan is not being changed. This would have avoided the disruption which has taken place and the, shall I say, acrimonious fight which has been going on during the time we have been attempting to put this through. I still feel that before forcing this bill through it would be possible for the government to keep the two Battlefords separate and not put them into one constituency. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has stated that that would disrupt the present boundaries of Kindersley, but the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) has pointed out two or three ways in which this could be done. There is also the amendment now before the chair. The government could take territory out of the Battlefords and place it in Redberry and take territory out of Redberry and put it into the Battlefords. That would be a very simple matter in my opinion and I appeal to the Prime Minister and to the hon. member from Regina to give this their serious consideration.

Mr. TOTZKE: Mr. Chairman, before the schedule for Saskatchewan is disposed of there are a few remarks I should like to make with regard to a number of constituencies in that schedule. I do not intend to argue the matter of the alteration of boundaries because I was assured pretty definitely the other day by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) that no alterations would be made. But there are some questions I should like to ask and some information I would like to obtain from the government before this schedule is passed.

I should like the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), who was on the subcommittee for Regina, or someone on the other side of the house to explain to this committee why it was found necessary to alter the southern boundary of the constituency of Qu'Appelle in the manner in which it has been altered and why it was considered necessary to select six sections in the constituency of Qu'Appelle along the Qu'Appelle river and put them in the constituency of Melville. I should like to know why it was considered necessary to take the suburbs of the city of Regina consisting of North Regina and the northern annex and put them into the rural constituency now known as Lake Centre. I should like to know also why it was considered necessary to take off the western row of townships in the constituency of Moose Jaw as it now exists and put them in the constituency of Swift Current. In spite of the additions which have been made to the constituency of Moose Jaw its population is still below the unit while the population of Swift Current is above the unit. I should like to know why more of the rural portions around the city of Saskatoon have not been included in the constituency of Saskatoon City. Could the hon. member for Regina give me the population of the proposed new constituency of Rosthern?

Mr. TURNBULL: I can figure it out but it will be smaller than it should be because of the population taken away from it and put into Prince Albert. I have attempted to compensate for that to some extent by taking certain townships which were formerly in Humboldt and transferring them to Rosthern. We have endeavoured to make up the deficiency which was created at the last moment.

Mr. TOTZKE: I do not wish to make any particular objection to the constituency of Rosthern as it now stands. I think I have demonstrated pretty clearly throughout the course of this debate that I consider there was no necessity for making the alterations in constituencies which have been made. I do not propose to go over the whole ground again, but I do want to say a word about the northern constituencies and especially about the alterations which have been made in Prince Albert. I concur in what my leader has said, that the alterations have not been made in a fair way. As that constituency is now constituted it does not give a fair chance to my chief.

In connection with the Battlefords and Redberry, I think I made it clear the other day that there would be no difficulty in readjusting the populations in these two constituencies. They are side by side and it would simply be a matter of taking population from one constituency, adding it to the other and then taking from the other and adding it to the first. The situation has been explained very well indeed by the hon. members for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) and Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). The hon. member for Acadia lived a good many years in that particular section of the province; he knows the constituencies and the interests of the people living in that district. The Prime Minister intimated the other day that if it was at all possible he was ready to make the desired change and put North Battleford back into Redberry and call the constituency North Battleford. As has been explained, there is a certain area lying south of the North Saskatchewan river which was formerly in the district of Rosetown and which has been added to the district of Redberry. This could very well be put into the constituency of the Battlefords. It lies south of the North Saskatchewan river and the area is contiguous to the old town of Battleford. The people in that area did their business there; their centre was the old town of Battleford. They very seldom got into North Battleford and as a matter of fact it would be more agreeable to the people living in that area to be in the Battlefords than in the Redberry district, the great portion of which lies north of the north branch of the Saskatchewan river. If the government did not think that were advisable, they could take a small portion of the range of the townships in which North Battleford is situated and add it to Redberry, and then get sufficient population in the next two ranges lying north of the proposed line of the Battlefords to make up the required number

I do not know that it is of any particular value to say anything more in connection with the schedule as proposed. As I said at the outset I was definitely told that no matter whether I stayed here two weeks or two months, there would be no alterations. I can see no benefit in continuing the fight after a threat of that kind. If I thought there were a chance of getting alterations of any kind, I would gladly stay here for two months and continue the fight. But I appeal to hon. members opposite, to the government, that in this particular instance of the Battlefords there is justification for a change and I think further consideration should be given in that regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Notwithstanding the somewhat pessimistic remarks of the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) with regard to the possible result of our intercessions, I would like to point out to the Prime Minister and to the government that like the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), I have some personal knowledge, although not of the same homesteading kind, of North Battleford and the surrounding country since 1905. It was then that the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were established. Following that for a number of years there were very good crops, but in 1907, 1908 and again in 1911 we had a terrific frost that put a crimp in practically all the crops of the old and southern areas of Saskatchewan. That was in the days of Red Fife; they had none of the early wheats established at that time, with the result that Red Fife seemed to be altogether too late and there grew up a strong desire and demand for more live stock. The Saskatchewan government responded to that demand in 1908 by passing a Live Stock Distributing Act and putting a considerable amount of money into the distribution of live stock. The good people of North Battleford, however, did not think we were engaging in that work sufficiently rapidly and generously to meet their requirements. There is a vast hinterland north of that country, without, at that time, any railroad extending up to Jackfish or Meadow Lake and they were crying out for more live stock as it was a great grass country. In order to meet the situation and to supplement the activities of the government of that day at Regina, the business men of North Battleford —and I would like the house to mark this because I have never before heard of a case like this anywhere in Canada, especially on the part of a small struggling town as it was at that time—initiated the idea of establishing a live stock distributing association—I think that was the official name—working in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture at Regina, the latter body doing most of the buying, while the business men of North Battleford supplied the money and did the distributing of live stock and collecting for themselves. A very considerable amount of live stock was distributed in that way by the business men, and, as I said before, I do not know of a city of that size in any other part of Canada or, indeed, on this continent which has taken such an active personal interest in the surrounding country from which it drew and upon which it depended for its business. It was, I think, an imperative and enterprising thing for them to do; it was pressed upon them by reason of the exigencies of the situation due to the early frosts and low wheat prices in those early years. The only similar organization I know of on a large scale in Canada is that recently initiated and organized by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Beatty; that was three years ago. The house will remember, when the recent bad crops first struck the southwestern part of Saskatchewan and other places, a number of business men headed by Mr. Beatty and others conceived the idea of doing in a large way exactly what North Battleford did away back in 1911, more than twenty years ago. The Canadian Pacific initiated this enterprise in a large way and it is now a going concern, not expanding very rapidly, because conditions, on account of lack of money, do not warrant it. But I want to point out that before the Canadian Pacific or any other of these big business concerns ever dreamed of such a proposition, North Battleford was on the map with its businessmen with their hands in their pockets supplementing the effort of the Saskatchewan government to do the same thing for that constituency running away north, one that has since developed so remarkably. I have much pleasure in bearing testimony to that because it is an outstanding fact, one that is not generally known. Many of the early settlers have passed away and it is only those who were then engaged and are still so engaged in the Department of Agriculture and know something of the early settlement of North Battleford who are familiar with that great movement.

I understand from the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) that he himself put some money into that enterprise. I am not going to ask him how much he got out of it, for I know, as a rule, those who promote those progressive enterprises very frequently lose money because some bad debts are always incurred in distributing live stock to new settlers in a frontier district. I remember, when we started similar work in the Department of Agriculture in 1908, the government figured out how much the loss would be and I remember it was estimated it would be at least 10 per cent. The then premier, the Hon. Walter Scott, took the ground that it would be good work and a good investment even though the loss proved to be twice that amount because the people had to be given some good foundation stock with which to build up a safe diversified agriculture. The loss was nothing like 20 per cent; if my recollection is correct, it was slightly over 14 per cent, so I anticipate that the business men of North Battleford would probably lose about the same amount on their investment.

Shortly after that a cooperative creamery was established in North Battleford, its activities radiating away to the north and to the west. At that time it was one of the largest of those frontier creameries, although later it was exceeded by Lloydminster. That proved a veritable godsend to thousands of farmers in that vast country, not only because they were able, out of the cream cheques they got, to pay for the live stock, but because of the way in which it helped to sustain them in their daily groceries and other supply requirements on the farm.

I cannot implement that with anything further except to point out that this was an unusual undertaking. Now that they have assisted in building up as described, that hinterland with their own money, to debase and disappoint that thriving young city by changing the name of the constituency from its present historic name—"North Battleford" and "Old Battleford" are names which have endeared themselves to the people there—changing it to the relatively unknown name of Redberry, is surely almost adding insult to injury. I am not familiar with the story of the name of Redberry. I think it is associated in some way with the Hon. George Langley. That was the name of his provincial constituency. I believe there was some noted gentleman in England, Lord Redberry or some other prominent gentleman who bore that name and after whom the provincial riding was called. I thought there was a village of Redberry in Saskatchewan but I am informed that there is not. But there was a constituency of Redberry up until a year ago, but in these redistribution days constituencies sometimes disappear, and Redberry was one of the ones that disappeared just a year ago. Up to that time from away back in the early days of settlement there was a provincial constituency of Redberry which the Hon. George Langley represented for many years. He was followed by Mr. Cockburn, member of the legislative assembly, who now represents that old riding. Anyhow, it does seem a terrible thing to deprive a young and thriving and justly proud city like North Battleford of the name of that great area which it helped so much to develop in the way I have described and to call the constituency by the comparatively unknown name of Redberry. I am sure that the Prime Minister, who is a gentleman of parts and has travelled much, knows the instincts of the human breast towards old institutions and old names like the Battlefords, where the old town was the seat of the territorial government prior to 1883. Battleford was the seat of the northwest territorial government for several years before the government was moved to Regina. Besides being the seat of government during those early years and also the seat of operation during the rebellion of 1885, Battleford is one of the beauty spots of the Canadian west. I have no figures to show how they voted in connection with this election or that election. I know that we have two gentlemen here from the Battlefords as a result of the election of 1930, but that is not the point I am driving at. It is the debasement, the disappointment of a worthy city that I am thinking of, a city that has not deserved this kind of treatment. While as I say I have not dealt with figures or shown how the townships go, whether this way or that, I do not think that enters into it at all because the alternative dividing lines are only six miles apart. But that is not the question at all. The question is whether the city of North Battleford with nearly 6,000 people will be in the riding formerly called by the name of North Battleford, or will it be taken out of that constituency and put into a new seat thus losing both name and constituency.

I would draw the attention of the government to another thing, which perhaps may not seem to have very much to do with this question, but out in Saskatchewan now there are three provincial vacancies, one in Estevan, one in Happyland and one in the Battlefords. Only less than a week ago the provincial member for the Battlefords, Mr. S. W. Huston, died. Now if the city of North Battleford feels, as I am sure the people there will feel, that they are not being properly treated in this redistribution bill, I would ask what effect is that going to have on the provincial by-election? So far as I can see, unintentionally no doubt on the part of this government, they are going to make the third vacancy in Saskatchewan go against the Anderson government. That is what the result is likely to be.

Mr. TURNBULL: Why are you worrying?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not worrying. I would rather see the cause of complaint removed on the part of North Battleford than see the Anderson government further embarrassed by leaving this redistribution map as it is. Governments come and governments go, as they always have and will, but for North Battleford to be deprived even in name of her hinterland with which she is naturally associated will be something she will feel for many and many a day. I leave it with the government. I have endeavoured to put the case plainly and earnestly, and I do feel very earnestly about it because it does seem to me to be a wrong that should be righted. Like my leader I leave it now entirely with the government to come to a conclusion based upon a sound and well-reasoned judgment in the matter.

Mr. TURNBULL: Mr. Chairman, as towns grow, the area of their influence grows, but their political size must decrease as the population grows. The area of North Battleford's commercial influence has grown large and the population has grown large at the same time, but to place North Battleford on one side or the other does not affect its commercial influence or the hinterland around it at all.

There are a great many things to be considered in a redistribution, and when you apply one of the yardsticks only you can get all sorts of incongruities. I defy my hon. friends to draw any map of Saskatchewan that I could not, by applying one yardstick at a time, criticize a great deal more effectively than they have criticized this particular map, There are present trends of population to be considered, and future trends, natural boundaries, accessibility, community of interest and probably many other matters which affect the situation. Undoubtedly the boundaries of North Battleford could have been drawn in different places by any person, and undoubtedly they could have been attacked wherever they had been drawn, but as they are drawn now you have a small, compact territory. If my hon. friend from Battleford complains that he is now in a Conservative constituency—I do not know whether he is or not—he is in very good company for a short time anyway, and he should not complain about that.. With regard to the size of Battleford as at present constituted, there are eight constituencies larger than it is.

With regard to the queries of the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) as to the south boundary of Qu'Appelle and as to Weyburn constituency, again I ask, why worry? The members themselves are perfectly satisfied, so why complain?

With regard to the six sections removed from Qu'Appelle and placed in Melville, the people in those six sections can vote with very much more convenience in Melville than in Qu'Appelle, and the people who were formerly in Qu'Appelle can vote more conveniently where they are now. That is why these changes were made, and it is a very good and sufficient reason.

With regard to the suburbs of Regina I should have been glad to retain the whole constituency of Regina as it stood. I have personal and political friends in the part removed. The suburbs that have been taken off gave me a majority of 250 at the last election, so it is no personal reason that requires that they should be removed from the city. They will now have two members to look after them because they will always be more or less connected with Regina, and the member for Qu'Appelle will also look after their interests.

With regard to the western boundary of Moose Jaw it is precisely the line on one of the maps presented by the hon. member for Humboldt. Why then does he complain?

With regard to Saskatoon there is truly a reduction in the amount of the rural area, but having regard to the population of Rosthern, and having regard to the fact that Saskatoon has grown approximately fifty per cent in the last ten years and is the centre of a very large area of future growth, it was considered that the rural area attached to it was sufficiently large to be satisfactory to the people. If every city in the country was given the territory surrounding it and attached to it by commercial interests, we would have a very different map from what we have now. The whole city of Vancouver is by commercial interests attached to British Columbia. No one suggests boundary lines should not be drawn across that area. The whole population of Ontario is attached commercially to Toronto, but no one suggests that the area of Toronto should be so enlarged. It has never been considered that the drawing of political lines across a territory detaches it commercially from the cities at the centre of that area. Railways will run across it, roads will run through it, and a person never thinks of political lines when he goes to do business. I say again that any map which could be drawn of any province could be criticized, but when you apply all considerations to the present map of the province of Saskatchewan, including Battlefords and Prince Albert, you have about as fair a map as could be drawn of that province.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wonder if I may ask the hon. member for Regina if he can see any objection to making the change.

Mr. TURNBULL: Which change?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have used all our ability to show the advantages of this change, and I believe the government representatives have not shown any disadvantage. True enough, the Prime Minister urged the advantages of provincial boundaries being followed, but I hasten to assure him—and I think he knows it—that out west we do not follow municipal or provincial lines. We never think of them at all. Federal boundaries are quite distinct. The federal boundaries of the two Battlefords have been entirely distinct. They have been distinct entities ever since they were established. They never were together federally. I know the story of them very well. It is true that at one time there was one Battleford, but as soon as there were two they were kept separate and distinct; they were not merged. Now, after many years, after this policy was established in 1914 by Sir Robert Borden's government, and later confirmed by a Liberal government in the Redistribution Act of 1924, this new merger is made. Both previous redistributions to which I have referred agreed on the southern boundary being the Saskatchewan river, and at this time we are asking only that the same principle be observed, and that the same southern boundary if possible be preserved. Sometimes boundaries have to be disturbed, but in the present instance the point is that for the want of moving the east boundary line a mere matter of six miles, the two Battlefords, both the town and the city, are being put into one constituency. By leaving North Battleford in the territory with which it has natural communications, its proper position will be preserved. I have not heard any argument to refute that statement.

Mr. BENNETT: The difficulty in this case is the difficulty which has arisen in all these cases. I have never envied the position of the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) in the committee. Had he not insisted upon putting forward an entire plan of redistribution, and had he contented himself with dealing with the situation unit by unit I think we might have been able to arrive at some more—shall I say—mutually satisfactory arrangement. Conceding that an adjustment is necessary—and that is conceded by all—it involves a change of boundaries. The question as to how those boundaries can best be changed without doing violence to existing conditions to an extent which would be unfair has been the very earnest effort, at least, of hon. members of the committee, who represented the government. It is unfortunate, but by reason of one constituency being maintained without any changes in its boundaries, it has had its repercussions throughout the entire province. The creation of the new constituency at Rosthern, as I pointed out a few moments ago, necessitated changes being made in the boundaries not only of constituencies nearby but also in constituencies that were overpopulated in order that the unit of population might be fairly observed.

At this time in the afternoon I shall not trespass upon the time of the committee to do more than to say this, that it was apparent that changes had to be made in the boundaries of Prince Albert; it was apparent that changes had to be made in the boundaries of the Battlefords; it was apparent that changes had to be made in the boundaries of Melfort, and it was apparent, also, that a new constituency had to be built by reason of the circumstances to which I have alluded, namely, population conditions. A new constituency was built up, and I have endeavoured to explain to this committee as fairly as I could the real, earnest desire to meet the views of the right hon. leader of the opposition and I think—I may be wrong in this—that what he said a moment ago is true, namely, that in dealing with figures it is always difficult, when you have polls which are split by reason of three-cornered contests, to determine exactly what the vote has been. Where there are three candidates it is almost impossible.

A few moments ago I said to an hon. member of this house what I believe to be true of western Canada more than of any other part of the dominion, namely, that it is a country where you cannot predicate a vote in the future upon what has happened in the past. It is always in a state of flux. I know nothing which is static in connection with the attitude of electors of western Canada. Communities which at one time have expressed themselves very firmly as being in favour of one political party at the next election vote very strongly the opposite way. Sometimes they vote for a third party. That has happened on more than one occasion. Under those circumstances I trust the committee realizes that having given this matter all the consideration and attention which could be given, and having arrived at definite conclusions we do not touch one constituency alone, but affect the situation in regard to other constituencies. I agree that if you took one isolated instance you might be able with some degree of fairness to say that this does not represent a fair and equitable redistribution of population. But when you consider one constituency in its relation to the others in the province, I think you will have to agree that the proposals which have been submitted are not unfair. In connection with Prince Albert it was admitted by the hon. member for Humboldt that changes had to be made. Once you admit that changes have to be made it is a question of weak, human, fallible judgment as to how they can be made so as to cause the least inconvenience and be fair to the population affected. That, we believe, has been the governing motive in connection with these matters. More largely in the west than anywhere else population has been the factor. Straight lines can be drawn much more readily than they can in the old settled communities where areas of land determine where the boundaries which have been worked out in centuries shall be made. It is difficult to say, with any degree of success, that you shall have a straight line from a line which is not straight.

All I can say is that the government has considered as fairly as it could the representations made to it. With respect to the Battlefords I can say only this. I live in the province of Alberta, and I saw the difficulty which arose between Edmonton and South Edmonton. I saw the rivalries on the two banks of the river. I have seen the same thing in the Battlefords, and I believe it is in the national interest federally, as it was provincially, that they be united. In that instance we followed the example of the provincial administration, which was not a Conservative administration, of uniting these two constituencies into one.

It will not be politically sound, they have said; we will not gain anything from it. The ex-Minister of Agriculture says we will suffer from it. But we are not thinking of that in this matter; we believe it is in the national interest that this should be. The province believed it was, the province acted on that belief, and did not act on it lightly. The province realized the force of the arguments made here, they were made then; and the province united them because these continuous jealousies such as between South Edmonton and Edmonton, between North Battleford and South Battleford, make it impossible to develop the spirit that there should be. The province accepted that view and united these two constituencies, and we have done the same.

One point made this afternoon as to which the government will be glad indeed to act on any reasonable suggestion that may be made, is in connection with the matter of names. If it is thought that the names the Battlefords and Redberry should be exchanged for other names we shall be glad to have any reasonable suggestions from the committee, and suggestions from the communities affected will be given consideration most of all. We cannot immortalize hon. gentlemen opposite by giving their names to constituencies. The right hon. leader of the opposition at least cannot complain, because one of his names finds expression in a constituency; he is one of the few members of the house of whom that can be said. Of course one of the most distinguished of Scotch names is McIntosh, but I hardly think we can substitute that for the Battlefords. Any reasonable suggestion on the part of the committee would be quite acceptable to the government. I know something of the history of Battleford, though not of course in the same degree that the hon. gentlemen do. In the very early days, thirty odd years ago, when Battleford was then an old community, it was my privilege to know two of the distinguished early settlers, one who administered justice, making Battleford the centre long before the member for South Battleford came into this country, and the other, one of the bravest men, I once heard a judge say, that he had ever come across. He was taken prisoner and sentenced to death, and when they asked him to recant he said: "You may shoot me, but always remember that the majesty of the law of this country will ultimately assert itself." I refer to the late Thomas Mackay. I was indebted to him for much of the information I had on the early settlement of that country, particularly with respect to the Battleford area.

Any suggestions in regard to these two constituencies we shall be glad indeed to view with favour. I regret that for the reasons I have given we cannot dislocate the plan of redistribution that has been prepared with such infinite pains. It was thrown entirely out of gear by allowing judgment to be influenced by appeals to sympathy and sentiment, and members on this side find themselves now in a position where they cannot yield to the views that have been expressed by the hon. gentlemen this afternoon.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, in respect to the suggestion of retaining the name North Battleford for the constituency, if the town of that name could have been included I would have welcomed that proposal very cordially. But it seems to me it would be something of an anomaly for the constituency itself to be called North Battleford, when the town of North Battleford is not in that constituency. Leaving the town from which it gets its name out of the constituency would be, I should say, offering the shadow but withdrawing the substance. I question whether it would help matters much. I have all along advocated very strongly keeping the name North Battleford for historic and other reasons—

Mr. BENNETT: Battleford is the historic name, not North Battleford.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, these names all mark stages in our historical development. I wish the Prime Minister could have seen his way to granting not only the name of the constituency but associating with it the town of North Battleford. If that cannot be done, unless the hon. member himself has some feeling on the matter my view is that to call the constituency North Battleford without the town of North Battleford being in it, perhaps would be regarded by many as anomalous.

Mr. TURNBULL: Seeing that North Battleford is not in the constituency will the hon. gentleman suggest a name that would be satisfactory for that northern constituency? I took Redberry as being the most satisfactory to everyone as I supposed. If any one can suggest anything more satisfactory I am not particular about a name.

Mr. McINTOSH: There is the town of Battleford and the young city of North Battleford, but all the country north and west of North Battleford is acceptably known as the North Battleford country. I think that the idea in the mind of the leader of the opposition is that if that great piece of territory now being called Redberry should be known as the North Battleford district, or territory, it might be better. I do not object to the name "Redberry." What I strenuously object to is doing away with the old name, North Battleford. Might I ask if the suggestion made by the right hon. the Prime Minister could be left until after eight o'clock?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, let us get through.

Mr. TURNBULL: Would my hon. friend suggest that the southern area be called "The Battlefords" and the other "North Battleford"?

Mr. McINTOSH: "The Battlefords" would be the area into which you put the two Battlefords?

Mr. TURNBULL: Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: My point is that all the country north and west of the city of North Battleford is known as the North Battleford area. I think the Prime Minister's suggestion would be better than nothing.

Mr. TURNBULL: I have no objection to calling them "The Battlefords" and "North Battleford."

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) the other day suggested that we should use the name "The Battlefords" rather than just Battleford. That country, when I went west, was called the Battleford country as a broad general term, rather than the North Battleford country, and I suppose it is yet; similarly with the Prince Albert country, and so on.

Mr. McINTOSH: It would be then.

Mr. BENNETT: If it would better satisfy the members from that area we might call the seat North Battleford, even though as the right hon. gentleman has said the city of North Battleford is not in it. It would mean an entire change of population to the extent of 7,000 to change the boundaries, that is the real difficulty. Call the south seat just "Battleford," or "The Battlefords."

Mr. McINTOSH: "The Battlefords" would be better.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no reason why that should not be done. The difficulty is because of the location of the city out of it. I have been making an endeavour to get away from the jealousy between rival communities, such as Edmonton and South Edmonton. I happened to be in the legislature at the time we changed the name South Edmonton to Strathcona. An amendment was moved in a spirit of frivolity that we should call it Macaulay because the member for that constituency was named Macaulay, and that motion was defeated by only one vote. I remember the enjoyment, more or less irresponsible, that a lot of members at that time got out of that situation. If it will please the members from the constituencies concerned I am content that the seat to the north be called "North Battleford," and that the seat to the south be called "The Battlefords." I shall be glad to move that, if it is thought desirable by those living in the locality.

Mr. McINTOSH: I think that would be satisfactory.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does it seem reasonable to call one "The Battlefords" and the other "North Battleford?" Why use the plural?

Mr. BENNETT: Well, that is what I asked.

Mr. VALLANCE: Of course I can see the trouble that may result if we maintain the name of North Battleford for the northern district. I do not see how you can call it North Battleford if you do not put the city in it, unless you name the one constituency Battleford and the other North Battleford.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): There is an amendment before the committee moved by the hon. member for North Battleford, that townships 44 to 48 inclusive, range 16, west of the third meridian, be taken from the Battlefords as at present constituted and transferred to Redberry as at present constituted.

Mr. TOTZKE: If you would allow me, Mr. Chairman, there should be included also that portion of township 43 lying north of the North Saskatchewan river.

Amendment lost on division.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): There is another amendment moved by the hon. member for North Battleford.

Amendment lost on division.

Mr. McINTOSH: I would suggest to the Prime Minister the name North Battleford for the northern constituency, and Battlefords —not Battleford—for the new constituency. It seems to be the feeling that these names would be better.

Mr. BENNETT: I would therefore move, Mr. Chairman, that on page 54, constituency No. 12, the word "Redberry" be stricken out and the words "North Battleford" substituted therefor.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps under the circumstances it will be preferable to have the word "Battlefords" remain, for the reason I have just given. There are two towns, North Battleford and Battleford, and it may be thought that we have named the constituency after the old town of Battleford, and that the newer town has not been considered. Perhaps if we adhere to the name of Battlefords it will serve the purpose better.

Amendment agreed to.

Schedule agreed to on division, as amended.

Section 3 agreed to on division.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. BENNETT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a word at this stage of the proceedings. Once more I want to register my protest against this measure which smashes old traditional county lines in the province of Quebec and violently destroys the federation of the province. I denounce this manipulation of the electoral map of the province of Quebec. That is all I wish to say to-day, but I shall carry this battle throughout the length and breadth of my province.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are at the end of the session, the end of the week and the end of the day. If any discussion were to take place now it is obvious that hon. members would have to remain here until next week. In the circumstances the government having said it intends by its majority to carry the bill as it is, being desirous of accommodating everyone in so far as we are able, we have decided not to discuss this bill further on the third reading, though in order to make our position clear, we wish to vote against the third reading. In doing so may I say that we are very, very strongly opposed to this redistribution bill.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Bennett) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. BENNETT: I think the whips will arrange to place the pair lists upon Hansard.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes, that will be done.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time.

Mr. BENNETT: I move that the bill now pass and that the title be as on the order paper.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, this motion is not debatable, but we could call for a division. If we do not do so, at this time it is for the same reason that we did not continue the debate on the third reading. The government has said from the start that it intended to carry the bill by its majority. We now know what that majority is and there is no occasion in order to ascertain it anew to divide the house again. Otherwise we would do so, because we wish on this measure to fight to the finish.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that would be in accordance with what was done in 1903 when a similar situation arose in reverse. The Conservative party was then fighting against the redistribution bill of that day and it was declared that the same division should be recorded in the journals and it was carried on the same division.

Motion agreed to on the same division.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

FREE CONFERENCE WITH SENATE—REPORT OF MANAGERS—FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I beg to present the report of the managers for the House of Commons who attended at a free conference with the Senate on Bill No. 71, to amend the criminal code, as follows:

Your managers beg to report that they duly held the free conference with the managers appointed by the Senate with respect to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (71), intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code," and the managers on behalf of the Senate have agreed to recommend that the Senate do not insist upon their first amendment to which the Commons have disagreed but that it accepts the following proposed amendment in lieu thereof:—

"(3) In any prosecution under subsection two of this section, where the circumstances are such as, in the opinion of the court, to render it likely that the child might be in danger of being or becoming immoral, its morals injuriously affected or its home rendered an unfit place for it to be in, it shall, upon proof that the person accused did, in the home of such child, participate in adultery, in sexual immorality, in habitual drunkenness, or in any other form of vice, be an irrebuttable presumption, that the child was in fact in danger of being or becoming immoral and its morals injuriously affected and that its home had in fact been rendered an unfit place for it to be in."

I now request that Bill No. 71 be considered in pursuance of the conference held with the Senate respecting certain amendments.

Mr. SPEAKER: The house will now consider the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 71, to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. DUPRE: I move, seconded by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) that subsection 3 of section 3 be deleted and there be substituted therefor the amendment which I have just read.

Mr. LAVERGNE: If I may say a word at the end of the session, I am glad the Senate and the ex-Minister of Justice have come to the opinion I expressed in the house the other day and for which I was severely criticized.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They send good managers there.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DUPRE moved:

That the second and third amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 71, an act to amend the criminal code, be now read a second time and concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

ILLEGAL WARFARE CLAIMS

MOTION TO PRINT INTERIM REPORT IN FRENCH

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): With the concurrence of the house, in order to correct an oversight, I would move:

That 200 copies of the interim report to His Excellency the Governor General in Council, dated January 13, 1932, made by Errol M. McDougall, Esquire, a commissioner appointed to investigate and report upon illegal warfare claims and reparations payable in respect thereof, laid on the table of the house on February 6, 1932, be printed forthwith in the French language and that standing order 64 in relation thereto be suspended.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

MOTION TO PRINT REPORT OF EVIDENCE AND PROCEEDINGS IN FRENCH

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That 500 copies in the French language of the proceedings held and evidence taken, before the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization which were distributed from day to day during the sittings of the said committee, be printed forthwith and standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

The translation of these proceedings was begun, but there is nothing on the orders of the house to authorize their being printed and distributed.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, May 27, 1933.

Sir,—

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate chamber on Saturday, May 27, at 8 p.m. for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. Lascelles,

Secretary to the Governor General.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I avail myself of this opportunity, before the house rises at six o'clock to meet again at eight, to express my appreciation and that of the government of the attitude taken by the official opposition during this last day in expediting the business of the house and enabling us to prorogue this evening. To bring the members back on Monday would have been very inconvenient and unfair to them, and I should like the opposition to be assured that we appreciate the spirit in which they have dealt with the difficult problems confronting them this afternoon, enabling us to reach prorogation this evening.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I appreciate what the Prime Minister has just said. I am sure if we had consulted our feelings in the matter, we would have kept up this debate for at least another week. We preferred to accommodate, as he has done on occasions, the feelings of the house generally.

May I before we adjourn make a request of the Prime Minister? If parliament is to reassemble before the year is out, would he be kind enough to give as long a notice in advance of that circumstance as may be possible?

Mr. BENNETT: It will be within your memory, Mr. Speaker, that last year I assured the right hon. gentleman that if the house met in the fall I would give as much notice as possible. We intimated that the house would meet after the Ottawa conference, but the date we were not able to determine until later. If as a consequence of what may take place during the next few months it is necessary to reconvene parliament this year, I shall make it known by every means in my power just as soon as I myself am aware of the necessity of parliament being summoned.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CONCURRENCE BY SENATE IN COMMONS AMENDMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a message from the Senate informing this house that the Senate hath concurred in the amendment made by the Commons to its first original amendment to Bill No. 71, an act to amend the criminal code, without any amendment.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber, His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

BILLS ASSENTED TO

An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.
An Act to amend the Criminal Code.
An Act to readjust the Representation in the House of Commons.

To these bills the royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In His Majesty's name His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following bill:—

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1934.

To which bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of His Excellency the Governor General did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to these bills.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the fourth session of the seventeenth parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

In bringing to a close the fourth session of the seventeenth parliament, I congratulate you upon the extent to which you have realized the hopes set forth in my address on the re-assembling of parliament in October last.

It is deeply gratifying that the benefits of the Imperial Economic Conference agreements now known throughout the world as the "Ottawa Agreements," to which legislative sanction was given in the early part of the session, are already reflected in a profitable and steadily increasing volume of empire trade.

The measures which my government has taken to maintain the integrity of national finance are already showing gratifying results. The credit of Canada throughout the world has been strengthened.

The last decennial census, upon which redistribution of the representation of the people in the House of Commons under the British North America Act is based, disclosed that Canada has now, like many other countries, a majority of its population residing in urban communities. Notwithstanding this added difficulty, a fair and equitable redistribution of the electoral divisions of the country has been accomplished.

The charters of Canadian banks have been extended for one year, in order that parliament before undertaking the decennial revision of the Bank Act, may be informed of the conclusions of the World Monetary and Economic Conference and may have before it the findings of a royal commission which my government will shortly appoint, to consider Canadian banking and monetary problems.

The intricate and difficult problems of railway transportation in Canada have been dealt with by legislation embodying the essential recommendations of the royal commission on Canadian railways and transportation. This legislation based upon the principle of maintaining the integrity of our two transcontinental railway systems, aims to secure efficient and economic service and to provide means for ensuring cooperation between the two railways.

The agreement with the Republic of France, regulating customs tariffs, together with the convention governing the rights of nationals, commerce and shipping, which you have ratified will, it is confidently believed, promote trade between and confer mutual benefits upon the two countries.

The amendments to the Pensions Act which you have passed will enable the country more fairly and equitably and with less cumbersome and expensive machinery to discharge its obligations to those who served in the Great War.

Among other important measures passed were an act to amend the Canada Grain Act, an act to authorize the governor in council to agree to extend by proclamation the duration of the Canada-New Zealand trade agreement, an act to amend the Canada shipping Act, and acts respecting penitentiaries, His Majesty's visiting forces, the criminal code, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and Unemployment and Farm Relief.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provisions you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The courage with which the Canadian people have endured the burdens imposed upon them in these troubled times is witness to their great faith in the future of their country. It is, however, realized that cooperation amongst the peoples of the world is essential to recovery from the unprecedented conditions which have for so long prevailed in all countries.

In relieving you from attendance upon your parliamentary duties, I pray that Divine Providence may guide and bless you.

This concluded the fourth session of the seventeenth parliament.
